We look at all the things happening. Rents keep going up. I pointed out in the House the CMHC in another presentation to our policy field committee: rents are still going to go up significantly. Their projections are that in 2008 in both major cities they'll be up significantly. Condo conversions, even with Bill 34, go on unabated. We just can't keep up, so a lot of people are suffering, Mr. Speaker. There's absolutely no doubt about that.

I guess we try to do what we can here and there and everywhere, thinking: would this help, if we did the Municipal Government Act? Maybe a little bit. Would that help, if we did something else? Maybe a little bit. But the problem is so severe with the pace of development that I think it's going to take a very comprehensive approach in dealing with this problem.

I'd like to say, as some government members believe, that it's getting better. Mr. Speaker, contrary to that, I do not believe that it is. I think that the housing situation, for renters at least, is as severe as it's ever been. If the phone calls to my office are any indication, we're still facing the very same problems. Bill 34, where they took part of what the housing task force brought forward and said, "Rent increases only once a year": well, that in many cases, without the rent guidelines, made it worse because people were getting hit harder right at the start. Where it might have been two or three smaller increases in rent, now we've got it all at once. And it's still going on, Mr. Speaker.

But, as I say, the problem is when you try to do a motion and it's a feel-good sort of thing. I don't think that this would particularly solve it because, as mentioned, it already is waived for university residences. I don't know how you'd begin to figure out where everybody was living, with students all over the city, to give tax breaks. I think it would take an army of bureaucrats to figure that out.

Then exempting small-scale landlords. As I say, I honestly believe that this would just be adding more profits to the landlords if we don't have rent guidelines. It's not to say that I don't appreciate the member bringing it forward. At least, this is an important debate that we should be holding in this House. I think the government had hoped that after the spring session this would go away, this whole housing crisis, but, Mr. Speaker, it hasn't.

I think we need to relook at where we're going in this province, but I do not see any urgency on the government's part. They seem to think things are working out well, that the heated economy is helping everybody, but it's not. Mr. Speaker, we talked in this House about Calgary, perhaps per capita one of the richest places in North America, and 61 per cent of the people there in a survey said that things are worse: we're worse off than we were a few years ago. Sixty one per cent of the people in Calgary. I expect that if you took that survey anywhere else, it would be the same. Of the big concerns they have – it's everything: health and the rest of it – one of the major reasons was housing and rents and what's going on.

As I say, Mr. Speaker – I won't go on much longer because other people want to get in – I don't think this solves the problem, but I do commend the member for bringing it forward to at least have another discussion in the Legislature about where we should be going with affordable housing. As I said, if this government feels that this is not a problem anymore, I just don't know where they're at. I honestly don't. People are still suffering. We all agree that we should get more supply on, but that takes time.

In the short run, then, what do we say to people? For instance, one of my constituents, a single parent, is working at very minimal wages, $1,400, and he has two young girls. His rent went from $700 to $1,400. Now, in fairness, he has gotten some money from the homeless and eviction fund and some from the rent supplement, but he just can't keep up, and that's not untypical of the stories that we're getting. You know, rather than sitting complacently and saying, "We've spent this amount, and we spent that amount," we should look at if the programs are working or not, and they're not. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that they're not. Rather than with our head in the sand, I think we should relook at the whole housing area and what we're doing to people in this province.

It's not only the people on fixed income anymore. It's bad enough when they're paying 60, 70 per cent and in this case 100 per cent for the constituent I talked about, but it's starting to impact what I call middle-income people, too, younger people who thought at one time that they would have enough to buy a house. They don't have that anymore, Mr. Speaker. They don't have that option.

I would hope that the government would review these matters. I guess hope springs eternal, and I'll hope eternally that they will see the light, but I will not hold my breath at the same time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of Motion 513, provincial education property tax exemption for affordable housing. I'll be very brief.

First of all, I applaud the sponsor, my colleague the Member for Edmonton-McClung. I know this motion is not going to solve all the problems in the affordable home crisis in Alberta, but definitely this motion is intended to increase the availability of affordable housing units by exempting the provincial education requisition tax portion of property taxes on housing provided by nonprofit organizations and public postsecondary institutions. It will also ask the government to explore extending the exemption to small-scale landlords.

Mr. Speaker, this motion is very important in providing more affordable housing units for Albertans. We all know that this affordable housing problem is very severe, and lots of people are crying for help. All the programs we have at this moment are not working for all Albertans, and this is another try, you know, another tool to help those people who need some help.

As we all know, with subsidized homes we have a long waiting list, and the rent is really high. As my background I'm a real estate agent, with lots of people calling me to find a suitable place, especially some people who are on a fixed income. Sometimes I feel really bad that I can't find a suitable place for them according to their level of income. I feel really bad. I know that this motion alone, just the idea, is not going to solve all the problems, but I think it will help.

Why are we talking about tax exemptions for affordable homes? We all know it's demand and supply. We have, you know, shortages of supply. To increase the supply, we have to give some incentives so that they can, you know, work faster to build some affordable homes here and which we are not expecting. I heard from the Premier the other day that some affordable homes are nearly finished, which is good. [some applause] Thank you very much. Well, it's a long time due. The thing is that this is a problem created by the present Tory government. If after some time they have decided to take it seriously, it's good news, and we welcome that. But we must catch up with the supply. This is the important thing. How can we help to increase the supply? This is another idea. That's why I say that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung at least introduced something, some ideas, so that we could consider this seriously.

While building new spaces is very important, as we know, further action needs to be taken right now, the sooner the better. In waiting for new units to be built, other measures, such as this motion, need to be explored – this is where we are today – especially for nonprofit groups. Nonprofit groups have a very limited amount of money, and they are sometimes totally dependent on provincial or federal or municipal grants. They're, you know, just looking at their financial hardship. If we help them, somehow give some incentives so that they could speed up the process, if we are able to help in this problem, which is really severe, and help the people who badly need some help from us – let's consider this motion. If we could add something, some better ideas, I think it's welcome. Giving some incentives, I think, like for the small-scale landlords, is needed badly. Yeah, some people may not like this idea, but I think, you know, that if we give them some incentives, it might help.

Considering all these things, I think this motion is a step forward. We should consider it very seriously. Once again I applaud the Member for Edmonton-McClung for sponsoring this motion.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some ambivalence to speak today on 513. Part of me, of course, is willing to look at almost any idea at all that will get people into proper shelter and properly aligned with their current ability to attract income. I guess part of what would help me – and I realize that it's just an idle wish now, at this date – is if I had more information on the chronology of this motion. At 513 it obviously didn't come in this summer. It must have been on the books prior to the spring session. I note that it's amended. People here in the House might know when that amendment took place. However, as I stand here, I don't. I think what's happened is that current events have overtaken the attempt of the Member for Edmonton-McClung to provide some assistance in this field.

One of the previous speakers talked about the fact that a policy field committee is looking into this particular situation. I chair that particular committee, so another part of my ambivalence is: what's it going to look like if I stand up and give a speech denying your motion? Does it mean that I don't care? Well, it doesn't mean that. What has happened since, I think, the motion was probably formulated is that we had a task force with quite a number of recommendations, some of which were accepted, some of which were, I guess, put aside for a period of time, others that may never see the light of day.

Then, of course, we had this unusual situation the first time out for the policy field committee on managing growth pressures: to have nothing assigned to it by this Legislature. Well, I'm going to speak on behalf of the co-chair, not only because I like him but because I feel like I'm getting to know him. Neither one of us are the kind of people who are going to sit around and do nothing, so we made sure, then, that we had something to look into. I have to admit to a great deal of surprise in finding out that what we were going to look into was affordable housing after such a huge analysis had been done.

For the information of the Legislature on how some of these things happen, maybe in the future when you're on a policy field committee and you don't have anything assigned to you, we did quite a democratic procedure and allowed each member to bring forward three of their top picks. Nuclear power was one of them that I chose. I'm still surprised that I misread my committee to the extent that they wouldn't see the importance of it on the scale that I do. In any event, we ended up with a decision, then, to look at affordable housing.

Now, in the early machinations of getting the committee organized and that sort of thing, there was an idea that came up that because the committee had already looked at affordable housing, maybe we should zero in on a particular item. Somebody suggested student housing and that we would look at that as a single idea. However, it was spread to the point where we are now going to report to this House on affordable housing with an accent on whether or not there are either legislative or regulatory barriers to dealing with this particular situation. And to the Member for Edmonton-McClung, we're right in the middle of it. We had six focus issues that, you know, sort of came out of all of the hearings that we held. We've dealt with three of them, but there are three that are currently at the legislative research stage, and early next week we'll be looking into that particular area.

I find myself very, very hesitant to then further narrow our work by standing here and supporting your motion. I think what I'll do is simply state to my colleagues here in the House that, again, I believe that current affairs have overtaken the particular issue you were trying to deal with and that when our committee finalizes its report and tables it here in the House, I hope that you will find some consolation, then, in what we have done and maybe even say that you urged us and encouraged us and made us do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was a little bit nervous there for a second at the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, you know, that when he said that he was going to speak for me, maybe there wouldn't be anything left for me to say. But there is. There are a couple of things left for me to say.

I have to agree with my colleague to the extent that I think current events have overtaken this motion. This motion is a motion that has had a bit of a long and difficult history, I think we could say. The motion as presently worded – and I'll just read it into the record again – is:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take measures to exempt not-for-profit organizations that provide affordable housing and not-for-profit postsecondary education institutions' campus residences from the provincial educational property tax requisition and examine the feasibility of extending the exemption to small-scale landlords.

That is how Motion 513, I guess as amended or as worded today, reads right now.

That Motion 513 replaced the original Motion 513 that the Member for Edmonton-McClung submitted last fall because, Mr. Speaker, there is such an incredibly long read time on private members' bills and motions other than government motions and because the recommendations in his earlier motion were pretty much adapted in our debate on the Residential Tenancies Act in the spring, so the Member for Edmonton-McClung was given an opportunity to change to a new motion. So I hope that for the benefit of the Member for Lethbridge-West that sheds some light on the chronology that he was looking for.

Of course, as that was going on, our policy field committee on managing growth pressures, of which I am the co-chair, decided in late summer, early fall that the first issue that we were going to focus on as a growth pressure issue in the province of Alberta was, again, the affordable housing crisis. The Member for Lethbridge-West, who chairs the committee, is quite right that we decided to look at some specific areas that in the collective wisdom of the committee we felt had perhaps not been dealt with yet, and the work on that proceeds.

Now, I cannot speak for the chair of that policy field committee when he says that he hopes that when the committee's report comes forward to the Assembly in a couple of weeks' time, the Member for Edmonton-McClung will take comfort in the report. I don't know whether the Member for Edmonton-McClung will take comfort in the report or not. I do know this: although the chair of the committee, the Member for Lethbridge-West, was surprised – I know he was very surprised – when affordable housing came up as the top issue in our poll of committee members, that occurrence by itself is as clear an evidence as I think we could find that the affordable housing crisis is ongoing.

Whether it was me on behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus back in January producing the first comprehensive affordable housing policy, whether it was the all-party task force on affordable housing struck by the Premier, which took that policy of ours as a significant guide in producing some very, very good work, whether it's the policy field committee on managing growth pressures, whether it's Motion 513, whether it's anything that any individual member has in the past or should in the future have to say on the floor of this Legislature or outside about the affordable housing crisis, there are a couple of key things to keep in mind.

Number one. We need to keep the focus on the affordable housing crisis until that crisis is solved. This should be our top priority in the province of Alberta. This should be our top priority as the province of Alberta because everybody needs a home. The other things we talk about, the other issues we talk about, while in some cases very important and in some cases not so important, pale in comparison to that inescapable, incontrovertible fact that everybody needs a home. Shelter is as basic as food to the human condition, so we must solve this problem.

Another point which is very key is this: we are not talking about rocket science here. We're talking about creating something in the neighbourhood of 10,000 to 12,000 units of affordable housing in the province of Alberta within the space of the next five years. By comparison, for instance, President Kennedy's assertion in 1960 that the United States would put a man on the moon by the end of that decade is something that you know, Mr. Speaker – because you and I are both old enough to remember that although I had much more hair at the time – that they pulled off. That was a truly amazing achievement because they went from a near zero knowledge base to something that existed when the President made that declaration, really, in the realm of a dream more than anything else. This is not a dream. Solving the affordable housing crisis is not a dream. This is something that's absolutely doable, and we should get on with the job now.

The other key thing, Mr. Speaker, to remember – and Motion 513 is but one small part of this – is that if we're going to solve the affordable housing crisis, we can't just do it with an initiative here and a rent supplement program there and a Residential Tenancies Act that requires a year's notice if you want to convert your affordable rental housing to ridiculously overpriced condominiums or anything like it. You can't just do it with one-offs. Okay? This is an essential issue that we get right by tackling it simultaneously on a number of different levels and a number of different platforms. It will take time to build 10,000 or more units of affordable housing. If we started right now, it would take a couple of years before we could build a significant number of new units of affordable housing.

There are things we can do in the interim to increase supply, and the ideas expressed in Motion 513 speak to that in a couple of ways. But we also need to crisis manage this situation, and that means keeping roofs over the heads of people who have them now but can barely afford to hang on to them. That means we have to punt the ideology that says that it's okay to subsidize landlords through rent supplements because they're good guys, they're business, but it's wrong to subsidize tenants through rent caps because that'll hurt business. You know, both sides need to hurt a little bit over the short term for a long-term solution to this.

Motion 513 is a motion that you may or may not choose to support, but it is very definitely one member's attempt – and it's been a difficult attempt for the Member for Edmonton-McClung – to shed some light on the most important issue that we have facing us in the province of Alberta right now other than over the long term what we're doing to the environment; that is, supporting people through making sure that everybody in the province of Alberta has a home.

With that, I will take my seat and leave it up to others to talk about this. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 513 brought forth by the Member for Edmonton-McClung. The motion recommends that the government allow exemptions for not-for-profit organizations that provide affordable housing and not-for-profit postsecondary institution residences from the provincial education property tax requisition, both of which have already been done.

The motion also suggests that the government look at the feasibility of extending this exemption to small-scale landlords. It is this last area that I'd like to address, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that it presents a whole host of difficulties, not the least of which include implementation, regulation, and monitoring.

I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for this motion and for bringing everyone's attention to this very important issue of affordable housing. It serves as a valuable reminder that this issue continues to be important for many Albertans and that we need to remain vigilant in doing all that we can for them. However, effectiveness needs to be an important consideration as well. We need to ensure that the way we implement solutions to address this need is going to be effective and efficient while making sure that the process itself is resistant to manipulation. We also want to make certain that those who receive the help are those who truly need it most.

My concern with this motion lies in the fact that the definition of small-scale landlords has no concrete, specific, and applied definition in the province of Alberta. There seems to be some commonality where usage of the term occurs, but even that is mostly implied. Generally, small-scale landlords are considered to be individuals or smaller companies who rent out one or more units in a small number of buildings. They may also include those who rent out rooms within a unit, wherein the owner may also share this space with another person or persons. They may also be those who own units or buildings but outsource the management of these properties to a managing agent. Mr. Speaker, according to these loose and vague interpretations the problem of application becomes evident from the beginning. What mechanism or criteria are we using to determine who is and is not a small-scale landlord? Clearly, the answer to this question is none.

I believe the danger here is threefold. First, not-for-profit organizations and postsecondary housing facilities are typically designed to help those Albertans who are facing challenges when it comes to finding affordable housing. Small-scale landlords are not necessarily interested in doing so, nor are they required to.

Second, how could we ensure that the savings we are passing on to these owners would be reflected in the rental prices that they would charge? This takes us back to the issue of effectiveness. Without accountability here we would not be solving the problem that the motion was designed to address.

Third, Mr. Speaker, the logical next question would seem to be: why? By what determination have we arrived at the conclusion that small-scale landlords represent a need to be addressed? In what way do exemptions for these individuals or small companies represent a need, and how does the tax exemption solve this? The truth is that without clear definitions we're not able to realistically know if a need exists and, therefore, if an exemption is even warranted. This may result in spending money that could be better used in other avenues that address the affordable housing issue, many of which are, in fact, already in place.

Again, the Member for Edmonton-McClung raises a valuable and worthwhile consideration, and I support his intentions, Mr. Speaker. However, considering that the substance of the motion is already being addressed through existing legislation, coupled with the important questions I've asked, I believe there is an inherent redundancy in this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support Motion 513 as sponsored by my colleague from Edmonton-McClung, which refers to a provincial education property tax exemption for affordable housing. Indeed, as others have said here, I support anything that's going to keep this important issue before us. I've spent considerable time working for and with not-for-profit agencies. I have a strong belief in this important sector, and it's my belief that this sector is underutilized, underappreciated, and undersupported in general. This sector is critical as Alberta wrestles with the issue of affordable housing.

