For those in the galleries that may not be familiar with what the pages do, they're the young men and women who are constantly scurrying about the Assembly assisting members and delivering documents and very important communications throughout the day and into the long hours of the night during evening sessions.

Sadly and unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, at least for us, seven of the pages will not be returning this fall. With the generous donations of all the members I've obtained some gifts for those retiring pages, and they will be sent out to them within the next day or two. I would especially like to acknowledge the outstanding service of those who are retiring. As mentioned earlier by Jennifer, they are Maureen Hasinoff, Jennifer Huygen, Samantha Johnston, Taddes Korris, Kaley Pederson, Adam Pisani, and Danielle Wiebe.

I would like to invite all of the members to show their appreciation for the wonderful service of these fine young Albertans.

The Speaker: While we await the beginning of question period – I've got some numbers and statistics that I'll be providing to members at the conclusion of question period, but before we do that, there's a very interesting thing that's going to happen in the year 2007. On September 18, 2007, the current government of Alberta will surpass the length of service of the government of Alberta that served from 1936 to 1971 in number of days. The service then will be 13,157 days on September 18, 2007.

head: 1:40 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public/Private Partnerships for School Construction

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a media conference in Calgary this morning the Minister of Education said that P3 contracts were required to build schools here in Alberta because, and I quote, the Treasury is going broke. End quote. My first question is to the Premier. Is the Treasury really going broke, or is the truth that the minister is simply scaremongering?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of Education made announcements both in Calgary and Edmonton with respect to 18 new schools being built. The plan announced today is going to build these schools quicker, much more efficiently, and at less cost. That's the real good-news story. Eighteen schools built immediately, starting with a template, and it's good news for all the school boards that participated.

Dr. Taft: Well, actually, it may be news to the Premier, but there's no proof whatsoever of anything you just said. The Auditor General of Alberta stated in his report of '04-05 that a detailed comparison should be made of P3s between the public and private financing models. With today's announcement the government is stating that it has already committed itself to P3s, that no contractor has been announced, nor any cost savings provided. To the Premier: has the government undertaken a full comparison of costs in building these schools, and if not, why is this project already being announced as a P3?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General also said that we should always look at alternative financing, public/private partnerships, for major infrastructure. The other thing, also, is that we have a policy in place that we will be doing cost comparisons with respect to the projects, but the Auditor did say: please consider public/private partnerships as you move on large infrastructure investment.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has confirmed, in fact, that the homework hasn't been done on these P3 cases, will the Premier admit that there is no business case whatsoever in his government's hands to justify building these schools through P3s, and if he has it, will he make it public?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the last time we had a debate in the House over a public/private partnership was when I introduced, with the support of all of our colleagues, the southeast leg of the Anthony Henday. That construction is going to be completed this fall. It's going to save millions of dollars. It's going to be complete flow-through traffic, done on time, much cheaper, and much more efficiently. That's what we're going to do. We're going to be bold in our policies. We're going to move ahead and not listen to the chatter that's just going to drag Alberta down. We're looking forward to the future.

Horse-racing Industry

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. This government's favourite P3 is its one with the horse-racing industry. The horse-racing industry knows all about the Alberta advantage. Their subsidy has gone up from $12 million to $45 million last year to a projected $56 million this year. The industry indicates that the new deal they're striking may be even more generous than the last one, a new deal that's going to last 10 years. Ten years. To the Premier: can the Premier confirm that this 10-year subsidy to the horse-racing industry is going to cost Alberta's government over half a billion dollars?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again completely wrong information. It's not going to cost the government any money. It is the participation at the slots at the horse-racing facilities. People participate. The horse-racing industry gets a share of it. If the people don't participate, don't support the horse-racing industry, then there won't be anything going to the horse industry. So there's no money coming from the taxpayer. Those that willingly want to play the slots, they're the ones that are going to contribute to the horse-racing industry, not the government of Alberta. Again, that's another case of misleading information, and we've heard that now for – what? – 45 days from the same opposition. No basis to it all. Again, misleading. If he thinks I'm not telling the truth, get up and correct me. You know what? He can't because he gave the wrong information once again.

Dr. Taft: This is lively. Mr. Speaker, if the Premier knew his own budget, he'd see that there's a line item for horse racing right in his own budget. Is he saying that he's not responsible for his own budget or he doesn't even know his own budget? How can this Premier possibly justify throwing hundreds of millions of dollars at horse racing when so many communities in this province need schools? Why do horses take precedence over schoolchildren?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if it wasn't for participation in lotteries in terms of the share that goes to the government, the government wouldn't get any share. So the horse-racing industry gets some compensation from those people that play the slots; part of that comes to the Alberta government as well. But, again, day 45, conspiracy after conspiracy, they have not been able to prove anything but just kind of twisting words. We're ending session today, and – you know what? – the attitude still has not changed. Always misleading the public of the province of Alberta. Every time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in Alberta thousands of kids went to school hungry and sat in classrooms hungry because there's no school lunch support from this government in Alberta, not one cent. My question is to the Premier. How can this Premier defend a government that spends $56 million this year alone on propping up horse racing and allows thousands of kids to go to school hungry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again misleading. The government is not spending $56 million. It's depending on the participation. You know, notwithstanding the doom and gloom that the Liberal Party of this province creates – and they spread it across the whole country, the doom and gloom – 36,000 people so far this year chose the province of Alberta as their home, and there are more to come. You know why? Because they see hope. They see job opportunities. That's why they're moving here in spite of the doom that keeps coming from that side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, we're here to lead into the next century, not listen to this kind of doom and gloom. I've got to be very careful how I choose my words in the public Assembly. But it's constant. Yet you know what? It is not destroying the hope of those people that want to seek their future in this province.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Temporary Rent Guidelines

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-six thousand people moved here last year, and a few of them even found a place to live. You know, despite the reality that the housing market is off the charts, the government maintains its neo-con philosophy of no market intervention no matter what. Yet despite an enormous shift in the market over the past decade in oil and gas, the Conservatives have gladly maintained a cap on the percentage of royalties that oil sands projects pay to the resource owners, the people of the province of Alberta. To the Premier: why, then, does the government refuse to allow Albertans and show Albertans the same respect and place a temporary cap on rents in this province until the market stabilizes?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this government has not placed any cap. It's a percentage. The royalties are based on a percentage. So, again, wrong information. The other thing is: there's no such thing as temporary. You know, they're trying to slide that in. One party says "temporary guidelines." This one just says "temporary." From all the information we have, putting in rent controls is actually going decrease the spaces available. Our role here is to work with municipalities and the federal government and increase the number of spaces. We're doing that. There were announcements made in Edmonton. We'll continue working with the city of Calgary and other municipalities across this province. We're going to be proactive.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta should be the place where people prosper, and some do, the rich do, but the poor get poorer, and the middle class have to work harder and harder just to stay in place. This government is hiding behind a philosophy of no market intervention to deal with the out-of-control housing market, but this is a double standard. Fact: the percentage of royalties paid by oil sands project owners cannot exceed 25 per cent of net revenue. In essence the royalties have been capped – yes, capped – for the past decade. To the Premier: why are the Conservatives okay capping the level of royalties paid by industry to Albertans but not with capping the level of rent that Albertans have to pay landlords? He's right. Apparently, with oil there's no such thing as temporary.

Mr. Stelmach: I don't know. I guess there was no question in there. He was trying to defend the mistake he made earlier in terms of saying that there's a cap. There isn't. It's based on percentage. With more activity we get more of a cut of the action as owners of the resource. Mr. Speaker, that is why we're having a very open, transparent royalty review. The results and the recommendations coming forward should be complete by the end of August. All that information will be made public. Albertans will be able to have a look at it and assess for themselves if they're getting a fair return as owners and also find the balance between the shareholders and also those companies that are making billions of dollars of investment in a very volatile marketplace.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This side of the House has nothing to defend.

It's not just oil sands project owners who get a sweetheart deal. Let's try this one. For conventional natural gas the cap rate, or maximum royalty rate, was implemented in 1993 at a buck forty-seven a gigajoule. Natural gas is currently projected to be selling at $6.75 a gigajoule, so the maximum amount that Albertans receive is capped. To the Premier once again: why is this Conservative government okay capping the level of royalties paid by industry to Albertans but not with capping the level of rent that Albertans have to pay to their landlords?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the other side hasn't done anything. They haven't done anything, so they have nothing to defend.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Public/Private Partnerships for School Construction

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Normally the announcement of new schools is something the government would be proud to announce. Normally new schools would be announced before a by-election, not after. Normally new schools would be good news and not kept under wraps until the last day of the Legislature session. But 18 schools built by P3s in a discredited method of construction is a waste of public money. Cost overruns can almost be guaranteed. I want to ask the Premier why he kept the P3 model for building these school until the very last day of session so that it couldn't be properly debated in this Assembly.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, what did he want us to do: announce it after session finished? You know, if it had been announced before the by-election, it would have been perceived as: you're doing something to win the election in Calgary-Elbow. So you can't win. We're proceeding; we're not holding back. Here's an idea. We talked about it during the leadership campaign. We're moving forward regardless of what bantering we hear from the opposition.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the P3 model, far from being the innovative and new way of building public infrastructure that the Minister of Education likes to say, is a proven and discredited means of wasting public money and contributing taxpayers' money to the government's corporate friends. I want to ask the Premier if he's going to stand in this House and give us the details, including the public-sector comparator for those schools, so that we know exactly how much it would cost if they built it through the public system, in the traditional way, which is the proven way to save taxpayers money.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would have been aware, that is our policy. We do always follow a very strict policy in terms of a public comparator model. The other is: we also punt it to a third-party committee to have a look at those comparisons. You know, in this particular case we're moving forward. These are schools that are badly needed. We're working with the school boards, and the school boards are very co-operative. This is a new approach. In terms of the comments made earlier, our neighbours to the west, the government of Premier Campbell, has moved in the public/private partnerships now for at least three years and has been very successful.

The Speaker: I think we have to move on. The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there's plenty of experience with P3s, including P3 schools in this country, and the Premier just doesn't have to go to his Liberal soulmate in British Columbia. He can look to Nova Scotia to find out exactly what can go wrong with P3s. So I want to ask the Premier again: is he going to make the public comparator available in this House? Will he table it by the end of today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the template is being produced in terms of the schools. We're going to put it out to tender, and once those tenders come back, then we have something to compare to. You don't have anything to compare to unless you get feedback on the kind of tenders that are going to come back from engineers, architects, and the construction firms that are going to pull their resources together and focus on building the schools that were announced today. It's good news for the province of Alberta. It's the largest school investment in many, many years in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Red tape costs us all. Regulatory burden has become a problem in almost every aspect of our existence. It affects our business, personal, and even our social lives. Paper trails seem endless. Much time is lost. Many regulations are archaic; they make no sense. Most could be made more simple. Respected surveys say that compliance costs $3.9 billion per year here. That's dead money. This work does not generate new dollars. These costs are huge but do not even count volunteer time wasted. My question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. How can you reassure Albertans that government is constantly vigilant in trying to reduce the burden of regulations on business in our daily lives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. The hon. member is absolutely right. In many cases the regulatory burden that's been put on by the many different levels of government do far more to stifle business than they do to maintain the balance of business interaction.

Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected, then Premier Klein – I think I complained so much about it – set me up in something called the dumb rules committee, which, we found out, basically ended up in a regulatory quagmire. Since then we've worked very hard to try and develop an understanding of how we can review the regulatory burden.

At this time the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House is chairing our Regulatory Review Secretariat. Indeed, all regulations that come from the government must go through that committee and be dealt with at that level.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the same minister: when might we expect an updated report on regulatory reform from the Regulatory Review Secretariat, and what might we expect from that report?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I think the member must have met with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business because they truly are constantly nipping at us to ensure that we have managed the regulatory burden as well as we can. We have eliminated the review committee and have put all of the responsibility for regulatory review with the regulation secretariat, and when they've completed their review of both process and potential, we'll release it to the public.

Mr. Backs: Again to the Minister of Service Alberta. Certainly, the CFIB, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, has done some very credible surveys on this matter in understanding things. I understand that the government started many of the movements on this in the '90s, and it was built on by B.C. Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, speaks to red tape and was introduced here a week ago. It looks to establish a count of all regulations. Such a count was performed for British Columbia in 2001, and this was done in a few months by summer students. When and how can we expect your ministry to bring forward such a count?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have been approached about trying to follow the regulatory count that the province of British Columbia did. In fact, the opportunity through TILMA to deal with the province of British Columbia offers a good opportunity to learn, but the number of regulations isn't critically as important as what the regulations mean to the everyday Albertan and their ability to either just live their lives or to run their business. So while counting might be a process to a number, it's not the be-all and end-all to determine whether the regulatory burden is, in fact, too extreme. I wouldn't want to prejudge what we might report, but I don't think that the number count is as critically important as removing unnecessary regulation.

But what a treat to have a reasonably intelligent . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Trade with the Netherlands

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week the Alberta government and the city of Edmonton had the great honour to have a visit from the Prime Minister of the Netherlands. Members of this caucus and across the way had an opportunity to meet him and talk about economic development opportunities between us and the Dutch. My question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What opportunities came about from this visit?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say, first and foremost, that the flags that fly in the hallway of the rotunda of this great building, of course, speak of the relationship that we have had with the Dutch people during many wars. I want to say today that many members of this Assembly have deep roots going back to Holland and the Netherlands and Canada's role. I want to also say that the Prime Minister chose to visit the province of Alberta, and I believe he did that because of the leadership that has been recognized in this government in terms of the approach we are taking. They actually met with a business delegation at the nanotechnology centre at the University of Alberta. Of course, there was a luncheon hosted at Government House, where many relationships were built relative to the future in technology.

The Speaker: Now we're going to move on to the hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Dutch through Royal Dutch Shell and other companies have huge investments in this province. Do we see further expansion in the oil sands with Royal Dutch Shell?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I can say that the Minister of Energy and myself and the member in this Assembly met in Fort McMurray at the oil sands with Royal Dutch Shell. They were fascinated with the co-operative approach we've had with the government at the federal level relative to a royalty regime that has attracted over a hundred billion dollars to Alberta. In actual fact, Royal Dutch Shell is one of those companies, with over $10 billion, and it really speaks of the partnership we have and will continue to have in the future, and that was the purpose of the mission to our province.

Mr. VanderBurg: I understand that a Dutch bank, Rabobank, is a well-known, agriculture-based bank and is interested in making some partnerships with Alberta. To the Finance minister: can the Finance minister tell us what is being planned with Rabobank and partnerships with this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. Certainly, each and every time we get a new bank coming into this province, it is a positive for the province of Alberta. We do like to see the availability of capital in this market, and we like competition. Each and every time there is a new bank coming in here, that allows its resources to be put in Alberta, it means more development for Alberta than is existing presently. Mr. Speaker, through to the hon. member, any time there is a bank that wants to come and put money into Alberta to allow for investment in Alberta, to allow for more growth in Alberta, the better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Postsecondary Education Affordability

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past few years this government has made some grand promises about advanced education. After years of fiscal neglect and skyrocketing tuition it finally appeared that the government had seen the light about the value of postsecondary education, but recently the government has started backpedalling. Promises made somehow no longer apply. Take, for example, the former Premier's promise of the most affordable postsecondary tuition in the country. Alberta still remains a less affordable place to go to university or college than, for example, Newfoundland or Quebec. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: has the current government now officially reneged on its promise to provide the most affordable tuition in Canada?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this is what happens when you do your research by reading the daily newspapers: you get the wrong facts. Essentially, what was reported was that we were reviewing whether or not the targets that had been set are still adequate targets. Those targets had been set in 2005, as the member well knows. In fact, if you were to just look at the numbers – and I think that the number reported was 60,000 – and if you looked at the 15,000 seats that we had committed to creating, we're already there. In fact, we may actually exceed that. Indeed, the number of seats that we create may be more; it may be in different places; it will most certainly probably be in different locations. We are working very collaboratively with the postsecondaries.

Mr. Tougas: Well, Mr. Speaker, apparently he didn't listen to the question or heard it very differently, but I didn't ask anything about that. My actual question was – and I'll ask it again: has the current government now officially reneged on its promise to provide the most affordable tuition in Canada? I wasn't asking about spaces; I was asking about tuition.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I simply took the opportunity to correct the hon. member's facts as he saw them, which weren't actually the truth. The affordability framework, which this government has brought forward and this government has acted on – $25 million worth in this budget is to create the affordability framework that the students and the faculty have talked to us about through the Learning Alberta report. Mr. Speaker, we are well on our way in becoming one of the most affordable places in this country for students to access the pathways for their personal success.

Mr. Tougas: Well, Mr. Speaker, a government that used to crow about the Alberta advantage has now adopted a more downbeat slogan: the price of prosperity. While Alberta used to be a land of unlimited opportunity, there is now a clear government move towards lowering expectations. Rather than live up to a promise, just try to lower expectations on tuition and expansion and try to lower expectations on the access to the future fund. By previous pledges this should be fully topped up to $3 billion by now but, instead, languishes at a third of that. To the minister: why at a time when surpluses have poured into government coffers has the access to the future endowment been so badly neglected?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the original intent on the access to the future fund was to utilize surplus dollars when they were available for savings. I would suggest to the hon. member that even under the Liberal plan that's on the website, they wouldn't probably have enough money to have put in even the billion dollars, if you did the math, which I don't think they've done.

But I want to go back, Mr. Speaker, to this affordability situation. Affordability in our postsecondary system is not just tuition. It's a lot of the issues that have been brought forward to this House. It is the total question of the quality of the education that the student has, the ability to transfer between our institutions, the transparency of our institutions as it relates nationally and internationally, where the student wants to create that pathway for their personal success. That's what it's all about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Public/Private Partnerships for School Construction

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As mentioned earlier in question period, this morning our government announced a new and innovative approach to school funding in Calgary and in Edmonton. This public/private P3 approach will consolidate the design and construction of new schools in these two cities. Can the Minister of Education tell us what the advantages of this new approach to school infrastructure funding will be for the construction of schools in my hometown of Calgary?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that despite what we've heard in the Legislature today, today was a great day for education in Alberta. As a result of our announcement today we have some 200 families in some 18 communities in Calgary and Edmonton who no longer have to worry about their kids riding school buses to elementary schools in these cities. Now, what we've done is we've announced that we're going to be bundling 18 schools in Calgary and Edmonton through one contractor.

An Hon. Member: How many schools?

Mr. Liepert: There are 18 schools, Mr. Speaker. So what's going to happen is that this will get schools built quicker, it will get them built more efficiently, and frankly what it will do is it will show that we have faith in the private sector despite what these opposition members have.

Mr. Webber: Again to the minister, Mr. Speaker: when can the communities expect construction to begin on these 18 new school projects in Calgary and Edmonton?

Mr. Liepert: Well, what's important in this, Mr. Speaker, is to work jointly with the four school districts because . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Please, please.

Mr. Liepert: We need to work jointly with the four school boards in Calgary and Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, because what we want to ensure is that what we design, that will be the design going forward, is what works for the school boards. The four school districts were elated this morning; 18 communities in Edmonton and Calgary are elated. The only people who aren't happy are the people in the opposition, who know that they're on a losing side in this argument.

Mr. Webber: There's also a great need, Mr. Speaker, for the expansion and renovation of existing schools throughout the Calgary area and, in particular, the Hamptons school in my Calgary-Foothills constituency. Can the minister indicate what timeline he is working with to allow other projects, such as the much-needed additions to existing school facilities, to go forward along with this new P3 model?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I was very clear in my announcement that this is the first effort in getting caught up in our school construction infrastructure. What we also need to do, though, is we have a number of areas in the province that are growth areas that also require new schools. What won't work in those areas, in all likelihood, is a bundling model like this because there are individual school requirements. So it's going to be my job as part of the cabinet planning committee to ensure that I make the case that some of the unallocated dollars that we have, that schools become the top priority, whether they're in Calgary, Edmonton, or elsewhere in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

2:10 Hub Oil Contaminated Site Cleanup

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Environment minister has stated in this House that it is not the role of Alberta Environment to advocate for environmental protection. To the minister: what, then, if not environmental protection, is the role of Alberta Environment?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the role of the Environment minister and the role of Alberta Environment is twofold: first of all, to ensure that the government and Albertans view decision-making through an environmental lens, to take into account the environmental impact of any decision that the government makes or individuals make and, secondly, to provide the necessary technical advice and expertise so that the decisions that are made using that environmental lens have some validity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1999, eight years ago, the Hub Oil explosion rocked the city of Calgary, killing two employees and causing significant soil and groundwater damage. To the Minister of Environment: was the operator of Hub Oil prosecuted to the full extent of the law, and if not, why not?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's the responsibility of anyone who causes damage to the environment, causes pollution, to clean that pollution up. In this particular case, Hub Oil is working with Alberta Environment, with the various stakeholders to put together a plan to do just that. As long as they continue to own that land, as long as they put in place the necessary provisions to ensure that any contamination does not go beyond the land in question, they're not in contravention of our legislation. So it's up to us to ensure that they follow through on their commitment.

Dr. Swann: That's the result of Bill 29 last year softening our environmental protection legislation.

Mr. Speaker, Hub Oil is refusing to actively treat and dispose of this contamination. At public meetings Hub Oil representatives have repeatedly stated that a risk management plan is too expensive. Could the Minister of Environment please explain how Hub Oil's risk management plan, that shifts responsibility for contamination to other parties, is consistent with the polluter-pays principle?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, in this particular case the risk management plan that has been proposed by Hub Oil has not been approved. That plan is in the process. Had it been approved, it would have been implemented by now. So I think the member actually answers his own question. If the plan was appropriate, if it was going to be approved, if it dealt with all the issues that have been raised by its stakeholders, it would have been approved. It has not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Government Initiatives

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some great things have happened in this province over the last six months. Government restructuring: Liberals didn't like it. Co-operation in the capital region: Liberals didn't like it. TILMA: Liberals didn't like it. Today 18 new schools, three of which are in my area: the Liberals didn't like it. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing regarding the recently announced municipal sustainability initiative, which Liberals don't like. This new municipal funding is for operating and core capital projects. Can the minister tell us what projects municipalities will be able to undertake with this new cash?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the funding of the municipal sustainability initiatives is being sent out in the very near future. The work that was done by municipalities, providing input for some of the guidelines, those guidelines are being sent out to municipalities at the present time. I think it's a good question. One of the prime examples is of the city of Edmonton, where they are spending $17.4 million on these recommendations to support a rehabilitation plan around the city of Edmonton.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, my first and last supplemental to the same minister. Affordable housing is a very important matter in the capital region and, I imagine, throughout the province. Can the minister advise: how is this money spent relevant to affordable housing, so that the Liberals have something to complain about?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, as you know, this government put $285 million of new money into affordable housing, and we have municipalities that are working very closely with municipalities on special housing concerns. In fact, the positive input that has been put in is from the city of Calgary. The city of Calgary, who received $63 million, is spending part of that money on 300 new affordable housing units plus a thousand rent supplements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Long-term Care Facilities

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's enthusiasm for public health care privatization knows no bounds. Every time they have tried to openly privatize, they have met fierce resistance on the part of an overwhelming number of Albertans; they're proceeding nevertheless. Their latest target is long-term care. In fact, the government has been moving to privatize long-term care for some time. It's privatization by stealth. The Conservatives know it. They just don't want Albertans to. According to documents tabled yesterday by the Minister of Health and Wellness, there has been a steady decrease in the number of publicly operated long-term care beds in the province and at the same time a big increase in the privately owned . . .

The Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. member, now we'll proceed. No, no, no. I'm sorry, hon. member. Remember we've got a rule.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I've obviously anticipated the question that would have been asked. We want to thank him for the direction the government is taking to ensure that the seniors' care is there as they would desire, in the format that they wish. Yesterday I had the opportunity, for example, of being in the Speaker's constituency at Shepherd's Care. Certainly, this might have been a private care. This is assisted living, not necessarily long-term care, but they have a whole range of facilities here in Edmonton also that can serve the specific needs. It doesn't even mean that you have to transfer the place in which you live. It's a matter sometimes of providing the health to where you are rather than having to make them move from a building to another building.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors' concerns are the last thing this minister wants to address. The fact is that from 2001 to 2006 we lost close to 11,000 publicly run long-term care beds while the number of privately run beds increased by over 900. Why is this government quietly squeezing out quality public health care?

Mr. Melchin: On the contrary, we're actually working towards the direction of aging in place, allowing seniors to be able to live in their own facilities, in their own homes to the extent that they can. Many times those in long-term care actually even progress in health and can go back to assisted or designated assisted living. Their care and their standard of health do change. They're not perpetually having to be in a place where they might have to die.

In respect to whether it's private or public, it has always been a combination of private. The private sector has always participated in the provision of long-term care. That's why there's also a standard, provisions of continuing care that have been put in place to ensure that all facilities meet the requisite high standards of patient care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister knows that there are almost three times as many private supportive living units in Calgary than there are publicly owned, and there are twice as many privately run long-term care beds in Calgary than there are public ones. Why are seniors' lives being put at risk for the sake of a Conservative ideological bias toward privatization at all costs?

Mr. Melchin: Well, we're certainly glad to hear the opposition put on the table that they feel that everything should be public at all costs and that the private sector has no role in our lives. It's quite contrary to the whole development of this great country in which we live, in which you and I can make private choices, can have private ownership and even the provision of services to an individual that are private. In this case it is the level of care that's important and even sustaining a person in their own place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Safety of Human Service Workers

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I raised some crucial questions about the health and safety of human services workers in this province. Unfortunately, I was not able to get the answers that these workers need, so today I will try again. Workers in the Department of Children's Services report the second highest long-term disability rate in government. Overall, many workers feel that the Department of Children's Services has failed to completely implement basic occupational health and safety measures. My question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. What is the minister doing to help Children's Services fully implement occupational health and safety standards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I have identified in this House on a number of occasions, the occupational health and safety standards apply equivalently to all of those members of our staff that are covered. The questions that were raised yesterday: I've already asked my staff to make sure that we are networking with Children's Services to determine whether or not there is a concern that has been expressed that we should explore. I certainly take very seriously the mandate of trying to make the workplace as safe as possible. So we have taken that consideration. I will be hearing a report back, no doubt, and we'll share that with the hon. member. I know that the hon. member shares concerns about workers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Compassion fatigue is a tremendous problem for human service workers. The nature of social service work and constant case overloading can be both physically and emotionally draining. Of all Alberta government employees, workers in Children's Services comprise the youngest workforce but report the highest use of the employment assistance program, which deals with the emotional/psychological health of government employees. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: what is being done to work with the Minister of Children's Services to reduce the physical and emotional toll caused by compassion fatigue?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that's very specific to the compassion fatigue, and I think that there's a necessity to explore that. I would just say that in 59 centres where we also have in Employment, Immigration and Industry many counsellors, many social workers, many people that deal with compassionate issues related to low income, sometimes very difficult social circumstances in terms of children's benefits, in terms of family conflict, in terms of those kinds of circumstances which are stressors in family life, we have many social workers as well who do a very determined job to try and follow through on behalf of the clients as well as gain support. So we'll look at that in that context.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. Social service workers are often forced to enter alone into situations that armed police officers would not enter without their partners or flak jackets. Workers have told me that they have been called at home and told not to go to work the next day because the threat is too great. All too often social service workers are exposed to death threats, the presence of minor weapons like knives and baseball bats, and illegal drug use. To the Solicitor General: the main problem is that human service workers do not have access to the criminal and police records they need to identify clients that are a potential risk. What is your department doing to facilitate access for these workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raises a very legitimate concern. We are doing everything that we can in our department to ensure that all of those who work in the social programs have the information that they require to deal with their clients in an appropriate manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. As the chair of rural caucus I've heard that some municipalities did not receive as much grant funding under the new municipal sustainability initiative as they did in the last fiscal year for capital and operating expenses. Now, this seems inequitable. So what steps is the minister prepared to take in order to level this playing field?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to emphasize that this government is responsive to the needs of municipalities. My ministry and myself have reviewed the situation, and I'm very pleased to announce that we are going to be providing supplemental support to those municipalities. We have said all along that no municipality should receive less, and we are supporting that with $1.4 billion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's very good news. My first supplement to the same minister: who will qualify for this targeted investment? How do they get in on this action?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, last year there was a program in place, the target investment program. Some municipalities received more funding from the target investment program than they did from the municipal sustainability initiative. There are 56 smaller municipalities that are involved. Those are the municipalities that will be receiving that funding. There is one town, one municipality, and I believe 54 villages. Those municipalities will be contacted in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that municipalities need the assurance of long-term, predictable funding in order to do their planning, can the minister tell us how long this funding will remain in place?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have committed to consulting with the municipalities and the organizations on the funding in years 2 and 3 and in the future. Year 2 we will have $500 million available, year 3 $600 million, and there is a commitment at one point to be ramped up to $1.4 billion up to year 10. I can assure municipalities that we will be working with them in ensuring that that funding will be delivered to best address their needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Farm Fuel Rebate Program

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the recent budget debates the Minister of Agriculture and Food downplayed the fact that his department had not reviewed or monitored the farm fuel benefit program. The minister claimed that desk audits had been completed as we go along. Desk audits seem like something that Enron would use to validate their budget. We know that millions of dollars have been wasted. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Will the minister admit that he was wrong when he made this statement, that no desk audits have in fact been completed and that the farm fuel benefit program has not been examined by this government since 1997?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, yes, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar made some interesting allegations during the Committee of Supply, and he probably will come back to those again. I did not believe state that desk audits are completed. I said that we are now doing desk audits, which is the initial process that we're going to go through in our review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. If this government would follow the Alberta Liberals' advice and get rid of all the freeloaders on this farm fuel benefit program, there would be extra money for eligible farmers so that they could see a real drop in their fuel prices when they need it this spring. Now, will the minister commit to having a full audit done of this program before the next general election to determine how many millions of dollars have been lost, or does this minister require another 10 years to accomplish that task?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, this is about the third time I've been asked about following the Liberals' lead. I think, probably, it has to be in the Liberals' handbook that all farmers are inherently dishonest because it comes back to that, it comes back to that, and it comes back to that.

An Hon. Member: He called them all freeloaders.

Mr. Groeneveld: He did. He absolutely did.

Mr. Speaker, we started the program. The Auditor General has called our attention to it, and we're proceeding as we go ahead. The hon. member also alleged in the paper a week ago that $17 million to $34 million probably was being cheated on by farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If anyone should know, it should be the hon. minister, but it was Tory city slickers that ridiculed agricultural support programs during the PC leadership race. The current Minister of Finance knows all about it, as does the current minister of community development and services because it was his EA that was complaining about agricultural grants, not Alberta Liberals.

Now, can the minister explain why farmers in other jurisdictions such as Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and British Columbia have only seen minor increases in their electricity costs while Alberta farmers have seen a 38 per cent increase in theirs?

Mr. Groeneveld: Probably the biggest problem: there's not a whole lot of Liberal city slickers. That's probably a problem from the other side of the House.

As I said before, I'm a farmer. I wouldn't farm anywhere else in Canada, and I'm not paying any more for my power and fuels than anyone else.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Law Enforcement Review Board

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A key factor in maintaining public confidence in policing is timely and effective decisions from bodies such as the Law Enforcement Review Board, which hears appeals from Albertans who have a complaint concerning police officer conduct and from police and peace officers who have been the subject of discipline arising from a complaint. However, the board has been without a permanent chair for some time, hampering its effectiveness and creating a large backlog of cases. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can he tell us what is being done to ensure that the board has the leadership it needs to function effectively?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to confirm that Calgary lawyer John Phillips has been appointed chair of the Law Enforcement Review Board effective today. Mr. Phillips has 30 years' experience practising law in Alberta. His broad awareness of law enforcement and policing issues and processes makes him a valuable addition to the board. The appointment of Mr. Phillips ensures that the board's work will not be interrupted.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police recently passed a resolution calling for increased staff and funding for the Law Enforcement Review Board. Can the minister tell us what his department is doing to address the backlog of cases before the board? When will these cases be cleared up?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, we have taken a number of steps to address some of these concerns brought forward. We are increasing the number of board members from seven to nine, we're having two or more board members sit as a separate panel, allowing two hearings to proceed at the same time, we have now built a permanent dedicated hearing room to help address scheduling issues, and we have made the chair a full-time position.

Statement by the Speaker

Spring Session Statistics

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 86 questions and answers today.

At this point hon. members might be interested in some numbers and statistics, recognizing that the Legislature will continue to sit, so these numbers will be amended tomorrow to give them current validity.

In this spring session of 2007 this is day 45. We've had 11 evening sittings. Last year, in 2006, we sat 42 days in the spring, including 28 evening sittings. In other words, we sat longer in 2007 than in 2006.

As of 6 o'clock last night this Assembly has sat for 14,873 minutes compared to 14,395 in 2006. In other words, there are nearly 500 more minutes as of 6 o'clock last night. If we sit today till 6 o'clock, that will be another 300 more minutes. That will be 800 more minutes, or 12 hours, more this year than last year. The number of hours as of 6 o'clock last night was 247 hours and 53 minutes compared to 239 hours and 55 minutes last year.

Thus far the words spoken in this Assembly this year are 2,014,117 as of 6 o'clock last night. Last year in the spring sitting it was 1,845,345 words.

Oral Question Period. This year, in 2007, we've had 10 question periods with 15 sets of questions, a set being three questions and three answers; 11 question periods with 16 sets of questions; and four with 17 sets of questions. In 2006 the Assembly had six with 15 sets. Remember: this year it was 10. Last year there were two with 16. This year there were 11. There were also four with seven.

The number of questions and answers in this Assembly in 2007 as of this question period, which ended just a minute or two ago, is 3,896 questions and answers compared to the 3,151 in 2006, a difference of 745. That does not include the 49 occasions when more than one minister responded to the same question.

This year the number of government bills that have thus far received third reading and Royal Assent is 20 compared to 42 last year. Government bills left on the Order Paper that we have – we'll see some progress, presumably, this afternoon – are 25 as compared to two in 2006. Since 1971 the number of bills left on the Order Paper varied between zero and 10 with the exception of this year, with 25; 1971, in which there were 22; and 1974, when there were 20.

Private members' public bills that have received Royal Assent is one in 2007, the same as in 2006. Since 1993, when the new provisions were made for private members' public bills to go through the process to actually receive royal assent, we've now had 41 of them.

In terms of sessional papers there'll be a few more tablings coming up, but it's essentially the same as last year. So far this year it's been 641; last year it was 646.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to read the preamble, but I am pleased to present a petition with 30 further names regarding rental difficulties that people are having in this province. The one point I would like to make is that these names were collected at the housing listening forum that was held recently at the Edmonton public library, and it's notable that the first two names on this petition under the area for address have indicated no fixed address.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three petitions today. The first one has 42 signatures, and it is the one that's calling on the government to finish the overpasses and interchanges at the locations where the Anthony Henday, the Edmonton ring road, intersects Lessard Road, Callingwood Road, and Cameron Heights Drive.

The second one has 60 signatures, and it's the one that is calling on the government to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

I'm under the impression that this brings the total number of signatures to 1,940.

The third petition, Mr. Speaker, is the one talking about the pay parity for workers who work with people with disabilities. I've submitted it before. Today I'm submitting 152 signatures, which brings the total to 3,065.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have today a petition signed by 176 people who are concerned with staff remuneration for those who are working with persons with developmental disabilities, and they are from 11 communities: Arrowwood, Vulcan, Carmangay, Blackie, Champion, Nanton, Milo, Calgary, Lomond, Mossleigh, and Okotoks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by a number of constituents from Edmonton-Centre. It's the same petition that's been circulating, urging the government to take immediate and meaningful measures to help low-income and other Albertans with the escalating and frequent increases in monthly rental costs.

The Speaker: Before we proceed on this matter, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce a group visiting from China. They're individuals employed by the Ministry of Finance in China. They're up in the public gallery. They're being hosted by the University of Alberta School of Business. They are being accompanied, I believe, by John Doyle, if I'm correct. I will practice my Chinese pronunciation here if everyone will indulge me.

All the guests may rise and remain standing if you like. From the Financial Bureau of Gansu, Zhang Qingguo; from the Financial Bureau of Guangdong, Lin Hong; from the Financial Bureau of Tianjin, Han Lin; from the Financial Bureau of Hainan, Qui Xiaona; from the Financial Bureau of Shanxi, Sun Xiangrong; from the Financial Bureau of Shandong, Xia Ying; from the Financial Bureau of Xinjiang, Liu Yan; from the Financial Bureau of Chongqing, Leng Xiang; from the Financial Bureau of Changzhou, Wang Xin; from the Financial Bureau of Zhejiang, Hong Xiaoran; from the Financial Bureau of Shaanxi, Wang Bin; from the Financial Bureau of Xianyang, Nan Yan; from the Financial Bureau of Qinghai, Kui Yinghong; and from the Financial Bureau of Fujian, Hu Shanhong. I would ask everybody, please, to give them a warm, Canadian welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Ni hao.

head: 2:40 Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 46 Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce for first reading Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will separate the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board into two separate regulatory bodies: a new Energy Resources Conservation Board and the Alberta utilities commission. An updated regulatory system supports this government's commitment to effectively manage growth pressures. There is an increase in applications brought on by increased oil and gas activity and the demand for electricity generation and transmission. Alberta has a world-renowned regulatory system for our energy industry, and this restructuring builds on that success and will ensure that Albertans have access to a robust regulatory authority as we develop our resource and utility systems. I would like to thank all the participating agencies for their co-operation and hard work on this important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 46 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Bill 214 Healthy Futures Act

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce private member's Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act.

The purpose of Bill 214 is to require government policy decisions to undergo a health impact assessment to examine a policy's effect on a wide range of factors like income, education, and environment that influence the health of our society. It is more sensible and cost effective to focus on prevention rather than to deal with problems created by unhealthy public policy.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give my thanks for the assistance I received from staff Lori Deluca and Glen Hughes and also to express my appreciation to the table officers for their help and their immense assistance on this.

Thank you so much.

[Motion carried; Bill 214 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today a presentation to the Alberta Residential Tenancies Advisory Committee, very clearly a nonpartisan group, on the experience with rent control in Ontario, showing what an absolutely disastrous effect it had on the development of rental properties and how it affected the most vulnerable in society and their ability to access any kind of lodging under rent controls.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness to table an e-mail from a constituent of his from the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud, one Kayla England, who raises some questions and expresses some concerns about seismic testing at Marie Lake.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. Youthful democracy is alive and well at Sir Winston Churchill high school in Calgary-Varsity as my first two tablings today will attest. The first set of letters my office received in favour of lowering the working age were written by Them Hoang, Sina Behbahaninia, Sid Mehra, and Vivian Cho.

The second set of letters my office received were opposed to lowering the working age and were written by Harry Han, Hyungmo Gu, Amir Mominov, Flora Kim, Qurat-ul-ain Khan, Ashley Li, Kent Feng, Mehrgan Devony*, Winnie Hsiung, Tiago Lins, Nina Chang, Laima Ekhlis, and Simone Mehra.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Sir Winston Churchill ESL students and their teacher, Jodi Hill*, for voicing their concerns to you and through you to all members of this House.

My third tabling is of four letters from Janet McTavish, Ayodele Sombo, Suzanne and Grant Basiuk, and Sandra Harland expressing great concern over the lack of government support for school-age child care.

Mr. Speaker, my final tabling of the session comes from Carla Tetz, who writes, "We had the hope that perhaps we could stay in Calgary, maintain our employment and raise our children here . . . but it is apparent that we must move due to high rental increase."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is a petition from Mr. Mike Judd of Pincher Creek enclosing 368 signatures from the Friends of Mount Bacchus calling for "a moratorium on development on the eastern slopes (particularly extractive industry), and full scale public hearings to determine the future of one of Canada's premier ecosystems."

The second was tabled inappropriately earlier this week as a petition and is from Tanya Woodruff of the Tomahawk area, with 120 signatures calling for exposure guidelines to be strengthened for children, pregnant women, and the elderly in relation to schools, particularly close to sour gas operations.

The third is a letter from Mr. Eric Musekamp of the Farmworkers Union of Alberta recognizing the death of Kevan Chandler, a farm worker through Tongue Creek Feeders, one year ago this week and calling on the government to act to address basic minimum work standards to protect agricultural workers.

The fourth, again from Mr. Musekamp, is a letter to the Alberta government recognizing the third annual farm worker day, August 20, and calling for raised awareness of the working conditions faced by agricultural workers and remembering those that have died.

Mr. Speaker, a further one is from a Calgary teacher in my constituency of Calgary-Mountain View, Wendy Kurchak, and I quote: "Mr. Liepert seemed to say that teachers' salaries are the cause of operating cost deficits" and suggested that the school boards need extra operating funds as a result. She begs to differ.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an e-mail with the appropriate number of copies to table today. It's from a constituent of Edmonton-Mill Woods stating:

I am gravely concerned and disappointed about the government's lack of commitment to solve the "unfunded liability" for Alberta teachers. Without threats or conditions this issue needs to be solved immediately so that working teachers and pensioners can receive the monies that are owing them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a document we received through a FOIP request which clearly shows that the racing industry renewal initiative has been continued for a 10-year time period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I beg your indulgence; they may both be a little long. The first is some summer reading which is highly recommended for all members of this Legislature. It's a university paper written by a brilliant young man who serves as the chief page at the Senate in Ottawa. His name is David Taylor. The title of the paper is Glass Houses: A Critical Analysis of Democracy in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, Based on the Procedures and Practices of the Senate of Canada.

The second tabling I have this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is the program from the city of Edmonton's 56th annual Salute to Excellence, the hall of fame induction ceremony. I'd just like to read off the names of those awarded if I could, please. In the arts and culture category: Walter Jule and Madge McCready. In the community service hall of fame: Margaret Weir Andrekson, Krishan Joshee, Dr. Dianne Kipnes, Mr. Irving Kipnes, and Reverend Donald Mayne. In the sports hall of fame: Orville Franchuk, Don Horwood, Leigh McMillan, and Danielle Peers. I would like to thank all of those fine individuals for their contributions to this city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings today. I'm tabling first of all copies of a rent notice received by Mike and Patti Beaudry. Like thousands of other Albertans, they received this notice shortly after the government's policy on rent guidelines was announced. The notice is for $400 per month more.

Also, a notice from a constituent named Linda Retallack. Linda is facing an increase of $500 per month.

Mr. Speaker, neither Mike and Patti nor Linda have read the documents tabled by the hon. President of the Treasury Board, so they don't yet understand how well off they actually are.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your patience while I table four documents today. The first and second are letters from Edmonton-McClung constituent Mr. Eric Lindstrom. In his first letter he talks about the rental crisis and the need to prevent the sale of rental buildings and for landlords to replace what they've already sold and also for rent controls to protect tenants.

The second is also from Mr. Lindstrom, in which he highlights the income or financial angle in terms of pensions, social assistance, inflation, and the cost of living.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from Edmonton-McClung resident John LeBlanc, a senior. Mr. LeBlanc wants the education taxes paid by seniors from 1993 till now refunded and to stop collecting this tax from seniors.

The fourth and last is from my constituent Ype Bouma and titled Driving in Alberta. Mr. Bouma has concerns and ideas with respect to drivers' behaviour, road design, planning, signage, and maintenance as well as vehicle maintenance and inspections. He even attached diagrams and pictures for everyone's reference.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today the 20th annual report of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the calendar year ended December 31, 2006. It also includes the audited financial statements for the fiscal years 2005-2006 and the 10th annual report of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Alberta branch. All members will receive a copy shortly.

Projected Government Business

Ms Blakeman: Under Standing Order 7(6), I think it is, could I ask one of the government House leaders to share with us the projected government business for next week?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, after giving it due consideration and careful thought, I've come to the conclusion that we should be able to finish the business of the House today, and it will not be necessary for us to meet next week.

Bill 43 Appropriation Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, the budget has undergone scrutiny for many days and many hours here in the House. Now it is truly time to take the budget to Albertans and let them see whether the government has reached and reacted to their priorities. I look forward to the opportunity to do that very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and speak on the Appropriation Act, 2007. I'll be very brief. I want to talk about the ministry of infrastructure. As we all know, road conditions all over Alberta are really bad. Even though we put lots of money into this department, I still receive so many complaints, not only in Edmonton but all over Alberta. What's the reason? I mean, I know that some members are saying that it's shortages of labour and that it's very hard for the contractors to finish the work in time.

Another thing I want to discuss, you know, in this ministry is that new areas, especially in my constituency, are growing fast. The new areas need new schools and new libraries and rec centres, and when I see the capital plan from the government side and we don't see that for at least – what? – three or four years, I'm surprised. I want to ask the minister concerned what answer he has for those people who live in the new areas. Where would the children go for the next three or four years? So new schools, new libraries, rec centres for the new areas: they need them desperately. Those are necessities, I think, for my constituents in that area.

The next question I want to ask is to the minister of seniors. Some seniors are complaining that some drugs are not included in the plans, and they have to pay money from their pocket. I just want to ask the minister if he has any plan to cover all the medicines for the seniors. They are also complaining about the transportation. Some seniors are complaining about the property education tax and also complaining about long-term care centres.

The next ones I want to move to are the ministries of education and postsecondary education: student loans, students' tuition fees, housing for the students, and parking facilities in the university area. You know, we need attention on those things for our students, our future, I should say. We need more apprenticeship spaces for them if we want a long-term solution for the shortages of labour in this province. Definitely we need some new colleges, universities for semiskilled workers.

Next I want to move on to some miscellaneous questions. You know, last year this government passed Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. Is there any plan to reverse that because there's lots of criticism? I think the members sitting on the other side might have heard from some stakeholders that if they really are serious about transparency and accountability, they should reverse this Bill 20 and prove that they are transparent.

Another thing I already asked during the budget debate is about the general revenue fund, that the blue book is not up to date. We can't find lots of information in there. I want to see the full details. It would be really nice if the minister concerned takes that seriously and improves a little bit on that blue book for transparency.

My next question is on the website for all the grants: CIP, CFEP, and many others. The website is still not up to date. It's not showing the full details of how they get the grant, under which grants, and what the rules and regulations are. It's not very clear. I think we should work on the government's website, you know, especially with the government's new slogan that they want to be transparent. If they really are serious about this, then they should update the website, especially the rules and regulations and even on some of the grants. They don't even have rules in place right now. So, you know, the government should work on this.

Now, my next few questions are about my own portfolio, the Ministry of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Yesterday, I think, I asked the question about the book publishing companies and the film industry. We are losing the cultural and arts sector industry, and I request once again – I know I asked the question, and still the question was not answered properly – the hon. minister to reconsider their stand on this. I want the minister and this government to help this industry, help this sector as much as possible.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Artists, especially, are suffering because of inflation. You know, in this sector they really work hard, and I think that if we are serious about promoting arts and culture in this province, we should seriously help this sector. If this sector flourished, then it would help all other ministries, like health care, even education. The artists play a really important role in that. I don't want to go into details, but the minister knows how important the arts and culture sector is in this province.

The next questions I want to ask the minister concern the question of human rights. People know that the system takes lots of time. If somebody complains to the Human Rights Commission, it will take years. How can we find the solution to speed up the application process so that more and more people who are discriminated against can somehow complain to the Human Rights Commission? So far that's the only reason they don't.

I've asked this question about the sports policy many times, and I still don't see the sports policy. I heard that this policy was made, I think, a long time ago but never implemented. I once again request the minister concerned to implement the sports policy so that we have the policy long term, especially for the new areas, when and where we can have new schools, recreational facilities, and school grounds, et cetera.

I think some other members want to speak on the appropriation bill, and that's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to third reading of Bill 43, which represents the Appropriation Act, 2007. It is our view that the Assembly should not accept the Appropriation Act, Bill 43, for a number of very important reasons. Most importantly, we don't believe that this budget actually deals with the real problems facing Albertans in this period of the overheated economy and the extremely rapid growth that we're seeing in the province.

Mr. Speaker, before I elaborate on that, I would like to introduce an amendment to the bill, which I will provide copies of to all members and to the table. I will move that Bill 43, Appropriation Act, 2007, be not now read a third time because the Legislative Assembly believes that the expenditures contained therein fail to deliver on the government's promise to manage pressures created by Alberta's overheated economy, particularly regarding infrastructure, health, education, and housing.

Mr. Speaker, this is, in fact, a nonconfidence motion in the government. Should the motion pass, the government falls.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we will allow the pages a moment to distribute the amendment, and we'll refer to the amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We believe that this bill should not now be read at this time because the expenditures contained therein fail to deliver on the government's promise to manage pressures created by Alberta's overheated economy, particularly regarding infrastructure, health, education, housing, and royalties. In terms of the economy the Premier was very clear right after he was elected as leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and thereby became the Premier of the province that the government would not touch the brake with respect to the economy.

Mr. Speaker, the government has created conditions for an overheated economy through a number of measures. Extremely low royalties is the main one, the elimination of most environmental regulation in the area surrounding the tar sands at Fort McMurray being the other one, and the third one is, of course, creating conditions for the undermining of legitimate trade unions working in the oil sands through the employer-friendly unions like CLAC, the merit shop, and, of course, the temporary foreign workers program, which has left thousands of qualified Alberta tradespeople working at other jobs rather than the ones they are trained for.

The entire development of the tar sands in the present circumstances is not being done, in our view, in the interests of the people of Alberta and certainly not in the long-term interests of the people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. They are being done in the interests of the foreign oil companies, the giant energy corporations, and, of course, in the interests of the George Bush administration's energy policy, which is to find a safe, secure, and relatively cheap source of energy given that their adventure in Iraq has come to a rather bad end. It's pretty clear that the invasion of Iraq was plan A for the Bush administration, and Alberta's tar sands and this government's policies around that are plan B.

I want to make it perfectly clear that we believe that the provincial government is selling out Alberta's natural resources. They are selling them for a price well below what other jurisdictions are requiring. Of course, the main examples that are most often cited are Alaska and Norway, but I think other members have during debate in this Assembly brought forward information that shows that many American states have much higher royalties than Alberta does. Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that I think it's absolutely unacceptable that we have a royalty regime in this province that allows much of the oil produced in Fort McMurray in the tar sands to be sold with only 1 per cent royalty being collected. That means that there's not enough value being created for Albertans and particularly for future generations of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I think that's one of the major issues we need to deal with because unless the government has a plan, a rational plan, for the development of the Alberta economy and particularly the tar sands, no amount of expenditure on infrastructure is going to be able to close the gap, and I think it's time the government realized that. There's nothing in the budget which addresses the main indicators of growth pressures. I want to just say that provincial inflation is now 5 and a half per cent, which is at its highest in 15 years in Canada. A labour shortage is grinding away productivity across the province. The housing and construction industry is looking at 25 per cent increases in building costs, and rents are increasing at twice the rate of inflation.

I don't think that the lack of a plan on the part of the Conservative Party, the Conservative government which is reflected in this budget is going to resolve these issues. In fact, I think it will only become worse. It's not management, Mr. Speaker. To quote Stephen Colbert: this is like rearranging the deck chairs on the Hindenburg.

I want to also talk a little bit about infrastructure. We've done some research on this, Mr. Speaker, and more needs to be done. We estimate that the debt of this province, if you measure it in terms of infrastructure, is close to $20 billion. I remind the House that when former Premier Klein was elected as leader of the Conservative Party and became the Premier of the province, he talked about the $23 billion that the province owed. That was the debt of the province when Ralph Klein became the Premier of the province. He tried to claim that he had paid it all down, but of course if you look at the cost for the infrastructure that exists, you'll see that there's $20 billion or close to that in debt remaining in terms of the infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, $20 billion is a lot of money. This budget has about $600 million earmarked for capital projects. There are thousands of kilometres of roads and highways that have not been repaired. There's an estimated $5 billion of infrastructure deficit in Calgary. Over a hundred new school requests have been ignored, with cost overruns and delays with the health care infrastructure. I just want to indicate that there's less than an inflationary increase for operating budgets, a 5 per cent decrease in capital funds for schools – no budgetary planning for the ATA, and school board negotiations are coming up – and there's more prescribed funding tying the hands of schools and school boards.

In terms of health, hospital beds and wards are not being used because of severe health professional shortage: 1,500 doctors short, 34,000 health professionals short in the next few years. Calgary health and other regions have a constant state of code burgundies and code reds. We have unforgivable delays and, subsequently, immense cost overruns in projects like the Calgary south hospital. The government refuses to be accountable and release the health workforce strategy. We have no idea how the $300 million set aside for the health workforce will alleviate the workforce pressures.

Mr. Speaker, I want to come to housing, which is the most severe problem facing this government and, I think, one that they have dropped the ball on rather badly. Renters are stuck between a rock and a hard place. Rent is rising at twice the rate of inflation, but wages aren't even matching inflation. Low-income and fixed-income families, seniors, people with disabilities, and AISH recipients are facing housing hardships. The middle class will whittle away to nothing. Its disposable income is eaten by rent increases. But the government's limited plan will not help them, and they're becoming desperate and destitute. What is needed is what the government has repeatedly rejected: the need for rent guidelines.

I want to just indicate in closing that that is, I think, just a tragic decision on the part of this government and one that has doomed tens of thousands or even hundreds of thousands of Alberta families to loss of their homes, loss of their disposable income, and in many cases has doomed them to poverty.

So, Mr. Speaker, we cannot support the bill, and we do not believe that it should be passed at this time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for questions or comments. The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much. I might have misunderstood what the hon. member had suggested, but coming from the oil sands capital of the world, which I'm very proud to have served as a mayor and alderman – and it is my home, and with our new one-month-old son we'll breathe the beautiful air in Fort McMurray and, I might also say, drink the beautiful water in Fort McMurray. Often it is said that politicians are inherently selfish. I can assure you that I will continue to do what this government is doing: ensuring protection of the environment and ensuring that all of us will enjoy the wonderful resource we've been blessed with.

I could interpret from what the hon. member has suggested that he really would like to see people out of work in my community of Fort McMurray. I could not disagree any more with what he is suggesting. The oil sands capital of the world, I might also remind the hon. member, as much as the New Democrats may want to shut down this economic opportunity – you know, the New Democrats have a wonderful reputation for working with unions as does this member in this government. I'm wondering what he is saying to the good union folks that are in Fort McMurray when really what he's suggesting is: shut down their jobs.

Mr. Mason: No.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, that's what I interpret. Maybe he needs to clarify, but I'm calling a spade a shovel here, and what I'm saying is that you're saying: shut it down. I could not disagree more with that because I want people to be able to feed their families, with a good job, while protecting the environment.

Let me add perspective as well. I remember that this government in its planning, and planning well out into the future, had a bridge to nowhere that was called the Peter Lougheed Bridge, a $50 million bridge. It crossed the Athabasca River. Everyone joked. The opposition joked because of the fact that it was a waste of taxpayer money. Well, now that bridge to nowhere is a bridge to a hundred billion dollars of economic opportunities for jobs. So ultimately we can protect and sustain the environment, give people jobs so they can feed their families, and I also even . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order.

Mr. Boutilier: Okay. Well, I get to finish my point, don't I? What's the point of order? What citations?

The Deputy Speaker: We'll deal with the point of order, and then you can finish.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the point of order.

Dr. Pannu: I'm just seeking clarification. Is he going to ask a question, or is he speaking to the amendment? That's not clear.

The Deputy Speaker: What's your citation?

Dr. Pannu: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Is he speaking to 29(2)(a), or is he speaking on the motion itself?

The Deputy Speaker: This is dealing with Standing Order 29(2)(a) where there's a five-minute question and comment period on what the previous speaker has said. That's what he's talking on. He's not speaking on the amendment; he's providing a comment, the comments he wishes to have. Previously, the House has allowed a lot of leeway on that particular situation, including that a member can stand up and ask for the speaker to continue for the remainder of the five minutes. So I feel that I have to allow the same privilege to this member to make his comments on what the previous member has stated.

So continue.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might also say that I hope that the commentary doesn't take away from my five minutes.

The Deputy Speaker: It didn't.

Mr. Boutilier: It didn't. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I would also like to be able to say that as we move forward, we had a bridge to nowhere that was criticized by others because we had planned ahead. We had streets paved, with fire hydrants and curbs, that people used to teach their kids to drive on, and we didn't have any homes on the investment of money that was put into it.

Let me just add – and the hon. member also sat on a municipal council here in Edmonton, a very good council – that it was interesting. We had a water treatment plant that we had planned ahead on, working in partnership with the provincial government, that accommodated water for 85,000 people – 85,000 people – and we were criticized because at the time we only had 35,000 people living there, enjoying the economic developments of the oil sands.

I had the opportunity and watched the fiscal regime that many people are critical of relative to the royalty regime that is in place today. Make no mistake about it. Working in partnership with the federal government that the fiscal regime that was signed when the Prime Minister came here with our Premier and the Minister of Energy back in late 1996 – I had the honour of being mayor – that public policy has attracted over a hundred billion dollars of investment opportunity. You know what? That is helping Edmonton. I might add to the hon. member, who comes from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, that this has created $45 billion of direct and indirect jobs for the good folks here in Edmonton and in Calgary. It's been doing that, and it's having a tremendous impact all across Canada.

I do not ever want to see this type of example of something shutting out. Perhaps the hon. member can stand up and clarify what he's saying, but I have on what he has said assumed that he really wants to shut down the oil sands. Now, if he's suggesting not, I would appreciate him standing up. We can stand together and hold our hands, saying: full speed ahead with the oil sands with the good plan that we have.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you get to respond.

Mr. Mason: Neither one, Mr. Speaker. Steady, progressive development for full employment for Albertans and manage the tar sands in a way that benefits Albertans, both this generation and generations to come.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Okay.

Does anyone wish to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the NDP opposition in the House has given an eloquent explanation for the motion before the House, so I don't need to spend too much time on repeating what my leader had to say. But I do want to put on record a couple of concerns which have led this caucus to bring this motion forward by way of our leader as a presentation just concluded. In this House in response to all kinds of questions during estimates debate and during question period the Minister of Education has been claiming that the Education budget increase is more than adequate. He uses a year, '97 for example, to draw attention to the fact of how much increase the budget has experienced. I want to set the record straight.

Yesterday in the House during question period he talked about an 85 per cent increase in the Education budget between '97 and 2007. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that that's absolutely misleading – absolutely misleading. If you adjust it for . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, are you speaking to the amendment, or are you speaking to issues that happened yesterday in the House?

Dr. Pannu: Yes, Mr. Speaker, speaking to the amendment before us.

The Deputy Speaker: Please restrict your comments to the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Indeed. The amendment draws attention to the fact that the budget has failed to address the serious problems that this budget creates and that this government has created over the years for education. Education is the most important responsibility that the government had, to secure the future of this province, to provide the best education possible for our children who are in school now so that they will become the guarantors of future prosperity. This budget fails, Mr. Speaker, and this is why this motion is before the House. Why this budget fails is because it doesn't provide enough money. That's the point that I was trying to make.

In 2007 dollars the increase in the Education budget from '93 to 2007 is 11.5 per cent, not 85 per cent. Again, in terms of 2007 dollars the difference between the 1997 and 2007 budgets is only 30 per cent, not 85 per cent as the minister has been claiming.

Now, on the other side, inflation over these years has gone way past 30 per cent. So the actual budget, the Education budget, included in the current 2007-2008 budget, in real value, in fact now means less in terms of money available to schools if you adjust for inflation and if you choose the right year for comparison.

I just want to set the record straight on that, Mr. Speaker. With that I conclude my remarks on the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is again available.

Seeing none, are there others wishing to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to be brief. I will be the first to concede that I, like the members of the NDP opposition, do not have a lot of confidence in this budget to address the promises that have been made by the government, and for the most part I agree with the sentiments expressed in this amendment. However, I do believe that the public service needs to be paid. The work of the government has to proceed, and I think that this amendment is nothing more than grandstanding of the highest nature.

The Official Opposition is long on record as having expressed our lack of support for the way that the Conservatives are managing this province, and I believe we've chosen a much more appropriate way to express that concern, Mr. Speaker. We held a series of standing votes under the Standing Orders where we took out those areas of the budget that we had concerns about and expressed our concern through that. As I say, I think that was a more appropriate way to do this. I don't believe we can accomplish much here today that hasn't already been accomplished, and for those reasons I cannot support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for question and comment.

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to participate on the amendment?

See none, does the mover wish to close?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Now, does anyone wish to participate back on the debate?

Mr. R. Miller: Again, very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I've had a number of opportunities to speak on Bill 43 and the budget in general during supply estimates.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order.

Mr. Mason: My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that a reasoned amendment on third reading ends debate on the main motion. Is that not correct?

Ms Blakeman: No. Only a hoist.

Mr. Mason: Only a hoist.

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have a citation to show that?

Mr. Mason: No. I guess that I'm wrong.

The Deputy Speaker: We're back on the debate. Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It must be the last day of school, I guess. I don't know.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to reiterate the concerns that I've made in the past regarding the lack of a savings plan in this budget. It causes me a great deal of concern as someone who would aspire to be the Finance minister for this province.

I'm particularly anxious to point out to members of this Assembly and all Albertans that the current Finance minister six months ago to the day believed in eliminating health care premiums, and somewhere over the last six months that seems to have evaporated. It's not represented in this budget, and I think that's unfortunate.

Six months ago to the day the current Finance minister was supportive of a resource revenue savings plan. That's not represented in this budget, and I believe that that's unfortunate.

Six months ago to the day the current Finance minister was supportive of the idea of capping increased spending at the combined rate of growth of inflation and population. That's not reflected in this budget, and I believe that's unfortunate.

I would hope that over the next several months, as the government does its planning for budget 2008, the Finance minister will perhaps revert to his old ways and find a way to convince his colleagues of the merits of those three very, very important initiatives, which are all reflected in Funding Alberta's Future, the document which the Official Opposition has produced. Not only the current Finance minister but, frankly, a number of people who sought the leadership of the Conservative party also supported similar initiatives.

I think there is a great deal of willingness on behalf of the people of this province to move in that direction, and I can only hope that the government will see the light, as it were. They've certainly come to recognize the will of the people when it comes to initiatives such as a broader ban on smoking in public buildings. I'm just hoping that they will as well recognize the wish of the people of this province to save some of the wealth that we're blessed with today to eliminate health care premiums, which has been high on many people's lists for a long time, and to find a way to cap spending at the rate of growth and inflation. Those are three priorities for this opposition, and I would strongly encourage them to be priorities for the government as they plan next year's budget.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone.

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going through my files of issues and concerns. Indeed, a couple of them come to mind here. I am particularly interested – and this is a cross-ministry concern – about what overriding policies the government has and what specific policies in each ministry are existing around specific strategies to protect people's personal information. I know that we have the overriding legislation available from the Health Information Act and PIPA, but I'm increasingly concerned with what I see around the collection of people's personal information, the posting of it on computers, and the sharing of it by Internet.

Even if it's just sending some information from one place to another, it's very difficult once it's on the Internet to be able to control it. I'm sure that many of us as politicians have experienced that you respond to one constituent's e-mail, and they then forward it on to their Facebook companions or whatever else, and then you start hearing back from 50 other people. When you answered that first e-mail, you weren't thinking that it was going to go to 50 other people, not that you're worried about what you said. That's the power of the Internet. It really can go out there to thousands and thousands of people.

I'm increasingly concerned with what the government is doing. If you're just being silent because you've got a plan well in hand and you know what it is and you don't want to share it with the bad guys, okay. Fine. But you need to signal something to people like me and to members of the public that you do have something quite concrete. If you're being silent because you don't have anything, then that's a deeper problem.

You know, I look at some of the pieces of information that have come my way, like the ability now to transfer personal information that is stored on one kind of document like a credit card or a passport or even the pass cards that we have. There's personal information that's electronically stored on this. The ability now to be able to harvest the information off of this and other kinds of documents and to be able to then share that – what strategies does the government have in place to be protecting us about this?

The other one is around using the voice-over Internet protocol and the ability now of some particularly inventive hackers to be able to harvest the phone numbers that people are actually trying to phone on either end off of that kind of information.

At the same time, I notice ever more information being requested from certain groups of people. I remember an article in which our own chief of police in speaking I think to a group of his colleagues was expressing concern that there were limitations on how much information they can get on people and that, boy, they'd sure like to have more. I mean, in this day and age where there are GPS chips in your cellphones, I think we need to have a better overall strategy about this.

It's not something that you can tag to any one particular department. It is something that I wish I could see better research being employed and funds being expended on across the board. I think as legislators this is going to become an increasing problem for us for two sides. One, we need to educate the public to beware and to be careful about how much personal information they give out. At the same time, we as government are trying to collect that very same information from people to use to be able to analyze that information and help us to make better decisions based on what we can get out of that. I think it's an ongoing area of concern.

The next issue that I want to raise is around the Human Rights Commission and just some observations that I have around that. I don't feel that it's working as it should be. You know, people have now become reconciled in some cases to avoiding the Human Rights Commission because it just takes forever, and that's a quote from some of my constituents. I note that in B.C. cases go straight to tribunal, but here there are not enough resources to have investigators for human rights. So we end up with a first attempt at conciliation, and we end up with a partial investigation, a statement of fact.

Then the director will either dismiss it or allow it to go forward. Then an HRC panel looks at it, and at that point it leaves the control of the Human Rights Commission and goes to the chief commissioner.

The lawyers aren't terribly happy with this system. They say that it doesn't work and that the remedies from the Human Rights Commission are too low to be meaningful. I question whether it's useful. The focus and the mandate of the commission as it sits now is not to punish but to try and put people back in the position they would have been in but for the discrimination. But the process that seems to be working to support that doesn't seem to be working, is what I'm trying to say.

I think it could be argued that the website is not very happy, and I'm putting a very positive spin on the words that were actually used to describe it. In particular, it's very difficult to do any research on the judgments. The panel judgments are listed by the year but not by the issue. You don't go on there looking for what the Human Rights Commission did in any given year. You go on there looking for other cases of discrimination based on gender or, you know, discrimination based on sexual orientation or some such thing. You don't go on there looking: gee, I wonder what they did in 1967. Those were a couple of the additional concerns that I wanted to raise while I had the opportunity.

If I can just clarify, I did raise yesterday that the government has set up two policies which are in conflict with each other. I was talking specifically about the decision-making process for school boards to prioritize where they want their schools built. Of course, there's great encouragement there to have the school boards close some schools in order to have a utilization rate that would enable them to open new ones. That policy is pitted against policies that our urban municipalities, our metro municipalities are trying to use to keep the inner part of our cities, not necessarily meaning the inner city but the centre of our cities, vital and to keep schools open there in some form or another and to make use of the building. There's nothing like having, basically, a square block of darkness in the middle of a community to really suck the life out of that community. The building is dark, it's not occupied at night, there are no lights on in it, and it is literally a black hole. It really damages neighbourhoods.

My communities in Edmonton-Centre were amongst the first wave of schools that got closed. Now, this would be eight years ago or so. I can really see the effect of that, particularly in Queen Mary Park, where we had the Queen Mary Park elementary school close. What it's done to that community is really sad because it is a meeting place for the community. Even if people don't have kids, they see the kids walk by. They see the parents walk by. They see people. You know, when there's a special night at the school, other people come to hear the Christmas choir and those kinds of things. It does bring a community together. When that school is gone and when there's no activity happening in that building, you lose that opportunity to connect. It's that connection that makes those communities safe. It has people knowing who's around, who's part of the community. They talk to each other. They know who should be there and who shouldn't be there. It does help to build communities. I'm quite concerned about this. I really urge the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing and the Minister of Education to make note of my comments here and to see if there isn't a way to stop pitting these two policies against each other.

Thank you for the opportunity to raise those additional issues around the appropriation budget. I appreciate it. I will let others make comments. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) does anyone wish to make any comments?

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Judicature Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Hon. members, debate was adjourned on amendment A1, so we are still considering amendment A1. Are there any members who wish to participate in the debate on A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General I'm pleased to continue the discussion in Committee of the Whole on Bill 18, the Judicature Amendment Act, 2007. Yesterday in relation to the House amendment to section 23(2)(d) I was in the process of stating the rationale for that amendment. The report on vexatious litigants, as I was saying, done by the Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia included the factor of, as an example, vexatious behaviour, and we interpreted the word inappropriately to include some level of persistence. But in light of the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, we are agreeable to having that clarified. We would propose to amend section 23(2)(d) to state: "persistently using previously raised grounds and issues in subsequent proceedings inappropriately."

The third House amendment is in regard to section 23.1(3), which states: "The Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Alberta has the right to appear and be heard in person or by counsel on an application under subsection (1)." The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung sought confirmation that the Attorney General would not be denied or prevented from appearing or being heard on vexatious litigant hearings initiated by a court on its own motion. I can confirm that there should be no difference between an application and a court's motion. Therefore, we propose to amend section 23.1(3) to clarify that the Attorney General has the right to appear and be heard at hearings initiated by a court on its own motion. The wording of the subsection would be: "The Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Alberta has the right to appear and be heard in person or by counsel on an application or a Court's motion under subsection (1) or (4)."

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the fourth House amendment is to section 23.1(6), which provides: "the Court of Appeal or a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench may make an order . . . binding on any one or more of the other Courts." I am putting forward an amendment to delete the words "a justice of" preceding "the Court of Queen's Bench." As a rule of interpretation the word "justice," of course, refers only to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, and this amendment would clarify that masters in chambers of the Court of Queen's Bench would also be allowed to make such orders that may be binding on one or more of the other courts. The current section does not limit the masters' authority in this regard, and the intention of Bill 18 is simply to give the courts additional powers, not to take away any powers.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to thank the members opposite for their constructive comments on the bill in second reading. Their input certainly helped to formulate the House amendments, and I think they will clarify and improve the legislation.

I would now like to move the amendments as stated to the House.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on amendment A1.

Dr. Pannu: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very brief. I want to just indicate my pleasure at the fact that the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has recognized and incorporated, as a matter of fact, some of the suggestions that I made in comments during the second reading of the bill. The amendment that he's proposing to section 23(2)(d) I think does clarify and address the concern that I expressed. I want to thank the member for giving careful thought to, obviously, the constructive way all of us engaged each other in debate on this bill. Two other amendments as part of A1 also seem to make sense, so I'm happy to support these amendments, and we'll see. We'll then vote on the bill as amended.

Thank you.

The Chair: Anyone else on amendment A1?
Ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on the motion? Did you want to speak on the bill, hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill?

Dr. Brown: Just a couple of further comments, Mr. Chairman. I will be very brief. Bill 18 empowers the courts to prevent an individual who has been found to be a vexatious litigant. The hon. member, as I mentioned, from Edmonton-Strathcona expressed a concern that the provision cast a fairly wide net. I would say that, as a whole, the bill makes it clear that the provision is meant to manage certain types of mischief, and I certainly have confidence in the fact that the judges will make an order only in such circumstances where it's necessary to protect the legal process from abuse. Nothing in the Judicature Amendment Act limits the authority of courts to stay or dismiss a lawsuit, which are powers that they already have.

I think that I have dealt with all the questions and concerns raised in debate and that we should move forward with the bill. Mr. Chairman, once again I urge all members of the Assembly to support Bill 18, the Judicature Amendment Act.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 18, Judicature Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 18 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 14Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I had put some questions on the record for the government that I was hoping to get a response about. But I will say again that overall I'm supportive of this legislation. For any of us that are at all close to the health sector, it's been made very clear to us that we need to have good preparations in place for a pandemic, which the experts tell us is almost certain to be coming within the next year to three years and which may well last in six-month scenarios, take us a couple of rounds or rotations to get through it. So it could be as long as 18 months before we're out the other side.

This bill is amending four pieces of legislation. It's essentially giving either the health regions or the ministry the ability, really, to do what needs to be done at times like that. I think we've been able to learn quite a bit from Ontario and their experience around SARS. Certainly, I think one of the major things is to make sure that lines of communication are clear and they're established prior to any pandemic actually beginning.

There is a Canadian pandemic influenza plan that maps out how Canada will prepare for it, and some of the questions that I'd asked were: what is Alberta's role in that overall plan? What can we expect from the provincial government, the roles and responsibilities? What's the co-ordination with other governments to anticipate problems? Provincial governments are responsible for mobilizing contingency plans and resources. What's been done with that?

I had gone through a sectional analysis previously, so I'm not going to repeat that. Overall I didn't have any large concerns with this. As I say, in second reading I had put some other questions on the record. At this point I'm happy to support Bill 14, the Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, and allow passage so that it can be implemented.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any others who wish to participate?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 14, Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 14 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 18 and 14.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 14. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 18.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 12Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007

Ms Evans: So moved.

I hope that this passes today. I think it's essential. I think it's a good-news bill for our constituents.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I will try to keep my comments brief considering the amount of work that we're trying to get through here this afternoon. I'd just like to reiterate the disappointment of the Official Opposition that, once again, when passing an amending bill which looks after income supports, we're not taking any measures to tie income support to the rate of inflation despite the fact that MLAs' remuneration is tied to the rate of inflation. We should be looking at some sort of a market basket measure and making sure that the people that are most vulnerable and in the most need in this province receive some protection from inflation, which we do not currently do.

Just briefly, Mr. Speaker, a very poignant example of that came to me recently when I attended the housing listening forum at the Milner library downtown and met a young lady who had moved to Edmonton to be nearer to the supports that she needed. Her first apartment was in Mill Woods, a very nice apartment, but she was receiving AISH. As we all know, I believe it was for a period of about nine years the AISH supplement did not increase at all. As a result of that and increasing rents, she was forced to downgrade her accommodation to a not-so-nice apartment in the Beverly community. Then a couple of years later she was once again mandated to downgrade her accommodations to an apartment on 97th Street because she could no longer afford the place that she had in the Beverly community. She's currently living in a rooming house on 95th Street, with crack dealers and prostitutes in the same home.

It was just a really striking example of how the lack of tying income support to inflation has forced someone who through no fault of her own has now had to downgrade her housing to the point where she's living in not just undesirable but, in fact, unsafe conditions. I think it really illustrates why the opposition pushes so hard on this point and why I felt compelled once again today to remind the government of how important it is to take that into consideration. Again, I would hope that the next time we review income supports, we would take that step.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Martin: Just very briefly. I suppose we could talk about all sorts of things in this bill. We know that this is a result, Mr. Speaker, of how the government reacted badly legislatively.

Hopefully, I see this as a necessary cleanup bill, but we do really have to concern ourselves somewhat with how we are treating the vulnerable people in this society. There's a growing group of them. I understand that – while the minister's here – to our surprise there is a minimum wage announcement today, that there would be an increase to $8. That came as a total shock to us, but the Premier announced it today.

I would hope that in the Legislature we could do things a little differently because we had this discussion. I was told that we would be moving along with this; there would be an announcement about an increase at some point. But sitting there, I was totally surprised, Mr. Speaker. So I think I tie this into how we're operating within the government here. I know that the minister's probably not going to comment on that because I understand that she has a news conference tomorrow, but I guess she'd be glad to know that it's already out there.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, any others wish to speak?

Does the hon. minister wish to close?

Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-McClung I'd just like to say that we are prepared to vote . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, first we should allow someone to move on behalf.

Mr. Tougas: Oh, okay. Well, you called me.

The Deputy Speaker: I didn't see anyone standing up.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill I'm pleased to move Bill 17 at third reading, and that's the Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

As you know, this bill is a proactive solution that, it's believed, will clarify the law for Albertans. It'll avoid unnecessary legal action in two areas. The first area deals with the recovery of possession of land, while the second area deals with cases in the area of conflict of laws between Alberta and another jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has asked that I thank members of the Assembly on his behalf for supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Now, where was I? It was a very complicated issue. Again, as my colleague from Edmonton-McClung tells me, this bill is fine. We've looked it over and checked it out with stakeholders, and we're perfectly ready to vote in favour of it, actually. That's all I have to say.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else?

Does the hon. member wish to close?

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

Judicature Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to move Bill 18, the Judicature Amendment Act, 2007, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General for third reading.

Mr. Speaker, we just heard debate a few minutes ago in Committee of the Whole regarding this bill. It amends the act to give the courts in Alberta greater power to deal more effectively with individuals who waste time and resources in court. This legislation will simplify procedures for dealing with vexatious litigants.

Amendments to the act were made. They are important as well to make sure that there is a right of access to justice and that it's not undermined by vexatious litigants. I believe these amendments, as we heard earlier, will preserve the right of access to justice for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill. I know that the hon. minister, when he spoke to it in legislative review, was very clear that this has been a long time in coming. It's important for the province of Alberta. Having said that, I would ask members of the Assembly to support this in third reading.

Mr. Tougas: I might as well just repeat what I said before. My friend from Edmonton-McClung assures me that this bill is in order. I believe some of the issues he brought up were addressed in the amendment. We're very pleased with it, and we're prepared to vote.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Red Deer-North I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 14.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I just spoke to this in Committee of the Whole and indicated that I was still awaiting answers to the questions, but I've been assured by the minister of health that those answers will be provided. At this point I'm prepared to support this legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

Bill 5Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 5 for third reading.

The Health Statutes Amendment Act essentially makes amendments to a number of health statutes, as the title suggest. In addition to some clean-up issues the primary purpose is to amend the Health Care Insurance Premiums Act and corollary acts to make it easier to appropriately audit the premium process and make sure that the system is working as it's intended.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. I'd just like to make a few comments about Bill 5, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. I understand, essentially, that this is an act to amend five pieces of legislation, and I'd like to comment on the first, third, and fourth sections.

The first section, which is amending the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act removes the requirement for a practitioner to provide permission to the department to review patient records and establishes a penalty for a practitioner who refuses to give his permission. My concern is around the protection of patient confidentiality. I know that this has been raised before, but I'm wondering what is being done to ensure that there's protection.

I also had a concern on the same first section with the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act around the minister's ability to select members of the committee that then reviews the claims that are submitted. I know that previous to this certain professions were required to be on the review panel and not others, and this has been removed. I understand that, but I believe it's important that we should always have members of the public involved so that we can have an independent view being brought into discussions. It's also important to ensure impartiality. Along with that, of course, I believe that representation from professions is important and wonder why some were originally excluded and what criteria there might be in terms of selecting the members to ensure, I guess, impartiality.

Section 3 is making it easier for Albertans to opt out of the health care insurance plan, and I wonder why we are doing this. It's just very few people that I hope would be concerned about doing that. I guess I'd like to comment here that I would like to see us get rid of health care premiums altogether.

The fourth section is about mandatory testing and disclosure, and I like this because it's going to capture the definition of guardian that's contained in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, and I think capturing that definition just makes good sense.

I think that pretty well summarizes my concerns. I support Bill 5 but again want to emphasize the concern regarding patient confidentiality.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to comment about one part of it and maybe lead to a question that if not here today the minister of health can do. Of course, I would say that medicare premiums – I think it's pretty obvious – should not be there. They're a regressive tax. But we can have that debate another time. I have a feeling that even the minister of health might agree with me although I know that it would cost the treasury some, but I think it's the most regressive tax we can have. And we wouldn't have to be playing with it here.

But in saying that, in the past we were making it easier for people to opt out. Basically, moving from 12 months to 36 months, I don't think that's particularly wise. My understanding from the latest figures that I was able to look at is that there were 255 registrants who opted out. That is somewhat not a lot, and if they're adults, I suppose they can make that decision to opt out under the act the way it is. I guess that I'm wondering: what happens if there are children involved in those 255 – I don't know if there are or not – and all of a sudden there's a serious illness with a child? It seems to me that that could be somewhat punishing. I wonder how that is handled.

I think that that's an important point in here. People can opt out. Now we're making it easier. I don't know if that would make the numbers go up from 255 to a little more, but there's obviously the potential there for some serious problems with people that are too young to make that decision, or rather if they couldn't, what happens to them if the parents opt out?

So I'd just leave it there, Mr. Speaker, if the minister has an answer to that or if he could get back to me on it, either way. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness wish to close on behalf of?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I do appreciate the member's comments and support. I will undertake to answer the question that was raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. My understanding is that if you opt out, you can in fact opt out for your dependants. But the fact of the matter is that this opting out provision is really quite a silly provision, in any event, if I may say so, because you can opt back in. So there's no real penalty involved in opting out. Very few people use it.

What we're really doing in this is making it easier to administer, easier for us, not easier for anybody else. So we don't have to monitor them on an annual basis because so few people actually use it.

With respect to the health care premiums themselves I do hope that we will have an opportunity to discuss health care premiums and how they're collected, whether we collect the premiums as part of the tax bill or whether they are in fact converted to a tax, and how we might incent Albertans to be more responsible for their own health using the premiums. In other words, if we collected it on the tax bill or converted it to a tax, either way we might be able to save collection costs; we might be able to save writeoff costs, but we might also be able to introduce some process whereby people could take deductions for things that they do to improve their health status. I think that's a discussion which we should look forward to. I'm pleased that you've not chosen to get too far into that one on this act because this act really is about clarifying our ability to audit the process.

I appreciate the concerns from Edmonton-Mill Woods with respect to confidentiality of patient information. There is always a trade-off, if you will, in terms of making sure that the process works appropriately and having the opportunity to audit, with the necessity for ensuring patient confidentiality. But that's inherent in the system. When the health care premium is billed to the department by the doctor that sees the patient, we get some health information as a part of that. It's our job to make sure that that health information is protected and is not let out, but it's also our job to audit the process to make sure we're being billed for appropriate procedures.

So I appreciate the concerns there. This will help protect the public dollar and the money that people pay us by way of health care premiums. I would encourage all members to vote for it.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Bill 10
Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure and honour to move on behalf of the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat third reading of Bill 10, Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act.

This being one of the most important bills of the spring sitting, I would hope that the passing of this bill would be unanimous.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the preceding member that this was a bill that demanded a great deal of time and attention of the Assembly. There was certainly vigorous debate involved, with participation of many members on a subject that is very near and dear to the hearts of many people. It was nice to see such a joining together of rural and urban MLAs as they worked together on this project. At this point I'm very happy to support third reading of the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Does the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House wish to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise now to indicate that after 45 days in the Legislature this spring and after actually more hours and more days in the Legislature than we did in last year's spring sitting, a spring sitting which included new rules which allowed for thorough scrutiny in Committee of Supply in a manner which has not been done before, changes to our Public Accounts Committee to allow private members the full opportunity to hold the government accountable, and the institution of legislative policy committees, I think some momentous changes in the Legislature – I don't think it would be appropriate for me to move adjournment without having commented on those issues.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's with great pleasure that I move that the House adjourn until 1 p.m. on Monday, November 5, 2007, pursuant to Standing Order 3.1(2) and Government Motion 28.

[Motion carried; pursuant to Government Motion 28 the Assembly adjourned at 4:20 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real thrill today to introduce a former resident of Sherwood Park now living in Texas, whose father was media personality Ernie Poscente. His mother, Pat, is a person who has been active as a community volunteer and is well known as a marriage commissioner.

Vince Poscente has a BA in recreation administration. He moved to Calgary and became the director of Alberta Luge, assisting the Calgary Olympic Development Association. In the '88 Olympic Winter Games he was one of four Canadian delegates selected to the International Olympic Academy in Greece. He actually undertook to become an Olympic athlete and with no previous experience learned to ski. He represented Canada in the '92 Olympic Winter Games in Albertville, France. Most recently, however, besides all of his expertise as an athlete he earned a master's degree in organizational management and has written a book, The Age of Speed. He's an inductee to the Speakers Hall of Fame with the likes of Ronald Reagan, Art Linkletter, and Og Mandino.

I'd ask you to join me in welcoming a man who lives in Texas but whose heart is in Alberta. Vince Poscente, please rise and receive the welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister for Capital Planning and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a constituent, Mr. Ranjit Dhanoa, who is visiting the Alberta Legislature for his first time. He is seated in the members' gallery, and he's accompanied by Sukhi Randhawa from that area. I'd ask Sukhi to rise as well, and perhaps the Chamber could receive them on this special occasion. Thank you for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 49 visitors from Aldergrove elementary school in my constituency. They are joined by teachers Mrs. Sandra Colquhoun and Mrs. Christine Steil; parent helpers Doug Parnham, Dana Hamilton, Kathy McDonald, Glennis Rideout, Christine Barringham, Pamela Young, and Cora Nicholson. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a visiting group from the Suzuki charter school in the Ottewell neighbourhood in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. The total number of visitors in the group today is 21. The group is led by teacher Miss Bauernhuber.

She is accompanied by two of the parent volunteers from that fine school, Mrs. Colette Grant and Mrs. Alison Schneider. The group is located in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups to introduce today. I'd like to introduce, first of all, to you and members of the Assembly 21 keen students from the Belvedere elementary school. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Janice Bogner and Miss Nicole Moores, who's a student teacher. They're in the public gallery. I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly 40 energetic students from Belmont elementary school. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Gerke and Mrs. McKeen and parents and helpers Mrs. Hay and Mrs. Kruger. I would ask them also to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to stand before this Assembly and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature Janine Halbesma, the senior policy analyst for the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I'm pleased and honoured that Janine is here today in support of Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act. Also, with her to support Bill 213 is Walter Hrach, a businessman and community activist from north Edmonton. They are in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members five of our fine, fine research and administrative staff in the Liberal caucus. They are new members Michael Decore, Kristen McFaden, Marta Rzechowka, Derek Volker, and Amanda Krumins. They are seated in the gallery along with our chief of staff, Judy Wilson. I'd invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Looking up in the gallery here, I see a familiar face, a lady by the name of Kathy Watson, who is with the Alberta Home Builders' Association. She also served as a member of the Affordable Housing Task Force. I'd like you to please welcome Ms Kathy Watson to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Family Violence and Bullying

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November is Family Violence Prevention Month in Alberta. Family violence surrounds us in our communities, affecting men and women of all ages, socioeconomic backgrounds, sexual orientation, and ethnicities.

Children are negatively impacted by family violence regardless of whether they are the direct target of abuse or witnesses to it.

The government of Alberta has taken action. Nine partnering ministries are working together and investing a combined total budget of $46 million to prevent and respond to family violence through the implementation of Alberta's prevention of family violence and bullying initiative. This year we provided an additional $2.6 million to help communities provide services to victims of family violence and bullying, including additional support to women's shelters and sexual assault centres, for a total investment of $23 million. We also launched a provincial safe visitation initiative earlier this year, and we continue to support community actions aimed at preventing family violence and bullying.

Along with our many community partners we have worked just as hard at preventing family violence as we have in responding to it. In fact, this morning our government launched the second year of the family violence public awareness and education campaign, which encourages Albertans to help individuals that are impacted by family violence. I encourage anyone who wants to know how they can make a difference to visit the family violence website at familyviolence.gov.ab.ca.

Mr. Speaker, putting an end to family violence requires a strong and collaborative approach from government, our communities, and our citizens. There are many ambitious goals that have been set for Albertans, like ending homelessness in 10 years. We can set another goal to end family violence, but it will take the whole community working together to help others. Together we can end the silence and stop the violence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

University of Lethbridge

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year has been a very, very good year not only for the city of Lethbridge but for the postsecondary institutions that make up part of our community. Today I'd like to make special note of the University of Lethbridge, which is celebrating their 40th anniversary. This institution is incredibly blessed with the administration and faculty that they have, the tremendous appeal that they have toward students from all across Alberta and right throughout Canada but, of course, especially southern Alberta. I believe that – I should be close – approximately 25 per cent of the student body actually comes from the city of Calgary. We're a great opportunity for Calgarians to offer their young children an opportunity to attend a first-rate university situation away from home, which is important to many young people – it certainly was to me – and, of course, also a very safe community.

There has been tremendous growth at that university, now something over 8,000 students. Because of that, the government of Alberta has been assisting them in their capital plan. Just recently announcements were made not only regarding renovation money for the University Hall but also, of course, capital going in to a life science and management centre and then just recently a top-up of the water centre. This water centre, by the way, is going to be world class for water in a semiarid environment like we're in. It'll be great for Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Canadian Centre for Unmanned Vehicle Systems

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to rise to talk about a $3 million funding announcement which was made last week in Medicine Hat for the Canadian Centre for Unmanned Vehicle Systems. Funding will be provided through the rural Alberta development fund, which encourages innovation, collaboration, and growth across rural Alberta. The Canadian centre for unmanned vehicles will create limitless opportunities for this type of technological industry in Alberta.

The centre is a national and international hub for the development, testing, evaluation, and commercialization of unmanned vehicle systems. Company partners already include such entities as DRDC, which is Defence Research and Development Canada, and MacDonald, Dettwiler, who built the Canadarm for NASA. Research and development and testing will occur for unmanned air vehicles, unmanned ground vehicles, and unmanned underwater and surface vehicles.

Mr. Speaker, their vision is to reach across Canada to promote and bring focus to research and development and, as well, the commercialization of the UVS technology. The centre will bring together existing technology clusters such as university, government, and industry interests throughout Alberta with regard to aerial, marine, and land UVS applications. Three million dollars from the Alberta government in rural development funding will help kick-start this viable international business in Medicine Hat for southern Alberta and for all Albertans as emerging cutting-edge technology brings worldwide recognition to the centre.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the RADF for recognizing this project as a project that will develop a phenomenal industry in not only rural Alberta but all of Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Children in Care

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The week that ends in Remembrance Day is a time to ask what matters in our lives. Some things that preoccupy us, such as oil royalties, will matter very little 50 years from now unless we convert the income from that source into things that do. Family values is one thing we say does matter; however, it is not uppermost in the day-to-day. This past week another child died tragically in the province's care in a foster home we commissioned to provide for those in critical need.

I believe we cannot in good conscience say that we support families unless we support them for all. The continued death of children in Alberta's care is unacceptable in a human society. These losses are not inevitable. A hundred and fifty years ago children died regularly working in conditions accepted as normal that we would not accept for a moment. These conditions did not just go away. Politicians resolved that those conditions would end and made it so.

I appeal to the hon. Premier to include the elimination of deaths in Alberta foster care in his objectives. This is an attainable goal if we increase the investment and attention given our social services. It is also a matter of faith and value. In a province that claims to be built in that tradition, Mr. Speaker, let us put our money where we say our values are: in building a child-friendly society.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Stewardship of Energy Resources

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The basic assumption of the whole debate on royalties is that Albertans own their resources. The Auditor General states it concisely. "Albertans own a world-scale hydrocarbon resource." Unfortunately, ownership, especially private-property ownership, too often means the licence to exploit.

Aboriginal people remind us that the land and its natural resources are a gift. Ownership is a foreign concept to them, and of course it's obvious that we did not in any way create the huge deposits of oil and gas beneath the land. The authentic response to receiving the land as a gift is thanksgiving, and the basic value which emerges from thanksgiving is stewardship.

Stewardship is deeply rooted in our western civilization and in the Christian tradition. As a preacher for 30 years in Alberta I delivered many sermons on the theme of stewardship. What is worth remarking is that this word "stewardship" has continued to have profound meaning in the wider secular society. In the circles of business and industry and especially in the context of our natural resources the word "stewardship" is often used. We have received the land as a gift, and the issue is whether we are good stewards of the resources we have received.

The Auditor General choose his words carefully and correctly when he wrote that indeed "Albertans own a world-scale hydrocarbon resource," and that it is the government and the Ministry of Energy which have "final responsibility for the stewardship of Alberta's oil, gas, and oil sands resources." But instead of stewardship the government has demonstrated a continuing history of mismanagement and the squandering of our resources.

Albertans are now faced with one of the most important choices in Albertan history. The Progressive Conservative government of Alberta has forfeited its right to act as stewards of the resources we own. This government should be replaced by responsible stewards whose values and vision and long-term plan will truly honour and respect the gift of our bountiful land and the resources we own.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to pass a thank you to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and particularly the Premier of Alberta for fast-tracking and putting in place the third quarter of Anthony Henday. Earlier this summer our minister of infrastructure, under the leadership of our Premier, announced the construction of the northwest section of Anthony Henday. [some applause] Thank you.

I cannot express enough how important this particular stretch of ring road is to my constituents of Edmonton-Castle Downs. As you know, Mr. Speaker, with the P3 model which is being implemented at this construction, this entire section of the Anthony Henday will be built in one piece. It will be built as a free-flow highway with no traffic lights and no intersections, allowing for the already congested area of northwest Edmonton to have their traffic moving freely.

Mr. Speaker, more importantly, this project will link the capital region in the way that it is meant to be linked, and St. Albert residents will have free access to northwest Edmonton and other parts of Edmonton. But what makes this project even better is the fact that it has a 30-year warranty – how often do we hear about a 30-year warranty on a highway? – which means that in 30 years residents of Castle Downs will receive the highway in the shape that it was built on day one of its utilization. That is a great deal for residents of Castle Downs.

So, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all residents of Castle Downs, thank you to all members for supporting this project. We are looking forward to driving on this brand new stretch of road by fall 2011. Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling 230 more petitions on the following:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to:

1. Ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across the sector, regardless of [where they work];
2. Ensure these employees are fairly compensated and that their wages remain competitive with other sectors . . .
3. Improve employees' access to professional development opportunities (training and upgrading); and
4. Introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in this Assembly today to table a petition that's been signed by 18 residents of Whitecourt-St. Anne. The petition urges the Assembly to pass Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007.

Thank you, sir.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has advised me, but she has no notice of motion. You want to rise on a point of privilege later. This is Notices of Motions here.

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

The Speaker: We'll recognize that.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Speaker: But I do have a notice of motion from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my leader and pursuant to Standing Order 30, be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the failure of the government to promptly introduce and pass royalty legislation to prevent the loss of billions of dollars to the public treasury as oil prices rise dramatically.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and present a document from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which supports Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, often known as the red tape act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling a letter from my constituent, Ms Elaine Hyshka, in which she expresses deep concern with Bill 46, that's before the Assembly. She goes into detail, section by section of the bill, on what she finds objectionable in that the government is now restricting public input and placing the energy industry in a privileged position relative to ordinary landowners and citizens.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today, both from constituents. The first from Tina Danecke, who is noting that her rent has increased by $305 a month. Needless to say, her salary has seen no increase. She notes that she's just a working schmo living paycheque to paycheque and believes she's being gouged because of greed and that nothing was done by the government to assist her.

The second tabling, also from a constituent, from Sarah Jackson, noting that herself, the majority of college and university students, and many Edmontonians want legally binding air quality laws and would love to see Edmonton set the Canadian standard for great air quality and low emissions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from a constituent, Mr. Neil Evans. He said that he would like to comment on the Royalty Review Panel and tell us that he supports and agrees with its recommendations: "My opinion is that changes in the royalty structure and policy are long overdue, and that Albertans have been shortchanged by the generous royalty policies of previous governments."

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from RKS Research and Consulting. It indicates that when asked to identify the states operating the most successful deregulated energy markets, the response was none.

The second tabling I have is a press release dated June 20, 2007, from the Official Opposition of the province of Alberta, and this press release is regarding Bill 46, which will restrict Albertans' democratic rights.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll return to the remainder of the Routine at the conclusion of question period.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Today it is my pleasure to invite the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to commence the fall session question period.

Royalty Revenues

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and it's my pleasure to respond. Secrecy and incompetence continue to be trademarks of this government. The current and former ministers of Energy claim Albertans have been receiving their fair share of billions of dollars in royalties. This has proven to be false. Yet they continue to figure prominently as front-row ministers in this government's cabinet. My question is to the Premier. What does it take before ministers are fired under this Premier's leadership?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I see Dr. Doom is back from vacation.

Mr. Speaker, I promised Albertans a very fair share of the development of the resources they own, and we have delivered on that commitment. Our royalty framework is fair to the owners of the resource, which are all Albertans, and it also finds the correct balance, providing the certainty and predictability for the continued investment that's necessary to develop the resources. We have found the balance, and I am certain that the policy is good for all Albertans.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier's word is no longer good enough. Albertans do not trust this government.

To the Minister of Energy: given that the minister has vigorously defended the old royalty regime knowing full well – full well – that it was shortchanging the citizens of this province billions of dollars, will the minister do the honourable thing and resign?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer would be no. However, I can indicate to the House and to all Albertans that, in fact, if you attach the 20 billion plus dollars that have been invested in capital deployment across this province year after year after year for the last five years, if you include the 8-plus billion dollars invested in the Wood Buffalo region year after year after year, if you include the jobs, jobs, jobs that Albertans received from the policies of this government, we are on the right path.

Dr. Taft: Despite seven years of gross financial mismanagement and incompetence on the part of three consecutive Energy ministers, the Premier refuses to do the right thing and clean up this mess. Why? Why does the Premier allow these ministers to remain in his cabinet?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the period of time that the member is talking about, we've eliminated, paid off, $22 billion worth of debt. We now have the highest employment rate in Canada. For the last – what? – three decades we have had the lowest income taxes. We also have the highest per capita income of any Canadian right here in Alberta, plus at least 500,000 new Albertans voting with their feet, moving to this province because our policies are correct. They also create new opportunities for their children and their grandchildren right here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, for the past seven years this government has assured Albertans that they were receiving a fair share of royalties. They should have known better. Albertans were losing billions. The Auditor General states that the minister's technical review staff "held the view that Alberta has not been collecting its appropriate share since 2000." My question is to the Premier. The department staff has known the truth for seven years. Surely the cabinet did. Surely the Premier was at the cabinet table. How long has the Premier known that Albertans have not been getting their fair share? How long have you known?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this whole question about: where has the investment gone, whatever is being raised by the Liberals . . . [interjections] I always give the opposition the opportunity to ask a question uninterrupted. I would hope that they would find the decency someplace there to reward me with the same behaviour, be reciprocal. Maybe now they'll be quiet.

Mr. Speaker, since being appointed Premier, I immediately asked for a review of the royalty framework to make sure that it's keeping up with the times. We've seen increasing prices, especially in oil. We've seen changes in world politics that made our resources more valuable. That was the most appropriate time to do the royalty review, and we did.

Dr. Taft: I'll repeat my question. Maybe we'll get an answer this time. The government staff have known the truth for seven years. Surely the cabinet was briefed. The Premier was at the cabinet table. How long has the Premier known that Albertans were not getting their fair share in royalties? How long? One year? Two years? Three years? Seven years? Answer.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to this whole question of fair share, when I look at – and this will come out in the next quarterly report – Crown lease sales, the highest ever, look at corporate tax revenue paid in this province, personal income tax, again much larger than projected, and given the fact that we have for-hire signs everywhere in this province of Alberta, that tells me that the money was reinvested in Alberta for not only developing the resources, but it also created opportunity for many other Albertans and gave them a much better quality of life in terms of health care and education right here in the province.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a straightforward question, but it is of fundamental importance, and the Premier is evading it. How long has the Premier known that the current royalty system was shortchanging the people of Alberta billions of dollars? When were you first informed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making an assumption. All I'm saying is that the current policies of the government over the last number of years have been very good for the province of Alberta. We've seen tremendous growth. We're on the world stage as the province of Alberta in terms of a good place to invest. Again, we have the lowest per capita taxes, income taxes. We also have a good return on the investments. We have $70 billion in investments. We're the engine of prosperity for all of Canada right here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil and gas don't belong to this party that's governing or to this government. This government are trustees for the people of Alberta, who are the owners of this oil and gas. As trustees they owe an explanation to the citizens, so I will once more repeat my question to the Premier, who seems so determined to evade an answer. Mr. Premier, how long have you known that the people of Alberta were being shortchanged with the current royalty system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the hon. member has finally come to the realization that the resources of this province are owned by all Albertans. It's also put in place the policies we have today to support the next generation and the generation after that, and that is why the new dollars coming from the royalty framework will be invested. One-third of that will go, of course, into savings, whether it be endowments, whether it be the heritage savings trust fund. The balance of that will be invested in infrastructure and the maintenance of that infrastructure so that the next generation doesn't have to reach deep in their pocket to pay for the maintenance of all the new infrastructure we're building in the province of Alberta.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this is a question of profound importance. I am asking it on behalf of the citizens of this province. How long has this Premier known that the current royalty system was shortchanging the people billions of dollars a year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member is making an assumption. When I look at this province, I can't see where this province of Alberta was shortchanged when you look at the quality of life that we enjoy, the excellent health care. In fact, we're attracting to Alberta the world's best physicians, some of the best research people to the province of Alberta because they see hope and they see opportunity. We're going to make sure that the new policies, the new framework continue with the kind of openness, predictability, and certainty that investors need to bring more money and more investment to the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've seen a demonstration here of evasiveness seldom seen in this Assembly. My question is again to the Premier. Why does the Premier feel it so necessary to evade answering a very straightforward question?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member across is talking about or he's trying to make the assumption that there are missing billions. Well, there are. There are missing billions: $22 billion of missing debt. That's missing. That's gone. That's paid off. Billions of dollars invested in infrastructure, in fact the most aggressive investment in public infrastructure ever in the province of Alberta, $18 billion over three years. We see the best quality of life here in the province of Alberta compared to anyone in the country of Canada, yet they seem to be the doomsayers of tomorrow. I don't know where they're coming from, but I'm looking to the future, not only for our children but for our grandchildren. That's what they can't see.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Ministerial Accountability

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago the NDP said that Albertans were not getting a fair share from royalties. The Liberals failed to support higher royalties while the Tories claimed the sky would fall. The Liberals will plead ignorance, but the Minister of Energy cannot. His department told him Albertans should be earning up to $2 billion more in royalties every year, and he covered it up. My question is to the Premier. When will you fire that Energy minister for this massive betrayal?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, obviously the two leaders must have been – I don't know – recessing together here or something like that and drawing up their own questions.

Mr. Speaker, going right back to where we were before, this is a wonderful province to live in. The billions of dollars that they're making remarks on are invested in the province of Alberta. We've paid off the debt. We have $70 billion set aside in savings to invest. In fact, we also have a stabilization fund set aside to cushion this province from huge revenue differences because of oil and gas or any other revenue streams that may change in the province. There is no better place in Canada than right here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. When will the Premier get out of his lame message box and answer a very, very clear question?

Now, the Auditor General said that this minister had access to information showing that royalties could be raised without hurting the industry, and he denied it in this House. How can you condone that, Mr. Premier? Why don't you do the right thing and fire that minister?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has issued a report. We have accepted that report. But before the Auditor General issued the report, made it public, I had called for a royalty review very early after being sworn in as Premier. It took time to do the review. The panel looked at so many different pieces of information. It's quite a very complex issue, obviously. We've received that report, we looked at it, and we made our decisions. Those decisions are good. They're good for the future because these are depleting resources, and we have to make sure that we find the balance but also keep some of that money aside for the next generations because that's important. Once the oil and gas is sold, it'll never come back.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the minister had knowledge that you could have raised royalties years ago and earned billions of dollars without hurting the industry. He did not tell Albertans that, and by evading the question, you are condoning that behaviour. Why is that minister still in your cabinet, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, they're making an assumption based on, you know, what he said – I don't know – three years ago or something like that. They'll never be satisfied as the ND opposition. If there's still any life left in the economy, they'll keep taxing it. They'll tax it to its death, and once it dies, they'll subsidize it. The policy we have is good, it's sound, and it's going to carry this province well into the next century.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We need to change from tax and spend to: let's have some integrity. Alberta has developed a reputation for respecting the rule of law and keeping its agreements. We have been able to attract billions of necessary dollars for the development of our oil sands. The problem, though, is that the Premier has given his word to Albertans that he is going to rip up those contracts. From the New Royalty Framework, page 10, it says "in the event that agreement cannot be reached, the government will take other measures." Will the Premier be open and honest with Albertans and tell us what those measures are?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes reference to this government tearing up agreements. We're not tearing up any agreements. Those agreements were renegotiated many, many times, many times at the request of oil and gas companies as prices changed over the years. That's dating way back, I believe, to the '60s, so there's good evidence as to how many times these agreements were open. We said that we're going to sit down and discuss the new royalty framework with the two companies. We're continuing to do that. It's in the best interests of their shareholders between the two companies, the government of Alberta, and future generations to reach an agreement, and I'm confident we will.

Mr. Hinman: What a bunch of political propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier says that he's a man of his word. He has promised to be open and honest, but evidence has not shown that. He will not reveal his donation list, he has already increased the size of his cabinet, and he broke his promise that he wouldn't have a TV address or infomercial. Will the Premier and this government come to its senses, though, and reverse its decision to break the signed agreements with Syncrude and Suncor?

Mr. Stelmach: Obviously, he never heard the first answer. We're not tearing up any agreements. We're entering into discussions with the two companies, and we'll continue to do that. I also said that once those discussions have been completed, then we'll bring that information to all Albertans, just like we did with the royalty framework report. As soon as the government received it, we made it public. The reason we made it public is that the resources are owned by all Albertans. That report went to the owners of the resources, and they had the opportunity to review it. Everyone – the company, the government, the opposition – had time to look at it. Again, we're not tearing up any agreements. That is a false statement.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they've said many times that they're going to rip up the agreement, and they said: we'd rather them take the carrot instead of the stick. I mean, how much more blatant can it be?

This government has a spending problem, not a revenue problem. The question I'd like to ask the Premier: does he really think that the government can do better with $1.4 billion than the economy and the economic spinoff that we'd receive by leaving it there?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, talking about being honourable and a person of integrity, I would ask that member to withdraw those statements with respect to tearing up agreements. The government is not tearing up any agreements. I make that very clear in the House, and he made those comments again and again. There's nothing ever, anyplace, where it says that the government is tearing up any agreements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The incompetence of this Progressive Conservative government in general and the Minister of Energy in particular is evident. This Progressive Conservative government, an incompetent government, allowed a government agency to use undercover spies to snoop and eavesdrop on unsuspecting, innocent, rural landowners. This incompetent Progressive Conservative government allowed billions of dollars in royalty revenue to go uncollected for years, when they knew Albertans were being shortchanged. This incompetent Progressive Conservative government drafted Bill 46, which is an assault on Alberta's democratic rights. My first question is to the Premier. Why did this incompetent Progressive Conservative government hire and protect incompetent ministers but fire and reject . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, not having heard all of the question, if that's the way the behaviour of this House is going to take place in terms of that kind of language, I would assume that – you know, we have people in the galleries that watch. This is the highest court of the land. I hardly ever see anybody delivering evidence to the highest court of the land in that kind of manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. If the Premier won't answer, perhaps the Minister of Energy will try. My next question. According to the Auditor General's annual report from 2006-07, which I'm sure he has read by now, there's a quote here that "for a significant portion of 2006, the Production Audit Group consisted of only one auditor." Given that in that year we collected over $9 billion in resource revenue, how can this minister assure this House and the resource owners in Alberta that we collected every penny that was due us when we only had one production auditor?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, indeed, the Auditor General's report was very interesting reading, and I do have to say that I've supported the report and continue to support the report. In fact, with respect to the audits we take it very seriously, and his comments around the capability of audit we are dealing with. We have stated publicly that we will continue to work with the Auditor General in the aspect of dealing with volumetric audits. As you would know, the volumetric system that we employ in the province of Alberta is a highly technical computerized system. It doesn't take thousands of minions running around to sample everybody's production. We receive the information in bulk. We receive the information in an IT system. It's all computerized, and it's checked on very regularly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the Minister of Energy to call good, hard-working people in the EUB and good, hard-working people in the Department of Energy minions is wrong.

Now, my next question is to the Premier. The departmental review staff at the Department of Energy – and I don't consider them to be minions – assure us that they held the view that Alberta has not been collecting its appropriate share of royalties since the year 2000. How can the Premier not admit that we have not collected our fair share in royalties and that this incompetent government has squandered billions of dollars in lost royalties?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the same question over and over again. Again, the billions of dollars of investment that came to Alberta at a time when oil was around $18, $19 a barrel grew this economy. It paid for a lot of the programs that we enjoy in health and education, in social services, and in taking care of children in our province. Billions of dollars went into infrastructure, and it kept our taxes at the lowest rate compared to other provinces. Also, the kind of certainty and predictability and investment that's necessary to grow this province will continue under this new royalty framework.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Alberta Farm Recovery Plan

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rising Canadian dollar continues to put increased economic strain on Alberta's producers, who already have to deal with rising input costs. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. What is the Alberta government doing to support its producers during these difficult times?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We understand that the producers in Alberta are going through some very difficult times with the rising Canadian dollar and the skyrocketing price of fuel, feed, and fertilizer. That's why on October 16 this year we announced the new Alberta farm recovery plan, $165 million in short-term assistance that will directly benefit producers being hit by these rising costs. But this isn't the answer. Rather, the plan is a temporary bridge towards the development of long-term sustainable solutions. Our expectation is that over our support industry will be able to develop their own long-term transformation plans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. How will this plan work, and when can producers expect these supports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good questions from an MLA well connected to agriculture, and I appreciate them.

Producers who are already enrolled in last year's CAIS program will have their entitlements calculated automatically. Those who did not participate in CAIS last year must submit the 2006 application prior to December 1. Producers can expect payments, Mr. Speaker, to begin this month. Priority processing will be given to those key industries that have been devastated by these economic trends. Any producers who would like to know more about the plan can phone the CAIS call centre or their local CAIS field analyst.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we've heard today, both the royalty review and the Auditor General have indicated that at least $6 billion has not been collected by this government, the biggest financial scandal in Canadian history. Not only has this government allowed money to slip through its fingers, but the only plan they have for the future is to hope for surprise surpluses. How can this government continue to fail Albertans by not implementing a proper savings plan for substantive investments in the heritage savings trust fund? I'll ask the question to either the Deputy Premier or the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you where there would have been billions of dollars gone if Albertans ever – perish the thought – elect a group whose sole purpose here is to drain as much money out of business and people as they can and spend it on the list of things they've got. If you want to talk about missing billions, that would be the gang that can't shoot straight right there.

The Premier ordered us, Mr. Speaker, from our unallocated surpluses: one-third into savings, two-thirds into deferred capital and maintenance. We continue to build the infrastructure for all the Albertans coming here to share the wealth yet look to the future in a responsible manner with our medical research, our heritage savings trust fund.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the government's very own projections, the revenue that this province is going to receive from oil and gas will significantly – significantly – decrease in a very short time. Those are your own numbers. Even with the new royalty rates implemented, this province is still going to be facing some very serious problems. We're living in a time when we need to be saving every penny, not losing $6 billion. How does Mr. Please Don't Call This a Compromise and his gang of merry men plan on dealing with this projected decline in oil and gas revenue? We're facing a serious problem here.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the very strategic reinvestment money created from our oil industry in Alberta has developed not only probably one of the best health care systems but allowed us to reinvest in an advanced education system that is second to none. We have research people coming here. We have identified how important it is to have a diversified economy. The increase in corporate income tax, giving the low rates, the increase in personal income tax when they've paid the lowest percentage of personal income tax: all of these are for a well thought out, well-planned, long-term financial stability for this province.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to know if they're going to cut programs, if they're going to raise taxes, or if they're going to do both. That's really what we're trying to get at with these questions. Over 30 per cent of Alberta's revenue is coming from a source that is not going to last forever: oil and gas. Stakeholders across the board, including some in the galleries today, are projecting deficit budgets or increased taxes if the correct trend of spending and lack of saving continue. This is a serious, serious problem. Now I'm hearing that the ministers are asking for anywhere from 7 to 30 per cent increases in their own budget deliberations.

An Hon. Member: That's the Liberals.

Mr. R. Miller: That's you guys.

So the question is: how do you respond, Mr. President of the Treasury Board, to the possibility of a deficit budget in the next few years?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, what an appropriate time, then, to develop a new royalty framework that addresses the long-term goals of Albertans, that lets us share in the wealth from our oil sands, which are truly Alberta's next wealth generator. We are aware that the conventional supplies of oil and gas are diminishing. In that light, the Premier has set forward a new royalty structure that will enhance and increase Albertans' capabilities to tackle anything that may come at them with the exception of, possibly, a Liberal government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's new royalty framework proposes many changes to the way we calculate and charge royalties. Some might say that sweeping changes have been proposed, more so than at any time in Alberta's history with the oil and gas industry. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What are the steps to be followed to implement Alberta's new royalty framework?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I must indicate that this is very important policy, perhaps the most important policy that's been developed in the province of Alberta for some time. This policy is supporting a royalty framework for the future, and it requires some legislation and regulatory amendments plus a large amount of work on IT programming and perhaps even hardware upgrades to continue to implement the program. The implementation requires work with producers, requires work with regulators, and requires work with the government to continue our Premier's commitment to build a stronger Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. The second and final question, then, to the same minister: does he have a time frame for all of this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we have indicated in our response to the report, the time frame that we have is approximately 14 months. We are determined that our new royalty structure would be implemented and in place in January 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Boy, wouldn't it be nice if people got 14 months' or two years' notice of a rent increase?

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, had the Conservatives actually collected the missing billions and had they managed the money wisely, we wouldn't be in the midst of an affordable housing crisis, but they didn't, and we are. In Fort McMurray rents are through the roof and climbing. To afford to pay the rent on an average two-bedroom unit in Fort McMurray now takes a salary of $78,000 a year. To the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta: will he institute a temporary rent cap now or, failing that, explain to us when he thinks the market is actually going to solve this?

Mr. Snelgrove: He's probably right on one point, Mr. Speaker, that if they had been in power and taken all the money they wanted out of the economy, we probably wouldn't have a rent crisis; we would probably have a Saskatchewan crisis, where we need people moving back.

Mr. Speaker, rent is a service and in many ways is a contract between someone wanting a place to live and someone offering that. Never before in recorded history has it worked when governments got involved in rent controls, price controls, when it actually worked to the benefit of the people it was trying to help, especially in a city like Fort McMurray, where it is so difficult to get a chance to do repairs on a building to modernize it because they simply can't move out. It's been 24/7, and that is a discussion that's a contractual agreement between an employee and someone providing the rent.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, what a shemozzle they've made of this. In Lethbridge the crisis is growing worse by the week. I've heard on good authority that there could be as many as three affordable housing construction initiatives that should have been under way by now that aren't, that kind of fell into a black hole when the province handed the file to the cities and sent everybody back to Go, or maybe it was stop because nobody seems to be going forward; you're just kind of chasing your tails on this one. To the Associate Minister of Affordable Housing and Urban Development: does she have the proper roles and responsibilities in place for this, and if so, can she explain why not very much building is getting done yet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, there's been significant building throughout the province. This member knows that recently it was announced, in March of this year, through the Affordable Housing Task Force report: $285 million toward affordable housing, toward homelessness. This year alone 196 million of those dollars were for affordable housing. That is the beginning of a plan to develop 11,000 units over the next five years. So we are working. We're working hard, Mr. Speaker, and we will ensure that people are housed through affordable housing.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, this is not rocket science. Humans have been building places to live since they crawled out of the cave. We know how to do this. We also know – this hon. member knows – that in the last three months 75 new secondary suites across the province have been approved for development, 75 only.

You know, the Conservatives' recent announcement of a secretariat on housing and homelessness was nothing more than another plan to develop another plan. I can tell you that if it takes the associate minister till April to define the shape and role of the secretariat, then people sleeping in shelters tonight will be in those shelters this time next year and this time the year after that. Will the associate minister explain to the House what she is doing right now to help people who don't have adequate housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important announcement, a secretariat to actually deal with the issue of homelessness, and that announcement came about because of what the communities in the province are doing at the community level. There's a whole paradigm shift in this province in regard to homelessness. You know that through the Pathways to Housing program, through Housing First, we house people before we have supports and services for that individual. The secretariat will work with the communities. It is the communities that have asked for this initiative, and they'll work very closely. It will be collaborative, it will be research driven, and it will be successful because it's a solution. But it takes time to develop solutions, and April is not that far away.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been misled for years about the government's royalty policies. According to the Auditor General Energy department staff have been considering royalty changes since the year 2000, and at least three years ago they concluded that Alberta's share had fallen to unacceptable levels. Unacceptable levels. No matter how this government spins it, that means billions of dollars are lost to the people of Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Was this Energy minister briefed by the former minister that this was the case, and if not, why not?

Mr. Knight: No.

Mr. Martin: Let me understand what that minister is saying. He said that when he took over this Energy portfolio, something as serious as a billion dollars being misplaced was not important enough for that minister to give? He wasn't briefed about this? Is that what he's saying?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying is that there is no billions of dollars missing from anyplace. There was no requirement for me to get a briefing from any former minister with respect to the royalty structure. I understand the royalty structure, probably much better than the honourable gentleman across the way understands the royalty structure.

What I have indicated and what I believe is true is that the royalty structure in the province of Alberta is a policy set by the government. The policy is not set by reports that are developed both internally and externally and given to any minister at any point in time.

Mr. Martin: I couldn't hear the huffing and the puffing because of the noise.

When the Auditor General comes out and says that Alberta's share has fallen to unacceptable levels and that government doesn't see that as important to change right away, where is the responsibility here, Mr. Minister? That is not your money. That is the people of Alberta's money that was wasted there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated previously and will repeat that I am actually in agreement with the Auditor General's report. The outcomes of that report we're dealing with, and we're dealing with the Auditor General on a continuing basis.

However, there are no missing billions. Those dollars remained in the province of Alberta, were invested, were a magnet for additional dollars. There are literally hundreds of billions of dollars that have been invested in this province over the period of time that these members speak about. It was very good policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

2:10 Staffing of Human Services Agencies

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's human services agencies have told government that if they could attract and keep more qualified staff, they would be in a better position to offer the high-quality services that Albertans expect and need. My first question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What has your ministry done to help agencies recruit and retain qualified personnel for important areas such as PDD staffing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really an honour to work with the tremendous staff of the contracted agencies as they provide services for persons with developmental disabilities. They do tremendous work for those individuals. I am pleased to announce also today that we are increasing funding for those agencies by $15 million. We're adding those funds in response to knowing that the labour market is hot, that the wages in the other jurisdictions, whether it be the public or private sector, are increasing. As such, we want to see that those agencies are able to retain those staff to do this very important work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: can Albertans expect to see more permanent residential spaces open up for persons with developmental disabilities due to today's funding announcement?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, this funding is to be directed solely towards wages of contracted agencies. It's not to be intended for additional aspects of the program delivery. This is specifically for those contracted agencies to provide additional dollars, through their salaries, for those individuals that work for them.

That said, this is a lot more than just about money. We supply over half a billion dollars for about 9,100 individuals, a very substantive amount, one of the largest amounts of money of anywhere in this country. It is not just about dollars. It's about how we get the effective services to those individuals. We are working very closely with those agencies to ensure that we look at our service delivery as well. How do we get those funds to the people when they need it in the fashion they need it?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that Alberta's human services agencies do reach right across the chronological gamut, can the minister advise this House what this new funding announcement will do for the children and families of this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are contributing $10 million to add to today's announcement. I can tell you that this will be very good news for the contracted agencies who deliver very necessary and important services for Children's Services. Over the last couple of months I've had an opportunity to visit many of them and to tour their programs, and I can tell you that I have been in absolute awe of their commitment and dedication to the children of this province. I know that this will go a long way in helping them with their staffing issues, but more important I think this is a great recognition of our commitment to them and our value of that working industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Calgary Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary desperately needs a complete ring road, and the most pressing section of that road is the southwest leg. Calgarians have known this for years, yet we continue to be mired in uncertainty, delay, and concerns over the cost of a deal for the right-of-way. More revenue would move this project forward, but this government has failed to collect billions of dollars in resource royalties as the Auditor General has shown. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: how can the minister justify to Calgarians the lack of any land deal with the Tsuu T'ina and no construction under way?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very easy to justify.

We started one ring road just this summer, we're finishing one ring road there, and we're very serious with our negotiations with the Tsuu T'ina. We honour the right to be able to negotiate that deal with them. We have full intentions that we are going to go through with the deal, and we have full intentions that someday we're going to come to the proper agreement.

Mr. Cheffins: Mr. Speaker, the cost increases on the south Calgary hospital project have quite rightly made headlines all over this province. Because of the delays in providing funding for the project, the cost of the building has spiralled. Of course, if the government had been collecting another $1 billion to $2 billion in royalties as they should have been, this hospital could already have been built. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: how can the minister justify the completely unnecessary cost inflation from $550 million to $1.2 billion and delays on the south Calgary hospital?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there haven't been any delays on the south Calgary hospital. This hon. member is too recent to know what's going on, I guess. The planning for the Calgary south health campus was announced a number of years ago. The planning process has been in place. The process has continued apace. It was budgeted for, and it's continuing to be budgeted for. There have been increases in terms of what's been planned for that area, and there have been increases in construction costs, but there haven't been delays in the process. It's proceeding rapidly.

Mr. Cheffins: Calgarians have known about this. Calgarians have been waiting since you blew up a hospital in Calgary. So my constituents know better.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary's postsecondary institutions have also felt the burden of underfunding. Mount Royal College needs a library. SAIT desperately needs to expand its trades and technology complex. A lack of funding for their urban campus has held that project back. No money, ever more delays. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: again, given this government's utter failure to collect our fair share of resource revenue, how can the minister justify not building these projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, perhaps the hon. member across the way will learn over time that he should really check with the proponents of some of these projects before he starts talking about them in this House. The urban campus is a perfect example of this. We are working on the urban campus with a number of the proponents. However, what was going to be program delivery has not been decided yet. The other partners that may become involved, like ACAT, have not been decided yet. These are things that the partners have had difficulty bringing together. It's not that we've had a lack of funding. In fact, we've granted some funding to the planning for the urban campus just recently.

I'd also like to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that had we . . .

The Speaker: I have to call on the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Oil Sands Development

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that Prime Minister Stephen Harper is back home in our beautiful province today visiting Fort McMurray and our valuable oil sands industry there. [interjection] My questions are to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What are the measurable economic impacts that Alberta's oil sands are having on Alberta and the rest of Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll give serious contemplation to naming a particular lake after, perhaps, Harry some day; lake Harry does have a particular sound to it that I think we'll have to contemplate.

At this particular point in time I'd like to say that the real benefit is simply this: over $150 billion; we are the envy of every province and territory in Canada in terms of what we are doing; over a thousand new construction jobs.

I'm very pleased to say that our Prime Minister is visiting the oil sands capital of the world because it is about the future of our young people and the wealth that comes from the oil sands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and final question is to the same minister. How is Alberta's prosperity helping to fuel Canada's economic growth?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, our Premier just recently was on Bay Street in Toronto, and when he was speaking at the Empire Club, he talked about the powerful economic punch that our province has in terms of what we are contributing. We contribute almost $9 billion to the federation of Canada, but what is more important are the jobs we create in other parts of Canada and within Alberta. That's good news for Alberta; it's good news for Canada. As the Premier said, and rightfully so, from the respect he's garnered from other Premiers at the Council of the Federation in Moncton, New Brunswick – other Premiers defended Alberta by saying: let's not kill the goose that is laying the golden eggs. Unlike what the Liberals and the New Democrats want to do.

Health Care Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgarians continue to suffer the consequences of this government's failure to meet their needs, which is particularly galling given this government's refusal to collect an additional $1 billion to $2 billion each year since 2000. Seven urgent surgeries were postponed last week in Calgary because there were no intensive care beds available. My question is to the minister of health. What is the minister doing to address the short-term lack of capacity across the province, especially in Calgary, where surgeries are being cancelled because beds and staff are not available? The south Calgary hospital is not going to help today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of assumptions in that question which ought to be addressed; first of all, the suggestion of lost billions that keeps coming up over and over from these people. They fail to understand that an increase in the cost to business over that period of time when the prices of oil and gas were low might have had an entirely different effect. So they shouldn't be just assuming that there are billions of dollars.

To the more important question, the question about dealing with the needs of Albertans when it comes to surgeries and the beds being available. There is an issue in this province. There's an issue of a shortage of people, and we've been working very hard in Health with Employment, Immigration and Industry and with Advanced Education to make sure that we have the nursing personnel both being trained here in this province and coming from abroad to work in those places. There's not a shortage of infrastructure right now; it's a shortage of people.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. That's not short term you're talking about.

To the same minister. A shortage of long-term care beds contributes to backups in hospitals, including longer wait times in the emergency room. With only 2 per cent of the lost billions at least 11 new continuing care facilities could have been built in Edmonton, Smoky Lake, Crownsnest Pass, Taber, Pincher Creek, Coaldale, Lacombe, Wetaskiwin, Bow Island, Bassano, and Hythe. What excuse does the minister have for the province's shortage of long-term care beds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The real issue today, as I said in the answer to the last question, is about people. The success of this province is such that the economy has been so strong that it has been difficult to get enough people to fill the jobs to keep those beds open. There are long-term care capacity needs, but the primary concern is not the beds. It's the health care aides, the personal care aides, to be able to provide the services needed in those areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Mr. Speaker, the $6 billion this government failed to collect over the past seven years, minimum, could have paid the salary of over 5,000 doctors a year or 17,000 nurses a year or built new cancer centres in Calgary, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, and Red Deer. Why didn't the minister lobby his colleagues to collect a fair share of royalties so it could fund these essential health services?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the question of what's a fair share of royalties is a question of a point in time. When the royalty design that is currently in place was brought in, the price of oil was around $11 and the cost of extraction in the oil sands was around $17 a barrel. Times change, and our Premier moved immediately upon being elected Premier to call for a royalty review because in the last three to four years the price of oil has now reached the level that it is at. To suggest that there's a large amount of money out there that could have built a lot of things or paid for a lot of things is absolutely invalid.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, considering we've had a little sojourn for about four and a half months, that wasn't really that bad. We had 84 questions and answers today, and tomorrow we'll just ask you to sort of tighten things up just a bit more so we can try and get in a few more questions and answers. But it's important to have this opportunity to allow exuberance to come in after a little sojourn.

We're going back now to tablings. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was next on my list.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Friday evening last I had the opportunity to attend the seventh annual registered apprenticeship program 2007 scholarship celebrations at the Chateau Lacombe. I just want to say what a wonderful event it was. I had an opportunity to sit with Christopher Rooyackers and his parents. He's a chef apprentice, graduated from McNally high school. They were quite enlightening in terms of sharing information. I'm also proud to say that a resident of Edmonton-Rutherford, Brennan Haycock, who graduated from Louis St. Laurent, is now an apprentice electrician. I'm happy to table five copies of the program from that evening for other members to review.

The Speaker: Are there others under tablings? If not, then the chair has three.

Hon. members, pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act the chair would like to table with the Assembly five copies of Members' Services Committee Order MSC 1/07, Constituency Services Amendment Order (No. 19), which came into force on October 24, 2007. The subject matter has to do with a recommendation from the Auditor General to take a look at the gifts and promotional items portfolio of all members' constituency office allocations. This is being tabled, and members might spend a few minutes looking at it.

Pursuant to section 28(1) of the Ombudsman Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 39th annual report of the office of the Ombudsman for the period April 1, 2005, to March 31, 2006. For the first time in our history, as per Standing Orders changes made last spring, Standing Order 55.01, this report is referred to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. A copy of this report was distributed to members on October 24.

Pursuant to section 46(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act, chapter C-23 of the Revised Statutes of Alberta 2000 I'm also pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner. This report covers the period April 1, 2006, to March 31, 2007. Again as per Standing Order 55.01 this report is referred to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. A copy of this report was distributed to members on July 25, 2007.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Environment, responses to questions raised by Mr. Bonko, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, on June 7, 2007, in the Department of Environment 2007-08 main estimates debate; response to Written Question 15, asked for by Mr. MacDonald on June 11, 2007; return to order of the Assembly MR 8, asked for by Mr. Chase on behalf of Dr. Swann on June 11, 2007; pursuant to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the Ministry of Environment environmental protection security fund annual report, April 1, 2006, to March 31, 2007.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, pursuant to the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research Act the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research 2007 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before moving on, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister for Capital Planning.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, colleagues and Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a very diligent constituent of mine, Mr. Vince Laberge, who has a keen interest in provincial proceedings. I know he cares deeply about the affordable housing initiative, as do I. He's very well known to me and to other members of the House here for providing very sound and solid advice to us on many occasions, today being one of them. I see he has risen. Welcome now, if you will, Mr. Vince Laberge.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, earlier today during the Routine under Notices of Motions the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre rose to give notice about a point of privilege she wanted to raise. There was no need under that part of the Routine, and no motion is required in terms of a member rising on a point of privilege. The member advised my office on Friday that she was going to be doing this, and that's perfectly acceptable. The document has been circulated. That can just be put in the storage container beside your desk. Unless there is a prima facie case of privilege arrived at by determination, there is no motion that can proceed.

At the moment the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is being recognized if she rises on a point of privilege.

Privilege Misleading the House

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This point of privilege arises out of a series of events that took place in this Assembly and subsequent to that on April 30, 2007. The direct exchange is found in Hansard on page 694. At that time the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked a question of the Minister of Energy regarding a tabling that had happened earlier specific to the content of the 2005-2006 internal royalty review. Significant portions had not been tabled or had been censored from what was tabled.

In his response the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, who is also, of course, the Minister of Energy, indicated, "Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in any of those documents that would indicate to anybody that we have not collected a fair share of royalties for Albertans." In fact, there were a number of references in the documents that were tabled, censored as they were, that did indicate that.

Mr. Speaker, the member made misleading statements. In doing so, he defied the dignity of the Assembly and interfered with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's ability to discharge his duties as the Official Opposition shadow minister of Energy. I would also add that because of the minister's statements that day, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was also impeded in the fulfillment of his duties as opposition leader in holding the government accountable.

Mr. Speaker, there are several tests that I need to meet today. First of all, notification, which you noted and as outlined in Standing Order 15(2). Written notice was provided to you. We also provided a copy to the affected member, the Minister of Energy and Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, and, as a courtesy, to the Government House Leader. All of this was on Friday, November 2, 2007. I attempted to give oral notice today during Routine, which was not necessary.

A second test that must be met in these cases is that the point is raised at the earliest possible opportunity. The statements were made on April 30, and we believed them to be misleading at the time, but with the release of the Auditor General's report on Tuesday, October 2, this confirmed the fact that the Assembly had been misled in the member's statements of April 30.

There are two examples I will give you, Mr. Speaker, that address situations where misleading statements from a member were verified as incorrect and became known at a later date. All of these were as a result of the report of an Auditor General or another public inquiry.

In Manitoba on April 6, 1999, the then Premier was accused of deliberately misleading the Assembly regarding the Interlake vote splitting scandal, and the subsequent Monnin inquiry illuminated that the information was indeed misleading. These issues were a result of the Manitoba provincial election in 1995, and the Manitoba Speaker agreed that the point of privilege had been lodged at the earliest opportunity, that being as soon as it was verified through the report some four years later.

Likewise, allegations that the Manitoba Assembly had been deliberately misled because of statements relative to the Crocus superfund scandal did not surface until several years afterwards. Then a quote from the hon. Jon Gerrard. He says:

I raise this issue now because until we had the Cabinet document of November 27, 2000, we did not know in this Legislature that we . . . and the people of Manitoba generally have been so badly misled by the Minister of Finance.

Again, in this situation the Speaker found that the elapsed time was not a bar to the matter.

Clearly, the Minister of Energy made statements that misled this Assembly. The content of his department's own review offers evidence that the opposite was the case.

Now, specifically the intentions of the minister. As we have noted, his only intention could have been to mislead this Assembly because his own review showed that for many years the royalty structure was not, as he said, building a stronger Alberta.

What privilege has been breached? Looking at Marleau and Montpetit on page 51, I quote: "The House has the authority to invoke privilege where its ability has been obstructed in the execution of its functions or where Members have been obstructed in the performance of their duties." The essential role of the Official Opposition is holding the government accountable for its actions. In that role question period is one of our most important tools for calling the government to account, and as Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, sixth edition, states at 410(5), our ability to call the government to account for the loss of billions of dollars was hindered to a degree that was shameful.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it would be naïve to suggest that every question in this Assembly will receive an answer, but I do note in Beauchesne's 97, quoting Speaker Sauvé, that while it is correct to say that the government is not required by our rules to answer written or oral questions, it would be bold to suggest that no circumstances could ever exist for a prima facie question of privilege to be made where there was a deliberate attempt to deny answers to an Hon. Member, if it could be shown that such action amounted to improper interference with the Hon. Member's parliamentary work.

Indeed, I believe that happened in the case specifically for the members for Edmonton-Gold Bar and Edmonton-Riverview. The statements of the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky have prevented these key functions. It greatly affected the ability of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to perform his role as Energy critic. Had the information collected by the Department of Energy been accurately reported before this Assembly, then the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would have conducted further inquiries and handled his duties differently. At the time of the utterance made on April 30, there were still 23 sitting days remaining in the session. Those are days the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar could have used differently had he not been misled.

The disrespect for the Assembly also greatly affected the conduct of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview in his role as Leader of the Official Opposition. For two months our own members but also those of other opposition parties were prevented from the effective conduct of their duties in this House and outside of it.

This is not a case where the information was not available, where facts were uncertain, or where the member was not informed of proceedings. All the information was in this minister's possession. His own department had passed on their conclusion, and the report of the Auditor General states this point with absolute clarity. In the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta, volume 1, pages 91 and 92, the Auditor General states that the Department of Energy knew at least three years ago that Alberta's share had fallen below the target range. Without a doubt, in the period preceding the incident in question the member had been advised that this royalty structure was neither building a stronger Alberta, nor had the government collected a fair share of royalties for Albertans, as he stated in his responses on the 30th of April.

We hold these misleading statements to be a grave breach of privilege. The authorities I use, Mr. Speaker, include Marleau and Montpetit, providing explicit guidance on the concepts of contempt and privilege, pages 51 to 53 and 66 to 67. Also, those basic privileges are expanded in Joseph Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition, page 193. I have also given a number of examples of Beauchesne's parliamentary rules at 410 and 97.

In order to represent the people of this province, it is clear that the integrity of this House and its individual members be treated with respect. How can we command any measure of public respect when members act in such a fashion?

I have already spoken of the importance of the role of the Official Opposition in ensuring accountability of the government, which we were precluded from doing because the statements we were given were false or misleading.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a situation that involves a misstatement or a misunderstanding of the use of language. It is not an issue that could have given rise to a subjective difference of opinion. What we are dealing with here is a deliberate attempt to frustrate the operation of this Assembly. This situation constitutes more than a mere allegation of misleading this House. The time has come for the government to accept absolute responsibility for the comments of this member before this Assembly.

I am guided by previous rulings from this Speaker, specifically May 4 of 2000 in Hansard, appearing on page 1339: "Members have to be responsible for what they say in this House, absolutely responsible, and there's no shirking of that responsibility." When referring to a purported matter of privilege on March 12, 2002, Hansard, page 267, the Speaker outlined this valuable guidance. In this case the allegation made by the member at that time for Edmonton-Highlands focused on a certain subjective interpretation. "Such an allegation is at best a disagreement between members and hardly meets the test of a point of order." But, Mr. Speaker, in this situation we clearly have a minister who provided information that either he knew to be false or, alternatively, should have known through the exercise of due diligence that the information was misleading.

Information cannot be subjectively misleading. The minister was confronted with the full and unedited text of the report and chose to contradict it. This behaviour is without doubt deliberately misleading. How can contradictory information which is known to the member be subjectively interpreted? If an individual offers information before a court of law that they know is false, that person is guilty of contempt, Mr. Speaker. What you have before you is just such a situation. I ask the Speaker to rule that a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been established.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, I'm not sure where you'd be coming from on this point, but there is a case of privilege raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and it would be most appropriate now to allow the hon. member who's been named in this point to respond as he chooses to respond at this point in time.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually pleased to have an opportunity here to initially respond to the point of privilege made by the hon. member. Simply put, I have nothing but the utmost respect for this Assembly, and I would not do anything to intentionally mislead you, Mr. Speaker, any of my colleagues, or any members of this Assembly or, for that matter, Albertans.

It's important to note that the Premier announced last December that the Department of Finance would be undertaking a public royalty review. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this announcement was made formally through the mandate letter issued to the Minister of Finance on the very same day that I was appointed Minister of Energy. During the entire time that I've had the privilege of being Alberta's Minister of Energy, this public consultation and review has been ongoing with the exception of the past two weeks, when the Premier announced our government's new royalty framework.

It was never my intent to prejudice the work of either the Royalty Review Panel or the Auditor General or to comment on work that had been done in the past. As part of the review process, Mr. Speaker, I took steps to ensure that the panel and the public had the information and support they needed from this ministry, including the release of analytical reports prepared for the Department of Energy by outside consultants.

Keeping in mind copyright laws and FOIP legislation, I tabled what I could in this Assembly, and I asked that the full reports, where they could be viewed by the public, be placed in the department's library. This was done, Mr. Speaker, in the name of ensuring that the panel and all Albertans had access to information that could help them reach their own conclusions about our royalty regime.

It is in this context, Mr. Speaker, that I rose on April 30, 2007, to respond to a series of questions posed to me by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. The question related to a specific set of documents I tabled in the House on April 16, 2007. The hon. member was asking about a chart which was part of, to use his words, "an extensive review of our royalty structure between 2005 and 2006" and why it wasn't tabled in the House.

In looking at only one part of an answer I gave to those questions from the member last spring, the hon. member is taking my point out of context. As Hansard clearly shows, Mr. Speaker, I said that you can look at any snapshot in time or look at one aspect of the system and draw a variety of conclusions about the performance of our royalty regime. However, if you choose to do that, I would suggest that your conclusions won't be very well informed because they are not considering the entire situation. The hon. member is doing the same thing with my statement: looking at one portion of it, drawing conclusions, and making allegations.

I stand by my comments from last spring, which were clearly in reference to the Wood Mackenzie documents and, specifically, information regarding internal international comparisons, which I have made public, by the way. Taken on its own, that information, international comparisons, does not consider countless other factors such as cost environments, productivity levels, anticipated commodity pricing, or any other factors that must be considered before deciding whether a royalty regime is appropriate and effective.

As I said on that day, the information in the Wood Mackenzie documents is not sufficient to reach a well-informed decision on whether Albertans are receiving a fair share from the development of our energy resources. The table in question indicates what others are receiving and does not at any point make reference or determine what is fair. If it was not clear in my answers that day that I was specifically referring to the Wood Mackenzie documents – and I believe that the hon. member was questioning me about that – then I apologize to my hon. colleagues.

Clearly, the opposition feel that the present royalty system would not be the one that they would design. That is their right as Albertans and their role as opposition members in this Assembly.

I believe in the new royalty framework of the Premier, and, Mr. Speaker, that is my right also. Difference does not constitute a willful or deliberate attempt to mislead members of the Assembly or Albertans.

Thank you for the opportunity to address this matter in the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to your ruling.

The Speaker: The chair has heard from two hon. members with respect to this matter. As this is all now in Hansard, the only opportunity the chair and the table officers will have to review both arguments will be to review the Hansard, which we can't possibly do for several hours yet. So I will defer any decision with respect to this. I mean, there's lots of information contained in both statements.

Also, both hon. members have only had an opportunity in the last few minutes to hear the arguments from one another, so I offer them an opportunity to read attentively what's included in Hansard, the arguments from both sides. Should there be a need for either member to add something further to this matter, we'll invite you with the conclusion of the Routine tomorrow afternoon to do so as we move forward with respect to this matter. In other words, the chair will not have a decision rendered by tomorrow but will give both members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky an opportunity tomorrow to look at that matter. I appreciate the responsible approach taken by both hon. members with respect to this.

Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Now we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who has a Standing Order 30 application.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I would move that we adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the failure of the government to promptly introduce and pass royalty legislation to prevent the loss of billions of dollars to the public treasury as oil prices rise dramatically.

Mr. Speaker, under this I would like to indicate that in section 30(7) motions under this standing order are subject to the following conditions. First of all, that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." I would argue that the government's failure to bring forward legislation at the beginning of this session means that Albertans stand to lose billions of dollars in revenue as the delay prevents the implementation of new royalty legislation that would raise rates. The government has stated that it does not intend to have its new royalty rates take effect until 2009, and it does not intend to bring forward legislation on the matter in this session; therefore, there is no other opportunity to debate this issue.

Mr. Speaker, with the price of a barrel of oil just about now reaching $100, the unwillingness of the government to move quickly and promptly on the issue will cost the public treasury millions of dollars by the minute between now and 2009, and the implications of such a sizable loss of revenue make this an urgent matter.

Other requirements that "not more than one . . . motion may be proceeded with on the same day" seem to be satisfied.

Section (c) that "not more than one matter may be discussed on the same motion" I think is met.

That "the motion must not revive discussion on a matter that has been discussed in the same session pursuant to this Standing Order" has been met.

The motion is not based on a question of privilege, and discussion under the motion does not raise a question that can only be debated on a motion on notice.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that the failure of the government in the past but also going forward to deal adequately with the question of royalties has cost the treasury of this province billions upon billions of dollars. The decision of the government not to proceed with legislation immediately in this session means that additional massive quantities of cash which ought to be coming to the people of this province will instead flow to large multinational oil and gas companies.

Mr. Speaker, this is an urgent matter because we all know that there are priorities among the people of this province that are crying out for solutions, and the government's negligence, dare I say, on this whole question has cost Albertans dearly. I believe that this is a most urgent matter which requires the full attention of the Assembly, and we should be debating this question of royalties today in this House so that all Albertans can see where all of the parties stand on the matter and that we can ensure, hopefully, that the value of our resources, which is the heritage of our children and our grandchildren, is adequately captured by a government policy that puts the people of this province first, not the multinational oil companies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Do others want to offer some guidance to the chair? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would oppose the adjourning of the ordinary business of the House to speak to this matter for a number of reasons. One should only do that in the most urgent of cases, and while the question of royalties is very important – the whole question of the royalty regime and the way forward with respect to royalties is absolutely one of the most important questions for Albertans today – it doesn't necessarily meet the test of urgency as has been framed by the hon. member today.

He wants to have the House adjourn to discuss the failure of the government to promptly introduce and pass royalty legislation. Well, this is day 1 of the session. No additional legislation has been introduced this fall as yet because it is day 1 of the session. But I will say that I did indicate as House leader that it was not our intention to bring legislation forward this fall because it takes time to properly draft legislation to make sure that it has the appropriate effect, and it takes time to put in place the necessary technology to give effect to the legislation. It's been made very clear by this government what the new royalty regime will be and when it will take effect, and the legislation that's needed to do that will be drafted carefully and appropriately and brought into the House when it's ready to do so.

Now, the question of the passing of the legislation, of course, is not the government's purview; it's this House's purview, so to debate the failure of the government to pass royalty legislation really denigrates the role of the House.

Preventing the loss of a billion dollars to the public treasury is another piece of it, and quite frankly if that's what the hon. member wants to debate, then there will be supplementary supply this fall, and there will be an opportunity during that supplementary supply to talk about whatever the hon. member might want to bring forward.

So there are a number of reasons why. While the question of royalties and the royalty process is a very important question for Albertans, the Standing Order 30 that's brought forward by the member today doesn't pass the tests of urgency and appropriateness.

The Speaker: Others?

Okay. Well, the chair is prepared to rule on this matter. First, the chair confirms that the notice of the application was provided to the Speaker's office this morning at 9:55 by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview of the leader's intention to seek permission, so the requirement in terms of notification certainly has been met.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed to be put to the Assembly, the chair must rule whether the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that the matter proposed for discussion relates to "a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

The relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic are Beauchesne's, paragraphs 387, 390, and House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589. The chair has reviewed these references closely in considering this request for leave, and there are two key points that the chair would like to emphasize to all members. First, to meet the requirements of urgency, there must not be another opportunity for members of the Assembly to discuss the matter, and secondly, the matter must relate to a genuine emergency.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the failure of the government to promptly introduce and pass royalty legislation to prevent the loss of billions of dollars to the public treasury as oil prices rise dramatically.

One of the key words in all of this is "royalties," at least in the eyes of the chair, who has been in Alberta for the last five or six months and has heard this word once, twice, three times.

The chair has listened attentively to arguments from both sides of the Assembly in this matter. The chair would however like to make some preliminary comments about Standing Order 30 applications generally. First, the chair has difficulty with the language used in the proposed application. It is provocative, pejorative, and in parts simply incorrect. The incorrect portion is where it says that the government can "introduce and pass royalty legislation." The government can certainly introduce the legislation, but it is only this Assembly that can pass it. The chair would think that this is a rather fundamental aspect of the law-making process of which members are involved.

The chair raised similar issues in an application by the leader of the third party on May 10, 2005, at pages 1400 to 1401 for that day. The chair's concern is that even though the debate under Standing Order 30 does not entail a decision of the Assembly, it would be perceived that if the application was to succeed, people can infer that the chair and members agree with the provocative wording, which is not the case.

To return to the wording of Standing Order 30, suborder (1) refers to a member requesting leave to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of, again, "urgent public importance." The chair interprets the motion to be for the adjournment of the business of the Assembly. It should not entail the sort of wording found in the member's motion. The chair interprets the request to be for a discussion in the Assembly concerning royalties on petroleum-based resources. That's the interpretation that the chair gives to the submission.

The chair would also draw to all members' attention that this interpretation may have further implications, and you may find those further implications under Standing Order 30(7)(d).

In terms of meeting the urgency requirement, the chair has closely reviewed today's Order Paper to determine whether there is another opportunity afforded to members to discuss this very serious matter. It does not appear to the chair based on the November 5, 2007, Order Paper that there will be an opportunity other than the question period to debate the issue of royalties and all that has happened since the Assembly last met.

Finally, although the chair has concerns with the wording of the hon. member's motion, the chair would be hard-pressed to find that the matter of royalty rates in the province of Alberta is not a matter that qualifies as a genuine emergency for the purposes of having a debate in this Assembly on this matter this afternoon. The chair would not in any way want to be taken as saying that this does not constitute a genuine emergency when so much of the province's economic life revolves around nonrenewable energy resources. Accordingly, the chair finds that the request for leave is in order and now puts the following question: shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

I suspect that all members would like to know the process and the procedure. I'll go through the process and the procedure just so that everybody is aware of this; this is so infrequent that we've arrived at this kind of a conclusion. If 15 or more members rise, the debate proceeds and the Speaker calls upon the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. The debate time would then be 10 minutes and conclude when all members who wish to take part have spoken or at 6 this afternoon, whichever occurs first. So if 15 or more members rise, the debate proceeds.

If at least five members but less than 15 rise, the question on whether the member has leave to move adjournment of the ordinary business is put immediately and if necessary determined by a division; in other words, although the chair has said that this can proceed, if there are between five and 15 members, you will then vote yes or no, and you can overrule the chair. This is not a vote of confidence in the chair.

The third option is the following: if fewer than five members rise, the motion does not proceed.

So the question is now asked: shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

[Fewer than 15 but more than five members rose. The division bell was rung at 3 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

The Speaker: Hon. members, first of all, we have not called Orders of the Day yet, so if there are outside liquids in the Assembly, this is still inappropriate.

Secondly, this being a rather unique situation, for those members who may not have been in the Chamber, who may have been out taking a very important call, dealing with a constituent and the like, there has been opportunity already. If 15 or more members would have risen, we would have proceeded to this debate per se. We are now into a division, and it will be a majority vote that will determine the decision. It will not be 15 or more members alone that will cause this action to move in a certain direction.

We currently have the question: shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

[Motion to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly carried]

The Speaker: The chair will now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to proceed and will draw to all members' attention Standing Orders 30(5), (6), and (7). Essentially, the speaking time is now 10 minutes per member. When all members who wish to take part have spoken, the debate will end or at the normal hour of adjournment, which would be 6 o'clock this afternoon. This debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly, and no vote is taken. All members may provide their thoughts for 10 minutes.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's an unexpected pleasure and a great honour to rise to speak to the Standing Order 30 request for a debate on royalties. This is an issue that has been of great interest to Albertans from one corner of our province to the other for the past several months, and in fact it's an issue that goes way back in time in this province.

I want to go back to the days when Peter Lougheed, formerly the Premier of this province and a Conservative leader, raised royalties not once but twice, in 1972 and 1974, and the howls of outrage from the oil industry when he did that, Mr. Speaker. The oil companies stayed, and in fact Alberta has prospered. That brings me to the present decision of the government to raise royalties by an amount which is less than was recommended by the royalty task force of the province, which talked about raising royalties. That was for us a minimum amount, a good starting place. That task force report would have increased the revenue of the province by approximately $2 billion per year. The government's proposal falls short of that mark and raises royalties by $1.4 billion according to the government's own numbers.

Mr. Speaker, clearly, the standard which I think the people of Alberta set, which is that the royalty task force recommendations are a bare minimum, has not been met by the government. We have the Premier taking out at great public expense advertising in newspapers, on radio, and so on claiming that he has met a commitment to the people of Alberta. He has not. He has not met the commitment the people of Alberta expect.

Let's be clear. The value of the oil in this province is rising very, very dramatically. Just the other day the price of oil hit nearly $96 per barrel. The royalty regime we're now dealing with was set in the days of $15 a barrel. Mr. Speaker, in the last election the Alberta NDP was the only party to call for an increase in royalties. The reaction that we got from the leader of the Conservative Party at that time, Mr. Klein, was that it was a new NDP NEP, that it would bring about a disaster when royalties were raised. The Liberals were completely silent on this question during the last election, when we were the only party that stood up in favour of higher royalties.

Mr. Speaker, we now are faced with the prospect of $100 a barrel oil or higher. The royalty task force members have said that what they represented in their report was actually a compromise. In fact, they retained the penny-on-the-dollar royalty for the oil sands plants that were not fully paid out, and that, I think, is unacceptable. The Premier has talked about raising it to a nickel. No other industry receives that degree of subsidization from the public purse for its capital costs. In fact, the economic rent that we receive under the new proposal of the government will fall very far short of the potential of this province.

The government claims that it is going to increase royalties by 20 per cent. The Liberal opposition claims that they are going to raise royalties by 20 per cent. Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that that falls well short of the economic rent on these resources. In fact, when oil increases from $80 to $100 and from $100 to $120 a barrel, there is no additional value that is brought by the operations of the company. These companies are profitable at $50 a barrel, so when it goes much higher than that, why then does the government regime allow the majority of that increased value to flow to the companies? Where does it go? There's so much talk on the other side about the oil industry and the benefits that it brings to this province's economy, and that's true, but what they overlook is that the bulk of the profits that these oil companies are making is actually going to shareholders.

If you look at EnCana, last year it posted the highest profit of any company in Canadian history, $6.3 billion profit. Mr. Speaker, EnCana could have paid the whole $2 billion that the royalty task force proposed for an increase and still been able to give its shareholders $4.3 billion in value.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it's clear that this government has settled for peanuts. We will remain among the lowest royalties in the entire world. Why, when Norway, when Alaska have built up huge funds, are we going to continue to collect a fraction of the value that we as Albertans deserve on our own resources? I thought that the task force report made a very good point. It said that there's a fundamental difference between taxes and royalties. Taxes are something you take from people who've worked hard to earn it, so every penny you take has to be justified. On the other hand, royalties are something you charge for something that you own, so every penny you don't take has to be justified.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has not justified the actions that it has taken. It has not justified the fact that it is taking so little of the value. Why is it that under the new proposal Alberta will remain near the very bottom of royalty rates charged in the world?

Mr. Speaker, look what we have. We have in northern Alberta an oil deposit that is one of the largest if not the largest untapped reserves of oil in the entire world. Quite frankly, oil companies are finding less oil. We are nearly reaching the point of peak oil, where available supplies will not be growing but will be declining at the same time that oil prices and the demand that drives those prices is increasing constantly. So what we're looking at in the long term are continued, sustained, and significant increases in the price of oil on the world market, yet we are settling for less than half of that increase in value. If oil goes up a dollar, under the government's proposal less than half of that will come back to us, the owners of the resources.

I say that it's pretty clear that this government has caved in to big oil. It has surrendered the position of this province. It has sold the people of Alberta out. It has not got the best deal that we could have had, and quite frankly I think that the Premier should not be spending taxpayers' money trying to convince the people that he did get a good deal. It's pretty obvious when you compare Alberta's new royalty regime that's proposed to the royalty regimes of other countries in the world that we didn't get a good deal. I don't think that the Premier has delivered on his commitment in any way.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta NDP has been very vocal on this issue from the last election forward to today. We've campaigned very hard and we've been very clear that the royalty task force recommendations were a bare minimum. The government has caved in to oil company pressure, and I've been, quite frankly, very surprised that the Alberta Liberal opposition has been largely silent on this issue.

Mr. Elsalhy: Focus on the government.

Mr. Mason: Well, he'd like me to focus on the government, but I think there are three parties in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Four.

Mr. Mason: Four. I apologize.

It's important that we all know where we stand. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals have been AWOL on this issue. The heavy lifting, as usual, on these kinds of issues has been done by the four-member caucus of the Alberta NDP. Until we get a fair deal on royalties in this province, we're going to stand up against a Premier who falsely claims that he has delivered on a promise. He has not; he has sold us out. He has left lots and lots of money on the table, billions that will not be available for our children and our grandchildren. It's a shame, and it's completely unacceptable.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, because of what the Assembly has done this afternoon, there wasn't an opportunity for the chair to say, "Orders of the Day," which would have allowed outside liquids and laptop computers to be used in the Assembly. So let's assume that this is okay because you're going to have a gruelling afternoon, and sustenance is always important for nourishment, not only nourishment to the mind but nourishment to the body. And you will not be interrupting anybody with the utilization of laptop computers.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: Here's what I have so far in terms of members who have provided notice of their intent to participate: the Minister of Energy, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. That's probably a pretty good list for the moment. There are other members who have advised.

We'll go with the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to stand and join the debate this afternoon with respect to the issue. I would not necessarily agree that, in my humble opinion, it would meet all of the requirements. Nevertheless, we find ourselves here, and I'm happy to engage in this discussion. I agree, in fact, with the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood that the issue of royalty review and reform is a matter of the highest importance, and I'm sure that all of our colleagues in the Assembly would agree with that.

While the discussion and implementation of the new royalty framework is a matter of utmost significance for this House and for all Albertans, Mr. Speaker, it's not a matter that can or should be treated with undue haste by this Assembly. The Premier has made a commitment that the new royalty framework will be implemented by this government, and it will be. However, making wholesale changes to Alberta's royalty systems for conventional oil and gas and for oil sands is not something that can be done overnight. It requires a series of legislative and regulatory amendments and a host of changes to the Department of Energy's software systems.

At a minimum, Mr. Speaker, changes will be required to the following acts and regulations: the Mines and Minerals Act, the mines and minerals administration regulation, the petroleum royalty regulation, the oil sands royalty regulation 1997, the oil sands tenure regulation, the natural gas royalty regulation, the freehold mineral rights tax regulation, and four regulations regarding royalty reduction for low productivity for high-cost wells.

As all hon. members know, amendments to any complex piece of legislation cannot be written overnight. They must be carefully drafted by Legislative Counsel in consultation with department officials, who in turn would hold discussions with those who may be affected by these changes. Once the amendments have been scrutinized and fine-tuned in the policy-making process, they can be introduced into this Assembly for debate. Mr. Speaker, I submit that it would be irresponsible of us to do otherwise with a matter of such fundamental importance.

In addition to the requirements of due legislative process, Mr. Speaker, there are technical considerations which preclude this issue from being considered an emergency. Quite frankly, it's physically impossible to implement any substantive change to the province's royalty system overnight. Alberta Energy currently utilizes five software systems to calculate and collect royalties from industry. Implementing the changes outlined in Alberta's new royalty framework will require new programs as well as substantial rewriting to existing software programs. Of course, companies in the oil and gas industry face many of the same technical barriers to immediate implementation. More importantly, they must make decisions about future capital deployment, and it would be manifestly unfair of us to impose such sweeping changes so abruptly even if it were possible.

It is in appreciation of all the factors that I have outlined, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier determined that Alberta's new royalty framework would take effect in January 2009. While the hon. member and other members of this Assembly are free to disagree with the decision and will have an opportunity to do so in this Assembly at an appropriate time, I submit to you that the matter is not a fit subject for an emergency. Implementing Alberta's new royalty framework through immediate legislation would be both irresponsible with respect to the legislative process and physically not possible with respect to the systems involved.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the hon. member's contention that billions of dollars are at stake if these changes are not implemented immediately. As all hon. members are aware, a substantial portion of our provincial revenues derive from the energy sector, and this is an inherently volatile industry. Over a full year a 1-cent change to the U.S./Canada exchange rate costs the provincial treasury $123 million. A 10-cent change in the Alberta reference price for natural gas costs can mean a swing of nearly $100 million in revenue. When these changes occur, we do not react precipitously; instead, we budget prudently and make changes to our fiscal and royalty systems only after careful consideration.

Mr. Speaker, we have, I believe, set in motion a framework for the future that will put in place a royalty regime that will serve Albertans very, very well for a decade or more to come. To look back and suggest that at some point, some snapshot in history, government policies, for whatever reason, may not have put all of the dollars into a government coffer that could have been put there by some other policy of government I think is just not a responsible way to look at the royalty system.

I believe that in order to fully understand the share that Albertans have received from this resource, we need to take into consideration the fact that this industry has generated literally thousands and thousands of jobs for Albertans, very high-paying jobs. It has allowed us to expand our postsecondary education institutions. It's allowed us to expand our health care and medical facilities. It has allowed the province of Alberta to grow some 60,000 to 80,000 souls a year in the last number of years. It has made Alberta a very vibrant industrial community for all Albertans.

I believe that the debate that will go on with respect to the royalty issue is certainly an important one for Albertans. We believe that the system has provided a very good result for Albertans, and, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to it continuing to provide that result for some time to come.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon on Standing Order 30. I would like to recognize the chair for indicating that this matter could proceed. I think it's very important. This debate is certainly very important at this time, and I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for bringing forward this Standing Order 30.

Certainly, I'm hearing lots of discussion on this already, but when the Alberta government compromised last week on the Our Fair Share report that was presented – and this is an independent panel, Mr. Hunter and his colleagues. When they indicate that we're not getting our fair share, the Alberta government, by choosing not to increase royalties by the amount recommended by the Royalty Review Panel – that compromise is an emergency, a public emergency. We have a half a billion dollars here that we're not collecting on an annual basis, and this is added on, Mr. Speaker, to the billions and billions of dollars that went uncollected – and I'm very disappointed – knowingly uncollected by this government going back to the year 2000.

Now, when the Royalty Review Panel released their report in mid-September, they stated, Mr. Speaker: "Albertans do not receive their fair share from energy development and they have not, in fact, been receiving their fair share for quite some time." The panel, as everyone knows – and hopefully all hon. members have read the report in detail – recommended a royalty increase of $1.8 billion between now and 2010. This was rejected for whatever reason by our government, and this rejection will cost us in this province at least a half a billion dollars in uncollected royalties annually. That is far too much money to leave uncollected; I'm sorry. When we increase royalties, we must also have the political will to collect them on behalf of the citizens. Alberta's citizens, I have to remind this Legislature, own the resources, and we have to look after their public interest. Unfortunately, this government has not been doing this.

Certainly, there is one act here, the Mines and Minerals Act, that needs to be amended, but the rest of the amendments that need to be made so that we can collect our fair share are all in the regulations. I for one would certainly love to see those regulations tabled here in the Assembly and vigorously debated, but I don't have confidence nor do the citizens of Alberta have confidence in this government that that will be done. There's no reason in the world why the Mines and Minerals Act could not be amended to facilitate these changes.

I certainly recognize the reason and the caution for a one-year transition on this. We have to get the bitumen valuation methodology done. That key recommendation from the Our Fair Share report by Mr. Hunter certainly indicated that we need to work at that. We need to work at it by June 2008 to have it implemented because we didn't have a fair market to determine the price of bitumen. The Auditor General in his report also indicated that by the year 2010 we could be losing upwards of a billion dollars a year if we don't have a proper bitumen valuation methodology. So that's why we should get at this, but at the same time I would advocate that there be a transition period through to June of next year so that we can get this bitumen methodology written in stone.