Not-for-profit groups which provide affordable housing face uncertain futures. Some have indicated that it's the worst crisis we've faced in decades. High tax bills put new projects by not-for-profits in jeopardy, which could result in less affordable housing for Albertans.

I'd like to take just a moment regarding housing for students. I note that a student dormitory is a facility that houses students in a communal living arrangement, where they share living and kitchen spaces, and that these dormitories are exempt from provincial tax. However, this doesn't capture individual residences such as apartments or townhouses. Motion 513 explicitly includes all campus residences, and I think this is a valuable consideration.

As my colleague from Lethbridge-West has indicated, he hopes that the initiative by the Member for Edmonton-McClung will nudge things along. We all support these measures in whatever capacity they might be able to have an impact, but I'd have to conclude what others have suggested, that this is a housing crisis that exists in Alberta, one that's seriously harmful for Albertans, including families and children. My constituents know, and those of us charged to listen and act should know, that bold action is required. Much of that bold action was recommended in the task force report and then ignored. But we'll keep trying. We'll keep the issues at the forefront, and we will not forget those who are suffering.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, have you indicated your desire to participate?

Ms DeLong: Yes, please.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and debate Motion 513. The ideas expressed in this motion are already covered by a combination of legislation and regulations. A campus residence of a qualifying educational institute is not required to pay the education tax portion of a property tax, and this exemption was implemented by the Alberta government through the Municipal Government Act. Several sections of the MGA also provide municipalities with the ability to consider and make decisions about property tax exemptions to respond to the individual, specific circumstances of nonprofit organizations providing affordable housing. So municipalities have the ability to decide if it is feasible to exempt certain small-scale landlords from paying the education portion of the property tax as well.

The difference between what this motion is asking and the current legislation is: who has the authority to grant the tax exemptions? To achieve the purpose of this motion, this government would have to take authority away from the municipalities. As stated in the MGA, it is under the purview of municipalities to grant tax exemptions. Now, within the MGA community organization property tax exemption regulation municipalities can also establish specific exemptions and regulate them through bylaws. Section 362 of the MGA gives not-for-profit organizations provisions for a property to be exempt from paying property tax if it's "used for a charitable or benevolent purpose that is for the benefit of the general public.” Also, under section 364 “a council may by bylaw exempt from taxation . . . property held by a non-profit organization.” So currently student dormitories in Alberta are exempt from paying education property taxes. However, most municipalities still require that municipality taxes be paid.

All property owners pay the education property tax. People who rent or lease property contribute indirectly through their monthly rent or lease payments as the education system benefits all Albertans. As new development brings with it new taxpayers, the education requisition will be spread across a broader assessment tax base. Every year the province calculates, based on assessment value, the amount each municipality must contribute towards the provincial public education system. If the province’s property tax rate decreases, the amount it requires from municipalities decreases as well, but if the municipality tax rate increases, the overall property tax may not change or could potentially rise. Municipalities use the property tax rate in conjunction with a local education tax rate to determine how much education property tax they will collect.

The relationship between property assessment and taxation is – and I have a little calculation here; I always like formulas – assessed property times tax rate equals taxes payable. The municipal council is responsible for setting the tax rate, and the municipality is responsible for calculating the taxes payable, collecting the taxes, and remitting the provincial education portion to the province.

Now, municipalities collect the education property tax and then forward it to the province for deposit in the Alberta school foundation fund. Although the provincial uniform education property tax rates will be reduced by about 5.8 per cent in 2007, the government will collect $81 million more in education property tax revenue as a result of the newly built homes and businesses and real property improvements. The additional $81 million will help pay for instructional costs, including teachers’ salaries, textbooks, and other classroom resources. The education property tax provides Alberta’s education system with a stable and sustainable source of revenue. Pooling the education property tax in the Alberta school foundation fund ensures that students receive a quality education regardless of their municipality’s assessment wealth.

Mr. Speaker, creating more legislation around education property tax is not the most efficient way to achieve the goals and purposes of this motion. Municipalities already have the authority to implement all of these tax exemptions. Therefore, I do not support this motion, and I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that after listening to all the debate ahead of me, I support the process of actually discussing this on the floor. My colleague from Edmonton-McClung has brought forward a very thoughtful motion. Perhaps it has been macerated through the committee looking at housing, but the fact that he has brought it forward and that we have discussed it and that it is actually based on the fact that there were some nonprofit housing projects that actually did receive this tax benefit and now are going to be assessed is, I think, something worth looking at.

Nonprofits that can provide housing in this day, when we are in such a crisis, I think should be looked at. Because we do something at this point in time does not mean to say that it’s actually cast in concrete. It should be cast in an evaluation process where we do something that’s right now and look at it a year from now because it may not be right a year from now. Maybe housing will have caught up. Highly unlikely in that short space of time, but maybe housing will have caught up at that time, and then we could relook at who would get breaks and who would not get breaks.

I think that my colleague from Lethbridge-West stood up and spoke with respect on how this process has come forward lends credence to what I’m actually saying, and so I’m supporting it in terms of the . . .

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(4) I would now like to invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close the debate.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to thank all the hon. members of the Assembly, both who supported the motion and who expressed some hesitancy, for their contribution. Briefly, I just want to react to some of the comments which I heard earlier in debate.

First, I will respond to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, who was talking about committee work and the committee that he, in fact, chairs and that the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie is the co-chair of. Those committees are new. They’re new creatures, and there is no manual. We’re making those rules as we go. I would argue that this is just one layer which we didn’t have before. Until they were announced, we only had the House; we only had the Assembly. This is a new layer. Even when they do meet and even when they do make recommendations and issue a report, these recommendations are presented to the Assembly in the form of a suggestion. They’re not binding on the Assembly. It is basically a recommendation, and then all 83 members in the House would have the opportunity to debate it and make their own decisions. I would argue back to the Member for Lethbridge-West that it’s the Assembly where all of these decisions have to be made, and it’s the Assembly where all of these ideas have to be thoroughly discussed and researched.

My hon. colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat was talking about small-scale landlords and, you know, that the criteria were loose. My response to him would be that anything we do that, basically, even minimally addresses the affordable housing crisis would be useful; it would be beneficial. We have regulations, and this government loves to rule by regulations, loves to put everything in regulation, not in legislation. This is no different. They could put regulations in place that define what is a small-scale landlord.

To my hon. colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat, I’m not talking about all small-scale landlords. I’m talking about those ones in particular which offer affordable housing. Regulations can define what is affordable and what’s not, but at least we know that 30 per cent of one’s income should serve as a guideline. Nobody should pay more than 30 per cent of their income to be deemed affordable housing or affordable living.

The hon. member also mentioned abuse or effectiveness, misuse of the funds, whatever. I was really puzzled by his remark because we know that the homelessness and eviction prevention fund has been abused. It was reported widely that people who don’t need the assistance are basically drawing that money out. If we need effectiveness with respect to Motion 513, I would argue that we need effectiveness with many, many different government programs and different funds. This is not an assistance to the landlord. This is an incentive for the landlord to continue to offer affordable housing.

In terms of students, again, I emphasize that “dormitories” is not the definition that is one size fits all. I am arguing that it is just one type, and then you have apartments and you have townhouses, that are not included currently. Motion 513 was attempting to include them in the exemption.

The nonprofits, Mr. Speaker, have to be assisted. When an agency like the Edmonton Inner City Housing Society gets charged something in the neighbourhood of $25,000 per new building to pay property taxes, I don't think it's fair, and we're sending them the wrong message. If they absolutely have to get that money to pay for that tax assessment, where it is likely to come from is from those poor people that these agencies are trying to help. If you're going to collect $25,000 from 25 units every year, that is totally unaffordable.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members from this Assembly to support Motion 513. Let's keep that discussion going because the crisis is real and it is continuing and everything we do here should have a favourable impact.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 513 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that given the hour, we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 6 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Title: Tuesday, November 20, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/11/20

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate ourselves anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Ms Evans: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, I rise this week to introduce a fabulous group of students, this time from Wes Hosford school, an exemplary elementary school where my grandchildren both attended. Now we have 64 students in three classes here, actually a total of 72 visitors. We have teachers and group leaders Kim Lerbekmo, Jane Dimitroff, Cathy Brosseau, Stephanie McGladdery, and we have Miss Shannon MacLeod as well as Mr. Tosczak. We have parent helpers Mrs. Jocelyn Bell and Mrs. Penny Reid. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a class from Fultonvale elementary school, who have been brought here by their teacher, Mrs. Karin Bittner, every year that I've served in this Assembly. The class is also accompanied by teacher aides Mrs. Diane Gundersen and Ms Jennifer Harkness. Along with them are parent helpers Mrs. Chris Douglas, Mrs. Shelly White, Ms Marj Langkamp, Mrs. Carrie Brunet, Ms Shauna Schryver, Mrs. Ruth LaFleche, Mrs. Karen Hachey, and Mrs. Jennifer Diener. They are in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm applause of the Assembly.

Mr. Coletto is a PhD candidate at the University of Calgary in political science. He's also currently the president of the Graduate Students' Association at the University of Calgary. Locke Spencer, vice-chair of the Alberta Graduate Council. Mr. Spencer is a PhD candidate at the University of Lethbridge in physics. Adrienne Huxtable, financial officer of the Alberta Graduate Council. Ms Huxtable is a PhD candidate at the University of Alberta in physiology. She is a former vice-chair of the AGC and has been involved with the AGC for three terms. I'll be meeting with this group later and look forward to the valued contribution that they give to Alberta. They are seated in the public and members' galleries this afternoon. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 10 special visitors all the way from Vulcan county. Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the steering committee for the first Exposure festival, which is Edmonton's Queer Arts and Culture Festival, which is starting on Friday, November 23, and running to December 1. Exposure will invite members of the queer community to develop, exhibit, and explore queer artistic expression and provide opportunities for Edmonton audiences to appreciate this art. A number of the members of the steering committee are with us today. I would ask them to please rise as I call their name. To begin with, Heather Zwicker, who's chair; Anthony Easton; Todd Janes, who's also a constituent and runs Latitude 53 gallery; Ted Kerr; and Christie Shultz. Is Adam there as well? Okay. So please join me in welcoming these wonderful members of our community bringing us another festival.

I have a second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you Herta Ogertschnig. She is a constituent and a senior. She's been very active in working with my office on concerns about standards of living, particularly around the amount of money that seniors have to buy good, nutritious food. We did contact the minister about this and asked him to review the income level in seniors' benefits. I would ask Herta to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly for her advocacy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Rod Olstad. Rod's family have been residents in Alberta since 1892. On behalf of my constituents and all Albertans I would like to thank Rod for his efforts and his advocacy on behalf of everyone. I would now ask him, please, to stand and that he receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Barrie and Richard Vickery

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to acknowledge the agricultural achievements of the Vickery family, who farm in Kneehill county. Recently Richard and Barrie Vickery, while accompanied by their wives, Judy and Sandra, as well as their parents, Richard Sr. and Betty, were named Agri-Trade farm family of the year for my constituency.

Through the years the Vickery family have witnessed many changes in agriculture, and they have continually succeeded by drawing upon their great work ethic and passion for farming. Today Richard and Barrie rely more and more on their innovation and resourcefulness to balance the demands of a modern agriculture industry as they farm a homestead that was founded by their grandparents in 1919.

The Vickery brothers are a great example of intergenerational farmers who have gained an immense appreciation for the independence and accomplishment of cultivating their own land. Each brother had once pursued other endeavours, only to be drawn back to their roots to live a life that has allowed so many Albertans to prosper. Their decision to return to the farm greatly benefited their rural community as both men are active residents. Richard served as county councillor in Kneehill county and Barrie as a director for Rural Crime Watch. The Vickerys acknowledge that their success is credited to the support they receive from their family. Each family member contributes to help farm 1,650 acres of wheat, barley, canola, and peas and 150 acres of hay, and they tend to a small herd of cattle as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

National Child Day

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, November 20, is National Child Day. This day was first proclaimed by the government of Canada in 1993 to recognize the United Nations convention on the rights of the child. Today we celebrate our commitment to ensuring that all children are treated with dignity and respect, given the opportunity to have their voices heard, protected from harm, provided with their basic needs, and given every opportunity to reach their full potential.

Children are Alberta's most precious resource. Supporting the growth and development of Alberta's children and providing them with the opportunity to pursue their goals will mean a bright future for all Albertans. We will continue to work together across government and with Alberta communities to improve the quality of life for all children and youth and provide families the support they need to lead safe and healthy lives. Mr. Speaker, today we will secure a bright future for our children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Famous Five Maquette

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among the statues on Parliament Hill in Ottawa are a few that are neither Prime Ministers nor queens and kings. One of them is of Baldwin and LaFontaine, the pair of MLAs in the province of Canada 160 years ago who led the movement for responsible government. Another, the most recent addition, is a sculpture of the five who 80 years ago led the movement to have women recognized as persons in the British empire. This sculpture and smaller representations of it throughout the country are the work of Edmontonian Barbara Paterson. The five who led this movement were social activists for whom women's rights were not an end in themselves but an important part of building a more human society. Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, Emily Murphy, and Irene Parlby were Canadians and Albertans. Three were MLAs who sat in this Chamber.

Leadership comes in many forms. Many who enrich the human journey are neither royalty, presidents, nor prime ministers. In our rotunda is one figure that falls outside these categories. That is the statue of Crowfoot, chief of the Blackfoot confederacy, whose wise leadership led to peaceful cohabitation of people of many origins – European, Canadian, and American – with his own people in their own territory. Crowfoot can be considered a father of this province.

It is time to add to the range of persons in our rotunda. To this end I propose the inclusion of a maquette of the sculpture of the Famous Five, who can be considered mothers of Alberta as a progressive and inclusive society. The spirit of the five cannot be contained by any one locale, yet it is time they be recognized here, where their work began. Their maquette in our rotunda will be a model of our possibilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Contributions to NASA Space Program

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share a story of people and organizations whose limits are literally out of this world. I'll begin with a good friend, Scott Parazynski, who was an Olympic coach in the Calgary games. He is an extremely knowledgeable medical doctor, and he is also NASA's most experienced spacewalker.

Last month my wife, Jennifer, and I were invited to take a special tour of the Kennedy Space Center and witness Scott's shuttle team blast off into outer space, an event we'll never forget. I'm pleased to report that two weeks later, after performing the most dangerous spacewalk ever in order to keep alive the hopes and dreams of those who are working on the International Space Station, Scott has returned safely to his family after his fifth and final mission.

When I reflect on the reception for family and friends on the night before the launch, I recall the most poignant statement from one of the astronauts who shared NASA's goal: to make life better for all people on Earth. Mr. Speaker, it would take the rest of this session to share even a partial list of the benefits that people around the world have gained from the space program, but it's worthy of note that many of the contributions originated right here with Albertans, including Dr. Bob Thirsk, who earned his BSc at the U of C, Professor Carlos Lange, Drs. Samson and Mann, senior scientist Ian Stirling, Shana Corporation, and in numbers too large to mention here, scores of Albertans involved with Canadarm and Canadarm2 projects.

These individuals, organizations, and events remind me of the incredible potential for good that human beings possess. I invite all members of the House to join me in saying thank you and congratulations to all associated with the space program for proving that, indeed, the sky is not the limit and for making our lives better every day in big and small ways.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Children's Rights

Mr. Eggen: Today marks the 18th anniversary of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child. Today is also the day that UNICEF Canada released a study on child well-being. Canada failed in a number of priority areas for children, including child poverty, obesity, mental illness, and high rates of children in state care and detention centres.

Now, some of you may feel that you've heard this before, and it's likely that you have. Since Canada ratified the UN convention on the rights of the child in 1991, we have continued to fail our children in these areas of concern. The statistic that 1 in 6 children lives in poverty has remained constant for the last generation.

There is growing disparity between certain populations. Aboriginal infants are twice as likely to die than nonaboriginal infants. Those who have disabilities are still far less likely to participate fully in the education and employment sectors of our society. Aboriginal children are failed by the system in the greatest proportions. The UNICEF report highlights housing, water, and education as major shortfalls. This government might want to look to the reserves and federal policy as the root, but I'm here to say today that this is also an Alberta responsibility. Alberta's children are amongst these numbers, which means that we are failing them here too.