Now, the New Democrats – and we're very grateful to the third party for bringing this forward, but there are some things that I need to get on the record here, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I made a presentation on behalf of our caucus to the public hearings that were conducted by Mr. Hunter and his panel, but as far as I know, the New Democrats did not. I don't know why they didn't, but for them to continuously harp on about no one else seeming to care is totally wrong. If the New Democrats were really interested, why did they not make a presentation to Mr. Hunter's . . .

An Hon. Member: Why do you think that?

Mr. MacDonald: Why do I think that? Because the New Democrats, hon. member, are very confused. You've got one group of them who wants to shut down the entire oil sands for environmental consequences, and you've got another group within the party that wants to increase royalties by up to 90 per cent. So I think there were a lot of internal divisions within the New Democrat Party, and that's probably why they couldn't have taken the time to make a presentation to Mr. Hunter's review panel. [interjection] Yes, hon. member, it does do good. It's obvious the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Claireview doesn't understand the details of the report because, certainly, we made recommendations that are addressed in there, hon. member. So it can be done. The New Democrats have answers to give, and maybe they can in due course provide them, why they didn't make a presentation to such an important review panel.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General – and we talked about him a little earlier – in his latest report also supported an increase in royalty rates: “The Department estimates that it could collect an additional $1 billion or more per year without stifling industry profitability.” Certainly, I would urge all hon. members to consider the wisdom of the Auditor General and the Auditor General's office on this. We're all engaged in this royalty debate. Again, let's look at the recommendations of the independent panel appointed by this government and the wise direction of the Auditor General.

Mr. Speaker, there are those who say that this is not the right moment to increase royalties. I have never met an energy executive who thought it was the right time to increase royalties. We recognize that there are always issues the energy industry has to deal with. Today they're environmental issues and uncertainty caused by war. These are critical international issues. But there's also the uncertainty here caused by the Crown agreement that may have to be negotiated.

The New Democrats always bring this up, and certainly this party accepts donations from energy companies, but when we take a donation from a company like Suncor, for instance – this is to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder – that doesn't silence us in the House. It's us that are asking the tough questions and have been asking the tough questions for the last three years about the Suncor-Syncrude order in council, not the New Democrats. We ask the tough questions.

The Premier at the time we asked the question didn't have a clue what we were talking about, but I was glad to see this whole issue of how Syncrude and Suncor are treated come out in Mr. Hunter's report. It's not fair to other oil sands producers that some people are treated more favourably than others.

An Hon. Member: You guys want to shut them all.

Mr. MacDonald: No. We want fair treatment for all oil sands operators. The government said that they were out of the business of picking winners and losers, but certainly when the order in council was slipped through cabinet over 10 years ago, the winners were Suncor and Syncrude.

Again, Mr. Speaker, there are those who say that costs for the oil and gas companies have gone up significantly in Alberta and we cannot increase royalties. But it's interesting that in the June 2007 EUB statistical review that was done, they didn't seem to think that costs were getting out of hand. The oil and gas executives have indicated to us that costs are out of hand, but that isn't what was in the EUB annual statistical review in June of this year.

Mr. Pedro van Meurs, an international expert on royalties who has advised this province on offshore rig rates and royalty structures . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'm sorry; I can't continue, but thank you.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, indeed, Mr. Speaker, what a privilege it is to rise on this important initiative. I want to say to the New Democrats, who brought this motion forward, that it's quite nice to see. Obviously, the Liberals didn't do that. The Liberals are saying that the New Democrats are confused, and here the Liberals are with their policy on the fly as they go forward in terms of their approach to royalty review. It is really reassuring to know that there is a government that gets it right – and it's the Progressive Conservative government – in terms of striking the right balance.

Mr. Speaker, a fair share was the theme of the royalty review report. It also is the theme of the new royalty framework that our Premier announced. Our Premier and the Minister of Energy made a commitment, and they are delivering on that commitment to all Albertans in terms of delivering our fair share.

As we just look around, it's clear that the old royalty system helped create one of the world's most successful economies ever. I draw to your attention what citizens have said to me.

Back in 1996 when the royalty fiscal regime was implemented, it was implemented to be able to combat what had just taken place in the province of Alberta. We had an OSLO plant, referred to as the other six leaseholders, that in fact was cancelled. We had Alsands, that was going to build, and that was cancelled. In fact, we had a bridge to nowhere. It was a bridge that spanned the Athabasca River, called the Lougheed bridge, that was built, it turns out, for the future. Ultimately, that bridge to nowhere is now a bridge to over $130 billion because of the decisive action and because of the actual royalty framework we have in place. It is a royalty framework that will continue to improve, ensuring that Albertans continue to get their fair share.

Mr. Speaker, our Premier is striking the right balance. Just recently, to demonstrate how things change, the CIBC, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, and the Toronto-Dominion Bank have predicted that in the next 10 years the world price of oil will be set by the oil sands province here in our country of Canada, that Alberta will be setting and determining what the world price of oil is, something that was unheard of in years gone by. But it really demonstrates the volatility of what's happening on world markets, the fact that our province will be setting the world price of oil because of the oil sands.

What an incredible treasure we in fact have. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that as we look around in terms of this royalty review, first of all, in 1996 the fiscal regime predicted $25 billion over 25 years. The policy of the Conservative government in this province has worked so well that it didn't generate $25 billion of investment; it has attracted investment from all over the world that now nears $130 billion, and it was predicted.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Boutilier: How much, do you ask? A hundred and thirty billion dollars. And that $130 billion goes over to a bridge to somewhere, which is the investment because this government had a vision for the future in terms of where we are and where we're going.

What's really important here, Mr. Speaker, was that the price of oil was then under $20 a barrel. Now as we look at WTI, west Texas intermediate, at something well over $90 a barrel, it just demonstrates, unlike what the Liberals think or the New Democrats think, that things are just not stuck in time, that it's a continuous improvement approach that this government takes. That's what in fact attracts investment to this province: because of the resource we've been blessed with. As the Premier has said: the government doesn't own this resource, and industry does not own this resource; this resource is owned by all Albertans. The Premier made a commitment, and he is delivering on that commitment in terms of getting Albertans' fair share.

But times will continue to change, and the fact is that the Middle East, who now set the price of oil at the world international scale, will actually be changed because it will be the province of Alberta that will be setting the world price of oil because of the importance of the oil sands in the future. That really marks in terms of the next 20 years how important it's going to be for our children and our grandchildren relative to the impact that the oil sands are having.

The framework that's been introduced by our Premier and by our Minister of Energy is one that bodes well for the future of certainty, of confidence, and getting it right. Rather than being confused, like the Liberals accuse the NDPs of being – you know, “They're confused”; I'm not going to weigh into that battle – I can say, rather than others, who suggest that the Liberals operate on a policy on the fly perspective, that this government gets it right. We manage in a measured approach. We examine. We analyze.

To give you an example of that, we needed a new royalty framework that gives Albertans a fairer share in terms of today's energy sector. The Royalty Review Panel conducted a detailed study and an analysis, an extensive public and industry consultation. The Auditor General conducted his own review of how governments' royalty systems are designed and operated, and we welcomed that. We heard from industry and from more than 9,000 Albertans, the owners of this resource, who posted, faxed, phoned, and e-mailed their MLAs. Also, the committee in itself: they presented, too. Now, on top of that, the government also conducted its own technical analysis.

The new royalty framework reflects all of this, and that's why we are getting it right. We are not policy on the fly, like what we're hearing opposite the way. We are being measured in our approach, and we are getting it right because that is our responsibility as a government to the people of Alberta, the true owners of this resource. This gives Albertans a greater share when energy prices are high and helps sustain the industry when prices are low. While producing more volume, we'll pay higher royalties. This means that lower producing conventional wells pay less while higher producing conventional wells and oil sands pay more when the price is high. Overall, royalty rates will in fact increase. We expect these changes to deliver an extra over $1.4 billion, depending on production, by the year just under 2010 and also depending on what the world price of oil will be at that time.

You can see that there are many spokes in the wheel. So often when we hear some of the discussion earlier today, it really just shows you that the opposition are using one piece of a puzzle that's very complex. I have confidence in our Premier, in his commitment on what he has delivered on and also the Minister of Energy on what he is acting on.

That really means this to Albertans: they are going to be receiving a 20 per cent increase over current projections for the upcoming years. One-third of those higher revenues will go to savings. Also, the rest will go to infrastructure in the many communities that have that resource where the work is taking place because we want to direct that infrastructure to the areas where the resource, in fact, is coming from. It's interesting to note that our Premier when he first became Premier came to the oil sands capital of the world in Fort McMurray and delivered on the oil sands secretariat, which falls under the Ministry of Service Alberta, where, in fact, they delivered over half a billion dollars on top of the $900 million that is being used for infrastructure for twinning, on top of the $102 million that went towards the city of Fort McMurray for the new water treatment plant, not to mention the extra $1,040 that goes to teachers and nurses and support staff in terms of the infrastructure, and that is human infrastructure, which is so important for our future.

Mr. Speaker, I have a six-month old son – I don't think anyone else has a son younger than that in this House – so I want to say that I have a vested interest relative to the future of Alberta. I want to say that I feel assured that our Premier's commitment and what he is delivering on, both him and this government and the Minister of Energy, is doing it right and is doing it for the future and the long-term sustainable future because that bridge to somewhere now, up over $130 billion, is going to be the way of the future in terms of what the world price of oil is going to be.

Mr. Speaker, we are delivering on a commitment that our government has made. This new Premier under a new administration is clearly acting on that. I want to say also that when I talk to citizens of my community, they trust Ed Stelmach, and they trust this government on getting it right, and they are doing it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we don't mention proper names in the House.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm sorry I mentioned his name, but I would like to say that the Premier is clearly delivering in terms of getting it right for his grandson and granddaughter and my son and Albertans' grandsons and granddaughters and children of the future because we can work in this. We are the only province in Canada where we don't have to leave our province to get a job. Just think of it: we are the envy of every single province and territory in this country. In fact, that is very obvious that we got it right, and we're continuing to get it right into the future.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think there are a couple of issues that I'd like to cover in my 10 minutes in responding to the motion set out in the Standing Order 30, and that specifically was outlining the failure of the government to promptly introduce and pass royalty legislation to prevent the loss of billions of dollars to the public treasury as oil prices rise dramatically. I think the issues that we need to take into consideration are those of stewardship, management, fiduciary duty, consequences, and issues of trust.

As far as stewardship, a number of people have spoken about the fact that this government collects royalties and is the steward of our natural resources on behalf of Albertans. I think we really need to underline that because where I come from, that means that there is even more onus on us as legislators and on government members to be careful. There's more onus to be careful because it's somebody else's resources. It's somebody else's money.

It's even more important that you're careful with somebody else's. When you are a steward for somebody else's belongings, you have to be even more careful than if it's your own. If you choose to make bad decisions with your own money or your own resources, fine; so be it. But when you're placed in a position of trust to look after someone else's, you'd better make sure that you're doing absolutely the best that you can possibly do for them.

I would argue that what we've seen come forward out of the Our Fair Share report and, indeed, backed up by what I'm reading in the Auditor General's report is that this government has not done that. They have not been good stewards. They have not been even more careful with somebody else's money – that is, Albertans' money and Albertans' resources – than they would have been about their own paycheck or their own bank account. I think that's going to relate to the loss of trust section that I'd like to talk to at the end of my remarks.

Now, you know, there was a very interesting day for me in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, when in response to a question the member – now I'm not going to remember the constituency up north – responded with, I think, what he thought at the time was a great insult by saying “Only the Liberals would plan and would look ahead” with great derision. He snorted that out, and we took that as a tremendous compliment because, in fact, we have done a great deal to plan.

Our funding our future policy has now been out for a couple of years. It outlines that we believed in the pay-yourself-first formula, in which oil and gas revenues would have had 30 per cent taken off the top and funneled into a series of endowment funds, including the heritage fund but also one for postsecondary education, for capital infrastructure, and for the arts, social sciences, and humanities. That money would be put away and would be grown through careful investment and management so that as oil and gas revenues declined, the money from those endowment funds and investments would be able to replace that money going into our budget.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, the money that is currently being collected by this government in the form of income tax and business tax and various levies does not meet the amount of money that they're spending. They are subsidizing every year with oil and gas revenue right out of the ground. This is not some savings account that they're drawing on. They are taking oil and gas revenues right out of the ground and putting it right into this year's budget. So management of our resources, I argue, has been very poorly done by this government. They're not managing well, and I think that any money manager would tell you that's really, really bad practice to be doing that because if, for example, we had a terrible downturn, there was some catastrophic event, we'd be in serious trouble and would be looking at cutting massively into programs that, frankly, are just struggling to recover from the number of cuts that the government levied against them in the '90s.

Poor stewardship, a lack of planning, which the previous Premier took as a boasting point: I think, frankly, that will, sadly, end up being his legacy. That's what people are going to remember him for: really, he had no plan. That wasn't something to be proud of because, again, as stewards for Albertans we're expected to be able to do that.

I think we have a fiduciary duty as legislators and certainly as government members to be managing people's money wisely and to be getting the maximum amount of money for them and to be making financial decisions that are going to benefit Albertans. I would argue that that has not been happening. There has been a carelessness. There has been a lack of planning. Even the way the government is currently reacting to the two reports that are out. Do we get a government that's going, "Yes, all right. We didn't do very well, and we will do better"? No. What I'm hearing today – and it has been very interesting being back in this Assembly – is the Public Affairs Bureau spin campaign just a-whirring in the background, just a-whirring away in the background, giving all members of the government caucus those special words and phrases to say.

Are they acknowledging that things didn't go well and could go better? No. What I'm hearing is, "Oh, we the public didn't understand," and "We the opposition members really don't know," and "We're confused." Nobody is admitting that there was a problem here. Now what I'm hearing is the spin: "Well, others didn't get it," and "We didn't really mean it that way," and "We can't read the reports properly," and all the rest of that.

I notice that when the Minister of Energy was speaking and defending why he couldn't have passed royalty legislation to prevent the loss of billions, he listed off the things that would have to be changed. You know what? I listened, Mr. Speaker, and what I heard was one piece of legislation and a dozen regulations. Well, I am deeply sorry if the Minister of Energy, who sits in cabinet, does not understand the government process. Regulations in this province end up getting passed behind closed doors by the Lieutenant Government in Council, also known as cabinet. It doesn't require legislation to change those half dozen regs that he rolled off in his response to this, and there's only one piece of legislation.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? We've seen examples of cooperation in this House, and I would dare say that if this government brought forward good legislation on the royalties and the oil and gas structure, it could be through this Assembly in four days. That's one week. No problem: first reading, second reading, Committee of the Whole, and third reading. We'd be done in a week if it was good legislation. But I don't see any attempt by this government to even deal with that. What I get instead is what I've come to expect from this government, actually, which is: don't take responsibility, don't be accountable, don't be transparent, try and make it somebody else's fault, and then tell everyone else they were confused and didn't understand it.

But you know what? Members of the public got a great opportunity this time around because they got two other reports, independent reports: the Auditor General's and Our Fair Share reports. They got an opportunity to read those reports on their own and make up their own mind. You know what? They are making up their own mind.

Let me talk about consequences. What we're seeing now is that even with the reports we have in front of us, there are significant consequences for the environment. That has not been discussed, I would argue, in any way, shape, or form as part of this whole discussion, and it needs to be. I can tell you that in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre that is a major concern: how this whole structure – the oil and gas resources, the revenue programs – is going to affect our environment, the effect on the environment being a major concern, and rolled into all of the decision-making on that, environmental assessment programs done as a part of that.

We have consequences for this province in that money was not collected that should have been collected, Mr. Speaker. I can really see that in the capacity of our NGOs, our nongovernment organizations – that's our charities, our volunteer-based organizations, our societies – in their ability to provide the programs and services that government has abdicated from. We also have a problem with funding for our health and education.

So the bottom line here is that our public now understands that this government can't be trusted. They won't accept responsibility for what they've done. They won't be accountable. They won't be transparent. And to just stand up and say, "Oh, this is not true," or "The public somehow misunderstands," is, I think, a gross miscalculation of what Albertans are capable of. I hope clearly that Albertans will show the government how much they understand these reports at the next election, which can't come too soon as far as I'm concerned. We've had a failing.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It does give me great pleasure as well to rise today to speak to the Standing Order 30 that has been accepted by the majority of this House. I think it's pretty apparent right now to all Albertans that there was a very important thing that took place in this province from about mid-September to mid-October. The Premier allowed the Royalty Review Panel suggestions to be out there for the public to have a look at and to comment back on, and I'm happy to say that the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar did take the time to read the Royalty Review Panel's suggestions, to send me a large number of e-mails, and to give me a lot of calls. I had several days of meetings as well as a town hall meeting that was set up by one of the oil companies in our town. A large, large number of responses with regard to the royalty review, I'd say probably over a hundred, which is very, very rare. In my almost seven years as an MLA I've never seen a response like that on any issue.

The calls, the letters, the e-mails, the public forums, et cetera, all seemed to carry a fairly common theme. Of course, a lot of them had very good, interesting, individual issues, but the overriding theme – about 80 to 90 per cent of the people of my area of Drayton Valley-Calmar understood that a royalty review was necessary, that it was timely, but they did not want us to take the full 20 per cent, the panel's recommendation.

More importantly, what they did say was: whatever happens, we want you to do two things. Number one, make a decision. There was a lot of pain and angst out there while the industry was waiting for the government to make a decision with regard to the royalty review, so they wanted us to make a decision as to what we were going to do. Secondly, that once that decision was made, understanding that there would most likely be an increase in royalties, they would be given time to implement that decision. Speaking as someone from Drayton Valley, from oil town – in fact, as you drive into Drayton Valley, it says: oil capital of the world. I know that maybe that's a little bit presumptuous, but Drayton Valley is all about oil, as is the rest of my constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I have to happily say that the Premier did make a decision. In fact, on October 25 our Premier delivered on his promise to take decisive action and ensure that Albertans get their fair share of revenues from the development of energy resources that belong to them. Implementing our new royalty regime is part of our Premier's plan to secure Alberta's future by building our communities, by greening our growth, and by creating opportunity.

This plan proposes royalty rate increases that are reasonable and that will guarantee a solid future for our energy sector, which is so important to the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar. Under Alberta's new royalty framework energy royalties are expected to increase by approximately $1.4 billion by 2010. This is an increase of 20 per cent over revenues forecast for that year under the current regime.

Reviewing and updating our province's royalty regime has been the topic of months of discussion, with literally thousands of Albertans expressing their opinions on the best course of action. This review has involved detailed review and analysis as well as extensive public and industry consultation. In fact, I think it's well known, but I'll just recap that Alberta's Royalty Review Panel hosted five public meetings across the province and accepted more than 220 submissions from Alberta residents, municipal leaders, and stakeholders in the oil and gas industry. The panel then made a number of recommendations for our government's consideration. Since then nearly 9,000 Albertans posted, faxed, phoned, and e-mailed their views on the panel's report. Once again, our government also considered the Auditor General's report, which has been mentioned in the debate earlier today, Mr. Speaker, further public and industry feedback as well as further technical analysis. Then all of these pieces were taken into consideration and incorporated into Alberta's new royalty framework.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this framework is the right plan to secure Alberta's future. It will provide Albertans with a fair share from the development of our province's energy resources while maintaining a healthy future for the oil and gas industry. It's a good deal for Albertans, and it's a fair deal for the industry that has made substantial investments in developing our energy resources, creating tens of thousands of jobs for Albertans, especially the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar and, of course, producing tens of billions of dollars in provincial revenues in the process, dollars that have helped us to build schools and hospitals and roads and new bridges and pave highways and do so much more, running social programs and the like.

That's important because an effective royalty regime is really only one of the ways that Albertans benefit from the energy development in our province. Economic activity, jobs, and tax revenue generated from the energy sector are also important and are part of the broader considerations the government has taken into account. The new royalty framework also offers a stable and predictable plan to increase the royalty share for the province while allowing industry the necessary time to adjust to these changes.

Highlights of the plan, which is expected to take effect on January 1, 2009, include a royalty rate structure for conventional oil and gas that operates on a sliding scale determined by commodity price and well productivity to reflect oil and gas economics. In other words, as commodity prices rise, so will the royalty rates on all the wells. Those wells producing higher amounts of oil or natural gas will pay even higher royalties and vice versa, which is good. That's important. The lower producers will pay less, and that's important for the older fields like the Pembina Cardium field, where I come from. The region where I live, Mr. Speaker, has been producing for over 50 years. Some of those wells are getting very, very costly to produce. We need that sliding scale up and down so that we can keep the people working and use the infrastructure that's currently in place – the pipelines, the personnel, everything that's there – so that we can get the full value out of those fields, which is best for the environment.

This new, simplified formula will also eliminate the need for the current royalty tiers and exemption programs. There are so many programs; it's so complicated. It's time to simplify. Our government will also introduce a sliding scale for oil sands royalties, ranging from 1 to 9 per cent pre-payout depending on the world price of oil. The net royalty will start at 25 per cent and increase for every dollar that oil prices rise above $55 per barrel to 40 per cent when oil is priced at $120 or higher. And that's not out of the question now, Mr. Speaker. As you heard earlier from the leader of the NDP, we're already approaching $100 a barrel.

Now, as the panel recommended, no grandfathering will be implemented for existing oil sands projects. Thus, our government is engaging in discussions with Syncrude and Suncor, who have Crown agreements that expire in 2016, to join the new royalty framework. In the event an agreement cannot be reached in 90 days, the government will take other measures to ensure a level playing field for all industry stakeholders. Mr. Speaker, this change recognizes the concerns expressed about the current oil sands royalty structure and will ensure that Albertans receive their fair share from oil sands development by providing a greater share of revenues as the prices rise.

Recognizing that Albertans want to see more of our raw energy resources upgraded here in our province, the province will also exercise its existing royalty-in-kind option. Now, this means that the province will be able to receive raw bitumen in lieu of cash royalties and then sell that bitumen so that it can be upgraded by Albertans in Alberta. In other words, we're going to create our own manufacturing sector right here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

Our government is also committed to ensuring that we have the best system in place to review how royalty revenue is collected and reported to Albertans, the owners of our resources. Former Auditor General Peter Valentine will lead a project to determine how these systems can be improved, and we'll provide his recommendations by March of 2008.

In closing, the big question is: what are we going to do with all this extra cash? Well, I'm happy to say that one-third of any additional revenues generated by Alberta's new royalty framework will be put into savings – into savings – and invested for future generations of Albertans, while two-thirds will be committed to capital spending projects that meet the needs of our growing economy. We can keep up to the growth, Mr. Speaker. Maintenance of those new capital assets, much-needed maintenance that is, will come from these increased revenues.

In addition to the normal fluctuations that affect the energy industry, we recognize that the new royalty regime may have some impact on activity in the short term. My hope as the MLA for Drayton Valley-Calmor is that we will keep the current companies busy throughout this transition process. However, this is a plan that encourages prosperity for the long term. I believe that we will see prosperity in the short term as well as in the long term. This plan will preserve our current economic successes and ensure that future generations receive a fair share of a well-managed and vigorous energy sector.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank you very much and thank this Assembly for this opportunity to debate this important and urgent matter. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to thank the Speaker for acknowledging this important issue and letting it go to a vote and to recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for bringing it forward – this is very important to Albertans – and to thank all the members who voted for it so that we could have this debate.

I would like to start off and I guess discuss the principle of what it is we're trying to do here in the province, and that is, as the Premier says, that we want to grow the size of the pie. Then we need to look at the principle and what allows us to grow the size of the pie. Throughout history we can see that whenever the government decides to step in and take more and spend more, the pie usually shrinks. Conversely, when the government has lowered taxes and lowered rules and regulations that are burdensome and don't serve any purpose, the actual take increases. If we were to look at the last three or four years and see the phenomenal increase in the income to the government, we'll very much see that this government and the people of Alberta have benefited to a tremendous amount from the boom in the oil and gas industry.

It's been disappointing, though, that this government has not recognized the oil and gas industry and acknowledged that to the public. It seems like in the last few years all they've talked about is that they have paid off the debt, that they are getting this infrastructure in there, and they fail to recognize that 40 per cent of our revenue to this province comes from the oil and gas sector. What they should be saying when they open up an overpass or a ring road or a new school or a hospital is to recognize and tell Albertans that we couldn't do this without the backbone of our industry right now, the oil and gas industry.

The increase in income tax of $3 billion in the last few years has been incredible. Corporate tax is up. The most amazing of all, though, is what the mineral lease rents have gone for. I want to address this just for a minute in that what investment people look at isn't the economic rent or the cost of doing it. When we want to put an investment in and if other places in the world want to invest in Alberta, what they do is: what does it look like the rate of return is going to be, and what is the risk related to that investment? From there, they make a decision on whether or not to put it in.

One of the disappointing things that this report, Our Fair Share, didn't bring forward was to look at the actual rate of return here in the province versus other jurisdictions. It's interesting how many leaders from other provinces and states have come here and said: "Oh, whoa. We're not going to be raising our taxes. We're open for business. Come here." Saskatchewan is also saying that they're going to continue the royalty holiday for high-production wells, and that's because they understand the rate of return on an investment, and they realize why we want that activity going on. It's disappointing that the government hasn't allowed Albertans to realize what an economic benefit the oil and gas industry has been instead of promoting themselves in gaming and lottery like that's what's driving our economy.

It's been reckless, though. What's happened to the industry over the last few months or, I guess, the last month is that there was a void, and they were not able to decide what to do for their fall drilling practices. The reports have come out that things are down significantly in what's going to happen this winter. We're going to see the economic downturn, and the revenue that's going to come in is going to I believe offset what little revenue they're going to try and grab in 2009. We'll again be chasing the car from the street behind and not catch the ride. This is just detrimental, the whole idea and the way they're attacking this.

We've also got the condition right now where our dollar has truly accelerated in the world market, but the price of oil hasn't. People were saying, "Oh, we're at all-time highs with oil and gas" when we're just reaching it now. Actually, we've lost it in the last two weeks. With the dollar hitting $1.07, we are not at all-time highs, yet the costs continue to go up, which is another area that was disappointing in the review, that they seemed to think that costs weren't part of the formula.

I'd like to talk for a minute about the different investment companies that I believe are the true experts when it comes to what should be the economic rent or what should be the rate of return and how we should be looking at adjusting it. There's been talk – and we certainly agree with that and put it out – that we think we need to look at where the break-even point is, as industry does. Everybody in this Assembly, I'm quite sure, is aware of the fact that we're already in a downturn in the gas industry because of the price of gas. We're already having rig utilization down 30 per cent, and they're forecasting it down almost 60 per cent by next year because long term they look at it being probably 12, maybe 18 months before there's a recovery in the price of gas.

[The Speaker in the chair]

One might note also in these reports – and the Department of Energy also puts it out – that they recommend that we go after these high-flowing gas and oil wells. Probably the most detrimental part of this whole review is to go after those ones because those are the ones that are already paying it. It's interesting to realize that, I believe, 5 per cent of the gas wells pay 63 per cent of our gas royalties and that 5 per cent of the oil wells pay 61 per cent of our oil royalties. This government and the review panel seemed to say: let's go after those big winners because they're making too much money on those big winners. In fact, if we even lose one out of those five wells, we'll be losing 12 or 13 per cent of our royalty because they're no longer economical. Those are high-risk, complicated drills that are not just easily discovered and drilled. It's a very high risk, and to go after those – once again, I'll say that it's the wrong area to go after.

The Alliance truly believes that if we want to put in the royalty review or to update it, what we should be looking at is the actual cost per barrel and the cost per gigajoule – right now we believe it's around $7.50 for gas and $75 for oil – and then possibly put in a 5 per cent windfall tax when it's above those areas. Again, we'd have to have that indexed to the cost as it goes forward and not just pick a number and then say that that's good where it is because it isn't $17 a barrel to get bitumen anymore. It's more like $35 or $40, and we need to recognize that those costs have gone up significantly.

I guess I'd like to comment a little bit on the methodology and the philosophy of what we need to be doing and the fact that so many people have taken the emotional side, that it's our fair share. From my experience in life and even when I was young, I used to tell my father, "This isn't fair." He'd say, "Well, life was never meant to be fair." What's important is equal opportunity, and in Alberta I believe that we're very blessed, that it's one of the few places left in the world where there is equal opportunity for an entrepreneur to go out and raise money and then try and drill and reap the reward of that high-risk, highly technical opportunity, and we want that to continue. But by raising the royalty in the manner that this government is proposing, I'm afraid for those small oil and gas producers. I'm afraid for all those little workers. When we attack the big individuals and the big corporations, it's always the little ones that get hurt. The big ones are going to survive; there's no question about it.

We've been an environment that's been able to attract hundreds of billions of dollars for investment, and yes, that investment is there, but we need to continue raising that money. If we send the message to the rest of the world that this isn't an economically stable place, that the government will change it on a whim or emotion that they should get more money, we're in detriment.

I'd just like to finish off, I guess, with the example of lottery and gaming, seeing how this government has promoted it so much over the years. If lottery and gaming was to say to people that come into those places and buy a ticket, "We will allow you to take a 10 per cent winning of whatever your costs have been because we want to have 90 per cent back," nobody would go and buy a lottery ticket or go into a casino if they had to prove and say, "Well, this is how much I've spent in my lifetime," and then they're going to get a simple 10 per cent return on that. The only thing that's maybe not quite as risky as lottery and gaming is the oil and gas industry. It's very technical, it's very important, and we want to have an atmosphere where small business and those entrepreneurs can go out and really succeed here in the province.

So I hope that as this debate goes on, we'll have a thought on this, that our PCs are turning into LCs, and that seems like Liberal clones to see who can tax and spend the most.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's great interest in members wanting to participate today, and there are a whole series of lists floating around, so these will be the following six speakers: the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then the Minister of Environment, then the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to be in this House and to rise on this motion at this time. At the outset I'd like to simply say this. I think that the Minister of Energy in his comments right at the start directed the crux of this debate, and that is that in order to properly adjust to and make the necessary changes in government to accommodate the changes in royalty rates, one had to not just give a snap decision and implement right away but accommodate changing the systems to undertake a very important reconfiguration so that the adjustments could be made properly to our database.

The second very crucial issue is that the energy sector in Alberta accounts for at least 50 per cent of our GDP and 13 per cent of Canada's GDP, so it's a very important opportunity, when you make a change, to acknowledge the importance of the industry, to pay due care and attention to the manner in which you're doing it and also to the people that you are affecting. I think that what has been lost in the callings – in fact, the first questions today, both from the leader of Her Majesty's opposition and the third party, consider that the most important question to our Premier was, in fact, the tenure of his Energy minister in the face of an issue that the Premier has actually delivered on, and that was his promise to Albertans to take decisive action and ensure a fair share for Albertans. At the same time, he wanted to ensure that we continue to have a strong economy.

Our new royalty regime will secure Alberta's future by helping to build our communities, protecting our environment, and creating new opportunities for Alberta and its industries. The old fiscal regime for oil and gas and oil sands delivered on its intended objectives – and I think we should be clear on that – in the process creating one of the most successful economies in the world.

In the mid-1990s the National Oil Sands Task Force recommended a generic royalty regime. It was predicted then that those changes would facilitate enough investment to reach between 800,000 and 1.2 million barrels of oil per day by 2020. Mr. Speaker, no one would guess that we would surpass that vision long before 2020 and see over a hundred billion invested in the production of bitumen, with a forecast production of in excess of 3 million barrels per day by 2020. This has been a tremendous success story for Alberta.

Now the global energy environment has changed again, and the policy of lower royalties as an incentive to resource recovery is no longer the basis for energy development in the province. We see the robust global energy climate, with oil prices reaching over $90 per barrel and demand for energy resources continuing to grow in the developing countries. Our Premier is fond of citing the example of 300,000 new vehicles per month in China. Multiplying that over a year, we can well see why their requirement for energy is up to 47 per cent of imported crude to facilitate the expanding economy in this country.

The importance of long-term, secure global energy supplies has made Alberta a key investment destination, second only to Saudi Arabia, with a reserve of 172 billion barrels, which makes us the best and most safe and secure supply of energy on the globe. Doesn't it seem important, then, to consider that we do this right and take a look at a new plan? It proposes royalty rate increases that are competitive and responsive to prices while guaranteeing sustainability, stability, and predictability. The royalty changes represent an increase of 20 per cent compared to forecast royalty revenues for the current regime for 2010. They do not, however, exceed the levels prior to 1996, when reduced rates were introduced to sustain energy viability during a period of low energy prices.

The discussion about fair share and the amount of government take was only part of what was taken into account when our government went into action with a decision which is currently being discussed. Departments of government worked hard to assess the implications for our global competitive position. We know that oil sands development is capital intensive, increasingly expensive, and contains considerable technical and business risk. In making our decision, we were very mindful of the implication to industry and our shared interest in continuing to have Alberta as a world-scale energy hub.

We didn't stop listening with the release of the panel's report. In fact, we listened to Albertans and to people world-wide, liaising with the energy industry, people who have investments in this province. We completed a thorough technical analysis of the panel's report. All substantive stakeholder input, particularly Albertans' input, was taken into consideration when government developed a plan to secure the future of our province, provide Albertans with their fair share of the resource, while working to maintain the competitiveness of our oil and gas industry.

The royalty framework is the right plan to secure Alberta's future. By making these changes to the system, the government is signalling that it clearly wants to provide leadership to the energy sector development objectives, fulfilling our role as stewards of the resource and respecting that the energy sector has created tens of thousands of jobs for Albertans and generated tens of billions of dollars in provincial revenues in the process.

The new framework offers the oil and gas industry stability and predictability, assures investors that Alberta maintains and remains a stable place to do business, a crucial item in the new regime. It is sensitive to market value, reflects the growing importance of unconventional oil and gas resources, and encourages value-added and environmentally sustainable production in Alberta. Industry will have a year, until January 1, 2009, to prepare for and adjust to the changes. I don't think that that's a significant amount of time given the importance of this industry to this province.

This new plan includes a royalty rate structure for conventional oil and gas that operates on a sliding scale determined by commodity price and well productivity to reflect oil and gas economics. Under this structure Albertans will get a greater share of higher prices, and industry will be sustained at lower prices. This new, simplified formula will also eliminate the need for the current royalty tiers and several royalty exemption programs.

Government will also introduce a sliding scale for oil sands royalties, ranging from 1 to 9 per cent payout, depending on the world price of oil. This change recognizes the concerns expressed about the current oil sands royalty structure and will ensure that Albertans receive their fair share from oil sands development by providing a greater share of revenues as prices rise. Our government is committed to ensuring that we have the best system in place to monitor royalty collection and to report to Albertans. To this end former Auditor General Peter Valentine will lead a project to determine how our current systems can be improved and will provide his recommendations to government by next March.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's very important and crucial that we pause and talk a moment about the fair share being not only about the royalty plan in place but the key element of the Premier's strong commitment to value maximization of our oil sands resource. Recognizing that Albertans want to see more of our raw energy resources upgraded here in our province, the province will exercise its existing royalty-in-kind option. This means that the province will be able to receive raw bitumen in lieu of cash royalties. The bitumen might be sold to local upgraders or refineries in Alberta to be processed into higher value products. This is exactly the kind of thoughtful policy that this government has been intent on pursuing.

Many of you know that in 2004 government and industry established a task force over a hundred members strong, the Hydrocarbon Upgrading Task Force, to develop and assess the business case for value-added bitumen processing within Alberta. This important initiative is a key piece to a larger vision that our government is working on with the energy industry. That vision is to maximize the value of our hydrocarbon resources – conventional oil, coal, natural gas, and oil sands – within Alberta. It is this unique combination of private-sector involvement and participation along with a clear articulation of government's strategic objectives that will move us forward if we're to be successful.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you very much. It's a valuable challenge, I think, to be able to discuss this issue, which we all know has been so important for the whole province, for MLAs. I'm sure we've had a lot of correspondence from every angle on it, so my commending to all members for supporting the emergency debate.

Ten minutes is not enough to get beyond barely scratching the surface, frankly, of the issues involved, but I'll do my best.

There are various ways to understand royalties. I often hear people say: well, a royalty is just a tax. It's not. They're different things. A royalty comes from selling something. In this case these royalties are collected when the oil and gas that the people of this province own is sold.

There are various ways of understanding the role of the government in this process. The government also does not own the oil and gas. In effect, the government is a trustee for the people of Alberta, who own the oil and gas. I think it's in some ways easier to understand this through an analogy like, for example, a landlord owning a building. If a landlord owns a building and hires an agent to manage that building and then collects rent, you're collecting a kind of a royalty there. In that case the government would be the property management agent. The question we have here, the question that the people of Alberta are so troubled about, is that of the property management agent: have they done the job they ought to have? Have they been honest with the owners, the landlord? Have they shared information? Have they maintained the property? Have they treated the tenants fairly? There's a tremendous amount of evidence that, in fact, the property management agent – in the case of the royalties it's the government – has failed its job.

Two compelling documents making this case are the Royalty Review Panel's report, Our Fair Share, and the Auditor General's report, although I should point out that these are by no means the only documents pointing out this problem. But I do want to put on record, Mr. Speaker, a few things from the Auditor General's report because I don't believe everybody in this Assembly has read that report thoroughly enough.

I would draw people's attention to page 91 of volume 1 of the most recent Auditor General's report, which says:

Beginning at least three years ago, the Department [of Energy] demonstrated that Alberta's share had fallen below its target range. The Department estimates that it could collect an additional $1 billion or more per year without stifling industry profitability. However, neither this information nor the reasons why changes have not taken place have been made public.

In other words, the agency managing the resource on behalf of the people of Alberta has not been forthcoming with the people of Alberta.

The Auditor General's report goes on page after page like this, and it does so in quite a lot of detail. Just jumping ahead again to page 105, in fact, quoting from the Auditor General's report, he refers to "dozens of presentations" made by the Department of Energy to various individuals in groups raising concerns about the royalty regime. So it's not like this was isolated. I think, frankly, that this government owes it to the people of Alberta to make those dozens of presentations public so that we can see how the public feels.

The Auditor General goes on to raise various concerns starting in December 2000. He refers to the "'Petroleum Royalty Review 2000' presentations [which] concluded that caps on the oil royalty rates should be removed."

He refers to – and I find this very troubling, Mr. Speaker; indeed, I wonder if there isn't a privilege here – the annual report of the Ministry of Energy '03-04, page 13, which is submitted to this Assembly, as a serious, indeed, I think a legal government document, and it quotes that report. In fact, I'll just read directly from the Auditor General's report.

The Ministry of Energy's 2003-2004 Annual Report . . . says that a royalty review was completed, focusing on the royalty structure and competitiveness. The brief description concludes that Alberta's royalty regimes "successfully encourage continued development while collecting a fair share of resource development profits."

That's what the annual report of a government department said, a report submitted to this Legislature.

The Auditor General goes on to say, "While the department did technical work during that year, no detailed cross-commodity internal report supports this assertion in the Annual Report." Nothing the department did supports the assertion made in the annual report. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there could well be a point of privilege on that as well. It raises the issue of trust, doesn't it? If we actually have as MLAs annual reports being submitted to us that we cannot believe, then how can we hold government to account? How can ministers do their jobs?

This report, meaning the Auditor General's report, goes on again and refers to the 2004 royalty review, the cross-commodity royalty review and assessment from December 20, 2004, the 2005 royalty review, and on and on it goes.

It also refers on page 107 of the Auditor General's report to "an 'Executive Committee Decision Request' dated October 4, 2005. In this 'Request', the Department described a Sustainability Levy with higher royalty rates." It goes on to indicate that "the 'Request' itself indicates that the 'minister decided not to go forward'." What in the world would possess a minister of a democratically elected government to not go forward on the advice of his own department to collect further billions of dollars that rightfully belong to the taxpayers?

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, but the crucial – crucial – evidence here is that for seven years this government has willingly forgone billions of dollars, has willingly and deliberately overruled its own officials. We need to get to the bottom of this. We need to understand why.

The work of the Royalty Review Panel I think is commendable. I will openly admit that we were skeptical when that panel was appointed. We challenged them. We raised concerns about the interests and background of the panel members. They exceeded our expectations. We took the process seriously enough as the Alberta Liberal caucus to actually make a submission to that panel, something that the third party did not do, and I'm not sure that the government did either. But we took the process seriously enough to make a submission. We also, after the panel submitted its report on September 18, took enough time to arrange a conversation with panel members because we thought it required that. Our position is that the destination set by the Royalty Review Panel was a good destination, that royalties need to rise, and they need to rise overall to the levels established and recommended by that Royalty Review Panel.

The details of how we get to that destination need to be sorted out, and as time progressed, even the panelists themselves began to agree that there was room for debate there. Perhaps we do need to go a little softer on the gas sector until their downturn is sorted out. Perhaps we need to treat different wells in different manners. Certainly, we need to be alert to environmental concerns, and this was one of the first things that struck me. There was not an environmental component to the terms of reference given to this panel. We have the idea that Alberta should perhaps become the upgrading capital of North America. We need to ask ourselves: do we want that burden placed on our rivers and our lakes and our air and our land?

Mr. Speaker, I'm running out of time. As I said at the beginning,

10 minutes is not enough. But I do believe that all of us, regardless of what side of this Assembly we stand on, need to take our role as trustees very, very seriously.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to what is probably a fundamentally critical issue for all Albertans for the next generation, for the next several generations to come. There's no doubt in my mind that 10, 20 years from now the royalty framework may change again, just as it did in the past decades. It has changed several times over the past several decades. There will always be a need to go back and review and take a look at whether our policy is doing what we intended it to do.

As the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry pointed out, 30 years ago, when my father stood in this House, they developed a royalty framework that was to encourage investment and exploration and create jobs. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, you have seen a number of different iterations of that royalty framework in your time in this House, and I'm sure the generations to come and perhaps future generations that might even be related to me might be standing in this House talking about what his dad did or didn't do in the year 2007.

The important thing that we have to understand is that no policy should remain stagnant if it is not meeting the objectives or if it has met those objectives. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003 – the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition suggests that there was discussion that maybe the royalty framework should have changed then, but I don't think that we had $90 oil in 2001, 2002, and 2003. In fact, I think the oil was probably hovering, I seem to recall, somewhere in the $10 to $20 range at the time.

Certainly, when you take a look at the exploration for deep gas and the exploration for shallow gas, there are a number of issues that had to be addressed in the '04, '05, '06 time period, which is why my understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that it took almost two years to really come up with the right incentive to ensure that we had drilling rigs exploring for those deeper, unconventional types of resources.

There's a need to ensure that our policy is adjusted over periods of time. There's a need that we want to ensure that there's investment by our partners in this. We as Albertans are the owners of the resource, but we need partners. We need partners to help us to achieve the results from those resources. To talk about different numbers, 1.4 or 1.8: Mr. Speaker, those are numbers that are based on assumptions on what the market may or may not do. They're numbers that are assumptions that are based on what the production may or may not be.

"Is it the right framework?" is the question we need to ask ourselves in this House. Is it the right framework that is going to deliver on the next-generation economy that we want for the next generation of Albertans to enjoy the same prosperity that we have here today, to enjoy the same kind of prosperity as when Premier Lougheed introduced his royalty framework? During the '70s we had tremendous prosperity in this province as well. Is it going to be the right type of framework that we're going to have 20 years from now or 10 years from now to establish what our Premier is talking about as being that next-generation economy that's knowledge based and that will be the thing that will carry us forward for the next 20 or 30 years? The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that we'll be an energy province for hundreds of years to come, and these types of questions will be asked in this House 10, 20 years from now.

The question that's before us as to whether or not we should introduce legislation today or this session: I think, really, the Minister of Energy answered that quite clearly, and others in this House have said it as well. The panel even recognized that it will take time for these types of changes to be put into the system, into the infrastructure of the computer systems, the monitoring systems, the audit systems, exactly what the Auditor General was talking about.

The hon. members opposite talk about rising prices and that we should take as much of those rising prices as we possibly can. They seem to neglect the fact that there's a difference in the costs as well. As prices have risen, so, too, have the costs of exploration, even on what one might consider to be the easiest ones to get to.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition used the example of the fact that perhaps we were property managers of some sort. If his party was the property manager, based on that type of analogy, they would have raised the rent so high that none of the tenants could afford it, and they would have left. That, Mr. Speaker, would be the problem in raising the royalties so high that no one would invest; they would leave. He mentions that there was a document produced by the department that talks about: well, you could raise them if you thought that was the right policy to proceed with. That's like listening to the maintenance janitor say: well, I think the tenants could handle a little higher rent, so you might as well raise it.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that what's happened here is the government of Alberta, on behalf of all Albertans, has taken a very serious, long, hard look at what the policy was – what its objectives were intended to be, what the policy should be, given our Premier's vision of that next-generation economy and greening our growth and creating opportunities for young people today as well as young people 10, 20 years from now – and looked at the type of framework that we need. We've come up with a framework that works.

It was this Premier who made this a question of public debate. You will recall earlier this year, during the leadership for the Progressive Conservative Party, all of the leaders and, in fact, the opposition talked about having a royalty review. It was this Premier that said: we're going to make a royalty review, and we're going to make it public the day we get it. I don't recall, and I don't believe that there's any other jurisdiction that has had such an open and public debate about our share or Albertans' share or that jurisdiction's share. In fact, I think this is the only jurisdiction that has had this type of debate for this period of time about what a government was going to do as it relates to royalties or even taxes. It's not normally the case, and I think the Premier should be given the kudos and the recognition he deserves for the fact that he has brought all Albertans as shareholders in this province together to talk about what they believe is their fair share.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, in my riding I heard a lot of: "Yes, we should raise the royalties, but be careful. Be careful that you don't stifle growth to the point that we start to lose the jobs." That's what, really, this is all about. We had to come up with a balanced approach. The hon. members opposite talked about 20 per cent being soft on gas. I believe the hon. Leader of the Opposition talked about recognizing environmental issues, and that's exactly what we did. I would think that he'd be extremely happy about that.

I'm a little concerned when the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition starts talking about sending jobs to other provinces and having upgrading done in other jurisdictions. I don't quite follow the economic development potential of telling investors, "Don't invest in upgrading in Alberta. Take it somewhere else. We don't want it," especially when we can do it in an environmentally friendly way. We've talked about how we can do that. We're doing research in that area, considerable research, I might add.

The NDP, on the other hand, would simply suck all of the dollars out of the exact people who we will need to have invest to get the resources out of the ground. Ergo, you wouldn't have any resources coming out of the ground. If we don't maintain Alberta as an attractive place to invest, they won't, and you won't receive any royalties at all. Careful consideration of all of these types of policy questions needs to be done, and we've done that, Mr. Speaker.

It's interesting that the Leader of the Official Opposition also talked about some of the comments that, perhaps, were made when the Premier announced the royalty review. Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals first trashed the process of the royalty review. Then they trashed the panel members. Then they trashed the report before it even came out. Then when the Premier made good on his commitment to release the panel's advice right away, within hours of receiving it, within hours of seeing it, the Liberals said: "My God. You have to implement it right away. It's a great decision." Now they're backing away from even that. They claim we lost a considerable amount of money over some sort of period of time, yet they fail to recognize that prices and markets have changed. Had they made a royalty change in 2000, it would have made a change in the royalties that you were going to receive in 2006. There has to be some recognition of the fact that being an armchair quarterback and looking back with hindsight certainly makes a good sound bite but probably not very factual.

The NDP have been claiming that we haven't been taxing or grabbing enough for 30 years. I find it interesting that what the opposition is talking about is: well, you could have had this much; therefore, you must have lost it somehow, somewhere. That's like saying: well, the NDP would have taxed considerably heavy on the – am I running out of time, Mr. Speaker? Well, the interesting fact here is that if you take the difference between what Conservative policies on tax and royalties have been – oh, well. Gee, I needed more time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was waiting with bated breath to hear the end of that speech, but I guess we'll have to wait for another day.

Mr. Speaker, just to make a couple of points. First of all, it's been alluded to; even the government members have said it, but I don't think they really believe it. The fact is that the resources in the ground were not put there by the Conservative government, contrary to what they talk about in their economic strategy. They did not put the oil sands there. These resources are the people of Alberta's. Plain and simple. It's Alberta's resources, not the oil companies', not the Conservative government's.

The point was made, and I'd like to enlarge on it. The Leader of the Opposition alluded to it: as business people we the people of Alberta should be trying to get the best return we can. Obviously, we recognize that companies that are drilling or working in the oil sands have to make a reasonable profit – and I stress "reasonable" – but being the owners of the resource, it is not our job to make them wealthy beyond any belief. Just look at what the companies have taken home recently, the major oil companies. It's unbelievable the types of profits that they're making. You know, while some money is rolling forward to us, especially with oil and gas, the conventional oil and gas is running out. We've lost that, Mr. Speaker. That's the bottom line that we must remember as the owners of the resource.

Now, you can't undo the past, Mr. Speaker, but to come back to the Auditor General – this is not the opposition; this is not anybody else; this is the Auditor General of the province of Alberta, that's paid to look into these matters. He said very clearly that the Energy department staff have been considering royalty changes since the year 2000, and at least three years ago they concluded that Alberta's share had fallen to unacceptable levels. Well, if three years ago they had fallen to unacceptable levels, with the price of oil going up, we can only imagine how much more unacceptable it is today. We've sat on this for seven years, or at least three, to be fair. The Auditor General is saying – again, not the opposition – that this is money that should have been flowing into the Alberta treasury – it's the people of Alberta's money – but it didn't. We missed it, and that's a serious matter. That's the possibility of billions of dollars that should be in the Alberta treasury.

Mr. Speaker, then we've had the royalty review go around, hand-picked by the government, and they came back and said something very similar. They said that we should move on this fairly quickly because we're losing a lot of money. Again, this was not, you know, the opposition that appointed these people. These were business-people that sat down and looked at what they thought was a fair result. Now, I believe – and they said it – that that was a compromise position that they gave at the time. They talked about $2 billion more as being a compromise, and they were comparing to other jurisdictions. When we look around anywhere else in the world, this is a sweet deal for the oil companies, no doubt about that, and they said that this is a compromise. Well, the Premier has sort of had a compromise of a compromise although he says that that's not the case. Well, very clearly it is.

But, you know, what's worrisome – and I come to the crux, Mr. Speaker, of what we're talking about in the emergency debate. They say: oh, this is so complicated; we're going to have to wait. In the meantime, if the Auditor General is right, we're not going to be doing anything here until starting in 2009, over a year from now, and then the full impact of even what the Premier is pushing forward as being his compromise of the compromise wouldn't even start until 2010 January 1. If the level of return three years ago was unacceptable according to the Auditor General and we know that the price has gone up now and that, as I said before, that would make it even more unacceptable, think about what's going to happen in the next year or two years.

Everybody is predicting that the price of oil is going to go up. Nobody can predict with certainty, but you now hear people saying $100 a barrel and some people speculating that with the world situation it could be $120 a barrel. Now, as the owners of the resource shouldn't we be getting some of that in the next year and a half? It wouldn't have taken that much. They had a whole six months to go through the royalty review. We've had a couple of months. They could have at least brought something forward to this Legislature that recognized this particular fact, and they haven't done so.

The reality is, too, when we look at the timing – Lord knows, I don't know when there's going to be the next provincial election. Who would even speculate about the next provincial election? But I would wager that there's going to be one before January 1 of 2009, when this starts to come forward. I would wager that, Mr. Speaker. I hope I'm wrong, but that's in the next year. That's a year from now, 2009. I would wager that there would be an election by then at least. Now, the Premier sort of alluded to: they would monitor this situation. They would monitor it. I'd just say, even with the little bit that we're getting now, that if this government is returned, there could be a lot of different changes by the time we begin to deal with this. That's why we should be dealing with this now, and that's the purpose of the emergency debate.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there's one thing that we should do. I know both parties won't like this, but we should not have the influence of big money in politics. The federal government has done it, and the Manitoba government has done it: taken out the idea that unions and corporations could donate to political parties. Actually, that creates some of the problems that we're in.

I know that the government and the Liberals probably think: oh, they just do it because they love us. They do it for a reason. They do it for influence. They do it for influence, Mr. Speaker. If this government was truly concerned about the democratic deficit, we would be looking at that, as other provinces are doing. It works well for them. I notice that the Liberals collected $250,000 from the corporate sector; the Tories, $600,000. I know that all this money just flowed into the coffers because they're good people and they just want to help out the democratic process. Well, even this government must recognize that this is important. It's not only the money; it's the influence that's there. I would argue vehemently with anybody that that's the reason we've had the royalty rates that we've had, because of that influence. I think that we should take a look at this democratic deficit. As I say, both parties, the Liberals and the Conservatives, are running over themselves trying to collect money from major corporations, especially oil companies, who are the biggest ones here. I just say that that's plain, plain wrong.

You know, the idea that all these people are going to pick up and go, these corporations – the minister of intergovernmental affairs said that Alberta is going to be the peak in the world, that we now will have that influence in the world because of our oil sands. Do you really mean to say, then, that if they're not paying their fair share, they're all going to leave? Of course they're not. We can have the debate about: what's a fair share? We think the minimum was what the panel came forward with, but we think we could even get more, and it still would be fair compared to other jurisdictions.

I know the government members are disappointed, but I think my time is up. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the following six will be worked in, hopefully, before the adjournment time: the Minister of Environment, followed by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, then Lethbridge-West, then Calgary-Currie, then Calgary-Nose Hill, then Edmonton-Calder. The maximum speaking time: 10 minutes. Anything less than that allows more members to get in, and there's a list that long.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll do my best to stay under the 10-minute limit. However, this is a subject matter that is complex. Others have made reference to the fact that 10 minutes is hardly sufficient time to deal with this issue and its complexity.

Mr. Speaker, that really is, in a nutshell, the difficulty that I have with this discussion today and have with the intent of the Standing Order 30 that came forward from the NDP opposition. It takes what is an extremely complex issue, and it tries to almost trivialize it by putting a very complex issue into a very simple statement. Basically, what it says is that the government should introduce and pass legislation immediately. Well, many other speakers have spoken before me. The Minister of Energy, I think, probably gave the best explanation about why that's inappropriate, that there are a good deal of considerations that need to be taken into account with respect to legislation. If it were only so easy to simply introduce legislation and pass it immediately and the world would be perfect tomorrow, I think a whole lot of things would happen differently around this place.

But you and I know, Mr. Speaker, that it's never quite that simple, that there are often huge considerations that need to be made. It's not good enough just to pass legislation; it has to be workable legislation. It has to be legislation that is implementable. On both counts there is a great deal of work that needs to be done. First of all, there needs to be a great deal of time and effort go into the development of that legislation. Then there will have to be, again, almost a total rewrite of the necessary software applications that will allow for the implementation. I'm not going to get into a whole lot of further discussion, for that simple reason, of why this motion that's before us is inappropriate.

What I want to spend some time talking about is the premise, the assumptions that are made, that have been made throughout some of the debate today by members of the opposition, not just the NDP opposition but the Liberal opposition as well, that somehow there is money that was left on the table, that somehow the government should be held negligent because money should have been collected by increasing royalty rates earlier than what was done. I think it really comes down to an issue, Mr. Speaker, of determining and distinguishing between "could" and "should." They're words that are very, very similar, but they have distinctive, different meanings.

So when someone points out that the government could have raised significantly more revenue if it had changed the rates earlier, that's true. That's absolutely true. The government could do all kinds of things. Every day I get people coming to me telling me that the government could or in some cases perhaps should be doing something that is going to result in either changing environmental outcomes, in the case of my ministry, the Ministry of Environment, or changing – it doesn't matter. We go down the row of ministers at this table. Everybody – our staff, the public – comes to us on an almost daily basis with suggestions, sometimes very well thought out position papers, that suggest that we could or should be doing something different.

What the opposition doesn't seem to comprehend is that simply because something could or perhaps even should be done, it is the responsibility of the government to dictate the policy, to determine the policy, to have that in-depth discussion because whenever some suggestion is made to change policy, it will result in one particular outcome, but it could also result in a number of other unanticipated consequences.

When someone comes to me and suggests to me that I could be tremendously reducing the amount of greenhouse gases, for example, Mr. Speaker, that are emitted in this province by simply restricting or limiting or ending any further expansion of oil and gas in the oil sands in particular, that's true, and I'm sure that there are many that have well-documented dissertations suggesting that that could or should be the case. But, clearly, there would be consequences of that, and the consequences, I would suggest to you, would be rather dramatic. Instead, it's the responsibility of the government to consider what the consequences are, to consider both sides of any issue before carrying forward.

When someone suggests that the Energy minister could have or should have realized that there was all kinds of money being left on the table, that somehow he is negligent or that the government is negligent, quite frankly I think that that is simply illogical. The responsibility of government is more than considering one particular side of any one issue. The responsibility of government is to consider what the implications are of adopting any new policy.

That being said, our new leader, our new Premier, after hearing from Albertans over an extended period of time that the government should review our policy with respect to royalties, made that one of his first acts after becoming Premier. He appointed an independent commission to do just that, to review the policies, and they did an excellent job. But, Mr. Speaker, they're not the government. They're not the ones that are responsible for considering all of the ramifications, all of the implications of adopting a new policy.

That's the responsibility of the government and the government caucus and the members of this House, that have been elected to make those kinds of decisions, and ultimately the responsibility of the members of this House when the government comes forward with the appropriate legislation for implementation.

That's the accountability, Mr. Speaker, and that's, quite frankly, the reason why this discussion that we're having this afternoon, while interesting, somewhat engaging, is really missing the point. The point of the matter is: what can we or should we be doing with respect to implementation of royalty reviews? The Premier set about a process, which is now about halfway through, maybe three-quarters of the way through. The policy has been set by government. Now it's up to the Legislature, and it will be up to the Legislature in a time period that's appropriate, that allows for the development of the legislation, the implementation of the legislation, and all of the various necessary safeguards to ensure that we have the capacity within our jurisdiction to be sure that the implementation of that policy is accurate and correct.

Mr. Speaker, wanting to abide by your earlier suggestion that less might be better, I think I'll conclude my comments there and encourage any other members who wish to speak to do so.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, that was less by three seconds.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this royalty debate regardless of the fact that it appears orchestrated.

The minister of advanced education without the benefit of a water inventory has indicated that there is sufficient water for all the in-Alberta upgrading and extraction. We Alberta Liberals don't share his view.

The Minister of Environment indicated that there is a difference between could and should. There's not only a difference between could and should; there's also a difference between did and didn't. The ministry did receive advice to increase royalties from their own department experts but didn't. That was negligent.

As early as 1994 the price of oil and gas had risen to the point that a surplus approaching $1 billion was recorded. Despite this early indication that the value of our nonrenewable resources was increasing, former Minister of Finance Jim Dinning ripped a page out of Finance minister Sir Roger Douglas's plan that had such a detrimental effect on both the economy and the people of New Zealand. Mr. Dinning introduced totally unnecessary, draconian cuts to public education, advanced education, seniors, social services programs, health care, roads, and infrastructure. It is important to note that the $23 billion debt that the government was so guiltily anxious to pay down, no matter what the cost to people and programs, had grown due to Conservative government mismanagement, the same type of mismanagement which remains rampant today.

To his credit former Premier Lougheed, a rare, enlightened Conservative leader, realized both the need for increasing royalties and setting them aside in the form of the heritage trust fund to create a future savings fund that would serve as a buffer, a replacement revenue source to draw from when conventional oil and gas revenue had peaked, as is the case today. Premier Lougheed recognized the necessity of investing in the extraction of another source of nonrenewable, predictable, stable energy, specifically the oil sands. Peter Lougheed also had the foresight to recognize that there had to be a balance struck between the economic value of the resource and the effect of its rapid extraction. Mr. Lougheed must have watched in disbelief and silent horror as his successors raided and undermined the heritage trust fund to the point that due to the combined ravages of inflation and the lack of contributions, despite years of billion dollar surpluses, the fund is worth less now than when he left it.

These billion dollar surpluses, fuelled by the rising value of our nonrenewable resources, made these rapid cuts of the 1990s completely unnecessary. Half of Calgary's hospitals didn't need to be closed or blown up. Doctors, nurses, lab technicians didn't need to be driven to the States. University seats didn't need to be closed. The pain that was supposed to be short-term continues to have fallout ramifications felt daily across this province. Schools could have been built in the 40 Calgary communities that are currently without. The defrayed maintenance budget of the Calgary school boards would not be sitting at over half a billion dollars.

What compounds the draconian cuts of the 1990s is the failure of this government since 2000 to collect, according to both the Royalty Review Panel and our Auditor General, royalties worth between $6 billion and $12 billion. Not only was the government-inflicted pain in the 1990s unnecessary, but had the government, the majority of whose members opposite have been in this House since or before 2001, collected the money due and properly managed the boom, we wouldn't be facing the problems of homelessness, hunger, poverty, and illiteracy most commonly associated with a depression.

After 36 years it's time for a change of government. It's time to restore the faith of Albertans in the democratic process. It's time to strike a balance between the economy and the environment. It's time for a man with a plan. It's time for a Premier from Edmonton-Riverview. It's time for Taft.

The Speaker: Well, over five minutes and 14 seconds left on the table, which is appreciated. There were no points of order, which is even more appreciated.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Dunford: Well, I want to begin by thanking the previous speaker. I was starting to forget that I was in a House of parliament, where there is confrontation usually at all times. The speakers on both sides of the House up until the Member for Calgary-Varsity I thought were staying on topic, trying to deal with the particular issue, I guess, in their own particular way.

I'd like to use my time to try to get us back to that particular methodology. One of the reasons that I want to do that is that up until today I found that there was difficulty in discussing the royalty situation because emotion came into it so rapidly. I was reminded of some of the discussions, some of the focus groups, some of the town halls that I arranged and went to during many of the health care debates. What this House needs more than anything, of course, is not just heat, but we need light as well, and I think we've heard from many of the speakers today from both sides of the House trying to provide that.

What I am worried about more than anything, though, is that we don't analyze this thing to death. It's been my experience quite often that analysis leads to paralysis. I think we have a situation here where the Premier has pointed out the direction that he wishes this government to take. I think that there has been a general agreement amongst the silent majority out there that he has found the balance. I'm not sure of that because they are the silent majority, and then by definition they're not phoning me. But the ones that are calling me have a particular interest, and it's clear that they're the usual suspects that we hear from. Neither of them like it, you know: either for or against. Maybe what we have here is one of those affectionately called Canadian compromises, that we've actually done the right thing because nobody would particularly like it.

One of the things that's made me focus today has been the tremendous advantage of hindsight. I don't think there is any question for the people that were here in 1995 that if we could have seen what was going to happen in 2007, we might have done things a little bit differently. I'm proud that in 1995 I was at the table when the discussions around oil sands took place. I was proud to be a part of that discussion, and I was able then to listen to the various ideas, thoughts, reasoning that went around it.

The overall objective at that time, of course, was on one side monetary because we were still wrestling with a deficit and had that huge debt that we knew we were going to have to deal with. We felt that it was going to have to be some kind of an arrangement to attract investment in the oil sands. The way you attract investment is: you are competitive. Being competitive, of course, doesn't mean that you're stuck in the middle somewhere. If there is a list of countries that provide royalty arrangements, you're not in the middle. You want to be at the low end. You want to be competitive to get the investment. Even in today's time, now, with the benefit of hindsight we can see that it worked. In fact, I can talk about a situation where, not in '95 but after 9/11 in 2001, there was a situation in the financial markets, in all of the upheaval and concern that that particular event brought on us, and again a huge downturn in the particular markets. It directly affected the ability of this government to perhaps meet what was then an ambitious budget target.

There were discussions, and we asked various pools of talent that we have inside our government to bring scenarios to us. Of course, as experts will do, you bring a scenario that is likely what is going to happen over the next five to seven years. You get a worst-case scenario, and you get, then, of course, a best-case scenario. I remember, particularly, how optimistic I thought the best-case scenario was. I can remember sitting in my chair and thinking: "You know, that's too optimistic. I mean, there's no way that we can count on that kind of a thing." The optimism was $45 oil. Our previous Premier, in talking about how there wasn't a plan for the major growth – I can say that there were none of us here that would have been able to plan for that kind of growth. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that if those experts that came to us in 2001 had come in with a best-case scenario of $90 oil, I don't think they would have made it out of the room with their jobs. I mean, that just would have been so unrealistic.

For the major part of the time that we're discussing here today, the record should show – and I think that it does – that what was done in 1995 was not only appropriate. It was extremely beneficial to the people of Alberta, and the numbers, of course, define that. If you look at a chart showing the parabolic increase in the price of oil, now, of course, it doesn't look so hot. So what we've had is that there's been a change of leadership. The new leader takes a look at it and says: hey, I want a review. The review was done, and it was released, and now it's time, you know, for people to react.

To go back into the Auditor General's report where he talks about how officials were saying this – officials should say this. I had almost 10 years of experience as a cabinet minister in this government, and I always wanted scenarios. If I didn't have some part of the department pushing one way and another part of the department pushing another way, how was I ever going to tell what it was that I should be bringing forward to my caucus colleagues? Debate inside a department is just as expected as it is in this particular House. It's not unusual for me to imagine that there would be officials in Energy saying: look, you can get more. In fact, I'd suggest that if there weren't some officials in Energy saying, "You should get more," then we ought to have been looking at what kind of corporate culture we had within that department.

There should be a healthy debate also inside departments about what it is that they think that the policy-makers should do. I use policy-maker deliberately because there is the difference. The difference is that administrators administer, of course, and then they bring forward their thoughts, their ideas to the policy-makers. That, ladies and gentlemen, is people that are inside this room. The policy-makers are on the government side, and then the people that want to challenge the policies, of course, are the opposition. They're doing that today and doing it admirably, and I congratulate them for that. But that shouldn't deflect us from seeing, not keeping our eye on the ball on this thing. The world has changed. We have $90 oil. We have a situation where time needs to change. We need it done by January of 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, as someone who sits on the opposite side of the House and challenges the policy that the policy-makers produce, for that insight into the inner workings of cabinet and its relationship to senior public servants and administrators and the insight into the corporate culture of the Department of Energy and other government departments. It will come in handy someday soon, I think.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West makes, I think, some very good points with which I would not argue. I understand that the world and Alberta's place in it in 1995 was and looked very different from what it does today. Having been in the media and covering those sorts of issues and events throughout that period, I think I understand how the hon. member and his colleagues back in the day came to the conclusions that they came to. I understand, as we fast-forward to 2007, how different the world is, how different Alberta's place in the world is, how different it looks, and I understand that that prompted the new leader of the governing party to commission a royalty review and make the results of that review public on the day that he got the report. I commend the Premier for doing that.

What I don't understand, Mr. Speaker, is the intervening 12 years and especially the last seven of those 12 years. Given what the Member for Lethbridge-West had to say about the need for a yin and yang, differing points of view within a government department and how that's healthy and how that shapes better policy, it doesn't change the fact that the Auditor General identified that for the past six or seven years on an annual basis the department's advice to the minister and to this government has been to raise royalty rates because those administrators, although they are not the people who should be making the policy, are the people who advise and give good advice to the people who make the policy. Those administrators saw a shifting landscape, a changing landscape, a changing reality.

I believe that somebody in the House earlier today talked about a paradigm shift. I'm not sure that that's the appropriate way to describe it, but a paradigm shift usually means a pretty significant, near seismic shift in the way things are. Certainly, from 1995 to $90 a barrel oil today: I think you could say that that's neo-seismic, at least. I guess the question that continues to plague me is how it was that we spent the last – I won't go back till 1995 – seven years, how the government spent the last seven years, in the face of the advice that it was getting from its bureaucrats, from its administrators, not seeing the change in the landscape, not seeing the approaching lights of the oncoming train, not seeing and seizing the opportunity.

Now, before you get all up in arms about this opposition guy saying "seizing the opportunity," I'm not doing a Hugo Chavez on us here. I'll leave that to the third party. I'm not suggesting that we should go out and nationalize the industry or jack up royalty rates by 90 per cent because, you know, we can probably squeeze that much blood out of them or anything like that. I do think and certainly my constituents tell me that a balanced, well-thought-out approach to this that balances the need of the people of Alberta to get their fair share and the need of the industry, which generates so much economic activity in our province and which is responsible for so much of the wealth that we enjoy today, the need of the industry that develops the resources that we own to be able to continue producing a prosperous economy for the people of Alberta.

None of that, though, changes the fact that we the people own the oil that the Almighty in his/her infinite wisdom decided to put under our feet rather than under the feet of somebody else. We have a responsibility in this House. Whether we're members of the governing party, members of the Official Opposition, members of the third party, members of the fourth party, or sitting in this House as an independent, we have a responsibility to those people to strike a good, fair, and balanced deal that results in the people of Alberta getting our fair share.

There is one point that I wanted to pick up on, maybe a couple if I have time, Mr. Speaker, and that's the notion of what we do going forward as the royalty regime changes, what we do not only with the extra revenue that comes in and how we manage and steward that properly but how we steward and manage the environment properly as well. There seems to be – now, this is on the part of the third party – this notion that the government would ship all the raw bitumen that it possibly could to the United States of America and that we evil Liberals, quote, unquote, would ship it all to some other part of Canada. I'm only expressing my personal opinion here, but, you know, if I can't do it at home, I'd rather enrich my Canadian brothers and sisters than enrich a foreign power. That's why I would rather see upgrader activity happen in British Columbia or Saskatchewan or Manitoba or whatever.

Mr. Speaker, that only makes good sense. We cannot, in our view in the Alberta Liberal caucus, develop all the upgraders that we could possibly use to process our bitumen in the province of Alberta and not do serious, irreparable damage to our environment. We need to share the pain, we need to share the gain with the other western provinces in Canada, and I think that's a vital, vital thing going forward.

I'll leave it at that, Mr. Speaker, and give others a chance to participate. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to join the Standing Order 30 debate of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I want to speak specifically to the motion. The motion speaks of "the failure of the government to promptly introduce and pass royalty legislation to prevent the loss of billions of dollars to the public treasury."

The first point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that there has been no failure of the government to act promptly because it is, in fact, a matter of great public importance. It certainly must be something that must be dealt with with promptness, but that promptness must be measured also by the fact that it is of great importance. Not only is it a very complex issue in terms of the royalty regime itself, but it's also very complex in terms of the economic consequences which flow from any alteration of that royalty regime.

In my respectful submission, acting promptly was exactly what was done by this Premier. The Premier promptly fulfilled his commitment to the people of Alberta to review the province's royalty system. He appointed an independent panel of experts. He gave them a mandate to thoroughly review the system. The panel of experts, I might add, which was seen as too biased in favour of the oil and gas industry by certain members of the opposition parties, was given a very broad mandate by the Premier to review the whole of Alberta's royalty regime for the oil and gas industry. They were given a mandate to review many aspects, including how we in Alberta compare to other jurisdictions; whether or not sufficient sensitivity is present in the royalty system to market conditions; whether the regime in the oil sands, which provides for revenue less costs, is an optimal regime; whether the various programs that we have for oil and gas are appropriate in the circumstances and whether they should be changed; and how the existing resource development should be treated. Also, the mandate included the examination of the economic and fiscal impacts that any changes might have.

The Premier gave the panel a very broad mandate. He gave them a limited time in which to respond. They came back within six months. The turnaround time, I would suggest, in view of the mandate was very short, so one could not say that there was a failure to act promptly in that case. Not a lot of time to hold public hearings, and there were 220 submissions made, as my hon. colleague has mentioned. That report was issued, then, consisting of 103 or 104 pages. The panel did make recommendations in the form of a report, which was called Our Fair Share, and again that is someone's opinion of what is fair. It's not based on science or certitude, but it's based on what is, in effect, a political judgment.

Again, speaking to the alleged failure of the government to act promptly. What did the Premier do when he got the report? He released it the same day. There has been criticism in the past that reports were not made public promptly, but it certainly couldn't be said of this report, where it was immediately released to the public for public comment and criticism.

After the report was released, within a very short time further consultations were undertaken both within the Department of Energy, by the Deputy Premier, and by other interested parties. A wide range of input was received with respect to reactions to the royalty regime and what some of the economic consequences might have been. Certainly, we've seen a great deal of that not only in the media, but the criticism has been made from both sides within this House during question period today. It would be my contention that the government certainly acted promptly in taking all of that input and bringing forward the plan, which is now being made into a new royalty framework, which the Premier has presented to the province in conjunction with the Minister of Energy.

Now, as to the legislation which the motion speaks to, other speakers have already made the point that this legislation and regulations flowing therefrom are not a simple matter. The regulations and legislation that needs to be drafted, as I understand it, are 11 in total. But one must also consider that not only do the law and the regulations need to be changed, but there has to be the imposition of a new economic regime, and a financial regime entails a lot of changes. New accounting software has to be developed both within the Department of Energy and by private industry. People have to be trained. There has to be a transition. These things do not happen overnight, so I would suggest that the accommodation in terms of introducing the legislation in the spring session is certainly not a failure to act promptly.

A second point that I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the motion is the idea that there have been some lost royalties. The speculation of the lost billions of dollars: well, in whose opinion is there a loss of billions of dollars? The fact is that the assertion that is made that there is a loss of billions of dollars is based on a number of assumptions. The most important assumption that has been made is that all of this activity would have remained unchanged had certain higher royalties been imposed. Yet if one looks at the panel's report, it quite frankly says, "The proposed increase in royalties and taxes will slow the rate of investment in the oil sands." I mean, even the panel suggests that these are not going to have consequences. So if there had been an imposition of a higher regime, it would have had consequences, and all of that activity would not have remained the same.

There have been suggestions that we'd have gotten more money in the government's pockets, but consider the fact that, number one, we had record land sales in the mines and minerals leases. We had a level of investment in the province of Alberta which was unprecedented, especially in the oil sands but also in exploration and drilling and conventional oil and gas. We had the highest employment rate, the highest creation of new jobs of anywhere in the country, growing salaries, billions of dollars in investments in the province, thriving businesses, which generated profits for Albertans and shareholders.

The second point I want to make with respect to these so-called lost billions is that those billions did not simply evaporate. To put it simply, it wasn't taken in by the government, but it didn't evaporate. It was left in the pockets of the corporations, both public and private corporations. The vast majority of those monies were then reinvested in the province of Alberta. People were buying goods and services and recycling those dollars. Our economy has grown, and as a result of the increased economic activity we have more workers, who are paying more taxes. We have more corporations and small businesses paying more taxes on their earnings. So there's a multiplier effect in the oil patch, not just in the oil patch but also in the economy as a whole: house builders, structural engineers, many, many small service companies. And who can honestly say how much less all of those taxes and economic activity would have cost the province than the money that would have been taken in by the treasury if those royalties had been changed? I don't think anybody could predict that.

Certainly, some hon. members have suggested that the failure to act promptly arose before the present Premier and the present Minister of Energy. One could say with some justification: well, that was then and this is now. More importantly, I think one must say that there were many complex pieces of information before the previous Minister of Energy. There were political judgments that had to be made, and those judgments had to be weighed against the economic consequences of increasing those royalties, which were not necessarily all negative.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, and all members might want to go take a look at Standing Order 8(3) to determine Thursday.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate having an opportunity to speak on this important issue, and I thank you as well for creating the opportunity through the ruling that we had here today.

I just wanted to return to the essence of our Standing Order 30 because, of course, what we're looking for here is a sense of urgency and a sense of prevention. What we're looking for here, as our caucus has been debating and deliberating over this issue for many months and years, is to collect a reasonable royalty rate in a timely manner. Considering that the hydrocarbon energy that we are collecting royalties from is a nonrenewable resource, then we believe that at any given point in time there is a sense of urgency to ensure that we're collecting a reasonable rate of return that is not going to interfere with the smooth operation of our most important energy industry but also that it reflects the true value of this important nonrenewable resource.

Before I make any comments at all, I think that it's important for all of us to consider this review process to be something that goes on at least on an annual basis. The royalty rate, for example, is brought out with the budget every year in England, in the U.K., and in other countries there is a continuous reassessment of the royalty rates based on market conditions and circumstances as they change over time. So the comments from other hon. members across here are very much appreciated, and I think that by putting together a very concise system, we can in fact address all of those concerns in a reasonable way.

Besides reviewing royalties on a more regular basis, at least on an annual basis, I would suggest that we look at the terms of the Hunter report and ensure that we put in a progressive sliding scale for royalty rates based on the vagaries of the market conditions and the price of the product that's being produced. By having a progressive system that slides up and down on the royalty rates according to the price that that commodity is trading for, then you're virtually ensuring that you're not going to see the devastation or the distortion of the industry as well at any given time because you are capturing the change in the price with a progressive system to calculate the royalty rates.

I think those two things on a very urgent and immediate basis would serve this House and the people of the province of Alberta very well because, of course, every day that we fail to capture a reasonable royalty return on our hydrocarbon energy resources, we are losing that money. I hear not without some force and some logic people arguing on the other sides here that we didn't lose that money because the regime was different at the time. Well, I think it's important for us, Mr. Speaker, to recognize what is going on around us. This is not planet Alberta. It is, in fact, an integrated part of the rest of the country and North America and the world as well. What we've seen, very compelling arguments and data that's been collected, is that other jurisdictions around the world are in fact increasing their royalty rates in keeping with (a) the value and scarcity of the hydrocarbon wealth that they have at their disposal in their countries and (b) the lack of hydrocarbon, oil and gas, that's available to the world to actually develop.

Let's not forget that here in Alberta this is part of a rarified jurisdiction where the oil and gas companies still have reasonably equal and open access to the commodity in the first place. There are other countries around the world that are nationalizing, and there are problems in different parts of the world where oil and gas is being produced, unstable conditions and whatnot. So we provide here in the province of Alberta a very stable and very appealing place to do business for oil and gas because, of course, we are part of the North American continent, so it is reasonably stable and safe. We are close to the largest market in the world for oil and gas, and we are part of that market, in fact, you know, and finally, we have a very stable product, especially in the tar sands.

Of course, when you drill for oil and gas, although technology has improved tremendously and the geophysics of it has improved tremendously, still you're not quite sure how long that oil or gas well is going to produce, and then one day it runs out. With the tar sands you can make a pretty good estimate of how much more you have and how much more energy and investment you need to get that product out. You can see it there or you can pretty much poke around and find out how much is there.

That provides a stability which I would suggest, and lots of other people are suggesting too, has a premium to it, Mr. Speaker. It has a premium that allows us the certainty, the safety, the strategic place of our oil and gas here on the North American continent. All of those things have value, and the value must be captured in our royalty regime.

I've been watching this unfold with great interest because, of course, since I was elected and before elected, we had a very active policy to increase the royalty regime here in the province, and I find it with no small dose of irony to see how things have changed very quickly over the last three years. You know, the price has gone up tremendously too, so that's a mitigating factor to some degree. But the point is that we've been pushing very hard over these past three or four or five years to have the royalty review changed, and I think now we're on the cusp of being able to do it.

What I fear, Mr. Speaker, is that we're going to say: okay; well, here is this compromise, and everybody is happy and away we go. Because already from the beginning, when the Hunter report was being presented, that was framed as a very reasonable compromise, to allow our oil and gas industry to continue on making a healthy profit and to adjust to greater royalty rates over time, but during the course of five weeks suddenly the Hunter report went over to an extreme, which I found very disturbing because this was really more the product of spin and communication work rather than reality. So when we saw the government unveil their version of royalty reform, suddenly what was a very reasonable, I think, report that we could live with, certainly, was thrown off into some version of extremism. That was just a misrepresentation of facts and reality, and any time we see that, we're compelled to put our feet down and at least try to resolve that.

This emergency debate that we have here today I think is truly a step in the right direction, and I hope that the public as they continue to become educated on this issue – remember, we're not just passing rules and then hoping that the public will go along with it. I prefer to see it as a continuum of education. People are just starting to understand what the royalty regime does and how this compromised royalty regime won't gain us any more money. In fact, with some changes in the system and changes in the market here in the next few years I would venture to say that we would be capturing less royalties than we are today. Certainly, I'm not suggesting that we capture more royalties at the expense of industry, especially the natural gas industry, because I know that the prices are very unstable there now. But, again, a progressive royalty system based on windfall profits, or the absence of, would solve that problem without a big deal.

It's incumbent upon us to take this royalty debate now, here today, and over the next three weeks as a starting point to come up with a real solution that everybody can live with but also that we can live with ourselves to ensure that we're not spending hydrocarbon wealth for the present at the expense of the future, not just the economic future but for our generational future of Albertans, who will hopefully benefit from the hydrocarbon wealth that we've been blessed with here in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'm speaking just very quickly on a couple of other points that I wanted to bring forward. We believe as New Democrats that this is a wonderful opportunity to have continuous reform and turnover with the royalties. We believe that the urgency will not subside today when we walk away at 6 o'clock but that the urgency will just begin. I've heard some rather spurious arguments about these royalties, and one of the more disturbing ones is that they say: well, the government collects lots of money, and what do they do with it anyway . . . [Mr. Eggen's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: I'll now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs as the 17th participant this afternoon.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'm cognizant that there are only some three minutes left on the clock. But a few comments are I think warranted. I've been listening rather attentively to this debate. If one was to arrive in Alberta and have no idea of what the political landscape of this province is, one would probably very easily conclude that the third party, the ND Party, is the Official Opposition in this province and not the Liberals. Kudos to them for bringing this debate to the House.

It was a rather enlightening debate without a doubt. I have known for a while what the ND position on the royalty review was, but up until today I didn't know what the Liberal position was, and frankly with two minutes left on the clock I still don't know what their position on the royalty review is. However, it would be very irresponsible to force this Legislature and this Premier and our Minister of Energy to now, in a very rushed manner, amend an act and some 10 regulations just simply to implement a policy that will have an impact on generations to come in the province.

Now, I often hear opposition parties arguing that legislation is passed too quickly, not enough consultation, not enough discussion with the opposition, and now we are encouraged to pass what is arguably the most important piece of legislation that this Legislature will ever face without any consultation. Just put it on the table. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre said: we will give you co-operation to just ram it through the House and implement it without any possible consideration of adverse effects that may occur.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier has done an honourable thing. He has made a promise to Albertans to review the royalty structure. He has made a very difficult decision, balancing Alberta's economic growth with what is owed to Albertans as shareholders and owners.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time has now come where we must now rise. We will reconvene tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock.

[At 6 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 6, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/11/06

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise in the House today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a group of 37 grade 6 students from Sturgeon Heights school in St. Albert. They are accompanied by teachers Lorna MacKay, Darryl Propp; parent helpers Sandra Shelemey, Craig Toth, Beth Purdon. They participated in your mock Legislature this morning, and after speaking with them in the rotunda, I found out that they are very knowledgeable about the process and what we do here in their Legislature. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm truly honoured to introduce two guests that are here that have very special credentials. Originally they were from Sierra Leone. They came to Canada via Moncton, New Brunswick, and eventually found that many people from Africa had actually settled in Edmonton and here they might find a home and many people that they had much in common with. Today we are joined by managing editor Alhaji Kabba and his beautiful wife and secretary and layout designer, Martha Kabba, who produce the Canadian African. They have interviewed Stephen Mandel. They've interviewed the police chief in Calgary. Today they interviewed me to find out what it's really like to work bringing immigrants into Alberta. I would ask them to please rise and if we would give them the warm welcome they so richly deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a delegation from the Fulton Place elementary school. This delegation is on tour this afternoon. They are led by a teacher, Mr. Michael Lam, and they are ably assisted by three parent helpers or volunteers: Mrs. Wendy Dick, Ms Linda McBain Cuyler, and Mrs. Heinrichs. I had the pleasure of visiting this classroom at Fulton Place school during Read In Week, in the first week of October, and this class is very well organized by Mr. Lam. The students are bright and energetic, and that is reflected in their activities in the classroom. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Alberta Film Industry

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta film industry is a means through which we communicate the voice and identity of this province. I'm not speaking just to the Alberta stereotype of the cowboy-inspired westerns set against the backdrop of the majestic Rocky Mountains. There is so much more. We're farmers, CEOs, police officers, nurses, and, yes, even politicians. We have stories set in our own unique heritage, and these stories are important contributions to our national cultural mosaic.

The film and television industry has long been of interest to this government. It's a knowledge-based, labour-intensive, value-added, and environmentally green sector with direct employment benefits going to jobs and service companies where films are being shot. The film industry also enriches our province's cultural images, acting talents, skilled craftsmen, and shares our enviable quality of life with the world. It's an industry that postsecondary schools like Red Deer College are focused upon.

The passionate vision of our Albertan identity is certainly reinforced in the indomitable spirit of Lorne MacPherson. He was the head of the Alberta Motion Picture Development Corporation when it opened its doors in 1981 and was instrumental in putting the Alberta film industry onto the global map. Lorne's vision and leadership helped shape a vibrant part of Alberta's arts community. By taking our culture to the world through film and television, he has helped to give global audiences a taste of our provincial perspectives and a clear insight into the Alberta experience.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Gaetz Apartments, Michener Centre

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Something very extraordinary happened in Red Deer last month. Thanks to the Premier's concern for the homeless and his mandate on affordable housing we were able to take an empty provincial building in Red Deer and transform it into 42 affordable apartments for people who have jobs but have no homes. Now called Gaetz Apartments at Michener Centre, these bachelor-type suites include three meals per day and laundry facilities for working people who will now have an opportunity to sleep peacefully and think about their future as they save money for a damage deposit and the first month's rent.

The idea to investigate the use of empty provincial buildings was first identified by Mayor Morris Flewwelling. Thanks to the co-operation of the departments of Infrastructure and Transportation, Municipal Affairs and Housing, Seniors and Community Supports, central PDD, and numerous community agencies we were able to work through extensive program proposals and find the right people for this project.

I would like to thank Justin Hubert of Heritage Family Services and his dedicated staff, Maribeth Friesen of the city of Red Deer social planning department, all the contributors to the project whose staff worked long hours and late nights to complete the renovations for their belief in this project. There are many people from the government departments who also worked very hard to make this project a reality, and I would also like to thank them.

Mr. Speaker, Gaetz Apartments, which will give a home to 42 working homeless, is a great story, a first in the province of Alberta. It's thanks to the vision of our Premier that we have been able to make this project possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Access to Affordable and Nutritious Food

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Food insecurity isn't a term that comes to mind in the province of Alberta, but it's a reality for many of our fellow citizens. Having access to nutritious food at all times is something that most Albertans take for granted, but a report released in June 2007, Income-related Household Food Insecurity in Canada, found that in Alberta 10.7 per cent of households have income-related food insecurity. As a province we have the second highest rate of food insecurity in Canada.

Food insecurity means that individuals and families do not have access to affordable and nutritious food through socially acceptable means. There has been a lot of talk in this province about the housing crisis. We need to be aware that those who are facing a housing crisis have faced food insecurity first. The homeless are severely food insecure. The precariously housed are food insecure. Housing, transportation, child care, and food security are affecting the low-income Albertans.

Most alarming is the finding that Alberta has the highest prevalence of food insecurity among its income assistance recipients. The Alberta rate is 84 per cent, more than 20 per cent greater than the Canadian average of 60 per cent. Eighty-four per cent is an unacceptable finding of food insecurity amongst Alberta's most vulnerable residents. Clearly, income assistance rates in this province are inadequate.

Food security is essential for healthy eating. Without consistent economic access to sufficient nutritious food, healthy eating cannot be achieved, increasing the risk of poor health. Food insecurity is an issue in Alberta. It is a cost to productivity in this province, to our children's future, and to our health care system. There is a lot that a responsible government can and must do to solve this problem. There is no excuse for hunger in Alberta, Canada's wealthiest per capita province.

1:10 Lethbridge College

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very good year for Lethbridge, and today I would like to recognize Lethbridge College. The year 2007 is the 50th anniversary for Lethbridge College, and actually there is no other publicly funded college in Canada that can make that statement because Lethbridge Junior College was the first publicly funded college that came into existence in Canada. Of course, over those 50 years it has a tremendous mark of excellence that it has made in terms of postsecondary.

Now, recently with the help of the Alberta government we have been able to increase the trades and technologies area within the college not only in terms of the renovation but also spots for more electricians, more welders, and more heavy-duty mechanics. We have now a board at Lethbridge College that's led by an excellent entrepreneur and, of course, a recent new president, who comes to us highly recommended as an administrator.

There are some programs that I would like to highlight at Lethbridge College, although all of the programs are of excellent value, in particular, again, that trades and technology that I've just talked about but also broadcast journalism. Right throughout this country there a number of faces that we see on television as anchors and also, of course, beyond our borders and even into Washington. The Global man in Washington, by the way, I believe grew up in Barrhead or Westlock. So an excellent, excellent program, and I want to congratulate all of them.

Lethbridge College, happy 50th. Look forward to the next 50 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Lougheed House Historic Site

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Historic sites like Lougheed House, located in the heart of my constituency, Calgary-Buffalo, keep our province's rich past alive. Preserving and protecting our heritage plays a key role in remembering who we are as a province and allows the next generation to help shape the future in building an even stronger Alberta.

Built in 1891, Lougheed House was the original home to Senator James Alexander Lougheed and his family. Lougheed House is a provincial historic resource and a national historic site dedicated to commemorating and preserving Calgary's early history. Discussions were held in the living room of Lougheed House with regard to the province of Alberta acquiring ownership of our natural resources in 1923.

Following the onset of the Depression in 1929 the Lougheed estate was unable to pay the property taxes on its real estate holdings. The city in 1934 took legal title to the house. Lougheed House is now owned by the province and operated in collaboration with the Lougheed House Conservation Society after a $6 million renovation. As one of the city's most historic landmarks it will now receive additional support from our Premier and the Minister of Alberta Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture to continue sharing Calgary's proud past with Albertans and visitors nation-wide.

This beautifully restored building and gardens represent a tribute to the province's proud history. Lougheed House connects Calgary, Albertans, and visitors to our province with that proud past and gives us a glimpse into how Calgary became the great city it is today. The Lougheed family are proud Albertans with a rich heritage as leaders in our community, Alberta, and Canada.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is envied the world over for the opportunity presented by its natural resources. The amount of extractable oil in its tar sands is second only to Saudi Arabia, and we are one of a handful of oil-producing nations where private companies can still do business. Thanks to this climate we have a very powerful bargaining position with respect to royalty rates.

The owners of these resources, ordinary Albertans, expect their elected representatives to obtain the maximum economic benefit possible for those resources through royalty rates. These expectations have not been fulfilled, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives failed to implement even the bare minimum recommended in the royalty task force. Instead, they brought forward a royalty system that will bring in $600 million less than the task force proposed in a single year.

The Liberals sat out most of the royalty debate, and only at the very end did they bring forward the vaguest proposal for a 20 per cent increase, the same per cent the Conservatives say they want. The Conservatives or Liberals don't talk about real value for royalties because they want to protect their political donations. The Conservatives took $580,000 from big oil and gas over the last two years. Nexen, Enbridge, Husky, Imperial Oil, EnCana, and Suncor are just a few of the companies that funded the Liberals to the tune of $185,000 over the last two years.

Mr. Speaker, it's time Albertans earned as much for their resources as Great Britain, California, Indonesia, Russia, Norway, Azerbaijan, Alaska, and Trinidad. The Liberals and Conservatives are settling for bottom of the barrel royalties. Ordinary Albertans deserve better, and that's why Alberta's NDP is demanding more.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Government Services I am pleased to table copies of two documents today. The first document is the committee's final report and recommendations regarding Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act. The second document is the committee's report on Bill 2, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, these reports are the product of 10 committee meetings. That's over 38 hours of meeting time, including eight hours' worth of public hearings over a few short months, not to mention the research, administrative, and procedural support of over a dozen individuals with the Legislative Assembly Office, including Mr. Robert Reynolds, Dr. Philip Massolin, Ms Rhonda Sorensen, and Ms Jody Rempel. I should also acknowledge the valuable support from the staff at Alberta Justice and the office of the Ethics Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure to work with my colleagues from both sides of the House on this committee and a privilege to chair one of this Legislature's first policy field committees. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was a historic report. That's the first time in the history of this Assembly, in 102 years, that such a process has been followed.

I now call on the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As acting chair of the Standing Committee on Community Services I'm pleased to table copies of two reports today. First is the committee's final report and recommendations regarding Bill 31, Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007. The second is the committee's final report on Bill 41, Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, the committee met on both bills over a time frame of four months, held nine meetings, received 85 written submissions, and heard presentations from 21 witnesses at public hearings held in Edmonton. I want to acknowledge the legal research, administrative, and procedural support of individuals in the Legislative Assembly Office, including Ms Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel; Dr. Philip Massolin, committee research co-ordinator; Ms Katrin Roth von Szepesbela, legal research officer, and the research team; Ms Rhonda Sorensen and communications staff; and Mrs. Corinne Dacyshyn, committee clerk. The committee would like to acknowledge the very capable support from departmental officials at Alberta Health and Wellness as well.

Mr. Speaker, it was an honour to chair one of the Assembly's first policy field committees, and the committee is proud of the all-party co-operation demonstrated throughout this process. As well, I would like to thank the Premier for putting this very democratic process in place.

Mr. Speaker, I request the concurrence of the Assembly with respect to the report on Bill 41, which recommends that the bill proceed with the recommendation that the minister consider imposing limits on the term of office for any person appointed as administrator.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I ask for concurrence, just a note of information. The reason that there was no request for concurrence on Bill 1 and Bill 2 is because those bills were committed after second reading, as was the case in the report on Bill 31. However, the report on Bill 41, because it was sent to the committee after first reading, does require concurrence of the Assembly. So I'll ask the question: does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Speaker: Opposed? It's carried.

head: 1:20 Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This petition has 82 signatures. It's a continuation of a similar petition from the spring, where it reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition signed by a number of constituents from the Rocky Mountain House constituency urging the passing of Bill 45.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 266 Albertans, mostly from Edmonton and area. They are asking the Assembly to urge the government to ensure that remuneration paid to people working with people with disabilities is standardized to ensure that employees are fairly compensated, that employees have access to professional development opportunities, and to introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level of care standards.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with this Assembly five copies of questions and responses to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. Contained in this is supplementary information to my responses as stated in Hansard and responses to unanswered questions for the Committee of Supply on June 7, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, I also am pleased to table with the Assembly today five copies of the 2006-2007 annual report for Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today five copies of the 2006 annual report for the Alberta Elevating Devices & Amusement Rides Safety Association. The AEDARSA is one of the delegated administration organizations that reports to Alberta Municipal Affairs and Housing.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today annual reports for the year ended March 31, 2007, for the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and for Livestock Identification Services.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to table five copies of a petition signed by 76 concerned citizens of Slave Lake and surrounding area urging the Legislative Assembly to "consider the addition of 25 more extended care beds for Slave Lake's aging population." People are finding it very difficult to travel back and forth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter dated July 12, 2007, that I received from the hon. Minister of Energy, and it is regarding the security measures taken by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board during the 500 kV transmission line hearing in Rimbey.

The second tabling that I have today is a letter that I wrote on September 14, 2007, to the hon. Premier of Alberta requesting "a full public inquiry into the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board (EUB), and specifically, the EUB's practice of hiring private investigators to attend and report on members of the public who take part in EUB hearings."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings today, the first from constituent Ryan Warden, expressing his opinion to the Premier, asking him to accept the findings of the royalty review in its entirety and expressing concern about police, senior citizens, first-time homebuyers, and our best and brightest being driven away.

Second is from Mary Elizabeth Archer, also a constituent, asking for a plan to address the growing human resource crisis in the human services sector by asking for an increase in wages, benefits, and supports and also to invest in a three-year social infrastructure plan.

Finally, from constituent Vernita Caron (Beaudoin), who writes to express her frustration and concern with the health care system. She feels there is far too long a waiting time in the hospitals and believes that it's less of a service than would be received in a third-world country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from Lindsay Chevrier, a constituent of mine, saying:

There is a shortage of more than 5000 units of affordable housing in Edmonton, waiting lists for existing units are years long, vacancy rates are zero, and few new units are being constructed. We must do something! Please give this great consideration and act fast!

Another letter, from Gabe Krahn: "I ask that the government continue to make a concerted effort to help alleviate this problem" of homelessness in this province.

Finally, from Jaysey Carlson: "Like everything else in prosperous

Alberta, the cost of educating our children is increasing. Provincial grants for education are not keeping up with rising costs . . . Don't short-change our future. Please make education funding a priority."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased and honoured to rise in our Legislature here today to make two tablings. One is the program for the proclamation of Family Violence Prevention Month from the city of Edmonton last week. It was ably chaired by Lynda Steele of Global news, who also was kind enough to autograph copies of her book for people there that day.

The second is a communication from 190 Edmontonians about the problems of particular predator violence.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter from Edmonton-McClung constituent Dr. Inderjit Singh Chohan, with respect to racial discrimination within publicly funded institutions, in this case Capital health, and what he believes to be a clear case of abuse of mental illness labelling to cover up the bigger issue of racism in the workplace.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is called In Full Swing at the New Building, which is an exact copy of a book produced back in 1907 to celebrate the first Young Men's Christian Association, or YMCA, in Edmonton. This archival treasure was shared with me by Mr. Franco Savoia of the YMCA when I attended the centennial birthday open house at the west-end location in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to table with the Assembly – and I will be providing copies to all members – a little booklet being put together called Page Biographies. It covers a bit of a biography of each of our pages. Quite interestingly, of the less than 20 of them I think five of them aspire to become doctors, two aspire to become lawyers, two aspire to become federal politicians, none aspire to become a provincial politician, and one aspires to become a professional golfer on the PGA. So enjoy reading them. I think they're quite fascinating people.

Mr. Martin: I would just like to bring forward a point of order after question period, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay.

head:

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Royalty Revenues

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General's report, the most recent one, provides shocking insight into this government's incompetence. Despite all of the evidence indicating that Albertans were being shortchanged on royalties, this government year after year after year did nothing. My question is to the Premier. On page 107 of his report the Auditor General refers to an executive committee decision request dated October 4, 2005. Will the Premier table this document unedited and uncensored for all Albertans to see?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this Assembly it was Dr. Doom. Today it's Phantom of the Billions. He just keeps coming up with all kinds of these stories.

I resigned from cabinet in March of 2006 to seek the leadership of this party. I heard from Albertans that they had some questions with respect to the royalty review. I made a commitment that if I was elected and sworn in as Premier, the first thing I would do is call for that review. I did. In September the report was given to the government. We also had the report from the Auditor General. All of that was made public. We also immediately – immediately – upon receiving the report from the panel gave it to all Albertans because they own the resources. We got feedback from thousands of Albertans.

We have a good decision in place. This is all about leadership. It's taking a stand and keeping commitments that I give.

Dr. Taft: Also on page 107 of his report the Auditor General refers to another document entitled Alberta Royalty Review 2005: Some Additional Questions, dated March 2006. This document predicts that Albertans could collect an additional $1 billion to $2 billion annually at prices for natural gas above $5. The Auditor General confirms that the minister of the time was briefed on this document. Will this Premier live up to his claim of being open and accountable and table this document unedited and uncensored for all Albertans to see?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I am open and accountable. In fact, I also want at this point to take an opportunity to thank the leader of the third party. At least we know where he stands on the whole issue of royalties. This guy is hiding behind you two. You don't even know. It's at 20 per cent, but he doesn't know where he takes a stand on it. And today he comes up asking for all kinds of documents. Did you ever hear of where his stand is? No, no. Not even for 30 seconds. Nobody knows. In fact, not even his members know.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier needs to end the cover-up. He needs to come clean with the people of Alberta. The Auditor General refers to a 2004 royalty review culminating in a cross-commodity royalty review and assessment dated December 20, 2004, three years ago. This document again suggests increased royalties as prices rise, and the Auditor General again confirms that the minister was briefed on this document. Will the Premier end the cover-up, come clean with Albertans, and table this and all those other documents uncensored for all Albertans to see?

Mr. Stelmach: Finally the Leader of the Opposition is agreeing with our policy, which means that Albertans now have the opportunity, given this royalty framework, to share in the reward, which means that as prices go up, our royalties will increase, and if prices decline, we will get less. That's the Alberta entrepreneurial spirit, and that's what this framework was built around. Now we know that at least the Leader of the Opposition agrees with part of the framework. At least we now know where you stand.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is clearly in denial. They're clearly continuing the cover-up. Yesterday the Premier claimed that despite all of the overwhelming evidence before him, he can't see where this province of Alberta was shortchanged. Well, he needs to look a little more closely. The Auditor General of Alberta confirms that we lost billions. The Department of Energy technical experts say that we lost billions. The Royalty Review Panel concluded that Albertans were shortchanged billions. Is it the Premier's position that all of these individuals, all of these experts, are mistaken?

Mr. Stelmach: I know there's one person in this Assembly that is wrong, that is mistaken, and I'm quite sure he's going to get up and say, "Yes, I made a mistake." He advocated for building upgraders in Manitoba.

Dr. Taft: This government has been advised by the Department of Energy's own experts, by the Auditor General of Alberta, and by the expert Royalty Review Panel that billions of dollars of public wealth were left on the table. In the face of all this evidence the Premier denies, denies, denies. Who is advising the Premier that all of the conclusions drawn by all of the experts are wrong? Who is advising him?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, very smart people. All the people that are on the government side sitting in this Assembly. I receive my advice from locally elected officials, those MLAs in this House that bring back comments and thoughts from their constituents. We take advice, obviously, from others, but at the end of the day in this government the decisions are made by government, not listening to advice that may come from bureaucracies. That's advice, but the decision is still vested in the highest office of this province, in the Premier's office, and with our government, period.

Dr. Taft: The Premier must be accountable to Albertans. If the Premier has evidence that contradicts his own government studies and contradicts the independent public reports put forward by the Auditor General and the Royalty Review Panel, he should make them public today. Be accountable. Will the Premier do the right thing and table all internal reports, reviews, and other documents that support his position that Albertans were not shortchanged, or does he have any?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Auditor General again made a comment to one of the reporters. I forget which newspaper. He said: look; this is a policy decision that was made by the government of the day, not by any external advisers, not by anyone else but the government. That decision was right. Look at the growth in this province. Look at the people that we have here from other countries that are coming here to Alberta because there's hope and there's opportunity.

You know, there's something. When you get out of this Assembly and actually travel around the province – something a young person told me the other day really hit me in the heart. He said: “You know, Mr. Premier, this is the only province in Canada where my grandfather, my father, and I have opportunity in the same province. I don't have to leave my province to go anyplace else in this country of Canada. It's here, in Alberta.”

Dr. Taft: I've been travelling around the province, Mr. Speaker, and I can tell you that Albertans know they have been ripped off by this government on royalties for seven years. They know it in their hearts, and they live it every day.

To the Premier. Albertans who travel on highway 3 near Lethbridge have been told that the highway will be twinned, quote, as fast as the budget allows, end quote. At the soonest it will be many years. Why did this government choose to make the people of southern Alberta wait for a highway while it let billions of dollars in royalties go uncollected?

Mr. Stelmach: Once again, the hon. member – and the thing that really surprises me: I thought he had a PhD in economics. Really weird here.

Anyway, if you look at the kind of revenue stream to the province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, they keep focusing on just royalties. If you look at the annual reports, you will see much larger revenue coming from taxes: personal income taxes, well above estimates; corporate tax, well above estimates. The amount of Crown leases that were bought in this province is simply outstanding. Why? Because we have a very predictable, sustainable environment for continued investment, the best in Canada. We're going to continue to stay on that track because that investment is necessary not only to build highway 3 but all other highways that are necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Energy. In Grande Prairie citizens are hoping for a NAIT campus to be built there any time soon. The land is available, but NAIT has been told by the province that no money will be forthcoming for capital projects at this location. Why did this government choose to make the people of northwestern Alberta wait for a desperately needed NAIT campus while it let billions of dollars in royalties go uncollected?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Yeah. Once again, he's totally wrong. There is a good plan in place in Grande Prairie in terms of increasing access to postsecondary.

Dr. Taft: Where's the NAIT campus?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, again, that's where you don't know what you're talking about. Now the minister will give us the right information.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are in discussions with NAIT in Grande Prairie on the Campus Alberta program, and it's an access plan.

Dr. Taft: Discuss, discuss, discuss. We want some action, you guys.

Again to the Minister of Energy. Citizens in Grande Prairie are waiting for funding to support a new aquatic centre for citizens there to enjoy. How is it that this government cannot afford to help the people of Grande Prairie with a swimming pool, but it can let billions of dollars of royalties go uncollected?

Mr. Stelmach: Again, the new – the new – recreation centre in Grande Prairie – and I believe it's about $90 million – is being built. You know why, Mr. Speaker? Because of the new money – new money – that's going into the budget, $1.4 billion for municipalities that will start in the year 2010-11. That's over and above a brand new hospital for Grande Prairie – and we know the needs – and also the ring road for the city of Grande Prairie. Those were the priorities of the people in that city, and that's why we're building them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Until this government announced its new royalty regime, Albertans were receiving less royalties than any other country in the world. In two years from today, thanks to this speaker, we will be receiving higher royalties than Ireland. Now, that means that we're still behind Russia, Australia, California, Alaska, Libya, Egypt, Azerbaijan, Nigeria, Venezuela, Angola, and Trinidad and Tobago. So can this Premier tell us why his royalty regime will have Alberta collecting less royalties than almost every other country in the world?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I thought there for a while the leader of the third party was going to sing: I've been everywhere, man. But it was very good.

Once all of the framework is in place, all the agreements are in place, we'll be able to better determine where we're going to be with respect to comparison to other countries. There are so many different comparisons. There are, of course, different zones to drill into. Some of the other issues tied to the environment – we have very tight environmental rules in the province of Alberta compared to some of the other countries that were mentioned. There's a lot here to consider.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this chart from the royalty task force shows that Alberta receives amongst the lowest royalties in the world, and this will not change with the government's new regime. My question to the Premier is: why did he cave in to the big oil companies and give them bargain basement royalties?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I know where the leader of the third party stands on the royalty review. He's supporting the panel in its entirety. He wants a production tax, which goes back to the old strategy a former party from Ottawa imposed on Alberta that drove Albertans out of the province, created a situation where people actually couldn't pay off their mortgages, had to leave. Businesses went broke. At that time I remember that interest was around 24 per cent, because I paid that interest rate. We're not going back to that kind of model of collecting royalties.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I just heard the Premier compare the royalty task force to the Trudeau government's national energy program. So my question is: if they came up with something that's equivalent to the national energy plan, Mr. Premier, why did you appoint those individuals?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, he's supporting the task force recommendations. Now he says: why did you appoint them? You know, that's just like some of the other comments I heard about: the process is tarnished; their appetite for royalty change is not significant; we have a flawed process. Then at the end they're all supporting the report. Make up your mind. It's either here or there. It can't be both sides.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Beef Safety

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent reports have indicated that an E coli outbreak in hamburger meat distributed by a U.S. company led to a number of illnesses. An investigation traced some of that meat back to an Alberta processor, resulting in a recall across the United States and Canada. This is a real concern to producers as to how it will affect their industry. To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: could he tell us what causes E coli, and what assurances does he have for Albertans and our customers that Alberta meat is indeed safe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. E coli is a naturally occurring bacteria in digestive tracts of cattle, and it certainly becomes an issue during processing, of course, when the bacteria comes in contact with the meat.

Alberta meat continues to be very safe. We have strict sanitation, inspection, and testing procedures. Raw meat is never sterile. Consumers should always follow safe food practices when they handle meat and cook their burgers very thoroughly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: with the Alberta livestock so dependent on exports, will this recent outbreak cause significant and long-term damage to our beef industry? [interjections]

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, probably not a laughing matter, I don't think. This is a serious issue in all of Canada, not just Alberta.

The federal government, the embassy, CFIA, and our government certainly are in discussions over what the new measures might mean. Federal meat processing facilities already have testing requirements from the U.S. Department of Agriculture. We will continue to work with CFIA in its ongoing negotiations with the U.S. because we have to minimize any negative impacts on our exporters.

Mr. Marz: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what steps are being taken to reassure both our domestic and our international customers that our beef is safe?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government along with CFIA believes that any U.S. action is certainly unwarranted. The U.S. supports the same type of safety controls that we have here in Canada. Alberta meat is known throughout the world as a safe and high-quality product. One single incident in a federal facility has not changed this. Again, we will continue to work with CFIA and our federal counterparts on lifting any new and unnecessary U.S. trade restrictions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Staffing of Human Service Agencies

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few months ago community organizations throughout Alberta launched a campaign about the crisis facing agencies charged with assisting our society's most vulnerable members, the aptly named Who Cares? campaign. Only now, after a great deal of public outcry, has the Ministry of Children's Services seen fit to demonstrate a small measure of token acknowledgement. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Why did the ministry allow this situation to become so severe before reacting instead of being proactive in protecting Alberta's most vulnerable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I'd like to say is that I have been working with my contracted agencies long before the campaign that the hon. member speaks about. Frankly, when that came out – Who Cares? – I can say that I care, and I can say that everybody on this side of the government cares about these contracted agencies.

Mrs. Mather: In addition to problems facing the nonprofits in this sector, this government's practices have made them worse. Why does this minister continue to allow for gross pay inequity for nonprofit employees when compared to their much higher paid counterparts in government agencies? Is the ministry aware that this practice of paying one group substantially more than another is poaching from an already scarce pool of workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I can tell you that I take this issue very seriously. Contracted agencies are 25 per cent of our close to a billion dollar budget in Children's Services. As I mentioned yesterday, I have spent a lot of time in the last couple of months going out and visiting with contracted workers in their facilities. I can tell you, as I said yesterday, that I am in awe of what it is that those people accomplish. What amazes me even more is that these people can be working anywhere else in the province doing something else if they want. They choose to work with our kids. They're doing a fabulous job.

I am working with them and going through the budget process in terms of narrowing the gap regarding the issue that you're talking about. Yesterday was good news in offering immediate dollars to help with some immediate issues.

Mrs. Mather: This increase of about 30 cents per hour in wages to people who find this a calling that the minister thinks is pretty good will barely cover the cost of annual health premiums for one family. This is a dismal indication of how much importance this government places on this crucial sector and the demanding, high-stress, essential jobs these workers perform. Will the minister please tell us what other more meaningful and effectual reforms will be instated and when?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can commit to the fact that I will continue to work with contracted agencies on their current needs and their future needs during the budgeting process. Again, I think that yesterday's funding of $26 million was good recognition of the important work that these agencies do and also allows them to take care of the more immediate pressures.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Forest Industry Sustainability

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne has a very prominent forest base. Communities within my riding are concerned that the forest industry may not survive the infestation of pine beetle and now the impact of a record-high Canadian dollar affecting exports into the U.S. Industry players big and small need to know that this government is solidly behind them. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: what is your department doing to address the plight of Alberta's forest-based companies and communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are tough times, indeed, for the Alberta forestry industry. They've been hit by the perfect storm: the collapse of the export market, the pine beetle, soaring labour and transportation costs, the softwood lumber agreement export tax, and the loonie going first to par and now past par with the U.S. dollar. I had the opportunity to meet with the Alberta Forest Products Association in September. We discussed these issues. I was able to announce a new committee that's being struck, the Alberta forestry sustainability committee, with three MLAs and three senior industry executives on that committee. The MLAs will be led by the Member for Peace River and will also include the members from Calgary-Nose Hill and Battle River-Wainwright.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for that answer. I want to thank the minister also for visiting the forest-based companies in my constituency. I want to know from this minister: when will this work by this committee start, and what's the focus of the work to be done?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the committee has been struck. Their first meeting will be later this month. What will they be doing? A broad range of questions that look at the competitiveness and sustainability of the industry. This would include improved forestry management techniques; innovation in products, especially in the areas of bioenergy and biochemistry; also carbon offsets for this government's new clean air emissions program; new technology and new investment to pay for that technology; new markets, questions of other opportunities; and transportation. The focus will be on: what can the government of Alberta do to work with industry to facilitate this innovation?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like I explained earlier, this industry is in trouble now. I want to know from this minister: when will this report come back, and when will he act upon it?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the members of the committee understand the priority that I and the rest of the government placed on them and on this report. I've asked them to move as quickly as possible. I've asked for a draft report by the spring of 2008. I have full confidence that the committee will meet that deadline and it will reinforce this government's policy of healthy forests, healthy forest communities, and a healthy forest industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Edmonton Remand Centre

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Delays and indecisiveness, trademarks of this PC government, are now costing taxpayers money. The latest example is the new Edmonton Remand Centre, which is now going to cost taxpayers an extra $312 million at least, which is a jump of about 101 per cent. The reason given, as always, is construction cost overruns, not the government's own bad planning and foot-dragging. My question to the Solicitor General is this. If I believe the cost overrun story, can the minister assure this House that he has reviewed these increases and that he is satisfied that they are legitimate and justified, that no one is taking taxpayers for an expensive ride here?

The Speaker: The Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The good news is that we're building a facility that is very much needed in our province. In regard to the cost overruns that you just spoke of, certainly the costs have escalated. When the estimate was done in 2005, $304 million, the site hadn't been selected yet, and the detailed design hadn't been selected yet. We need the spaces, and we will ensure that taxpayers are getting the best value for their dollar.

I would ask the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation if he wants to supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the minister. The remand space is needed. It was needed four years ago.

The province owns the land; they don't need to buy it. In fact, the government's own 2007 budget boasted under the heading Alberta's Major Capital Accomplishments that this was under way and that we have "selected [the] site for the new $308 million Edmonton Remand Centre." Again to the Solicitor General: why did construction not begin immediately after the site was chosen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would not be prudent to start construction on a facility until such time as you do a detailed design and a detailed analysis of the site. We've done that, and now we're proceeding.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned, as are many taxpayers in this province, that our government does not only let billions of dollars in uncollected revenue disappear on us and deny that an opportunity was ever lost, but it also gives in to any and all contractors who apparently and frequently lowball their offers to win those bids only to come back later and ask for more money. In my book a contract is a contract, and people should adhere to what they agreed to. Can the minister confirm whether or not any progress-monitoring measures, conditions, timelines, or performance bonds were ever put in that contract?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, if he's talking about the contract for the Remand Centre, we're in the process of developing that contract now, so of course there are going to be checks and balances there to make sure that we don't have a cost overrun. The information was put together by Infrastructure and Transportation. I have all the confidence in the world in it, and if the minister would like to supplement, I would invite him to do so.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we've decided to take this contract on with a contract management. Therefore, Stuart Olson will be doing that contract. They'll be putting out bids to every subcontractor out there. We will overcheck those bids. Stuart Olson is going to manage the job, and we believe we will get the best value for the taxpayers' money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Homelessness and affordable housing are of great concern to my caring constituents. During the summer I attended several meetings on housing needs, and most recently at a meeting organized by the Calgary Homeless Foundation, I heard Dr. Sam Tsemberis of New York speaking on the Housing First program that he has successfully founded in New York City. My question today is to the associate minister of housing. Is the government of Alberta considering this model for the homeless in our province?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Affordable Housing and Urban Development.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Housing First model is an excellent example, and it's excellent for how the community homeless foundations and the housing trusts in our seven major municipalities in Alberta are changing their approach to addressing the needs of the homeless. They have a very bold, innovative plan that is looking forward to ending homelessness in our province within a 10-year period, and it's through an innovative approach that completely changes the conventional method of assisting the homeless. That means that the individual will be assisted through Housing First. Then they will be assured supports and services, and that will bring back their integration into the community.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: recently the Alex community health centre in Calgary announced the hospital discharge project for the homeless. How does this relate to the Housing First model?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hospital discharge program is a pilot project. Currently in Calgary there are approximately five individuals a day that access emergency services at hospitals. They are then discharged back into the community to the shelter, usually with needs for medication or dressing changes. They have a host of needs that are medical. What the Alex community health centre proposal will do is stop the revolving-door syndrome for 50 chronically homeless Calgarians by providing them with housing in the community, with their own apartments, where they will then have 24-hour access to a seven-member professional team made up of nurses, physicians, et cetera, that will address those needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are the costs associated with this pilot project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our current method of responding to the chronically homeless requiring hospital treatment is well known. It's approximately $150,000 per person. The Housing First model, the hospital discharge program, which will include, as I said, housing for 50 individuals a year as well as the support and treatment through a very professional team, is estimated to be approximately $30,000 per person per year. You can see that that's a savings of about $120,000 per person per year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Labour Relations Code

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years this government has promoted policies that unfairly discriminate against workers. The labour code established in 1988 is overdue for review. My question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. What is your policy in respect to reviewing the labour code? In response to the demands of thousands of workers, it appeared that the minister was promising a review but has since backtracked, running away from her promise.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in 2002 the then minister initiated a discussion relative to a review between both employers and employees. There was absolutely no decision made to advance any kind of review of the Labour Relations Code.

Earlier this year, right from January, when I had first a chance to take a look at some of the issues, I talked to different labour groups, I talked to different employers, and I had not one request until September, at roughly the time there was conflict between some of the members of both the union and the management on certain labour relations agreements, for any kind of review. We are satisfied that our Labour Relations Code works.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Supreme Court of Canada in June of this year submitted an important decision, a historic decision in respect to collective bargaining. It set the bar quite high in making it clear that legislation which substantially interferes with the collective bargaining process is on a collision course with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is yet another reason for reviewing the labour code. I wonder if the minister would now, in the light of the Supreme Court, move forward with a review of the labour code to make sure that a whole list of items – the first-contract process, use of replacement workers, et cetera, et cetera – could be in violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Speaker: The hon. minister, but we will avoid legal interpretations.

Ms Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is not something that I can address.

We have two groups in the province of Alberta that have issued a Charter challenge that is known before the courts.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to a decision that's already been made, the Supreme Court of Canada's decision. Surely the minister should proceed on the policy issue, you know, and be proactive, not wait. It's like saying: "It's okay to break the law. You might get caught." We have to be proactive and change the laws.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Rent Regulation

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the government made a grandiose statement that they were going to end homelessness within 10 years. Ironically, at the same time the number of families waiting for affordable housing in Edmonton passed 3,000. That's 500 more than it was six months ago, 20 per cent more than when the government responded to the government housing task force. Frankly, no government since the 1930s has done more to create homelessness. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. My question is straightforward: when will this government get off its ideological hobby horse and do the right thing and bring in rent guidelines?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I could answer the member's question by saying that this government has very much been proactive in its direction in trying to deal with individuals that have the challenge of housing, that have the challenge of homelessness. I don't want to be on the same broken record that maybe I was on in the spring, but $285 million of new money was put into the budget last year.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, 500 more people are on the waiting list here in Edmonton. The same in Calgary. The same in Fort McMurray. Everywhere. We know now that the vacancy rate in Edmonton is going to be less than 1 per cent. Calgary has been at .5 per cent for months. Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is at .2 per cent. It's time, Mr. Minister, for this government to realize that the market is not working. We're getting worse instead of better. I again ask the same minister: what will it take for this government to implement rent guidelines, making it possible for Albertans to sleep at night knowing that they'll be able to afford to sleep in the same place a month from now?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not going to implement something that we know is not going to work. We need to have a focus and a direction that is going to have housing increased. We increased funding by $14.3 million, to $33 million, to assist 6,700 Alberta households. This includes $9 million for the direct rent supplement program.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the point is that it's not working. Things are getting worse. That's the message we're trying to get through to this thick-skulled government. My question, then, simply is this to this minister: with the situation getting worse – they refuse to work on rent guidelines – what is the message we're saying to people that are spending 50 to 60 per cent of their income on rents and the homeless and all the rest of them? Are we really saying that the message is: "Enjoy yourself. Enjoy your cardboard box. Because that's all we're going to do for you"?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do understand that the situation and the challenges are getting greater. That's why we are doing things differently. That is why we looked at systems in the United States, in different parts of the world, as Housing First, that the hon. associate minister is working on, to look at having housing for the homeless, to bring forward different types of direction and focuses that put people in homes, that give individuals the stability of having a house or a home.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mumps Vaccination for Adults

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the government announced that it will be providing a second mumps vaccination to young adults. Free vaccinations are now available to young people attending Lethbridge postsecondary institutions, where a number of cases have occurred, and the vaccine will be available to youth province-wide next month. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is government waiting until December and possibly allowing the virus to spread before making this vaccination available to all young Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is actually a very important topic. It has been discovered recently that a certain cohort of young adults did not get a second mumps vaccine when they were children, so anyone born after the year 1970 and under the age of, say, 26 or 27 is at risk for contracting mumps as an adult, which can be a very serious health risk to them.

There have been outbreaks of mumps at a university in New Brunswick, and now we've seen mumps cases at the Lethbridge Community College and the University of Lethbridge in Alberta. We've moved immediately to acquire the necessary vaccine to have vaccinations done in Lethbridge for young adults of that age cohort, and we're moving to get the vaccine to provide that to the rest of the province.

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, my last question to the same minister: will this vaccination put additional strain on the health care system, especially since the flu season is fast approaching?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it will. It's important for us to move to get the vaccine, first of all, that we need to make sure it's available to all young adults who were born after the year 1970 and who are under the age of 26 or 27. We will move to have that vaccine available, and in December we will start a vaccination program across the province. We hope to align the vaccinations with other vaccinations that are happening; in other words, if people are getting a flu shot, we can align those resources. We are working with the health authorities to make sure that we have the appropriate human resources in place to accomplish this. Will it put a strain on the process? Absolutely. Is it necessary? Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Deferred Infrastructure Maintenance

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Deferred maintenance is the most important problem facing Alberta's infrastructure. It is maintenance that has already been put off at least once. It is overdue, and there is according to the Auditor General over $6 billion worth of it in this province. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How could this government possibly stand by over so many years underfunding vital maintenance until, as the Auditor General puts it, public safety may be at risk?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we're working very, very diligently and hard on making sure that we try to catch up. We admit we do have a backlog in deferred maintenance. We've worked on our capital plan and our budgets to increase that. We've increased them this year, and we are working as fast as we can. Remember, we have such a fast-growing province here and we have such a heated economy that we don't necessarily have the capacity to get it done as quickly as we'd like to.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General showed that this government hid from Albertans that we could have been pulling in billions more in royalties. He showed up another aspect of their secrecy, that there is "little public information on deferred maintenance." I guess there's no point in giving evidence of quite how incompetent their management of infrastructure has been. Unfortunately, hiding from a problem doesn't make it go away. It's time to come clean. Exactly how much is the current deferred maintenance backlog?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think today if we looked at every single thing that is out there, if we talked roads, buildings, schools, hospitals, we're getting close to that $4 billion to $5 billion range.

Mr. Chase: Well, that is certainly a conservative estimate. Over 60 roofs in Calgary schools are leaking, and some ceilings are even collapsing. Brentwood elementary, Western Canada high school, Ernest Manning high – the list goes on and on. Getting an education in Alberta should not be hazardous to your health, and that's not to mention the crumbling hospitals and the potholes littering our highways. This is what a $700 million deferred maintenance bill means for Calgary school boards. This is what a $6 billion maintenance shortfall means for this province. All of its legacy of underfunding . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I just have to say that I don't know where this . . . [interjection] Oh, he's still screaming. I don't know where he's getting his information from. We fund the school boards with maintenance dollars, and there are times when they don't always put the dollars where they're supposed to go, but we do fund with maintenance dollars. We don't want any of our students to be in any type of health jeopardy, and we look after those problems.

Roles and Mandates for Postsecondary Education

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology has been conducting a roles and mandates policy framework for Alberta's publicly funded postsecondary system. My questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What problem are you trying to solve through this review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, it was brought to our attention by a number of the institutions that they needed a framework for clarity around who does what in the system because we can't all be all things to all people. So in the interests of students – and the students also have been very supportive in this consultative process that we've been working on – we've brought forward all of the postsecondaries to say: how do we create a better system, Campus Alberta, that provides for accessibility, transferability for the students, the taxpayers, and society and the economy as a whole? I might add that the areas of concern and regionality have been dealt with in the framework document, and things are moving along quite well.

Mr. Doerksen: To the same minister: what role will the comprehensive community colleges play in this framework?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we have a number of excellent colleges in our province. They all play a significant role within the communities. Grande Prairie was mentioned today by the Leader of the Opposition. Grande Prairie college plays a key role as a steward of the educational components in that area. A NAIT campus was mentioned. There's no need to have different stewards in a certain region. We need to have one steward, and that's where the comprehensive community colleges come into play. That doesn't mean that they deliver it all; it means that they are the stewards of that region. The comprehensive community colleges will provide for a broad range of program delivery for student access so that students don't have to leave home in cases like Grande Prairie. They can get their education right there in the city.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the officials at Red Deer College are particularly concerned with this framework in that they see that it might prevent them from the ability to offer degrees in an institution such as a comprehensive community college. How has the minister addressed those concerns?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I opened my first answer with: we can't all be all things to all people in terms of the colleges or the universities. There has to be some clarity of the roles and responsibilities within each of those institutions. The comprehensive community colleges actually in a collaborative approach will be able to offer degrees from any institution, whether that be the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, Athabasca University, the University of Lethbridge, the University of British Columbia, but we've also allowed them the flexibility. If there is a described need, if there's something that will fit within the Campus Alberta transferability for the students, then we have allowed for a Campus Alberta review of a degree to be delivered by that institution. That's not going to happen on an ongoing basis, but in specific cases where need warrants it, we will allow that to happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Forest Industry Sustainability

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The forestry industry in this province is facing difficult economic times, as the minister knows. In the past 24 months Alberta's forest products have fallen in value by about 29 per cent. As a result companies have been scaling back and slowing down in production and construction. This has resulted in job losses across the product as well as across the province. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: while you recently announced a committee to address and examine these concerns – that's great – what are you doing right now to address the problems that have been going on over the last 24 months?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, everybody on this side of the House knows that we're committed to a free-market approach to all sectors of the economy. We've worked closely with the forestry sector to deal with the five or six different factors that are hitting the industry right now. I can repeat them for the hon. member if he likes: the pine beetle, the dollar at par, the softwood lumber export agreement. These problems did not occur in the last couple of weeks or months, and they're not going to be solved in the next couple of months. We're working with industry. We've dealt with stumpage fees to reflect the lower prices. We're taking measured steps in appropriate time to deal with this in a responsible manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why has it taken so long right now to come up with a viable solution? What are you doing right now, today?

2:20

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member and his colleagues across the way have been out of power for so long that they've forgotten that quick responses to deep-seated problems just create more problems. We're dealing with this in a measured and responsible way. We didn't get into it overnight, and we're not going to get out of it overnight.

Mr. Bonko: Grande Prairie has had areas hit worse by the pine beetle. Even though the numbers of the beetles have not increased this year, they're not gone for good. This needs to have some action. Local officials have said that municipalities have not been consulted regarding the fight with the pine beetle. They noted that the grants have dropped from $5 million to $2.8 million. To the minister, then. Inadequate funds are being provided to fight the pine beetle in Grande Prairie. Where is the forestry industry? I thought it was vital to you. What are you going to be doing to increase it and fight the pine beetle?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to report to this House that I've been to Grande Prairie three different times since we rose last June. I've met with municipal officials, Sustainable Resource Development officials, forestry industry officials, all in the area. In fact, there is good news about the pine beetle in that area. We did not have a repeat of the overflight from the year before. Our very proactive reaction to pine beetle is having a positive effect there. We've asked for new money to fight the pine beetle in the rest of this year, and I'll be asking for similar strong financial support to continue our fight with the pine beetle both in the north and the south in the next budget year.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 88 questions and answers today.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from NorQuest College that have joined us in the public gallery. Students from NorQuest are always very enthusiastic and very inquisitive, and we're delighted to have them join us today. There are 18 visitors in all, and they are led by their teacher, Ms Melanie Skrypyk. If I could get them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Privilege
Misleading the House

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday I indicated that at the conclusion of the Routine today I would invite either or both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and the Minister of Energy to add additional comments to the subject that was being debated yesterday before we take all of this together and decide to deal with it by tomorrow.

Did the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre have anything further to add?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the remarks the Minister of Energy made yesterday. I have reviewed carefully his remarks, and I maintain that the minister deliberately misled the House, and in doing so, he did impede the work of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that as at the 30th of April 2007 the Minister of Energy knew that the government was not collecting a fair share of royalty revenues. Now, he knew this because it is contained in the documents that were tabled as a package on April 16 as Sessional Paper 250/2007, tabled by the Clerk and listed as a document entitled Royalty Review 2006: List of Consultant Studies and Software. It included a censored report from Wood Mackenzie, charts, e-mails, and a variety of other documents contained in that binder.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on page 213 of what was contained in this sessional paper, it does state that since 2000 the gap between prices and effective royalty rates has grown, suggesting that our royalty system should be examined.

On page 426 of the documents that were contained in that sessional paper, it says: economic rent, a demonstration of our rent share by pool size, price commodity, PSAC; this shows that we are not capturing our fair share at high prices.

On page 748 it notes that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky participates in some of the oil and gas compact commission meetings. In the 2005-06 Ministry of Energy annual reports the then minister makes a special point of thanking the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for his efforts with the U.S. energy council and PNWER, indicating to me that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky was very much in the loop on the government's energy policy even prior to his appointment in December 2006 as Minister of Energy.

I also maintain he knew this because the department officials have been briefing ministers since 2000 that royalty revenues were not as high as they should be, that the system should be examined, and that we were not capturing a fair share. This is supported by the Auditor General in his annual report, in which he notes that in general staff have produced quality analysis, that staff support the minister by analyzing royalty issues and presenting that information to the minister, that at least three years ago Alberta's share had fallen below its target range, that the department could collect an additional $1 billion more per year. That appears on page 91 of the Auditor General's report.

Also available to the minister was a 2000 royalty review; one dated May of 2003; a 2004 royalty review with suggestions to give consideration to increased royalty rates; a 2005 royalty review which also included that, and I quote: Alberta could increase its share; and another dated January 5, 2006, which was presented to the standing policy committee in August 2006 by the then minister. As far as I'm able to determine, both past and present ministers of Energy were on hand for that presentation. The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky was a member of that committee at that time.

In the exchange on the 30th of April 2007, page 694, the minister says, "There is nothing in any of those documents that would indicate to anybody that we have not collected a fair share of royalties for Albertans."

As I have shown, there was something in these documents that did indicate that a fair share had not been collected. The Wood Mackenzie document was not singled out by the minister during this exchange. An entire binder of documents was tabled together. We have shown that two speak directly to the minister's knowledge that we were getting a lesser share.

In the material that was available to the minister there were ample references to royalty rates and collecting a higher or fair share. It is a reasonable presumption that the Minister of Energy would avail himself of this information. The royalty structure is a core business of the Department of Energy, and the Minister of Energy is steward of these resources and responsible for the policies. Not only is it reasonable for him to avail himself of this information; it's necessary for him to do so in order to exercise due diligence. I have to believe as a member of this government that he was aware of this information.

The Minister of Energy knew when he said, "There is nothing in any of those documents that would indicate to anybody that we have not collected a fair share of royalties for Albertans" that the government of Alberta was not collecting a fair share. He misled the House with that statement and impeded the work of all members but particularly the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Energy, would you like to add additional information to the file?

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would. Again, it's a bit of an interesting thing now that every document that ever has been published either internally or sourced externally for the Department of Energy seems to be a document that I was referring to. Of course, very clearly in the record of Hansard I was answering a question with respect to some severed sections of documents. The severed sections of documents were made available by me very shortly after being appointed. They're in the Energy department's library. All of the reports are there. All of the documents that have been referred to in this particular exchange with the member opposite are there.

The specific documents. There is nothing in those documents that makes anything other than comparisons to other jurisdictions. Nothing in there says anything about whose share is right, proper, or fair. Mr. Speaker, what it says is that there is a comparison, and that's what it was intended to do.

Mr. Speaker, again, the thing seems to keep revolving around the fact that somehow or other this government and particularly I have made an open and blatant attempt to mislead the House. I will continue to defend the fact that I had answered the question honestly and openly, and I do believe that the statements that I made can be supported. I very much look forward to your ruling with respect to the matter.

The Speaker: We'll try and return tomorrow afternoon at the conclusion of the Routine with a statement with respect to the matter.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on a point of order.

Point of Order

Tabling a Government Report

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point of order is simply about the fact that the government has not tabled its crime reduction task force report in this Assembly. I would note that they are having a news conference with, I think, the Premier and three ministers at 3 o'clock. My problem with it is simply this: a report is being given to the media at 2 p.m., admittedly under an embargo, but none of the MLAs, especially opposition MLAs, who might be asked to comment on this, will know what's in that report till 3 o'clock. I think that when the government talks about transparency and openness, this should be the case, that if it's embargoed for the media, we should at least be having Members of the Legislative Assembly that could go under the same embargo. I know that there's not a lot you can do about it, but I think that this is an important point of order. Perhaps this policy or this practice might be changed in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader on this point.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the fact that the member didn't quote a citation from our Standing Orders is probably reflective of the fact that this is not covered under our rules given that this is a government report, not a Legislature report. I think the member has made his point. I'll be happy to pass on his concerns to the government, but I can't see where this constitutes a point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm unaware of any constitutional requirement for the government to make the report available to all members. I do not believe that this is a point of order. It must be a complaint.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand today to speak to Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007. This legislation brings the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act in line with initiatives announced in Budget 2007. It parallels amendments made at the federal level and makes the act consistent with current policy.

On September 20, 2006, Alberta announced the elimination of the double taxation of dividend income. Currently dividend income is taxed twice; first, when income is earned by the corporation, and again at the personal income tax level when investors receive dividends. To address this double taxation, federal and provincial governments provide dividend tax credits on personal income taxes as an offset. However, the dividend tax credits have not fully offset taxes paid at the general corporate rate. The current amendment will correct this. The amendment will also reduce the tax credit for dividend income received from small businesses as the current credit more than offsets taxes paid at the small-business rate.

A general antiavoidance rule, or GAAR, will be added to allow for the collection of tax from individuals who have used an avoidance transaction for no bona fide purposes other than to avoid federal or provincial tax. Such transactions are becoming more common in Canada. The federal government first introduced GAAR legislation in 1988. Since that time Alberta is required to parallel the federal definition of taxable income, and since GAAR allows for the reassessment of taxable income, Alberta should have introduced a parallel provision at that time. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's provision will be retroactive to 1988.

Charitable donations have a tremendous impact, Mr. Speaker, on the lives of Albertans, and the provincial tax system encourages these donations through a tax credit. This amendment increases the tax credit rate by 21 per cent for charitable donations over $200, encouraging Albertans to give even more. Including the federal charitable donations credit, Albertans receive 50 cents in tax credit for every dollar donated over the $200 threshold.

Mr. Speaker, recognizing the importance of continuing education, this amendment provides relief to postsecondary students on the costs associated with higher learning. This amendment also increases the education amounts, which compensate students for other costs of living while still a student. These credits can also be transferred to spouses, parents, or grandparents.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, supports Alberta's well-known tax advantage, and I urge all members to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I'm taking a speakers list.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to confess to being a little confused, and perhaps the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon is a little confused because I believe we're doing Bill 36, which is the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007. Yet his comments . . .

The Speaker: Actually, we're doing Bill 36, which is the Real Estate Amendment Act, are we not?

Mr. R. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have in front of me Bill 36, and it's titled the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

The Speaker: Then I'm really confused here because I have in front of me something else, so I'll defer if the member has the actual bill.

Mr. Rogers: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. We should be speaking to Bill 36. I spoke to Bill 35.

The Speaker: Okay. Well, let's just unravel all of this. We're dealing with Bill 36. The hon. member spoke to Bill 35. Does the hon. member have comments for Bill 36?

Thank you very much, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, for drawing that to the attention of the House, including the chair.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your indulgence. I will speak to Bill 36. It is my pleasure to stand today to speak to Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007. The Alberta Corporate Tax Act is generally amended every year to ensure that our tax system is consistent with the federal regime, to correct current technical deficiencies, and to ensure consistency with the government policy. This year's amendment reflects two earlier decisions; namely, the termination of the Alberta royalty tax credit program and the phase-in of the increase to the small-business income threshold from $400,000 to $500,000.

The Alberta royalty tax credit program was established in 1974 in response to that year's federal budget. The program has since run its course, and this change is a reflection, Mr. Speaker, of today's conditions. The phase-in of the increase to the small-business income threshold from $400,000 to $500,000 will be effective on April 1 of each year, phased in by 2009.

Mr. Speaker, this year's amendment act proposes a change to Alberta's antiavoidance rule, known as GAAR. Our legislation currently provides that the rule applies when the transaction is undertaken primarily to obtain an Alberta tax benefit. This bill would amend the Alberta Corporate Tax Act such that GAAR would apply when avoidance transactions undertaken in other Canadian jurisdictions affect Alberta tax.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides additional assistance to small businesses, helps discourage tax avoidance schemes, and eliminates ARTC, as announced by Alberta Energy.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to support this bill, and I thank you for your indulgence.

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, this is Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, Bill 36.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well – you know what? – I won't say anything. We'll just let that go. There's so much, actually, to be said about both Bill 35 and Bill 36, which in many respects are parallel acts, and that may have been part of the source of the confusion for the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

First of all, when we're looking at amending the corporate income tax act, I want to talk a little bit about small business in Alberta and the reasons why this is certainly a good thing. I'm going to guess right up front that my colleagues from the NDP opposition are going to roundly criticize the Alberta Liberals once again. It seems to be their strategy these days. They're going to come after us for sticking up for small business, Mr. Speaker. But, in fact, most people in this province understand that small business is one of the driving economic factors in terms of economic output in this province, and it's a good thing that we make some accommodations for them.

It was unfortunate, quite frankly, that yesterday, not to dispute the absolute relevance of debating royalties and the new royalty regime structure in this province yesterday, but as a result of that, the procedures with regard to Bill 213, colloquially known as the red tape bill, had to be set aside until, I believe, this Thursday, unfortunate in that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business had planned to be here for the debate on Bill 213, and once again it has been set aside. Hopefully, we'll have an opportunity to deal with that very important piece of legislation on Thursday.

Mr. Speaker, raising the small-business threshold to $500,000 from $400,000 is clearly a good thing. It will give those small businesses an opportunity to pay tax at a lower rate, at 3 per cent, and certainly encourage further growth and development of small business in Alberta, and that is a good thing.

In consulting stakeholders, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business did question the need for making small business wait through the taxation cycle for four years until they realize the full benefit of that. That was about the only concern that the stakeholders that I consulted with had raised.

One of the things that the government talks about in their press release – and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon mentioned it here a minute ago – was making the business tax system more equitable. In particular, they refer to the fact that the dividend tax credit on large corporations is going to be increased and that they're going to deal with some loopholes in the legislation that allowed more than a generous dividend tax credit for income tax at the small-business rate.

This would lead one to question the mover of the bill and perhaps the Finance minister as to just exactly how much revenue was forgone from the years 2001 to 2004, when this government failed to deal with this particular loophole. I'm going to guess that in this particular case, since it doesn't appear as if that part of the legislation is retroactive, we won't be able to get it back. But I think it's a relevant question to be asking: just how much income tax revenue did we lose as a result of not having addressed this earlier?

There was reference from the mover of the bill a minute ago about the Alberta royalty tax credit and the royalty credit for individuals and trusts being eliminated. As a result of that, an additional $111 million is to be realized by the Alberta Treasury. Of course, this comes as a result of pressure from not only the Official Opposition but others to see some sort of a royalty review, something we've been asking for for years, Mr. Speaker. Last September we finally had a little bit of movement on that.

As was indicated by the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon a minute ago, this program really had run its course, and the goals of it were accomplished some time ago, I would argue years ago. It's probably long overdue that those two programs were eliminated. Again, I think it would be fair to ask: how much revenue might the government have realized if we had dealt with two particular tax credits earlier? A fair question, again, since we're talking.

I know that members opposite don't like to hear talk of lost billions, but the reality is that there are many examples in the Auditor General's report and the Royalty Review Panel's report of situations where we perhaps could have been and, arguably, should have been collecting more. When I look at this piece of legislation, it causes me to believe that, in fact, there's even more money that has been left on the table. It's good, I would argue, that we're doing this now, but certainly some question as to why we didn't do it sooner.

One thing I note here: that announcement was made on the 29th of September last year, with the changes to come into effect December 31 or January 1 of this year. So, basically, Mr. Speaker, three months' notice to industry for changes in the royalty regulations that would realize us additional dollars as opposed to the 14 months that are being allowed industry for the changes that the Premier announced two weeks ago. I think it's probably valid to point out as well a comment that my colleague from Calgary-Currie made yesterday, that renters in this province would love to have the opportunity to have a 14-month notice of a rent increase as opposed to the three months that they get now.

In regard to those two tax credits being eliminated, I guess the other comment that I would like to make is just this. Obviously, somebody in the Department of Finance, some public servant, that was doing their job and working diligently to make sure that Albertans collected their fair share of revenue from corporate income tax, made a recommendation to the minister, and the minister took that advice and brought it forward in legislation. Clearly, there are many of us on this side of the House and many Albertans across the province who wish that the Minister of Energy had taken the same steps and followed the advice of his hard-working civil servants when they made similar recommendations to him in regard to collecting our fair share of oil and gas revenues.

Now, in talking about the general antiavoidance rule, the first question that springs to mind immediately, of course – and it wasn't addressed by the comments made by the mover of the bill – is that if these changes were first brought in by the federal government in 1988, a full 19 years ago, and we're now in 2007 and the Alberta government is finally moving to bring our legislation in line with changes that were made federally 19 years ago, what took so long? Why are we here today? Why was this not dealt with some time ago. I know that it's described as an inadvertent situation; nevertheless, it's a question that I think bears asking. I hope that perhaps we can have an answer from the mover of the bill or the Finance minister when we get to the committee stage, Mr. Speaker.

An obvious follow-up to that question, then, would be: is there going to be any attempt made to collect the monies owing as a result of the retroactivity? If we're now making this bill retroactive to 1988, are we going to be investigating to see whether or not, in fact, there would be money that would be owing from 1988 and subsequent years? What steps would the government be taking to chase some of those dollars down? How many dollars are we talking about, quite frankly? That's something that's not addressed in the government press release and wasn't addressed by the mover of the bill. So, again, questions that I think would be relevant to ask on behalf of Alberta taxpayers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to give credit where credit is due. Once again the Finance minister has been very accommodating with the Official Opposition in terms of supplying the so-called three-column document to us in preparation for debating this bill. So I'm going to reference that a little bit, and if it's appropriate, I can certainly table copies of that as well. I'm not sure if that's required, but if you wish, I could certainly do that.

Section 4 of the document refers to the nonresident withholding tax. A situation had developed where apparently the nonresident withholding tax is paid to the federal government and not shared amongst the provinces. In other words, the federal government collects this money; Alberta sees no part of it. Yet apparently the legislation as it sits now allowed an inappropriate exemption to be used in terms of calculating the amount of tax that was payable in Alberta to the Alberta government. I think that most reasonable people would certainly agree that that's not right. If we're not gaining anything in the way of tax revenue, why would we allow that withholding tax that's paid to the federal government to be used as part of the calculation in terms of how much tax is going to be payable in our province?

I think that this is, once again, a change that's overdue and brings us up to par with other provinces. Again, the question would be, Mr. Speaker: how much of that tax revenue that we should have been collecting has been forgone over the years in that we didn't change this particular loophole?

Again, I think kudos to the staff at Alberta Finance for bringing it forward and kudos to the minister for recognizing that the government hasn't been collecting its fair share of taxation and doing something about it, again in stark contrast to the situation that we discussed yesterday afternoon with the Department of Energy and the minister's refusal to hear the many voices that were coming at him from his own civil service in terms of the opportunity and, in fact, I would argue, the desperate need to collect a fair share of royalties for us.

Now, that same document in section 5 talks about a situation where – you'll just have to bear with me for a second, Mr. Speaker, while I find the relevant piece of paper. The same document talks about corporations allocating taxable income to Alberta using rules contained in federal regulations and adopted by Alberta and refers to a two-factor approach, "allocating taxable income based on salaries and wages, and gross revenue, paid or earned through permanent establishments in the province over total salaries and wages and total gross revenue." A rather lengthy explanation of the situation.

I have a question, and I'm hoping that the mover of the bill can answer this for me. The act contemplates moving to a single-factor approach that "will be used for corporations subject to special rules when one of the factors is nil." The question I would have and, again, am hoping that we might have an answer to when we move to the committee stage is whether or not moving to a single-factor approach might in fact be an oversimplification of the rules and thus allow even more loopholes to come into play. I'm just curious – concerned, I suppose, rather than curious – that we don't do that by oversimplifying the rules, that by making it easier for corporations to use this section, we're not somehow opening a loophole for them.

I guess the last comment on that same page discusses moving the income allocation rules to the regulations. I didn't have a chance to quiz the member who moved the bill. I'm not sure whether or not that is actually contemplating moving legislation into regulation. If it is, of course, then that is a concern of mine that I've expressed many times in this House, and I will continue to do so. But I was unclear, having read the press release from the government and that document, whether or not, in fact, that's what we were contemplating there.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, as I said, it's a bill that certainly doesn't seem to be terribly controversial. It's a bill that has the support of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. I haven't had a lot of people expressing concern to me otherwise. It certainly does give some opportunity to small business to pay a little less tax although certainly shareholders of those small businesses will pay a little more in the way of a dividend tax. But I guess that it might ultimately be more or less revenue neutral. I'm not sure.

Certainly, I would like to reiterate my concern that the Energy minister doesn't appear to follow the same practices that his colleague the Minister of Finance does in terms of paying close heed to the recommendations that come out of the department in terms of making sure that we collect our fair share.

Lastly, I just want to remind this House and all Albertans that the one tax that we would be looking for a reduction in, in fact an elimination of – certainly, if I were to be so honoured as to serve this province as the Finance minister, one of the very first things I would do would be to eliminate the health care premium tax, Mr. Speaker. I hear some chortling going on on the other side, but I think that's just an example of the arrogance that we see when a government has been in power for 36 years. There's some presumption from the Minister of Education, in particular, that that government is going to be in place for another 36 years. I'm going to suggest that that's exactly the kind of attitude that is rubbing many people in this province the wrong way: thinking that it's by divine right that he's a minister of the government in this province as opposed to, literally, a democratic process that allows him to be there.

The Speaker: Do I hear a point of order?

The hon. minister on a point of order.

Point of Order

Imputing Motives

Mr. Horner: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. The member under 23(h), (i), and (j) of Standing Orders is imputing a whole raft of things to hon. members on this side of the House as to what we may think are our rights or anything else. We hold very, very highly the honour that citizens of Alberta have placed in us by election to this House, by election to the government, and by choice of the Executive Council to sit and to serve Albertans. He's imputing false motives upon how we got here and why we're here. I would ask the hon. member to not only retract the statements but also to tone it down.

The Speaker: On this point of order the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, first of all I was referencing the Minister of Education, not the other ministers in the government. I specifically said that, and if you would like to review Hansard, you'll see that I was specifically referencing the Minister of Education, who, in fact, chortled openly when I suggested that I would be honoured to some day have the opportunity to serve this province as the Minister of Finance. Then I said that it seems to be his thinking for some reason that by divine right he serves in this role and not at the pleasure of either the electorate of this province or, for that matter, Executive Council or the Premier or whoever else may have asked him to do so. I would certainly argue that I was not referencing the cabinet members in general, the Executive Council, but one individual who was heckling me as I was speaking.

The Speaker: Well, herein lies the dilemma. If hon. members would focus on the subject matter and not sway and not gaze into the future and call upon the stars for intervention and if others would listen attentively and not throw barbs back and forth, we wouldn't have all of this.

Now, it doesn't take away from the speaking time of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. He still has three minutes and 35 seconds to proceed. We will proceed, and we'll ask everybody to basically conduct themselves with the highest level of decorum possible.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much for that guidance, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Miller: I will continue to do a little bit of stargazing on the track that I was on and just simply say that an Alberta Liberal government has always said and certainly would make it a priority to eliminate the health care premium tax. This would be of great benefit to individuals in this province who currently pay it, including members of this Assembly, who pay, I believe, half of the premium tax – the Legislative Assembly is kind enough to pay the other half – and clearly, Mr. Speaker, of tremendous benefit to small business in this province. Having been and still serving as a small business owner myself and, certainly, having consulted with many small business owners over my time in this Legislature, it is very clear that this is an onerous tax that places an extra burden on small business. If we want to do something for small business in the way of amending the Income Tax Act, this would be a great place to start, in my mind: to eliminate that health care premium tax and give not only individuals in the province but certainly all small businesses in the province a tremendous tax break.

Members will know that we're one of only three provinces in the country that even collect a health care premium tax. As I say, it places a tremendous burden on small business to buck up and pay that tax for the employees. In fact, a number of small businesses that I know offer that as some incentive for employees because of the fact that they can't afford a full-blown health care plan, and the one thing that they can do is pay that tax on behalf of their employees. But, again, it is a burden on small business, and it is certainly something that we could do to show small business that we're serious about helping them out and promoting their causes and their needs in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I think my time is almost up. I'll be happy to listen to the comments of others. I do look forward to having the opportunity, hopefully, to hear some response to the questions and concerns I've raised when we get to committee and, certainly, to explore in more depth some of the issues that I've raised in my talk this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be mercifully short and just say that certainly we will support this bill. It makes absolute good sense, but it does raise some concerns. As I understand it, the RTC was implemented back in 1974 as a response to the federal government tax structure making Crown royalties nondeductible for tax purposes. I notice it seems to be growing. There seemed to be about $82 million refunded back during the 2004 fiscal year, and that goes up. I'll come to that.

I guess I'm wondering why it was that there was this confusion. The Auditor General seems to have been the person that started and put this in the realm. It was the Auditor General's report in 2003-2004 that recommended that the RTC be revisited as the federal regulations had reversed the 1974 decision, making the RTC invalid. Well, it's a few years later, and we're getting around to dealing with this. Mr. Speaker, I think if I look at it, it's probably $82 million going up to, from the press release, $111 million. That's quite a chunk of cash that we probably lost during that period of time. I think what's worrisome about that is that we tie that in to the whole debate about the royalties. It's the Auditor General, again, that's brought forward a report that this time the government seems to sort of ignore or say it is wrong. How can the Auditor General be correct here and then so wrong later on?

I think it goes to the confusion when we deal with the oil industry of how we're dealing with them, whether it be through the ARTC or how we deal with them in royalties and the rest of it. There seems to be a lot of confusion within the department about collecting: what should we collect within the rules that we're playing by, and then are we collecting enough? There is this discussion going on.

Again, this is a good bill. It seems like if it was $82 million that was refunded back in 2004, 2005 would be another $111 million, and I notice that it's only retroactive to the beginning of 2007. I expect that's all you can do because retroactive legislation would probably end up in the courts, Mr. Speaker. I certainly think it is a step in the right direction, but it does lead me to question, as I say, the confusion here within the Energy department about collecting taxes or royalties or whatever. One only has to wonder how much more money the treasury has lost.

In saying that, Mr. Speaker, this is certainly a step in the right direction. If it's $111 million, as said, in the tax – that was 2005-2006 – that's significant cash. I expect that would only go up, so it's a little late, but better late than never. Certainly, we in the NDP opposition will quickly support this bill and get on with it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, then, to participate in the debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, as my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford, support Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, because it, as has been said – and I won't repeat – brings into alignment our Alberta provincial tax structure with the federal tax structure. Whether or not it goes back to 1988 and should have been resolved back then, this is one case when, you know, credit to the Ministry of Finance. They're on it. If they would get similarly onto other areas, such as ending homelessness and providing incentives for students, this would be wonderful.

When it comes down to it, there's only one taxpayer, and that taxpayer is subject to a whole variety of taxes, both open and covert. In this particular case what we're doing by increasing the credit for small business is that we're investing in an entrepreneurial spirit, and that's part of where Alberta has been over the years. We've gone through a variety of values, primarily of an agrarian nature, forestry associated. For a long part of Alberta's development – and it's still the case right now – we've been dependent on resources: the resources of wood, the resources of the soil, the underground resources of oil and gas.

But Alberta has been dependent on primarily its God-given natural nonrenewable resources of oil and gas far too long. By supporting small business in 2007, at least we're starting to begin the diversification process that will get us beyond our dependency on nonrenewable resources. Bill 36, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, recognizes a belief that has been long held by Alberta provincial Liberals: that Alberta's people are our most important resource, and by giving businesses a credit, a support, we recognize the valuable contributions that they make to this economy.

It is rather sad that in the Alberta economy there is such a tremendous dependency on a resource which in the conventional terms of oil and gas has passed its peak. We have the good fortune of years of coal that, hopefully, can be environmentally harvested, gasified, with the CO₂ and other emissions associated sequestered. But we know that even with the oil sands and even with the coal the effect on our environment of recovering these nonrenewable resources can be very devastating. We know that the amount of water that is used to extract these resources is of great concern because without the water, obviously, nothing else in this province is going to go forward.

Bill 36, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act recognizes that we must come up with other ways of creating wealth in this province. What concerns me is that after the conventional oil and gas are sort of – if we had a one-trick pony, then this would be what I could consider a one-trick ass, or donkey, if there are sensibilities in the room. That's the idea: our great dependency for our general revenue on VLTs, slots, gambling in general, of which only 3 per cent is directed for prevention through the small amount that goes to AADAC. Again, by recognizing the contributions of the small-business individual and the number of people who are employed in small business, we're recognizing that Alberta is a place where the little man and the little woman can make a go of it. With this Bill 36 we're supporting their entrepreneurial spirit. We're supporting their desire to make a mark in Alberta, which will benefit us all through the taxes, obviously, that are collected.

We're recognizing, too, for the small business entrepreneur that they are paying a considerable tax for the privilege of doing business in Alberta, not only to the province but to the federal government. Harmonizing our tax structure will take at least some of the time out of the process in terms of calculating the tax and will encourage other individuals to set up shop in Alberta.

Of course, one of the problems of setting up shop in Alberta at this time is the labour. The government in it's wisdom or lack thereof has tried to deal with the labour shortage by bringing in – I think the figure is now approaching 60,000 – temporary foreign workers. Those aren't the type of people that are going to be employed, obviously, by the definition "temporary foreign workers," for any length of time in the small businesses of Alberta.

One of the aspects in terms of investment – and we'll talk more about this when we talk about Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007 – is the idea of investing in the training, whether it's vocational or academic, to provide the sort of trained-in-Alberta workers that will be the future small-business proprietors and work within those companies.

We have a vast untapped natural resource situated in the north, in central Alberta, and in the south, and that's our First Nations people. We know, for example, that shortly Edmonton will outpace Winnipeg as having the greatest number of First Nations people living off-reserve. This provides us with a wonderful opportunity of investing and supporting, providing the education, providing the social framework to support First Nations in their business endeavours.

Of course, Fort McMurray is one large evidence of very successful First Nations and Métis business. Whether it's owning the hotel that we had the pleasure of staying in, whether it's providing services, whether it's providing the heavy machinery, there is a great opportunity. Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, reaches out to all Albertans in supporting the promotion of small businesses.

We're fortunate in Alberta in many ways. We have among the best educated population. I have the great honour to represent Calgary-Varsity, which has the highest number of postsecondary graduates, so I know very well the value of investing in people and education and supporting their endeavours, whether it be in small business, whether through academic pursuits, areas in the environment, and so on.

Alberta, as I say, in many ways has so many opportunities beyond just our nonrenewable resources. We have to recognize the value that we have in Alberta, the value that our people bring to it, and we also have to recognize the fact that this Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, simplifies the tax collection process.

My esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford, in talking about taxes and how we could provide breaks for Albertans, brought up the notion that has been brought forward by Scott Hennig of the taxpayers association and, before him, Jason Kenney, who was also connected with the taxpayers association, of the unfair tax, the sort of hidden tax, and that's our health care premium.

If we wanted to make a major change not only for small businesses but for large businesses, for school boards, government, and so on, I realize that the income we would lose approaches a billion dollars, but the health tax – and that's what it is. It has nothing to do with health provisions. It simply disappears into the general revenue black hole. That tax does not recognize wealth. It doesn't recognize ability to pay to any great extent. There are seniors on fixed incomes who are excused. People below the poverty line are excused. But those who are struggling to pay their rents, to put bread on their table are adversely affected by this health care tax.

I look forward to the point in this House where the government will recognize what small-business associations have pointed out, what professional associations have pointed out, this cost to business of providing employee benefits to those that are fortunate enough to retain their employees through assisting with the paying of the Alberta health premium tax. When we get rid of this, this will be another major step for Albertans in general in having as a family over a thousand dollars to reinvest in our economy, $1,000 less that they would have to pay on taxes, and an opportunity to get out from under that, of all taxes, most unfair tax burden.

In closing, I commend the government on Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007. The final comment would be: better late than never.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to close debate.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would encourage all members to support the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a second time]

Bill 35

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would sheepishly stand up and remind the House that I have commented on the provisions of Bill 35 already, which is on record in Hansard. I don't know. I look to you for some direction. If you'd like, I could go through my remarks again, or whether they would suffice.

The Acting Speaker: You can just move the bill.

Mr. Rogers: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to move second reading of Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for saving me the hassle of trying to find the correct citation in the Standing Orders that would have prevented him from speaking to the bill again since he's already done so once.

Mr. Speaker, as I acknowledged earlier, this Bill 35, the Personal Income Tax Amendment act, 2007, and Bill 36, which we dealt with a minute ago, are in many respects parallel bills, accomplishing somewhat the same objectives on both the personal tax side and the corporate tax side. I think it's interesting to note, however, when we talk about personal taxes paid in this province, that government's own projections this year show $7.318 billion projected to be collected by the Alberta government in personal income tax, yet on the corporate side $3.126 billion, or 22.2 per cent from corporate tax, yet 52 per cent of the total tax take coming from individuals.

The argument has been made before – and I think would be safe to make it again – that individuals perhaps bear more than their fair share of the load of income tax that's collected in this province. It would I think have been a good thing if we went a little further with this income tax amendment act, perhaps raising thresholds once again for individuals in the province or somehow making things a little more equitable for them.

Once again, we talked earlier about the health care premium tax and what a great opportunity this would have been for the government to help out individuals who end up paying that tax either partially or wholly themselves, you know, whether they're self-employed or have an employer who doesn't cover all or part of that cost. This would have been a great opportunity, as my colleague from Calgary-Varsity mentioned a minute ago, to save families anywhere up to a thousand dollars a year, put that money back in their pockets. This is a government that argues that the individual knows best what to do with that money and that by having it in the economy as opposed to in government coffers, that actually increases economic activity. If the government truly believes all of that, then this is an opportunity lost, Mr. Speaker, and I think that's unfortunate.

I'm just going to go back for a second and talk about the personal tax versus corporate income tax. The reason I want to do that is because we talked a minute ago about corporate income tax and particularly making some accommodation for small business. I note that this year small business is projected to pay $407 million in income tax, which is only a small percentage, I suppose, of the overall take. But, again, when you look at the number of large, large corporations that are operated in this province and the fact that they're paying only a fraction of what individuals pay, I think it would be fair to say that even a greater recognition of that inequity for the personal income tax payer might be in order.

We know as well from the last number of quarterly updates we've had that the province is taking ever more personal income tax than their own projections show. I expect that later this month, when we have the second-quarter update, that will once again be true. Again, sort of an opportunity lost, I believe, in terms of recognizing the individual taxpayer and not having given them a little more opportunity to save some money.

Now, this Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, also discusses the medical expense credit. Currently that credit is $5,000,

Mr. Speaker. It's being moved to $10,000 and retroactive to January 1 of 2005, which is a good thing for those people who found themselves in the unfortunate circumstance where they might have been applying for that credit. Unfortunately, I don't think that we can give an awful lot of credit to the government because this is actually being done to parallel federal legislation. While I'm glad that we're doing it, it would appear to me that, in fact, the federal government led the way on that. Boy, I think if we go back to January 1, 2005, when that federal legislation took effect, that would mean that it was actually a Liberal government in Ottawa that put that increased tax credit in there for taxpayers. That's interesting as well, I suppose.

Anyway, the notes that were supplied to me by the Finance department indicate, as I said, that this particular medical expense credit being increased to $10,000 parallels changes that are made to federal legislation and that that is actually required by the tax collection agreement between the province of Alberta and the federal government.

Then there's a note that says that Alberta indexes most credits in the personal income tax system. Alberta indexes most credits in the personal income tax system. As someone who's standing before you today, Mr. Speaker, and before all Albertans defending the Alberta taxpayer, the obvious question is: why do we only index most credits in the personal income tax system and not all? I'll be curious to hear whether or not the mover of the bill or the Finance minister can provide us with some explanation as to which credits in the system are not indexed and what the explanation might be for not extending that courtesy to taxpayers when it comes to every credit in the system.

Now, the disability tax credit: there have been some changes there. Certainly, a little tweaking of the words. We're changing the wording "severe and prolonged mental or physical impairment" to read "severe and prolonged impairments in physical or mental functions." Certainly, those that I've discussed this bill with don't have any concern with that. It looks like it might actually, you know, give a little more flexibility in terms of allowing credits to take place. We're amending the bill to allow physiotherapists to certify a marked restriction in walking for the purposes of determining eligibility for the credit.

Particularly important, I think, section 13 of the bill amends the legislation to allow the credit where there are cumulative effects of multiple restrictions. So where under the current legislation perhaps a person may have an affliction that in and of itself wouldn't allow the tax credit to kick in, if you look at cumulative effects of that and other afflictions, under the new legislation they would be eligible for the tax credit. Again, that's a good thing. But again, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately it's actually coming on the heels of federal legislation that did just that. Our tax collection agreement with the federal government mandates that we parallel our legislation with theirs, so I think, really, the credit is due to the federal government.

There is also an adoption expense credit for the first time, Mr. Speaker, effective January 1, 2005. Again, credits go to the Finance minister for making this retroactive to January 1, 2005. A permanent, nonrefundable adoption credit of the lesser of $10,000 or the total adoption expenses. This is wonderful news. This one, apparently, is the brainstorm of the Alberta Department of Finance. It is paralleling federal legislation, but it's not required under the tax collection agreement. This is something that we're doing because it's the right thing to do, not because the tax collection agreement says that we have to do it. I applaud the minister for taking that step.

One of the things that we know there has been an awful lot of discussion in this House on, particularly my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, who serves as the shadow minister for Children's Services, is the need to increase the number of families that are looking to adopt children, are willing to adopt children. If allowing them a credit of up to $10,000 to deal with some of the expenses that they face in doing so will help in that process, Mr. Speaker, then I would argue that that's a good thing. Again, as I say, apparently something that wasn't required under the current legislation but a recognition, the federal government having made the move, that that was a good thing, and we're extending the same opportunity when calculating Alberta tax payable. That's fine.

The general anti-avoidance rule. Again, this is parallel to what was discussed when we were talking about the corporate income tax amendment. The one thing that I do note is that although we discussed the fact that this is retroactive to 1988, apparently the first actual court case that dealt with this was in 2005. Up until that time it's apparent that there were not any cases that were relevant to Alberta's tax collection system. So I may have just answered my own question, when I asked during debate on Bill 36 how much money might have been forgone over the years 1988 to the present. At least it would appear that from 1988 to 2005 we didn't necessarily lose any money.

Then my question could be amended to say: what about since 2005, when that court case took place? Have there been any examples of companies that have avoided paying Alberta income tax since 2005? As I asked before, I would ask again whether or not we're taking steps to determine how much money might have been forgone and whether or not we're taking any steps to try to retrieve any of that money.

Also, Mr. Speaker – it was referenced by the mover in his initial comments – an increase in monthly education expense claims for students; $400 per full-time student is going to be increased to a $600 expense. For part-time students $120 is going to $180.

I have long been a proponent of not just helping out students but in particular of promoting lifelong learning. It's something that is near and dear to the hearts of the Official Opposition. Our leader has talked in this House many times about the opportunity we have right now, with the incredible natural resource revenues and the wealth that they're bringing to this province, to extend our postsecondary institutions to rival world-class institutions from around the world. Certainly, that's a major part of the policy platform that we ran on in the last provincial election and will undoubtedly be a major part of our policy platform when the next election comes around. We see here where there's some recognition by the government that, in fact, part-time and full-time students are facing higher expenses than ever before, and we have to recognize that by giving them a little more expense claims on their income tax calculations.

I asked earlier why we don't automatically index every tax credit in the system, and maybe this is one that should be indexed to inflation and doesn't appear to be currently. So I would ask either the mover of the bill or the Finance minister if they've contemplated indexing not just that, but we talked a minute ago about the $10,000 eligible adoption expense and the $10,000 limit for medical expenses. Why are we not indexing those automatically so that we don't necessarily have to come back into this Assembly every year and deal with an amending piece of legislation?

It would make perfect sense and particularly in this overheated economy right now, Mr. Speaker, where we know that inflation is running somewhere between 5 and 7 per cent in Alberta. Why would we not automatically be indexing these to inflation and thereby giving recognition to those that are dealing with caregiver expenses or those that are attending postsecondary education or those that are dealing with adoption expenses? Automatically extend to them some inflation protection through indexation of these various credits that they can apply for. Perhaps that's an oversimplification of our income tax system, but it would make perfect sense to me. As I say, I'll be curious to hear some response to those questions from either the mover of the bill or the Finance minister.

I know there are other speakers that would like to have the opportunity to comment on the Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, Mr. Speaker, and I'm happy to cede the floor and look forward to the opportunity to explore in more detail some of those questions when we get to the committee stage.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, when we look at Bill 35 and we talk about the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, one might say: boy, there are going to be some really major changes here; maybe they're going to get rid of the flat tax and we'd look at medicare premiums and all those sorts of things. But in saying that, I'd just like to take a look at a couple of points in this bill.

The government announced earlier this year that it would increase the tax credits. They've done that with increases for charitable donations, I believe, from 10 per cent to 21 per cent. I have no objection to this, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what worries me more about this is that charities or nonprofits are now expected to do more and more and more. Maybe this can help to get some money to them. Things that used to be done by the government are now being shifted onto them. We've had this discussion, again, in the Legislature. I think the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford mentioned it. At the same time that we're expecting them to do more and more and more, the salaries and even the recent announcement are not going to cut it. We're expecting them to do more and more and more, and there's less and less staff.

I expect that this is the government's attempt to say: well, maybe we can get a few more dollars out if we increase the tax credit. Maybe they can. For that reason I would support it, but I'd really question where we're going with this, Mr. Speaker. This seems to be sort of the Americanization of everything, that we're going to have, you know, the private sector deal with all of the social problems that rightfully, I think, belong with government. But in saying that, I'm certainly not going to say that we shouldn't allow this tax credit to go on.

Mr. Speaker, the bill tightens the wording on credits for mental and physical impairments. I'm not quite sure what this means, stating that the handicap would have to have "a marked restriction in the ability to perform a basic activity." Now, I take it that they've changed this wording. Are there some problems that have developed with the previous way we described it? I hate to do this, but is this a way to sort of cut some people off that maybe were getting funding before? If that's not the case, I would hope that the government would tell us why this change is necessary.

The bill adds a section that allows for deductions to be passed on adoption expenses. I believe it's up to $10,000. We will support this, but again I wonder: is part of this problem that we, you know, try to get adoptions? That's a good thing, but I notice that the foster care that we have in the province right now is like the other organizations. They can't get enough people. Perhaps this is a way to try to deal with it. Again, I think that the problem is much deeper than this. If this gets some kids adopted, that's good, but I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the whole problems in foster care are not going to be solved by this. In saying that, it's not a bad thing, and we will certainly support it.

The bill adds a section that clarifies the notion of tax avoidance.

Mr. Speaker, the bill itself is probably, you know, okay, but I don't think it's going to solve the serious problems that I've been talking about. In the meantime we could have a major debate – and I won't do that – about, as I say, the role of flat tax and the unfair taxation system in the province, but that would be stretching this particular bill, I think, and probably not worth while at this point.

Just in conclusion, we in the NDP opposition will certainly support the bill because it probably does some good and no harm. That's the reason we would support it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak, I think rather briefly, to Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no.

Mr. Taylor: My colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar is urging me to go on and on, but I really don't have that much to say. I'll try and get to the point, stick on topic, and sit down, make room for other speakers.

Mr. Rodney: Brief.

Mr. Taylor: Perhaps my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed would like to get up and contribute to the debate as well.

A couple of points, really, that I wanted to make. First, on the section that allows for greater charitable claim, which when you put it together with the federal will take the amount up to 50 per cent deductible: good idea, I think. I support it in principle. Having said that, of course, it's not my preferred option to download even more of what we see in the Alberta Liberal caucus as responsibility for the province to look after the needs of our population and look out for our population and their well-being. But you can't get around the argument that if there's an ideological predisposition to do that, it certainly does help to encourage the private sector and philanthropists to step up to the plate and fund charitable programs and charitable initiatives.

So I think this is a good idea as far as it goes, and I would acknowledge it probably as far as you can go with an amendment like this first time out. But I would encourage that going forward, after we have dealt with Bill 35, we look at the possibility of perhaps allowing charitable donations to be 100 per cent tax deductible. If they are going to support charities and causes that under the income tax laws of Canada and Alberta are duly recognized as good works and good programs, then why not encourage people to donate as much as they possibly can by making 100 per cent of those donations tax deductible?

I like what's being done here in terms of increasing the amounts on postsecondary education in terms of the education expense claim there. I think, as my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford said, it acknowledges the ever-increasing cost of postsecondary education, and it's time we did that.

There's one other thing that I would like to get on the record, Mr. Speaker. It is not in this bill, but I'm going to take the opportunity for debate in principle on this bill to put it on the record and suggest that it is something that as a province we very much do need to be looking at doing sooner rather than later. It's a bit difficult because, you know, were we the federal government, there would be an obvious avenue to travel on what I'm about to suggest, and that's a capital gains tax exemption. But I'm going to suggest that we in the province of Alberta, as a way to incent the construction, the development of affordable housing to deal with what I believe is a very real crisis in many, many communities across this province, look at ways to make the donation of privately owned land for the construction of affordable housing tax deductible.

Now, you know, if we were at the federal level, there would be a model for this. We could simply look at what the feds do when land is donated for ecological or environmental purposes, donated as land or donated as a conservation easement through organizations like the Nature Conservancy of Canada, that sort of thing. There is a waiving of capital gains when that happens. You can't do that at the federal level when you're donating land for affordable housing because it's taxed as though you had sold the land and realized the capital gains. Perhaps my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford can correct me if I'm wrong, but my understanding is that we obviously cannot approach this through capital gains.

I wonder if we could get creative about it. We can and we seemingly do get quite creative about tax credits and eligible expense claims, that sort of thing, under provincial personal income tax rules. I wonder if there's a way that we could address that and provide some sort of credit – I don't know what it would be, Mr. Speaker – that would acknowledge that a property owner, whether that be an individual or a corporation, has donated land to a recognized land trust for the sole purpose of having it used for development of affordable housing.

With that, I will take my seat and let others take part in the debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's a saying that the only certainties in life are death and taxes, and Bill 35 attempts to take some of the pain out of those taxes, as did Bill 36, by harmonizing the in-our-pockets nature of both the provincial government and the federal government. The greatest difficulty in coming up with a tax structure is getting the balance right. You have to have a tax rate that not only maintains but provides services without discouraging investment and entrepreneurship. Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, attempts to strike that balance.

To take sort of a little bit of a satirical look and not to take away from the religious intent, with Bill 35 we have a case of the government giveth and the government taketh away, and I'll leave the blessed portion out. What is happening, especially at the postsecondary level, is that students are getting a bit of a tax break, but that tax break is rapidly eaten up by their increase in tuition costs. I believe that in Alberta we have the second-highest tuition costs in the country, and that, of course, is a concern.

Now, in previous years there was a sheltering. One of Ralph Klein's most thoughtful statements was that he told students that if they received an increase in their tuition, bring it to the government and the government would cover the difference in that cost. Well, that protection left. Part of the reason that that protection for students left was the introduction of Bill 40, which took the right to discuss to what extent tuition should either be raised or lowered out of the discussions of the Legislature and put it into regulation, which became at the whim of the minister of advanced education at the time. Now, we have the good fortune at this moment to have an enlightened minister of advanced education, and I'm appreciative of that fact, but no matter how enlightened the individual is, the decision to raise tuition shouldn't be left to any single individual or the employees of their department.

Other esteemed colleagues, both Calgary-Currie and Edmonton-Rutherford and credit to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, indicated the charitable donation aspect, which has been somewhat left out of Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007. My colleague from Calgary-Currie raised a concern that Larry Simpson of the Nature Conservancy raised. That concern was that in order to promote the donation of land by private individuals, it would be wonderful if the government would recognize the value of those land donations and recompense the families for having made such philanthropic generosity with a tax credit. Likewise, the philanthropy of individuals, whether it's million-dollar endowments to universities and so on, needs to be recognized to a greater degree.

I would like to see just for the average Albertan some kind of encouragement when it comes to making charitable donations so that it doesn't have to be above the $200 mark. There are a number of people who willingly, without any kind of recognition, provide donations, but it would be nice if we lowered that charitable donation ceiling to the point where people who have the least to give but give freely of the little that they have are recognized and compensated.

My colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, briefly at least, uttered the words "flat tax." At some point in this Legislature I think that could be the subject of a very interesting debate. While the flat tax purports to lower taxes in general, the reality of the flat tax is that it's the middle class that basically shares over 80 per cent of that tax burden, whereas a progressive tax, that seems to be more frequently used in other provinces, recognizes that you're taxed on your ability to pay. It seems that in Alberta the more money you make, the less overall you have to pay because of a flat tax rather than a progressive tax, so the people who are making the seven-figure salaries are doing rather well in the Alberta climate. We can say, "Yes, well, they employ people," and so on, but they also have access to services that the majority of Albertans are paying for on their behalf. I would welcome a discussion of the fairness and the burden that a flat tax puts on the majority of the people in the middle class.

The business of taxing students comes up again and again, and of course a tuition increase has the same effect as a tax. Last year I and colleagues attended basically a tuition concern rally at the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology. There were a number of students represented there – I apologize. It was actually the Alberta College of Art and Design where the event took place. I'm going back to 2004 for the rally at SAIT. Student after student, whether they were graduate students or undergraduate students, pointed out how much higher tuition costs are in Alberta and how much less of an opportunity there is to actually, if you can afford to pay the increased tuition, find a seat at a postsecondary institution, whether it be promoting technical, promoting art, or the academic universities and colleges.

What would be of benefit to both the students and to the colleges themselves would be to recognize and support a tax break for the institutions. For example, this past month my colleagues and I attended, again, a rally. It was a rally on affordable housing, but it was directly related to tuition increases. It was found that the majority of the students at Mount Royal were paying well beyond the recommended 30 per cent for housing that this government has suggested is a reasonable amount.

This is where both the students and the universities could receive a tax break if the government did away with the education portion of the property tax, at least for the student residences on campus. If you want to tie the institutions' hands somewhat, whatever money is saved goes towards residence construction. We know, for example, that at the University of Calgary student residences are able to at best house approximately 7.4 per cent of the entire student population. At the University of Alberta it's slightly higher; it's toward 9 per cent. But when we're making responsible income tax or tax amendments, such as Bill 35, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, I would like to see that same sort of creativity applied both to students and to the institutions of higher learning.

We had an opportunity as Public Accounts and as a member of Public Accounts very recently to talk to the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, Mount Royal College, and Grant MacEwan here in Edmonton. They talked about the tremendous backlog in infrastructure. Again, if we could provide less tax on those venerable institutions, they would have more money to invest in infrastructure, programming, and, of course, their student population.

I am hoping what we're seeing in Bill 36 and Bill 35 is the beginning of a creative approach to tax relief in Alberta that can then be applied not only to individuals and small businesses but extending those benefits to institutions of higher learning and providing that seed money in the form of returned taxes or uncollected taxes to support the institutions.

Again, I repeat that Alberta's greatest resource is its people, and whatever we can do, whether it's through the specific lowering of dedicated taxes or providing greater room, that will benefit the province as a whole.

In summary, we have to balance the need for the collection of taxes, which provides predictability and sustainability and provides the level of infrastructure support that we cannot get from nonrenewable energy. When governments dramatically reduce taxes, such as the suggestion of knocking the flat tax down from 10 to 9 per cent, and then find out that in years to come they don't have the general revenue and have to drive the taxes up again, that loss of balance and political opportunism can take a great toll. We know very well that in 1994 basically every individual in a service-providing area, whether it be education or health care or social services, had a tax of 5 per cent added to them by a deduction from their paycheque.

Thank you.

4:00

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening with interest.

An Hon. Member: No way.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I have. I certainly have. And to the hon.

minister in charge of Service Alberta I've also been reading your annual report, and I must say that I'm disappointed to have a good look at your annual report. Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, we will have a time to address that, but certainly I realize that it's not during the debate on Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

When you look at the consolidated financial statements of the government – they've been issued in two volumes this year – we see the direction of personal income tax, not only personal income tax but corporate income tax. We see, for instance, that in the year 2005-06 there was $4.6 billion collected and in 2006-07 there will be $7.6 billion collected, or a $3 billion increase in personal income tax collected. It certainly is refreshing to see that there are some modest attempts being made here at tax relief. This bill is a companion piece for Bill 36, which finally eliminates among other things the Alberta royalty tax credit, which is certainly an interesting tax credit. It's had a long history in this province, and it has been frequently mentioned in various reports of the Auditor General.

When we look at the Alberta royalty tax credit and we do the math on it over a 25-year period from 1982 through to 2007, we see that certainly the taxpayers in this province have been very, very generous to the energy sector. If you add up over that 25-year period, Mr. Speaker, you will see that over $7.1 billion was used to satisfy the Alberta royalty tax credit at the same time that the Auditor General questioned the whole purpose of the tax credit. It may have been necessary back in the early '80s and in some periods of the '90s, when resource prices for natural gas and conventional oil were very low, but to wait until this year to eliminate this program I think was unnecessary. It should have been done much sooner. If you look at this total bill, it's over $7 billion, and that's not the only royalty adjustment program. But, finally, with Bill 36 and now its companion piece Bill 35, we're seeing the end of that.

If anyone has any questions, they can just refer to the Auditor General's reports, and they can see for themselves that the Auditor considered that program not to be of merit, and how this government administered it or didn't administer it – well, that's certainly another question.

With Bill 35 we see this reduction in a tax credit from dividends for small businesses to eliminate inadvertent preferential tax treatment by 2009. We see the increase in the amount claimable for medical expenses for caregivers, from $5,000 to $10,000. Sometimes one would have to question if that is enough and what determined the doubling of that. Why $10,000? Why settle on that? The new adoption expense credit is added. I think that is really a step in the right direction, and the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon is to be commended and thanked for this initiative. The new general antiavoidance rule is added, and of course there are also the increases that hon. members have talked about earlier, the increases in monthly credits for time spent at qualifying educational institutions.

Overall, I think the intent of this bill is good, as is Bill 36, because when you look at Bill 36 and you see a $7 billion-plus royalty tax credit over a 25-year period, certainly we have to acknowledge the generosity of the Alberta taxpayers to the energy sector, and it's time that the same generosity was reflected in our tax policy to those who are personal income tax filers.

Now, at the same time, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to refer hon. members of this Assembly again to the Auditor General's most recent report, volume 1, which I'm sure all the hon. members across the way have read and certainly have thought long and hard about the scathing report on the Department of Energy. The hon. minister in charge of Service Alberta must be very relieved that he's not Minister of Energy because there were a lot of problems in that department. [interjection] I'm sorry?

Mr. Snelgrove: You've got the best one in the world right now.

The Acting Speaker: Through the chair, hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Sorry for that distraction, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] The universe? Yes, everyone in a democracy, hon. member, is entitled to their opinion, and that includes you. But one only has to look at the Department of Energy's conduct as is articulated by the Auditor General to know that there are major problems in that department not only with this minister but with past ministers.

When we look at the Auditor General's report on the government's revenue forecasting systems, I think it is noteworthy that we consider these in the debate on Bill 35. I'm not going to speak specifically to his recommendations regarding corporate income tax forecasts, but I think we should have a look at the personal income tax forecast as described by the Auditor. The Auditor is recommending that "the Department of Finance improve its method for estimating historical personal income growth used to forecast personal income tax revenues." The Auditor goes on to note that the historical personal income growth data may be unreliable.

Now, we know that there is a lot of unreliable data in the Department of Energy. That's a certainty, and I know that government members are very embarrassed by that and that they're ashamed and disappointed, but I think they should have a look at the Auditor's recommendations from other departments as well.

Now, it goes on to say in here, hon. members – and this is from the AG's report, Mr. Speaker:

Statistics Canada produces the personal income growth historical data on a calendar-year basis. Preliminary information on personal income is available for the previous calendar year in April of the following year. Statistics Canada produces revised information in November. Finance uses the November information to develop the budgeted revenue for the next fiscal year. The effect of using this information is as follows:

- In the budget for the year March 31, 2006, Finance forecasted the average income growth to be 5.7%. In preparing the financial statements for the year then ended, Finance revised the average income growth forecasts to 7.8%, based on preliminary income data from Statistics Canada and revised economic projections for 2006. The difference between budget and actual results for the year ended March 31, 2006 is more than $800 million.
- For the year ended March 31, 2007, Finance's forecast of income growth was 6.6%. In preparing the financial statements for the year then ended, Finance revised the forecast to [over 10 per cent].

Ten and a half per cent to be precise, Mr. Speaker.

The difference between budget and results reported in the financial statements is about $1.6 billion.

That's in two years.

Now, perhaps if we were to be a little bit more prudent, we should consider other tax relief for personal income tax filers in this province. The Minister of Service Alberta – I'm delighted to see that I'm putting more good Liberal ideas in his head. I would urge the government to not only stop at the measures that they have initiated in Bill 35 but to consider other measures. Certainly, we have been very generous, as I said, to the energy sector over the years. When I'm talking about the $7 billion Alberta royalty tax credit, I'm not talking about the other $8 billion plus that we've given them in royalty reduction programs. That $8 billion is only from 1992, so that's in a 15-year period. We can conservatively say, Mr. Speaker, that over that period of time we have provided – I'm not going to call it subsidies to the energy industry – tax concessions or royalty concessions in excess of $15 billion. So if we can do it for that group of corporate parties, I think we should consider it for personal income tax filers as well.

One only has to look at the hon. minister's own projections here to see that in 2006-07 personal income tax is going to be in excess of $7.6 billion and corporate income tax is going to be $3.6 billion. So I think it's time for the government to go a little further than these good initiatives that are in Bill 35 and consider other measures to reduce the tax burden for individual Albertans. It's time we gave personal income tax filers more consideration.

In conclusion, I would remind the members opposite, particularly the hon. Minister of Service Alberta, that we have reduced significantly the combined corporate income tax rate for energy companies in Alberta over a significant period of time. I think it's seven years. We have reduced their tax by 13 per cent. The combined income tax rate has gone from 43 per cent to 30 per cent. We have been generous to one group of participants in the economy. Let's consider the others.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments? Any others?

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to close debate.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

Bill 37

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. Well, Mr. Speaker, so much tax cutting has just made me light-headed. We have to turn that around.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to stand on behalf of the Minister of Finance today to speak to Bill 37, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007. Tobacco use is the leading cause of preventable disease, disability, and premature death in Alberta. Every year more than 3,400 Albertans die from tobacco-related causes.

Albertans are accustomed to having the lowest taxes in Canada, but in some cases higher taxes send the right signals. Increasingly, the tobacco tax will help encourage Albertans not to smoke. This is especially the case for young people who are more sensitive to price change. While the Alberta economy has raised incomes, tobacco rates have stayed the same since the last increase in 2002. The disincentive to smoke is not as strong as it once was.

Our primary goal with this piece of legislation is to help discourage smoking. Bill 37 proposes raising tobacco taxes by 16 per cent, $5 on a carton of 200 cigarettes. The tax rate for loose tobacco and cigars will also be raised at the same time to ensure that the tax on all tobacco products is comparable. This is the change that was announced in Budget 2007.

Bill 37 also includes some administrative amendments and ensures that the tobacco tax is consistent with other commodity taxes.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope that the President of the Treasury Board feels better now that he has counterbalanced those massive tax cuts that we discussed with bills 35 and 36 with what would appear to be $90 million in increased taxes for his treasury.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that certainly has the support of the Official Opposition. Anything that we can do to encourage those that smoke now to perhaps consider quitting is something that we would support, and certainly measures taken to encourage young people not to begin smoking are something that we would support. So this bill will have the support of the Official Opposition. But – and the President of the Treasury Board was obviously expecting a but, so I'm happy to provide it for him – incenting through increased taxes, while it may go some measure towards what the government is hoping to accomplish, clearly does not address the bigger issue of smoking and its cost to our economy.

Mr. Speaker, last May 31 in this House, on a day that just happened to be World No Tobacco Day, I asked the minister of health if he could provide us with the numbers. They're startling numbers, absolutely startling numbers. I asked the minister of health what the direct cost to the Alberta treasury was for health care services provided to deal with smoking-related issues: $471 million in direct costs to the health department. The total cost to the economy, according to the government's own figures, $1.296 billion – $1.296 billion, for the those on the other side that are yawning and can't seem to stay awake for this most important discussion, the cost to the Alberta economy due to smoking and smoking-related issues. Those are the government's own numbers. Those are the health minister's own numbers.

The government projects that with the passage of Bill 37, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007, we will collect an extra $90 million in taxes. That should bring us to a total this year of $890 million in tobacco taxes. Now, you have to put all of these numbers in context with each other. So $471 million is the direct cost to the department of health, yet we collect $890 million in tobacco taxes. Those taxes once again disappear into the black hole of general revenue. They're not specifically directed to health care programs or to smoking cessation programs. In fact, Mr. Speaker – and this is perhaps the most disturbing thing of the entire discussion – only $9 million this year is contemplated to be spent on smoking cessation and other tobacco reduction strategies.

So here we are with the government saying that we need $90 million more from those that are smoking to encourage them not to smoke anymore and to encourage young people, who are particularly price sensitive, not to take up the habit, but of that $90 million that we collect, we're investing only $9 million. That's $90 million extra. I'm sorry. It's $890 million, almost $900 million that we're collecting in tax, and we're investing only $9 million of it back into smoking cessation and tobacco reduction strategies. One per cent, Mr. Speaker, of the tax that is collected goes back into programs to help people quit smoking or to help encourage them not to begin. Clearly, this is woefully inadequate.

I think the government should collectively hang their head in shame because this is much more about a cash cow than it is about smoking cessation or encouraging people not to start. If, in fact, they were serious about those initiatives, then they would literally put their money where their mouths are and put some money into smoking cessation programs and tobacco reduction strategies, but that is not happening. Not only is it not happening, but it's pitiful. I'm sure I can't come up with strong enough words. It's beyond disturbing to see that we only put 1 per cent of the tax that we collect back into those programs that are so terribly important in terms of convincing people not to start or to stop partaking in the habit that they're in now. That is just huge, I think, in terms of this overall debate.

While we support the bill – we support the collection of more tax from tobacco, and we certainly support the idea of encouraging people not to start and those that are smoking to consider quitting – really what we're talking about here is a cash cow: more money for the government, more money for ad hoc spending, more money to be spent without any long-term savings plan or any real vision as to where we're going but no real, sincere effort on the part of the government to help with this major burden on our economy and with this major health concern for the people of this province. My head spins: $1.3 billion cost to the economy; $9 million that we spend to try to get people to quit. I just can't believe it.

An Hon. Member: He's light-headed.

Mr. R. Miller: Yeah, now I'm getting light-headed, and it certainly isn't as a result of those major tax cuts that we provided Albertans with a few minutes ago.

A couple of other things caught my eye as I was preparing for today's discussion, Mr. Speaker. I see that the Ontario Campaign for Action on Tobacco has just recently released a study concluding that contraband in Canada – and we're referring to tobacco, of course – is increasing compared to their 2006 study. This study now shows that 22 per cent of cigarettes smoked in Canada are illegal, compared to 16.5 per cent in 2006, so a dramatic increase, a nearly 50 per cent increase in the number of illegal tobacco products that are being consumed in this country as a result of higher taxes, presumably. I think it bears asking the question of the Finance department: if they have any similar studies that would show the breakdown in Alberta. This particular study showed that $449 million in Ontario alone was being lost to contraband tobacco and a total across the country of $1.6 billion per year.

Again, if we're going to talk about forgone revenues and getting our fair share, as we have a lot over the last two days in this Assembly, here is another example of that, I'm sure, as governments continue to increase tobacco taxes. What this study is showing us is that despite, you know, the good intentions of the government in terms of trying to convince people to either quit smoking or not start, in fact, what we might be doing, Mr. Speaker, is simply driving the habit underground and thereby allowing a situation to develop where we're not collecting our fair share of tax. So that would be a question that I'd certainly be looking for more information on from the Treasury Board president or others on that side: if they could provide us with Alberta-specific numbers as to what percentage of cigarettes being smoked in Alberta are illegal and also how much tobacco tax revenue we might be forgoing as a result of that.

Interestingly enough, the same website, Ontario Campaign for Action on Tobacco – and this is not directly related to the tax amendment that's in front of us, but I think it's something that members will find informative and an idea whose time is due in Alberta, as far as I'm concerned. On October 10 of this year Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger of California signed a bill that would make it illegal to smoke in a vehicle if someone under the age of 18 is present, and that bill comes into force in California on January 1 of this coming year, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, if we're going to talk about the negative impacts of smoking on our economy and on our society in general and if we're going to talk about initiatives to try to encourage young people not to smoke, I think one of the best things we could do in that regard is look at the situation where young people are in a confined space and being exposed to second-hand smoke. Clearly, one really good example of that would be the situation where they're in an automobile. So that's something that I would hope that perhaps the health minister would give serious consideration to as we prepare our legislative agenda for the spring.

Now, there is also contemplation in this bill, section 32(7) in particular, that deals with amending the act so that disclosure can be made to anyone of information that

- (a) is readily available,
- (b) is in a summarized or statistical form, and, in theory, at least,
- (c) cannot, directly or indirectly, be associated with or identify a particular person.

This has been contemplated in order to allow a freer exchange of information between police authorities and other entities that might be investigating the contraband that I was referring to a few minutes ago.

On the surface clearly it would be a good thing that we make it easier for these various authorities to exchange information and try to track down that illegal trade of tobacco and make sure not only that it doesn't continue but that governments across the country are able to collect the tax that is due to them, but it certainly does raise some privacy concerns. We've discussed several privacy issues in this House over the last three years that I've been a member, and I would be looking for some assurance from the department or the minister or the mover of the bill that, in fact, there will be safeguards in place so that exactly what is described here is the way that this legislation does unfold, that the only information that is shared would be nonidentifying information in a statistical form and would not either directly or indirectly be associated with the identity of a particular person.

Also, I'd just like to note that the Canadian Taxpayers Federation recently polled their members, and as shocking as it might have been for Albertans to hear that this government actually supports increasing taxes, interestingly enough the Canadian Taxpayers Federation found that 70 per cent of their members who responded to the recent survey also supported this particular tax increase. I think it does show that in the right circumstance a tax increase can be supported by all sides of this House and by all political spectrums. But, again, my biggest concern, Mr. Speaker, is that, in fact, simply raising the taxes that are collected on tobacco and not addressing the much bigger issue is only a baby step in the right direction.

The other thing that I would like to comment on just briefly before we move on is something that I've mentioned many times in this House: the need for some sort of an ethical investing policy. With the new corporation, AIMCO, coming into being, the minister almost seems to have wanted to distance himself from giving any sort of direction to them in terms of where we invest our money. But last year in this Legislature the Minister of Finance conceded that at that point in time we had $57 million directly invested in tobacco companies.

Once again we have the government talking out of both sides of its mouth. On the one hand, they're saying that we have to increase tobacco taxes so that we can encourage people to either quit smoking or not start smoking; on the other hand, the same government and in this case the same minister directly investing $57 million into tobacco companies. That's indefensible. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, but there isn't a person on the other side of the House who could convince me that this is something that we should be doing, and I think most Albertans would agree. If, in fact, you believe that tobacco use is harmful to our economy, to our society, and to our citizens, then how can you possibly defend directly – directly – investing $57 million into those very same tobacco companies?

I hope we'll have the time, Mr. Speaker, to deal with a private member's bill which I have coming up shortly, which will if successfully passed by this Legislature mandate that the Finance minister and by extension AIMCO would thereby divest themselves and never again directly invest in tobacco companies. That's something that I really hope we can move towards.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that earlier in the life of this particular Legislature we had successfully passed an amendment to the – I can't recall the exact name – cancer legacy act or whatever it was called, whereby the government agreed not to directly invest any of that particular money into tobacco companies. Here is a perfect opportunity for the government to do the right thing and put into legislation and thereby give direction to AIMCO that we will not direct any money directly into tobacco companies.

Those are my comments for this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, on Bill 37, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007. I look forward to comments of others and particularly look forward to having the opportunity to deal again with this bill in committee stage.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with pleasure to have a chance to make some comments on Bill 37, the cigarette tax amendment act. Perhaps working backwards from what I had prepared to just reinforce what my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford was just saying, you know, there has to be a certain congruency between different pieces of legislation and intention that our Legislature is putting forward into law here in the province of Alberta just so that one hand might not be doing one thing while the other hand is doing something else but also to have some congruency for the public to see that we have an integrated approach to reducing the use of tobacco here in the province of Alberta.

I certainly want to compliment at the outset the new advertising campaign that has been on television here in the last few weeks in the province of Alberta. The advertisements seem quite hard hitting and compelling, and they are in a tight rotation as well so that people are less likely to be able to ignore them.

I think that an integrated approach is absolutely necessary, but also a unified approach is absolutely necessary. As the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had mentioned, if we are demonstrating that we have, say, for example, an ethical investment policy on tobacco that avoids investing in that very tempting investment – because let's not kid ourselves; the return rate for investing in tobacco and alcohol and gambling is very high. We have to resist that temptation, I believe, in the interests of the larger public interest that we are invested to serve here in the Legislature, which is the health and well-being of the population.

Certainly, it's been said many times, but I'll say it again, that of course we have to pay for the other end of any degree of failure we have in regard to tobacco use in the province of Alberta because that ends up at the doorstep of the health budget. People have to be looked after after they have picked up a debilitating disease or condition as a result of smoking on the other end of our same budget, same tax dollars on the health side. I guess my main point of argument here with Bill 37 is certainly that it is promising and it's a good opportunity for us to increase the tax, but then I just have a couple of comments as to how we might nuance that to make this bill the most effective act possible.

You know, the things that I have been reading about in terms of the price of tobacco and then the corresponding reduction in use of tobacco: there's an interesting equation that happens, and it has a lot to do with the wealth of the population. I read in the newspaper just recently that it's difficult to deter young people from buying tobacco, say, for example, even though the price of a package of cigarettes is over $10 because in our economy these days this is what a young person can earn in less than an hour's work. If that money that they are earning is not for essentials, if they're living at home or, you know, they're having that as disposable income, then even a price of $10 or $12 is not necessarily a deterrent for young people to pick up the habit of purchasing and consuming tobacco.

Tobacco, let's not forget, is an addiction with very well-documented neurochemical costs. High prices don't necessarily stop people from addiction. We see, unfortunately, with other harmful substances such as cocaine or alcohol and whatnot that people will spend their last dollar to feed their addiction. So we don't necessarily have a magical price point that's going to price people out of using tobacco as such. Also, there are studies that show that a 10 per cent hike in prices, for example, might result in a 4 per cent decrease in demand but practically will really only bring up about a 2 per cent reduction in actual smoking prevalence. I don't think this is the kind of target that we want to realize from this bill. Of course we would like to see a better return, considering the damaging effects of tobacco use.

So the best way is to follow through on a taxation bill such as this one but also match it and exceed with better smoking cessation programs. My suggestion, then, is to target this increase of revenue that we would realize as a result of increasing these taxes to specifically target smoking cessation programs for individuals through our health system so that we're taking that money and we're targeting it and aiming it specifically at the thing that we're trying to achieve.

Of course, a smoking tax is, unfortunately, a disproportionate tax to the working poor, people working in lower socioeconomic areas. Certainly, you know, considering the circumstances of people, it's unfortunate that they will spend that last dollar on tobacco. But then, again, we have to target the psychological and physiological root causes of that addiction. As I said before, by targeting the revenues from the cigarette tax amendment act specifically to cessation programs, I feel that we could in fact manage that better, I think.

Certainly, I am encouraged by the focus of this provincial government on tobacco and trying to reduce the percentage of the population that uses tobacco and suffers the ill effects of tobacco. Perhaps by making a couple of small bits of fine tuning to Bill 37, we could realize the goal that we all, I think, share here in the room, and that is to increase the health of our population in the widest possible way by reducing the use of tobacco here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007, is a bill that should be supported, and hopefully it will be supported by all hon. members of this Assembly. We are going to see with this bill increases in tax revenue. Of course this is going to occur because we are increasing the taxes on tobacco. When we look at this closely and we see section 32, which amends communication of information laws to be in line with FOIP and other commodity tax acts, this actually enhances the ability of the government, as I'm understanding this, to transfer information from other governments in Canada and allows people employed in investigating criminal offences to obtain information. I would only assume that that's, again, in light of the Auditor General's recent report and his comments regarding the marketing and the selling of tobacco products on or near First Nations' land.

I think those are, overall, very good initiatives and, as I said before, need to be supported. But we all know the power and the influence of the tobacco industry. We know fully well the lengths that they will go to to lobby and try through those lobbying efforts to influence legislators. Now, one of the outfits that is employed in this is a public relations company called Burson-Marsteller. Burson-Marsteller the tobacco industry, as I understand it, hires to advocate on their behalf. The tobacco industry has a history of opposing government initiatives such as this one with Bill 37, but they always hire, it seems, these public relations firms to do their work for them.

Now, if we look at this Burson-Marsteller, they had a very close relationship with the cigarette maker Philip Morris. As I understand it, they organized the smokers' rights group, the National Smokers Alliance, this NSA, for the tobacco company Philip Morris in the early 1990s. The purpose of the group was to mobilize smokers on behalf of the tobacco industry to protest clean indoor air loss, increase cigarette taxes, and other legislated efforts that would affect cigarette consumption. The smoke-free advocacy organization Americans for Nonsmokers' Rights compiled a report exposing the National Smokers Alliance's links to Philip Morris and showing that Philip Morris funded the National Smokers Alliance with $4 million in seed money.

Philip Morris, as I understand it, was not the only tobacco company that helped support the National Smokers Alliance. In 1997 Brown & Williamson – whoever they are I don't know – donated $500,000 in support of the National Smokers Alliance. Now, this, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to note – and I certainly hope that there's not this sort of influence occurring here in Alberta – is after the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the EPA, ruled in 1993 that second-hand tobacco smoke could be ranked as a group A human carcinogen, the same rating EPA gives to asbestos, radon gas, and vinyl chloride.

Thomas Humber of Burson-Marsteller wrote a memo to Ellen Merlo, senior vice-president of Philip Morris, corporate affairs, urging Philip Morris to put into action a list of strategies to fight public health authorities on the issue of environmental tobacco smoke. Now, I'm getting this from the Internet. What I find troubling about this, Mr. Speaker, is the demonstration of just how far and to what lengths outfits will go to try to influence public policy-makers.

How does this relate to this bill? Well, Mr. Speaker, we look at this Tobacco Tax Amendment Act and we see what the government is trying to do, and I think we should applaud that. But we have in Canada here, as I understand it, a firm called the National Public Relations company. Now, as I understand it, National is also affiliated internationally with the same person, Marsteller network, and National Public Relations is also working in central Alberta.

They're representing the Alberta Electric System Operator. As I understand it, one of the groups they want to meet with is UPTAG. They have been phoning people in central Alberta who have been standing up and speaking out against the 500 kV line that the application for was eventually withdrawn by a regulatory body that was embarrassed by the whole process.

This public relations firm, the same one that's affiliated with the tobacco industry in the U.S., is now operating in central Alberta for AESO. Whether they're trying to smooth over the damage that has been done to the credibility of the whole regulatory process, I don't know, but certainly things remain mysterious as to what their motives are.

An Hon. Member: Mysterious.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Very mysterious.

If this information that I have is true, I cannot understand what a supposedly independent and arm's-length organization such as the Alberta Electric System Operator would have getting an international public relations firm involved in holding meetings with landowners. Now, if the information I've been provided is true and these sources are reliable that indicate that it is an association with the tobacco industry, well, I think we need to have a good long discussion right here on the floor of this Legislative Assembly regarding this because I don't think it's a good way to do business and neither do the good folks in central Alberta who have been contacted by this public relations firm.

When you look at how these public relations firms operate for the tobacco industry, I would urge all hon. members to be very cautious in approving this process as a way of managing or increasing public confidence in what has been a very, very, very poor process for interested people to participate in, and those are the landowners around central Alberta. I'm going to keep my eye on this, certainly. I'm hoping that more people in central Alberta who have been contacted by this public relations firm will hopefully keep me updated on this. It's not a step in the right direction when you look at how the same sorts of organizations have been working for the tobacco industry in America.

Now, the tobacco tax, Mr. Speaker, we are looking at this. We have consulted the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. As I understand it, they support this bill. They conducted an independent poll, and they were certainly supportive of it. The hon. minister talked about the initiative from the Alberta budget 2007, the fiscal plan. I think we should pass this legislation, and hopefully it will help in a small way to reduce cigarette and tobacco consumption in this province, particularly among younger people.

With that, I will conclude my remarks on this bill at this time, but let's make sure that the same sort of measures that took place to try to discredit certain organizations that opposed second-hand smoke laws in America don't show up in central Alberta using the same techniques to try to discredit people who stand up and speak out and try to protect their democratic rights.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Unlike bills 35 and 36, Bill 37 isn't a good example of the adage better late than never.

Had this sin tax increase been legislated earlier, we could potentially have saved lives, hospital bills, and improved the quality of life of Albertans young and old. We know that tobacco is one of the key causes of not only lung diseases but heart disease, and between heart and stroke and diseases of the lungs these are the primary killers of individuals: Albertans, Canadians, the whole world.

We're not going to go into the details there, but I would like to flash back to 2005, and I want to shine a very positive spotlight on the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, a fellow teacher, and that probably has something to do with his enlightened attitude. When he brought forward in 2005 the idea of banning smoking in all public places across the province, that was a truly revolutionary idea. In second reading of that bill it appeared to have gained sufficient momentum that the third reading would just go through and so on, but unfortunately when it came to the Committee of the Whole, the whole concept of saving Albertans from second-hand smoke literally went up in smoke.

That was unfortunate because what has happened since is rather than the province taking a leadership role on banning smoking in public places, it's been the individual cities and municipalities who have outpaced the government in establishing their own legislation.

Again, my hat is off to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who single-handedly came up with a good idea that the opposition supported and, unfortunately, the government didn't see the wisdom of.

Now, what this Bill 37 does is it recognizes that the government has a role in establishing what is the greater good for its population. The arguments against individual rights and, you know, "why should we have to wear a seatbelt?" or "if I want to smoke, too bad for everybody else in the room," and "it's my right as a member of such and such a legion," or "if I want to light up while I'm wearing my oxygen mask, that's my individual right" – obviously, the government decided that with raising this particular tax on tobacco, this was good for everybody.

Now, I'm all for sin taxes, both grammatical and in this case taxing questionable values. I'd like to see the same kind of increase applied to liquor. I would like to see a similar tax increase placed on the revenue that private individuals derive from casinos, from VLTs and slots on their premises; in other words, these activities that have very little benefit to them. You know, let's tax them out of existence and improve the quality of life for individuals, but of course that would be overreaching our government stewardship and responsibility.

Again with a flashback to 2005, my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre came up with a rather revolutionary idea: take the revenue from a sin tax and turn it into a healthy living promotion. The Member for Edmonton-Centre in her bill suggested setting aside $250 million of the then $600 million tax, which would go into health care initiatives. Instead of this money just being perceived as a cash cow, it would actually go into education for healthier living. It would go into financing smoking reduction, helping with student programs, putting more money towards AADAC. Again, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed had the opportunity to take over the responsibility for that area; I'm sure he would have liked to have seen that bill go ahead. By investing, as I say, tobacco money into healthy living, great things could be accomplished.

The member recognized that – you know, she wasn't suggesting that we reward people who have the good fortune of having the genes that allow them to be healthy in the first place. She wasn't suggesting the government pick up the tab for private gym memberships or being on the golf course. She wanted to see this money going into improving our health care delivery system and into preventative health care measures. She recognized the fact that some people, despite their best intentions, based on their genealogical line have problems which are not of their creation.

I also want to recognize, and not dwell on, a point that my esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford brought up, and that's the idea of ethical investment strategies for the heritage trust fund. The government is sending mixed, in quotes, smoke signals by investing in tobacco companies through the heritage trust fund while at the same time raising tobacco taxes. You can't have it both ways. Well, in this case I suppose you can.

Continuing to invest in tobacco is the equivalent of investing in munitions and land mines and so on. We know that smoke kills. It kills first-hand. It kills second-hand. So why would we want to have anything to do with investments in death, basically? Bill 37 recognizes that smoking isn't something that we can just outlaw, but if it's going to exist, at least we can get some derivative benefit from it. I would support, when it comes to discussion, a Bill 38 next year where we say: let's raise it another 16 per cent. The sooner we get rid of tobacco products and the damage that they cause, the better.

I appreciate that the government has brought forward Bill 37. I would encourage them to look at eliminating investments in the heritage trust fund for tobacco. I'd also like to point out, when giving credit where credit is due, that my Edmonton-Centre colleague also introduced legislation, I believe this past spring, outlining and pushing for the banning of power walls, which encourage young people to smoke and take up the negative habit, by removing these displays that entice students as they go into areas. I think that also as part of that proposed legislation there was discussion about taking it out of pharmacies and supposed buildings that promote health products. It was recognized, at least from a Liberal point of view, that you can't have it both ways.

There's no doubt that smoking has no side benefits. If taxing it will get rid of it, then bring on the taxes. Thank you, government, for Bill 37.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I promise to be very brief. [interjections] I thank my hon. colleagues for the warm reception. I appreciate that.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, my previous hat before joining this esteemed Assembly was as a pharmacist. I definitely would like to speak in favour of any measure that would end up reducing tobacco use in this province. Raising taxes is but one measure that is frequently used. I like the fact that by doing this today, should this bill pass, we are going to be the jurisdiction in Canada with the most tax on tobacco products. I am hoping that this would be something that we keep up. We definitely support any measure that would reduce usage in this province.

Eliminating tobacco products from drugstores is something I supported, and it's something the College of Pharmacists supported as well. We have spoken in this House repeatedly about the need to do something like that because you are definitely sending the wrong message when you have tobacco products in a drugstore. We should also look at ways to eliminate tobacco products from all drugstores, regardless of size, in terms of small community stores that are not banner stores, not megascale grocery stores or the multipurpose ones.

Now, in terms of raising tobacco taxes and raising revenues, I would really like to see tobacco taxes put into a health promotion fund or a disease prevention fund rather than seeing these revenues go into the general fund to be spent on whatever the government decides. If we're raising these taxes to make more money in terms of disease prevention or health promotion, that's one thing, but if we're taking this money and putting it towards potholes or other infrastructure projects and so on, I don't think that's the direction we should be going.

Similarly, when we charge health care premiums. You know, health care premiums are not used for disease prevention and health promotion. They are basically a tax that is put into general revenue to be spent on government priorities that are not necessarily health related. I think this is something we need to be alert to and something we need to be discussing in this House.

Now, from my experience as a pharmacist I'm going to tell you something that you are going to likely find very strange, Mr. Speaker. Take Alberta Blue Cross. Alberta Blue Cross has private plans. You know, as an employer or as a business person you can go to Alberta Blue Cross and start a plan for your employees, and you can add your spouse and your employees' spouses and their offspring and their kids, for example, to that plan. But most of these plans are tiered, so if you pay X, you get coverage for X, if you pay Y, you get coverage for Y, and so on. Then we also have public plans. As MLAs we all have Alberta Blue Cross coverage, as civil servants who work within the government have Alberta Blue Cross, and so on and so forth.

We need to be telling an agency like Alberta Blue Cross that it is time to seriously consider covering smoking cessation aids. You think about the patch, you think about the chewing gum, and you think about all the other tools that are available to help people quit. Raising taxes and making it financially, you know, less attractive is one way, but then also looking at the treatment angle and to help people quit is another thing. I think the time has come for the provincial government to approach an agency like Alberta Blue Cross and say: "What can we do to make this happen? Where do we sign? How much money do you need?" Let's get this behind us. Let's move on. The time has come for smoking cessation aids to be covered under provincial plans.

Take something else. There is a medication, Mr. Speaker, that is called Zyban. Zyban is a medication that is made by a company called Glaxo Wellcome, or GlaxoSmithKline now; they've changed their name. It is a medication that helps people quit, and it is proven. Many research studies have indicated that, yes, it does work. It is not covered by some of those plans I mentioned.

Take the same formula, the same molecule, which is marketed by the same company, made in the same lab, in the same pill press, called Wellbutrin. What's inside is the same. The tablets are exactly the same shape. They're exactly the same strength. They have exactly the same effect. They're made in the same place. They're made using the same machine. Wellbutrin is an antidepressant, and Wellbutrin is covered because depression is a medical disease. It's a medical affliction. It is something that we can treat.

Well, I would argue that smoking and the addiction to nicotine and to the tobacco product is a medical affliction. It is something that we should be treating. There is no justification for this drug to not be covered when, in fact, it's the same formula. We know it's safe. The experts have told us that it does work. How can you justify to somebody who is dying from lung cancer that you can't get this? They can't fight that addiction. They cannot quell that addiction.

These are but a few things, Mr. Speaker, which I have discovered in my life as a practising pharmacist, and I think the time has come for this House and for the government to start thinking about these issues. Making it financially less attractive for people is one great thing – and I totally support this direction – but we have to take this money and put it towards disease prevention and health promotion. We also have to look at ways to help people quit who express that desire. Making that decision is about 50 per cent of the work. The other 50 is looking after that chemical addiction, looking after that chemical dependency and dealing with it.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this bill passes, and I hope that the House and the government seriously take my points into consideration. Who knows? Maybe in the spring we will hear good things about, you know, Blue Cross and other insurance companies moving towards covering smoking cessation aids.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Any others?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to provide further clarification and information with respect to Bill 7, including items that were raised during second reading of the bill. Now, it's been quite a while since second reading of this bill, back seven months ago, so I had to do a little bit of reading in the Hansard in order to refresh my memory.

During second reading of this bill, Mr. Chair, reference was made to two private institutions, the Canadian College International Institute and Columbia College, and it was referred to by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. In Hansard of April 3, 2007, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona talked about how he personally had to deal with complaints stemming from poor management of vocational schools. He said that in 2005 the ministry had to deal with a complaint about the private school CCII [or Canadian College International Institute] that dealt with excessive grant funding from the government, falsification of attendance records, course quality dilution, and misrepresenting course hours, et cetera.

Now, to clarify, Mr. Chair, the Canadian College International Institute does not offer programs licensed under the Private Vocational Schools Act and is not regulated by Alberta Advanced Education and Technology. I don't know exactly what the hon.

member was talking about or what he was referring to here, but I'm not going to deal with the issue because it has nothing to do with Bill 7.

On the other hand, though, Columbia College does offer vocational training licensed under the Private Vocational Schools Act, and a question was raised by the hon. member regarding the $87,000 provided to Columbia College in 2005–2006 as reported in Alberta Advanced Education's 2005–06 annual report. Now, this $87,000 was from the first allocations out of the ministry's access fund. In this phase private vocational schools were eligible for support, and Columbia College was awarded funding for its business management program. Columbia College continues to offer this program and receives the funding awarded during that first access fund competition. However, private institutions offering licensed vocational programs are not currently eligible to receive access fund grants for programs.

Also, Mr. Chair, a question regarding the training provided to temporary foreign workers was also raised during second reading of this bill, and that was brought up by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who I see is here today enjoying the annual report of Service Alberta. Is that what you're reading there, hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: The department of agriculture now.

Mr. Webber: Anyway, I'm a little bit confused by what the hon. member had started to ramble about way back on April 5. If I read it here, it says:

When we look at what's going on in this province and what's going on outside this province and recruiting workers into this country and province, we have to be very, very careful about what we're actually going to do with this legislation.

Then he went on to say:

There are also many agents recruiting temporary foreign workers. It is unfortunate that some of the temporary foreign workers are being asked for megabucks, thousands and thousands of dollars to gain access to this province. They're getting here, and they are finding there is very little, if any, work.

Now, there are people in this province that are offering training programs to prospective temporary foreign workers.

The hon. member went on and on. Then he had a question. He said, "How are these trainers affected by Bill 7?" the trainers to these temporary foreign workers. Just to inform the hon. member, temporary foreign workers are already highly skilled workers before they come to this country to work. They're functioning at a journeyman's level. In such cases that you've described, specific trade-related training is provided by the employer. So a temporary foreign worker's training does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Private Vocational Schools Act, just for your information.

A further clarification with respect to Bill 7. Government does not license private institutions. Advanced Education and Technology licenses and monitors vocational programs offered by the private institutions. Apprenticeship and industry training programs are generally not offered by private institutions and not licensed under the Private Vocational Schools Act. The exception is hairstylists or hairstyling training, which is offered by licensed private vocational schools.

Now, changes included in Bill 7 include the removal of the two-tier system of licensing, brought about through changing the wording of section 12(2), repealing section 13(1)(a), and revising the wording of section 24(b) of the act, the removal of the requirement that licences be renewed every two years, which is carried out by repealing section 12(6), section 13(1)(a), section 14, revising the wording of section 24(b), and by the addition of the new section 17.1, which provides a mechanism not currently in the act. It's all in here, all for you to read, and it was available right from day one. So the questions that were asked could have been researched through your own reading.

Advanced Education and Technology will still collect and review information and conduct compliance reviews. The rigour will continue; however, these changes will streamline administration.

Now, to explain these changes in further detail, I want to refer to the removal of the two-tier system of licensing. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora wanted more specifics on this, and he went on and on. I won't even go with the quotes because I couldn't understand what exactly they meant. But I will be clear. Removing class A and class B categories of licences requires all licensed programs to demonstrate satisfactory performance outcomes. From a consumer's protection point of view it is more effective for vocational training to be either licensed or not licensed, instead of downgrading licences with poor performance outcomes from class A to class B. Although the two categories of licences are being discontinued, licensees will still be required to report graduation and employment placement information for each licensed program to the ministry on an annual basis. The ministry will also continue to address instances where performance outcomes are problematic.

Now, I will quote also another member, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who back on April 3 said, "Overall, Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill is worthy of support." He went on to say, "The intent of Bill 7 appears to be quite straightforward." It is, Mr. Chair.

I'd like to thank the chair for the opportunity to present this information on Bill 7, the Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act. These changes to the Private Vocational Schools Act are designed to enhance consumer protection and to be more reflective of current practices. I ask that the members support this bill as it moves forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate this opportunity in Committee of the Whole to participate in the debate. I for the most part support Bill 7, and hopefully the questions I ask won't be considered an affront. I'm looking for clarification.

Having been involved in the delivery of public education for 34 years, I'm very aware of the standards that are applied, very strict and stringent standards. A tremendous amount of Alberta's tax money and general revenue goes into funding education in this province, and I note that approximately one-tenth of what goes from the government to support public vocational schools goes to the support of private vocational schools. However, there has to be that same type of expectation, the need for regulation. I see that one of the points of Bill 7 is to try and make that regulation worthwhile and not necessarily as onerous.

Instead of reviewing the equivalent of a charter every two years, it's going to replace the monitoring on a regular basis. I apologize. I didn't participate in the second reading section of this, but if the member proposing Bill 7 wouldn't mind telling me about some of the monitoring methods that are effective that would be applied to private – I'm assuming it'd be a carry-over from how we monitor our public vocational schools – that would be appreciated.

I also notice that instead of a two-tier licensing system, there's going to be a single tier. That makes sense because then all vocational schools will have to achieve a particular standard, and as such it'll be a high standard, and we should receive good service, good training from these schools. Again, these concerns may have come up in second reading, but my concern is the certification process for a private vocational school and how onerous the expectations are for a school. Obviously, they have to provide a business model. They have to have some type of start-up money that would ensure that they're not going to suddenly close their doors and leave students literally out in the cold. If the hon. member could provide some information on what assurances or what bonds schools have to take out so that in the event that for whatever reason they have to suddenly close, then the tuition is returned to the students who applied to take the training at their programs. I know that this has been a problem in the past in Alberta, where unfortunately we've had some fly-by-night opportunists who have opened and very quickly closed their vocational schools.

I can get past my public school preference by recognizing that at this point there has not been sufficient funding support for public institutions, whether they be of the academic or the vocational nature, and that has sort of by omission created a niche for private vocational training schools. If they do a good job in filling that niche, then they have a right to be in existence. There is no doubt that a number of students are being turned away from SAIT and from NAIT and from some of the training colleges that are publicly funded. I suppose that, as a result, they're making their way to these private institutions. Hopefully, they're getting a good education.

The explanation of standards set and government monitoring is an area that I would like to hear from them. Hopefully, these concerns of mine are recognized as being legitimate, based on my 34-year professional education career, and every effort will be provided to answer these questions. I appreciate that I'll have another opportunity to ask again if for whatever reason the answer doesn't provide the depth of explanation that I would appreciate.

As I say, in general I support Bill 7, increasing education opportunities for students across Alberta, but I would like clarification about enforcing regulations and establishing regulations before funding is provided. And what kind of protection is there for students so that they won't pay a tuition and then find on the following Monday that the institution has closed down and they're out that money?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I listened with interest to the hon. member who is sponsoring Bill 7, his comments regarding debate at second reading. I'm pleased to hear that he has had a look through Hansard going back to the spring session. I would like to remind not only that hon. member but all members of this Assembly that there is a role for the Alberta Advanced Education and Technology department. I don't think I should say technology, just advanced education. I may be getting ahead of myself there.

An Hon. Member: And technology. Yes, indeed.

Mr. MacDonald: And technology. Okay.

As I understand it, there's a private vocational training division within that department run by the director of private vocational training, and the director is given the power by the regulations to license and oversee the province's vocational programs. Now, that being said, I would like to alert the hon. member to the fact that there are many different classifications or types of visas for temporary foreign workers to this country. Some of them are very, very limited, and they restrict a temporary foreign worker. In fact, they prevent that person from getting any additional training or training in another vocation. I've seen these visas.

I would remind the hon. member that his comments earlier were not correct because the department of advanced education is the one that is giving these individuals temporary accreditation. They're supposedly looking at the trade qualifications or the vocational credentials of these individuals before the temporary foreign worker visa is issued and accepting or rejecting those qualifications. The individual, if the visa is approved, is allowed into this country, into this province, and they have six months to challenge and pass Alberta's qualifications. So those are the rules.

I had a group of temporary foreign workers visit my office. I had the pleasure of talking to them in September. Some of them couldn't find work.

Mr. Horner: Nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it does, hon. member, have a lot to do with this bill because it was your department that said that their qualifications were valid, yet whenever their original employer refused to hire them, others would not.

This is the niche that the private vocational colleges want to get in. Now, they want to get money – they're another group that have got their hand out to try to get these individuals involved in a rather confusing transaction, and that is the upgrading of their credentials or the acceptance of their credentials, to start with. So the temporary foreign worker: there is an issue around this bill and how they are being treated.

Hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, you should check with your own department and make sure that the accreditation process is working, because there's a gentleman in there – I've seen the letters myself – by the name of Mr. Olie Schell who was signing off on these qualifications. No one knows whether these qualifications have validity or not. There are people in there signing those letters, and I can provide to you, hon. minister, copies of those letters.

Mr. Horner: What's the relevance to the bill?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the chair will be happy to recognize you next.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I appreciate that.

Private vocational schools see the plight of these innocent victims of temporary foreign worker policy gone bad. They see them as a market opportunity. I would ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills and the minister of advanced education to please be aware of that and try to do everything to stop it and protect these individuals from any type of exploitation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair, and I will keep my comments brief. I was only able to look briefly at Bill 7. Certainly, the Member for Calgary-Foothills seemed to alleviate some of my concerns that just come from the private vocational training facilities in general, specific to quite a number of complaints that I have had to deal with from some specific private training schools in the last couple of years.

I guess my questions here in the Committee of the Whole are very specific to whether or not Bill 7 will seek to streamline the accreditation process for specific skills and if that is one of the benefits or one of the capacities of this bill. I see that you are streamlining, as you say, removing the two-tier system for accreditation, which is certainly laudable. I guess what I see as a potential problem is that – well, I mean, it's a good problem to have – we have a demand for lots of skilled workers, and we have, then, a burgeoning industry to train people for specific skills. It is our responsibility to ensure that the regulations surrounding new training facilities are stringent enough so that people aren't wasting their time and money in vocational training that might not be in fact recognized by the trade or the workforce, the people doing the hiring, and people aren't spending their money on these things as well.

Everyone wants to improve their station and lot in life, and I see young people often taking a couple of years off after high school and then going back and choosing, perhaps, a commercial training facility as opposed to Grant MacEwan or NAIT or SAIT or university. Then if that experience is not to their satisfaction, they will give up in terms of postsecondary and further postsecondary training. The timeliness and the effectiveness of any postsecondary training is so crucial to ensure that the individual has a good experience, they're not wasting their money, and they can derive the benefits that they perceived that they would in fact get from signing up at a postsecondary training facility.

Mr. Chair, whenever there is a new, expanded opportunity for an industry, as we see now with postsecondary training, certainly it's necessary for us to streamline or cut the red tape, but it's also important for us to regulate. I'm just hoping that Bill 7 serves to be stringent enough to send a clear message to people, perhaps, choosing to set up sort of a training school or vocational training of any kind that the provincial government, indeed, will retain control of the integrity of that education.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Mr. Chair, I'd just like to refer to a couple of the questions that they had asked just before we call the question. I apologize to the Assembly here.

Anyways, with respect to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, he had asked a number of questions which are in the regulations. I've printed the regulations from the Queen's Printer. It's on the web. It has everything from criteria for vocation. It's got the exemptions. It's got conditions precedent. It's got licence renewal. It's got separate applications. It's got everything in here, in the regulations, that would answer all of the questions that you had asked with regard to monitoring methods, with regard to licensing, with regard to the certification process, the bonds. Are there bonds? Yes, there are bonds. It says it all in here. I would suggest, perhaps, that you read the regulations.

Also, Mr. Chair, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar went on again with regard to the temporary foreign workers. Again, the amendment to this act removes the distinction between types of licences. Okay? It also removes the stipulation that licences must be renewed every two years. It provides mechanisms for licences to request cancellation or suspension of a licence. It also changes the name of the act. That's what this amendment is all about. To go into a debate with regard to temporary foreign workers has nothing to do with the bill, so I'm not going to bother with it.

With regard to Edmonton-Calder: again, read the regulations. It's all in there.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

Are you now ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 7 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

5:40

Bill 8 Vital Statistics Act

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to take this opportunity to respond to the questions raised by the members for Edmonton-Strathcona, Edmonton-Rutherford, and Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I thank them for those questions.

With respect to the motivation for updating the act, the majority of the vital statistics work is done on policy as the legislation is outdated.

As to why the term "director" is being replaced with the term "registrar," we're doing this to update the language in the act to make it consistent with the terms used in other registries legislation.

In response to whether any changes to this act may have been spurred on by the need to improve security measures for private registries, there are no changes that were made specifically because of the private registries. Additional security measures were added to the Change of Name Act in 2004.

In response to how this bill will be responding to organized crime, there are two amendments that will respond to the increase of identity theft and fraudulent identity. First of all, this bill makes it an offence to fail to return fraudulent birth certificates to vital statistics. Secondly, the bill requires evidence of a birth and that it has occurred in Alberta if the birth occurs outside of a hospital. This will help minimize the creation of fake individuals and identification.

As to whether the law enforcement agencies were consulted in drafting the bill, they were specifically consulted on the requirements for minors aged 12 to 17 to submit their fingerprints with their change of name application.

In regard to our respect for cultural and ethnic diversity in the drafting of legislation, we worked very closely with the constitutional law division of Alberta Justice, who ensured that we were in line with the Charter.

With respect to whether any amendments are in response to Charter challenges, there is an amendment that has been added for this reason. It allows the registrar discretion to allow a child to have a different last name from their parents if it is for cultural or ethnic reasons due to the numerous successful Charter challenges on this issue.

In response to how we are accommodating the provisions of the FOIP Act, we have added a regulation making authority to allow us to prescribe in regulation all of the information we are requesting on vital statistic forms to ensure that there is a clear authority for its collection.

To clarify what happens with fingerprints that are submitted with a change of name application, they are sent to the RCMP in Ottawa for comparison with their criminal record database. If a person has a criminal record, their record is updated with their new name; if not, no file is kept with fingerprints. In all cases the RCMP return the fingerprints directly to the applicant.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for providing responses to the questions that I raised during second reading.

I've indicated in the past that the Official Opposition caucus is for the most part supportive of this bill and the objectives that the government has laid out with presenting it. We're always cautious, Mr. Chairman, of the sensitive nature of the issues that are being discussed in Bill 8 and wary of the fact that attempts to accommodate ethnic and cultural diversity can lead to other problems. Those were points that were raised in second reading and I'm still mindful of today.

Since we're in committee, I do have a number of questions that I would like to get on the record. I'm not sure how much time we'll have to deal with them today, but perhaps tomorrow or at a later date we may see some answers to this.

Part 1 of Bill 8 deals with births in Alberta and particularly the registration of births in Alberta. One of the interesting things that I note, Mr. Chairman, is that section 3 of part 1 deals with the birth registration document and, in particular, describes that if more than one child is born, as an example twins or triplets, a separate registration document for each child must be provided, each document stating how many children were born.

I know it's a rare situation, but certainly we've seen an example in B.C. just recently with conjoined twins. I'm wondering whether or not – the Treasury Board president is chuckling, but it is a reality; it does happen, of course. I'm curious whether or not Bill 8 contemplates that situation and how, in fact, that might be dealt with if we had a situation of conjoined twins. Would there then be a single registration document that would suffice if the decision was made not to separate the twins? If that's the case, what happens down the road if the twins were to be separated? These are difficult issues, I'm sure, to be dealt with, but I'm wondering, if we're amending this act to deal with any number of things, whether or not that has actually been contemplated. It's been years and years, as the member indicated, since we've dealt with this issue and updated it, and here's a perfect opportunity for us to deal with a difficult issue that we've seen, you know, in the neighbouring province of British Columbia. That's certainly one that I would be looking for some clarification on.

Section 4 of the same part 1, dealing with birth registrations and particularly the notice of birth, goes to great lengths to describe how physicians attending the birth will deliver notice to the registrar. It talks about all sorts of responsibilities and encumbrances upon the registrar.

Then it goes on in section 5 to refer to the registrar again, that within one year after the birth, after the registrar is satisfied that all of the documentation required by the act is sufficient, the birth would be registered.

I guess my question is this. Clearly, it would seem to me that the registrar must be trained and well educated in legal matters. I'm just wondering whether or not that is a deviation from the act as it currently sits. What sorts of safeguards would we be putting in place to make sure that the registrar's office would be fully competent and capable to live with the greater demands of Bill 8 as it's been presented to us here today?

Also, section 6 of that part 1, dealing with birth and again talking about registration after one year, describes that when a birth is not registered within a year but the registrar receives an application for registration, if it is then verified by affidavit and accompanied with a birth registration document, the prescribed evidence respecting the birth, and the prescribed fee, the registrar shall register the birth. The question that I would have there is: what exactly constitutes prescribed evidence? I'm not sure that it's necessarily outlined in the bill itself, and perhaps that comes in regulation. But that would be a clarification that I would be looking for. I see that the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne is nodding his head, so I'm going to guess that, in fact, that is the case.

Moving on, then, to section 8 of part 1, the naming of the child. Section 8(5) describes that the last name of a child must be registered as follows:

- (a) if the parents agree, showing:
 - (i) the last name of one of the parents, or
 - (ii) the parents' last names hyphenated or combined.

Then there's the contemplation that the last name can be a combination of the parents' last names.

Later in the bill it states that the registrar may refuse a name if he or she determines that it is offensive or confusing. My question would be: what would happen if the parents combined their names in a manner that the registrar opposes? Will that provision trump the provision that we've just described? It seems that it gives an awful lot of power to the registrar, I suppose, to dictate what is and is not an offensive name. I'm a little curious about that and might look for a little further discussion on that. [interjection] Now the President of the Treasury Board is asking me for some examples of melded names. Well, there's a great exercise that I've seen on the Internet, Mr. Minister, where you can actually put in your name and somebody else's name, and it'll come up with all sorts of examples, some of which, I'm sure, wouldn't be appropriate to mention in this body. Nevertheless, that is out there for those who wish to partake in it.

Now, as I said, the registrar has the ability to actually determine what is and is not an offensive name. Also, the registrar would be given the power to refuse to register names that he or she thinks might cause confusion, be a source of embarrassment, could defraud or mislead the public, or be objectionable on any other grounds. I'm going to suggest that the registrar should have had these powers when a fellow I know was given his name by his parents. His name is Robert Loblaw.* Of course, he's gone through his entire adult life being referred to as Bob Loblaw. I'm going to suspect that he wishes that the registrar had had these powers at that time. He might have been able to save an awful lot of embarrassment and headache for Bob Loblaw.

In all seriousness, given the subjectivity involved in determining what might be an offensive or confusing name, the registrar would clearly have to be extremely well educated in terms of ethnic and cultural diversity. That is a question, I think, that we need to explore a little bit. What might at first seem to be confusing or objectionable to the registrar might be perfectly normal and acceptable in other cultures. Really, it leads to a question of what sort of cultural training and qualifications the registrar would have if he or she is going to have the power to make these sorts of determinations. I think that's a valid question. Again, you know, the mover of the bill and the Minister of Service Alberta I think both have been very cognizant of the cultural sensitivities in the drafting of this bill, but it doesn't stop with the drafting of the bill, of course. We have to be awfully careful in the actual regulations and then even more so in the application of both the legislation and the regulation. That's something that's important to be mindful of. I think I'm going to leave it there for now.

There's one more thing I'd like to read into the record on the question of births, and that is the whole contemplation of a child being born on an aircraft. I think the mover of the bill mentioned, you know, that if the first landing of that aircraft is to be in Alberta, the parents should have the opportunity to register that child in Alberta. Fair enough. However, section 13(5)(c) allows "the person who has charge of the child" – actually, Mr. Chairman, I think I jumped ahead of myself here because I'm not actually contemplating birth on an aircraft anymore. What we're talking about here is deserted unidentified newborn children. So birth on an aircraft: we've dealt with that. The mover dealt with the concerns.

Here we are now talking about deserted unidentified newborns. Section 13(5)(c) currently allows the person who has charge of the child to select a first and last name for the child – that would be if this new legislation is passed – whereas the former Vital Statistics Act simply required the director to do so. Again, the question that arises out of this is: who is likely to be the person who has charge of the child, and how will that be determined? Is that, again, going to be in regulation? I'm supposing. Would it be a police force? Would it be Children's Services? How are we going to describe or narrow it down, focus in on who the person is that has charge of the child and has, then, according to the provisions of this new act, the ability to name the child? Perhaps it will also be the Minister of Service Alberta that would have charge of the child. We could have all sorts of interesting names being given to these kids at that point.

There were questions raised about the amendment of the first name.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I regret that I have to interrupt, but we're getting close to the adjournment hour, so I will call upon the Deputy Government House Leader to move that the committee now rise and report.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that when the committee does rise and report, we report Bill 7 and we report progress on Bill 8.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 7. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 8.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move, given the hour, that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:57 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 7, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/11/07

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Mr. Tong-Mo Suh, the consul general of the Republic of Korea. I also welcome Mr. Jeong-Sik Kang, the consul of the Republic of Korea. They are in your gallery today, Mr. Speaker.

I might add that Alberta's relationship with Korea is rich and multifaceted. We have 8,000 Albertans of Korean descent. We have two-way trade of over a billion dollars, making Korea Alberta's fifth-largest trading partner, and certainly a long-standing twinning.

I would like to just finally add, Mr. Speaker, that with Remembrance Day only four days away it is an appropriate time to reflect on another bond between Alberta and Korea. It was during the dark hours of the Korean War that the members of Alberta's Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry came to the assistance of Korea. What a proud moment for our nation in helping an important partner.

I'd ask all members of the Assembly to join me in asking the visitors to stand and be recognized as a welcome to the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I might just add as a supplement to the hon. minister that two former members of this Assembly served in the Korean conflict, Mr. John Gogo and Mr. Doug Cherry.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Mrs. Janice Sarich. Janice is the nominated candidate for the Progressive Conservative Party in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. She has extensive experience in both the private and public sectors, having served as a Catholic school trustee and also as the owner of her own business. Janice is a mother of two who has very strong ties to her community, obviously her city, and her province. I'm proud to have Janice as a member of my team as we move towards a better future for all Albertans. I would now ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups to introduce today. In the first group, a very special group, I'd like to introduce and present Raffaele and Rosetta Talarico along with their daughter Sandra Talarico and another daughter, Chiarina Rosin, who works in my office. May I just say that Raffaele emigrated to Canada from Italy in 1952 at the age of 25. He travelled by boat from southern Italy to Halifax, then by train from Halifax to Wainwright, where he worked on the railway for four years and earned 90 cents an hour. Rosetta emigrated to Canada in 1957 at the age of 20 and joined Raffaele in Edmonton. She raised her family, working for GWG, the Hotel Macdonald, and finally for the University of Alberta hospital. They have been married 50 years and will celebrate that anniversary November 9, and Raffaele will also be celebrating his 80th birthday on November 17. Please join me in welcoming Sandra, Chiarina, Rosetta, and Raffaele. Would they please rise.

I have another introduction, Mr. Speaker. They are the dream team, some of Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry's finest, and they are Veronika Woek, Theresa Wilson, Terri Mason, Angela Woo, Joyce Ford, and Jan Bystrom. They're here today to have a look at the Legislature and be able to expand on our activities in their workplace. May they please rise, and please acknowledge them.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a number of people who were involved in a very special announcement at the Stollery children's hospital this morning. Thanks to a $500,000 donation from Bell an echocardiography telehealth outreach program will be established at the Stollery using the most advanced technology from Bell Canada. The program will provide patients and health care professionals from communities throughout central and northern Alberta with access to Stollery's advanced diagnostic tools and medical expertise in cardiology. The solution will be delivered using the Alberta SuperNet, a partnership between the Alberta government and Bell Canada, which members know is a high-speed network made possible through that partnership.

With us today are Dallas Smith, chair of the Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation board of directors; Dr. Terry Klassen, chair of the department of pediatrics at the Stollery children's hospital; Jean Trines, a senior echocardiography technician at the Stollery children's hospital and a recent new Albertan; Jack Janssen, associate director of government relations with Bell; Jeff Meerman, associate director of media relations with Bell; Judy Mahaffy, associate director of community investment with Bell; and Kelly Frank, the director of business development with Bell. I'd ask our guests to rise and be recognized for the contribution that Bell has made and the good work that Stollery does.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my privilege to introduce to you and through you today a very bright young man who's here on a work shadow with his father. Levi Dibben is a grade 9 student out in Lakeland Ridge in Sherwood Park. He's here today job shadowing his dad, my executive assistant, Dwight Dibben; however, he has promised not to share everything with his mom when he gets home. I would ask Levi to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am certainly honoured to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of young people who are taking part in the national Take Our Kids to Work day today. We have Meaghan Mackenzie, Rachel Finnessy, Julianne Belzile, Lindsay Kitson, James Contos, Myles Grunling, Alicia Powers, Jacquelyn Harrison, Kiera Forrest, Jocelyn McDonald. They are accompanied today by Manfred Grunling, who works as a technical training manager in our division of tax and revenue administration within the Ministry of Finance. All of these grade 9 students are going to be working in the Ministry of Finance this afternoon, and I understand they're going to be doing such interesting things as consolidated financial statements and all of those. I would ask all the students to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very dedicated, knowledgeable, and charismatic lady who hails from my constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul. She now resides in the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, in the constituency of the Premier, and she also happens to be one of my assistants in my office. Ladies and gentlemen of this Assembly, if I could ask you to give a warm welcome for Candice O'Neill.

Mr. Zwozdesky: M. le Président, il me fait beaucoup de plaisir de vous présenter quelques élèves, des parents et enseignants de l'école Ste-Jeanne-d'Arc. C'est une école très magnifique dans ma circonscription d'Edmonton-Mill Creek. The students are all in grade 6. They're incredibly well behaved, and they speak impeccable French. Today they are accompanied by teachers, subteachers, and parents: Mylène Deschênes, Rachel Jean, Ron Liboiron, Amanda Chernyk, Michael Chernyk, Diane Noël, Fanta Camara, France Goudreau, la soeur de mon collègue l'hon. M. Goudreau. Also, Annie Renaud, Stephane Harvey, Nadia Chehayeb, Michelle DeAbreu, Mary-Lou Beaubien, and Murray Sinal. I would ask them to all please rise and receive the tremendously warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to this House a constituent of mine seated in the members' gallery. Her name is Kerstie Schreyer, and she is visiting today from Abee in my constituency. Kerstie is a grade 9 student at the Thorhild central school and in her free time volunteers with the Abee Community Association and the Newbrook Recreational and Ag Society. She's also a violin player and a recipient of numerous Ukrainian dancing awards. I would ask her to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of Edmonton-Centre, Roy Skoreyko. Roy is a dedicated community volunteer and is very interested in the proceedings of the Assembly today and particularly wanted to see his own MLA at work. So I would ask you to please join me in welcoming to the Assembly Roy Skoreyko.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and Members of the Legislative Assembly some 51 energetic and keen students from Overlanders elementary school. They are accompanied today by their teachers, Ms Laura Wenger, Ms Christine Novesel, and Ms Cindy Chisholm. Also along are parents Mrs. Karen Timmann, Mrs. Kim Militsala, Mrs. Skye Griffiths, and Mr. Marcus Frey. They're in the public gallery. I would ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three constituents of Edmonton-Mill Woods: Rajiv, Sonia, and Nikhil Sinha. Rajiv is the vice-president of the Woodvale Community League, and he is a member of the Mill Woods President's Council. Their son, Nikhil, is 14 years of age, and Rajiv and his wife want him to have the experience of question period today. I'll ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Bill 46 was quietly introduced on the last day of the spring sitting of the Legislature. At the same time in Rimbey undercover spies hired by the EUB were eavesdropping on unsuspecting innocent Albertans. This bill appears to be written by an autocratic government determined to ignore both consumers and landowners in order to speed up the energy regulatory process. This bill will give the Alberta utilities commission the power to make orders and issue decisions without giving public notice or holding public hearings. It will give the Alberta utilities commission the power to prevent landowners and consumers from making verbal representations to the commission. It will limit the time period in which Albertans can appeal a decision or order made by the Alberta utilities commission to 30 days. Finally, it will restrict the ability of landowners to hire outside legal counsel when intervening in regulatory hearings.

This government does not want anyone to question their actions, and Bill 46 is a blatant attempt to silence Alberta consumers and landowners. Bill 46 illustrates yet another flawed decision by a floundering government. Bill 46 will allow regulations introduced behind closed doors by cabinet to quietly override legislation discussed and debated by all members of the Assembly.

Albertans should be very concerned about the direction of this Progressive Conservative government. They want even more power to override legislation without any public debate or knowledge. This government has spied on citizens, hidden royalty information from the public, and failed to collect billions of dollars in royalties. Now this tired government wants the power to override the Legislative Assembly. Enough is enough.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Torrington Community Wellness Centre

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to acknowledge the opening of the recently constructed community wellness centre in Torrington, Alberta. There are often challenges for rural Albertans who live in remote locations to access a wide variety of health and educational services. Therefore, I'm pleased to acknowledge that our government is encouraging partnerships that will improve the availability of health and educational services in rural communities.

This innovative wellness centre will enable the residents of Torrington and surrounding area to meet their less critical but important health needs. The wellness centre will allow health professionals to provide their specialized services, which include reflexology, foot care, and massages. The centre will also provide educational opportunities by offering unique learning programs for children through its library and Internet services.

I'd like to commend the diligent work of all the volunteers, local businesspeople, representatives from the area's municipal governments, and the David Thompson health region. Together their collaborative efforts ensured that this health facility had the support it needed to become fully functional. I believe this is a great example of enhancing rural development within this province, and our government should continue to support community partnerships that will create opportunities for rural Albertans to improve their health and well-being.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Flu Immunization

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, flu season is upon us, and many people have and will experience its effects. As an example, last year in our province more than 30,000 individuals were diagnosed with influenza. Many people at high risk were hospitalized, and many others developed serious complications. This is, of course, a concern. Obviously, influenza has a major impact on Albertans and on Alberta's health care system. This year we urge Albertans to get a flu shot so we can reduce the number of infections and associated complications such as pneumonia.

It is critical that Albertans protect themselves and others by becoming immunized. We need to remember the importance of this simple precautionary measure and the positive impact it will have by reducing visits to hospitals and medicentres and lost time at work. Albertans at high risk for influenza such as seniors, persons with chronic conditions, children under two years, and pregnant and lactating women can get a free flu shot at their local public health clinic. Others can obtain the shot from their family physician.

I encourage all Albertans, like myself, to become immunized so that we can fight the flu.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Fetal and Pediatric Echocardiography Telehealth Outreach Program

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To all of us the Stollery children's hospital is a place where we receive hope. When our children are sick, when parents are suffering, that's where we go and receive hope. Well, today for a moment the tables were turned around, and the Stollery hospital was in the position of receiving hope from yet another corporate entity who has shown what epitomizes exemplary corporate citizenship, and that is Bell Canada. Bell Canada today has donated $500,000, which actually today is $550,000 U.S., to the Stollery children's hospital for them to implement the echocardiography telehealth outreach program. It's almost as hard to say as Lukaszuk; I appreciate that.

What it really means in real terms is that a child in remote Alberta will not have to come to Edmonton to have their heart scanned and to be diagnosed and monitored postsurgery but that that scanning can happen in remote Alberta, and images could be analyzed via the SuperNet at the Stollery children's hospital by our experts. Now, that is quality provision of health in co-operation with the private sector and our ministry of health.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Bell Canada for their generosity. I would like to thank the Stollery children's hospital and the foundation for putting this program together and for providing our families and our children with hope.

Thank you.

West Lethbridge Centre

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, you have heard me say before that this has been a very good year for Lethbridge, and I'd like to reiterate that today. About two weeks ago the Minister of Education and myself were part of an announcement of funding for what is called the west side high school. There were, of course, other officials there as well as elementary students who hopefully will be finishing their high school in this facility. They took us out onto a windswept, barren field west of Lethbridge. I don't know if the wind that day was a hundred kilometres or not but just about. We're still bearing the scars of the grit that we were faced with – pun intended – during that particular event.

The significance, Mr. Speaker, I think is important for every member here in the House. What we have are two high schools going together. We have the Holy Spirit school division, and we have the Lethbridge public No. 51 school division, so we have in the same complex two school divisions putting their high schools together. In between – and this is the magic and the innovation of this project – we have a Lethbridge city public library. The contribution by the provincial government: something to the tune of $40 million, $45 million. The whole project, $100 million, is in what will be known as the West Lethbridge Centre. Just a great project for our city and for this province.

Conflict in Darfur, Sudan

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada must lead in Darfur, Sudan. In July '07 the United Nations Security Council passed Resolution 1769, calling for 26,000 troops on the ground in Darfur by December 31, '07, to stop the genocide. The appeal then went out to all member countries, and based on the response so far, according to Senator Roméo Dallaire we still will be arguing logistics next year at this time.

The Sudanese government and Darfur rebel groups remain in conflict. Women, men, and children continue to be starved, violated, and killed, as have a number of the pitifully funded African Union troops. Humanitarian groups have left due to insecurity. Two and a half million displaced people endure a miserable existence. Darfur burns as member countries dither. One year ago UN humanitarian chief Jan Egeland said that if the camps explode in violence, as they're poised to do, hundreds of thousands of civilians, largely women and children, will die. The Sudanese government, supplied by China and Russia, continues to violate the fragile environmental and human rights in Darfur.

Canada has given roughly $400 million over four years, mostly humanitarian aid and some military equipment. According to Roméo Dallaire it will cost about $600 million to deploy the troops and equipment, 5 per cent of the current Canadian surplus. Today I'm calling on all citizens and representatives of conscience to add their voices to over 10,000 Sudanese in Alberta to ensure a Christmas gift to Darfur: troops on the ground by December 31, 2007. Two years ago opposition leader Stephen Harper called on Prime Minister Martin to, quote, leave the bleachers and lead in Darfur. End quote. It's now time for the Harper government to honour its word to leave the bleachers and lead.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed with 25 names provided to my office by the Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta supporting the minister of health's introduction of Bill 45 and hoping that all members of this Assembly will vote in favour of this particular bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 280 individuals who are urging the government to ensure that remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized, that they're fairly compensated and that wages are competitive, that employees have access to professional development opportunities, and for the government to introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level of care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 53 residents of Lethbridge and area, and it is of course petitioning this Legislature to pass Bill 45 and to "not dilute its contents so as to compromise the version approved at second reading." I'd like to submit these.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by Albertans from Rimbey, from Bluffton, from Ponoka, and from St. Albert. This petition reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to launch a full public inquiry under the authority of the Public Inquiries Act into spying practices by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board (AEUB) and the Minister of Energy's oversight role of the AEUB.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to present a petition signed by a number of residents of my constituency that urges the government to pass Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007, in its current form.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a couple of petitions that deal with similar issues, and they have been signed by over 500 of Alberta's oil and gas workers. The petition calls on the Legislative Assembly to "discard the Royalty Review Report."

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in this Legislature today to make two tablings. One is part of the program for a fundraiser for the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters. That was an inspirational evening with General Roméo Dallaire, and it was titled Sheltering the Innocent: Children, Violence and What We All Can Do to Help. That had hundreds of people there.

The second is another fundraiser for the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters. It was Breakfast with the Guys. That was this morning in hall D of the Shaw Conference Centre, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and the leader of the third party, the Employment, Health, Municipal Affairs, and Children's Services ministers were all there as well as MLAs from Calgary-Shaw, Edmonton-Castle Downs, Edmonton-Calder, Edmonton-Glenora, and Edmonton-Whitemud. The Premier gave a very moving address with the mayor, and all of the men there rose and said: I pledge never to commit, condone, or remain silent about men's violence against women. It was very moving, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from a constituent, Kathleen Lowrey, who is another victim of this government's decisions about refusing to bring in a temporary rent cap. She notes that she was given an increase in April with notification for August of a $50 increase, and the landlord later rescinded that and, because they could only do it once a year, made it into a $200 rent increase. She is not very appreciative of that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is a letter that I received on July 26, 2007, from the Minister of Energy regarding CO₂ projects and the royalty credit program.

The second is a letter that I received from the hon. Premier of our province dated October 31, 2007, and this is regarding the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and the conduct of the board over the last little while.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a chart from the Alberta Royalty Review Panel report, which I referred to yesterday in the House. The chart is entitled Oil Sands and Offshore/Heavy Oil Projects: Combined Ownership & Government Share. It compares Alberta's oil royalty shares to that of other countries and finds that even under the new regime proposed by the government, the only country which will charge lower royalties is Ireland.

The Speaker: We'll return to this part of the Routine at the conclusion of question period.

1:30 head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

head: Royalty Revenues

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General, the Department of Energy, and the Royalty Review Panel all confirm that this government has not collected a fair share of royalties, but the Premier repeatedly denies this fact while refusing to share his proof with Albertans. Today the Premier is quoted in the media as saying that in his many years as a cabinet minister he was never told that Albertans were not receiving a fair share of royalties. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Since 2000 were any of the internal royalty review reports or presentations that are referenced by the Auditor General discussed with cabinet?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite knows very well that I have not been a member of the cabinet since 2000.

Just to touch a bit, if I might, Mr. Speaker, on the situation with respect to the accumulation of benefits to the province of Alberta and to Albertans. The member opposite indicated that something may or may not have happened in the year 2000. What I can tell you is that we had approximately $15.5 billion worth of investment in the province in the year 2000.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Premier told the world in a media interview, and I quote: the previous royalty framework had no way of capturing higher prices. End quote. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier just now admit the obvious fact that Albertans were not receiving a fair share and that his government failed to act?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure if I shared the information with the whole world. I did do two CBC interviews early this morning, so I don't know if it is with the whole world but at least with the province of Alberta.

You know, it's a funny thing. When you look at all of the economic indicators in this province, the GDP growth, which has really doubled in this province, from well over a hundred billion to over $200 billion . . . [interjections] See, again being rude; still hasn't learned in all the months that he's spent in the Assembly.

Then you look at the per capita spending of Albertans: much higher than anybody in Canada. You know why? Because all of that money ended up in the pockets of Albertans, who reinvested it back into the economy of the province of Alberta.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Premier continues to deny that Albertans have lost billions. He calls them phantom dollars. Well, to ordinary Albertans they're real dollars. What we have from this government is phantom accountability. To the Premier: will he end the secrecy and immediately release all the internal documents referred to by the Auditor General in his report uncensored? Just trust Albertans.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this question came up the other day. The opposition was asking for information with respect to royalty reviews, et cetera, done by the Ministry of Energy. In April the minister tabled at least 500 pages. My information is that there are at least a thousand pages that have been released by the Department of Energy to the opposition. Nine studies are available in Energy's library. I don't know exactly what pages he's referring to. There may be a specific page with information that is production information from a company. That cannot be released; that can only be shared with the Department of Energy.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. It seems that this Premier believes in transparency right up to the point of accountability, and then he changes his mind. This is a matter of trust, and right now no one trusts this government when it continues to deny the evidence of both the Royalty Review Panel and the Auditor General, that Albertans have been shortchanged billions of dollars. To the Premier: is it the Premier's position that the Auditor General was wrong when he stated that this government could have been collecting at a minimum an additional $1 billion to $2 billion annually in royalties without hurting industries? Was the Auditor General wrong, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that question was asked by the media a number of weeks ago. My response to that was that the dollars that were referred to in terms of what could have been collected in royalties and what actually went to the economy in terms of increased Crown lease sales, personal income tax increases, corporate tax increases, and also the amount of money that was invested by the province, given the huge economic growth, into highways: I believe something like $55 billion since 2000. The billions are there. It's invested everywhere, from corner to corner, in this province: good health facilities, new schools, and the best programs in the country of Canada right here in the province of Alberta.

Dr. Taft: It's just nonsense, Mr. Speaker. It's total nonsense.

Again I ask the Premier: is it the Premier's position that the Royalty Review Panel, which his own government appointed, was wrong when it indicated that his government was failing to collect a fair share of royalties on behalf of Albertans? Were they wrong too?

Mr. Stelmach: Now, finally, he gets to the Royalty Review Panel. Well, February 17, Edmonton Journal, the leader: "This royalty review process is tarnished from day one." Public statement, CHED radio, after the panel: oh, a very valuable report, and our position is based on the bottom line that the Royalty Review Panel set. You can't accuse the panel of doing something wrong as soon as it's appointed, and then all of a sudden ride this high horse: we're going to follow every recommendation. Besides, Mr. Speaker, as soon as I received that report, we made it public. Again, we made it public immediately, and every Albertan had an opportunity to review it. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the minions have finally woken up.

Is it the Premier's position that his own Department of Energy was wrong when it indicated that this government was failing to collect a fair share of royalties? I don't understand how everybody can be wrong but the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Maybe the hon. leader can help me understand because on February 17 in the Calgary Herald the hon. Leader of the Opposition said: the appetite for royalty change is not significant.

Then, of course, on CHED radio again on October 26: royalties must rise by 20 per cent; this is nonnegotiable. Where are you on this thing? Tell us.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier will table those documents he's quoting. Thank you.

The Premier indicated in this Assembly on Monday that he "can't see where this province . . . was shortchanged" on royalties, yet on a local radio station this morning he indicated that the previous royalty framework had no way of capturing higher prices. To the Premier: since this government refuses to release the uncensored documents itemized by the Auditor General, can the Premier explain to Albertans why? Why the secrecy? What is he afraid of?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my reference this morning was – let's just take natural gas. There was a cap on the price of natural gas, I believe, at around $3.50. Gas was much higher than that, but we couldn't really receive the optimum as much as now under a sliding scale, which puts gas at $16.65, I believe. Once again, as part of the Alberta entrepreneurial spirit let's share in the reward as prices go up but also be realistic. If the prices do drop, we will see less revenue from the royalty framework. This royalty framework was put in place to provide certainty and predictability for the companies that are making investments of billions of dollars.

Dr. Taft: Well, again to the Premier. We all agree that the oil and gas belong to all the people of Alberta. My question is to the Premier. Why doesn't he trust the people of Alberta with the information he is concealing?

Mr. Stelmach: You know, Mr. Speaker, in September the panel reported. We immediately made that report public. In September the Auditor General reported. He reported to the public. Everybody has all of the information. If there's something beyond the thousand pages and the nine studies that are in the library and have been in the library all this time, if you don't have the time to go and research it in the library – certainly, the Liberals received extra money this year in the budget for extra help for research. You've got to find somebody to dig this up for you if you don't have the time yourself. It's there. All those studies and the thousand pages: it should be there.

Dr. Taft: In the past few days, Mr. Speaker, we've heard cabinet ministers refer to public servants with names such as minions and janitors and things like that. The Premier himself said he doesn't listen to their advice. Can the Premier explain these comments to the public, and will he at least offer an apology to the hard-working public servants of Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this Premier does not have to apologize to the public servants of this province because I always acknowledge their tremendous contribution. [interjections] I would hope that they would listen because if they keep talking, they won't get the answer.

What I said was, simply, that it is the elected people in this province that make the decisions. Certainly, we get advice from senior officials. We get advice from many other areas. At the end of the day the responsibility rests with this government, period.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier sold out Albertans with his royalty plan, giving away billions of dollars to big oil that belongs in the public treasury. Oil prices hit $98 a barrel yesterday, and forecasts predict prices well above $100 a barrel. Everyone sees this but the Premier, who has decided to continue the goofy pennies-on-the-dollar royalty holiday for new tar sands projects. He's leaving billions of dollars in the pockets of big oil, billions that belong to Albertans. On existing tar sands projects alone the Premier's new royalty holiday will give big oil a $1.8 billion subsidy next year. That's $5 million a day given away to big oil. Why won't the Premier for once act in the interests of ordinary Albertans instead of big oil and end this program?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the new royalty framework reflects higher prices. As prices go up, our royalty take will be much higher. If those prices drop, of course, we'll see a difference, a lowering of the royalty stream to the province. The leader of the third party says that oil is at $90, or it could even be $100 a barrel. Bitumen is not priced the same way as west Texas crude. There's a substantial discount because bitumen comes out almost like grease. We have to add value to it, obviously. That's part, again, of the overall royalty framework. It's to see how much more value we can add to the bitumen before it leaves this province.

Mr. Mason: Oh, nice way to change the subject there, Mr. Speaker.

You know what? Albertans know that the Premier is giving industry a bargain basement royalty program. He's subsidizing some of the most profitable corporations in the world, and it's ordinary Albertans that are paying for it. We've crunched the numbers, and I'm sure the Tories have, too. They know better than anyone else that we could end the royalty giveaway tomorrow, and the oil companies would still turn a healthy profit, but they won't do it. Mr. Premier, you're selling out Albertans with a $5 million-a-day giveaway to big oil. How can you justify it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the new royalty framework will set a much higher cap on oil, which will allow us to receive more. We did that, as well, with natural gas. We also did a fair amount of work on conventional oil by removing the three vintages, really dates when some of the wells were drilled. That makes for a much simpler way of dealing with the various vintages of oil, easier both for industry and for us. Most importantly, this provides a certainty and, of course, the predictability for business: new investment to come to this province. There's a considerable number of fields that can further be developed, and this will provide jobs well, well into the future.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we've gone from a-penny-on-the-dollar royalties for new oil sands projects – you see, I said oil sands – and now the Premier is raising it to a nickel on the dollar. That's not a fair share. That's barely there. Alberta is on track to becoming one of the biggest oil producers in the world, but what good is that status if the proceeds go to subsidized multinational oil corporations? We've got a Premier that's bending over backwards to convince Albertans that black is white and that a $1.8 billion subsidy for big oil is a fair share for Albertans. To the Premier. The Auditor General says that your government gave away $1 billion to $2 billion a year over seven years. How many more billions will you flush down the toilet with this royalty holiday?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the dollars that have been collected in royalties over the years have been invested very wisely in programs, in infrastructure in the province of Alberta.

The hon. member refers to prepayment. The formula has been changed in a prepayment. It's also been changed significantly in the postpayment. That is going to bring a considerable amount of new revenue to the province. Of course, yes, the framework takes effect January 1, 2009. I believe, just going by my memory, that one of the major companies last year paid $1.7 billion – just one company – in royalties to the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Crime Reduction and Safe Communities

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Safe communities are a very important part of ensuring the quality of life we currently enjoy. The Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force's final report and the government's response to the recommendations were released yesterday, November 6, providing one of the most comprehensive reports our Premier has requested through the task force, which included a number of government departments, including Justice, Sol Gen, Health, Education, and Children's Services. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Now that we have the final report and know that Albertans want action on crime and its causes, what are the next steps the government will be taking to address crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member indicated in his question, this particular initiative was the Premier's priority. He asked that I co-ordinate the task force, and the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek very ably chaired that committee and produced the report to government late in September. The report makes a number of recommendations, 31 in total. We have accepted those, with the exception of two that will be further studied. They deal with recommendations regarding enforcement, treatment, and prevention, and we will be moving on those in the days ahead.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. We know crime prevention is an important component of any crime reduction strategy, and the treatment is a significant part of the recommendations in this report. Can the minister explain why these are critical areas surrounding treatment?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the report indicates very clearly is that in order to tackle the issue of crime and safe communities, it's necessary to have a holistic approach. It's necessary to have something more than enforcement. It's necessary to deal with the issue of treatment. We practically have some examples of that in the system today. We have the domestic violence courts, which have reduced recidivism from the 30 per cent range down to 6 per cent. We have a drug court pilot here in Edmonton, which has done very good work with low-grade criminal addicts. The fact is that this report has said that we need to do more of that, and we have committed to doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. It's clear that sustaining safe communities is best served by a collaborative approach to fighting crime. How will the Minister of Justice ensure that this gets done?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the number one recommendation in the report was that there needed to be oversight with respect to this initiative. Crime and reduction of crime is a complex matter. It involves some 13 ministries in this government. There are five lead ministries – Health, Children's Services, Justice, Education, and Solicitor General – and it's necessary that there be leadership and co-ordination.

Additionally, it is necessary that all aspects of society are involved: municipalities, the federal government, individuals, and communities. The recommendation was that there be this safe communities secretariat established. It will provide the leadership and co-ordination on a go-forward basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Royalty Framework Advertising

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Please Don't Call This a Compromise and his ministers have accused us of making up phantom billions of dollars. Well, I charge them with giving Albertans phantom accountability, as our leader said just a minute ago, and allowing their own political agendas to dictate the economics of this province, political agendas that used 350,000 real taxpayer dollars to fund the full-page partisan newspaper ads. Can the President of the Treasury Board, the man who is in charge of how much and how money gets spent, show us real, not phantom, accountability and try to justify this illegitimate use of taxpayers' dollars?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, wasted dollars, wasted time. It fits in.

Mr. Speaker, what happens to these dollars? They were reinvested in Alberta. They were multiplied across Canada, and they've resulted in a Conservative federal government that's allowed to give approximately $60 billion in tax cuts because they worked with the province responsibly managing their money, as opposed to how the last Liberal government from Ottawa looked at our energy sector and bled it dry and collapsed an entire country. That's what you get.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I'm going to read the question again, and I'm going to hope that perhaps – perhaps – the President of the Treasury Board might actually listen to the question and give me an answer that's relevant to the question. I was asking whether or not he can justify 350,000 taxpayers' dollars, real taxpayers' dollars, being used to pay for an advertising campaign that is clearly partisan, uses party colours, and is totally offside. Can you justify that? I don't know. You know, this is your last chance. I hope you can do it this time.

Mr. Snelgrove: There is a certain obligation in the House to try and tell the truth or ask reasonable questions, and I can appreciate that may be stretched.

What our Premier did is make a commitment to show his plan to Albertans. This government has a plan. This party has a leader who is decisive. This Premier of our party, of this government, doesn't have to go out and look at the weather vane to find out which way he's going today. This Premier made a commitment to Albertans. He delivered on it, and he's showing that in his plan.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of making things up, the Premier's desperation is clear when he distorts quotes by the Alberta Leader of the Official Opposition. The complete quote was this, and I wish he would have used the entire quote: we have a tone being set by the Premier – by the Premier – that suggests to me that the appetite for royalty change is not significant. In other words, it's pretty clear that the suggestion was that the Premier's appetite for royalty increases is not significant. For the Premier to use only half of the quote is totally, once again, offside. My question is for the Minister of Energy. Is the government so worried about public reaction to the missing billions that they have to distort quotes from the Leader of the Official Opposition?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, you know, most of the questions have been about the royalties: "The royalty structure didn't work. The royalty structure was allowing dollars to escape." This Premier in one of his first moves came in and said: "You were right. That royalty structure was then. It worked well. Now we need a new royalty framework to address the opportunity to capture the billions of dollars involved in the future of Alberta." That Premier identified a panel to give another independent look, used all of the input from Albertans, from the Department of Energy, and has put in an energy royalty framework that will last Albertans and serve them very well for decades to come. He's so far ahead of these guys; they're still biting their own tail.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Strength of Canadian Dollar

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning Canadians woke up to the news that the Canadian dollar had once again hit a record level. This time it's over $1.10 U.S. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. With the dollar seeming to hit record levels quickly, can the minister tell the Assembly the reason for these jumps?

The Speaker: Okay. Go ahead.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there have been a lot of strange things happen in the dollar market in the past six months. In the last couple of days, though, we've seen a tremendous increase in the Canadian dollar relative to the U.S. dollar. There probably are a lot of reasons for that, although emotion and the ability to sell and buy play a lot in it. What we saw yesterday was the Chinese economy threatening to take $1.4 trillion out of the U.S. economy by changing their purchasing powers from the U.S. dollar potentially to the Euro. This is probably China flexing . . .

The Speaker: Well, we'll go on to the member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's primary market is the U.S. Much of the province's revenue is based on the resources sold in U.S. dollars. To the same minister: have you made any revision on the provincial budget to take into account the new strength of our Canadian dollar?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, for every one cent that the Canadian dollar goes up, we lose roughly $123 million in revenue from the province of Alberta. We've seen the Canadian dollar go from a high of 84 cents in February to $1.10 yesterday. We certainly are seeing the financial impact. Our Budget 2007 showed the U.S. dollar at 86 cents. We subsequently increased that to 93 cents in the first quarter. The Canadian dollar has averaged 95 cents to this point, so I would fully anticipate that in the second quarter we will be making some revisions. There is a huge amount of implications to our economy, but there is a huge amount of implications to the Canadian economy in general, especially the manufacturing sector.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there any other economic indicators of this kind impacting on our budget?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, budgeting right now in the province of Alberta is a very difficult thing. We see the price of oil going to unforeseen heights. It's up at $98. No one – no one – would have anticipated $98 oil. Equally, no one would have anticipated a $1.10 Canadian versus the U.S. dollar. We are currently looking at all of these. We are balancing out, on one hand, that a 1 cent increase, as I mentioned, goes up to a $123 million loss, a dollar increase in the price of oil allows us to have $130 million more revenue into our coffers. Our second quarter will be a culmination of all of these events. It will be our best estimate as to what is going to happen in the next six months. It is an extremely volatile market today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 46 will restrict Albertans' democratic rights. Bill 46 is a blatant attempt by this Progressive Conservative government to silence Alberta consumers and landowners. My first question is to the Minister of Energy, who is also a rural landowner. Does Bill 46 adequately protect the property rights of farmers and other rural property owners?

The Speaker: Well, legal interpretation is one thing. This bill will come up for debate. That's clearly a question of opinion, but if the minister wants to pursue.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we put to this Legislature and what we will put to the people of the province of Alberta, particularly landowners who are affected by any developments on their land or even in certain circumstances adjacent to their land, in this case is an opportunity to have a very much strengthened protection of their rights as landowners. What we're talking about in Bill 46, of course, is a utilities commission. It has nothing to do with many of the other issues that seem to be dragged into the thing with respect to energy . . .

The Speaker: We'll get to the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given what happened with the spying scandal in Rimbey in June, why is this Progressive Conservative government planning even more restrictions on Albertans who want to participate in future energy regulatory hearings?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing further from what is correct with respect to Bill 46. It actually, in fact, expands the opportunities of Albertans to be represented in any intervention in the utilities. With the addition of an Alberta consumers' advocate in Bill 46 and their mandate to represent Alberta consumers, this strengthens the opportunities for Albertans to be represented.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The fact is that rural Albertans disagree with this Minister of Energy, and they disagree with this government on this bill.

My third question is to the same minister again. If he listens carefully, hopefully he will understand. Part 10 of Bill 46 and on in here is a provision that will allow this government through cabinet to override this bill through regulation. Why are you allowing that to happen?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you and all Albertans that Bill 46, in fact, much strengthens their opportunity to be heard with respect to any issues around utility development in the province of Alberta. Perhaps the Liberals don't like that. I can't account for that. Nevertheless, the Utilities Consumer Advocate in this bill, the Market Surveillance Administrator, and other portions of this particular bill much strengthen Albertans' opportunities to be protected with respect to their use and the installation of utilities infrastructure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

School Construction and Renovation

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last June I was among many who witnessed the Minister of Education as he announced, and I quote, an innovative approach to building schools in the neighbourhoods where students live and learn. I go on to quote: the P3 delivery method is to provide Calgary and Edmonton area schools with 18 new schools by the fall of 2010. Obviously, parents want these schools as soon as possible. So my question to the Minister of Education is simply this: what progress has been made about getting these schools actually built since this announcement five months ago?

Mr. Liepert: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that there has been a great deal of progress made since June. One of the ingredients of the announcement was that the schools, when completed, would be owned by the school boards in Calgary and Edmonton. What we've done over the summer is ensure, working with the school boards, that we have all of the agreements in place. I'm pleased to say that another milestone was reached this week when the project team issued its request for qualifications. That'll take place during the month of November, and during that time we will have an indication of which companies have the qualifications to meet the construction requirements.

Mr. Rodney: My first supplemental is to the same minister. This P3 approach, this pilot project to new school construction, has had its share of critics, sometimes more heated than others. What my constituents want to know is: what has the government done to ensure that this method of delivery is indeed in the very best interest of Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the other tasks that was undertaken this summer was to do an external review of the traditional model of building schools versus the design, build, finance, and maintain model. That independent audit has determined that not only will this model be more cost efficient, but frankly it'll get schools delivered to students where students live and learn much faster than they would be under the traditional model.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education. While this may be well and good for areas where new schools are to be built, there are many school jurisdictions throughout Alberta with school infrastructure needs not only in the area of new school construction but also major repairs. How does the Minister of Education plan to address those needs?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we recognize that the P3 model doesn't work everywhere, so we are taking the more traditional approach to capital needs through our capital planning process. The Premier has made it clear that we'll be introducing a capital plan in the near future. However, I think it's important to note that in this current fiscal year we have some $600 million in projects that are under way both in new schools and modernization. In addition to that, from the fourth quarter budget surplus we announced a couple of months ago that we would be investing almost $200 million into modernization, including Western Canada high in Calgary and Archbishop MacDonald high school here in Edmonton and some 17 projects throughout the province. So the total infrastructure dollars in education this year is some $800 million.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Water Management

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have let it be known very clearly that the management of Alberta's water resources is the highest priority. We are facing decreasing supply and increasing demands, especially in southern Alberta, on rivers now closed to new licences. The government's handling of the Balzac situation in the past year shows without a doubt that our water allocation system is not working. It raises a question: should water be sold to the highest bidder? The Eastern irrigation district has applied to Alberta Environment to give them the right to sell water to other users. Conflicts over water are staring us in the face, Mr. Minister. To the minister: does the minister support allowing irrigation districts to sell water on existing . . .

The Speaker: I think we have to move on.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the member has not been watching the news of late because the specific instance that he references the department dealt with last week, when we announced that we were going to defer any further consideration on that particular proposal. I'll be happy to enunciate the details in subsequent questions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Environment has not yet decided on the Eastern irrigation district licence change, as the minister has just said. That's good news. Albertans have said that they want to be actively involved in how the most valuable resource is managed. Will you, Mr. Minister, be making the decision behind closed doors, or will you ensure that the public is involved in this important decision?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the reality that we face in the South Saskatchewan River basin and, frankly, throughout the province of Alberta is that we have a finite resource in water. That reality means that we are going to as a society have to have a better understanding about what our ongoing policy for water management is going to be. Specifically to answer the member's question, there will be a broad base of discussion in the development of policy, but at the end of the day, like most decisions, there will have to be decisions made, and the government will make those decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With 70 per cent of southern rivers allocated to the irrigation districts under the first in time, first in right principle, it's clear that the Water Act is not able to deal with the many new demands. Mr. Minister, will you show the leadership needed and open the Water Act to ensure that environmental and human priorities are secure in southern Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member needs to again check the reality book because irrigation districts have been doing phenomenal work in becoming more efficient with the water that they use, much more efficient in ensuring that the value-added for that water serves not only the needs of the agricultural community but those of the surrounding communities. A very good example of that is the modernization that Western irrigation district is taking that frees up water. It's a win-win situation, creates additional opportunity for irrigation as well as supplying water for other uses. That was facilitated through the transfer of a water licence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Police Officer Supply

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we had another announcement about something that's going to be happening in the future, and I'm talking specifically about the crime strategy. With the overheated economy and more and more people rolling into the province, we have a desperate need for more police officers. Alberta ranks eighth in the country in police officers per capita, well below the national average. To get to the national average, we'd need 800 new police officers, with an estimated cost of $80 million a year. With a growing population that's probably an underestimation. My question is to the Deputy Premier, and the question is simply this: why didn't the government announce separately a specific item dealing with hiring much-needed new police officers in the province?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the report had some 31 recommendations. One of them dealt with, specifically, the issue of additional police officers. I can tell you that over the last three years the Solicitor General with the support of this government has put some 300 additional police officers into the streets together with additional sheriffs' personnel. This particular report calls for more police officers. It also calls for more strategic use of police officers so that they will be using the resources they have more effectively. Specifically, it calls for the targeted use of police officers in areas where they can weed and seed.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's all well and dandy, and there are some good aspects to the report, but the thing is that we have this problem right now. The police are overworked. Everybody knows that. In the city of Calgary the police chief says he needs a hundred new policemen right now. This is stuff that's needed right now. There's no announcement in here, at least that I'm aware of, about how many police are going to be hired as a result of this. My question to the minister is simply this: can the minister tell us here in the Assembly how many new police will be hired in the coming year?

Mr. Stevens: The chief of police of Calgary was at the table, Mr. Speaker, when this announcement was made. What he said was: this is awesome; I welcome this report; I welcome this government's support of this report; I welcome the additional resources that we will be getting on the line in Calgary as a result of this report.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, frankly, it's all talk at this point, just like a lot of the other announcements we've had from this government. There's always something coming down the way.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I come back to the minister. Tell us again how many new police officers will be hired in the next year? We have a right to know that.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier was asked what the level of the commitment of this government was with respect to this initiative. We obviously have this as one of the principal initiatives of this government because our Premier said that it would be and because it should be, because the people of Alberta consider safe communities a priority. What he said is that this government is committed, and we are committed in terms of some $470 million over the next three years. That's $470 million over the next three years, and much of that will be going to enforcement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Climate change continues to dominate as the top environmental concern for Albertans. A recent federal report on greenhouse gas emissions places Alberta as the number one provincial emitter of greenhouse gases in Canada. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What action is this government taking to reduce the province's emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member is absolutely correct that Alberta does lead the nation in greenhouse gas emissions. Alberta also leads the nation in the supply of energy not only for Alberta but for much of North America. This government takes its responsibility to deal with those CO₂ emissions very seriously. That's why we are the first jurisdiction in North America to introduce legislation to deal with CO₂ emissions. We are committed to continue to lead by example by establishing and committing to very real and achievable reductions in CO₂ over a realistic time frame.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. With industrial development expected to stay strong well into the future, what plans does Alberta have to place a limit on increasing emissions?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member is aware, we've been in a process over the past number of months of consulting with Albertans on an updated version of our existing climate change strategy. What we heard from Albertans is very clear, that there is a will that this government continue to lead by example, continue to bring forward the necessary means to have reductions in CO₂. That means that we need to concentrate on the technology that will allow us to begin that process in earnest, and we plan to announce the next, updated version of our climate change strategy before the end of 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. To the same minister: if Alberta is, as the minister claims, a global leader in taking action on climate change, why is Alberta keeping its carbon credit trading system exclusive to the province?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was asked that exact same question at an event I was at this morning at breakfast, talking to an international group who are in Edmonton this week, leading experts on carbon capture and management, and the answer I gave to them was very simple: there is a need for us to invest in technology so that we can implement that technology in Alberta. It does us absolutely no good for funds to flow out of Alberta and allow our industry here to continue to do what they're doing and let others benefit from it. Our commitment is to find within Alberta real reductions, verifiable reductions in CO₂. We'll recognize those as offsets, but we want the reductions in Alberta. We want the investment in Alberta. We want those dollars to stay in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Deferred Infrastructure Maintenance

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General added up the provincial deferred maintenance deficit because, as he put it on page 52 of his report, "government information on deferred maintenance is incomplete." The amount he calculated was $6.1 billion, but yesterday in this House the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation claimed that the total amount was "close to that $4 billion to $5 billion range." Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board can clear up this murky picture. To the president: was the minister (a) saying that the Auditor General is wrong or (b) painting a rosier picture than actually exists?

Mr. Snelgrove: Or (c) none of the above. Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General in our several meetings with him has identified, as we have as a government, that there needs to be a way to identify ongoing maintenance to ensure that you don't get behind, to understand that when you build facilities now, you are going to incur maintenance down the road. When you're getting into a system like that in the middle of the hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars of investment that we have in infrastructure around Alberta, it becomes very problematic to pick a number on a snapshot in time as to what level of maintenance you're going to require to keep to that level.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It makes you wonder who's minding the store.

Responding to a different question I asked yesterday, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation stated that the government funds school boards for maintenance, "and there are times when they don't always put the dollars where they're supposed to." To the Minister of Education: is it also this minister's position that the deferred maintenance backlog for this province's schools is a result of school boards not spending their money correctly, or does he accept that his colleague was wrong and that the budgets for school boards have not contained even remotely enough money to allow adequate maintenance spending?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, one of the issues that school boards have to deal with is the fact that some 25, 30 years ago we as a government put a lot of money into infrastructure, and like one's own home, it is now coming back that it needs repairs. We recognize that there are significant challenges relative to infrastructure and maintenance and modernization, and it was one of the factors behind us committing a good chunk of our fourth-quarter surplus towards the $197 million modernization announcement we made a couple of months ago. As I said earlier in question period, that's going to allow projects like Western Canada high and Archbishop MacDonald and some 17 other projects around the province to get modernized and repaired, and I think that's the route we have to take.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier likes to bask in the credit for all the economic successes in this province; however, when it comes to the huge deferred maintenance backlog, his ministers trot out a string of excuses, blaming school boards, blaming an overheated economy. This is yet another example of a government that promises accountability but fails to deliver. To the President of the Treasury Board: why is this government avoiding its responsibility for the $6 billion deferred maintenance fiasco?

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank goodness for the end of the nonsensical approach to questions we've seen.

Mr. Speaker, our Premier early in his mandate said that we need to work hard to address all of the liabilities we have around maintenance. He said that of unallocated surpluses one-third will go to savings; two-thirds will go to maintenance and replacement capital. That's a very responsible approach to it, to supplement the hundreds of millions of dollars we currently spend on maintenance on our government facilities, roads, and infrastructure and to supplement that with two-thirds of all unallocated surplus, a very responsible use of taxpayers' money. It's a plan that works.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 78 questions and responses today.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Cited Documents

The Speaker: During question period, Leader of the Official Opposition, when there was an exchange between yourself and the Premier, I seemed to have heard a request from you to have something tabled. Was that a serious request or not?

Dr. Taft: Yes, it was a serious request. Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. Government House Leader, is there such a document to table?

Mr. Hancock: The Premier was just alluding to newspaper quotes and media, all of which is in the public domain. It's been your ruling in the past that newspapers shouldn't be tabled.

The Speaker: No, there was no such ruling in the past. What the Speaker said is that it's most inconvenient to quote from a newspaper as an authoritative source. Quite a difference. So if there is a document, if it's a newspaper article, it's from the public domain anyway, a public document, table it. If we can move on with this. But if you don't have it today, I'm sure by tomorrow this could be arrived at.

On the Routine we left off today with tablings, and I was going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for tablings.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is from the Canadian Federation of University Women, Alberta Council, and this is in regard to the draft guidelines for nutrition of children and youth in child care, schools, and recreation facilities. They're expressing a major concern regarding the "relegation of the well-developed recommendations in this report to the category of 'guidelines.'"

I have a letter that I'm tabling that went to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry and myself from a constituent stating that now is the time that the oil companies and this government wake up to the understanding that the oil and gas in the ground under our feet do not belong to them . . . they belong to the people of this province.

Now is the time that the government needs to do what is in the best interest of the citizens who elected them.

Another tabling from a constituent in Edmonton-Mill Woods.

I am writing concerning the problem of homelessness in our city and Province . . . I have heard of the One Per cent Solution and ask the government to call for federal and provincial governments to commit one percent more of their budgets to housing programs.

That's from Tracy Dunham.

Finally, I have a letter from Terri Calder in Calgary expressing concerns about the proposed child care licensing regulations that are scheduled to be implemented in the spring of 2008.

The Speaker: Before we move on, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of people who have joined us in the public gallery today, who are here for Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 45. This is a special group. Principal Gail Brierley and librarian Linda Krauss are joined by seven students, I think it is, from the Nellie McClung school for girls, which is located in Oliver school in my constituency. These young women are members of the BLAST team, which is building leadership for action in schools today. They have waged a very successful campaign to advocate for the banning of power walls, so they have a vested interest in the outcome and passage of Bill 45. I'm just delighted they were able to join us today. I would ask the principal and librarian Krauss and the students to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Privilege
Misleading the House

The Speaker: Hon. members, earlier this week there was an exchange in the House with two hon. members with respect to a purported question of privilege, and I'm prepared to deal with that now. The chair and the table officers have considered the arguments advanced by the Official Opposition House leader on Monday and Tuesday afternoon in support of her purported question of privilege alleging that the Minister of Energy deliberately misled the Assembly in statements he made to the Assembly on April 30, 2007, concerning royalties. We've also considered the arguments made by the Minister of Energy in response to the purported question of privilege.

With respect to the preliminaries, there was proper notice given by the Official Opposition House Leader under Standing Order 15(2). The Speaker's office received a notice on Friday, November 2, 2007, at 10:40 a.m., so the two-hour requirement has been met.

Another important component in the question of privilege is whether the matter was raised at the earliest opportunity. When she was arguing this point on Monday, November 5, found on page 1791 of Alberta Hansard for that day, the hon. member provided references supporting her view that the question had been raised at the earliest opportunity and that while the Official Opposition believed the minister's statements to be misleading at the time, they required the alleged confirmation found in the Auditor General's annual report released Tuesday, October 2. The member referred to numerous purported questions of privilege from Manitoba concerning the issue of earliest possible opportunity. The chair researched this point and discovered that all the purported questions of privilege from Manitoba shared one other thing in common: they were all found not to be prima facie questions of privilege. To continue the substance of the issue, the chair finds that the matter was raised at the earliest opportunity.

From the member's statements the essence of the purported question of privilege is what the minister said in this Assembly on April 30, 2007; namely, that "there is nothing in any of those documents that would indicate to anybody that we have not collected a fair share of royalties for Albertans." According to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre the issue is whether this statement was deliberately misleading so as to constitute a contempt of the Assembly. As the chair has indicated when allegations of deliberately misleading the Assembly have arisen before, these are very serious allegations. The chair commented extensively on the origins and backgrounds of such charges in rulings found in Alberta Hansard for November 24, 2003, at pages 1803, 1804, and February 19, 2003, at pages 18 to 19, to mention only the most recent cases.

These purported questions of privilege allow members to allege that someone is deliberately misleading the Assembly, which is something they could not say in the ordinary course of debate under our rules of debate. The nature of this offence in the Parliament of the United Kingdom is set out in Erskine May, 23rd edition, at page 132.

The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt. In 1963 the House resolved that in making a personal statement which contained words which he later admitted not to be true, a former Member had been guilty of a grave contempt.

The reference is to the notorious Profumo affair, which members of a certain age will recall.

As the chair has noted before, there is really a two-part test to be met in these types of contempt applications. The Canadian House of Commons committee studying the allegation that a former Minister of National Defence had deliberately misled the House with respect to troops in Afghanistan in 2002 used the same test. The chair should note that in that case, the Eggleton affair, even though the Speaker of the House of Commons found there to be a prima facie question of privilege, the committee found that the minister had not deliberately misled the House.

The test adopted by the House committee and in previous rulings by this chair is articulated by David McGee in his book Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, second edition, where the Clerk of the New Zealand House of Representatives states at page 491:

There are two ingredients to be established when it is alleged that a member is in contempt on this ground: the statement must, in fact, have been misleading; and it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time the statement was made that it was incorrect and that, in making it, the member intended to mislead the House.

In this case the Opposition House Leader alleges that the statement by the Minister of Energy that “there is nothing in any of those documents that would indicate to anybody that we have not collected a fair share of royalties for Albertans” is misleading and that the minister intended to mislead the House. The chair cannot agree with either point. The minister was referring to documents that he tabled in the Assembly on April 16, 2007, Sessional Paper 250/2007. The minister indicated yesterday in the Assembly that some of the missing pages from the reports tabled can be found in his department’s library. Accordingly, they can be reviewed and evaluated.

The minister’s statement was clearly subjective when he referred to “a fair share of royalties.” The Assembly held a special debate on this issue of royalties on Monday, and the chair thinks that any fair observer would be hard-pressed to say there was any agreement on what constitutes “a fair share” of royalties. Accordingly, if the chair does not objectively view the minister’s statement as necessarily misleading, there is no reason to examine whether it was deliberately misleading.

It was interesting to the chair that the member raising this purported question of privilege referred to the Auditor General’s report as the basis for the allegation that the minister deliberately misled the Assembly. While the Auditor General as an officer of the Legislature performs important work for members, his views on policy do not supplant the views of those who have been chosen by the people of Alberta to represent them.

Accordingly, the chair does not find there to be a prima facie case of a question of privilege, and that concludes the matter.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I’d like to call the committee to order.

Bill 45
Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction)
Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m absolutely delighted to rise this afternoon to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 45. First, I would like to welcome, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre did, the students, part of the BLAST team from Nellie McClung and say thank you for the student advocacy you’ve put in. I think that’s a tremendous effort, and it does make a difference. Thank you for joining us today.

Bill 45 I think is a major step forward in terms of health for Albertans, so I hope that the Assembly will consider it very favourably this afternoon. I’d like to thank members in the Assembly for the support that they gave to this bill at second reading. There were a few issues raised at second reading which I do want to quickly address, but I do want to also say that since the bill has had the opportunity to sit over the summer and I’ve had the opportunity to consult with Albertans and hear from Albertans on it, I have to report to the House that the response has been overwhelmingly positive from all parts of the province and from all sectors.

There have been concerns raised, and I did engage in consultation with people who will be directly affected – retailers, for example – and have had a good opportunity to discuss the impact on the retail sector, but the enthusiasm that Albertans have for what we’re doing I think is very, very clear. In dealing specifically with questions that were raised, the Member for Edmonton-Centre asked that places from which tobacco products may not be sold be extended to include child care centres and schools as well as amusement and recreation facilities. I certainly am in sympathy with those views, but while developing the legislation, I can say that we took a strong look at what was already in place.

The federal government has a number of restrictions relating to the sale of tobacco, one of which is a prohibition on selling tobacco products to young persons in a public place or a place to which the public reasonably has access. Additionally, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act prohibits youth under the age of 18 from possessing or smoking tobacco in a public place.

When we crafted the bill, we looked at the number of things that we could include in it and made a conscious decision to go this far. There are lots of different things that could be added, and I hope, actually, over the years that this act will continue to be the leading act in the country with respect to the promotion of health through the cessation of tobacco use.

The other question that was raised was a question about vending machines. It should be clear to members of the House that the federal government has placed restrictions on vending machine locations. Vending machines are only allowed in bars, taverns, and beverage rooms or places to which the public does not reasonably have access, so it’s not necessary to include that again in this legislation.

The Member for Lethbridge-East commented on the investment in the tobacco industry by the government of Alberta. The only response I would have in this discussion, of course, is that that’s beyond the scope of this bill. That’s the subject for a different discussion.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner asked for additional prohibitions for smoking around children. Again, I’m quite in agreement with the sentiments expressed. In my personal world it would be against the law to smoke in a vehicle which has children present. I think there are a number of other circumstances, but this bill doesn’t go so far as to specifically delineate individual family situations. Again, there may be a time when we can actually do that, when we’ve moved the public to the point where that’s an acceptable thing to do, but I think the legislative process is an iterative process. It’s one where we shouldn’t be commanding all the time. It’s something where you actually have to move people to it.

So while I personally would favour that as part of the law – that people not smoke in a car, in a closed space where children are present, even, for that matter, in their own home where people are present – I can’t say that we would be agreeable to an amendment to do that in this act at this time. But it is the type of thing which I would ask the hon. member who raised the question and other hon. members to discuss in public, to talk about, to raise the public consciousness about the health effects on children, and particularly in smoking in enclosed spaces, in cars. The evidence is coming out to confirm what we intuitively know: that that is bad for children's health.

Legislation is only one tool that's available to us. While it's an important tool, I think the educational tool and the public discussion tool are equally important, and I think that's where we should go next with the issues that have been raised, until we're ready to actually make them part of legislation. Leadership, prevention, education initiatives, and tools included in the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy are very important ways to carry these messages forward.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View commented on looking at more sponsorship restrictions and enhanced education programs. As I noted a moment ago, provincial legislation is just one tool. The federal government also plays a role in regulating tobacco in Canada and currently restricts tobacco sponsorships for events or facilities.

I just want to indicate how much we believe that education is a crucial component in reducing tobacco use, and I want to again comment on the work of BLAST, building leadership for action in schools today, and the BLAST team at Nellie McClung. As I indicated and thanked them, and as the Member for Edmonton-Centre thanked them earlier, it is extremely important that we mobilize and activate the student citizenship in the discussion. That's where we can have a very effective impact, and I think the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Centre with respect to the BLAST team clearly indicate as well that this is a testament to the power of motivated students.

Clearly, these students get it. These students are ambassadors to others, and I've found over my years in politics that students talking to their parents can often be the most powerful instrument of change. Again, I want to thank the BLAST team that's here and the other students who've written to me talking about how they advocate in their own schools and their own communities and their own families because that is a very powerful message.

In addition to the BLAST program, other programs that we have include the young adult tobacco reduction strategy, which funds initiatives at colleges and universities; teaming up for tobacco-free kids, a tobacco prevention/reduction initiative; sport for life; kick the nic youth tobacco cessation program; the Alberta spit tobacco education program, or ASTEP; as well as an aboriginal tobacco-use strategy funding, which helps off-reserve aboriginal communities develop educational programs with an emphasis on the difference between sacred and recreational tobacco use.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there were questions raised about the proclamation date for this bill in the event that the Legislature passes it. We have posted proposed implementation time frames for discussion on the Health and Wellness website since June. The time frames suggest a staged approach, with the enhanced smoking ban that's proposed in this bill to be in place by January 1, 2008; the restrictions relating to display and advertising, the so-called power walls, by July 1, 2008; and sales restrictions in place by January 1, 2009.

Those were posted, Mr. Chairman, in answer to a commitment I made that we would consult about how these restrictions could be effectively implemented and take into account the concerns of retailers with respect to their ability to actually implement them, given, perhaps, the shortage of people available to actually do the revamps that are necessary.

However, I would say, Mr. Chairman, that I don't think it's too difficult for people to comply. They don't have to do the fancy work right away. Renovations can take time, but moving quickly, and with six months' anticipation, I think that by July 1 all retailers should be able to comply with this. I think that's not an unrealistic time frame to ask them to comply.

Mr. Chairman, those would be my comments in response to the questions or concerns that were raised at second reading. I believe the bill provides a comprehensive move forward. I believe that we can implement it on a timely basis. Yes, there are other things we could do, but I would urge the Assembly to pass this bill as it is now, and let's work through the education process, through the public discussion process, and through the continued legislative process to make it even better.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am just delighted to be continuing on with the debate of this bill. I'm just going to do a quick refresher because it has been many months since we last spoke about this, and I do have two amendments that I had actually prepared last spring that I am going to be bringing forward at this time although, in fact, the minister has addressed both of them.

The concept of creating public nonsmoking spaces and also banning point-of-sale power walls and prohibiting sales of tobacco products in pharmacies and in educational institutions has met a number of barriers and hurdles over the years. In fact, the first couple of tries didn't succeed at all, even though in 2002 the Mazankowski report, which was the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, did include recommendations to reduce tobacco use through reducing advertising and promotion. It was specifically targeted at youth.

In 2005 we did have one of the government backbenchers introduce legislation to ban smoking. That bill was supported by my colleagues in the Official Opposition, but the bill was amended to allow for smoking to continue in certain places, which I really objected to because part of the impetus behind that 2005 bill was to protect workers. We created a situation where we protected some workers depending on the location of their workplace. I felt that it was most unfortunate that we would protect some people and not protect others because of where they worked. That, in fact, was the situation until the current Minister of Health and Wellness introduced Bill 45 in the spring of 2007. As I mentioned, that bill did include three things: the province-wide smoking ban in all workplaces, including the bars, the casinos, and the bingo halls, which were excluded specifically the previous time; the ban on the power wall advertising; and prohibiting the sales in pharmacies and educational institutions.

Because I have the BLAST students here, I want to talk specifically about why banning power walls was so important. The most fertile recruiting ground for new smokers is youth, and particularly pretty young people. I first became a smoker when I was 12, and I was a really good example of what happens when you hook a young person on smoking at that age. I smoked with great dedication for 32 years. The tobacco industry made an awful lot of money out of me. And it did really impair my health. But you're addicted to that, and nicotine is a stronger addiction than heroin. It's very, very difficult to unhook yourself from that. My entire body had grown up with nicotine and tobacco in it. Everything about my body changing as I grew older was hooked into the drugs and the additives that are in tobacco, so it was a huge change for me when I quit smoking.

The ability to be able to make it less attractive to young people to smoke and to make it harder for them to do it and to empower them with the tools to protect themselves is really important. It's why the work of the Nellie McClung BLAST team was so important. It indicated the willingness of young people to recognize that and to work toward changing public policy, and they have been very successful at doing that.

Power walls are meant to be successful, and I'm sure they tested them until they got something that was very successful. Once again, what we had was power walls, or that sort of bank of advertising of the tobacco packages that appear at eye level behind the clerk at the point of sale. When you go to the cash register at a small convenience store or gas station, usually they have the gum and the candy down below the counter. On the counter are the lottery tickets. Then at eye level behind the clerk is the power wall with all the packs of cigarettes.

What they found was that young people who had never smoked – never smoked – could tell you the logo, the colour, the design: everything about various names of cigarette brands. Obviously, that was imbuing itself, and the advertising was really working and sinking into everybody's psyche. It was meant to stimulate impulse buying. You're standing there. You'll pick up a Mars bar and, "Oh, I'll have a couple of packs of cigarettes while I'm here." That's exactly what it was meant to do, and it was very successful.

I was very pleased to see the leadership from this particular minister of health. It did take us, I think it was, three ministers of health and two Premiers to get this far, so I was pleased to see the leadership that was brought forward by this minister of health in taking the extra steps in adding in the banning of power walls to this legislation. He didn't have to do it. We're not the first by any means. Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, P.E.I., and Nunavut have all preceded us in this, but I'm glad that Alberta wasn't dead last. I'm pleased to see that.

A couple of other things I want to say about those power walls. Teen smoking is rising in Alberta. We did have a drop in it for a while, and it has been rising recently. This is an area that we need to target aggressively, and I look to the leadership of groups like this BLAST team and others across Alberta to provide the leadership to their peers in not starting smoking, especially at a young age.

Now, I know that there was a hue and cry from retailers that they were going to really suffer as a result of the loss of advertising revenue if they had to dismantle the power walls. I've done a little bit of research, and I'm appreciative of the Action on Smoking and Health, who also provided me with some information. In fact, small-business people in Alberta can really work very close to the line sometimes to be making a profit for themselves. It often involves a lot of family members pitching in to make the family business a success.

Still, when you look at it, what's been shown in other provinces where the power walls have been banned is that at the most retailers suffered a 5 per cent reduction in their advertising revenue coming from the tobacco companies. If, for example, you had a corner store retailer or convenience store retailer who was making, let's say, $3,000 from their tobacco product advertising revenue, this would mean a difference of $150. You know what, Mr. Chairman? I think that 150 bucks is worth it. I understand the challenge that it can be for small-business people in this day and age, but I'm also confident that the retailers that I know and, I'm sure, the rest of the retailers in Alberta will recognize that that $150 or that small amount is well worth it in order to protect the next generation and hopefully convince some of the existing generation of smokers to quit.

One other issue that I wanted to bring to the minister's attention is that as far as I can discover, a regular Blue Cross drug plan does not cover the smoking cessation drugs and patches and gum and things, so unless you're on a specialized or an enhanced plan through your workplace – and some people are, but a lot of people aren't – you are paying full freight on the cost of smoking cessation. I would think, given the cost to our health care of people that are coming in with COPD, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, for example, and other effects of long-time smoking, that it would be in our best interest to try and assist people to quit smoking. Maybe I could ask the minister to have a discussion with Blue Cross the next time he's out there about whether they couldn't be covering smoking cessation products like – I can't remember the brand name now.

Dr. Swann: Nicorette?

Ms Blakeman: No. Goodness knows, I was on that drug for long enough.

The gums and the pharmaceuticals and the patches: as far as I could tell, unless you're on an enhanced program that specifically covered it, the regular Blue Cross coverage of drugs does not cover it, and frankly a lot of people – I think it's about half the people in Alberta – don't have Blue Cross coverage at all, so then they don't have access to that at all. That's something that we could look to, and I think it would be a good investment from the government.

Now, I do have a couple of amendments I'd like to bring forward, Mr. Chairman, and they have in fact been referenced already by the minister. The first one that I would like to bring for people is an amendment to section 9, striking out "on Proclamation," and substituting "on January 1, 2008." I have already supplied the table with the amendments.

The Chair: Could you just give us a moment for the pages to distribute them. We'll refer to this as amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you.

The Chair: We're ready to go. You may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The amendment that is now before us, amendment A1 – in fact, the date on the bottom is June 13, 2007, so I was anticipating this some time ago. I really felt that we didn't need to be giving such a long lead time to the retailers to be taking down those power walls. I think you would really have had to not be exposed to any media in Alberta not to be aware that this bill was first introduced last spring, had quite a bit of debate at that time, then was on the website, and an additional consultation was solicited throughout the summer on this.

I felt that people had really had this top of mind since last summer, and waiting for another full year for them to be able to take down a display is really not necessary. To my mind I thought: why are we allowing something to stay in place that could entice how many more young people to smoke in that intervening period of time? I have a lot of small-business people in downtown Edmonton, Mr. Chairman, and I have consulted with a number of them on an informal and formal basis around this. They didn't seem to feel that there would need to be a huge amount of time involved in doing this, certainly not a year, which is what we were talking about, from summer of '07 to summer of '08, which is what the government was contemplating.

So I really felt that all things could be done together with a January 1, 2008, proclamation date; that is, to ban smoking in public places and all workplaces as of January 1, 2008, to remove the power walls from the retail businesses, and to remove the sales of tobacco products in the pharmacies and in educational institutions. We're seven weeks out from that date at this point. I still think that's a possible achievement, and I would really like to see us do it.

I don't see the point of waiting the extra six months. I don't see what we gain from that, and I can see what we can lose from it.

I ask the members to support me in this amendment to have the proclamation date set for all parts of this bill for January 1, 2008. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I agree with virtually everything the hon. member said except for the part where she said: could we please support the amendment? I'll explain why. In my opening remarks I addressed comments that were made in discussion of this bill in second reading back in June and indicated that timing for implementation, in our view, ought to be staged. Now, I would be delighted, actually, to have it all implemented on January 1, 2008. I think it's important that the ban in public places piece be implemented at that time frame, and I'm going to be working hard to achieve that on a proclamation. But I also undertook to consult and to talk to retailers and others and heard them, heard what they had to say about the changes they need to make.

Now, I will tell you that I'm not personally convinced that it's going to be a real difficulty or a hardship to comply with this bill. In fact, I don't think it's going to be a hardship to comply with this bill. However, there were some comments, some things brought to my attention by some of the people that I consulted with with respect to concerns about the safety of people in their workplace, for example convenience stores: if they had to put cigarettes under the counter, whether their safety provisions would be in place if they had to turn their back on customers, and those sorts of things.

Now, I'll tell you this. I didn't go into a lot of detail about whether there was any merit to their position with respect to that, and quite frankly I think the accommodations can be made very, very easily, at least on a temporary basis. It may take longer for convenience stores to make changes. But the bottom line, the commitment that I made in the discussion, was that we would have a reasonable time for implementation if at all possible. I think that giving them to July 1 to make those adaptations is reasonable.

The larger question with respect to sales in pharmacies is a little bit more difficult for some people who have stores. I have a letter from a retailer in northern Alberta who is an independent pharmacy who leases space inside another store and is going to have to actually change his whole operation unless the store that he leases from agrees to get out of the sale of cigarettes. Now, those are things they can do, but I think it's fair to give them time to do it, so I would ask that we not adopt this amendment, that we do allow the bill to come into effect on proclamation so that we can indeed proceed with the proclamation, hopefully, on January 1 for the nonsmoking piece of it. The proposal I'm taking forward is July 1 with respect to the power wall ban and January 1, 2009, with respect to sale in pharmacies.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just will be very brief because I would support this amendment. After all of the number of months and years that we've been talking about this bill, I think that the people who are selling smoking products are more than aware that it's coming. I think they're more than prepared for this to pass, and I think that it would take them a very, very short time to actually comply with this, which is why I am supporting this. I think they're ready, and to put it off for another six months really – who knows?

It may be just one kid less that isn't going to start smoking, and that would be worth it.

The Chair: Are there others on the amendment?

Are you ready for the question on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a second amendment, that I'd like to put forward at this time, also at the table, which I suppose we would now call amendment A2, around locations where smoking products could not be sold. Could I get those distributed?

The Chair: Yes. We'll distribute them now, and we'll just give the pages a moment to do that.

Okay. You may proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is amending section 6, the proposed section 7.3, which is the section: "Sale of tobacco in certain places prohibited." Specifically, the way the legislation reads now is that "no person shall sell tobacco products or offer tobacco products for sale in any of the following places."

What we already have is:

- (a) a health facility in which one or more health professionals regulated under the Health Professions Act or another enactment provide services;
- (b) the campus of a public post-secondary institution under the Post-secondary Learning Act;
- (c) a pharmacy;
- (d) a retail store if
 - (i) a pharmacy is located in the retail store, or
 - (ii) customers of the pharmacy can enter the . . . store directly or by use of a corridor.

So, in other words, a pharmacy that's attached to another retail space.

My concern about this was that there are still places where you end up with a lot of younger people congregating – frankly, we want them to congregate there – where we still see tobacco products sold, and I would like to address that. What is being anticipated here – and I'll skip the first one and come back to it – is a school or a school building. One of the things we're contemplating or that my caucus would like to see us move towards is more community schools. We could see a situation in the future, for example, where you have a tuck shop or a small shop in a community school in which things are being sold. We actually have those kinds of venues in some of our schools now where, you know, candy and pop and things like that are sold. I wanted to make sure that we wouldn't be allowing or that it couldn't be anticipated in the future that tobacco products would be sold anywhere in a school or a school building.

I also wanted to make sure that we were including facilities that are used for sports, recreation, arts, and culture; in other words, arenas, theatre spaces, other places where we really want everybody to be and to feel comfortable. They also often have vendors who are selling a variety of confectionery, chocolate bars and things like that, but also often tobacco products. I wanted to be very clear that they would not be allowed to sell tobacco products.

The third one is pretty obvious, but I just wanted to make darn sure it wasn't going to happen, and that was to say: in any daycare facility under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. That one sounds like something that's pretty obvious. You wouldn't sell tobacco in a daycare space, but we're looking at daycare spaces being in all kinds of buildings and associated with all kinds of other enterprises at this point, and I thought: better safe than sorry.

Really, I was trying to cover any additional space where we might have younger people congregating or where we'd like younger people to be congregating. That was the intent behind this amendment.

I know that I have spoken either on or off the record to the minister of health, and there was a feeling that this could be dealt with under regulations, but as always, Mr. Chairman, I really don't like things being added under regulation. Because it is done behind closed doors, it can be both given and taken away by members of cabinet without consultation with the public. It's harder for the public and even members of the opposition to get access to those regulations and to find them easily online or through the Queen's Printer. I really prefer that it's in the legislation, which is the other reason why I did the amendment and didn't just leave it to the good intentions of the minister.

Those are my reasonings behind bringing forward this amendment. I think it's worthwhile to be absolutely clear about what we anticipate here and that we really don't want those tobacco products sold widely at all. I can envision a point in time where – it's still a legal substance to consume, and adults are welcome to do that – they'd have to be going to very particular places to purchase those products and that it wouldn't just be easily accessible. You wouldn't be able to just run in anywhere and pick up tobacco products.

The harder it is to get those products, the more likely it is that people will either stop smoking or never start. Again, I'm speaking from personal experience on this. The major reason why I quit smoking was that it got so inconvenient, it drove me crazy. I'd been elected for a number of years at that point. You know, we were in this thing where the smoking rules that were coming in really made it inconvenient to smoke, and that turned out to be a very good thing. I was spending way too much time thinking about where I would be able to go to smoke and how long it would take me to get there and how long it would take me to get back and did I need to have a coat and was I going outside. I thought: "Why am I spending so much of my life thinking about having a cigarette? My whole life is being consumed by this. It's a colossal waste of time and energy." That was a real impetus in getting me to stop smoking.

When I look at how easy it is – you know, I can remember a story of a friend who went in to see her doctor. She'd gained a couple of pounds, and she just marched right out. There was a convenience store across the street, and over she marched and bought another pack of cigarettes and started smoking again. I thought: if only that convenience store hadn't been across the street. If it had been a little bit harder for her to find that pack of cigarettes, the likelihood that she would have started again I think would have been severely diminished. That's what I was shooting for here.

I ask for my colleagues' support in the Assembly for amendment A2. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I don't disagree with the sentiment that the hon. member has expressed in bringing forward the amendment. I'm not aware of any daycare facilities where they actually sell tobacco products, but I suppose it could be possible.

Schools and school buildings across the province. School boards have routinely banned the use of tobacco products on their premises, and that would include selling. Although laudatory, that's probably redundant.

The facilities used for sports and recreation, cultural, or artistic activities is something that I had actually contemplated bringing forward in the bill, but it begged a lot of questions and raised a lot of issues that I just decided were not worth dealing with at this point in time.

The sentiments, again, are very laudable, obviously. I want to tell you that in the discussions I've had with Albertans over the course of the summer, the number of times that I've heard from Albertans that what made it possible for them to stop was the inconvenience was quite heartening, actually. But having said that, I can't encourage members to support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the amendment to Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. I also want to acknowledge the presence of young leaders, the group known as BLAST, building leadership for action in schools today. How refreshing to see young people pushing for the kind of action that this bill is about and the debate that we are having on it. I want to thank them for their interest and for the leadership that they are providing to their own age mates, their peers, and in fact for providing some pressure and encouragement to us to enact the kind of legislation that's before us.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that in general the bill is good, but it can be improved. It can be made better. This particular amendment, amendment A2, moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I think will make it better, improve it even if there is some risk of redundancy, as the Minister of Health and Wellness has indicated while expressing his tacit approval for what's being proposed in this amendment but suggesting that he would not support the amendment because of the risk of redundancy. I think that minor risk is worth taking so long as the amendment makes clear and clarifies the language and that particular section which does list public places where tobacco can't be sold.

I think we should extend that list as per this amendment, particularly to schools and school buildings. Schools and school buildings routinely prohibit the sale, but they're not required by law, I think, to do so. Sports facilities, recreational facilities, cultural and artistic activities are other places which are public places and are not covered in this list. So I think it would be a useful and helpful improvement to the proposed bill to have these places that are proposed in the amendment included in that list. So I'm happy to support amendment A2, Mr. Chairman.

One last point I want to make. "A day care facility under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act." It may be true, Mr. Chairman, that the daycare facilities that exist in the province at the moment may be highly unlikely places we would find tobacco products being sold, but who knows? The scene might change. As we hear through the media, there are very, very large and wealthy foreign multinationals that have indicated interest in moving into the daycare facilities field. They are private businesses, and they certainly are interested in this arena of activity because they want to of course enhance the returns on their investment, and selling tobacco would not be seen as something that would be considered by them as an illegitimate activity unless it is specifically outlined so in a piece of legislation such as the one that's before us or some other action is taken. So as a precaution I think that subsection (e) in the amendment that will be added to the existing list of 7.3(a), (b), (c), (d) is a good addition to that list.

I think all of these three additions as proposed in amendment A2 certainly merit our support, and I'm happy to do so, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes, I would like to support amendment A2 to this bill as well, particularly the one where it says about facilities used for sport, recreation, culture, or artistic activities and particularly the one for sport.

I know that I've been in numerous sport venues that aren't necessarily public buildings, and they have sort of a bar attached. I really don't think that having everyone sitting in a room where the air is blue is a good example for kids that are coming off a hockey rink or off the soccer pitch or, in fact, any of the indoor tennis and those sorts of things. I really would support it because I think these have to be labelled.

I'd like to just augment, I guess, what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had said about the daycares. When we look and see what's going on in this province where smaller daycares are closing for various reasons – some of which may be questionable, but that's my opinion – and we do see a large daycare come in that is private and wouldn't be under the same microscope in terms of their behaviour, I think it's very important that we do have these children protected. Even if it was the building and it forced people to go outside of the building, it increases the cessation of people quitting smoking.

I think that if these things are clearly labelled, it just strengthens what is probably already a good bill that has been many, many years in the coming. I would like to support that and hope that it would be supported.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A2?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill as it is. The next person I have on the list is the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege to rise in the House and to debate Bill 45 again. I appreciate the minister saying that he was looking at addressing the questions that I brought up this spring. I guess I just want to re-emphasize those again. We live in a free and democratic society, and with that we say that we respect the rule of law. I personally feel that the most important duty of government is to protect its citizens, and that entails their life, being first and foremost, their liberty, and their property.

What I want to go over again is the fact that the minister said that we perhaps need more evidence on the harm or the danger that is caused to infants or young children in a home or in a vehicle. I would have to say that we've got more than enough evidence. If we're banning it in the workplace because it's known to kill adults, we certainly know that it would be more harmful for young children and infants. So I'm disappointed that the government didn't take the initiative to bring forth an amendment. I thought that it was a good enough one that they'd do that. I guess next time I need to do my due diligence and bring in an amendment myself.

I just want to talk about the importance. When he talks about the law and not wanting to be intrusive on some of the areas where we've already stepped in, perhaps, then, what he's saying is that he's going to repeal those laws. We are not allowed to jump in our vehicle and drive our children to a soccer function or anywhere else without having them securely strapped in with seat belts. The risk involved in a car accident versus a young child who's being exposed to smoke is certainly, I would say, in the same neighbourhood as the long-term detrimental effects on that child with the number of allergies and asthma and other problems that we know affect our young children today.

Even probably the most important reason why we need to amend this and we need to put in regulations that prohibit smoking around young children is the fact that those adults that have chosen that themselves and are smoking automatically expose their children to that. We have many laws. We have the children's helpline. If they want to be parents of ill repute, the children can call if there are other problems going on. We cannot jump on our bicycles and go for a bicycle ride without putting helmets on our children. All of those things are there to protect children who can't protect themselves.

I still want to continue to push this government to realize the importance of protecting young children in the presence of adults and the fact that they can and will smoke in their own private places. It'd be very easy to pass legislation to prohibit this and to put fines in place as we do for seat belts, for bicycle helmets, and also for child abuse. We have no problem going into a home if they're calling the 1-800 number.

The other, I guess, most important reason why we need to do this is because, as I said earlier, those adults who have chosen to expose themselves to this think that there's no harm with it and that it's okay to expose my grandchildren or my children or my nieces and my nephews. It becomes almost a dividing fight inside families on what they can do.

The most interesting thing to me – I listened to a grandfather in my constituency when he was talking to me about this. He'd smoked longer than the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I think he was saying over 60 years, and he said he couldn't quit. His young grandson, though, had asthma, and the doctor finally wrote a nasty letter that the mother gave to him that said: you are not looking after your child if you allow him to go visit his grandfather and see him, because he smokes around him and he has asthma attacks. That grandfather quit smoking the next day.

There is something there. We can send a message when we're told: "You know what? We're affecting our children, our nieces, our nephews." I think that we're being negligent on this part and that we're looking after the adults, and we're talking about the teenagers and being exposed, but what about those who are exposed that don't have the ability to move themselves? I would very much like to see this government bring forth new legislation that starts to protect those, the most vulnerable in our society – and that's our children and our infants – that can't get away from this. I hope that we can see more in the future on this.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 45 in debate in committee. I listened to the Minister of Health and Wellness when he made his introductory remarks as we started this debate this afternoon in the committee on this bill. I find him very persuasive when he talks about the need for education, whereas some punitive penalties – I deem those as important to discourage Albertans from smoking in public places or selling tobacco products in retail stores or other measures that are included here, but education is also important.

I think the young students and their presence here today is a good example where that education should start. It is true that we learn to smoke by being with peers who smoke, and particularly in teen years the approval of peers is very, very important. Being able to be with peers and enjoy their approval is very, very important. So it's encouraging and very hopeful to see young school students taking leadership in educating, playing sort of an educative role vis-à-vis their own peers, and I'm sure they have an impact on people of our age and perhaps their parents as well. [interjection] There is the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who I know is somewhat disturbed, I guess, by this move forward.

Mr. Chairman, it's refreshing to see how things change in this Legislature. Over the last 10, 11 years we were at times quite restrained from talking about banning smoking in public places and other places, but it's good to see that climate change and us proceeding with a bill such as this.

The bill would have been much improved, Mr. Chairman, had certainly amendment A2 been approved by this House. Amendment A1 I think underlined the urgency with which we should undertake to implement the steps proposed in this bill once it becomes law. So the stepwise or staged implementation of the bill as proposed by the minister I think does not reflect that urgency, in my judgment. If some retailers or people who have these power walls in their stores need some time to make changes, certainly this could have been done in the next six months. I don't think we need more than a year to bring all parts of this bill into implementation.

So I'm disappointed that the minister hasn't seen it appropriate to take these amendments and at least give some sort of undertaking to the House that his proposed stages by which he's proposing to implement this bill would be reconsidered, that in fact, although he cannot accept amendment A1, he is willing to expedite the timetable and the introduction of stages by the end of which all of this bill will become enforced, not only proclaimed but enforced in the province.

Mr. Chairman, the point was made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on including drugs that are used for helping people cease smoking. Smoking is an addiction. It's a highly addictive habit. Tobacco is an addictive drug, and its cessation is important not only for our health but also for our pockets. We know that when we are not well, those diseases that are caused by smoking or by inhaling second-hand smoke not only prevent us from enjoying good health, but they also affect our ability to be productive citizens, they affect our ability at our workplace, they affect families, and they have destructive results sometimes.

The cessation of smoking and the use of drugs to help people stop smoking is an area which I think should be considered for coverage under our health care legislation. It should be seen as a medical necessity, a necessary medical expense, and therefore covered under our health care plan. It's a good suggestion, and I think I would like the minister to certainly reconsider his position on this and perhaps bring back some amendments to this legislation at an appropriate time to provide that coverage for drugs that are prescribed to help people to stop smoking.

The last point that I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is this: while the minister has not at the moment found himself in a position to accept the two amendments that were made, these amendments I think need to be paid some attention. I wonder if the minister would tell the House if he's willing to bring some amendments back to the bill in a certain specified period of time, two years from now or whenever. He's hoping that education will have an impact on people, and at that stage he'll move with the public opinion and bring in some of these changes. I wonder if he will comment on the wisdom of bringing this bill back for making some changes in it or if he would in fact put in a formal review of the bill in two years so at that time he can make some changes in the bill resulting from the review. The review itself could certainly invite people like the young people sitting up there to come before us in public hearings and give their input or some other interested parties to come before us and do the same.

I wonder what the minister's position is on, in fact, including in the bill a need to review it in a couple of years from now in light of the experience that we gather over the next two years once the bill is implemented.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hancock: Just briefly, Mr. Chairman, to respond to the last speaker. I think that legislation should always be available for evergreening. I think that it's one of the most important pieces of work that we do in this Legislature. Oftentimes when we put out the lineup of bills that are available for the session, people chide the fact that the majority of those bills are not on major policy items, and indeed they're not.

Every piece of legislation that we have in this province should be reviewed on a periodic basis and updated and made whole. So I think it would be absolutely appropriate to do that with respect to this bill. Does it need to be put into the bill? I don't believe so. There are a number of mechanisms that we have now. We have the policy field committees, which can embrace that kind of a review of their own volition should they wish to do so. As I said in my earlier remarks, I think that we should revisit this. We should make sure that our smoking legislation provides leadership in the country in respect to this area. That's my personal view.

Now, I heard the hon. member ask me for a commitment to bring it back, and I have to say that I'm expecting between now and two years from now to have to reapply for my job, and if he would be so good as to ensure that there was nobody running against me, I could make that kind of a commitment, perhaps. So I would invite him to use his powers of persuasion on his party and those of the Liberal Party because I would be happy to continue in this role, but I have to admit that I am at the pleasure of the people of Edmonton-Whitemud as to whether or not I could be back here in two years and bring that forward myself.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise in Committee of the Whole on Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. This in conjunction with another bill before us, Bill 37, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007, will go a long way in helping us to set the conditions to reduce the attractiveness of tobacco and to reduce the impact of second-hand smoke in our environment. Clearly, it's going to assist in preventing illness and disability and death. It's progressive. It's long overdue.

From a health perspective we've been pressing for provincial leadership on this issue for 20 years. It's great that the provincial government has finally come around and with pressure like BLAST and many other groups is bringing it to the Legislature. I want to acknowledge Action on Smoking and Health and Physicians for a Smoke-Free Canada. A long and tedious battle to try to get governments to stand up for public health. Be that as it may, it's here, and we're certainly going to support it in its many dimensions.

I would also like to add my voice to that of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre and others who feel that now the next phase needs to examine supports for cessation. We have a tremendous number of people addicted to tobacco in the province. We could tremendously reduce our health care costs if we could assist them as early as possible to get off tobacco and tobacco products, and we should be providing accessible, affordable cessation treatments within our purview. It's a no-brainer in terms of saving health care dollars in a system that is already tremendously overtaxed and another opportunity to really make Alberta the healthiest place in Canada.

I would admonish the government to not wait to be badgered and coerced to take the next steps. We have been waiting 20 long years for this kind of leadership in the province. It's now important to take the leadership, continue on, and press for significant supports which are not covered under our present medical plan or health insurance plan or drug insurance plan generally. There's a real opportunity for leadership here.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to very briefly comment on the request from the Minister of Health and Wellness for me to arrange, certainly, for my party to not have someone run against him in the next election. I know that I have made it public that I won't run in my own constituency next time around. That's for sure. You know, we have a candidate already nominated, so I have no chance of changing my mind there. But I can assure the minister that I won't run against him if he accepts my suggestions here now. There has to be a fair exchange here. I won't challenge him in his constituency as a candidate provided – provided – he accepts the suggestions that I have made to him. I think that will improve the bill. That certainly would be another feather in his cap if he did accept the suggestion and would also save him this competition from an impossible source. That's me. I won't run.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be brief. I think it's quite clear that this is a bill that certainly must pass. The hon. member in front of me said that he's been waiting for it for 20 years. Well, actually, I've been waiting for a bill like this for 40. My father died 40 years ago of lung cancer. In those days it was just called cancer. Certainly, that connection had not been made to smoking, and yes, he was a heavy smoker right from the time when he was 14 years of age.

I remember shortly after that there was, I believe, the Surgeon General of the United States – I'm not exactly sure what his title was, but his name was Koop, and he looked like Uncle Sam – that came on television. He was reviled and he was made fun of, but he stuck to his guns. Forty years ago he was making that connection. So I am very honoured to be able to stand up in this House today and say: yes, I support this bill.

I've also been fortunate in my life to travel in Middle Eastern countries and see young kids smoking, anywhere from the ages of 5, 6, 7, up.

Our job is not done. Because we can protect Albertans and because we can do this in Canada, I don't believe our job is done. I think that this will be a successful bill. We'll go forward, and I'm hoping that we can take our leadership and go beyond our boundaries.

One of the things that I hope will be changed with this bill is the fact that we take in $890 million in taxes, but we only spend $9 million on cessation programs.

The other thing that I would hope would be changed is that we would take the money that we put into the heritage fund into tobacco companies and put it into – I'm not sure where – probably something that would be a sustainable stock market item. We really can't be two-faced about this. If we say, "Smoking is bad for you; we've passed this bill," surely we will take those monies out of the heritage trust fund.

The other people that we are protecting, who probably will never know that they have been protected, are those who are exposed to second-hand smoke. Forty years ago second-hand smoke wasn't even a consideration, and now we have all of the evidence and research to prove that, in fact, you can get cancer from second-hand smoke.