It's up to this government to provide for and to protect Alberta children to the best of its ability. This begins with ensuring that schools are supportive and encouraging places for all children, that health care is of the highest standard, and that children have quality, accessible, and affordable child care. It's time to make a difference and not excuses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

National Addictions Awareness Week

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission I'm pleased to rise today and help AADAC-funded services and programs, staff, our community partners, and Albertans kick off National Addictions Awareness Week, starting November 18 to 24. This week features various events such as wellness walks, resource fairs, school presentations, family swims and skating activities as well as announcing the winners of a youth video commercial contest.

National Addictions Awareness Week aims to create greater awareness of addiction issues and to reinforce the message that Change Is Possible, this year's theme. The week also encourages communities to take local action to reduce and prevent substance abuse. Providing addictions programs and services makes good economic sense. Research tells us that every dollar spent on addictions treatment saves $7 in health care costs. Addictions treatment drives down demand for acute and long-term care and promotes more efficient use of the health care system.

In the area of prevention these figures are even higher. Every dollar spent on prevention translates into $14 in savings. Prevention strategies like public awareness, education, and social marketing can shift attitudes and behaviours to help reduce the risk of substance abuse and problem gambling.

Albertans can receive support across Alberta through services in 51 communities and have free access to services, including assessment and outpatient counselling, day treatment, detoxification, short- and long-term residential treatment, and overnight shelter.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all Albertans to contact their local AADAC office to find out more about the activities planned in their community and information regarding addictions programs and services.

Thank you.

Bill 49 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 49, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2007.

The bill will amend the Traffic Safety Act. Amendments are required as part of Alberta's traffic safety plan. Legislative amendments will define an intersection safety device which can be used to gather evidence dealing with red light and speeding infractions at intersections and the introduction of this evidence in court by affidavit – these changes will incorporate and mirror existing provisions for red-light cameras – and also allow photocopies of registrations for class 4 commercial trailers to be carried as an option to the original certificate.

The proposed legislation will affect evidence considered by the Alberta Transportation Safety Board respecting alcohol-related driving. It will also streamline the process of applying for a court review of board decisions and confirm the amount of deference the court gives to board decisions.

Finally, the legislation includes a liability cap for the vehicle leasing and sale industry and lenders who retain title to vehicles as collateral for loans where these businesses do not have possession of the vehicle.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 49 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the AADAC annual report 2006-2007. As chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission it's my pleasure to table these. The commission continues to provide leadership in delivering services that assist Albertans in achieving freedom from the harmful effects of alcohol, other drugs, and gambling. This report summarizes the activities and achievements of the commission in 2006-2007.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table five copies of a petition of another 15 residents from Slave Lake and region regarding the need for extended care beds in Slave Lake. This is signed by concerned citizens of Slave Lake. Of course, we wish to have our aging family members remain in this community, with familiar friends and family. Having to leave the community does not allow for much time to be spent with loved ones. Travel to visit is also an issue with costs, work schedules and other barriers.

They want us to consider . . .

The Speaker: Let's just move on with the tablings.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling correspondence from Eva Makowichuk. She's concerned about the treatment her relatives have been receiving in long-term care facilities and is asking for advocacy available for seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is a pair of publications from the Edmonton Community Action Committee on Elder Abuse. One documents the intervention team's approach.

Another is the program for the 38th annual awards banquet for the Northeast Zone Sports Council. Their motto is Developing Youth through Sport. These were the awards for softball, baseball, soccer, and of course minor hockey.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a petition to the Legislature urging the government to re-evaluate the proposed changes to daycare regulations.

Another tabling I have is from Shauna Grabinsky, wanting to express a few concerns about the proposed Child Care Licensing Act.

Another one from a constituent, Dean Whalen, writing to express concern about the problem of homelessness in our city and province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Several tablings today. The first is a correspondence from Herta Ogertschnig, who is my constituent I introduced, expressing her concerns about the cost of living and Alberta seniors' benefit program; a second tabling from a constituent, Alyssa Fraser-Hopkins, asking that midwifery services be covered by health care – I heartily agree – and letters from Michael L. Smith and Eva Rose G. Angcoy, who are pointing out their concerns about the labour laws, asking for first-contract arbitration, recognition of bargaining rights, one labour law for all unionized workers, automatic certification of workplaces, and outlawing the use of replacement workers. Again I heartily agree.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. They are from constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar

Dave Wilson, Deano Mitchelmore, and Theresa O'Connor. These three individuals from my constituency are writing indicating their strong belief that Alberta's labour laws require major changes to encourage fairness to all working people in Alberta.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Child Hunger

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is the anniversary of the adoption of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child, a convention to which Alberta is a signatory. Article 24(2)(c) requires all parties to combat malnutrition and to support the provision of adequate and nutritious food, yet today and every school day in Alberta thousands of children go to school hungry through no fault of their own. My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier believe that the children of this province have a right to adequate food?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of our priorities of government is to improve the quality of life for all Albertans. In a province where the average per capita income is the highest compared to other jurisdictions, in a province where we have low tax rates, we have a lot of the general, very positive economic indicators, yet today we have children that are arriving at school without breakfast. We have a number of programs in place to support families that either through income or through some issues at home the children aren't given proper nutrition. The minister may outline all of the programs we have in place.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that Alberta schoolchildren by the thousands turn up hungry at school every day. The Alberta Liberal caucus sits here across the Assembly from a government that spends more per capita than any other province but often delivers less. Are Albertans getting full value for their money? I don't believe so. Does this government have its priorities straight? Again, I don't think so. This government continues to support subsidies to things like horse racing when just part of that subsidy could create a province-wide school nutrition program. Other provinces support hungry schoolchildren. This government supports horse racing. Can the Premier explain why his government has refused to directly support feeding hungry schoolchildren in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the leader is misinforming the House. The only revenues that go to horse racing in this province are those that are a share of the benefits of the VLT income. Those people that happen to use the VLTs, that income is shared towards horse racing.

However, with respect to children in this province, we have the best supplementary health program for children in the country of Canada. Close to 75,000 children are receiving benefits covering eyeglasses, prescription drugs, emergency ambulance service, dental care, and essential diabetic supplies. We have raised the maximum benefit of this program to give more Alberta children access, and there's more to come.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I introduced a motion in this Assembly for school nutrition programs a year ago. It's something, as members here will remember, I feel very passionate about. This government voted that motion down en masse. Supporting people in need, especially kids, is a fundamental commitment of the Alberta Liberals. When this government spends more per capita than any other province and can't stick to its budget, it can't call itself conservative, and when it refuses to support programs that feed hungry kids, it can't call itself progressive. To the Premier: when will this government recognize that systemic child hunger in Alberta exists and is unacceptable?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, over 1,600 children in Alberta receive support through the child and youth support program. We've also gone further than that, far beyond what the Liberals wanted to do, and that is that we've also expanded the program to pregnant women in low-income family situations, and we also offer child care subsidy for families that are in postsecondary education in the province of Alberta. It's an outstanding program and, once again, unmatched anywhere in the country of Canada.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Children's Services

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Article 3 of the convention on the rights of the child states that jurisdictions are responsible to take all administrative and legislative measures needed in order to support the rights and well-being of children in their care, yet the Auditor General himself has observed that more attention must be placed on follow-up care for children in the care of this province. To the Minister of Children's Services: when will the ministry have these additional measures in place to support vulnerable children throughout their childhood?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, the first thing I would like to say is that in this province we're really proud of the focus that this government has on children and families. For a province of 3 million people we spend close to a billion dollars on programs and services for the well-being of children and families.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The number of children being placed in hotels under the province's care is on the rise. How will the government work to bolster the number of foster families and provide them with the necessary supports to provide optimal care for the children that they look after?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that with our foster families, the member is aware, we are endeavoring to embark on a campaign. We are looking for more foster parents. We're also working very closely with the Alberta foster care association on both the campaign as well as supports for current foster parents as well as our future ones.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new casework model proposed by Children's Services looks promising, yet it will mean more responsibilities for an already overworked staff. How does the government plan on addressing this gap between needs and resources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct that the casework practice model is a good model. Currently we are testing it in 13 sites across the province. We do know that it is using the best social work practices. In the test sites we know it's more labour intensive. We are funding for more staffing in the test sites. As we implement it across the province, we intend to increase that staffing as well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, as the associate minister for affordable housing announced here in the House, a new emergency shelter partially opened in Calgary, and by evening it was full. All over Alberta this winter shelter space will be full to capacity, and people will be left out in the cold. To the Premier. Full shelters are not good news. Shelters are not homes. Will he acknowledge and take responsibility for the fact that this situation is the result of years of neglect by his government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've had people move to this province from different provinces in Canada and from other countries to seek jobs and opportunity. We acknowledge the fact that the number of homeless has increased in the province because more people are here, but we also have numerous programs to address that. We fully support the Calgary homelessness committee that wants to eradicate homelessness in 10 years. We're putting resources towards that. Any further detail the minister responsible can provide.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, when the new Mustard Seed emergency facility in Calgary is fully open, it will have 341 beds. The last homeless census in Calgary counted more than 10 times that number of homeless people. Ten years ago this government got the first heads-up that the homelessness crisis was developing. Talking about a plan to end homelessness in 10 years now is 10 years too late. What actions will the Premier take immediately – immediately – to help thousands of homeless people in the city of Calgary and across the province of Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the associate minister will outline all of the programs available that we have, and those programs are supported in our budget.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm surprised by this question because I know that this member has been at meetings that I've been at, that he fully supports the 10-year plan to end homelessness. That's been with the students' union. It's been with the Homeless Foundation, you know. But having asked this question, there are a number of programs that are available. The immediacy of those we've been discussing in the House, like the eviction and prevention fund, like the rent supplement program that the minister has addressed . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province of Alberta needs a plan and a plan of action to move homeless people beyond the shelter. The Premier's affordable housing gambit is not working, as evidenced in Fort McMurray, as we talked about here yesterday; the increasing number of homeless on city streets; rents that are still skyrocketing. The recent announcement of a secretariat to end homelessness in 10 years was not a plan; it was a plan to make a plan. That won't help this winter or next. What actual action is the Premier or whoever he wants to pass this off to going to take to move Albertans beyond the shelter?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, along with the support through the budget for affordable housing and homelessness we're also providing support programs to those that are homeless. We find that many have issues of their own, generally addictions to drugs or alcohol. We have to deal with those addictions as well. So we have to provide a continuum, not only provide a very secure shelter for the individual, but you also have to take care of the reason that that individual might have ended up in a homeless situation. That is the full extent of the program, dealing with a lot of the issues behind the scenes to make sure that that particular person doesn't end up in that same situation again.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Olymel Pork Processing Plant

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Olymel pork processing plant in Red Deer was banned from exporting pork to the United States after food safety infractions were found during a U.S. Department of Agriculture audit. But in the House last Wednesday the Agriculture minister told us that "Olymel can ship to the rest of their customers throughout Canada" and called the infractions minor. My question is to the Premier. If Olymel's meat is unfit for Americans to eat, why is fit for Albertans to eat?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, unsafe food is not allowed anywhere in the North American marketplaces. We have a joint investigation always done by the USDA and also by the CFIA. It's a Canadian jurisdiction because Olymel was shipping product outside of the province and outside of the country, so it automatically falls within federal regulators. Those regulators are working with the provincial government to ensure safety of the product and to see how we can win back the market south of the border.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Maybe the Premier would stand up and make sure that his federal cousins do the right thing and make sure that food is safe for all people regardless of what side of the border it's on.

The USDA report is disgusting. They found condensation dripping onto carcasses from the ceiling, contamination on carcasses, cigarette butts, and so on. I'd like to ask the Premier why he's allowing his agriculture minister to downplay the safety concerns about unsanitary operations instead of demanding that the federal government step in and clean up this facility.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, when I referred to the USDA, it's the United States Department of Agriculture, and the CFIA is the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. Sometimes when you use these acronyms, people are wondering what I'm talking about. Both federal agencies are involved in inspecting the plant and also ensuring that Olymel carries out any of the prescribed procedures that have been imposed either by the USDA or by the CFIA. We're awaiting those reports. We said that we'll support the two agencies in any way possible because the safety of food is of prime importance to the department of agriculture.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier talks a good line, but while he's doing that, his agriculture minister is trivializing the concerns about contamination and unsanitary conditions that were found at this plant. Will he stand up now and admit to the House that his agriculture minister was wrong in trying to minimize the impact of this USDA report?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of agriculture didn't minimize any report. He's a big man, and he'll be able to stand up and defend himself in the House. So the minister of agriculture can respond.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, under no circumstance in this world will the CFIA allow unsafe food into the Canadian marketplace. I have full faith in the CFIA. The only triviality sits across the way, as far as I'm concerned. If the hon. member would like to come with me to Olymel, I would gladly take him on a plant tour. Then you can see for yourself.

It's pretty sad when the newspapers write the third party's questions.

The Speaker: As interesting as it is, I have to move on to recognize the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Pension Plans

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The taxpayers continue to pay a very dear price for the failure of this government to honour past contracts and to keep commitments that they have made and to accept department recommendations on safety and efficiency. They failed to follow their own legislation and to pay off all debt with surplus dollars. Consequently, we have now had turned over to the taxpayers an additional $2.2 billion over and above the $4.4 billion that they recognize they owe the teachers and failed to do it. Why is this government burdening the taxpayers with more debt without receiving a mandate from the people to do this?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm not quite sure where the member is coming from, but if he's talking about the teachers' pension liability, it's about $2.2 billion. It's a liability. It's not an operational debt. A liability, of course, is an obligation to future payments, and this $2.2 billion would have grown to a mammoth amount of about $45 billion had we not dealt with it today. Why would we want to just sit and watch this thing grow in liability and not do anything about it and have the next generation deal with it? Ultimately, they would have had to. So today, now, is the best time. We dealt with it, and the matter is now put to rest. The vote will be taken by the teachers over the next few days, and we will know the outcome.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they didn't deal with it. They signed now; they're going to pay later. Had they followed their own legislation, they would have paid off the $4.4 billion years ago, and we wouldn't have raised the level of animosity between the teachers and the province by not paying that. My question is: if unfunded liabilities are recognized, why is this government recognizing the teachers' unfunded liabilities? What about Albertans for the Canada pension plan and the $60 billion that's unfunded there? What is this Premier going to do about future Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has alluded to paying off the teachers' pension plan, and I'm assuming that the question has gone towards the direction of whether or not our bond rating will actually change. Well, six months ago I actually asked the bond rating agencies in New York and Toronto exactly that question, and they said that that has already been taken into consideration with regard to our triple-A bond rating.

When it comes to the Canada pension plan, the Canada pension plan is a 25 per cent funded plan and is deemed to be a 25 per cent funded plan. It is expected to be 25 per cent funded in the year 2025 continuing on to the year 2075.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, like the other contracts that they've broken or they haven't honoured, this is costing the taxpayers, and because the oil companies can pay extra taxes and Albertans can pay extra taxes, it doesn't affect our bond rating. The question is: is this government going to do something about the Canada pension plan and realize that we need an Alberta pension plan to protect the prosperity of all Albertans in the future?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that what the hon. member is referring to is an Alberta pension plan, something that could be supplementary to the Canada pension plan. It's some of the visioning that we are doing, looking at the future, how we secure the future of the next generation and the generation after that. Certainly, discussion around that point has tremendous merit. Let's put it that way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Department of Energy Consultant

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past May a government agency was paying private eyes to spy on Albertans in Rimbey and in Redwater. At the same time Murray A. Nelson, a former senior executive at TransAlta and a former board member of the Alberta Electric System Operator, billed taxpayers $500 an hour for a total of $38,000 for 76 hours of work done in May of 2007. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What did Mr. Nelson do for the taxpayers at a cost of $500 per hour in May of this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it seems that the hon. member is calling into question value for Albertans. I certainly would have to say that I can explain the situation around Mr. Nelson's contract. However, I cannot explain the lack of value in the opposition with respect to what that's costing taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the key deliverables that we've asked for from Mr. Nelson: an implementation plan to ensure that the new AUC is in place and functional by January 1, 2008. It will include but is not limited to terms of reference, a labour relations strategy, and identification of key supporting regulations to be developed by the department.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Electricity exports from Alberta will force the domestic electricity price in this province even higher than it already is. My question is: why did this government hire Murray A. Nelson at $500 an hour to increase electricity exports in this province to the lower 48 states? Why is he doing that?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I guess it might be time for a little bit of discussion with the hon. member about which way electrons can travel because, as a matter of fact, if you beef up a transmission system and interties in the province of Alberta, electrons can also travel into the province at a time of need. [interjections]

Mr. MacDonald: Wow. You really should appoint one of these guys as Minister of Energy and let this one go.