I support this bill, and I'm delighted to stand up and know that 40 years later what killed my father will not kill someone else's father.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and I'll try to be brief. I just don't want to let this opportunity pass with the brilliant young ladies from Nellie in the audience today. I'm going to provide them with some homework. You've probably got more than enough homework, but a little bit more won't hurt you.

Yesterday in this Assembly I pointed out the two numbers that my colleague from Lethbridge-East just referred to; that is, the $890 million in tobacco tax revenue that we're projected to take in this year and the woefully inadequate $9 million that we spend in tobacco reduction strategies and smoking cessation strategies. Also, I think it important – and the young ladies in the gallery can go back to the Hansard from yesterday and look at these comments – that in question period back on May 31 of this year the health minister also acknowledged that the direct cost to Alberta Health as a result of smoking activity is $471 million.

Ms Blakeman: How much?

Mr. R. Miller: Four hundred and seventy-one million dollars. Even more disturbing is an acknowledgement from the health minister of indirect costs to Alberta's economy through lost production, time taken off work, all of those things: $1.296 billion or nearly $1.3 billion. These are staggering figures that I think just add fuel to the fire when it comes to the good work that the girls from the BLAST program are doing.

The other thing – again it's in the comments from Hansard yesterday – I just want to put it on the record so that they can hear it when they're here and perhaps for them to check into this. On October 10 of this year, Mr. Chairman, Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger from California, a Republican I might point out, signed a bill that would make it illegal to smoke in a vehicle if someone under the age of 18 is present. That's exactly what the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner was talking about a little while ago, and I would like to draw the attention of the health minister to that. Perhaps in his next amending bill we can follow the lead of our colleagues in the California Legislature and take a bold step forward in terms of protecting young children as well.

Those comments I wanted to get on the record in front of the BLAST team from Nellie, and as I said, a little bit of homework for you to go and check out more in terms of Bill 37 and the extra tobacco taxes that we're going to be collecting in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 45 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 8
Vital Statistics Act

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move an amendment to Bill 8, which I believe you have for circulation. It's a very simple amendment to sections 42(4) and (6) striking out the term "the Chief Medical Officer" wherever it occurs and substituting "a medical officer of health."

The Chair: The amendment will be referred to as A1, and we will just allow the pages a moment to distribute it.

Okay. You may proceed, hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I won't dwell on this. It's simply a terminology change but an important one. The sections basically deal with disinterment, I think, and they refer to the chief medical officer of health, who is one person in the province. It should refer to a medical officer of health, which would then make it possible for the medical officer of health in any region to sign the appropriate certificates.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the explanation provided by the minister of health. I've had opportunity to consult with a former medical officer of health over the last few minutes. We have no problems with this amendment, and we'll support it.

Thank you.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I also would like to express the position of our caucus that there's really nothing in this amendment that we have any concern about. It's essentially updating and changing the language of the existing piece of legislation, so we will be happy to support the amendment.

The Chair: Are there others?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Now back on the bill as amended. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. There were some issues brought up yesterday in Committee of the Whole, and I'd like to have an opportunity to respond to them.

With respect to the registration of conjoined twins we will leave this to the discretion of the doctors as this is a medical question. If the doctors complete two notices of birth, then we will register them as we would now.

With respect to the responsibilities and encumbrances of the registrar with respect to births there is no deviation from the act as it currently sits.

In response to what is prescribed evidence for a delayed birth, this evidence will be prescribed in regulation. Some examples include medical proof, such as a doctor's record and affidavit, a certified copy of a church record regarding the birth.

Where a combined name creates an offensive name, the registrar would have the discretion and could trump the requirement to combine a name. Regarding how the registrar would determine if a proposed name is offensive or not, any names received that are obviously not acceptable will be refused by the registrar.

Regarding who has charge of a deserted newborn, this is not legislated under vital stats regulations or legislation. Generally it's a social worker with Children's Services. If Children's Services has provided a name, the registrar will accept that name. Where no name is submitted, the registrar will name the child George, Bill, anything but Sue.

I'd also like to thank the folks in Service Alberta: Barry Haugrud, Katherine Olson, and Rosanne Dofher for their assistance in drafting these amendments.

Thank you.

3:50

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for providing those explanations to some of the questions that I raised yesterday. I'm not sure what he has against the name Sue. I know a lot of Sues that would probably raise their eyebrows at that, but hopefully the registrar will disregard your comments and leave that in his basket of names to choose from.

I do have a few further questions, Mr. Chairman. I indicated yesterday that for the most part our caucus is supportive of Bill 8 and doesn't see any particular reason to hold things up here. At the same time, I think some of these questions are worthy of asking and getting the government on record in terms of the thought process that went into drafting the bill the way that it was done.

Carrying on with names, then, under section 15(1)(a) it requires that the person be known as a different name before the age of 10 – this is in discussion of changing names – so I'm just wondering if the member might be able to outline for us why that particular line was drawn at the age of 10 as opposed to eight or 12 or whatever. What thought process went into choosing 10? Also, then, what processes will be in place to ensure that the registrar confirms that an individual was in fact known by a different name prior to having attained the age of 10 years old?

Also, then, I'm wondering about if a parent or a guardian applies to have their child's name changed and the child is over 12 years old, then the child's consent is also required. We're wondering why the age of 12 was decided on. In the one instance it's 10 years old, and in the other it's 12 years old. I'm questioning whether or not a child of 12 is responsible enough to have a say in the matter in the first place, so that would be something I'd be looking for a little more clarification on.

Section 15(13) refers to the registrar's own judgment of the acceptability of a person's first name. We talked about that a minute ago. Again, I referenced yesterday some of the concerns around cultural sensitivity, wondering what sorts of training the registrar might undergo that would qualify them to make that decision in terms of cultural sensitivity.

Section 19(5) discusses allowing a stillborn's name to be amended on application to the registrar only if the stillborn's birth was registered without a first name or if the name given was considered unacceptable by the registrar. According to a government document many cases of stillborn children exist where the parents are traumatized and try to distance themselves from the event, yet later, of course, they may return and want to name the stillborn child as some sort of form of closure.

Part 2. Just one question in terms of the registration of marriages. It refers in this section to a requirement that a person complete a marriage registration document in accordance with the regulations. Of course, we're assuming that those regulations would simply dictate the process for filling out the document, Mr. Chairman, and not the content of the document itself, but I'm curious whether or not that's the case. If the regulations, in fact, touch upon the content of the documents themselves, then we would like an explanation as to why that needs to be done through regulation. Once again, my standard pet peeve about regulations being set or at least having the opportunity to be set behind closed doors, out of sight of public scrutiny, public debate, and public input. I'm not ever suggesting that that is standard practice, but certainly we understand that it could be done that way, so that's the concern there.

Under part 4, which deals with the change of sex, section 30 deals with the amendment of records on change of sex. I guess the only question I have there is in the case where an individual whose birth is registered in another jurisdiction changes sexes, why, then, did we decide to remove the requirement to notify that other jurisdiction of the change? If the member might be able to provide some explanation as to why that was done.

Part 5 deals with deaths in Alberta. Section 33(4) states that when an interim medical certificate of death is issued, it shall be delivered to the registrar within 60 days. The previous act mandated that it be delivered within 30 days. I'm curious whether or not the member could share with us why the period has been doubled and if there was a specific reason for making that change. I would have thought, if anything, in today's technologically advanced society that we would have less trouble than ever making that notification. Just curious why that time period has been doubled.

We talked a minute ago, with the amendment that was moved by the health minister and approved by this Assembly, about disinterment and the fact that, well, originally the proposed legislation talked about the chief medical officer; now we've changed it to a medical officer of health. Nevertheless, it states that a medical officer of health can make a decision regarding whether or not a body can be disinterred and that that decision is final. Is there, perhaps, a need for some sort of an appeal process or an appeal mechanism? Whether or not Service Alberta contemplated that when they were drafting this, or if they're completely comfortable that the decision now being made by a medical officer of health should be final, without appeal is a question I'd like to have answered if possible.

Part 6 deals with the administration of the act. There's a provision in there that states that the registrar may at his or her discretion refuse an application for registration under the act if it appears to the registrar that it's being done for fraudulent or improper purposes. Certainly, that would seem to be a good thing that we would have that power there, but again I'm just concerned that the registrar would have the proper training or background in place to properly identify fraudulent applications. Is there perhaps a need for the registrar to have training and a law enforcement background? That's the question I would have there.

I think we're almost done. Section 56(1) expands on the previous act by allowing the registrar to investigate, refer the matter to the police service, or refer the matter to an investigator. Again, I'm just wondering what sort of training the registrar would receive in respect to investigating these fraudulent activities. Should we not, perhaps, just be automatically allowing the registrar to refer the matter to a law enforcement body as opposed to the way that it reads right now? Particularly the word "investigate" is what I'm questioning there.

There's a lot more, I suppose, that I could question on some of the specifics of this bill, but frankly that's as much as I've had time to go through over the last little while, so I'll leave it at that and look forward to some responses from the member or the Minister for Service Alberta at the appropriate time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a remark to make about registration of marriages, which is something I know something about because I've married so many people over the years.

An Hon. Member: How many, Bruce?

Dr. B. Miller: Hundreds and hundreds, which could be misinterpreted. Or it's ambiguous to say that you've married somebody many, many times, but I have presided at weddings, marriages. So the word used here is "solemnizing" marriage in Alberta. That's a good word, solemnizing.

It's interesting that the registrar must register a marriage within one year of receiving all of the information. I didn't think it took that long to process the information. When I performed a marriage, ministered at a marriage, I had to actually turn in the documents within 48 hours, and then presumably the office could deal with the matter. Then if the married couple wanted to get a wallet-sized, laminated marriage licence from vital statistics, they could apply for it.

Now, one of the interesting things in my transition from being a minister in a church, performing marriages there, to being an MLA – as MLAs we can preside at weddings, too – was that in a church context there actually is a book in which you register marriages. As I understand it, every church in the province has a registration book. Actually, you can record marriages, baptisms, and funerals in that book so that if the documentation that was filled out at the wedding somehow goes astray and doesn't actually reach vital statistics, then you can refer to this book because you recorded the names and the witnesses of the marriage. So you can provide that documentation.

The interesting thing: as an MLA we're not required to register that anywhere. We fill out a form, which we give to the couple. So if they hang on to it, okay, then maybe they would be able to submit that. If there was no registration of the marriage and a year had gone by, they would be able to submit that, and that's proof. Right? It's interesting that the MLA doesn't have any proof that he or she can provide, which I think is something that could be covered, actually, through changes in the regulations, whatever, to be able to have the MLA record that somewhere so that it could be copied if the couple comes back a year, two years, three years later and says: I couldn't get a wallet-sized licence from vital statistics because they say there's no evidence that you married me. Well, there is evidence because in my office I have a book in which I registered that marriage. It's a simple thing, but it seems to me that that's a way of covering it. I think that's really important. I leave that for consideration. Maybe that's something that is left for the regulations and not to be included actually in the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Chair, before we finish, I thank the members for their questions, and I'll make an attempt to answer them.

I think the first issue that you brought up: why age 10? Well, it's currently in the legislation, and we're going to leave it at that.

The question on marriages. It will be better defined within the regulations. Remember that the Marriage Act is not being updated here. Vital statistics records the event, and the act only governs the registration of the events. We're not reviewing the Marriage Act here.

There was a question with regard to deaths. Thirty days was unrealistic for the medical examiner, and we did consult the medical examiners on that question.

Sex change was brought up. Two doctors' affidavits are required as proof to amend the record. Two doctors. Then you also asked about if a person was born outside the jurisdiction. The person who underwent the sex change must notify their home jurisdiction to have their records updated.

I think that maybe that clarifies some of the questions for you. I can provide further detail for the members before third reading.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, and thank you, Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, for the quick response to those questions. I just want to clarify: did I hear you say in regard to the sex change that it's up to the individual who's had the sex change to notify their home jurisdiction or the jurisdiction that they were born in as opposed to incumbent upon the government to do it as part of the act?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, yeah. I did say that two doctors' affidavits are required as proof to amend the record here in the province. If the person was born outside of this jurisdiction, the person who underwent the sex change must notify their home jurisdiction and have their records updated.

Mr. R. Miller: Okay. What you're saying is that it's up to them to make the notification. The act is telling them that they have to. Then I suppose the question would be: are there any processes in place to make sure that that actually takes place? That would be the obvious question out of that.

The other thing that you mentioned and I just want to touch on. You indicated that medical officers of health had indicated that 30 days was unrealistic in terms of filing the death notice, so that's why we're moving it to 60. I suppose inquiring minds would want to know whether or not there were a lot of examples of medical officers of health not being able to meet that 30-day deadline. Obviously, it's been in place for a long time, and I'm sure most of us would assume that it was working fairly well, but if they're telling you that it's unrealistic, perhaps there are many examples of times when that deadline was not being met.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Chairman, I don't have specific examples with me. The department folks had consulted with medical examiners, and I wasn't going to question that professional advice.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 8, Vital Statistics Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 8 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 13

Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is obviously a household bill.

An Hon. Member: Housekeeping.

Dr. B. Miller: Housekeeping. I was thinking of the parable of the householder or something.

For the life of me I can't figure out why the changes are being made. I looked at it, I read it a couple of times, and it seems to me that there's just a substitution of wording. Section 4 presently reads, with reference to the minister administering the fund: "and any income of the Fund accrues to and forms part of the Fund." Now the new wording: the minister "shall administer the Fund." So that's the same. And the part about accruing to and forming part of the fund is in (1.2): "Any income of the Fund accrues to and forms part of the Fund." I could go through this line by line, and I just don't see what difference the changes make unless there's some secret code here that I'm missing. I taught a course on the da Vinci code a couple of years ago at the U of A, so maybe there's some hidden code here, and I need to analyze it more carefully.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Chairman. This is housekeeping. I assume that there are some reasons why these changes have to be made. It would be nice to have a little bit of an explanation, and that's where I'll leave it.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 13, Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007. I just want to make a few observations. Over the last several weeks and months I've had the opportunity to meet with and hear from several postsecondary institutions who have expressed some concern about the effectiveness of the existing piece of legislation, of the government's actions that should follow from the commitments made in this piece of legislation, which have to do with the fund's intention to match private donations to postsecondary institutions.

This certainly, I think, was an idea that was welcomed by institutions, and we in principle agreed, although I had several critical observations that I made when the bill was first passed. One of the criticisms that I made was that a more stable funding framework would be better for institutions than one where they have to first of all seek the private donations and then hope that the government will match them.

The experience of the institutions over the last several years now has demonstrated that the matching from the government side hasn't kept pace with the undertakings that were given to these institutions in legislation. The size of the fund has not kept pace with the donations that are flooding into colleges and universities. A December 4 Calgary Herald report indicated that $225 million has been raised by institutions, with another $200 million waiting in the wings, but only $48 million has been distributed, and this was shared among all postsecondary institutions, a matter of great concern to the institutions affected.

In fact, just last week I received some information from the University of Alberta. The university is very concerned about having in fact to fund endowed chairs based on the money they will receive from private donations and without at the same time getting the same amount under the access to the future fund from government sources. So this has added to the financial difficulties for the university, and I'm sure that's the case with other institutions in the province as well. Mount Royal College, I understand, has received only $3 million from this fund so far, which is only one-third of what it actually is owed according to this piece of legislation.

The main concerns that I have, Mr. Chairman, when speaking to this bill in this debate during the committee stage, are ones that are long standing. The institutions just cannot continue to rely on the access to the future fund for making their future plans. If they are to receive and attract more private donations, they have to be able to assure donors that the money from the government side will be forthcoming in good time. If that doesn't happen, that impairs, in my view, the ability of postsecondary institutions to attract donor funds, funds that are premised, of course, on the undertaking given by this government by way of this piece of legislation that those donations will be matched and matched relatively quickly.

So it is creating a kind of difficult situation for many institutions in the province. The University of Alberta, certainly, has contacted me and expressed that concern. It hasn't come from the president's office, I should say. This comes from some other sources, some faculty, because faculties and deans raise funds, seek private donations unless they've got them. They then proceed to establish the process through which an endowed chair is created. Once an endowed chair is created and an appointment to that endowed chair is made, then financial commitment kicks in. The university has to find the funds to finance that endowed chair.

Now, that financing is based on two sources of funding, one from the donation and one from the government side. The one from the government side has not been forthcoming. The university receives a very small amount of the funds that it raises from private donations for the purposes outlined in this act, and then the government doesn't deliver on this. So this puts institutions in a very, very, very difficult situation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to just go on record reminding the government, reminding the minister of advanced education, postsecondary education, that there's a problem here, and this particular change in the bill, the amendment proposed in the bill, doesn't address the real issues and the real concerns that the existing piece of legislation, Access to the Future Act, has created, has produced. Those problems need immediate action. They need immediate attention from the government. Otherwise, the whole purpose of the bill will get defeated in the long run, and universities and other postsecondary institutes will find themselves in a very precarious situation, an embarrassing situation where they have solicited and received private donations on the premise of the Access to the Future Act and the commitments made under it that the government will provide equivalent funds in a timely fashion so the institutions can meet their promises they make to these generous donors who have made available large sums of money.

I was at a function at the University of Alberta I think a year ago or a year and a half ago when the China Institute was formally opened. The Mactaggarts were there, who had made a donation of these very, very rare Chinese textiles and other materials going back several centuries, and the value of the donation that they made was $37.5 million. Mrs. Mactaggart, who spoke at the function, in fact was very critical of this government's failure to come forth with the funds to match the donation that they had so generously agreed to make on the assumption that their $37.5 million will be matched by the government under the Access to the Future Act. They were very disappointed. Mrs. Mactaggart was very, very critical and unhappy about the fact that the donation that they made had not been matched several years after having made their donation.

I'm sure there are many other donors in a similar situation who are expressing their unhappiness and frustration with this piece of legislation, and my fear is that this amendment will not address the real concerns, the failure of the government to implement the commitments made in good faith. I think the government has broken faith on this with institutions, and I as one MLA who represents that university and is contacted on a regular basis by the university with their concerns want to take this opportunity to put this concern of postsecondary institutions related to the ineffectiveness of the Access to the Future Act on record.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege to get up and speak on Bill 13. I guess the point that I want to bring up – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is an example of the dilemma that we're in in that the sponsor of the bill said earlier in Hansard: "The first amendment will expand the ability to make financial transactions from the fund. The scope of financial transactions will be broadened to allow the minister to use the fund to match private donations for scholarships." That's the area, I guess, that I'm very concerned about.

I don't know. It seems to me that these guys have all these access to the future funds, sustainability funds. All of these, what they really are is just slush funds in order to promote the cause of the government in its need to prop itself up. I think it's an interesting situation here, where an individual has made the donation, and he's expecting a donation to match that. It sets up the political arena such that: I want to do this, and the government is going to match it. Why is it that the minister has the ability to do it on one occasion but not on another?

The basis of the real problem with these funds is that at the outset of looking at them, they look interesting. They're doable. It looks like it's going to be in the interest of the students. But I would argue, Mr. Chairman, that if they actually put the money towards the university and towards these things rather than hold them in a slush fund, it would actually make it more affordable for these individuals to go to school. More importantly, though, if we were really interested as a province and as a country in promoting our education system and all charitable organizations, what we really should be doing is looking at a system, as the Alliance has put forward, where charitable donations would be used as income deduction. Thereby people could donate to charitable organizations, schools that are accredited by the province in order to promote those that they feel are important.

The biggest fallacy of all of this, though, is that the do-goodness of the government really has to go and tax other people in order to match someone else's contribution. So what this is saying is that for Albertans who want to make a contribution to, for example, a university, the government now is in a position of power to go out and tax other Albertans to match that. Philosophically, it just seems wrong to me to say that we as a government will tax other individuals to match contributions, especially if they're our friends who the minister wants to accommodate and say: well, we'll tax other Albertans to match this.

I don't think it's in the best interests to broaden the scope and to allow the government to give out more money with what isn't a firm and known formula. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona says, it's actually upsetting donors who thought they were going to be matched and aren't. In the interests of the taxpayers of Alberta and for those who want to support and give charitable donations, we should come up with a much better method than slush funds that promote political connections and being able to promote ourselves, saying, "Look what good things we're doing" as we tax Albertans. Just put the money directly to schooling, directly to housing and those other areas, and it will in fact lower the costs.

So I need to speak against this amendment. I don't believe it's in the best interests of the students or the taxpayers or the education facilities that we're trying to help with this.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not going to respond to the last speaker's comments. The access to the future fund was a very important step forward and actually has been hindered by its own success in terms of the encouragement it has given to Albertans to contribute to their postsecondary institutions.

I do want to just briefly reference the remarks made by Edmonton-Strathcona because I think that they were particularly unfair insofar as they referenced the Mactaggart gift. Members will recall that the Access to the Future Act was Bill 1 in this Legislature, and in that year in the throne speech in referencing the fact that this bill was going to be brought forward, there were two projects which outlined the power and the effectiveness that would be available under the access to the future fund. One of them was the Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library, and the other was the Mactaggart gift to the University of Alberta which established the basis for the China Institute. Both of those were indicators of how the fund could work, and both of them have worked.

While there was a timing process, as I understand it, with respect to making sure that the funds were in place for the China Institute, that has in fact been done. That commitment has been met, and I wouldn't want it left on the record of this House that the commitment that was made in the throne speech in that particular year and the commitment that was made to funding that Mactaggart gift under the access to the future fund was not met because it has been met.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 13, Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just comment that this bill proposes to do some housekeeping relative to the budget of this year and to be in concert with the federal tax changes. I would look forward to comments from members of the House.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thought I put a number of questions on the table yesterday in my comments during second reading, and I was hoping to have some response to those questions as we dealt with this matter in committee today. That is the normal practice of this Assembly, of course, that we get a response from the mover when we come into committee.

I'm not sure whether the member has some of those answers for me or if he wants me to read them into the record again or what, but it would be nice if we could hear some response to those questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do apologize to the member opposite. It was my hope to have those answers today, but I will commit to have those answers ready for the discussion for third reading.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the spirit of the bill I certainly stand and support it. We do need to harmonize and see that it's simple and straightforward. But I guess where I'm disappointed again, though, is that this government has taken the time to bring forth the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, yet it has failed to keep its commitment to lower corporate tax to 8 per cent. It's talked about it time and time again. We've had many corporations, I believe, that moved to Alberta because of the proposal of this government to work it from 12 down to 8 per cent, yet they seem to have stalled out when they've had huge surpluses, when they could make those commitments. I guess I just have to say that I'm disappointed that that isn't part of a corporate tax amendment. We should be looking at lowering the tax as this government has promised but has failed to do.

With that, I'll sit down and wait to hear other comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to make some very few brief comments on Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007. Certainly, I think that these are welcome changes that will help to realize some additional funds for the government.

I just wanted to make note that the Auditor General's report in 2003-2004 recommended that the ARTC be revisited as the federal regulations had reversed the decision back in the early '70s, making the ARTC invalid. You know, this is an inevitable reaction, I suppose, to that.

Then in August 2006 the government of Alberta issued a press release stating that cabinet had recommended this review for royalty programs for deep gas, low-productivity wells, reactivated wells, and so forth. The results, in our minds, is that this restructuring would potentially bring in as much as $200 million or $300 million, that another $186 million would be added to the provincial coffers. We seem to see that this bill will realize those things, and we do in fact support the bill.

I guess I would like to ask – and perhaps the hon. member who is moving this bill could give us that information as well at third reading – what might be the analysis of how much more funds this might realize as a result of the streamlining?

That would be my only question. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to express my dissatisfaction with the proposal that we see answers to the questions that I asked in third reading. The member certainly understands that the time for proposing amendments, if we were to do so, is now, during the committee stage. I thought I asked some relevant questions, particularly in terms of the lack of indexing of some of the thresholds that are in here, and I was looking forward to having that information in front of us as we debated Bill 36. I'm going to guess that we're going to be dealing with a similar situation when we do 35 in a few minutes.

I just want to be on the record as suggesting that that really is not satisfactory to the Official Opposition. We support these bills. We've indicated that in the House. But I don't think it's the proper way to handle this, to allow this to move through committee without having the information in front of us. I want to be on the record as expressing that. I would really ask, quite frankly, if the Government House Leader might consider adjourning debate on these two bills until we have the answers to those questions in front of us.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that's a fair request, and I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 36 and then, if the House agrees with that, that we not call Bill 35 and move right on to Bill 37.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 37 Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 37, Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007. This does increase the tax revenue from tobacco. It amends communication of information laws to be in line with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and other commodity tax acts and enhances the ability of government to transfer information with other governments in Canada. It also extends the time period for objections and allows for people to directly appeal to the court without having a minister review the appeal.

We're clearly in support of this bill, not only in terms of increasing the barrier to tobacco and thereby reducing the incidence of smoking and tobacco use but also in bringing in needed revenue to deal with the adverse effects of tobacco on our health care system, in our human activities. The toll on human life, both quality of life and quantity of life, in this province is second to none. It's the number one preventable illness in our society still. Particularly for young people, the cost is a significant barrier and must be sustained, and this tobacco tax increase will make us among the top tobacco tax areas in the country. This is leadership. This is what we expect from this government. We on this side of the House will certainly be supporting this.

One of the questions that does keep revolving around this whole tobacco issue is how the money will be used and whether and when we will be properly investing with this revenue in some of the other measures that will help us to reduce the incidence of tobacco use, whether it's smoking tobacco or smokeless tobacco.

Are we doing all we can as a society to address some of the addictions problems and reduce the impacts on our health status, on our productivity, and on our health care system? It's a response to growing numbers of people across the province who are having respiratory problems, cardiovascular problems, and cancers that continue to plug our system and limit our ability. This is a progressive decision and will, I think, add significantly to the preventive elements in our public policy. Prevention has to be a primary focus if we're going to ever get a handle on some of the cost issues in our society.

It's quite clear that this is a progressive bill that we'll be supporting, and I thank you for the opportunity to speak to it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I had spoken quite extensively on this bill yesterday, and I was reflecting on the one aspect of it quite a lot here just yesterday evening and today. Again, I would just like to reiterate that I think the responsibility that we have in collecting these extra funds is to see that we target those funds to tobacco cessation programs. I believe as well that we can have the capacity here through the Legislature to encourage health benefits like Blue Cross and the health regions to in fact target those tobacco cessation programs. Here we are, like I said yesterday, with this remarkable new ad campaign that seems to hit hard, number one, but also suggests that you the person with the tobacco addiction has a medical problem.

So the next logical step for me is for us to say: "Okay. We're going to treat this through the public health care system, and we're going to target the new taxes that we would realize through this legislation to pay for that." That one-two punch, that sense of unity, I think would send a strong message. Plus, it would give the punch both financially and medically for medical practitioners to in fact achieve the ultimate goal that we are looking for in this legislation, which is to reduce tobacco use amongst Albertans.

I just wanted to reiterate and strengthen those comments here this afternoon. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to also be on the record as speaking to Bill 37 and certainly supporting it, but again I would like to echo some of the words that we've heard already. Increasing the tax is wonderful, but I really don't want to see it go into general revenues because it'll disappear into the black hole called general revenues. I really would like to see it go directly to cessation programs, but I also would like to see it go to education. I'd like to see the education of our youth, starting in kindergarten, about the dangers of smoking, both tobacco and certainly the smokeless tobacco, and also chewing. There's been many a young person who thought he was imitating a ballplayer and ended up with cancer in the mouth. I think that I would like to see some of those dollars go towards education.

I would reiterate that I feel very strongly that we have to pull our dollars out of the heritage trust fund that go towards the stocks in tobacco companies.

Also, I would like to see some of this increase in dollars go towards helping those that now have the addiction, some of the older people that I've certainly worked with who are on oxygen, who have emphysema, perhaps cancer even at this point in time. Who are we to judge how people got addicted? I think that it's fine to be able to say to our young people, "Don't smoke," but I also think it's very judgmental to stand and say to someone who is older, who has the addiction and could well be suffering or dying: well, gosh, you shouldn't have started smoking. I just don't think that it reflects a civil society where, because we don't smoke, we are smug and say that we won't look after you. I believe that extra dollars should go towards the treatment of those that are suffering now.

Otherwise, I certainly approve. Hopefully, by increasing this tax, we will have a quicker result in terms of people not smoking.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't have a lot today – I think I spoke quite extensively on this bill in second reading yesterday – but a couple of things that I just wanted to question. Several sections in Bill 37, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007, strike out the terminology "certified mail" as a means of communicating an objection or an appeal. Instead, now it reads that a person must file their objection either in person or through registered mail. Probably with a little more time, a few more hours of my life, I might have been able to figure this out on my own. I'm guessing that Canada Post no longer has a classification called certified mail, and it's now registered mail. If somebody could provide clarification on that, I would appreciate it.

Section 11 adds subsections (5) and (6) allowing for a person to have a minister approve an immediate appeal of a notice of objection, and if that consent is given, the person then has 90 days in which to appeal to the court. Then it says that they can appeal directly to the court without having the minister first hear the objection. It sounds a little confusing to me. I'm not a lawyer. I've acknowledged that several times in this House. One of the unfortunate things, I suppose, although many people would consider it fortunate, is that the Official Opposition does not have a lawyer in our caucus, nor, should I say, do we have the financial resources to keep a lawyer on retainer, so we're at a bit of a disadvantage, I suppose. That just seems a little confusing to me, and I wouldn't mind an explanation on that.

I talked yesterday about the area in section 32 that amends the act to allow for disclosure to anyone of information that

- (a) is readily available,
- (b) is in a summarized or statistical form, and
- (c) cannot, directly or indirectly, be associated with or identify a particular person.

This is information that would be made available to law enforcement agencies or investigative agencies that would be looking at situations involving fraud or illegal trading in tobacco products. I raised the concern yesterday in second reading about issues around privacy and just wonder what parameters are going to be in place to make sure that, in fact, this section 32 is adhered to and that personal information, identifying information is not made available in that circumstance.

Section 37 allows for a small amount owing, proposed in the legislation to be $20, to either be collected or not collected. I think we're all familiar with seeing such allowances being made in other tax collection forms. I'm just curious whether or not the $20 figure is something that would sort of be more or less universal across the board when we're talking about the collection of taxes or the refunding of overpaid taxes and whether or not that is a change from current legislation.

Beyond that, Mr. Chairman, I think a number of people have talked about what a good step forward this bill will be, although I did suggest yesterday that I am concerned that it's much more about collecting revenue, i.e. a cash cow, than it really is about smoking cessation or a tobacco reduction strategy. I know that the health minister has attempted to market this as such, but the reality is that when you look at this small amount of money that we put into cessation and reduction strategies compared to the amount of tax that we're collecting, I mean, we're going to collect 10 times more tax as a result of this bill being passed than we currently spend on cessation and reduction strategies. In fact, a hundred times more will be collected in total than what we spend on reduction and cessation strategies.

It's clear to me that despite the minister's assurance that this is part of an overall strategy, as I said yesterday, we're not putting our money where our mouths are, and a lot more could be done. That's why I directed the young ladies that were up in the gallery earlier to review Hansard from yesterday and look at some of the minister's own comments in terms of the cost to society and the cost to our economy that smoking has. I think it's indefensible that we're spending only 1 per cent of the tax that we collect on those various strategies.

I think that will be the extent of my comments in committee stage. I look forward to the passage of this bill. We all support it on this side of the House, it would appear. I look forward to the early implementation of this. As I suggested earlier, when we were talking about Bill 45, I also look forward very much to the minister coming back to this House with some further concrete measures to curb the costs of smoking to our citizens. Particularly, I like the one that referenced where California has now made it illegal for people to smoke when there are occupants in an automobile under the age of 18. I think that that's something we should be moving forward to quickly, and I hope that the minister will take those remarks to heart.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

 Second Reading
 Bill 40
 Personal Directives Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 40, the Personal Directives Amendment Act, 2007.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Member for Calgary-Shaw for her work during the review of this legislation and shepherding Bill 40 to this point. It's my pleasure to now take this important legislation through second reading and the remainder of the legislative process. In fact, I'm very excited about this legislation, and I hope to convince all my family and friends to make it a priority to have a personal directive written.

The Personal Directives Amendment Act will enhance the Personal Directives Act, a piece of legislation that has stood the test of time. For the past 10 years the Personal Directives Act has helped Albertans plan for a time when they may not be able to make their own personal decisions. The Personal Directives Act allows private citizens to write down their wishes about personal matters in case they're ever unable to speak for themselves. With a personal directive Albertans can lay out instructions for things like health care decisions or where they want to live or name a substitute decision-maker, called an agent, who will make decisions on their behalf, or use a combination of both. These documents help give Albertans peace of mind, knowing that their wishes will be respected.

Mr. Speaker, it's very important to know that a personal directive is very different from a personal will or a power of attorney.

When considering changes to the legislation, the government wanted to ensure that the amended Personal Directives Act would meet the changing needs of Albertans. To make sure changes were heading in the right direction, government held extensive consultations and really talked to Albertans about their experiences with this legislation. Through questionnaires, public meetings, and stakeholder sessions government consulted over 4,300 Albertans. These Albertans included doctors, lawyers, advocacy groups, health providers, private guardians, long-term care providers, and members of the public. They said they wanted personal directives to remain voluntary, and they were very clear about what they wanted to see in the legislation. They wanted it to meet the needs of a growing and aging population. The legislation should also be easy to use, understand, and access and include protective safeguards, and this is what the amended legislation achieves.

One of the ways this legislation is making personal directives easy to use and understand is by providing a voluntary standard form. Albertans can choose to fill out the form or use it as a guide to help them write their own personal directive. The act will make personal directives easier to access by including provisions for a personal directives registry. This voluntary registry will allow health professionals to access the contact information of an agent in case of emergency, allowing the wishes of the person in crisis to be followed. The amendments also clarify the responsibilities of agents, service providers, and the writers of personal directives, making it easier for all involved to understand their roles.

Mr. Speaker, our population is becoming increasingly mobile, and Alberta continues to welcome people from throughout the country and the world. The Personal Directives Amendment Act will recognize other planning tools, like personal directives written outside of Alberta.

Personal directives will also be easier to use for parents with dependent children. The Personal Directives Amendment Act contains provisions that allow parents to plan ahead in case they're ever unable to make personal decisions. They will now be able to name a temporary agent who can care for their children until a formal guardian is appointed.

Protective safeguards are very important to Albertans. Under the new legislation there will be a new method to reassess capacity when there has been a significant change in a person's decision-making ability. There are times when a person who has an activated personal directive regains their ability to make decisions. A new process detailed in the Personal Directives Amendment Act will ensure that once an Albertan has regained their decision-making ability, the personal directive can be deactivated, giving them back control of their personal decisions. The personal directive will then lay dormant until it is needed again.

Another protective safeguard contained in the legislation allows the office of the public guardian greater investigative powers. Albertans said that they were uncomfortable taking concerns to court but wanted a way to ensure that concerns were handled carefully. Amendments to the act will allow the office of the public guardian to investigate complaints about agents after having received a written complaint. Complaints will be screened to ensure they meet the criteria in the act, which can include the agent not following the personal directive or the action of an agent resulting in physical or mental harm to the incapable maker. When necessary, the office of the public guardian can work to resolve the complaint, refer it to alternate dispute resolution, or take the matter to court.

The Personal Directives Amendment Act also contains provisions that allow the office of the public guardian to act as an agent of last resort. This mechanism will allow Albertans to have a substitute decision-maker even though they do not have a friend or family member who could act as an agent.

Personal directives speak for Albertans who cannot speak for themselves. Ensuring that this legislation meets the changing needs of Albertans will help it be even more effective over the next 10 years. The amended legislation will be easier for Albertans to access, understand, and use and will provide the protection they need. I urge all members to support Bill 40, the Personal Directives Amendment Act. This legislation brings peace of mind to Albertans and ensures that their wishes are followed in the event that they are unable to make personal decisions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to stand and certainly support in principle this amended bill to the Personal Directives Act. I'd like to just say a few words towards this bill and how it will help in my case, certainly, as someone who has worked within the health care industry, particularly with the elderly.

When someone is turned over to our care, it makes it so much easier when we are very, very clear on exactly what is expected of us. It's very difficult, in fact, in a nursing home situation and now probably in designated assisted living or assisted living to actually know how far to go when there has been some sort of a health episode with people that are in our care. I think this was probably long overdue, and I'm very pleased to see that these amendments have been done and have come forward at this time. I probably am going to have additional amendments where I think that the bill could be strengthened in some other fashion, but I would leave that until committee.

I think the other thing that this is going to help with is cutting down on elder abuse. It will give a mechanism to be able to protect elders from those that are actually their agents because there will be a chance to refer and have that agent's behaviour examined as to if they're actually abusing this person. Regardless of what the person has said, sometimes the abuse is on the side, but it would be able to protect them from that. Children also would be protected.

I think that when you do this form, which I think is a very good idea, I probably would go even one step further and ask that it be the only form that is used. When this form does come forward, it shouldn't just come forward as a piece of communication that this form is available. It should also come with some education so that whoever is going to use this form, either the agent or the person that then has to interpret it, we're all interpreting it in the same fashion because sometimes we're dealing with emergent situations, and you don't have time to double-check what was really meant by this person and what they had said on the form.

[The Speaker in the chair]

It would be nice to know when we sign these directives, as well, what our wishes are and that the person that we have entrusted will make sure that our wishes will be carried out and that it will just be so. I concur and certainly agree with my hon. colleague across that we should encourage people to have personal directives. I guess I would go even further to say that I think that the minute you turn 18 and become an adult, you should have a personal directive, particularly, I think, with our young people because from 18 to 30 there are huge traumatic episodes in terms of accidents. Many of our young people do become brain-injured and simply cannot make those kinds of decisions. More often than not they aren't married; their parents certainly are not their guardians anymore as they're adults. So I would really encourage personal directives being started at the age of 18.

There are a number of things that I would like perhaps considered. Considering the directives outside of Alberta, I think I would like a little more discussion on that. As a health care worker that has to work quickly or perhaps maybe work with a problem such as someone not speaking English as a first language, I think I would like a little bit more direction put in the bill on that one.

The other part that I think is good and that I'd like further discussion on is actually to be able to investigate complaints about the agent that is in place or, in fact, the public guardian, perhaps some safeguards for the public guardian when the public guardian has to assume that agency, and perhaps clearer regulations or clearer rules on exactly how the public guardian would fulfill their duties.

As I've said, I think this is very good, and as a health care worker

I certainly welcome it. I would ask that the House pass this bill through second reading to committee so that further considerations could be discussed that I believe I'll be bringing forward in the form of amendments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very interesting bill, and it's very important. It evolves out of a long history of dealing with the issue of personal directives and living wills.

Recently a study was carried out by Alberta Justice and Alberta Seniors and Community Supports, the legislative review of the Dependent Adults Act and the Personal Directives Act, final report recommendations, and I assume that the shaping of this bill is in part the result of that review.

I mean, this idea of having a personal directive or a living will is not actually very old, and it's interesting how the context for making decisions has sort of shifted. It's broadened. At one time, I guess, you know, it really depended on the decision of physicians and also teams of physicians and nurses and hospitals and perhaps an ethics committee in a hospital. But now the wishes of the patient are part of the consideration, a very important consideration, when treatment plans are to be put into place. This brings into the picture other persons; namely, the agents or the persons who are named in the personal directives.

A personal directive gives an appointed person, the agent, powers in relation to decisions about the patient's health and personal care. The Personal Directives Act, which was enacted in 1996, really tried to address issues that were really major problems with the law; in other words, at the time the failure of the law to provide for substitute decision-making authority in terms of emergency health care or treatment and also a failure of the law to provide individuals with a mechanism to voice their intentions. Now we have that mechanism with the permission to proceed with a personal directive or a living will. That's very important because it recognizes an important principle, which is discussed a lot in medical ethics, and that is the autonomy of the patient and the independence, the recognition that the patient has a right to express their own wishes and that those wishes be considered by the health care team when they lose their capacity to make judgments for themselves.

It's praiseworthy that this legislation puts in place a voluntary system and also something that is simple and easy to carry out. Now, of course, living wills are not perfect, and they're not an ironclad process. I think one of the problems with personal directives and living wills in the past was that even the best clearly written personal directives can't include all possibilities. Otherwise, you might end up practically writing a book to cover all the eventualities that might occur in terms of hospital care, emergency care. Even if you have instructions that apply to a particular situation, they're still open to interpretation and must be interpreted and translated into specific decisions at the moment of a person's crisis when they are in the hospital. But this is certainly a step forward. As I've studied the literature on living wills and personal directives, this I think is a really important step forward.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to especially pay more attention to one section in this bill which I find quite interesting, and as the hon. member who introduced this bill mentioned, I think it's an important protective safeguard. That is section 10.1, determination of regained capacity.

The main purpose of a personal directive, of course, is to lay out instructions for health care in case one becomes incapacitated. If you lose your capacity to make a judgment about what kind of treatment you desire, then you need to have specific instructions.

But the question becomes paramount: what happens if you regain capacity after having lost capacity? The question is: is the regaining of capacity sufficient for a person, then, to be considered competent to decide on their treatment? There's a bit of ambiguity here, which I don't think this bill really deals with.

I mean, a very important point to consider, which the bill does deal with, is the issue of authority: who makes the decision about whether a person has regained their capacity or not? The bill outlines a process of consultation with the service provider, the health care provider, consultation with the named person in the personal directive, the agent. That consultation might actually lead to the involvement of a physician and a psychologist, especially if there's disagreement between the agent and the service provider. So I think that outline is good.

The whole issue of capacity and defining capacity still lurks here as an important issue. In my reading of the medical ethical literature, much of the discussion of capacity has focused on the question of death because it was important for the medical establishment to define death in some way. One of the definitions of death that has been put forward is an irreversible loss of capacity for consciousness or social interaction. But, of course, if you regain your capacity, it's kind of moving from death to resurrection. So I think it's important to try to understand what it is we're talking about when we talk about capacity.

What does it mean to have the capacity again to make a judgment about your own treatment? What constitutes capacity? Is it simply attaining consciousness? No, that's not enough. You would have to have the capacity to be able to communicate, to reason, to make moral judgments, the ability to think and feel and relate to other people: your family and the doctors. I mean, these are important issues, and one of the things that's really important is that the patients be able to make the judgments in their own interests in terms of treatment plans that could be put in place.

Capacity is not defined in this bill. I guess it's left to regulations. As 10.1(5) states, it suggests that a decision about capacity is made in conjunction with regulations, but I'm not sure what those regulations are. Presumably, if there's a discussion or debate, an argument between the initial care team and the agent named in the personal directive, and the physician and psychologist come in to make a decision, then they are going to follow some sort of guideline, some sort of regulation to determine whether the person has capacity or not.

It's very interesting. I think, you know, this whole process is evolving through time, and we're getting better at dealing with these kinds of situations. I commend the makers of this bill for that section. Except for the fact that it doesn't really define what capacity is, it still outlines a process that needs to take place, and that's a protection for people who seem to lose capacity and then through the miracle, if I could say, of modern science and medicine regain capacity. And then it's really important that they are considered, that their wishes are taken into consideration. Then if they again lose consciousness, if they lose their capacity, of course, the living will or the personal directive comes into play again.

Those are the points that I wanted to raise about Bill 40. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, should members wish to take advantage of it.

There being none, then I'll call on the Member for Edmonton-Calder, then Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to this opportunity to make some brief comments on Bill 40, the Personal Directives Amendment Act, 2007. Certainly, as the previous speakers have mentioned, there doesn't seem to be a great deal to be concerned about with this bill, and certainly the whole concept of strengthening and broadening the personal directive option that's available to citizens here in this province is a commendable thing to do. It has lots of positive socioeconomic implications, and I think that it's part of the evolution of how we look at health care at all stages of our life.

I do however have a couple of specific concerns that I hope during the course of this debate will become more clear to not only myself but other individuals in the province that have expressed this concern to me, actually, and that is working with the personal directive and the guardianship of others for individuals who become invalid through medical problems, just to ensure the integrity and the protection of a person who might lose their independence and freedom through a personal directive type of document. I guess it's incumbent upon us here in the Legislature to ensure that every possible mechanism is available to an individual with a personal directive to be able to find a means to appeal and to clarify their position at any given point in time, whether they've been declared to be not in the capacity to make decisions for themselves or not. Of course, Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps the worst-case scenario. What we're talking about is an individual losing their right to be a person with all of the rights and freedoms and responsibilities conferred upon all of us through the law.

We must be very careful when we're drafting a document such as this that it's very clear that a person might have the capacity to appeal or to have assistance and a sober second opinion on their case if they have in fact been declared to be incompetent and the mechanisms in their personal directive have begun to be executed. Of course, with the vagaries of human nature being what they are, you know, people might and do take advantage of others in these circumstances.

I believe – and again I'm looking for clarification during the course of this debate – that the Mental Health Act deals specifically with defining whether someone has the capacity to make decisions for themselves or not. That being given, still Bill 40 and the personal directive document that is being drafted for an individual become the vehicle by which someone can be declared incompetent, or it defines the term somehow for someone if they are having physical difficulties. So I think that we have to be very, very careful to ensure that such an act or a bill as this one does not make it more difficult for an individual to protect their freedoms and to not be preyed upon by guardians who might wish to have someone declared to be incapacitated and to invoke their personal directive when, in fact, that is taking place against that individual's will.

Those are the general comments that I wanted to make in terms of concern, and I hope that we all get clarification on that during the course of this debate. Of course, all of us here could be in that same situation where you have a personal directive, and we want to ensure that it's invoked only in the most responsible manner and at the most appropriate time and place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Is there any member who would like to participate under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

There being none, then I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to stand and comment at second reading on Bill 40, Personal Directives Amendment Act, 2007. I also want to congratulate the mover on this. It is progressive policy that will, I think, help to protect the rights and freedoms of individuals at the same time as balancing family and societal obligations and do this in a way that is ultimately going to serve the individual without compromising and risking the resources or the people around that individual and the family.

It recognizes patient autonomy. At the same time, it assists families in implementing with some direction the wishes of an individual, and that's important. It also has addressed some of the inadequacies of the Personal Directives Act with respect to determining regained capacity, the care of minor children, the voluntary registration of personal directives, the investigation of complaints, and new powers of the public guardian to investigate and act on complaints as well as to collect information relating to the personal directive.

As it sits, there are some important measures to guard against abuse and neglect and exploitation of individuals, and I commend again the movers. This will improve our confidence in this important role for the public service around health care, social services, and meeting the needs of individuals in our society.

The Personal Directives Act addressed a gap in law by providing individuals with the ability to plan for their own incapacities, and now we recognize that some changes are needed to safeguard against exploitation of those very rights and options for individuals who do take the initiative. Prior to Bill 40, the personal directive had no public oversight, and we believe that this is an important amendment.

There are perhaps some minor suggestions we might make to strengthen it further, and that would have to do with some of the issues around directives made outside of the province, the investigation of complaints by the public guardian and how to ensure that all sides have an opportunity to be heard and acted upon, and the duties of the agents, which are not as clearly spelled out as they might be.

But given those caveats, we're on this side very supportive of this bill and look forward to further debate and discussions in third reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any participants under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Other participants? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have listened to the debate in second reading on this Bill 40, and I just want to assure the members opposite that I will be bringing back the answers because I feel this is a very good bill and a very strong bill. I do not have the answer right now to answer who decides when capacity has been regained, but there's a very good process and a very safe process, a protective process.

Then also the directives made outside the province. I just want to say so that you can think about this. I raise the issue of the fact that my mother visits regularly from Ontario, and if she has a personal directive in Ontario, would we recognize that here in Alberta? The answer to that is yes, as in Ontario my personal directive would be recognized there.

I'll bring back some more answers, and hopefully we'll all be on the same page on this one because it is a great response to something that's badly needed in our society. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a second time]

Bill 38 Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 38, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007. Bill 38 would implement an enforceable dispute resolution process under the Alberta-B.C. trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, or TILMA. It would permit a penalty imposed by an impartial dispute panel established under TILMA to be filed in Alberta courts. This amendment parallels legislation introduced by our partners in B.C.

As the hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations mentioned previously, the TILMA itself lays out the dispute resolution process. By permitting a penalty imposed by a TILMA dispute resolution panel to be filed with the courts, as this amendment proposes, this process would have some teeth.

Mr. Speaker, one of the shortcomings of the pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade is that it does not have an enforceable dispute resolution process. The TILMA enforceable disputes resolution process signals the commitment of the governments of Alberta and British Columbia to eliminate needless impediments to trade, investment, and labour mobility between provinces within our own country.

The TILMA has a three-step dispute resolution process: first, dispute avoidance; second, consultation; finally, if none of those are successful, three, resolution through an impartial panel. In the third step complainants will be able to make their case before a dispute panel. The panelists are independent and impartial. They have the ability to levy a financial penalty against a government but only if it does not change a measure that has been found to violate the TILMA. The maximum penalty is $5 million.

Monetary awards under the TILMA are only available if a province has acted contrary to the agreement and only if that province does not comply with the panel ruling. This is to encourage compliance, not to compensate individuals or companies for business losses. Private parties cannot sue through the courts for damages under the TILMA. They can access the dispute resolution process, and they can seek recourse only on measures related to trade, investment, or labour mobility. Under the dispute resolution process only one dispute can be launched on what is essentially the same complaint at any one time. That allows a situation to be supported or corrected, reducing grounds for further complaints. To reduce the likelihood of frivolous complaints, the dispute panel can charge the full costs of a dispute resolution process to losing complainants.

The hon. minister of international and intergovernmental affairs has already outlined one example, Quebec coloured margarine, of how Albertans are hurt by the lack of an enforceable dispute resolution process under the AIT. Let me briefly give you a couple more. In 2004 an AIT panel agreed with Alberta that credit unions and Treasury Branches in our province would be hurt by proposed changes to federal regulations governing the way the cost of consumer loans are explained. Mr. Speaker, almost three years later we are still in discussions with the federal government about those proposed changes. Also in 2004 another AIT panel agreed with Alberta that Ontario's Edible Oil Products Act was inconsistent with the AIT. Ontario repealed its act. However, we are now concerned that Ontario has gone through the back door and introduced the same restrictive measures under its Milk Act.

Mr. Speaker, approval of the amendment that is before us will give the TILMA dispute resolution process teeth. TILMA panel decisions will be enforceable, unlike the decisions handed down by AIT panels that some Canadian governments have seen fit to ignore. I encourage all members to support Bill 38, the Government Organization Amendment Act, which will make penalties handed down by TILMA dispute resolution panels enforceable by the courts.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say at the outset that the Official Opposition will not likely be supporting this bill, and I'm happy to tell you why if you can't guess why. Although we've long been in favour of reducing trade restrictions with our neighbouring provinces – and, in fact, our leader recently released a vision statement called the Western Tiger, where we contemplate growth initiatives to . . . [interjection] Well, now the health minister is saying: shipping our bitumen east and west. Yes, that's exactly what it contemplates as opposed to sending it south across the border. Clearly, the vision is to create an economic western tiger, so that in itself would indicate, certainly from a high-altitude perspective, that we're in favour of things being done that would increase trade with our neighbouring provinces and reduce the number of restrictions to that.

However – and this is a really important point – there has never been any debate on the TILMA agreement in this Legislature. Full debate took place in the B.C. Legislature and none in this Legislature. That in and of itself is all the reason that I need to stand before you, Mr. Speaker, and the people of this province and say that I cannot support anything that moves TILMA into legislation by amending the Government Organization Act without first of all having a proper debate of what TILMA is and what the ramifications will be and addressing the concerns that have been raised by various stakeholder groups by acknowledging the good things that TILMA would do. Many groups are fully in support of TILMA. It's not so much the vision. It's not so much the concept of improving trade with neighbouring provinces and making it easier to take place. It's simply a question of the process or in this case the lack thereof, whereby we suddenly have an agreement foisted upon the people of this province, the businesses of this province, the trade unions of this province without proper debate ever having taken place in this body. That is clearly the concern that we have.

Now, I'd just like to go through some of the stakeholders that have been in touch with us or have publicly commented on the TILMA agreement up until this point. Certainly, Gil McGowan from the Alberta Federation of Labour is quoted as saying that TILMA is a wolf in sheep's clothing and that it is a way for companies to control elected decision-makers. I don't think anybody in this House would contemplate that as being a good thing if, in fact, it proves to be true.

The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives is not explicitly against TILMA being put into place, although they're openly against NAFTA and clearly skeptical, Mr. Speaker, about the need for TILMA in the first place.

Interestingly, the Ontario Federation of Labour – and I know the mover of the bill in second reading has referenced Ontario and some of the concerns that the Alberta government has with Ontario – has issued a review of TILMA done by the law firm Sack Goldblatt Mitchell LLP of Toronto, and they state that TILMA represents a far reaching and corrosive constraint on the future capacity of the governments of British Columbia and Alberta to exercise the policy, legislative, and programmatic authority that is essential to their governance mandates.

They're clearly advising that Ontario and any other province should not adopt TILMA-like obligations without – and this is important – “the fullest and informed public discussion and debate.” Again, that is something that has not taken place in this Legislature and causes us untold concern.

The Canadian Union of Public Employees is against TILMA. They say, “TILMA will provide multiple grounds for challenging governments' right to regulate based on a myth – that there are substantial inter-provincial trade barriers.” Well, I'm not so sure, quite frankly, whether or not I would agree that there are substantial interprovincial trade barriers, but clearly there are still some. Clearly, they don't necessarily serve this province well, and they don't necessarily serve our neighbouring provinces well.

I've raised a number of concerns, and one in particular that even the Minister of Finance has acknowledged is the concern about the future of the Alberta Treasury Branches with the implementation of TILMA. I know that financial institutions were given a little bit of extra time before the TILMA agreement applies to them; nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, at some point in the not-too-distant future the Alberta Treasury Branches are going to as a result of TILMA be required to operate on a level footing with financial institutions that do business in both provinces. It's unclear to me to this point – and I think even the Finance minister acknowledged that it's unclear to the department – just exactly what ramification the implementation of TILMA will have on the Alberta Treasury Branches.

So here we are now amending legislation to ensconce the TILMA agreement into legislation and yet never having had the debate in this Assembly as to exactly what TILMA is, what the implications of TILMA will be, whether or not it in fact accomplishes the things that the agreement is set out to accomplish in the first place. So grave concerns over the manner in which this is being done, probably more so, Mr. Speaker, than the content of the bill. It's just concerns over the process or, as I indicated, the lack of process.

I think I'm going to allow others to speak in second reading. I know for sure we'll have much more to say when we get to the committee stage, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps be looking for some amendments to come forward as well. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to participate. Please proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I rise with a tremendous amount of interest to make comments on Bill 38, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007, here in second reading. You know, I find it a bit rich that this appears before us here now when all of the work and negotiation and drafting of this TILMA agreement was done behind closed doors and outside of this legislative office. In fact, Bill 38 is just the final little piece that's required to actually get the TILMA ball rolling, so to speak, to have a disputes inquiry board and all of this. It's like debating after the facts the substance of the TILMA agreement as drafted privately between British Columbia and Alberta.

I think all Albertans should take notice of what's going on here, British Columbia as well and other Canadians too, because this legislation and the governing structure of TILMA are definitely taking bites out of the autonomy and the capacity of different provincial Legislatures and municipalities to govern and to have the responsibility over the areas that they should be legislating on. You know, it's regressive policy in the worst sort of way, and we hope that we can certainly at least have this recognized in a wider context by the public here by debating this Bill 38. Perhaps that will be the only positive thing that could come out of it.

The Alberta New Democrats are rejecting this bill based on a lack of democratic principles, which it represents. The bill takes away democratic and governmental accountability and, I would say, holds it hostage to private and corporate business interests. This conflict resolution bill as described here is similar to the function of the WTO. According to many groups who have criticized this considerably, for example the Council of Canadians, nine out of the 11 rulings of the WTO where governments tried to defend their regulations in fact came up short.

This bill cannot be amended, in our view, in any meaningful manner given that the governing structure of TILMA is in fact not contained within this bill. It becomes almost a bit, well, not just ironic but hypocritical to consider debating this when the substance and the effects are not contained in this piece of legislation. This bill, though, I see as the central kind of a binding element that TILMA needs to get under way, so I urge all members here in the Legislature to reject this bill.

You know, it's interesting to see how the debate is taking place as we speak here. We're doing this here in Alberta. In British Columbia this also is being debated now, and it's interesting to see how that is unfolding because it does give us a very, I guess, strong illumination that people are not happy with the bill in British Columbia either.

I believe that this bill does not represent the public interest; it represents private interest in the most narrow sort of manner, and it's akin to the privatization of the legislative process that we represent here in this House. It's a legal document that will give special rights to individuals and to corporations to sue the provincial government or municipalities if it's deemed that the regulations or the laws or the bills or the bylaws of municipalities and provincial governments are getting in the way of the business interest of that corporation.

I believe that the fears that have been expressed through different labour organizations and the Council of Canadians and municipalities across both British Columbia and Alberta are very well founded. The potential for the reduction of standards in both provinces, of labour standards, of safety standards, of food and health standards, environmental standards, social values – all of those things are put at risk here potentially by what seems to be this bill that's meant to create so-called efficiencies. I find that highly ironic and very troubling, too.

You know, a lot of the arguments that are being made in support of TILMA I find to be spurious at best. The Constitution of the country of Canada has always banned genuine interprovincial trade barriers and, really, very, very few exist. That seems to be the Trojan Horse by which TILMA is proceeding. What many commentators call interprovincial barriers are, in fact, just regional differences between provinces. All the economic evidence that I've seen indicates that these differences really don't have a big effect on interprovincial trade as such. What TILMA is aiming at is to lower the standards through the laws that are created by different provinces and different municipalities between British Columbia and Alberta.

Of course, the TILMA founders would like to dream that other provinces would like to join as well. I find it interesting that other provinces have not in fact said that they would go along with this. Perhaps we should find a message and a lesson in that rejection by other provinces of the principles of TILMA.

In fact, looking at some of the arguments, the Conference Board of Canada made all of these wild claims that the impact of TILMA would realize so many billions of dollars. I would refute that quite stringently. The Conference Board of Canada estimated that we would realize so many benefits from this change in the trade procedures between British Columbia and Alberta. For example, they say a 3.8 per cent increase in B.C.'s GDP, which seems impossible, considering that only 5.4 per cent of B.C.'s GDP actually went to Alberta in terms of interprovincial exports in the last available year. So it seems illogical that such an outlandish increase in their GDP would be realized through TILMA.

There is just a whole range of problems associated with this, not the least of which, I believe, is the devaluing of the legislative processes that we are entrusted to keep here in this Legislature and the British Columbia Legislature and all the municipalities along the way. Who is to say that a civil suit should bear more value than the legislation and the due process and the consideration that people have in each region in terms of their, say, environmental concerns that they have for their region or for labour concerns that they have for their region or food or safety?

There is just a whole range of things that we do and I think do quite well in terms of having regional government that should not be superseded by a dispute mechanism that they're suggesting here with TILMA, which amounts to no more than people sort of suing each other in a race for the bottom, the lowest common denominator, which is just to make a buck somehow. I find that to be reprehensible, and certainly I will stand in the way of this bill and any other TILMA legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Further participants? Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, do you wish to participate?

Prior to calling on the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, could I avail upon the Assembly to give permission to introduce some very special guests that are here today?

The Speaker: In both galleries are a number of former members of the Alberta Legislative Assembly who have served with distinction in the past and are here to enjoy this evening at the first former MLA dinner. Members will recall that a bill put forward by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose gave rise to the creation of the Association of Former MLAs.

I'm going to introduce those that are here, and I'll just ask them to rise as I introduce them. Would you just kindly withhold your recognition until we have concluded this. Second Reading

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: For our distinguished visitors the Assembly is currently debating Bill 38, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007. We're in the second reading. I'm going to call on the fourth participant, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, to present her remarks.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief. One of the things that bothers me the most about this bill is that absolutely nobody seems to know about it. I've spoken to people. I've certainly spoken to municipalities in southern Alberta. Many of them say that they don't have a clue. Probably that's because it was not debated in this House, where it should have been. So that's one of my concerns.

I won't go into some of my other, deeper concerns because they've already been addressed, and we will be speaking about it again, but I really believe that the main thing about this bill is that nobody knows about it. It's very important, and it will change the way we operate. For instance – and I'll speak about nurses – the standards in B.C. are not quite on par with ours. If we pass this bill that's coming up, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, the actual self-regulation will turn over to the minister. Under TILMA the minister will be able to do things that probably the nurses in this province will not be happy with or, in fact, probably the doctors because they will lose that power for self-regulation, which then levels off the two professions. I think that that can be very problematic in terms of how health care agencies actually self-regulate.

I'll stop there, but the fact that no one knows about it is very, very troubling.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you might imagine, I'm trying to get up to speed on any number of bills. This one strikes me as being one which really deserves careful consideration. I think we'd all agree that there are implications for this bill. Just upon quick reading of it, I mean, realistically the object of the bill, to enable the government to pay out any penalties that may be awarded against the province due to a claim under the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, is a lot in and of itself. The impacts and the outcomes are very huge. The act recognizes TILMA as an agreement to which Alberta is liable and in which the province participates, the mechanisms by which that agreement operates, or an adjudication panel and potentially fines. We are talking about $5 million for a single infraction.

This is something that I know our caucus is going to want to try to pay particular attention to, particularly because of some of the points that have been raised here. With regard to the democratic process, as far as this goes, this is of concern to me. I mean, this is a far-reaching piece of legislation that I think deserves the full debate of the House. I'm quite concerned, in fact, that from what I understand from one of my colleagues, this received fuller debate or considerable debate in the British Columbia Legislature. I'm quite at odds to try to figure out why it is that there hasn't been full debate in this particular Legislature. It's the democratic process that I'm concerned about here, and I'm, frankly, happy to be able to rise this early on to be able to address that. I would think that that should be something that would be a concern to all members of this House.

There are concerns about the measures to be in place that form the obstacles to trade, investment, and labour mobility. We understand that. We understand some concerns around article 6. Realistically, I mean, ours is a free-enterprise party. We recognize that trade agreements can have great benefit to business, consumers, and governments. Clearly, when unnecessary barriers to trade, investment, and labour mobility exist, we should work to remove them. But I'm not sure that there's been a full debate on that and on the ramifications of it. TILMA could have incredible influence on future government behaviour, and we therefore definitely need detailed discussions about it in the Legislature. If more and more policy areas come under its scope, as seems to be the intention, then this need becomes ever more important.

Again, it's an issue of transparency and accountability. This government has talked about transparency and accountability. Well, if that's the case, let's take our time and let's have a full debate so that the public can take a full look at this important piece of legislation and the ramifications of it.

We need to know exactly what areas of policy are to be included under TILMA. The agreement is not clear on this matter. What government policy is going to have to change? If none, then why have the agreement? But if some, then what? Albertans need to know, and we're looking to this government to have a debate in this House so that we can find out what changes will be forthcoming. All we're asking for is a debate here. We're not getting that, and we need to know why.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for those comments. I said previously that I have a serious democratic concerns about this bill. I would like to ask you a question. Hypothetically, let's say, what happens if the city of Calgary decides to go on a green policy to have a higher percentage of renewable electricity being purchased through the municipality and then through a disputes inquiry board a private power company says: we'd like to take the city of Calgary to task on this because it interferes with our right to sell our electricity to the city of Calgary? What would you envision with this TILMA thing?

Mr. Cheffins: Well, I think you raise a valid . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, through the chair, please. Please proceed.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think you raise a valid question here. I think that there are concerns about the breadth of this bill and how it is that it's going to affect Albertans. But I think you also raise questions with regard to how this will unfold. What are the administrative ramifications? What are the ramifications with regard to various levels of government? I would expect that some of the members of this House, including ministers, would have questions about that. We'd like to see those kinds of issues raised and debated fully so that we can really get at what's best for the province on this particular bill.

The Speaker: Others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to conclude the debate.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of comments that you've made that I'd certainly like to address, and the other ones we can bring forward later. First of all, in terms of debating TILMA, TILMA is available to you. It has been available since April of '06. According to custom, when we bring forward things into the Legislature, that is how we debate them. This is your opportunity to debate. It is available to everyone. This is a wonderful time. We are in front of the Legislature, and the way that we debate issues within the Legislature is that we bring through legislation and debate it. We can deal with the rest of the questions later.

Thanks very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour I would move that we now call it 6 p.m. and adjourn until another day starts tomorrow for us at 1 p.m.

The Speaker: Before calling that question, just a little update. About 30 minutes ago there was a flurry of activity in this Assembly when a number of hon. members went to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta website, and on that page called Elected Members of the Assembly the following statement was in it: writ has been dropped. So this has now been fixed. It was fixed at 5:55. We will investigate what this was – if this is a renegade employee, a hacker, a computer glitch – and report to the Assembly tomorrow. But false alarm.

[Motion carried; at 5:58 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 8, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/11/08

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Today we're going to do something just a little different. I have with me at this auspicious place Nicole Stewart, a grade 10 student from Catholic central high in Lethbridge. She was the first-place winner in the Alberta 2007 intermediate poem competition sponsored by the Alberta-Northwest Territories Command of the Royal Canadian Legion, and she placed second in the dominion intermediate poem competition in the year 2007, sponsored by the Royal Canadian Legion. She has written a poem in commemoration of Remembrance Day called Eyes, and I am going to invite her to come to where I stand and read the poem for all Members of the Legislative Assembly, our guests here today, and all those who might be watching via our live video feed on the Internet.

Miss Stewart:

Remembrance Day is here once more.
I sit at a ceremony, lonely and bored.
There are seniors galore in dresses and ties,
I don't understand 'till I look in their eyes.

A mother's eyes glow with the ghost of her son
Who lost his life that had barely begun.
Just a few rows over eyes look to her love
Who's now watching her from heaven above.

A daughter's eyes shine with love for her dad.
She never knew him, what fun would they've had?
A brother's eyes fill with tears because
He never told his sister just how proud he was.

The eyes the most haunting are in the front row,
A blue so bright they cut into my soul.
A single tear forms in the corner and rolls
Down his face through the creases and folds.

He thinks of the day that he left on that ship
Not knowing what would come on that horrible trip.
The tears, the violence, the pain and the fright.
He thinks of the visions that still haunt his nights.

He thinks of a battle he barely escaped.
Why was he the one who was given this fate?
To this day he can hear the air raid alarms
As he thinks of his best friend who died in his arms.

A tear falls down for each memory he sees.
Suddenly it clicks, it makes sense to me.
We must honour our heroes with love and respect,
That's why we sit here today:
Lest we forget. [Applause]

The Speaker: Isn't that marvellous? A poem by Nicole Stewart, a grade 10 student from Lethbridge, an outstanding Alberta young person. Thank you very much, Nicole.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 29 visitors from Spruce Grove's Living Waters Christian Academy. I was speaking with them earlier today about the mock Legislature. As everyone can see, they're a well-dressed group of young folks, and their debate at the mock Legislature happened to be about school uniforms. I was told that it was a very interesting debate, and at the end of it all it did pass, which is hardly surprising. I was talking to them about what we do in this House. They're very knowledgeable about what we do and who we represent. They are accompanied by teachers Miss Kori Fehr, Miss Kathryn Lochhead, and parent helper Colleen Osback. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our House.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Tourism Promotion.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly the very first public school that I've had come to the Legislature in the seven years that I've been in office. It's a long trip, and we're very grateful for the opportunity to introduce the students from grade 6 from Father James Whelihan school and their teachers and group leaders Mrs. Niksic, Mrs. Royer, Mrs. Rutledge, Ms Van Dyke, Mrs. Paczulla, Mrs. Curzon, Mr. Donaldson, Mrs. Henezi, Mrs. Chalifoux, Mr. Felske, Mrs. Lapierre, Mrs. Borrelli, Mrs. Pariag, Mrs. Greyeyes, and Mrs. Yee. I'd have them all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and to members of the House eight very hard working employees of the Department of Education. We have Marc Prefontaine, Natalie Reschke, and Heidi Looby, who work in the teacher development and certification branch. We have Cheryl Sides, Mary Fitzgerald, and Marni Pearce, who work in the health and children's initiatives branch of the department. Finally, we have Wieland Petermann and Romana Bedriy, who work in the international languages branch of the Department of Education. I would ask all eight employees, who are seated in the members' gallery, to please stand and receive the response from the members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is a pleasure and an honour for me today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all of my colleagues in the Assembly some of the staff from the ministry office. Undoubtedly, all of my colleagues will understand that the minister's office over the last number of months has been extremely busy, and I think, again, my colleagues would agree that the staff in the office have been more than helpful. They remain very, very friendly. Of course, to me they would. But on all sides – the questions that are asked, the work that has been asked of them – they continue to produce what I think are stellar results in the minister's office. I would ask Stacey Leighton, Ethan Bayne, Diane Carter, Belinda Bridge, and Jason Chance to please rise, and I would ask my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome to this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Captain Mark Peebles, Master Corporal James Pantel, Corporal Zach Buchanan, Corporal Chris Megyesi, Corporal William Salikin, Corporal Ryan Shudra, and Corporal Michael Zmurko, who have either returned from Afghanistan or are deploying in the future. They are here to help us on Remembrance Day in memory of Master Corporal Raymond Arndt from the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, who was killed August 2006 in Kandahar, as well as many members of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry who continue to lay down their lives. I'd like them now to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly today two gentlemen that represent two separate and competing Alberta-based companies involved in the transportation communication business. These two men have contributed to revolutionizing their industry with new technological advances in respect to the electronic reporting of hours of service logs and vehicle inspections. I would ask Mr. Kim Sax from Mense Incorporated and Mr. Brett Duncan from Verigo Incorporated to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a family from southern Alberta who live on my western constituency border, right on highway 3, I might add. They've travelled to Edmonton for an education weekend. They're spending part of the day here at the Legislature. The Kroeker family are typical of most families in southern Alberta and, might I say, all of Alberta. They're hard working and want the best for their children. I would like to ask Henry Kroeker and his wife, Dorothy, and their sons Ben and Jed to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Energy, an additional introduction?

Mr. Knight: Yes, if I may. Thank you very much. The gentleman won't need an introduction to you, Mr. Speaker. He may need an introduction to some of the members assembled here today. Marvin Moore is in the Assembly. He joined us today. Many of us will know that Marvin served in this House as a Member of the Legislative Assembly for the Smoky River riding initially and then, I believe, the Grande Prairie-Smoky riding for a short period of time as it transitioned as well. Mr. Moore continues to serve Albertans daily. He works extremely hard with the health region in our part of the province. I would ask that Mr. Moore please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. I'd like to begin with Nicole Stewart and her family. I see that she has joined her family in your gallery, and I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature the family of Nicole. If each would rise when I mention your names, there's Roxanne Stewart, her mother; Russ Stewart, her father; her sister Laurie; a grandfather, Bill Stewart, from Hairy Hill. The Stewarts, of course, are from Lethbridge, as you've mentioned. Then another set of grandparents: Metro Eliuk, grandfather from Sherwood Park, and Iris Eliuk, grandmother from Sherwood Park. I would ask all of the members to honour the family of Nicole, such a bright person.

The second set, Mr. Speaker, is Shelby MacLeod and a friend of mine, Reg Dawson. Shelby was around these parts for at least as long as I have been, and that's why I was around as long as I've been, because of Shelby. I want to welcome them to the Legislature and ask that you give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Al Sauve, who is the executive director of the sheriff's branch in my ministry.

Our sheriff's branch has made invaluable contributions towards ensuring the safety of all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, we now have over 500 sheriffs working in partnership with other law enforcement agencies throughout Alberta helping keep our roads safe, transporting prisoners, protecting the courts, assisting with criminal investigations into gangs and drugs, ensuring the appropriate counterterrorism practices are in place, and performing many other duties that support this government's mandate for safe and secure communities.

Today I had the pleasure of introducing another new role for sheriffs, that of finding and apprehending criminals at large on outstanding warrants. Effective immediately we have 10 sheriffs who will be working in that regard. This new warrant apprehension team reflects the recommendations of the safe communities task force by acting to take these criminals off the street right now.

Mr. Sauve is sitting in the members' gallery, and I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Remembrance Day 2007

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month of the year 1918 the guns fell silent, and men lay down their arms across the Western Front of Europe at the end of what was then known as the Great War. This bloody conflict cost the lives of millions, including over 69,000 Canadians. The end of the war came into effect on the signing of an armistice between the warring nations, and thus November 11 became known as Armistice Day.

Despite the passage of time and other intervening conflicts the 11th hour of November 11 has retained its significance and has assumed a broader symbolic importance as the special time when peoples of the British Commonwealth and some other nations commemorate veterans and the sacrifices of those who have fallen in the service of their country.

In Canada November 11 is known as Remembrance Day. It's a time when we pause to remember all those who served in our armed forces and more than 117,000 Canadians who died in the Boer War, two world wars, the Korean War, and in UN peacekeeping and NATO actions.

Mr. Speaker, I know that all members of this Assembly join with me in recognition of Remembrance Day. The red poppies which are worn on the lapels of members today remind us of our solemn duty to remember and to pass on that legacy to the next generation.

This Sunday, November 11, at 11 o'clock in the morning may each of us in this House and all Albertans, young and old, stop to take two minutes from our busy daily lives to observe two minutes of silence to honour the memory of all those Canadians who have served and especially those who have fallen in the service of our country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Remembrance Day 2007

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity today to honour those who have answered Canada's call to the military service and offer them our heartfelt thanks. Remembrance Day is a powerful tribute to the sacrifices made by over 100,000 Canadians throughout the history of our nation's military participation. Throughout World War I, World War II, Korea, Bosnia, Afghanistan, and peacekeeping missions around the world our soldiers have always been renowned for their courage and bravery. Their actions have helped shape our Canadian identity. The Battle of Vimy Ridge alone, now 90 years in our past, continues to instill Canadians with pride. Veterans have allowed our society to flourish as a democratic, open, and prosperous nation.

The constituents of Edmonton-Decore have always had a great deal to do collectively in supporting the military families, and I am proud to have helped in that regard.

To the members up in the gallery and to all Canadian veterans I offer my gratitude, respect, and solemn vow to remember those who offered their ultimate sacrifice.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Edgeworth Centre

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to recognize the opening of a sport development and wellness complex in the community of Camrose. The community and university project encompasses leisure, sport, education, health and fitness and features a large spectator arena and fitness centre. This state-of-the-art recreational and wellness complex, now named the Edgeworth Centre, will generate tremendous economic and health benefits as it serves a large regional population in east-central Alberta.

These and other worthwhile attributes that the complex brings were all reasons why the Alberta government, the city of Camrose, the county of Camrose, the University of Alberta, surrounding towns and villages supported by neighbouring MLAs, and the private sector proudly provided substantial funding for the centre. One of the greatest accomplishments of this facility was the co-operation and partnership between the stakeholders and supporters. Together their efforts culminated in the planning, construction, and grand opening of this multifaceted facility on September 28. It was my honour to be a participant at that time.

This Camrose sport and wellness project demonstrates the true potential of comprehensive rural development. The university's support ensures that this leisure campus is not only an exceptional sporting venue but a multipurpose university and community centre with a physiotherapy clinic, physiology lab, and technologically capable classrooms.

Mr. Speaker, the Edgeworth Centre is an inclusive model that will provide opportunities for Albertans to improve their health and minds. I anticipate that for years to come Albertans will enter this facility to attend a Kodiaks or Augustana Vikings game, participate in fitness activities, educate themselves, participate in the Viking Cup, or simply to be an active volunteer in the community organization.

Mr. Speaker, this is a remarkable achievement for the community, the university, and a large section of east-central Alberta, and I wish to congratulate all participants on the opening of this new centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been ripped off, ripped off by a government responsible for what could be the most expensive scandal in Canadian history. According to the Royalty Review Panel and the Auditor General the government has lost billions of dollars, at least $114,000 per hour for every hour of every day for the last seven years, because of inadequate government oversight of the royalty regime.

My constituents are asking me many questions about the money this government failed to collect and how that money could have made Alberta a better place. They want someone to be held accountable for letting so many billions of dollars slip through the government's fingers. These dollars could have been saved in the heritage fund to build a better future for our province and to vastly improve the quality of infrastructure and vital government services. Homeless people wonder why this province still has so many problems even though it seems the government can afford to lose billions of dollars without a second thought.

Both the reports reveal that there are serious problems with accountability, transparency, and management within the Ministry of Energy, yet the government has refused to acknowledge that the Auditor General and the Royalty Review Panel both raised huge concerns over accountability within the Ministry of Energy. The people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, cannot trust this government, that has squandered our past to build our future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Shelby Chalmers

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been said that a library is at the heart of our community. I would also add that children and youth are at the heart of our communities as well, like the Nicoles of Lethbridge and in Slave Lake Shelby Chalmers, a 12-year-old student at Roland Michener secondary school in Slave Lake. I understand she's watching these proceedings from her school today.

Shelby loves her local library, and she took it upon herself to host a barbecue in September to raise money for the Slave Lake municipal library. Thanks to posters she put up at the library and around town, approximately a hundred people showed up to help Shelby with her fundraising mission. They ate hot dogs, hamburgers, buns, chips, and pop she solicited from local businesses. Attendees had more than just good food to enjoy at the event. They also had a chance to win door prizes and take part in kids' games. Shelby's parents and sisters helped out at the event as did the local Rotary Club members. At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, Shelby raised more than $2,000, money that will help build a new library, much needed in Slave Lake.

It was such a success that she's thinking of having another barbecue. The library board was thrilled, the community was amazed, and of course Shelby did such an outstanding job. This remarkable young lady reaffirms our belief in the strength, compassion, and dedication of Alberta's youth that inspires others to help make our world a better place. To you, Shelby, great work, and thank you very much for taking it upon yourself to become a Slave Lake citizen.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask all members of this House to join me in recognizing Shelby Chalmers for sharing her gift of leadership and her love of libraries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government likes to make grandiose announcements about what they're going to do in the future. Recently the Premier announced that we're going to have a housing secretariat and a 10-year plan to get rid of homelessness. This government has known about this problem for well over a year. They formed a task force to make recommendations. The final report was delivered seven months ago, and the government ignored most of the recommendations. Things have gotten worse. We now have 20 per cent more people on waitlists for affordable housing in Edmonton. Our shelters are already turning people away because they are at capacity. Estimates for the capital region alone say that we are short at least 6,000 affordable housing units, and last week's announcement won't fix that.

No government since the 1930s has done more to cause homelessness. It is a problem started because of major cuts to social housing in the mid-1990s, and now we have an overheated economy with thousands of people rolling into Alberta looking for a better life, and it will get worse. Without a moratorium on condo conversions and rent increase guidelines, more affordable units will be taken off the market. It is frightening to think about what might happen to homeless people when the weather changes this winter.

This Conservative government has to stop worshipping at the altar of the so-called free market and do what is right for vulnerable Albertans. It's not too late to do the right thing. Stop this crisis from getting worse by listening to ordinary Albertans, and put a stop to rent gouging. Albertans should be able to sleep at night knowing they'll be able to afford to sleep under the same roof next month.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to present a petition signed by constituents of Lacombe-Ponoka and area. They are urging the Assembly to pass Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 1,232 Albertans asking the Assembly to urge the government to stop commercial logging in Kananaskis Country and protect the area as a park. The petition was spearheaded by a group of Bragg Creek and Redwood Meadows residents who gave away about 7,000 tree tags this summer to people who hung them on trees on their property to encourage the government to protect the northeastern districts of the Kananaskis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and present a petition that is signed by the members of the area 17 council of northeast Edmonton, which comprises the presidents and the chairmen of community leagues, other NGOs, hockey and such, and it reads: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly [of Alberta] to pass Bill 213, Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, which will eliminate unnecessary regulations and reduce red tape."

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 216 Water Protection and Conservation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 216, Water Protection and Conservation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill will strengthen government's ability to manage water sustainably.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 216 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bill 218 Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy (Repeal of Ministerial Briefing Exemption) Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and introduce Bill 218, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy (Repeal of Ministerial Briefing Exemption) Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that this government remains committed to its pledge of providing the accountability and transparency that all Albertans expect from its public offices. This bill is being introduced with the people of this province in mind. The exemption of ministerial briefing notes from public access serves only one purpose: to allow the government to keep their dealings out of the public forum.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 218 read a first time]

head: 1:30 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night I had the pleasure of visiting the Lacombe Memorial Centre, where I was joined by over 350 concerned Albertans. These Albertans were concerned about Bill 46. Speaker after speaker expressed serious reservations about the direction this government is going in regarding Bill 46. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. All electricity consumers in Alberta will pay the full cost for any future transmission expansions and upgrades. Why under Bill 46 is this government limiting and restricting consumers' ability to participate fairly in hearings which will determine those total costs? It will show up on their monthly bills. Why aren't they being treated fairly?

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Hon. members, I will call on the hon. minister, but Bill 46 is at second reading. We will have an opportunity to debate this bill. The Assembly has not determined where it's going to go with this bill, so I don't know how the sponsor of the bill can respond. He may find that the Assembly goes in a different direction.

If you choose to say something, proceed.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The line of questioning, of course, is very similar to the line of questioning that took place yesterday. What I would have to say about the issue is that there appears to be a propensity by some individuals both inside and outside of the Legislature to whip up an awful lot of angst in the communities in rural Alberta with respect to the issue of their utilities. The fearmongering that's going on will certainly subside once Albertans, generally speaking, get an understanding of what's in Bill 46 as it proceeds through the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's Albertans that understand the bill and not the minister.

In October of this year the Auditor General did a great job of pointing out the Minister of Energy's failure to be accountable to Albertans. Bill 46 states that the Market Surveillance Administrator will not be subject to the Auditor General Act. Again to the Minister of Energy: why doesn't the minister want the Auditor General to audit the Market Surveillance Administrator? What are you afraid of? What are you afraid he'll find?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I have to say with respect to that is that Bill 46 is a piece of legislation before the House that is going to put in place a regulatory process that meets the electricity needs and the utility needs of all Albertans. There's need for utility infrastructure in all areas of the province. This is a very positive step forward for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Let's talk about need. Bill 46 amends the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. Currently this act requires the EUB to determine whether a proposed transmission line is and will be required to meet present and future public convenience and need. Why is the minister allowing the proposed commission in Bill 46 to approve transmission line projects without considering public convenience and need? Hasn't he learned anything from the spy scandals?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, that's a bunch of conjecture around something that may or may not take place. There will be a full debate of Bill 46 in this Assembly, and at that point in time all of the intricacies of the bill will be debated.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Okay. I'm going to make the comment again. If the hon. members want to cancel question period and move to second reading debate on Bill 46, the chair is at the will of the Assembly. But we do have a question period, and until you tell me differently, we're going to pay attention to what the purpose of the question period is.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. A confidential draft oil sands royalty regime report from this government dated October 2004 – and one can only assume that it was presented to cabinet – indicates that economic rent in 2004 on oil sands production was 34 per cent. This was described as extremely low by international standards. Again to the Minister of Energy: why did this government ignore the report for three years, costing Alberta resource owners billions and billions of dollars in lost royalty revenue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's obvious that the member opposite has himself wedged very squarely in the past. If you want to talk about the past, I'll tell you something about 2004. Royalty revenues to the province of Alberta in 2004: $8.34 billion – $8.34 billion. Capital investment in the energy industry only, province of Alberta, 2004: $23.7 billion – $23.7 billion. Jobs for Albertans, security for Albertans, infrastructure for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister and from the same report. You can see for yourself the blank pages. Now, why are you excluding this information from the public? Will the minister table all the recommendations made in this 2004 oil sands review for all Albertans to see? They own the resource. If you're truly open and accountable, you will show these recommendations on royalty rates and royalty collections, and people can make up their own mind whether they've been ripped off by this government or not.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, it's quite obvious, in fact, that the people in the province of Alberta have made up their mind. We're on this side of the House. They're on that side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing about this is that I would suggest to you and I would suggest to all Albertans that the member opposite spends too much time staring at blank pages.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the minister's information, I was in the Lacombe Memorial Centre last night when the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka asked if we need a new government, and there was a loud cheer.

Now, the Hunter report states, and hopefully the minister has read this: "The Panel is unanimous in declaring that Albertans do not presently enjoy a transparent and readily-evaluated royalty regime for oil and gas." Was this confidential draft oil sands royalty regime review of October 2004 shared with Mr. Hunter and his expert panel, and if not, why not?

Mr. Knight: Well, let's talk about the past some more, shall we? Let's move from 2004 to 2005. That was a nice year, 2005. I'll move ahead a year. In 2005 royalty revenues to the province of Alberta: $10.7 billion. Mr. Speaker, in 2005 the billions – the billions – $32.8 billion energy investment capital deployment in the province of Alberta, $32.8 billion. That's where the billions are.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When shown how his government let billions of royalty dollars slip through its hands, the Premier has claimed that this is not a problem. He stated that “all of that money ended up in the pockets of Albertans.” The Premier's claim that billions weren't lost, that we get our fair share through some magical trickle-down effect is contradicted by the department staff, by the independent expert panel, and by the Auditor General of this province. The impact of those missing billions is all too clear. To the Minister of Education: could the minister explain why school boards have been underfunded for so long if all of those billions of dollars were actually in the hands of Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it hasn't taken this member very long to figure out that that party will go to any length to fertilize the truth, to sink to the bottom of the lowest denominator when they come up with their questions.

Mr. Cheffins: If the minister disagrees, he should be asked to stand under the leaky roofs, and that will change his mind real quick.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's municipalities have struggled for too long to get enough funding for all sorts of needs: public transit, roads, policing. The list is far too long to list here today. To the minister of municipal affairs: why were our municipalities so cash-strapped if, in fact, those billions of dollars were in public hands?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that our Premier and this government very much recognized some of the challenges that municipalities had with the growth pressures in the province, so this Premier and this government put forward $11.3 billion over three years for sustainability and predictability for municipalities to do exactly that: to plan for transit, to plan for infrastructure, to plan for recreation facilities.

Mr. Cheffins: This government was around when all those problems were created.

Mr. Speaker, last year the mayor of Fort McMurray made an unprecedented personal intervention in the EUB hearings over the Voyageur project. The regional municipality of Wood Buffalo did not have nearly enough funding to address infrastructure and staffing needs. To the Minister of Energy: could the minister explain why the mayor had to do this if, in fact, the public had these billions of dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, this government has been extremely proactive with respect to any of the infrastructure problems that have been created by a very robust economy in this province. The situation that the member opposite speaks about has been very, very well addressed by two reports of the government that we're acting on: one, the Radke report, and two, the multistakeholder commission that we put in place. Those things are moving forward. The recommendations have been accepted. We will rest on that very good work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, the International Energy Agency said that future increases in world oil supply will come from “nonconventional sources – mainly Canadian oil sands.” Alberta's tar sands represent the largest, most secure, most valuable deposit of unexploited petroleum in the world, and as any small business owner could tell this government, that puts Alberta in the driver's seat when it comes to royalties. My question is to the Energy minister. Why, given Alberta's emerging dominant position in world energy markets, has this government proposed royalties lower than almost every other jurisdiction in the world?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you about the system in the province of Alberta is that it has generated a tremendous amount of economic activity in this province that has benefited all Albertans, all Canadians, and people from around North America and globally. It's a very robust industry; we understand that. We realize our position on the world stage; however, there is much more to it than just the oil sands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'd love to play poker with this minister. Alberta has been dealt a royal flush, and the Premier folded. Mr. Speaker, all the rest of the people in this province could see that big oil was bluffing. So my question to Energy minister is this: why did this government cave in to big oil?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, there could be a very good case made here that the leader of the third party wants to gamble with Albertans' jobs. I do not want to gamble with Albertans' jobs, and certainly I won't gamble with Albertans' jobs with a bunch of jokers.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister sure is a card.

The fact remains that it is this government that is gambling with the future of this province by letting the lion's share of the value from our resources flow to shareholders in multinational oil companies. Those are the same companies that finance the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party in this province. Mr. Speaker, how is it that Albertans could ever trust this government to stand up for them against big oil given the fact that they are so dependent on big oil money to finance their election campaigns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll tell you, this is the gamble. Here is the gamble: 2006, $9.3 billion in royalty revenue to the province of Alberta from the energy industry. Capital investment in the province of Alberta in the year 2006: $36.6 billion. That's the gamble. That's what we put on the table. That's what Albertans have accepted and expect us to continue to do, and we will continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Electronic Driver Reporting and Enforcement

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone wants safe highways. Many truckers are so fatigued that they create danger and should not be on our highways. A tragic case decided just days ago in our courts showed how a tired trucker killed an RCMP officer doing his job on the side of the highway. Tired driver: deadly driver. People in the transportation industry have told me that the old-style time-consuming paper logbooks for truckers and bus drivers have little effect. Electronic means are now available for real-time, verifiable reporting of hours worked. My question is to the minister of transportation. When will your department simplify the onerous paper-driven system of drivers' logbooks and accept the 21st century existing, proven technology for logbooks?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this government supports new technologies that reinforce compliance with hours-of-service regulations and ultimately reduce the fatigue of professional drivers. Alberta is not alone in its attempt to accept such new technologies. The U.S. government, Transport Canada, and all the provinces are currently developing performance criteria for manufacturers, carriers, and enforcement officials to ensure that these devices have acceptable standards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Federal regulations deal with interprovincial transport. The province handles enforcement of these regulations. All provinces except for Alberta have harmonized with the federal regulations on driver logs and vehicle trip inspection. When will your department, Mr. Transportation Minister, streamline, simplify, and harmonize to the Canadian standard, cutting red tape and implementing electronic driver reporting and enforcement?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the province is currently involved in harmonization of laws and governing of commercial carriers. We're also working with Transport Canada and other jurisdictions in developing guidelines for the introduction of hand-held electronic logbooks.

Mr. Backs: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Enforcement is the key. Proper enforcement follows simple reporting, little red tape. Our transportation department in its enforcement has not allowed implementation of electronic reporting. When will the department allow this, and have implementation timelines been established?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this government has long accepted the on-board electronic logbooks allowed by Transport Canada. That regulation is tied to the vehicle engine as a way to prove that driving activity matches the driver's hours of service. The new technologies being developed are stand alone, and current Transport Canada regulations do not support their use. We're in the process of changing that. We're currently developing policy guidelines for manufacturers, enforcement officers, and carriers to ensure that they're all provided with acceptable characteristics. We do support new technology, and we are actively pursuing harmonization acceptance across Canada and the U.S.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Repeat Offenders

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force report states that there is a serious problem with repeat offenders and that targeted action is necessary to deal with them. My questions are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Mr. Minister, why is it that repeat offenders are such an issue?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question, and if the opposition were in touch with the community, they'd recognize that the community thinks it's an excellent question. The fact is that some 15 per cent of offenders are responsible for 60 per cent of the crime. Here in Edmonton I can tell you that the Edmonton police have identified 136 or so individuals who are responsible for an incredible amount of the crime. To the extent that these folks can be identified and dealt with appropriately within the criminal justice system, we will be able to keep our communities safer.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how are you proposing to deal with these offenders?

Mr. Stevens: One of the recommendations in the excellent task force report, one that is accepted by this government because we have a policy with respect to safe communities, something that the opposition do not have, is that we will take some steps with respect to repeat offenders. First of all, Mr. Speaker, we will be ensuring that more often Crown prosecutors rather than police will be addressing the issue of bail in the first instance. At present that is the reverse.

Secondly, we've had great success with respect to identifying long-term and dangerous offenders through a flagging system. We are currently in the process of working with the Solicitor General and with police forces throughout Alberta so that we can develop a flagging system for repeat offenders.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when will this system be in place?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that we are working on that as we speak, and we are working on it in earnest as it relates to the flagging system.

On the issue of the Crown prosecutors we have had a pilot project in Wetaskiwin for some time now, which has had incredible success. It's one of those situations which makes the police very, very happy because they're able to do what they should be doing, and more importantly, from my perspective as the Minister of Justice, we have appropriate people dealing with the bail applications.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Farm Fuel Rebate Program

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Please Don't Call This a Compromise and his ministers have failed this province and its people by leaving billions of dollars in royalties uncollected. Now we have further evidence of their inability to collect our fair share of tax revenue. The Auditor General has been made aware of cases where former farmers have notified Alberta Agriculture that they are no longer farming, yet senior department officials admitted yesterday that they do not even know if the department follows up by cancelling the farm fuel tax benefits received by those same farmers.

My question is for the minister of agriculture. How can you continue to allow millions of dollars to be lost in revenue by not cancelling the farm fuel tax benefit for Albertans who have admitted that they're no longer in the business of farming?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar earlier in the spring, we're reviewing the program and will be coming forth with a new program in the next few months. I suspect no fraud, but perhaps the program needs to be changed a little.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sixty thousand farmers are registered in the farm fuel benefit program in Alberta, yet numbers from Statistics Canada show that there are only about 40,000 farmers who would be eligible for the program. To the minister of agriculture: why have you not followed up the recommendations from the Auditor General's 2005-2006 report, a report which you agreed with and said that you would follow up on, by verifying application information and requiring regular renewal to avoid abuse of the program? It's two years later. What are we waiting for?

Mr. Groeneveld: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the member across has a hearing problem because I just explained that. The purpose of the Alberta farm fuel benefit program is to allow farm operators to buy fuel at a competitive price with their North American counterparts. We're working on it, as I said. We're working with the Department of Finance, who actually administers the program, so there's no problem.

Mr. R. Miller: I can't imagine why it takes two years to start that work, Mr. Speaker.

A freedom of information response that we received earlier this year showed that the department of agriculture was aware of the abuse in the farm fuel program as far back as 1997. An internal audit done in 1999 again noted the problems with the program, yet nothing was done. During 10 years of mismanagement, Mr. Speaker, hard-working farmers who were legitimately eligible for the program could have been better assisted if the misused dollars had been redirected into appropriate programs. My question is for the minister: why has this mismanagement of the farm fuel program been allowed to continue for 10 years while several agriculture ministers, including the current Premier of this province . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: As I said, it's under the Department of Finance, so maybe I'll ask the minister to respond to that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under TEFU this program provides approximately $50 million worth of benefit to farmers in the province of Alberta. These $50 million go to people who have had an extremely tough time with low commodity prices over the past several years, so it is a program that is working excellently.

Mr. Speaker, in my tenure as this minister I have dealt with farmers that have been taken off of this program, and realistically they are very unhappy. Do we have to ensure that the farmers that are on this program are legitimate farmers? Absolutely. Do we do it? The answer is yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Crime Reduction and Safe Communities

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force final report says that the justice system is broken. My questions are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. How did the system get to the point where the report claims that it's fractured?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as you know, the task force toured Alberta. They went to 14 different locations, received input from literally hundreds and hundreds of Albertans. What they were reporting is what people felt about the system, and, yes, they did call it fractured. There are definitely a lot of things that were outlined in the report that need to be done better, and I can say on behalf of this government that we acknowledge that, and we will be doing better.

On the other hand, it also indicated that there were many things which are going well. It is to be acknowledged that the prosecution service, the court service, and the police are doing a very good job. What we need to do is to have more collaboration, co-operation, and leadership with respect to this, and that was the essence of this particular report. We need to have some way in order to bring those groups together so that we can all go in the same direction collaboratively.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. What role do actual communities, such as my communities, play in this?

Mr. Stevens: The task force report indicates very clearly that this is not just simply a matter for Alberta Justice or the Alberta Solicitor General or for police forces. This is a matter for all communities, all municipalities, all individuals in Alberta. When we all understand that we have a role to play, then we will make incredible strides.

One of the things that was pointed out in the report that would help our communities is if we have safe communities legislation, and I'm happy to say, Mr. Speaker, that later today Bill 212, I believe, will be before the House as a private member's bill. It's referred to in that report as the kind of bill that we need here in this province to assist municipalities in addressing the kinds of issues that they have in their communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost every day this week the Premier and his ministers have denied that this government failed to collect billions of dollars. They even claim that the missing dollars have been reinvested into the province and are benefiting Albertans. To the Minister of Energy: can the minister explain how we reached a crisis in the human service sector if this money actually trickled down?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. What's actually missing here is an understanding of what has happened in the province of Alberta with respect to the development of the resources of this province over a number of years. If people want to continue to dwell on the past, well, I've got more. If they want more, I've got more.

In 2003: $6.5 billion in royalty revenues to the province of Alberta and capital investment in the province of $19.4 billion. Mr. Speaker, what this does is provide jobs for Albertans, security for Albertans, and certainly allows Albertans to be able to take better care of themselves with respect to the issues that the hon. member is talking about.

Ms Pastoor: With all due respect, sir, EnCana has just spent billions in Texas, and that's not in the past.

To the minister of health. Seniors in assisted living are forced to pay each time if they need extra bathing, eating, or in fact receiving their medications. Can the minister explain how we reached this point in continuing care if this money has trickled down?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, they talk about missing royalties. There aren't missing royalties. The royalties that were assessed were collected. What they're talking about is perhaps a lost opportunity to collect royalties, and the Minister of Energy has indicated how by keeping the royalties at the rate they were we created economic benefit.

The member should also know that our Fiscal Responsibility Act puts a cap on how much royalty revenue can go into the operating budget. We should not be moving into the selling of the assets to pay for the groceries. So if there were additional royalty revenues, it wouldn't be appropriate to spend it on current expenses. It would be appropriate to save it to build a knowledge-based economy for tomorrow and to build the assets for tomorrow.

Ms Pastoor: People not receiving care really don't care about the economics; they know they're being ripped off. To the minister of seniors. Albertans on AISH are struggling to pay their rent and meet their basic needs because benefits have not been indexed to keep up with inflation. Can the minister explain how people on AISH are benefiting from these trickle-down dollars?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, over the past years we have ensured that each year there has been an increase to those AISH payments. We do acknowledge that those individuals with severe disabilities have an ability to have a monthly payment. This past year in this budget we did increase payments to those AISH recipients. That's a matter of each budget that would come forward for the future year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A safe and secure community is very important to the people of Red Deer-North and all Albertans. This government has told Albertans many times that it is committed to safe and secure communities, so it's very disturbing to learn that there are as many as 200,000 warrants outstanding for the arrest of criminals throughout Alberta, 8,000 of those warrants for serious or violent crimes. These criminals need to be taken off our streets. My first question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What action is the minister taking to get these criminals off the streets of Alberta's communities and neighbourhoods?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's commitment is firm. Albertans have a right to safe communities. Today I announced a new $1.4 million program which will help take criminals off the street and keep them off. The new warrant apprehension team will work with police agencies across the province to target and bring to justice criminals on outstanding warrants. This is consistent with recommendations from the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force. Each one of these units consists of five sheriffs whose sole purpose is to find and arrest criminals with outstanding warrants who have evaded capture. We are turning up the heat.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: what will these warrant apprehension teams do that police can't or don't already do?

Mr. Lindsay: This new unit is going to work in partnership, Mr. Speaker, with municipal police, the RCMP, and corrections to identify, find, and arrest criminals who are unlawfully at large. Having a unit dedicated strictly to apprehending these criminals will make warrant apprehension much more effective. Getting these criminals off the streets ensures they won't reoffend and revictimize Albertans.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: what can people in my community do to help with the work of this new unit?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, enforcement alone will not curb violence. We need the ongoing support of the community to help police in their criminal investigations. For our part we continue to work with Alberta communities and with police to prevent crime and make criminal acts more difficult to commit. This year alone we spent $18 million to help fight organized crime, and in the last three years we have invested $31 million and added nearly 300 police officers to our streets. We have also established two sheriff surveillance teams that help police investigate organized crime and gang activity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In 1994-95 teachers reluctantly agreed to wage rollbacks to help the Conservative government get out of debt. Alberta's teachers have been asked to make sacrifices ever since, and they've been given very little support for their pension fund. Teachers here contribute more than any other province. They're still paying much more than their fair share. My question is to the Education minister. Currently the government is paying only half of the pension benefits you're meant to pay. Why don't you get off your high horse now and pay the proper amount?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to say that for the past several months officials of the Department of Education and representatives of the Alberta Teachers' Association have been holding meetings relative to working towards a resolution on the unfunded pension liability and other issues related to that. It was determined at the outset that public discussions during this time would serve no purpose. I am optimistic that negotiations and discussions are proceeding, maybe better than what one might have expected at this time.

Mr. Eggen: Well, considering, Mr. Speaker, that there was a last-minute attempt jammed in the last budget forcing the teachers to do something with this and that during the budget as well there was 3 per cent underfunding of teachers to squeeze the school boards so that it made it very difficult to do these negotiations in the first place, I see a pattern of stalling. I would like to know how this idea of not funding the unfunded liability issue fits into this building tomorrow platform that we're supposed to represent. Are we going to get something for an unfunded liability before the next election?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member will recall that in the budget of this past spring we allocated $25 million, and that is to assist the teachers' contributions. Starting on September 1 of this year the government of Alberta assumed the 3.1 per cent contribution the teachers were making towards the unfunded pension liability, so as of September this year teachers actually have 3.1 per cent more take-home pay than they did the month previous.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, I mean, I find that difficult to put forward, playing with numbers like he is. The fact is that school boards were given 3 per cent under the funding for the cost of living for this year and probably, really, for the cost of the price to do business in this province. I heard the minister say this before, and I would like him to say it again. Will he make a commitment to not tie the unfunded liability issue to the next round of contracts? There are only eight of 62 boards right now that do have contracts. There are many thousands of teachers who do not have contracts. Are you going to remove the tie between unfunded liability and the negotiations for contracts?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, we are in discussions with the ATA right now, and I am very optimistic that things will proceed favourably. Unlike certain members of the opposition, I'm optimistic. I am not going to run around this province spreading doom and gloom.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Grizzly Bear Management

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent report shows that in Banff national park human contact has caused the death of female grizzlies and has compromised the population's growth capacity. Top scientific research shows that the death of just one female grizzly bear can be devastating to the whole group as well. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why was the grizzly bear recovery plan not adopted three years ago, when it was presented to Sustainable Resource Development? What are we waiting for?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to report to the House today that this government has a long-standing policy of putting the long-term well-being of the grizzly bear at the top of our priorities. I can go back to 2002, when the then minister, the Member for Athabasca-Redwater, right there, created the grizzly recovery team; in 2005, when the then minister of Sustainable Resource Development, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, suspended for the three years the grizzly hunt and instituted the population study. This government is proud of our record on looking after the long-term well-being of the grizzly bear in Alberta.

Mr. Bonko: Well, it's not much of a record to stand on, considering the population continues to fall. Mr. Speaker, I'm disappointed the government still has not followed the advice of its own conservation committee to list the grizzlies as either threatened or endangered. Do something besides strap cameras to their heads. What are we going to do?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm again happy to report to the House that I met with the grizzly bear recovery team in June, received their report and their study, one of the best presentations I've seen in my 10, 11 months as a minister. I did receive that report last month, in October, and we'll be releasing it shortly. I can tell you that, again, the long-term well-being of the grizzly bear is at the very top of the priority list of this government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recommended number of grizzlies to sustain a healthy population is 1,000 – 1,000 bears – yet in the past five years under the Tory government the number of bears remaining in the Alberta landscape is less than half. Notwithstanding the minister's provincial hunting day will he stop and act now and suspend the grizzly hunt indefinitely?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is playing with numbers from two different reports. Again, we, my predecessor from Livingstone-Macleod, undertook a four-year scientific study based on DNA of hair samples that will give us an accurate understanding of the nature of the population, the distribution of the population of grizzlies in this province. We have identified core grizzly habitat areas. That's the key to the study. We've identified the fact that unregulated public motorized access is the problem, and we'll be prepared to deal and recommend very positive solutions to that problem at the end of the study and when the three-year moratorium ends.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy is at an all-time high, creating many opportunities across the province for skilled tradespeople. In fact, a number of industries are lacking so many workers that Albertans are now suffering the consequences of waiting weeks and months for services. Our province needs to start drawing from untapped labour sources such as youth. We need to be innovative to attract young Albertans to those promising careers. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is your department doing to attract youth to careers in trades to increase the number of skilled people in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very important question given the very hot economy we have and the huge investment that the oil industry has made in our province. We've centred on the students in the high schools and enabled them to enrol in the registered apprenticeship program, or RAP as we call it, as early as grade 10. By doing so, they can earn credits towards their high school diploma and an apprenticeship at the same time. More than 3,000 RAP apprentices who started high school have graduated and are now working full-time to complete their apprenticeship programs. Students get the opportunity in this program to experience the trades, develop some skills, gain knowledge, gain work experience, earn high school credits at the same time, and can earn an income while they learn and achieve their apprenticeship.

In addition to the RAP program we have the youth apprenticeship project, which is a pilot project in northern Alberta.

The Speaker: I think we'll pass it to the hon. member now.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I'm glad the minister talked about the registered apprenticeship program. Just last week I was able to attend the scholarship celebration for those fine young people, and several of those members that were receiving scholarships were from Whitecourt-St. Anne. You know, the RAP program started back in 1991 with great partnerships with industry, and apprentices have been spending thousands and thousands of dollars on training. But what are the tangible results from this program, and what is your department doing to assist these young people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are committed to increasing opportunities for these young people. We have RAP scholarships, which encourage high school students to continue their apprenticeship programs after graduation. We've made over 500 of those available each year. In addition, $4.4 million is available annually to regular apprentices who demonstrate excellence in their training programs. The government has also paid tuition increases for apprentices for the past two consecutive years. Grants are available for apprentices who demonstrate financial need.

Mr. Speaker, we're also making it easier for apprentices in remote areas to get their training. We have 1,600 high school students that are currently in the RAP program today. We're getting very, very positive feedback from both the students and the employers. We have over 66,000 apprentices in the province.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm afraid we must move on.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What's your department doing with the federal government to help promote postsecondary education within Alberta's First Nations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just yesterday I met with University of Alberta officials. In fact, we were talking about the economic partnerships that we have in place. Relative to tangible measurements you may not be aware of the fact that we've had over 1,200 apprenticeships, and our goal is to work towards 1,500 apprenticeships, many of them being in the aboriginal community. Truly, our aboriginal youth are a key to the future in the terms of economic development and opportunities here in the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Anthony Henday Drive Intersections

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently received an e-mail from a constituent complaining about the single most frustrating stretch of road in west Edmonton, the intersection of Anthony Henday Drive and Stony Plain Road. The government brags repeatedly about the Edmonton ring road, and for the most part it is a fast, smooth-running freeway, but there is a major knot at Stony Plain Road and Anthony Henday. Common sense dictates that an interchange should have been built at the point where the two heavily travelled roads meet, yet while new sections of the Edmonton ring road have opened traffic light free, west end motorists continue to fume in enormous traffic jams at a series of lights on the Henday and Stony Plain Road. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: why did the government choose not to build a proper interchange at Henday and Stony Plain Road when the Henday opened, and when can we expect construction on these desperately needed improvements to begin?

Mr. Ouellette: We're doing an engineering design on that right now, Mr. Speaker. It's not in our three-year plan right now. We're trying to figure out how we can speed it up to get it there. We understand that that intersection is backing up traffic. We know it's busy. If we had done the first portion of the Anthony Henday under a P3 scenario, we probably could have had it all done at once. We couldn't get it all done at once within the budget we had at the time. We did the best we could, and we're working on putting it there as fast as we can.

Mr. Tougas: Another $6 billion would have come in handy, wouldn't it, Mr. Minister?

Can the minister explain why the government chose to complete an overpass at 87th Avenue, an overpass that currently leads to a dead end, before completing work on the Henday and Stony Plain Road?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I will have to say that I'm not exactly sure what overpass he's speaking about. I haven't gone to that dead end yet.

Mr. Tougas: Well, to the same minister. The government has clearly put its fanatical devotion to P3s ahead of its obligation to the voters to build desperately needed roads. Is the government now telling the public that they can forget about highways getting built in a timely manner unless they follow the P3 model no matter how much they may be needed?

Mr. Ouellette: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. We are doing whatever we can to build highways whenever we can. I'm just saying that wherever a P3 fits, where it works right, we will do it. We've been working on that, and anywhere that needs a highway to keep our people safe, we're working on getting it done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. As we're into the start of the early fall, can he explain to me how he's working with the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture on the mountain pine beetle, especially in the area of the Willmore wilderness park?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to report to the House that we are at a better position this year than we were 12 months ago on the pine beetle. The number of infected trees in northern Alberta has dropped to about 300,000 from over several million, and we think that the combination of the good weather and our very proactive policy with respect to identifying and removing infected trees is having a positive effect there. The situation in central and southern Alberta is not quite as optimistic. There are still heavy infestations on the British Columbia side of the border, and we're concerned that there has been, percentagewise, an increase in pine beetle in southern Alberta. So we're continuing to pursue our aggressive policies there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Can the minister give us an outline on what he's doing with forest management units E8 and E10 pertaining to the mountain pine beetle and the caribou?

2:20

Dr. Morton: Well, Mr. Speaker, the mountain caribou situation has been on our priority list for a number of years. Again, one of my predecessors, I believe the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, created the caribou recovery committee, and we now have that committee. There are a number of teams in place for the different caribou herds, and we have two plans already in place, and I'm expecting a third, local plan for a specific group of caribou forthcoming this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. With the mountain pine beetle affected trees, how is he working with the other forest companies in the areas there to make sure that we're getting the best utilization of this fibre?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, again I'm happy to report that the various logging forestry companies in Alberta are working closely with Sustainable Resource Development to both stop the spread of the pine beetle and also to utilize infected trees. A number of new products are being investigated. We're working closely with counterparts in British Columbia, who, unfortunately for them, are much further down the road of pine beetle kill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period. There were 88 questions and answers today. We will return now to the Routine and on the Routine we were at Introduction of Bills.

I'll now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Bill 222

Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund (Tobacco Investment Elimination) Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In light of the tremendous progress made in this House yesterday on Bill 45, I'm honoured to request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 222, Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund (Tobacco Investment Elimination) Amendment Act, 2007.

[Motion carried; Bill 222 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today five copies of the special areas trust account financial statements, December 31, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Carrying out my MLA duty as the voice of my constituency in this Assembly, I would like to table a document given to me by a number of constituents. This document reads: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to pass Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of the confidential draft oil sands royalty regime review from October 2004. That was the basis of one of my questions to the Minister of Energy today.

The second tabling I have is a flyer that I got in the Lacombe Memorial Centre last night. It's called Kill Bill 46, and more information can be reached at www.killbill46.ca for those who are interested.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the opportunity to meet some very dedicated, committed members of the Central Alberta Refugee Effort in Red Deer, known as CARE. They are doing an excellent job for the community. I'm tabling five copies of their fall newsletter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to table a letter from a student in Mill Woods in which she's expressing concern about the homelessness in our city. She's asking that the government continue to make a concerted effort to help alleviate this problem completely. "We must do something! Please give this great consideration and act fast!"

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first tabling is the appropriate number of copies of an Edmonton Journal article written by the leader of the Liberal opposition on September 26, 2007, criticizing the inequity in the government's municipal infrastructure funding formula, which gives Calgary one and a half times more money per person than Edmonton.

The second tabling is a news release from the Liberal opposition dated November 2, 2007, which outlines their own spending priorities, curiously giving Calgary three and a half times more money than Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to make three tablings. One is a document from Veterans Affairs Canada. It's appropriate to table this with the Remembrance Day weekend coming up. It outlines material on Henry Louis Norwest, originally from Fort Saskatchewan, an impressive rodeo performer who was also a tremendously accomplished veteran in the First World War and was lost at that time.

Also, I have two documents pertaining to my question today. One is a description of electronic, or wireless, logs and how they operate. Another is a group of documents. One shows electronic procedures, and one shows the old-style paper procedures.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, a document dated September 2007 entitled Review of Section 8 of the Fatal Accidents Act and pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Law Society of Alberta annual report 2006 and the Alberta Law Foundation 34th annual report 2007 for the fiscal year ended March 31 with attached audited financial statements and other financial information of the Alberta Law Foundation, year ended March 31, 2007.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm hoping that the Government House Leader can share with the House the projected government House business for the week of November 13 to 15, 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In anticipation of an adjournment motion today which takes us to Tuesday rather than Monday because of the Remembrance Day holiday, we would have, then, under Orders of the Day on Tuesday for third reading Bill 7, Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007, and Bill 8, Vital Statistics Act; for second reading Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007; and in Committee of the Whole bills 35, 36, and 24, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, and the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007.

For Wednesday, November 14, under Orders of the Day for third reading Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007, and Bill 37, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007. For second reading Bill 11, the Telecommunications Act Repeal Act; Bill 41, Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007; and Bill 23, the Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act. In Committee of the Whole, time permitting, Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act; Bill 2, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007; and Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

Thursday, November 15, under Orders of the Day for second reading Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. For third reading Bill 13, the Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007; Bill

1, the Lobbyists Act; Bill 2, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007; and Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007. It's all, of course, depending on progress from previous days.

head: Statement by the Speaker
Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, just two housekeeping items for today. First of all, there was an item that arose in the House yesterday with respect to an exchange with the Official Opposition Leader and the Premier, and it had to do with a tabling. I've been advised by the hon. Government House Leader that the quotation that the Premier used in the question period came from, quote, notes. Under the rules notes do not have to be tabled. Members might want to just refer to Beauchesne 495(1) and to Marleau and Montpetit at pages 517 and 518 for greater clarification with respect to that. Both those documents refer to documents, dispatches, official documents, and the like. Notes, though, that members may have in front of them that they would quote from need not be tabled.

There was also part of the exchange, I think, that occurred between the chair and the Government House Leader that had to do with newspaper articles. Today the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona tabled newspaper articles. The Speaker has indicated in the past that those were totally unnecessary to be tabled in the House. News releases of other parties need not be tabled either. They probably could be found someplace.

However, during the question period if a member was quoting something from a document, including a newspaper, I think it's only good courtesy, should another member ask for the copy of the article in question to be tabled, that it be provided if it's part of the complete document per se.

Nothing further.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Mr. Speaker, under 13(2), I'm wondering if the Speaker could expand. I note that on page 1853 of Hansard in the Premier's response he does say to the Leader of the Official Opposition, "because on February 17 in the Calgary Herald the hon. Leader of the Opposition said," and then he gave a quote. I take it that he was quoting from the Calgary Herald. He mentions it. Now, I am expected to see that document tabled in this House. To hear that it's in notes strikes me as an omission on behalf of the Government House Leader in not providing the document. I understood from the ruling that the Speaker had given and which appears on the pages that I'd quoted for you, starting on page 1859 and concluding on 1860, that the documents were expected to be tabled.

The Speaker: All hon. members, from where the chair sits, the chair has no idea what is in front of a member. The chair – oh, yes – assumed that there would have been a newspaper article or something that the quotation had come from, but the chair was advised by the hon. Government House Leader that the quotation came from notes, which made it different. The chair has no idea what's in front of an hon. member when they have a piece of paper in front of them. That's what the assumption was. The advice provided to the chair was that it came from notes, and if that's the case, well, notes are not required. If it came from a newspaper article, and there's a whole newspaper article in front, it would seem to me that as a point of courtesy that might have been provided. I don't know other than the word "notes," so perhaps the Government House Leader might be able to add some clarification.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in preparation for coming into the House, we have notes and briefing books and things like that that we refer to. Now, if I were to come to the House and use a quote from Winston Churchill, it wouldn't be expected of me to table either Bartlett's quotations or the original book that the quote was in. It is a matter of saying a quote and saying where it came from, and that should be of interest to the House.

Now, if I were waving around a newspaper and saying, you know, "I'm quoting from this newspaper" and was asked to table it, while in my view that would not necessarily be appropriate because it is a newspaper and is in the public domain, I'd be happy to table that. But if I refer to one of these notes, that's a briefing note, and that's where I get a lot of information to be able to answer questions. It doesn't make any sense to suggest that if I quoted somebody in an answer to a question, I would have to go to the source and find the book and bring it here and table it so that people could look up the quote. They're told where the quote comes from. They can go check the source, and that should be the answer to it.

Now, I believe, Mr. Speaker, you're absolutely right. When you were referring to it, you didn't know what the Premier was referring to. The concept of tabling goes back a long way. We have broadened the concept in this House, perhaps appropriately, to allow a whole lot of tablings, but the original rules, Erskine May, would suggest that it's official government documents, those sorts of things which are really intended for the purposes of tabling. For the purposes of public discussion in the public domain we allow tabling of all sorts of things, and I'm not going to suggest that that's inappropriate. But to suggest that everything that a person, perhaps, quotes from and has in front of them should be tabled opens the door to a whole new set of tablings which would be inappropriate.

The Speaker: It's not a point of order or anything.

Mr. Mason: I'm just looking for the rule that allows me to ask a question of the Speaker on a ruling for clarification.

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, the Speaker hasn't made any ruling. We're having a discussion.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Can I discuss?

The Speaker: Proceed, then. It's 13(2) probably that you're looking at.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If I can discuss, then, one of the concerns that I have is that when quotes from documents of whatever kind are transferred into notes for a member, who then quotes from their notes, at the very least, if they don't have to table their notes, then the notes need to give all members of the House a very clear understanding of where it comes from so that it can be found easily. I think if that was the case, it would prevent the government from doing indirectly what they're not supposed to do directly.

The Speaker: Look, the reality of all of this is that we do have a committee, by the way, that's supposed to be looking at all of these modifications and changes to the Standing Orders. It could easily be referred to them to have a discussion. All the chair is saying is the following. I'm not aware of any member who at one time or another in the past, if they've been here for more than a little period of time, has not had an article or something in front of them that may have a thousand lines in it, and then they have extrapolated one line out of that article and used it. Somebody else might challenge them then and say: well, by taking that one line out of these 1,000 lines, you have not given truth to the whole understanding of the whole subject. It seems that if an hon. member takes one line out of an editorial and uses it and then another hon. member says, "Well, fine, by taking that one line out, you haven't given the whole ambience of the whole thing," but the hon. member who has taken one line out says, "That's in my notes. I wrote it down," under the qualification for notes they do not have to be tabled, and in essence you're going to have this kind of a situation.

But as I do recall, at the time in question the hon. the Premier did cite the date and the source as well. Having done that, I suppose I could go to the library and get a copy made if that would help everybody.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you.

The Speaker: You want me to go to the library to get a copy of the newspaper article on that day? Well, we'll have one of the pages go, okay? Clerk, would you look into the record for yesterday, see what date it was, get a copy, and provide it to all members of the Assembly.

But we're doing something different today in the sense that this is the first time that, in essence, one of the changes occurred in the order of business as a result of the special debate that occurred on Monday of this week. Standing Order 8(3), the new one, basically says, "If the business enumerated in suborder (1) has not received a total of 3 hours of consideration," then three hours of consideration for private members' bills must occur during that week on Thursday. So we have a situation today where we now have a three-hour block – a three-hour block – set aside for private members' business.

However, we also have provision in our rules that no later than one hour and 55 minutes into that three hours we must stop and then go to motions. So when I say Orders of the Day, the clock will start to run. One hour and 55 minutes later if we're still in private members' business, we will stop and go to motions, and there'll be one hour and five minutes of motions. If we were to follow this through, three hours from now would take us to 20 minutes to 6, and in essence we will have fulfilled the obligation of the standing order.

At that point in time I would hope that the hon. Government House Leader would give consideration, because our Standing Orders also indicate that we don't sit on Remembrance Day – well, Remembrance Day is a Sunday, just so there's no confusion – that when we rise, we do not return until Tuesday at 1 o'clock. Otherwise, I'll be back here Monday at 1 o'clock.

An Hon. Member: By yourself.

The Speaker: By myself.

Okay, if I say Orders of the Day, here's where we're going.

Bill 212

Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act

[Debate adjourned June 11]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to add some thought to the debate on Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Albertans have always placed importance on investing in children. Through initiatives such as Alberta's Promise this province has invested resources and expertise to ensure that our children have every opportunity to succeed in the world of tomorrow. By investing in our children and keeping them on a clean and clear path, we seek to ensure the vitality and strength and stability of Alberta for decades to come.

I'm pleased to see that our government is building upon the progress which has been made in continuing to make our children a priority. Our government has pledged to enhance early learning opportunities for Alberta's children, increase access to child care, increase high school completion rates, and ensure that Alberta students have access to high-quality postsecondary education.

We also have to realize that an integral part of our investment in children is protecting them from many potential harms in this world. Mr. Speaker, we've all seen the devastating impacts that social ills such as violence and drugs can have on the lives of our youth. These activities poison our social and physical environment, disrupt the bodies and minds of our youth, and create a culture of harm and abuse. Once this culture is entrenched, it is very difficult to eradicate. To this end, I'm encouraged to see that this government will continue forward with the prevention of family violence and bullying initiatives.

I support Bill 212, Mr. Speaker, because it is consistent with the government's objective of making communities safer for Albertans and especially for our children. The Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act would place a tool in the hands of law enforcement which will allow immediate action to be taken when safety in Alberta's communities is compromised. Specifically, Bill 212 would give a director of law enforcement the power to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench to have restrictions placed upon a property when there is a balance of probability indicating that illegal or disruptive activity is occurring. This restriction could include removing excessive fortifications from a property or placing a community closure order on it. Among the many possible repercussions community safety orders would provide for the property to be closed for a period of 90 days. After the end of this order the owners of the property would be permitted to return while any troublemaking tenant would be permanently evicted.

I believe these restrictions will be effective in reducing dangerous activities in our communities because they offer creative solutions to address activities which compromise the safety and the quality of life of the residents. By forcing property owners who are involved in activities which present a danger to communities to vacate the premises for a period of time, we are in essence taking away their ability to endanger neighbourhood residents. This is particularly true in a case such as the manufacturing of illegal drugs, where property is directly tied to the hazardous activities because it makes concealed production possible.

Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, we already have several pieces of legislation in Alberta which could be used to stop activities which endanger communities. For instance, the Public Health Act mandates that property owners must ensure that their property is not injurious to others. In addition, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and the bylaws of many Alberta municipalities also include provisions to restrict homeowners and tenants from engaging in harmful activities. While these legislative tools are often effective at reducing dangerous activity, there's room to improve upon them. The existing legislation is limiting because it may be vague in some instances. Bill 212 represents an opportunity for improvement because it outlines a specific process in reducing activities which may harm the general public.

Another strength of this proposed act is the creativity of the solution that is proposed. In this Legislature we have the proud history of approving legislation that is creative and that looks beyond the obvious answers and implements solutions which drive to the roots of the problems. Some examples of these are the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, and the Drug-endangered Children Act. Both of these acts take into account the broader implication of dangerous activity and put in place a solution to mitigate them.

In the case of the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act this legislation implemented a process to force endangered youth to receive treatment for drug addictions. The Drug-endangered Children Act allows for apprehension of children who are endangered by the manufacturing or use of illegal drugs. These solutions are not necessarily designed to be punitive but, rather, to prevent harm and to remove children from situations where they may be injured by their own actions and those of others.

One interesting thing to note is that both these acts are related to issues concerning youth. There's just something about our children, Mr. Speaker, that seems to bring out the best in the members of this Assembly. I think that Bill 212 provides this Assembly the same opportunity that the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act and the Drug-endangered Children Act allow. It gives the opportunity to make our province a safer place for children by being proactive and focusing on the prevention rather than waiting for harm to occur and punish those responsible.

To be certain, there is a great deal of value in punishing those who harm or endanger others. I believe that deterrence is a valid principle and can help to make Alberta safer. We have a criminal justice system for deterrence, and I believe it works quite well. Bill 212 would in no way detract from our current system of criminal justice or allow those who harm Albertans to elude punishment. Those who choose to break the law will still be brought to justice.

Rather, this bill will help to enhance Alberta's justice system. It deals with dangerous behaviour before it results in harm and can reduce the overall caseload of the justice system. In doing this, we could help ensure that our communities remain safe and our justice system can deal with offenders in a timely and efficient manner. Moreover, by avoiding the sometimes lengthy timelines involved in the prosecution of criminal cases, we can ensure that the action will be taken today to prevent dangerous activity, activity which harms Albertans and our children.

Finally, enacting legislation which ends up controlling dangerous activity through civil rather than criminal sanctions allows this Assembly to take direct action to protect Albertans. We are forbidden by the Canadian Constitution to pass criminal legislation, but we can help to achieve the goal of protecting Albertans through other means, such as this bill.

I'm going to end up where I began, Mr. Speaker, by talking about the duty we as legislators have to the children of this province. I believe that we owe them the right to grow up in a province that is nurturing, progressive, and, above all, safe. We owe them the opportunity to pursue their dreams and to be free from a life filled with fear caused by dangerous activity. I call on this Assembly to support Bill 212.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, I know that you've indicated that you'd like to speak next, but my records indicate that you have already spoken at second reading on this bill. So I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 212 for the first time. I recognize that this is something that not only big cities in the province but smaller communities around Alberta have been looking for, a little bit more ability to be able to take the criminals at hand. We recognize, in fact, that the police are tied up on numerous occasions and cannot act as swiftly as one would like, instances in my own constituency when people have called in with concerns about drug dealings or drug houses or excessive partying. Excessive partying goes away, but the drug houses are there because they seem to be profitable.

This particular bill, Bill 212, allows people to be able to call in anonymously, and the director of the detachment is able to make the determination, in fact, whether or not they go and investigate a little bit further. If that is the case – and they don't have to give their name – they've got several options, including issuing a warning letter to the property owners, resolving the problem out of court, or just applying for a community safety order through the courts, with which the property could in fact face closure, or applying for immediate closure.

If it's a rental property, the people may be a little bit more conscious as to who, in fact, they're renting to. If it's the owners, they're going to be obviously watching what they're doing because it now enables homeowners, regular community members, to be a little bit more diligent in getting rid of illegal activities, making communities safer for the children, as the member across has said, and I think that is paramount.

We all believe that our kids should have an opportunity, as we did years ago, to be able to have the community safe and sound, to be able to go to the playground that's maybe only two, three houses down without worrying what's going to happen to them. I think that this is a great step in enabling that. It's the first step. It probably can be improved upon later on, as the years go by. We recognize where there needs to be a little bit tighter pieces in it, but from right there I think that's an opportunity for everyone, as I said, to have a safe and secure community.

I appreciate the opportunity. I fully support Bill 212. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I also would like to rise and speak to Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I just want to indicate that I have represented much of northeast Edmonton in another capacity – that is, as a councillor for the city of Edmonton for 11 years – then the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands, and then Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood since 2000, so that's seven years, nearly eight, and I have had many interactions with my constituents on issues like this.

I believe that the constituents of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood would like me to support this bill. I think it is an important tool that would help the community itself as well as the police deal with difficult situations that arise from time to time in some of our communities. This kind of activity really has a negative impact on people's ability to enjoy their lives, to enjoy their property, and to enjoy their communities, to be safe and to be sure that their children are safe.

As a community we have done a great deal of work over the years to try and improve conditions, particularly some of the bad housing which exists, some of the rundown areas, and to improve the business districts along 118th Avenue. I'm proud to say that the community's efforts have met with a significant degree of success, and things are getting better in some of the communities where this has been a problem. It's pretty clear that when bad neighbours move into a community and use the property for something for which it is not intended, use it for illegitimate activities, more needs to be done. I think this bill will provide the opportunity to do some of those things.

I recall that during my first term on Edmonton city council there were two fortified drug houses right downtown, side by side, and one of them was called the fortress. The police would make raids regularly on the fortified property, but it was all set up so that the drugs could be disposed of before the police could actually get in. So it was the city council that got involved in developing a strategy to deal with this. This was one of the early community policing strategies where it wasn't the police, particularly, that solved the problem but the utilities. By cutting off the water, by cutting off the electricity, by taking a number of steps to condemn the building, we were able to deal with this. Now, this kind of heavily fortified drug house is no longer the norm, but there are many houses in which drug activity or other kinds of unsavoury activity that ruins people's enjoyment of their community and makes them feel unsafe do continue.

Just about three weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I held a community meeting at the Eastwood Community Hall with Detective Maurice Brodeur from the Edmonton Police Service, and he talked to the community. We had a full house. I introduced Detective Brodeur, and he talked about the Edmonton police's report a drug house program. It involves teaching people in the community to identify drug houses, to understand the different grades or degrees of drug houses and the types of activities that are normally associated with them, and to give the people a number where they can get the Edmonton police involved in dealing with that. So we've been proactive in the community in dealing with this, and I believe that this bill will give further strength to those police and community efforts to try and eradicate residences and other structures in communities that are not used for their intended purposes.

I note that this bill is modelled on legislation that was brought in by the NDP government in Manitoba, which, in my view, in my experience has been one of the leading governments in providing the kinds of tools that are necessary to deal with crime and illegal activity in communities. It's one of a number of pieces of legislation that the Manitoba government has established that I think have had a very good track record and have been very successful.

I would like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing forward this bill and want to indicate that it has my full support and that of my caucus. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak to Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. Community policing has been a part of Edmonton for more than 30 years. It is important not only because a city the size of Edmonton is too big to be served from one downtown office; it is important for police officers, men and women, to be able to develop a sense of affinity for the neighbourhood and citizens that they serve. And it is important to us as civilians to recognize and integrate law enforcement officers as part of our daily lives and not only in time of accident or emergency. We need to recognize that they are part of us when they are upholding the law and ensuring our security.

Edmonton-Mill Woods is a reflection of the multicultural country and world that we live in. People who have come to Canada from many authoritarian states sometimes take a while to get used to the different role the police play in our society. Edmonton-Mill Woods also had the benefit of Detective Maurice Brodeur's approach in the community, and it has resulted in a better understanding and appreciation of the work that police do.

What is it that distinguishes a police officer from a civilian in a democratic society? There is, of course, the training, the risks, and responsibilities for others and the attention that comes with the uniform. Civilians can fade into a crowd when things get tough; a police officer cannot. A civilian can treat public and private lives as two separate worlds, but a police officer cannot. They are held to a code whether they are on or off duty. Finally, when there is a challenge, a disturbance, or an incidence of violence in public, civilians can walk away, and in some cases, if they're smart, they'll do that; a police officer cannot.

For these reasons, our uniformed officers deserve our respect and our support. To be supportive is, first, a matter of attitude. It is to accept the police as part of us, to see the man or woman in the uniform as a fellow human being. To be supportive of our police is also a matter of actions. It means to come forward when we have been a witness at an accident or an incident, to avoid activities and crowds that disturb the peace or infringe on the law, to take responsibility for our society whether or not the police are present.

Canada brings together a number of values in unique combination. One of our national symbols is a mounted police officer, yet we are not a police state. It is possible to be both law respecting and democratic because our policing has historically been a community affair, reflecting and upholding values that we all share. Whether we are looking at our national police force, that patrols huge tracts of territory, or a constable on the beat in a small town, both are not something over and above but a part of the communities they serve.

Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, allows citizens to support the work of the police and to make a difference in the safety of their communities. I am pleased to speak in support of it, and I thank the Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing it forward.

As I speak, I am representing the wishes of Edmonton-Mill Woods. The intention of this bill is to promote community safety by providing a mechanism for the government of Alberta to respond to public complaints about a property, a community, or a person and then make a complaint to a director under the Solicitor General that the person's community or neighbourhood is being adversely affected by activities on or near a property in the community or neighbourhood; or it is being habitually used for activities criminal in nature and having a negative effect on the health, safety, or security of one or more persons in the neighbourhood; or the illegal activities interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of one or more properties. Investigators will undertake an investigation and take any number of actions, including a community safety order.

This bill allows the communities and neighbourhoods to have a say in the safety and security of their communities. This is about community empowerment and allowing people to be active in ensuring the safety of their neighbourhoods. This bill allows another tool for people above and beyond calling the police, who sometimes do not have the resources to effectively deal with and gather the necessary evidence to deal with some illegal activities. Empowering citizens in the war on crime is highly effective. People know what is happening in their neighbourhoods and often can gather the evidence that is crucial in obtaining a community safety order, evidence that can only be discovered through proximity to the troubled area. For this reason, having a mechanism to allow them to gather evidence and directing it to an agency of the government for investigation is a positive step in combatting crime.

This legislation improves community safety by targeting and, if necessary, shutting down residential and commercial buildings and land that are habitually used for illegal activities. This legislation empowers citizens to take back control of their neighbourhoods by reporting problem nuisances and businesses.

There are a couple of points to be raised for discussion. I am wondering about the makeup of the investigative team, what that would be. There needs to be individuals who are well trained in completing investigations, such as retired police officers, intelligence officers, or individuals with experience in conducting investigations, and so forth. This is a very effective mechanism, I believe, to combat crime in our neighbourhoods and to empower citizens to have a say in controlling the future and destiny of where they live. We need to know, of course, that this investigative unit will have sufficient funding to be effective because there will no doubt be many complaints from all over the province.

In concluding, I want to say that I'm very much in support of empowering citizens to take back their communities and to take responsibility in ensuring that our police are supported. This sends a message to criminal organizations and those who commit illegal activities that the people are watching and that they will not tolerate criminal behaviour in their neighbourhoods. The stakes can be high. We know meth houses, child exploitation: these are serious offences that need to be monitored by all sources, not just the police, and this bill will provide that mechanism. So I am very pleased and proud to support the intention of Bill 212.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in favour of Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. Before I begin, I would like to commend the Member for Calgary-Hays for the efforts he has made on this bill. [some applause] Yeah, let's do that. This is an innovative piece of legislation that we can use to address difficult issues, issues that require creative solutions such as this one. [interjections] I seem to have lost the attention of some of the members of the House.

I also stand in support of Bill 212 because it is so closely aligned with the government of Alberta's commitment to providing safe and secure communities for all its residents. The Alberta government has historically worked on and approached community safety very thoroughly and thoughtfully. This can be witnessed in initiatives in the government's recent response to the Crime Reduction and Safer Communities Task Force report, Keeping Communities Safe. Because crime can only truly be addressed in a community-based manner, it is with the input of Albertans that we get closer to resolving the tough issues confronting us.

Mr. Speaker, when I read the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, I immediately thought of the positive impacts this legislation could have on drug use in our communities. We all know there's no quick solution for eradicating drugs or harmful behaviours from our neighbourhoods. It takes more than imprisonment and treatment to address substance abuse and addiction. Thankfully, we are presented with new tools every day. I believe that innovative legislation such as Bill 212 can work to curtail these social ailments.

This legislation fully utilizes our best resource in the fight against drugs, and this resource, Mr. Speaker, is Albertans. The act is founded on co-operation, education, and prevention. These are approaches that involve and revolve around the community and the citizens who comprise it. Bill 212 gives Albertans the opportunity to make progress in the fight against activities which cause harm to their communities. The provisions of this proposed act empower citizens to identify activities which could disrupt families' healthy existence.

Bill 212 provides a direct route to address criminals who corrupt the fabric of neighbourhoods. Under this act if any Albertan sees disruptive activities frequently occurring in their neighbourhoods, they could call the director of law enforcement and divulge their concerns. If a director finds just cause to investigate the complaint, investigators will be stationed in the neighbourhood to collect information about the subversive activities. From there, if need be, the individuals involved would be taken out of the community, and the activity would cease. These activities would no longer be part of the lives of our children.

The Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act aims to identify issues which do not necessarily require immediate attention and get slotted down the priority lists. While these matters are sometimes not urgent, they still have the possibility of building into something much more dangerous if they are not addressed.

The bill also targets activities that interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of our properties. Albertans should be free to enjoy their homes in safe neighbourhoods; therefore, this type of activity is unacceptable. With Bill 212 as soon as these activities are identified, they will be addressed. With immediate and direct attention, as is called for with Bill 212, disruptive activity taking place in communities will not be given the opportunity to flourish. In other jurisdictions using this act, safety agencies have been able to warn and scare petty criminals into stopping their actions.

Mr. Speaker, criminal activity is an ongoing battle in all jurisdictions. Because of its clandestine nature, it is hard to get a hold of it and to understand it. If we as legislators equip our communities with all of the tools possible to address crime, criminals will have less ways to evade repercussions. Furthermore, by reinforcing the idea that criminal activity has no place in communities, we're showing a strong example to our children. By showing our kids this example today, the notion of participating in illegal activities may not enter into the equation later on.

Mr. Speaker, if we are effectively to fight drug use in Alberta, our schools must be freed from drugs and other addicting substances. By eliminating or diminishing the number of locations within our communities which aid the production of addictive substances, there would be less opportunity for these to be introduced into school environments. Young children who previously lived in environments haunted by illegal activities would no longer have access to drugs.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays to close debate on Bill 212.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly for committing themselves to a serious and thoughtful debate on the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. During the debate many valuable points were brought up, but what was most striking was my colleagues' dedication to increasing the safety and quality of life in Alberta's communities. I'm also pleased that this act received overwhelming support. I know that if passed, the Safer Neighbourhoods and Communities Act will go a long way in making a real difference in our communities.

As was pointed out, this bill will empower Albertans to address disturbing and disruptive behaviours in their neighbourhoods. Albertans are the eyes and ears of the communities, and with this legislation they can be fully utilized. They will be encouraged to work with the law enforcement services whenever possible.

I have seen this bill at work. I visited Winnipeg, spoke to the people that work with the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act there. They had been, at that time, for some three years. It works very well. They take approximately 400 complaints a year. This is also law in Saskatchewan and on the 1st of January of this year in Nova Scotia and Yukon.

If this bill is implemented, Albertans across the province, rural and urban, will benefit. Those who have ill intentions will learn that they are not wanted anywhere in our province. They will be driven out or be forced to comply if they want to stay in our neighbourhoods.

I would like to reiterate the prevention aspect of the bill. By identifying issues before they get out of control, as proposed by the act, we have the potential to help young Albertans choose a legitimate path. For example, if a community member identifies a young person's continually disruptive behaviour, that individual can alert the safety agency. If the agency decides to investigate the behaviour and finds ground for action, the agency can work with the youth and parents and find a solution before a criminal record is created. The agency may set something up where the youth goes to AADAC, for example. This gives the youth the opportunity to get on the straight and narrow before it's too late. Paired with Alberta's renowned addiction programs, this bill will be effective in prevention.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to address some specific comments which were made about Bill 212. The Member for Edmonton-Glenora is concerned about the confidentiality of a complaint made to the safety agency. I would like to reassure him that the bill states that it would be prohibited to disclose the identity of the complainant or any information that may lead to his or her identification. The information provided to the safety agency would not even be allowed to be released to a court.

The member also voiced concerns about how the roles of the director of law enforcement and the peace officers seem to be increasing. As mentioned, I've travelled to other Canadian jurisdictions which have this legislation, and this legislation works. Drug dens get shut down, and disturbing activities get identified before they turn into dangerous crimes.

I feel strongly that Bill 212 will strengthen our communities by making them safer for all Albertans. I hope to see this act be a part of the province's larger program and approach in achieving safer neighbourhoods. I would also like to ask the hon. members to consider Bill 212 and ultimately support the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act because it helps citizens take back their communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 212 read a second time]

Bill 213

Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great enthusiasm together with a sense of responsibility to Albertans that I introduce Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, for second reading.

First off, I must thank the members of my staff in both the Legislature and my constituency office for the fine work and long hours that they have put in on this bill. Writing, research, and compiling views of constituents, community leaders, and other

MLAs is often very painstaking and time consuming. This has been done since I've had the independent office going. I thank Catherine Obacz, Desiree Ho, Kirstyn Rau, Kayla Tabachniuk, and Robin Williams for all the fine work that they've done. I also thank the Canadian Federation of Independent Business for their work and their input.

Small business has made it clear that they think that regulation needs reining in, that compliance is often confusing and counterproductive and eats up far too much time. Surveys from the CFIB indicate that smaller businesses with less than five employees spend as much as 20 per cent of their time on book work dealing with regulations. That covers all levels of government – municipal, federal, provincial – but it's certainly provincial that can take the lead.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the entrepreneurs that are at the edge of just starting out, these ones with less than five employees, at the most creative and challenging time in the life of their business. At this very crucial time they are the ones that are most saddled, comparatively, with the greatest burden of regulation. Just think of what greater productivity, new ideas, and greater wealth could be created if more of that time could be spent doing productive things.

From the CFIB members and from other small business I received over 200 faxes and over 400 e-mails from their members and others regarding and supporting Bill 213.

I also thank the not-for-profit sector for their input and support on Bill 213. I try to sit in on many meetings of the various community organizations in my riding of Edmonton-Manning, and it is universally clear that they are angry at the degree of regulation that they are subjected to. Why is it that every community league has to have someone who can handle the forms and the book work? Why do so many beg to have an accountant or a bookkeeper on their board? Why are they now starting to pay people to do their forms? Do we need to have grant money going to pay for getting grants?

People get active in community organizations to get their children into sports and other wholesome activities. They want to be involved themselves, not sitting in their basements in front of the computer trying to figuring out some incomprehensible set of rules to raise a few hundred dollars for soccer balls. For example, Mr. Speaker, why do we have a short form bingo handbook? I looked at this short form bingo handbook, and I read from many, many pages of this short form bingo handbook. Do we really need everything in this? You know: rules on how to describe the various volunteers and their roles, regulations on aprons, such things. Do we really need a 23-page section on pull tickets? Do we really need this type of thing? People want change. They want to see their children play, not to become experts on the pull ticket regulation.

You know, with regard to the nonprofits of community leagues, hockey organizations, and others actually earlier today I tabled a petition from the area 17 council of community leagues in northeast Edmonton, which represents thousands of volunteers, fully in support of Bill 213.

Change can happen. We have exciting new technology, Mr. Speaker, that is helping us to do many amazing things. This technological world can create more paperwork if we let it. Let's not. Use technology to simplify things. For example, earlier today I had a question regarding the transportation industry which now has mandatory logs that are handwritten and must be done every day. It's really a 20th century, if not a 19th century idea, this handwritten logbook. Twenty-first century transmission programs are more secure, more reliable, and are actually much better in terms of dealing with this issue. The message here is that regulation must stay current, must be reviewed from time to time for real relevance.

This is not to say that we should not have any regulation. We do need rules, like for our restaurants so that we have healthy food there and can trust that what we buy there is safe. We need rules for food, air quality, water safety, and many things. But do we need so many? Are not the very purposes of the rules and regulations that are created so often defeated by their complexity? Are good regulations ignored because they are grouped with so many others that have no relation to common sense or relevance or are just too much into detail that people don't even look at them? Are rules redundant because they are a duplication of a similar rule in other regulations or other jurisdictions that deal with the same area? This is to say nothing about cross-jurisdiction differences. You know, for municipalities and such BizPaL is a great initiative, but maybe it's time to have a standard business licence that crosses municipal boundaries. The regulatory reform reporting plan for ministries in Bill 213 could lead to that.

Bill 213 sets forward a regulatory reform initiative that is wide ranging and comprehensive in its process. It is a bill that is the first statute of its kind in Canada, the first time that regulating regulations will not be done by creating new regulations. This will be a law of our Alberta Legislature. As a statute it sends a clear message that we must enter a new and more modern age in the way we deal with regulation. It sends a clear message that we must begin to use technology to simplify the way we do things, not to add more detail. This bill will change thought processes that leads to regulation, to make regulators think about the outcome and costs of the rules that they are creating. Make regulations clear. Make them simple.

Unnecessary red tape does create additional costs for business, not-for-profit organizations, and for individuals. The reduction of nonessential or redundant forms in regulations will streamline existing processes and enhance government effectiveness. We must ensure that the can-do attitude of Albertans is directed to doing. Reduce regulation, reduce red tape, and get on with the task at hand.

Bill 213 looks to establish a baseline measurement of the current number of regulations against which progress towards regulatory reform can be measured. When British Columbia instituted such a measure a few years back, it was completed by summer students in a few short months. Such a measurement will be of value in that it quantifies what is in place now. Other measurements, such as the hours necessary for compliance or other factors, would also be helpful.

Bill 213 would seek the avoidance of duplication and have someone in government check for that. Bill 213 would mandate an analysis of alternatives to regulation. Do we really need handwritten logs for truckers, for example? Do they work? Bill 213 would seek consideration of the economic impact of a regulation – how it would affect Alberta's competitiveness with other jurisdictions – and would look to minimize compliance costs. It makes sense. It might save some cents or maybe much more. Bill 213 would require public consultation. A little feedback can go a long way in these matters, Mr. Speaker. Bill 213 would mandate an estimate of the time and cost required for implementation. I'm sure that this is often done. This bill would require that. Bill 213 would require an ongoing review of relevancy of any proposed regulation through the inclusion of a sunset clause. Let's get everything into the 21st century and get rid of whatever is unnecessary.

Bill 213 would make all these matters public, with each ministry establishing a three-year plan for regulatory reform. This bill clearly addresses accountability. As the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has said: ultimately, governments have two main powers, fiscal and regulatory. We have an annual budget for the fiscal side in this province. We need accountability for the regulatory side.

Other governments are addressing that gap, including Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Labrador, British Columbia, and even the federal government. We must make our Alberta government accountable as to the full extent of regulation, the full burden it applies to our citizens. Make the bureaucrats think twice.

The bill looks to compliance. Let people in businesses focus on what is truly important. If rules can be kept as simple as possible, it is likely that they will actually be followed. The respect for the rule of law and compliance with laws is in direct relation to respect for the laws enacted and their complexity. Keep them simple, and you enhance civil society through respect for the rule of law. What about the labour shortage? Cut the paper burden and you'll free up more time and need less workers.

Mr. Speaker, hundreds of Albertans have written in supporting this bill. It is time for such legislation. I ask that all members of this House support Bill 213. I welcome suggestions for improvement. Let us as legislators send a message to Alberta and Canada that we can and we want to cut red tape.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by Calgary-Varsity, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak to Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act. The purpose of the bill is to progress towards regulatory reform. According to this bill, all proposals for new regulations would contain an assessment based on need, with a view to avoiding duplication, an analysis of alternatives, an examination of the economic impacts, evidence of public consultation, assessment of time and cost required to implement the change, and continuous review of the proposed regulation to determine if it is necessary.

Also, ministries would have to develop a three-year regulatory reform plan to establish targets and review the progress of each regulation. The proposed legislation includes a number of prescriptive measures. These requirements include ministries developing and making public a three-year regulatory reform plan, as mentioned, six months after this act comes into force. This timeline is established in section 3(1) of Bill 213.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta has legislation to handle regulatory reform targets and puts forward an efficient means for a review. Within the Regulations Act Alberta established a Regulatory Review Secretariat to handle issues of regulatory reform. The chair of the Regulatory Review Secretariat approves regulation impact reports that are mandatory with most proposed regulations. Only those that would not become regulation or do not have a considerable impact are not reviewed. This report must meet the satisfaction of the secretariat to be issued a compliance certificate. Without the certificate the registrar will refuse to file a regulation under the Regulations Act.

Mr. Speaker, this process allows the chair to determine the validity and efficiency of any major regulation, thereby delivering an efficient method for regulatory review. While this government does see the need to reduce red tape, there are numerous steps being taken to reach this goal as well as sound business planning within each ministry.

Mr. Speaker, Service Alberta's business plan reflects the department's objective to improve government efficiency and regulatory reform. Under the third goal the ministry has expressed the need to constantly manage Alberta's regulatory environment while retaining a competitive advantage in our global economy. They are working with government councils, committees, and the private sector to assess and ensure the efficiency of government business. This identifies regulations put forth that would hinder growth for Albertans, small business, and the overall economic competitiveness of our province. Since Alberta is not the only government to constantly refine the efficiency of their regulations, Service Alberta is not the only department to constantly refine the efficiency of their regulations. The Department of Finance incorporates a similar strategy to improve service.

According to the Ministry of Finance's three-year business plan, Mr. Speaker, the ministry works with stakeholders, including service providers, to improve forms and develop e-service modules to ensure Alberta's continued success. This process identifies and mitigates areas with a high risk of noncompliance through partnerships with stakeholders in other Canadian jurisdictions to consolidate private-sector pension, insurance, financial legislation, and regulatory processes. The Department of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations encourages both provincial and federal solutions to improve efficiency and effectiveness through the reduction of overlap and duplication between governments and the reform of institutions.

When it comes to reaching accord with other provinces, Alberta is a leader. As a matter of fact, as of April 28, 2006, the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, or TILMA, came into effect. The agreement removes barriers to trade, investment, and labour mobility. Mr. Speaker, both Alberta and British Columbia established the ability of workers to move between our provinces and streamlined business registration and reporting requirements.

The TILMA agreement created the second-largest economic region in this country, Mr. Speaker, removing obstacles to trade and mobility, and I would suggest that the rest of the country should take note and come on board. By doing so, the agreement diminishes the amount of regulation and improves efficiency. It establishes Canada's most comprehensive internal trade market, including over 7.8 million people. Neither province's people, investments, nor goods take precedence over one another. However, it does take into account certain differences in justified cost-of-service matters, thereby preserving the necessary provincial autonomy.

To further strengthen the efficient partnership, the Member for Calgary-Bow introduced Bill 38, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007, on May 7, 2007. Bill 38 proposes to allow a penalty that would be imposed by a TILMA dispute panel to be filed in the Alberta courts. A similar piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, has also been introduced to complement this in the province of British Columbia. If the bill is enacted, the legislation would enforce the dispute resolution mechanism outlined in TILMA.

The trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement outlines a three-step process to resolve disputes through dispute avoidance, consultation, and, as a last resort, resolution by an impartial panel. Under TILMA the panel would have authority to impose a financial penalty of up to $5 million for either province that violates the agreement. TILMA along with Bill 38 will work towards cutting red tape, making it easier to comply with the standards of both provinces, and will provide a dispute resolution mechanism to deal with any conflicts.

In conclusion, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing forth Bill 213. I feel that Bill 213's proposal deserves further consideration in light of the measures the government of Alberta already has in place. With what is enacted in the Regulations Act, the government has a well-established plan to deal with regulatory review. The bill would set timelines and requirements that could improve the regulatory reform process. The government is continually committed to reviewing regulations to ensure that they do not impede Albertans' business and government efficiency. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to further debate and the conclusion of debate on this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. It is my pleasure this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to rise to speak in favour of Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act. As I'm very aware of the intent of the bill, I do not want to provide the verbal equivalent of the bureaucracy that this bill is attempting to eliminate. I will very briefly state that this bill increases the efficiency of the process rather than adding numerous layers of questionable oversight. It also improves the accountability associated with the bills.

As a teacher of 34 years I'm very aware of stifling bureaucracy, which has gotten to the point where field trips, even across the back field to the library, have become so overpapered that any kind of outdoor pursuit, even basically walking to the school across the block, has become prohibitive. Bill 213 recognizes that we need to get on with the job. The government has an oversight responsibility, but that oversight should be more with eyes and ears as opposed to just researching and reviewing documentation. Be out there. Do it. Don't just read about it.

I support my colleague from Edmonton-Manning on Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act. I appreciate the fact that the government members recognize that it focuses on the duties and requires them to speed up the accountability process while at the same time eliminating the unnecessary red tape. Thank you very much, Member for Edmonton-Manning, for putting forward this bill. I wish it speedy acceptance.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 213. I would like to support it. I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning bringing this forward to the House because the red tape dilemma is a growing one here in the province. It's something that we definitely need to address. With all respect to the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, we're not doing well enough. We need to do more. The government is very slow on it. If they think that they have enough in place, we realize how negligibly we're working on this, that it just isn't happening.

CFIB put out a research paper a while back. We talk about Alberta having the lowest taxes in the country and the Alberta advantage, yet out of all of the provinces where the business owners sent back to them, Alberta had the worst record for red tape. So I think it's something that we absolutely need to address, not only as a province but as a country. Alberta should be leading in it and not allowing British Columbia to be, well, 20-some per cent ahead of us in business satisfaction.

One of the areas that I guess I want to speak on, being that I represent a rural area, is the number of problems that I have from constituents calling up dealing with the CAIS program. Here is an excellent example of complication, misunderstanding. Even the accountants who work on CAIS and predict and say, "Well, this should be your payment" are not able to come up with the right answers. There is just far too much paperwork, too many loopholes and, I guess, areas of arbitrary ruling that don't help. I feel that the real dilemma we have here in the province and in our country is that we've got this mindset now that somehow rules and regulations, conversely, help us to have safety and productivity, and I think that it's wrong.

One of the sad things that we see is that more and more rules and regulations are imposed in industry. We see industry leaving our country, our province to go overseas, and then we have products that are coming back that are substandard, yet we say that we can't regulate and be the watcher for all of these items that are coming back. I think that we need to back up and think this through a little bit. Do we need all these rules and regulations, or do we pass laws and legislation that hold businesses and people accountable for their actions? It would be much easier to deal with these things in a court of law than in the reams of paper that have developed over the years to try and meet these regulations.

I just want to give one example. I had auto mechanics come to me two years ago because they were looking at passing new rules and regulations on who qualified and who could work on automobiles because in the big cities there's a problem with backyard mechanics in the fact that they were doing shabby work and then turning it back to the people, and there was no recourse. So the industry thought, "Well, if we increase the cost and the rules and regulations to become a mechanic, that will protect the people," whereas it doesn't. All it did was hurt those small mechanics from small towns that couldn't afford to buy a $50,000 bond, which was what the proposal was. In a small town they know their customers, and they're held accountable. If you do shabby work, you're put out of work immediately.

This is a case where the law was failing the people, so they thought rules and regulations would help, and it doesn't. Those people should be held accountable for their shabby work and be able to be taken to a court system that's quick and efficient, and therefore we wouldn't need all these rules and regulations.

Just to go over a few of the other things in the CFIB research. They talk about the cost of compliance and what it costs per employee. It's just tremendous. Some of them estimated that it cost over $5,500 there. Workers' compensation, occupational health: 67 per cent felt that the red tape there was excessive. The small business owners primarily deal with regulations. In 70 per cent of businesses in Alberta it is the owner who primarily deals with the regulations. It's very onerous, and they're not able to do the work they want in their own business because they're so busy trying to meet the rules, the regulations, and all of the red tape that goes along with that.

Somehow we need to be able to simplify it because what rules and regulations generally do is put small businesses at a disadvantage with large businesses just on the effect of efficiency. A large business can afford to hire one or two people in order to fill out all those rules and regulations, whereas a small business doesn't specialize in it. It's onerous on them, and it's very difficult for them to go forward. It's interesting. I've even spoken with the presidents of the different educational facilities, and the number one complaint they have is all of the red tape and the amount of information and forms that they need to fill out in order to look for funding, assistance, and other areas. It's the same with the municipal districts, the small towns, and villages. All of these are problems inside our own province that affect the efficiency and the competitiveness of our businesses here in the province, and we need, truly, to address it.

On the reduction in productivity, the percentage of members saying that regulations significantly reduce their productivity, by sector: transportation, 74 per cent. It's incredible when we think about the amount of goods and services that are sent around the province at such an onerous cost of doing business. The question that the businesspeople ask: does government even have any idea what the cost is to corporations and the individuals and farmers to have to do this red tape?

I want to go back again and refer to British Columbia. When Premier Campbell got in there, it was one of his mandates that they were going to reduce it, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning referred to that. They've done an excellent job, and Alberta, because we can't lead, needs to follow those who are doing better. It's an area where there's no excuse for us not to do better, to realize the problem.

I again want to go back to the idea that these rules and regulations are forcing industry out of our province, out of our country to other areas, and then we're bringing in subquality, whether it's clothing, whether it's toys for kids, whatever it is, that doesn't meet the quality that we have here. It's very difficult to say, "Well, we should be buying at home" when we've driven those industries out of our country and they've gone overseas. It's a difficult thing to try and have it return.

Overall, I guess I'd also like to refer to the different taxes that we even collect here in the province. The health care premium is nothing but a bureaucratic headache in what it has caused. For the $900 million that we collect, what is the real cost on that? The thousands and thousands of Albertans that aren't paying it: the government hires people to go and chase this down. This is a classic example of where we could streamline government, streamline the operations, reduce taxes, reduce the red tape, and truly make a difference for our health care system.

There's no reason to be collecting the health care premiums when we have the surpluses that we have just when we look at the red tape and the book work that has to be kept along with that. The problems that we have when those clinics allow people to come in and they haven't been paying their premium, to put them in the policing situation of saying, "Well, why are you here? You need to pay your premiums," puts them in an unfair situation.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for the diligence that he has had on this bill and for bringing it to the awareness of this House. I would hope that we would pass this and that we would double our effort and try and pass British Columbia in their effort to reduce the red tape. It's something that we need to do. We want the Alberta advantage to be here. We want to be competitive, and we want to enjoy competition with other jurisdictions that do not have the red tape and the problems that we do here.

Thank you very much for the time to speak on this.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. The purpose of Bill 213 is to establish policy that will measure and assess progress made in the area of regulatory reform. This is to be accomplished in two ways: first, by evaluating new regulations to ensure that they meet specific criteria for preventing duplication and also ensuring that thorough analysis has taken place by considering effectiveness, cost, and public opinion; and second, by establishing regulatory reform reviews within ministries that include reform targets and ensure continuing regulatory relevance to reduce regulatory burden. This would place more responsibility on ministries for regulatory legitimacy and accountability.

I applaud the spirit of this bill and the goal to address inefficiencies in cost, resources, and bureaucracy. Clearly there is a need within government to eliminate duplication and overregulation and to limit administration to those things that are absolutely necessary. The impact of regulatory burden can limit growth for Albertans, small business, and overall economic competitiveness, which is why working towards streamlining interaction between government, citizens, and business and improving accessibility and service delivery benefit us all. This is something with which we are all in agreement.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is how we go about achieving this goal. Many of the things that Bill 213 advocates are already in place, and the government is still hearing from Albertans that regulations are burdensome. Most regulations already have an expiry or review date as well as the kind of sunset clauses that the proposed bill recommends. These formal reviews allow for frequent assessments that provide a way of monitoring regulation on a continual basis to ensure effectiveness and relevance. In this case, therefore, Bill 213 would simply add to that which already exists.

We also have the Regulatory Review Secretariat, which was just renewed in March of this year. It is specifically responsible for overseeing ongoing review of regulations to ensure consistency, relevancy, and simplification to both new and existing regulation. It also ensures that new or amended regulation is in keeping with the core responsibilities of government. Much of this process is accomplished through regulatory impact reports, which all regulations require. These reports mirror much of what is advocated in the proposed bill. There are mechanisms currently in place that monitor and assess regulations to ensure effectiveness and relevance. Requiring ministers to follow regulatory reform plans and processes proposed in Bill 213 could mean asking them to duplicate work that is already under way or to place new administration on top of existing processes.

However, Bill 213 brings to light some important points that remind us of the need to deal with the issue of excess regulation and procedure before it becomes a problem. This is why the focus needs to be on creating a culture of reduction when it comes to regulatory burden. This up-from-the-ground approach helps us in two ways. First, when considering reducing and preventing duplication in the creation of new regulation, we will steer ourselves away from creating that which is burdensome, and second, in preventing bureaucracy rather than merely reacting to it, we create more opportunity to spend time on the efficiency of existing regulations instead of creating new legislation.

In short, the more we dedicate ourselves to preventing and reducing regulatory burden and creating a culture that supports efficiency and ease, the more expedient and valuable the regulatory process will become. In this way the practice of preventing an excess of regulation becomes institutionalized as part of the way of governing. This is what this government is already working to achieve through its existing regulatory review process. It helps to ensure that as a government we always strive to create legislation that is not only beneficial and responsive but is also efficient and relevant.

Regulatory reform is a priority for the Alberta government. Communicating how we are reducing and eliminating regulatory burden as an institution is crucial, and our commitment to this priority needs to be reflected in the way that individual ministries and departments do business. Indeed, many of my ministerial colleagues have already demonstrated a commitment to this process, with Service Alberta leading the way.

In its 2007 business plan Service Alberta focuses on strategies geared towards streamlining regulations, improving efficiencies, and strengthening the competitive advantage for government, business, and individuals. Within its third goal of improving program and service delivery by government, the ministry outlined several ways this will be accomplished: first, by developing policy that gives direction to the regulatory environment to maintain a global competitive advantage while taking into account environmental protection and public health and safety concerns, second, by working in conjunction with internal government agencies and the private sector to look at innovative ways of streamlining government business, and finally, by consulting with other ministries and various stakeholders within the province to identify areas of regulation and administration that limit growth and economic competitiveness.

A multitude of other ministries, including Finance, Municipal Affairs and Housing, Environment, Energy, and many others, have also taken it upon themselves to address regulatory burden within their business plan. Targeted and directed approaches to deal with the regulatory accountability and transparency that Bill 213 identifies are already under way within government, Mr. Speaker. We must continue to encourage this kind of accountability since, ultimately, being accountable for our own regulation process is how we best serve the people of Alberta.

I look forward to further discussion on this issue and hearing from the hon. ministers on how they are dealing with the regulatory burden and their plans to improve the regulatory review process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to add my opinion and viewpoint to the discussion on Bill 213, Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, and I congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this bill forward. What I'm going to refer to is my experience with the Affordable Housing Task Force.

This previous speaker, our hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, had the same experience. He didn't share that with the House, but, Mr. Speaker, when we went around Alberta with the Affordable Housing Task Force, we went to seven different communities to hear what people had to say. One of the constant themes that we heard everywhere we went was about red tape, that with the whole process of making application for affordable housing, whether it's a local community group that wants to build a seniors' complex or other kinds of housing, the red tape that they had to go through was formidable. We're talking about the groups that reported to us, for the most part nonprofit groups.

In the case of nonprofit groups we're not talking about paid staff that are able to focus on the various kinds of forms that they have to fill out, the long application process, and so on. It's often volunteers who don't have that much experience, and there's tremendous pressure on them to be able to follow the process in the correct manner. Sometimes they have to actually use money from their nonprofit organization to hire somebody to just focus on the filling out of forms. In the case of social agencies that are involved in front-line work in our inner cities, it seems to me that that is a waste of money when those people could be actually engaged in caring for the needy and the people that they are concerned about.

When we reported to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, the task force presented our document, Housing First: An Investment with a Return in Prosperity. Among our recommendations was this recommendation: cut red tape and improve efficiencies. It's exactly what Bill 213 is talking about. The first recommendation under cutting red tape was that the government should develop initiatives to improve efficiencies, greater synergies, and reduce duplication within government among nonprofits and between both sectors and also improve government responsiveness. We heard that for many nonprofit groups that apply for funding to build affordable housing, the length of time, the process that they go through is so, so lengthy that by the time a year or a year and a half goes by, the costs of construction have gone up, and the nonprofit organization has to turn around and request more money because of those spiralling costs.

Actually, we recommended that all provincial departments adopt an eight-week turnaround on housing grants and funding requests. I notice that the government turned down that proposal although the government did agree to pass on our recommendation about improving efficiencies and reducing duplication among government and nonprofits, that this recommendation should go to a cross-department assistant deputy ministers' committee. So it's apparent that the government is listening to people's concerns and is trying to do something, but this bill really makes it more concrete about what should be done. There should be some sort of process to get a hold of this whole issue and improve the situation.

Also part of our recommendations, Mr. Speaker, was that the government should create clear, standard provincial grant and program procedures to minimize the time and money costs for nonprofit groups and developers, standardized cross-ministry grant forms and templates. I notice that the government is referring this recommendation to the cross-department assistant deputy ministers' committee but acknowledges that because there are so many different programs, there have to be different procedures, different requirements, different kinds of forms.

Then we also recommended that there be an elimination of provincial procedures for nonprofits and service providers that are ineffective and inefficient; for example, multiple audits of the same program, different application forms for each department, et cetera. Mr. Speaker, we heard time and time again complaints about the red tape that nonprofits have to go through. It's a tremendous burden on nonprofit organizations. Most of those organizations are made up of citizens who volunteer their time and put so much effort into those organizations, so to be faced with huge red tape, they need help. They need help to deal with all of that. They need assistance from the departments of government to make sure that they can follow the right procedures and get the outcomes that we all need and want to see happen, especially in the area of affordable housing.

Mr. Speaker, I don't have anything more to add on this. I thought that that experience was very important to attend to because the government established this task force. We went out and heard what Albertans are saying. They don't like the tremendous burden of red tape, and this bill is addressed to exactly try to minimize and cut it down and put in place a procedure to be able to oversee the whole issue of red tape. I commend it to the House. We should vote in favour of this Bill 213.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to be able to rise today in this Assembly and join the debate on Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act. I doubt that anyone in this Assembly would disagree with the opinion of the Member for Edmonton-Manning when he previously stated in the House that red tape costs us all. I feel that this notion is largely personified by this government's commitment to identify opportunities to reduce and simplify the regulatory burden faced by the people and businesses of Alberta.

As a brief example of this commitment we can refer to the Regulatory Review Secretariat. Through the secretariat the government is working towards fulfilling an obligation to rationalize and simplify the regulatory environment for the benefit of Alberta's citizens and businesses. It ensures that any new and amended regulation is consistent with the government's core responsibilities.

The chair of the secretariat is responsible for reviewing each regulation and its supporting rationale or need to regulate. This body scrutinizes regulation impact reports submitted to them by departments wishing to amend or create new regulations. The secretariat provides consultative support to departments in preparing these reports and issues compliance statements once they've been approved. It should be noted as well, Mr. Speaker, that under the Regulations Act approval is required for filing a regulation. The Regulatory Review Secretariat reports regularly on the work of ongoing regulatory review and regulatory reform activities to the Minister of Service Alberta.

Bill 213 also urges us to establish a baseline measurement for regulation, an interesting concept that may require further consideration. I'd like to reiterate a sentiment expressed in this House back in June of this year by the hon. Minister of Service Alberta: "The number of regulations isn't critically as important as what the regulations mean to the everyday Albertan and their ability to either just live their lives or to run their business."

I'd urge this House to also consider that excessive legislation can also have negative consequences. Tacking on additional laws to reduce regulation may bog down the legislative process. This would have similarly detrimental results that could easily affect Albertans in a manner comparable to overregulation.

Although there are measures in place to reduce regulatory burdens, we continue to hear that regulations are a challenge to businesses in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a moment to elaborate on this. Certainly, an excessive bureaucracy affects many parties, but my specific concern is about the small businesses in Alberta. How does overregulation affect them specifically?

In a report from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business called Prosperity Restricted by Red Tape, 2005, it was stated that 3 out of 4 small business owners indicated that regulations add significant stress to their lives. In the same report I was shocked to discover the statement that businesses with less than five employees paid $5,317 per employee per year in compliance costs. The report concluded that businesses with more than a hundred employees paid $1,104 per year to cover these same expenses.

Let's get away from the numbers for a minute and think about the impact of this for our province. How many Alberta communities depend on their local small businesses for jobs, investment, and growth? What happens to small businesspeople when they want to pursue dreams such as running their own hardware stores, establishing community law firms, or opening local delicatessens? The answer is that they are faced with huge financial costs that they may not have the resources to overcome. Also, in comparison with their big business counterparts they may not have the necessary workforce to devote to regulatory compliance.

This particular point emphasizes that there could be costs other than financial ones. Excessive regulation results in time being taken away from actual business operations as well as family and friends as long hours become necessary for some business owners just to make sure they're up to code. This is invaluable time and effort that could be better spent. Mr. Speaker, this creates a climate that detracts from the entrepreneurial spirit of this great province. It may cause some small businesses to struggle. Albertans have big dreams and hopes. Those who have invested in them may decide that these obstacles are just too great to overcome.

Of course, small businesses aren't the only ones to suffer. An excessive amount of regulation creates a mountainous burden for everyone. It may dampen investment and in some cases restrict job creation. Albertans may be afflicted with higher consumer prices and a reduced range of product choices. Under the structure of a bloated regulatory framework the government itself becomes weighed down in its attempts to communicate and enforce regulations. Simplifying and streamlining regulations positively affects everyone in this province.

Having said that, the method of improving regulatory review should be considered with caution. I believe that this government is vigilant in reviewing and reducing regulation and is striving toward improving the review process. Having said that, there's always more that can be done.

The character of Bill 213 hits the nail right on the head when it speaks to the stifling nature of this phenomenon, and I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate on this issue. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to make a few comments about Bill 213, and I would like to start by congratulating the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing forward this bill. I did a little research going into the debate today – you could call it a historical vignette if you like – about the history of the term "red tape." Now, one school of thought says it goes back to England in the 1600s, when bureaucrats used red cloth tape to bind legal documents together. Another source, an American source, of course – Americans like to claim everything as their own – says it goes back to the U.S. Civil War, when long, bulky federal documents were folded into three sections, and the documents were then bound together with narrow red ribbon before being shipped off. The recipient then had to cut and remove the ribbons before reading the document, thus creating the term "cutting the red tape."

Now, I know that's not particularly relevant, but that's never stopped us before. Whichever explanation is true, Mr. Speaker – I lean towards the British version, personally – red tape and government are inextricably linked, and since governments pretty much invented red tape, it's up to us as legislators to do everything we can to rid society of this perennial problem.

The purpose of this bill is quite straightforward. It is to ensure that current and proposed regulations in regard to red tape for businesses and nonprofit organizations are necessary and not merely there to keep bureaucrats busy. You notice that I didn't use the term "minion." It attempts to streamline procedures for businesses and nonprofits to speed up proceedings and to cut down on unnecessary work. Since red tape is a creation of government, this bill puts the onus on government to ensure that all new regulations that will be passed are absolutely necessary.

There were some interesting statistics about red tape that we received from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which estimates that 35 per cent of Alberta businesses have reported an increase in red tape and that Alberta businesses lose 65 days a year to untangling red tape. It is especially interesting that British Columbia eliminated 113,000 regulatory requirements. I believe the Member for Edmonton-Manning said they just used high school students to do that. Other jurisdictions across the country have red tape legislation, and I'd like to think that this government is honest in its desire to make Alberta a leader in all areas of government, not just in spending.

We've all received a glowing letter of recommendation about Bill 213 from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Now, the federation says that Bill 213 is about accountability and compliance. But, even more importantly, it is not entirely a business bill but an attempt to help nonprofit organizations and even MLAs, I suppose, wade through the sea of red tape that can so often trip up industry and nonprofits alike.

There is an interesting chart contained in a research document by the CFIB. The chart asks if there is a single bylaw governing business licences in specific cities and if it is easily accessible. The city of Calgary is one of the few municipalities that does not have a single bylaw, according to the chart. Apparently, there are a total of 10 bylaws governing the licensing of businesses in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, red tape costs businesses, entrepreneurs, and nonprofits countless millions of dollars and millions of hours of frustrations. I urge this Legislature to vote in favour of Bill 213 and again congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this bill forward. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to debate Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. Reducing and limiting the regulatory burden placed upon business in Alberta is a paramount task for our government. Government rules and regulations are an instance of daily interaction between our government and Albertans, however unnoticeable the relationship may seem.

Now, our government prides itself on increasing transparency and accountability in all areas of government interaction with Albertans. After all, a key focus for this government is governing with integrity and transparency. This improves the quality of life in the process and builds a stronger Alberta through increased economic activity and efficiency.

Bill 213, Mr. Speaker, seems to infer that our ministries are currently unresponsive to limiting regulatory burden placed on business and are therefore responsible for regulatory inflation. The increased expectations and demands on our governments to regulate and address a broad range of social and environmental goals have postulated this concept of regulatory inflation. While there has been an increase in regulatory demand, it has been dealt with equitably and efficiently, with the full understanding that there is a need for a streamlined process.

However, if we were to make sure that we knew exactly how many regulations we had, whether we measured that by the number of regulations or whether we measured the regulations by the amount of time it takes businesses to fill them in, I think that we would become much more aware of the situation with the regulatory burden that we do have out there. Not only that, but if we were then to take the next step and were to say, "Okay; this department now has this exact regulatory burden upon Albertans," and the people that work for government were to actually measure them in terms of how much they were able to reduce the regulatory burden upon Albertans, then they would sort of get in on the whole concept, not only just the concept but also the goals of reducing those burdens.

So I think that it's really important that we engage the public service in this whole process, that we get them interested in this whole process of minimizing the amount of work that we are creating for the people of Alberta. If we get them engaged in that whole process, they'll become our allies in this fight. Rather than a top-down approach of us saying, "Oh, you've got to cut regulations," as a government and as politicians, you know, if we ourselves are pushing that message instead of it just coming from the top down in terms of politicians pushing this idea, if we can get the public service involved in this whole aim, I do believe that the public service would be very interested in working on this. But it has to be part of the goals, and to be able to make it part of the goals, we have to actually measure what the regulatory burden is that we have on the people of Alberta.

Now, simply counting the regulations I think is not the best way to really analyze the situation. I think a much better way of analyzing it is to actually find out how much time it takes people to fill it in. If we were to change the measure to a more realistic measure such as that, I think that this bill would be a very good way to move forward.

I'm working right now on a project with BizPaL where we're looking at the total regulatory load on one particular part of the restaurant industry. We're not just looking at what the load is provincially, but we're also looking at what the federal government load is, what the municipal government load is, what the health region load is, all of the different regulations and forms that have to be filled in. This, I think, will be something where it makes it very easy to compare what we are doing here in Alberta or in one part of Alberta even compared to the rest of the country. Again, that will give us a little bit more impetus to really go after trying to cut back on regulations.

In summary, I must say that I do believe that this is the way to go. I don't think we've got quite the measurement, as you suggested, for this bill. I think there are better measurements. But the whole concept of it I think is excellent.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to address Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. Albertans, individuals and businesses, are faced daily with rules and regulations. Due to the impact that rules and regulations have on their operations in Alberta, I feel compelled to contribute my thoughts on this subject.

Also, as I've said many times in the past, personally I profess the four-E principles, being ethical, economical, effective, and efficient. So when I get into the government or the public policy operation, I would still want to see the efficiency, the effectiveness, the ethical and economical drive for public services and operations. When we look at this, regulatory efficiency is an issue that is very, very important to the government of Alberta and those who comply with them because these stakeholders stand to gain when most effective regulations are possible. Regulatory review is in constant motion in Alberta and has been demonstrated by my colleagues speaking previously and for years.

In many ways Bill 213 is very much aligned with this government's regulatory regimes. Just as the government does, the bill recognizes the burdens of dealing with unnecessary red tape and regulations. As a fiscally responsible government we realize that unneeded regulations can present additional costs to all stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time just to address the organization that affects 120,000 employers and over 1.65 million workers in Alberta, and that is the Workers' Compensation Board, the WCB, may I say. It is a nonprofit institution mandated to administer the workers' compensation system in our province. Like any organization, there are rules and regulations, procedures, and red tape. It is important to note that, as such, the WCB is autonomous and an arm's-length organization with the government.

Probably you know, Mr. Speaker, and my other colleagues realize that through payment of premiums the employers fund the no-fault system, which is designed to protect workers and employers from the full impact of work-related injuries and illness. Now, the WCB is a very important organization that aims to ensure that those who make Alberta thrive are well taken care of in times of need and misfortune, and with the sheer volume of players and funds involved and the intimate nature of the service provided, it is critical that the process involved with WCB be as simple as possible.

Through this example I can demonstrate how the government of Alberta has worked with WCB to streamline existing processes to enhance the outcome for Albertans that is called for by Bill 213. Mr. Speaker, I must note the complaints that some individuals and organizations have with the processes in WCB because they are directly related to Bill 213. Furthermore, when we acknowledge this perceived inadequacy, we can help dissolve those perceptions and make improvements. For instance, some business owners in Alberta feel that WCB regulations are quite burdensome due to paperwork and time requirements, and we should take note of that. Much has been done on the system used by WCB to increase the satisfaction of those who collaborate with the organization, but there's room for improvement.

I know that in the year 2000 two reports were released with the hope of improving the service delivery of WCB. The Members of the Legislative Assembly Workers' Compensation Board Service Review Input Committee and the Review Committee of the Workers' Compensation Board Appeal Systems both called for simplification of the WCB system. For example, the Members of the Legislative Assembly Workers' Compensation Board Service Input Committee recommended that the WCB use plain language in decisions, documents, and communication and stated that it was not clear how many Albertans actually knew the difference between temporary total disability and temporary partial disability. So this is a needed simplification.

In a 2005 status report it was stated that clear standards for communicating decisions are now set out in WCB style guidelines. In order to achieve this recommendation, the hearing chairs were provided with training on decision writing just to understand the subject and how to deal with the procedures. In addition, WCB declared that it was committed to improve communication with all of its stakeholders and recognized that this will be an area of ongoing improvement in their organization.

Now, I just want to emphasize the aspect of government operation procedures, red tape, that affects Albertans. Particularly in this situation, the example is 1.65 million Alberta workers and 120,000 employers, so the call for this change in government operation regulatory review and simplification to make our system more efficient, more effective, more economical is a very, very good drive.

I want to commend our Member for Edmonton-Manning, who introduced this notion in this Bill 213. Of course, many of my other colleagues will support this idea. I want to just call on our other members here to support the drive for making our government more efficient, effective, economical. Thank you very much for the time.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you had indicated you wanted to speak on this one.

Ms Blakeman: No. I think it was on the next bill. My apologies.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. Any other speakers? Anybody? There seems to be some confusion.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South has now risen. Would you like to speak on this bill?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I would love to speak on Bill 213.

The Acting Speaker: The chair will recognize you.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you. I will join the debate on Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

In listening to one of the previous speakers describe his experience with red tape, I have a similar story to share. One time I was the power of attorney for somebody who had to live outside of the country for a while. It was actually my brother. His mortgage came up for renewal, and I had to arrange for the renewal of his mortgage. I had to send the documents away to a different country – I won't mention the name – and it took an incredibly long process for that document to actually get back to me. When it came back to me, physically sewn onto the document was a strip of red tape. So when the other member mentioned the origins of red tape, it reminded me of that experience that I had some 20 years ago and what red tape actually meant in that case.

Mr. Speaker, this bill before the Assembly proposes a direct way to address a significant challenge that affects all organizations. This challenge is reducing the burden of navigating through excessive regulation. Our government is conscious of how tedious and ineffective it can be to have regulations that overlap and complicate processes. We also comprehend the necessity of enabling businesses and individuals to have the ability to operate in the most efficient manner. However, we also have to respect and abide by the laws and rules that have been established for the benefit of Albertans. It would be neglectful to ignore the responsibility that our government has toward matters as important as the environment or occupational safety. Ministers within this government accept their mandate to ensure that operations which are under their auspices will uphold standards that have been developed through consultation, research, and practical experience.

Our government recognizes that regulations are necessary in many situations. However, reviewing regulations is also necessary to ensure they remain effective and achieve their intended outcomes. I would like to refer to the developmental processes that are undertaken and implemented by various government ministries to ensure that regulations are developed for specific purposes that have measurable results and are not duplicated in principle by previous regulations.

There are many examples of ministries carrying out their work with due diligence, and they are implementing regulations with the scrutiny and thoroughness that Albertans would expect. Service Alberta documented in their 2007-08 business plan a strategy to improve and streamline regulations in order to improve the ability of ministries to deliver government programs and services. The ministry noted its commitment to developing policies that provide direction for Alberta's regulatory regime and maintaining a competitive advantage in the global economy while protecting the environment and public health and safety.

Service Alberta goes further to state that the ministry will "work with internal government councils, committees and the private sector to identify, assess and manage innovative initiatives to streamline and gain efficiencies in the business of government.” The priority of Service Alberta is clear and consistent. They have and will continue to “consult with stakeholders from across the province and other ministries to identify regulatory burden and administrative policies that limit growth for Albertans, small business and overall economic competitiveness.”

Mr. Speaker, this type of commitment articulates the strategy of our government to reduce regulation for businesses and individuals. As I have indicated, it is in this government’s best interest to mitigate the regulatory obstacles that may possibly exist without jeopardizing our commitment to health safety and quality of life.

Our government should especially caution against overregulating the nonprofit sector. These benevolent organizations operate within strict financial parameters and may not have the staff to navigate through excessive regulations established by federal, provincial, and municipal governments. Often due to regulation nonprofit organizations dedicate much of their valuable resources both in staff and finances to establishing and maintaining registrations, providing reports of various events to regulatory agencies, and ensuring compliance in their operations.

The cost per organization of full compliance with all government regulations for donations consumes significant resources. The extent of this burden in some situations forces the organization staff to focus on paperwork rather than fulfilling their mission. The costs also redirect the financial means of charitable and other nonprofit organizations toward administrative duties as opposed to directing the funding at its intended objective. Ironically, nonprofit organizations typically reduce bureaucracy, thereby expediting the important services they provide.

In our effort to reduce governmental regulation, the Ministry of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations acknowledged they will promote both interprovincial and federal/provincial solutions to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Canadian federation through the reduction of overlap and duplication between governments. Everyone can realize how time consuming and costly it can be for Albertans to have to continually adjust for repetitive regulations.

The Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing, which has a significant regulatory framework due to the circumstance of their functions, has taken a proactive approach to addressing these regulatory issues. The ministry has identified in their core business goals, strategies, and performance measures that their first priority is to facilitate a legislative framework that enables municipalities to operate successfully and meet the local needs of Albertans by monitoring provincial legislation and regulations. Where it is appropriate, the ministry will recommend changes to municipal regulations that support improved approaches to local governance, election processes, and service delivery. The Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing is committed to assisting municipalities throughout the province to develop an effective regulatory regime that accomplishes their objectives but does not act as a hindrance to the cities, towns, and villages. The ministry asserts that it will assist municipalities who are having sustainability or accountability problems to examine and pursue innovative approaches or restructuring that will address regulatory problems.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta’s provincial government acknowledges that excessive regulation is unnecessary. Our government has taken the proactive approach to expedite decision-making and allow departmental functions to operate with the effectiveness and urgency that the residents of this province expect. It will never be our intention and should never be our intention to force individuals to fill out a seemingly unending amount of paperwork or obtain multiple licences or make individuals go through arduous committee procedures. The regulatory formalities and requirements of our government are implemented for the individuals to know that their government has not increased bureaucracy to ignite their frustration but for their benefit and well-being.

I can assure this Assembly that our government will continue to show leadership in reducing red tape for the financial and practical advantages for all Albertans. As I have explained in these deliberations, we recognize the importance of regulatory review and should consider, Mr. Speaker, Bill 213 in working toward improving our regulatory review process.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the time to address the Assembly on this very important bill, and I thank the member for bringing it forward and will be supporting him in his initiative. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. We only have about a minute and a half.

Mr. Egen: Okay. Sure. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise to express our caucus’s support of Bill 213 as well. In our analysis it seems that the bill seems to reflect what has been done in the province to the west of here. Over the last five years the British Columbia government has implemented a regulatory reform legislation aimed at reducing red tape. Bill 213 seems to mirror that, and we seem to think that is reasonable. The bill has strong potential in streamlining the regulatory processes, making it more efficient for businesses. Reducing unnecessary, onerous regulations is an economically sound policy.

We have a couple of concerns. I might be able to get through one or two here now, however. One, the legislation in B.C. is in support of small businesses, and it is in the Ministry of Small Business and Revenue, but 80 per cent of small businesses say that it really hasn’t made much of an impact on their processes. That number rises to 90 per cent in the interior and the north of British Columbia, so perhaps we can learn and adapt to that historical fact.

The legislation allows for stakeholder input and has the potential perhaps of impacting social and environmental regulations, so we have to be careful of that issue as well. We should be wary, as well, of environmental regulations and labour regulations and health and safety regulations from the potential to be degraded through this.

Again, of course, regulation is important, and it has its value . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Unified Family Court

511. Mr. Chase moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to improve service for families involved in legal proceedings by implementing a fully effective unified family court, as called for by the Unified Family Court Task Force report.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to introduce Motion 511: be it resolved that the Members of the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce amendments to create a unified family court as contemplated by the Graham report of 2001.

The value of a unified family court is that it provides a single forum for families and individuals to address legal issues that arise out of a family breakdown. As a corollary to the condensed court services, counselling and other social services would be provided by such a court. The benefits of such an approach are as follows.

Currently unified family courts exist in several other Canadian jurisdictions. However, Alberta has not yet created a unified family court system despite the recommendations of the government-commissioned Graham report of 2001. In addition, the government implementation committee was created in 2003 that was tasked with implementing the concepts of the unified family court. It has been illustrated through studies of existing programs in other provinces that unification of family proceedings is beneficial from both a cost and time perspective.

The concept of unified family courts first gained notoriety in January 1974, after the Law Reform Commission of Canada working paper 1 recommended a national network of such courts. This began a period of reforms to relevant provincial legislation which resulted in the creation of unified family courts in other jurisdictions as follows: Prince Edward Island, 1975; Ontario, 1977; Saskatchewan, 1978; Newfoundland and Labrador, 1979; New Brunswick, 1979; Manitoba, 1984; and Nova Scotia in 1999.

The following issues have caused the current approach to family law to flounder. Divided jurisdictions between provincial or territorial family courts and the superior courts creates confusion. It results in families basically being ping-ponged back and forth between various courts. When one court doesn't resolve their issue, they're forced to go to another one. This creates great confusion and great expense.

Parties in a family law case must follow detailed rules of civil procedure which are not tailored to meet their needs. To meet the procedural requirement of the forum, litigants must spend significant amounts of money in drafting paperwork which is often unnecessary. To me, the greatest tragedy is that the money that could have been spent on the children for a variety of concerns – education, health, funding for their futures – is spent on legal wrangling. Litigants are often forced to appear before judges who either have little familiarity with family law or dislike dealing with family law cases. The divorce process and also the litigation associated with it, issues such as custody and access and the division of matrimonial property, place parties automatically in an adversarial position. This has proven to have negative effects on the members of the family, especially children.

Making the procedure less adversarial, as the unified family court accomplishes, has benefits for all stakeholders. The unified family courts are a valuable tool to improve our legal system. Their creation will allow for a specialized judiciary and improved mechanisms for dealing with problems that are unique to family proceedings.

The reason for implementing and suggesting Motion 511, which would work towards the implementation of a unified family court, is necessary because the needs of families are not currently being met by the existing system. The availability of unified family courts is a proven means to expedite proceedings. This has been proved in the majority of Canada's provinces.

A unified family court will allow for greater attention to be provided to family issues without resorting to litigation, so that it doesn't have to go to court. Facilitation can happen beforehand: save money, save conflict, save time.

These issues will be heard by a specialist judiciary who are well equipped to handle the intricate nature of family law issues. They're there because they're informed. They're there because they care.

Most of the work to implement such a system has already been completed, and proven models already exist in most of Canada. The government of Alberta stated in 2003 that the UFC was a priority but has yet to act on statements made to the press about the creation of the UFC system. That today is going to change.

The current duplication system is confusing, time consuming, and does not provide services that would be beneficial to Alberta's families. The implementation of a unified family court structure would allow all interested parties to have their needs met.

While researching the background in the preparation of Motion 511, I quickly realized that federal/provincial jurisdictional disputes, including funding of the unified family court concept, have delayed its implementation in Alberta. Thanks to the support and advice of the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, who worked with me to ensure that the intent of my Motion 511, of a single court dedicated to family law, remained intact and could therefore move forward, potentially partisan, divisive politics were set aside.

Having laid out the underlying precepts of the motion, I look forward to the amendment, whose wording has been previously shared and discussed. Today the rights and responsibilities of Alberta's children, their parents, and grandparents will move one step closer to receiving the unified legal process protection they deserve, with your support.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Motion 511 be amended as follows: by striking out "as called for by the Unified Family Court Task Force report" and substituting "process." The amended motion would read as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to improve service for families involved in legal proceedings by implementing a fully effective unified family court process.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the change is necessary for this motion to work effectively and provide the most benefit for all Albertans. Currently family law issues are addressed through multiple levels of court within our legal system. For example, Alberta's Court of Queen's Bench has exclusive jurisdiction in divorce and the division of matrimonial property while the provincial courts have the responsibility of young offenders and child welfare matters.

In accordance with the proposed amendments the concept of the unified process could denote more efficiency within our current system. If implemented, the jurisdiction of provincial issues or justices would not have to be relinquished to federally appointed justices as suggested in the Unified Family Court Task Force report. There are numerous constitutional issues which arise with the cross-jurisdictional concept as recommended within the report, not to mention access issues for Albertans.

Currently the Court of Queen's Bench sits in 13 major centres in Alberta while the provincial court sits in 75 major centres. Of the 13 centres in which the Queen's court justices sit, only 11 are regularly operated while the other two are operated on specified dates. Mr. Speaker, in order for success to be achieved within the family court system, the system itself must be accessible to all Albertans. A unified family court process would likely meet this litmus test without an exorbitant amount of resources.

Further, when a previous attempt at a structural unified family court was introduced during the 25th Legislature, Third Session, through Bill 56, the Alberta Court of Justice Act, it was found that the federal funding scheme for structural unified family courts presents little financial advantage. The federal government has also not proceeded with legislation to allow for the appointment of judges to expand the unified family courts as they had planned. As stated by the 2002 Unified Family Court Task Force report, a unified family court should not be established if the provincial or federal government is not prepared to provide the resources needed to support the court. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment to Motion 511 is the proper choice.

By incorporating the successes within our current system, family resolution in Alberta can continue to be accessible, efficient, and operate effectively. Also, following the previous attempt of the structural unified family court, a meeting was held with the Chief Justice of the provincial court, the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, and the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal and other representatives from both the Court of Queen's Bench and the provincial court to discuss the future of the unified family court initiative.

From this discussion the family justice strategy arose. The family justice strategy showcases an effective alternative to the structural unified family court system, as recommended by the task force, which works within our current court system, jurisdictional limit, and court funding. With these current initiatives along with a willingness to continue to streamline the court processes for families, Alberta is on the right path.

The proposed amendments to Motion 511 would allow another opportunity for this important matter to be dealt with further and in an appropriate manner. It would allow for results, and that's what we need for Albertans dealing with family law issues. I hope that the proposed amendment is satisfactory to all members of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. I'm pleased to speak in support of amendment A1. Motion 511, the unified family court, has as an intention to provide a single forum for litigants to address legal issues that arise out of family breakdown. At the moment different matters are addressed by judges in both the provincial court and the Court of Queen's Bench.

[The Speaker in the chair]

This bill would provide condensed court services, counselling, and other social services. The provision of these services can remove some of the acrimony that tends to accompany a family breakdown.

Unified family court processes do exist in several other Canadian jurisdictions. A government implementation committee was created here in 2003 and was tasked with implementing the concept of the unified family court in Alberta, but no further steps have been taken. This is disappointing.

I have some comments from a child protection point of view and based on observations of families that have engaged the courts. I know there are individuals who believe that one way to protect family values is not to make the court process simpler. It goes with the "if you build it, they will come" scenario. This is small thinking that does not address the problems or help families in need of assistance.

Court is very confusing for families in general, and I wonder how many parents stay in abusive relationships because they feel they cannot access the court system when they have to. They feel intimidated; they feel overwhelmed and confused. I know that there are clients that social workers have worked with over the years that have told them that they got a lot out of the judicial dispute resolution process. I've studied that myself, and I believe that along with parenting and after-separation courses and mediation services we can do a lot to bypass acrimony that we presently often have.

Common to parties in a court action is that each party thinks they are right, hence the dispute, and it is amazing to see how a judicial dispute resolution session, where both parties sit in front of a judge and the judge gives a nonbinding point of view of how they would rule should the matter actually go to trial, often causes a settlement.

It is unfortunate, however, that recent legislation such as the new Family Law Act and the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act have made matters in court more complicated as both pieces of legislation provide the authority for an applicant to apply for private guardianship. The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act is far more robust and time consuming to go through because of the home study provisions, but the Family Law Act allows for private guardianship without the same steps or safeguards. A unified family court process would be an improvement. However, I think we need more unified legislation that does not offer differing steps to the same remedy with different expectations.

One huge problem in family law is dealing with the allegation and counter-allegation issue. There are many scary stories in child welfare where parents have used their children and the court system to get what they want via false allegation. Certainly, if we had a case management approach to dealing with difficult cases in family law, this could result in interesting outcomes. A case manager could be the front-line worker engaging with the family, and should there be a need to revisit the matter in court, a direct referral by a case management court worker could be ideal.

It would be interesting to review fatality inquiries to see how many cases had ongoing legal involvement or clients having difficulty accessing the courts. I am also of the view that we need more secure supervised visitation services to be used by the courts to assess and facilitate visitation when required. I would advocate for a tiered approach in a unified family court process where cases could be assessed based on the risk and streamed accordingly. Each stream could provide a range of services based on a clear understanding of the risk each stream is about and what their needs are.

I would also advocate for involvement of grandparents when appropriate. Grandparents are taking care of our children more often than we care to count, and they should be a part of the process and told that they have rights. I'm of the belief that families do want to resolve their issues without fighting. However, as it now stands, I think many stay together or do nothing to avoid the confusion of finding justice in the courts. Our present system of family court is confusing, even for social workers.

A single forum for issues relating to families and children makes sense for several reasons, one level of jurisdiction where court orders would apply across the board. Judges in family court would have to be knowledgeable in issues relating to family breakdown, children's services, and youth justice. For example, it is not unusual for parents to be in the process of separation or divorce, dealing with custody and access concerns, and the children involved in youth justice as well as concerns relating to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. These issues are dealt with at different levels, jurisdictions, although they have a common causal factor, which is the family breakdown. Not only would the family court judges be more knowledgeable and, hopefully, more consistent in their decisions, but services for the family would be streamlined: parenting, psychological assessments, mediation, counselling, et cetera.

Communication between professionals delivering services would be streamlined, reducing duplication of services and increasing the effectiveness. Most importantly, a single forum for litigants would take much of the confusion out of the process for parents and other family members. Often individuals do not know where to turn for assistance, and when they contact different agencies or government departments, the process is extremely difficult to sort out.

I am speaking in support of Motion 511 and this amendment, which would establish a unified family court process, because it would provide a single forum for families and individuals to address legal issues that arise out of family breakdown. It has been illustrated through studies of existing programs in other provinces that unification of family proceedings is beneficial from a cost and time perspective. It is clear that the unified family court process approach is beneficial. It provides a positive alternative to what presently exists, which is divided jurisdiction between provincial or territorial family courts and the superior courts, which creates confusion.

Parties in a family law case must follow detailed rules of civil procedure which are not tailored to meet their needs. Litigants are often forced to appear before judges who either have little familiarity with family law or dislike dealing with family law cases. The divorce process and all civil litigation associated with it, issues such as custody and access and the division of matrimonial property, places parties automatically in an adversarial position. This has proven effects upon the members of the family, especially children. Making the procedure less adversarial would have benefit for all stakeholders. For example, access to the judicial dispute resolution process could eliminate much of this negativity.

The adversarial system of our courts and politics is at its weakest in family relationships. The intensity that created those relationships in the first place makes it very difficult to resolve, let alone dissolve them when something breaks the bond. It is like the forces that hold the atom together. Until a century ago we thought it was indivisible, but when it was split, those same forces released the blast of energy we call the atomic bomb. This analogy of trying to contain the energy loosed by splitting the atom shows why we need special courts to deal with family matters. The usual tools of analysis and cross-examination and argument don't work when emotions are high. They often make things worse.

Since relationships are important to women and we prefer to deal with issues by looking for common ground and consensus, with conflict as a last resort, it is not surprising that women played a key part in shaping family law and courts in Alberta, especially one woman, the hon. Marjorie Bowker, the first female judge of our family courts 38 years ago. Judge Bowker was instrumental in our adoption of a court-centred marriage conciliation model. Motion 511 and this amendment for a process which we are considering today are a tribute to her legacy. The recognition that court procedures had to be streamlined and facilitated to deal with real people and their relationships is what she was about. The fact that we have to modify her legacy is a sign of its importance and its ongoingness. Laws and traditions set in stone are not alive. As Deepak Chopra points out, it is sometimes necessary to change the words in order to preserve the meaning.

Mr. Speaker, I commend this motion and the amendment to my colleagues as a step in a tradition that recognizes that our laws exist for humankind and not the reverse. I thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity for his foresight in bringing this forward.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a debate on an amendment to Motion 511. Any further participants on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize what the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays is doing in bringing this amendment. It's stopping short of recommending an actual unified family court but emphasizing a unified family court process, which is not what the Graham committee recommended. The Law Reform Institute has been on record as long ago as 1978 as pushing for a unified family court in Alberta. Other speakers have mentioned the tremendous problems and the confusion facing people when they're dealing with family matters. You know, there are a number of courts having jurisdiction over different issues. I don't think the public really is sufficiently aware, so it becomes quite confusing for them when they approach this whole issue and face issues of family matters in court.

For example, federal matters such as divorce and division of matrimonial property are to be heard in Court of Queen's Bench. The provincial court has jurisdiction over local and provincial matters such as adoption, child protection matters, child welfare and domestic relations, issues like guardianship, custody and access, and matters relating to children of unmarried or separated parents who are not divorcing except if the court is to establish paternity, in which case Queen's Bench has jurisdiction. If you're a grandparent seeking access to your grandchild, that is a matter for the provincial court. In the case of child support, matters are heard in Court of Queen's Bench unless you are bringing an application for the reciprocal enforcement of a child support order from another province, in which case you will be heard in provincial court. Well, that is completely confusing.

I hope that lawyers know and have this figured out and know which court to approach with a family matter, but it's totally confusing for ordinary people. Just on this point, it's interesting that there is a practice among lawyers who often bring, actually, a matter to one court, and when things don't go right, they take the matter to another court, actually taking a lot longer time in the process. Sometimes it's the client that wants that to happen because they don't see what is happening for their betterment in one court, so they start a proceeding or have a proceeding started in another court. Actually, that's referred to as forum shopping. I've heard of church shopping. If people don't like one particular church, then they go to another church.

Ms Blakeman: And they MLA shop.

Dr. B. Miller: MLA shop, too. But forum shopping, that's interesting, shopping for the court that you think that you'll get a better deal in. That leads to a lot of conflicts and probably lots of delays, and costs go up because the court proceedings are much longer.

Mr. Speaker, I think this confusion is not helped when there's not one court. I know that there's a new courthouse being built in Calgary, but right now in Calgary I think you have to go to different buildings if you want to go to provincial court or to Queen's Bench. In Lethbridge if you walk into the front of the building, you go in one direction if you want to go to Queen's Bench or you go in the other direction if you want to go to provincial court. So even physically it's confusing.

I think what the Graham commission had in mind was the establishment of a unified family court that would overcome the confusion that's out there for people. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods pointed out, there are so many advantages to having a unified family court because you have judges who have specialized experience with family matters; you have family law lawyers dealing with it. In that kind of context, where there's lots of understanding of the dynamics of family, there can be attention to mediation processes, which can even happen before a family gets into court. So a lot of good things can come out of a unified family court.

On the amendment. I know that my hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity is really interested in supporting this motion to move things forward. I really respect that. But the motion as amended doesn't quite get us to the physical entity of a unified family court.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the amendment. Further speakers? Shall we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: Now we will continue a debate on the motion as amended. If I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, that essentially closes the debate. I also note the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills wants to participate, so we'll call on him.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to rise and speak on Motion 511, which as amended proposes a unified family court process to be adopted in Alberta. I truly believe the intentions of Motion 511 to be in the best interests of the people of this province. As many of the members know, expediting the judicial process to minimize the amount of time families spend in court is very important to me.

In the 26th Legislature, Second Session, I introduced a private member's motion to this Assembly which attempted to recognize the critical role that grandparents play in the lives of their grandchildren and to encourage access when it is in the best interests of the child. This, Mr. Speaker, obviously refers to the custody or visitation rights for grandparents following a spousal separation, a parental death, or relational difficulties. Family issues are diverse and offer many complexities to our judicial system; therefore, prolonging the family interaction within the system only further exacerbates these complexities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe a unified family court process would be very beneficial for all areas of family law, including the issue of grandparents' access to their grandchildren. It is important to the well-being of the children to have an opportunity to know their grandparents and other family members and to continue the close relationships they have enjoyed in the past. Unfortunately, parents may disagree that such contact is appropriate even in intact families. In these cases the ability to apply for access must remain available to people who feel the parental decision is unreasonable or harmful to the children. Therefore, child custody cases should be dealt with on a case-by-case basis.

As currently written, the Family Law Act specifically mentions "grandparent" and the process they must go through to gain access to their grandchildren. The act recognizes that for most Alberta families grandparents and other extended family members play important roles throughout a child's life. However, this legislation also realizes that in some cases disputes between parents and grandparents result in grandparents being denied contact with their grandchildren. In situations where the guardians, usually the parents, and grandparents cannot agree on contact, the act includes a process through which grandparents can apply to court for a contact order. Mr. Speaker, in granting the contact order, the court is required to consider the best interests of the child. The Alberta Grandparents Association remains unsatisfied that this process is fair to grandparents.

I believe that the proposed unified family court process presents us with a great opportunity to incorporate issues of grandparents' access to their grandchildren in an efficient and expedited manner. Child custody as well as visitation rights are an important cog in the development of our next generation. Incorporating all areas of the family into a unified family court process will supply our justice system with the means to an effective outcome. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I support Motion 511.

The Speaker: The discussion is on this motion as amended. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on Motion 511 as it has been amended. Alberta itself has the sad statistic of one of the highest divorce rates in Canada, and Motion 511 would be a great benefit to couples and grandparents. I have received several letters from frustrated parents and grandparents who would love to have this resolved in a friendly manner. Grandparents, unfortunately, are caught in the middle, and I'll take my own case, for example.

Through divorce my grandparents were very instrumental in my life, and I don't know what would have happened if I hadn't had that relationship, because a lot times they were the ones that helped raise me. I think that disallowing grandparents to have that influential opportunity with kids would be a huge loss. For anyone who has grown up without a grandparent, they may not know it, but for those who have had grandparents, try and put yourself in the position of not having the experiences, the wisdom, just even the knowledge being passed down. It's a shared family tradition that a lot of people cherish, being able to have that third family or, as I call it, a grandparent. I think it's instrumental in a lot of kids' lives. It's the one stable piece that's there because if there's fighting at one house or the other, there usually seems to be a little bit of continuity at the grandparents' house, where there is no war raging. It's just love and understanding.

I would certainly support this Motion 511. I think it would help a lot in family unity being a little bit better. Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the motion as amended.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am rising to speak to support Motion 511 as amended. I think that the topic that has been brought forward here is sufficiently important to look for some compromise, the spirit of which, I think, we're seeing with this amendment passing so quickly and reasonably unanimously.

The unified family task force we saw from several years ago talked with the public and the legal community and delivered a report more than seven years ago, and the government seemed to accept this report, but really we didn't see much happen since then. So this motion I think revives the interest in the sense of unifying family law here in the province of Alberta and working with our federal counterparts to realize this to happen. Of course, the co-operation of the federal government is necessary to enact this, so certainly our caucus urges the Justice department here in the province of Alberta to begin to undertake the mechanisms by which we can see a unified family court functioning here in the province of Alberta.

I, too, through my constituency office and through people contacting me over the past three years have come to realize that there's a tremendous amount of inefficiency and ensuing social problems associated with the court system as it functions now in terms of family law. Anything we can do to solve that process I believe is in the public interest, which this Legislature is designed to serve. So we certainly support this motion as amended and look forward to other legislators doing the same.

Thank you.

5:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to spend a few moments to add to the debate of Motion 511, which as amended urges the government to develop and implement a unified family court process. I'd like to discuss some of the benefits of a unified family court process because such a system would streamline the adjudication of family law, and this may assist families in navigating their way through the justice system and has the potential of limiting large legal costs. As the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods indicated, it can be onerous for people and sometimes confusing and even scary.

A unified family court process could also make effective use of specialized judges and legal professionals which have an understanding of family law issues. This would be a benefit to the legal system as court cases relating to families would be handled by experts in the field. In many cases, Mr. Speaker, in my constituency we see a lot of situations where this kind of a process certainly could be used very well.

The motion as amended has the best interests of the family at heart and would further solidify Alberta as an innovator in family law issues. This government has been, is, and will continue to be a leader on this issue. Currently Alberta Justice has a family justice strategy in place. This strategy already embodies many of the principles outlined in the Unified Family Court Task Force report.

Perhaps most importantly, our province has cutting-edge legislation in the area of family law. In fact, in 2005 this Assembly debated and passed the Family Law Act. This act modernized family law by changing terms relating to child custody and access. It introduced new concepts such as parenting time and contact orders. Mr. Speaker, the Family Law Act modernizes criteria in the best interests of children, which includes recognizing spousal violence when considering parental access to children, yet another area where Alberta is providing clear and decisive leadership in the national sphere.

I'm not sure if many members are aware that Alberta is the home of the Canadian Research Institute for Law and the Family, otherwise CRILF. This institute is responsible for measuring the Family Law Act's effectiveness. Quite recently two board members from the institute stated publicly that our act should be a model for the federal government when it considers reforming custody provisions in federal law.

Mr. Speaker, our commitment to helping families goes beyond statute. It includes action as well. Lawyers are actively using less confrontational means to resolve disputes between separated and divorcing couples. These methods avoid traumatizing in hurtful court processes, which too often have a negative impact on children. It also ensures that the tension built into divorce cases is dissipated and rational negotiations are conducted, thereby reducing costs and avoiding bitter acrimony.

The net result goes beyond costs, though, Mr. Speaker. Families being torn apart by divorce are already traumatized enough, and we all know that. I'm sure that each of us has had family members going through that. Resorting to alternate processes to resolve disputes ensures that children are not put in compromising situations through the custody process.

This government cares about families and particularly cares about the welfare of children. I believe that the new Family Law Act addresses many concerns about confusion within the legal system. Most importantly, the legal profession has resorted to other means than courts to deal with family law issues.

A unified family court process would be an opportunity for this government to further expand on its successful initiatives for family law, and therefore I will be offering my support to Motion 511. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there additional members that wish to participate in the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that the motion has been amended and the idea of a unified family court process has been put forward, I just wanted to give an example – and this is an example that was given by a provincial court to the Graham task force, which looked at the whole unified court process – which illustrates the problem that we have at present. This is maybe an extreme example, but a child reacting to stresses within the family is charged with shoplifting. The parents become involved in an argument over the problem, and one seriously injures the other in the presence of the children, thus bringing child welfare authorities into the picture and also bringing about a criminal assault charge. One parent claims custody and maintenance, the other claims divorce, custody or access, and a division of matrimonial property.

So what happens? Well, youth court is involved because the child committed a shoplifting offence; adult criminal court is involved because of the assault charge of one of the parents; Provincial Court, Family Division is involved because of the one parent's claim for custody and maintenance and the child welfare authority's application for temporary guardianship is involved; and the Queen's Bench is involved because of divorce proceedings. Provincial Court, Family Division would also have to be involved if there's a protection order under the Protection Against Family Violence Act. So here you have one, two, three, four courts involved with the same family. I mean, that's maybe an extreme example, but I think it illustrates that we really need to have a unified family court process.

I think the Calgary-Lougheed MLA Marlene Graham, QC, who chaired the Unified Family Court Task Force, stated that the status quo is no longer acceptable. I think that all members in this House would agree with that. She also went on to say that the time has come for a unified family court in Alberta. Well, we're almost there.

Mr. Speaker, I support this motion, which is getting there, because it's in favour of a unified family court process. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise briefly to join the debate on Motion 511 as amended, which seeks the implementation of a unified family court process within Alberta's judiciary. Family law is a very unique part of any judicial system. Negative experiences acquired during this sensitive process can have tremendous impacts on families. Through the intimate nature of family law it's important that this system operate as smoothly as possible.

A unified family court system is typically designed to bring the various jurisdictions of family law together at the superior court level. Furthermore, they're intended to reduce the time, conflict, and cost of litigation by providing a single court system with jurisdiction and authority to hear all issues raised in each distinct family matter. This system also aims to provide easy access to a full range of family justice services, specialized judges who are experts in family law, and a user-friendly environment with simplified procedures.

To examine the potential of a unified family court in Alberta, the Unified Family Court Task Force was established by the government of Alberta in 2001. The task force provided many recommendations to make the family law process user friendly and accommodating. Following the task force, Alberta Justice conducted consultations with legal stakeholders to discuss the future of unified family courts within Alberta's judicial system in 2004.

Mr. Speaker, at that time, based on the stakeholders' commitment to a streamlined family law process, the previous focus on court structure was shifted to a more functional approach. This shift of attention materialized because it was determined that the majority of the objectives of the unified family court system could be efficiently realized through an initiative, goal-oriented approach. In other words, this simplified process may be attained through changes in the system.

Mr. Speaker, this motion encourages the government to continue to pursue a unified family court process. I encourage all members to support this motion. I also would like to take a moment to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity for working together with all members of this House to come up with something that we all want to support for the benefit of families in this province. He deserves to be commended for bringing this initiative forward, and I thank him for that.

The Speaker: Shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close the debate on this motion as amended?

Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I recognized the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, but I also want to recognize the Member for Calgary-Foothills because he's been a part of this process basically since the beginning.

A lady by the name of Marilyn Marks, who has talked to a number of members of this House, a grandparent who has had difficulty with access to her grandchildren, has spoken to committees; she's spoken to individual MLAs. The Member for Calgary-Foothills attempted to bring a motion through last year to recognize grandparents' rights and improve grandparent access. I very much appreciate the work that he has done towards that end, and I very much appreciate the energy that Marilyn Marks has demonstrated over years of frustration of trying to do the best for all children in the province and recognizing that families consist not only of a mother or a father, or a mother and a father, but that grandparents play an extremely important role.

The Member for Edmonton-Glenora, based on his pastoral background, has dealt with families and breakups and the sadness of children who have not been supported and has every directly involved reason to especially want this unified family court process to work. That's been a large part of his lifetime's work to this point. We all want it to work. We have an opportunity in this province in that our current Prime Minister, Stephen Harper, who is a family man, has the authority within the federal jurisdiction to work with the province to make this work. I appeal to all members to encourage this process to not only work provincially but in partnership with the federal government.

Thank you for your support.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 511 as amended carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 11
Telecommunications Act Repeal Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 11, the Telecommunications Act Repeal Act.

The act was proclaimed in 1988 to regulate the operations of two public organizations, Alberta Government Telephones and Edmonton Telephones. The act sets out the terms for the Alberta Government Telephones Commission: its purpose, membership, financial, and reporting responsibilities. The act also authorizes the city of Edmonton to provide telephone and telecommunication services within city boundaries through Edmonton Telephones.

The reason why I am asking for this act to be repealed is because both of these organizations no longer exist as corporate entities. You may recall that in 2006 the government intended to bring this act to this House as part of the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, but that act did not go forward at that time. That is why Bill 11, the Telecommunications Act Repeal Act, a stand-alone piece of legislation, is before us today for second reading.

I would also like to add that Alberta Justice and the Attorney General agree there's no legal reason to keep the act. As a result, this is a housekeeping item to clear the statutes of Alberta of an obsolete and invalid piece of legislation. The regulation of all telecommunications companies remains under federal jurisdiction through the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

I support the repeal of the act and encourage other members of the House to do so as well.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 24
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, a complete review of the Real Estate Act has not occurred since 1996. In addition to several housekeeping matters, amendments being proposed will update and clarify legislation, address changes in the marketplace, and strengthen the Real Estate Council of Alberta's statutory authority to address the growing problem of mortgage fraud.

Mr. Speaker, some of the highlights of the proposed amendments include allowing the regulations to set out limits on current exemptions for financial institutions when they deal with real estate and mortgage products, requiring that industry members abide by the act and RECA's standards of conduct even in their personal trades and deals, and allowing RECA to require applicants to submit to a criminal record check for licensing purposes. This will assist RECA in combatting mortgage fraud by helping them identify individuals who apply for authorization under an alias to conceal a past criminal record.

Ensure more comprehensive industry representation on RECA's council by requiring that it include one licensed appraiser representative and one licensed property management representative, and make failure to comply with a direction from RECA an offence, which will assist RECA in enforcing cease-and-desist orders in unlicensed practice situations. Clarify that unlicensed industry members cannot collect fees, and allow a consumer that pays a fee to such a person to initiate a court action to recover their money. Remove the requirement that RECA approve a prospectus on real estate located outside of the province of Alberta. Regulate real estate outside Alberta that goes beyond RECA's mandate and that RECA is not in a position to verify the information in the prospectus.

Set out situations in regulation where the executive director may refuse to investigate complaints, including anonymous complaints, Mr. Speaker. Provide that investigators can record information electronically. Make it an offence for an industry member to fail to co-operate with an investigation. Provide protection to individuals who co-operate as a witness by not allowing any incriminating evidence they provide in the investigation to be used against them in separate proceedings.

Allow nonindustry members who have relevant expertise to sit on a hearing or appeal panel, and allow a hearing panel that has cancelled an industry member's licence to specify the time period or the conditions to be met before that industry member can reapply. Require an industry member that initiates an appeal to pay the costs of preparing the record of the previous panel's proceedings. Give the executive director the ability to appeal a hearing or appeal a panel decision when it is in the best interests of the public to do so. Provide that a hearing or appeal panel can grant an application for a stay of proceedings, which postpones the penalty until an appeal is heard, rather than requiring an industry member to apply to the court.

Give more notice to affected trust fund beneficiaries when RECA has frozen an industry member's trust fund, and remove RECA's ability to appoint a receiver to deal with frozen funds as it takes RECA beyond its regulatory role. Clarify RECA's authority to include relevant personal information when publishing information about an industry member's licence. This is limited to business contact information and the type and status of an industry member's authorization.

Allow RECA to share relevant personal information that is limited to business information of industry members with other regulatory and law enforcement organizations in other jurisdictions. Simplify the consumer access to the assurance fund by allowing RECA to waive the requirement that an applicant obtain a court judgment where the case is straightforward, Mr. Speaker. Require an applicant to submit a statutory declaration to RECA setting out the details of their claim for payment from the assurance fund where the applicant has obtained a default or a consent judgment against an industry member but not a specific finding of fraud or breach of trust. Set out in the regulations the manner in which the assurance fund proceeds would be distributed if the fund were to be wound up, instead of having the proceeds distributed to all registered industry members. RECA suggests allocating the funds in accordance with uses authorized for surplus funds in the regulations to the benefit of the industry.

Provide for limited liability protection for governors, officers, and employees of the Alberta Real Estate Foundation. Remove the concept of a property user's licence as it relates to the use of real property, such as time-shares and vacation clubs so that RECA no longer regulates these. Remove the requirement for service agreements to be in writing although the act will specify situations where a written agreement is still required.

RECA's rules continue to recommend the use of written service agreements in all situations and to enforce the provision for written service agreements for exclusive representation of a buyer or seller and the representation of certain lender clients.

All of these amendments, Mr. Speaker, will update the legislation, improve clarity and consistency in the language, and add flexibility to address existing and future marketplace issues.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I wish to move adjournment of debate on Bill 24. Thank you very much.

Third Reading

Bill 37
Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move third reading of Bill 37.

As everyone in this Assembly knows, this was part of budget 2007, which increased the tobacco tax. Also, as everyone here in the Assembly knows, by increasing the amount of tax on tobacco, we're hoping to cut down consumption, especially in those groups obviously who cannot afford the price of cigarettes.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. It's an important element of the whole tobacco strategy that has been brought forward by the minister of health. I therefore would move that we adjourn debate on this bill.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've run out of things that we can run off this afternoon, so I would move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. on Tuesday, November 13.

[Motion carried; at 5:32 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an exceptional person in the Edmonton community, Mr. Dave Dorward. Mr. Dorward is the nominated candidate for the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta for the riding of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Dave runs his own chartered accounting firm in Edmonton. He is an alumnus of both NAIT and the University of Alberta. He is very involved in the community with a particular passion for sports and youth, coaches a number of basketball teams, and I'm very proud to have Dave as a member of my team as we build Alberta's future. Dave is joined in the gallery by his wife, Janice. I would ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today a group of 13 energetic grade 5 and 6 students from Kitaskinaw school on the Enoch reserve. I ask that they please rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce a couple of individuals that are visiting today. One of the individuals needs no introduction: Mark Hlady is a former MLA for Calgary-Mountain View and president and director of International PetroReal Oil Corporation. Ben Anderson is a director for International PetroReal Oil, and Bill Marshall is the vice-president of exploration for Drumlin Energy Corp. I would ask that they all stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Sorry.

Mr. Mason: We didn't know which one should get up, Mr. Speaker.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two guests who are seated in the public gallery. They are Cynthia Lazarenko and Robert Price. Cynthia recently retired from Alberta child care services in January.

She has been a member of a number of nonprofit organizations and boards of directors in both Alberta and Manitoba. At its recent convention the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees awarded Cynthia a lifetime membership for her outstanding dedication and commitment to the labour movement.

My second guest is Robert Price. He is currently the president of the federal NDP riding association of Edmonton-Leduc and treasurer of the provincial NDP constituency association of Edmonton-Rutherford. Prior to retiring and moving to Edmonton, he taught English and social studies in the public system. Robert has served on various community boards and on the executive of ATA locals.

Both Robert and Cynthia are here to observe the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am indeed pleased today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Bohdan Harasymiw. Bohdan is professor emeritus of political science at the University of Calgary. He lives in Edmonton and is still active in researching the processes of democratization in post-Communist countries. In September 2007 he was an official observer of the parliamentary elections in Ukraine. He is here to observe Alberta's form of democracy in action. I would now ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Michael Butler. Michael is a small businessman who is actively involved in his community. He has been involved in the hospitality, retail, and home building industries. His other interests include visual communications and coaching basketball. He is here to observe the Legislature proceedings. I would invite him to rise now, please, and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two guests seated in the public gallery. They are Dr. Wasimol Haque and Charan Khehra. Dr. Haque has been a scientific executive in the Canadian pharmaceutical/biotech sector for the last 20 years. He served with local biotech companies like Biomira, Chembiomed, and the Alberta Research Council before moving to Winnipeg to lead the cardiovascular drug discovery division at Medicure Inc. Although he has been busy as a scientist, he has not stopped being a concerned citizen. In that capacity he has been commenting on human rights, social justice, peace, and other matters on the international scene and written on it both in national and international press. He is a strong opponent of militarism and believes that Canadians must play an effective role in bringing peace to the troubled world.

My second guest, Mr. Speaker, is Charan Khehra. He is a former director of special projects for the NDP caucus as well as my former executive assistant. Charan is a social activist who supports various nonprofit community organizations through volunteer work and currently serves on the Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton's awards organizing committee and the city of Edmonton's Landlord and Tenant Advisory Board.

Both of these guests are sitting in the public gallery. I would now request them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Alberta Relationship Threat Assessment and Management Initiative

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, what can a person do who has just suffered another severe beating and been told that if she reports the assault to the police, her two small children will be hurt? What does a person do whose partner restricts access to the phone, to transportation, and to community resources so that you can't leave, and if you do, your children will be abducted and harmed? Where do you turn to for help when your partner has complete power and control over your life and when you are too afraid to trust the police?

Mr. Speaker, fortunately we now have ARTAMI, the Alberta relationship threat assessment and management initiative, to turn to. Under the competent direction of Val Campbell this initiative, that includes a Crown prosecutor, a family law expert, a victim safety specialist, a Children's Services liaison, RCMP and municipal police officers, is the first threat assessment unit in Canada to be operational.

The Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security has stated: "No one should ever live in fear." His department has the lead in this initiative, and they have helped more than 50 families to survive situations of violence and terror. ARTAMI brings together many experts to deal solely with reducing and preventing relationship violence and stalking and is part of the Premier's plan for keeping our communities safe.

The story that I told is a true story. It's a story of violence and terror that has a happy ending. Thanks to ARTAMI and the specialized training of its members this young mother, knowing her children were now safe and protected at school, had the courage to contact the police. She and her children were then able to escape to a women's emergency shelter and were reunited with her family to start a new life in a new location. Her partner was arrested and charged with 17 criminal offences.

Mr. Speaker, not all incidents of family violence have a happy ending, but through the response of ARTAMI we can more effectively address threats of violence and lead victims and their children to safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard over the past few days statements about what Bill 46 is not. I want to use this time to tell Albertans what Bill 46 is and attempts to do. I'm very familiar with the Utilities Consumer Advocate, the UCA, since it reported to me when I was minister of government services. Under this bill, the creation of a UCA governance board, the government intent is that the UCA be independent from the Alberta utilities commission. This is being accomplished through the creation of a UCA governance board which will direct the UCA's regulatory interventions. Under this bill funding for the intervening and regulatory rate hearings will be restricted to the UCA. I do want to stress, so that there will be no confusion, that funding continues for local intervenors directly or adversely affected by an application such as transmission siting hearings, and the opportunity for interested parties to intervene in regulatory proceedings continues.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, what has changed is a strengthening mandate for the UCA to intervene on behalf of small consumers. The UCA also has an increased responsibility for public communication and education. Responsibility for mediation and information continues.

A ratepayer advocate avoids duplication by groups with common interests, Mr. Speaker, provides increased accountability to small consumers, and has been shown to increase the likelihood of negotiated settlements and incentive regulation. Funded ratepayer advocates with policies that restrict reimbursement of intervenor costs are common in most states and are generally recognized as providing increased efficiencies.

Five true consumer groups have come together through a memorandum of understanding, agreed to pool their interventions under the UCA and sit on an interim governance board with similar powers as envisioned under Bill 46. I want to thank those true consumer groups: the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association . . .

The Speaker: I'm afraid, hon. member, that we are now going to have to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ethics in Government

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Trust. As we drove down highway 2 last Wednesday afternoon headed for a public Kill Bill 46 forum in Lacombe, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, our chief of staff, and I were reflecting on the bizarre series of events of the afternoon's question period. The Premier had falsely attributed a quote on royalties to our opposition leader before rapidly exiting the House, as has become his custom, without tabling the document from which the erroneous quote had come.

On the topics of deception, manipulation, and suppression Sir Walter Scott warned: oh, what a wicked web we weave when first we practise to deceive. George Orwell spotlighted the power of falsely manufacturing consent by concealing dissent in his novel 1984, when he noted, "He who controls the past controls the future."

We had barely left Leduc when we received an excited call informing us that the writ had been dropped. While initially catching us off guard given that the Conservative approval ratings in the polls continues to plummet despite a flurry of unbudgeted spending announcements, the possibility of a desperate cut-your-losses-and-run Christmas election call had been prevalent for some time. Because of this trust-challenged government's refusal to establish fixed election dates, its big stick of dissolving parliament to avoid the light and heat of the Legislature's public accountability has been held constantly over Albertans' heads.

It isn't a matter of if; it is simply a matter of when the most important trust election in almost four decades will be called. When the election is called, Albertans will be given a choice to place their trust in an Alberta Liberal government with a clearly focused, inclusive plan for the future or remain stuck in the covert quagmire of this rudderless government's status quo. To quote Joe Anglin, a Lavesta Area Group panelist from Wednesday night's Lacombe Kill Bill 46 forum: democracy isn't something you have; it's something you do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Remembrance Day 2007

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sunday, November 11, all across our province Albertans commemorated our Canada Remembrance Day. Each year I have the great honour to represent our government and Legislature at the ceremony held by the Canadian Legion Ogden Branch. Every day when I am in Edmonton working in this Legislature Building, I walk under the standards of our Canadian armed forces units that engaged in the battles of the past. Every day I walk by the bronze plaques engraved with the names of hundreds of Albertans who died in the wars, and every time I walk to and from my office, I can't help but feel thankful to those Albertans who protect myself, my family, and our fellow Albertans.

Thanks to those Albertans of the past who volunteered in the armed forces – and, unfortunately, some did not return – we have Canada as our country, Alberta as our province. Thanks to those Albertans of the present who also volunteer in the armed forces – and, unfortunately, some may not return – we have a place to call home: a nation and a province with security that we enjoy every moment and a world worth living in, with human dignity and freedoms.

Indeed, it's a precious gift being Albertan, being Canadian. It's a gift from our Creator. It's a gift from our parents and ancestors. Surely, it's a gift from those who died for us to live in the freedom and the dignity of a human being.

I'm fortunate enough to have lived and worked in many parts of the world under different governing regimes, under varieties of traditions and social rules. It takes much time to elaborate those life experiences, so please trust my saying that nowhere else can a person have a life of quality like we have in Alberta, in Canada.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Education Curriculum in Macao

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I had the privilege of attending an Alberta school not in Alberta but, rather, in Macao, not too far away from China. What makes that school really interesting is that this is the only Alberta school outside of the province of Alberta where parents, business leaders who have elected to provide their children with the best education available, have shopped the world for a curriculum and have chosen the Alberta curriculum to be the curriculum instructed in that school.

Mr. Speaker, you would find that school to be very exciting. You walk in there, and it's like being in Alberta: Alberta textbooks, Alberta certified teachers, and children writing Alberta diploma exams and graduating with Alberta high school diplomas.

When speaking with one of the parents, the parent indicated to me that they want their children to receive the best education available in the world. These children from 38 countries in the world have chosen Alberta education to be the one instructed to them. As the principal of the school writes in his message to the parents: the province of Alberta has a tradition of excellence in education which is continually demonstrated by Alberta students' high scores on international tests.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate our civil servants in the Department of Education for the great curriculum that they've developed and for expanding Alberta education world-wide and to thank the International School of Macao for choosing the Alberta curriculum as the best curriculum to instruct their children with.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government likes to pretend they're all about openness and transparency when in reality they work to make public accountability and public input things of the past. Albertans owe a lot to the brave landowners who stood up to a flawed process in the 500 kV power line hearings in Red Deer and in Rimbey. They stood their ground, exposed the AEUB spy scandal, and what did they get in return? Bill 46.

The government is forging ahead with an antidemocratic bill that demonstrates its willingness to ignore Albertans' concerns for the convenience of big business. This government is setting up an AEUB that serves the interests of energy companies instead of the interests of ordinary people. Bill 46 would plug the power in the hands of an appointed commission rather than those who are democratically elected by Albertans. These officials would have the ability to discern whether or not Albertans would have a say in their own future.

This bill screams of antidemocracy, and it's not just the Alberta NDP who are crying foul. Opposition has been voiced by numerous groups, including the Environmental Law Centre, the Pembina Institute, the National Farmers' Union, Parkland Institute, Consumers' Coalition of Alberta, Consumers' Association of Alberta, the Sierra Club, and the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta.

We can only judge a person, Mr. Speaker, by the sum of their actions. Bill 46 is a heavy-handed and regressive reaction to serious problems in the power industry here in Alberta. Albertans expect better. It's up to legislators to deliver.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition signed by 146 individuals residing in the Summerside and Ellerslie areas in my riding who are urging the government of Alberta "to consider providing additional capital funding to the Edmonton Public School Board and the Edmonton Catholic School District to address the need for new community schools in Edmonton-Ellerslie."

I have a second petition, Mr. Speaker, signed by 736 individuals, residents of southeast Edmonton, who are urging the government of Alberta to establish a multicultural long-term care facility in South-East Edmonton to accommodate seniors from diverse ethnic groups who reside there and who have special needs relating to language, traditional customs and food requirements that may not be met in standard long-term care facilities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition today to present to the Legislative Assembly, and the petition reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to launch a full public inquiry under the authority of the Public Inquiries Act into spying practices by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board (AEUB) and the Minister of Energy's oversight role of the AEUB.

This petition is signed by citizens from Rimbey, Bluffton, Didsbury, Ponoka, just to name a few.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table this petition which is urging the government of Alberta to ensure that remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized and that they're fairly compensated and their wages remain competitive, to improve the employees' access to professional development opportunities, and to introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level of care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eighty-two more signatures on the same petition urging the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Most of these signatures today are from Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Bill 215 School (Canadian History Content) Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 215, the School (Canadian History Content) Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill will improve Albertans' competency and awareness of Canadian history. The knowledge of Canadian history and culture is needed for our youth, particularly for those who have come here from other countries.

[Motion carried; Bill 215 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to present two tablings today. They represent two examples of outstanding artistic contributions to our Alberta. The first is a program for the excellent production of Vimy at the Citadel Theatre in Edmonton. This play very much brought to life that important milestone in Canadian history.

The second is the program for Red Boots, Ballet and Bubbly, the incredible gala held on Saturday at a packed Jubilee Auditorium by the incomparable Shumka dance group. They outdid themselves again with a tremendous and varied performance, and were even led in one of them by conductor Zwoz, or, properly, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek. Well done, Shumka.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is The Artsroll Illustrated Birchon, which is a book of Jewish blessings for various occasions, explained in both English and Hebrew. It was part of the Beth Israel synagogue 100th anniversary gala celebration in my constituency, which took place on January 28, 2007.

The second tabling today is the 82-page program and commemorative book for the 2007 Edmonton Negev gala concert, which took place on June 14, 2007, Mr. Speaker. This year's event was in tribute to Mr. and Mrs. Don and Marion Wheaton.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Royalty Revenues

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Annual reports of government departments are important documents with legal standing. The Government Accountability Act gives direction on what is to be included in them, and the Legislative Assembly Act indicates that submitting false information in reports to the Assembly is against the law, yet it looks like this has been common practice for the Department of Energy. My question is to the Premier: given that the Premier has defended the decision to forgo billions of dollars in royalties as a policy decision, why did this government cover up that decision in their annual reports?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the Leader of the Opposition is making ridiculous accusations. It's all about philosophy. What the Liberals would like is to hoard this money, just bring it in and then dish it out to Albertans piece by piece, through his fingers, by having Albertans come on their knees, stand before him, and say, "Oh, please, give me some of that money back," that should go to all Albertans. That's what the Liberal government is all about. It's not going to happen in this province because I don't stand for that kind of behaviour.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Energy annual reports are where this government is to be accountable to the people of Alberta. People expect the information in these legal documents to be truthful. We now know that it wasn't. Does the Premier support this government's practice of misleading Albertans through annual reports that falsely claim the royalty system was working well?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm sure that tomorrow the leader will be able to table the documents that say where they were wrong, in terms of the annual report. We'll give them until tomorrow to table that.

The other thing is that during that period of time Alberta collected over $75 billion worth of royalty revenue. At the same time we've seen increases, of course, in population in the province of Alberta as a result of people coming to this province because of opportunity, the highest standard of living anywhere in Canada, the highest per capita spending of people because they're also receiving the most per capita in salaries, and also the lowest taxes.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this cover-up was not accidental. It was intentional and systematic, and it lasted for years. This government knew the truth. It deceived Albertans, and someone has to be held accountable. To the Premier. The Auditor General refers to various instances where the Department of Energy's annual reports indicate that the royalty system was capturing a fair share despite internal evidence showing otherwise. When did the Premier first learn of this cover-up?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the leader once again is making an assumption, reading into the words of the Auditor

General. The Auditor General clearly stated that there was no wrongdoing. There were no policies being broken. The government stands by what the Auditor General said in the opening remarks when he presented his annual report.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in his report into the royalty system the Auditor General uncovered a disturbing fact. For several years the sharing the profits performance measure in the Department of Energy's annual report "portrayed satisfactory performance by the royalty regimes while detailed analysis in the Department indicated otherwise." In short, the Department of Energy's annual report repeatedly deceived this Assembly and the people of Alberta. To the Premier: how long has the Premier known that the Department of Energy was providing false information to Albertans? How long has he known about this cover-up?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, the allegations are totally false. The Department of Energy did not present false information to the Auditor General. If he has some text or something to present to the Assembly, then table it. Otherwise, again, the Liberal Party has a different philosophy, a philosophy that I talked about earlier, and it's something that Albertans have never accepted in the past and, I can guarantee you, won't in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. All this evidence is there for the Premier to read in the Auditor General's report.

In the Department of Energy 2003-2004 annual report, page 13, the government reported that the royalty regimes collected a fair share of resource development profits, yet the Auditor General says that no internal report supports this assertion. To the Premier: why did this government table an annual report with false statements in it? Who ordered this?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the government did not table any false documents or reports. Tomorrow, certainly, he can table any kind of documents he has in his possession that say otherwise.

You know, protected by the immunity of the House, he can make all these kinds of accusations against the government or against individual members, and that really shows a complete disrespect for the sanctity of this Alberta Legislature.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, Albertans put their trust in this government, and they were betrayed. In the corporate world there are requirements for full, plain, and true disclosure. Misleading the public in the corporate world leads to prosecution. The citizens of Alberta have the same right to high standards of accountability from this government as do shareholders in corporations. To the Premier: who will the Premier be holding accountable for this multibillion-dollar betrayal of the public interest?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier of the province of Alberta and as the leader of this government I am accountable to Albertans, and I'll stand up for every decision that this government has made in the past. It has led to the tremendous economic growth in the province of Alberta. In fact, over the last few days other provincial Premiers have expressed interest in how well Alberta is doing because they know that their economy is dependent on the success of Alberta's economy. Really, again, Alberta's economy is the engine of prosperity right across Canada.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Premier will stand behind this government decision. For seven years secret reports of the Department of Energy warned the government that the royalty system was losing billions in uncollected royalties. Despite this, for seven years the government has reassured Albertans through its annual reports that the royalty system was fine. Albertans were being deceived over and over. To the Premier: why did this government's annual reports tell Albertans they were collecting their due in royalties when it knew – it knew – this was not true. Why the cover-up?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, he has the opportunity to table these secret documents, and I'm quite sure he'll present them tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General notes that the Department of Energy's executive and staff knew that the sharing the profits performance measure needed to improve. Presumably, the Minister of Energy, a former member of the standing policy committee, was made aware. To the Minister of Energy: will the minister admit that he knew Albertans were being fed false information in the annual reports from his department? Was he involved in this cover-up?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will say is that over a number of years – and if you want to talk about seven years and deal in the past, that's fine. We can do that. But for that time, at least, and many years before that and years into the future, where we are interested in going, the people of the province of Alberta have been very well served – very well served – by a royalty regime that produced stellar results economically across the board for Albertans and for all Canadians.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, for seven years Albertans have been kept in the dark about their royalty system by this government. It's time to end the cover-up, time to face the truth. To the Premier. Will the Premier do the right thing: stop hiding, end the secrecy, trust the people of this province, and immediately table all internal royalty documents that are referenced by the Auditor General uncensored?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this Premier made a commitment to Albertans during the leadership. Nobody on that side even talked about any kind of a royalty review; in fact, they even said it wasn't really an issue. I called for the review. As soon as we received the report from the totally independent panel, we made it public because we firmly believe that all Albertans are owners of the resource. Albertans had an opportunity to review the report. We further looked at the full report as a government, and we made a very important decision for the benefit of all Albertans that's going to take this province well into the next decade with good policy, certainty, and predictability.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there's a bigger secret, and that's where the Liberals actually stand on royalties.

Mr. Speaker, Newfoundland and Labrador's 6.5 per cent super royalty surcharge gets them a lot closer to a fair share than the Alberta Tories' sellout royalty regime. On oil price from $80 a barrel and up Newfoundland royalties would earn Alberta over a billion additional dollars a year. My question is to the Premier. Why can a have-not province like Newfoundland stand up to the big oil corporations and get a more fair royalty deal when the government of Alberta folds like a cheap tent?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we can compare the two royalty frameworks, obviously, but it'll take more than the 45 seconds I have to respond. The province of Newfoundland and Labrador took a different approach. They're actually using taxpayers' money to invest in the industry. It's a different approach, completely different from the position we take in Alberta. We allow the private sector to invest, and we have a very fair framework that will find the balance between, of course, Albertans, that own the resource and should get a fair share, and the certainty and predictability in the marketplace where billions of dollars have to be invested in order to develop the resource.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this Premier is certainly no Danny Williams. If Alberta used Newfoundland's royalty rates, we would be earning an additional $3 million a day – a day. So how is it, Mr. Premier, that the people of Newfoundland will get more for their oil than Albertans? Why did the Premier back down to big oil?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I heard on the campaign trail is that many Albertans were not too happy with a penny on the dollar in terms of the prepayout period in terms of the oil sands. That's one of the issues that came out quite often. I said, you know, from listening to that and listening to other questions being raised: well, we'll conduct a review. And we did. Now, this framework that we have put in place is one that works for Alberta. In speaking to the Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador, he said that this is what is good for them. He said that the Alberta model works for Alberta but this is new to their province. You know, they made the decision to go that way, by investing taxpayer money in the industry, and we didn't.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans cannot trust the Tories or the Liberals to get them a fair share. Both parties will give away billions of dollars in resource revenues to oil corporations because it will keep the big donations flowing. We think Albertans deserve better. If Newfoundland can do it, Alberta can do it too. To the Premier: why doesn't the Premier admit that the government of Newfoundland got a better deal than he did and go back to the table and get Albertans a real fair share?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, our royalty framework shares the reward and also the risk. As oil prices rise, we will see more royalty coming from conventional oil and gas and also the oil sands. So it moves with price, which really puts in the kind of certainty for the industry. If the price should drop dramatically, then, of course, we will share in the risk as Albertans. On the other hand, we'll capture the upside with rapidly increasing world oil prices. So it's a very good model for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The line of thought seems to be: bigger government; more money is better. I want to say that conditions have shifted, costs are up, and the current royalty structure isn't unreasonable: that was the Minister of Finance back in May of this year. I'd like to know why we're flipping on this and saying that something that was reasonable in May now isn't. As I was growing up, my father always said: if you want to know, go, and if you don't, send somebody. I'd like to know why the Premier hasn't gone himself and spoken with oil and gas. The Finance minister has, and he says that our rates were reasonable and that it is good for our economy. Why is the Premier doing this to the oil and gas industry?

Mr. Stelmach: What a difference of opinion in this building. A good thing about democracy.

One of the things that, as I said, came up in terms of the framework that we had before was to ensure that given the historic changes in the industry in the province of Alberta, the framework would keep up with those changes. One of those changes was rapidly increasing oil prices during the period of time, and the suggestion by many Albertans was: why don't you review it just to give us a bit of an indication if they're fair or not fair? Going through a review, the panel took one position, obviously. As a government we opposed the production tax on the wellhead. It was something that the federal Liberals put in place that devastated this province back in the '80s, and we're not going to do that again.

Mr. Hinman: They're going to destroy it with their own new tax system.

Protecting the environment is reasonable, but it must not be a barrier to the growing Alberta economy; my government does not believe in interfering in the free market: both statements by our Premier earlier this year. Mr. Speaker, if the environment isn't important enough and can't be a barrier, why is it that now the sentiment to get more from industry and drive them out of the province is okay? Why is this Premier attacking the oil and gas industry and wanting to drive them out to other jurisdictions by changing the royalty revenue programs that we have in place now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would have a look at the framework, we've maintained a lot of the programs, especially for shallow gas, also for flaring, capturing the flaring rather than the methane going into the air. We're capturing that. Also, with deep gas we've made adjustments in the royalty framework. We have listened to the presentations that have been made by many of the small and large oil and gas companies, found a balance. Again, we're going to have the certainty that's going to carry this province well into the next decade.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, it isn't a balance. It's a tipping point, and why do we want to go there? We went through the '80s. We saw that when government interferes, it's wrong. Why does he want to do this? You can't just step in and lower the boom on the growth and the development of the oil sands or elsewhere in the province. If that were to happen, the economic consequences for Alberta and for the economy of Canada would be devastating: again, words of the Premier. It seems like he understood it before. Why is he wanting to attack the families that depend on the oil and gas revenue? Why does he want to attack the oil workers, the small towns? This is an attack on Albertans. Why is he doing this? Why doesn't he admit that he's cowering to the Liberal/ND sentiment and say, "We will not destroy the economy in Alberta"?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we would have cowered to the Liberal sentiment by putting in a production tax. Our framework respects price. Of course, if price goes up, then Albertans share in a greater reward. If the prices drop, we share in the risk. It is part of the true Alberta entrepreneurial spirit, and that's what the oil industry has supported. They're okay with sharing the risk. We've always shared that risk over time. That's why our royalty framework is one of the best in the world, to be shared and studied by others: because we know how to strike the right balance and take a leadership role.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans continue to voice their opposition to Bill 46, but this government does not want to hear that voice. The Minister of Energy continues to deny what citizens already know: Bill 46 will trample the democratic rights of Albertans. My first question is to the Premier. Given that Albertans want the government to kill Bill 46, why is this government forcing this bill onto consumers and landowners so soon, in January 2008?

1:50

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the bill is before the House. It is going through a number of amendments. Part of the responsibility of the opposition and the government is to find a balance, look at the amendments that come forward and make this a strong bill, and leave it at that. We're going to have further debate in the House to see what amendments will be passed in support of Bill 46.

The Speaker: This bill has not come up for second reading yet.
The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to hear that this government is at least going to try to amend this flawed legislation.

Again to the Premier: does this government bill protect the property rights of farmers and other rural landowners?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, that's the big discussion here in the House. Yes, property owners have a position to take. We're all property owners. There should be, of course, a fair hearing in terms of how somebody is, you know, wanting to build a power line or drill a gas well or build a road. There are all these opportunities in terms of fair hearings in front of a quasi-judicial authority to find the right balance.

Speaker's Ruling Hypothetical Questions

The Speaker: The chair has difficulty with this line of questioning. This bill has not come to the House for second reading. As far as the chair knows, this bill may never come to the floor of this Assembly for second reading. So how are we discussing something that, in the view at least of the chair, not knowing what the scheduling will be per se, may be a bit hypothetical?

Proceed with your third question.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that Alberta landowners, including farmers, consumer advocacy groups, environmentalists, and members of the legal community, members of the business community, all oppose this government's Bill 46, yet the Minister of Energy here claims that the bill is being misinterpreted, can the Premier please tell Albertans who was consulted by this government when this flawed legislation was drafted?

Mr. Stelmach: Two points. One is that this is reminiscent of the kind of scare tactics that the opposition used during another bill before the House a number of years ago, which was Bill 11. Again, they used misinformation, spread that misinformation across the country without giving the true and relevant facts of the legislation that's before us. Like I said, the bill will be up for discussion, for debate, and we'll listen to the opposition's position on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Affordable Housing for Rural Alberta

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's housing market has experienced exceptional growth that has increased demand on affordable housing throughout the province. Often there tends to be a perception that this challenge is isolated to large urban centres, but in fact rural constituencies such as mine are facing this challenge as well. My question is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. What measures is your government taking to alleviate the affordable housing pressures on rural Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government is very much aware that with growth and prosperity come challenges, and of course one of those challenges is affordable housing. Rural Alberta is not immune to those challenges. Through the municipal sustainability housing initiative this government has allocated $38 million as well as supported the rural communities with a supplement of $68 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. What direction could you provide to rural constituents, builders, and tenants who are seeking to access funding for affordable housing?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, as I said before, Mr. Speaker, there is $68 million that is available to smaller municipalities for them to be able to apply to our ministry for housing projects in their area. We're hoping to attain approximately 500 units with that funding.

Mr. Marz: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how are we ensuring that the concerns of rural Albertans are being taken into consideration when we develop affordable housing initiatives and programs?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the key is to make sure that we have more units available. The availability of those units very much helped the whole spectrum, whether it be rent supplement or whether it be the homeless and eviction fund. At present we are helping nearly 21,000 people with the homeless and eviction fund and 1,800 low-income families through direct rent supplement.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to say that the associate minister of housing is also working on a secretariat to look at homelessness in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Government Employment Contracts

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the Information and Privacy Commissioner's ruling this government is refusing to release details of contracts with Mr. Murray Smith and Mr. Rod Love. The Premier stated that the reason for this is that he views these details to be personal and private. My questions are to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Are the details of Mr. Smith's contract private and personal because he's a top Tory or because the Premier was the minister who picked Mr. Smith?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing that's very important. We are reviewing the decision that was made by the Privacy Commissioner. What we're going to do is ensure that this is open and transparent and at the same time that all taxpayers in Alberta fully understand where every single cent goes. That is something that we are committed to. But even more importantly, we're going to protect the rights of those relative to privacy. We're going to ensure, unlike the Liberals – they'll be out there ensuring that for every person in Alberta there is no such thing as anything that's private – that we're going to do what is right, what is right, and what is right.

Mr. Bonko: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's great to hear.

This government is only willing to be open and transparent up to the point of action. Then before you know it, secrecy kicks in. To the minister: how can this government claim to be open and accountable when it refuses to comply with the finding of the Information and Privacy Commissioner's ruling?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, our government has indicated that we're reviewing what the important words were from the Privacy Commissioner. We have 45 days to review what he is saying and to take the appropriate action. We will take the appropriate action, and we will do what is right. What the Liberals want to do is to simply circulate everywhere across Alberta so that no Albertan has any privacy on anything.

Mr. Bonko: Murray Smith, Rod Love, Kelley Charlebois, Bob Maskell: what do all these names have in common? Contracts. Government contracts to Tory insiders. With so many contracts with their friends, no wonder the government is trying to hide behind the details. To the minister: given this legacy of insider appointments and patronage, what kind of government are people supposed to expect, one it can trust or this one?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans expect and what they are assured to get from this government is this. As he mentioned some hon. members' names, perhaps trying to besmirch their names, we have tabled in here, in fact, the contracts that were done relative to the important aboriginal education initiative. Perhaps the hon. member didn't read it, but I will table it again today, as I have done before in this very Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are concerned about the recent discovery of bovine tuberculosis in a bull from British Columbia which was in fact born on a farm in central Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. What is the status of this investigation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because tuberculosis is a reportable disease, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency is the lead agency, of course. At present we have six B.C. and 23 Alberta farms under quarantine, and the CFIA is tracing and testing these animals. If there is a bright spot here, it is that the CFIA will compensate all producers for all animals that have to be tested and destroyed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the expected impact on Alberta's beef industry?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, this case will not change Alberta's test-free status as it's not a potentially contagious disease. It does restrict the movement of animals on these quarantined farms, of course, but it's not expected to have any international impact.

Mr. Speaker, it certainly does emphasize how we have to have our traceability systems in place. We in Canada and, probably more importantly, here in Alberta have the best traceability system going in probably all of the world.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: with everything that's going on right now in the industry – the high Canadian dollar, the high price of feed and fuel – what is the Alberta government doing to support this industry?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, the red meat industry probably is facing the perfect storm now, but we have initiated some round-table meetings. We had one with the industry on October 16, and we're having one again tomorrow, on the 14th. In the short term we're coming up with $165 million which we will put into a farm recovery plan which will be delivered through the CAIS program. Long term we've charged the beef industry with working on some recovery plans of their own. We as the Alberta government have initiated a competitive initiative which has been in place for about six months now. So we are working on the issues to the best of our ability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Community Grant Programs

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to a letter written to the minister regarding the administration of grant programs it was admitted that the major community facilities program has slowed down the processing and approval time for the smaller programs. My questions are to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. How does this minister plan to ensure that funding for the larger projects will not continue to impact the smaller projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is asking a very important question.

I want to say that although the major facilities program has taken up a lot of our staff time, I can indicate now that we are basically caught up with the community facility enhancement program, and we're not very far behind on being caught up on our community initiatives program. We have added additional staff and have asked our staff to work extra time, and they've done a tremendous job in responding.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my attempts to find out information about the guidelines and requirements for the MCFP, I found that the ministry had still not posted the names of who has received funding for this program on its website. This government needs to be accountable to the public for how their money is spent. To the same minister: why is this taking so long to post the names of the recipients on its website?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the member talks about the major community facilities program. There have been only a few of the hundred or so applications that we've received that have been approved. Because they're major facilities, we have to do extremely more due diligence, and we're in the process of approving them. Those that have been approved have been made public, and that particular information has gone out with major news releases on all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm still concerned about the discretionary ability of the minister to deny funding to any group that he sees fit, especially with the community initiatives programs. Now with the lack of transparency with the MCFP I'm even more concerned. To the same minister: can this minister tell us how he can assure Albertans that this money is distributed fairly among all constituencies and all organizations?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we look at the programs and we try as much as possible to distribute them on a number of criteria. One is on the basis of merit and the impact it has on their individual communities. The other aspect that we look at is more on a regional basis to try to ensure that individual regions have access to similar amounts of dollars. We don't specifically target individual constituencies, but we certainly look at the whole province and individual regions and identify the merits and type of impact it has on those communities and approve them accordingly.

Sour Gas Well Safety

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, families in Big Valley, in Drayton Valley, and other parts of Alberta have grave concerns with nearby sour gas wells, yet these concerns are being ignored. Sour gas wells near their properties are threatening the health of their children, their livestock, and the safety of their homes. As conventional supplies of gas run out, more and more companies will seek to engage in dangerous high-pressure sour gas well drilling with potentially catastrophic results. My question is for the Energy minister. When is this government going to set up regulations to protect residents instead of protecting the interests of the big oil and gas companies?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the regulatory process in the province of Alberta is renowned around the world. I must say that EUB as it stands today: one of the major mandates and a major function of our regulator is the protection of Albertans. There is nothing that is constructed, no project that goes ahead, no facility that hits the ground without due consideration and a complete – a complete – review of all of the necessary emergency measures associated with that infrastructure.

Mr. Eggen: I don't know, Mr. Speaker. These days word is out that when the gas drillers arrive at your door followed closely by the EUB, you should be afraid, be very afraid. Why? Because one has got the drill ready to go, and the other one has the rubber stamp ready to go.

In many cases residents surrounding these gas well developments have been misinformed of what's even being drilled and how dangerous it actually is. Once again to the Energy minister: why aren't residents of this province being given a chance to voice their concerns about these developments in Big Valley and in Drayton Valley and elsewhere, and why was there not full disclosure about the potential danger?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, the regulatory authorities would take into consideration any of the emergency measures required with respect to any of these facilities. Most certainly, when there are citizens that are involved from the point of view of their proximity to any of this work, what happens is a complete due diligence. There is a situation, I think, that has been expressed today by a family in Alberta with respect to egress and their possibility of how they move away from a potentially hazardous situation if, in fact, one occurs. The board will reconsider that, and it will be taken into consideration with the application.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, I recall, that it was only the actions of outspoken individuals and the Calgary health region that actually stopped Compton Petroleum from drilling a very dangerous sour gas well right in the city of Calgary itself. Since this government seems interested in tinkering around with the EUB, why does it not seek that the oil and gas side of the EUB be more effective so that it represents the interests of ordinary Albertans and doesn't just rubber-stamp every potentially dangerous project big industry puts in front of it?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, as I had indicated earlier, the mandate of our regulators is, number one, the safety of Albertans. That will continue on a go-forward basis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Gang-related Crime

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Red Deer-North are very concerned about gang activity in their neighbourhoods. Recently there have been many alarming reports in the media about violent gangs from B.C. coming to Alberta to set up shop in our neighbourhoods and communities. Clearly something must be done to prevent this unacceptable risk to our safety and security. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What is being done to keep B.C. gangs out of Alberta and to control gangs that are already in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Police in our communities continue to work effectively to prevent crime and also to make criminal acts more difficult to commit. That being said, the safe and secure communities task force report released last week sets out a blueprint for action, including more officers to front-line policing to target specific activities such as gangs and drugs and tough new legislation to support local police in shutting down derelict properties, which can be breeding grounds for gang activity. In addition, this year we will spend $18 million to fight organized crime. We have also established two sheriffs' surveillance units to help police investigate organized crime and gang activity. Last week I announced the warrant apprehension team, whose sole purpose is to take . . .

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member for a supplementary.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: can he assure this House that Alberta's police have the resources they need to fight gangs and organized crime?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to providing safe and secure communities for all Albertans. In the last three years we have increased police funding by $31 million and added nearly 300 officers to the front line. In Alberta we have 5,600 RCMP, municipal, and First Nations police officers in addition to about 5,000 peace officers, including sheriffs, correction peace officers, and community peace officers. We're also developing a new $100 million IT strategy to make it easier to access information, and we're also putting in place a new first responder radio system.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, gang violence affects everyone, and it will take co-operation and co-ordination to combat this scourge. To the same minister: what can communities do to help?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Enforcement alone will not curb violence. We require the additional support of our community to help police in their criminal investigations and to make criminal acts more difficult to commit. Community residents need to be vigilant and report suspicious activities. Also, through their input to the safe communities task force Albertans have given us a clear road map to reduce and prevent crime in our communities. We are acting on the recommendations of the report. Victims' services, youth justice committees, and also community-funded safe houses are all areas where communities can get involved, and they do play a significant role in reducing crime in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A well-known rodeo family near Stettler along with their animals recently became seriously ill after a sour gas leak at the nearby Bears paw Petroleum site. This is the fourth reported leak at the site since 2001. In 2006 a leak resulted in a member of the family receiving emergency care in a nearby hospital. In each case the Energy and Utilities Board gave the facility the go-ahead to keep running. To the Minister of Energy: with sour gas releases at this site having gone on for six years, what needs to happen for real action to be taken against this company? How many chances before they're shut down, Mr. Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this particular incident I think that it's fair to say that the regulators have been on the site, continue to assess the situation, and I'm sure that a full and frank and proper report will come forward at the appropriate time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Gas leaks are of great concern, life threatening in fact, both in this area and in the Drayton Valley area, where there are plans to drill a sour gas well with high concentration of poisonous hydrogen sulphide only 420 metres away from one resident's property. The health and safety of Albertans must be the number one priority of this government. I recently spoke with the medical officer of health in the area of Stettler. If the EUB has the health of people as the top priority, how is it, Mr. Minister, that the health regions are still not being notified of sour gas releases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There would be, of course, a requirement under the application and licensing of any of these facilities for an emergency measures program with respect to any sort of a release, be it sour gas or any other kind of a release, from a site. I am not aware at this particular moment if the application in question indicates that a health region should be notified, but I certainly will look into the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Livestock are also suffering greatly from this gas leak and, indeed, throughout the province. In this case near Stettler a dozen competition horses and 40 cattle were seriously affected. To the minister of agriculture: why did the agriculture department allow the animal health investigation committee and its funding for such animal investigations after exposure to be disbanded last month? Do you expect farmers to pay the $100,000 costs in these investigations?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, certainly we're concerned. It is a concern of anyone when these types of things happen. We aren't necessarily out of the picture because the Farmers' Advocate's office will advise landowners with options they have and what they might wish to pursue. However, the FAO, of course, does not have any legislative authority to act on the owners' behalf, but he certainly can advise them where they should go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Police Officer Supply

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has told Albertans many times that it's committed to safe and secure communities, so it's very disturbing to hear that Alberta ranks eighth in the country in peace officers per capita. This is well below the national average. Labour shortages certainly are common in many different sectors across the province, and law enforcement is no exception. Many police services across the province simply cannot get enough qualified people in uniform. My question to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security: what is the government doing to make sure that there are more police officers on the street?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated earlier, in the last three years we have significantly increased funding to put more police officers in Alberta. We've also committed to increasing police resources in the coming years. Last week I announced the new $1.4 million sheriff warrant apprehension team to take criminals off the street and to keep them off. As of now we have 12 new officers out on our streets who are reducing the number of criminals who are out there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister, then: what is the government doing to help police services recruit and retain staff as well?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, this government is fully aware of the serious problem of police recruitment and retention in Alberta, and that's why last June we brought together leaders in law enforcement in a round-table to address these concerns. Various organizations are now taking the lead on several strategies identified by the round-table. We are committed to completing this work as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then again to the same minister. This demand for police officers will mean that in the near future many young men and women will be hired to fill those vacant positions. What's the government doing to ensure that police training is consistent across the province as well?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, we are moving forward to develop a provincial police college in Fort Macleod, a college that will standardize training and ensure that police in our province will have the ability to work together more effectively and efficiently. We are also working behind the scenes to determine the building size and the number of students we can enrol there, and we are developing a provincial curriculum. We will be exploring revenue streams, and we are intending to release an expression-of-interest document in the near future to gauge private-sector interest in this much-needed facility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Water Quality in Fort Chipewyan

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A report commissioned by the Nunee health authority of Fort Chipewyan and released last week confirms high levels of arsenic, mercury, and oil-related compounds in water and wildlife. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Dr. Timoney's report found flaws in previous studies conducted by this government. Will the minister finally initiate an independent study of the water, wildlife, and human health in the region?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, the government takes issues around this concern very seriously, but the fact of the matter is that there has been ongoing monitoring of a number of indicators since the early 1990s. The regional aquatics monitoring program, or RAMP, takes literally thousands of samples on an annual basis and has been doing so, as I said, since the early 1990s.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My next question is to the minister of health. Mr. Speaker, there's no denying that elevated levels of arsenic and mercury in the water and wildlife will impact the health of residents who rely heavily on this for their diet. How much harm or risk is this government willing to write off as the cost of doing business?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The assumption in that question is invalid. There is no indication of elevated levels of either arsenic or mercury. The study that the hon. member referred to in her first question basically goes back and looks at some of the older data, which has already been dealt with. We've reviewed the data, we've had peer review processes on that data, and we're satisfied that arsenic levels in the area are actually lower than in other areas.

In terms of the resulting health implications, which we're obviously very concerned about, there have been allegations of higher amounts of cancer in the area. We've studied a hundred per cent of the mortalities in that region and discovered that they have no higher level of cancer in that area than in any other area of the province.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister. Policy decisions, especially around rapid industrial development, have a profound impact on the health of people and the environment. Will the minister admit that conducting health impact assessments before decisions are made is more sensible and cost-effective than dealing with the consequences of unhealthy public policy?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Environment indicated in answering a question, there are ongoing samplings of the water and the quality of the air. It's absolutely important to maintain a full understanding of what the cumulative impacts are in that area and in every area, particularly where there's industrial growth. Of course, we want to know what the impacts on health are, and we do want to know those beforehand.

Our department has been working very closely with the Department of Environment and, in fact, has been leading work on, for example, the enhanced environmental health surveillance biomonitoring project. We're involved with the Wood Buffalo Environmental Association's ongoing human health monitoring program. We're involved with the community exposure and health effects assessment program that was done earlier. We're involved with the northern river basin human health monitoring program. Health monitoring is absolutely essential in any area of industrial growth.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 90 questions and answers today.

When we broke for Oral Question Period, we were on the item in the Routine known as Tabling Returns and Reports. I'll now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate it. I have two tablings today. The first is a government ad that appeared in the Globe and Mail on Saturday, July 7, 2007. Here the government is looking for a chair of the Alberta energy resources conservation board and a chair of the Alberta utilities commission. The closing date of these competitions was July 31, 2007. This is an ad placed before Bill 46, as you correctly stated, Mr. Speaker, has been debated in the Assembly.

The second is an ad that also appeared in a newspaper on October 19, 2007, and this is an ad looking for many senior officials in the Alberta utilities commission.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last evening I and the hon. Member for St. Albert had the pleasure of attending the new teacher induction ceremony at Barnett House, and I'm honoured to say that 75 new teachers were inducted into Edmonton public teachers local 37 and happy today to table the appropriate number of copies of the program from that event.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In following up on the Premier's request for the documents from which we were quoting, I table the appropriate number of copies of several different excerpts from the Department of Energy's operational overview with the particular sections highlighted for him to review.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from Jennifer Matyjanka in Edmonton, where she's stating:

We have a fundamental right to voice concerns and opinions that lead to the creation of standards and regulations that promote quality and provide access, affordability and alternatives for child care . . . Without an appropriate amount of time for stakeholders to obtain background information on the effects these proposals will have on child care options as they are today, it was impossible to make informed decisions and comment regarding the proposed changes.

The second tabling is from Leah Weber, president of Meadowlark Park Childcare. She's stating that many married, two-parent households that do not qualify for subsidy are "being forced to face the decision of either quitting their jobs because they cannot afford to work or finding substandard, unlicensed child care."

My third one is from Sheila Gough in Edmonton, and she's asking us to "develop a real plan that will address the growing human resources crisis in the human services sector."

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a memorandum that I received from the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays requesting early consideration to Committee of the Whole of Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, pursuant to the Regulated Accounting Profession Act the Certified General Accountants Association of Alberta 2006-07 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Lindsay, Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, pursuant to the Gaming and Liquor Act the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission annual report 2006-07 and Charitable Gaming in Alberta: 2006-07 in Review.

The Speaker: Hon. members, during Oral Question Period the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill advised of a point of order, and then at the conclusion of the question period, at the beginning part of the Routine, the hon. Member for Peace River advised of his intent to rise on a point of order. We will now proceed to the point of order by the hon. Member for Calgary Nose-Hill, that arose as the result of interjections.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today on a point of order pursuant to Beauchesne 484(3), Beauchesne 485, and Beauchesne 486. Beauchesne 484(3) speaks as follows:

A member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself as a political institution; or to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for [those] actions in a particular case.

Beauchesne 485 speaks to the following: unparliamentary words may be brought to the attention of the House by the Speaker or by any member.

The Leader of the Official Opposition repeatedly used the word "cover-up" during his questions. In so doing, he clearly offended the rules of decorum of this House. Mr. Speaker, there have been repeated rulings by both you and your predecessors in office that the phrase "cover-up" is an unparliamentary phrase. I would refer to page 5 of the excellent document which you've circulated to all members of the House in which it states a number of rulings, repeated rulings in fact, of this House that "cover-up" is an unparliamentary phrase. It's my respectful submission that there is a prima facie case of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition using unparliamentary language.

But I would like to go beyond that, Mr. Speaker, to a number of other points because the bare use of the words on several occasions did not reflect, in fact, the tenor of the way that those were used. I believe that the hon. leader has offended the rules not only against the use of our unparliamentary language but in respect of imputing unworthy motives for actions of members in a parliamentary case. That would offend Beauchesne 484(3) and Beauchesne 486, which speaks of injurious reflections being made against a member of the House. Not only did the hon. leader use the word "cover-up" repeatedly; he also referred to the government's annual report having false statements in it, and this was linked with the phrase "misleading the public." It's my respectful submission that the context and the tenor of the use of those words were clearly meant to infer that the Premier and certain members of Executive Council had participated in a cover-up, and as such it has impugned those individuals.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader ought to know very well that there was no cover-up, that there was no misleading the public. In my respectful submission, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition should be called to order by you, he should apologize to the House, and he should withdraw his remarks.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I may respond to the member and the citations raised. I appreciate his raising Beauchesne 486, and I will note that, in fact, in 486(2) in Beauchesne it does say, "An expression which is deemed to be unparliamentary today does not necessarily have to be deemed unparliamentary next week." At the same time, in 486(3) I note that it says, "There are few words that have been judged to be unparliamentary consistently, and any list of unparliamentary words is only a compilation of words that at some time have been found to cause disorder in the House."

More to the point, if I may refer you to Marleau and Montpetit, page 71. I'm speaking of freedom of speech, a fundamental right without which they would be hampered in the performance of their duties. It permits them to speak in the House without inhibition, to refer to any matter or express any opinion that they see fit, to say what they feel needs to be said in the furtherance of the national interest and the aspirations of their constituents.

I also note on page 74, continuing on the importance of freedom of speech:

This freedom is essential for the effective working of the House. Under it, Members are able to make statements or allegations about outside bodies or persons, which they may hesitate to make without the protection of privilege.

Freedom of speech is important in this House, particularly in holding this government to account. I am sorry if the member finds that difficult, but it's our job as the opposition to raise those questions and to ask for the government to account for that.

I will note the Auditor General's report in three different places. On page 92 he says – and this was the information we were basing this on: "In fact, for several years the measure portrayed satisfactory performance by the royalty regimes while detailed analysis in the Department indicated otherwise." Again I'll quote from the Auditor General's report on page 106: "While the Department did technical work during that year, no detailed cross-commodity internal report supports this assertion in the Annual Report." And if I may, Mr. Speaker, on page 125: "Indeed until the 2005-2006 Annual Report, the measure indicated successful performance by the royalty regimes while technical review suggested a different result."

So I would argue that there is no point of order that has been raised. I could also go through the impugning motives, quoting Beauchesne 69, and I've already gone through the unparliamentary terms in Beauchesne 485 to 492, but I would argue that the Leader of the Official Opposition was doing his job in questioning the difference between what was in an annual report, which is expected to be truthful, and what has been raised by the Auditor General.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill was quite correct in his desire to participate by raising a point of order, and that's the right of all members to deal with this.

At the outset there were a number of citations used by hon. members. The House of Commons Procedure and Practice at pages 525 and 526, Beauchesne's paragraphs 485 through to 492 are relevant. Specifically, the chair did write down a number of words that were used today as he listened attentively to the questions and the responses, and he heard words such as misleading, deceive, cover-up, false, betray.

There are a number of factors and background that one would want to consider in dealing with this. One would be the tone, the manner, the intent, the person to whom the comments were directed, the degree of provocation, I guess, or uprising within the Assembly, the level of disorder that was created.

There's one theme, that these words were used consistently with respect to, quote, a report. The chair does not believe, in his attentiveness to the questions, that the usage of these words was directed at any individual, any hon. member; they were directed towards a report. We have had rulings with respect to this in the past, that a point of order, a point of privilege must be directed against an individual.

However, having said that, the use of unparliamentary language

– it's also very true that on one day it may be acceptable. On the next day and in the case of the context in which it is, it may not be acceptable. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill specifically used the word "cover-up," yet in section 490 in Beauchesne: since 1958 it has been ruled parliamentary to use the following expression: "cover-up." It's the context, essentially, in which it is. If the attack here is a cover-up against a report, that's entirely different than some hon. member standing up and basically saying that it was a member of the House. If it was a member of the House who was accused of a cover-up, then, in essence, there would have been an interjection, and the chair would have hoped that the House leaders would have been to the intent very, very quickly on that.

However, having said that, there is a line which all hon. members must conduct themselves by, and it's to that line that the chair would remind all members that they should be temperate and their statements should be worthy of the place in which they have uttered those words. This is an honourable institution, and this is an institution of decorum, and there are some words in the English language – it's amazing how there are some great books, in fact, dealing with synonyms, there are some great books on wit, and there are some great books on humour, and there are some great books on startling statements of innuendo, and sometimes we just use the base of the word. Great parliamentarians like Winston Churchill and others could always find a statement for a situation that would have much more impact than words like misleading, deceived, cover-up, false, betrayed.

Hon. Member for Peace River, do you have a point of order, sir?

Point of Order Members' Statements

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order pursuant to Standing Order 23(i). Earlier, in a member's statement given by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, he made what I believe to be disparaging remarks about the Premier's attendance in this Chamber during question period, offering not only his prediction about what it was going to be like today or in the future but what it's been like in the past. He also impugned some motives on the Premier, seemingly implying that he's ducking or for some other reason.

Mr. Speaker, clearly, page 522 in Marleau and Montpetit states: "It is unacceptable to allude to the presence or absence of a Member or Minister in the Chamber." I would ask that this member be called to order and asked to withdraw those remarks.

The Speaker: Actually, I'm going to deal with this without any further interjections. This Assembly dealt with changes to the Routine, and this Assembly agreed to invent the section of the Routine called Members' Statements. It was clearly understood by all members at the time, in the invention of this process, that members would have two minutes to speak on any range of subject that they would want to speak on and that the chair would not accept points of order or points of privilege on anything arising out of these members' statements. There was a warning given, in fact, by the chair before the Assembly agreed to this, saying: "How would the Assembly want the chair to deal with this? If there was a statement of such great insult and provocation, would the chair intervene?" The Assembly said: "No. The chair should not."

That has been the ruling when this has been raised on previous occasions. Members have an opportunity for two minutes to display their thoughts as they so choose. Needless to say, on all of us there always is, though, a responsibility, certainly, for honesty. There is certainly a responsibility for integrity. However, members may view what has been said in different ways, and that accounts for this.

This is not a point of order. This is following the tradition of the House of a ruling of a part of the Routine we currently have. There is a committee, a committee of hon. members, set up that always consistently looks at the operation of the House and can deal with it if they so choose, but today it's not a point of order.

Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 7

Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 7, the Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007.

I would like to briefly summarize the proposed changes that are included in the bill and provide clarification on certain points raised by members during the Committee of the Whole discussion of the bill. To begin, amendments in the bill change the name of the Private Vocational Schools Act to the private vocational training act and change the name of the director to the director of private vocational training. This is being done to clarify that it is vocational training programs and not institutions that are licensed.

Other amendments included in the bill remove the provision for licensed programs to be categorized as either class A or class B based on performance outcomes. The intent of this change is to enhance consumer protection by requiring all licensed programs to demonstrate satisfactory performance outcomes.

Bill 7 also includes changes to the act to make it more reflective of today's environment with respect to licensing by providing a mechanism whereby a licence can be cancelled upon the request of a licensee, subject to all of the licensee's obligations to students being met. There is no mechanism in the act at present that accommodates requests from licensees to cancel licences.

Amendments also included in Bill 7 remove the requirement that licences be renewed every two years. I'd like to assure members that this change will streamline administrative processes but will not lessen the attention that is given to monitoring and compliance assurance activities. Although this change provides the flexibility to free licensees that demonstrate compliance from the administrative exercise associated with renewals for longer time periods, licensing periods can be made as short as deemed appropriate.

During the Committee of the Whole discussion of this bill members raised the matters of licensing requirements and ongoing monitoring, so I want to provide you with further information on these points. As I mentioned in the Committee of the Whole discussion, licensing requirements are specifically set out in regulation. These include the demonstration that there is a reasonable labour market for graduates, the posting of security to be used to provide tuition refunds to students when necessary, entering into a standard enrolment contract with each student that identifies all costs for the training program. Ongoing monitoring includes on-site visits, meetings with institution owners and representatives and frequent interactions with institutions, the review of requests for program changes submitted by institutions, review of complaints received from students and other parties, and the analysis of performance outcome information that must be submitted annually to the ministry.

I would also like to clarify at this point that private institutions that offer licensed vocational training programs generally do not receive government operating grants.

To conclude, the remaining changes included in Bill 7 update the Private Vocational Schools Act by revising the wording used in reference to the information that is set out in licences, the manner in which notices of program licence cancellations or suspensions are provided to students, and the manner in which notices under the act are served.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask that all members support the passing of this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. We're in third reading of Bill 7.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The vocational schools, whether public or private, do a great service to the province of Alberta, and I would like to recognize the Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute, which sits across from the University of Calgary and works with the University of Calgary in the constituency of Calgary-Varsity. This Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute will soon be celebrating 41 years of serving the community, and it has served the community very well.

In its early undertakings I had the opportunity as a first-year student in education at the University of Calgary to work with students of the Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute in developing language programs and specifically helping them with trade considerations such as the appropriate language that a salesperson might use in selling a product. I found the members of the class that I participated in at the Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute very excited and enjoying the role play associated with selling goods. In fact, their enthusiasm was so great that I had to caution them that if one of their classmates appeared less than eager or willing to purchase their piece of merchandise that they were role-playing and selling, then they should not threaten to pound the individual if those products weren't received.

Over the years the Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute had a series of programs to train individuals with disabilities to participate in a full life experience, and with the VRRRI celebrating, I wanted to take this opportunity to recognize 41 years, which will soon be coming up, of dedicated service to the community and the long association with the University of Calgary.

With regard to Bill 7, Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Foothills giving some of the oversight mechanisms that the government uses to evaluate vocational colleges. I know from having met, along with members of my caucus, administration from Grant MacEwan Community College that there is an expectation with community colleges and other vocational colleges as well as academic institutions of a peer review format. In Grant MacEwan's case they sent out to 32 different institutions to recognize their applied degree-granting programs. They welcomed that external input.

I would hope that in the government's oversight of much-needed private vocational schools, the peer evaluation of the various institutes would be the equivalent of a SAIT or a NAIT in terms of the programs that they would offer, granted on a much smaller scale because they are private and they aren't government funded. I am hoping that that government oversight is very much there to make sure that the programs are of value and that the students who participate in these programs can be assured of training that will then qualify them for the very necessary market that we're experiencing in Alberta, where we have a tremendous shortage of skilled professionals.

Again I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing forth Bill 7. As a past educator I believe that government oversight, whether it's for public institutions or for private institutions, on an ongoing basis is absolutely essential.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 7, Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007. First of all, I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for sponsoring this good piece of legislation. This bill is about changes in licensing procedures for private vocational programs, eliminating different classes of licences and switching from biennial renewal of licensing to an ongoing monitoring system. The removal of the licence classes eliminates the current situation of second-class institutions. It also slightly weakens what private institutions must do if a program is found to be unsatisfactory by the ministry.

Definitely, I will support this bill, Mr. Speaker, with some clarification, a clarification of how the regulation will change, also with a reservation made over the weakening of requirements when a program is cancelled or suspended by a ministry. I just wanted to know why this change is needed.

They are not the most dramatic changes, but they are positive. Removing the class B licence of school is positive. If graduation rates and employment placement rates are unsatisfactory, then these institutions should not receive a licence. This does all rely on the government changing the regulation accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, we also need clarification of the oversight process. As it stands, the legislation limits licences to two years in duration. The renewal process for those licences means at least in theory that every two years the program is re-evaluated by the director, ministry, and this should ensure that standards do not slip. The proposed change suggests a rolling, constant evaluation. Whether this will take place is unclear. It places more control in the director's hands as they are no longer mandated to issue any extension.

The message we had from the ministry was that this was a housekeeping bill, changing the wording of the legislation to reflect current practices. That seems to hold with the reading of the bill.

Alberta, Mr. Speaker, has approximately 140 private vocational schools offering thousands of training programs from accountancy to hairdressing, for example Marvel college, professional medical associations, and so many others. We Alberta Liberals recognize and appreciate their contribution to our communities.

Students at private vocational schools are eligible for Canada and Alberta student loans. According to the latest statistics we have from the government, $6.4 million went to students at private vocational colleges in the year 2003-2004, a tenth as much as the public-sector students, approximately $64.6 million. The drop-out rate for private vocational schools is much higher.

With regard to the areas changed by this legislation, currently there are two classes of licences for private vocational schools. A class A licence means a licence that authorizes the licensee to provide the vocational training specified on the licence and signifies that the programs are new or the programs have a student graduation rate and employment placement rate that are satisfactory to the director. A class B licence means a licence that authorizes the licensee to provide the vocational training specified on the licence and signifies that (a) the programs do not have a student graduation rate and an employment placement rate that are satisfactory to the director; (b) the director is unable to form an opinion about the student graduation rate or the employment placement rate in respect of those programs. Thus, Mr. Speaker, currently the program can have an unsatisfactory graduation rate and employment placement rate yet still have a licence to provide vocational training. The bill would remove that distinction.

Also, Mr. Speaker, currently in place is a term limit for licences of two years. After that time they need to be renewed. This provides some impetus for oversight by the director but doesn't guarantee it. The renewal process is not at all complex. As long as the director is satisfied that the licensee is in accordance with the act and regulations, then their licence is renewed. Removing the licensing category that allows private vocational schools to have unsatisfactory employment and graduation rates is a positive move. These programs charge students a lot of money. They should offer a decent service for that money. The government needs to ensure that all programs – all programs – offer students satisfactory graduation and employment rates.

Once again I commend the sponsor, the Member for Calgary-Foothills. I definitely support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Deputy Government House Leader, do you want to rise on this point or participate in the bill? Okay. Well, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should there be a question.

There being none, then I'll call on the hon. Associate Minister for Capital Planning.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise just briefly in support of Bill 7, the Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, as brought forward by our good colleague from Calgary-Foothills. I want to begin by saying that I certainly support the broad scope and nature of this bill. In addition to some of the often referred to cosmetic changes, such as changing the name and so on, there are some other very important changes that have been commented on at some length.

I happened to be speaking with some folks about vocational schools in general over the last few weeks, and I just wanted to indicate that I also support this bill because it goes on to also clarify that it is the specific vocational training programs that are being licensed hereunder and not the institutions per se. I know that we have a number of these vocational institutions in our province, dozens and dozens of them, probably a hundred or more, and I think that's very indicative of how important they are and how reliant they are on our reviewing the laws and statutes that govern their operations from time to time. That, in fact, is what the hon. member is doing here.

Just two other quick points, Mr. Speaker. I heard a lot of comments about putting in a clause that would allow for the cancellation of some of these licences after they have been granted mostly because there is a void in the act as it is currently worded. This will certainly address that particular void. So it's just as important and necessary to give the parameters surrounding such cancellation as it is to have the cancellation clause in there itself. I know that has been addressed or there will be further address of that subject in the regulations that will undoubtedly accompany this.

The other comment I wanted to make was that I also appreciate that there will be constant vigilance and monitoring of this whole licensing provision, including visiting the sites where program delivery is actually happening as well as consultations and also helping with respect to the compilation of specific information that has to now be submitted, as I understand through the bill, on a very regular basis. Those are two very important points. In the end, Mr. Speaker, we're trying to help students help themselves, and we're trying to help these institutions, these private vocational institutions, deliver the best programs possible.

I realize that there are other amendments within the bill, but those are some of the highlights that my constituents wanted me to comment on in particular, so I'm pleased to do that.

My last point is simply with respect to the overall enhancements that are going to follow for consumer protection as a result of this new and renewed licensing program as evidenced in the act.

So with that, I'll take my seat and once again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for his vigilance in bringing this good law forward at this time. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

There being none, additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a couple of additional comments in regard to this bill after my previous comments and reflection. I certainly will vote in support of this bill, but as the hon. speaker just previous to me has mentioned, perhaps, you know, I would want to make a comment to help to ensure that the regulative side of this bill covers a number of concerns that I have. The merging of the class A and B licences combined with the removal of the two-year limitation on licences I believe, in my mind, represents a downgrade of enforcement and oversight in regard to private vocational schools. So I just want to make that comment.

Although the ministry does promise to continue with oversight of this sector, current changes seem to be suggesting the opposite of that. The graduation rates, for example, which seem to separate class A and B licences and regular licenses, represent a part of this oversight procedure, and they also happen to be two criteria that are being removed from the act and its regulations, so I was concerned about that. As I said before, no clear indication of what sort of oversight might actually take place. This is one question that I had.

Another one was to know what kind of oversight is taking place right now within the ministry to ensure that these problems do not pop up. For example, how many private vocational schools have been in fact audited and investigated by the ministry in the last four years or so? How often does the ministry review the 140 or more private vocational schools to ensure compliance? You know, in the 2005-2006 report it stated that $87,000 had been granted to Columbia College, which is a private vocational school. How much money has been given to private vocational schools in this last year, 2006-2007?

Mr. Speaker, I just want to ensure that the ministry through this bill or through its accompanying regulations institutes regular inspections of private vocational schools to ensure that minimum standards are being met for future development and for the benefit of postsecondary education in general here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Additional speakers?

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills to conclude the debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: All right. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. members for Calgary-Varsity and Edmonton-Calder for speaking about the bill and thinking that the bill is now fit to be amended. Your support is appreciated. I see that you must have read the entire documents on the regulations and the Hansards in the past to answer most of your questions from Committee of the Whole, so that's great.

Mr. Speaker, I'd just like you to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Bill 8 Vital Statistics Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce third reading of Bill 8. I'd like to also take this opportunity to further respond to questions raised in Committee of the Whole.

With respect to the time period to submit a medical certificate of death, the physician or medical examiner must file an interim medical certificate within 48 hours of the death. The timeline has been extended to file the final medical certificate from 30 days to 60 days because a final medical certificate may require autopsy work. Last year approximately 80 per cent of the final medical certificates were not filed in time to meet the 30-day deadline.

With respect to an appeal from a medical officer of health's decision whether or not a body can be disinterred, there is no appeal. This is because the medical officer of health would be evaluating the potential public risk associated with disinterring a person who has died of a communicable disease. If the medical officer declares a disinterment a risk to the public, his decision would be final.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Regarding register books for marriage commissioners, registered marriage commissioners must have register books. It would be too onerous to require a temporary marriage commissioner, who may only perform one marriage, to maintain a register book. Vital statistics has other mechanisms in place to register a marriage should the registration go missing, such as an affidavit from a person who has solemnized the marriage.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the individuals within the department who have helped work on this bill: Barry Haugrud, Rosanne Dofner, Katherine Olson, Barb Lepage, Nikki Abele, Heather Innes, Martine Sallaberry, Alice Barnsley, Allison Matichuk, and Di Nugent. I'd also like to thank the members of the opposition from Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Strathcona, and Edmonton-Glenora for their assistance as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My comments on Bill 8 in third reading will be brief. I think the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne has done an admirable job in addressing not only the questions that I raised in second reading and while we were debating in Committee of the Whole but throughout the first part of this legislative session, back in the spring, when we had a number of questions. He was very accommodating in providing answers to those questions.

As I've indicated a couple of times, our caucus will be supporting Bill 8. We've raised some concerns around the sensitivities involved, the cultural sensitivities particularly, and will be interested observers, I suppose, as this legislation is put into place to make sure that those concerns that we've raised have been addressed with this legislation properly, and if for some reason that proves not to be the case, then I'm sure there will be discussions with the ministry to address those. But for the most part what we're doing here is moving into the 21st century some legislation which, I understand, in some cases can be 50 years old or older, so it's perhaps long overdue. I suppose the only question would be: why do we wait so long on some of these things?

The independent Member for Edmonton-Manning has before this House a bill that deals with red tape. One of the proposals that comes from the B.C. model is to eliminate two regulations for every one new regulation that is put forward. That sort of thing, if it were to be done in this province, might actually spur us on to review regulations and legislation more often, and maybe we wouldn't find ourselves dealing with a situation that's been left so long. I hope that those comments might spur those on the other side that are involved in drafting legislation to look at more pieces of legislation that perhaps should be reviewed.

As I said, for the most part we're onside completely with Bill 8 and hope that it accomplishes the things that the mover and the minister have set out for it to do. As I say, we'll be interested observers and hopefully helpful critiquers if, in fact, that's not the case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. As my esteemed colleague for Edmonton-Rutherford has already noted, we are supportive of Bill 8. Again, I would like to just offer some cautions. FOIP, when used as it's intended, protects individuals and their identities, as it should do. When it's used to simply hide information that should be public knowledge, then there is a concern. We've had examples in Alberta of almost 2 million more health premium cards being printed than the actual population of this province; therefore, whatever we can do to make sure that identity theft or the misuse of a person's identity is prevented, the better.

We've also had experiences where unencrypted files stolen from a laptop computer with Calgary regional health records caused great concern. Recently in Edmonton the records of families looking after children for the government, foster families, turned up in a dumpster. We've had examples where computers have either been stolen or not been wiped clean of the government information on Albertans that was stored there. So I can't overemphasize the need to properly prevent identity theft. In Alberta we've had instances of people claiming that a property was actually theirs and causing individuals great loss of monies over identity theft in claiming that the house was actually belonging to them, and it turned out to be sold out from under them.

We have had concerns about how well contained our information is from the inquiring eyes of the PATRIOT Act and U.S. legislation which continues to, I would suggest, pry into Alberta and Canadian affairs way beyond the level of security that is necessary.

We had a circumstance this past spring with regard to the federal government's indication of names and identity. There was an impression left in parts of India, especially northern India, and in the country of Pakistan where the name Singh caused confusion. Because Singh is such a common name, the idea was suggested that possible immigration of individuals with the last name Singh might not be accepted. There was the appearance of a push to have individuals change their last name so that it was Singh hyphenated so as to clearly identify the individual.

While we support Bill 8, I want to share my colleague Edmonton-Rutherford's caution that protecting legitimate privacy is of utmost concern. We will continue to support and hold the government accountable for protecting that legitimate privacy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate in the debate?

Does the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne wish to close?

Mr. VanderBurg: Call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 24
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate November 8: Mr. Rogers]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to continued debate in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again to speak to Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007. This bill is just to strengthen the ability of the Real Estate Council to investigate cases of mortgage fraud. The amendment act also makes a criminal record check, especially for certain professions, like real estate agents, mortgage brokers, or appraiser guys – you know, some appraisers are licensed, and some are not. This is very important because they are dealing with the public, and the public should be aware of how those people are dealing with the public. It impacts. It's a huge amount of money sometimes, and the people who are not educated, the people who don't understand the practice in this field, sometimes lose quite a bit of money.

Mr. Speaker, the bill definitely will increase the amount of power for the minister to set regulations on various aspects of the oversight mechanism of real estate agents and mortgage brokers. This is something we have long had concerns about.

I am still a licensed real estate agent. I know there are many flaws in the system even though we have so many organizations like the RECA and the Real Estate Board. They always talk about their ethics, but still even some realtors who are licensed don't stick with the rules and regulations. We have a school in the Real Estate Board. They try their best. They teach all the real estate agents about ethics, but in the last, say, seven, eight, nine years in my profession as a realtor I found out that not many realtors are working according to the ethics that they learn from the school. This bill is very important for them, especially if this act has some teeth. If we keep on passing the acts and we don't enforce them properly, this act will mean nothing.

Mr. Speaker, in this bill we talk about the regulations again this time. I just want to know: what are those regulations, and why don't we discuss those regulations here in this Assembly? This is very important. Giving powers to the ministers, and they will deal with the Real Estate Council or the Real Estate Board – I think it should be open. We should discuss those regulations here in this Chamber.

This is my suggestion. Everybody should know, not just giving more powers to the minister, and they deal with the RECA or the board. Some government-side members sit on the board. They know the ins and outs, and they have connections, and some people know that. I'm not, you know, saying that they're not telling the people whatever is happening here about the regulations, but I think it should be open to all of us sitting in this room.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, will work to combat mortgage fraud more effectively if we discuss the regulations here, if we discuss the full details here of what those regulations are. If we debate properly on those regulations, it would be more effective for the public. After the bill passes, it makes the act, and not only the RECA but the public should be aware about this act. This is a valuable task. The Alberta Liberal caucus, however, has always taken the position that shifting too much out of the legislation and into the regulations is a problem. This basically gives the minister the power to change how the law is applied whenever they want through orders in council.

I just want to touch upon a couple of things about mortgage fraud. I remember that last time – I don't remember exactly; I think Bill 12 or 13 was also about mortgage fraud – I talked about that. I talked about the assumption of the mortgage. Let me say a few words about the assumption of the mortgage. Some people might not know. Assumption of the mortgage is simply if somebody who has the mortgage sells their property, and the new buyer assumes their mortgage.

Some people, not all people, you know, are doing the right thing, but some people are making fraud because they want to sell their property. Sometimes they go to the bank, get the high percentage of the mortgage, and then when they sell their property to the buyer, they don't lose anything; they make money. But some people have the bad record. I think this is only happening in Alberta. Some other provinces in Canada are quite aware of this practice. I know that the RECA was working hard to stop this assumption of the mortgage, and I think that practice is still going on. I want the sponsor of this bill to make a note. I want him to discuss with the RECA if possible, and they can give us better suggestions as to how we can enforce that. Definitely if you don't have assumption of the mortgage in Alberta – other provinces are aware of this – then we can stop at least some fraud in the mortgage system here in Alberta.

The next thing I want to talk about, Mr. Speaker, is criminal record checks for all realtors. The RECA has the process. They always ask licensed realtors to update a certain number of hours. They educate them. But even after taking those classes, still some realtors don't, you know, go by the rules and regulations as well as the teachings from the real estate institutions. They are doing something which is totally unethical. They don't care about the public. They only care about the money they make. This is not right.

I'm not blaming the RECA. They are trying their best, but how can we control this thing? I mean, the process is there, but some people get some witnesses, and then they get away with that. They even do some criminal things, but after some time they come back and start a practice in the real estate profession. I think we need some enforcement. We need some more strict rules just to stop this kind of practice in Alberta. Some other provinces have. I think if we follow some other provinces, you know, it might help Albertans do their business. They can deal with the professional people in Alberta.

The third one is that some appraisers in Alberta still don't have licences. They appraise the property, and some people do it intentionally. They always appraise the property for less money.

They don't tell the truth, sometimes, to their own clients. Sometimes realtors and appraisers – they know each other very well – make deals, and it's very hard to find out if the dealings are done, you know, under the table.

I'm sure that if we debate this issue on all different types of fraud in this Assembly, we can find out some sort of enforcement method we could enforce and give some more powers, not only to our minister. Okay? After discussion I want to see a powerful organization that can go after the appraiser people who are not professionals, and I want an entity or organization that can go after those realtors who have criminal records. I want them to go after who makes the mortgage fraud in Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

This is not the first time I have seen legislation about mortgage fraud. The Real Estate Amendment Act is so very vast. I mean, there are so many loopholes in the Land Titles as well. I am sure the sponsor of this bill, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, worked really hard to bring this legislation again and again. His background is also in the same profession, and he knows about this very well.

My suggestion to all members sitting in this House is that we should take it very seriously. The fraud in this industry is still going on. Whether it's in the assumption of mortgages, whether it's appraising the property, or whether it's the practice, realtors – some, not all of them – are doing unprofessional practices in Alberta. So we should stop that practice here in Alberta and do the right thing.

I support this bill with some reservation, like I mentioned, and I'm sure the sponsor of this bill will look into this with some stakeholders, especially the RECA. Definitely we can improve this legislation. I want to make sure this time. When we pass this bill, it should help all realtors.

The majority of the realtors in this province are honest people. They are professionals and should do the right things in this province. So are most of the banks. They don't want to lend money to people who make frauds. There are lots of good appraisers, and they are doing a good job professionally. Definitely they should have checks and balances on all three types of professions, and we should make sure we strengthen this bill as much as we can.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm just rising very briefly to make a comment on Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act. Certainly, the New Democrat caucus is in support of this bill as well. For a number of very, I think, practical reasons the Advisory Committee on Mortgage Fraud urged the government to allow increased sharing of information related to mortgage fraud, so this helps, through Bill 24, to identify the ways to investigate the suspected fraud. A criminal record check is certainly a good thing to have for real estate agents, mortgage brokers, and appraisers as well that wish to be licensed.

3:30

I've actually encountered this unfortunate fraudulent activity on more than one occasion over the last three years through my work as an MLA, and I can't think of anything more financially devastating for a family than to be taken for a ride on the mortgage of their home and essentially lose a home under false pretenses. We're talking about many tens of thousands of dollars that, unfortunately, were misappropriated by unscrupulous mortgage people.

I welcome Bill 24 if this in any way can assist and reduce the incidence of fraud in mortgages here in this province of Alberta. Every interested party that we had a chance to speak to certainly did endorse this change as brought forward by Bill 24, so I'm happy to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Like my expert colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie, who has spent a large part of his life dealing with real estate and appreciates the type of integrity it is necessary to possess to represent your customers, while I don't have near the expertise, I do have concerns which, hopefully, Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007, will address, and that is the area of fraud. As a young man I was the victim of fraud in terms of buying a second-hand car. I purchased the car with cash from a family friend. When I went to register the vehicle, nothing showed up in the way of a lien, but about five months into the driving of this vehicle a lien showed up to the point where the total value that I had paid for the vehicle was in fact owing to the bank that had previously financed the purchase of that vehicle. So I learned a relatively small lesson in honesty at the loss of $500.

As has been pointed out, there isn't a great deal of difficulty in obtaining a real estate licence or an appraiser's licence, and with the hot market that we're experiencing in Alberta and the flipping of properties with such great speed, there is the potential for fraud. To whatever extent Bill 24 seeks to eliminate those fraudulent processes, the greater our support for it.

I should just mention that members of the Alberta Liberal caucus met with Privacy Commissioner Frank Work with regard to our responsibility as notaries public and commissioners for oaths. Quite often we're asked to attest to an individual's identity. In our capacity we're often brought in to review wills, transfers of properties, and so on. Obviously, for the majority of us this isn't something with which we've had previous training or expertise, so Mr. Work cautioned us to a great extent that before we provide our constituency office stamp or our signature, to the greatest extent possible we search the individual's information and background. Of course, as everybody knows, we keep copies of that information, but there is always the possibility that the seal that we have been given as elected representatives could be misused by individuals pushing to have a signature or with incorrect credentials. It's just a cautionary note to my fellow colleagues that as notaries public and as commissioners for oaths we have to be especially careful in our due diligence that we don't unwittingly participate in a fraudulent exercise.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Yes, very briefly, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly not an expert when it comes to real estate, unlike a number of colleagues in this House, but just a couple of quick questions that I have in regard to Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007. I think the fact has already been discussed that an awful lot of this legislation is going to be in regulations as opposed to in the actual legislation. My concerns over that are well known and I think always worth reiterating.

I'm wondering, though, if the mover of the bill might be able to inform us when he responds in the committee stage as to just exactly what entities were consulted in the drafting of this bill. I'm particularly wondering whether or not the Alberta Association of the Appraisal Institute of Canada was consulted, whether or not the Alberta Assessors' Association and the Canadian National Association of Real Estate Appraisers were consulted in the drafting of the bill. If, in fact, they were consulted, what sort of input did they have into the drafting of the bill?

When we get into committee, I'll have some questions about section 8. In particular, it discusses who shall and shall not collect a commission or remuneration for services. I'm wondering with particular reference to www.comfree.com and some of the other web-based sales tools that are out there now for individuals whether or not that section might directly impact the activities of some of those companies and how. That would be some guidance that I would be looking for from the mover of the bill when he comes back into the House at the committee stage.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called. Does the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon wish to close debate?

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure. I want to thank the hon. members who participated in the debate for their input on this bill. Suffice to say that as someone who practised in this industry for 12 and a half years, I'm very pleased to see that we're bringing these changes forward.

For the most part, Mr. Speaker, this industry is made up of some exceptionally professional and credible people, but unfortunately, particularly in this hot economy that we have today, there are unscrupulous people that will worm their way into the industry, so to speak. I would suggest to you that these amendments that are proposed here will go a long way to bringing back credibility to the marketplace and to protecting our consumers.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill 24.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Bill 23 Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance it's my pleasure to stand today and move second reading of Bill 23, Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act.

Before I get into the details of the legislation, I would like to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to provide some background information on how this legislation was developed. The Uniform Law Conference of Canada has recommended that all provinces adopt policies to protect a one-stop process for people to recover their unclaimed property and to provide governments with the ability to administer that property until it is reclaimed. At the same time various Alberta government departments suggested that processes be developed to resolve long-standing issues related to vested property from dissolved corporations.

Recognizing the cross-ministry implications, representatives from a number of Alberta government ministries prepared a discussion paper, that was released for public consultation in September of 2005. The resulting Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act was introduced as Bill 41 during the 2006 spring sitting. Although the bill passed first reading, it was allowed to die on the Order Paper to give Albertans another opportunity to provide input on this groundbreaking bill. Both the discussion paper and Bill 41 were well received, with only minor changes to the processes and legislation resulting.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 23 is being proposed to achieve two main goals. The first goal is to establish a primary repository and claim system for unclaimed or abandoned property of Albertans. To accomplish that, Bill 23 would require holders to pay or to deliver assets that remain unclaimed after the end of a specified holding period together with information on apparent owners to a central repository. Owners will be able to search a single registry to determine if the Crown holds assets that belong to them or that they are entitled to. A single-stop repository makes the process of locating unclaimed assets easier for all owners. To accomplish the second goal of establishing a clear process to manage and resolve issues related to property that vests in the Crown after a corporation's dissolution or in other circumstances, Bill 23 proposes several measures.

First, Bill 23 proposes a five-year period during which a corporation can be revived. Experience has shown that very few corporations are revived after five years. Once the period has passed, property vests permanently in the Alberta Crown. It is anticipated that vested property would include land. The legislation proposes a process that will enable the Crown to take title to the land and remove various encumbrances with sufficient warning. At the same time creditors would retain the right to enforce any security interest they may have in both unclaimed and vested property. Claims for the return of such unclaimed and vested property will be allowed for 10 years from the date the property is transferred to the Crown.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this legislation will establish clear rights, obligations, and procedures for facilitating the return of unclaimed property to its owners when managing vested property. I urge all members of the Legislature to give their support to Bill 23.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We support the intention of Bill 23, Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act, 2007, but we feel that it needs to be strengthened. As a result, when we come to Committee of the Whole, we'll be introducing amendments to further strengthen this bill.

Just to provide a little bit of background on how we got to today on Bill 23. In 2005 the government released a discussion paper about Bill 23. It wanted to hear from Albertans about how to deal with vested property from dissolved corporations; that is to say, property that comes into the possession of the Crown after the corporation is dissolved and unclaimed personal property. According to a Finance spokesperson the government received rather dismal interest from the public, but credit to the government for having pursued this concern.

Last spring the government tabled this piece of legislation as Bill 41, but it died on the Order Paper. The government claims that it wanted more input from Albertans about the bill, and praise be to the government for seeking input. That's what Albertans are all about: providing that input, which, hopefully, the government then acts upon. Since that time the government has received no substantial submissions from stakeholders according to the spokesperson. The department, however, has not released the comments.

Bill 23 primarily gives the government rules to deal with property from dissolved corporations and unclaimed personal property.

When a corporation dissolves in Alberta “any property still owned by a corporation at the date of its dissolution vests in the Crown.” That comes from the 2005 paper. But in the absence of clearer guidelines or policy, the provincial government claims that it has limited authority to resolve these issues. Decisions are therefore made on an ad hoc basis. Some land issues have been difficult and time consuming to resolve. The department is not aware of any other province with legislation in this area, so Alberta would be a leader.

According to the 2005 discussion paper the second issue relates to unclaimed property of individuals. Four provinces – B.C., Quebec, Prince Edward Island, and Ontario – have enacted legislation to provide a means of reuniting people with their unclaimed or abandoned property and to provide governments with the ability to administer that property until such time as it may be reclaimed. That government stewardship role is key.

The Uniform Law Conference of Canada has recommended that all provinces adopt a uniform unclaimed property regime based on its uniform Unclaimed Intangible Property Act. Most U.S. states have also adopted some form of unclaimed property legislation based largely on the U.S. National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws from the 1995 draft uniform unclaimed property act or its predecessors.

I will not go into details on the areas of the amendment. I’ll leave that to my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford. But I would like to raise some questions that, hopefully, the mover of the bill can provide answers for. Amongst the questions are the following. Can the minister or the member introducing the bill explain the impact of repealing the Ultimate Heir Act? Will the minister confirm that net income from unclaimed property or estates is no longer being transferred to university scholarships? This is a concern we have: into the future are universities going to be limited in the philanthropic opportunities that preceded the enactment of this bill? If that is the case, what is the justification for cutting universities out of philanthropic opportunities?

A fourth concern is: do any other provinces, states, or federal governments have legislation to resolve property issues for formerly owned corporations? I would think that in the government’s research for this bill they probably have examples that could be used to justify this Bill 23.

Another question. The 2005 discussion paper proposed, in quotes, an unclaimed property fund. I would be interested to know why this term has been dropped from Bill 23, the justifications behind the dropping.

My last question before passing along the concerns to my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford. The 2005 discussion paper noted that a number of corporations that dissolve revive within five years. How do we know that this legislation is going to actually make it easier for corporations to revive and get their property back?

Again, referring to the booming economy and companies’ attempts at diversification and re-creation, consolidation, et cetera, how do we know that, as I stated, they will actually get their property back, property that they’re entitled to?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As my colleague from Calgary-Varsity has indicated, we have for the most part support for this bill in our caucus although, certainly, questions remain, particularly around the use of the $11 million that resides in the Ultimate Heir Act and, also, how those dollars are going to be dealt with in the future. Before I address that, though, there are a couple of questions that I would like to put on the record, and hopefully either the minister or whoever is carrying the bill when we move into committee stage can respond.

The first of those would be around the consultation that was done following the bill’s demise at the end of the 2006 year. As was indicated by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, when Bill 41 died on the Order Paper, one of the reasons the government gave for allowing that to take place was that they wanted to gather more input from Albertans. We’ve been told by people in the Finance department that, in fact, there wasn’t an awful lot of input forthcoming. That would just prompt me to ask: what steps did the government take, what steps did the Finance department take to engage Albertans following this decision to let Bill 41 pass? I guess I should say “pass away” because it died. How sincere an effort was made to engage Albertans? As my colleague from Calgary-Varsity pointed out, despite the fact that the Finance department has told us that there was very little in the way of input that came back, we’ve not seen what that input was. Maybe a summary as to exactly what input was provided to the Finance ministry would be helpful in our knowing just exactly what the people of Alberta thought when they did respond to this particular bill.

Now, it was also discussed that the Uniform Law Conference of Canada has made recommendations. In large part this bill arises out of the recommendations that they made as well as the 2005 discussion paper. Apparently, other provinces do not have legislation currently in place, or at least as of the time of this research there are no other provinces that have legislation in place dealing with the dissolution of corporations, and clearly that’s something that the Uniform Law Conference of Canada was looking for. I’m wondering whether or not the Department of Finance did any research to see how other provinces deal with that, then, if they don’t have this particular legislation in place. Obviously, they’re dealing with it in some manner, so I’m curious to know if we had a careful look at what other provinces are doing and also maybe a status report as to how far along other provinces are in terms of moving towards this as well. If the idea is to have all provinces on the same page, then I’m curious to know where we’re at with that.

I will talk a lot about the money that’s currently held by the Ultimate Heir Act. Apparently, as of last spring it was $11 million. In legislation right now this money is supposed to be turned over to universities, yet in my consultation with a couple of universities they were unaware of the fact that there was money there and certainly unaware of the fact that they were to be getting money from that fund into the universities. So one of the things I’d like either the minister or the mover of the bill to respond to is: just exactly when is the last time that any money from that fund was transferred to a university? As I say, I found it interesting that they didn’t even seem to be aware of this. I understand that in the big picture $11 million across, you know, four or five universities might not be an awful lot of money. Nevertheless, it is money that, according to the current legislation, is due to them, and that doesn’t appear to be happening, so I would be wondering why.

Now, my colleague from Calgary-Varsity also alluded to the fact that we might well have an amendment coming. In fact, that is something that I am contemplating.

I’m curious: if the legislation as it reads now is designed to turn this money over to universities, why do we see a need to change that other than for the fact that it appears not to have been happening? I think we all understand the importance of postsecondary education. The general revenue fund in this province seems to be relatively healthy and probably doesn’t need another $11 million, so I’m curious to know why the need to dispense with that part of the legislation. If the legislation needs updating, fair enough. We're willing to go along with that. But why was there a need seen to take away another stream of revenue for the universities and transfer that back into general revenue? Certainly, that's an explanation that I would be looking for from the department.

A couple of questions further to where my colleague from Calgary-Varsity was going. The Minister of Environment, when he moved second reading of this bill, talked about the five-year timeline which corporations would have to revive themselves. I'm wondering if there might not be some unusual circumstances there that should be contemplated by the Finance department. As an example, perhaps, somebody who's serving in the military and is out of the country on military service for a period of time. Should we, perhaps, consider extending the five years to accommodate their service to the country? What about children under the age of 18? If it should be a minor child that owns a corporation that is dissolved, should there be some accommodation for that situation, perhaps five years from the time that that person would reach the age of majority? So just a couple of questions about that sort of thing.

I'm also wondering, I suppose, if a corporation that was dissolved were to be involved in litigation – perhaps somebody's suing them for money, and the corporation is now dissolved – what impact would that have with the new legislation? What role would the department play in that if there's a lawsuit involved? Then, indeed, I guess the question would follow: does the creditor need to notify the Crown of the lawsuit? Perhaps they already do in some legislation somewhere. I'm not sure. Then, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be obvious to ask as well: if the lawsuit were to take longer than five years to resolve, does it therefore follow that the five-year period during which a corporation could revive itself would also have to be extended because there may be litigation under way?

Sort of in terms of big-picture questions, I'm wondering if the minister or the mover can provide us with information as to how closely they've followed the recommendations from the Uniform Law Conference of Canada in the drafting of this bill. Is it an accurate reflection of the recommendations that came from the Uniform Law Conference, or are there deviations from their recommendations, and if so, what would those deviations be?

I'm curious to know what the costs of the administration fees are going to be under the new legislation. I've already asked the question about how other provinces resolve vested property from dissolved corporations. If they don't currently have this legislation in place, what are they doing to deal with that situation?

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will look forward to further debate in second reading and particularly look forward to some responses from the ministry when it comes time to deal with this in Committee of the Whole. As I say, there may well be an amendment from the Official Opposition caucus in regard to holding that money for universities as opposed to dumping it into general revenue.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

If not, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the debate.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the chance to just make a couple of comments on Bill 23, Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act. We as a New Democrat caucus don't have a problem with this bill. It seems to be talking about unclaimed private property, vested properties, and dealing with some movement on behalf of the federal government, I guess.

For unclaimed private properties the bill outlines the rights and responsibilities of the holder of the land. Currently regulations set out, when land is unclaimed, the holder having the responsibility to contact the owner and inform the ministry of unclaimed land. This bill, in our minds, outlines the transfer of vested properties to the ministry.

If corporations and co-operatives and societies are involved, the bill also ensures that the mineral rights in properties will be vested and put to the Mines and Minerals Act. Although there have been provisions for land titles to be transferred to societies or corporations that have been resurrected within a reasonable time frame, there's no mention if mineral rights will ever be transferred over, too. We certainly don't have a problem with that and find it interesting that the members from Calgary-Varsity and Edmonton-Rutherford are talking about some amendments. I would look forward to seeing what those happen to be.

Otherwise, this certainly doesn't seem to be a bill that is in any way onerous or difficult for the New Democrat caucus to support. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing none, the question has been called. Does the hon. Deputy Government House Leader wish to close?

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 35

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to once again speak to Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007. I appreciate the comments made at second reading by several hon. members, and I would like to take this opportunity, hopefully, to address some of the comments and questions that were raised regarding Bill 35 during second reading.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford asked why all Alberta tax credits and thresholds weren't indexed. Alberta indexes nearly all tax credits with the exception of the threshold amounts for political contributions and the charitable donation amounts. I think it's important to note that indexing the charitable donations threshold would in fact be worse for Albertans as it would raise the threshold at which the higher rate kicks in.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview brought up a concern regarding the wording on credits for mental and physical impairments and whether the new wording would in fact cut off funds from those receiving them now. Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is clearly no. In fact, changing the wording adds clarity and allows more leeway in allowing people in need to benefit from this credit.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there were questions raised regarding specific threshold amounts: namely, for charitable donations as well as the maximum amount for medical claims. The charitable donation amount is determined by the federal government under the tax collection agreement. I'd like to point out that the $200 threshold does not apply to each donation separately but to total donations. The first $200 in total donations claimed in a year receives the lower 10 per cent tax credit rate while annual amounts over the threshold receive the higher 21 per cent credit. As to the medical expense claim amount, the federal government increased the maximum allowable medical expense claim for dependants other than spouses and children from $5,000 to $10,000, and we've paralleled this increase.

As I mentioned before, Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, supports Alberta's well-known tax advantage, brings Alberta's personal income tax in line with initiatives announced in Budget 2007, parallels amendments made at the federal level, and makes the act consistent with current policy.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. members for their questions and comments, and I hope that I have provided sufficient clarification.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In second reading we discussed thoroughly Bill 35, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, and I would like to thank the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for providing answers to questions that we raised at that time. One of the areas that isn't absolutely clear to me and, hopefully, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon can clarify is the exemptions for a person who is providing care for a family member, whether that's a person who as a result of age is infirm or there may be a disability associated with it, and the ability to have the expenses associated with providing that care exempted.

I know that for a considerable amount of time my father was providing care for my mother. It took a tremendous amount of his personal time and the family's time to provide the support for my mother in the house, and expenses were associated with that care provision. In this case it was my mother, but whether it's a child, an infirm individual, or somebody with a disability, hopefully, the process of claiming the exemptions will be further clarified in Bill 35, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, as at this point there are so many individuals who have pulled themselves involuntarily out of the workforce to provide care, whether it be for children or, as I say, an individual who is no longer, for a variety of physical or mental reasons, able to cope on their own.

We pride ourselves in Alberta on giving a hand up rather than a handout, and the work of these caregivers, these care providers – it's absolutely essential that it be recognized. We're fortunate in Alberta that we have so many voluntary organizations, such as Meals on Wheels, that provide, literally, a lifeline to individuals who are forced to be at home. Of course, Meals on Wheels extends that lifeline to individuals at drop-in centres in the way of providing bagged lunch. It also through the duck soup program provides much-needed support for schoolchildren, and of course the program has a large waiting list.

I'm hoping that in Bill 35, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, every possible legitimate exemption can be provided to individuals who either voluntarily or involuntarily have forced themselves out of a working circumstance to care for a loved one in need, and I would very much appreciate clarification that these exemptions have been extended and the role of the caregiver and financial support for them is recognized in Bill 35, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to have this opportunity at committee to get some questions on the record regarding Bill 35. I've certainly listened to the discussion, and I can see where there are some very, very good things being attempted here. I'm interested to know from the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon if in the drafting of this legislation there was any consideration given to the fact that a number of years ago, six years ago, as I recall, we had before this Assembly – and it was passed – a bill to help tradespeople out across the province with the purchase of their tools. Since that bill was passed by the Legislative Assembly, it was never ever put into law. So it was a tax cut that was promised by this Progressive Conservative government, but there was no delivery on that tax cut. Now, in all fairness to this government, it was a private member's bill that was passed, not a government bill, but the majority of members on all sides of the House voted for this bill, and it was never made into law.

When I first saw this bill during committee, I thought we could amend this and correct that wrong and give those deserving people a tax cut. Certainly, we all know that tradespeople, many of whom purchase their own tools to take with them on various jobs, have a great deal of difficulty financing those purchases. I would only have to look at auto mechanics as an example. Some of these individuals have to have $50,000 and $60,000 worth of tools with them whenever they go to their work site.

So I looked at this, and I couldn't find any place in the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, this current bill, where it could be amended to incorporate into this bill, Bill 35, what was initially voted on in this Assembly. I'm recalling, Mr. Chairman, that this was five if not six years ago, and it was a commitment made by this Legislative Assembly which was never ever delivered to the tradespeople of this province.

If the hon. member could answer my questions, I would be very grateful at this time. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. In referring to the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, while I'm sympathetic to the questions he raises, I regret to say that we don't have any provisions in this bill for the situations that he has dealt with. The changes that are proposed do not reflect what he has asked about. Maybe that is something that can be brought before this House at another time, but there are no changes that would deal with the points that he raised.

Again the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raises the questions of tools. I would agree that particularly in this economy, where tools are a big part of the trades and with the importance of trades in this economy, that might be a very wise provision to bring forward in the future. I think he referenced some changes in a private member's bill that were never proclaimed. They're also not referenced in this bill at this time.

I will take those points under advisement and hope, as the hon. member does, that we may see some of those reflected in future amendments to the Personal Income Tax Act, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do have a couple of comments regarding the opening statement by the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, when he indicated that the reason that tax credits aren't indexed is because it would actually cost taxpayers money. Indeed, the example that he cited with charitable donations: that is true. He might have misunderstood my comments in second reading. I was referring to the government's own three-column document that they provided us with. The Minister of Finance has been very forthcoming and very accommodating in terms of making those available to us.

In discussing the medical expense credit – this is the one that the mover has indicated is being moved to $10,000 from $5,000 in response to a change in legislation by the federal government, and we're paralleling that. I congratulated the government and applauded their move in paralleling that, but the three-column document indicates that this $10,000 threshold will be indexed commencing in 2006, so presumably that's under way or will be retroactive once this piece of legislation passes. Then it notes under the heading Rationale that Alberta indexes most credits in the personal income tax system. So my question in second reading was: why are we indexing this particular one, the medical threshold, at $10,000, and why are we not indexing some of the other thresholds that this legislation establishes?

As an example, Mr. Chairman, we look at the new adoption credit, a nonrefundable adoption credit, again paralleling federal legislation. That adoption credit has been established at the lesser of $10,000 or the total adoption expenses, but there's no indication in here at all that that $10,000 maximum will be indexed to inflation. So my question is: why not? If we're indexing the medical expense credit, why would we not at the same time extend that benefit to adoptive families and index the $10,000 maximum credit for adoption expenses?

Another example of the same thing. I complimented the government the other day on increasing the education expense claims, Mr. Chairman. In section 16(1) they're increasing those claims from $400 for a full-time student to $600 for a full-time student; likewise, from $120 for a part-time student to $180 per month for a part-time student. So this is good work, but again the question is: if we're going to index the medical expense claim, why would we not at the same time index the education expense claims for both the full-time and part-time learners? It just seems too obvious to me, and perhaps that's why we're not doing it, because we don't always do things that are obvious.

Those are the questions that I was referring to in second reading. In the government's own document it says that we index most credits in the personal income tax system. Again, the question is: why not all? Let's give every benefit possible to Alberta taxpayers, particularly in the case of adoptive families – Mr. Chairman, we know that we need to encourage and engage more Albertans in terms of adopting children, putting them into real family home situations as opposed to foster families as soon as possible, giving them that stability – and certainly support for adult learners by way of increasing the education credit. Those are obvious to me and I'm looking forward to a response from the mover of the bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In responding to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, again I would thank the hon. member for his comments, and I would agree that he makes some very valid points of some other worthy changes that could be made. I would commit to the hon. member that since this type of an amendment is an annual amendment, reflecting the provincial budget and the federal budget typically, we have an opportunity in the next iteration of this act. Those are worthy suggestions that I would be willing to take up on behalf of him and all Albertans when we have that discussion. I hear the hon. member, but I would commit that we would take a look at that when we look at these changes for next year.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. As I previously indicated in second reading, I appreciate the fact that the Alberta provincial government is paralleling personal income tax exemptions with the federal government. That working together makes absolute sense.

Prior to the federal Conservatives forming government, the previous federal Liberals had proposed a variety of child care expense exemptions that would have enabled parents to make a choice of whether they were going to receive funding support for having their children attend daycare or preschool/after school care. This is an area that I would like to see the Alberta government pursue to a greater extent in consultation with the federal Conservatives but also given our enviable position economically. The idea of expanding the exemptions for child care would be very much appreciated.

Alberta recently stopped supporting children in care past school-age entry at age 6, and there are a number of parents who would like to see just that little bit of time before school and after school supported so that they could be full members of the workforce. So I would encourage the government and the mover of this bill, as we move further into the budgeting process, to consider having a made-in-Alberta child care expense provision in the form of tax exemptions to give parents the right of choice, whether, as I say, that may be in the home or in private, institutionalized care.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just going back to the questions that I asked in second reading. I'm curious whether or not the mover of the bill may have an answer to this. I didn't hear him address it when he spoke initially today. That is the situation around the general antiavoidance rule and the retroactivity to 1988. I asked questions in second reading as to whether or not there may have been any cases where Alberta tax was owing. I think I indicated in second reading as well that I had answered my own question in terms of the period from 1988 up until the period 2005, when it appeared as if there weren't any, but I was wondering in second reading whether or not we had any examples of Alberta tax owing since 2005. I'm just wondering whether or not the member was able to determine an answer to that question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In answer to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I was not able to ascertain any such situation.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. When it comes to care in general, people have put forward in consultation at my constituency office and when I've travelled the province the idea of assigning a value to an individual. In some cases that assigning a value is called a living wage. In other cases it's called a care allowance, as I've indicated before, whether it's a child, a disabled person, a senior under the care of a family. In drafting the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, was any thought or research done in establishing the worth of an individual and, by extension, the worth in the form of an exemption to the person, family member, that provides that care?

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My last comment, I believe, on Bill 35 in the committee stage, and that is just a disappointment that I have in regard to charitable contributions. I understand the changes here are going to make those tax credits somewhat more favourable for individuals making contributions to charities; however, in the calculations that I've done, I don't think we go as far yet as we do with the Alberta political tax credit. That's something that we've talked about in the past in the Official Opposition and raised in the Assembly, the need to give at least as much of a tax credit to individuals contributing to charities as we extend to individuals contributing to political campaigns and political parties. That's not happened here, and I am disappointed that we haven't gone that far.

It's still, unfortunately, more lucrative to donate to us as politicians and our political parties than it is to donate to charitable organizations, and that's something that I had hoped we would rectify with this bill. As the member said, we tend to have amendments to the Personal Income Tax Act every year, so I would implore the Finance minister and the department to make the necessary changes so that in the future we will be at least as generous with tax credits to individuals making donations to charitable organizations as we are to those that make donations to political parties and to politicians.

Thank you.

The Chair: Others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm trying to get up to speed on any number of things and trying to comment where I think it's valid. In this instance, as we're considering the Personal Income Tax Act considerations, Bill 35, I recognize that there are concerns that Albertans have around personal income taxes. I didn't hear specifically, directly about this during the campaign; however, I did hear concerns about the difficulties that families face, in particular with regard to, you know, health care premiums. I'm just curious as to whether or not the government in considering these things thought about the toll that health care premiums place on families and small businesses, and I'm just wondering whether or not those considerations were taken. Those are things that I did hear about recently, and I hope that those things are being given consideration.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. In answer to the hon.

Member for Calgary-Elbow, while I might suggest that health care premiums might be a great item for discussion, it was not something that was considered in this bill. I'm sure I look forward to your raising that again at some point in the future.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 35, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 35 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 36

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to once again speak to Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007. I appreciate the comments made at second reading by several hon. members, and I'd like to take some time to address some of the comments and questions that were raised regarding Bill 36.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford asked for clarification regarding the need for making small businesses wait through the taxation cycle for four years before they could realize the full benefit of the increase to the small-business threshold. The increases to the threshold as well as the reduction to the credit rate are phased in to give business time to adjust to the changes.

A question was also raised regarding the Alberta royalty tax credit, or ARTC, and how much revenue was lost by not having dealt with it earlier as well as how much the government is expecting to see as a result of the proposed changes. Mr. Chairman, the Alberta public accounts show the cost of the program in the 2007 and 2006 fiscal years as $174 million and $111 million respectively. With regard to how much the government is expecting to see, the cost of continuing to provide the credit has not been estimated for future years. However, the rate of credit provided under the program was a function of oil and gas prices and has been set at 25 per cent for both the years 2006 and 2007. Given current prices it would not be unreasonable to presume that future savings from the elimination of the program would be comparable to the program costs in '06 and '07.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford also asked about the general antiavoidance rule, GAAR; specifically, why it has taken so long for Alberta to bring its legislation in line with the federal legislation and whether there will be attempts to collect retroactively. Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Corporate Tax Act currently parallels the provisions of the federal general antiavoidance rule, or GAAR. After a federally sponsored review of the provincial GAAR legislation in May of 2006, it was determined that a strict adoption of the federal provisions would preclude the application of GAAR to Alberta taxpayers where Alberta tax payable was reduced as a consequence of an avoidance transaction entered into primarily to avoid federal tax. The proposed amendment ensures that Alberta will be able to reassess under GAAR even when the primary purpose of the transaction is not to avoid Alberta tax.

With regard to retroactive collection, Mr. Chairman, the government's intention is that Alberta should be able to reassess in the same circumstances as other jurisdictions. The proposed amendment, therefore, corrects a technical deficiency in the legislation. As the GAAR rules have been in place since 1988 and the government's intention to apply GAAR to avoidance transactions was clearly communicated to taxpayers, a retroactive effective date is appropriate.

Since 1999, Mr. Chairman, there have been examples of avoidance transactions specifically directed towards reducing provincial tax and sometimes avoiding it completely. Attempts to collect the appropriate amount of tax owing to Alberta from these taxpayers will be made to help ensure that all taxpayers – and I repeat: all taxpayers – pay their fair share.