Now, my question again is to the Minister of Energy. Who benefits from this $500 per hour contract? Is it the electricity consumers, or is it the big shots that are promoting electricity deregulation? Which is it? Who benefits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will say again about this particular individual – you know, it's odd, and it continues and has done so for the years that I've been here. The members opposite, and particularly this one, take great pleasure – take great pleasure – in calling into question the character of Albertans that work very hard on behalf of this province and on behalf of Albertans. If that's the best constructive thing they can do, I guess they can just continue to be who they are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mental Health Services

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Health and Wellness said that the report of the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force provides the broader focus needed to address addictions to illicit drugs and substance abuse as well as the mental health issues, which are another key contributor to crime. The need for psychiatric treatment, especially for those who may be self-medicating with illegal drugs and committing crimes, is great, yet the wait times for psychiatric treatment in Alberta are longer than in most other provinces. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why isn't the government doing more to help people get the mental health treatment they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a focus that came through on the crime and safe communities task force, and there is a commitment to do more in the area of mental health, certainly. But I think we should be very proud of the fact that the Alberta Mental Health Board has a comprehensive strategy for mental health in the province, and they're working towards it, particularly focused on children's mental health. Now with the federal government establishing the Canadian Mental Health Commission, with its head office in Calgary, also with a focus on children's mental health, I think we're really poised to make progress in this area and make sure our children in particular have access to the mental health services that they need.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, by the time someone enters a treatment program, he or she has already suffered greatly from the devastating effects of mental illness, and when this happens, the greater society suffers as well. Surely, treatment is only one part of a larger strategy to address mental health needs. Can the Minister of Health and Wellness tell us what is being done in the critical area of prevention?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a lot that's happening. In fact, I'm going to be at a conference this Friday in Banff with the mental health showcase talking about all the programs that are available and the co-operation and collaboration that's going on in this area. The Norlien Foundation sponsored a conference in May that brought together a number of the thinkers and collaborators across the province in this area. So there's lots of good work happening. We brought in with the support of the Canadian Mental Health Commission three people from the Bluewater school board in Ontario, which might, Senator Kirby believes, have the best school-based mental health program in the country, to meet with a group of people in the Capital region about programming that they can do. In other words, there's a lot of collaboration happening and good work being done.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Ambulance Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The mess this government created is flowing downhill and landing at the front doors of our cities. City hospitals are so backed up that paramedics are forced to wait up to eight hours in emergency rooms, which also means that those ambulances are not available to respond to calls. My first question is to the minister of health. There were 24 red alerts in Edmonton just last month, and that is only expected to get worse. Why didn't the minister do anything over the past year to prevent this predictable situation?

Mr. Hancock: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, the minister of health did quite a lot in this area. I met with both the Calgary regional health authority and the Capital health authority to talk about what they might do in terms of the emergency areas, how we can expand the capacity of the emergency areas, putting in place the full capacity protocol, as an example, which has been implemented in both places with some degree of modification for the circumstances. We're doing a lot of work in terms of how we can move patients through so that there's more capacity at the front end of the emergency. The fact of the matter is that there is increased activity at emergencies notwithstanding initiatives such as the Capital Health Link, which was created a number of years ago and took a lot of pressure off the demand for emergency. That's been expanded across the province. There's lots of good work happening.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister. Ground ambulance funding has remained static since 2005. How does the minister expect municipalities to respond quickly to emergencies when provincial funding is not keeping up with inflation or population increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Prior to 2005, of course, ambulances were run by municipalities and funded by municipalities. In 2005 the government made a decision to move to supporting ambulance services as a part of the health system, but that was put on hold. As a result of that, there was a hole in the municipalities' budgets because they hadn't planned in that year, and the government stepped forward and filled that hole with $55 million. That doesn't stop municipalities from increasing their funding for ambulance services, as they used to do in the past. However, we are working on an ambulance policy, which I hope to be able to bring forward very shortly, to deal with the completion of that transition program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, this government backed out of the deal and left the municipalities on the hook.

To the same minister. In April, when there was still snow on the ground, the minister indicated that he would soon be deciding whether to transfer ambulance service delivery from the municipalities to the health regions. There is snow on the ground again. Has the minister made this decision, or are municipalities going to have to wait in limbo for another two years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing I've learned on this job is that issues aren't always as simple as they seem to be on the surface. With ambulance services that seems to be the case. There are a lot of interests across the province with respect to ambulance services. There have been at least five reports on the area. Over the course of the year I've met with a number of stakeholders and interested people with respect to the area. I've reviewed the pilot projects, I've reviewed the reports, and we're moving forward with a policy, which will come in the fullness of time.

Drug Abuse Treatment and Prevention

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, low-life, scumbag criminals are continuing to peddle drugs to young Albertans, hooking them on these harmful drugs and causing endless grief to Alberta families. Recently there have been reports that some Alberta families have had to send their children to clinics in the United States at great expense or to other provinces for drug addiction treatment. My question is for the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Why can't young Albertans get treatment here in Alberta, where they're close to their families?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this again was an issue that was addressed in the crime and safe communities task force, and that supplemented the work that was done on the crystal meth task force, which clearly identified a need for more treatment programs. Having said that, we're committed to providing those treatment beds right here in Alberta, but we do have services through AADAC: outpatient counselling in more than 50 communities, mobile services, intensive day-treatment programs in Edmonton and Calgary, detoxification services and residential services in Edmonton and Calgary and Lethbridge. In instances where young people are using substances that endanger themselves or others, parents can access mandatory treatment through PCHAD, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act.

Dr. Brown: My first supplemental is to the same minister. One of the most important recommendations of the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force was that the government provide mandatory, early, and ongoing education for children and youth to build their skills and reduce the risks of them getting involved in gangs, drugs, violence, and other crime. What is the government doing to ensure that Alberta students are properly educated on the dangers of drug use and addiction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is one area where AADAC has very, very good materials. I've actually discussed this with educators, and they've told me that the materials that AADAC puts together are very valuable, very useful tools for the classroom. AADAC counsellors are available to do that resource work in our educational institutions.

It is very important that we deal with drugs on a preventative basis rather than having to always deal with it on a treatment basis. A prevention strategy will include social marketing as well, continuing the types of ads that people may have seen with respect to crystal meth. In fact, there's just a phenomenal one on YouTube that is now going around from Facebook to Facebook, which is an important way to get the message out to young people. We also, as I mentioned, though, have brought in people from a school-based program in Ontario to help us with collaborative processes here in our schools.

Dr. Brown: My final supplemental is to the Solicitor General. What is his department doing to step up detection and apprehension of these low-life scumbags that are dealing drugs to young people in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier said during the release of the safe communities task force report, "We're going to lower the boom on crime." The Premier also spoke about drug dealers who are sentencing our youth to a lifetime of addiction. We will ensure that these criminals are brought to justice. We are moving forward to implement the recommendations of the task force. This year alone we're spending $18 million to fight organized crime. This includes funding for integrated policing units to target and dismantle organized crime networks and gangs who rely on the drug trade to make money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Aboriginal Children's Services

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to UNICEF aboriginal children are one of the most vulnerable populations in Canada, facing enormous challenges. Overall the poverty rate for aboriginal children is close to three times that of any other Canadian citizen or child. On-reserve aboriginal children who enter the children's services system in Alberta face care that is comparatively substandard to care for off-reserve children. The Auditor General himself remarked that there were observable declines in standard of care on reserves. To the Minister of Children's Services: why is this gap between provincially administered children's programs so wide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member has raised a very serious issue. We know that aboriginal children make up 8 per cent of the child population in this province, yet they're 58 per cent of children in care. That is one of the reasons why our historic agreement with the First Nations and INAC was so important and so critical. It is intended to get money onto the reserves, modelled after the Alberta response model, and start supporting families before they reach a crisis on reserves.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 50 per cent of children in care are aboriginal children, yet they make up only 15 per cent of the population. This is a huge problem in this community, and it has now yet again caught the attention of the international community, causing just embarrassment for Alberta. Why are there not more programs available that are specifically designed to bridge the gap between provincially administered programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again she's raising a very good point. We obviously have some jurisdictional issues, but that is not to say that we as a province will ever walk away from trying to provide services. Aboriginal children are Albertans after all, and that is why we're working so hard with First Nations and INAC on the historic agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. In a system that should work to keep children with their families and use apprehension only as a last resort, Alberta's number of children in protective custody is nearly 10,500. The increasing number of permanent guardianship orders and adoption staff involvement in child apprehensions signal a move toward provincial wardship. To the minister: when will the ministry focus on strengthening supports to these families where appropriate in order to support reunification with their children rather than simply removing them?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what we do. We will always try to have children remain with their families. But at the end of the day we will always do what is best for the child, and sometimes that does require us to intervene.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Emergency Housing

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's okay to talk about a 10-year homeless plan and secretariats and all the rest of it, but we have a crisis right now. The weather has changed, and there's a growing homeless problem. More and more people are vulnerable out there today. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Rather than talk about grandiose plans, what is this government prepared to do immediately, as the weather has changed, to add capacity to our shelters so that nobody freezes out there?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question because I want to say that this government is addressing the issues of homelessness, addressing the issues of housing. In fact, this year $285 million was added into the budget, including the housing rent supplement, also to the eviction prevention and homeless fund. We are working at helping individuals that need help.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's cold comfort to the thousands of homeless people out there. You can talk about all the programs that aren't working, but the reality is that we have a crisis right now. The weather has changed. What is your message to the homeless today? Is it, you know, "Be happy; get your cardboard box insulated"? Is that what we're saying? Don't give us numbers. What are you prepared to do now?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, what we are doing is that we have added more funding to the emergency shelters fund, and that addresses some of the concerns that are taking place in Calgary and in Edmonton and in Fort McMurray and in the rest of the locations where there is need for emergency shelters.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's absolutely not the case. With the amount of money we're putting in, there's still growing homelessness. There are 500 more in Capital health requiring subsidized housing than there were in the spring. It's worse now. What's it going to take? Is it going to take some stories about people freezing again before the government adds the capacity for shelters to get through this winter?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that winter has not caught this government by surprise. In fact, we have been working since summer, preparing if this situation should arise. Seven point five million dollars for winter emergency funding for Alberta communities: Calgary, $4.3 million for up to 450 spaces; Edmonton, $2.2 million for an additional 350 spaces; Red Deer, $240,000 for 50 spaces; Grande Prairie, $140,000 for 25 spaces.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Addictions and Mental Health Treatment

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's crime reduction and safe communities response includes the expansion of treatment beds by adding facility-based and residential treatment beds to address addictions and mental health problems, both of which are identified as key contributors to crime. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How does the minister propose to increase the number of treatment beds available for addictions and mental health problems when there's funding already in place for 400 treatment beds in the province's hospitals that cannot be utilized because of staff shortages?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member raises a very good question related to the delivery of health care in the province. The reality is that there is a challenge to recruit the appropriate number of health care workers in Alberta's market today, and it's not limited to health care. We have a health workforce strategy that has been put together to try and increase both the way we value the employees that are in the market today and keep them and make them more productive, how we recruit more from abroad, and how we train more Albertans to fill those places. Also, Mr. Speaker, we've recently added money to the AADAC budget, for example, so that we could increase the wages for contracted staff to make them more competitive so that we can provide the workforce that we need. Under the crime and safe communities strategy . . .

The Speaker: We have to go to the other hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. While treatment may be a solution for those already known to be afflicted with mental health issues and/or addictions, both of these problems are clearly on the rise in our fine province. My question is: how much impact can realistically be expected from these beds over the short and long term? Doesn't this need to be part of a larger plan to be truly effective?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, treatment beds are the last-resort piece. Treating after the problem is already resolved, and of course, as I've been talking about over the course of the last year, the real future is in prevention. That's in working through the school portal to children in schools, providing the wraparound services that are necessary to make sure that they get the help where they need it, that we work early to avoid children getting involved with drugs. And, yes, as the Solicitor General indicated in an answer to a previous question, getting hard on those that are peddling drugs to our children. That's where the real action has to take place, and that's the strategy that's outlined in the crime and safe communities task force.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Cultural Diversity in Seniors' Care

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to Statistics Canada 1 in 4 Canadians are foreign born. That ratio will increase to 1 in 3 by the year 2010, and more often people from different racial and ethnic groups are moving into long-term care centre facilities. To the minister of health. Seniors from different ethnic backgrounds face challenges in long-term care centres like limited activities, communication, and discrimination. What is this government doing to increase the ability of long-term care staff to overcome these barriers?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question and not one that I've had raised before, but I think it is important for us to work with long-term care to make sure that, first of all, they're very sensitive to the ethnocultural needs of residents. For example, the Chinese senior citizens' centre in downtown Edmonton does a very good job of making sure that there's a full range of services for elderly Chinese people within a culturally sensitive location and supports them in that way. There needs also to be that kind of sensitivity in other locations where it's not devoted to one particular group, to make sure that those services are available, both language services and food services, in a culturally sensitive way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think, Minister, that was in the task force recommendation, and I was expecting the government to implement those things.

Anyway, my second question to the same minister. For many people entering long-term care centres, cultural integration and communication are the highest, biggest challenges. Will this minister consider a mandate re cultural diversity and sensitivity training for all long-term care providers?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be a bit of overkill to mandate it for all long-term care providers, but I think that any long-term care provider, whether it's being done in the private sector or by a not-for-profit organization or, in fact, by a regional health authority, needs to be sensitive to the needs of their customers, their patients. They should make sure that their staff have access to the cultural sensitivity training that they need to make sure that the Albertans that are in their care get the best service possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will this minister commit to building a long-term care facility on the south side, south of Edmonton, that accommodates culture specific needs related to food, language, tradition, and religion? Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Well, I guess that begs the question, Mr. Speaker, as to which language, culture, food, and religion. The hon. member didn't say. But the hon. member knows, because we've had discussions, that I'm very supportive of the idea that where there is a large enough group of people to sustain it, make sure that there are care facilities of a long-term care nature or continuing-care nature that are sensitive to the needs of the population. It's very, very important to have. It's important that Albertans, as they grow older, are treated with respect and dignity regardless of their culture, their background, or their needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An AISH recipient receiving $1,050 per month can't make ends meet no matter how they stretch them. This $1,050 a month is spent in the following manner: 80 per cent on housing, 20 per cent on food, zero per cent left for utilities, zero per cent left for transportation, zero per cent left for clothing, and zero per cent left for quality of life and any other needs. My questions are to the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Could the minister inform the House and the 36,000 Albertans on AISH as to what services or supports are available to them under these very difficult circumstances?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak a little bit about the AISH program, that is much more than just the financial assistance of $1,050. It does also encompass very extensive health benefits that average about $322 per person. That would be a waiver of the health care premiums. It would expand to all of their family coverage, spouse and dependent children. It would also give them prescription drugs, eye care, dental care. It would go on to emergency ambulance services, essential diabetic supplies, waivers of Alberta Aids to Daily Living copayments. All of those things ensure that they would also have the supports of whatever health needs would come along with it. But that isn't even all that would be . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Everyone from bankers to financial institutions to housing experts agree that only 30 per cent of your income is the most that you should pay for a safe and healthy place to live. Could the minister advise the 36,000 Albertans on AISH, especially those living in large urban centres, if help is on the way?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to those on AISH I would also like to mention that about one-quarter of those on AISH are also under the programs for persons with developmental disabilities. There are very expanded programs that cover one full quarter of all of those on AISH that are well in addition to these financial supports. That averages almost $60,000 per individual for that program alone.

We could also go to the things that we're trying to do with their living. There are about 1,100 clients on AISH who, unfortunately, because of the disabilities and the health issues, have to live in modified AISH, which provides them long-term care assistance for their housing and their needs. Others have PDD support . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. It's understood that AISH support is paid to individuals based on the disability of that particular individual. My question is: why is this individual being penalized and his income clawed back because the spouse is working and earning money?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, nearly half of those who are on AISH do earn some form of income through supports other than AISH. It is income tested. What we've tried to do and have achieved is to ensure that there is a greater allowance for earnings of income that won't be clawed back from benefits. If you're a single individual, you can receive up to $400, as a family $975. Then even the next thousand dollars each would only have 50 per cent of that taken back off the benefits. We've had a major initiative that has been going for unemployment: how do we see that those people with AISH have an ability to also be involved in productive work and included in our society?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

All-terrain Vehicle Safety

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's children continue to die in ATV accidents. This past weekend a 12-year-old boy died in a quad crash in Nampa. He was not wearing a helmet at the time, unfortunately. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: will this government take measures to mandate helmet use by children on off-highway vehicles in this province?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, again, in tragic accidents like that my heart really goes out to those families that that happens to. But we are looking at the Traffic Safety Act right now. We are going to consult with Albertans on helmet laws. We have legislation in place right now under the traffic act that it is illegal on public land for anyone under the age of 14 years old to operate an all-terrain vehicle without adult supervision, and we do plan on consulting with Albertans on that.

Mr. Bonko: Well, it's also against the law to not buckle up, but people still do it.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec is one example where helmet use by children on an ATV is mandatory. While it may be difficult to enforce such a law universally, taking concrete action will at least save some lives here. To the minister: why is this province lagging behind in protecting children from serious ATV injuries and accidents?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I don't think we're lagging behind at all. As I have just told the hon. member, we do have legislation in place. We do have education programs in place, and we plan on consulting with Albertans – I want to say it again – on mandatory-type laws.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While human costs of these accidents must be our primary concern, the health care costs must also be factored in. ATV injuries result in disabilities, brain injuries, blindness, and other lifelong conditions that are costly to treat. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: is the minister committed enough to a sustainable health care system to support a mandatory helmet law for youth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wearing helmets any time you're engaged in dangerous activity is good advice, and it's one that parents really should instruct their children to do when they're engaged in that type of activity. I'm always at the forefront of promoting the idea that, first of all, we should educate, and then, if necessary, we should legislate to make sure that safe practices are carried out.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 86 questions and answers today.

We will now return to our Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings. They come from Joanna Gottlob, Sarah Hillmer, Derek Wynnyk, Katie Russell, and Mark Sheppard, and they're all on the theme of homelessness and the lack of affordable housing units. They indicate that we're missing in Edmonton alone over 5,000 units.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Then, hon. members, today I'd like to table the appropriate copies of the following Members' Services orders as a result of recent meetings of the Members' Services Committee. First of all, Members' Services Order 2/07, which will come into force on April 1, 2008; MSC 3/07, which came into force on November 13, 2007; Members' Services Committee Order 4/07, which will come into force April 1, 2008; Members' Services Committee Order 5/07, which came into force on November 13, 2007; and Members' Services Committee Order 6/07, which will come into force on April 1, 2008. I'm tabling this, and members will receive copies of this shortly.

Government Motions

Reappointment of Information and Privacy Commissioner

34. Mr. Renner moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the November 15, 2007, report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Franklin J. Work be reappointed Information and Privacy Commissioner for a four-year term.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion, if members would like to participate. If not, shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

[Adjourned debate November 15: Mr. VanderBurg]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is a stench that pervades this province, and that stench is Bill 46. The stench comes from something that should have been buried like an animal's dead carcass but has only been covered over. That is the stench that rural residents find when they smell their well after a fracking that has occurred in the area. It's the smell of coal-bed methane that has penetrated into their well without baseline testing preceding it. It is the smell of sour gas that is in the air that the family experienced from Bearspaw Petroleum's failure to adequately control their wellhead. It's the smell that residents in the Pincher Creek area woke up to the other day. It's the smell that came across from Fort Saskatchewan. After 40 minutes it was finally brought to an end when the fire was brought into control. Bill 46 stinks.

Two weeks ago when we were out to Lacombe – that is, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and myself – as we approached the town, we saw a large sign erected by the residents that said: kill Bill 46. The reason they wanted that bill killed was that it eliminated the need for spies because spies aren't necessary. If you can't get to the hearing, there's nobody to spy on at the hearing. People were incensed. Over 350 rural Albertans showed up at that meeting at Lacombe, and I want to give credit to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for having had the bravery to stand up as a member of the panel and represent his constituents.

Those constituents, however, reminded me of something from a

Frankenstein movie minus the pitchforks and the torches. They were concerned that their interests were not being reflected. Thanks to the expertise of individuals like Joe Anglin from the Lavesta group and a respected Alberta journalist, Andrew Nikiforuk, they went through every section of Bill 46 and pointed out the shortcomings, one of the shortcomings being the back-to-the-future clause, which would simply erase everything that has happened since now and 2003. The sins of the government would just very conveniently be covered up.

They also acknowledged the idea that an individual could only put forward a concern in a hearing if they were materially affected. Now, the definition of materially affected is an awfully broad definition. For example, I wouldn't have been able to be the last intervenor at the Compton hearing on the sour gas well in southeast Calgary. That hearing had the effect of causing the evacuation of 350,000 Calgarians living in southeast Calgary. Why that well ever got to the point of having a hearing rather than just simply being denied, I will never know. That is the problem associated with Bill 46. I and members who couldn't necessarily demonstrate that they were materially affected would not have been able to intervene.

This Bill 46 takes away individuals' rights. The arrogance associated with Bill 46 is the arrogance that is equivalent to what the member from Compton Petroleum stated, that the chances of a blowout were the square root of zero. Well, as I say, tell that to the people down in Pincher Creek in the spring of 2005 when twice the Shell Canada plant failed to ignite and sour gas permeated the region. Tell it to the people of Bearspaw, the family who was affected and had to go into hospital, whose livestock, whose special horses were affected. Tell it to the people in Fort Saskatchewan. Tell it to the people in Whitecourt who are concerned about the possibility of a nuclear reactor. If anything goes wrong with a nuclear facility, it will not be the appeal process that led to the concerns of a nuclear facility. The effect will be devastating, and it will be felt far beyond the simple borders of the county.

In terms of hearings that have currently taken place and have been ignored, look at what happened when Mayor Melissa Blake pointed out the concerns over the rapid development in the tar sands area and how it was directly impacting on the infrastructure of the municipality of Wood Buffalo and specifically the city of Fort McMurray. The EUB, like Pontius Pilate, just simply wiped their hands of the situation and said it wasn't in their mandate. They did not have the power to provide Melissa Blake and the citizens of Fort McMurray and surrounding areas that she represents with any assurance that there would be any slowing down of the rate of the development of the tar sands.

Of course, our Premier has said that he refuses to put the brakes on that development. Unfortunately, the Premier also seems to be unwilling to grab the steering wheel and stand up for Albertans who are very concerned about Bill 46 and the secrecy associated with it. Bill 46 limits the representation a person can have when coming before a hearing.

I mentioned the 350 that showed up at Lacombe. There was a smaller turnout but a significant concern from members of Camrose who came out this past Wednesday, when the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, my colleague from Calgary-Elbow, and I went out to talk to the individuals. In the crowd was, again, Mr. Joe Anglin of the Lavesta group, who has had his rights tromped, who has been spied upon but refuses to give up. As I noted in my member's statement, Joe Anglin states: democracy isn't something you have; it's something you do. With Bill 46 something is being done to the democratic process that limits people's ability to attend hearings and to appeal the process.

We've already seen, before this Bill 46 came in, what happened to individuals in the Longview area who are concerned about the fracking that would take place along the eastern range, that area whose underground springs and aquifers provide the water for the town of Nanton and all the farms and ranches in the surrounding areas. Twice I've attended meetings at the MD headquarters at Chain Lakes, where members from the Pekisko Group, members from the town of Nanton, and surrounding landowners have expressed great concern about the possible damage from fracking that could occur hundreds of miles away from the source. However, because the exploration was not taking place on their specific land, they didn't have the right to appeal that decision.

Bill 46 makes it impossible for anyone upon whose land a drilling or a tower is put to have a fair hearing. It makes it impossible for literally millions of Albertans to have a voice. For example – and I'll not go into detail – the city of Calgary: over a million residents but they can't have a voice as a committee member on the proposed new utilities group. They were denied the opportunity to participate in the hearings on the transmission lines that were going to go from Lake Wabamun down to Calgary. One million people who cannot be a part of that group. They may get a partial representation through the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, but they have no direct input. One million people whose concerns are not being addressed.

Talk about appointments versus elected representation. That's what this splitting of the board is all about: government appointees representing government interests at the expense of individual landowners. Currently the EUB is funded 60 per cent by the industry, 40 per cent by the government. They're appointed by the government. Where in that formula are people represented?

Now, take Bill 46. Another clause in Bill 46 suggests that rather than having your own representation, the government will appoint an advocate to represent you, providing you qualify for that representation. They basically get you coming and going. First off, the fox in the henhouse is going to be representing the hens if those hens qualify because they can demonstrate that they will be materially affected. Well, as I stated earlier, whether it's nuclear, whether it's coal-bed methane, whether it's sour gas, people have a right to express their concerns at a hearing. It isn't just the person upon whose land the interference is caused. Every Albertan who has a concern, whether they're a member of an environmental group such as the Bragg Creek coalition, the Pekisko Group, whether they're a member of the Sierra Club, whether they are a member of the ND Party or the Green Party or the Alberta Alliance – if they have concerns, especially as elected representatives, they should be able to appear at a hearing.

At the hearing at Rimbey I understand that a member was denied access to the process. These concerns of lack of democratic representation, as I've mentioned before, cause a stench to be felt, to be smelt across the province.

Last week members opposite objected to my quoting of Sir Walter Scott's reference . . .

Some Hon. Members: Careful. Be careful.

Mr. Chase: Careful about quoting? I will be careful because I added "he." Yes.

Sir Walter Scott indicated that, oh, what a wicked web we weave when first we practise to deceive. Bill 46 is about deception. It's about suppression. It's about manipulation. I also brought forward the quote from 1984, George Orwell: “Who controls the past controls the future.” Bill 46 controls the past. In fact, it goes all the way back in the past to 2003 to cover up the government’s mishandling between 2003 and 2007.

In terms of stench another literary example. This example comes from a play about government corruption, where a brother killed his own brother and assumed the throne. He then married his brother’s wife, and in the process of the time of the play people die. At the end of the play it is noted that there’s something rotten in the state of Denmark.

The Speaker: Unfortunately, hon. members, this portion has now left us, but we do have opportunity under Standing Order 29(2)(a) if an hon. member would have a question and for an answer. The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have numerous questions to the hon. member. He’s made reference to the municipality of Wood Buffalo – it’s not the municipality; it’s actually the regional municipality – and made comments relative to our mayor but really, really, I think, missed the entire mark of what was said at the EUB. I might add, because I had the pleasure of being an intervenor at that EUB, and specifically it was dealing with the issue of the Suncor Horizon project, this government has always taken the approach that we can grow the pie, and we can grow the pie at the same time . . .

Mr. Martin: How do you grow a pie?

Mr. Boutilier: You can grow the economic pie that keeps people in jobs. I want to remind the member that it’s called oil sands sweet blend, not tar sands. It seems to be another Jack Layton comment that comes out. Actually, that’s more from the other comments.

My question is simply this. At the time when we were there, we talked about a government dealing with high-growth strategies. The mayor was there, and the mayor was very supportive of the approach our government was taking. When they said the Radke report that came out in dealing with high growth, which has offered an oil sands secretariat, which is headed up by the President of Treasury Board – I have a letter that I will table in this House where the mayor thanks the government for its vision and its leadership. So to imply that the mayor was intimating as if she didn’t like our approach is simply not true.

I’m asking the member to come up and actually respond and withdraw the comment because the bottom line is that our oil sands secretariat – the Premier came to the discovery centre, announced over $500 million, announced infrastructure programs of over $200 million for housing. He announced $105 million for a new water treatment plant. No other city has got that support, but a hundred per cent of the support is from the province. Then they proceed at the oil sands secretariat to offer $1,040 for a living-out allowance for teachers, for support staff, for nurses. If you support the project, the reality of it is that we are taking quick action.

I ask the member: will you withdraw your comments? They are not reflective of the current reality.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Simple Simon met a pie man stretching his pie. Now we also have a stretch coming from across the way. When the member opposite appeared at the Alberta EUB hearing, the member wasn’t sure what hat he was wearing. Was he wearing the MLA hat for the . . .

Mr. Boutilier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceed, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. He wasn’t sure whether he was wearing his hat as the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo or whether he was wearing his environmental hat. When members of the media asked him which hat he was wearing, I believe his answer was: I’m capable of wearing both hats at the same time. Well, this double-speak double-hat double-talk that’s associated with Bill 46 is unfortunately prevalent in this House today.

Mayor Melissa Blake appealed to this government in 2005 along with a delegation of 30 individuals representing First Nations, Métis, health boards, education. She asked this esteemed group, with a very strong PowerPoint presentation, for $1.2 billion worth of support in the way of infrastructure funding because she was aware that the town was not keeping up with the pace of approvals in the oil sands.

Rev. Abbott: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chase: Therefore, she appealed to the government. What they got was an interest-free loan as opposed to an absolute grant that approached anywhere near $1.2 billion. In 2006 Mayor Melissa Blake came back, and she indicated that because she hadn’t received the $1.2 billion, due to cost of inflation, the fact of not tackling a series of infrastructural concerns in Wood Buffalo, the price tag had risen to $2 billion.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the time provision of five minutes under the Standing Order has now left us as well. However, we do seem to have two points of order. First of all, the hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thanks. Mr. Speaker, I ask the member to withdraw his comments. Simply, I’m very aware of what hat I wear. What he was suggesting was basically intimating that I didn’t know. That was not true. He made quotes that were inaccurate and incorrect. In actual fact, he should withdraw it because, simply, what he said is not true.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader on this point of order? Okay. Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: I think the member was responding to an incident that was quite well documented in the media in which there were a number of different titles that were offered and accepted by the member. Rather than saying that this is inaccurate, I think it’s widely available that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was trying to insist that he was there as an MLA and, in fact, was at that time the sitting Minister of Environment, and that caused the series of questions from the media. So the Member for Calgary-Varsity was entirely accurate.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, on this particular point. The hon. member couldn’t be more inaccurate in terms of what he has said.

In fact, I also will suggest that his quote was wrong, inaccurate. It is widely published. I will table it here so the member can consider it. Even more than that, his comments relative to what was said by this member at an EUB hearing are inaccurate, untrue, and he should withdraw his comments.

The Speaker: Well, hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, you jumped up before I had a chance to recognize you. In politeness and courtesy from the chair I let you continue, but it really was a no-no.

The hon. member is both MLA and minister. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity alluded to that. We're going to move on unless we have another point of order.

Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, you have a point of order?

Rev. Abbott: Yes, I do.

The Speaker: Well, then, we'll hear your point of order, sir.

Point of Order

Question and Comment Period

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. It's actually our Standing Order 29(2)(a), which talks about: "a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions." There were a number of MLAs that were indicating that they would like to ask questions of the member. The tradition in this House is to allow 30 seconds for a question and 30 seconds for an answer when we're on the five-minute question-and-answer period. I would hope that we could hold to that. I know that the Member for Calgary-Varsity went on and on and on with his answer. I believe it was a diversion tactic so that other members could not get up and challenge him on the inaccuracies of his speech because his speech was completely inaccurate and completely out to lunch. It was totally off the topic of the bill, and members couldn't get up and say that. [interjections]

The Speaker: No. It's okay. I think I'm going to rule on this. Okay?

Number one, there is no tradition of 30 seconds. Number two, this is question and comment period, and the chair was actually really moving in the chair for quite a period of time because the hon. gentleman that the chair recognized first to raise a question actually made a comment for three minutes of the five. The opportunity then afforded to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was less than two minutes of the five minutes. So who does the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar want me to draft and quarter? If it's a point of order against the hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations . . . [interjections] Okay. We've tested the five-minute thing today. We'll now move on.

The Speaker: I did have a speakers list some time ago. These are the following six speakers: the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, then Drumheller-Stettler, then Cardston-Taber-Warner, then Calgary-Elbow, then Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The names will be identified as the next speaker comes up. If the member, unfortunately, is away at their office for a few minutes, we'll just keep going and substituting an alternate member back and forth.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have an opportunity to join the debate on Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. I want to commend the hon. Minister of Energy for bringing this piece of legislation forward. I believe it is important to emphasize that Bill 46 will further our government's commitment to ensuring that Alberta's energy resource and utility concerns are dealt with in an efficient and expedient manner while protecting the rights of landowners and consumers. This legislation was designed to benefit all Albertans in this time of tremendous growth, which is one of the key reasons for introducing it in the spring sitting of this Legislature. The Alberta government realized the complexity of Bill 46 and wanted to allow Albertans and stakeholders the opportunity to thoroughly assess all the sections within this legislation.