Finally, the question was raised about moving to a single-factor approach and whether this would be an oversimplification of the rules, thus allowing for more loopholes. Mr. Chairman, taxable income is generally allocated among provinces in which the taxpayer has permanent establishments based on two factors associated with the permanent establishments: gross revenue and salaries and wages. In some cases taxpayers have gross revenue but not salaries and wages, as between their branches. In these circumstances the use of the general formula would allow only half of the income that should have been allocated to Alberta to be allocated to the province of Alberta. The proposed amendment will ensure that the appropriate amount of income is in fact allocated to Alberta. Of limited application, the amendment corrects a technical deficiency in the legislation.

As I mentioned before, Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, provides additional assistance to small businesses, helps discourage tax avoidance schemes, and eliminates the ARTC, as announced by Alberta Energy.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I thank all hon. members for their questions and comments and hope that I have provided sufficient clarification. I look forward to further debate. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, in the committee stage. I would like to thank the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for the clarification that he has provided to the questions that I asked in second reading. Indeed, they were thorough clarifications, and I do appreciate that, particularly with respect to my question about the single-factor approach and whether or not that might actually create a loophole. It would seem to me, based on the explanation we've just received, that in fact it's closing a loophole. I know that that was the intention, so I'm pleased to have that explanation.

In regard to the comment that the phasing-in is to give small business an opportunity to adjust, I can assure the hon. member that small business would relish the opportunity to have the full benefit of the higher threshold as soon as possible and not have to wait through the full four-year cycle to experience that benefit. Now, in fairness, they may not like to have the flip side of that coin, which is the increase in the dividend tax payable. I'm sure that, you know, they would like to have their cake and eat it too, but I guess I would suggest that if we would like to do something for small business, certainly a move we could have made is extend the increase of the threshold somewhat sooner. Certainly, in consultation with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that was their comment: "Why make us wait four years? Why not give that benefit to small business immediately?"

Then, Mr. Chairman, not to sound like a broken record, a question could be asked, and I guess I'm asking it. On the $500,000 threshold for small business, once we get there in 2009, I believe it is, why would we not index that to inflation as well and once again extend that benefit to small business? We all know that small business is indeed a driving factor in Alberta's economy, and I think it would probably be something that would be very much appreciated and endorsed by small business, to index that threshold to inflation as well and give them the same benefit that we just discussed giving to individuals when we were talking about Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007. That would be a question, I suppose, for the mover: whether or not the department has contemplated indexing the small-business threshold once we reach the full amount of $500,000.

Clearly, if one were to look at the economy as it is currently, with inflation running in this province somewhere between 5 and 7 per cent, over a four-year cycle we've chewed into an awful lot of that $100,000 increase in the threshold that we're giving them. I'm not sure that we're doing anything on the flip side with the dividend tax to make up for that, so that would be something that I know those small-business owners that I talk to would be interested in hearing, and I'm sure the Canadian Federation of Independent Business would also be curious to know the answer to that and perhaps the Canadian Taxpayers Federation as well.

I'll leave it up to the mover of the bill to respond to those questions and concerns. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for his comments and his thoughts. As he spoke, I looked up in the gallery, and I saw the executive director of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce nodding his approval. I would agree with the hon. member that this is an idea certainly worth studying and something that I will take up with the Minister of Finance.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We certainly support the bill. I'm more interested in the reviewing of the Alberta royalty tax credit and what that means in terms of dollars. Now, it's my understanding that the Auditor General's report in 2003-2004 recommended that this be revisited, and I guess we've gotten around to it finally now. I'm trying to get some idea about how much money we perhaps lost to the treasury during that period of time up to the present.

Mr. MacDonald: Seven point one billion dollars over 25 years.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, hon. member.

The other point that I want to make is simply: why was it that the Auditor General brought this forward in 2003-2004, and what was the problem to the time that we're bringing it up now? The reason I ask this is because there are probably a number of different recommendations that could end up costing the taxpayers a fair amount of money, Mr. Chairman. It's important that when we find loopholes – and I think the member would agree with me – we try to deal with this as quickly as possible. One can only wonder if there are some other tax avoidance issues that we don't know about or how quickly we can deal with them.

4:40

As I say, there was no point in having this particular loophole. Certainly, we should have known that in 2003-2004. I guess we should have known it before then. Even if the figures were from 2003-2004, can the member tell us exactly how much money that was and how much it might mean on a yearly basis now? There are various figures from the press releases that seem to contradict it, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for his comments. With regard to potential lost revenue, I mean, at this point, hon. member, we can only speculate because, as you know, it depends on whether a certain policy was implemented or not and what that would have meant in terms of collections.

In terms of the delay, well, I can't speak for previous members of this Assembly. You've been here some time before me and at different times. I would only say that at this point we have realized that this is something that's timely. To agree with you, hon. member, it's overdue. We're moving forward, and I'm glad that we're here. I don't have any exact numbers for you in terms of what it could have meant, but the fact is that we have realized now that it's time to do this, time to move forward, and I'm glad that we're doing it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I, too, have questions at this time regarding Bill 36. Certainly, to the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, my questions are around the tax revenue and the corporate income tax revenue that's anticipated for 2007-08. I'll just use that as an example. It's over $3 billion: $3.1 billion. The previous fiscal year I believe it was $2.9 billion. When this legislation was drafted, what considerations were made to the energy trust sector? Certainly, I'm going through this, and I'm very curious in light of the fact that in October of 2006 there was a fundamental change in how energy trusts were to be administered or not to be administered. I would like to know the implications for the energy trusts. What are the implications for them regarding the amendments here that we are discussing with Bill 36? If I could have a breakdown, please – if he has one, I would appreciate it – of what percentage of the corporate income tax in Alberta is being paid by the energy income trust sector, not only in 2007-08 but also what it was in the year 2006-07. I would be grateful if the hon. member could provide that information.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, again, I thank you for your comments. You're looking for some specific numbers that, unfortunately, I don't have at my fingertips, hon. member. I recognize your point in terms of the changes that were recently made that impacted the energy trust sector. The only commitment that I can make to you is that these changes that are being proposed will be consistent across the board, and, yes, they probably will have a little different impact on the energy trust sector because of, I guess, the unique nature of that sector of our economy. But these amendments are intended to be applied across the board, and that's the best answer that I could give you, hon. member.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd like to thank the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for the detailed answers to questions, which honours the legitimate concerns raised by opposition members representing their constituents' concerns over Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007. That recognition and the co-operation that has been demonstrated through second reading and now into Committee of the Whole are very much appreciated.

I also appreciate the member's explanation about the need for a phase-in period for this legislation to be enacted. There has been a great deal of discussion associated with the ramifications of following through on a federal government promise to first reduce the GST a single per cent to 6 per cent and then with the follow-up promise to reduce it a further per cent so that it is now 5 per cent. What has happened for a number of small-business owners is the question of whether the time for implementation – such as recalibrating cash registers, new tax filing programs, following the rules, the exemptions, and so on – was more of a headache than a financial improvement. This was more the case with the small individuals who primarily did their own bookkeeping within their family circumstance. But the debate as to where this revenue best fits is always going to be coming up for discussion.

On a recent Cross Country Checkup this question of the recalibration was brought forward. Some people would argue that the GST provided the federal government with a stable, relatively predictable source of funding that they could then apply to public programs that benefited the nation. Of course, the counterargument was: what does the government know about the needs of individuals? The money is best left in their pockets for them to add to the economy, to direct as they see fit. So that discussion of the appropriate ways of reducing taxes remains a topic of hot debate and concern as to what the role of a government is. We all know about what happened in the States with the Boston Tea Party, when people felt that there was taxation without representation.

Fortunately, with Bill 36 the intent is to give small-business owners a break, and that's a break that's also recognized by the federal government in paralleling this legislation. For a brief opportunity in historical time we have the alignment of two Conservative governments, a federal government in Ottawa and a government that has occupied the majority in this Legislature for the past 36 years. So my challenge is, given this very brief alignment of the planets, to push the federal government with the exemptions that the province is providing; in other words, instead of just aligning ourselves with already existing federal corporate tax legislation, be prepared to go further and institute a direction that will support all Albertans while still recognizing that revenue through taxation, whether it's property tax that's collected in the name of education, which should show up on education budgets, particularly when we have an inflation rate approaching 6.4 per cent and the money provided to the education is just barely over 3 per cent – likewise, let us be bold, and the money that is collected currently and, we would suggest, unfairly for health premiums be actually put towards health.

What I am challenging the provincial government to do is go beyond the status quo, strike out in a bold direction that recognizes that tax that is collected in the name of education and health care actually goes to those areas. Show to the federal government that Alberta is not only a tax-friendly province but cares for the well-being of the public programs for its constituents. We have an opportunity in Alberta, by collecting the proper amount of taxes, whether they be in the form of royalties, whether they be in the form of property taxes, to make the quality of life in Alberta something that goes beyond just per capita averages and actually filters down to rents, to food, to support of Alberta's most vulnerable.

I challenge the government to go beyond Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, and take a serious look at taxes that have been collected in the name of property, that have been collected in the name of health but, unfortunately, bear no resemblance to either area.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity for his comments, and I also thank him for his compliments at the beginning of his words. He touched on a number of things that I think were more policy than specifics to the piece of legislation, and I would suggest that what is consistent in this legislation is that Alberta continues to make sure that we collect a fair and reasonable tax burden while maintaining a competitive advantage, the most competitive tax regime across this country.

Furthermore, I'm quite pleased to hear the hon. member encourage us to work with our federal counterparts to reduce what has been traditionally a very high federal tax burden under previous Liberal governments. I'm pleased to hear that he's supporting what I believe is the type of direction that we've seen in Alberta for many years, that we also want to continue to see at the federal level.

The member also mentioned, Mr. Chairman, that he would like to see health care premiums going towards health. I'd like to remind the hon. member that the health care premiums that we collect plus some $10 billion plus go towards the provision of one of the best health care systems in this country.

Hon. member, I think we're on the same page, and I thank you for those comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to come back, looking at some of the news releases to follow up on my previous questions. A news release from September 21 from the minister at the time said that "the elimination of the ARTC based on 2005-06 figures would increase revenues . . . to the province by a further $111 million." There's another one on April 6 that says $113 million, but they're in the ballpark. So I take it that that's roughly the amount of money that we're looking at on a per yearly basis. I don't know how far this goes back, to be honest, you know, when ARTC was irrelevant or invalid, but certainly the Auditor General said in 2003 – I know it's not this member's fault, but I'm making a point here so that we move on these things faster. That's roughly, if I'm correct – probably it wouldn't be $111 million; it might be slightly less – around $300 million that could have been in the Alberta treasury, and that's a significant amount of cash.

I think we have to have some mechanism within the Department of Energy or others to see that these things – and how far back before the Auditor General? Who knows? I'm not going to ask the minister that. The point I'm making is that that's a significant amount of cash. I'm glad we're dealing with it now. I hope the message to the Department of Energy and any others that we're missing on these sorts of things is that this is expensive. That $300 million can do a lot of different things for the province is the point that I would make.

The member alluded to the retroactive part of that, but that's not really much of a retroactivity. It just goes back to January 1 of this year, if I'm correct, and it's still in the same tax year. Am I correct about that? The release that I saw on September 21 – correct me if I'm wrong – says: "The decision follows a review and consultation with industry and stakeholders. It requires a legislative change that will be retroactive to the beginning of 2007." So we're really just looking at this year for the retroactivity. Am I correct about that? If not, then maybe the press release is wrong, and there have been changes. So I'd just like clarification on that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I don't believe that we're limited to the beginning of the year. The point I do want to make, though, is clearly that the retroactivity that's being proposed here is intended to be consistent with the rest of the country. So whatever is typical across the country in terms of retroactivity, that is exactly what we will be reflecting in the changes as proposed by this bill. We will catch up, in effect, with the rest of the country.

Thank you.

Mr. Martin: I'd like some clarification before third reading on that because this was a release from the Department of Energy at the time. I think that's an important consideration because it requires a legislative change – maybe I'm missing something in here – that will be retroactive to the beginning of 2007. So maybe there's been a change. You don't have to answer now. Maybe I have time to take a look at it before third reading.

Thanks.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 36, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 36 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 24 Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate November 8: Mr. Rogers]

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just looking forward to further exploring the options in this bill in committee, looking forward to further discussion in committee.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise again and speak to Bill 24, Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007, at Committee of the Whole stage. In December 2005 a committee made up of government, lenders, law enforcement, and real estate industry put forward eight recommendations to government regarding mortgage fraud. Number one, the government of Alberta participate in a mortgage fraud prevention committee to encourage communication, develop best practices, and improve training for workers in the mortgage and real estate industry. Number two, declare mortgage fraud a government priority and establish specialized mortgage fraud investigation and prosecution units. Number three, quantify the financial impact of mortgage fraud in Alberta. Four, amend the Real Estate Act to ensure that the Real Estate Council of Alberta has the necessary investigative powers and the ability to share personal information about mortgage fraud perpetrators. Number five, review privacy legislation and suggest amendments to facilitate sharing of personal information related to mortgage fraud between law enforcement and investigating agencies. Six, raise public awareness of the criminal nature of mortgage fraud. Seven, amend Alberta's Law of Property Act to allow lenders to sue on the covenant except on farmland and owner-occupied residential property. Number eight, review whether the land titles office should send notices to the lenders, property owners when there is a suspected incident of mortgage fraud or fraudulent transfer of title.

Bills 12 and 13 in 2006 also made some steps to address mortgage fraud concerns. My question is why we failed to implement all those recommendations. If not all eight of those recommendations, how many recommendations have been implemented so far? Why do we keep on introducing bills again and again and again? This time I request that the members consider this very seriously, make sure that when we make an amendment on this bill, it should be effective for all the people in Alberta.

I have a few other questions to ask the hon. member who sponsored this bill. Does this government have figures on the impact and size of mortgage fraud in Alberta? How many mortgage brokers are blacklisted? How much money is involved? What else needs to be done to combat mortgage fraud based on the 2005 committee recommendations, those eight points I mentioned?

So far bills 12 and 13 in 2006 and now Bill 24. What else? What else do we need? Who has the government consulted, like stakeholders, and on this bill what were their concerns? What were they asking for? Were their concerns adequately addressed? I know some stakeholders. I'm sure the hon. member knows about the Real Estate Council of Alberta, the Alberta Real Estate Association, and consumers' groups. What do those who suffer at the hands of mortgage fraud, the most important groups, think about this bill?

If we really, really want to strengthen this industry, I think we should protect the consumers first. Create consumer confidence and trust, trust not only in those in the real estate practice who are licensed realtors but those people who don't have a license, those people who are working in this industry. It's very important – and the hon. member knows about this – especially the commercial real estate. I don't know whether they are immersed in this industry or not. Commercial real estate is involved on a big scale, tons of money. Some, not all, of the real estate people are making deals under the table. How can we enforce that? If we don't follow the recommendations of the RECA in the last, say, five, seven years, after passing this bill, how can we guarantee that we could be able to help those people who are suffering because of this bad practice in this industry?

Public awareness, you know, is very important just to create consumer confidence and trust in this industry. We must promote the integrity of this industry. We should especially have more improvement on the educational side. We should especially educate the professionals working in this industry.

We must have an effective investigation system. Not only an investigation system, but we must have a detective system, how we can detect what's going on in this industry. So far my personal experience is that when we talk to the RECA or any other associations in this field, they always talk about ethics, but they say: we don't have the powers. If they don't have the powers, why do we keep on making laws, one after another? We must do something which has an effect on the industry, which gives some more powers to RECA or any others.

Even the committee I discussed that was made in 2005 that some government people were involved in, I'm definitely sure Official Opposition parties were not involved in that. You guys can't at least criticize the Official Opposition on this matter. I would suggest that, I mean, if this government really thinks they are accountable, they are transparent – and now recently the Premier has announced that some members from the opposition are involved in some other committees – how come Official Opposition parties are not involved in decision-making in this industry? They should know. The public should know. In all industries the government, if they are accountable, should talk openly. I think this could be the best thing for Albertans.

If we could have a detective system to detect realtors, to detect the appraisers, to detect the lenders, especially the mortgage, that I mentioned, the assumable mortgage. This is very important in dealing with fraud of any kind. I am not only talking about real estate. If we don't have a proper investigation system, if we don't have the interrogation or detective system, we cannot succeed.

So please make a note and if possible try to – when we say that the committee is made of the government, other parties should be involved, and they should know what is going on in this particular industry because it's not a small industry. It's a big industry. You know, representation from all parties is very, very important.

One more thing that I want to say: after the investigation or interrogation, whether it's the realtors or the brokers or the lenders, once they are caught, they must be severely punished. They must be – I repeat – must be severely punished. If the penalty is not enough, and if needed, if the lender or any other professional keeps on doing the blunder again and again, I'm sorry to say that that person, he or she, should be in jail. They should be in jail.

Now I move to sections 3(a)(ii) and 3(b)(i), (ii), and (iii). All add in “subject to the regulations,” which invests more power in the hands of the cabinet and orders in council. Why? Why can't these sections be solidified in the legislation? Why? This is something that happens too often with this government: moving issues out of legislation and into regulations. I'm again talking about the regulations.

Next, section 4(a)(i) cuts sections that allow various national, provincial, and local organizations to pick between them and two members of the Real Estate Council of Alberta. Why are these institutions being cut out of the council selection process? What did they have to say about this?

Section 5(c), again shifting to the regulation powers, is no longer specifically prescribing the limit of a penalty. Why? How much is the minister intending the penalty to be?

Section 7. Why is the bill getting rid of this ban on industry members soliciting, accepting, or receiving money from their clients except in the usual course of business? Why was the clause problematic?

Section 9. This section includes much more than it previously did. It has gone from land sales only to all business transactions. Why?

Section 11(a)(i). More use of regulation rather than an explicit time period. Why don't you tell us here in this Legislature about the regulation in detail? I mentioned it before. It's very important. Instead, we recommend something and then go back to the RECA. We are the elected body. I mean, all the regulations that we are going to recommend to the RECA we should discuss here in this Assembly because it's very important. If the government really believes in transparency, if the government really believes in accountability, we should discuss everything here.

Now I move to section 15(4)(b). This requires people being questioned in an investigation to answer even if that answer is self-incriminating. It does, however, prevent it from being used against them in any civil proceedings or in prosecution under any acts. This language can be found in a few other bills in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very serious thing that we have been through many times before, as I mentioned: in Bill 12, Bill 13, and now Bill 24. Why are we wasting time? I mean, the bill is in front of us today, and before we pass this bill, I want to make sure that this act is able to strengthen an entity. You name anything.

Also, I'm suggesting the participation of the opposition members whenever there is a discussion about amendment of the real estate laws. It's very important because we are directly involved with the public. Even politics start with the public and finish with the public. Same thing, real estate people or the lenders and the appraisers. They are dealing with people. When we are dealing with people, we should be very cautious. We should be careful because, you know, a huge amount of money is involved.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for his comments. Certainly, with his background he's got a lot of knowledge in this industry. I think his comment are very relevant to this bill. I'm going to apologize to the member ahead of time. I tried my best to take some notes, hon. member, as you spoke. I don't know if I'm going to capture everything that you raised, but I think I can speak in general to the bill, as you know, from my knowledge of the industry as well.

Let me say right off the bat that I think it's a philosophical discussion as to whether regulations – because regulations are done outside this Chamber, you suggest that we probably should get into more detail in the bill. Well, the complexity of this I think makes that unrealistic. But that's a philosophical discussion for another day. I just wanted to acknowledge that.

Going back to the discussion in second reading, I believe that it was probably yourself that mentioned the need to have a stronger enforcement mechanism to keep out unscrupulous members of the industry, more power to go after bad appraisers. I think this change will not only get the bad appraisers; it's going to get the bad mortgage brokers, the property managers. As you know, all of these industry members are part of RECA.

Later on in your comments, hon. member, you talked about wanting the opposition members or government members to be more involved. The reality is that our involvement as legislators, be it as opposition or government, is right here. This is our opportunity to make sure that to the best of our ability the bill captures what we need to provide that confidence to the consumer. At the end of the day this is about the consumer.

In one of your questions you asked about the impact, the size of the fraud. How many dollars? How many brokers? Hon. member, I've got to tell you that one is too much. One is too much. In my time in the business, in 12 and a half years – I suspect you've got as many or more years in the business – I've seen many, and I can tell you that each one was traumatic for the people involved. They were caught up by very unscrupulous people, very selfish people that masquerade as professional industry members, but, frankly, they're crooks. I can't think of another word to use for them. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that's not unparliamentary language because that's how I feel about these people. I believe that one person taken advantage of is too much.

Anything that we do through this bill to strengthen the power of RECA – let me remind the members present that RECA, the Real Estate Council of Alberta, is a self-regulating body that was created under the legislation in 1996. It's made up of industry members, people from the different segments of the industry. Under the legislation they have the ability to regulate the members: who can become a member, what courses they have to take. You're well aware of the 18 credits that people have to take to maintain their licences. One of the key courses in that is one that has to do with conflict of interest and integrity.

You also mentioned, hon. member, about the ability to regulate other people that are web based or – I hate to label a particular company – the commissions that operate outside of the real estate market. As you know, hon. member, the definition of trading in real estate under these provisions specifically relates to trading in real estate. I would say to you that maybe that's something that should be brought before this Legislature. There are individuals that are operating in this business that, because they don't technically trade in real estate, are able to operate outside of this legislation. That's where you find some of these web-based companies.

Frankly, I don't like them any more than you do, but I think we need to find another mechanism where we can regulate these individuals who are operating on the periphery of this industry, because that's what they're doing. They're not technically trading in real estate, so they don't fall under the provisions of this act. I think the potential is just as good for consumers to be harmed by those individuals as it is by people who operate under the umbrella of the profession.

So I would say to people like yourself, hon. member, and me, who have knowledge of this industry, and others – I'm sure all hon. members in here want to protect the consumer – that we would seek to bring something before this House, or if it's something that has to be done federally, that we would work with our federal counterparts to make sure that these provisions are brought forward that will ultimately provide that protection that we want for the consumer.

One of the questions that was asked by yourself, hon. member, and others is: who was consulted? I want to tell you that we have a stakeholder list of some almost 50 organizations in the real estate industry that were consulted. You asked about appraisers, for example. The Appraisal Institute of Canada, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the law society of Canada, the Real Estate Institute of Canada, the National Home Warranty Program, the Calgary Apartment Association, the Red Deer Landlord and Tenants Board, the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, the Alberta Business Brokers Association, building owners and managers, the people that manage the apartment buildings: we consulted some approximately 50 organizations involved in the trading of real estate, hon. member. I can assure you that to the best of our ability we left no stone unturned in really trying to get the input of everyone involved in this industry.

Is this piece of legislation perfect? Probably not. But I can tell you it goes a long way to getting that protection that we want for the consumer, strengthening the ability of RECA to do investigations, requiring criminal background checks to make sure that crooks stay out of this industry, allowing RECA to take copies of documents when they come in to do an investigation, reducing the amount of time and notification that have to be given so that, again, these crooks don't hide the evidence. I think this piece of legislation, hon. member, goes a very long way to providing that protection for the consumer that we all desire. I'm sure that at some point, when we find the need, maybe we can improve it again. But I think this goes a long way, and I would encourage you and all hon. members to support this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I've been listening with interest to the discussion in committee this afternoon on Bill 24. I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon regarding this bill. I agree with the principle of the legislation. Certainly, whenever we think of any measure that works to combat mortgage fraud more effectively, I think it's worthy of merit.

We are discussing this bill at the same time as we have a subprime mortgage crisis in our neighbour to the south. In certain geographical areas of America, whether it's California, Arizona, parts of Florida, there is significant angst among consumers. When we look at what our neighbours are going through, we cannot afford not to have a very strong oversight measure and also the will to enforce that measure. Certainly, both hon. members indicated when they were speaking that they were quite willing and anxious to get tough if necessary on any violations. I couldn't agree with that more. One only has to look at the composition of this Assembly, Mr. Chairman. Not this term but in the last term, certainly, there was a former member for whatever reason – the reasons are still mysterious – who had to resign their seat here. We can never take any of these incidences too lightly.

I have, as do so many Albertans, a lot of reservations about allowing the minister or the minister at the time to make regulations without any debate in this Legislative Assembly. Now, as I understand this, we are giving the minister the power to change how the law is applied when it is necessary through orders in council. I'll use two examples, Mr. Chairman, to raise a caution about this being subject to regulations, which would allow more power, again, in the hands of cabinet and the orders in council.

Let's go back 11 years, back to 1996, when Syncrude and Suncor were given the right, the one-time right, to change from paying royalties to this province on synthetic crude oil production to a bitumen royalty, which is significantly less. That issue was never discussed before this Assembly. Surely, it was discussed at the cabinet table. I will never be allowed to see those discussions or read about those discussions, of course. But that's an example of one matter that was done before cabinet, behind closed doors, which now we are paying a significant price for. Certainly, the Hunter report talks that this could be in the hundreds of millions of dollars a year in concessions to those two oil sands producers.

That was done at the cabinet, behind closed doors, and that was a regulation that was just conveniently filed in the Leg. Library. Eleven years later it's a major problem for this government. I understand there are negotiations going on now on how to level the playing field. So much of the royalty suggestion – I shouldn't call it the suggestion – the royalty compromise that was made by this government depends upon the negotiations with Syncrude and Suncor over that regulation. Suncor, for instance, was to receive $150 million in historical costs over that period of time, whatever that means.

An Hon. Member: Relevance?

Mr. MacDonald: I can hear an hon. member talking about relevance, but I would remind the hon. members – all members, Mr. Chairman – that we are in committee, and that is one of two examples that I want to bring up as to why we should be very leery about giving another statute the authority to allow this government to continue to rule by regulation and not by being open and transparent and having full debates in this Legislative Assembly.

Now, that was one example. The second example – and the Minister of Energy will be really excited to hear about this, Mr. Chairman – is an example of the same sort of rule by regulation that is being proposed in this Bill 46, which we haven't had a chance to debate yet. Hopefully, we'll get to that, if not this week, next week. Not only is this Bill 24 going to be subject to regulations, but look at what we're doing with Bill 46. We're having a regulation-overriding statute, which is totally undemocratic.

So I have a lot of questions – a lot of questions – about why we would be providing cabinet with yet another opportunity to rule by regulation. That's one reason why I'm very cautious about supporting this bill.

5:30

Of course, the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon talked about the Real Estate Council of Alberta and the fact that this is a council that is self-regulating. Now, again, whenever we look at some of the chaos and the confusion that consumers are facing in America and some of the financial losses that are being posted on a weekly basis by major banks, by mortgage companies, by brokers over that subprime issue, I'm not so certain that self-regulation is the way to go.

Now, it's interesting. Our research indicates, Mr. Chairman, that Alberta is one of the only jurisdictions in North America with full self-regulation of the real estate industry, fully funded by industry members. In most other provinces and the states responsibility is either shared with government through coregulation or entirely the government's concern. The hon. member would have to prove to me that in this period of 11 years, or since the time of July 1, 1996, we are better off with self-regulation of the real estate industry.

The hon. member – and I really appreciate his time and his interest and his willingness to answer questions – in response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie gave a long list of those who had been consulted regarding this draft or this bill, but I would like to know if the Consumers' Association of Alberta or the Consumers' Association of Canada is one of the 50 members on his list. I certainly hope they were consulted.

I would like to go a little bit further with this, Mr. Chairman. As part of the Real Estate Council of Alberta – I understand the number one goal is to protect consumers through licensing requirements, effective investigation of complaints, disciplinary proceedings, and administration of the assurance fund – what consideration, if any, has there been of putting a representative of the Consumers' Association on that council? I understand there are a dozen representatives on that council. Yes, it's composed of 12 members representing residential and commercial real estate, property management, mortgage brokers, real estate appraisers, and the public, but are any of those 12 members of the Real Estate Council of Alberta from any recognized consumer groups? If I could have an answer to those questions, I would be very grateful.

Again, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to please be very cautious. Let's think of the big bill we're going to face here with Syncrude and Suncor. Let's look at the implications of Bill 46. If we look at those, I don't think we should be giving more power to the cabinet to rule by regulation and not through open, transparent debate on the floor of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. In response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I just want to make it perfectly clear that the Consumers' Association of Canada, Alberta branch, was consulted in that list of 50.

Also, Mr. Chairman, the makeup of RECA. It doesn't specify that this individual is a member of any consumers organization, but there are 10 industry members and one public member at large. One of the 12 members appointed must not be an industry member, so someone that is not connected with the trade of real estate at all. Of course, the terminology of the trade is everything from the mortgage industry, the appraisals, the property managers, realtors, someone that is not connected with the trade of real estate at all. Although that individual, I would admit, is not specified to be a member of a consumer association, they very well could be. A member of the general public outside of the industry could very well be anyone.

The other point, Mr. Chairman, raised by the hon. member. I would submit to you that the consumer is better off today because of the self-regulating nature of this industry. Again, unfortunately, one or two bad apples give this industry a very bad name. There are some extremely highly qualified, highly ethical, professional people in this business at all levels, be they on the real estate side, the mortgage side, the appraisal side. There are some very, very credible individuals, and frankly it really saddens me that these individuals are being tarred with the brush of these one or two bad apples. That is why I think it's so important that we strengthen this legislation, strengthen the regulation that gives RECA, this body – it is in their interest to keep up the good name, the quality of their industry, and they work very hard.

The other thing you mentioned, hon. member. Of course, it is self-regulating, but it's self-regulating that has to fall under this legislation, so we do have the opportunity in this Legislature to beef up or change or modify the legislation. This body, RECA, and what it does only survives based on what piece of legislation we put forward in this House. So, hon. member, I would suggest to you that if you feel that we need to do more at some point in the future, we bring that change here and we beef up this legislation and we continue to provide that support to the public that they need.

The other thing you mentioned is the subprime crisis. I would say to you that even though we don't have that kind of crisis in Canada right now, the reality is that when you have a business climate where people are willing to lend money beyond the values that they should – frankly, these are stupid business decisions, be they in the States or here. I can't understand why these people are crying now because if they were dumb enough to lend money to people who couldn't afford to pay it back, I think they deserve everything they get.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon alluded to it. I mean, apparently we're bringing this bill in because of the possibility of previous mortgage fraud, and he said that there were perhaps one or two bad apples. I doubt that that would cause us to have this bill brought before the House. I guess the question I have is: how serious a problem is it? How many cases are we aware of that have come forward through the real estate board?

I want to go into the self-regulating part of it. I have no great objection, you know, to people self-regulating, but it's interesting that we're going to be debating a bill here tomorrow, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, where we seem to be moving into the territory of professionals like doctors and nurses and that, and here we have a bill dealing with real estate, where we're moving in the other direction. So I think there's a contradiction there.

You know, I wonder about the self-regulation. How can you control this? The figure I've seen – I think it came from RECA – is that there is something like 14,943 real estate mortgage brokers and appraisal industry members, almost 15,000, in the province. Now, that's a lot of people to self-regulate, and I think that we really are counting on the self-regulation here to be able to do that. When you deal with other professionals where we have self-governance, they don't nearly have those sorts of members, and of course they're trained. The amended act makes a criminal record check a prerequisite – I thought that would have happened before; it seems to be a no-brainer – for a real estate agent, mortgage broker, or appraiser.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but it seems to me that the whole thrust of this – you know, it says: clarifies and modernizes the terms and all the rest of it – is that we're giving the self-regulators more power to try to get to what he calls the bad apples. I'd say that that's a major job. I think that if mortgage fraud is serious enough that we're bringing forward a bill because we're concerned about it – I'm not sure what the answer is, but I don't think that this solves the problems necessarily.

You know, we can talk about: there is more potential for abuse. We were alluding to subprime, but we've got even CMHC saying that you can have 100 per cent mortgages. That is the way of the future, that there are going to be more sales out there, probably people getting in over – when CMHC says that it's okay, there are going to be a lot of people involved in it.

I don't think this is going to do any harm and certainly not, you know, enough that I wouldn't support the bill, but I really do think that with the self-regulation in those sorts of numbers with a growing market, we're kidding ourselves if we don't think that even with this bill there's a potential still there in a very dramatic way. Perhaps we need stiffer laws. I don't know. That's something we could take a look at.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I think there are aspects of these changes that will make it easier to curtail mortgage fraud, but that is not the only intent of this bill. The self-regulating and tidying it up: it's been 10 years. We have looked at the whole industry over that 10 years plus, and we've looked at what has worked very well, what needs some adjustment. Part of that, underlying that, is, number one, first and foremost, protecting consumer confidence, protecting consumers. So while there are some tools that this gives to RECA, the council, to protect the consumer, the bottom line at the end of the day, hon. member, is to clean it up, to fine-tune the mechanism that was put in place in 1996 to ensure that even before we get to problems, we have the kind of mechanism that will provide the kind of confidence that we would all want. At one point or another even we in here are consumers in this industry. So it really is intended to create a good environment for consumer confidence.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'd like to again thank the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for shouldering so much of the responsibility for bill debate today. I'd also like to recognize the member's professionalism and that of my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie. What the House has been treated to today is a terrific in-service on real estate and the cautions associated with the real estate industry that Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007, attempts to accomplish through further eliminating the possibility of fraud.

I have a concern that has been raised by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with regard to the idea of regulation trumping legislation. We have been elected by our constituents to do due diligence to demonstrate the intelligence and integrity necessary to make decisions on their behalf, and that is how the Legislature is set up, so that those discussions can take place. If we simply give over the people's rights to a behind-closed-doors cabinet regulation as opposed to the little airing opportunity we have in debate, then we are basically neglecting our duty and saying that the state in its wisdom should just manage people's lives, including the lives of the members of the opposition. It has been noted by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie that this type of expertise to which we have been treated today should be sitting beside each other in committee in preparation for legislation and bills like this, which would then eliminate the need for the types of discussion that we're having here today.

It's a concern to me that there is a grim reality in this province that Bill 24 doesn't address. That grim reality is that Bill 24, Real Estate Amendment Act, talks about eliminating fraudulent mortgage processes, but inflation, cost of living, a desire expressed by the Premier to not touch the brakes on the economy, together with a lack of government legislation or regulation prevent people from obtaining the very mortgages that Bill 24 attempts to protect. There is a growing reality that owning a home and qualifying for a mortgage in this province is becoming more and more difficult. With no legislation other than the legislation to landlords that they can only raise their rent once, with no limitation on the extent of that raise, individuals who are in the position of wanting to rent or rent to own cannot put away the amount necessary to qualify for a mortgage.

Without legislation that requires condominium conversions to occur with sufficient notification to tenants, what we have is an end run whereby simply by raising the rents, you can drive those tenants out of the future condominium; therefore, no notification of the change from a rental accommodation to a condominium is necessary. That's the grim reality in this province. Unless we look at even temporary sunset rent controls of some sort, people will not be able to set aside the money necessary to have the stability of a mortgage. This is a major concern for Albertans.

We advertise, we brag, we beat our chest and talk about the Alberta advantage, but the grim reality is that that Alberta advantage is very elusive for the people whose rent continues to increase without any type of oversight. An example would be in the Varsity apartments that I brought up so many times during the spring session of the Legislature. While theoretically you can only raise the rent once, landlords are getting very creative. They're now suggesting: "Oh, yes, but we're going to now charge you for your cable," or "We didn't charge you before for your electricity and your sewer, and we're now going to charge you for that, but that's not a rent increase; that's just a recognition that the cost of electricity has gone up; therefore, we're adjusting your rent to accommodate for that particular concern." There is no legislation that prevents landlords from being creative in the types of gouging they undertake.

So we can argue about regulation, and we can argue about legislation, but when it comes to rental circumstances, when it comes to homelessness, there is neither regulation nor legislation that addresses the need of individuals to qualify for that first mortgage and to enjoy both the opportunities and the responsibilities of owning their first home.

We've got a number of organizations that will appreciate Bill 24, Real Estate Amendment Act, and I credit the government for doing the research that would prevent that fraudulent activity from continuing. That background research and accepting the input from that background research is very refreshing. We have seen examples – the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and the Member for Edmonton-Glenora have first-hand experience of being on an expert task force tasked to tour the province to come up with the best suggestions possible to allow people to have ownership of their homes, to have a roof over their head, whether it's a rented room or whether it's the opportunity to have a home of their own. When the rental task force came back with their recommendations, unfortunately, the government rejected 32 of the 58 recommendations. So it is of great concern how the government picks and chooses between what will be regulated and what will be legislated.

I also want to touch on the concern that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview pointed out with regard to the self-regulation of real estate agents. Now, I don't know, and I'm sure the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon or the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie could give me a brief background on the type of education and the coursework required to qualify to be either an appraiser or a realtor, but I would suggest that it pales in comparison to that of a doctor. Yet when we talk tomorrow about Bill 41, we're saying that doctors who have had nine-plus years of training if they're going towards a specialty don't have the sufficient internal authority within their professional qualifications to self-regulate. There is also, potentially, the suggestion that while it takes six years to achieve a master of teaching degree, members of the teaching profession don't deserve a raise equivalent to inflation.

The government seems on one hand to be very willing to allow certain organizations to self-regulate, but when it comes to the professionalism of organizations such as medicine and education, they need to be shepherded because they don't have the intelligence to regulate themselves in a professional manner. You can't have it both ways. Therefore, what I would recommend is legislation that the open opportunity of the people of Alberta be recognized as superior to anyone's behind-closed-doors regulatory attempts.

The beauty of a democracy is that all voices are heard, and I appreciate the discussion and the voices that have been heard in this Assembly today. Again I want to thank the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon and recognize the intellectual capabilities of the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in providing this House with a much better understanding of Bill 24, Bill 36, and Bill 35 than we had going into this discussion and debate.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 63 "the Committees of the whole Assembly shall rise and report prior to the time of adjournment," and I still have another member on the list. So we'll rise and report. I'll call on the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007, and also report Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007, and report progress on Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007.

Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 35 and Bill 36. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 24.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour and the vigorous and rigorous debate of the afternoon, the tremendous progress made, I would move that we call it 6 p.m. and adjourn to reconvene tomorrow at 1.

[Motion carried; at 5:57 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Gift of Mace Rest to the Legislative Assembly

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the top of the Speaker's dias is the coat of arms of our province. Beneath the crown is Castor canadensis, the Canadian beaver. The significance of this animal and the trade in furs to the development of what became our province is well known. Our Legislature Building is within 100 metres of the fifth and last Fort Edmonton, constructed in 1832. From 1795 until 1891 Fort Edmonton was the regional centre of the fur trade. Then as now the fur industry continues to support our rural economy. It allows many of our aboriginal and Métis citizens as well as others who are living on the land to do so in ways that make use of a sustainable and renewable resource.

Today in the Speaker's gallery are board members and staff of the Alberta Trappers Association. They and their 2,700 members from throughout the province have given the Legislative Assembly a unique and fitting gift. This kind gesture celebrates our province's long and continuing connection with the land, its animals, and a way of life so integral to the development and character of our Alberta.

I would now ask the pages to unveil the gift. [The mace rest was uncovered] Through the generosity of the Alberta Trappers Association the Assembly's mace rest has been completely covered in the finest Alberta beaver pelt dyed in our Chamber's green livery. On it is engraved a silver lozenge which reads, "Presented to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta by the Alberta Trappers Association, November 2007."

From that group and with us today in the Speaker's gallery are Ted Callbeck, director from Onoway; Dennis Wohlgenuth, director from Sexsmith, with his son Nolan; Margaret Kidner, director from Edson; Linda Stolberg, administrative assistant; and Karen Lebeau, executive manager. Unfortunately, Mr. Gordy Klassen, president, and Ross Hinter, vice-president, both of whom had planned for some months to be here, could not be in attendance. I would now ask the Assembly to welcome our guests and give the gratitude of this House for the kind gift. [applause]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of individuals who are visiting the Alberta Legislature today from my constituency. I think it is so important for these bright kids to visit the Legislature. As you know, Mr. Speaker, they will be tomorrow's leaders. We have with us today 38 grade 6 students from Bowden Grandview school, that are seated in both galleries. They are accompanied by teachers Teri Patterson and Tracy Dreher and parent helpers Charlie Brooks, Kevin Robertson, Janna Miller, Jackie Berggren, Maggie Peckham, and Brenda Sherwood. I would ask them all to rise so that others may join me in giving them a warm welcome to the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups of introductions today. First of all, it's my honour today to introduce a number of people who are involved in today's very important initiatives surrounding the treatment, research, and prevention of diabetes. As we recognize World Diabetes Day today, we are also celebrating a significant milestone in the fight against the disease right here at home with the opening of the Alberta Diabetes Institute.

The people who are about to stand before you all represent organizations that are making significant advancements in the prevention and treatment of diabetes, helping Albertans to live healthier lives now and into the future. I'd ask them each to stand as I name them.

With us today from the Canadian Diabetes Association are James Gibbins, executive director for the prairie region; Rami Chowanec, regional chair for northern Alberta and Northwest Territories; Jack Ballish, regional director for northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories; from the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation board members Lorna St. Thomas, Susie Marano, Sarah Lord, and Denis Baumgartner; youth ambassador Shayne Baumgartner; and Celina Paley, fundraising co-ordinator; from the Alberta Diabetes Institute, Dr. Ray Rajotte, founding scientific director – if I may, Mr. Speaker, Ray has been a very significant player in diabetes and leading the team that discovered the Edmonton protocol – and his successor as scientific director of the Alberta Diabetes Institute, Dr. Ron Gill, new to us, from Colorado: welcome to Alberta; representing Capital health, Dr. Richard Lewanczuk, medical director of chronic disease management for Capital health and professor in the University of Alberta department of medicine. I would ask you to give our guests a warm and resounding welcome to the Alberta Legislature and a thank you for the work that they're doing for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House five leaders of Alberta's voluntary sector. There are more than 19,000 voluntary sector organizations in Alberta working in a variety of ways to improve the quality of life of Albertans. The staff and volunteers of these organizations are active in areas ranging from education to recreation to social services to much, much more. Over the last few months many of us have heard from these organizations as they contributed to the public discussion on Bill 1. We're pleased to have these five representatives in the House today as we consider that bill further.

I'd ask our visitors to stand when named: Russ Dahms, executive director of the Edmonton Chamber of Voluntary Organizations; Lois Gander of the Legal Resource Centre of Alberta; Scott Lundell, Volunteer Alberta's volunteer board chair; Katherine van Kooy, president of the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations; and Bob Wyatt, executive director of the Muttart Foundation. I'd ask the House to give these visitors our warmest welcome and thanks for the work that they do for Albertans.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, Diane Gramlich, her husband, Marlin Styner, of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, and executive director Mark Nicoll are accompanying a distinguished visitor seated in your gallery. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled Ms

Susan Scott-Parker, the founding chief executive of the Employers' Forum on Disability, a group founded in the United Kingdom 16 years ago to get more persons with disabilities into the workforce. Susan, a former Albertan and a member of the Order of the British Empire, is one of the world's leading authorities on the employment of persons with disabilities. I'd ask Susan to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Affordable Housing and Urban Development.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some very special guests who have joined us today. These are seven outstanding individuals who are providing strong leadership in their communities with the development of regional strategies and 10-year plans to end homelessness. I had an opportunity to meet with them today, and I look forward to working closely with them in the future. I would ask each of you to please rise as I introduce you to the Assembly and to stay standing. We have Jim Burke from Fort McMurray, Maribeth Friesen and Pam Ralston from Red Deer, Susan McGee from Edmonton, Lynn Pack and Heather Manarey from Grande Prairie, Diane Randell from Lethbridge. Wayne Stewart was here earlier but was unable to join us for the introductions. I'd ask the Assembly to please give your warm welcome to this very special group of people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In what may well be a first for Rotary but certainly a first in my three years in this Assembly, the Rotary Club of Edmonton Gateway held their regular meeting this afternoon in the Legislature Annex Building. We had about 20 members join us for a tour of the Legislature this morning, approximately 30 members and guests were with us for lunch, and a number of those have managed to rearrange their schedule so that they could stay and observe question period this afternoon. I would like to briefly introduce them and ask them to rise as I do so. We have with us today Hazel and John Bellingham, newly arrived from the U.K. and new residents of the town of Beaumont – they're guests of a Rotarian today – Cec Blackburn, a past president of the Rotary Club of Edmonton Gateway; Al Buchanan, a member of the Edmonton Sunrise club; John Drebit; Agnes Fisher; Richard Fryga; Timothy Haak; Michael Lawal; Doug McEwan; Tereena Morelli; Otto Nuoranne, who is an exchange student from Finland and hosted by the Rotary Club of Edmonton Gateway this year; Lorne Parker; and Judy Wilson, who is a member of our club and also a chief of staff with the Alberta Liberal caucus. Oh, did I miss Jim Jones? You're not standing. I would ask them all to please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: There also are a number of members of this Assembly who are Rotarians. Perhaps they would like to stand as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a really committed group of students who are joining us in the public gallery today. These students are with the international pharmacy bridging program at the Bredin Institute. These are internationally trained pharmacists who are completing upgrading here so that they can join our health professionals in Alberta, and I appreciate very much the time and effort that they are putting in to do that. If I could recognize Cynthia Lambertson-Poon, who is their teacher – if you would please rise, Cynthia – Tariq Chughtai, Shatha Hanna, Sukhpreet Birdi, Iqbal Shahid, and Ahmad Abouzeed. If the Assembly would please join me in welcoming these students.

Thank you.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased again today to see two guests in the gallery from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. Well known to this Assembly are Ken Kobly and Terri Kembal, formerly an editor of Sherwood Park News, now serving with the Alberta chamber. They make a dynamite team, and we're sitting here wondering just exactly what bill might be on the Order Paper today that would interest them. I would ask them to please rise and get the warm welcome from this room.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Employment for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Louheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities co-hosted Real People, Real Jobs, a workshop here in Edmonton that helped Alberta employers understand the opportunities and benefits of hiring persons with disabilities. Our partner in this event was the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce. The chamber has done a tremendous job in recent years through its Edmonton Employer Consortium to co-ordinate services for employers and persons with disabilities. The consortium includes regional businesses, government authorities, educational institutions, business associations, staffing organizations, and service providers. Its promotion of inclusion and the employment of persons with disabilities has led to an increase in the number of persons with disabilities joining Alberta's workforce.

Encouraging employers to recognize the value of persons with disabilities and see job candidates with disabilities as a good hiring opportunity is important, particularly in the Alberta labour shortage and climate. Susan Scott-Parker brought this message to Alberta as keynote speaker for this morning's workshop. Ms Scott-Parker is founder and chief executive of the Employers' Forum on Disability, a group founded in the United Kingdom 16 years ago but whose influence is now sweeping the globe. I'm pleased that Susan Scott-Parker, a former Albertan, and now one of the world's leading authorities on the employment of persons with disabilities, is with us today.

The Employers' Forum on Disability makes it easier for business to employ persons with disabilities, serve customers with disabilities, and engage stakeholders with disabilities. Barclays, Cisco Systems, Merrill Lynch, the UN, and the European Union are just some of the global players in business and government that are moving to get more persons with disabilities into the workforce. The group's message is simple: there's a significant advantage to business and to society in releasing the potential of the world's population who have a disability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Alberta Diabetes Institute

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to recognize the opening of the Alberta Diabetes Institute. As is well known, diabetes is reaching epidemic proportions in Alberta. In fact, more than 14,000 Albertans are diagnosed with diabetes each year. That's approximately 40 people per day. More than 150,000 adults are currently living with this disease.

Diseases like diabetes are the leading causes of avoidable illness, health system utilization, and premature deaths in Alberta. But, Mr. Speaker, there is good news. The Alberta Diabetes Institute, located at the University of Alberta, officially opened today. This facility will bring eight groups of researchers under one roof for the first time. The Alberta Diabetes Institute will enable researchers to improve diabetes prevention, develop new treatments, and ultimately work towards a cure for this dreaded disease. Their research has already produced groundbreaking results. The Edmonton protocol for diabetes is a world-leading, life-enhancing procedure for transplanting pancreatic islet cells to the liver of a patient with type 1 diabetes.

Today we are also marking World Diabetes Day. The Canadian Diabetes Association and the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation are using today's activities to increase awareness of this major chronic disease, to celebrate milestones in treatment and research, and to remind us not to take our health for granted. With the efforts of these groups, Mr. Speaker, our province will continue to be a world leader in responding to diabetes. Please join me in congratulating everyone whose hard work has made the Alberta Diabetes Institute a reality. To those who are raising awareness on World Diabetes Day, we wish them every success in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Members' Statements

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to deliver a member's statement on, well, members' statements. I rise today to urge that all hon. members of this Assembly use caution in the exercise of the great latitude that members' statements allow them.

Yesterday the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity used a part of his member's statement to criticize the attendance practices of one of our members. What would the constituents of Calgary-Varsity think if I outlined the attendance record of their MLA today? Mr. Speaker, for that matter, what would Albertans think if I pointed out that that member's leader sometimes leaves the House before the completion of question period, a practice that the Member for Calgary-Varsity apparently takes exception with?

The Member for Calgary-Varsity also takes great issue with incorrect or incomplete quotes and outlined this in his statement. What would his constituents or, for that matter, his former students think if I were to outline today that he himself incorrectly quoted George Orwell by adding a word to the quote? Could you imagine, Mr. Speaker? The member seems to be concerned about using quotes out of context. What would his constituents think if I pointed out that his statement referenced a public forum that he attended, yet the government system in George Orwell's book clearly would not have allowed any form of public debate or input? Would his constituents accuse him of using a passage or perhaps an entire book out of context? Could you imagine?

What would the member's constituents think if I pointed out today that the injurious words that he freely tosses about, Mr. Speaker, words like "deception" and "manipulation," are words that in some contexts have been ruled to be unparliamentary? Would his constituents conclude that the rules established to allow for civil debate are . . . [Mr. Oberle's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ethics in Government

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a terrible thing when citizens lose trust in their government, but that is exactly what happens when the government keeps giving the people good reason to lose that trust. Earlier this year the people begged the government to take action against rent gouging. Months later Albertans across the province are still struggling to deal with the huge rent increases.

Landowners in rural Alberta, traditionally strong Tory supporters, are finding that their trust is being taken for granted as Bill 46 threatens to take away their right to be heard.

The province's public boards, which make decisions that affect hundreds of thousands of Albertans, are overwhelmingly dominated by members of the Tory party. This government has severely undermined the credibility and objectivity of these vital boards, and when they are undermined, so is the public trust.

The government forced through Bill 20, which hides ministerial briefing notes from the public for 15 years, a gross breach of the Premier's promise to be accountable to the people. What kinds of secrets do ministers need to hide from the people for a decade and a half?

Mr. Speaker, when a government comes to feel that it has a divine right to power, it is inevitable that they begin to take the trust of the people for granted. That attitude is not only an insult to the citizens of Alberta, but it is dangerous to our democracy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Funding for Nonprofit Human Services Agencies

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This province is home to quality dedicated nonprofit organizations that provide care for families, youth, and children at risk. Some have been serving for more than a quarter of a century, yet since 1994 certain costs have not been addressed by the funding formula used by the government. While rapid growth is pushing up costs, these agencies are not receiving help with gasoline, insurance, and electricity. Any increases have been for salaries and benefits only. These are minimal and do not take into account the experience of staff and allow them to move on the salary grid.

Mr. Speaker, these are good people doing good work for a vital cause. They are not in it for the money. Yet oversight is putting their operations into poverty, increasing demand on their services, and forcing them to beg, like the theme where Oliver brings his bowl to Mr. Bumble in the workhouse and plaintively asks: please, sir, may I have more?

There's injustice added to this injury. Children's Services and other ministries recognize the calibre of staff of these groups and attract them with higher wages while using the private sector as a training ground and source of expertise. In a province where this government professes not to compete with the private sector and to be committed to dealing with the challenges of growth, workers in these organizations find it hard to accept, as I do, how those giving to meet a public need can be taken for granted by those pledged to serve the public good.

I appeal to the government to take this under consideration, to bring support for these groups from welfare basement to a level appropriate to one of the world's leading economies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Remembrance Day 2007

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure to rise and to recognize the achievement of two remarkable young women from my constituency: Corley Farough and Sarah-Anne Jozsa, both students from the St. Mary school in Taber who remembered to remember. Corley placed first nationally in her senior division of the Royal Canadian Legion's Remembrance Day poetry competition and was invited to Ottawa to participate in the national Remembrance Day ceremony by laying a wreath on behalf of all the youth of Canada. Last year Sarah-Anne placed first in Alberta in her junior division and read her poem here in Edmonton.

I would like to say how much I appreciate the emphasis of Remembrance Day that occurs in my constituency. It is inspiring for all, especially for other youth. It raises the understanding and awareness of the sacrifices of our veterans and their families. We as citizens enjoy the freedom bought with their lives. We should make sure to pass it on to young people in the understanding of that sacrifice. Sarah-Anne and Corley's poems show us that their parents and teachers are doing just that.

I would like to share a part of Corley's poem Crosses with the Assembly.

Crosses are standing row after row
A silent reminder of men we don't know
Men who have given up all of their lives
Men who left children and warm loving wives . . .

This pain in his gut is not hunger or fear
But the loss of his innocence and all he holds dear . . .

In the pit of his soul is an ache he can't mend
The news hit him hard of the death of a friend
The sickening feeling of loss only grows
As the fields keep filling with crosses in rows . . .

If tomorrow will come, he does not know
But crosses are standing row after row.

In closing, I would like to share Sarah-Anne's closing lines from her poem I Will Never Know.

I will never know what you went through
To set our country free.

But this I know, I won't forget,
That your death was for me.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The chair of the Select Special Personal Information Protection Act Review Committee.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Select Special Personal Information Protection Act Review Committee I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee's final report. Copies are also being circulated to members.

I'd like to thank Mr. Tom Thackeray and the staff from Service Alberta for the time and expertise that they contributed to this project. I'd also like to thank Mrs. Karen Sawchuk, committee clerk of the Legislative Assembly Office, for her professionalism and dedication during the entire process and to acknowledge the contributions of committee members from all three parties for the completion of the committee's mandate.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to present a petition signed by 65 constituents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose and area. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to pass Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, and not dilute its contents so as to compromise the version approved at second reading, in order to address the enormous health, social and financial implications of tobacco use in Alberta.

Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, like the previous member I am pleased to present a petition signed by 39 people from Red Deer and central Alberta to petition the Legislative Assembly to pass Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Likewise, I have two petitions: one from 18 residents of Cypress-Medicine Hat and one from three residents of Highwood urging the Legislative Assembly to pass Bill 45.

Mr. Martin: Likewise, likewise, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 60 Albertans also urging the Legislative Assembly to pass Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition today that reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to launch a full public inquiry under the authority of the Public Inquiries Act into spying practices by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board (AEUB) and the Minister of Energy's oversight role of the AEUB.

This petition is signed by concerned citizens from Bowden, Bashaw, Ponoka, Innisfail, Bluffton, and Lindale to name a few.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two petitions today. I join my colleagues in also presenting a petition signed by 542 individuals, mostly from Calgary and Edmonton, who are urging the Assembly to pass Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007.

The second petition that I have today, Mr. Speaker, is signed by several hundred Albertans who ask the government to ensure that remuneration paid to employees working with persons with disabilities is standardized, that they are fairly compensated and their wages remain competitive, that they have improved access to professional development opportunities, and for the government to introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level of care standards.

Thank you.

head: 1:30 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Royalty Revenues

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General has exposed the fact that Department of Energy annual reports presented false and unsupported claims to Albertans. This isn't about how one interprets fair share. This is really very simple. It's about this government deliberately misleading the people of Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Does the minister accept that he has a responsibility, a personal and legal responsibility, for his annual reports to this Assembly to be accurate, to be backed up by the facts, or is telling the truth simply a policy decision? [interjection]

The Speaker: That would be a point of order? Yes.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this question, again, it came up yesterday. We answered it yesterday. I'm well prepared to stand here today and for the rest of this session and answer that question again and again and again if it's necessary. The truth of the matter is that Alberta Energy and I stand behind the information that was included in the annual reports in question, particularly the one for '03-04.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, I paraphrase what you said in the last statement – we are going to have a point of order on it – but I'm going to caution you to avoid innuendo such as along the lines: telling the truth is a matter of policy. There's a very, very strong innuendo in there that I will not tolerate.

Proceed to your second question.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the decision to ignore evidence of failing royalty regimes and ignore recommendations from experts in the department is a policy decision, one made by governments, not civil servants. This Tory government was certainly entitled to make that decision, and unfortunately for the people of Alberta they did. But they are not entitled, despite what they think, to deceive Albertans about that decision. Albertans own the resources. This government broke the public trust and deceived the owners. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister admit that the decision to report false and misleading information in the annual report was a political decision, one made by members of the government with the support of this Premier?

The Speaker: We've got a second point of order with respect to this and its language.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Again, Mr. Speaker, this is getting to the point of being absolutely ridiculous. I have said that I stand behind the report that was done, the 2003 report that the hon. gentleman across the way speaks about.

In fact, in that period of time there were three commodity reports delivered and work done with respect to three commodities in the province of Alberta and the royalties issue around those. The information was made available to the Auditor General. Whether or not there was a cross-commodity report done that he didn't feel was complete, the cross-commodity reports are there if he wishes to look at them all. I understand they weren't all reviewed. The information is there. The truth is there, and I stand by it.

Dr. Taft: Well, then, if the minister is so confident in the truth, let the people judge. Will he make public all the internal documents itemized by the Auditor General in his report, and will he do it uncensored?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, every government in every democracy in the world has legislative protection with respect to some information that's provided to the cabinet. There are documents that are internal to every government, and those documents that are protected we will continue to protect.

What I will say is that in 2003-04 reports were done. The Auditor General is free to look at them again if he wishes.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only thing this minister is protecting is his government's butt.

For seven years – seven years – this government has covered up the fact that it deliberately failed to collect billions of dollars in royalties. The minister and the Premier deny that the Department of Energy's annual reports contained false information on royalties, but those denials ring untrue. To the Minister of Energy: page 13 of the Department of Energy's '03-04 annual report states: "A review of Alberta's royalty structure and competitiveness was completed." Will the minister admit that this statement is false and that his department's annual report deceived the Legislature?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, every day and every year from the year 2003, if we want to go into the history, till the year 2010 we have and we will continue to protect the rights of Albertans, and we will collect the royalties that are due to the people of the province of Alberta on resources they own. We have done it in the past, and we'll continue to do it.

Dr. Taft: The same government annual report claims:

This review compared Alberta's royalty competitiveness against other North American and international jurisdictions. Alberta's conventional oil and natural gas regime was ranked as among the most rigorous regimes in Canada and the world.

It turns out to be completely untrue, and this government knew it, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: how could he stand by when his government was misleading the people of Alberta so deeply?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what's misleading. What's misleading is the statements that are being made by the member opposite. I'll tell you what happened in '03-04. I'll tell you some facts: $15 billion in royalty revenue to the province of Alberta, '03-04; $2 billion in lease sales and bonus bids; $43 billion in capital investment, 2003-04; jobs for Albertans. That's what we created.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, let's just see where the Minister of Energy actually stands. Is the Minister of Energy saying that the Auditor General is deceiving the public? Is the Auditor General wrong, Mr. Minister? Is he wrong?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you emphatically – and I can tell you that I believe that the people of Alberta agree with me – that who is wrong is the member opposite. That's who's wrong.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this government wants to play forgive and forget with billions of dollars in royalties that rightly should have gone to the people of Alberta. Those dollars would have meant so much, for example, to the seniors of this province, many of whom bit the bullet for this government's cutbacks only to now learn that this government was squeezing seniors while letting billions of dollars slide out the back door. To the Minister of Energy: will this government come clean to the seniors of Alberta and make public all internal government reports on royalties, described in the Auditor General's report, uncensored?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, let's take a look at what's happened since I've been the Energy minister. We have a Premier who recognized that the royalty structure should be looked at from an independent point of view. Our Premier has done that. As we move forward in this province, the royalty regime for the future of the province of Alberta will serve this province and the people of this province very well.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the billions of dollars that this minister and this government want to pretend away were real dollars. They could have done so much. The people of Calgary, for example, are reporting a dramatic drop in their quality of life in recent years, citing concerns over roads and schools and hospitals. The people of Edmonton are facing double-digit tax increases, but this government let billions of dollars slide out the back door and then covered it up with misleading reports. To the Minister of Energy: will this government please do the honourable thing and tell the truth about what it knew about the failing royalty system and when it knew?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you something that I know about the royalties. There is a royalty review that took place in the province of Alberta. It was delivered to the people of Alberta on the 18th of September. Shortly after that I sent a letter to the member opposite and asked him – I asked him – for his input so that we could add it – add it – to our own report that we did, that we generated. To this day I have absolutely no information from the people opposite. Nothing. None. No response.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the people of Alberta placed their trust in this government. The people of Alberta took the hit to their public services: public servants took pay cuts, thousands of people were laid off, hospital construction was delayed, schools were postponed. To the Minister of Energy: why did this government let billions of dollars slip away and then deceive the people of Alberta about it? Why did it betray the trust?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, we seem to have some kind of a broken record. Nevertheless, what I'll do is respond again. What I can tell you is that from 2000 to 2007 there weren't so many missing billions.

I'll tell you about billions. Royalty revenue to the province of Alberta: $66.14 billion. Capital investment in the energy industry in the province of Alberta: $202.7 billion. That's where the billions are. They're invested in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Quality of Life in Alberta

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While this government justifies its bottom-of-the-barrel royalties because of out-of-control growth, the evidence is mounting that conditions are actually getting worse for most Albertans. Yes, most Albertans. While corporate profits and the incomes of the richest 10 per cent of Albertans are way up, thousands of ordinary families are one or two paycheques away from financial ruin or homelessness. In Calgary alone there are at least 20,000 people with a family income of less than $15,000 who are paying more than 50 per cent of their income for housing. My questions to the President of the Treasury Board: what has this government got to say to those Albertans whose families are at risk of becoming homeless as a result of uncontrolled growth, sky-high rents, and a government . . .

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that we are compassionate, that we have programs to look after those in Alberta that are less fortunate. But the biggest difference is this: our government tries to lift people to the top, and their philosophy pushes people to the bottom. Most Albertans want to strive for the top.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister can say that, but the facts are otherwise. Yesterday the city of Calgary released its 2007 citizens' satisfaction survey. Sixty-one per cent of Calgarians surveyed said that their quality of life has worsened in the last three years. The largest number cited overpopulation and pace of growth, but there are other reasons as well, including crime, cost of living, traffic congestion, poor infrastructure, housing costs, poverty, and homelessness. They are all identified by Calgarians for why they believe things are getting worse in their quality of life. My question is to the minister: how, with all of Alberta's wonderful opportunities and advantages, is this government able to make life for 61 per cent of Calgarians worse?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, if someone was listening to the question period from the start, they would wonder what on earth the facts have to do with the questions. That aside, there is a migration to Alberta from people all across the world. They're coming here to share in one of the most dynamic economies that we've seen. We are offering the highest average income, the highest standard of living. We provide the best health care system in the world and the best education system in the world, too. This government has consistently strived to lift people to the top, not attempted to drag them to the bottom.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Here's the chart from the Calgary report. These are the people that think things are getting better, these are the people that think that it's the same, and these are the people that think that it's getting worse. When will this government wake up and stop subsidizing big corporations with the lowest royalties in the world, tax cuts on corporations that are earning record profits, and do something for working families who are at risk of becoming poor or homeless?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it wouldn't surprise me at all if the hon. member had his chart upside down. It wouldn't surprise me at all. But we really want to ask Albertans: what do they want? They want an education system that's first class. They want a health care system that's first class. They're coming here by the thousands, by the hundreds of thousands. They're coming here to get away from some of the provinces that his kinfolk have run into the ground. Alberta has become the destination for those with hopes and dreams.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Report of Premier's Task Force on Crystal Meth

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over a year ago government accepted the report of the task force on crystal meth, which recommended improved access to treatment as well as prevention programs to address crystal meth addiction in Alberta. Some of my constituents have been asking me: what happened to that report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year my department, the Department of Health and Wellness, was asked to take the lead in preparing a cross-ministry response to the crystal meth task force report. The cross-ministry review concluded that addressing the effects of crystal meth effectively actually should be done in the context of dealing with a broader focus on illicit drugs and substance abuse. I'm pleased to report that the crystal meth review has evolved into the more comprehensive Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force, which has now reported. The report of the task force provides the broader focus needed to address addictions to illicit drugs and substance abuse as well as mental health issues, another key contributor to crime.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary is for the same minister. Have any of the recommendations of the crystal meth task force been implemented, or is this another taxpayer-funded report collecting dust on a shelf somewhere?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most of the health-related recommendations of the crystal meth report have been addressed either through the crime reduction and safe communities response or through the ongoing programs of my department and agencies like AADAC. For example, under the leadership of AADAC the Alberta drug strategy was developed in 2005 on the principle that a comprehensive approach to the use and abuse of alcohol and illicit drugs is necessary. The Alberta drug strategy focuses on prevention, treatment, crime reduction as well as policing and enforcement. Under the drug strategy, the PCHAD legislation, funding for local drug coalitions, initiation of Better Together school projects in a total of nine school boards, all contribute directly to the reduction of crime and addiction.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. What are this government's intentions regarding the buying and selling of water?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue that the member raises with respect to water is one which has to do with the licensing of water and the transfer of licences in a water basin that is fully allocated. The ministry has been developing a policy, will continue to develop a policy to allow for the transfer of licences from one licence holder to another, but it does not and will not condone the sale of water.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That certainly was an interesting response.

My next question is to the Minister of Energy. Under Bill 46 the Utilities Consumer Advocate is not only responsible for the purchase of electricity and natural gas . . .

Speaker's Ruling Hypothetical Questions

The Speaker: Okay. Please sit down. The third time now I've said this: Bill 46 hasn't been introduced for second reading. It hasn't been approved by this Assembly. It has no status. You're not going to use question period to debate a bill that hasn't even reached second reading. It's the third time I've said this now.

Mr. MacDonald: My question, Mr. Speaker, is: why is this government planning on turning water into a commodity to be traded and sold to other jurisdictions under the sections in this bill?

The Speaker: Okay. Last question. Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

1:50 Olymel Pork Processing Plant

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A few days ago, in fact on Monday of this week, an order was imposed on the Olymel pork processing plant in Red Deer, temporarily preventing them from shipping pork products to the U.S. My question today is to the Minister of Ag and Food. Can this minister provide us with an update on this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it seems like it never rains but it pours. As we know, this is a temporary measure, the slowdown at Olymel. The CFIA has been in contact with the USDA, and together they're working with Olymel to help resolve this issue. Apparently, these infractions are only minor, so we're hoping it's only a short matter of time before they're resolved. Delisting doesn't happen very often, but from time to time it does, and we'll deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. How will the temporary delisting of this Olymel plant by the USDA affect our pork producers in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Red Deer plant is still open, and it's still processing pork. Olymel can ship to the rest of their customers throughout Canada and to export markets other than the U.S. They do have other Canadian plants that can ship to the U.S., but the particular Olymel plant in Red Deer cannot.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: with the ongoing challenges that face the pork producers and their industry in Alberta today, what is the government of Alberta doing to help this industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that's why when it rains, it pours. The pork industry and the red meat industry certainly seem to get hammered from time to time. I met with the pork industry in September. We have the short-term program, of course, the Alberta farm recovery plan, where we're going to make $165 million available to the red meat industry as a transition program for the short term.

Long term, Mr. Speaker, the pork industry recovery plan on their own is now under way, where the pork people are coming up with their long-term plans, and we'll try to work with them on their plans as they move forward into some stability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Contracted Human Services Agencies

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I last questioned the Minister of Children's Services regarding the wage discrepancies between government employees and contracted agencies, the minister answered that the issue is being reviewed. Given this government's track record on so-called internal reviews, this may never see the light of day. We need assurances now. Since these agencies provide a government-sanctioned service, why doesn't the government discontinue its practice of paying these people less immediately?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to say that I agree with the comment that the same member made just a few minutes ago that we have good people doing good work for a good cause. I do believe that.

It's not just that it's been under review. I can tell you that we've worked very closely with our contracted agencies in the last two years. We've given increased funding of $20 million to address the issues that they have laid out for us. As recent as last week we gave another $26 million, and I can tell you – and I said this last week as well – that I am committed to working with them on their current and their ongoing issues.

Mrs. Mather: Last week the minister assured this House that these funding and allocation practices were currently being examined. Despite the one-time funding patch awarded, there are still many agencies projecting the possibility of shutting down as early as this winter. Agencies provide for the majority of administered government services in this province. If they are forced to close, what will the government do with all of these children, youth, and families at risk? Is this acceptable treatment for the most vulnerable citizens of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that we will never put a child at risk in this province. We are working closely with the association, like I said. We did offer a lot of relief with their current situation. I can tell you that as early as this weekend I am once again meeting with the association for Alberta families and children to make sure that we are in line and on target for working with them to meet their needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's practice of case-by-case contract allocation is yet another factor causing unnecessary problems for an already strained sector. The extreme competition that is fostered by these practices is sometimes resulting in less qualified agencies receiving a class of vulnerable individuals that they are ill prepared to handle. Will the minister commit to standardizing the contract award system for social agencies charged with taking care of our most vulnerable citizens based on merit and service rather than detrimental competition?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually glad that you've raised this issue. It was just within the last couple of weeks that I've asked for more information on the case-by-case contracting situation that we have, and it also will be a topic of discussion this weekend.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Child Care Licensing Regulations

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Red Deer, like in many other Alberta communities, child care continues to be of high importance to parents. The Child Care Licensing Act was passed in the spring session with the understanding that a regulation would also be developed. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Can you tell me the status of the child care licensing regulation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to briefly give you an update on the consultation. Between May and July we have consulted with Albertans. We heard from 1,500 of them through 16 public meetings in 11 communities as well as online. I do want to take a moment to thank everyone that took part. It's very valuable information to be moving forward with. We did commit to putting the results of the consultation on the website, and we did that last week, so people can go onto the Children's Services website and see what it is that we heard. I can tell you that we'll now look closely at all of the results and all of the viewpoints that were shared with us and move forward on what will be acceptable to parents, operators, and children in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My second question to the same minister. My constituents are concerned that the new regulation will make it even harder for them to find affordable child care. Can you assure Albertans that this is not the case?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to remind everyone that the consultation, the proposals were just for discussion purposes. It is a very open process, and like I said, it is on the website. When you go on the website, you can see that we had a variety of opinions. We have some of the proposals that were well accepted, others that were not. I can tell you that we will pay attention to the results of what Albertans had to say, and we will have a reasoned response for all of the proposals.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: when will the child care licensing regulation come into effect?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do expect that the act will be proclaimed in the spring. I can tell you that between now and then we will continue working with the child care community. Also, I would like to just assure Albertans that for any changes, we will make sure that there are reasonable timelines for implementation when we do agree with the regulations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Regional Municipal Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sitting here listening to all these problems being enumerated today, and now the citizens of Edmonton face a big, fat tax increase, a double-digit property tax hike. Edmonton city council is talking about that in order to pay for the necessities of life in a city: fire, police, ambulance service, snow removal, affordable housing, plus a whole host of services and infrastructure used by residents of all the surrounding suburban communities. The Conservatives' municipal funding plan doesn't sound all that sustainable to me. To the minister of municipal affairs. It's his responsibility to fix this. What's he going to do to get needed dollars into the hands of city governments so they can do the job they were elected to do?

Mr. Danyluk: I'm not sure what the member opposite is trying to suggest, if he's trying to suggest that the government should take over those municipalities. Municipalities have asked for autonomy. This Premier and this government have very much addressed the sustainability and predictability for the future for municipalities with a municipal sustainability initiative that amounts to $11.3 billion over 10 years – $11.3 billion – and, speaking to Edmonton and area, amounts to over $3 billion to support those municipalities.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, cities are in this pickle because the Conservatives first failed to collect billions in royalties over the years. Now they're trying to fix things by throwing billions at the municipalities, talking a good game about autonomy but without a plan. Funny darn thing. Cities are still having to raise their taxes to provide services to their citizens. That's not the way it should be. To the minister. Cities shouldn't be forced to raise taxes to pay for the province's incompetence. Is the minister prepared to rework municipal sustainability funding so that it's there and equitable to all municipalities?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe I should ask the Minister of Energy to again supplement the amount of funding that has been supported to this province of all the investment by the industry, which, in turn, makes this province the most attractive province in Canada. We have a hundred thousand people that are coming to this province to invest their lives into this province. Looking 10 years into the future for predictability for municipalities and sustainability is not a short-term solution.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, size doesn't matter. It's what you do with it.

The Conservatives continually dodge the issue of mandatory regional planning. The bills for providing the services for all the people of the capital region come to city hall in Edmonton, but neither the MLA for Sherwood Park nor the mayor of Strathcona county has any interest in sharing tax revenues from the refineries and the upgraders. You know, in Sherwood Forest Robin Hood took from the rich and gave to the poor. I think the Member for Sherwood Park has it backwards. To the same minister. Strathcona county has clearly indicated no interest in sharing their vast tax base. What will this minister do if an agreement cannot be reached on regional planning? Is he going to yell at them? What's the plan?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I do want to say that Strathcona county and 24 municipalities, including the city of Edmonton, are around the table in the discussion of the capital city integrated plan. We are working with those municipalities, looking at ways that we can cooperatively work together and find solutions to some of the challenges we have. This is a province that has a lot of growth, a lot of prosperity. With that growth there are some challenges, and we are working on those challenges.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forecasts from the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation indicate the following. In 2008 some 55,000 new people are expected to move to Alberta, the number of new multifamily homes being built will decrease, and the average rent for a two-bedroom apartment in Edmonton will rise to $1,090 from $950 while vacancy rates drop to .5 per cent. Calgary rents will go from $1,075 to $1,140 with a vacancy rate of 1 per cent. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. When is your government going to stop being ruled by right-wing ideology . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister for the third time.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, to call a plan of 11,000 units over five years in support of housing I do not say is an ideology. It is the proposed plan. Two hundred and eighty-five million dollars extra this year in support of housing is not an ideology; $143 million to high-growth communities, $68 million in support . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the rents are still going up, and more and more people are being thrown out and are homeless. Those are the rates that are going up.

My second question is to this minister, then. Along with rent guidelines why are we not prepared to plug the loopholes in dealing with condo conversions? We're losing more rental apartments to condo conversions than we can build. That's the reality.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we do have more and more people coming to Alberta because Alberta is the place of opportunity. That is why this government is looking at supporting the housing and not only supporting the housing but supporting the rent supplement for those who need it. The prevention and eviction fund is for those individuals that may find hardship in paying their rent or being able to get their first month's rent. This government is addressing those needs and working with the people of Alberta.

Mr. Martin: That's why 61 per cent of Calgarians think they're worse off than they were in the past, Mr. Speaker.

The government's response, frankly – and the minister has alluded to it – has been pitiful. The homeless and eviction fund – yeah, it's taxpayers' money, running out of control, up to $17.6 million, fraud charges. The mortgage fund subsidy is being tapped out. How can this minister justify his answer, using taxpayers' money, when all he has to do is bring in rent guidelines and condo conversion controls? That would solve the problem.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, rent control does not work. It does not add any units to the system. We have a hundred thousand people moving into Alberta. When you have a hundred thousand people coming into Alberta, they do not bring services with them, but more importantly they do not bring housing. We need to have initiatives for housing to be built.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Off-highway Vehicle Restrictions

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents, some who have recently moved here from other provinces, like to go outdoors and enjoy Alberta's beautiful trails on their off-highway vehicles; however, many of them have been telling me that more and more restrictions are being placed on where they can go. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why are these Albertans facing so many limits on public lands?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is simple: our ever-rising population. In the last 25 years we've seen the population of this province grow by a million people, from 2 million to 3 million. In the next 20 years we expect another million people. So while the number of people keeps growing, the size of our province doesn't. There are more and more people doing more and more activities on the same piece of land. We've reached a tipping point. The old policy of allowing anyone to do anything anywhere any time just isn't going to work anymore, and that's why we're bringing in the land-use framework.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister:

given that 99.9 per cent of these OHVers are hard-working, law-abiding citizens, what should I tell my constituents who feel that off-road enthusiasts are being singled out and no one else faces such restrictions?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the reason that the off-highway vehicle community feels perhaps particularly affected by this is that they're the fastest growing recreational group in the province. In the last 20 years the number of registered off-highway vehicles has grown fourfold, from 17,000 to over 82,000. It's predicted that as many as another 30,000 will be sold just this year. So with these kinds of numbers come new challenges and conflicts. The land-use framework will be addressing these, but we already deal with some of these issues through the forestry land-use zones, the FLUZ activities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister. Again, my OHV-riding constituents provided a lot of feedback to the land-use framework of which you speak. When can Albertans expect to see this land-use framework and see it in action?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the off-highway vehicle community indeed provided a lot of very useful information to the land-use framework process. We consulted both with the public and also with stakeholder groups, including the off-highway vehicle groups. All this information is now in the department. We're developing our draft, and Albertans can expect to see the draft framework early in the new year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Government Employment Contracts

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Billions of dollars in uncollected royalties, yet we continue to see top Tories benefiting at the teat of this government and yesterday a refusal from the minister of international and intergovernmental affairs to address the contracts and an effort to explain away not making them public.

Today I'd like to talk about the contracting practices of the Calgary health authority. When they appeared before the Public Accounts Committee this past September, Mr. Speaker, we learned that Kelley Charlebois was given $12,000 by the Calgary health authority to help write a speech. He didn't even write the speech by himself; he helped to write it. Untendered contracts . . .

The Speaker: I'm afraid we're now out of time for your question, so I don't know where we're going to go with this.

2:10

Mr. R. Miller: My question is . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. The time is over by the rules of the House, so go to your second one.

Mr. R. Miller: I'll go to my second question. That's not the only one, Mr. Speaker. You know what happens? The gravy train seems to go on forever. The gravy train goes on forever if you're a top Tory. Rod Love, $42,000, sole-source contract, no performance measurements. They didn't follow their own contracting procedures. The question is to the minister of health. When is he going to put a stop to this?

Mr. Hancock: You know, Mr. Speaker, what I'd really like to put a stop to is people rising in the House and besmirching the character of individuals by throwing out unsubstantiated allegations. The Calgary health authority has the full authority to hire the people it needs to do the job it does. They're not told who to hire by this minister, and if they think they need consultants for a reason, I'm not going to spend my time going into the depths of why they believe they need a consultant. The health operation is a $12 billion operation. The Calgary health authority is close to $3 billion, and they've got competent people running their business. But what I do decry is somebody rising in this House and besmirching . . .

The Speaker: And I have to go to the hon. member now.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not this hon. member that raised those names; it's the Auditor General of this province who has a problem with the way that your department issues contracts to your top Tory friends. It's time that we put a stop to it, and he suggested that you do. I want to know when your department is going to deal with it. When are you going to stop the secrecy? When are you going to stop the favouritism? When are you going to start following your department's own policies in terms of issuing contracts? And it's not wrong. Tell the Auditor General it's wrong.

Mr. Hancock: I don't have a problem complying with the Auditor General's request with respect to contracting and everything else with respect to accountability. What I do have a problem with is people who believe that just because you've ever done work for this government or have ever been involved in the political process, you ought not to ever do any contract work. This is an appropriate process for people to engage in, and individual reputations ought not to be taken lightly as these members opposite try to do day after day after day. [interjections]

Prairie Grasslands Land Exchange

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, members of the Alberta Wilderness Association and others have recently contacted me regarding a proposed land exchange. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member Calgary-Nose Hill has the floor. You may start over again.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members of the Alberta Wilderness Association and others have recently contacted me about a proposed land exchange in the Hays area of southern Alberta. The association is concerned that ecologically sensitive public land is going to be swapped for potato production. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What can he advise the House about this specific land exchange that the Alberta Wilderness Association is referring to?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the concerns of the hon. member and also that of the Alberta Wilderness Association. The land-use framework has focused greater public attention on the importance of habitat conservation, including the native grasslands in southern Alberta.

I am aware that there have been inquiries with respect to the project referred to here, but this is pretty routine. We get inquiries all the time about the rights and obligations of leased land, of public land, and we answer those. I can tell the hon. member that as of today my department has not received any formal application regarding this specific land exchange, so it would be premature and hypothetical for me to respond to that question now.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: what is his department's policy regarding the protection of Alberta's native prairie grassland?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, in addition to the agricultural use of these prairie grasslands, they have significant environmental value that is recognized in our department's policies. Our policy is to protect these areas and to limit the footprint of any activities that occur on them. Prairie grassland under most circumstances is not normally sold, and if it were to be exchanged, it would only be exchanged if the private land obtained were more environmentally valuable than the public land given up; in other words, we only trade up.

Dr. Brown: Again to the same minister: will the minister advise the House what the policy of his department is with respect to land exchanges and particularly with respect to land being broken out of the native prairie state?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, in this context two criteria must be met. First of all, the private land that we would obtain in such a swap would have to have, again, equal or greater public value than the public land that would be transferred to private ownership. Public value here includes the conservation of habitat such as that of fescue grasslands. The second criteria is that the real estate value for the land that the government obtains, again, must be equal to or greater than the value of the land that we would swap. We also review these proposals through other departments to see how other interests might be affected. That allows us to detect if there are any other concerns. So I repeat: if we do trade, we only trade up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not a good time for temporary foreign workers in Alberta. Reports of abuses continue to pour in: employers providing housing with 14 people in a three-bedroom house, deductions from paycheques for housing, lower wages than promised. When workers finally find the phone number for the foreign worker information line, which is not effectively advertised and which is available in English only, they are referred to several other government departments. My question is for the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. How will these workers be informed about their rights and be provided with adequate government assistance instead of the runaround that they currently receive?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's true that we get sometimes as many as a thousand, sometimes over a thousand, calls a month on our foreign worker hotline. These calls are not all about complaints relative to employers. There are frequently other questions about some of our programs, like earn while you learn. If anybody isn't able to access the phone number, obviously, calling the RITE government number of 310-0000 is available anywhere in Alberta. But we've had such a response to this that I'm pretty confident that most know it's 877-427-6419. Since October 2006 we've had a great deal of positive response to our number.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Temporary foreign workers are not a commodity to be purchased for a limited time and then sent back home. They are people, many of them with families. In view of the fact that a high percentage of these workers are filling low-income, unskilled positions, my question is to the same minister. What programs are in place to help new workers settle in Alberta and be made, also, aware of their rights?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this year with the federal government doubling up their money and with continued support from ourselves, integrated settlement services have been available in several communities. We have had tremendous success with programs that provide them low-cost funds for loans if they need that for accreditation and other purposes. We have had tremendous fortune in working with nonprofit organizations both in Calgary and Edmonton. The Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers is a particular advantage for people in this city. I would say that we've had a very positive response, not only from the temporary foreign workers but others who have come here accompanying some of our PNP program candidates, too.

Dr. B. Miller: The United Kingdom has an excellent program of licensing brokers, agencies, and labour providers. It is called the Gangmasters Licensing Authority. If brokers exploit foreign workers, they are subject to hefty fines and even jail time. The British Gangmasters Licensing Authority is concerned with identifying the more persistent and systematic exploitation of workers rather than concentrating on isolated cases of noncompliance, as has been the practice of this government. Will the Alberta government put in place this kind of effective monitoring agency?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have in place – and I would like to think we wouldn't call them gangmasters – very strict legislation with very severe penalties around those who would abuse temporary foreign workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Alberta Diabetes Institute

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Diabetes touches all of us, and there is no cure. I had the opportunity this morning to attend the official opening of the diabetes research institute at the University of Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What financial contribution has our government provided to date to this new institute, and what will your department do to continue to support this institute?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a very important day, as we learned earlier both in a member's statement and in the introduction of some very important visitors to our Legislature. Dr. Ray Rajotte has led the Diabetes Institute for some time, and now we can be proud of a very solid facility, which will bring five departments at the University of Alberta together – the minister of advanced education may wish to supplement – into a common research facility. So it was a very proud day. The government of Alberta has contributed $246 million to the health research innovation facilities at the University of Alberta, and other research dollars have of course been provided by the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, about $20 million specifically to the Diabetes Institute project. The Diabetes Institute could be one of the pinnacles of success in this province of Alberta.

Mr. VanderBurg: Back to the same minister. We need to create environments that support healthy choices, Mr. Speaker. Minister, when will your department start tackling other issues, like obesity, that contribute to diabetes? It's a nascent problem.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, a very good question. I've been tackling my own problem of obesity for some months now and, I think, with some success, but I do that as minister of health because I want to walk the talk that I've been talking with Albertans about for the last nine months or 10 months, maybe, since I've been appointed to this ministry. Talking about Albertans taking responsibility for their own health, weight is a very important issue. It's particularly important with respect to adult-onset diabetes. Members may have read in the newspaper on the weekend, as well, about the impact of obesity or weight with respect to those persons who have prostate cancer and their morbidity rates. So obesity is a very important program, and we need to talk to Albertans about taking that personal responsibility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Diabetes is on the rise within our First Nations communities. To the minister responsible for aboriginal affairs: do you think that this new world-class Diabetes Institute that has opened today in Edmonton will assist in mitigating the rise in diabetes within aboriginals?

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say as a type 1 diabetic that on my first day in Alberta 30 years ago I was diagnosed with type 1 diabetes. I want to thank every member of the Legislature who joined the Premier and the minister of health today at this world-class opening. It was interesting that last year, you recall, we had: who is Canada's greatest Canadian? My wife and I – no disrespect to Tommy Douglas, who truly was a great Canadian – voted for Banting and Best. I think this institution today is a shining example in this world that the next Banting and Best will come from right here in Alberta through this great institution that we have.

The Speaker: Well, that concludes Oral Question Period. There were 94 questions and answers this afternoon. We must now return to the Routine. When we broke from the Routine for Oral Question Period, we were on the Routine subject known as petitions, and I was in the process of recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

head:

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This particular petition is extremely popular in this province. I am tabling 187 more signatures on the petition which reads that the undersigned residents of Alberta urge the government to "ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across the sector" – we had some questions in question period today on this – ensuring that the employees "are fairly compensated and that their wages remain competitive." Number three would be "employees' access to professional development opportunities," and number four would be to “introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to stand and present two petitions to the Assembly today. The first one is signed by 122 oil and gas workers and people from the province asking the government to “discard the Royalty Review Report and eliminate restructuring of the Oil and Gas Royalties.”

The second one is signed by 160 of my constituents regarding Bill 45 and ensuring that it passes and that we don’t water down the smoking law that’s coming in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, did you have a petition?

Mr. Mason: A couple of tablings, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: No, petitions.
Are there others?

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 48
Health Facilities Accountability Statutes
Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise today to introduce for first reading Bill 48, the Health Facilities Accountability Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

Bill 48 amends three key health statutes: the Hospitals Act, the Nursing Homes Act, and the Regional Health Authorities Act. These amendments clarify roles and responsibilities within our regional health system to ensure that regional health authorities have the authority and the responsibility to plan for and direct the delivery of health services in their respective regions.

The bill also addresses a need to clarify accountability, a need identified by the Health Quality Council of Alberta during its review of infection prevention and control practices. All health facilities in our province must be operated safely and effectively. Albertans expect and deserve no less.

The proposed amendments follow through on the government’s commitment to make needed legislative changes to better assure Albertans of the quality and safety of the health service delivery system.

Mr. Speaker, I would move first reading of Bill 48.

[Motion carried; Bill 48 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today that highlight health research in our Alberta. One is the program for the recent successful Northern Alberta Brain Injury Society event which I attended.

The second is the program for this morning’s official opening of the Alberta Diabetes Institute, attended by many members here and mentioned by other members today. That was a very successful opening. It brings to mind the fact that the Alberta building trades have raised almost $950,000 for diabetes research in the last four years alone. This centre is vital. It’s making our capital city and our province proud of the work being done on this devastating disease.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have a petition. But it wasn’t in the appropriate form, so I’m doing it as a tabling. That’s probably the confusion. It’s a petition of citizens in Airdrie, Calgary, and Crossfield who are concerned about Bill 46. They identify nine flaws in the bill, including lack of input farmers will have on future EUB activities, especially in light of the debacle surrounding the 500 kV line.

The second tabling is from Rhondda Dugdale, yet another Albertan who is very concerned that Bill 46 will be stripping away the democratic rights of Albertans to protect their property. She asks: who benefits from this bill, landowners or industry?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table correspondence from Peter Harvey of De Winton. He’s gone through a terrible ordeal for months in getting the medical attention he needs for a severe shoulder injury. He’s had to close his greenhouse business, which he had operated for 32 years. He’s imploring the government to take action on surgery wait times.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I’m tabling a three-page-long letter from Sharon Malott of Red Deer addressed to the leader of the NDP opposition. Sharon served our country in the Canadian armed forces in Wainwright in the ’70s. Unfortunately, she now suffers from several mental health problems and is trying to survive in the face of an out-of-control rental market and low AISH rates. She has written this letter hoping to draw the attention of this Legislature to the plight of Albertans in the same position as she is in.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table letters from 18 individuals concerned about the implications of proposed regulations for child care in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is a letter dated June 27, 2007, that I wrote to the hon. Minister of Energy regarding the invasion of privacy in Rimbey that occurred through the EUB.

The second tabling I have is an e-mail. This is the say no to Joe e-mail. This is an e-mail dated Wednesday, October 24, 2007. It’s from the Department of Energy, saying no and “please exclude Joe Anglin from the meeting.” I can only assume, Mr. Speaker, that that was about Bill 46.

My third petition is a flyer that I got last week in Lacombe, and it's called killbill46.ca. I would urge all hon. members to have a look at this website.

Thank you.

2:30

The Speaker: Well, there's no such thing as Bill 26, as far as I can see.

Mr. MacDonald: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. I said Bill 46, killbill46.ca. Sorry for the confusion. It's certainly Bill 46.

The Speaker: Okay. That's fair. I heard 26. There was no 26. Anyway, any more kill bills? Any more tablings?

Hon. members, actually we had 94 questions and answers today, so it went along a lot quicker than I thought.

We had three points of order. The third one from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has been withdrawn.

Hon. Government House Leader, your first point of order.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During Oral Question Period today we saw a shocking and bizarre performance on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, which breached, in my view, Beauchesne's 485 with respect to the use of unparliamentary language; 489, which references statements which are unparliamentary. There were so many unparliamentary statements in the member's presentation today that I can't list them all. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but essentially they amounted to misleading the public, lying, deliberately misleading, false and misleading information. That was the tenor and the tone, if it was not the exact words, of the member.

He also breached Beauchesne 64 in terms of reflection on a member. Beauchesne 64, Mr. Speaker, specifically references, "The House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members." It goes on to indicate the types of attacks, including one particular attack in which the quote was "a cheat and a swindler." I would suggest that the tack that the hon. member took today in question period against the Minister of Energy clearly falls into that category in terms of suggesting – well, more than suggesting – directly, outright stating that the minister was deceiving the public, was lying to the public, that the government was lying to the public in annual statements. That, clearly, is unparliamentary. It was totally unsupported, and I'll get into the detail on that.

Also, Mr. Speaker, Beauchesne's 409(3) is relevant. Beauchesne's 409(3) refers to: a question ought to seek information and therefore not be based on a hypothesis. Clearly, the whole gist of the member's questions was based on the hypothesis that there was something wrong in an annual statement, and I will deal with that particular piece. But also it should not be argumentative or make representations. Clearly, the member's questions were outside of Beauchesne's 409.

Beauchesne 409(7) also is a prohibition against casting aspersions.

Mr. Taylor: We get the point.

Mr. Hancock: You don't get the point. You've been belabouring the point over and over again, and you've been doing it in an unparliamentary way.

Beauchesne 409(7): "A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions."

Mr. Speaker, the questions also breached the conventions of this House that one treats members in the House honourably and with respect and takes them at their word unless there is some proof that their word should not be taken. So let's get past the citations and into the substantive matter here.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview has today and I think in past days – but let's focus on today – gotten up and tried to ask questions and in his questions put a hypothesis that somehow this government misled, deceived, lied, and all those things and referenced an annual report.

Mr. Speaker, we have a Public Accounts Committee, and the Public Accounts Committee has the designated role of reviewing annual reports. If that hon. member believes that there is something inaccurate in an annual report or something that's in error in an annual report, he should be taking that to the Public Accounts Committee and exploring that. The hon. member should not be getting up in question period and casting aspersions on a member or using unparliamentary language to make political points. He should be doing his job as a member of this House and taking any error he finds in an annual report if he finds an error – and I submit to you that he won't find one, but if he did find an error, there's an appropriate way to deal with it, and that's not by using unparliamentary language, it's not by attacking members of the government, and it's not by using inflammatory language in this House.

Mr. Speaker, let's go further into the merits of what has been happening. The hon. member has been referencing the Auditor General's report. I need not remind that member or this House that the Auditor General is an officer of this House. Taking out of context out of the Auditor General's report, which is also, by the way, in the purview of the Public Accounts Committee to look into, they've been talking about lost billions of dollars. I believe the actual quote in the Auditor General's report on page 121 of volume 1 is that "the calculation estimates a range of $0.7 to $1.4 billion per year of un-captured rent, but this can only be considered a rough estimate." A rough estimate.

So the Auditor General's report doesn't say there was $1.4 billion of lost revenue. That quote I have taken slightly out of context because there's a whole paragraph talking about what the calculation he's referring to is. But it's clear as you read through several pages of the Auditor General's report that the Auditor General was dealing with how you deal with a policy issue and doesn't come to the conclusion, not that I've seen in the report, that the Auditor General actually has a role in terms of determining public policy on behalf of the government of the people of Alberta but, rather, takes the role of pointing out some of the policy issues that he thinks should be undertaken, some of the reviews that he thinks should be undertaken, some of the issues that he thinks should be undertaken, none of which is done, Mr. Speaker, in the context of other aspects of government policy, none of which deals with the whole issue of whether there's an economic impact of a royalty change, none of which comes under the context of whether or not there might be an environmental policy, whether or not a gas flaring program might deal with another issue of importance.

I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member, by taking these out of the Auditor General's report and out of context without putting any framework around it, which, of course, he doesn't have time to do in a 45-second question, which is why he should be doing it in the Public Accounts Committee, and then suggesting, by using that language, that there's somehow lying in the annual reports of the government is not only substantively wrong but is definitely unparliamentary. I think the hon. member ought to be called to account now and ought to be asked to apologize to this House for his indiscretions.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that was certainly a very wide-ranging discussion, considering it was a point of order called on two specific phrases that were used in the House. I think what's important here are two things. The first is the role of the opposition. I note that on page 32 of Marleau and Montpetit they outline how important that is. I quote, if I may:

The role of the opposition is key to our system of parliamentary democracy. Prime Minister Wilfrid Laurier put it succinctly when he said: "... it is indeed essential for the country that the shades of opinion which are represented on both sides of this House should be placed as far as possible on a footing of equality and that we should have a strong opposition to voice the views of those who do not think with the majority."

The opposition, it's well recognized, has a role to play in this House, and that is about holding the government to account. We have a situation that has been referred to several times. In fact, I will take the same effort with it that the Government House Leader did. We have a situation where an annual report states some facts or holds something out that we are expected to take as true, and then we have other reports that challenge that.

Now, we have repeatedly asked the government and tried to hold them to account by saying, "Provide the information that backs up what you're saying because we can't get access to it," and the government is not forthcoming with those documents. We have an Auditor General's report which in three different places is saying that the information in that annual report is questionable. The Auditor General clearly had access to government documents which the government will not give us access to as well, so the questions arise.

Now, the issue of freedom of speech and the ability to raise those questions is a really important one in this House and allows the opposition to do its job. If I may reference page 74 of Marleau and Montpetit, specifically, this freedom is essential for the effective working of the House. Under it, Members are able to make statements or allegations about outside bodies or persons, which they may hesitate to make without the protection of privilege. Though this is often criticized, the freedom to make allegations which the Member genuinely believes at the time to be true, or at least worthy of investigation, is fundamental.

Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where the Official Opposition under the guidance of the Leader of the Opposition has been pressing the government to release some information, and the government has chosen not to do so.

The Government House Leader spoke quite a bit about the tenor and the tone of recent exchanges in the House, and I agree. The rhetoric has inflamed; it has accelerated; it has become inflammatory on both sides of the House. I think that if we want to examine the Hansard with as much leeway as my colleague has done, we would find, in fact, that that tone, which is mostly set by members of the government, has elevated itself in this House. Simple answers and simple tablings would have cooled the heat that has accelerated in the words on both sides of the House here. There is an escalation of inflammatory language, and it exists on both sides of the House.

I've set out that it's important that the opposition hold the government to account; that there is an upholding of freedom of speech, which is important to allow the members of the opposition to press the government on those questions; that we do have a back-and-forth, a give-and-take; and, indeed, that the rhetoric on both sides has been inflammatory in recent time and particularly over this issue.

The reflection on the individuals. I will respectfully disagree with my hon. colleague the Government House Leader in the particular set of questions that were asked today, on which he called the point of order and then took a flight of fancy over several weeks' worth of interplay between the Leader of the Official Opposition and the government. Those specific questions today were not particular reflections on an individual, if you look at the Blues, and I'm assuming that the Speaker has access to the Blues. I'm looking at the questions that the leader in fact asked. He's asking – I don't need to repeat the questions – does the minister have a responsibility for his annual report to be accurate? That's not an unfair reflection on someone.

The Government House Leader also raised the idea of a hypothesis and under 409(3) somehow suggested that we should not be questioning the government based on this. Well, we do have a situation where we have sets of documents that are conflicting, and we are trying to get to the bottom of that conflict between documents, where we have one set of documents that says one thing and we have an equally respected legislative officer whose document indicates that there is something else at play here, and in three different places he does mention that quite specifically.

On page 125:

The Department does not reconcile the one . . . to the other, so it is not clear how sensitive the measure is in comparison to detailed technical review . . . Indeed until the 2005-2006 Annual Report, the measure indicated successful performance by the royalty regimes while technical review suggested a different result.

Well, we can't get access to that technical review; that's why we keep asking for it. The government won't provide it, so they should be expecting increasing rhetoric in the questioning.

The quote on page 92 of the Auditor General's report, again: "In fact, for several years the measure portrayed satisfactory performance by the royalty regimes while detailed analysis in the Department indicated otherwise." Well, let's have the rest of the detailed analysis, please.

Let's look at page 106. Again, quoting from the bottom of that page: "The brief description concludes that Alberta's royalty regimes 'successfully encourage continued development while collecting a fair share of resource development profits.'" The AG goes on to say, "While the Department did technical work during that year, no detailed cross-commodity internal report suggests this assertion in the Annual Report."

So we do have conflicting information. It is our job to press for answers on that. We have a situation where this particular issue is becoming very heated in this House, but it is the job of the Official Opposition to press the government to be open and accountable and to press for that information to be released. I would argue, therefore, that there is no point of order.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the arguments made by the hon. Government House Leader. Yesterday I rose on a point of order under Beauchesne 484, 485, and 486 in regard to a number of remarks which I contended were unparliamentary and which I believe impugned the motives of some of my colleagues in this House, and I asked that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition be called to order and required to apologize for those remarks. However, you ruled on that occasion that the derogation was in reference to a report and not to any one person or persons.

In my submission, Mr. Speaker, the nature and the tone of those remarks have continued in question period today. If anything, they have become more personal in nature. As a consequence, I believe that the order and decorum in this Chamber is suffering. I would implore you through your good offices as the Speaker of this House to rule on these points of order in a manner that will restore and enhance the order and decorum in the Chamber. It's my respectful submission that the Leader of the Official Opposition should be called to a point of order on this issue, and he should be required to apologize to the House.

The Speaker: Are there others? No others?

I take it, Government House Leader, that in essence that was both points of order in one submission? And that's fair to the Official Opposition House Leader that the two could be dealt with at the same time.

Hon. members, there was a deterioration today, in my view. Yesterday we basically had certain words used in the Assembly. There were points of order dealt with. The chair basically indicated that as both of those points of order and the usage of the words generally dealt with a report, they could not be targeted to a particular individual and that on that basis the custom and tradition of the House basically allowed us to proceed in a certain way.

I'll give you this analogy. In an earlier life I once had the ability to be an educator, and when you walked into the classroom, you set rules. There was always little Tommy or little Mary who wanted to know exactly where that line was. They would creep right up to where that line was and stop their fingers right there at the edge of the line or put their little toe at the line, and you got through the first day. But the next day little Harry or little Billy saw this happen the day before, so he went crawling right up to the line, put his little toe or his finger one inch across the line, wanting to see what the teacher would do. Well, there were some who came down – I'm sure the hon. Member for St. Albert has experienced this once or twice – and stomped on that little toe or that little finger. As a result, little Billy or little Harry withdrew within the line, and the other members in the class observed this, saw this, and said: "Okay. The rule was there."

It seems that wherever the line was set yesterday, we crossed it today. It just seems to be this human kind of trait that doesn't distinguish from men to boys or women to little girls. When you're younger, you test it; you get older, you test it.

However, this is a kind of responsible place. This is not a schoolyard. This is not a hockey rink. There are rules of decorum, and there are traditions and everything else. There were a lot of citations given yesterday for parliamentary language.

Quite clearly in what was said yesterday and was said on a previous occasion, it is unparliamentary – underline "unparliamentary" – to insinuate that another member is not telling the truth. Now, whether the statement is artfully crafted or unartfully crafted – to just simply come up and tell somebody that he's a liar would not be very artful, or you come from another direction – it is incumbent upon the chair to intervene in such circumstances, and the chair did such today at the conclusion of the first set of comments by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Anything that can possibly create an innuendo that another member is not telling the truth is not acceptable in this House, is not acceptable in any parliament. When I take a look at the words of the Leader of the Official Opposition, and I've jumped into the first part of the question, "It's about this government deliberately misleading the people of Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Energy," no intervention from the Speaker or anyone else at this point in time.

Then the next part of the question, "Does the minister accept that he has a responsibility, a personal and legal responsibility, for his annual reports to this Assembly to be accurate, to be backed up by the facts": put a stop there with a question mark; everything's fine. But, you know, he's just got to add the following: "or is telling the truth simply a policy decision?"

Now, if I take a look at 409(3) in Beauchesne, it says: "The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations." I have a great difficulty believing in my head that that last phrase complies with Beauchesne.

Then we go on. After there was an interjection, after there was an intervention, a point of order raised, and an intervention by the chair, another question. It's midway through the preamble, then the question: "My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister admit that the decision to report false and misleading information in the annual report was a political decision, one made by members of the government with the support of this Premier?"

Well, I'm going to repeat 409(3). "The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations." Clearly, to me, that was offside again. Twice in the same time. So I don't know what the jig is. I have been here long enough to know that some members deliberately will push the envelope to see where it will go.

There are other options than pushing the envelope. One option is, of course, that the chair can get up once, twice, three times, name the member, and the member's gone. I've seen that happen before, done deliberately, too, by some members: deliberately provoke and reach that point. The chair has experienced this, has seen it. Only once in 10 years that I've had the pleasure of being the Speaker have I named such a member. I'm prepared to do it if need be.

We've also seen a situation whereby part of the jig might be: well, let's all just sort of storm out if we don't get our way. I've seen that happen too. Things went on; life went on; civilization did not come to an end.

There are a number of comments that the chair wants to make as well. With respect to the hon. Opposition House Leader's explanation about the role of the opposition, this is not in question by any member in this Assembly and is most certainly not in question by the chair. The Official Opposition has a very responsible role to play. It must – it must – have an opportunity to express itself. It must hold the government to account, but it cannot interpret the account to its will for its own pleasure, at a minimum, or go to the extreme, fabricate the account to in fact find a benefit. It must hold the government to account, but that account must be one that is based on decorum, truth, honesty, integrity, and the like.

It doesn't help to say that the tone today was "mostly set by members of the government." If that isn't inflammatory in itself, I don't know what is.

Hon. members, the fact that one does not get one's way is not a legitimate reason to violate decorum, good manners, and responsibility. Yes, the opposition must hold the government to account. Yes, the opposition has every right to press the government to release documents. But there's a way of doing it without, in fact, providing personal innuendo.

The bottom line and the conclusion to all of this is that in listening and in reading, I do believe that there were words here that did cause offence. I don't think that's appropriate, and I'm going to ask that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition find a better way of expressing, "Is telling the truth simply a policy decision?" and "Will the minister admit that the decision to report false and misleading information in the annual report was a political decision, one made by members of the government with the support of this Premier?" The intent there is to say through the back door that that was absolutely false. I think those comments have to be withdrawn. I do believe there is a point of order, and I find that that is the case today.

The question is: how do we proceed with this now? Can I accept that the message will be conveyed to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition by the Opposition House Leader?

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, I am empowered by the Leader of the Official Opposition to follow the ruling of the Speaker. I therefore withdraw his comments and apologize for the offence that was given to the House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, all hon. members in this House should accept that apology and withdrawal. This matter is now closed.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 45

Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On to the positive work of this Legislature for Albertans. I'm pleased to move today third reading of Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this to be a historic moment in Alberta. I answered a question in the House earlier today with respect to the role of obesity in terms of human health as we move forward and the importance particularly relative to diabetes but also other chronic conditions. I made a statement earlier this year that in order to deal with the issue of wellness, in order to talk to Albertans with some sincerity and credibility on the issue of how we keep ourselves well, we needed, first, to start with the most obvious and most direct health hazard that we have in our society, and that's smoking. I was very pleased, therefore, to be able to bring forward Bill 45, which does accomplish a number of things with respect to helping Albertans with their own personal health.

The bill speaks to smoking in public places and enhances the Smoke-free Places Act with respect to places in which smoking can be undertaken or, more particularly, places where it cannot be undertaken so as to protect other Albertans from the hazards of second-hand smoke. We haven't gone so far in this province – and I don't think I know of a jurisdiction where they have gone so far – as to tell people that they cannot smoke themselves. That's up to them. But in terms of being able to affect other people's lives with smoke, that is a public policy issue, and that is an issue of the protection of persons' health status.

The bill does provide for a broader range of areas in public places in which people are prohibited from smoking. That's an advantage. I think it's an advantage to say that not only can you not smoke in a public place, but you can't smoke within a certain distance from a door, from an open window, from an air conditioning vent. You can't draw the smoke back into the public place. You can't force people to walk through the smoke to get into a public place. This bill enhances the protection of Albertans from that perspective.

Are there other things we could do? Obviously there are, Mr.

Speaker, but I think this bill goes a long way to help Albertans with the stated goal of protecting their health and enhancing their health status.

We go further in the bill, of course, to prohibit advertising in certain places, the banning of the so-called power walls. The words "power wall" are not in the bill, but the effect of the bill is to prohibit the advertising and promotion of tobacco products in any place where they are sold or offered for sale or in any manner if the advertisement or promotion is visible from outside a place in which tobacco products are sold or offered for sale.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The sale of tobacco is also prohibited in certain facilities: health facilities, campuses, pharmacies. Mr. Speaker, the prohibition of sale is in some cases symbolic because, certainly, people can go somewhere else and buy their cigarettes. That is true. But I think it's important to make a clear distinction that a healthy area should be a healthy area, and when we're promoting health, we should be promoting health. So the act does that.

I think the act goes a long way to take away from the public view, again going back to the power walls, particularly, in my opinion, where it is focused on encouraging children or young adults to start smoking. Power walls are clearly aimed at advertising the sale of cigarettes, encouraging people to take up the habit or to resume the habit or to continue the habit at a higher level. This bill will at least slow that process, at least take that out of the faces of our children.

I think it is significant, Mr. Speaker, that over the course of the last several years we've had a number of children who have been advocating. I speak to grade 6 classes often, and when I do, I often talk to them about my role as a representative in this Legislature and what it means to be a representative. I also talk to them about the need for them to play their role as citizens, that I can't be a representative without them playing their role as citizens.

Well, it's absolutely encouraging, Mr. Speaker, that in the course of the discussion of this act, in the time that it has been in the House and over the course of the summer as the House was in recess, we've had numerous representations from students, from school groups. We had the BLAST team in, I think, both in June when the bill was introduced and was first discussed in the House and again just the other day while the bill was in committee, the students from Nellie McClung who have been very active in this promotion. That has been very important. It's been very important to me as a legislator that we've had students come forward and say: "We know this is bad for our health. We think there should be a law because we think that others should not be able to affect our health."

Quite frankly, I've had representations from students and from others that we ought to go further, that we ought to look at banning smoking in enclosed places like cars where children can be affected. This bill doesn't do that. But what I'm really pleased about is that we've engaged young people in this province in advocacy on a public policy issue that is so important to their health and to their future.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to acknowledge the hundreds of other Albertans who took time to make their views known on this bill. We've come a long way in a short time in terms of recognizing the need for this type of legislation. This speaks to the hard work and dedication of a number of organizations that are increasing awareness of the hazards of second-hand smoke and of the health concerns.

I was at the opening of the Alberta Diabetes Institute today, a very valuable facility which brings researchers together. In managing chronic conditions, whether it's diabetes, whether it's stroke, whether it's the whole cardiac area, pulmonary disease, whether it's lung disease, we know that cigarette smoke is hazardous to our health. We know that it is a very significant factor in the health care costs that we all bear as a public. We know that reducing the amount of smoking is one of the first elements that we can undertake as a society and as individuals so that we can have a health care system that's sustainable, we can have a population that's healthy, and we can make sure that the acute care services that Albertans need and want are there for them when they need it because we're not using them unnecessarily. We're reducing the pressure on that system, and we're improving the productivity and quality of life of Albertans as individuals and in our communities by addressing a very, very important issue.

So I would like to ask members of this House to support Bill 45 in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a good day, I think, in the House when we're able to see third reading of a bill like Bill 45. It's so often referred to just as the smoking bill; we forget what the real name is: the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. I will quite likely repeat a number of the points that the Minister of Health and Wellness has already made because in many ways my progression through this has exactly mirrored his.

As the Speaker is aware, in second reading and in Committee of the Whole I was able to invite into the gallery members of the BLAST team from the Nellie McClung school in Oliver school in my constituency because they had been so instrumental in energizing their peers and colleagues in other BLAST teams in other schools to really get on this particular issue and follow it through. It was a great opportunity for me as a legislator to work closely with a younger group of people in teaching them about how important public advocacy and citizen representation is. I come from a social activist background, and I sometimes despair that that generation is no more. I was really excited by the reaction of the BLAST teams at Nellie McClung and also in other schools to jump onto this issue and really grab hold of it and run with it. I think it was a good experience for them. It was a good experience for me, and clearly the Minister of Health and Wellness also benefited from it.

I'm sorry that I can't remember the names of the other schools that participated, but about six months ago, in the spring, on a fairly chilly day, there was a rally held on the steps of the Legislature by a number of different BLAST groups from different schools. Again, it was co-ordinated by the group from Nellie McClung. So those folks certainly recognize the effect that smoking certainly could have on them as probably they've seen the effect that it's had on their parents.

We understand the numbers now of the effect that smoking can have on our health. We're starting to be able to get some hard data about what it costs us in financial terms. I think that many of us for many years have understood the human toll that cancer, particularly lung cancer, can cause us.

I was going to talk about some important people. You lose them to lung cancer. I lost someone to lung cancer this summer, and it makes me angry. So I'm very grateful to see this bill. I'm very grateful for the people that worked on it. I wish it could have come sooner to save people that I loved. I know we all feel like that in here. I'm sorry to get emotional on you, but this kills people. It's a human cost to our society. It's a tremendous financial cost to our society. We have to do everything we can to be able to combat it. We're legislators. We're leaders. We should be able to do this work, and I'm glad we've done this work today.

Thank you to everybody that worked on it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.
3:10

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to share a few thoughts on Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. As an advocate of anti-smoking legislation throughout my tenure in this Assembly I am pleased that this piece of legislation has received the support it requires to reach third reading.

Through the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy, introduced through the work of AADAC a few years ago, and other legislation brought by other private members we have made good progress with tobacco legislation in this province. The goal has always been to achieve a comprehensive strategy. This bill adds to what we have been trying to do; that is, to have a comprehensive strategy for tobacco reduction. We are responding to the concerns raised by our health officials and many other citizens regarding tobacco use, including many from my own constituency. They have been strongly urging that we adopt legislation that will help to reduce smoking, and I'm sure that everyone involved in public health and those concerned for smoke-free places are encouraged by the progress that we are making here today.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that as elected members we have a responsibility to promote healthy choices, and it is in the best interests of all Albertans to be able to interact in smoke-free environments. I want to congratulate the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness for bringing this legislation forward. It serves a valuable purpose by acknowledging the shared responsibility that we have to each other's health and well-being. I believe Bill 45 is a very positive step forward for this province, and I will be supporting it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of Bill 45. Bill 45 is a very positive step forward. I want to both thank the Minister of Health and Wellness for taking the leadership in bringing this piece of legislation forward and congratulate him for getting it through this session of the Legislature so that it becomes law in this province and we begin to enforce the provisions of the bill in order to reduce the dangers to health that result from both smoking directly and second-hand smoke, which affects the health of those who don't smoke but may yet suffer from the hazardous consequences to health. Those hazards are very serious, you know, leading up to loss of life, death.

Mr. Speaker, this bill brings us a long way from just a few years ago when we found it impossible in this House to move forward in the way this bill is moving the province forward, so it really is a good day. It's refreshing to see a consensus on all sides of this House with respect to what this bill proposes to do and the almost unanimous support that it seems to enjoy around this House, this Assembly, for the measures that it proposes to take.

Mr. Speaker, it's talking about the health hazards that smoking creates and the cost of it to society, to individuals, and to the health care system, I think, something that must be kept in view when debating this bill and speaking in support of it.

In 2002 approximately 470-some million dollars was spent on Alberta's health care system, caring for tobacco-related illnesses that smokers and victims of second-hand smoke perhaps suffered because of the use of tobacco products. They're, of course, in addition to the health care costs which we must try to contain and reduce as much as we can through prevention and through taking measures such as this bill proposes to take.

There are other societal costs which arise from lost income due to premature death, illness, disability, worker absenteeism, reduced productivity, and other such losses. Tobacco is often responsible for a substantial loss of life and property damage, accounting for 1 in 4 fire deaths in Alberta from smoking. You know, people fall asleep or accidentally start a fire in their dwelling or their workplace, resulting in entirely unnecessary and tragic deaths and property damage.

Mr. Speaker, every well-designed study that we know of produces the same evidence, strong evidence which shows that the economic impact of smoke-free laws is quite substantial. There were concerns in this province by some businesses a while ago. I'm glad that we don't have that concern anymore. These studies indicate that after the initial adjustment period, the so-called feared negative consequences of preventing people from smoking in hotels and motels and restaurants are very temporary. They're transitional, and after a while the hospitality industry does not suffer from what at one time was feared might result in terms of consequences for them.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that in drawing up the regulations for this bill, some of the amendments that are proposed, some by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, with respect to expanding the list of smoking-prohibited places could be expanded. We had an interesting discussion during the debate on the bill during the committee stage. Some of the proposals that were brought forward in the form of an amendment by the Member for Edmonton-Centre which has proposed the inclusion of recreational facilities and other places where cultural and artistic activities are performed, undertaken, would be a good start.

We do need to protect very young children from smoking. This bill is about public places, so we can't really perhaps talk about what happens to very young children when parents smoke when they're travelling in the car and the child is seated in the back seat. Given the conception of the bill, that it talks about public places, I think perhaps there are some constraints on us to seek the inclusion of the definition of a motor vehicle, a family automobile which has infants and young children travelling in it with adult parents who are smoking, to be included in the public spaces. It's a suggestion that's worth considering. We need to protect from the very, very severe, hazardous effects of cigarette smoke, tobacco smoke, our own children who are travelling with us.

I think some provision needs to be made either in the regulations or perhaps when there's an opportunity to revisit this piece of legislation to encourage Alberta parents, encourage adults travelling in family automobiles, private automobiles with their young children, to desist from smoking. We need to discourage as much as possible smoking activity in automobiles as well as in other places.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, again I want to reiterate our support for this and want to congratulate the minister for piloting this bill through this House to its conclusion, hopefully, today. Thank you.

3:20

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions, comments.

The hon. Associate Minister for Capital Planning.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make a few brief remarks with respect to Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. It's a bill that I'm going to support, quite obviously. I want to begin by saying on the record how much I appreciate the hon. minister of health and his efforts in bringing this particular bill forward.

We've heard a lot of talk over a lot of years in this Assembly with respect to the ills of smoking and tobacco use in general, with respect to the lethal consequences of some of its use or overuse. We know about the costs not only to one's personal health that arise from this. We also know about the cost to the pocketbook. We also know about the cost to the health care systems across this great dominion and, in particular, right in our own province. We also know about the cost of damage to property that often arises as a result of careless smoking and/or from improper extinguishing of those cigarettes. Property damage, forest fires, a number of things in some cases have been traced to improper extinguishing, and we're all well aware of those. The intention is not to blame one segment of society but to point out the ills and some of the consequences that may arise with respect to this particular habit.

We all know how addicting smoking can be. We all know that we need more emphasis being put on the prevention side, research on prevention and, ultimately, treatment, as we heard earlier with respect to another situation involving diabetes. While I'm not drawing a parallel between one and the other, I'm drawing a parallel between what goes into these programs to help educate the public. In this particular case we're doing a wonderful job educating them. Not only are we educating. We're also enforcing through this bill the serious commitment that our government has to helping people overcome smoking and in many cases overcome the commencement of smoking at an early age.

There are specific rules in the act, which we're all familiar with, that talk about how we will not tolerate the advertising or promotion or displaying and so on, and we also talk about the serious consequences of the contravention of these laws. The fines and the penalties that are reflected in the bill range anywhere from $10,000 on the first offence up to, I believe, $100,000 for a next offence up to the revoking of one's licence if necessary. I'm talking about retail licences.

I also find it very interesting that while we are again leading the way for some, we should be mindful of the impact that this kind of a discussion in this Assembly is having on other jurisdictions. Mr. Speaker, I was in England over the summer, and I noted that after several years of debate they have decided to go smoke free in that country. It's tremendous kudos to them as of July 1 of this year to have taken that step. Obviously, there are other jurisdictions that are following suit. So we should be mindful of how powerful a message like this can be elsewhere. Hopefully, it will influence others to take appropriate actions.

My final comments really are just with respect to the tragedies that sometimes engulf the young people who get hooked on this habit far too early. As a former schoolteacher myself and a business owner I saw all too often how negatively and how quickly our youth can be impacted by following peer pressure or following in the footsteps of adults. I think this bill will go a long way toward curbing that, hopefully putting the butt out forever.

I'm grateful, again, to the Assembly for its unanimous support. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and also the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose and others who have made very eloquent and passionate presentations and/or bills. In particular with Wetaskiwin-Camrose, I recall when I was the associate minister for health some eight, nine years ago, when he first brought it up in some discussions at the time. I'm sure he's having a joyous day of it today, as is Calgary-Lougheed, as is my colleague and friend from Edmonton-Whitemud.

Thank you very much for this. I will be pleased to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available again. Seeing none, the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would again like to support the minister on his bill and bringing it forward. I know that from the constituency of St. Albert there's been a lot of interest and a lot of support for this piece of legislation. I see in the research that was done by our people that 80 per cent of the population of Alberta supposedly are looking for a complete ban on smoking in public places.

I often wondered about the power of cigarettes, and I remember one of my good football colleagues who recently died in the States: good looking, beautiful voice, good actor, had everything going for him. Yet he had a tendency to smoke, and the power of that was unbelievable. I don't smoke, yet this thing seemed to grab hold of this gentleman.

You know, the influence of smoking on young people is just amazing. I would hope that we not only look at this as a start. I think that we should continue to do sound research into why young people, especially young women, smoke cigarettes. I'm always amazed when I go to chapel sometimes at the Sturgeon hospital on Saturday that there seems to be a tremendous number of people in the hospital that are sitting outside in the cold weather smoking. It's a very powerful addiction, and I think we have to remember that and continue to work at it as to the reasons why. I won't say much more about this. The eloquent speakers before me have suggested all the reasons.

The only other thing I would mention that amazes me is that where I live now – I've just recently moved to a condo that I think is going to be completed in 2014. They don't seem to be able to get the workpeople to do the job. But the amazing thing I'm noticing is the power of cigarettes at the coffee rounds in the morning and the number of workmen that smoke cigarettes. The implication of that to me is absolutely frightening from the health perspective and from the property perspective because I wonder what's going to happen to this condo that's in development in the future. Is it going to be destroyed by fire? I think there's a tremendous economic cost, and there is a strong addiction in the workplace, so I think there has to be some looking at that as well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of research.

Certainly, the government, the people that have worked on this bill deserve credit. I know that I am fully supportive of it, and I think it's a step in the right direction. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just take this opportunity to express my support for Bill 45. The point I really like is to think about the advertisement attracting people. I have been told that first it starts out with some thoughts, some thinking, and then it becomes words and becomes actions and then becomes habit. So if we can't have control of this smoking habit, we have to go backward a bit and stop the action of it and then to advertising and thought, starting out. I believe this bill will help to at least remove the habit of smoking.

I don't want to go into the debate of how bad smoking is to health and other matters. That's been evidenced in health care. Also, I can say that in my personal family matters, among our family members I have a brother who started smoking very early, and then he developed health problems. The whole family clan worried about it and spent a lot of effort to help. Unfortunately, he did die at an early age because of the result of smoking affecting his health. From that personal perspective I really believe that we need to at least reduce or eliminate smoking in terms of health and cost to society.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

I travelled around the world a bit before I came and lived in Canada. Recently I travelled back to some places. I found that tobacco smoking in developing nations is increasing, and that makes me worry. When I got back here, I saw this bill, and I think this should be a beacon or an example that we can show to other parts of the world that we are doing something here that other parts of the world should look into and use us as an example or model.

With this, I want to commend the Minister of Health and Wellness for bringing this bill forward and the support from all my colleagues in the House for this bill. Thank you very much.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak in the third reading of Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. I also would like to thank the minister of health and his staff for bringing this bill forward.

This bill will allow tobacco control measures to be implemented in Alberta, which include a province-wide smoking ban in all workplaces, including bars, casinos, and bingo halls; a ban on prominently placed point-of-sale tobacco displays, commonly called power walls; and prohibit tobacco sales in pharmacies, public colleges, and universities.

In 2002 the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, the Mazankowski report, included recommendations to reduce tobacco use such as regulating advertising and promotion targeted at youth and regulations to prevent smoking in public places. In 2005 legislation was introduced here to ban smoking in all workplaces. Unfortunately, that bill was watered down, allowing smoking in any building where minors are not permitted. This led to municipalities being forced to take the heat when it came to deciding on instituting a complete smoking ban in their community.

I want to make a note here and commend the work of our Alberta Liberal health critic, Laurie Blakeman. She has been working for over a year to increase public awareness of tobacco industry tactics, especially the use of power walls, and she did a lot of this work with students in Edmonton schools.

We know that teen smoking in Alberta is rising. As a former high school administrator it was often a great concern of ours where they could smoke, how we could discourage the smoking, and so forth. We became really aware that the number of female students smoking was increasing. Given that the majority of smokers begin smoking before turning 18, we need to take action to reduce the youth smoking rate. I know the answer is always education, but it is not enough. We do need restrictions to support education. Power walls placed at eye level at point of purchase influence consumers, especially the youth.

I particularly like section 6 of this bill because it adds a section restricting the display, advertisement, promotion, and sale of tobacco products. It prohibits the display of tobacco products in a place visible to customers. That's power walls. It prohibits retailers from advertising tobacco products anywhere the public is permitted access or anywhere that is visible from outside the premises, such as windows. It prohibits the sale of tobacco in health facilities, postsecondary institutions, pharmacies, and retail stores containing a pharmacy.

According to the government's own numbers every year 3,400 Albertans die from tobacco-related causes. This province spends $471 million annually on health care costs directly attributed to tobacco use and $1.8 billion on lost productivity, fires, and property damage. Taking action to reduce these risks and costs is the duty of a responsible, accountable government. We must as politicians be leaders and take action on something the public has supported for years and most other provinces have already done. Even the government's own Mazankowski report from 2002, as I said, made these recommendations.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

If we are concerned about the retail losses, I'd like to quote from an Action on Smoking and Health news release of June 7, 2007, where it says:

Data supplied by Canadian tobacco manufacturers under Health Canada reporting requirements show that Alberta retailers received 11.8 million dollars from tobacco companies last year for stocking and displaying their products. The same data shows that tobacco industry payments to retailers in provinces that have outlawed powerwalls have remained largely unaffected. For example, payments to retailers in Saskatchewan have declined by only 5 per cent since the province's powerwall ban took effect in 2004.

"Alberta will be the first province to implement a powerwall ban and a tobacco sales ban in pharmacies at the same time," this Action on Smoking and Health news release says. "This coordinated approach will greatly reduce any potential impact on remaining tobacco retailers due to increased consumer traffic."

A few years ago 77 per cent of Alberta pharmacists voted in support of a tobacco sales ban in pharmacies following a referendum conducted by the Alberta College of Pharmacists. Both the Alberta Pharmacists Association and the Alberta College of Pharmacists have called for a ban on tobacco sales in any premises containing pharmacies.

It is time for a comprehensive action to support health for Albertans. This includes protection from second-hand smoke. We need legislation that is consistent across the province, that does the right thing; that is, a complete smoking ban in workplaces and public facilities. So I'm pleased to support Bill 45.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to get up and speak to this particular bill. I'm going to be very brief. Years ago people could smoke anywhere, even in hospitals. After more than 40 years plus of warnings and reams of information that we're receiving from Health about the effects of smoking, we're finally at the point in Alberta where, I think, it's a momentous moment.

I harken back to '93 with one of my friends, who is sitting in the gallery, when I met them at a policy conference. I think it was in 1993 in Red Deer. We were having this particular discussion. At that particular time I smoked. [interjections] See, Mr. Speaker? It's a good thing we can't see the colour of my face on the camera. But we had this discussion about smoking, and I think I took him aback somewhat because when we were talking about this issue, I supported AISH at that particular time on their initiative in 1993. I happened to be one of those people that was hooked on cigarettes morning, noon, and night. I would get up, I'd have my cup of coffee, and I'd have my cigarette, and I'd be happily, merrily going.

If you remember, Mr. Speaker, through the period of this Legislature – I go back to some pictures when there used to be ashtrays and cigarettes in the Assembly. I think you've been around long enough to know that we used to be able to puff away in our caucus. So we have come a long way just since I've been elected, since 1993.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge the hundreds of people that have worked hard on this bill and over the years have pushed the initiative to get where we are today. I'd like to acknowledge the Canadian Cancer Society, the Alberta Cancer Board, the Alberta Lung Association, the Alberta Heart and Stroke Foundation, Action on Smoking and Health, and the Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge two people that I have a great deal of respect for. One is Les Hagen, who has been pushing this initiative for as long as I can remember. The other person that I'd like to acknowledge is a friend and a constituent, Christian Velthoen, who has kept me abreast and has not let me forget about this particular issue from day one.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:40

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was privileged to be able to speak to this bill in committee, so I'm pleased to be able to speak to it at the moment that it will be passed. Certainly, I would like to thank the Minister of Health and Wellness and congratulate him for using his skill and many years of parliamentary experience to get this bill to this momentous moment where, in fact, we will pass it.

In committee I spoke about my father having died of lung cancer 40 years ago. It was in those days that it was just starting to be a kernel in people's minds that there was the connection between smoking and cancer. My mother certainly made it and did live to be 95. I was pleased that the Solicitor General, I think, of the United States actually had started to bring that up because it made her think, and she quit instantly upon my father's death.

I think that my hon. colleague from St. Albert had mentioned about young women starting. Now that we have set this path that hopefully society is on in terms of not smoking, I think that where young women and some young men are influenced is that it's quite obvious that the increase in smoking in movies and on television is just very apparent. Hopefully, society will be able to put some sort of pressure on the movie companies that at this point in time actually depend on the cigarette money to produce their movies. That may well be the next big step towards having all of the planet clear of smoke.

But at this point in time I would just again like to thank the minister and am privileged to be able to vote and be in the House for the third reading of this momentous bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is again available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to speak to Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. I must commend the minister for bringing this bill forward. Smoking isn't cool in Alberta anymore. Addiction to smoking tobacco is a brutal and devastating addiction. Bill 45 will certainly have a great effect in reducing this devastation and giving addicts a greater incentive to quit. The health effects and the discomfort to others through second-hand smoke in public places will be further constrained, the effect on children who see their parents in public places and other places and other people that they look up to will be further limited, and this will limit the pressure that they see to smoke. The societal pressure will be reduced.

Mr. Speaker, you know, the Member for St. Albert mentioned the tradesmen who smoke on construction sites. I worked on a lot of sites and spent a lot of time in lunch shacks in the past. Sometimes the blue haze was hard even to see through, and it still does continue to some degree to this day even though it is lessening. I hope that this will have some effect in helping to ensure that smoking isn't cool anymore.

The effect on young women who do seem to still have some desire to smoke – some of that I know anecdotally from talking to many – is that they think that, you know, it's helpful in keeping their weight under control, but I don't think that's true. I've lost a bunch of weight without having to get into smoking again or anything like that, and I think it's important.

When I did work in the trades, it was often, you know, seen to be sort of cool to smoke. But when I went back to university, I wrote a paper. Actually, it won an award, and it was published. It was on asbestos specifically, but it spoke also to the relationship between other factors and asbestos. One thing that a lot of us at one time would do was work with asbestos. Gosh, I remember even sticking it through table saws and watching and saying how neat it was to watch the asbestos fibres just float in the air around us. Everybody knows now how devastating that is. But one thing I found out in that research when I did that paper, Mr. Speaker, was that the incidence of lung cancer and the incidence of asbestosis was increased not once, not twice, but 40 times for people who are moderate smokers. Forty times, almost a death sentence. That has, you know, been seen in our health costs.

I helped people in later times to access the Johns-Manville class action suit, which settled asbestos-related matters. Also, because their addiction to smoking went along with their asbestos exposure – and you see this with other materials and other fibres. Mr. Speaker, the need to reduce smoking and the way that Bill 45 will help with that, the way that Alberta is breaking its societal addiction to smoking, which is helped by this bill, is very, very important.

I'm very pleased to support the minister, to support the bill, to support the government in this bill, and I commend the minister for bringing it forward. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is again available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and participate in this discussion on Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. As was said before, this is a good bill which attempts to ban smoking in all public places, to prohibit tobacco product displays in retail outlets, otherwise known as power walls, and to ban tobacco sales in pharmacies and on postsecondary campuses.

Now, as you know, Mr. Speaker, I am a pharmacist by training, and this is something that I voiced my support for before in this Assembly, and it is something that my entire profession has supported. It should come as no surprise that I like this bill, and in particular I like the piece around section 5 of this bill, which removes the exceptions which were put in place before, in previous acts, which allowed smoking in designated public places or where minors were not permitted. In essence, what we're doing is making the province truly smoke free in its entirety, and this is a direction that I am fully supportive of.

We don't want to leave these decisions to municipalities to make, and then it's hit and miss: some municipalities adopt that direction in their bylaws and regulations; some choose not to. I think direction and leadership had to come from the provincial government, and I am glad that the provincial government, now with the support of the Assembly, is sending that message – and we're sending it very clearly – that no one municipality should feel free to allow smoking in any of its public facilities, that it is provincial policy, that this is not allowed to happen.

It was also mentioned that in a plebiscite or a referendum amongst members of the pharmacy association – now it's called the Alberta College of Pharmacists – some few years ago 75 per cent plus or even a higher number, 77 or 78 per cent, of pharmacists surveyed indicated that they did support a total elimination of tobacco sales from drugstores in this province. I have said on record here before that this was a direction that I supported as one of these people who voted, and one of the things that I wanted to make clear was that we were not going to allow any exceptions, that regardless of size, regardless of the type of facility, or regardless of the design, any location that had a pharmacy, any location that employed a pharmacist would not sell tobacco products.

Again, I find this positive. I find it timely and a healthy move on the part of the government, and I urge all members of this Assembly to also support it at this stage.

We all know, Mr. Speaker – and you should as well – that second-hand smoke is dangerous. Second-hand smoke is hazardous. We're trying to help people to quit smoking for their own benefit, but we're also trying to protect others around them. Chemicals that are found in second-hand smoke include things like carbon monoxide, which is found in your car's exhaust. You're looking at ammonia, which is found in window cleaners. You're looking at things like cadmium, which is found in batteries, and arsenic, which is found in rat poison. These are but a few of the chemicals that are incorporated into tobacco products. You don't need me to tell you how dangerous these molecules are.

Second-hand smoke makes you sick. If it doesn't kill you, it makes you sick, and it makes you sick chronically, so you have many, many years of suffering as a smoker. There was once a study published that basically talked about what length of time it takes for your lungs to come back, for your lungs to heal, to restore themselves to their original state after you've been smoking. I can't remember the statistics quite clearly, but I know that they said that it takes at least two years for every year of smoking. If you have smoked for 10 years, for example, it would take 20 years for your lungs to come back to their original state.

Ms Blakeman: I smoked for 32 years.

Mr. Elsalhy: Who did?

Ms Blakeman: I'll be dead by that time.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. Some of the members here have indicated they've smoked for 30-plus years. Well, I think it's hopeless for them.

Second-hand smoke hurts children as well, Mr. Speaker. It hurts babies because babies cannot detoxify their bodies. They cannot handle that onslaught of poison. It hurts older children as well, and it also hurts pets. Everybody that is close and dear to you, if you're a smoker, would be adversely affected.

One of the other things I wanted to briefly mention is that as we're talking about banning smoking and banning the sales of tobacco and making it harder for people to inflict that type of harm in terms of second-hand smoke, I would also like to draw the Assembly's attention again to the issue surrounding smoking cessation: smoking cessation aids, smoking cessation programs, and so on. As I mentioned before, most of our insurance plans do not cover smoking cessation aids.

If we look after the ill person after they have been diagnosed with an affliction or a disease like lung cancer, for example, and we cover their medications because we need to help them and come to their assistance, I think it would be also equally prudent to support people who want to make that decision, who want to quit early on, before they actually deteriorate and before they get extremely sick and it costs taxpayers more in terms of medication and operations and things like that. I am repeating my call for the minister of health and for his colleagues to maybe lean on and talk to insurance companies like Blue Cross and others to see what we can do as a government and as a society to get these insurance plans with the program, to get them thinking about what they can do to add to their formularies, to add to their benefit lists things like the patch, things like chewing gum, nicotine gum, things like the inhalers, and so on and so forth, and then even medications like Zyban, which I mentioned in the House before.

Mr. Speaker, again I repeat that I am in support of this. I commend the government, and I commend my colleagues in the Official Opposition for quickly realizing how beneficial this is and voicing their strong support as well. I urge all members to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Did you want to speak on 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Brown: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Please proceed.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to draw the attention of members of the House to the principles on third reading of a bill. I refer to Marleau and Montpetit page 533, where it states, "Debate on third reading is designed to review the legislative measure in its final form and is strictly confined to the contents of the bill." I think that if all members adhere to that, we would make further progress in the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments, and I'll take that as a comment.

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, since I was the last speaker, I can only assume that the hon. member stood on 29(2)(a) to react to my comments. Or was that more general as to everybody in the Assembly? We hear the hon. member, and we know his expertise as a former lawyer, and we understand that he wants us to be focused on the effects of the bill in third reading. I thank him for drawing our attention to it. As one member I promise to adhere to that.

Thank you.

Dr. Brown: Well, I can assure the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung that the reference was not a personal one with respect to his debate. However, it was one of more general application to the proceedings in the House today.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on 29(2)(a). This is becoming popular.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I think, generally speaking, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has quoted a specific reference, but there are a number of other references which quote third reading as being on the anticipated effect of the bill when passed. So it's perfectly appropriate for my colleague for Edmonton-McClung to be commenting on the fact that once this is in place, a smoking cessation program would be appropriate because that is following on the anticipated effect of the bill. We want more people to quit as a result of this bill, and assisting them to do so with smoking cessation programs is more than warranted. I realize this wasn't a point of order, but I'll contribute to the discussion thus.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?
If not, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't indulge in a lengthy speech in support of this bill as I know all members are ready to vote on this, but I would be remiss if I did not express my support for this very important piece of legislation. I think in the closing aspect of this bill I would like to send my regards and send kudos to our minister of health for bringing this bill, which often was met with vocal criticism, albeit from a vocal minority but nonetheless with criticism. It took a lot of courage to bring legislation of this nature forward, and it is a progressive piece of legislation.

We all know that costs of health care are rising in this province. One of the drivers of our costs of health care is smoking, and there is just no way of denying it. As a parent of a young girl there is nothing that could be . . .

An Hon. Member: A beautiful girl.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you. Yes, a beautiful young girl. There is nothing that is as important to me as making sure that she doesn't take up the awful habit of smoking.

There are also other individuals instrumental. I know that a large community of medical professionals and other professionals in Alberta have been supportive and instrumental in drafting this bill, and they should be thanked at this point. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek listed many of them in her previous comments that I heard, but one that she would like to add, I know, and I will add on her behalf is Dr. Roger Hodgkinson, who has also been instrumental in drafting the bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that with our young people in mind, with our health care system in mind, and with the health of Albertans in mind all members of this Assembly will find it in their hearts to support this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is again available.

Seeing none, are there any others who wish to participate in the debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister wish to close debate?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly I'd like to thank all members of the Assembly for speaking. I've heard every member speak in favour of the bill. I do not want to anticipate the Legislature, but I look forward to passage of the bill and thank my colleagues in this Legislature for what I think is a very good piece of public policy work.

[Motion carried; Bill 45 read a third time]

Bill 37
Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate November 8: Dr. Oberg]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and considering the wonderful accolades of the previous bill brought – and I certainly would lend my support to that – I believe that Bill 37 is a partner in this in that it increases the price of tobacco that will be paid, which ultimately decreases the availability of tobacco to a lot of people.

There were some questions raised about why the tobacco revenue was not specifically designated. As you know, we have a habit here of not dedicating revenue. We feel that all revenue should be put into one pot, and each particular area should be weighed against the other one for its importance, whether it's education, whether it's health care, whether it's infrastructure.

There was also a question about AIMCO and the investment in tobacco. I want to make a couple of points. First of all, there's about a $57 million investment either directly or indirectly in tobacco-related industry in AIMCO, and one of the reasons for that, quite simply, is that we have tasked them in our policies to go out and make the best possible investments for Alberta. In saying that, I would also add, though, that the cancer prevention legacy fund, which also has very close to $500 million in it, does not invest in any tobacco-related companies.

Mr. Speaker, we are also in the process of taking a look at exactly how we look at policy when it comes to investing. As you know, there is presently a financial investment advisory committee that is out, and we'll have the report in by the end of the month, so I wait with bated breath as to what they're going to say.

Mr. Speaker, this is but one of the reduction strategies that are out there. The hon. minister of health has brought in a wonderful bill that has brought together a lot of other components. As Minister of Finance it's my job to bring in the taxation component. Indeed, in this last budget it may have pre-empted a little bit – and for that I apologize – Bill 45, but it had to be brought in in Budget 2007, or it could not have been brought in until Budget 2008, and there's really no point in wasting that extra year in putting forward a project that we know will stop smoking, that will decrease the number of people that smoke.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Assembly to grant third reading to this bill. I think it's an important bill. I think anything that we can utilize to stop the amount of smoking that is being done is extremely important, and I would ask the Assembly to vote on this.

One other question, though, that I will touch on very briefly is the whole idea of illicit tobacco use and tobacco importation. When you raise the taxes, you open yourself up to having contraband tobacco brought into the province. I still feel, though, that ultimately the contraband tobacco is illegal and therefore should be dealt with under the courts, under the legal system. I believe that raising the taxes is still the most important way to do it and that the majority of people are not going to be buying their tobacco from the back of a semi-trailer and that the police and the court system should come down very hard on those people bringing in contraband tobacco.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to our neighbouring provinces, which tend to be where contraband tobacco would come from, we are very close to the taxation in British Columbia and Saskatchewan. As a matter of fact, if you exclude the provincial sales tax, we're actually higher. I will not comment as to what is going to be in Budget 2008, but I would anticipate that people out there know my feelings well enough about tobacco.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the Assembly grant third reading of this very important tax bill, this very important adjunct to Bill 45, which we just passed, and I would ask for consent as soon as possible.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased on behalf of members of my caucus to support Bill 37, Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

I agree. We do see this as a companion bill to Bill 45. It's something that this caucus has been urging the government to do for some time. At the same time we have also been urging the government to be very careful and, in fact, to regulate itself on investments in tobacco companies through the heritage savings trust fund. There have been some minor nods towards that, but I think that anything we can do to discourage smoking – as a smoker, you know, the cost didn't really deter me. A lot of people said that when cigarettes hit a buck a pack, they were going to quit, and they're still smoking at $10 a pack. But I think there is a psychological break point for just about everybody. Increasing taxes is a disincentive, and I hope it's going to work.

I disagree, respectfully, with the minister that the funds shouldn't be targeted, particularly around the cessation programs. I would like to see more of a direct tie between the revenue collected through this and smoking cessation programs or support for AADAC and the programming that they offer there.

Clearly, we are all aware of the money that's involved here. Something around $880 million will be collected this year in tobacco taxes. I would prefer to see some direct connection with how much is going into smoking cessation because at this point it's $9 million. It should be more, particularly if we talk about funding through Blue Cross and making that available to more people than the approximately 50 per cent that can get it now. This is definitely a cost to the health care system. I think I heard the minister say that somewhere in the range of $1.3 billion is a direct effect from smoking on our economy and our cost, so $890 million and more isn't going to hurt if this bill passes.

Again, on behalf of my caucus I'm pleased to support this, and let's hope this is another useful tool in that toolbox to move us towards a healthier population overall. That will put us in a better place to be able to resist some of the other health issues that are coming our way in the future. I'm willing to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 37, the cigarette tax amendment act. Interesting to see two bills related to addressing the whole problem of smoking and seeking reduction in the consumption of tobacco by way of smoking and other ways being discussed back to back. I think it certainly underscores the importance of taking a variety of actions, introducing interrelated policy initiatives together in order to achieve the real benefits of reduction in tobacco consumption.

Mr. Speaker, when such measures were introduced in California, for example, between 1988 and 2004, lung and bronchial cancer rates declined in that state at a rate four times that of the rest of the U.S.A. in reaction to decreases in tobacco and cigarette consumption. Similarly, close to 59,000 heart disease related deaths were prevented during the first nine years of the California tobacco control program. So there's no doubt that legislation and public policy initiatives intended to reduce consumption of tobacco by way of smoking and other activities is certainly a measure in the right direction, is a measure that needs to be supported by us.

I think that in addition, insofar as this bill is concerned, Bill 37, it's one step among many that are needed – Bill 45 is one – to discourage smoking in public places. This one will make it more expensive to consume, to smoke, but I think that when we talk about consumption, we also need to be mindful of the pattern of consumption of tobacco in society. There's a good bit of information available on this, that unfortunately people who are in the low-income bracket, in fact, are likely consuming tobacco and cigarettes on a larger scale than those who are not in those income brackets.

While the measure is well intended and based on the assumption that by taking this economic initiative – by making it more expensive to smoke, that is – it will discourage all kinds of people from smoking, two things, I think. The economic side effects of it will be borne, I think, primarily by people who can ill afford it unless at the same time we do invest more resources into smoking cessation programs to help the people who will bear the brunt of the economic burden that will increase as a result of this.

I think the point has been made already. The Minister of Finance, of course, while conceding that there may be a contradiction in the investment policies that the government presently has – that is, it continues to invest some money in the tobacco industry because of the returns that that minister was saying Albertans get from those investments as part of the heritage fund and other funds that may be invested that way – also drew our attention to the cancer prevention fund, $500 million. That fund does not invest in this. Now, if the logic behind not investing from the $500 million is a sound one, then surely the same logic should apply to any other investments from public funds that are made in the tobacco industry.

I will urge the minister to reconsider the investment of heritage fund related investments in the tobacco industry and to try to convince his caucus and colleagues to change the policy. True, it's the policy for now, but it's not a policy that can't be changed. If the logic behind the other investment, the $500 million for the cancer prevention fund, is a sound one, I think it will be equally sound and appropriate to apply it to any other investment, be that from the heritage fund or others.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's time for the minister and the government to consider increasing funding in tobacco cessation programs. Nine million dollars is presently used, but it's not enough. Smoking tobacco has, as was pointed out by my neighbour here from Edmonton-Manning, devastating consequences in terms of afflictions. It also has devastating effects as an addictive drug. Addiction is a very, very crucial part of stopping smoking. I have known many friends over the years, colleagues that I worked with, well-educated men and women, who struggled to quit smoking. They knew that it was hazardous to their health, that it could in fact lead to fatal illnesses that they would suffer from, yet they couldn't stop smoking because of the addictive nature of smoking.

That's the other side where I think attention needs to be paid. If this bill is to have a payoff, if this bill and Bill 45 are to bear results, I think more attention needs to be paid, more effort needs to be made in treating smoking not only as an indulgence that can be prevented simply by increasing the cost of indulging in it, but I think we need in a resolute manner to treat this smoking habit as a serious addiction. We should develop public policy measures that address the problem of smoking as an addiction and therefore help reduce its incidence and hopefully prevent disease and the waste of financial resources that we need, once smokers begin to suffer from it, to provide medical treatment.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and hope the Minister of Finance is taking some note of a few of the suggestions that I made and will try and address them as we move forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'll be very brief. I just want to take a moment to disagree with the Minister of Finance. I really do believe that he probably has access to people who could find a better way of using that $57 million than having to invest in tobacco companies. There are a lot of oil companies out there that I understand make a really good return on their dollar, so perhaps we could change our tobacco money to oil money.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, are there others that wish to participate?

Does the hon. Minister of Finance wish to close debate?

Second Reading

Bill 11
Telecommunications Act Repeal Act

[Adjourned debate November 8: Mr. Dunford]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I promise to be fairly brief on this bill given how thorough and extensive it is. It basically repeals the name for Alberta Government Telephones, AGT, which is an old, old company that used to exist many years ago. I don't think we're necessarily opposed to that. It's something that doesn't exist anymore.

But I have to ask a question as a layperson. AGT ceased to exist quite a few years ago. Why did we have to wait until 2007 to actually sort of wake up one morning and say: "You know what? It no longer exists. Let's deal with that"? That's just one question I had, you know, as to the delay. I don't want to call it tardiness. [interjection] Yes, it was initially in something called a miscellaneous statute, which we deal with here, as you know, Mr. Speaker, something that is typically minimal or of very minor impact. I think it was pulled out because it somehow raised a flag for some member of the opposition, and I need to seek clarity from the government as to why it would do something like this. I think it was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford who actually raised that flag, and I will be eagerly anticipating his explanation why he deemed it worthy of more scrutiny.

As a retailer – and many retailers in this province do this. We sometimes sell prepaid phone cards. Some of these prepaid phone cards are actually from the big companies, you know, the typical big players in the market like your Rogers and your Fido and your Telus. But some are also from the smaller companies, and I'm not going to mention their names because we have hundreds, literally hundreds of them available at grocery stores, at gas stations, in drugstores, and even in the bigger box stores like Zellers and the Bay and places like that. Everybody sells these prepaid phone cards now.

I wanted to remind my hon. colleagues and yourself, Mr. Speaker, that in the spring I was talking about consumer protection and the need for more recourse for consumers in this province who are sometimes wronged or deceived or lied to or robbed of their money. People buy these prepaid phone cards, and they're promised as per the displays and the advertisements that this particular card for $5 gives you 500 minutes in Canada and the U.S., or this particular card allows you to phone the Philippines. For five bucks you get 37 minutes or whatever. People trust these outlets, these companies, and they buy these cards. They try the product, and then sometimes it doesn't deliver what it promised. Instead of your 500 minutes you get only 200, or instead of the 37 minutes to the Philippines you get 12.

Then some of them have hidden fees as well. They have, you know, per-minute charges and per-day charges and per-week charges. Not everything is listed in that brochure or that advertisement, and sometimes they offer you a website, but most times, no, they don't. Sometimes if you have a complaint, they give you a toll-free number and you try phoning it. Good luck. Nobody typically answers, and then should you get an answer, it's usually: oh, it's because you used it the wrong way or because you didn't finish it all in one call. Well, who's going to talk for 500 minutes in one call?

[The Speaker in the chair]

Anyways, I have experienced a lot of trouble with these products, Mr. Speaker, and as we're talking about telecommunications, I'm talking about updating our way of doing things and, you know, getting with the program. I think the government, hopefully, would address issues of this nature. People are losing money, and some people might argue: well, a card for $2.50 or a card for 5 bucks or even for $10 is not that much. But if you multiply that by the number of people who get ripped off and scammed, then you're looking at a lot of money.

I'm hoping that the Minister of Service Alberta, being in charge of our consumer protection division, would maybe task some of his employees in his department with maybe an investigation into this practice. I bet him and I bet you that it's a lot of money at stake, and many people, if asked, would come forward and even testify that they lost that kind of money for those types of products.

I have to repeat my call for better consumer protection legislation in this province, and I also would advocate that maybe we need a secretariat or a separate arm of the government that just handles that and is not tasked with other competing jobs because this is of utmost importance, in my opinion. You know, if you get five people doing it or 10 people doing it, I don't think that's enough. I think it should be what it used to be under previous administrations, a stand-alone agency or arm of the government that handles consumer complaints, fair trading concerns, and unfair market practices.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I am not opposed to Bill 11, and I would urge all members to vote in favour as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon and speak for a few minutes on Bill 11, the Telecommunications Act Repeal Act. I actually think it's quite appropriate that we be here today to discuss this act because this act really is the final nail in the coffin of publicly owned telephone companies in this province.

I'm going to begin my remarks by thanking the Legislature Library for the good work that they do in providing information to us. One of the really neat features that they have is a page on the website called Scrapbook Hansard, and I'm sure Mr. Speaker will be familiar with that. Before Hansard was actually kept in this Legislature, they have gone back into newspapers, and they've managed to pull archival material from newspapers to represent what was said in the building, even though Hansard wasn't actually kept.

One of the first nuggets that I gleaned from this website was a reprint of the Speech from the Throne in full, the very first speech that was given to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, on March 15, 1906. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it was a Liberal government and Premier Rutherford who drafted that speech. The Lieutenant Governor read from it, and he read as follows:

The growing necessities of commercial and social activity in the Province require that telephonic communication between the different sections of the Province should be rendered as inexpensive and effective as possible, and your careful attention will therefore be directed to the consideration of providing means towards this end.

So there we have a Liberal government in the very first throne speech in this province espousing the need for a publicly owned utility, that being telephone companies.

Now, only a matter of a few days later the Edmonton Bulletin reprinted some more material from this House, and actually March 20, 1906, is when this particular piece appeared, again courtesy of the Scrapbook Hansard on the LAO website. In this particular piece, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition – and I have to confess I didn't verify whether or not Mr. A.J. Robertson was a Conservative Leader of the Opposition, but I'm going to suppose that that might have been the case. Anyhow, he responded to the Speech from the Throne with these words. He said that the government mention of telephonic communications was rather colorless; that it did not suggest or frame any plan. I thought that was rather ironic, that we had a Conservative Leader of the Opposition suggesting that the government had no plan. How times have changed.

It went on to indicate:

Possibly this was because the Government had no plan and had to meet the House in order to get one. The Conservative party he intimated believed that Government ownership was the proper solution of the telephone question and that they would be found coinciding in any move in that direction, but that they would have liked something more definitive in the speech.

That was the response to the Speech from the Throne and the suggestion that we should have a publicly owned telephone company.

Now, another piece that I found quite interesting – and this appears to be an editorial column from the Bulletin on February 15 of 1907, and the headline is Telephone Policy. It says, Hats off to the . . . government! Hats off to the Hon. W.H. Cushing! The telephone policy enunciated by the Minister of Public Works in the legislature yesterday marks an epoch in the history of Alberta. It is the most important step in public ownership ever taken by any government in Canada, and is a knock-out blow to the Bell Telephone monopoly in this province. There is no proposition to buy the Bell company out or to do business with them in any way, the government policy is a clear cut business proposition to build and operate telephones for the public. If the Bell has anything for sale or feels like selling they must come forward of their own accord.

Mr. Speaker, it goes on, and I'm not going to read the entire article into the record, but I do believe there are some interesting lessons there for all of us, coming from just over 100 years ago.

Now, of course, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Government Telephones wasn't the only publicly owned telephone company at the time. Edmonton Telephones was actually established about the same time, and I found it interesting to note that in 1911 and 1912, according to an article that appeared in the Edmonton Real Estate Board's publication, Real Estate Weekly, there was a two-storey brick building built at the corner of 101st Street and 112th Avenue, and this building, interestingly enough, was designed by a gentleman by the name of Jeffers, who, as you well know, also designed the Alberta Legislature Building. So that was a neat little melding, I suppose, of history.

The article went on to say that the two exchanges that were built in those two years along with the Strathcona Telephone Exchange, constructed in 1908 by Alberta Government Telephones, "were the electrical lifelines that kept people in touch." The Strathcona Telephone Exchange was purchased by the city of Edmonton after the two cities amalgamated in 1912.

The history of Edmonton Telephones and its relationship with Alberta Government Telephones, of course, became quite controversial at one point in the 1990s, and I thought it was relevant to discuss for a brief moment the role that former leader of the Official Opposition and a former mayor of Edmonton, Laurence Decore, played in that particular period. Those of you who have been paying attention to telephone companies in Alberta will probably remember that there was a period of time when Edmonton Telephones got into a bit of a dispute with AGT because while the rest of the province was served by Alberta Government Telephones, Edmonton Telephones had to purchase all of their long-distance service, all of their access from Alberta Government Telephones, and that wasn't just for other parts of the province but, actually, international calling as well. It all had to come through AGT, and therefore AGT had an awful lot of control over the rates that Edmonton Telephones charged.

The mayor of Edmonton at that time, Laurence Decore, decided to put a fight against that and fight for autonomy for Edmonton Telephones. Part of the agreement that they had with Alberta Government Telephones at the time was that we would submit Edmonton's telephone records to Alberta Government Telephones by magnetic tapes. Well, Laurence Decore did that, as required by the contract, but he encrypted the magnetic tape so that AGT's system could not read those tapes, and therefore they had no way to actually bill Edmonton Telephones for the long-distance services that had been used. This dispute was eventually settled, and life returned to normal, I suppose.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, in 1995 Edmonton Telephones was sold to Alberta Government Telephones – by then they had become Telus – and that was the end of that chapter in terms of a publicly owned telephone company by Edmonton. However, there is a legacy that carries on to this day.

City council in Edmonton decided to take that money, the proceeds from the sale of Edmonton Telephones, and turn it into the Ed Tel endowment fund, and that fund is doing quite well today. Initially, it was established in 1995 with $467 million. At the end of the last business year that fund was now worth $704 million. In fact, it's generating so much excess revenue that the city budget recently benefited to the tune of $8.8 million. The city council decided to take some extra money out of that endowment fund and move it into their revenue so that they could lessen the blow of – I think it was mentioned earlier today – what is expected to be a double-digit tax increase.

The last thing I'd like to point out, I suppose, about AGT and the connection to this place that we do business in is the Annex building, that many of us have the pleasure of calling home, and it really is home. I have actually slept in my office in the Annex building a couple of nights since I've been here.

Mr. Speaker, the library staff were very accommodating once again in confirming for me what I had suspected, already knew, and that is that the building that we refer to as the Annex was actually constructed for Alberta Government Telephones in 1953 and was known as the AGT Building for many years. In the years 1963 and 1964 it was added to – it was originally only six storeys high – to the current 12 storeys. I'm not sure whether or not they added asbestos at that time. Certainly, there is asbestos in the building from its original construction. We heard earlier the Member for Edmonton-Manning referring to the negative effects of asbestos, and I'm going to guess that there may have been more than a few employees that worked on the Annex at one time or another that may also suffer from the effects of having been exposed. In 1966 the building was sold to public works, and presumably some time after that the Legislature started moving into the offices.

I just thought it was important to go over a little bit of the history of the public telephone companies in this province, Mr. Speaker. It's with some regret that I see this bill coming forward, not because it isn't a necessary bill. Clearly, we've spoken in the past about the need to review legislation and get rid of pieces that are no longer valid, and this is one that qualifies for that. But I think it would have been sad to let it go without a little bit of commentary on the long history that public telephone companies have had in this province and the great service that they've provided to the citizens of this province, and I'm glad to have had the opportunity to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Would there be additional speakers on this bill?

Should we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Bill 41

Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce for second reading Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

Bill 41 was referred to the standing policy committee after first reading, and I'm pleased that the standing policy committee did recommend to the House that we proceed with Bill 41.

Health care professionals play a very critical role in the health care system, and in this province as in all provinces in the country governance of health professions is done through regulatory colleges. It's a process that works well. Self-governance has served us well and will continue to serve us well. Regulatory bodies function independently of each other and the health system operators, so there's an issue of assurance that we need to deal with, hence Bill 41. Government's role is to provide that assurance to the public, notwithstanding that we have self-regulated professions and that those professions do operate in the best interests of the public, that they do have the capacity to provide for the most part the governance in the way of bylaws, codes of conduct, standards of practice.

The health care system is in fact becoming more and more complex. We're operating now where we have a stated policy of government that we want to have health care professionals working to the fullest extent of their capability, training, and expertise. We're working very diligently with health care professionals on multidisciplinary teams, methods in which health care professionals, different professions can practise collaboratively and collectively for the better good of Albertans. So it's important as we do that to make sure that our codes of conduct, our ethical standards, and standards of practice are synergized, that they work collaboratively together, and that they are synchronized appropriately.

It's also very important, as we have a range of health care professionals working together not only at cross-profession but within, if you want to call it, a range or a hierarchy of the profession, that their standards of practice, codes of conduct, et cetera, work together. So there's a role for the government, the Minister of Health in particular or through the Minister of Health, to work with the professions to make sure that we have that kind of a collaborative practice and that the codes of conduct, the standards of practice, and the ethical standards are working in concert.

Now, earlier this year we had a very unfortunate circumstance with respect to issues around infection prevention and control, which has been discussed in this House before, so I won't go into the details on it. But coming out of that incident, I as Minister of Health asked for a number of things to happen. One of the things which we did was ask the health professions to respond with a review of what they had in place with respect to infection prevention and control standards, and we had a report on that, which was released in August of this year.

While there are – and I want to say this – many very positive things happening in the province by the professions in respect to quality of care, infection prevention and control, there are gaps. There are issues that need to be addressed. So it's important when that happens, when you see that, to work collaboratively, to encourage the health professions to work both independently and to work collaboratively with each other to make sure that those gaps are filled.

But there is a responsibility as well on government. There's a responsibility on government to provide assurance to the public that those gaps are being filled. So I want to be very clear that it's not my intention as minister and it's not government's intention, nor would it be appropriate, for us to step in and do things with respect to the standards of practice or the codes of conduct. In fact, many of them, Mr. Speaker, are standards which are negotiated by the professions with their sister and brother professions across the country. It's not that easy to step in and tinker with bylaws or standards of practice or codes of conduct, but it is still fundamentally important to be able to say to Albertans that the role of assurance that government holds is there, is being fulfilled, and that we have the capacity and we have the authority to do it if and when necessary.

With respect to Bill 41, then, I would just highlight that there are four categories of amendments being proposed to the Health Professions Act. The bill itself is called Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act because the medical professions are not yet, in fact, under the Health Professions Act. They're still under their own act. We anticipate the medical professions being brought in perhaps by the spring. So it's necessary to amend both acts in one circumstance.

Within Bill 41 there are four categories of amendments. The first category of amendments provides, as I've been speaking about, for greater accountability. Amendments are proposed to both the Health Professions Act and the Medical Profession Act, and it's really around this ability of the minister – and I want to emphasize – in extreme circumstance to be able to direct the profession to change a code of conduct or bylaw or standard of practice. I say in extreme circumstance because the expectation, the reality will be – it has to be – that one would not make such a change unilaterally or, as some have said in public discussion on this bill since its tabling in the spring, on a whim.

This is not about taking away self-regulation. This is not about defeating the very effective process of self-regulation of the profession, but it is about re-establishing the ability of the government to fulfill its role of assurance to the public.

It is about recognizing the complexity of the system and understanding that health care professionals are working together not only, as I say, in the hierarchy of the profession – in other words, nurse practitioner, RN, LPN, nursing assistant or personal care attendant, doctors, physicians' assistants, whatever other subsequent professions we might put in place there – but across professions, where you have, such as they proved so effectively in the bone and joint institute, the ability of health professionals to work together as a team and work with others, with the technicians and other support personnel, to make much more effective use of the health care resources and much better use of patients' time and provide a much better outcome to patients by working collaboratively. But if they're going to work collaboratively, they have to work with an understanding of a consistent set of ethical standards, of codes of conduct, and standards of practice.

It's government's role because if there was ever a problem, people wouldn't go back to the profession about the problem. They'd come to government. In a SARS pandemic, in a Walkerton situation, in any of those, to use extreme examples, it's not the individuals involved – sure, they're held accountable, but it's not those individuals that are expected to provide the assurance to the public. It's government that's expected to provide the assurance, so it's necessary for government to have the tools to actually do that assurance.

It should be clear that while the amendments that we're bringing in in this first category are about authorizing the minister to give direction to a health regulatory body to make, adopt, or amend regulatory bodies' bylaws, regulations, or standards of practice, it's to do so when there are gaps or inconsistencies. It's to do so after full discussion has happened, after you've gone through a process of discussion, unless there's an emergency. It's to do so only if after consultation, facilitation, mediation, and arbitration there needs to be a mandate. It should be clear – and I want to make that clear on the record – that this is not a first-in solution. This is a last-resort solution.

The second category of amendments basically talk about strengthening reporting on public health matters. Again, this comes out of discussions we were already having but was highlighted by the events this spring at East Central health, particularly at St. Joseph's hospital, and the necessity to make sure that there is a clear understanding of the primacy of the Public Health Act and the requirement on health care professionals to immediately report threats to public health to a medical officer of health. That provision, that requirement to report, prevails over any of the confidentiality provisions in the Health Professions Act, the Medical Profession Act, or any of the other regulations or bylaws governing health professions. It must be seen as paramount that the assurance of public health comes first, and if there's any question about the primacy of any of the various acts or regulations or bylaws, the duty to report has priority.

The third category of amendments that are being brought forward in Bill 41 deal with, in essence, the ability to provide support to colleges. This also had some degree of concern being expressed by members of the profession because you have, in fact, under the Health Professions Act a structural regime that applies to all of the colleges. But, in fact, one size doesn't fit all. Although it was a useful exercise, it's a very important structure to have a Health Professions Act and to have a standard organizational framework and a process for public involvement and those sorts of things.

In fact, when you have newer professions, when you have emerging professions, when you have some smaller professions that perhaps do not have the capacity to carry out all the functions that are required of a profession, there may be a need for support. It's in that vein that these amendments come forward, to say that in appropriate circumstances there can be an administrator appointed to perform a registrar function or to assist with a complaints director or to do the conduct and competency committee functions, that, in fact, these are helping provisions, but they also are fail-safe provisions. You could appoint an administrator in a circumstance where a profession fell on hard times and was not able to actually carry out its functions.

So while the major professions, the ones that we've known and loved for a long time – the College of Physicians and Surgeons; CARNA, the College and Association of Registered Nurses; the College of Pharmacists – are well-established, very strong professions, one would not expect to see the need to use this provision with respect to those professions. I can't even imagine a circumstance where that might come into effect. However, it might be very important to be able to have these provisions with respect to supporting a new or emerging profession.

Again, under our health workforce plan one of the things that we want to try and accomplish is to have new and emerging professions be able to come forward, be able to practise their profession in the province and add to the health workforce in an appropriate way to really, again, use the full skills that people might have, the education that people might have to provide appropriate health outcomes for Albertans.

The Standing Committee on Community Services recommended imposing limits on the term of office for any person appointed as administrator. The bill currently allows for a term of an administrator to be set in the appointment. The intention is to help colleges eventually operate without an administrator. I'm not anticipating an amendment coming forward in that regard, but I wanted just to highlight that that came out of the standing committee's report.

The fourth and last category of amendments really provides for greater clarity. Members will know that the Health Professions Act came into effect a number of years ago. It has been our practice, as we've learned and grown and as we've brought professions into the act, to do amendments from time to time which, basically, update and improve the act. So the changes in that category, for example, deal with the responsibilities of employers and employees. Employees must provide evidence to their employers of valid professional registration. Employers must ensure that they employ the right health professional for the right job. Those are the types of amendments in that portion of the act.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 41 I would commend to the House. I would ask the House for support. I think it's a very important piece of amending legislation which will provide the minister and the government with the tools it needs to provide the assurance to the public of Alberta not only, as we've now introduced in Bill 48, that with respect to the regional health authorities there is a clear line of authority in process and accountability but that with respect to health professions there is a clear line of assurance and responsibility. While we do delegate significant opportunities to professions to self-regulate and responsibilities to professions to self-regulate, there is still a role of assurance that government must have, and Bill 41 provides the tools.

It's also important, as I said, because there needs to be a clear indication – and this is the appropriate place for it – that whether health professionals are practising on their own, in their own practices, or whether they're employed by or working within a health authority, they have a duty as health professionals to report any public health concern to the medical officer of health.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I would ask for the support of the House on Bill 41.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. If a government member would like to participate, kindly advise.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is one of these interesting bills that you see occasionally coming from the government which has something good in it, and then that is balanced by bad things in it. We were willing to support the government in the amendments that they are proposing in Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, in providing clarity and certainty around the situation that arose specifically with the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Vegreville in which there was uncertainty about who was supposed to report to whom or even if there was a requirement to do that. I am a fan of certainty, particularly where public health is involved, so those amendments and the section that contains those amendments I'm certainly willing to support as the shadow minister for Health and Wellness.

I have not heard any complaints from any section of the health professions or members of the public who weren't supportive of this. I think it helps everybody to know exactly what the expectations are and that they're laid out clearly: what are the lines of communication, what is the timing around it, and who's supposed to do it to whom? That kind of clarity is very helpful.

We certainly had a scare around infection control both in Lloydminster and Vegreville earlier this year. It scared a lot of us and really brought into high relief the need to have those lines of clarity and authority. Certainly, the Health Quality Council report, from which flows much of the legislation that the minister has referred to, was pointing that out. In addition, when we look at some things like a pandemic preparation, as the minister alluded to at the end of his remarks, that is one of the key ingredients. It is around clear lines of communication and clarity of roles and responsibilities. So the first section that appears in Bill 41 under Public Health Threat and the changes that flow through the Health Professions Act and others I think: we have no problem with that. That's the good.

Now the bad. A number of members of the health profession took advantage of the policy field committee public consultations to come and present, and I'm glad that they did. They were able to get their concerns well on the record. I may repeat some of those concerns, but I think it's important to have them laid out in this House.

I think the second part of this, specifically what's included in section 135 that's being amended, is pernicious, the part that's under Part 8.1, Direction, Support and Variation, specifically the minister's direction under 135.1 and everything that follows after that. I know that the College of Physicians and Surgeons really objects to this, and frankly so do I. This I think is an excessive reaction to the situations that arose. This is granting the minister an unwarranted extension of powers, and it is unwarranted.

Further, it fundamentally challenges the concept of self-regulation, and that is what we were trying to set up under the Health Professions Act. We have these professions. They're experts in their field. We recognize their right, essentially, to self-regulate and that they are the best people to be doing it. Then what we have is this overlay from the minister that says: well, yeah, all of that's true except if I decide that it isn't. So I would argue that this sort of thing fundamentally challenges that whole concept of self-regulation and all the other things that fall under that new Health Professions Act.

It's all about self-regulation. They've made every possible health profession conform to that by setting up a college, an association, a series of criteria for meeting standards in the profession, for self-regulating on discipline procedures, on training, on ongoing, lifelong evaluation of professional qualifications and practice. We've done all of this work to set this up. We've been operating under that assumption. It's worked pretty well for us so far, and now we have this overlay where the minister can basically interject himself into any component and for no good reason. The reasons that the minister has laid out are not good enough, not to make that kind of a change in what we have in a system that's working pretty well for us, not perfectly but, you know, pretty well.

I think there are a number of possibilities that arise out of a change like that. For example, how keen will the pressure be to capitulate on a negotiation in another area to avoid having the minister decide that this is such an enormous case that they're going to have to invoke these powers and come in? Pretty strong. I can speak from experience on that one. The not-for-profit sector in this province has been under enormous pressure to be careful, not to make too much noise, not to distress the government by pushing too hard on certain advocacy things because they held all the money strings in a lot of cases.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think we can look not too far in the province for other examples where the government has not played ball on this kind of thing and where there is a coercion factor that comes into play. You know what? Sometimes that's our own fault, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes we self-censor. Sometimes we make choices about our organizations or our companies in fear of some sort of interference from the government because they have the power to do it. Okay. That's our fault. We shouldn't have self-censored ourselves or made decisions based on that. But you know what? We do it because of fear. We do it because the government has already given itself the power to interfere with us. That's what's wrong with the whole second section of what's anticipated in this act, in Bill 41.

The minister says: oh, we're not really going to use these powers; you know, this is just really for an unanticipated extreme emergency.

Well, you know what? If the powers are not to be used, they should not be legislated. The government surely has another way to deal with this problem. If this extreme, far-reaching, highly unlikely situation is ever going to arise, then they have a number of other tools at their disposal. This makes it too easy, and it's too darn tempting.

I think we've seen a couple of other examples where we have major conceptual legislation that gets adjusted a bit by this government and as a result other things happen that, I hope, were not anticipated, but perhaps they were. You know, the idea of collective bargaining that got tinkered with when the government in negotiating with CNRL changed the division 8 labour code. That has now allowed for changes in master agreements. So there's an example of where they gave themselves the power. They changed something that was conceptual legislation, and then they've gone back and used it not for good but for evil, I would argue, if I may paraphrase, Mr. Speaker.

Where is another example? Well, that would be around the confined feedlot operators, where they tinkered with it and allowed those to be closer to things like schools and communities. You know, we can find examples of where this very same government, these very same people – not 25 years ago, Mr. Speaker, not 40 years ago or 70 years ago, but this group of people – have made changes in other substantial pieces of conceptual legislation, and that resulted in them then coming back and using it, again, I would say, not for good but for evil.

What underlying problem is being solved by the changes that the minister would like to see in this legislation? Again I'm not talking about the beginning part, about the public health, about that clarity. I'm talking about the other sections, where the minister is now able to go in and arbitrarily change regulation power and a number of other powers that are delegated now or are allowed to be evoked by self-regulatory organizations. What powers and what problem is being solved by this? I don't think the minister was able to articulate exactly. It's all sort of, "Well, maybe it's this," or "Maybe it's that," or "I could imagine possibly at some point in the future." Uh-uh, uh-uh. That is not what legislation is for: some whimsical, magical, possible thing in the future. It has to be more concrete than that to be giving itself such enormous power.

If it's not a problem that's being solved, then what policy issue is being addressed through this? Again, I can't see what policy issue is being addressed. What policy issue needed to be advocated that's now being addressed by the minister giving himself powers to be able to go in and arbitrarily change self-regulatory groups? Again, that can't be answered.

I heard the minister say: well, this was being done for what if or role of assurance. Well, again that brings up the issues of trust. This government continues to give itself very expansive powers, especially through regulations, which are not open to scrutiny by this Assembly. The discussions and reasons behind it do not appear in Hansard. They're not streamed through live audio or through live video streaming on the Internet. The citizens and the members of the opposition have no ability to scrutinize the government on why they arrived at those particular decisions. It's behind closed doors, and for the kind of changes that are being anticipated here, that is inappropriate.

There are a couple of things really wrong around those issues of trust. There are issues around transparency and accountability. What kind of report back do we get if the minister decides that he wants to come in and do this? What sort of accountability and transparency do we the public or members of the opposition in this House on behalf of the public get to have to scrutinize when the minister decides to do this? It's not there, Mr. Speaker, and that is wrong.

There also need to be checks and balances on power. Power corrupts. Absolute power corrupts absolutely. This government continues to give itself more and more intrusive powers into every aspect of our lives. That is inappropriate, and we the people have to curb that power. That's part of the push back that citizens should have against a government. They should be able to advocate to keep the government in check, and so is it the role of the opposition to do that.

I will not support this legislation as it stands. As I said at the beginning, I'm more than willing to support the public health concerns that were being addressed because of the confusion that arose over those situations that started with St. Joe's hospital and then moved beyond that last spring. But the second part of what's anticipated in this legislation is inappropriate. It's more than that. It is pernicious. I don't trust this government with that kind of power. I'm not willing to give them that kind of power if I can't trust them with it. I have enough examples in front of me of where that government took that kind of power before and then did things that were against the tenor of what was expected out of that, and I feel they misused and abused that. I don't think it's appropriate to do that.

An Hon. Member: Do you have some examples?

Ms Blakeman: I gave the two examples, if the member was listening. He's welcome to check with Hansard.

I won't support it because this is being made unilaterally. I don't like it being made through regs, which this government tends to do. There are other opportunities for the government to react to pandemic situations. This kind of power should be used only as a last resort, and I don't see anything on the horizon that would justify the minister giving himself and the government that kind of power at this point in time.

I will look at amendments for this, but I do not think what's being anticipated here is appropriate in any way, shape, or form.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to participate in debate on Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. You know, some of the bill is, I suppose, absolutely necessary. We learn things as we go along, and the bill aims to provide for greater accountability to Albertans about the consistency of health care standards of practice, require the reporting of public health issues despite any other confidentiality in the respective acts, and provide for professions to be regulated in the Health Professions Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as the previous speaker said, most of that's desirable, and certainly we learned things recently by what happened in east-central Alberta. But I think the other part of the bill, that we all know is the most controversial part, is that the minister gains new power to intervene in professional bodies. I notice that the minister said that one of the purposes of this act was to increase collaboration between the various health professions. He's done that indirectly because I think he has almost all the associations against him in section 135. They all seem to be of one mind about that, so I think there is an amount of collaboration going on, probably not the kind that the minister wanted. We notice, I think, right across the board that the College of Physicians and Surgeons, CARNA, the pharmacists all strongly opposed to the new section, section 135, which creates new powers for the minister to intervene in the affairs of what are supposedly self-governing bodies. I know this was brought forward to the policy field committee, but they decided, I think unfortunately, to not recommend any substantive changes to section 135.

Now, I've listened to the minister. I wasn't on the committee, but I believe he said to the policy field committee that, really, this is just a what if, sort of, and he can't imagine – I heard him say today – for whatever reason that he would ever interfere with the established professional bodies such as the pharmacists, physicians, surgeons, nurses, and others, but maybe there are some emerging health professions that may need some help. Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is sort of taking a sledgehammer to a nail. If there are some particular smaller professions that are coming that need help, surely there's a way around it to put it into regulation that that's who we're to deal with, but to say that you take a broad approach and say that for all the health professions the minister has the right to intervene seems to me to be overkill.

As the previous speaker said, the minister said that he can't imagine ever having to do that. Well, why would we legislate it if you can't imagine us ever doing it? I mean, that just doesn't make a lot of sense to me. What could be a good bill we've now got in a controversy here with the minister. I know the minister himself is from a profession that's self-governing. I can imagine the outcry within that group of professionals if this sort of bill was coming forward. In the legal profession they'd be as angry as the other groups are, Mr. Speaker.

Last night in this Assembly I recall debating Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007. Interestingly enough, in that particular bill dealing with mortgage brokers – we were supposedly dealing with mortgage fraud – we were actually opening it up to more self-governance so that they can deal with these problems within the real estate industry. The next day, Mr. Speaker, we have a bill here dealing with established professions that have been around forever, and now we're taking away some of their rights. That just doesn't make a lot of sense with two different bills that we're debating right here in this Legislature.

You know, I say to the minister that I would have thought one would have wanted to be particularly careful when we're dealing with this. As I say, the collaboration, the groups – he's got the message, I'm sure, about section 135. So you've taken a good bill and learned from it, and now we have this controversy, unnecessarily, I would say, in terms of taking away rights of the professions. That doesn't make much sense to me, Mr. Speaker, because these are precisely the groups that we want to have on board on this accountability.

Now, I notice – and I'd like to come to this – why we have to do this. The minister was good enough to brief us about a bill that's coming forward, Bill 48, the Health Facilities Accountability Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, and he alluded to the problems with infection control in Vegreville, in east-central Alberta. This particular bill, Bill 48, seems to me to be solving his problems, Mr. Speaker, because he's working, correctly – and I believe it's a good bill – on accountability. Obviously, the minister is accountable overall.

Then the health regions. We've laid that out in Bill 48. It seems to me that there's where the minister has the power to do the things that he needs to do. So why would we be taking this bill and messing around with the professions when we don't need to, Mr. Speaker? I just come back to what the minister said. He said that it's basically there for emerging professions. Well, surely you can put in some guidelines and that without going and saying: well, it may be down the way that I need to interfere in the professions that have been operating in this province for a long time. I really do say to the minister: imagine in the legal profession, that he's in, if a similar bill like this came forward, what the outcry would be. He knows very well what that outcry would be, and they'd probably be even more vociferous, because they're used to being in court, than the doctors and everybody else, I can imagine.

You know, if I may just quote from a letter sent recently to Mr. Hancock, that was delivered to all of us, from PARA, the Professional Association of Residents of Alberta. I think they put it very well. They talk about co-operation. I'll just quote the one paragraph: as resident physicians we have witnessed an era of productive collaboration between the Alberta government and its physicians; introducing legislation which may undermine the ability of Alberta's physicians to regulate themselves risks making the province a less attractive environment for new physicians deciding where to practise.

That's an important point, Mr. Speaker, because we're all in competition for health workers right across Canada, around the world, for that matter, and they're saying that this may have a detrimental effect, especially getting new young physicians. It says: resident physicians value sound discussion and good evidence from a broad perspective to implement codes of ethics, regulations, bylaws, and practices. I think they're offering their hands out and saying, "We'll help whatever way we can." They're saying: "Why are we doing basically this? We've had a good round of collaboration with the government." They're praising the government; they just don't understand the purpose of this.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, most of the bill is an important part of accountability and certainly, when we bring it in with Bill 48, absolutely a necessity, as we've learned in east-central Alberta. But I'd just say to the minister and to this government: why would we undermine a good working relationship with established health professionals that we need to make it a sound health care system by even saying that we may need this power somewhere down the line, that we may need it? As I say, the minister hasn't given us a good reason why he would interfere within the self-governance model of these established professions. He said, you know, that emerging professions may need help. Well, it seems to me that you can deal with that rather than what you're doing here. I think it's a major mistake, and it detracts from the good parts of the bill, and it certainly detracts from the bill that the minister brought forward today.

I'd just, with all due respect to the minister, say that I think we don't have a Senate here, but sober second thought – well, that's always a misnomer in the Senate. We need some sober second thought here by the minister and the government, and I would hope that they would take a look at this before it comes back in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. I have to start by saying that this is a new phase in democracy in this province because this is one of four bills which were referred to the newly formed standing policy field committees – I know, Mr. Speaker, that you and I together sat on one of them, the Standing Committee on Government Services; this is the other one, Community Services – which is really a direction that I like and I commend. We know that members from both sides of the House approached this exercise with open minds, and I know that for the most part it did pay off. I was more than pleased with the co-operation and the progress that we experienced in Government Services, and I'm sure that was the case as well in Community Services.

Now, Bill 41 as proposed by the minister has good parts and questionable parts. When we're amending the Health Professions Act to require immediate notification of the medical officer of health by a health professional, a college employee, an officer, or an agent of any threat to public health, well, that's okay. I think that is good in terms of, you know, public safety and in terms of reaction times and in terms of being quick on our feet to respond to an emergency or to a threat, so I don't see any reason to oppose this particular part of the bill.

But as my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Centre mentioned, it has become more the tradition and the custom of this government to lump good things with bad things, and I'm going to remind the House that this was the case last year when we were talking about Bill 20, the changes we did to the privacy legislation. We had some good components, which everybody agreed to, components that strengthened protection of personal information, components that made it difficult for personal information to be misused or abused, but then we also had components from the government which made government operations more secretive and added another layer of concealment to, you know, government decisions and blocked access to government information and so on.

So we were faced with a very difficult situation last year, Mr. Speaker: do we support a bill that has questionable parts, or do we oppose it? You try to amend it. You try to remove the offending parts, you try to stick to the good parts, and you try to move forward, but then the government responds by saying: "No. It's take it all or leave it all." This is a similar situation.

I mentioned the positive component. The negative component here would be the part that amends the Health Professions Act and the Medical Profession Act to give the minister that extra power, that added power, the concentration of power in the hands of one person, to either replace the functions of the entity that's in question – take the College of Physicians and Surgeons, for example – or direct a college to adopt certain bylaws, regulations, or standards.

Now, as the minister explained in his opening remarks, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the college of pharmacy, nursing, and so on and so forth, all of these entities, are long standing. They are strong in their mandates, they are strong in their history and tradition, and we don't have many complaints against them. We don't have many troubles with these agencies or entities. So why are we doing this now?

Definitely the concerns that were heard in the committee, from my brief scan of their transcripts and from talking to members of the Official Opposition that sat on that committee, regarding changes to existing medical health professions' self-governance were definitely the more pronounced concerns, the concerns that were heard the most.

Now, I think that this is in reaction to the crisis in Lloydminster, for example, and in similar situations with respect to infection control and things like sterilization and things like this. Responsibility for these situations rests with the health regions, and I have to mention, Mr. Speaker, on the record that I would have much rather seen health regions continue to be elected, but what's behind us is behind us. They are now appointed. Anyway, they are ultimately responsible for what goes on in the facilities in their immediate region.

Then I would like to see a strengthened central monitoring role for the ministry of health to have that oversight capacity, that oversight function centrally, that basically they would look after sterilization. They would look after equipment. They would look after most of these things. That would then hopefully alleviate the concern that maybe the health regions are to blame. I don't want to be pointing blame, and I don't think the minister is trying to do this here. But I think he's trying to react very forcefully. I think, you know, that co-operation with the health regions and maybe having that central monitoring function would alleviate that concern, and he doesn't have to really intervene in this fashion.

The committee received submissions, Mr. Speaker. They received written as well as in-person submissions, oral submissions. Again, sort of the uniform reaction, the most received feedback was: what are we trying to do here? The most important question was one given by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and I don't think they've received an answer yet: "What problem is being addressed? What is this legislative change attempting to do?"

Now, when we take a professional organization that has been there in some cases even longer than the government – I actually attended the centennial celebration of the Law Society. This Law Society was here before the province became a province. Similarly, I would bet you that the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the college of pharmacy have been here for decades and decades, some of them before the province even became a province. Now we're telling them: you cannot continue to do what you do because we know better. I think this would be classified, in my book at least, as short-sighted. I think it would be too much government, and we know that too much government is not necessarily better. Sometimes we enter into places that we shouldn't, and we venture into new places that maybe we should stay away from.

The other question I had. I know this is second reading, Mr. Speaker, so I'm talking to the essence of the bill. I'm talking to the basics of the bill, which is about the recommendation from the committee to the minister to impose limits on the term of office for an appointed administrator. Is the minister leaning towards that? Is he going in that direction? I need to maybe hear from him as to his rationale, what good he's hoping to achieve, and what problems, again, we are trying to fix or address. Appointed administrators: you know, I would classify them as employees. They're basically there to do a job. Have we heard anything that maybe advises us or tells us that maybe two terms is enough because the longer they stay, they lose their effectiveness or there are mistakes made or certain things that maybe we don't like to see?

I need to know the rationale and if, in fact, the minister is leaning towards that, if he's going to accept that recommendation from the committee. I'm not necessarily against it. Don't get me wrong, Mr. Speaker. I just need the clarity to make up my own mind whether, in fact, this is something I am going to be willing to support.

In terms of the minister using public interest as his trigger, who is going to define public interest? Is that interpretation or that opinion going to be one that the minister exercises himself? When we have situations where public interest is the focal point, the deciding factor, who's going to make that decision? Again, I don't think it should rest in the hands of just one person because too much power concentrated in one person's hands is not necessarily the way I'd like our government to be going. Subjectivity and sometimes settling scores or personal agendas might get in the way of being objective and being a good manager.

I can go on and on, but I realize this is second reading, and I want to give the opportunity to other members of the House to put their thoughts on record and put their comments and questions on record so that we can all gain a better understanding. If we're forced to have the situation where we take it all or leave it all, I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am probably going to oppose Bill 41 unless the offending sections are removed, and I'm hoping that this would happen in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order (29)(2)(a) is available.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, at this time I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 41.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1 Lobbyists Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I understand you're offering some amendments to this bill.

Mr. Cenaiko: Yes, sir.

The Chair: I'd like to point out to the Assembly that this is an historic event in the province of Alberta. This is the first time that the newly formed standing committees are reporting directly to the Legislative Assembly.

With that, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

5:30

Mr. Cenaiko: Another historic event for the MLA representing Calgary-Buffalo.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today before the Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act. This bill passed second reading on March 22, and on May 29 it was referred to the Standing Committee on Government Services. The committee met a total of 10 times, including two days of public hearings. We heard from 48 citizens and associations through both written submissions and public hearings. A number of issues were raised throughout the committee's review, and we had the opportunity to explore those issues with stakeholders.

I think it is important to note that the Department of Justice brought several proposed amendments to the committee so that the committee could consider all amendments. I would like to move a package of amendments that are found in the committee's report and ask that they be marked A1. The committee recommended the following amendments.

Part A. Amendment (a) to section 1 was proposed by the Department of Justice. The addition of a definition of client will clarify that consultant lobbyists hired by individuals or organizations must register. Amendment (b) was also proposed by the Department of Justice and makes the definition of consultant lobbyist consistent with that of organization lobbyist without changing the intent of the bill. Amendment (c) would change the definition of organization lobbyist by adding a 100-hour threshold. Those organization lobbyists who lobby for fewer than 100 hours annually will not be required to register under the proposed legislation. The 100-hour threshold amendment has been proposed to exempt small not-for-profit charitable organizations, among other groups. The committee listened closely to the concerns of the not-for-profit sector, and this amendment is an attempt to address those concerns.

Part B. Amendment (a) has been recommended by the committee and proposes the exemption of members of boards of trustees under the School Act and the staff of those members or the officers or employees of the boards. This proposed amendment is recommended because school boards are publicly elected bodies, like municipal governments, and should be similarly excluded. This proposed amendment clarifies that unpaid volunteers are exempt from the bill. Amendment subsection (b) was proposed by the Department of Justice and clarifies that the exemption of certain submissions extends to submissions made on behalf of individuals as well as those made on behalf of organizations.

Part C. This amendment to section 6 of the bill was considered extensively by the committee. This proposed exception to the prohibition against lobbying and providing paid advice to government on the same issue at the same time would exempt those who are involved in multistakeholder committees and would permit the Ethics Commissioner to grant an exemption from this prohibition when it is in the public interest to do so. Persons are appointed to these committees due to their expertise in their field. The intention of the legislation is not to penalize a person or organization for participating on advisory boards and committees.

Part D. Amendment subsection (a) is a technical amendment proposed by the Department of Justice. The amendment proposes striking out a phrase because it is no longer necessary given proposed amendments to other sections of the bill, which clarifies the role of the Ethics Commissioner. Amendment subsection (b) would further amend section 11 by expanding the scope of the information to be kept by the registrar in the registry.

Part E. This amendment to section 14 was proposed by the Department of Justice and clarifies that only the Ethics Commissioner may issue advisory opinions and interpretation bulletins.

Part F. Amendment subsection (a) provides authority and a mechanism for making public reports submitted to the Speaker when the Assembly is not sitting. Amendment subsection (b) is a committee amendment proposed by the Department of Justice which clarifies the role of the Ethics Commissioner with respect to the publication of the details of a report.

Part G. Amendment subsection (a) was proposed by the Department of Justice and addresses concerns that only the designated filer is guilty of an offence if a lobbyist conducts lobbying activity while knowing that the designated filer has not registered or filed a return on his or her behalf. Amendment subsection (b) proposes a reduction of fines for violations of the bill. Fines for violation of the proposed legislation would be reduced by one-half. This proposed amendment is to bring the maximum fines in the bill in line with the maximum fines in similar legislation in other jurisdictions. There was also the concern that the large fines may discourage some smaller organizations from lobbying due to the fear of inadvertent mistakes leading to prohibitively large fines. Amendment subsection (c) was proposed by the Department of Justice and clarifies that only the Ethics Commissioner may exercise the powers, duties, and functions in section 19(5), (6), and (7).

Part H. This proposed amendment would give the Lieutenant Governor in Council the authority to make determinations regarding definitions of time spent lobbying and to communicate. The committee felt that this was necessary so that adjustments can be made to the legislation regarding what constitutes lobbying under the proposed 100-hour threshold for organization lobbyists.

Part I. This proposed amendment would reduce the time frame for first review of the proposed legislation from five to two years. Given the nature of this proposed legislation, the committee believed that an earlier first review is warranted. It would also allow the not-for-profit and volunteer sectors an opportunity to evaluate the operation of the act at an earlier date.

Part J. This amendment was proposed by the Department of Justice, which clarifies what information must be provided when the client is an individual and not an organization.

Part K. Amendment subsection (a) was proposed by the Department of Justice and clarifies that a business address does not have to be provided for an individual. Amendment subsection (b) was also proposed by the Department of Justice to increase clarity.

Mr. Chairman, with that, the recommendations from the committee are before this Assembly.

I would just like to take the opportunity, then, having worked with all members of the committee from all parties, to address who the members were. The deputy chair was the MLA for Edmonton-McClung. We had representation from the MLAs for Calgary-East, Calgary-Nose Hill, Livingstone-Macleod, Calgary-Bow, Drumheller-Stettler, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, Lethbridge-East, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, Edmonton-Strathcona, and Edmonton-Calder. Mr. Chairman, it was a tremendous opportunity to work together as MLAs and, as well, to ensure that legislation coming before this Assembly does meet the needs of the public, and we attempted to do that with the original drafting of Bill 1.

With that, I'll end my comments. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this amendment. I understand that there may be a move to sever the amendment so we can vote on the sections one by one, but I did want to speak prior to that admonition being made, so I thank you for allowing me the opportunity to do so.

First and foremost, I want to say that this is, in my view, a very historic occasion and an important one. We had a standing policy committee, or, as we call them, a policy field committee, which was able to hear from the public with respect to a bill and not just any bill, Mr. Chairman, but Bill 1. Bill 1 normally is a bill sponsored by the Premier as the first bill of any session, and often it deals with noncontroversial items. Often it doesn't deal with as important an item as what we're dealing with today with Bill 1. Certainly, it's unheard of to have the Premier's bill referred to a standing committee of the Legislature for this type of scrutiny and public input. It truly shows that the reform initiatives that this government proposed and that were worked on with members of the opposition and the opposition House leaders, both from the Liberal opposition and from the third-party opposition – it shows the effectiveness of that process.

I wanted to go on record, first and foremost, by commending the members of all of the four standing policy committees, and particularly this one, for the service that they provided over the course of the summer break in the session and for hearing from the public and doing good work. I particularly wanted to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo as the chair of this particular committee but all the members of this committee because I think this is a very, very important step forward for our Legislature and one which was promised by our Premier and one which I as House leader was pleased to be able to bring forward and work, as I said, with the opposition House leaders on.

Now, having said that, it's important to recognize that the House has final control over a bill. So while I think there's been very good work brought forward, I have to say that I don't think the work that's brought forward completely captures the true concerns that were raised by the volunteer sector in our province. I just want to highlight that at the appropriate time I will be bringing forward a further amendment which will deal the question of what I would call a public-good exemption, an exemption which would make it very clear that charitable organizations and voluntary organizations are not part of the registry process unless they are constituted to serve management, union, or professional interests not having a majority of members that are profit-seeking enterprises or representatives of profit-seeking enterprises.

The reason I mention this now, Mr. Chairman, is, first and foremost, because it may impact how we consider all the rest of the amendments that we're bringing. If we're going to deal with them on a one-by-one basis, I think it's fair for the House to know that there's going to be a government amendment come forward to the bill to deal with this concern that has been raised by many members of the public, members of voluntary organizations. It's important as we deal with each of the amendments that's being brought forward that we understand that there will also be an amendment brought forward to consider, which I have stylized as the public-good amendment. I thought that in the context of the possibility that you might recommend that we vote on this package of amendments on a section-by-section basis, it was important to put that acknowledgement before the House and advise the House that this additional amendment would be coming forward, which I had proposed to bring forward after this package of amendments was dealt with.

The House may discuss as to whether or not some of these other amendments are required, but in reviewing the full package and the impact of the public-good amendment on the full package, I don't believe it's necessary to change the package as recommended by the committee. It's just to provide this additional public-good exemption. Having not circulated the amendment that I'm talking about, I would just reference it to be very similar to the Quebec act, which provides for an exemption for any person. Our language in this bill talks about directors, officers, or employees, but in any event it makes it very clear that persons who are in a voluntary organization which is truly a charitable or a public-good organization, as opposed to a special-interest organization, would be exempted from the registration under the Lobbyists Act.

Mr. Chairman, again, I want to say thank you to the committee for the work that they've done. This committee and all four committees this summer have done, I think, a service to this Legislature in carrying forward the interests of the policy field committees, or, as they're referred to in the Standing Orders, the standing policy committees, and to bring the true interests of the amendments that we made that we agreed upon, first as House leaders and then embodied as temporary Standing Orders, to really bring that process to fruition. This is the first amending results of that process. I think the committee has done great work. The amendments that I'm bringing forward will intend to supplement that work, not to replace it.

With those comments, Mr. Chair, I would look forward to our dealing with amendments on the floor.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. In my role as House leader for the Official Opposition I would ask that the package of amendments that have been brought forward be severed into parts. Those would be the parts that are as presented, outlined by the alphabet A to K, which I believe gives us 11 separate amendments.

I am aware that we've had some people very patiently waiting with us in the gallery. They are representatives of the not-for-profit sector. So I am delighted to hear the Government House Leader speak of amendments to come following this package that would be addressing their concerns specifically around what's been referred to as the Quebec amendment, and I will be very glad to be reviewing these 11 amendments with that screen or focus put in place. I do look forward to that amendment coming forward, and I certainly appreciate the members of the sector staying with us all afternoon to see the launching of this bill. I'm pleased to hear what the House leader has put forward, but I do ask that the whole package be severed into parts, please.

Thank you.

The Chair: Okay. It's the decision of the chair that the amendment be tabled as amendment A1 and that we will deal with each part with subamendments. We will label each different part separately.

Ms Blakeman: We will end up dealing with different amendments, though, correct? I am asking this to be severed, not to be done as various subamendments. Am I correct in that?

The Chair: Yes. Separate parts.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. In responding to amendment A1 now, which is section 1(1) which is being amended, first of all, let me thank the hon. chair of the Standing Policy Field Committee on Government Services, whom I had the pleasure of working with for at least 10 meetings. I have to thank all the colleagues who sat on this committee for their open-mindedness and their patience as we all struggled to reach that balance, you know, that fine midpoint between our desire and our attempt to make government and the dealings of government more open and transparent and the reaction we had to give to members from the nonprofit sector and the volunteer sector when we heard their cries loud and clear when they said, you know, that the net of the act was cast too wide and it wasn't them that the act intended to catch.

It was a balancing act, and I think the committee actually achieved a good balance when members from the media, for example, were criticizing us for watering down a bill that was attempting to make government more open and transparent and to allow us to govern with integrity. But then, on the other hand, you get members from the nonprofit sector saying: you guys went too far. I thought to myself that maybe we actually reached that balance. Knowing that all we do and all we did in the committee was going to end up on the floor of the Assembly in Committee of the Whole for all 83 members of this esteemed Assembly to work on and to debate and to talk about, that was the added level.

I am pleased that the Quebec amendment is coming forward. Had the Government House Leader not done it himself, I was more than prepared to do that on my own. Me and everybody else, Mr. Chairman. It was basically a good step. It was a good measure. The committee was really a positive exercise, and it was eye opening for me. I understand that this is one of the few times we've done it in this province, if ever. In that regard I am definitely pleased.

Now, to focus on the amendment that we have before us, this one here is renumbering some clauses and striking out some clauses, substituting another. I'm going to tell you in layman's language, Mr. Chairman, what we're attempting to do here. I'm speaking on behalf of the committee and all the members. What we're trying to do here is say that a consultant lobbyist has to register and report regardless of how much time the consultant lobbyist spends. So for somebody who is paid a fee or is under contract to lobby on behalf of a certain agency or a certain entity and gets paid, there is no threshold. If you spend one minute lobbying, you are caught under the act, and you have to register and report versus an organizational lobbyist, somebody who is in-house.

The committee deemed that an in-house lobbyist or an organizational lobbyist who is not paid, you know, somebody who is totally volunteering, does not have to register and report. Now, if that person is paid for their transportation, for example, or something like this just to compensate them for expenses that they incurred, they still don't have to register and report. But if they're paid any type of fee or any type of honorarium, then they have a threshold. If they meet that threshold, then they have to register and report.

We struggled in the committee between different models and different suggestions: the 20 per cent threshold, as you remember, Mr. Chair, and, you know, the eight days or 12 days and so on and so forth. We picked the Quebec approach, which is 12 days, but we further clarified it as 12 working days. Typically a working day has eight hours. We multiplied eight by 12; it gave us 96. We actually rounded it up to 100. We said that if somebody individually or collectively within an agency reaches that threshold and exceeds it, then that person or that entity has to both register and report any lobbying that they do.

This is, in essence, what we're trying to do in this amendment, that we're now calling amendment A1. As a member of the committee but then also just as an MLA in this House I think that that provides the clarity that was necessary to make that distinction very clear between who is a consultant lobbyist, somebody who makes a living lobbying on behalf of a cause or an agency or a group, and then somebody who is doing it as a volunteer in-house. Then if that volunteer gets paid, you know, we have that threshold here, which also offered a bit of clarity. Not having a threshold was an undue burden, in my opinion, on most of our volunteer-run associations, charities, nonprofit service providers, and so on.

Now, is 100 hours too little or too few? No. I think it's a reasonable thing. We're talking 12 days, which is one day a month.

They might argue that they need to do more. I'm hoping that with the Quebec exemption, then, we would address that, but till then, you know, till tomorrow or next week, this should offer the relief that is necessary in this case, in my opinion, because 100 hours is a lot of time.

We've heard the concern that maybe preparation time is also included. Maybe some people thought that that was not fair because how can you account for prep work? How can you account for research? How can you account for time you spend online trying to determine, you know, who does what in government and who is the person to talk to and who is the person to approach? Well, we struggled with this because you can't really discern what is prep time and what is actual lobbying time. So we said that it all counts. But then I'm hoping that with the clarity from the amendment, with the Quebec exemption, this might not be necessary.

The threshold is here to stay, and the threshold is fair, in my opinion. The distinction that we made was extremely important and useful to make to members of the nonprofit community and the volunteer community. An organizational lobbyist who is just one person, like a one-man show, a sole proprietor, or somebody who is a partner in a partnership: then they don't need to make a payment, and they don't need to receive a payment because they're basically running their own show, so they're still captured. I think that is also a good direction.

So, Mr. Chairman, speaking to this particular amendment, I do support it, and I thank you for the opportunity.

The Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 63, I will now ask the Government House Leader to rise and report progress. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 1.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the committee concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It being approaching 6 o'clock, I would move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 5:58 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 15, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/11/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the House 25 guests from Hughenden, comprised of students, teachers, and parents. I had the pleasure a couple of weeks ago of being in that school and talking to the students about the role of an MLA. We do a little mock Legislature, and I was proud to say that those students were some of the brightest students I have ever experienced talking to. They are a brilliant young group that knows more about this Legislature than most Albertans do in general. They are accompanied today by their incredible teacher, who teaches them a lot about government, especially in Alberta, Mrs. Cathy Samson, by Mrs. Kym Poelzer, Mrs. Carol Anholt, Mrs. Brenda Buchanan-Charlton, Mr. Eric Poelzer, Ms Yvonne Waring, and Mr. Matt Samson. I'd ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a strong member of the community for the Strathcona riding, Mr. Dave Quest. Dave is the nominated candidate for the Progressive Conservative Association and brings with him a wealth of knowledge and experience. He served in various positions with the party, as executive of the Better Business Bureau of Alberta, and is a very dedicated member of his community on many levels, including coaching soccer. I'm certainly proud to have Dave as a member of my team as we build Alberta's future. Dave is joined by his wife, Fiona, and I would ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, once again it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly the nominated candidate for the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta for the riding of Edmonton-Manning, Mr. Peter Sandhu. Mr. Sandhu succeeded in his nomination after the second ballot of a very strongly contested nomination. Peter is a centennial ambassador, helping to celebrate Alberta's 100th birthday, a very dedicated member of his community, and a strong booster of not only the city of Edmonton but the province and the country of Canada. I'm proud to have Peter as a member of my team as we build Alberta's future. Peter is joined by his wife, Kamaljit, and I would ask that both of them rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House 32 of Alberta's brightest and best students from Warburg school in my constituency. Warburg school is known as the small school with a big heart. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Mrs. Chandra Klatt, by parent helpers Mrs. Cheryl Garrett, Ms Lynn Lafreniere, Mrs. Tara Benoit, and Mrs. Nicole Moeller. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 18 grade 6 students and their teacher, Nova Gould. They are from Kameyosek elementary school in Mill Woods, and they are excited to be here. I'd like to have them stand, please, and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 18 students from the Faculty of Law at the University of Alberta who enrolled in a course in legislative process and legislative drafting taught by our Senior Parliamentary Counsel Rob Reynolds and Chief Legislative Counsel for the government, Peter Pagano. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have two introductions today. The first person I'd like to introduce is Bonita Davidson. She is a constituent of Edmonton-Centre. She has been a dedicated personal care attendant for 25 years. She believes strongly that caregivers are not treated or paid fairly and that quality of care is suffering because of this. She also has collected thousands of signatures on the petitions that I've been tabling every day in the Assembly. Bonita, if you're here, I would ask you to please rise and accept the welcome of the Assembly.

The second introduction that I'd like to make to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to all members of the Assembly is Nick Palamarchuk. Nick is a senior in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre and a resident of Cathedral Close. I met him during one of my frequent visits to Cathedral Close. He came to the Legislature today, actually, to watch the debate of Bill 46, which I gather will be a very short debate today. He's a lifelong student and is currently working on his master's degree. So there we have it: lifelong learning in the flesh. Please join me in welcoming Nick Palamarchuk.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister for Capital Planning.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce some constituents who are accompanying Mr. Peter Sandhu today for their first visit to the Legislature. I'd like to ask Kulwinder Toor, Inderjit Gill, Harpreet Sandhu, and Heiko Lotzgeselle to please stand. Please welcome these wonderful members from my area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two long-time NDP activists, Laurie and Christine Lang. Laurie was one of the founding members of the Knights of Columbus 12457 here in Edmonton. He's been active in his church, St. Dominic Savio parish. Laurie has been employed at Alberta Hospital and was president of his local and the United Nurses of Alberta. In 2004 Laurie was our candidate in Edmonton-Manning and ran a great campaign. He returned to politics, only this time on the federal scene, to run for the NDP in the riding of Edmonton-Sherwood Park in the 2006 election. I want to thank him for his contribution to the NDP and to democracy in Alberta.

Christine Lang is an active volunteer in her community. She teaches at Landing Trail school in Sturgeon county. She and Laurie have two sons, Ian and Keith. Ian and his wife, Dina, live in Beaumaris. Keith is married to Mandy, and they have two sons, Nicholas and Matthew.

Before I ask them to accept the warm welcome of the Assembly, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for helping to facilitate and organize this visit today. I would now ask that Laurie and Christine rise or wave and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to all Members of this Legislative Assembly a resident of Rimbey, Joe Anglin. Joe is a father of three, and he is a very active citizen in the affairs of not only this province but also in central Alberta. Joe is one of the many citizens who are actively fighting Bill 46. He is an articulate, reasoned voice in why Bill 46 should not become law in its present form. I would now ask Joe, who is sitting in the public gallery, to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

1:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure and honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly today two gentlemen. Father Bernie Gilliece and Nels Rissling are here in support of Laurie and Chris Lang today. Father Bernie is a respected educator and a Salesian priest and was a principal as well for many years. He is the very much respected and loved priest of St. Dominic's parish in Edmonton-Manning.

Nels Rissling, Mr. Speaker, is also a great contributor to the community, both as an active member in the Kilkenny Community League, his church, and local 488 of the plumbers and pipefitters, and was a former candidate for the New Democrats for Parliament in 1988. I ask that they rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

House of Commons Seating Formula

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in Ottawa the government of Prime Minister Stephen Harper reintroduced in the House of Commons the Constitution Act, 2007. The act deals with the imbalance in representation in the federal Parliament as a result of growing populations across Canada, especially those in Alberta and British Columbia. Under the new formula proposed in this legislation, Alberta will get an additional five members in the House of Commons.

Perhaps we shouldn't be surprised that the Prime Minister from Alberta has the foresight and the political will to deal with this long-standing issue. On behalf of all Albertans I want to congratulate the Prime Minister and his government for taking this historic action, which will come into effect after the next federal census, in 2011.

As I have said many times before, as the engine of Canadian prosperity and economic growth Alberta does deserve a bigger voice in national affairs, and now thanks to the actions of the government, led by a proud Calgarian, we're seeing that happen again.

The Prime Minister is taking action to improve and, of course, modernize democracy in the House of Commons and the Senate. Now, these are all long-standing goals of the province of Alberta. The Prime Minister should know that this government and this province strongly support his actions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to participate.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to respond to the Premier. Alberta Liberals agree that additional representation for Alberta in the House of Commons is a good thing. We welcome the change.

As Alberta's population grows, so too should our influence and our presence within Confederation. It's equally important to ensure that Albertans are fairly represented at the provincial level here in the Legislature. Currently, urban areas are underrepresented in this House compared to rural areas, which have only a third of the province's population but half of the seats. Edmonton in particular has been shortchanged.

Seats should be redistributed to make sure that our cities have a voice in this Chamber that's truly representative of their proportion of the population. As the federal government pursues electoral reform, so too should we here in Alberta. Redistribution would help renew democracy in Alberta, but it's just a beginning. For example, we should consider fixed election dates, a citizens' assembly to discuss proportional representation, and whistle-blower protection: policies the Alberta Liberals have long supported.

This news from Ottawa should serve as an example for democratic renewal here at home. Let's see what we can do to make Alberta a more vibrant, robust, and representative democracy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yes. I'd like unanimous consent for the leader of the NDP to reply to the ministerial announcement.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under our traditions and rules unanimous consent will be asked for by the chair and must be provided in order to recognize the leader of the third party. I'll only ask one question: is anyone opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Assembly as well. Alberta's NDP fully supports the move by the federal government to increase the number of seats for Alberta. I think it's a matter of common sense that in a province with a rapidly growing population, its representation needs to be in proportion to its population. I'm also very pleased to say that it looks like Prime Minister Harper is taking the advice of the federal NDP leader, Mr. Jack Layton, and is considering a referendum on the abolition of the Senate in Canada, something that we have long supported.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, you're wishing to participate as well?

Mr. Backs: I'm wishing to seek unanimous consent.

The Speaker: Hon. members, again unanimous consent will be required, so I'll only ask one question. Is anyone opposed to providing an opportunity for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to participate?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Speaker: I think that said no, so I'll accept that as not opposed.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank all members of this Assembly for an opportunity to speak on what is an extremely important development in the history of our province and the history of our country. The importance of Alberta getting more seats gives more voice to our province, to our Alberta, and to the west in the Parliament of Canada, and we need that there. We need that there probably even more so in a reformed Senate or if we should get rid of it. You know, triple-E is something we should be pushing for, that we should see, and that we must have in our Parliament. Alberta's importance is increasing. I thank the Prime Minister for doing this, and I support him. I'm sure that, indeed, all Albertans do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Amber Alert

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Alberta's most precious and valuable resource was put at risk. The resource that I'm talking about is our children. First of all, I want to say that the child that was abducted in my constituency is safely back at home with his family. Secondly, I want to publicly thank the young people in his community for their quick thinking and their accurate information that helped police and the public to recover this brave young man so quickly. The co-operation between the public and the RCMP through the Amber Alert program has shown that if you put our children at risk, the police services and the people of Alberta will come together very quickly to stop you. While I'm not sure what role the Amber Alert played in this particular case, I want to thank the police officers involved, and I want to thank all my colleagues for putting the Amber Alert program in place and all Albertans for responding when we are in a time of need.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about AISH, the assured income for the severely handicapped, a group of approximately 36,000 Albertans who live on the edge of poverty and can do nothing about it. Many have mental health diseases, related mental problems, may be brain injured, or are physically disabled. Many are severely undereducated. Many were cared for in institutions and are now living in the community and struggling just to exist. Affordable housing is a challenge. Some live in subsidized housing, but for many shelter takes up to 70 to 80 per cent of their income.

There have been subtle changes to the eligibility criteria, evaluating disabilities in terms of activities of daily living despite the fact that there is no reference either in the act or the regulations. Many applications require appeals. This is a great hardship for this group of people.

There have been additional improvements to the AISH program – an increase in employment income exemptions and easier reporting – but there have been only three raises in benefits since 1993, still not enough to live with dignity.

The simple truth is that AISH benefits have not kept up with the rate of inflation. It needs to be increased and then indexed annually, as are MLA salaries. Cost-of-living increases affect all Albertans, not just MLAs. Remember the purpose of the AISH benefit. It is meant to provide financial support to Albertans with disabilities who are severely and permanently limited in their ability to earn a living. It is to eliminate barriers to full participation in society and increase independence.

I challenge every member in this Legislature to think how they would survive with dignity on $1,050 a month while watching inflation eat every last penny. A society may be judged on how it treats its most disadvantaged, and so should a government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Métis Week

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November 16 always evokes sad yet joyous memories for me. It was on this date 122 years ago that Louis Riel was hung for treason because he fought for Métis rights. Many Métis people feel that Métis are still struggling to take their rightful place in Canadian society. Some provinces in Canada even today refuse to accept and implement these rights as recognized and affirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada. The Métis have had to use the judicial system to prove that their rights exist, and thanks to the Supreme Court of Canada time and again the courts have sided with the Métis.

Alberta has done better. We have had a positive and productive relationship with Métis that dates back to the 1920s. As an example, Alberta is the only province to provide a land base and recognize a governance system in legislation for Métis settlements. As well, we have had agreements with the Métis Nation of Alberta to ensure that Métis can be self-sufficient. In the area of child welfare the government of Alberta established a separate region for Métis in order to ensure protection and care of Métis children and families, the first of its kind.

We believe Métis people are part of Alberta's rich past and an important part of our future, and that's why Métis Week, November 11 to 17 of this year, is to be celebrated by all people and communities.

On November 12 the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations along with the Métis Nation association president, Audrey Poitras, helped launch Edmonton's Métis Week celebration with a special flag-raising ceremony at city hall. In addition, on November 16 at 11 a.m. here in the Legislature there will be a special ceremony commemorating Louis Riel.

Communities across Alberta will be celebrating Métis Week. Come join us as we reflect on past challenges and successes and in building a strong Métis community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

National Philanthropy Day

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the last 22 years one day of the year has been designated as National Philanthropy Day. This special day helps to recognize and pay tribute to the people and organizations that help to make our communities a better place through their generosity and charitable giving. Whether it's $10 a month or $100 a month, Albertans recognize the importance of charitable giving. In fact, a recent Statistics Canada study found that Albertans gave $177 million more last year in tax-deductible charitable donations than they did in 2005. This is an increase of 15.5 per cent and is the largest increase of any province in Canada. Clearly, we can see that many Albertans are willing to help those in need, whether it is with an in-kind gift or a financial donation.

National Philanthropy Day is also the perfect time to remind Albertans about the enhanced charitable tax credit that was introduced as part of Budget 2007. Alberta's charitable tax credit increased more than 60 per cent for total annual charitable donations over $200. When combined with the federal credit, Albertans will now receive a 50-cent tax credit for every dollar donated over the $200 threshold. With this increase Alberta has one of the highest charitable tax credits in Canada. One of our government's top priorities is to improve the quality of life for all Albertans. The enhanced charitable tax credit is one way we are addressing this priority.

National Philanthropy Day may only be one day of the year, but there are 364 other days where Albertans show their generosity and giving spirit.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Laurie Lang

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many great people in our communities are often unsung heroes. They make a tremendous contribution to all but never ask for anything in return. Laurie Lang is such a contributor and is with us here in the Legislature today. Laurie is a community and social activist, a leader in his church, his union, and has been an active voice in municipal, provincial, and federal politics. Devoted to his family, Laurie is husband to Chris, father to Keith and Ian, father-in-law to Mandy and Dina, and grandfather to Nicholas and Matthew. Another grandchild is expected in not too many months.

Laurie was born in Killam, Alberta, and was raised in Spring Lake. During his time as a grain elevator manager in Trochu he was an active volunteer firefighter and continued that at the Alberta Hospital department in Alberta. Starting at Alberta Hospital in 1971, Laurie has worked there most of his career as both a registered psychiatric nurse and a registered nurse. Laurie also served on his profession's council. Laurie was a director of the board of Alberta Hospital, chaired the Alberta Hospital foundation, and helped found the AUPE local there. He was the president of local 183 of the United Nurses of Alberta. Laurie ran four times as a New Democrat, twice federally in northeast Edmonton and twice in Edmonton-Manning. He is a strong advocate for a better mental health system. He knows that Alberta needs more trained mental health personnel, especially in children's and community health.

Laurie, to me, is known best through St. Dominic Savio parish and with his wife is active in many church functions. Laurie is also a brother knight, a fourth degree, and indeed the founding grand knight of St. Dominic Savio Knights of Columbus Council 12457. He is among the many knights who make many quiet contributions to so many communities. Laurie Lang is highly respected. He is presently in a difficult battle with cancer, and we pray that your recovery will be quick. We all wish you and your family well, Laurie. Another statement for Laurie will soon be made in our Canadian Parliament by the Member for Edmonton-Sherwood Park, Ken Epp. I salute you, Laurie Lang. You're one of those uncelebrated heroes that make our Alberta a better place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Labour Relations

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make a few comments today about lack of fairness in our labour laws in this province. The minister is aware that I've had correspondence with her asking that we take a look at the labour laws. I notice that the minister said in the letter, "The Alberta government periodically reviews its labour laws to ensure they are relevant to the needs of Albertans." Well, I'd like to see those periodic reviews because the last time we really had labour laws looked at in a major way was 1988. Unfortunately, for workers it made it worse than it was before. But I think there are some issues that cry out. The building trades have their problems, as the minister alludes to, and some of that's in court, and we'll have to see how that works through.

There are a couple of things that we could do that we should have learned right away, and one is first contract arbitration. We've had some very harsh strikes that lasted a lot longer than they needed to. Other provinces bring in first contract arbitration, and it's settled, and the union is there to represent the workers. We saw what happened in Tyson recently. We saw the Palace Casino workers being out for over 300 days. These went on far too long. The previous minister said that they would look at first contract arbitration.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind this minister that we should be taking a look at these things. Five years down the way is not good enough. There has to be more fairness in our labour legislation. While we're at it, we could look at replacement workers. That also leads to danger. Surely it's time for this government to bring fairness into our labour laws.

Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment it is my pleasure to table the required number of copies of the committee's final report on the beverage container recycling review. The committee chose to undertake this project after receiving a request in July from the Minister of Environment. This report is the result of nine committee meetings, which included public hearings in both Edmonton and Calgary and the review of over 115 public submissions.

The committee also received administrative, research, and procedural support from the staff at the Legislative Assembly Office, including Mr. Robert Reynolds, QC, Senior Parliamentary Counsel; Dr. Philip Massolin and his committee research team; Ms Rhonda Sorensen and the communications staff; the Hansard staff; and committee clerks Karen Sawchuk and Jody Rempel. I would also like to acknowledge the valuable support from the staff at Alberta Environment and the contributions from members on both sides of the House for this project.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Royalty Revenues

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Premier. On November 7 the Premier claimed that he was never made aware during his years in cabinet that Department of Energy reports were recommending Alberta's royalties be increased. I make the next quote very carefully, and I'll table the documents. It's from a news story. The Premier told the Canadian press, and I quote: in the time that I was around the cabinet table, there was nothing coming to me. End quote. My question to the Premier. Does the Premier stand by this claim?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the media was asking if I received any information with respect to royalty information or whether anyone presented anything to cabinet. I said that I resigned from cabinet in March of 2005 . . .

Mr. MacDonald: In 2006.

The Speaker: Avoid these outbursts.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, at least he's listening.

. . . 2006 to pursue the leadership. I did that, and during that long campaign period I heard very clearly from Albertans that they had some questions with respect to the royalty regime, with respect to some of the, you know, penny on the dollar that came up with respect to the oil sands. I promised that I would undertake the review. We did. We now have the framework in place. The issue has been settled and is done with.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Energy. Yesterday when asked in this Assembly to make public all the internal documents on royalties itemized by the Auditor General, the minister replied that those documents need to be protected because of "legislative protection with respect to some information that's provided to the cabinet." Does the minister stand by this claim that the documents itemized by the Auditor General were provided to cabinet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, very clearly we're back into some more of living in the past. We're talking about royalty reviews. By the way, the Auditor General's report states on page 100: "We could not find an authoritative definition of 'royalty review'. Not surprisingly, the term means different things to different people." Where was the royalty review?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Complete evasion.

Anyway, the government cannot have it both ways. It can't deny Albertans access to these documents because they were provided to cabinet and then turn around and claim that cabinet never saw them. The Premier needs to get his story straight. To the Premier. The Premier needs to clarify which of this government's stories are true. Were the documents shared with cabinet as the Minister of Energy has claimed, or were they not as the Premier himself has claimed?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, we took a very, very bold leadership move to review the royalty framework of the province of Alberta. It came as a result of listening to Albertans. The decision has been made. The member wants to live sometimes in the past. During this period of time, in the last number of years that he served as Leader of the Official Opposition, he still has not taken a public position on the royalty framework. He's still sitting on the fence.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is just too much fun. Yesterday the Minister of Energy claimed: "What I can tell you is that from 2000 to 2007 there weren't so many missing billions." I want to just repeat that. The Minister of Energy said: "What I can tell you is that from 2000 to 2007 there weren't so many missing billions." I want to ask his boss how many. To the Premier: just how many missing billions were there?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, at least $22 billion worth of missing debt.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Energy also claimed, and I'll quote him again just to be right: "I'll tell you some facts: $15 billion in royalty revenue to the province of Alberta, '03-04." Now, according to the government's latest annual report – and it is only an annual report, Mr. Speaker – audited by the Auditor General, it was in fact only $7.6 billion, including not only royalties but bonuses and sales, rentals and fees, and all the rest. To the Premier: can the Premier explain why his Minister of Energy is claiming they took in $15 billion in royalties when the true number is only half that amount?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll refer it back to the Minister of Energy. He can reply to the question or whatever is coming from the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, again, what we have here is more innuendo, more backtracking, more backpedalling, trying to get away from a situation they found themselves in yesterday where, in fact, the line of questioning was found to be a bit inappropriate.

With respect to the numbers we should just do the math. The Liberal math doesn't add up. If you add up '03 and '04, the numbers will support themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's recount some of the facts: deciding to let billions go uncollected year after year and then covering that fact up year after year. Now, in trying to defend the government's record on this file, the Minister of Energy is telling Albertans that they collected $15 billion when they collected only half that amount. Albertans need a government they can trust. To the Premier. Will the Premier do the right thing: put the public interest ahead of personal loyalty and replace this Energy minister with a minister who's capable of cleaning up this mess and taking charge of this file?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have tremendous confidence in my Minister of Energy.

Not very often am I going to dig this low in this Legislative Assembly, but this person across the way made very serious allegations last spring with respect to a water issue. He said he had documents – he never did table them until today – at the same accusing me of receiving money through the Beaver regional waste management commission, and he'd sent a letter to them two years in a row to receive money. You're talking about trust. I'm clean.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Deferred School Infrastructure Maintenance

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation consulted boards . . . [interjections] Excuse me. The Infrastructure and Transportation minister consulted school boards about the deferred maintenance problem. The next day the Minister of Education blamed the problem on 30 years of wear and tear. The maintenance backlog is $700 million in Calgary alone, an indication to you, Mr. Speaker, of the systemic underfunding not working. To the President of the Treasury Board: given the comments by the Education minister, why has the government therefore failed to address the maintenance needs of school boards for so many decades across the province?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, one of the first things this Premier did is to bring forward a policy on how we will handle our unfunded allocated surpluses. On top of the hundreds of millions that we spend annually on maintenance, he's going to put two-thirds of our unallocated surpluses to capital maintenance. What more responsible way for Albertans' money is that?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Mr. Speaker, thank you. We have $700 million in Calgary. The government has certainly demonstrated through its actions how sincerely it takes this situation. A below-inflation increase in the budget has left school boards desperate. An Alberta Liberal government, on the other hand, would ensure sufficient, predictable funds for schools across the province. To the President of the Treasury Board: why is this government relying on unsustainable, surprise funding, luck-of-the-draw funding which doesn't work? Why are they relying on this? Tell us about that, Mr. President.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised at the tone of someone who should know better about the education system in Alberta and the funding that it does. We fund the best education system in Canada, probably in North America. Our students achieve among the highest results, and we have an absolutely unmatched building program. But it's not just in Calgary, sir. It's all over Alberta where we build schools. We deal with the whole province. We don't try and separate one city from another. We look at the total education funding.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, let's go across the floor to somewhere else so we can get a better answer. When Alberta's provincial government told school boards that no additional funds would be allocated to education, they were instructed to get very creative. Two school boards came up with an idea to hold a plebiscite about possibly raising taxes to come up with the shortfall of monies.

An Hon. Member: And what happened?

Mr. Flaherty: Well, I'll tell you. Just be patient. Be patient.

This notion was overwhelmingly shot down by the public. They rightly see education to be the responsibility of this government. To the Minister of Education: given that this government has shirked its responsibility, are they now suggesting these creative approaches that the minister suggested for raising funds . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has been recognized . . . [interjection] . . . for the third time.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I suggest that the hon. Leader of the Opposition might want to look at a new caucus whip because he's got somebody there who managed to control the out-of-control members behind him.

The hon. member is correct that there is a provision in the School Act that if a school board so chooses, it can have a plebiscite at the same time as school board elections. In these past elections on, I guess, the 15th of October there were two plebiscites held in Alberta. As the hon. member correctly pointed out, neither one of them was successful, but that's the democratic process at work.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Taser Use by Law Enforcement Personnel

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The terrible incident which took place at the Vancouver International Airport on October 14 raises serious concerns about the safety and use of tasers by law enforcement personnel. I saw that last night. I saw the tape. I was really shocked. Within 30 seconds – this man was moving away from the police. He was retreating from them, he was tasered, and he died. The question is not limited to what happens in B.C. On August 10 Jason Doan of Red Deer died after being tasered three times, and on Christmas Eve a year ago Alessandro Fiacco died after being tasered in Edmonton. My question is to the Premier. In light of this continuing pattern of tragic losses . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier. [interjection] The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Justice minister has indicated that he's willing to look at a review of the use of tasers, but in this particular case he was supporting the very catastrophic event that we witnessed, of course, on the video. This happened at an airport, which is federal jurisdiction, but we want to collate that information, work together, and work with the Solicitor General to see that whatever rules we have in place for the use of a taser are safe, find a balance between the protection of the police officer but also of the person that's being arrested.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Premier's answer. But this is a very serious matter, and this happens in Alberta from time to time as well. There's a question of the safety of the device, first of all, but also there's the question of its misuse from time to time by police. In 2002 Randy Fryingpan was passed out, drunk. He was tasered six times in 66 seconds, and there were no repercussions for the officer that was involved there. What we need in this province are some clear guidelines for police of when they can use a taser, when they can't, and serious sanctions if they misuse it, as has been the case a number of times. I would ask the Premier again: will he do a review of taser use in Alberta to make sure this stops?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's not only taser use. There are other issues that have come forward with respect to finding the balance. Do we have the right processes in place? We made some changes with respect to reviewing police actions. The Justice minister said he would take that into account. He's supportive of reviewing the process. He will bring that forward to caucus, explain the process, and then we'll take it from there.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I hope the government will actually take some action on this and do it before another regrettable incident happens in this province. In 2002 a constable tasered a woman in the back despite the fact she'd been arrested and was kneeling down in handcuffs. In 2004 an EPS officer tasered an arrested man who had surrendered and was lying face down in handcuffs. The judge called it excessive force.

Mr. Premier, I hope that you will do this. This is not a political issue between the NDP and the government or the Liberals or anything. This is a matter of ensuring the safety of our citizens and providing clear guidelines for police so that they know when they can use a taser and when they cannot. Will you please call for . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier. [interjection] The hon. the Premier has been recognized.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I said that the Justice minister will be bringing forward a process. The hon. member is right. There are situations, you know, of whether more force was used than necessary. There is also the other side of the story. We also have had police officers that were significantly, seriously injured in the line of duty. It's so difficult to find a balance.

Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member, we'll undertake that with the Justice minister and Solicitor General. We'll look at the rules, review them, and bring forward to the Assembly the results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Environmental Management of Industrial Projects

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that Alberta is experiencing a tremendous boom, and that has meant that some areas in the province have had concentrated industrial growth that has had some negative environmental impact. Recently the Minister of Environment announced a cumulative effects management framework that outlines a new approach of dealing with industrial development. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Are we implementing this approach a little too late?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it's never too late. In fact, the cumulative impact approach to environmental management is very much future focused. It's recognizing that the pace of growth that we have in this province has the potential to have significant impact on the environment if we don't do things differently. Up until now the approach that we have taken has been on a project-by-project basis. In the future we need to be more outcomes based. We need to determine in advance what is the expected outcome and then take the necessary action to ensure that we achieve that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since there are several pilot projects in place but none of them are in the areas of the province where most extraction of resources takes place, can the minister let us know how the decision has been made, and can we expect this to be done on a pan-Alberta basis?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the implementation of the cumulative effects is going forward from the basis of learning from experience with various pilot projects. To some extent we've already begun on the oil sands, for example, with the recent decision on in-stream flow needs and determining how we're going to manage the water allocations on the Athabasca River. To some degree and to a large degree we already have some of the basis for cumulative effects in the oil sands. Obviously, that is one of the areas where we look forward to expanding the program as soon as possible.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Can we expect this program to be implemented through all of Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, right now we are going through a process of testing, testing the type of regulation, learning from experience on the ground. We have three pilots: the Industrial Heartland; we will be implementing very shortly one in east-central Alberta; and one in southern Alberta. All of those pilot projects will be dealing with some different issues: some, more land; some, more air; some, more water. What we learn from those will then be implemented and brought together for a broader implementation across the entire province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Health Care Aides

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bonita Davidson, a constituent from Edmonton-Centre, is here today advocating for better wages and working conditions for personal caregivers like herself. She's been a personal care attendant for over 25 years and has seen too many good, qualified caregivers leave the profession because wages and salaries are just too low. My first question is to the minister of health. When will the minister increase funding to provincial home care programs and providers so that caregivers receive reasonable and competitive wages and stay in the sector? Home care is still cheaper than facility or hospital care.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raises a very important issue. We do have a concern, almost a crisis, with respect to the provision of home care and home care attendants and personal care aides, and salary is a very important part of that. I've been working with my colleagues, actually, in Children's Services and Employment, Immigration and Industry with respect to pulling together how we deal with wages in this sector and contracted-out agencies because in the service at the front end of the system in many systems, whether it's children's services or health or other areas, we are facing a crisis. With the tight economy and the shortage of workers that we have, we have to be able to pay more to keep good people in those areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, I'm glad to see that the minister is beginning to think about possibly working on it.

At the 2004 first ministers' meeting each province agreed to, one, provide first-dollar coverage for home care services; two, develop a plan for implementing these services by December of 2006, two years later; three, report annually on the progress. So my question to the minister of health is: where is this plan, and when will Albertans get to see it?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we tabled a health workforce action plan that was a product of work between three ministries in government, and in that plan we identified precisely this area that needed to be worked on. I have been working on getting the necessary budget and the necessary resources to be able to properly fund this particular area because it's an essential service to Albertans. It's taking care of the most vulnerable people at a time when they need it the most. So absolutely important. We're working on getting the budget resources in place and dealing with this very issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Health care aides perform a wide range of duties, from assisting clients with bathing and dressing to walking and therapy. They may be required to lift items weighing up to 20 kilograms or be on their feet for very long periods of time. My question is: what supports are available for private caregivers without WCB who get injured on the job?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any private caregivers that are not covered by WCB, and I would be very pleased if the hon. member opposite would share those particular stories with me. I would be very interested in finding out exactly how we make contact. If I had that information, I would follow through.

We make sure as much as possible that we look after employment standards, occupational health and safety. We added staff in this area this year. We're very anxious to improve that. The hon. member will remember that when we announced the workforce strategy, the minister of health also announced the use of patient lifts in many of these facilities to help the personal care attendants.

I look forward to getting the information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Highway Construction and Maintenance

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Safety on our highways is of paramount importance to my constituents and to all Albertans. Sadly, two people lost their lives on highway 19 in my constituency yesterday. While it's not appropriate to speculate on the cause of this tragic accident, it is safe to say that if the highway was twinned, we may have had a different outcome. My questions are for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Can the minister advise the House on the status of twinning this extremely busy highway?

Mr. Ouellette: To begin with, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I was very saddened when I heard about those deaths, and my sympathies go out to the families.

As to the question about the future twinning of highway 19, we're always concerned about any safety concerns on all the highways in Alberta, including highway 19. Even though the twinning is not in our three-year plan, Mr. Speaker, we have done the functional planning, and the detailed design work has begun. In addition, the department has begun acquiring the right-of-way. But I would also like to add that since we've opened the Anthony Henday, traffic counts have dropped by a thousand cars a day on that stretch of highway. As fast as we get all of the work in place, get the budget in place, we will be looking at going ahead with the twinning.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Mr. Minister, there has been a noticeable reduction or a lack of snow fencing on highway 19 and highway 2 between Edmonton and my constituency, resulting in drifting and many accidents. Has there been a change in maintenance standards, and can we expect to see this rectified this winter?

Mr. Ouellette: In fact, Mr. Speaker, we are still using snow fences between Edmonton and Nisku and on highway 19 in problem areas, such as the fencing that we've just installed at the Nisku interchange. We do keep tabs on areas where drifting snow might be a problem on that highway, and we will put up a snow fence anywhere we think it's required. We found that as more land opens up without shelterbelts, the need for snow fencing and other measures has increased. In addition to fencing, we're also looking at other measures such as snow ridging. That's where they go out and make a bunch of different windrows in the fields, and that collects the snow.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is for the same minister. Mr. Minister, how can users of these highways report maintenance emergencies encountered in their travels, and is it feasible to post signage at reasonable intervals on these highways?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, for the QE II south of Edmonton, highway 19, and other highways around the Edmonton area motorists can contact Alberta Highway Services at 1-888-255-5554. You can also go to our department website and find all the contact information there.

The department has a standard policy on how signage is posted on provincial highways. The standards focus on safety of motorists and take into account a number of factors, including distance between signs and intersections with other roads, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that this might be an example of the squeaky wheel getting the oil. AISH benefits have not kept up with the increased cost of living, resulting in extra stress and hardship for most of these recipients. While this government has let billions of dollars go uncollected, AISH benefits have increased only three times since 1993. To the minister of seniors: how does the minister explain this to thousands of Albertans on AISH who are struggling to pay their rent and buy their food?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that in each of the last three years we have raised those rates for AISH. It has gone from $850 over a couple of years ago to $1,050. [interjections]

The Speaker: The minister has the floor.

Mr. Melchin: We also acknowledged at that time and I said last year in our budget that those would be priorities that we'll look forward to. We do acknowledge the challenges that those on AISH are facing. That's why we made an increase last year. That's why we continue in our business plans going forward to look at the same issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. In his mandate letter to the minister of seniors the Premier urged the minister to "develop and introduce measures to benchmark improvements in quality of life for all Albertans." What benchmarks have been initiated? How are they evaluated? Clearly, life has not improved for those on AISH.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we are starting out on one of those mandates, a very good mandate, to look at the quality of life. This wasn't just limited to those with disabilities. That was for all Albertans. We are early in that process. But I would say that we've done much lately to help look at the lot of those on AISH. Part of it is not to trap them into a permanency of just having a support program. How do we build an opportunity for them to be more included in our society, in employment, and so forth? We want to look at it because it is important for those people to have those opportunities. That's where our focus has been directed.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here's where the squeaky wheel comes in again. Increases in costs of living affect all Albertans, especially those on fixed incomes. Does the minister have any plans to increase and index AISH benefits?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, one of the things we have done relating to income, for example, is that we did raise the level of income that AISH recipients can earn without it being clawed back, a very important initiative. The other side of what we're looking at is an annual reporting of income rather than monthly so that there can be some flexibility. The other directions we're looking at: we want to see that there is permanency of opportunity for those on AISH, for employability also, acknowledging that from time to time their health will be at a time when they can work and maybe a day later they can't work. So we're going to look at flexible arrangements, broadening those opportunities for them to participate in the workforce as well as seeing that health and income supports are there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Energy Regulatory Hearings

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the summer I have heard a number of my constituents and other Albertans raise concerns about their involvement in energy regulatory proceedings. Specifically, they are concerned about their rights to be a part of the regulatory process that oversees the development of transmission lines, and they are concerned about being heard. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister take steps to ensure that Albertans are able to bring their concerns about power lines built on their property before the energy regulator?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have done that. We have ensured that there is full public notification of any application. We have ensured that public hearings must be held even if one person is affected by an application and requests one. There were 60,000 applications last year before the EUB, and in nearly all cases no one was adversely affected; therefore, hearings did not commence.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: will the minister ensure that landowners will continue to have the ability to hire legal counsel when intervening in regulatory hearings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Again, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have done that. Intervenor funding for landowners who are directly affected by proposed infrastructure continues to be available. Others can apply to be part of the regulatory process; however, funding may be reserved for those Albertans who are directly affected. These persons will continue to be able to hire legal counsel if they wish.

Mr. Johnson: My final question to the same minister: will the minister ensure that the decisions of our regulator can be appealed within a fair and reasonable time frame?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we have done that, and no one has ever discussed changing this. Questions of law or jurisdiction related to regulatory decisions can be brought forward to the Court of Appeal. The time period of 30 days is the same as the Alberta Court of Appeal, the highest court in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Southwest Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years this government has failed to successfully negotiate with the Tsuu T'ina nation the acquisition of land needed for the key southwest leg of the Calgary ring road. Calgarians are frustrated, and the city is understandably reluctant to act on municipal infrastructure before they know where the provincial ring road is going. Adding to this immense frustration, the province has advanced the Tsuu T'ina casino development, which is scheduled to open this fall. This will add enormous traffic pressure on nearby communities. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: why has the casino been allowed to proceed without a final agreement on the necessary ring road infrastructure?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we're working with all the stakeholders, and I honestly believe that we are negotiating in good faith and we are going to get an agreement with the Tsuu T'ina. Everything went through the proper processes, and we're working on it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgaryans need this road. The Tsuu T'ina nation deserves to be fairly compensated for the land. Throughout this negotiation, though, Albertans' demand for transparency and accountability has been frustrated. To the same minister: what estimates of cost and transfers of land in lieu have been discussed by this government?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, anyone at all knows that when you're in the middle of a negotiation, most people don't want any of their information given out, and we're under the obligation to deal in good faith with the Tsuu T'ina and not let everybody know their business.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cheffins: That might be more acceptable if he hadn't given the casino away.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The natural area of the Weaselhead is adjacent to the proposed route for the ring road. We cannot allow this wildlife habitat and primary source of drinking water to be ruined. This would be the case if alternate routes were to be considered should the government fail in the ring road negotiations. Once again to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: could the minister please assure us that full protection of this area will be considered and accounted for during all ring road considerations and developments?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I can assure everyone that water is very, very important to this government. We will always follow all of the environmental regulations, and even though we are a government department, we still go through all the same approvals with our other departments that anyone else does.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Child Care Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to an article on child care published just yesterday in the Banff Crag & Canyon, a publication in the Minister of Children's Services' own riding, the only two child care centres in the Bow Valley both have two-year wait-lists. At the end of June Alberta received $26 million from Ottawa to support the expansion of child care spaces in this province. Not one dime of that money has gone into creating child care spaces. Given that there is a serious shortage of child care spaces in the province, two-year wait-lists for spaces in the minister's own riding, why hasn't she used the funding for its intended purpose; that is, the creation of new child care spaces all around the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that we have put a huge number of dollars into child care in this past year. Just to list a few things, we have enhanced the five-point plan; we have increased wage top-ups; we've started the staff attraction incentive fund; we've created the child care bursary. In fact, I can tell you it is working because we know that as of today we've created 1,600 extra child spaces in the last 10 months. We have attracted over 400 new child care workers to the industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day this government sits on this federal transfer of $26 million, it fails to meet the needs of Alberta families who are waiting, waiting for you to do the right thing. When will you use that $26 million that is transferred from Ottawa to create more spaces? Ms Minister, come clean on that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I just mentioned, I listed off a few things. We've also increased our subsidies to parents. We have a significant list of areas that we've enhanced, the five-point plan. We certainly have increased the funding significantly over the last year, and we are seeing results.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Research in Australia shows that 40 per cent of revenues of ABC Learning Centres, an Australia multinational in the business of child care, come from government subsidies. We know that multinational corporations such as ABC are making offers to buy Alberta's child care centres as well. Can the minister assure Albertans that government daycare funding won't be used to subsidize giant, hugely profitable companies looking to set up McDaycares in Alberta?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that who we support in this province are the families and the parents, not companies.

Just to make a rather important point, the government's role is to ensure the quality and the safety of our child care programs. We require all operators to meet the very same standards, so we do not differentiate based on who it is that owns the child care program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

2:10 Highway Construction and Maintenance

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation has been talking about the work his department is doing to fix highways around the province, but some of my constituents say that they don't see much road construction going on these days. My question is to the minister. How can the minister say he's committed to fixing our roads when we don't seem to see much of the construction going on?

The Speaker: Okay. There; answer that one, Minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to let the hon. member know that we undertook a record amount of highway construction work this year. The government invested roughly $1.8 billion for the construction, repair, and maintenance of highways this year, which is the highest amount invested in Alberta's history. We did about 1,200 kilometres' worth of paving this year, which is 300 kilometres more than last year. This includes over 200 kilometres of brand new highway and 50 kilometres of brand new twinning. In fact, we received complaints that we were doing too much work and there were too many construction zones slowing people down too much.

The Speaker: I can't get involved, can I?
The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. These numbers sound impressive, but my constituents say that they don't see this work going on to alleviate the traffic problem. My question is to the same minister. Where is it being done?

The Speaker: Okay, Minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that a lot of it was done right in his home city of Calgary. We did roughly 25 kilometres of the Deerfoot Trail at the north end. We also started construction of the northeast ring road in the spring and continued construction on the northwest leg of the ring road throughout the season. We continued twinning highway 63 up to Fort McMurray and also continued twinning highway 43 between Edmonton and Grande Prairie. We continued twinning highway 21 near Sherwood Park, and we're rebuilding highway 9 near Drumheller. We finished the southeast leg of Edmonton's ring road, and then we opened the new interchange in Aldersyde.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is certainly good news, but how do we know this is not just a one-time thing that will disappear next summer? Can the minister assure us this effort will continue next year and the year after?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. This government plans to invest almost $5 billion for highways in the current capital plan, so the level of activity in the next two years will either match or exceed this year. We've ramped up our investment for the repair of existing highways to address a backlog of projects. We will invest $1.4 billion over the next three years to repair existing highways, which is $800 million more than the previous three-year capital plan. We need to make these investments to address Alberta's growth pressures, support our economy, and we fully intend to continue building our highway network.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Deerfoot Trail Safety

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now for a real question. Recent traffic collision statistics from the Calgary Police Service, covering April through September of this year, which will be tabled today, show that too many intersections on the Deerfoot Trail rank in the top 10 Calgary collision locations. These rates are far too high. This summer the government committed to another short-term review of the Deerfoot safety, but immediate action is required. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Erecting a post and cable barrier was obviously a good preventative start. More initiative is required. What is the minister doing now to reduce these hundreds of accidents?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we're very concerned with safety on Deerfoot Trail, and we're taking a number of steps to improve the road safety. One of the identified intersections, Peigan Trail, will undergo major improvements during the '08 construction season. Another of the identified intersections, Glenmore Trail, is slated for major improvements as early as '09. We are also working with the city on a safety review of Deerfoot Trail, which potentially will give us a number of short-term measures to improve the road's operation and safety.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, a large proportion of the problems on the Deerfoot relates to dangerous driving practices. To the minister: given the high level of driver-caused casualties and accidents, is the minister satisfied with the level of provincial policing and enforcement dedicated to the Deerfoot?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have to agree with one thing the hon. member said. It isn't very often I do that, but I will have to agree that, yes, driver error causes 99 per cent of the collisions we have in this province. I do have to say, though, that policing of the Deerfoot is under the city of Calgary. He should also be asking maybe the Solicitor General on this, but policing for the Deerfoot is handled by the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While driver error is the primary cause of accidents, not 99 per cent worth, the McDermid report of 2004 concluded that poor road design and maintenance were major contributors to accidents. The previously mentioned police statistics highlight the unacceptable collision rates on the Deerfoot interchanges: Memorial Drive, Glenmore Trail, 16th Avenue, 17th Avenue, and Peigan Trail. All of these high-collision, questionably designed interchanges continue to cause great concern to Calgarians. To the same minister: why has the government not corrected the design flaws as recommended by the McDermid report?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I had just answered at the beginning that we are addressing some of the concerns on those intersections. I named two of them that we're going to get the work done on as soon as possible. The Alberta government has invested roughly $250 million in the Deerfoot Trail since 2000, and another $20 million worth of projects are scheduled for the '08 construction season.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Potato Cyst Nematode

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that a condition called potato cyst nematode has been detected in a couple of fields of seed potatoes in Alberta. This is a fairly common condition in many countries, but the United States Department of Agriculture has recommended closure of the U.S. border to all Alberta seed potatoes. My question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food: what is the status of testing on these farms right now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting to note that in light of this, the CFIA has put a voluntary ban on sending seed potatoes down to the U.S. They are doing some intensive follow-ups, and I'm pleased to report that they found no further problems. But we certainly want to see that border open to the people on the farms that have tested negative for PCN. Our staff, of course, are going to work closely with the CFIA in their investigation and with the USDA to fully reopen that border again.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if the USDA continues its ban on Alberta seed potatoes, is there compensation for our farmers?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, of course. You know, it's a serious concern. Producers who experience these losses, of course, will be compensated through CAIS and production insurance. We are working with the federal government so that the compensation certainly addresses the value of these potatoes as well. Happily, at this time the seed potato shipment season probably doesn't start until after Christmas, so hopefully we can get it cleared up well before then.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mr. Prins: No. That's it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Zoo Standards

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Zoocheck Canada and the World Society for the Protection of Animals just released a report documenting more than 150 violations of Alberta's zoo standards at two roadside zoos. This includes dirty cages with no potable water, social animals being housed alone, unlocked gates and poor fencing, and the list goes on. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why are these zoos continually not being enforced and checked?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we were made aware of these allegations on November 6. Obviously, we're studying the allegations. We conducted regular staff inspections of most of these private zoos, including the one under discussion here, five times in the last year. These are serious allegations, and we'll certainly pursue them.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This has been going on since the previous minister held the portfolio – he was so proud about naming his accolades here yesterday – so I was just wondering at what point. The new zoo standards came into effect in August 2006, and there's supposed to be full compliance by the end of the year. Even though there have been some reports of inspections passing, there's still evidence of gross violations. To the minister. Many Albertans and organizations are concerned about the welfare of these animals and are watching quite closely. When will the zoo standards be brought into full compliance?

Dr. Morton: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to begin by saying that I'm still very proud of both my predecessors, the ministers of Sustainable Resource Development. Nothing has changed there.

Again I repeat: our staff checked these zoos as recently as three weeks ago, and there were no obvious violations. But as I said, we'll follow up on these new allegations and take appropriate action.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you. Under the new regulations zoos had to submit to the zoo development plan to indicate how they planned to meet the new standards. When animal welfare groups requested these copies through the freedom of information process, they were stonewalled. If this government claims to be open and accountable, then there should be no hiding the information from these groups. To the same minister: will the government release these documents to the public uncensored to show whether or not the zoos took appropriate steps to meet the standards to obtain the permits?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of these requests, but I'd be more than happy to work with the hon. member to provide the information that they're looking for.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes Oral Question Period today. There were 88 questions and responses.

When we went to Oral Question Period, we were in our Routine under the segment known as Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees. I'll now call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

head:

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees (continued)

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'm pleased to table the requisite five copies of the report of the standing committee recommending the reappointment of Mr. Frank Work as the Information and Privacy Commissioner for the province of Alberta. Copies of the report will be distributed to all members this afternoon.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on behalf of the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bill 47

Livestock Commerce and Animal Inspection Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat I request leave to introduce Bill 47, Livestock Commerce and Animal Inspection Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

The bill will amend the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act and the Animal Health Act. Amendments to the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act will clarify the requirements and refine the legal language pertaining to security interest disclosure and directing of payment for the sale of livestock. Amendments to the Animal Health Act will add inspection authority over livestock market facilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 47 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you. I'd like to move that Bill 47 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the program for the SAGE awards dinner, that took place last night. SAGE is the Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton. The honorary chairperson for this year's awards ceremony was none other than the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings here today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent from Ms Beverley Smith, a substitute teacher in Calgary concerned about the deterioration of schools in regard to improved libraries, more caretakers, and repairs to plumbing.

My second tabling is the appropriate amount of copies sent from Citizens Against Nuclear Development expressing their opposition to the proposed Energy Alberta Corporation nuclear power plant in the Peace River area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and honoured to rise with two tablings today. One is the program for the dinner for Father Michael Troy honouring his 90th birthday and 60th anniversary of ordination. It was a wonderful dinner that filled hall D of the Shaw Conference Centre. Another example of a fine educator and priest in our community.

The second tabling is the canola industry policy issues brought to many MLAs last night, things like biodiesel, international trade, and many other issues. This was presented to MLAs last night at a reception.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is from Jaysey Carlson, who says: "Like everything else in prosperous Alberta, the cost of educating our children is increasing. Provincial grants for education are not keeping up with rising costs."

The second is from Holly Doll from Ponoka. "Bill 4 will only hurt Albertans . . . Our childcare is fine. We all like it the way it is, so don't ruin a good thing. Leave childcare alone."

The third is from Christine Pittet expressing concern about the homelessness in our city and province, asking the government "to make an effort to alleviate this growing problem completely."

The fourth is from Richard MacKay stating that "a $15 million dollar allocation to PDD barely covers the cost of inflation in this province."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, as indicated earlier today, I am happy to table the appropriate number of copies of a Canadian Press report in which the Premier said that he was never made aware during his years in cabinet that an Energy ministry report recommended Alberta's royalties be increased by at least $1 billion a year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table to the members opposite the appropriate number of copies of George Orwell's novel Nineteen Eighty-Four. These were given to me by demonstrators at the front of the Legislature. I shared with these individuals the belief that the government has previously allowed staff in the EUB to spy on Albertans. I would invite all government members to read the book. It should be educational.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five copies of my letter dated June 14 and my cheque to the Lethbridge Food Bank as per my pledge of April 2, '07. Half of my MLA indexed pay raise, $146.25, is donated monthly to a food bank until AISH is similarly increased and indexed. The Lethbridge Food Bank has 1,679 volunteer hours and feeds 42 people yearly and is directed by Amanda DeCecco-Kolebaba.

My second tabling is a letter from a very concerned Albertan, Evelyn Laqua. She states that there isn't Alberta health care, that it's regional health care, that home care is different in all regions, that qualifications for that care are also different, that senior health care facilities are being quietly privatized and care decreased. Who can you trust? Alberta health care is "a big cumbersome corporate monster business."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. The first tabling is the 2007-08 Film and Video Arts Society of Alberta fall/winter calendar. I received this brochure when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and I attended FAVA's 25th anniversary celebration on October 26.

The second one is actually a CD, Mr. Speaker, with information and a video about the Cityfarm project up in northeast Edmonton. It's like a camp for young children to learn about community and nature and how to have fun while staying out of trouble. I was really impressed when I was given a tour of Cityfarm after these children had just had elections for their own town's mayor, sheriff, and chief horticulturist. The website is www.city-farm.org.

The third one is a tabling I'm doing on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity. Further to the questions he posed to the minister of transportation today in question period, these are the monthly traffic collision statistics for April through September obtained from the Calgary Police Service.

Thank you.

2:30

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Sorry.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of tablings I would like to do today on behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. The first is copies of a public presentation done to the Royalty Review Panel by the shadow Minister of Energy on May 14, 2007, outlining a royalty policy.

The second is copies of the printout from the Alberta royalty review website confirming that that member did in fact present.

I'd also like to present the appropriate number of tablings of a media release in which the leader outlines commentary on the Liberal policy on the royalty review, followed by the appropriate number of copies of the video transcript of a speech that he gave on October 23 on the Liberal policy on royalty reviews, and, finally, Mr. Speaker, a speech that was done to the Calgary Chamber of Commerce on October 25 also outlining the Liberal policy on royalty review.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would ask the Government House Leader to please share with the Assembly the projected government House business for the week commencing Monday the 19th to Thursday the 22nd of November, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, on Monday, November 19, the House would deal with private members' business, so there wouldn't be government business scheduled for that day.

On Tuesday, November 20, after Orders of the Day we anticipate that the results of the second quarter will be tabled. We then would proceed with discussion on second reading of Bill 46 and in Committee of the Whole progress on Bill 1 if it's still before the committee, Bill 2, and possibly Bill 31.

On Wednesday, November 21, we expect to receive messages from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor with respect to supplementary supply; Committee of the Whole again progress on Bill 1 if still before the committee, Bill 2 if still before the committee, Bill 31, and Bill 40; and second reading on Bill 46.

We anticipate, subject to the pleasure of the House, that on Thursday, November 22, under Orders of the Day we will be in Committee of Supply to deal with the messages from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a rare occasion that I have the privilege of introducing anyone from my constituency in this House. Today I have that privilege of introducing to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a bright young businesswoman from Widewater, Alberta. Not only does she have her own consulting company, called Milestone consulting, she has also been newly re-elected as a councillor to the MD of Lesser Slave River No. 124. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask Darcie Acton to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The citations are 23(h) and (j), and this is specific to the Premier claiming at the end of one of his questions that the Liberals, or more appropriately the Official Opposition, have no policies on royalties or on the royalty review. I have already tabled a number of documents at the appropriate time which outlined repeated public presentations of the Official Opposition policy on royalties, which included the shadow Minister of Energy presenting to the panel itself on May 14, 2007, followed by media releases from October, transcripts of speeches given on October 23 and 25. I think most of those actually precede the official government response on the royalty review. So, in fact, we were out there ahead of the government.

In 23(h), making allegations against another member, the Premier clearly tried to make the allegation that we didn't have an existing policy, and I've tabled the actual documentation that shows that we do.

I think that the language that was used, if I refer to 23(j), was sufficiently insulting and abusive to take the notice of the House. [interjections] This is exactly what I was talking about, Mr. Speaker, when I spoke about this yesterday. There is a tone that is set by the leaders in this Assembly, and indeed the Premier is the leader of this Assembly, and he certainly did set the tone today. I don't think it's a tone that the rest of us should be very proud of.

So I would argue that comments like that, particularly where they are inaccurate – and I have provided the documentation to prove they're inaccurate – should not be made, and I would ask that the comments that the Premier made be withdrawn.

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on this point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's hardly a point of order. Interestingly enough, it was told to me by somebody who obviously had too much time on their hands at the moment that they had actually done a review of all of the Leader of the Opposition's statements and speeches from prior to the last election, through the last election and since, up until the spring of this year and in that review had failed to find any reference to the Leader of the Opposition talking about the need for a royalty review.

In fact, it's very apparent from that type of a review that the Leader of the Opposition had not been at all on the issue of royalty review until the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party during the campaign prior to becoming that position, the person who ultimately became Premier and followed through on the promise to review royalties, made it an issue during the leadership campaign. It never was an issue that was brought up by the Liberal Party or by the Official Opposition prior to that time.

I don't have the Blues in front of me, but the Premier in referencing in question period today that he'd never heard from the leader of the Liberal Party on the topic was clearly referencing the fact that over the past two years there has been very little said by the Liberals with respect to the question of the need to review royalties. It became an issue when we identified it, when the Premier of this province, as a candidate for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party, indicated that there needed to be a review of royalties from the time, raised it, and then did it.

I can understand the sensitivity coming from the opposite side. I'm not sure it's a point of order that the hon. member has now tabled various documents to try and demonstrate to this Legislature and to the public of Alberta that they actually do think about royalties. We can now read those things, and we can determine whether, in fact, those statements are a well-thought-out policy or not. It's now clear that on October 23, I think she said, the policy was tabled. That's available for people to read.

Clearly, in the cut and thrust of question period the Premier was responding to the concept that the Liberals never had a policy on royalty review up until the royalty review was called. Even then it's very clear from the record that when the royalty panel was empanelled, they were very critical of the panel itself. So to come as latter-day converts to the concept of royalty review – it's very clear where each of the parties stands from that perspective. They have a policy now. That's a wonderful thing.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on this point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Whether there is or isn't a point of order, you, Mr. Speaker, will be the one to decide, and I'm sure you will rule accordingly. However, the merit of the point of order is what the Premier has indicated as Liberals not having a policy.

Mr. Speaker, if you ever have enough spare time – and I don't suggest that anyone has enough spare time to go to the extent of doing that – I would challenge you to review the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition's web page, on which he proudly lists all of the speeches he has ever delivered prior to the 2004 election. There are dozens of them. If you were to do that, you would find that the term "royalty review" or any reference to reviewing the royalty structure for the province of Alberta for natural resources is not mentioned, I dare to say, once. As a matter of fact, in the platform of the Liberal Party for the 2004 election that has never been mentioned.

We know where the NDP stands on the royalty review.

The Speaker: I'd like the hon. member to please focus on this point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I know that the Minister of Energy has challenged the Leader of the Official Opposition to contribute, and that has not been done. So I think it's a fair assumption that there was no platform.

The Speaker: Anybody else on the point of order? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday, and I do believe that . . .

The Speaker: A citation will help us focus. Proceed.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Premier's questioning and statement around the Liberal's lack of policy, I have to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in fact that is the case. As was indicated yesterday, I wrote a letter to the Leader of the Opposition and asked him to express his opinion with respect to the royalty review. No such opinion was forthcoming to this point in time.

The Speaker: I think we've probably heard enough testimony for this. The hon. Official Opposition House Leader cited 23(h), (i), and (j) in her submission, and it's very clear what those segments have. All members of the Assembly have the Standing Orders before them. Here's what actually was said, the latter part of what the response was from the Premier: "During this period of time, in the last number of years that he served as Leader of the Official Opposition, he still has not taken a public position on the royalty framework. He's still sitting on the fence," at which point the Member for Edmonton-Centre, the Official Opposition House Leader, rises to advise that there was a point of order.

We've heard argument from several members with respect to this and the tabling of certain documents in the House today. The chair does not recall if those documents have been tabled previously or if they are reasonably accessible. But with those documents now having been tabled today, that will allow all members in the next couple of days and the weekend to study these documents. They are easily accessible, and all members who may have been unsure what the position was of the Leader of the Official Opposition now can ascertain that and determine that, in their own view.

Beauchesne 494 is pertinent. It says:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

You've heard this before.

I think this demonstrates what happens when, basically, individuals talk about he/she/you instead of recognizing that the purpose of question period and the exchange in question period should deal with policy. Every time we venture into this personal thing, we seem to have responses at the end of the question period. In essence, members should stick to policy. Members can have differences of views with respect to policy, and if we deal with that, that would really be helpful.

This is something that remains an issue, and I guess we'll continue to have points of order with respect to this. It's difficult for the chair to determine if there is a policy or not a policy by just sitting here, but if two members disagree as to whether or not there is a policy, the chair is bound by basically saying that sometimes the House has to accept contrary views of the same item, so that's where that one will end.

Committee Membership Change

30. Mr. Hancock moved on behalf of Mr. Zwodzdesky:

Be it resolved that the following change to the Standing Committee on Community Services be approved: that Mr. Marz replace hon. Mrs. Ady as chair.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Motion 30. The House will know that the Member for Calgary-Shaw accepted an appointment to cabinet as the Associate Minister of Tourism Promotion in the summer. Since that time the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills under the rules has acted as a replacement for her on the committee, and we would ask that the House now regularize that or make that a permanent change to the committee.

The Speaker: Anyone want to participate? This is a debatable motion.

Should we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 30 carried]

2:50 Committee Membership Change

31. Mr Hancock moved on behalf of Mr. Zwodzdesky:

Be it resolved that the following change to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing be approved: that Mr. Lougheed replace the hon. Mr. Zwodzdesky as chair.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Government Motion 31. The Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek has as well similarly been appointed to cabinet, to Executive Council, and the request is that the Member for Strathcona replace him as chair of the committee.

The Speaker: This is also a debatable motion if members wanted to participate.

There being none, we'll call the question on the motion put forward by the hon. Government House Leader.

Second Reading

Bill 46

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in the Legislature today to speak on Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, in second reading. As you know, I introduced Bill 46 during the spring session. Bill 46, of course, will separate the EUB into two regulatory bodies: the Energy Resources Conservation Board and the Alberta utilities commission. This recognition of two boards with clear mandates, improved management, and fresh leadership will respond to the increased number of applications brought forward before the board due to the increased activity in the oil and gas industry and the need for an electricity-related infrastructure, the infrastructure that will help meet the increased demand for electricity in the province of Alberta. The mandate letter I received from the Premier includes the responsibility to ensure that our province has an electric system that meets our province's growing needs, and that includes making sure that new generation capacity and transmission infrastructure are in place.

I want to make a few important points, Mr. Speaker, about this increased workload on the provincial regulators. When I say increased workload, I'm referring to a 300 per cent jump in the number of applications before the EUB each year, 300 per cent. In 1995-96 the EUB dealt with just under 19,000 applications, and in 2006 they had over 60,000. This remarkable increase is a reflection of Alberta's prosperity, but it has also made it necessary to restructure our energy regulatory process.

Without the ability to move electrons from where electricity is generated to Alberta's homes and businesses, Alberta's progress would be severely hindered and the effects would be widespread. Policies must be in place that address many needs and expectations. How do we meet the increased demand for electricity? How do we get that electricity to Albertans? They expect their lights to come on. How do we balance the demands for power with legitimate landowner concerns, and is our regulatory process serving Albertans? Is it responsive, efficient, and accountable, a process Albertans have confidence in?

Before I get to the specifics about Bill 46, I think it's important to provide some information about Alberta's electric system as this lays the groundwork for the intent of Bill 46. The Alberta Electric System Operator, a not-for-profit company, is responsible for planning Alberta's electrical transmission system. The AESO produces a 10-year system transmission plan every two years, files this report with the province's regulator, and makes this document public. The most recent plan was issued in February 2007 and is available on the AESO website. The plan says that there's a need for over $3.5 billion worth of transmission development over the next 10 years. Currently $1.5 billion in transmission investments are in progress in the province.

The Speaker: You will move.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point in time I would like to move second reading of Bill 46.

Since 1998 demand for electricity has grown at a rate equivalent to adding two cities the size of Red Deer each year. Generation added in the last 10 years is more than Saskatchewan's entire power supply, and Alberta's load growth in 2007 is equivalent to Ontario's load growth, a province with three times our population.

Let me make one thing clear: Alberta's electric system has kept pace with the dynamic growth, and we have kept the lights on. It's only logical that as demand increases, the electric system must continue to respond. The fact of the matter is that all electricity systems regardless of market structure require maintenance and upgrades to keep the lights on.

The last major transmission projects in Alberta were constructed in the 1980s. Alberta needs new and upgraded transmission lines to meet the electricity needs of Albertans, and strong, interconnected transmission is essential in encouraging the development of more electricity generation. Power producers are not going to build power plants if they can't get their product to customers, so transmission lines are needed in all regions of the province. One important area is southern Alberta.

With the recent removal of the 900-megawatt threshold, there is the potential for the development of thousands of megawatts of wind generation. I appreciate that after that announcement the leader of the NDP issued a news release saying that the province should move quickly to build the transmission lines to accommodate more wind power. That's great. However, the province doesn't build transmission lines. But it's good to know that he agrees that it's important to have a strong transmission system. Albertans have heard the term "a reliable electric system," but what does it really mean? It means having enough transmission capacity to handle normal events that occur from time to time, like scheduled maintenance of a power plant or a storm or a downed transmission line.

Mr. Speaker, we could get to the specifics about Bill 46. When I tabled the bill, I said that an updated regulatory system supports this government's commitment to effectively manage growth pressure. There is an increase in applications brought on by increases in oil and gas activity and the demand for electricity generation and transmission. Alberta has a world-renowned regulatory system for the energy industry, and this restructuring builds on that success and will ensure that Albertans have access to a robust regulatory authority as we develop our resource and utility systems. I stand by those statements today.

Since tabling Bill 46 in the Legislature last spring, there has been significant public discussion about the bill's intent. This is an important piece of legislation, and Albertans are right to ask questions about it. I have met with citizens and landowner groups, I have listened to their opinions, and I have expressed mine as well. I can assure Albertans, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 46 has been written carefully to preserve and balance the rights of individuals and intervenors with the need for a functioning and responsive regulatory system that can serve the needs of all Albertans.

There has been a lot of work done on this bill. There are a number of respected organizations that are supportive of many aspects. These organizations do a fine job representing their stakeholders, and we have worked together to make this bill fair and effective. Today I'm happy to put on the public record facts about Bill 46. Respecting the rights and concerns of landowners and other members of the public is a fundamental principle to this government, and Bill 46 upholds that principle. Albertans expect a regulatory process that is focused, diligent, fair, and responsive to the province's growing needs, and this government couldn't agree more.

Let's look at specific sections of the bill, some of which have been the subject of much public comment over the last few months. Part 1 of the AUC Act creates the AUC and sets out its corporate governance and jurisdiction, including appointing more members to deal with the increased utility workload. It also requires the appointment of a CEO to allow the AUC members to focus on their duties while the CEO deals with management and administration of the AUC.

Mr. Speaker, section 9 deals with decisions and orders. I want to clarify its intent and purpose, and the section must be looked at in its entirety. Section 9(1) gives the AUC the right to make certain decisions without hearings if there are no affected landowners. This is not new, Mr. Speaker. This is an authority that's currently granted under section 26 of the Energy Resources Conservation Act. Section 9 balances this authority by requiring that a public hearing must be held if any person's right may be directly or adversely affected by an AUC decision.

It is also important to emphasize that section 17 explicitly requires the AUC to consider whether a proposed development is in the public interest and to take into account its social, economic, and environmental effect.

Bill 46 guarantees affected parties the right to receive notice and the opportunity to learn all the facts about an application. So to be clear: notice must be given to everyone affected, and if one person requests a hearing, one must be held, and concerns must be taken into account. I want to add that landowner rights are further protected by the fact that the AUC must comply with the Administrative Procedures and Jurisdiction Act with respect to rules on procedural fairness.

Section 9(4) gives the AUC an ability to require testimony in written rather than oral format. The EUB currently has this authority in section 40 of the PUB Act, and it's been used before. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is not new. This will not be the usual practice, but it may be appropriate to handle proceedings in certain circumstances. These would be highly technical matters such as the determination of gas cost recovery rates.

Sections 21 and 22 deal with intervenor funding, and I want to be very clear about this section, Mr. Speaker, as there have been some public statements about these matters that are simply wrong. There are two sets of hearings where intervenor funding can be applied: infrastructure hearings and rate hearings. In facility and infrastructure hearings, such as those for transmission lines, all landowners who are directly and adversely affected will continue to be eligible for funding to represent their interests. Other interested Albertans who aren't directly affected may apply to intervene in hearings as they do today, but these individuals will be responsible for their own costs. This in no way affects landowners' rights to retain legal counsel.

For hearings such as rate applications small consumers would be represented by the Utilities Consumer Advocate. The Utilities Consumer Advocate will have an expanded and more proactive role in representing small consumers at rate hearings. The Utilities Consumer Advocate will be funded through electric and natural gas distribution tariff charges on those customers the consumer advocate represents.

Consumer groups play an important role in the regulatory process. Five consumer groups have come together through a memorandum of understanding and agreed to pool their interventions under the UCA and sit on an interim governance board with similar powers as envisioned under the bill. The organizations are the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the rural gas co-ops, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Other groups can still participate in the process if they choose, but if they go outside the representation of UCA, they would be paying their costs. Intervenor funding for consumer groups is part of the approved rates that Albertans pay on utility bills. Intervenor costs and rate hearings were $3.3 million last year, Mr. Speaker, and $6.7 million in 2005. This funding would now be reserved for customers that are affected by energy development.

In urgent circumstances Alberta's regulatory agency must be permitted to give orders without notice; for example, in the event of a generator failing or a transmission line failure. Section 24 gives the AUC authority to take immediate action to issue orders in an emergency or other situations requiring urgent action. This is not new. Again, Mr. Speaker, this power is already contained in the PUB Act. I can assure Albertans that this measure is to be used in emergencies or matters that require urgent attention. It is not intended for infrastructure projects.

Section 29 provides the terms under which a person may appeal to the Court of Appeal. It specifies that leave to appeal must be filed within 30 days. It does not specify when the appeal must be heard or completed. This is not new, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this is taken directly from the current Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act, and the section reaches a balance between ensuring due process and allowing for a reasonable time frame to settle matters. The UCA will have an expanded role in representing consumer interests in AUC proceedings.

Again, I would like to say that the Utilities Consumer Advocate has served Albertans very well in the past, and it will continue to do so. Many consumer groups are pleased with the role of the UCA and the role that it will play in the future. The independence of the office of UCA will be preserved by the office taking its direction from its own governance board.

Appropriate expert, technical, and legal services will be made available to best represent small consumers. The UCA will be funded by the small consumers it represents. The benefits of a centrally established organization to represent small consumers will be to strengthen the effective position of small consumers in hearings by consolidating the arguments, formerly made by multiple intervenors, to reduce the total number of intervenors, many of whom are representing a same or similar argument, which would reduce the time and cost to conduct hearings, and to ensure that the technical and legal counsel representing small consumers are experts in the field of utility regulation, providing strong arguments on behalf of small consumers. Individual consumers who wish to be represented by the UCA are encouraged to communicate their issues to the office of the UCA, and the UCA is given the new obligation to proactively seek out the opinion of small consumers.

Mr. Speaker, sections referring to the MSA not being under the jurisdiction of the Auditor General are not new. Under current legislation, the EUA, the MSA has never been under the jurisdiction of the Auditor General. Under section 50 of Bill 46 the MSA "shall appoint an independent auditor to review and audit its financial statements." Further, under section 53 the MSA must prepare an annual report that is made public.

Finally, there have been some claims that Bill 46 will apply retroactively to 2003. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is not the case. Bill 46 confirms that need must always be considered. The act simply clarifies that need does not have to be addressed more than once during different parts of the regulatory process. Bill 46 clarifies existing legislation to make an administrative correction to the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. The overlap has led to some uncertainty, and Bill 46 clarifies at what stage of the regulatory process the need for new transmission lines should be considered. However, this will not change the fact that need must be formally considered as part of the process.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks on Bill 46. Let me be clear about public hearings. Full public notification of any application must be made. A public hearing must be held if one person would be directly or adversely affected by any application. If no person requests a hearing or if no one is adversely affected, a hearing would not be required. The AUC will continue to be able to review and vary any past decision, just like they do now. Under Bill 46 questions of law or jurisdiction related to regulatory decisions can be appealed to the Court of Appeal, just as they can now.

Let me be clear about intervenor funding. Intervenor funding for small consumers will continue through the UCA. Intervenor funding for local intervenors who are directly or adversely affected by proposed infrastructure would be available through the AUC. Bill 46 does not prevent any intervenor from appearing before the AUC. However, only directly affected intervenors receive funding in infrastructure hearings.

As Minister of Energy it's my responsibility to ensure that our province has an electricity system that meets our province's growing demand. This includes having a regulatory process that the citizens have confidence in, that finds a balance between the needs of affected landowners and the overall need of Albertans to have the lights come on when they flick the switch. This includes having the transmission infrastructure in place for today and to address the anticipated growth in years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

3:10

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has been recognized.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 46. It's certainly a contentious piece of legislation. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. Minister of Energy in his explanation of this bill. It was quietly introduced here in the Legislative Assembly in June. Since then, our office has received call after call after call and we've received e-mail after e-mail after e-mail regarding this legislation, and all these calls and e-mails have been questioning the direction the government is going in.

Now, certainly, in light of recent events, the spying scandal at the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, some Albertans – and these are the ones that we are talking to – are now very concerned about this proposed Alberta Utilities Commission Act. I was quite pleased to learn the other day that the Premier is contemplating amendments to this legislation even before we have had any discussion on this legislation at second reading, so that certainly indicates to me, Mr. Speaker, that there is a lot wrong with this bill. I don't know how it was drafted. I don't know who was responsible for the drafting of this legislation, but certainly landowners and consumers have a lot of questions. Who was consulted? Who knows? But we do know that there are major flaws in this legislative proposal.

One can only surmise, Mr. Speaker, why at this time this government went ahead with this legislation, but certainly there's an indication – and this is from the government themselves – that in light of what happened at the regulatory hearing in Red Deer and in Rimbey, the government has decided to limit and restrict public participation in the hearings. They say this themselves. This is in regard to oral testimony, and this is under section 9(4) of Bill 46, which gives the Alberta utilities commission the right to refuse to hear oral testimony during a hearing.

The government surmises that while there may be benefits from oral testimony, there is the potential for emotions to overtake the actual considerations of the situation. The Alberta utilities commission has a need to encourage calm consideration and must have the right to make decisions based on written submissions in some circumstances. Now, is that democratic? I certainly think not, Mr. Speaker.

What could we do to improve this bill? Well, certainly, there are going to have to be lots of amendments, and it is interesting that the hon. Minister of Energy didn't mention any deficiencies in this legislation. It is clear that in part 10 – and the government should be offended, Mr. Speaker, that this has gone from the drafting table to the floor of this Assembly. Here under part 10, Transitional Provisions, Related and Consequential Amendments, Repeal and Coming into Force, everything from part 10 through to the retroactivity clause to 2003, all this part of this legislation, this proposed bill, can be changed through regulation. This is clear in section 95(9). The hon. minister didn't mention this, but it states in here, "If there is a conflict between a regulation made under subsection (7) and a provision in this Part, the regulation prevails."

How can a regulation prevail over a statute? We know what happened to the federal Conservatives when they tried that with barley marketing, and we know what the courts had to say. Why is this being allowed on the floor of this Assembly? Why is this government, if it's open and transparent, trying to force on the floor of the Legislative Assembly a bill that will have a regulation override part of the statute? Not only would that regulation override a part of the statute; the regulation made under this section may be made retroactive to the extent set out in the regulation. The hon. minister in his opening remarks certainly didn't mention that. That, hon. minister, is completely, utterly undemocratic, and the hon. minister knows it.

Now, Bill 46 will restrict Albertans' other democratic rights. This bill, incredibly, was drafted at the same time as the spies were hired by the government agency to eavesdrop on citizens in Rimbey. When we look at this bill, it's repealing the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act, and we are setting up this Alberta utilities commission. One has to assume that this bill appears to be written by an autocratic government determined to ignore both consumers and landowners in order to speed up the energy regulatory process.

The reason why this energy regulatory process has to be sped up in the first place is because of the failure of electricity deregulation. The hon. minister knows the complete, dismal failure that has occurred. Certainly, we have this massive backlog not only in upgrading and expanding our transmission system but in our baseload generation, which has not kept up to the expanding electricity grid. It hasn't kept pace, Mr. Speaker, and it hasn't kept pace because of the chaos and confusion that was created because of electricity deregulation.

Now we're going to take this bill and try to convince Albertans that this is the right way to go after the spying scandal in Rimbey? I don't think so. Rural Albertans, urban consumers see through this minister's attempt, and they see through this government legislation.

Let's consider this with this bill. Bill 46 gives the Alberta utilities commission the power to make orders and issue decisions without giving public notice or holding public hearings. That's in section 9(1). It gives the Alberta utilities commission the power to prevent landowners and consumers from making verbal representations to the commission. It also limits the time period in which Albertans can appeal a decision or order made by the Alberta utilities commission to 30 days. I think that should be increased, and hopefully we'll get to that in committee.

This bill restricts the ability of landowners to hire outside legal counsel while intervening in regulatory hearings. This is in section 9(4). It is interesting that the government acknowledges this. The government acknowledges that this section 9(4) is limited to circumstances in which the Alberta utilities commission has provided an adequate opportunity to make representations in writing. In these circumstances the Alberta utilities commission is not obligated to allow oral representation or to be represented by counsel. That's from one of the responses that's publicly available regarding this bill, and that's a government response, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Now, there are certainly limitations and restrictions being placed on Albertans here, and it is really, really unfortunate that this government would be attempting this at this time. Is this going to restore public confidence in the energy regulatory process, this bill? Certainly not. Is it a right step at the right time? It certainly isn't. The government knows this, Mr. Speaker, and it is very, very disappointing that they would present this at this time. Again, who is being represented here? It certainly is not consumers.

3:20

In the time that I have left, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to have a look at the excellent analysis that was done by the Environmental Law Centre in July of 2007 regarding the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. Before we vote in second reading on this, I would urge all hon. members to have a look at this, and you can see for yourself exactly what is being attempted here. This is not the innocent change that the hon. Minister of Energy is indicating that it is. If you read the bill section by section, line by line, you will clearly see that this is one of the most undemocratic attempts ever taken by this government. There have been many over the years, but certainly this one . . .

Mr. Taylor: Takes the cake.

Mr. MacDonald: Takes the cake. You're absolutely right, hon. member.

This is hopefully going to be changed, but we have to look again at section 9. This is perhaps the most serious flaw, this entire section, because we are restricting rights to public participation or we are granting these very wide discretionary powers to this proposed commission.

I'm using this as an example. Surely, if this government won't listen to the Official Opposition, doesn't listen to rural landowners, doesn't listen to urban consumers or farmers, you'll listen to the Pembina Institute. This is one of their observations regarding this section, Mr. Speaker.

- The Commission is allowed to make an order or decision without giving notice and without holding a hearing unless it appears to the Commission that its decision “may directly and adversely affect the rights of a person” (sections 9(1), (2)). The ‘directly and adversely affected test’ has been a continuing source of controversy and litigation in Alberta because it is highly restrictive, often preventing participation by individuals and organizations who have bona fide and legitimate concerns with proposed projects.

They go on to say:

- Even when the rights of persons are ‘directly and adversely affected’, the Commission may further restrict public participation by deciding not to hold a hearing in several circumstances.
- The commission is not required to hold a hearing when it considers that “no person will be directly and adversely affected in a material way” . . .

I didn’t hear the hon. minister state that.

. . . (section 9(3)(b) . . .) This section adds another obstacle to public participation to the “directly and adversely affected” restriction and there is no way [at this time] of determining how the Commission will interpret “in a material way”.

We know what it meant in the lead-up in late April, early May. We know what it meant to the citizens in Rimbey, where a government agency hired spies to eavesdrop and monitor on them. We know what happened in that case. The minister across the way and all of the other hon. members on the government side are content to allow this bill to pass after that despicable behaviour? I hope not. Now, the Pembina Institute goes on to say:

- The commission is not required to hold a hearing when it is satisfied that the applicant has met the relevant Commission rules respecting each landowner that may be directly and adversely affected (section 9(3)(c)). These rules have not been developed and the Commission [again] has broad discretion to create rules that could be used to restrict the use of hearings. For example, the rules could provide an easy path for an applicant to undertake limited public consultation and then argue that a full public hearing should not be ordered.
- Even if a person is entitled to “make representations” to the Commission because he or she qualifies as directly and adversely affected, this right only includes the opportunity to make a written presentation. The right to a “hearing” does not include an automatic right to make an oral presentation or to be represented by counsel (section 9(4)). This provision is another restriction of existing procedural rights found in the Energy Resources Conservation Act.

For your interest that’s section 26(2).

It will limit the ability of some people to participate effectively in the Commission’s [hearings].

The institute, Mr. Speaker, also states:

- The commission is not required to give notice to interested parties when making decisions on matters that it considers to be urgent or “for other reasons appearing to the Commission to be sufficient” . . . This [provides] an extraordinarily broad grant of discretionary power to deny the most basic procedural right that people should have prior notice of orders and decisions that may affect their interests.

Before my time runs out, I would like to spend a little bit of time on sections 96 and 98. That is at the very back of this bill. Now, this is the coming into force of section 96(14)(c)(ii). We want to have this section come into force on June 1, 2003, and that is the date that the last Electric Utilities Act amendments came into effect, as I understand it. This is, again, not the innocent little housekeeping change that the hon. minister has described. This is a significant change to this bill.

Now, what effect will this have? Well, if we allow this to happen, citizens will no longer have an opportunity for effective public participation if this section goes ahead. The commission will no longer be required to address public need and convenience in the context of the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. Under the EUA or any other act there is a difference, and I hope hon. members will see that difference as we proceed with the debate on this legislation. There’s a significant difference when we’re discussing public convenience and need, and I hope that hon. members across the way recognize that. This, again, is going to water down the regulatory process. If consumers and landowners felt frustrated with the behaviour that was exhibited in Rimbey, their frustrations, unfortunately, will be greater if we allow this bill to go through this Legislature unchanged. We have a duty and an obligation to challenge this flawed law because, certainly, it needs to be.

I talked about the Environmental Law Centre, Mr. Speaker. In the time I have left, I would like to talk about the disrespect of this government towards this legislative process. In July of this year, July 7 to be exact, there were newspaper advertisements taken out to advertise for a chair of this new Energy Resources Conservation Board and a chair for the Alberta utilities commission. The closing date of this competition was July 31, 2007. How can we advertise for these senior positions before we know that the bill is going to become law?

Mr. Elsalhy: It’s very presumptuous.

Mr. MacDonald: It certainly is.

We also had on October 19 an ad for citizens to apply for senior positions with this new Alberta utilities commission. That, in my view, is a complete and utter contempt of this Legislative Assembly and the legislative debate that’s going to occur here. It’s like this is a rubber stamp. If we allow this bill to proceed, this will be a rubber stamp for all energy regulatory hearings in the future, and it is unfortunate. It’s also undemocratic. I’m sorry; I’m out of time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, landowners and consumer groups have expressed concerns about the changes to the energy regulatory system outlined in Bill 46. Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, will preserve and balance – preserve and balance – the rights of individuals, intervenors, and industry with the need for a responsive regulatory system that serves all Albertans. This bill was introduced during the spring sitting so that landowners, consumer groups, and industry could be consulted. Consulted. Government is now considering amendments to respond to the input we received throughout the summer.

It’s important to understand exactly what the act will and will not do. The act ensures that the landowners can bring their concerns forward about the development that affects them. Directly affected landowners will have access to intervenor funding if they choose to participate in the process. Any other citizen can still apply to take part in the hearing process for both the infrastructure hearings and rate hearings, Mr. Speaker. Intervenor funding, however, is reserved for those Albertans directly affected. Consumers are well represented at rate hearings by the Utilities Consumer Advocate, the UCA. Although intervenor funding will be reserved for individual Albertans affected by energy development, other groups may participate in rate hearings if they choose. With our growing province we need new and upgraded transmission lines to keep the lights on and to meet the electricity needs of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about some myths that we’ve been hearing, and I want to talk about some facts regarding this bill. Myth: landowners won't be notified or have the ability to participate in hearings about development on their property. Bill 46 fact: notice must be given to everyone affected. Everyone affected. If only one person requests a hearing, one must be held, and concerns must be taken into account.

Myth: Albertans won't be able to retain legal counsel or receive funding to intervene in hearings about electricity infrastructure on their land. Bill 46 fact: intervenor funding is reserved especially for affected landowners, and they can still hire legal counsel if they wish. Other Albertans who aren't directly affected by development may apply to intervene, as they do today, Mr. Speaker.

Another myth: because this bill is retroactive to 2003, Albertans won't be able to question whether proposed power lines are even necessary or challenge decisions already made. Mr. Speaker, Bill 46 fact: need and public interest must always – must always – be considered under Bill 46. The retroactivity only clarifies that need doesn't have to be addressed more than once during the regulatory process.

Another myth: this bill changes the way things happen today, including allowing the regulator to accept input in writing instead of hearing verbal presentations, allowing orders to be made in emergency situations without notice, and placing a limitation on the appeals period. Mr. Speaker, Bill 46 fact: these provisions are not new and exist under current legislation. Bill 46 balances the needs of affected landowners with the overall electricity and utility needs of all Albertans. All Albertans.

Another myth: new power lines aren't even needed and are only being proposed to sell power to the U.S. Myth. Myth. That's an Edmonton-Gold Bar myth. Bill 46 fact: Albertans' and Alberta's transmission system hasn't been upgraded in over two decades, Mr. Speaker. New electricity lines are essential in keeping the lights on for all Albertans and encouraging the development of new generation to meet power demands.

Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall call the committee to order.

Bill 1 Lobbyists Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Hon. members, we are also dealing with part A of amendment A1, that's on the floor. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to join in this discussion. I advocated for the idea of a lobbyist act, and a lobbyist registry is an important concept for me. I've talked about it a lot with my constituents. Actually, as I go around and speak at all of my different seniors' residences, it's one of the subjects that comes up over and over again because I really do believe in it. I think it's important that we know who is talking to whom in the government and about what, and that needs to be transparent.

I don't think it's wrong for people to try and influence public policy. I'm a social activist rabble-rouser from way back. I try really hard to influence public policy, and I always have. I think that's perfectly appropriate, that citizens try and tell their government what they need them to do and try and influence them to go in a certain direction. That's perfectly legitimate.

What's important is that that process is transparent, that we can see who is approaching members of the government, in particular members of the government, to influence public policy and what public policy is. Either someone is advocating to put it in place or to change it. That's the important concept for me, that transparency; in other words, the registry and how that registry is set up, the kind of information that's easily displayed.

I spoke in second reading, I'm sure, and we in the Official Opposition certainly accepted the principle of the bill.

Now, the bill spent the summer on the beach of the policy field committee, I'm sure getting a great tan, wearing flip-flops around and cut-offs, and enjoyed its time at the lake with all the members of the policy field committee.

Mr. Elsalhy: It wasn't a trip.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm sorry. I have been corrected. I have used totally the wrong metaphor. It was not a day at the beach. Okay. I withdraw that. I've been corrected by a member of the committee.

Nonetheless, it was in the policy field committee over the summer. What we have before us now are the amendments that have been suggested by the policy field committee, and they are sections A through K, and we are approaching these one at a time.

Specifically, we are talking right now about section A, and several people have described that, but essentially it was trying to make it very apparent that consultant lobbyists must register. It was also clarifying that the definitions of consultant lobbyist and organizational lobbyist are consistent. It also had several tests for an organizational lobbyist. That's where they brought in that the 100 hours was the test that had to be met, and if an organization wasn't likely to meet that test, then they didn't have to register as an organizational lobbyist.

Then at the end they struck out some of the groups that had been included in the original version of the bill as a public office holder, and this becomes an important definition as we go along because people who are talking to these public office holders or these public office holders who are speaking to members of the government become very important in the context because some will be prohibited from speaking to each other.

I am certainly in favour of what's being put forward in this amendment. I know the committee spent a lot of time working on it and then trying to come up with that test and those definitions, and I respect the work that they did here.

I am a little curious, however, and maybe someone can explain this to me. In the last section in what appears under section (e) in clause (j) of the original bill, which would be on page 5 of the original bill, for anybody following along at home or perhaps in the gallery . . . [interjection] I know. I always think it's much more interesting than everyone else does. One of the things that has now been deleted is the section that says:

. . . but does not include a master in chambers of the Court of Queen's Bench, a judge of the Provincial Court, a presiding or sitting justice of the peace, an officer of the Legislature or a member of a body acting in an adjudicative capacity.

Maybe a member of the committee can explain to me why that got cut out.

I looked through the comments from the sponsoring member, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but he, interestingly, doesn't talk at all about that section of the amendment. Since we're in Committee of the Whole here and that allows us to go through the bill clause by clause, word by word if we need to – it's a detailed examination of this section of the bill – I'd be interested in hearing what was anticipated there.

For the purposes of debating this amendment in section A, I am supportive of it. I would like to enhance it.

Let me go back and be very clear that I am supportive of this lobbyist bill. I really want to see this bill pass and get into place. I also want to see it be the best bill it can possibly be, so I have sponsored a number of amendments, which will come forward over the next few days that we debate this bill. I want it to be the best bill it can be, and it's an important concept to me.

My experience has been that once you pass legislation in this Assembly or in any other one, you live with it. I know that there's a clause in here or maybe even an amending clause that says we're going to review it in two years. Yeah. But I still find it takes an awfully long time to come back and correct, amend, or add to a piece of legislation if you don't get it right the first time out, so I'm anxious that we do get it right the first time out in as many ways as possible. I hope there's an excitement here in the Assembly to do good work on this bill because I am very excited about it. I know a number of my colleagues are, and I anticipate some good debate and I hope good give-and-take between the sides of the House on how we're going to proceed on this bill.

Those were essentially my comments in support of section A, amendment A if you will, but I would like to introduce a subamendment, and that subamendment is already at the table. I'll ask for it to be distributed at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the subamendment that is being introduced now we shall refer to as subamendment A1. The main amendment is A1, and this is a subamendment. It will be referred to as subamendment A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed now.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again, it helps very much if you follow along on the original bill. So that's, again, back to page 5. This gets very confusing. Under section 1(1)(j) we get into Roman numerals, and I'm suggesting that we strike subclauses (ii) and (iv). Specifically that reads "an employee of a department." That's subclause (ii), and subclause (iv) is "an employee, officer, director or member, as the case may be, of a prescribed Provincial entity."

The reason that I'm suggesting this – and this has been brought forward by a number of the not-for-profits that I work with – is that there is a concern that we are limiting an already fairly limited pool of volunteers that we can pull upon to have come out and volunteer their time and expertise for the various community-based organizations. Let's remember that there's a pretty wide variety of people that are covered under these organizations. I'm aware that the Government House Leader has already indicated that there is a government amendment coming – so that flags to me that it's sure to pass – that will in fact use what's called the Quebec exemption to exempt all of the not-for-profits and charitable and volunteer organizations with the exception of those that are either sort of management oriented, professional associations, unions, and essentially associations which are there for a profit-making reason.

So just off the top of my head and not to pick on anybody in particular, for example, the AMA would still be covered under this legislation, but arts and cultural organizations would be exempted. The unions would still be covered under this, but youth recreation groups would not. They would be exempted now. Profit-making groups – I guess it depends on the membership, but let me try. You know, Horse Racing Alberta, for example, would still be covered under the legislation because essentially they're representing people that for the most part are making money at what they're doing. So they would still be covered under this legislation, but social service agencies would now be exempted. That was a very, very important part of this legislation because that would have been the deal breaker for me. I had an amendment ready to go that would have done the same thing, but I'm now told the government will bring that forward.

Back to talking about the nonprofits. We have a situation now where volunteerism, the pool of volunteers and the actual number of volunteer hours that we're getting, is declining. We have a very different society now than we did in the 1950s, when just about everybody's mom stayed home, and then they were available to volunteer on the PTA or – we had a different name for it – home and school association, you know, to do good works at the church or to volunteer with the Heart and Stroke Foundation or whatever. There was a very wide pool of mostly married women that were pulled from at that time.

That has shifted as time went on. Now it's much more difficult to recruit volunteers, frankly. Even the big, sort of popular, fun volunteer-based organizations like the Folk Festival or the Fringe are struggling to get the number of volunteers that they need on a yearly basis to provide those festivals. And those are fun. You know, you'd think that would be easy for them to be recruiting, but almost every year you see them out there going: we need more people to help.

The point of my trying to exempt employees of departments and employees, officers, directors, or members of prescribed provincial entities is because that takes away a pool of people who are very knowledgeable about certain issues. Let me give you an example. For example, you've got people that are working in the mental health areas, let's say, or in agriculture. There's a better one. I talked about Horse Racing Alberta. So if you've got people that are working in the department of agriculture or they're working for a provincial entity that is connected with that somehow, and you now say, "Sorry; they're not really allowed to be involved in lobbying or advocacy," you've potentially cut those people out of the pool of volunteers that are available to a group like Horse Racing Alberta because, you know, they now have to start registering their hours and counting them to get to the hundred and have to list and maybe they don't want to register.

I think we have to be very careful that we don't put things in place that will have consequences for us that are larger than we're willing to actually work with, and I think this is such a situation. By cutting out experienced, knowledgeable people from being able to volunteer in a sector that they know – yeah, Alberta is a big place, 3 million people now. Okay; that's good. That still doesn't give us a huge pool of people to pull from for a lot of fairly specialized sectors, and I think it's important that we recognize this. This was certainly the advice that we had from the not-for-profit sector, that they felt this would reduce their pool of volunteers and that they didn't want to lose those experienced people, so I agreed to bring forward this amendment.

I am hoping that people understand what I'm trying to do, but I'm happy to answer questions or direct the answers back through one of my colleagues, and I hope I can get the support of the members of the Assembly for this subamendment, which is subamendment A1, which is amending section A of the committee amendments.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Not on the subamendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Not on the subamendment? Okay.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Being a member of this field committee has certainly been an experience. I had originally been on the select standing committee looking at the Conflicts of Interest Act, which, in turn, became these two bills, 1 and 2. I left that committee to go on the task force. So I have been familiar with what this has been attempting to do for probably a good couple of years now.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

Mr. Elsalhy: The long-term care task force.

Ms Pastoor: Right. The long-term care task force. So it was prior to that. It's been probably over two and a half years, then.

It's been a very good experience, having been a part of this new standing field committee, and up to this point I think it's been a very good process in terms of people being open and sharing their views, listening to their constituents, and bringing back what they feel should have been happening on this bill. We'll see how this actually plays out in the end. At this point in time it looks like it may be very interesting, seeing as how we're going almost clause by clause and amendment by amendment.

I think this is a very good bill. I think what we're trying to do is strengthen it and make sure that what we really attempted and what was intended by having this bill was actually the open process whereby people can know who is talking to their government. The Liberals, of course, have been calling for this for a long time, so I'm pleased that it is coming forward.

A really interesting concept that came up in the committee was presented by a private citizen. It goes a little off this subamendment, but I think it captures what should be happening with this bill. It should be open and certainly transparent on who speaks to whom. The citizen had sort of suggested that perhaps the onus is on the wrong end of the conversation. Perhaps the onus should actually be on the elected officials so that we would keep track of who we spoke to. I believe it's a lot easier for us as elected officials to say who we've spoken to, where we've spoken to them, and about what than it is for many of these hard-working, nonprofit volunteer organizations to try to keep track of their many people and what they're actually doing. Many people are doing all kinds of volunteer hours that are really unaccounted for because that's what volunteers do. They just get in and get the job done. So it's actually only the ones that can account for their time where this bill would be applicable.

I believe what we're trying to get at with this subamendment is that it's actually too broad. I think, as has already been mentioned, that it actually cuts out people who may want to volunteer. I think that if you're an elected official or if you're a public office holder, you're very aware that you are in the public and it's fair game and you should be responsible. But often volunteers volunteer on a private basis. They're not elected. They're not public officials. So I think that by having this, it's too broad, and we're capturing a lot of people who would be deterred, perhaps, in coming forward.

It also affects families because the husband may be doing one thing, the wife might be doing another, but of the two groups that they're working on, one may in fact have a paid consultant lobbyist or the other group wouldn't, and then it becomes very, very onerous on good volunteer groups to try to sort that out. It's just too complicated.

Also, partly the employee for provincial entities. Now, at this point provincial entities haven't actually been defined as to who will be exempted. My understanding is that that will be done in regulations, but in fact that discussion can go back to the standing field committee.

I would support this and ask the support of the House because I believe that it is too broad. We're capturing too many people who really have nothing to do with what we're trying to achieve with this bill. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much.

I'd like to recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the subamendment, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is with interest that I rise and participate in the debate on the subamendment on Bill 1 that was presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Certainly, we've heard from a lot of different parties and organizations regarding this legislation. I understand that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung was involved, as was the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, in the field policy committee that looked at this. I don't know if you'd call it that.

I have been contacted regarding this bill by many people from the not-for-profit sector who are very concerned about the restrictions and limitations that this bill in its current form would have on their activities or their operations. Certainly, when we look at this subamendment as presented and we're looking at striking out "an employee of a department" and also "an employee, officer, director or member, as the case may be, of a prescribed Provincial entity," I think the intent of the hon. member is not to restrict or limit the pool of citizens who may be interested in volunteering after hours or on the weekend with any number of organizations. Am I correct on that assumption?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, you are.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Because certainly we have quite a large volunteer sector in Alberta. I can't recall which hon. member of this Assembly, but certainly last week there was a discussion here on the importance of the volunteer sector. The former Member for Drumheller-Stettler was a passionate advocate for the volunteer sector.

If we are going to change this, I certainly agree with the first definition of a public officer when we talk about an employee of a department: "an employee, officer, director or member, as the case may be, of a prescribed Provincial entity." I can only presume that those prescribed provincial entities would be anything I could think of. It's not exclusive to the list that's in the back of the government of Alberta's annual report of agencies, boards, and commissions. I would like clarification in the course of debate on that because certainly there is a long list there, and it would be in the regulations.

There is a lot about this amendment that as I discuss it I'm getting more and more unsure about, but I will only have to take the sage advice from my colleague that this is worth while. When I think of this, well, of course, hon. members, you'll have to excuse me because I'm very concerned about the agencies, boards, and commissions and if they're considered a provincial entity and the patronage parade that goes on there. I certainly wouldn't want to be excluding any of the patronage parade from scrutiny. Certainly, hon.

Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you're absolutely right: there needs to be scrutiny. But the hon. member assures me that they are caught in another section of this bill.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and cede the floor to another member. Thank you.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, Mr. Chairman, rather than just talk in general about the bill, just this particular amendment. It's all about the definition of public office holder, and I think restricting it to Members of the Legislative Assembly and any individual on a member's staff is clear.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

There are lots of problems by including just employees of any department. That's quite restrictive and unnecessary. I always have a real problem with restricting public servants from being able to speak out about political matters. My experience is that it's not until they retire that they really, really become outspoken about what they really feel in terms of politics. I think that's quite a shame that they are so restricted. As a matter of fact, in the last few years there has been a tremendous fear factor that's promoted by this government in various departments, and so many people, especially people dealing with welfare issues, for example, will not speak out for fear of repercussions, punishment, losing their jobs. I really would like to see them, you know, have the freedom to express their views. My understanding is that a lot of the references to other positions would be covered in regulations, like officers or directors of agencies, boards, commissions, and so on.

I'm not going to say any more about this. I support this subamendment and hope that we pass it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, is there anybody else who wishes to speak on subamendment A1?

Mr. Hinman: I believe that I have the one here. I guess just a few quick remarks. This is a huge bill. We're going to have many amendments come forward. I guess my biggest and briefest comment is that I look at Bill 1. I realize we have a lobbyist problem. We need to do something about it. But my biggest concern is that we go on and we debate, and we're going to go for hours on this trying to find a solution that will hold lobbyists accountable and whether we want to take the patronage that goes on, to eliminate it if possible. I don't believe that we can eliminate it.

Last night I had the privilege of going to the canola growers' presentation. There the Premier had told those people: you have an open invitation to come and see me any time. By saying that, all of this whole bill is excluded. He's given an open invitation, and then it goes by all that.

My question on all of this and this amendment is that this seems to me to be a bigger problem than the gun registry in that the loopholes that going to continue to exist. Wherever the Premier goes, whoever he talks to – I could have brought someone from nuclear energy to the canola board last night, bumped into the Premier, talked to him, and it wouldn't be recorded. If he approaches me and talks to me on this – we have such a huge gaping hole in all of this and the bureaucracy that we're going to try to do.

What we're doing is we're holding the people of Alberta accountable when really it's the office of the Premier and the government that needs to be held accountable. So we want to have a bunch of bookkeeping and a bunch of extra work. Maybe it's the Premier and the ministers who need to report and record and do all of this work rather than all of these people that are trying to get on with their lives to work for charitable organizations.

You know, it just seems like we're going at this the whole wrong way. I wonder, like I say, even on this amendment to an amendment do we really understand? Are we just spending a lot of time when, in fact, the loopholes are going to be there? We need to take it and approach it from a different angle.

Just a few thoughts on this short amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on the subamendment.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, sir. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I have to start by saying that I do support subamendment A1 as proposed by my colleague from Edmonton-Centre.

An Hon. Member: Unobservedly?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Unobservedly.

She went into some detail to explain why she needs to clarify that particular section and why she's eliminating the clauses that she referred to. But I couldn't help but feel the need to respond to some of the comments made by my hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner. I think he was referring to reverse onus, making that requirement on the elected official rather than the people who have the ear of the elected official. While this was brought up in the committee, it was felt by some members from the committee, not all but some, that it would be too much work for them and for their staff. We briefly talked about the fact that we actually do keep a log of who comes into the constituency office and talks to me, what is the subject matter, how long it took, you know, for that conversation, and so on. So we keep that log anyway.

Mr. Hinman: So do the MLAs who were at the canola thing last night report who they met and talked to?

4:10

Mr. Elsalhy: It would be very simple.

But it was felt that this would give the impression that maybe members of the government are becoming less accessible.

Now, I have to remind the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner that nothing we're doing here will prevent access to the government. What we're doing is requiring the registration and the recording of that conversation, of that discussion, but we're not saying that nobody can access ministers or the Premier. Nobody should feel restricted in that access. What we're doing is just offering that transparency, the layer of transparency that is missing. So when the Premier invited members from that organization to come and speak to him with no restrictions, well, that's fine. They can continue to have access to the Premier with no restrictions, but after this bill passes, it will just be a requirement for them to register and report. That's it.

Mr. Hinman: But can he ask them?

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, that's another thing. That's a loophole that might be addressed today, hopefully.

The other thing is that Bill 1 is actually a good piece of legislation, but we're trying to do our due diligence to make it even better. So when we seem to be belaboring the discussion and the debate and we seem to be introducing amendments and then reacting to amendments by introducing subamendments, well, this is what we're elected to do. This is what we're here to try to accomplish. I don't think any time spent under the dome here in the Assembly is time wasted. I don't think giving it the attention that it's seriously deserving of, you know, weakens it or waters it down. No. What we're trying to do is make the good sections even better and to be friendly to those people who expressed the most concern in terms of the volunteer sector and the nonprofit sector, at the same time looking for these loopholes that have been identified through the submissions to the committee, through the deliberations of the committee, and trying to seal them one by one.

I know this is a new exercise, and I know the hon. chair of the committee, from Calgary-Buffalo, would agree with me. It's a multilayer thing, and that's why it tends to be confusing. We have the bill, the actual proposed act. We have the committee work, which was a layer on top, and we now have recommendations that are appearing before us as amendments and we have subamendments. So because of this navigational maze that we have to go through, some members might feel that maybe we're killing it to death, maybe we're talking too much. But I don't think it's time wasted, Mr. Chairman, and I know you agree with me. This is what we were elected to do, and we're making something that is good even better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on the subamendment.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, and just to clarify to the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung that perhaps I didn't express myself properly there. Yes, we want to know about the lobbying that's going on. We want to be able to understand it. But my question is that there are so many loopholes that are going to continue to be open. I don't think that we're ever wasting our time underneath here when we're debating and trying to do such a serious passage of legislation to see that the government is run properly. But when the Premier comes down to my riding and is the drawing card for fundraising, are all the people that have bought and put money towards that fundraiser and are speaking to the Premier going to be recorded and have to answer? Like I say, last night at the function, anybody could have been with me and spoken to the Premier, and I just feel that the loopholes are going to continue to be there. Will we ever be able to close those?

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers on the subamendment that's before the committee?

Hon. members we shall now have a vote, and I just want everyone to be aware of what we're doing. We will be voting on the subamendment that's before us that was moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. After that, if we have no further speakers on part A, we shall have a vote on part A of the amendment moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Thereafter, we shall proceed to part B. Is that clear with everyone? Good.

[Motion on subamendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers on part A of amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to talk about this amendment. I realize that it's really important in this legislation to make the distinction between a consultant lobbyist and an organization lobbyist, and this amendment is suggesting changes to the definition of organization lobbyist, which I think is important.

Just to back up a bit, I really also agree with my hon. colleague from Edmonton-McClung that this bill needs to be supported in general. The lobbyists registry is something that has been coming for a long time. I was a member of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, and I was prepared because it has always been a part of our Liberal platform to argue for a lobbyists registry. When I saw that most members of the committee were in fact in favour of a lobbyists registry, we put it forward as part of our recommendations, but we didn't actually go into much detail. We left that up to future committees, so now we have a more detailed presentation in Bill 1 of a lobbyists registry.

I just want to point out that, you know, if you look at the federal legislation, there's one part that's missing which I think would be really important, that's not here in this Bill 1, and that is that the federal legislation, which has a lobbyists registry in place, also has a lobbyist code of conduct. Now, I raised that issue with the select committee on the Conflicts of Interest Act, that perhaps we needed a code of conduct up front, in front of our conflicts of interest legislation. I think it applies here too because I think it's important to have something like a lobbyist code of conduct. This act really doesn't present a code of conduct other than the whereases.

Now, it's interesting that Canada was the first country to reinforce the lobbyists registry by having a code of conduct. I think that's setting the bar high for provinces and for Legislatures, that we need to assure Albertans that lobbying is done ethically and with the highest standards with a view to conserving and enhancing public confidence and trust in the integrity, objectivity, and impartiality of government decision-making. I think that having a code of conduct that actually addresses that kind of high ethical standard would be a real addition to this bill.

I notice that in the lobbyist code of conduct of the federal government they actually list the four whereases; our Bill 1 has five. The first four whereases are taken right out of the lobbyist code of conduct: free and open access to government is an important matter of public interest; lobbying public office holders is a legitimate activity, et cetera. The one that's added is the reference to contracting with the government, which is not in the federal lobbyist code of conduct. But the federal lobbyist code of conduct goes on to outline principles like integrity and honesty, openness, professionalism and then rules: transparency, confidentiality, and so on.

Mr. Chairman, I think that that would have been a great addition to this Bill 1, if we had had the lobbyist code of conduct up front and then the specifics of how to put in place a lobbyists registry that follows on from a code of conduct. But we don't have that, so we're now looking at going through this bill line by line to try to make it a better bill. It's something I support. The time has come. There's been an evolution of concern by the public for a greater standard of ethics set by Legislatures across the country, and the lobbyists registry is a part of that.

Under organization lobbyist the definition is that it's a person who receives a payment for the performance of his or her function. That's a very important statement because we're not talking about volunteers. Volunteers are excluded from this. We're talking about people who actually receive a payment for lobbying and a person who lobbies or whose duty is to lobby on behalf of the organization at least 100 hours annually. You know, I've been persuaded that that is a good way of placing a limit on this definition of an organizational lobbyist.

The federal government in their lobbyists registry puts it at 20 per cent. So 20 per cent of an individual's activities, if it's involved with lobbying, then that person has to register. But that is vague, that 20 per cent. Twenty per cent of what? It is vague and hard to pin down, so actually I think this is a better expression of the limit in the definition by saying: at least 100 hours annually. I mean, in terms of reinforcing this, it's up to the lobbyists themselves to keep track and then to register when they're supposed to register. Again, the onus is on them. It would be better, of course, as I said, to have a code of conduct for lobbyists, and that would set the bar high for them, just as we should have a code of conduct that covers our own behaviour.

I don't have anything more to say on that. I support this amendment, and I think it's a step forward. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other speakers on part A of amendment A1?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: I have an amendment to A1 to be amended in part B.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we are dealing just with part A for now.

Mr. Mason: I'm sorry. Thank you for that direction, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: So we need to vote on this one before we move to part B.

Any other speakers for part A on amendment A1?

Hon. members, we are now going to vote on amendment A1, part A of amendment A1, as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

[Motion on amendment A1A carried]

The Deputy Chair: We will now proceed with part B of amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Actually, it is a pleasure because the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East and myself and on a few occasions the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow worked on the committee. We had to do some explaining to our own caucus members, and they trusted us when we clarified and explained what went on in the committee. They trusted us when we told them about the amendments that were the outcome of the committee work because we possess that, quote, organizational memory. It seems like it was a natural fit for Lethbridge-East, Edmonton-McClung, and Calgary-Elbow to some extent to be participating eagerly in this debate.

Part B, Mr. Chairman, as recommended by the committee, attempts to do at least a couple of things. The first one talks about restrictions on the application of the act. What we're trying to do here is clarify who's exempted, who this act does not apply to. When we had the written submissions and then when we had the verbal or in-person presentations, it was brought up time and time again that school board trustees really should not be caught under the definitions of this act, just as we would exempt members from our health regions, for example.

Now, trustees also argued strongly that because they're elected officials, just like we are, they should not be looked at as lobbyists because they're elected to really advocate on behalf of their constituents, just as we are. If I'm talking to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation about those overpasses in Edmonton-McClung, I am not a lobbyist; I am an MLA. I'm doing my work. So a trustee who approaches the Minister of Education and says, you know, "We have school infrastructure issues" or "Classroom sizes are increasing beyond acceptable levels" or so on and so forth, that school board trustee is doing what he or she was elected to do.

The committee heard that argument from trustees, and we agreed that we needed to exempt school board trustees, school board organizations, even the employees in those school boards because that's what this entire entity was tasked to do; that is, to advocate for issues surrounding education, to advocate on behalf of the students, the children, and to some extent their parents as well. Section B is attempting, as is clear, Mr. Chairman, in subclause (a) that we're now telling the world that this act does not apply to "members of the boards of trustees under the School Act, individuals on the staff of any of those members, or officers or employees of the boards." That is the first thing that we're trying to do.

What we're also trying to do in section B is to exempt organizational volunteers who do not receive any form of payment. The committee also had the discussion of whether an in-house lobbyist, an organizational lobbyist, needs to be caught under this act. We agreed that if somebody was truly a volunteer, does not make a penny or maybe gets their expenses paid but doesn't really receive any payment or honorarium, then that person does not need to register or worry about reporting. But if it's somebody on staff that gets paid to do this, then there is the idea of a threshold, the idea of a trigger point.

We discussed it, and we agreed in committee that it would be on an individual basis as well as on a cumulative basis. If an organization has five or six or 10 people who do lobbying, they all count towards that 100-hour threshold. That was a distinction that we wanted to make very clear to members of this House because it all counts. If you have one person doing it or if you have five or 10 or more, you know, it doesn't matter. It all counts towards that 100-hour threshold if these people are paid. So in-house lobbyists who are paid have to worry about that threshold. I remind you, Mr. Chairman, that consultant lobbyists, regardless of what amount of time they allocate, have to register and report. That was a distinction we wanted to make.

Now, in reading the amendment as proposed by the committee and, you know, referencing the loophole that was identified by many people who submitted, and in particular I'm going to reference Democracy Watch, Duff Conacher, and Fasken Martineau DuMoulin. Mr. Guy Giorno highlighted one particular loophole, which the committee discussed. We discussed it very thoroughly but, unfortunately, couldn't reach an agreement, so we felt that it would be prudent for us to maybe raise the same issue again in the House here for all 83 members to hopefully look at and discuss. As such, Mr. Chairman, I move subamendment 2, and I'll wait for the pages to distribute it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, there is a subamendment that is being circulated to you. With all these little subamendments coming through, this will be referred to as subamendment B1. The first one was subamendment A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, you may proceed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Before us we have subamendment B1. As I'm telling my hon. colleagues, what we're trying to do here is address one particular loophole. It was something that was highlighted more than once whereby the public office holders initiates or invites the feedback or the discussion, and as such the lobbyist does not have to register or report. If hon. members want to read it, it's on page 2 of the recommendations from the committee, which is section 3(2)(b) and (c), and it's part (c) which now is suggested to read: "to a public office holder on behalf of a person or organization in response to a request initiated by a public office holder for advice or comment on any matter referred to in section 1(1)(e)(i)."

4:30

It makes sense, Mr. Chairman, and we know that members of the committee struggled with this. We don't want to be sending the message that we're not interested in what people have to tell us. Definitely not. What we're trying to say here is that when the Premier invites certain people to talk to him about royalties, for example, people have to know. When the Deputy Premier had these meetings with members from the oil and gas industry, well, had this act been in place, these members would have had to register and report.

To have this loophole here staring at us and really weakening something that we're all aspiring to achieve here in terms of openness and integrity was not acceptable. This is one way to address it: by basically eliminating that licence for an elected officer holder – Premier, minister, MLA – to initiate that discussion. In this way that person totally bypasses and sidesteps the act, and this person as a lobbyist is not then deemed to have breached the act and gets away with it and doesn't have to be held accountable nor pay a penalty or a fine. I know that members from both sides are going to be extremely eager to address this.

I have to note, Mr. Chairman, that so far it doesn't seem like any of the members from the government side have spoken, not to the amendments from the committee and not to the subamendments suggested by the opposition. I want to remind them that this is Bill 1, which is the flagship bill of the hon. Premier, and while keeping silent might signal that they're in support, people out there who are now listening or watching or reading Hansard might not necessarily get the same feeling or the same impression. I want to challenge some of them at least, maybe two or three, to stand up and put their thoughts on the record. We need to hear from them if they do support their own Premier. If, in fact, they're keeping quiet because they find some of these sections objectionable or questionable, we need to know. We need the assurance that this House is behind this direction, that this House likes to have a registry for lobbyists, and that we are definitely moving towards more openness in government, more accountability in government.

That's my challenge to them. Speak on the subamendment, speak on the amendment itself, and let's really make something that was good initially even better. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. When I was speaking yesterday with respect to this bill, I was very complimentary of the process that we had with respect to the committee, and I think it was a good process. I'm a bit surprised that a member of the committee, who would have had the opportunity to have raised this at committee, would now be bringing an amendment on it.

Be that as it may, the problem with this subamendment is that it would really have the effect of reducing the ability of an MLA to go out and find out about issues. The amendment is to remove (c). All the time members go out and ask people their viewpoint. If by doing that you're going to put somebody in a position where they have to register as a lobbyist because you went out to ask them their opinion, ask them to give you some advice on a subject – in other words, a request initiated by a public office holder for advice or comment on any matter – that would really inhibit us as MLAs in doing our job. That's not an appropriate way to go.

I would ask the House not to pass this amendment. I don't think this amendment is appropriate at all. What we want to have is a bill which makes it clear that lobbyists promoting their interests register and that the public is aware of lobbyists who are promoting their interests or promoting interests on behalf of some other organization. But an amendment which would have the effect of chilling conversations between an MLA and anyone that they might go to to ask for advice, to seek input, to solicit opinion would very seriously limit our ability to do our jobs and would put an onus on somebody that we talk to. Remember that under this act the onus is on the lobbyist to register and to keep track of their hours and that sort of thing under the appropriate sections. If I in my position as an MLA call someone and ask for advice, I put an onus on them, then, to determine whether or not they're a lobbyist and whether they should register, whether they should start keeping track of their hours. That's not appropriate.

I'd ask the Assembly not to accept this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, did you want to rise?

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes. I thank you for this opportunity for me to be able to speak to subamendment B1 to Bill 1. As sort of introductory remarks to my comments on the amendment, I had an opportunity to sit on this committee as a temporary substitution and had the opportunity, therefore, to engage in considerable debate with colleagues on the committee when we were reviewing Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, and also to hear individuals and organizations that came before the committee to express and register their concerns and observations on what they thought were the strengths of the bill and where they thought there were loopholes that needed to be plugged. While there was general support for the bill, there was serious concern expressed with respect to parts of section 3, which this subamendment B1 is an attempt to amend.

I was among those members of the committee that argued as best we could that the section of the bill which exempts government officials and any contacts initiated from the government side to talk to people who may be registered as lobbyists, people who have private interests to advance in their conversation with the government, that the prohibition, the restriction on application of the act when it applies to government leaves a very big loophole. Public interest groups that came before the committee drew our attention to it in a very specific way. They said: there's a huge loophole.

It should be incumbent on the government to also disclose the people that it has talked to, including people in organizations who may be registered lobbyists. But the bill allows the government to not disclose that information. In their view – and I agree with that view completely – it would in fact defeat the very principles of the bill and the objectives of the bill, which are to ensure transparency and accountability on the part of all of those people, including government representatives, who are responsible for enacting legislation which affects everyone in this province. The Lobbyists Act in itself, although long overdue, is a welcome legislative initiative on the part of the government. I want to leave absolutely no doubt about this. We are happy that this piece of legislation is before us.

What we are trying to do is improve it and improve it by plugging a very serious loophole to which attention was drawn not only by some of us, members of the Legislature who happened to be on that committee and had the opportunity to take part in the debate, but by public interest organizations. Organization after organization drew our attention to it. They said: for this bill to really work and to make a difference in the way we have been transacting and conducting ourselves as government and as lobbyists in this province, this loophole must be plugged.

If we do not plug this loophole, then the very essence of the bill is in a sense sucked out of it; its objectives are frustrated. Albertans will not have complete confidence in the ability of this bill to serve the objectives that they expect all of us to not only respect but, in fact, enact in our daily behaviour and also in legislation that comes before this Assembly.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment – and I had the same amendment approved as well, so I won't duplicate it. It's there. I'm glad that I'm speaking to it here in the House. I'm very, very supportive of this amendment. I think it will make a very major difference to Albertans who have become cynical about the way this government has allowed lobbying to happen in the past. If this loophole is not really plugged, then that practice, about which Albertans have become very cynical and very critical, will be allowed to happen, albeit through the back door.

So long as the encounter was initiated from the government side, it will not be considered as lobbying. I don't think that's the best way to go. I don't think it's the right way to go. The right thing for this Legislature to do is to delete this subsection, that this amendment proposes and asks the House to do.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Elsalhy: Again, Mr. Chairman, just a few comments to react to what the hon. House leader was mentioning. I don't think it does that. I don't think that by eliminating that section, we're restricting access to MLAs or restricting MLAs' ability to solicit feedback and input from stakeholders and experts. We're not doing that.

Let's take a situation where the Minister of Justice, who is now the Deputy Premier, had these behind-closed-doors meetings with members from the oil and gas industry. He spent at least a month talking to them, and nobody knew what the subject matter was, what recommendations or discussions were about, and we were told that this is part of an ongoing dialogue with members of the industry. Nobody knows, and these documents will never be revealed because they were just informal discussions. Even if you try to go through the access to information way and try to FOIP some of these documents, I have to tell you: good luck, Mr. Chairman; you will not meet with success. This is one example.

Another example, Mr. Chairman. It is really annoying when you have a discussion that involves transfers of money or the payment of money and you have no records. Take, for example, verbal contracts, which is something we've complained about and criticized on this side of the House, where the government gives contracts to people for verbal advice. There is not a piece of paper generated. There is no record. There is no tape. There is no transcript. No record whatsoever. People don't get paid small honorariums; they get paid tens of thousands of dollars for something that we cannot prove was beneficial to the taxpayer. We cannot know that for sure. So when you have that, you tell me that, yes, this is annoying, this is irritating, and it is wrong. Well, this is not different.

Let's take a consultant lobbyist. Well, they have to register regardless. If I invite them or if they approach me, they have to register regardless. If you take an organizational lobbyist, if they're volunteers, they don't have to do it. If they're not paid, they don't have to do it, and even if they are, they have a hundred hours before they have to register and report. Well, if I invite them to talk to me for an hour and each MLA in this House invites them to talk to them for an hour, that's 83. They would still not have to register and report. So I don't think that the argument from the Government House Leader holds water. I think he is concerned, as he should be, because he doesn't want to be giving the impression that we're not accessible and that it's limiting our ability to solicit input. We're not going to do this. This amendment only seals that loophole so people in, you know, those places which the act was designed to catch are caught.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Just one brief comment on the hon. member's discourse. Ironically, of course, he raised the Deputy Premier meeting with oil industry interests. Well, if he's paying attention, he'd know that the Deputy Premier indicated that he would make public all the meetings that he held in that regard, and in fact he has disclosed as though there was a registry in place all of the meetings that he's had, the people he met with, in the same form as would have been disclosed if there had been a registry. You can look on the Department of Justice website and get that very information. So the point that he was making is not in fact valid on that particular matter.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I, too, listened to the discourse of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and would like to remind him that perhaps all the information, all the reports and fact-finding statements that have been made in regard to royalties, could be on that website as well, as well as who the hon. member has met with recently. That would be being really open and really transparent.

Now, regarding this amendment, I would certainly urge all hon. members to accept this. I do not think that this will restrict MLAs from doing their jobs in any way. I see this deletion as necessary to enhance and restore public confidence in the office that we hold. For that reason I won't speak at length on this, but I would urge all members to support this amendment. Certainly, it has been well articulated by both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Member for Edmonton-McClung. Please accept this because I think it will go a long way to restoring public confidence, and it's not going to inhibit or limit in any way our ability to do our job or to talk to citizens who may have an issue or may have a concern. Certainly, they may be able to provide us with advice.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to make brief comments. I was reading through some of the remarks that were made yesterday by the Government House Leader when speaking to Bill 1, and he has made a very welcome suggestion to introduce the idea of public good. I think it is important in this House to always keep in mind what serves the public good, and I'm looking forward to the amendment that he's going to bring forward to improve this bill. He made the suggestion that that amendment will be coming forward to exempt nonprofit charitable voluntary organizations from the requirements of this bill. I think that's a good amendment. We hope to see it soon. I'm sure that if the amendment is going to be as it seems to me it will be, then it will have, certainly, our enthusiastic support.

Using the same principle of public good, I think it will serve the public good if subamendment B1 is voted in by the House. I think that it's a good principle. It's a good guiding principle. The debate on the bill should focus on whether or not any changes that we propose in it will enhance and serve the public good or make the bill better in its attempt to serve the public good.