I am pleased to acknowledge that while the Legislature was adjourned throughout the summer months, the Department of Energy conducted successful consultations with stakeholders regarding Bill 46. Understanding all aspects of the legislation was essential, and our government established a stakeholder advisory committee that has and will continue to meet with representative groups to develop a comprehensive implementation strategy. These discussions engage the public on the provisions of Bill 46 and provide opportunities for our government and Albertans to critically analyze what is being proposed.

As an MLA and as an Albertan it was a privilege for me to be a participant in a public discussion on Bill 46 in Lacombe on November 7. At this meeting in Lacombe some important issues were brought up that need to be clarified. It was indicated to me that the beneficial intention of a few sections of this legislation can be improved through amendments. Due to the importance of this legislation, I will be supporting appropriate amendments that will provide valuable clarification to these sections of Bill 46. I am confident that our government through the diligent efforts of the Department of Energy will continue to give critical attention to many issues regarding Bill 46 that are of concern to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 46 is a pragmatic approach to the huge amount of applications that the EUB currently oversees, as has been mentioned. This past year the board received over 60,000 applications compared to the almost 19,000 it processed in 1995-96, a mere decade ago. Our government has acknowledged that as the pace of our energy development continues to excel, Albertans will need a better mechanism for handling their concerns. To address these increasing workloads, Bill 46 will implement two separate boards with clear and distinct mandates that will improve the effectiveness of the board's proceedings. The mandate of the Energy Resources Conservation Board, the ERCB, will solely focus on the responsible development of Alberta's resources, including oil, natural gas, oil sands, coal-bed methane, and other mineral resources. Bill 46 will also establish the Alberta utilities commission, which will supervise the distribution and sale of electricity and natural gas to Alberta consumers.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of both of these boards is to ensure that our government is taking the appropriate measures to allow Alberta's regulatory system to address more issues, not less. I am pleased to reassure all Albertans that Bill 46 was drafted with their concerns at the forefront of our agenda. Our government sought ways to improve the ability of Albertans to voice their concerns. The Alberta government through the AUC will continue to ensure that intervenor funding is maintained for directly affected landowners. It is important to emphasize that small consumers will continue to receive representation through the UCA, or the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

The boards will still preside over landowner and consumer concerns with the thoroughness and diligence that is expected for all legal matters. Openness and transparency are an essential aspect of this legislation. Each board will continue to ensure that full public notification is given when any application is made. To strengthen public participation, a public hearing will be held – and I'll repeat it: will be held – even if only one person will be directly or adversely affected by any application.

In the circumstance that no person requests a hearing and if no one is adversely affected, a hearing will not be held. But, again, I repeat: if only one affected person asks for a hearing, that hearing will be held. The legislation is designed to ensure that the public has the means and ability to exercise all their contentions and their concerns. As with any matter that has serious legal implications, there needs to be an avenue for appeal. Bill 46 will retain the present course for appeal that allows questions related to law or jurisdiction on regulatory decisions to be appealed to the Court of Appeal. In this area there is no change from present legislation. If new evidence and information are presented that would strengthen a past decision, the two boards will uphold the ability to vary a decision.

Mr. Speaker, our government has demonstrated leadership in establishing an appropriate regulatory regime for Alberta's energy resources and utilities. Bill 46 is an opportunity for this government to enable two boards to deal with energy applications in a proficient way that upholds the rights of all Albertans. We comprehend the implications that these decisions have for landowners and consumers of this province. That is why our government has taken every action within our capacity to ensure that Bill 46 does not favour the interests of any particular group or stakeholder. It will implement independent and nonpartisan boards that will function in the best interests of all Albertans, including landowners and consumers. I look forward to further discussion and the introduction of amendments at the appropriate time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have Standing Order 29(2)(a) available. Because of the interest by a number of members in the last few minutes, when we exercised this, we'll try and abide with 45 seconds, 45 seconds, which is the same approach we've taken, and that would allow within a maximum of five minutes about six responses.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. The clock starts now.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the member who just spoke, what is happening here is that the government is concentrating on this phrase: affected landowner. Does the member not understand how aggrieved the other parties feel that it's only the directly affected person that can trigger most of what's now included in this bill? If you have a house across the road from the landowner who is legitimately recognized under this act, you have no say in this. You cannot call a public hearing. You can't trigger any of the other mechanisms that are available in this bill, and that's why people are feeling so aggrieved. They can be in the shadow of a development. They can be literally across the street from it. They can be at an invisible line . . .

The Speaker: Could we move on now?

Hon. member, do you want to respond?

Mr. Prins: I believe all interested Albertans can write in, in writing.

They may not have intervenor status, but they can write to these things. All their considerations will be taken into account.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question at this time to the hon. member is this: if the effective representation of Albertans under this proposed bill becomes law and we have only intervenor status being provided by the Utilities Consumer Advocate, how is this system going to advance the interests of Alberta consumers of electricity?

The Speaker: The hon. member, if you wish to respond.

Mr. Prins: No. Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the previous speaker from the other side. Considering the industrial development that we've seen here in the province over these past 10 years and then into the ensuing 10 years, say, with the Industrial Heartland, how is this Bill 46 going to accommodate for the necessity to do cumulative impact assessments, which precludes your idea that you are in fact are going to have only people directly affected? This line that you're trying to draw here completely ignores the fact that it's cumulative impact assessments that we require.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you want to respond?

Mr. Prins: Well, I believe that the Department of Environment is dealing with that in another way.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you have another question?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I do, for the hon. member. In section 9(4) of Bill 46 it states: "the commission is not required . . . to afford an opportunity to a person . . . to be represented by counsel." Can the hon. member please explain that line for us for the record?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Prins: I believe that members that are not directly affected can represent themselves, but they will not have paid intervenors.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm again looking at another problematic area. Section 9(3) says that the commission does not have to hold hearings if the proposal applicant has met the rules affecting landowners. I mean, how is that going to make it a more open process when, in fact, you can make a ruling that excludes people from the beginning by using a set of circumstances? It doesn't seem to make sense to me.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Others? Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. Again to the hon. member regarding section 9(4) of Bill 46, which states: “the commission is not required . . . to afford an opportunity to a person . . . to be represented by counsel.” Does the hon. member consider that to be unconstitutional?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

3:00

Mr. Prins: No comment.

The Speaker: Others? Okay.

Mr. MacDonald: I have another question.

The Speaker: We still have a few seconds left, Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. This is very interesting.

Now, the city of Calgary was denied standing in the AltaLink application to build an export line because the board ruled that the city was not directly or adversely affected. To the hon. member: will Bill 46 correct that deficiency?

Mr. Prins: No comment.

The Speaker: Others? No more? Okay. Then we’ll move forward.

The following is the speakers’ list: Edmonton-Calder, followed by Drumheller-Stettler, then Cardston-Taber-Warner, Calgary-Elbow, Bonnyville-Cold Lake, Edmonton-Mill Woods, and Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m speaking with great interest, and we’re certainly going to explore this Bill 46 in great detail. At the most basic level Bill 46, in the minds of our caucus, runs contrary to the mandate of open and accountable governance set by the standards of this Legislature but also by the Premier since he’s taken office. This seems to be crafted as a very broad bill and a very blunt sort of tool that is designed to shut down dissent and, in fact, will contribute to the EUB losing its credibility more so than it even had during this past summer with the spy scandal in central Alberta. It is, in our view, a very undemocratic bill, and we believe that it will stifle legitimate concerns of citizens over decisions being made, effectively, by unelected bodies such as the proposed commission in one section of this Bill 46.

While different people have been commenting and focusing on different words or clauses here, we would like to make some global statements in second reading, first of all that we believe that Bill 46 limits participation when it is necessary to have participation. Believe me, we saw from the circumstances in Red Deer and Rimbey this past spring and summer that if you don’t follow an open procedure, you in fact will slow down the process and end up with unintended results. We also believe globally that Bill 46 narrows who can participate in hearings. It also seems to limit how individuals and groups might be able to participate, and finally we believe that it runs contrary to the commission’s larger mandate, which is to serve the public interest. The sum of all of these effects, I believe, Mr. Speaker, is to make Bill 46 very restrictive and an undemocratic piece of legislation that we would hope would not see the light of day.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Specifically, in regard to limiting participation section 9(2) states the participatory rights that can be granted when individuals have been affected directly and adversely by the proposal on the table. This is far too narrow, in our minds, when considering that utilities- and energy-related issues, in fact, affect a much broader swath of people than what could be deemed immediately affected. Energy-related issues affect all Albertans, and as I mentioned previously, the cumulative impact of building so many new industrial projects around the province has its own effect, this added-together effect, which I believe this legislation would seek to exclude.

I mentioned this previously, but section 9(3) states that, you know, the hearings may not be held if a person is not affected in a material way. This notion of being affected in a material way is at best legally vague, Mr. Speaker, and does not exist in any existing legislation in regard to the EUB function. So I would call that into serious question and into doubt as well.

Section 9(3)(c) states that the commission does not even have to hold hearings at all if the proposal applicant has met rules affecting landowners. This, Mr. Speaker, I think has at least three specific problems. First of all, such provisions do not exist in any current legislation, so it seems rather arbitrary and heavy handed. Second of all, the impact cannot be known, given that the rules affecting landowners haven’t even been outlined yet. How could you make such a presumption without outlining the parameters under which you would make that claim? Third of all, we believe that it can be used as an opt-out. This is an opt-out clause. Even if people are directly and adversely affected, we believe that this is very poorly constructed language that could seek to exclude open participation.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, Bill 46 imposes limitations on who could participate in hearings, and we believe that by linking the directly and adversely affected test to the hearings, the bill somehow skews the participatory rights to those within a fairly narrow group of people. It makes the stakeholders who have broader concerns suddenly excluded. Once again, there’s a whole universe of reasons why we should not exclude people from hearings affecting energy and other issues in this province. Coming to the table with this sort of legislation now just seems at best counterproductive.

Talking about intervenor costs. Again, this is a huge issue that we just saw being played out in the summer in Red Deer and in Rimbey. This new legislation that’s brought forward here now is talking about covering local intervenor costs. This is a crucial component, we believe, in ensuring participatory rights and democracy. The hearings are difficult, and you need legal and issue-specific expertise, we believe, and this is absolutely crucial for intervenors. Yet section 21 and section 22 allow for the payment of intervenor costs but narrowly define the intervenors as being only people directly and adversely affected. This is particularly restrictive, Mr. Speaker, since groups may have a legitimate interest in hearings in a broader sense and require that funding to make their claims known.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I certainly have a whole universe of interesting things to say about this, but I believe that at this juncture I would like to pass forward a notice of an amendment that I’m doing on behalf of Mr. Mason, to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, be amended by striking out all the words after “that” and substituting the following: “Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.”

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have copies of the amendment?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I’m passing it now.

The Deputy Speaker: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A1. We will allow for a moment to have them circulated.

I believe you may proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, if you want to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you. Bill 46, Mr. Speaker, comes in the aftermath of one of the most dark times of the Conservative government and of the EUB, which was the Rimbey spy scandal. This spy scandal showed the willingness of an unelected body appointed by the Conservative government to treat the citizens of Alberta, quite frankly, like criminals for wanting to express their concerns over decisions that would have an impact on their lives in a very direct way. The problem was with the actions of the EUB rather than the actions of ordinary Albertans.

Given the catastrophic failure of the EUB and the firestorm of this controversy that ensued, it is natural to bring in changes to this system. However, any changes that are to be proposed should be proposed with full public discourse and insight into the processes that will be brought forward. This government, in introducing this bill in the manner that it has, has shown that it has not learned from the past mistakes.

Openness and accountability lie at the crux of this current debate. The government fails these basic values in a twofold manner. First, it introduces a bill that restricts the openness and accountability of the system and the people's ability to contribute to it. Second of all, it introduces a bill in a manner that avoids any kind of public input into the content of the bill. The government treats the people of Alberta as a problem that should be avoided for the next time, and then tries to cut them out of the process. If the government wishes to be truly open and accountable, then it will send this bill to committee, where all the parties can come together and lay out a proper framework for the commission in a co-operative manner. It can be done with the input of the stakeholders and concerned Albertans, who have so far been betrayed by this system and by the government.

There is no decision, in our minds, that trumps the need for participatory and co-operative politics and decision-making in correcting the mistakes of the past and in laying out a path that's more amenable to the future for everyone. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that we send this bill to committee, live up to the mandate of being an accountable government, and use the democratic processes that we've started here in the Legislature and outside to work through this problem of the EUB in a reasonable manner and in an open and accountable manner.

The mechanism by which Bill 46 was brought forward, I believe, is indicative of the problem that this government has with discussing important issues in a broad-based manner. Bill 46 is not a democratic piece of legislation, nor were people consulted to make the process by which they're presenting at an EUB hearing more amenable and more meaningful and somehow a democratic process that makes sense to them. Using Bill 46, I would say, as a microcosm of a larger problem, bringing this bill and the problem of a broken EUB back to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment, we believe, would be in the best interests of all people in this province at this time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is an interesting amendment, A1, at this time on Bill 46. Certainly, I support the amendment, but at the same time I'm very disappointed that it's going to restrict and limit debate at second reading on this bill. Many of the landowners in central Alberta who have been directly affected by the distasteful behaviour of a government agency would appreciate a full public debate at second reading. For the hon. member who is proposing this amendment to limit and restrict debate at this time in second reading, I must say on behalf of the landowners that I'm very, very disappointed. However, in light of the major changes that this legislation will provide, one would have to support it and explain to those landowners that the third party is very anxious to see changes to this bill, but their excitement may significantly reduce and limit debate on this bill.

Certainly, we all know that Bill 46 is going to restrict and limit public participation and further public hearings on energy matters, just as this amendment is going to restrict and limit public debate at second reading on this legislation. Hopefully all hon. members will participate in the debate on this amendment, and hopefully all hon. members will support this amendment at this time.

Now, since we spoke at second reading last week on this legislation, there have been more groups come forward, Mr. Speaker, with articulate reasons why this bill should not become law. Certainly this amendment would give those individuals a chance to have a consultation with this government. We only have to look at the letter that was written last week and circulated to members of this Assembly. It was tabled earlier this week in the Assembly as well. In this letter the mayor of Calgary, which is the home of one-third of all electricity consumers in Alberta, would like to see as a result of the growing public opposition to Bill 46 that the government of Alberta suspend Bill 46 pending full public consultation. With this in mind I can certainly support the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

We look at the city of Edmonton. They, too, have concerns regarding Bill 46. We look at the Alberta Beef Producers. They have significant concerns and issues with Bill 46. Some of the industrial power consumers have concerns and issues around this. Consumer groups have issues around this. The Green Party has issues around this bill.

Now, the hon. Minister of Service Alberta is very anxious, Mr. Speaker, to participate in debate, but what he is stating at this time is not audible. I'm looking forward to his active participation in the debate this afternoon. Maybe the hon. minister is so worried about the Alberta Alliance in his constituency that that's one of the reasons why he wanted to restrict and limit their ability to participate in public discussions here yesterday afternoon. Not only is this bill restricting and limiting democratic rights, but that hon. member is doing that as well. There are many sections of this bill that are offensive to the various groups that have articulated their opposition. Whether the hon. member across the way wants to hear it or not, that's too bad.

There is a reason, Mr. Speaker, why we all should support this amendment. There are many reasons, but this bill will allow the public utilities commission to approve new transmission lines without considering present and future public convenience and need. This will give the Alberta utilities commission the power to make orders and to issue decisions without giving public notice or holding public hearings. This proposed law, if we allow it to proceed, will give the Alberta utilities commission the power to prevent landowners and consumers from making verbal representations in some cases to the commission. Again, we're going to limit the time period in which Albertans can appeal an order by this Alberta utilities commission, and that time period is 30 days. I know that 30-day period is in current legislation, but certainly that has to be changed.

Now, on Thursday we had a discussion on the role of regulations. As I understand it, the regulations for this legislation are already circulating, certainly not in the opposition benches but in the government benches. This is another reason why we should be supporting the hon. member's amendment because those regulations have to be public. They could be part of the public consultation process, and the authors of those regulations could explain why they are necessary and why it is necessary in this bill.