I think that removing the restrictions, which would allow the government to contact lobbyists on its own initiative, thereby not having to report on it, will not serve the public good. I think that removing the ability of the government to not disclose its initiated contacts is a very important change that this bill needs to see made to it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the members of this House to support this amendment because it will enhance the ability of this bill to serve the public good. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on subamendment B1?
Are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on subamendment B1 lost]

[Motion on subamendment B1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will revert to part B of amendment A1. Are there any other speakers who would like to participate? Hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, did you want to speak on part B?

Mr. Elsalhy: Oh, no. No.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Well, then, we need to have a vote on part B of amendment A1 that's before us.

[Motion on amendment A1B carried]

The Deputy Chair: We will now proceed with part C. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, you've come to expect that I would be the first speaker each time, and good on you for being so observant.

Section C here is talking about contracting prohibitions. This section is talking about the fact that if you are engaged in a lobbying activity, you cannot have a contract with the government on the same subject matter that you're lobbying on or vice versa. If you have a contract with the government in a certain area or with a certain department, you cannot be engaged in lobbying on the same subject matter because that would present as a conflict of interest.

This section, as it's suggested in amendment A1C, captures also your significant other, your partner, your spouse. We are calling them associated persons. While we struggled with this in the committee, Mr. Chairman, what we're trying to say is that the associated person probably has at times gained some information from their partner or spouse that would put them in this perceived conflict. The amendment here is talking about that to try to alleviate that concern.

Sub (2) addresses the issues surrounding multistakeholder situations, when an MLA or a minister or even the Premier invites feedback or input from multiple sources, you know, experts or people who are knowledgeable about a certain area or certain field. When you have these multistakeholders, then these individuals do not have to worry about the act applying to them.

I mentioned subs (3) and (4), basically telling us that it's an either/or type of situation. You can't lobby and be contracted at the same time on the same subject matter or vice versa.

Subsection (8) changes that the initial act had a provision for 90 days, a grace period of 90 days for you to cease one activity or the other. You either ceased to be a contractor or you stopped lobbying. The committee felt that 90 days was a bit generous and that we wanted to reduce it to 60 days.

So that offers the explanation for most of what's in section C, which really amends section 6 of the proposed act, subs (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), and (8). Mr. Chairman, it was felt that maybe the committee was a bit too rigid in terms of still insisting on having the associated person captured under the act.

I want to use this opportunity to address one of the concerns which I believe was raised by the Government House Leader or maybe one of the government members to my right when they said: "Well, you were a part of the committee. How come you're now presenting amendments and responding to amendments after the report has been submitted?" I want to put on the record and emphasize that while we were members of the committee and we had these discussions, we knew all along that it was the Assembly that was going to make these decisions and that it was all of us on both sides of the House that will now again discuss and study and scrutinize the recommendations from the committee. When these are done, well, guess what, Mr. Chairman? We're going to scrutinize and study the bill itself.

I told you earlier that we have multilayers. We have three layers here. We have the bill, the proposed act; we have the work from the committee, which generated 11 amendments; and then we have subamendments from the Liberals and the NDs. Potentially there is one from the Conservatives as well. Then when all of this is done, we go back to the bill itself, and maybe we'll have more amendments. We're doing our due diligence because that's what we were elected to do. We were elected to study pieces of legislation that are either bad, that need to be stopped, like Bill 46, or good, that need to be strengthened, like this bill, Bill 1.

So when the member opposite indicated that, you know, "How come he was a member of that committee and now he's doing all this work?" and "Why didn't he use the opportunity during the committee?" well, the committee was rushed, and the committee mostly focused on the submissions and presentations which we received. Let me tell you that the amount of contact that we were exposed to by members from the nonprofit sector, members from the volunteer sector was immense, and we wanted to alleviate their concerns because, really, in my book, in my definition, this act was not created to catch them. It was created to catch people who abuse the information that they gained while in government or while associated with government, and it was created to deal with the perception that politicians are less than honest and that people who have inside information and inside access to information were abusing this information through that revolving door: leaving government one day, coming back the next week to lobby government on the same area of expertise that they were one week earlier entrusted to be working on.

I don't want to be citing names or giving examples because I know the hon. Government House Leader will jump to his feet and accuse me of besmirching people's reputations and dragging it through the mud. That is not my intention one bit. My intention here, as well as members from both sides of the House, I hope, is to tell people that we're not as bad as they think we are and prove to people that we are open and transparent . . .

An Hon. Member: You are.

Mr. Elsalhy: No. I don't think I am. And only time will tell how many of us will make it back here and how many will be swept aside.

Anyway, what I'm saying is that people have a right to know who has the ear of government, who is talking to government about what, and what we're doing here is just that.

Now, I know many of my hon. colleagues want to speak, and I know some of them actually are contemplating further subamendments. I want to cede the floor to them so they can actually proceed with that endeavour. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I'd be the colleague. Thank you so much. I think this section for the most part is appropriate. I have a huge problem with part of a clause, but overall this to me is I think the Rod Love clause because essentially it's setting out that you can't be paid to be giving advice to the government, you know; in other words, hired by the government and also be lobbying on behalf of somebody back to the same government. That's exactly the situation that we had. So this whole section was set up to preclude that kind of behaviour, and I believe that is appropriate.

It tries to cover it off in several places, and I think my colleague and I'm sure others will explain why the committee made the choices that they made in replacing the original clause, which appears on page 10 in the act for those that are following along at home and in the gallery. In the original act section 6 appeared on page 10, and this amendment A1C is to replace it in its entirety.

As I said, I don't have a problem at all with the subamendment or even, actually, with the original. I trust that the committee did good work in asking for the replacement. When I look at what the sponsoring member of the amendment said, that it was considered extensively by the committee, the proposed exception to the prohibition against lobbying and providing paid advice to the government on the same issue at the same time, but it would exempt those that were on multistakeholder committees, which makes sense.

You know, again, I've talked before about having a limited pool of people with specific knowledge in certain areas, and you don't want to exempt them or take them out of your role of expert, if I may put it that way. We need that expertise in these committees, and we certainly value their input, but I think it's important that we don't let someone who really takes advantage of the system, and that's what we were dealing with there.

I do have an amendment to this section C. If I could ask, I would like to move that amendment at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the subamendment that is being circulated will be referred to as subamendment C1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment is structured to remove the same phrase that appears in two different sections. That phrase is "or a person associated with that person." Whether you're following along at home with the act at page 10 or you have the package of amendments in front of you and you're looking at the new proposed section C, in section (3) of the proposed section C it says, "no person shall lobby on a subject-matter if that person, or a person associated with that person, is holding a contract for providing paid advice on the same subject-matter." I'm fine with all of that except for having "or a person associated with that person" captured into that. The same thing happens in section (4): "no person shall enter into a contract for providing paid advice on a subject-matter if that person" – here's that phrase again – "or a person associated with that person, lobbies on the same subject-matter as that of the contract."

Here's why. We've got to grow up. This is 2007. What is being captured here is the idea that somehow spouses are the same person. We're failing to recognize that we have mostly two-adult working households. Where you have a family or a partnership happening, these people are usually both working, particularly where you have professionals. What this is is a really old-fashioned idea that somehow you can't have a husband and wife involved on something because – what is it: nepotism? – something bad will happen. It's essentially a very old-fashioned idea that they're the same person.

To me it's offensive that in 2007 we would still have that kind of thinking. We need to recognize that we have couples that are two independent individuals. They may share a home life, but they may be going in entirely different directions out in the professional working field. Or maybe they're even in some of the same fields. It's quite common, for example, to find a household with two physicians, two accountants, maybe even two people that are working for the same entrepreneurial outlet.

What is being set up with this by including those associated persons is incredibly convoluted, but here's what could happen. Let's say you've got two physicians. One of them works at this point for the AMA, but because of this extra clause in there the spouse could not go and volunteer, for example, for the Diabetes Association because it's assuming there would be some kind of collusion happening between those two people.

That's where it gets unacceptable to me. I think we have to allow that in this day and age you may well have a household with two physicians, one of whom would be contracted to be providing that advice and the second one who could be lobbying. They may not actively be lobbying, but remember the way this act is set up. You could have someone that's on the board of directors for the Diabetes Association or medical clinic or pick whatever you want, and any work they do in trying to change public policy would now be prohibited. You can't do that in this day and age.

Are people going to try and take advantage of this? Yup. That happens. We know that no matter what system we set up, 3 per cent of the people are scallywags, and they are going to figure out a sneaky way . . . [interjections] Well, there are all kinds of other words I could use. I thought scallywags would be the most appropriate today. So, yeah, there are 3 per cent of the people that are going to cheat and do bad things. You know what? Welfare system: we set up all those guidelines, and 3 per cent of the people consistently cheat the system. Okay. So we've got 3 per cent that are going to do it to us one way or another no matter how secure our system is. Why on earth would we stop the other 97 per cent? Why would we penalize the other 97 per cent? Why would we treat the other 97 per cent as though . . .

An Hon. Member: Guilty by association.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. That they're guilty by association. I'm going to remind you again how small that pool of volunteers can be, particularly in sectors where we need some level of expertise.

One, I think we need to grow up and recognize who's actually inhabited, who our citizens in Alberta are, and what they do. Most households have two working adults in them. We want them to volunteer, so why on earth would we set it up so that either one of them has to quit their job if either one is volunteering in an associated sector or the person can't go out and volunteer? Why on earth would we pass legislation that does that when there are other ways for us to get at the law-breaking or the nepotism or doing something wrong that is somehow going to harm the system? There are other ways to pick that stuff up. But to me it is offensive that we would not recognize that we have independent people in this day and age.

Two, I think it's frightening that we would try and narrow that pool of volunteers in that way because that's really what would end up happening with this.

I'm thinking "spouse" when I read "or a person associated." I think in the definition it means someone that's pretty close in the same family, so it could mean an adult child; it could mean a parent. But, frankly, how many of you here are in absolute control of your parents? Right? Exactly. You know, my father – love him to death – do he and I agree on everything? Oh, boy, you can imagine those fights, right?

An Hon. Member: I like your father already.

Ms Blakeman: There you go. Mostly I win, I will point out. But that's the thing. That would be captured here.

An Hon. Member: You just talk him out.

Ms Blakeman: That's right. I just talk him out. No. He's a pretty good talker, too.

But that would be captured here, so we could have a situation that having an adult child who worked in a certain field would preclude their parent, who would be closely enough associated to be picked up by this definition, from either volunteering or working in the same field. I mean, come on, you guys. This is 2007. We've got to get by this one.

That's why I brought this in. I know I've been pushing some buttons here, and I know I've been challenging some people, but I think this is a good idea, and I hope I can get the support of this House. I think that by passing this, we will allow things to go on that happen already and should happen already. If we need to put other things in place, I'm sure the government, with its great fondness for regulations, can manage to capture any huge problem in regs if we do have a lot of problems with couples, for example, that do bad things in association somehow around lobbying.

But I do not think it is right in this day and age to be capturing those associated persons and counting them, which is what we're doing. We're including them in the way we figure this out. Just look at these phrases if I take out the phrase I don't like. You would end up with clause (3) reading: no person shall lobby on a subject matter if that person is holding a contract or providing paid advice on the same subject matter. That's what we want. That's what we wrote. That's the intention behind what we were trying to do here.

Let's look at clause (4): no person shall enter into a contract for providing paid advice on a subject matter if that person lobbies on the same subject matter as that of the contract. Well, that's what we're trying to do here. That is the Rod Love effect. That's exactly what we're trying to stop.

But as soon as you put in those two extra phrases, you've added in a whole other person and basically stopped somebody else from either working or from volunteering. Why on earth would we do that? That does not honour the intent of what we were trying to do with this particular clause. It penalizes a whole other sector of people, whether they're your parent or adult children or a spouse. We didn't mean to capture them, and I don't think we should capture them, and if there is something that is going to go wrong and people are going to misbehave, there are other ways to deal with that 3 per cent that are miscreants, scallywags, evildoers than to pick off 100 per cent of the people the way we're doing now.

That's why I've brought this recommendation forward. I hope I can get the support of the House on it, and I welcome any and all further debate on this subamendment C1. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I can't agree with the last speaker that this was somehow meant to capture spouses. I read the term "associated with" to mean, for example, partners in a law firm, partners in a consulting firm. I've got to tell you that I sort of resent the implication that somehow all of us on this side of the House are dinosaurs or living in the past age or something like that. Nonetheless, the member makes a valid point, and if this indeed captures spouses, I think I'm quite prepared to support this amendment. If need be, we can close a loophole later on or catch it in regulation. I think it's a good point. I don't think the point needs to be made by painting this side of the House as dinosaurs or living in a past age.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I think there is merit in what she says because I think we're right: you can't legislate goodness. We don't intend to stop people from doing it; we just want people to know who's doing what. So if this has done that – and I think she's probably correct. From someone who has a spouse in a high profile position, as you do, sometimes it takes those life experiences to understand what legislation may have an unintended consequence of doing. So I hope that we all give careful consideration to this simply from the examples.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. I listened with a great deal of interest, maybe as a baby dinosaur, then, in that case in this caucus, if we are to be described as dinosaurs.

Mr. Elsalhy: Albertosaurus.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, let's not go there.

The only concern I have, Mr. Chairman, is this: very often we as government are criticized by members of the opposition that there is a perceived apprehension of bias, that there is a collusion and referrals to high-powered Tories in some way influencing the government decisions and policy-making. The Member for Edmonton-Centre has coined this clause as referring to someone who has once worked in the Premier's office, and it is her goal to capture that kind of a relationship with this clause.

Now, I would want to get some form of assurance from the members opposite that if the spouse of that particular person was doing the lobbying of the government and that person continued to work in the Premier's office, would they assure us that all of a sudden that would not be perceived by them as a collusion and one more venue of attacking the government? I don't think we are going to get that kind of an assurance, so I think this government and the committee and the drafters of this bill have gone one step further to assure Albertans that there will be no reasonable apprehension of bias, and all the loopholes have been closed up.

If we allow spouses, children, parents, and perhaps other conjugal partners to now be allowed to carry on lobbying, what have we really achieved? Is there going to be a guarantee, now, from the opposite side of the aisle that when those occurrences take place and one member is working within a position of influence in government and his or her spouse is lobbying on a matter of policy with government, they will from now on keep those two separate and adhere to the Member for Edmonton-Centre's assurances that we should keep them separate and apart because they're separate individuals and not use this as a venue of trying to attack the government that there is a collusion? I personally am not satisfied that that will happen. If the Member for Edmonton-Centre would advise me that from now on they would not see that as being a collusion, then I would definitely support her argument and vote in favour of the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Any other speakers on this amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Chairman. I agree with the speaker from Edmonton-Centre. I can't in fact validate what the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is asking her for. Again, it's probably case by case. But she was trying to make the point that we're grown up, and we should be able to conduct ourselves accordingly and make sure that we abide by set rules or at least know where we're going.

A perfect example that I would raise here is through associations and how it could penalize a spouse with them being Members of the Legislative Assembly. When we in fact were voted in as sitting members, we were given strict rules that if yourself or your spouse holds an account with Alberta Treasury Branch, you must cease those accounts. There would be a perfect example how that could affect an individual through this bill. Just because of my wife's association with me she was made to give up her account at Alberta Treasury Branches. She failed to see how her association with me constricted her ability to do the banking there, but that was the rule, and that's what she abided by.

5:30

Bring it back to this case. This is exactly where we're concerned with regard to spouses of individuals with lobbyists. Why should an individual's good work in a community or efforts with a particular organization be hampered through a spouse's involvement with said X organization? We're very concerned as to that person's ability to continue the work or be hampered for their work. Quite frankly, some people may say: "You know what? It's not worth my time, and I'm going to give it up." So not only is the organization, in fact, penalized with it, but the community at large through their work would be penalized with it.

I just wanted to bring up that working example as to the Alberta Treasury Branches because that was an example that some of us may have in fact had when we were elected. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I find myself in the most unusual position of agreeing both with Edmonton-Centre and with Edmonton-Meadowlark.* In fact, I think what happened in this legislation: accountability legislation and codification of rules can sometimes have unintended consequences. Here we have the conflicts of interests legislation, the ethics legislation, which brings our spouses in exactly in the way that the Member for Edmonton-

Centre indicated. We're now capturing them under this act.

I had exactly those experiences that Edmonton-Meadowlark* talked about in terms of every year when we file our statements, we're reminded that not only our spouses but our children are associated persons, and we have to report on that. It is a bit of an extension because we don't in this day and age control our spouse's financial affairs all the time and certainly not our children's all the time. So I agree with what the hon. member has said. In fact, I would welcome the concept, when next time we review that particular act, of dealing with this issue as well.

So I would add my voice to those who say that this does not need to bring spouses in. It's intended to be legislation which lets the public know who is talking to government. This particular section is basically one which says that if you're working for government on a particular issue, you ought not to be lobbying them, being paid to lobby them on the same issue. I think this is one amendment which I certainly would be in favour of because I do agree.

My spouse has her own professional activities, her own volunteer activities, and unfortunately due to the life that we lead as members of the Legislature, our paths don't cross often enough. When they do, I'm certainly not too concerned about being lobbied. So I would ask that we do consider this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a very interesting argument related to the amendment here. I'm certainly in total sympathy in principle with the argument being made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on making clear distinctions between two adults who may happen to be married and thereby associated. I think there is a point in considering that we may be interpreting the word "associated" a bit too narrowly. There are a variety of ways in which persons can associate with each other. I think the argument would seem to reduce the whole notion of association to relationship and marriage, with which we have a bit of a problem.

One other, I think, current practice and legal requirement that we have, of course – they are not exact parallels – is where an MLA's spouse's assets must be disclosed to the Ethics Commissioner. That is a requirement as of now. If we were to take the logic of the present argument to its final conclusion, then we would say that even that legal requirement doesn't belong to the new century, 2007, but hearkens back to the past.

There is some reason why the disclosure requirements for us as members of this House oblige us to not only disclose our own assets but also make a statement about the assets of our spouses. There is some, I think, tension between what is being proposed here and what's already in place, but I think this bill, once it becomes a piece of legislation, will come back to this House for reconsideration, for re-examination, in two years; that is, if the amendments that are proposed here are passed.

I'm quite willing to support the amendment and see if there are some unintended consequences that follow from it because one concern that I do have here is the concern about creating another loophole. We were in this debate in committee very concerned about loopholes in the bill. As a matter of fact, one amendment that we just debated and voted on was about plugging a glaring loophole. This would seem to be creating a potential loophole, and I would be concerned about it. But two years is not a very long time. Let's vote on this amendment. Let's vote for the subamendment and then look back at it two years hence and see if it created some unexpected problems, at which time we can then return to amend the legislation if necessary.

Thank you.

*See page 2021, col. 1, para. 1, line 3

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, just briefly, I want the record to show that in my comments I was referring to Edmonton-Decore, not Edmonton-Meadowlark.* I wouldn't want to be accused of agreeing with too many Liberals at once.

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

Hon. members, we are going to vote on subamendment C1 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

[Motion on subamendment C1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, if there are no further speakers on section C, then we could have a vote on section C and proceed with the rest of the matters. Is there anybody else who wishes to speak on amendment A1C?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Amendment A1C as amended by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

[Motion on amendment A1C carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we now will deal with part D of amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: There's a pattern developing here, I think.

Ms Blakeman: That's what you get when you're a shadow minister, my friend.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yeah, but I'm not the shadow minister for Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Okay, so make it short, then.

Mr. Elsalhy: We'll try. I promise to be brief. Section D, Mr. Chairman, has two clauses only. It basically talks about the registrar. The registrar is the person who is going to control the registry. The registrar is the person who is going to be, you know, in charge of that registry: what goes in it, the method and mode of reporting, how accessible it is, and so on and so forth, and his or her relationship to the Ethics Commissioner as the officer of the Legislature who is going to oversee the registry. So we have two levels of oversight. We have a registrar, who reports to the Ethics Commissioner, and then we have an Ethics Commissioner, who reports to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment from the committee, amendment D, is basically talking about that role and removing some unnecessary language. Initially, I think, the bill was drafted to highlight the registrar in most of the clauses, but we wanted instead, after having that discussion in the committee, to highlight the Ethics Commissioner as really the higher level, the upper level, in terms of that hierarchy and in terms of that chain of command.

You know, if we're talking about the registry, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to remind hon. colleagues about one particular discussion that we had in the committee. That discussion centred around the need for registration and filing to be extremely easy. I have to tell you that we have access to one of the best legislative researchers, who was made available to us to assist in terms of research. His name is Dr. Philip Massolin. One of the questions I posed to him was, basically, to compare how easy it was to file, how easy it was to register and report in other Canadian jurisdictions which have established registries already. He came back and told us how easy it was, the frequency of the filing, whether there were fees charged, and, you know, which of these registries had an online presence where you can actually access the information and then also where you can do the filing online.

I think the Assembly wouldn't find it hard to accept the direction that the committee charted. The direction was that it has to be online, it has to be extremely simple, easy, and it has to be free of charge because we don't want to make money off the registry – that is not the intention – and we don't want it to be onerous and to be complicated. We want it to be very simple. If you have an online website where people can access the information, so you're looking after the transparency angle, and where they can also do the filing and the reporting, so you're looking at the operational angle, I think that is the way to go.

Most people now are checking for information online. The government website probably receives thousands of hits every year. The Assembly website, I know, receives thousands of hits every year. People are growing more comfortable in terms of technology and online access. This registry has to reflect that direction and that growth, where at the click of a button or a mouse you have the information at your fingertips, right in front of you, you can print it off, you can compare it, you can check archives and go back however long and see over time, you know, who is doing what. That is a measure of accountability and transparency that I'm definitely willing to support.

Clarifying the language where the Ethics Commissioner is the person in charge and the registrar reports to him or her I think is something that is self-explanatory and I don't think would face a lot of opposition from either side of the House in terms of the amendment that's before us.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: No. I just wanted to make an important observation why this bill is better than in some other jurisdictions. Because it's interesting. I've made some considerable attempt to understand the federal legislation around the lobbyists registry and noted to my chagrin that the actual authority of the oversight of the lobbyists registry lies with the Ministry of Industry. It's under a cabinet minister at the federal level. Actually, the Gomery commission recommended that the registrar of lobbyists be freed from the requirement of reporting to a cabinet minister and instead report directly to Parliament on matters concerning the application and enforcement of the Lobbyists Registration Act.

This bill I think is better because the authority for the appointment of the registrar is under the Ethics Commissioner, so there is a more direct connection between the lobbyists registry and its functions and this Legislature, and it doesn't go through a particular department or cabinet minister. So that is, I think, a really important step.

I know that when I was on the Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, we did meet with people from Ontario, and I think it was important to move in this direction, to have it under the Ethics Commissioner's jurisdiction.

I just wanted to make that point. It's just a positive point in support of this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to put in my little bit with regard to what I would be looking for had I in fact accessed the registry. I'd be looking for those who had registered. I'm hoping that it's going to be easily accessible, that there won't be a charge for myself to be able to find out, in fact, who has voluntarily put themselves down.

*See page 2020, col. 1, para. 8, line 3 and col. 2, para. 2, line 1

I'm also hoping that the website would in fact be open and transparent as well as showing on one side who is registered but on the other side who is being penalized, what the penalty perhaps was for – that might be going a little bit – but show the fine. I'm hoping that there will be fines. We're talking about the fines that are going to be put in for the people who in fact don't register and if they're caught exceeding 800 hours. But we're hoping that the registrar, in fact, does include that.

So I'm looking for a two-pronged piece from the registrar: one that would in fact have the people registered, the accessibility for myself, but on the flip side fines for breaches or warnings to those individuals who breach the act itself. I'm hoping that this amendment does take into account those comments as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you now ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we're voting on part D of amendment A1 as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

[Motion on amendment A1D carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will now deal with section E of amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. Section E dictates that it's the Ethics Commissioner who now issues interpretations and information bulletins, not the registrar. I think you're going to agree with me that that's, again, something that emphasizes what we've just discussed. It's the Ethics Commissioner who represents the top person on that ladder, in that chain of command, and it will be up to him or her to tell us, you know, how to react to breaches of the act, how to adhere to the act and sort of behave within its clauses and what it tries to accomplish.

The Ethics Commissioner replaces the registrar in the proposed bill. I don't think it really necessitates a lot of discussion in this House. It makes sense. If someone in this House finds it objectionable or questionable, they would have to please rise and explain why this is not a good decision. But I think the committee felt that the Ethics Commissioner should be the one tasked with issuing these interpretation bulletins and clarifications and making these decisions because the Ethics Commissioner is the officer that reports back to the Legislature. Later on you will notice, Mr. Chairman, that there's actually a reporting function for the Ethics Commissioner in terms of what he or she would have to bring back to the Assembly and how timely that reporting function has to be and what's in the reports and so on and so forth.

Overall, I think I'm in agreement, and I know the members from my caucus are in agreement. We'll call the question unless there are other speakers.

5:50

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1E carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will now deal with part F of amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Essentially, this is providing authority and the mechanism for making public reports submitted to the Speaker when the Assembly is not sitting. That is a fairly new mechanism that we've developed here, I think. So if the Assembly is not sitting, it's a way of essentially tabling a report and complying with the requirements of legislation.

For the most part, that works. My only concern about this is the potential for it to be abused, so I'm trying to balance that against: how large is that potential for it to be abused? I don't think it's that large, and I think it's incumbent upon members of this Assembly to be paying attention, frankly, as the stuff goes through. Really, we need to read our mail more than anything because if the Assembly is not sitting and these reports come through, in essence they've been tabled, and it's accepted that we have that information. That's the function that is being allowed by this particular section or clarified by this particular section, if I'm reading this accurately.

I think it's a process that should allow the Assembly to operate more efficiently, and in that, I trust the work of the committee, and I'm certainly willing to support it, as are the members of my caucus. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1F carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tempted to ask a point of order to see what kind of a ruling we'd get.

Mr. Speaker, I would move that we now adjourn until 1 p.m. on Monday, November 19.

[Motion carried; at 5:55 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen who are here, we'll now proceed to the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Please participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's just an honour today to introduce a total of 74 of my constituents from Pine Street school. There are three classes that are attended by their teachers and group leaders, Heather Lockwood, Cheryl Hawryluk, and Pegi Brown, along with parent helpers Mrs. Jill Sharp, Mrs. Wendy Rudnew, Mrs. Pam Fair, Mrs. Violet Germsheid, Mrs. Denise Conrad, and Tracy McFadden. I would ask our honoured guests to please rise and for this Assembly to wish them well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm hoping that the group is in the gallery, and now they are. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition and the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview I'm absolutely delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 28 guests. We have 26 students and two teachers joining us from l'école Notre-Dame in the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. They are led today by their teachers Mlle Magali Com and Mr. Paulin Larochelle. If the group could please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly a visiting delegation from Clara Tyner elementary school. Clara Tyner is another fine public school located in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. There are 27 visitors here today. As a matter of fact, they're here for the week, and I certainly hope they find their week here informative and enjoyable. The group is led today by teacher Sandi James, and they're accompanied by Mr. Wayne Wheeler, a parent volunteer. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to rise today and to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Breton home-school group. We have with us today seven students: Tanner Daudelin, Mikayla Maciborski, Brittney Ellis, Brady Ellis, Brendan Ellis, Brooke Aldous, and James Aldous. They're here today with their group leader, and they're sitting in the very front row of the public gallery. I would ask them all to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you the Engler family: Garry; his wife, Dawn; children Jonathan and Patricia; and their guests, Lana LaFrance and Andrew Vandenhaak. Let me just, if I may, say a few words about Reverend Engler. Reverend Engler is the head of pastoral care at the Sturgeon hospital. He has a great compassion for those dying and sick. He's been instrumental in my life and my family. He's a wonderful man, and he's blessed by the good Lord for his good work. Would they please rise – they're sitting in the front row – and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two young Albertans seated in the gallery. They're Mandy Melnyk and Nathan Macklin. Mandy comes from a strong agricultural background and was born and raised in the Waskatenau area. She's a member of a long-standing family farm and has been active in organizing farmers at the grassroots level since she was just 14. Mandy is a passionate advocate for fair representation for rural Albertans.

Nathan Macklin is a young farmer in the Peace Country region. He's a descendant of one of the first homesteaders in the Grande Prairie and DeBolt areas. Nathan is active in the fight for farmers to retain their democratic control of the Canadian Wheat Board. He is also very active in the National Farmers' Union. Nathan is the NDP candidate in Dunvegan-Central Peace. I would now ask that both Nathan and Mandy rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly quite a number of guests seated in the members' gallery. If you could rise as I call your name. They are as follows: Phillip Crawford, Zenovia Wiwihar-Crawford, Breanna Crawford, Natalia Crawford, Aiden Crawford, Marek Crawford – we have most of the Crawfords here – Mellissa Brade, Amber Brade, Shannon Kusch, and Meagan Cote. These individuals have come all the way from Whitecourt to add their voices to the growing number of Albertans who oppose the development of nuclear energy in this province. They're rising, and I would now ask that they receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. My first introduction is of a number of Edmontonians who joined the group outside the Legislature before noon today to protest nuclear development in this province. I believe they're seated in the members' gallery. They are Kate and Bryan Wrostok, Carl Beinert, Elizabeth Beinert, Zach Pentyluk, Kevin Wright, and Leila Darwish, who is with the Sierra Club prairie chapter. I will now ask the guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second set of guests, Mr. Speaker, is two federal candidates for the NDP here in Alberta. Ellen Parker, our federal NDP candidate for Crowfoot, is here today from Camrose to voice her concerns on the nuclear issue. Joining her is our federal candidate in Edmonton-St. Albert, Dave Burkhart. They are also seated in the members' gallery. We are honoured to have them here today. I will ask them to now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It also gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and members of the Assembly a number of guests seated in the members' gallery. They are Cole Commander, Holden Commander, Bonnie Commander, Jensen Commander, Shannon Rosnau, Jeff Rosnau, Katty Rosnau, Ben Rosnau, and Noah Rosnau. These guests are also from Whitecourt and are here today to ask the government to oppose the development of nuclear energy in this province. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to inform the Assembly that this government has reached an agreement in principle with the Alberta Teachers' Association to address the teachers' unfunded pension liability. This agreement would resolve a serious issue that has hung over this province, its taxpayers, and its teachers for over half a century. Unresolved, this would have grown into a very mammoth $45 billion problem for our children. Mr. Speaker, that simply is not acceptable. We will not leave this problem for the next generation.

As you can imagine, it was far from easy to resolve a difficult issue that has been around since the mid-1950s. I want to pay tribute to our Minister of Education and his negotiating team for the hard work they put into this on behalf of all Albertans. I must also thank a former member of this Assembly, ATA president Frank Bruseker, for his strong public support of this agreement. In my mandate letter to the minister last December I directed him to seek a very long-term solution that provides value for teachers, for students, and for taxpayers, and we have done that. This is a very positive, forward-looking move that meets the needs of a growing province.

Under the agreement the government of Alberta will assume the teachers' portion of the pre-1992 unfunded liability. In return,

Alberta will get five years of labour peace and the certainty that a massive, growing liability for taxpayers can now be dealt with. Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased that this agreement benefits younger teachers, who have been carrying an unfair burden. In doing so, it really does address the issue of attracting the thousands of new teachers Alberta will need over the coming years.

This agreement must of course be ratified by Alberta's teachers, and all collective agreements must be in place by January 31, 2008. But I'm confident that Alberta teachers will see the advantage in an agreement that will allow the education community to focus on providing the best possible learning environment for Alberta's children. This government made it a priority to find a lasting solution to this problem, one that balances the interests of teachers, students, and taxpayers. This agreement in principle does that, providing the predictability and stability that our education system needs.

Mr. Speaker, it is another very important step in building the future of this province. Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Teachers play a vital role in Alberta's culture, progress, and prosperity, so I'm pleased that the government has reached a deal with Alberta's teachers, a tentative deal, to address the unfunded pension liability. It looks like a good deal, one that could make teaching far more attractive for Albertans considering the profession while reducing the financial burden on teachers currently serving the province. We're glad that the government has followed the lead of this Assembly, who in April passed Motion 503 urging the government to take action on this issue. My colleague the hon. Member for St. Albert introduced that motion. I think he deserves some credit for bringing this issue to the floor of the House, as does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who has been raising the issue in question period and debates for many months now.

We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that addressing this long-standing unfunded liability, which is a $64 way of saying debt, is not some kind of gift to teachers. It's merely a long-overdue correction to a bad policy, as the Premier himself indicated, a bad policy, it should be noted, that this government has been aware of for almost 50 years. While this is a good deal for teachers, it remains to be seen whether this government can make it a good deal for taxpayers. The debt that the government has just assumed – the debt – should be paid off sooner rather than later. The longer it's allowed to fester, the greater the cost to all Albertans.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a note on trust and accountability, if I might. We're concerned that Alberta school boards, locally elected representatives of local people, local parents with a stake in this matter, were shut out of the process and had no voices as this deal was made. This follows a troubling pattern of disrespect from this government for our school boards. In 1995 they hamstringed school boards by taking over management of the education property tax. They failed to fund the settlement for school boards reached following the 2002 teachers' strike. Not the best way to celebrate a hundred years of service from our elected boards.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it seems like a good deal. Let's hope the government follows through by taking care of this incurred debt in a responsible and timely manner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I do know that the leader of the third party would like to participate. We'll need unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and also to all members of the Assembly. It's good to see this Conservative government step up and take responsibility for a situation that they themselves made worse. The pay-as-you-go philosophy in place since the '50s was a problem, but since 1992 the situation worsened. In that time the deficit grew from $742 million to $6.3 billion. It is also important to remember that assuming this debt does not mean that this government has a plan to eliminate it, but taking this $2.1 billion government-imposed burden off teachers is certainly the right thing to do. Young teachers will benefit, as will taxpayers.

While it's a good step, we also need assurance that the standards will not drop for class sizes, school closures, cuts to classrooms, and teachers' working conditions. Albertans need to know that their educational system will not decline during the five-year term of this deal.

Mr. Speaker, the government certainly messed up on housing and royalties, but I think they did the right thing here, and I'm prepared to congratulate them for it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner wishes to participate. We'll need the unanimous consent of the Assembly.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Dr. Bill Gunter
Dr. Stefan Bachu
Dr. David Keith

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is clearly recognized around the world as a good place for solutions-based research, and we have researchers in our midst who are taking us to new heights and accomplishments. As chair of the Alberta Research Council I'm pleased to note that three of Alberta's finest minds in research have been named as co-winners of the 2007 Nobel peace prize for their contributions to the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change document on global warming. They are Dr. Bill Gunter, a distinguished research scientist with the Alberta Research Council's carbon and energy management business, Dr. Stefan Bachu, senior geoscience adviser with Alberta Geological Survey, and Dr. David Keith, director of the ISEEE energy and environmental systems group at the University of Calgary.

These gentlemen were already highly esteemed international scientists whose expertise was being sought around the world. This outstanding tribute through the Nobel peace prize recognizes their efforts to build and disseminate greater knowledge, in particular on the capture and storage of carbon dioxide in suitable geologic formations. This is of immense importance to Alberta as part of a practical and achievable solution to climate change. Each and every one of these individuals and the organizations that support them, including the Alberta government, and all Albertans can be extremely proud of the work done to enhance world-class interdisciplinary research, innovation, and education focused on a cleaner environment, a responsible energy industry, and a suitable economy.

Mr. Speaker, the 2007 Nobel peace prize is further recognition that Alberta is home to world-class research talent and an unparalleled research system built on partnerships among government, universities, research organizations, and industry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

1:20 Adoption Awareness Week

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to recognize Adoption Awareness Week, running from November 19 to 25. Traditionally, the third week of November is a time when we stop and celebrate the many dedicated families who have opened up their lives to a child through adoption. It's a time when we ask families to think about the many children who are still waiting here in our province for committed, nurturing families and permanent homes.

Alberta has a number of successes to celebrate during this year's Adoption Awareness Week. We are the only province that has developed a dedicated website to profile children waiting for adoptive families. This year we celebrate our 24th anniversary working in partnership with CTV television on the Wednesday's Child series, the series that has proven to be a very successful way to find the right home for Alberta children hoping to be adopted. Last year Children's Services found homes through adoption and private guardianship for 471 children who were formerly in government care. In the first half of this year, I'm pleased to say, we've seen a 20 per cent increase in the number of children placed with new families.

Today there are about 165 amazing children who are still waiting to be matched with a loving, caring family of their own. To find out more about adopting a child in Alberta, families can tune in to the Wednesday's Child program, airing each Wednesday on CTV, log onto Alberta's adoption website at www.adoptionalberta.gov.ab.ca, or simply pick up the phone and call 780-422-2634.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Riverdale Net Zero Energy House

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Saturday I joined over 1,100 interested Edmontonians in Riverdale, one of the many fine communities in Edmonton-Gold Bar, for a tour of one of Alberta's first four net zero energy homes. The duplex located 9926-87th Street combines ultra energy-efficient design with three solar energy systems to produce more energy than it consumes over the course of a year. The Riverdale net zero energy house is the most northern one under construction in Canada and will be completed in February. I was surprised to learn that it is possible here in Edmonton's cold, northerly climate for a home to generate all its own heat and light.

On the tour we saw installed solar heating and solar-panelled power systems, high performance windows, partially insulated walls, other insulation details, very efficient wall construction, air tightness, and heat recovery water and ventilation. The technologies used in this house are all off the shelf. The way they are designed and integrated into the house to achieve the net zero energy goal is new.

We need to recognize the financial contributions to this project by both Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Solar Energy Society of Canada, northern Alberta chapter. There are over 40 Alberta specialists on the Riverdale net zero house project. The core project team consists of Peter Amerongen, Andy Smith, and Gordon Howell. This house, which is healthy, sustainable, zero annual energy costs, is the house of the future. It is here now. The public interest in the project is noteworthy.

I would like to thank all those who organized Saturday's event and encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to please visit this house in Riverdale. For more information and tours, please e-mail info@riverdalenetzero.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Oil Sands Multistakeholder Consultation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On July 7 of this year the report and recommendations of the Oil Sands Multi-Stakeholder Committee and panel released its recommendations to the government of Alberta. This is one of the most important public consultations undertaken in years, and the Alberta government has not yet responded to them. There seems to be a reluctance to publicly address these critical issues.

What is the government of Alberta's response to the recommendations on environmental, social, economic, and governance issues related to oil sands development? The consistent message from most presenters to the consultation was that the pace and scope of development is irresponsible, the social and health impact unacceptable, environmental risks too high, especially the massive tailings ponds, and the cumulative environmental impact not adequately understood. Industry is also asking what's going on. They invested many hours in the mining liability management program over several years. The proposal on who is liable for oil sands risks is still not out for public consultation. What are we hiding from?

Recently appearing on an Alberta Environment website is the index of reclamation and a clear indication that the government has changed the definition of reclamation. Reclamation means that a site has been cleaned up and restored to equivalent land use. Here it appears that Alberta Environment has redefined reclamation as any activity on a site that begins the process of reclamation.

In the face of mounting criticism, both within the country and in the international community, it appears that this government will do anything to give the impression: everything is fine; just trust us.

The multistakeholder committee and panel were not able to reach consensus on 26 recommendations. Most of the recommendations they were unable to reach agreement on relate to the protection of social supports and the environment, including interim, precautionary-based emissions and environmental thresholds, real greenhouse gas targets, and a limit on the cumulative amount of land that can be disturbed at any one time in each of the oil sands areas.

Albertans are increasingly . . . [Dr. Swann's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Registered Apprenticeship Program

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to expose an Alberta trades top secret, the registered apprenticeship program, RAP. A week ago I attended a celebration to recognize the apprentice scholarship recipients from around the province.

Industry and government work together to provide on-the-job trades experience. Students can start in RAP as early as grade 10. The work earns them on-the-job experience through their apprenticeship along with credits toward high school diplomas. When apprentices graduate from high school and start their new first period of in-class training, they are eligible to receive $700. They receive the remaining $300 when they start the second period of in-class training.

The registered apprenticeship program 2007 scholarships of $1,000 have been awarded to 384 high school graduates participating in the program. Alberta government partners with industry to fund the annual $1,000 scholarship. The RAP scholarships are an excellent way to promote trades study in Alberta. As more and more young people explore these challenging hands-on careers, these young people have successfully demonstrated both high academic skills and employability skills as part of RAP.

Strengthening postsecondary education is part of our government's plan to secure Alberta's future in building our communities, greening our growth, and creating opportunity. Currently Alberta has 47,000 registered apprentices in 51 designated trades and six designated occupations. On behalf of the youth and parents in my constituency I want to thank the participating companies and the government for investing the time, effort, and funding.

Curb the Danger Impaired Driver Program

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to tell all members of this Assembly about a very successful program in Edmonton. Over and over again as I travelled the province as chair of the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force, we heard about the importance of every Albertan getting involved to help make their streets safer.

Curb the danger is a process for curbing impaired driving through community involvement which was initiated by the Edmonton Police Service in October of 2006. This unbelievable and successful program urges road users of Edmonton to report suspected impaired drivers to the 911 emergency operators. Patrol and other members try and intercept these reported drivers. When an interception is not possible and a plate information matching the description of the vehicle, a letter is sent to the registered owner informing them of the incident.

Mr. Speaker, not only does curb the danger target impaired drivers, but it has been able to obtain stolen vehicles, suspended drivers, drivers without insurance, warrants, and drivers without valid licences. Since the program began, EPS has received 7,842 calls from citizens reporting suspected impaired drivers on Edmonton streets. Of the total, police pulled over 2,403, which led to 743 impaired charges and 148 24-hour suspensions. An additional 2,325 registered owners received letters in the mail, an indication that their driving habits were reported to the police.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, about the wonderful job this program does and would like to acknowledge one of our own, Barney Stevens, who is a security guard. Thanks to Barney, EPS, and Edmontonians who have participated in a true example of community policing.

Oral Question Period

head:

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. deputy Leader of the Official Opposition.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instead of solving the affordable housing crisis, the Conservatives have gone and turned it into a money pit, another black hole down which they pour your tax dollars and mine without anything of lasting value to show for it. Their rent supplement program is now $10 million over budget and climbing. To the Premier: what excuse does he have for the program going so far over budget? And we're only halfway through the fiscal year.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the spring I told this Assembly that for any people that are either moving to the province of Alberta from other jurisdictions or Albertans that are presently seeking housing on their own, we would be there to assist those families and their children to find affordable housing and at the same time invest in affordable housing, working with the municipalities so that we would have more units available for families that continue to move to this province. That is our goal. We're meeting those obligations. It just shows that there are so many people coming to the province to seek opportunity here.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the truth is that the Conservatives' rent supplement program subsidizes landlords. The truth is that the Conservatives show their true colours every day. Their rent supplement program is not about protecting tenants, not about supporting people; it's about doing whatever it takes to make sure landlords can charge whatever they want, and if Joe Tenant can't pay, Joe Government will. When is the Premier going to check his good landlord/bad renter ideology at the door, do the right thing, and bring in a temporary rent cap?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, don't ever get baffled by the statement "temporary rent cap." There is no such thing as a temporary rent cap. You can speak to Premiers from one corner of this country to another. That's how originally some of them got caught up in this temporary rent cap. Temporary in some of those provinces is over 10 years. Temporary, quite frankly, has significantly reduced the number of available units for housing and at the same time put serious impediments on constantly refurbishing rental units in those particular provinces. And that's a proven fact.

Mr. Taylor: This is so important, and the results of not having a home can be devastating. A new report on youth homelessness from the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo reveals that some homeless youth in that area are so desperate that they are trading sexual favours for a place to sleep. Fort McMurray has been pleading for help from the province for years to deal with growth pressures, and this, Mr. Speaker, is the government's answer. To the Premier. No more rhetoric; no more saying you're doing a job, because you're not. What are you going to do right now to fix the housing problems in Fort McMurray so children don't have to trade sex for shelter?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I will discount that kind of an opening statement. But let's face it – I don't know where he was this spring. He should know that this Assembly made a very important decision, and that is that we invested $396 million into the community of Fort McMurray to deal with the critical housing issue, water and sewer treatment in the community of Fort McMurray. We've also put together a team that's moving the infrastructure dollars as quickly as possible. We've made huge, huge advancements in the community of Fort McMurray that he is not even aware of.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Department of Energy Consultant

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Energy has a contract with Mana Energy Group Limited. The president of this company is Murray A. Nelson. The company charges $500 per hour for professional services to the Department of Energy, and they have invoiced taxpayers over $84,000 for a total of 160 hours of service since June. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What services does this company provide to the government for $500 per hour?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The engagement of professionals outside of the department for issues such as the impending set-up of the new Energy Resources Conservation Board and Alberta utilities commission would be some of the work that's contracted outside.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what are the qualifications of this company to provide the service to your department for $500 per hour?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be my understanding that the individual that's being spoken about is indeed very, very knowledgeable with respect to the industry and the utilities system in the province of Alberta. I believe that during this transition period that is taking place, we will require the services of experts such as this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Was this contract – this contract here – tendered? Again to the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that I really understood the question. He asked me if that contract was tendered to me. I would suggest it was not tendered to me.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I'm certain that taxpayers are interested in how they can get themselves one of these $500 per hour government jobs for giving advice.

Now, my next question, and perhaps the hon. minister can understand this one. Who in the Department of Energy authorized the contract?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of contracts, of course, that are out. Not only the Department of Energy but I think that a number of government departments would look outside of government for expertise with respect to the work that we have to do on behalf of Albertans. Most certainly, the work that will be provided on behalf of Albertans by this particular individual: I think the proof of that will come in the conclusion of the work that he'll be doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question is to the Premier. Why does the government of Alberta pay $500 per hour for this company and this man's advice when you reject free advice from Joe Anglin of the Lavesta group regarding the electricity measures?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know who the hon. member is referring to. He may want to bring that issue and ask the Minister of Energy that question. I don't know who he's referring to.

Mr. MacDonald: That doesn't surprise me, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy. For $500 per hour this company must provide a great service for Albertans. Will the minister table in this house the details of the contract, what work was done, what benefits Albertans received, and so forth? Or was this contract one of those secret deals this government is so famous for?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, you know, the work that's ongoing with respect to the transition from the EUB to two new regulators in the province of Alberta is extremely important for Albertans. At an appropriate time we will have two new regulators. We will do it right. In order to get it right for Albertans, we do require the services of outside experts.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Ordinary Alberta families are being hurt by this mismanagement of housing by this Conservative government. Thousands of low-income renters are just a paycheck away from being without a home. The government's own audit of the homelessness and eviction prevention fund found that rental arrears were the cause of half of the claims to the fund, but instead of putting in rent guidelines to stop skyrocketing rents, the government is throwing money at the problem, and it's ending up in the pockets of landlords. To the Premier: if you're going to spend $21 million over eight months on this program, how many more millions of dollars will you dump into this black hole in the next year?

1:40

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we made a commitment to Alberta families that are in need of assistance. But I just want to go back to this other word that the opposition uses. The Liberals use temporary. The third party uses guidelines. Just give us guidelines. Don't legislate; just put in guidelines. Again, a misuse of words. You can't put in a guideline. If you want to put in rent controls, you actually legislate. You don't say that these are guidelines. That's another way of trying to kind of sneak this in, saying it won't harm the housing industry, keep down future construction, by using the word "guideline."

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's curious because we used the term that was used by the government's own task force on housing and homelessness. The term that they used was guideline, Mr. Premier.

But you can't get out of the question that easily. You know, it's important that this government recognizes that people are losing their homes because they won't stand up to landlords. To the Premier: is it because you want donations from big landlords for the Conservative Party that you won't take action?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, changing the questioning because I guess I struck a nerve with him with respect to guidelines. Let's be perfectly frank. Putting in legislative rent controls would only reduce the number of available units constructed in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Martin: Oh, they're really building them now.

Mr. Stelmach: By the way, one of the hon. members says that they're really building them now. Well, quite frankly, yes. Individual housing starts for rental units are up. He should know the statistics out of Edmonton because they're quite phenomenal. In that short period of time many more built under this policy than the zero that would have been built under his policy.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the Premier is forgetting that most of the units that are now being built are condominiums and that condominiumization of rental units is proceeding faster than new ones are being built. If you really want to increase the supply of rental units, Mr. Premier, why don't you do something about the condominiumization that's taking place in this province instead of ignoring the problem?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, last spring we did pass legislation in the House to do that, and secondly . . . [interjection] I don't know if truth hurts them or what. By the way, a teacher – a teacher – that I know would want some kind of behaviour in the classroom is the one that's actually abusing the rules of this House.

Mr. Speaker, the policy we have has been implemented, and it's working well for Albertans. We see the number of rental units increase. We also see the cost of housing beginning to level off. We're seeing housing becoming more affordable. The policy is working, and that policy is working within just a few short months.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Health Care Accessibility

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The success of any society is often judged by its efficiency in providing goods and services. How long do you have to wait? Is there good customer service? These are questions asked. Public and private services are subject to the same questions. Our Alberta health care is a public and private mix. Albertans often have to wait months for health procedures. Health suffers. To even see a doctor or to take a child to a clinic, employees often lose a full day's work. What a waste to them, the economy. What a frustration. There is a shortage of doctors, but why the wait times? My question is to the minister of health. The hip and knee replacement program was a great success in cutting wait times. When will this team approach to health . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member was going to ask when the hip and bone program is going to be extended across the province. I can tell you that we've worked with the bone and joint institute to look at their process. We've extended financial resources to them so that they continue their work, and one of the most important things that can come out of that process is to use it as a model in other areas of health care, where multidisciplinary teams of both health care professionals and those that support them can work with individual Albertans to make the most effective use of the resources, which results in a reduction of the time that people have to wait.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how soon will a comprehensive electronic health card be in place for all Albertans, one that will save paperwork and wasted time for patients and staff in clinics and hospitals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been considerable debate and discussion around the concept of an electronic health card, or so-called smart card. We haven't gone in that direction in the province. We've gone in the direction of an electronic health record which can be accessed by appropriate health care professionals. We expect to have that electronic health record fully operational in 2008 so that most, if not all, pharmaceuticals will be recorded on the record, the electronic diagnostic testing will be on the record, and most Albertans will be on an electronic health record by the end of 2008.

Mr. Backs: A second supplementary question to the minister of health: Mr. Minister, what penalties for clinics for excessive wait times has or will your department attach to fee payments for publicly funded procedures, and are there other measures, private or public, planned to improve service?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not going in the direction of penalizing, at least certainly not at this point in time. Instead, what we're trying to do is to create the environment or the climate in which clinics can adopt best practices, can use the benefit of health care professionals' training and expertise to their full value, working in the context of primary care networks, for example, bringing the full value of all health professionals to the table. At this point in time it wouldn't be appropriate to use a penalizing process because there's such a high level of integration between the various roles that are played. But it's very important to take the learnings from the bone and joint institute, to extrapolate that to other clinics and other processes and use health care professionals to the best of their training and expertise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For some 50 years Alberta's teachers, governments of the day, and Alberta's taxpayers were strapped with the unfunded pension liability, which was only growing, until this Premier made an undertaking to address this issue. Promise made; promise delivered. The ATA and the minister and the Premier should be commended on it. However, to the Minister of Education: what will the actual benefit be to an average Alberta teacher in his take-home pay, having ratified this agreement?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess that first of all it needs to be pointed out that as a result of our initiative in this spring's budget, since September 1 of 2007 we have been picking up the 3.1 per cent contribution of teachers, which will expire at the end of December, so the immediate impact will not be seen. There will be a retroactive 3 per cent pay increase to September 1, and then there will be the lump-sum payment at the end of April, and then, going forward, there would be the ongoing wage increases.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In that case what will the benefit be to an average Alberta taxpayer from this expenditure?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think there are a number of benefits to Alberta taxpayers. I don't know how you put a number on students being in class for five consecutive years without labour agreement. Secondly, I think it's also fair to say that the ATA and the teachers have come to the table. They have accepted a 3 per cent wage increase for the current fiscal year that we're in, and that obviously is a lesser amount than has been accepted by other public-sector unions. I think the long-term benefit, though, on this deal is that it's good for parents, it's good for teachers, but it's especially good for students of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Even though pension funding right now is not flowing through school boards, some are asking why schools boards were not involved in this negotiation. Can you enlighten us on that?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it needs to be pointed out that I was not involved in the negotiations as the minister, nor was the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association involved. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, we wanted to take politics out of the negotiations, and I think the results that we announced last Thursday show that we succeeded in taking politics out. Now, I know the opposition wants to make a political issue out of it, but we decided – we had a strong negotiating team led by the Deputy Minister of Education. The ATA came to the table with the intention of also resolving this issue, and unlike the Liberals, who will continually plant the same tree and expect to get different fruit from it, we took a different approach.

1:50 Affordable Housing for AISH Recipients

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, finding an affordable place to live remains a crisis in this province. People with full-time jobs can barely afford the rent on a one-bedroom apartment. For residents whose only income is $1,050 a month, which is an AISH cheque, finding a place is almost impossible. A studio apartment is $800 a month. To the minister of housing: do you expect people to live like this? Substandard basement suites are not the answer. What else can this minister do to get Alberta through this crisis? Whatever it is that's been happening up to now, it isn't working.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last spring, when we initiated the housing task force committee, that housing task force brought forward recommendations. One of the recommendations was the homeless and eviction prevention fund, the recommendation being for $7 million to address those exact issues. We have presently served 21,000 individuals under that program, trying to assist those individuals in time of need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. It's actually helping the landlords.

To the minister of seniors. Band-aid measures this government has put in place in the spring haven't solved the affordable housing crisis. How are Albertans on AISH supposed to afford medication, food supplies, and equipment when most of it, 70 to 80 per cent, is spent on their rent?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, with respect to those on AISH we do take that seriously in the sense that we have raised AISH rates over the last three years. We continue to work towards that obligation of looking at how we can improve that going forward. We provide a full complement of health benefits to those on AISH. We've also tried to work to make it far more flexible for them if they are employed, that a greater amount of their income would be exempt from any clawbacks. We've also tried to make sure that we're working on more flexible employment initiatives for those with disabilities.

Ms Pastoor: I agree with the minister. There have been some good changes made. However, most of these people really cannot work at a full-time job. Will the minister increase AISH payments to reflect rent increases, or is the government finally going to implement temporary rent caps, as recommended by your own housing task force? Mr. Minister, temporary can be temporary if this government has the political will to make it so.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, those on AISH receive a range of benefits. As we've said, there has been a very substantive increase over the last two, three years in AISH payments. We are going to see – and we're working towards that – that those payments do increase. We acknowledge that there are increases in living costs but have also tried to make sure that there are more flexible arrangements for employment. Acknowledging that they aren't always capable of working on a full-time basis, how do you ensure that you can work with employers in our system to ensure that to whatever flexible arrangements they can, they have opportunities to be included in work?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An Alberta education is ranked as one of the very best in the world. It takes many people and a lot of hard work to ensure that our students receive the best education possible, so it's important that we work together to benefit our students. Throughout the discussion and announcement of the agreement in principle to deal with the pre-1992 teachers' portion of the unfunded liability, the focus has been on teachers and government reaching a five-year agreement, but the students ultimately are the reason we are doing this. My question to the Minister of Education is: what's required to finalize this proposed agreement?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is correct that it is a memorandum of agreement, and in order for it to be finalized, the 62 school boards and 62 ATA locals across the province have been given until January 31 to resolve this particular issue and sign contracts. I think it is important to point out that there are issues at the local level that school boards and ATA locals may want to include in the agreement, and we've given them the opportunity to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this weekend during discussions with some of my constituents this question kept arising, so I need to ask the Minister of Education what the answer is. Does this agreement mean that the government is now bargaining provincially?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. This is a one-off situation, and when this particular contract expires at the end of August 2012, we will resume the normal bargaining that exists today. I think it's fair to say that during the course of the negotiations there was a fair bit of give-and-take on both parts, and the ATA felt that it was in their best interests for their members to have labour peace in exchange for the assumption of the unfunded liability. That's the way this particular negotiation worked out, but we will revert in 2012 to the normal process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: That's all. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years this government has managed to systematically erode the powers vested in publicly elected school boards across the province. Their exclusion from unfunded pension liability negotiation is simply another example of this. Why did the government choose to exclude school boards throughout these negotiations when they are essential to the agreement's implementation, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the member would have been listening, he would have heard the answer earlier. As I said to the very fine question from the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, the Minister of Education and the head of the ATA were also not involved in the negotiations because we have embarked on several occasions in the past which have not been successful, and our desire this time was to attain success. We put the two parties at the table that . . .

Mr. Chase: The Education minister gets in the way of successful bargaining.

Mr. Liepert: You know, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity wouldn't be spending so much time in his basement thinking about all these smart-aleck sayings that we hear from him every day, he might have been at the School Boards Association reception last night and heard the very, very positive response to this agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If one school board dissents, this agreement in principle will collapse. That's the way I understand it. This is to the minister. Given that they were just last week given the specifics, why has the government given the board such an immense responsibility in such a tight time frame to ratify the agreement? Why so tight, Mr. Minister? It's a very important agreement.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member was at the reception last night, and if he would have been talking to the school trustees, as I was – and I've certainly been talking to my colleagues, who have been around the province this past weekend talking to teachers, talking to school board officials. I would say that there is a high degree of satisfaction with what has been put on the table. The school board trustees are saying to me that the fact that they now have the length of the contract, the funding in place, and the fact that they'll have labour peace for five years can now allow them to sign a contract with their ATA locals, and they can focus on educating students and not be negotiating contracts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the government has done with this latest agreement is create a two-tier bargaining model across Alberta, where salary is negotiated provincially but things like working conditions are negotiated locally. To the Minister of Education: since the government is systematically eroding the autonomous powers of school boards, what future role does this government expect them to play? What is their role going to be? What are they going to do in the future, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that the Liberal opposition has looked long and hard and sometime this morning has finally found something that they think is negative about this absolutely incredible deal for all Albertans. I would just suggest that all of the feedback we have received has been very positive, and unlike the hon. Member for St. Albert I'm optimistic that we're going to have labour peace in this province for the next five years and students are going to be in the classroom getting educated, where they belong.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

2:00 Teacher Recruitment and Retention

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was a teacher in my previous life. It is one of the most meaningful and noble of all professions, and its role is second only to parents in producing a successful next generation. I've seen many, some of the best, teachers, many young and energetic teachers, leave the profession to pursue other interests. To the Minister of Education: given that recruitment and retention are critical to the future of this province and our students, does the minister have information or statistics to indicate the significance of this trend or its impact on the profession, the school system, and our students?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that some 30 per cent of teachers within five years exit the profession. It's hard to put a number or a specific percentage on why a particular teacher leaves, but clearly in my meetings with teachers across the province in the last 11 months and especially with those who are new to the profession, they have indicated to me that paying for a liability that they had no part in creating was something that they felt was unfair. We have fixed that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the new pension deal will attract and retain more teachers, and I think many Albertans agree with that, but proof and evidence are important. Does the minister have evidence that would show that the recent agreement for Alberta taxpayers to assume $2 billion of the unfunded liability will solve the recruitment and retention issue?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I guess, Mr. Speaker, only time will tell. There are a number of factors as to why teachers leave the profession, and some of them we have little or no control over. However, this is one that we clearly have control over, and we've taken action. Teachers will have the 3.1 per cent no longer taken off their paycheques. In addition to that, they will have a salary based on the weekly earnings index for the next four years and 3 per cent this year. I believe it will keep the majority of new teachers in the profession for much longer than in the past.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The pension plan liability issue has been resolved, but it's not a magic bullet for retention and attraction of professionals. Is the government considering other options to ensure that the best teachers stay in the profession for our students?

Mr. Liepert: One of the things, Mr. Speaker, that I think we need to do is recognition. Last night at the School Boards Association opening ceremonies they presented what was called the Edwin Parr award, and it is for first-year teachers. There were some seven recipients last year, and for those members in the House who were in attendance, I think everyone who was there will say how literally blown away we were with the quality of these young teachers. I believe that recognition either through such awards as the Edwin Parr award or our own excellence in teaching award – I would strongly encourage all members to nominate teachers in their constituencies for what is a very well received recognition of their work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The rumours around the plans to build nuclear power plants in Alberta are starting to spin out of control. The Alberta New Democrat caucus and most Albertans have grave concerns about these proposals and would welcome the opportunity for the government to set the record straight here and now. The Conservatives, and the Liberals, too, for that matter, have had closed-door meetings with Energy Alberta. We believe, as do hundreds of Albertans that met today on the steps of the Legislature, that this issue is too important to ram through in secrecy. To the Minister of Energy: will the minister kindly describe the details of their meetings with Energy Alberta, with particular emphasis on why you think this province would need nuclear power in the first place . . .

The Speaker: We have a 45-second rule. That's about a minute and something else.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the development of nuclear energy in the province of Alberta most certainly there is an application that's in front of the Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission, and that's the proper place for it to be. Under our Constitution in Canada the federal government reserves a constitutional right to deal with these issues, and we respect that. Also, there will be at an appropriate time hearings that would take place and public consultation. You can rest assured that the Alberta government on behalf of the citizens of Alberta will be very active in that issue.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that these negotiations have obviously progressed along to a fairly advanced stage just with the amount of nuclear material we've been receiving around the province, yet we've had no position from the government as to their position on nuclear energy in general. So, Mr. Minister, please set the record straight once and for all. Does this government support a nuclear-free Alberta, or do they support building nuclear power plants on our soil?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, you know, it's easy if you want to just try to phrase a question that would put any individual in a corner. However, what I would suggest is that what will happen in Alberta, as may not be going to be done by the NDs, is that nuclear energy would be considered in the broader context of our comprehensive energy strategy. We are at this point neither a proponent of nor a detractor from any nuclear proposition in the province.

Mr. Eggen: You know, that's funny, Mr. Speaker, because I look at the 20-year plan for electricity, for example, in this province: no mention of nuclear energy. Suddenly here it is, popping up on the floor of the Legislature. Albertans deserve to know what's going on in the open in terms of nuclear power in this province. Why is the government pursuing this dangerous and costly nuclear route instead of investing in proven sustainable solutions such as conservation, wind, solar, and geothermal energy? The billions that it would cost to build and then clean up a nuclear plant afterwards could be invested in a much wiser fashion.

Mr. Knight: You know, again, Mr. Speaker, similar to some of the questions that we were dealing with last week, I can repeat the answer any number of times that the member opposite would like. We are neither a proponent of nor a detractor from any nuclear project in the province of Alberta. The mandate for this is clearly at the federal level. Clearly, the Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission will deal with it in a timely manner, and we as the government of Alberta will be involved in the process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are also for the Minister of Energy. Today concerned citizens from across Alberta, British Columbia, and Ontario gathered on the steps of the Legislature to express their deep concerns about the prospect of nuclear power plants close to their homes and families. While companies are filing applications and scouting locations, citizens feel ignored. These people and all Albertans concerned over the prospect of nuclear power were promised public consultations with full disclosure. Mr. Minister, is it your intent to push through Bill 46 to limit public participation in nuclear energy discussions?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: I see you refuse to answer, Mr. Minister.
Citizens have pressing questions about health, safety, environmental and economic impacts. The MLA for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne has been heard to say that it's not a question of if but when for nuclear power in the Whitecourt area. Tell me, Mr. Minister: is this the position of the Alberta government? When, not if, on nuclear power?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, to clarify the first issue, number one, I believe that if you read the Order Paper, Bill 46 appears there at some point, so I think that wasn't appropriate.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the answer to the second question, what another member might or might not say out in public is certainly not a concern for me.

I'll repeat the answer again. The government of the province of Alberta is neither a proponent of nor a detractor from any nuclear facility in the province of Alberta. It's being handled appropriately by a federal government agency.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is the government's duty to make balanced decisions, decisions that are made in the best interests of the people of Alberta and all future generations. Given the massive cost overruns of nuclear power in Ontario, will the minister commit here and now that no public funds and no public liability will be assumed to support the nuclear industry in Alberta?

2:10

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, you know, it's interesting when we get into these types of discussions. The answer to that question, I think very clearly, lies in the fact that it would be my observation that in Canada Alberta is the only jurisdiction that has no public money in the utility system currently, no debt and no public money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Winter Emergency Shelters

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our province continues to experience strong economic growth, and along with that come a number of social needs for vulnerable Albertans. I know from past experience that with winter fast approaching, a number of homeless individuals in Calgary and throughout the province will require emergency shelter. My first question is to the Associate Minister of Affordable Housing and Urban Development. What is the status of the winter emergency shelters in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you. We've been very proactive in addressing the emergent needs of the homeless in the province. For a number of months we've been working with community agencies, with the municipalities and organizations, and that's to ensure that they're able to assist the homeless with winter emergency shelter in their own communities. Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Member for Calgary-Bow: in Calgary today we did open an emergency winter shelter, which was the Foothills Shelter. It will be operated by the Mustard Seed until April of 2008. This winter emergency shelter will provide 450 emergency spaces for the homeless, and that's good news.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. The second question is to the same minister. How many emergency spaces were provided last year, and will that 450 be enough for Calgary and others in the province for this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that with our strong economy people will arrive in our province without resources to establish themselves. That's why, as I said earlier, we partnered with municipalities and community organizations to provide additional winter emergency shelter spaces. This winter we added other municipalities to the program, like Lloydminster and High Level. In response to the member's question this year we're providing more emergency spaces than we've ever had before in the province. This year the emergency shelter budget tripled to 7 and a half million dollars, which will provide 940 emergency shelter spaces, and that's fairly significant.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. A final question, Mr. Speaker, is also to the same minister. Are we doing anything to move people beyond their dependency upon the winter emergency shelters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question addresses why the Secretariat for Action on Homelessness, which was recently announced, is so important. Each year we do keep spending millions of dollars on solutions which address the immediacy but not the long-term, fundamental causes of homelessness. We know – we've heard it in the Assembly before – we can't keep doing the same thing over and over again and expect different results. The secretariat will work with communities. They'll work with communities and the homeless foundations in assisting them with their long-term plans and their 10-year plans. Also, the secretariat will provide leadership collaboration and co-operation as the 10-year strategy for homelessness is developed for our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Crime Reduction and Safe Communities

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing I've learned in this Assembly is that when the government is spending money on something, they announce it in the biggest and boldest lettering available. That is why the government response to the recent report and recommendations on the safe communities task force was confusing. Not once anywhere was there any mention of money, not in the press release and not in the background documents. Then when challenged, the Premier told us in a press conference that $470 million over three years has been committed. To the Solicitor General: what assurances do we have that this verbal commitment will bind your government to fully funding the recommendations of the task force, or are we supposed to just take the Premier's spoken word?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member mentioned, our Premier did commit to $470 million for implementing these task force recommendations, and I look forward to that member and his colleagues across the floor supporting it when you bring it up in the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding, then, that we're going to see this in the spring budget, hopefully. This government, though, has so many examples of reports and recommendations that sit in a drawer or on a shelf gathering dust or are implemented piece by piece here and there with no clear plan. That is why I was questioning it. The best example is the crystal meth task force, headed by Colleen Klein, the former Premier's wife, which came out with many good recommendations after months of public consultation. As happens so often, this report is in need of an APB to determine its whereabouts. Again to the Solicitor General: what assurances can he give us that the safe communities task force recommendations are not going to meet with the same fate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, in regard to the crystal meth task force this ministry is already moving ahead on a number of initiatives that were mentioned in the crystal meth recommendations. In regard to the safe communities/crime prevention task force, we plan on implementing the ones that we have committed to.

Mr. Elsalhy: That's the disconnect, Mr. Speaker. They say they're moving on these initiatives. We don't see this in the House. The safe communities task force recommended, for example, adding more police officers, but to do this, the minister needs to review and revamp the criteria for municipal policing grants. This government has repeatedly refused to revamp these criteria, and in their report they state that the recommendations and the provincial funding formula need further study. The current funding formula is so ridiculous that a town that has 5,001 people will end up paying hundreds of thousands of dollars for policing while a town with just 5,000 gets everything paid for. To the minister: why are small municipalities being penalized for experiencing growth? Why is there no sliding scale for police funding for towns that exceed 5,000 people?

Mr. Lindsay: Again, Mr. Speaker, any of the programs we have in place are subject to review time and again. The police grant program is one of those that we look at on a continual basis. In regard to the 5,000 population, we do give those communities two-year assistance on that particular program. The help is there. I also want to point out to the hon. member that this government also returns approximately $100 million to police agencies as a result of fines that are collected in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Opening of U.S. Border to Live Cattle

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Border closures, court rulings, the changing dollar have created hardships for my producers. Many of my constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne depend on the cattle industry for their livelihoods. Today the United States Department of Agriculture implemented its final BSE rule, allowing the importation from Canada of bison and live cattle over the age of 30 months. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Can the minister explain the impact of this rule on my producers in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and others across the province? How quickly can they expect to ship cattle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this is absolutely a positive step finally for our cattle industry. It's been a long time coming, but some hard work by both the provincial government and the new ag department in the federal government has paid off. Live cattle and bison born on or after March 1, 1999, including breeding animals, which is very important, and meat products will be allowed into the U.S. Rule 2 restores trade and recognizes the effectiveness of our BSE safeguards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same minister. In Whitecourt-Ste. Anne I have an advisory committee made up of producers, and we've spent many hours talking about age verification. Today's ruling will stress the importance of age verification for our producers. Can the minister tell us what steps are being taken to encourage age verification amongst Alberta's cattle industry and the producers border to border?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly an important question indeed. We've been working with the Canadian Cattle Identification Agency since October of 2006. To date over 3 million birthdates have been recorded in the CCIA database. Alberta beef, of course, represents over 50 or maybe 60 per cent of the Canadian total. Although we have a multitude of cattle age-verified and identified, it's time to move forward. Now is the time we must age-verify all cattle that are born in the future.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the minister responsible for international trade. Like I said in the preamble, this issue is very, very important to the producers in my constituency, and the issue is: what's next, Mr. Minister? You know, the producers have been faced with many issues. R-CALF always seems to have endless issues to raise in the U.S. courts. It seems like one barrier after another hits the producer at the primary level. My question is to the minister. What's next? What can we expect?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'm very proud to say that Albertans are free traders who certainly oppose unfair trade barriers. We are working with the federal government and our partners through the WTO, the World Trade Organization, but there is no doubt that Alberta's agrifood industry would benefit from the reduction of trade-distorting subsidies and market access barriers. We are committed towards that end and that principle. However, we are extremely frustrated at this time with the glacial pace of the World Trade Organization negotiations, but we remain committed to achieving that objective and benefiting producers here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 88 questions and responses. We'll now return to the Routine.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to the requirements of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, it is my pleasure to rise today and table the required number of copies of the 2007 report of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund. The report will be available on the committee's website, and I have arranged to have copies distributed to each hon. member. I'd like to thank the staff at Alberta Finance, the office of the Auditor General, and the Legislative Assembly Office for the dedicated support they provide to the committee throughout the year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I present a petition signed by 113 central Albertans requesting that the regulations for Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007, reflect the intent of the legislation as outlined in second reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon, and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to launch a full public inquiry under the authority of the Public Inquiries Act into spying practices by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board (AEUB) and the Minister of Energy's oversight role of the AEUB.

This petition is signed by people from Buck Lake and Rimbey and Bluffton.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a petition from 85 Albertans. The undersigned residents "petition the Legislative Assembly to pass Bill 45, the Smoke-Free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, and not dilute its contents so as to compromise the version approved at second reading."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two petitions today. One, indeed, from a number of individuals: 252 of them supporting the passage of Bill 45. So their mission has already been accomplished.

The second: I actually have two collections of the same petition, totalling 560, who are urging the government to ensure that remuneration paid to employees working with persons with disabilities is standardized, that they're fairly compensated and wages remain competitive, that they have improved access to professional development opportunities, and would the government please introduce province-wide service- and outcomes-focused level of care standards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from all the members of the newly elected executive of the Kilkenny community league and others, and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to cut unnecessary regulations that cause time to be lost in filling out forms and other burdensome and unnecessary rules (red tape) by supporting Bill 213 the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cheffins: Mr. Speaker, I rise with signatures from 18 Calgaryans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to pass Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a petition with 37 signatures. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to immediately establish, in consultation with community leaders and interested citizens, the Keystone Wildlife Preserve in a designated area west of Edmonton, north of Highway 16 and east of highway 751, to ensure that wildlife habitat and the surrounding environment are protected for generations to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions today. The first one is the same petition that's urging the Legislative Assembly to support Bill 45. I am pleased to tell the petitioners that we have done just that, and it's awaiting royal assent.

The other petition, Mr. Speaker, was signed by 231 Albertans from many communities but mostly from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Leduc, St. Albert, Grande Prairie, and Spruce Grove. It reads: we, the undersigned residents hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to "introduce legislation or amend regulations to give consumers in Alberta access, even if limited or controlled, to raw (unpasteurized) dairy products, particularly for health or medical reasons."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there additional petitions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I just want to add the voices of a number of Calgaryans to the successful passing of Bill 45 in order to address the enormous health, social, and financial implications of tobacco use in Alberta.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. We've got a whole list of others.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two from the leader of the third party. First of all, I'd like to table the appropriate numbers of copies of letters from Wayne and Marjorie Brideaux of Calgary regarding this government's failure to rectify the housing situation by allowing rent gouging to continue. They ask when this government will "stop applying ideology in the face of fact" and listen to the findings of the housing task force.

The second one, Mr. Speaker, was to table the appropriate number of copies of letters from Aubrey Finnen, a landowner in central Alberta, regarding his objections to the way he has been treated by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is a document regarding geothermal applications, a recent document that shows how 2 per cent of the electrical energy generated for California is from geothermal now, and the entire capital of Iceland is heated that way.

Another is a communication from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business outlining support for the Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one document to table. It's the article from Banff Crag & Canyon of November 13, 2007, which I referred to in the House last Thursday and which reports that the only two child care centres in Bow Valley, one in Canmore and one in Banff, have a two-year waiting list.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one: A Review of Discovery Wildlife Park Based on the Alberta Zoo Standards by the World Society for the Protection of Animals.

The second one is A Review of the Guzoo Animal Farm Based on the Alberta Zoo Standards, again by the World Society for the Protection of Animals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today pertaining to the same subject. On November 9 my wife and I along with the MLAs from Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Calder attended an event at the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers titled Global Gallery. The first tabling is the news release announcing this event, which was designed to showcase immigrant talent in the area of visual arts, as in painting, photography, and sculpting.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the actual program book, containing many biographies and samplings of all 25 of those artists' work. It is now available online at www.emcn.ab.ca.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

2:30

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter from Stephen Renaud in which he is talking about the need to look at the quality of life for persons with disabilities: "Because of the low AISH income many individuals are challenged in today's housing market. Available low cost housing is very difficult to find."

The second letter is from M. Platts, where she says: "I do not believe that the purpose of providing early child education in any form is to make money but to provide a service. I would like to see that service fully funded for all children by our government."

The third one is from Kerri Bischoff. "I was appalled at the decrease in the maximum Number of children allowed in a care facility, 24 down to 16, as well as the food catering fees and of course the rise in cost due to the decrease of spots allowed in a facility."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings today. The first tabling is the program of the western legacy awards, which we celebrated on November 9 at the Roundup Centre in Calgary. The awards were presented for innovation, youth, and sustained contribution.

My second tabling consists of the highlights of this past weekend's Parkland conference I attended, the theme of which was From Crisis to Hope: Building Just and Sustainable Communities, a goal all members of this House have been tasked by our constituents to achieve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling correspondence from Yvonne Mireau of Edmonton. She's suffering from a serious jaw injury and has had to have it wired shut for the past year, during which she has been on a liquid food diet. Now, her treatment has cost her over $1,000, but she's not covered by Alberta Health as it's classified as dental. She wishes to draw the attention of the minister to this major hole in our supposedly universal health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of the Fort McMurray Youth Housing Needs Report, prepared under the direction of the Youth Shelter Subcommittee at the request of the Homeless Initiatives Steering Committee, regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. I referenced this report earlier today in question period.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first two are in regard to my questions from earlier in question period. My first tabling is an invoice from June 1, 2007, to Kellan Fluckiger, executive director, Alberta Department of Energy, for $38,000 for 76 hours of professional services. It's signed by Murray A. Nelson from the Mana Energy Group Limited.

The second tabling I have is a similar invoice, but this one is dated September 1, 2007. It's for 92 hours at $500 an hour for a total of $46,000. It's to the same executive director, Mr. Kellan Fluckiger of the Alberta Department of Energy, and it's signed, "Yours truly, Murray A. Nelson."

My third tabling is a letter dated November 8, 2007, to the hon. Premier from Mr. Bronconnier, the mayor of Calgary. This is outlining some of the concerns that Calgary city council and the citizens of Calgary have regarding Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly, if they have not read this letter, to please do so quickly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, before we move forward, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: That being the case, the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some guests from the Dunvegan-Central Peace constituency. I believe they are seated in both galleries. I would ask each of them to rise as I introduce them: Denis Sauvageau from Falher; Dan and Huguette Ropchan, Adele Boucher Rymhs, Knut Moller, and Eileen McGuire from Grimshaw; Peter and Sara Jessing and Trudy Keillor from Berwyn; and George Beinert from Whitelaw. Earlier I had a chance to meet with them. They're here to express their concerns over the nuclear proposal. Please join me in giving them our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you. It's also my pleasure to welcome some constituents who have travelled from our far northwest corner of the province to express some concerns they have about nuclear energy and to urge the government to engage Albertans in a policy discussion. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was unable to meet with my constituents earlier, but I plan to sit in on a meeting this afternoon. Nonetheless, it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this House Brenda Brochu; Erik Moller; Micheline Danburger; Wanda, Genevieve, Monique, and Jacqueline Laurin; Louise Alm; and Carol Akininstall. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again it looks as though we're just catching the last few of the representation of guests from the nuclear demonstration this afternoon. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members Sonja Myllymaki from Edmonton, Izumi Kuribayishi from Edmonton as well, Art Jackson from Jasper, Bob Cameron from DeBolt, Connie Bresnahan from Hinton, Paul Pryce from Calgary, and David Cammeron from Calgary. If you could rise and receive the Assembly's welcome.

Bill 213
Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act

[Debate adjourned November 8: Mr. Eggen speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder may continue. I believe he still has nine minutes in his speaking time on Bill 213.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I believe that I've completed my comments on that bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act as presented by the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Manning. I want to take this opportunity to thank him for introducing this legislation. I'm very appreciative because it indicates that he is very much in agreement with what the government is doing in this whole field of regulatory reform.

I want to make a few comments, though, about the proposed bill. Quite frankly, the intent of the bill, while admirable and right in keeping with what we would agree with – there are a few things that I want to bring to the attention of the Assembly. If we were to follow this bill, it would be very, very simple to do what is in here, but there's more to this than just counting numbers. In section 2(a) currently it asks for the number of regulations. If you're going to do just a number count, that would not necessarily accomplish what we really need to do. Some of the things that are in this bill that talk to the need of regulatory reform – I guess if you look at the preamble of it and you see the number of reasons for the introduction of this and the reason that we need to do it, we agree with those. But just counting numbers is not going to accomplish what the hon. member has identified in the preamble of his bill.

I would like to expand on what we feel needs to be done and what, in fact, we are doing. I think it's important, when a bill is presented, that it be in the greater public interest because that's really what you need to have as a driving force and to affect all the regulations. To address that issue, there are a number of criteria that I believe it should meet. Those are things like be necessary for the maintenance and/or enhancement of the public health, education, order, and safety; be necessary for the maintenance and/or enhancement of the environment; and contribute to the goals of sustainable development. Quite frankly, one of the things we hear often as we're talking to businesspeople about regulations and forms and things of this nature is that, in fact, there's a great burden, that they spend a lot of time and money having to fill out forms, having to meet certain regulations that maybe don't address some of the things that I'm just describing. It must contribute significantly and positively to the competitiveness of the private sector in the province, including promotion of innovation and encouragement of efficiency in the conduct of business, and of course be necessary for the effective internal administration of government of the province.

This regulatory reform is more than just outside of government. There's a big cost to government with some of these regulations. So I think it's important that we weigh that against the need – I believe that we need to look more at what it is that we're trying to accomplish; in other words, the outcome of the regulation.

Quite frankly, when we talk later in the bill about the accountability portion of the act, you need some way of measuring that, and I believe that we've got some suggestions that would really accomplish that. I think that there are some other very important elements that are necessary in the regulations, things like identifying the problem and desired objectives or outcomes – and that's what I spoke to briefly before – and to of course establish a clear case for the action and also to consider the options, regulatory or nonregulatory, for achieving the desired outcomes. Once again, it's a measurement of outcomes: how do you get there? Look at the problem and what it is you want to do. Now how do you get there?

Consult with those potentially affected in developing the regulatory action with the participation of the community. Once again, it is extremely important that as we develop regulations and/or review regulations, it not be just an exercise internally. Currently under our request for regulation we do have a section that speaks to having to consult with the stakeholders, consult with the public.

Assessing the impacts, costs, and benefits of each option for consumers, business, government, and of course the greater community, deciding on the alternatives on the basis of transparent criteria, and adopting the options of the greatest net benefit to the community and developing a strategy to implement and enforce and review the preferred regulatory actions to ensure that regulation is relevant and effective over time. Now, I spoke briefly earlier about the need for having a way of measuring these regulations, and I believe that up front we have to make sure that we address certain issues so that in the process of approving regulations, we need to be able to look at the various terms and categories. I think that we can do that, and that will help with the measurement at the end.

I think we have to look at things like the environmental quality, the quality of life or health, social and cultural effects – that is, the awareness and tolerance, et cetera – changes in prices and quality of products, the effects on competitiveness and/or market openness, reduction in compliance and administrative costs, increasing market choice, improvements in information. Those are just a few of the things that I believe need to be incorporated. While some of them are alluded to in the principles of the act, I believe that there need to be some more things added to it. Certainly, if and when this reaches the committee stage, I would be wanting to look at some of those things.

There's going to be a lot of activity in the whole regulatory reform and all of the regulations because as TILMA develops, there is going to be the necessity to look at a lot of regulations. Currently we're asking departments to do an inventory. I'm not saying numbers; I'm saying do an inventory so that they know exactly what it is that they have in the form of regulations, that they know the quality of those regulations. Do they meet these other criteria that we're setting out for those regulations? Then as we try to synchronize with the TILMA process, we're going to have to be looking at how our regulations fit with the B.C. regulations.

Of course, another very good process that's developing – I'm very pleased to say that as I understand it, the city of Edmonton is going to be involved in it – is a system called BizPaL. What this system will do over time – it's a great undertaking, but what we're trying to do is make sure that business knows through one window what the municipal requirements are, for example, to establish a restaurant. What kind of regulations are there as far as the province is concerned? Then in some cases there are federal regulations that get involved. On the municipal side, of course, you get into all things like land-use bylaws and building codes that the city may have. Of course, on the provincial side, once again, you get into things like the building code.

There's another area that's very critical that we address, and I just don't see in the bill where this would be handled. For example, a restaurant: you're going to be affected by many government departments, not only the municipal but government departments. We've got to be able to say, whether it be to one ministry, "you will take the lead," and then it will be spread across the other ministries that are involved. Somehow we have to through the regulatory process determine which are involved and who should be taking the lead, which ministry, because that's one of the things that is extremely frustrating.

The Speaker: I think the speaking time is over.

Mr. Lund: Oh, I'm sorry. Just one thing.

The Speaker: No. You'd need unanimous consent for that. Sorry. It doesn't quite work that way.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak in support of Bill 213, Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act. The purpose of this bill is simply to ensure that current and proposed regulations in regard to red tape for businesses and nonprofit organizations are necessary. It attempts to streamline red tape for businesses and nonprofit organizations and citizens to reduce what is an unnecessary cost.

Alberta Liberals have been strong advocates of this type of legislation in the past and applaud this member for bringing this bill forward. It is a bill worthy of support. This bill forces the government to do something that has been absent in Alberta for a long, long time: be accountable to the people and to the Legislative Assembly. It opens the doors that have been closed for so long. It's in the public interest and, as such, should be supported. Businesses in Alberta are drowning in red tape. It is time to throw them a lifeline.

This legislation is a long time coming, something that small- and medium-sized businesses everywhere have been calling for. Mr. Speaker, those calls have previously fallen on deaf ears. We have an opportunity to do the right thing here today, the right thing for Alberta businesses. A vote against this bill is a vote against transparency and accountability, and we must make effective and sustainable red tape relief a top priority.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to eliminate unnecessary government red tape that poses a significant financial burden and a significant time burden on businesses, nonprofit organizations, and private citizens. This bill will place the burden on government to ensure that all regulations that are being posed or that will be passed in the future dealing with accountability and compliance will be subject to full process to ensure that they are absolutely necessary. It will ensure that all government regulations have an element of accountability to ensure that they are necessary regulations and that alternatives to regulations do not exist.

Bill 213 places a specific timeline on the Minister of Justice to develop a regulatory review, regulatory reform plans, and progress reports for all new regulations. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it forces government to undergo a process before passing new regulations to ensure necessity. It also addresses public documents that the minister is required to make public again. It puts into legislation a process to be followed regarding documents that the minister is required to make public. The documents must be placed before the Legislature and must be made available to the general public.

These are the strong accountability functions. Mr. Speaker, this Bill 213 is about accountability. You know, businesspeople are facing lots of burdens, especially fiscal responsibility, taxing, and spending, and burdens of regulations, especially increases in accountability. Government, I think, must reduce the burden on businesspeople in this area.

This bill also is about compliance, Mr. Speaker. I receive numerous phone calls and e-mails from some businesses in my riding. They are facing, you know, lots of problems with labour shortages. We all know that this is a problem, not only in my riding but all over Alberta, and lots of businesspeople are facing this.

Even the temporary foreign workers: there are so many flaws there. You know, they are blaming temporary foreign workers even though this program is a federal program. But they expect the Alberta government, because the Alberta government has signed onto this accord recently – they think that that accord is not strong enough. It is not in their favour because sometimes they get approval from HRDC, which is a totally federal government department, and once they get approval from them, they send those papers back to their potential employees back home, wherever those people are coming from, maybe in Asia, maybe in Europe.

They are facing lots of problems. Even, you know, the employees or some agencies overseas pay an application fee, and after that they don't get any response. What they get is just a simple letter that they don't qualify for it; their financial situation is not sound enough. Sometimes they get a denial letter just saying: your intention is not to work in Alberta; maybe your intention is to stay here permanently. Those people are telling me that, you know, if their financial situation is so strong, why would they come to Canada to work as a temporary foreign worker?

It is understood, Mr. Speaker, that there are lots of other problems that foreign workers are facing in this country, especially accommodation, and inflation is going up. Everything, especially in Alberta recently, has gone up, and they are facing financial problems here as well.

I'm not criticizing only the department, federal government or the provincial government. There are lots of flaws in this system, especially in some agencies working overseas – we don't have any control – and some agencies working here. Employees are also, you know, playing some dirty games sometimes. I heard that some employees also come here on a sponsorship for a certain employer, and then afterwards they slip, and they work for somebody else.

Businesspeople are complaining that the labour shortage is still a big headache for them. It's a big problem, and it's a hurdle. The government of Alberta, I mean, has signed an agreement with the federal government, and they should talk to their Tory cousins in Ottawa and do something about it. I said that definitely, when I speak in the Legislature, I will pass on your message. I hope the ministers concerned are listening.

Even last session I introduced a motion to not rely on temporary foreign workers, to increase the number of PRs, permanent residents, or immigration in this country. These messages should be sent to the federal government so that it helps not only the citizens of Canada; it should help businesspeople. Also, some organizations working here who are nonpolitical, nonreligious: it might help them, too.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to speak to Bill 213. I'd like to begin my speech by complimenting the Member for Edmonton-Manning on his hard work and dedication to this issue. It's an incredibly timely issue that needs to be addressed. Alberta has work to do on regulatory reduction, so I appreciate greatly the member's foresight and his dedication to this. I'm sure small business, volunteer organizations, and all Albertans in general appreciate him bringing this to the discussion in the Assembly today.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that Bill 213, Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Government Services pursuant to temporary Standing Order 74.2.

Thank you very much.

This bill focuses, Mr. Speaker, on counting regulations, which is an incredibly important part of any regulatory review process that this government would undertake. It creates a visual picture of the regulations, and quite frankly it brings to the consciousness of Albertans and bureaucrats as well as members of this Assembly just how many regulations there are and how encompassing they can be and perhaps on occasion even a barrier to growth and productivity in this province.

Mr. Speaker, that is not the entire process that needs to be undertaken to make sure that we review regulations to minimize the burden that we place on society with the regulations that we have. It's critical that we're able to do a cost-benefit analysis of all the regulations. In fact, some statistics and some numbers show – and

I think some other members have mentioned them – that for every dollar the government spends to administer a regulation, the private sector spends $20 trying to comply with that regulation. So when we come up with new regulations, it's critical that we do a cost-benefit analysis to determine just how much it will cost the voluntary sector or private business or any other segment of our economy or society that has to adapt to that regulation.

It's also critical – and I've heard a couple of other members discuss it here as well – that we're able to do a time-cost analysis on what regulations mean to sectors of the economy. In fact, I know some members here have cited information that some Albertans spend up to nine hours a week just trying to comply with regulations that we've set in this province, whether it's a small business or a voluntary organization. Mr. Speaker, that can translate into upwards of 40 days per year in just complying with government regulations. If we're going to do this analysis, it's very important – and this bill is critical – that we count the regulations, but it's also important that we do a cost-benefit analysis and that we do a time-cost analysis.

Mr. Speaker, one thing that I don't think I heard one member of this Assembly mention is that we need some place for people within society to actually come and speak to the government about a particular regulation that's creating a tremendous burden on their business or their sector of the economy or their sector of society. We hear all the time about the problems with regulations and how much of a burden they are, but very rarely have any of my constituents or the people that I've dealt with in the business community or the volunteer community come forward and said: this is the regulation that's creating a burden. They talk about regulations in general all the time. If there was some body or organization or institution set up within government that allowed members of the public to come and cite specific regulations and educate us on just what a particular burden it was to them and their business or their public-sector organization, it would really help us to address the regulatory burden.

Mr. Speaker, this field committee that I've asked by motion that this bill be referred to would provide an opportunity to discuss, examine, and recommend changes to this bill in an open and transparent manner. This process has the potential to determine the best means available when addressing the important issue of regulatory reform and to incorporate those actions with those currently being undertaken by this government. I know that there are many actions being undertaken by this government to reduce the regulatory burden. This process would allow a full evaluation, and it would allow review by the public, because even though we have some brilliant members in this House, we can't consider everything all of the time. The purpose of creating those standing committees was to get input from the public that has to deal with the regulations that we're dealing with. This regulatory efficiency is an important issue to this government, and ensuring that the system remains vibrant is essential to the prosperity of this great province.

I commend the member for bringing this forward. I think it's timely. I think he deserves the recognition of this House and the recognition of the public, both the private-sector businesses and the voluntary sector, because they face a lot of regulatory burdens as well that we often don't consider.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have an amendment to Bill 213. First of all, we'll proceed with the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, did you want to get in on this amendment?

Rev. Abbott: No.

The Speaker: We'll proceed, then. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. I have to start as well by thanking the hon. sponsor of Bill 213, the Member for Edmonton-Manning. I'm thanking him because he's raising awareness about this issue that, as was said before, does not only apply to members of the business community, in particular the small business community, but also community leagues, nonprofit organizations, volunteer-run organizations, and so on.

I also have to put on the record my appreciation for the effort he made to make every member of this House aware of his bill, you know, offering some background information and offering justification for why he was sponsoring this bill, which really should be adopted by all private members in this House. The model of sharing information ahead of time to try to enlighten those members as to why and the rationale behind it and, hopefully, to secure their support, as was said before, is something that has been part of the Alberta Liberal platform for some time. As such, we have no problem supporting this initiative.

Now to the motion as introduced by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright. While I'm not necessarily opposed to referring this particular piece of legislation, the idea that's contained in it, the subject matter that it raises, to one of the four standing policy field committees, I have to question what I am starting to see as a pattern developing here in this Assembly and in this government, Mr. Speaker. By that pattern I am referencing the fact that it seems to be the easiest way out of having to make a decision by referring an idea or a bill to a committee or a task force. We have different names for these things now. Then these people meet, and they have hearings, and they invite submissions. A report or a file is issued with recommendations and suggestions, and then most of the time it gets ignored. I don't want to see this happen today, and I don't want to see this happen to this idea in particular.

The regulatory burden is not only huge, but it's increasing, Mr. Speaker, and we need to definitely address it. So I would rather see this House commit today and make the decision today and pass this bill today because I haven't heard anybody in this House from either side who has expressed any major concern to it. The opposition as well as members from the government have both indicated that, yes, it is timely, yes, it is important, yes, we have heard the cries and the plight of those people from the small business community, from the nonprofits, and, yes, we agree. So why delay it further? Why send it to the committee? The committee takes its time, and then the committee reports back to the Assembly. We're going to still make the same decision, I'm hoping, which is to reduce regulatory burdens and to make our regulations more efficient.

So I think that it's an unnecessary step. I think that it's wasting time. You know, in my opinion – maybe I'm a bit cynical now, having been here for three years – it just stalls. I haven't heard anybody opposed to the idea, so let's get on with it, and let's vote today. That is basically my two cents with respect to this motion to refer Bill 213.

Now, I did some research, Mr. Speaker, and this is not new. We're talking about an issue, you know, that is not an innovative thing that the House is discussing or contemplating. We've had task forces, and we've had review committees for as long back as the library here can produce records. I actually went and asked the Legislature Library, and they produced one of the reports. I'm telling you, we seem to have task forces galore in this province. We have reports galore. Here is the regulatory reform task force report from 1997, the status report, fairly thick. It talks about what should be done. The next year the same thing, 1998 status report, even thicker. Nothing has been done yet. The Regulatory Review Secretariat, which evolved from the earlier task force, 1999 status report, extremely enlightening and very useful had it been implemented. Then you move on, Mr. Speaker, to 2001 as well, the Regulatory Review Secretariat status report, and so on. I didn't ask for all those records. I just asked for a sampling, and the Leg. Library was really generous and shared these with me.

This secretariat has not been eliminated or struck. It is still here. So why do we need to do this outside of something that is already here? Three members of this Assembly sit on it. One of them is the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, who has spoken earlier. Another member is the MLA for Calgary-Bow, and a third member is the MLA for Lesser Slave Lake. I mean, these people sit on this committee supposedly to study this. I don't think we need another committee, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On the amendment the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, as I've already recognized, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

3:10

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As deputy chair of one of the policy field committees I find this amendment interesting. I'm a little bit torn about the direction in which, perhaps, the House should proceed because I do believe the policy field committees have done some good work in their initial efforts over the spring, summer, and fall, and I believe that they have the potential to continue to do good work.

Having said that, I tend to support my colleague from Edmonton-McClung that we are adding in here a step that I don't think needs to be taken at this time, Mr. Speaker. I'm referring back to Hansard on May 14, 2007, when private member's Bill 207, which was introduced by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, was up for second reading debate in this House and there was an attempt to bring in a similar amendment at that point to refer Bill 207 to another policy field committee, I believe community services rather than government services on that one. There were some quite strong arguments made by members on the government side of the House, albeit speaking, I am sure, privately, for themselves and for no one else, because it was a private member's business day, some fairly convincing arguments against referring that bill to the policy field committee. One member said that it should be debated here and now on the floor of the House, for instance, and there were other comments like that.

I'm reminded as well – although I wish I could reference this for today's Hansard, and I can't. I think I picked it up on a TV show somewhere some years ago. Maybe it was that British parliamentary satire Yes Minister – I'm not sure – where it would have been Sir Humphrey, if that was the show, the chief public servant advising the minister, who would have said: Mr. Minister, we're all in favour of cutting red tape as long as we cut it lengthwise. It strikes me that that's what we're attempting to do here. We're attempting to drag out the process of dealing with the red tape that small businesses across my constituency and all over this province are strangling in, and I don't think that we need to do that.

With respect to the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright and his concern about, I guess, the breadth and scope of regulations that could be involved here, if this Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act, passes today on second reading, then we can refer it to the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Speaker, I believe we can do much of the same work in Committee of the Whole. I see no reason why we can't.

Now, again, as I said before, I believe that the policy field committees can do fine work. They can dig deeper. They can do all sorts of things that we cannot do at committee stage in this House.

They can call witnesses. They can commission reports, studies, et cetera, et cetera. But that, in my view, might be an appropriate tack to take after Bill 213 proceeds through the House.

I think Bill 213 gives the government the discretion to set a reduction target in the number of regulations if it chooses. It does not require or specify that the number of regulations has to be reduced, that sort of thing. I think that Bill 213, if passed by this House, can set a general tone – and perhaps we can get quite specific at the Committee of the Whole stage – for where the province wants to go on regulatory accountability and transparency. I mean, there are a few bad apples in any bunch, but you'd be hard pressed to find very many small businesspeople who would not acknowledge that there is the need for some, you know, government regulation of their business.

I take it I'm done. Thank you.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to close debate on Bill 213 as amended with an amendment in place. Proceed.

Mr. Backs: Just a quick point of clarification. Is the amendment still on?

The Speaker: Hon. member, we'll proceed to hear you close the debate. Then we'll proceed to take the vote, first on the amendment, and then, depending on the resolution of the amendment, we could go forward to the second vote.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very, very pleased to have seen such interest in this bill. There were very many speakers – I counted 17 – who have fully spoken to this bill. I think that that underscores the importance in many Albertans' minds, in many small businesses, in many voluntary organizations, and even in many organizations in the public sector of concerns over the time they spend on the regulatory burden and how to deal with it. We've had a number of, you know, questions that have been raised in question period that have looked at this issue, such as the issue that looked to the problems with the log books in the transportation industry and today in the issue of smart cards, perhaps, in health care and the issue of waiting lists and things like that. These are all parts of the paper burden, the time burden, the waiting that has made for some inefficiency in our society.

In reality, you know, the success of a society is defined by many things, but one of the things is its efficiency, and one of the things is its ability to do things in a way that doesn't waste the time of its citizens. I think there are many things that are in this Bill 213 that can work to do that. I think that many people have worked to bring matters forward on this, with many good comments from all of the 17 speakers on this issue. I really don't have time in the five minutes to speak to all of them although I would like to do so and thank them all for their many comments.

There has been brought to me the need for some improvements, some things that could be brought forward on the issue from further public hearings and from further debate in committee. There are, of course, two options to that. That's to go to third reading, and the other is to go to a policy field committee. You know, I'm torn somewhat on which would be the best, but I would support the amendment from the Member for Battle River-Wainwright in that I think it is important to take that extra public consultation and to put that forward to a little bit more sober second thought, you might call it, over a bit of a longer period of time even though we would like to see that brought in in departments and in areas in a way and in a fashion that would come to implement some of these matters sooner. I think the fact that we have brought a lot of this to light will certainly have a psychological effect on many of the rule-makers.

With that, I thank the Assembly for their support in the many words that have been spoken on this one, and I close, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 213 carried]

head: 3:20 Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 212
Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is an honour to rise on behalf of the constituency of Calgary-Hays and begin the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. If passed, this innovative piece of legislation has the potential to bring community safety and quality of life to a higher level in Alberta. I believe that this is what we all strive for.

I would like to thank the members of this Assembly for the tremendous support they have shown throughout the process. I believe that the ways this bill will help our communities are numerous and far reaching. As legislators and representatives of our constituents we owe it to Albertans to thoroughly consider all aspects of legislation that can increase safety in our province. I commend my colleagues for doing just that.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to address some of the remaining questions which were previously raised by the opposition. During second reading debate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview raised concerns regarding the possibility that drug houses would move from neighbourhood to neighbourhood with the measures called for by Bill 212. I believe the diverse mechanisms within this legislation properly deal with this apprehension. The act is able to address this concern because it attacks drug and prostitution operations from two separate directions.

First, if it is found that the manufacturing, purchasing, sale, or consumption of intoxicants is occurring on a property, Bill 212 can shut the operation down by requiring all implicated persons to vacate the property and not allow them to re-enter or reoccupy it. Furthermore, the Court of Queen's Bench can require the safety agency to close the property for use and occupation for up to 90 days. This means that even in the event that an individual is found to be responsible for breaking the law and is subsequently sent to jail, the property itself would no longer be available for use. The individual in prison would not be able to ask associates to continue the disturbing behaviours, as is sometimes the case. Therefore, drug production would cease on that property.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, any time and place that a drug or prostitution operation is brought to the attention of the agency proposed by this bill, pending a third investigation it can be shut down no matter what community it is spotted and reported in, and if the operation moves, it can be reported, investigated, and shut down again. Committing a crime is partly a matter of convenience. If a drug operation repeatedly gets shut down due to community observations, eventually these individuals will get frustrated and cease production in Alberta. They may find somewhere else more convenient, without observant eyes and ears in every direction, but thanks to this proposed legislation that place will likely be outside the great neighbourhoods of this province.

Mr. Chairman, while the same member conceded that Bill 212 properly deals with the supply of illicit substances, he was concerned about the demand side of drugs. I am proud to say that one of the spectacular features of this proposed act is its preventative nature and capabilities. For instance, if someone in the community notices a lot of traffic at an individual's home and witnesses increasingly disturbing situations occurring on the property, the community member can call the agency for help. If the agency finds that activities are occurring that negatively affect the community but are not beyond repair, the agency can address the situation in a community-based manner.

In addition, those who may not be heavily involved in disturbing behaviours may realize that it is not worth losing their tenancy agreement over these activities and, consequently, cease them. This negative attention from the law holds the potential to lead a person out of trouble before the situation becomes too grave and before they are tainted with a criminal record. It is in this manner that I believe the act addresses demand. It identifies issues before they get out of hand and before addictions are created.

Mr. Chairman, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora voiced concern about the role of peace officers within the act. In part 3 it is stated that "if requested to do so, a peace officer shall provide any assistance required by an inspector or the Director in the performance of [their] duties." This just means that if an occupant of a property and any other persons at the property do not comply with a request to leave the property, the director may obtain the assistance of a peace officer to remove them from the property. The use of peace officers in this case would be a precaution in the event that the director fears complications.

The same member also had a concern with who exactly the director would use as investigators. In the jurisdictions which already use this legislation, directors employ individuals with extensive investigative experience. Their know-how is crucial to the success of this proposed act because these individuals are sworn in by the courts as experts. I assure the member that the investigators are of the highest calibre.

Lastly, I would like to address his concerns regarding the relationship of investigations under this act and those of the municipal police. Again, in the jurisdictions I have visited, these two bodies operate in a co-operative manner. The investigations mandated under the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act do not get in the way of police investigations since they keep in constant communication with each other and work as allies.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move a package of amendments to the bill and take a few moments to briefly outline them.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we need to make sure that the amendments are circulated.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment that is being circulated to you shall be referred to as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, you may proceed.

Mr. Johnston: Amendment A allows the director to delegate his or her powers, duties, or functions to an employee under the administration of the minister. Amendments B, J, and Q call for the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act to be included under the jurisdiction of this bill. Amendments C, K, and L clarify which certificates of title are affected by a community safety order. Amendments D and P are simply style changes, and amendments E and M switch the term "interest" to "caveat" to be consistent with terms used in Alberta. Amendment E also ensures that caveats cannot be lapsed.

Amendment F clarifies the collection of information during the investigative process. Amendment G is a grammatical change. Amendment H seeks to strike out section 32(3) to be in sync with Alberta's Torrens system. Amendment I removes the term "summary conviction" since the term is not used in Alberta. Amendments N and O are cross-reference changes. Amendment R is a terminology change.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that these amendments be brought forward as one package if that is at all possible and acceptable to the committee. While these amendments are very minor, they will go far to strengthen Bill 212. The Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act thoroughly confronts undesirable activities in our province. It presents many different approaches to deal with crime and disruptive behaviours. Therefore, we have a lot to consider here today.

I look forward to hearing the debate on the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act and the amendments I have brought forward. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm glad to speak again and add some further thoughts to the debate on Bill 212. As I look at these amendments, it appears that they're mostly housekeeping but also clarifying some things in terms of delegation. "The Director may delegate the Director's powers, duties or functions under this Act to an employee under the administration of the Minister." I guess I'd like to have an opportunity to ask for some clarification on that. The other parts of the amendment I think are quite clear, and I would support them.

3:30

Bill 212's purpose is to enhance community and neighbourhood safety by providing a way for people within the community to make a complaint to the government about properties that habitually negatively impact the health, safety, or security of one or more persons in a neighbourhood and/or interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of one or more properties in a community or neighbourhood. This bill will provide for a government agency through the Ministry of the Solicitor General and Public Safety to respond to these complaints and put an end to activity that adversely affects or harms a neighbourhood. I'm thinking that this amendment means that that power can be delegated to an employee.

The Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act would place a tool in the hands of law enforcement which will allow immediate action to be taken when safety in Alberta's communities is at risk. Bill 212 would give a director of law enforcement the power to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench to have restrictions placed upon a property when there is a balance of probability indicating that illegal or disruptive activity is occurring. This restriction could include removing excessive fortifications from a property or placing a community closure order on it. Among the many possible repercussions community safety orders would provide the property to be closed for a period of 90 days. After the end of this order the owners of the property would be permitted to return while any troublemaking tenant would be permanently evicted.

The individuals in my constituency that I've talked to about this believe that these restrictions will really be effective in reducing dangerous activities in our communities and that they are a creative way to address the concerns that they have that there is a compromise to safety and the quality of life in our community. This forces property owners who are involved in activities which present a danger to communities to vacate the premises for a period of time, and we're therefore taking away their opportunity to put neighbours at risk. This is particularly true when we're talking about drug houses, where property is, I guess, attached to hazardous activities because the police can't know everything, and individuals in the community can take responsibility and report these things.

Bill 212 represents an opportunity for improvement because it outlines a specific process of reducing activities which can harm the public. It gives an opportunity to make our province a safer place for children by being proactive and focusing on the prevention rather than waiting for harm or dangerousness to reach a level of crisis. I really like that approach. I think this legislation ends up controlling dangerous activity through civil rather than criminal sanctions, and it allows us as Assembly members to take direct actions to protect Albertans. All Albertans have a right to live in a safe and secure environment.

The provisions of this proposed act empower citizens to identify activities which could disrupt families' healthy existence, and it provides a direct route to address criminals. With immediate and direct attention as is called for with Bill 212 – and I don't see anything in the amendments changing that – disruptive activity taking place in communities will not be given the opportunity to flourish.

A number of other jurisdictions have already passed very similar versions of this legislation. The provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia and Yukon have all brought forth legislation similar to this, especially the Saskatchewan version.

This legislation empowers citizens to take back control of their neighbourhoods by reporting problem nuisances and businesses. It will also hold property owners accountable for threatening or disturbing activities regularly taking place on their properties. I really think that that's an important step, and I applaud the Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing this forward.

We know that the police do not have the resources to deal with all the complaints they receive even if the information is reliable. There simply are not enough police officers, so this bill will create another investigative agency, staffed by trained investigators. The member had that explained to me the other day. They will be trained to deal with problem properties in neighbourhoods where illegal activities are occurring. Any tool to deal with the rise in crime in Alberta is welcome.

I'm happy to support Bill 212. I do have a question, though, about the first amendment that's suggested here, 1.1. I wonder if I could get that explained more clearly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to contribute to the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. After a very positive second reading debate the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has moved amendments to the legislation in order to further strengthen the bill. With the proposal of amendment A the powers, duties, and functions of the director may be delegated to an employee under the administration of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. This would allow the acting director to deal with the various requirements that may arise under the proposed act.

Mr. Chairman, the director plays a significant role in many aspects of Bill 212. Within the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act there are certain necessary functions that only the director can accomplish. This role is vital to this bill. For example, complaints are given by concerned Albertans to the director. The director then assesses their validity. Section 3 of the act explains that complaints may be given to the director when a person believes their community is being adversely affected by activities within it or if property in the community is being habitually used for a specific purpose. The director is required to process the complaints by checking their validity and completeness before deciding the proper course of action. This will help ensure that those who have made complaints to the director will have their case heard as quickly as possible.

Amendment A, which has been proposed for Bill 212, allows for action to be taken by the acting director upon receiving the complaint. The transfer of duties will reduce the backlog of cases for the director upon returning to the position and ensures that concerns in the community are being dealt with in an expedient manner.

Under section 4 the director has the authority, upon receiving the complaint, to act in the best interest of the community. This includes investigating the complaint, sending a warning letter to the appropriate party, applying to the Court of Queen's Bench for a community safety order, and making a decision not to act in certain cases.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to the community safety order there is a provision which states that a complaint can be taken to court on an urgent basis. This may require the director to close the property from use and occupation on a specific day and keep it closed for up to 90 days.

A director can also apply to vary any order. Consequently, proposed amendment A would allow the director authority to be exercised when an order needs to be modified. This accommodates those who are indirectly affected by the actions taken by the director or the acting director. It can assist families who are not directly involved with the complaint to continue their daily routine. This may require further investigation, but the option to retain possession of their property will be available. Conversely, the acting director would have the authority to remove those remaining within the property upon further complaints.

While a community safety order may also be modified by a resident of the property, it must be sent to the director. This can discontinue an application for a complaint or the closure of a property. Furthermore, the modification of any order might need the appearance of the director in certain cases. It may also be necessary for a director or acting director to present the case. When the director deems the application for either a community safety order or an application for a variation frivolous or not in the public's interest, that would be a need for his or her presence in court. This would ensure that the director's position is heard and that the rationale of each case is presented.

The proposed amendment listed as amendment A provides an opportunity to address the concerns through the delegation of the director's powers and duties if need be.

Mr. Chairman, section 24 of the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act states that it is the responsibility of the director to handle property closures appropriately. Closure of a property once a community safety order is granted would require the director to be available to ensure that the copy of the order is both given to the respondent as well as being posted in a conspicuous place on the property. The director may enter the property to close it and keep it closed with or without the consent of the property owner.

Also, under Bill 212 the director would have the authority to take any measures in order to safely and effectively close the property and keep it closed. This includes ordering the occupants to vacate the premises, attaching locks or other secure devices, erecting fences, changing or terminating utility services, and/or making alterations to the property to ensure that it is not a hazard while it is being closed.

Amendment A as proposed would allow for the employee under the authority of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Safety to enact the safest possible solutions available under Bill 212 if the director was temporarily unavailable. According to the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act the director must ensure the necessary means to achieve that a property closure is met. If a director is not around when a property closure is scheduled, the process might not be handled smoothly.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the availability of a director is important to Bill 212 for information-gathering purposes. The investigation of any complaint would require the gathering of all necessary facts. Section 29 goes into details on the authority of the director with respect to information gathering. The director is authorized to collect data on those in question from various sources, including public bodies. Without a director present, access to the proper information would pose a challenge to the investigation. The ability of the director to gather crucial information gives the bill its strength. Through proposed amendment A, which allows for the delegation of the director's powers, duties, or functions, an investigation can be conducted thoroughly and accurately in all cases.

In conclusion, Bill 212 as proposed via amendment A has granted the authority of the director to be given to an employee under the administration of the minister. It gives the authoritative power necessary to continue with and carry out the objectives in Bill 212. By doing so, the director's role would always be available to provide safe communities for all Albertans.

The safety of communities throughout this province should not be put on hold for any circumstance no matter what may happen. Amendment A as proposed would not allow for security to be jeopardized. Mr. Chairman, I feel that Bill 212 is a positive piece of legislation and that the proposed amendment to section 1 will help strengthen it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to address the amendment, 1.1. I have a concern with that in that I really would like a clarification from the mover of this amendment as to who exactly that employee could be. I think this is a very good bill, and I've seen effective community behaviours in helping to identify crack houses or whatever. However, I see a problem with the director and going to the employee, who, I assume, will be one of the government police. Then I'm not sure how the two would actually work with the police department that's in charge of that particular area. I think I would like a little clearer definition on how that exactly would work in terms of working with the police departments that are responsible.

When I hear that a complaint can be made to a director and then it's going to go here and then it's going to go there, in that time frame a good gang could have had that house sold and moved out in two seconds flat. I'm just wondering how quickly these directors and these employees would be able to operate because I really can see people moving in and out of these houses as rapidly as they need to so that they don't get caught.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. Certainly, this bill, as many members have noted, is a step in the right direction. Illegal activity, criminal activity in communities and neighbourhoods does increasingly present a serious challenge and often a threat to the safety of community members, people who live there, children, and others. So the provisions of this bill certainly are an attempt to address this growing threat to security of neighbourhoods and safety of neighbourhoods and communities.

Most of the provisions of the bill deal with what responsibilities the director will have and how the director will discharge those responsibilities. There's a fair bit of detail with respect to the responsibilities not only of the director but of other people, such as inspectors, who may be empowered by the director or by this act to undertake activities, all of which taken together will help prevent the incidence of crime in these communities and, if necessary, to be able to close down buildings and residences where such activities may take place.

There are provisions in the act which allow appeals to the orders or the decisions made by the director or people working on the director's behalf. So there is a due process provision duly included in here, which is a good thing, Mr. Chairman.

There's a fair bit of detail from section 24 onwards with respect to the closure of properties by the director and matters related to the recovery of costs in closing the property.

The bill, Mr. Chairman, is a good one. The amendments that are made: most of them are changes to language, either fixing minor grammatical problems or the terms that are used. The bill follows quite closely bills that are already law in other provinces. Manitoba has had this kind of bill in place for five years; Saskatchewan, over three. Nova Scotia and the Northwest Territories or Yukon have had similar bills proclaimed more recently, in the last year or so.

The usefulness of this kind of piece of legislation is demonstrated by the practices that have ensued and the ability of the governments in other provinces to get after the individuals or groups, gangs or criminals, individuals who take advantage of the relative anonymity of neighbourhoods, set up their operations related to illegal drugs and whatever have you in those places, and use those as safe houses for engaging in activities which certainly are to the detriment of both communities and individuals living in those communities. Particularly, I think our concern must focus on the exposure of children to such illegal and criminal activities.

Most of the sections of amendment A1 are quite good. This will improve the bill, clarify the bill, make it consistent with the language that is used in this province as distinct from the language that may be used in other provincial and territorial jurisdictions.

The concern expressed about the very first element in amendment A, which has to do with allowing the director to delegate his or her powers, duties, or functions to an employee under the administration of the minister, is one that can be addressed, I guess, in the development of regulations. I think the suggestion that was made that there is a need for clarification as to what level of employees should be able to receive the delegation of powers from the director is a good suggestion, but I think it's a matter that perhaps is better dealt with in the development of regulation pursuant to the passage of this act here in this Assembly.

One concern that I have, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the bill as it stands is a matter that was raised by the Information and Privacy Commissioner. I just want to get to the letter. The office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner and the commissioner in particular, I think, rightly draw attention to the section of the bill which will override the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. The point that the commissioner has made is that this is unnecessary. The section that he refers to is section 30(2) of Bill 212. The commissioner clearly says that it is unnecessary to have that section in the bill. In fact, he recommends that this particular section be deleted. This is the right time in the debate on the bill, when the bill is in the committee, for the recommendation made by the commissioner to receive attention, I think.

The last paragraph of the news release that was issued by the commissioner's office I think makes an important point, and I will just read that particular paragraph – it's a short one – into the record, Mr. Chairman. The last paragraph states:

The FOIP Act sets out the Alberta Government's commitment for openness, accountability and protection of privacy. The Commissioner is concerned that override provisions which are unnecessary fail to recognize the purpose and objectives of the FOIP Act.

That's a fairly strong statement, in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, coming from the commissioner. I think we shouldn't be passing legislation in this House that suffers from that kind of failure and fails to recognize the purpose and objectives of another act of this Legislature. The concern, I think, is about section 30(2), and the concern deals with the ability of this act to ensure that the informant or a member of the community who lodges a complaint to the director has his or her identity kept confidential. The confidentiality issue is certainly an important one, but the commissioner's own observations suggest that the provisions of the FOIP Act already ensure that such confidentiality can be maintained and that the identity of the person who lodges the complaint with the director can be fully protected under the provisions of the FOIP Act. That's my only concern about the amendment: that it omits to include in the list of various elements of amendment A1 the deletion of this section 30(2) of Bill 212.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today and join the discussion on Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, at the committee stage. Before I start, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to acknowledge the efforts of the Member for Calgary-Hays. This bill represents an example of how we can move one step closer to making our communities safer for all Albertans. This legislation could empower Alberta citizens and enhance their sense of ownership and responsibility within the community while lessening the load on our hard-working police staff. As a government we have committed to creating safe and secure communities throughout the province, and this bill is a step in the right direction.

With that said, Mr. Chairman, I'll now speak primarily to the proposed amendments to section 29 of the act. This section is important to the overarching structure of the bill as it describes the role of the director and his abilities regarding the collection of information from the accused. The proposed amendment seeks to add the words "including personal information" after "collect information" in subsection (1)(a), (b), and (c). This would help to clarify any possible ambiguity with the jurisdictional limits of the director. Mr. Chairman, the range as well as the right to obtain this information is not clearly or sufficiently defined within the current wording. The addition of "personal information" solidifies the authority to obtain information about an identifiable individual or personal and distinguishable characteristics of that individual.

Mr. Chairman, personal information is clearly defined in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, section 1(n). The reference to personal information within the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act provides precedents for the legal meaning of personal information as well as an understanding of which aspects should be included. Therefore, as stated in the FOIP Act and as proposed in amendment F to Bill 212, the personal information which could possibly be collected by investigators includes the person's name and address, the whereabouts of the person, and the person's place of employment. Access to this information would further the director's ability to make a well-informed decision on the complaint.

Mr. Chairman, the description of collectible information within Bill 212 combined with the proposed changes to section 29(2) also protects Albertans from misinterpretation. For example, acquiring personal information could otherwise include infringement on an individual's rights, such as information revealing the individual's race, ethnic origin, religious or political beliefs, or associations; the individual's age, sex, marital status, or family status; an identification number or symbol assigned to the individual; fingerprints; other biometric information, including blood type, genetic information, or inheritable characteristics; information about the individual's health and health care history, including information about a physical or mental disability; or information about the individual's educational, financial, or employment history. Quite simply, the amendments proposed for section 29 clarify the director's investigatory scope.

Bill 212 would protect communities and neighbourhoods in Alberta from disruptive or illegal activities that may cause harm or create a potential to cause harm while also ensuring that Albertans' rights are properly protected. Mr. Chairman, following implementation of Bill 212, a person may file a complaint if they believe that their community or neighbourhood is being adversely affected by activities on or near property in the community or neighbourhood or if the activities on the property indicate that the property is being habitually used for a specified use beyond the inhabitants' legal authority.

To state the obvious, Mr. Chairman, this legislation could allow for a vast amount of complaints to flow through the director's office. Without being supplied with all the information available pertaining to a particular complaint, how can the director make effective or accurate decisions regarding the complaint in question? Once again, the inclusion of personal information in section 29(1)(a), (b), and (c) clarifies the ability of the director to make just decisions on accurate information without infringing on the rights of individuals and without the meaning of the legislation being lost in interpretation.

The importance of the inclusion of personal information is reiterated in the proposed amendment to section 29(2). By substituting the preamending wording with the proposed amendment, any possibility of confusion or appeal by an individual under complaint should be reduced. The clarification of the rights of Alberta's directors will allow for a smoother process for all.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to also mention to the hon. members that the proposed amendments to section 29 are supported by the access and privacy branch of Service Alberta. The access and privacy branch is the entity responsible for co-ordinating and administering Alberta's Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act as well as providing support to the government of Alberta and local public bodies that are required to comply with the act. The access and privacy branch also co-ordinates the province-wide administration of Alberta's Personal Information Protection Act and assists private-sector organizations that are subject to the act.

To carry out its mandate, the branch provides publications and resource materials on its FOIP and PIPA websites. The expert feedback they have provided on amendment F will further the positive impact Bill 212 can make.

Mr. Chairman, this bill will represent a valuable service enhancement for all Albertans. As Alberta continues to grow, the necessity of legislation which furthers the ability of communities to remain safe and secure is paramount.

Once again, I'd like to acknowledge the efforts of the Member for Calgary-Hays and urge all members here to vote in favour of Bill 212 and its proposed amendments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to support the concerns raised by my colleague from Lethbridge-East with regard to the amendment and to support the Member for Calgary-Hays on this important piece of proposed legislation and to express the concerns of my constituents regarding public safety. I've had some direct experience over the past decade or more in considering these issues, and what I've learned, particularly from community groups, is that public involvement is key to public safety, most certainly over the long run.

Mr. Chairman, rising levels of gang activity are of great concern to Calgarians and Albertans in general. Increased gang presence represents serious potential encroachment, even entrenchment, within our communities of a criminal presence amongst law-abiding families and individuals. Crack houses, grow ops, and meth labs are dangerous to the public safety of Albertans and to their health and well-being. One of my brothers is a firefighter, an officer with the Calgary fire department, and these criminal operations in our neighbourhoods also present a risk and danger to such stalwart citizens providing services in our communities. We need to clean our communities up by cleaning these facilities out. Indeed, we need to take our communities back.

In order to accomplish this, we must facilitate the involvement of community members, who absolutely must feel protected in coming forward. That is key. We must protect concerned, involved citizens who step forward to report suspicious activities. Protecting these individuals will encourage them to contact authorities again the next time and will encourage others to do the same. These sections are of particular significance to this important proposed piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very, very pleased to rise and to commend the Member for Calgary-Hays for his fine, fine work in bringing this bill forward. It's a very important bill and an important bill to my constituents in Edmonton-Manning, and certainly the amendments I believe do strengthen the bill.

The one that's of a particular interest to me and very important to some communities in my neighbourhood is the addition of the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act to the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I had the honour of putting together the 20th anniversary memorial of the Edmonton tornado in the Evergreen community, which sustained some difficult losses in that tragedy. The one thing that came through to me in that was the strength of the community and how many people have stayed in Evergreen for many, many years. In fact, 25 per cent of that community is still there or have moved back since that time 20 years ago. They want to keep their community safe. They want to keep their community growing. They want to keep it a good and strong community. Sometimes in the recent past there have been some problems. You know, this act will come a long way to I think deal with some of those problems, and including the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act was very important in strengthening this bill so that it can be used for that community.

In general in northeast Edmonton this will be very helpful. We've had a number of instances that I've known about and a number that continue to be a problem. There are those that rent these houses and don't seem to care. Well, I think this will bring them to bear and focus them pretty quickly. There are those that attract criminal activity because of their own ways. We've had one particular place I know that's been off and on that way for 30 years because the individual, although he does nothing criminal himself, sort of has lots of friends in that community. This will, I'm certain, begin to allay the fears of their neighbourhood and the police service and all the rest of them and begin to clean up that problem that's been in that particular neighbourhood for quite some time.

Again, I commend the Member for Calgary-Hays. I think he's done a very fine job in bringing this forward. I hope that the amendments and the bill pass with strength. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today and join the debate in committee stage of Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I would like to speak today about two proposed amendments. Amendment B proposes to add "or a tenancy agreement as defined in the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act" in section 2(1)(f), and secondly, amendment Q proposes to amend the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act by adding the following section after section 4:

Notwithstanding anything in this Act, if an order is made pursuant to the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act that terminates a tenancy or entitles a landlord to possession of the mobile home site, the tenancy terminates and the landlord regains possession in accordance with the order.

Mr. Chairman, illegal activity can occur anywhere, including in mobile-home communities. Mobile-home owners purchase their homes as an investment, just like people who buy houses or condos. The communities in which these investments are made should be subject to the same legislation. After all, Bill 212 is making all neighbourhoods more safe and secure. Mobile-home communities experience the same safety concerns as any other community. In some cases there may be a perception of added security for those who choose to break the law in these communities as they can be located outside the city limits and include a large number of residences in a concentrated area. With a high concentration of housing, drug dealers may also view these communities as providing an ample supply of buyers and sellers. These areas, like all other Alberta communities, could greatly benefit from the proposed legislation, and these amendments, amendments B and Q, allow for that.

Bill 212 would empower Albertans to kick this kind of activity out of their communities. The Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act is legislation that governs residential tenancy agreements for people who own or occupy a mobile home. A mobile home, also called a manufactured home, is usually a factory-built, single-family dwelling which can be moved from one place to another. It should be noted that the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act does not apply to holiday trailers or recreational vehicles being used for recreational purposes. A tenant under the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act is the owner of a mobile home who rents a mobile-home site from a landlord. If the owner rents the mobile home to another person, the act does not apply. The Residential Tenancies Act applies to this tenancy relationship. The proposed amendments ensure that mobile-home owners as well as tenants would be covered under the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act.

All dwellings should be subject to the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, and all residents who use their property for activity deemed unacceptable in this act should be subject to the same consequences as those who live in any other type of dwelling. Mr. Chairman, all Albertans have the right to live in a safe community. Including these proposed amendments would ensure that the possession, growth, and sale of drugs and all other offences listed in the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act would not be tolerated in mobile homes and mobile-home communities.

Like any kind of housing, mobile homes can be purchased as a primary residence or can also be rented out to individuals with a tenancy agreement. Tenants may sublet this site to another tenant. A tenancy agreement may indicate that the landlord's consent is required to sublet; however, a landlord cannot unreasonably withhold the consent. The tenant arrangement can be on a month-to-month basis or can be longer, depending on the wants and needs of the landlord and the renter.

Currently for mobile-home owners and landlords there are two ways of dealing with problem tenants: one is with a 48-hour notice and the other is with a 14-day notice to vacate the premises. A 14-day notice is also called a substantial breach. If a tenant physically assaults a landlord or another tenant or there is significant damage to a mobile-home site or common area, the landlord can apply to the court to end the tenancy or give the tenant a 48-hour written notice to end the tenancy. If a tenant has been given a 48-hour notice but does not move out, the landlord has five days after tenancy ends to apply for a court order that confirms that the tenancy will end. If the landlord doesn't apply within the five days, the 48-hour notice is no longer valid, which means that the tenancy has not ended.

A substantial breach occurs when a tenant does not carry out any of the obligations under the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act or when the tenant commits a series of breaches of the tenancy agreement and the cumulative effect is damaging. If a tenant commits a substantial breach of the tenancy agreement, with the exception of nonpayment of rent, the landlord can apply to the court to end the tenancy or give the tenant a 14-day notice to end the tenancy.

Now, the amendment amending the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act to include the tenancy agreements of mobile-home sites would provide landlords with a good tool to use when faced with illegal activity occurring in and around the property.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment also includes provisions for mobile-home occupants to own their home and live there as their primary residence. First-time homeowners often see single mobile homes as a good alternative to buying a house, as stand-alone structures that have yards, good square footage, and enough room to raise a family.

Mobile-home communities have lots of children and seniors, who deserve the same protection as all Albertans. Without these proposed amendments mobile-home communities could possibly see an increase in criminal activity as these areas may not be appropriately addressed by this legislation. So if a landlord is unable to effectively evict tenants for activities that are in this bill, renters who are being evicted from other communities may see a mobile-home park as a viable option to continue their illegal activities.

I applaud the important direction of this bill, and I believe that the proposed amendments B and Q are necessary to ensure that all communities will benefit from the tool this bill provides and all of which work toward keeping communities safe. Mobile home communities are not exempt from the devastation criminal activity can bring to a neighbourhood, and therefore they should not be exempted from this bill.

Mr. Chairman, ensuring that mobile home communities are protected by this legislation and that all the consequences set out in this bill will apply to all members of these communities that choose to break the law is necessary if this legislation is meant to protect all Albertans. I would like to urge all members to support this bill, including the proposed amendments B and Q, because of the positive role this legislation could play in Alberta communities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm really pleased to rise and speak to amendment A1 to Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. You know, first of all, I want to applaud the Member for Calgary-Hays for, first, sponsoring the bill and then for his amendment A1. I think that with these amendments we will be able to strengthen this Bill 212. As well, we will strengthen the community. Anything for safety, you know, is very important for all of us, and I commend the member for adding extra amendments to improve this bill.

Mr. Chairman, now with these amendments I think this bill allows for communities and neighbourhoods to have a say in the safety and security of all communities. This is all about community empowerment and allowing people to be active in ensuring the safety of their neighbourhoods.

This bill also would enable another tool for the people to access above and beyond calling the police, who sometimes do not have the resources to effectively deal with and gather the necessary evidence to deal with some illegal activities. For instance, there may not be necessary resources to conduct a full investigation of a possible house being used for purposes of meth production, drug trafficking, illegal liquor sales, or any other criminal offences. People within the community are witnesses to critical circumstantial evidence, including illegal activities like vehicle traffic at odd hours, noxious smells, and disposal of certain toxic substances that police services could only determine through constant surveillance. Given the pressures the police forces face, this is another tool to be utilized for community safety.

A director of the Ministry of Solicitor General and Public Security can now investigate the complaint and take a number of steps, including informal resolution, warning letters, or application to the courts for community safety orders. These are all effective tools to discourage the illegal activities that may be harming the security of the neighbourhood. The amendments in this bill will also be effective in putting more pressure on criminal organizations that use property to carry out illegal activities. It will also allow for people to take control of the direction their neighbourhoods take to ensure safe and healthy communities.

Mr. Chairman, the investigator can also call in the support of police services or peace officers if need be, depending on the evidence. This ensures the safety of the civilian investigators and creates an integrated dynamic between the investigative unit and the police services.

Mr. Chairman, you know, this bill is all about empowering citizens to take back their communities, and it is another tool in the fight against illegal activities in our communities. The police do not have the resources to deal with all the complaints they receive even if the information is reliable. There simply are not enough police officers. We had task force recommendations, and I'm not sure how many police officers the government is going to recruit. I don't have that detail in front of me, but I heard from my community, especially my riding, and they keep on asking and putting pressure on some of the ministers that they should give us some more police officers in that area because the crime rate is really high. This is very important for all the communities.

This creates another investigative agency staffed by trained investigators to deal with the problem properties in neighbourhoods where illegal activities are occurring. Any tool – any tool – to deal with the rise in crime in Alberta is welcome, and this sends a message to criminal organizations and those who commit illegal activities that the people are watching and that they will not tolerate criminal behaviour in their neighbourhoods. The stakes can be high. Meth houses, child exploitation: these are serious offences, Mr. Chairman, and need to be monitored by all sources, not just the police. This bill provides that mechanism, and this is critical in the fight to win back our neighbourhoods from criminal activities. This is a bill worthy of support. I will support this bill, and I applaud the Member for Calgary-Hays once again.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Good afternoon and thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and join the debate regarding Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. It is the responsibility of the Committee of the Whole to deconstruct the legislation brought before it in order to produce laws that best serve the interests of Albertans. The bill before us today and the proposed amendments certainly uphold the interests of this province.

Mr. Chairman, the Roman philosopher Seneca is quoted as stating: he who does not prevent a crime when he can encourages it. We can use this sentiment being addressed when we analyze the purpose of Bill 212: to protect communities and neighbourhoods in Alberta from disruptive and illegal activities. This would be accomplished by taking a hard look at the areas where these activities are taking place and holding the property owners accountable for those activities. In other words, we investigate the suspicious drug dens and criminal dwellings which may plague some of Alberta's communities, investigate them and take appropriate action depending upon the activity and reaction of the participants.

This legislation, it seems, becomes a preventative measure with the aim of improving public safety in Alberta communities in a more direct manner. Mr. Chairman, it doesn't get much clearer than that. This proposed legislation is a tool that Albertans can empower themselves with in order to feel confident that their neighbourhoods are crime free. Having briefly gone over the character of the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, I would now like to take the opportunity to dig into some specifics related to the proposed amendments listed as E, K, L, and M.

Mr. Chairman, I'll begin by introducing the common concept of caveat emptor. Generally speaking, this is the property law doctrine that controls the sale of real estate property after the date of closing. Under this doctrine the buyer takes responsibility for the condition of the property they purchase and should therefore examine it before acquisition. The only exception to this is if the seller overtly covered up latent defects. This concept is embedded in property legislation as a means of protecting the seller from unwarranted legal action.

I bring this up, Mr. Chairman, since Bill 212 as proposed is a piece of legislation with specific inherent features that refer to property and property rights. The Constitution Act, 1867, allocated legislative power over property and civil rights to the provinces. This included general property law, which encompasses succession law and matrimonial property law. The property laws of the common law provinces are generally similar, but one area in which the real property law does differ is in the system of recording the ownership of land.

In the Atlantic provinces and southern Ontario there is a deed registration system. However, in the four western provinces and northern Ontario there is the land titles, or Torrens, system. Under the deed registration system individuals establish ownership to land as a result of their predecessors on the deed. Theoretically, to establish ownership, they should trace the title to the original grant of the land from the Crown. In southern Ontario it is necessary to show a good root of title dating back 40 years.

Under the land titles, or Torrens, system the state registers all lands within its jurisdiction by listing who owns them and who has claims against them. Prospective purchasers only need to be concerned with who the register says is the owner and not with whether there is a good root of title.

As we can see, property law itself is characterized by a great degree of historical continuity and terminology. I believe it would be in the best legal interests of Albertans that Bill 212 conform to this continuity. By saying this, I mean that when the bill in question makes specific mention of property, it is important that it utilizes the term "caveat" as opposed to other terms. This is the substance of the changes outlined in proposed amendments E, K, L, and M. These are significant, Mr. Chairman, as they would allow this act to fall into sync with other legislation relating to the rights of buyers and sellers in property matters. By doing this, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act would avoid any legal confusion.

As alluded to, various sections of Bill 212 require amendments in order to fall in line with this idea. For example, proposed amendment E asks that section 21 be amended (a) by striking out "an interest" wherever it occurs and substituting "a caveat," (b) by striking out "the interest" wherever it occurs and substituting "the caveat," and (c) by repealing subsection (4) and substituting the following:

(4) The registration of a caveat may be discharged pursuant to subsection (3) with respect to any or all parcels of land described in the community safety order.

(4.1) Notwithstanding section 138 of the Land Titles Act, a caveat registered pursuant to this section does not lapse and shall not be cancelled or withdrawn except at the Director's request.

A similar argument is relevant with respect to proposed amendment M, which asks that section 46 be amended (a) by striking out "an interest" wherever it occurs and substituting "a caveat," (b) by striking out "the interest" wherever it occurs and substituting "the caveat," and (c) by repealing subsection (4) and substituting the following:

(4) The registration of a caveat may be discharged pursuant to subsection (3) with respect to any or all parcels of land described in the community safety order.

(4.1) Notwithstanding section 138 of the Land Titles Act, a caveat registered pursuant to this section does not lapse and shall not be cancelled or withdrawn except at the Director's request.

These amendments are supported by the introduction of the term "caveat" in place of the term "interest." As I've indicated, this properly aligns the bill with our system of property law.

If I may beg your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, I would like to briefly outline that amendments K and L also seek to include the term "caveat" into the legislative framework of the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. This would be done by adding the specific clause stating:

(a.1) if the Director intends to register a caveat under section 46, specific references to the certificates of title with respect to which the order is made.

This new clause would be added to sections 43(2) and 44(2) after clause (a) respectively. Again we see the inclusion of the term "caveat," and I would again note the importance of this inclusion based on my prior line of reasoning.

4:30

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendments are a step in the right direction, and the debate that has taken place is a necessary one. I encourage all members to support Bill 212 with its proposed amendment. As we are discussing the possibility of property transfers, we must provide a context by which we would protect the rights of the potential buyers and sellers. The use of appropriate terminology assists in the construction of a more valid framework for this important legislation.

As I began my speech by referencing Seneca, I would like to finish it by reminding my colleagues of his sentiment that the prevention of crime is a crucial step in eliminating it. A safer Alberta begins with safer communities. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening very intently to the debate and eagerly awaiting my turn, and I thank you for this opportunity. Now, typically when we see an amendment introduced in the House, it is usually very specific and it's usually very targeted, especially in Committee of the Whole. We're actually amending one section, taking out a clause, adding in another clause, or basically amending a certain section in the act. Bill 212, as you know Mr. Chairman, is a private member's bill. I spoke to it in second reading, and it is, in fact, my pleasure again to participate at this stage, being Committee of the Whole.

Typically on the opposition side we like to sever omnibus amendments into their individual sections, into their individual pieces, usually because of a concern that we have that sometimes the government attempts to lump together pieces that are good with pieces that are bad. It forces us, actually, to be in a situation where it's a take-it-all or leave-it-all scenario. I have to confess that this amendment, the draft of which was dated November 8, was shared with us in the Official Opposition sometime, I think, last week, and I also have to confess that today was the first time I've seen it. I'm not sure when it reached our research department, but they assured me that there is nothing contentious in it, that it doesn't raise any particular flags for us, and that it's for the most part based on the comparable Saskatchewan legislation. As such, I'm not going to be voicing any opposition to the amendment as it is worded. I just wanted to emphasize that it was our preference to see this broken down so that in the future we're not forced to either take it all or leave it all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to confirm that on this side of the House we definitely applaud and appreciate any initiative that reduces crime, that basically addresses the issue of crime, which is an issue that is of concern to most Albertans, young and old. We particularly like initiatives that engage the community. We like initiatives that get people behind law enforcement and sometimes even in front of law enforcement. We have advocated for a long time to the government that the government should really put its money where its mouth is. By saying that, I'm basically talking about the various, you know, committees and task forces and studies that have been commissioned over the years to deal with crime in so many different ways. Sometimes it's child exploitation. Sometimes it is the situation about drug and substance abuse. Sometimes it's about, you know, prostitution, gang violence, drinking age, minimum drink prices, and so on and so forth. So many recommendations come and go, and so many committees come and go. Task forces come and go.

If you ask me, Mr. Chairman, I would have much rather seen this bill as a government bill, as some government bill that is the work and the sponsorship of the Solicitor General, for example, or the Minister of Justice. But failing that, I'm pleased that it's a private member's bill, and I'm pleased that at least somebody from the government side is finally recognizing the role for the community and, you know, moving forward.

We just recently had the announcement about the safe communities task force. The community actually met together, and they had these public hearings, and they produced a document that is a good read. The government is promising to move forward on this, and they're asking us to be patient. Today in question period, in reaction to one of my questions, we were told that we have to stay tuned because it's going to appear in the budget next spring. I'm going to be watching very carefully and eagerly that it does because if it doesn't, we're going to be asking very hard questions as to why not.

About a month ago or so, Mr. Chairman, the sponsor of Bill 212 and myself and the Solicitor General and other members, namely the former Solicitor General as well, were attending the International Conference on Crime Reduction in Banff, Alberta. I have to tell you, I thoroughly enjoyed myself and learned a lot at the Banff conference. It was structured in such a way to bring members from the law enforcement community, lecturers, statisticians, people who study crime, and even people who were affected by crime all together under one roof to talk about ways to reduce crime. We covered a lot of ground, and I'm going to share with you some of the stuff I learned, which really hit the nail on the head in terms of Bill 212 and community engagement and community involvement.

The opening ceremony keynote was basically talking about something called reassurance policing. It's the type of community policing that, basically, reassures the community, that tells the community that we realize that there is a particular crime issue, and here's how we're dealing with it. It's not only actual crime, Mr. Chairman; it's the fear of crime. People are anxious, people are apprehensive, and reassurance policing addresses that. This particular keynote was extremely well received, and it was given by a person who is a PhD from Cardiff University in the U.K. His name is Martin Innes. We learned lots in that presentation.

Then the following couple of days we actually broke out into concurrent sessions where people listened to a presentation but then had a question-and-answer period right after. The one I attended first was something about public transit, ensuring safety and order. It was talking about the entire trip, Mr. Chairman, realizing that sometimes problems on public transit have a spillover effect in the community that is immediately adjacent. So our approach as per that discussion was the whole trip safety approach, where the person has to feel safe from the minute they leave their door, walking to the station or the stop, being on public transit during the trip, and then descending from public transit, walking to their destination, and then vice versa on their way back.

One of the people that I have to highlight on that panel was Mike Derbyshire, who is the director of safety and security, Edmonton Transit. Mike was basically seconded from being an Edmonton police officer to the public transit, and he takes that leading role very, very seriously. I have to applaud him because, yes, crime on public transit, for example, has that spillover effect.

The next session had to do with strategic approaches to crime reduction. One of the presenters who I thoroughly enjoyed and learned lots from was Ward Clapham. He's the superintendent of the RCMP Richmond detachment. It talks about, you know, blending both proactive and reactive strategies together, highlighting the fact that communities have to be engaged, you know, talking about crime reduction at the local community level, including evidence-based problem solving, evidence gathering, intelligence gathering, and so on. The community knows what the community has to deal with. We can tell them what we think is right or what we think needs to be done, but the community knows what ails it, and the community can tell us how to address that.

Superintendent Clapham actually has 25 years under his belt, and he has written some books that I urge members from the Assembly to maybe consider reading over the Christmas holiday, many books on community policing and, you know, root problem solving.

The fourth session which I attended was talking about turning around subsidized housing and neighbourhood quality of life, to fix the broken window theory. It basically talks about taking pride in your rental property ownership, dealing with disorder, avoiding slums, avoiding ghettos or the ghettoization of our lower income people. Again, it addresses things like the fear of crime because sometimes when people are afraid of crime, they themselves tend to be aggressive, or they themselves tend to be more prone to disorder, conducting disorder, or causing more trouble or more problems.

One of the presenters, which I have to highlight, was Constable Dale Brenneis from the Edmonton Police Service, who is actually championing something called the crime free multi-housing project here in Edmonton, Mr. Chairman. I'm sure you've heard of it. It's a pilot project that I think should be expanded upon and should be implemented across the province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for the opportunity to join the Committee of the Whole on Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I would like to acknowledge the efforts of the Member for Calgary-Hays. The hon. member has demonstrated exceptional leadership in community crime prevention by placing this legislation before us, and the committee should give it a test.

Our government must continue to provide police services with the support they need to adequately address unsafe properties that threaten the quality of life within all our communities. Thanks to the proposed amendments listed as amendments B and Q, all mobile-home properties will be included under this bill. After all, safety is important to every Albertan community. I especially appreciate this because I do have a large mobile-home community within my constituency.

Mr. Rodney: Do you live there?

Ms DeLong: I live very close by.

Bill 212 provides a clearly defined mechanism for residents to act on their concerns if they identify illegal or suspicious activity occurring in their neighbourhood. Section 3 of Bill 212 establishes that if residents in a community have noticed activities that are negatively affecting their neighbourhood and these activities are of a criminal nature or could present all the evidence to be deemed as such, the residents are then empowered with a complaint measure. The residents can take their concerns to an appointed director of law enforcement, who will then proceed by assessing the legitimacy of the complaint and decide on the appropriate action that should be pursued to solve the concern.

Mr. Chairman, this is a fundamental part of the process. Residents who have encountered conflicts with unsafe or hazardous properties in their neighbourhoods have indicated in some instances that their concerns are not being properly addressed. As I believe was mentioned earlier in this debate, proposed amendment A ensures the complaint mechanism can function properly in all circumstances by granting the authority to delegate the powers, duties, and functions of the director to another employee under the administration of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Safety. By establishing a fully functional complaint mechanism, Bill 212 with its proposed amendments will provide a course of action that will give attention to these issues when they arise in a community.

Section 4(1) of Bill 212 details the thoroughness in which complaints are dealt with and allows for the director to take action depending on the seriousness of the matter being reviewed. Provisions in this section of the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act are intended to eliminate concerns that are frivolous, vexatious, or may be more appropriately dealt with through an alternative route.

If the complaint requires decisive and strong action, then the next stage of the procedure, as outlined in section 5(1), could be the issuance of a community safety order. Before the community safety order is processed, the Court of Queen's Bench will determine, based on the facts that have been presented for its review, whether the property and its surrounding area are being adversely affected. The court will base its assessment, as indicated in section 6(1), on all activities that present an "immediate threat to the health, safety and security of one or more occupants of the property or persons in the community or neighbourhood." This is a central part of the procedure, enabling the court, which is a fair and just authority, to determine whether action should proceed. It strengthens the bill, adding another level of checks and balances. It would be concerning not to access the resourcefulness of our judiciary at this stage, and without this section of the bill questions could arise regarding the criteria under which a community safety order is to be administered.

Mr. Chairman, if the facts of the complaint necessitate the issuance of a community safety order, the bill clearly states what the community safety order will detail related to the property and the individual in question. The community safety order will give a description of the hazardous or illicit activity that initiated this course of action. This will enable those responsible for the behaviour an opportunity to stop what they're doing or be held accountable if they fail to comply.

There are two important provisions within section 6(2) that enhance the effectiveness of community safety orders: first, section 6(2)(d), which allows for the order to have a set date, and secondly, section 2(e), which informs the individuals named in the order of their right to appeal. The amendment C will further improve section 6(2) by ensuring that the director intends to register a caveat under section 21 and that they specify the certificates of title on which the order is made. This ensures that the centralized registry of the Alberta lands system, which falls under the Torrens system, has all the relevant information for a given title.

Mr. Chairman, the community safety order is an essential tool and gives a mandate for more aggressive action against an offender. Its provisions will allow the court to provide direction through measures such as instructing those who are considered violators to vacate the premises within a prescribed time frame or terminate their tenancy agreement. This encouraging aspect of the procedure that's laid out with this piece of legislation and its proposed amendments is that it allows for the involvement of the director throughout the process. This is beneficial to ensure that the director, who is the representative of the community where the infraction has occurred, has an ability to sufficiently carry out the concerns that have been raised by residents.

Section 7 allows the director to apply to vary the safety order only to better address the safety concerns of the residents. On the other side of this provision the participation of the court ensures that the actions which will be taken are in accordance with Canada's laws and are solely carried out to uphold the safety of the community.

Within section 8 the proposed act defines the court's ability to negate a variance proposed by the director if the judiciary concludes that the community safety order has already appropriately addressed the issue raised in the complaint. The sections in this legislation and the amendments proposed to them continually emphasize a common theme, which is that Bill 212 strikes the right balance. It empowers citizens who are concerned about illegal or disturbing activities in their communities and at the same time involves the judiciary, that is best equipped to ultimately deal with unsafe or hazardous property.

Further to my point, Bill 212 includes section 9, which defines the ability of the resident who is in question to take action to appeal or apply to vary the community safety order. This section is a valuable portion of the legislation as it allows for those who may be innocent or falsely identified as affiliates in the activity a method of recourse. The legislation has also enabled the complainant with the ability to apply to the court for a community safety order if they feel the director has not pursued their concern with the urgency and tactfulness that is required.

In section 17 the act indicates that the court has the authority to recoup the costs of assessing a complaint brought forward by a complainant that is not legitimate enough to demand their consideration. I believe that sections such as this illustrate the comprehensiveness of this legislation and the proposed amendments.

Bill 212 represents a new approach to dealing with illegal and unsafe activity in the residential properties, and I will offer my support to have it proceed with the amendments that have been presented.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. And I also advise you that I will be interrupting you within about three, three and a half minutes.

Mr. Martin: I will certainly step down so that if we want to vote on this, we will. I have no intention of going on very long.

I spoke about this, Mr. Chairman, in second reading. I think the amendments, basically, are housekeeping amendments. I think it's more to do with some of the terms used because of the fact that the bill was based on Saskatchewan law. So the amendments do not change the intent of the bill. Certainly, I strongly supported it, you know, in second reading because, let's face it, this is a small step in the right direction. We have to empower the community. The police cannot do it all. We have to empower the community, and the community feels more helpless when they have a drug house in their community. They don't know what to do. They call the police, but as we know, that's a very complicated procedure.

We're not reinventing the wheel here. This has been brought in in Manitoba for five years – and I've talked to the people in Manitoba; they feel it's had a really positive effect – Saskatchewan, for three years, Nova Scotia, and Yukon.

I do want to compliment again the Member for Calgary-Hays because it's absolutely crucial. This is a step in the right direction. If we do not empower the community to deal with some of these problems, we'll never solve the problems because, as I said before, the police cannot do it alone. So I think this is one tool. It's not going to solve all the problems. It certainly doesn't deal with the causes of crime. But if you have a drug house in your community, at least it empowers you to be able to do something about it, and I think that was the main message we got from Manitoba when I talked to them about this, that it had empowered the community to do something about it.

Mr. Chairman, I don't want to hold this up at all. I just want to say that we strongly support it. It's absolutely a good step in the right direction. I compliment the member for bringing it forward, and I hope that this will move forward and become law in the province as quickly as possible.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have about two minutes or so. Does anybody wish to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I ran out of time in my earlier remarks, so I wanted to just finish my thoughts. I was mostly talking about the crime-free model here in Edmonton in the rental market, and I mentioned that particular constable from the Edmonton Police Service heading that crime-free multihousing project. I just wanted to talk about that project.

It basically means that rental properties get certified, and to get certified is a really interesting way to tell your tenants and tell the community where your housing project is that you are not going to tolerate disorder and crime within your premises and that this would be the reason why somebody could get evicted, for example, if they get sucked into that cycle of crime and disorder. You basically get a plaque or a certificate, that you post on your wall, and then you get recertified every so often, like every two years, I believe, and if you fail, your certification is revoked, and then you have to apply again.

That particular constable actually was instrumental initially in something called the Oliver citizen's foot patrol, which is a form of community policing, Mr. Chairman, and he was also instrumental in establishing a proactive community plan in response to . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, but pursuant to Standing Order 8(3.1) I must now ask the Deputy Government House Leader to move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 212.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report progress on Bill 212.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 212. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Education Property Taxes

513. Mr. Elsalhy moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take measures to exempt not-for-profit organizations that provide affordable housing and not-for-profit postsecondary education institutions' campus residences from the provincial educational property tax requisition and examine the feasibility of extending the exemption to small-scale landlords.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You don't need me to tell you that this motion is intended to increase the availability of affordable housing units by exempting the provincial education requisition tax portion of property taxes on housing provided by nonprofit organizations, postsecondary institutions, and potentially extending it to small-scale landlords. We all know that we have a housing problem in this province, and we all know that there is need for new housing units to be brought onto the market, but until then we feel that we need to be looking at different things that we can do in the interim, different things that we can do today, right now, until that new supply hits the market.

Now, who are we trying to support? Who are we trying to assist? Well, definitely whenever you think about nonprofit or volunteer organizations, they're usually supporting people who are the most vulnerable or the least advantaged. Add to that seniors, for example, add to that AISH recipients, definitely add students. We've all heard those stories, you know, that particular student who was living in a shed with no heat and just a little lamp, and all his belongings were in that 1 metre by 2 metres space. We know about people with disability.

These agencies and these organizations look after people with disability. They look after people who have drug or substance abuse issues and so on. So it's definitely people who, for the most part, can't afford better housing options. These are people who are at the very bottom of that food chain that need assistance from the government, need assistance from community organizations. Their need is real, and it only gets worse. We know that sometimes, you know, there are situations where you have tent cities, for example, and people are concerned and upset because it doesn't look good, and it's an unsavory site. But what happens to these people in the winter? What happens when those shelters fill up? What happens when we can't secure affordable, dignified housing solutions for them?

I told you what the motion reads, Mr. Speaker. It is trying to provide something in the interim, something until new affordable housing units are brought onto the market, and it's one step of many. I'm not saying that this is the be-all and end-all. This is just one step of many, and hopefully the government is considering most of these options.

Now, whom did we consult, Mr. Speaker? Well, typically we consult people who are immediately affected or who are likely to be immediately affected. So we actually went and asked postsecondary institutions which offer that type of assistance, you know, both on-campus and off-campus. We went and asked municipalities. We went and asked nonprofit housing organizations. Then we also solicited some feedback from Alberta Municipal Affairs and Housing, the ministry itself.

Let me talk about nonprofits very briefly, Mr. Speaker. We have many nonprofits in Alberta. Part of their work would be to provide accommodation, to provide housing. Like I mentioned, they're mostly serving those who are less advantaged, people who are left out, if you will. One of the examples I am going to highlight is an agency by the name of Edmonton Inner City Housing. That's in Edmonton, obviously. They have existing facilities, but they were planning on adding two new ones. The province, actually, back in 1998, if I remember correctly, changed the law with respect to property taxes, the education part and the municipal part. In 1998 changes to provincial rules took place that basically treated some of those nonprofits as taxable; namely, because these sometimes charge rents. Now, we all know that the rents they charge are token rents. These are by no stretch of the imagination representative rents or real rents. These are just minor fees to tell people, you know, "You're responsible for your unit," to do the upkeep, to take pride in the ownership, and so on. Because they charge whatever little rent, then they are deemed to be taxable.

It is typically a situation where you talk about row housing, for example. I'm really interested in this because there is supposedly a new project in Edmonton-McClung that is going to offer row housing. It's in an area called Jamieson. Many people are concerned because they don't want it to be a ghetto; they don't want it to be a slum. They want it to be integrated into the larger community. They don't want the troubles and the disorders that come with a ghetto or a slum, and I understand their concern. We want it to be successful, and we want these people to have roofs over their heads. So that's a question.

You know, sometimes cities have to charge the education part of the property tax because if they don't, for example, the province will come after them and say: "You know what? You have to. Because you failed to collect it is no excuse, and we're going to take it from your revenues." Sometimes cities, you know, their hands are tied. We know certainly that the mayor in Edmonton here was frustrated a bit. Let me tell you that it doesn't affect only one agency or two or 10. It actually affects potentially hundreds. We know that at least 300 properties fit that description and are going to be reviewed in the city of Edmonton alone. If you add Calgary and you add all the other major towns and cities, the picture is far greater, Mr. Speaker.

At least 300 of these facilities are being reviewed in Edmonton; more are being reviewed throughout the province. If the city in question does not charge the education property tax component, the government, the province, is going to come after them and say: gimme, gimme. Where can they come up with that money? What it is doing is adding an undue burden on these nonprofits that cannot really make ends meet now.

In terms of students and in terms of residences the current situation as per the Municipal Government Act dictates that a student dormitory is exempt from the provincial tax component. But dormitories are one type of student residence. A student dormitory is a facility – and this definition, actually, was shared with us by municipal affairs – that houses students in a communal living arrangement where they share living and kitchen spaces. Sometimes the bedrooms are private. Sometimes they are; sometimes they're not. But that's a dormitory. Well, I would argue that not every student in this province who is living away from home lives in a dormitory situation because you can add individual residences, such as apartments or townhouses, which are not communal.

Motion 513, as I'm suggesting, explicitly includes all campus residences, both on campus and off campus, not just dormitory-style ones. It expands that exemption, and it basically says that a student is a student; a student residence is a student residence. If one is exempt, all the others are. It ensures that the tax exemption applies to all campus residences.

I mentioned some of those examples which we heard about, Mr. Speaker: people who are living in less-than-optimal conditions, people who are living in basement suites that are substandard, or people that are living in a shed or, you know, in somebody's backyard, and they're camping out. That is not acceptable. If they can't afford it, it is, I think, the duty of this government to make it less difficult. While this is not giving an incentive per se, at least it is removing a deterrent. These organizations do not need to be burdened with this tax requisition.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I'm going to give you examples, Mr. Speaker. For example, on campus I'll give you the example of Lister hall, which is right on the University of Alberta campus. Then off campus I'm going to give you Michener Park. Michener Park is a big community that houses thousands of people.

How many minutes do I get as the mover? Twenty minutes, I believe. Anyways . . .

The Speaker: We'll now call on the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to have an opportunity to speak to Motion 513, which centres on providing education property tax exemptions to a number of property types. I would like to focus on the element of student residences, also known as student dormitories, and show how through current legislation, the Municipal Government Act, student residences are already exempt from paying education property taxes.

Mr. Speaker, if anyone is for tax cuts, it is I. However, I cannot support this motion because we already do this. Our government has a well-thought-out education property tax system and a very effective structure for receiving adequate payment to fund Alberta's priorities in education. Every year the province calculates, based on assessment value, the amount each municipality must contribute towards the provincial public education system. Municipalities are each responsible for collecting the property taxes and then forwarding the education portion to the province for deposit into the Alberta school foundation fund, or ASFF. In 1994 the Alberta government established the ASFF to make sure that all education property tax is accounted for separately from general revenues.

As a result of the strong overall growth in assessment, the province has reduced its education property tax rates by about 5.8 per cent for the 2007 tax year. Mr. Speaker, this move marks the 14th straight year that the education property tax mill rate has been lowered or frozen. Now, it hasn't been raised in 14 years. Since property taxes are collected by local municipalities, it is the Municipal Government Act that sets out the provisions and legal basis for the way local governments in Alberta's cities, towns, villages, and rural areas operate in this regard.

The act also covers property tax exemptions and gives reference of properties and organizations that may be typically considered for exemption. In Alberta exemptions are provided to qualifying properties that tend to reflect social values that are based on collective principles. The usual basis for determining tax exemption is the facility's accessibility and the public benefit that arises from its use. Property used in connection with educational purposes, regardless of how it is registered, is exempt from property taxes as it falls under the Government, Churches, and Other Bodies division of the Municipal Government Act.

Section 362 of the Municipal Government Act outlines the exemptions available to postsecondary institutions in our province, specifically outlining the properties held by postsecondary educational institutions which are exempt from paying education property taxes. According to the act, a student dormitory is defined as a housing unit that is used in connection with a purpose referred to in section 362(1)(c), (d), or (e) or with a college incorporated under a private act of the Legislature. The definition also includes the residents of which are students of a facility and are used in connection with the same purposes, as listed in the given subsections of section 362 of the Municipal Government Act.

For the purposes of the act student dormitories are exempt from taxation in whole or in part by section 363(1)(d). Mr. Speaker, this section exempts student dormitories from paying property taxes but continues on to section 363(3), which states that it gives municipalities the option to tax student dormitories by establishing a bylaw. Even though Alberta municipalities currently have the option to tax student dormitories for other purposes, education property taxes on student dormitories are not collected.

Our government has an effective education property tax system and fully functioning legislation which takes into consideration the best interest of all Albertans. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, our government has already addressed exempting student dormitories from the education property tax, and as a result I will not support Motion 513. In the future I hope that the opposition Liberals will do better research before they introduce motions in this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make a few comments in regard to this particular motion. I was going to point out, the same as the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar did, that in the presentations that they made to the policy field committee on growth pressures, in the one that was the University of Calgary's, they made it very clear what they wanted. They acknowledged that the education tax has been waived for university residences, but they were still assessing. What they wanted was municipal tax; they want to amend the Municipal Government Act. That was their presentation.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is right that they do not pay taxes on student residences at this particular time. We've had quite a discussion in the policy field committee about amending the Municipal Government Act. There were differences of opinion there, but we'll come back to that.

I know that the member is trying his best to try to look at the affordable housing crisis and do something about it, and this is one motion trying to deal with it. I'm not sure how you would go about, beyond the residences, though, giving tax breaks exempting small-scale landlords. If I know something about landlords, if there's a tax exemption, everybody will be a small-scale landlord very quickly, I would think, so I think it would be very hard to define "small scale."

Again, we had the discussion in the Legislature about rent supplements, that in fact they end up being supplements for landlords. There's nothing to say that even if they had this tax break, they would pass it on in terms of lower rents. In our experience with the other programs, probably not. It would be another tax break for landlords rather than the people that need it.

I know that the member is trying to deal with housing, and I'd still say to the members here that it is a crisis in how we deal with it. The government has refused to look at a lot of the things from the housing task force that we advocated. They picked some things, cherry-picked them, and I think they've made it worse in many cases.