Maybe the hon. Minister of Service Alberta could make a presentation to the public hearings and explain why in his view it is democratic for a regulation, in this case part 10, to override the statute. Maybe the hon. minister can explain that. Maybe we could have a public hearing in Vermilion or Lloydminster. Individuals there who've been paying very high power bills as a result of his policy on deregulation could try to explain to him – and hopefully he'd listen to them, Mr. Speaker, more than he's listening to me – just how directly they've been affected by electricity deregulation, negatively affected by electricity deregulation. Those are some of the points as to why we should support this amendment.

When you consider exactly what this government is up to: the Minister of Energy admitted yesterday that they've hired a $500-an-hour consultant to implement this bill, both commissions on this. This is a consultant who in the past has worked for the Alberta Electric System Operator, has had a very distinguished career with TransAlta, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps this consultant could come arm in arm with the Department of Energy's minister, the current minister. I don't know who the minister would be if we were to have public hearings because I'm certain there are going to be changes in that department. Maybe they could come together to this hearing that is being proposed as a result of this amendment. They could explain the details of this bill, and we could ask, for instance, some of the questions that could be and should be asked at this series of hearings. Now, I'm just going to find those questions. Who suggested that intervenor costs for outside legal experts should not be paid for? Who wants that?

Mr. Snelgrove: Me.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Service Alberta wants that. This is from a government minister who at the same time is willing to give an expert five hundred bucks an hour to meet behind closed doors and advise the government.

Now, the nine-member commission that's to be appointed by cabinet will determine who gets paid to intervene in hearings and who does not. Again, we're restricting and limiting landowners' ability to hire outside legal advisers. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie certainly will have a lot to say about how the city of Calgary is going to be directly and adversely affected in more than a material way by this draconian legislation, but I'm going to leave that for the hon. member.

The commission, this government-appointed commission, can make any order or decision it is authorized to make without giving notice and without holding a hearing. This is in the bill. You cannot deny that, yet you're trying to deny that. Maybe if we had a series of public hearings, you could try to justify it and see if your constituents will buy into it. See if they will after how you have treated the public who wanted to stand up and speak out in Rimbey against the 500 kV line. What was your solution? Let's hire some spies and have a look at them: that was your solution, and you got caught. You got caught hiring spies.

Mr. Agnihotri: They're still laughing.

Mr. MacDonald: I know, hon. member, that they're still laughing, and they should be ashamed of themselves, yeah.

We had the Premier initially try to defend this measure. I'm sorry; it was a disgusting chapter in the history of this province. This government in its own internal speaking notes on Bill 46 admitted that the reason why they want this legislation is because of what happened in Rimbey. That was admitted in your own – yes, and I'll provide the hon. House leader with a copy of that if he hasn't already seen it because he's going to have a lot of work to do in providing a defence to those hon. members of this Assembly who sent letters out to their constituents, who did not exactly abide by what was in that Q and A and in those speaking notes. The letters that have been sent to the constituents by the hon. members are different than what the Q and A has suggested.

Mr. Speaker, the commission orders without notice allow 10 days for individuals to become aware of the order to challenge the decision. Again, that has to be changed. If we follow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder's suggestion with this amendment A1, then perhaps people could make some suggestions. How much longer than 10 days should that be?

The commission is going to determine who a local intervenor is, and that is very interesting. Maybe people in Rimbey would have a good idea and make some good suggestions as to who a local intervenor should be.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill through this government-appointed commission controls landowners and farmers and consumers who want to intervene on a hydro development, a power plant, a transmission line, or even a gas transmission line. But there's no control over the people who are going to develop the power plant or the people who are interested in developing the transmission line. It's a one-way street. It's complete control over the consumers, who are footing the bill, for instance, for an expanded or an upgraded transmission line, but there is no control over the promoters. [interjection] The hon. Minister of Service Alberta is talking about a confession. Well, perhaps he could stand up and tell us why this government gave AltaLink the right to build a 500 kV line without any sort of open competition. Perhaps he could tell us that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments, the hon. leader of the third-party opposition.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to tell the House what the position of his caucus and party is on the need for the 500 kV line.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. That's a very interesting question. If the hon. member would check our documents, he would certainly see that we have suggested, and it's not the first time we've suggested to this government, that if Calgary, which certainly is in need of more electricity – I would say to the hon. member that we have a surplus of electricity around Lake Wabamun at our coal-fired baseload generation depot there. There's a surplus of electricity there. Calgary is short of electricity because of the failures of deregulation. We suggested three and four years ago, hon. member, that we build some baseload generation capacity around Calgary. Therefore, there wouldn't be the need for the 500 kV line or the expanded 500 kV line from Wabamun Lake down to Langdon.

I would also at this time, Mr. Speaker, like to mention that I was surprised to hear the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka tell the over 350 people that were gathered at the memorial hall there that we are going to have major brownouts; there's not enough electricity to go around. So that even encourages us to build more baseload generation capacity and . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we've been allowing 45 seconds for new questions each time to get more in.

The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. My question is in the same vein as the New Democratic leader's. What is the position of the Liberal Party relative to this idea of electricity? You can't suck and blow in terms of the idea that, well, we want Calgarians to have electricity, but at the same time we're not going to infringe. I have to ask you this question. What is your position? I have to ask you what your position is of the party you represent because, you know, I heard the theory: the lights are on, but nobody is home. Well, I've also heard the theory: maybe the lights aren't on under a Liberal government, and I know no one's home.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that's quite interesting, Mr. Speaker. When he spoke, I couldn't see if his feet were moving or not to see if he was doing the jitterbug.

In regard to his question I'll say it again – and I'll say it slowly so he can maybe understand – there is a surplus of electricity generation capacity around Lake Wabamun. There is a surplus, and there is a bottleneck there that has been brought on by your own government's dismal failures as a result of electricity deregulation. It's your failure, not ours, as a result of that bottleneck instead of building the baseload generation capacity at Lake Wabamun. I would remind the hon. member that the 800 megawatts of power that are proposed for Keepphills cannot be built because there's no way of wheeling that power through to Calgary. So why don't we take . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see once again that the Liberals are dodging very clear questions. I can still remember the very first time that the former member for Edmonton-Ellerslie received her very first question ever in the House under Standing Order 29(2)(a) – I think it was myself who asked the question – and she stood up and dodged it. The very thing that they accuse us of doing all the time they're doing right now.

Mr. Speaker, a question has been very clearly put forward to this Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Does he believe that we need a 500 kV line or not, and what is his party's plan to deal with this surplus of power and to make sure that the lights do stay on down in Calgary? It's a clear question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have provided a clear answer to two hon. members of that gentleman's caucus. That's perhaps the reason why he didn't receive his own nomination in Drayton Valley-Calmar, because he doesn't listen to them just like he's not listening to me.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Rev. Abbott: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). Mr. Speaker, I want those comments withdrawn immediately. This has absolutely nothing to do with the topic at hand. That was a direct insult to myself, and I will not stand for that in this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't think there's a point of order here at all.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I have Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Mr. Speaker, sorry. This was not on the point of order. Did you want to proceed with the point of order? On the point of order. Okay.

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

On the point of order, Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be quite brief here. There's no point of order here. I was clearly pointing out to this hon. member that he didn't listen to the response that I provided to two previous members of his caucus, and he persisted in the same line of questioning. I was just demonstrating that, clearly, he doesn't have the ability to listen to my answer. There's no point of order here.

The Deputy Speaker: On the point of order, the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: You know, I certainly think that both sides do have a bit of a point here. I think the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar certainly is correct in that he didn't get an answer, nor did the rest of us, from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. On the other hand, I don't think that it satisfies the conditions for creating disorder in the House to talk about some of these. So I don't think that there is a point of order, Mr. Speaker, although, you know, I certainly see where the hon. member from Drayton Valley is coming from.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think there's something that needs to be said in this House and, first of all, that is that I do listen to my constituents. I do represent them very, very . . . [interjection] I beg your pardon? I could check Hansard to show that you said that. I do listen to my constituents, and I do represent them very well, thank you very much. If you want to start talking about nominations, we can have a debate on that, but I don't believe that's what we're talking about today.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I believe that this member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has sunk to an all-new low in this House. I didn't think you could get any lower than they've been in the past, but they're doing it now.

I do listen to my constituents. I do represent them well in this House. I represent them in caucus, and I represent them in the constituency. I listen to them in meetings. I sit down with them. I have had a number of calls and concerns about Bill 46 that I have taken very careful time to listen to and to represent to the minister. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, I'm on the speakers list today so that I can also make some comments on Bill 46 on behalf of the good people of Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Once again, I am asking that this member withdraw those comments. If you have to check Hansard to see what he said, then go right ahead.

The Deputy Speaker: I think I'm ready to make a ruling on this. I have noted that there has been bantering going on back and forth on this debate from all sides of the House that is probably bordering close to offending the rules of Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). So if we're going to call one, we're going to have to call them all. I would caution the House to be a little more respectful of one another during the course of this debate, and we'll proceed from here. There's no point of order at this point.

Cardston-Taber-Warner is the next speaker.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, this is indicative of the emotion that is throughout rural Alberta and even the metropolis of Calgary over Bill 46. And there are a lot more problems that are going to continue on if we don't have a more democratic process and expose the regulations and all of the information regarding Bill 46 because there hasn't been enough. So I want to stand up and speak in favour of the amendment, that this really does need to go to committee. It would be to the benefit of all Albertans.

I want to share a few reasons why it is important that we refer this to the committee. The first and most important thing, I believe, in a free and democratic society is education. The problem is that when there's a lack of knowledge, that is when tyranny can come in and oppression and when people are taken advantage of because of that lack of knowledge. Right now when landowners are faced with a so-called accredited land agent that shows up, they have a bunch of information that is pretty much overwhelming for the landowners, and they're buffaloed by them saying: "Everything is fine. There's nothing you need to worry about. Just sign on the dotted line." And if you don't sign on the dotted line, all you're going to do is delay this by 60 days because we're going to take it to the board, and we're going to get there. So the problem is that the landowners are approached the first time, and they're not informed with enough information. They don't really have the ability to go out and to speak with what the government has put these . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we are debating amendment A1, which is that the bill not now be read a second time and the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment. We're not debating the bill; we're debating the amendment to the bill, so if you could restrict your comments to that, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. I'll try and clarify. What I'm debating is why it needs to go to committee, and the reason is because the education process for Albertans needs to be there. Another reason why it needs to go to committee is because so far the debate that has gone on has been very limited, and it's going to be limited if we have to pass this by December 6 in what appears to be the rush of this government saying that we have to have this bill passed.

The information and the education is not there. What I'm trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a very tenuous situation. It's extremely important that the public is more educated on Bill 46. Even the experts that have read this in giving their opinions say: "Well, we need to see the regulations. We need to have more information."

The other reason why it needs to go to committee, Mr. Speaker, is because this is very much about public interest. The question, you know, with the 500 kV line: is it necessary? The question: is it necessary to have three, four, five sets of lines going down? That needs to go to committee so that can be openly debated, and the public can come in and say: this needs to happen.

An excellent situation in southern Alberta is that we have an abundance of wind down there. There have been a lot of windmills put up. Windmills are a benefit to society, yet there was a restriction there because there wasn't a line big enough to carry it, so the government put a cap on the wind production. Thankfully, they've raised that cap now, and we can go forward. But in the interest of trying to get that line through there, again, a lot of hard feelings and problems were brought forth. Luckily those landowners were able to come together enough in unity to put a stop to the abuse of it going across their lands when they didn't want it. But not every group every time is going to have that ability to get the people of Alberta to come together to protect the community as a whole, especially with the notification process only within one mile of the pipeline, the power line, or whatever. It's very limited and it's hard. Not every time can the people get the communities surrounding to gather together to fight these things.

It's critical that this goes to committee so that we can understand and study this problem more and make sure that these areas aren't, well, basically just walked over by saying: well, you've had your say, and now you go forward. It goes to a quasi-judicial judge, and basically he has the authority to just say: well, I've listened to you, and now I'm doing it. It's not good enough.

The other problem is for the landowners to be able to reach out and find that there's a very limited amount of lawyers and land agents that actually work on behalf of the owners in the province. It's not in the best interest to move forward on this without a lot more debate on whether or not there's sufficient land agents that are accredited for the property owners. We know the incident in northeast Edmonton where someone tried to represent the landowners, and he was taken to court. I was just amazed at the outcome of that. We need other corrections in the Legislature before we can go forward.

The other thing is because of the failure of the government to plan and to realize that the need for power lines doesn't make it – what would I say? – an emergency on their part. It doesn't make it an emergency on the public's part to say: well, we've got to go ahead with this dictatorship bill.

There are so many reasons, Mr. Speaker, why this needs to go to committee. It's just critical that we understand that this is not in the best interest of the public to immediately say, "Let's pass this and go forward. The regulations will come along later," and we just don't have any worry in that area.

The other concern, I guess, and why it needs to go to committee is the fact that the landowners really are in a conundrum right now on how to protect their property. Really, this is the debate when it comes to a democratic society: do the landowners have, you know, property rights, or is it in the public interest? Unfortunately, if you want to look at the worst cases of abuse of the people and of the land, it's in those countries where the government is in a position of power to say, "Well, in the public interest we are taking this," and are doing – you know, some in here are very nervous about a nuclear plant going in. The only places where we had trouble with nuclear plants is where government can actually say, "We're putting one up, and we're going to have our own rules and regulations," as opposed to . . .

Mr. Mason: An industry looking after itself.

Mr. Hinman: . . . a body that is looking after the best interest of itself, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood says.

The point, Mr. Speaker, is that we need to protect property rights. This bill is an attack on property rights. It's an attack on the ability of people to say no to something that they're worried is not in their best interest. Basically, this bill could be – I hope that it will not be, though – rammed through by December 6. It's the same when people go to the old board or perhaps this new board: it's rammed through, and it's not in their best interest.

We have this balance, Mr. Speaker, and it needs to be debated more in committee. It would benefit all Albertans for us to come up with a much better process to protect the rights of the landowners and the rights of industry to find a balance between development and keeping their land the way they want it and not being told: "Well, it's too bad. We're coming through because this is in the public interest." It isn't in the public interest when government is in a position of power where they can say that. Once again, like I say, we look around the world where government has taken away the property rights and said: we will expropriate and develop as we see fit. Those are the biggest environmental disasters, the poorest people in the world because the government first says, "We're going to take it from the big and the wealthy," and then six months later they come back and say, "Well, we're going to take it from you as well." There is no rule of law once they pass that point.

I once again want to speak in favour of this amendment. I would urge all members of this Legislature to take the thought that we need to have more time, more public input, more debate. This isn't an emergency, needing to pass this Bill 46. It will not be in the best interests of Albertans, so I would urge all members to support this amendment and send it to committee to be further debated openly and publicly for all Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to ask the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner – as it happens both he and myself are on the all-party committee to which I'm making reference to refer this bill. What in your view has been both the tone and the success of the all-party Standing Committee on Resources and Environment thus far? Do you think it would be worthwhile to send Bill 46 there, considering the tone that we've seen so far?

Mr. Hinman: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder for that question. It is an honour to sit on that committee. One of the questions that we asked when we were discussing in that committee is: what are the more important issues that we should be looking at? I can't think of a more important issue than property rights and proper development throughout the province when it comes to energy and the environment. I think that this is an excellent bill to be referred to that committee. We sent many others already this past summer. We've gone through them in other committees, and I think it's been an excellent democratic process. I totally agree – that's why I'm supporting this – that it needs to go to that committee so that Albertans can and will have much better input, and I believe we will have better legislation for development in the future.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: I want to speak on the amendment, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Agnihotri: No. On the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, back to 29(2)(a).

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, once again talking about the success of that all-party committee thus far, how did you find the process functioning between the parties? Did we have success? Do you think that we could apply that to Bill 46 and come to some fruitful conclusion?

Mr. Hinman: Well, I think the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake would even agree with me on this. That committee worked very well. There was good, open discussion. A lot of the politics were taken out, and it became, you know, a nonpartisan discussion. We were looking for the public interest, that all sides brought forward, and there was excellent discussion. I believe our report will benefit Albertans. When it comes to recycling, we will do a better job in the province because of the work of that committee.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've noticed that a very venerable person, a former employee, a former leg. assistant as a matter of fact, has sneaked into the public gallery here while we were heavily debating Bill 46. That is Teresa Lightfoot, again, a former leg. assistant to myself and the Member for Strathcona. I see her up there. I think she's in the Legislature doing some research for a project she's working on. I would ask Teresa to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Second Reading

Alberta Utilities Commission Act

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. On amendment A1 the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're in Bill 46. The Member for Edmonton-Calder is asking that it not be read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment. Timing is often everything in politics. Even if this government thought that this was the best bill that they've ever thought and gone through all the processes, they should recognize by what has happened in the most recent past that there's going to be a great deal of cynicism no matter what because of the spy scandal and the other things that are occurring. For the life of me I can't see why we're in such a hurry to do this.

The policy field committees, it seems to me, were set up precisely – precisely – for these reasons: that you could take a controversial bill, send it to the policy field committee, and they could hear from various groups and come back to the Legislature with a bill that in their best wisdom after many public hearings is a better act.

So there's going to be cynicism. We've had the troubles with the EUB, and all of a sudden we bring through a major bill like that. What do you expect? What do you expect, Mr. Speaker, is going to happen? It's precisely what has happened. If we ram this through in the next little while without proper debate and proper public hearings, that we could do through the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment, I mean, that cynicism is going to be out there even more. It's not just rural Alberta. We certainly know that they're very upset about it. But as mentioned previously, the mayor of Calgary has said that this process is wrong. We know a number of other people that have concerns about it.

Now, the government's response, basically, is: "Look, this is a good bill. Trust me. Just trust me. Just trust us." Isn't that a leap of faith, Mr. Speaker, from what's just happened with this particular organization? You know, I'm not saying that this is a perfect bill – far from it – but even if it was a perfect bill, you would still have this difficulty.

It seems to me that that's precisely the reason, as I say – and I want to reinforce the fact – that we set up policy field committees: to look at bills like this that could be referred to us. I mean, what's the hurry about this? Why is this such an urgent situation that all of a sudden after all the problems we've had with the EUB, we have to get it through this legislative session this fall?

An Hon. Member: By December 6.

Mr. Martin: As somebody said, by December 6.

Why not take the time to do it right? If the government's right in their arguments, they can make those to the policy field committee. They could make them to the various groups that have concerns, and if they can convince them or if the groups can convince them differently, that to me is what democracy is all about, Mr. Speaker. I don't understand why we can't do this. This seems to me to be a perfect way out for the government. You know, you just can't have the situation that occurred with the spy scandal, that was national news all over, and expect people to trust the government on a bill like this without going through the proper procedures. Mr. Speaker, that's precisely what we're doing here. We're not going through the proper procedures.

This is just a policy field committee. We could call it a chamber, if you like, of sober second thought here before we rush into this and create more anxiety, before we create more cynicism out there. If we did this, I think the government would be complimented. All we're trying to do is help the government a bit here. Lord knows they need the help. If they took the advice, I think, if they walked away and said, "Yes, this makes sense; we have policy field committees that work well, and we'd like to take it upon ourselves to do this properly," the government would get some credit for it, and they would get out from under this situation, as I said, Mr. Speaker.

Now, no matter how the government cuts it and says, "Trust me; don't worry," there are groups that have been saying – and I believe that to be the case until the government can convince us differently. You know, it's not just, as I say, rural Albertans. The Consumers' Association of Canada, Alberta branch, says that Bill 46 strips – and we know – intervenor funding. They make the claim that that will cost taxpayers more money. They say that every dollar spent at intervention saves consumers $10 and that in 2005-2006 an estimated $90 million was saved. Now, I think that that should be an important argument for anybody, Mr. Speaker, that we could actually save some taxpayers' money if we do this right.

Who will represent the small consumers? Well, they tell us that an office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate is going to look after all the small consumers. But again, that's cynicism because here would be a group hired by the government, you know, and you take the complaints there. Well, obviously people are going to be cynical. So that's why we need to go back and have a discussion about this at the policy committee.

The Environmental Law Centre. I mean, they're not political, Mr.

Speaker. They say that it's going to be almost impossible for landowners to show that they're affected in a material way. This has been alluded to. These are all major problems.

The other problem that we looked at: can the developments proceed without a hearing? The minister says, well, they could do that before. Well, maybe they shouldn't have been doing it before, Mr. Speaker. Just because they could do it before doesn't necessarily make it right. We should be looking at that.

Can landowners hire lawyers? Well, only if they're directly affected. It's already been talked about. What does that mean, directly affected? Without money for people that have some knowledge and intervenor status, I think we have some serious problems.

If the government believes so strongly that all these arguments that all sorts of groups are putting forward are invalid, then surely they should have the courage to say: "We will take it back to a policy field committee. We will sit down, and we will listen. We will make our case, and you will make your case, and then we'll come back to the Legislature." They might change their mind, Mr. Speaker. That wouldn't be a bad thing, you know. Again, I just stress that I do not understand why we have to push ahead without this.

It seems to me that this particular bill, Bill 46, was handmade for policy field committees. It's what we looked at in trying to make the Legislature more responsible with all-party committees to take a look ahead at controversial bills like this. It seems to me this was tailor-made for this sort of bill. For the life of me I just do not understand why they want to antagonize, you know, thousands of Albertans, rural Albertans, people in the city of Calgary, all over, Mr. Speaker, why they have to do this. It's so unnecessary. They could walk away and say: "We're going to do the right thing, go to a policy field committee. We'll have this debate, and we'll hear from people. Then we'll come back to the Legislature after we've done that." Why do they need to create this anxiety, hostility, cynicism? It's so unnecessary. Unfortunately, when you create that hostility and cynicism, nobody really wins. Nobody really wins.

I would just conclude by urging the government to do the right thing. As I say, even at this point they could say: "Okay. We're not in a big hurry. We have time. Let's go back to the policy field committee, which we helped to organize." They'd get credit right around the province, and it would be taken away as a political issue, and the Legislature would work the way the Legislature should, Mr. Speaker.

I certainly, obviously, will be supporting this amendment. It makes absolute good sense at this time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, does anyone wish to comment or question under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Saying none, back on the amendment. I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find myself torn by this amendment. The idea of sending it to committee is the equivalent of raising Lazarus, and there was only one individual who was able to accomplish that over the last two millennia. When something is as flawed as this piece of legislation is, I'm not sure that members of the committee would recognize how many hours and hours of writing, basically starting from the first capital letter and ending at the last period, would have to be rewritten for this bill to be acceptable, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview pointed out, for rural Albertans or urban Albertans.

It's fairly safe to say that the members of the government won't take my advice, but I'll offer it anyway. The government has the potential of being perceived as getting on with good governance. If their plan to eliminate the unfunded pension liability succeeds – I thoroughly hope it will for the sake of teachers, for the sake of students, for the sake of school boards – if they can see that through, that'll be the first major piece of planning that they've been able to accomplish in almost a decade and a half. All the goodness that would be associated with putting an end to the unfunded liability, which means not only the $2 billion and not just simply contributing the $80 million a year but dealing with the actual $2 billion and then the $4.1 billion on top of that – the government has put forward a plan on getting rid of that unfunded liability.

Now, they haven't necessarily put a timeline to it or how much will be paid out other than the teachers' wages and so on over that time period. But if it can be accomplished, you know, I'll take my hat off – I only wear one hat at a time – to the government and recognize that accomplishment. In the face of that potential achievement, which I really hope goes through successfully – I don't have that same potential bitterness that it's just an election ploy. Having been a teacher for 34 years, I really want this thing to go through.

However, contrast the forward thinking of reducing a pension liability, which by 2060 would be in the area of $45 billion, to this piece of legislation, that not only annoys the 2 million people living in urban centres but attacks directly their own Conservative credibility, that they have fought to establish over the last 36 years, in their power base in the rural areas. I can't understand why the government would go against the very people that have been their staunch supporters over the last number of years. Based on the distribution of rural MLAs to urban MLAs, the rural vote remains the strong point. The rural vote decides who forms the government. Why this government would be so anxious to cut out the people that they have been elected to represent, to give them an appeal process that would be cut down to 30 days providing they are somehow affected in a material way – I don't understand why they would be opposed to the notion of referring this to committee.

Now, I'll give the government another bouquet, two in a row. We have long criticized the government for a lack of accountability and a lack of transparency. We were the only province that didn't have all-party standing committees, and the Premier in his wisdom – well, that's three compliments – noted that standing committees should consist of members of all parties. He recognized the combined wisdom – the combined wisdom of the member of the Alliance Party, the combined wisdom of the members of the New Democratic Party, the combined wisdom of the Liberals, and the wisdom of the Conservatives, who are currently forming the government – to come to consensus through the committee format.

As I said, I'm torn because I know how hard the committee worked and the number of hours they spent coming to the decision that it was very important to recycle milk containers. We know that they recognized the problem that almost two-thirds or more of containers were ending up in dumps, and that wasn't, obviously, very effective. They recognized that not only should milk containers be recycled and that in order to encourage people to do so, they would have to provide a certain reward in terms of a deposit, but the government also – and I think it was partly through this committee – recognized the fact that not only were milk containers not being recycled, but likewise pop bottles, cans, beverage containers, and so on weren't being recycled.

The committee came up with the idea – and I'm attributing it to the committee – of raising the bottle deposits and the cans and so on so as to improve the environmental quality of life. Also, since there are so many homeless individuals whose livelihood, basically, is dependent on the recycling that they do, this gave people an opportunity to actually participate in an ecologically supportive endeavour. However, I know how hard the committee worked on recycling milk cartons and rewarding people for it with a deposit.

When you compare the recycling of the milk containers to the difficulty associated with rewriting Bill 46 – taking out the covert clauses, extending the appeal period beyond that limiting time of 30 days, allowing for elected members on the commission – basically they would be starting from scratch.

Now, with regard to the covert nature of Bill 46 and why it's so difficult to correct, the individual who originally spent so much time in helping the Energy minister draft this contentious bill is no longer around. His disappearance from employment with the government would suggest that he found a more lucrative position. Possibly he reconstituted himself as a consultant and is being hired by another government ministry at $500 an hour. But he's no longer around, and we have a new individual. We have the new sort of Steve Austin of government consultants at $500 an hour, the bionic consultant, and so far he has cost Alberta taxpayers $84,000. If his work is reflected in Bill 46, then we're going to need another consultant at goodness knows what an hour to undo the damage that this individual has contributed to the secrecy of Bill 46.

Now, the committee will be like an archaeological dig. They're going to have to do the equivalent of going to a mushroom factory and sifting through the various layers of detritus and dirt and try and uncover pieces of potentially amendable information. I'm not sure, even given the combined wisdom of this House, that that task is possible. It concerns me that the use of the member's time could be better spent than trying to breathe life into a bill that the signs along the roadway to Lacombe indicated should be killed. So I'm not convinced that the committee and its attempts to revitalize this bill will be successful.

However, I do recognize that there has been good work done; for example, on Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act. Here are four compliments. Please. I hope we're keeping track today. The government recognized that nonprofit organizations in Bill 1 should be exempted. They recognized the flaw of requiring charitable organizations to be registered as lobbyists, so now they're going to be exempted. It does go to show – and, again, this is why the yin and the yang, the pulling I'm feeling – that there's the possibility of taking a bad piece of legislation and, with the help of all parties, turning it into a worthwhile piece of legislation that Albertans will appreciate because it takes into account the concerns that they have expressed through their representatives on the all-party committee, and the whole democratic process is revived.

Today I have taken the opportunity between debates to write approximately 110 times to a class in my constituency who came up to do the tour of the Legislature from St. Vincent de Paul. The expression I've written close to a hundred times is: democratic participation is essential. That is what amendment A1 suggests. It suggests an underlying faith in the democratic process, that despite 72 years of a Conservative-dominated agenda there is still the possibility of new thought, of shining light into those dark recesses by the combined efforts of all the members in attendance.

I don't want to see it as a sentence for those members. I want them to enjoy the love and the connection and the rejuvenation of being with their families over the Christmas period. I realize that in order to fix Bill 46, so much effort will have to be expended and so much time away from their constituents and their loved ones that I'm having trouble balancing the amount of time that would be necessary to fix Bill 46 as opposed to simply, as the signs on the way to Lacombe indicated, killing it.

With Bill 46, if it does go to committee, it does, as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview indicated, give the government an out. It does give them an opportunity, an amazing opportunity – in French you say “incroyable” – an unbelievable opportunity to get this right. While I have doubts that it’s possible to get this right, I would not want to take away from the opportunities that have been provided through all-party policy committee partnership to attempt the impossible. If they can fix Bill 46 in committee, then we’ve got the best system of democracy and participation in all of Canada.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise to speak to this amendment, which would send Bill 46 to a standing policy field committee in order to allow members of the public to come forward and make their comments in an open and democratic forum with respect to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question that this bill has generated a great deal of controversy and is perhaps one of the most debated bills within the public as well as in this Legislature, so it seems to me to make a great deal of sense. I’m going to talk a little bit and lead up to the reasons why I think this referral amendment should be supported.

It’s very clear to us on this side, or at least in our corner, of this Legislature that the Tories are in the pocket of big oil. Mr. Speaker, they took nearly $600,000 from big oil companies in the last two years in political donations. Somewhat farther behind, our colleagues in the Liberal Party took about $200,000 from big oil in the same period. So it should be no surprise that they want to set up a structure that allows big oil and the big power companies, which are also significant supporters of the Conservative Party, to be able to override public opposition. I want to say that it should be no surprise that both the Conservatives and the Liberals are supporting royalties that would place Alberta amongst the lowest in the world. When we are sitting on one of the largest untapped reserves of petroleum left in the world and have the opportunity to set the price, the lion’s share of the additional value, according to the government’s proposal, is going to go back to the oil companies.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker – and I’m getting to the reason why this amendment is necessary – I wish to set the political context for what’s happening right now in this province with respect to public hearings on these matters and why significant changes to this legislation are needed but that those changes need to come about as a result of true democratic consultation with the people of this province, including landowners who are potentially affected. On top of amongst the lowest royalty rates in the world, both the Conservatives and the Liberals support a series of tax cuts for corporations in this province. These are amongst some of the most profitable corporations in the world. Just last year we had EnCana post over a $6 billion profit, yet both the Conservatives and the Liberals want to cut their taxes from a few years ago, a 15 per cent rate, to 8 per cent.

When I was a newly elected MLA, Mr. Speaker, I attended a Chamber of Commerce lunch here in Edmonton, and I heard Steve West lay out this plan to cut the corporate tax rate from 15 per cent to 8 per cent. The government has been proceeding in stages to implement this in this province, and they’ve been supported, of course, by the Liberals in doing so. So we have everyone from Steve West, every provincial Tory finance minister, and the Leader of the Official Opposition all agreeing that we should cut corporate income tax almost in half.

We need to look at the mandate of the EUB. I think this is an important thing, Mr. Speaker, because we want to divide it. The government wants to divide the EUB into two pieces. One will deal with oil and gas and those types of resources; the other one will deal with electricity. That’s fine, but fundamentally the basic policy of the government is going to be: continue to facilitate the extraction of petroleum and its export from this province ahead of all other considerations, ahead of the rights of landowners, ahead of the environment, ahead of the general public interest. The same thing with power. They’re going to want to facilitate the development of a power grid that meets not the needs of Albertans necessarily but which provides for the export of electricity from this province and which allows the burning of coal in this province and all of the associated negative impacts with pollution in order to export that power to the United States.

It brings us to the spying scandal amongst the Rimbey landowners. Those landowners were very, very interested in the 500 kV proposal, which they believed negatively impacted them. They began to organize, and they organized effectively. They got their message out to the extent that the government and the EUB became alarmed, so of course there was the well-known incident of the spying.

It’s interesting that the investigation set up by the Minister of Energy with Justice Perras resulted in a report which was nothing less than a whitewash, Mr. Speaker. It was a whitewash. It didn’t look at anything that went on above the level of the director of security for the EUB, notwithstanding the fact that the NDP opposition produced e-mails that showed that at least three members of the panel, all the members of the panel hearing that case on the board of the EUB, were privy to the information that the spying was going on. And senior officials, colleagues of and superiors to the director of security for the EUB, were also involved, yet there’s no mention of their involvement whatsoever in the Perras report. So the Perras report was a complete whitewash. Nobody has looked at the role of the board, the senior administration of the EUB, or the minister or other members of the government or officials in the Department of Energy with respect to that spying scandal. That’s all been swept under the carpet. We may never know exactly what happened.

Now, Bill 46 attempts to deal with this problem, at least from the perspective of the government, who wants an EUB that will facilitate the oil companies’ interests: extraction and production of petroleum and of electricity, including electricity for export for profit. So what does the bill do? Well, aside from the structural switch, the bill changed the ability of public input into utility-related decisions by restricting it to those people directly and adversely affected by proposals on the table. Such a move would exclude the broader public and public policy groups from having a say in the process.

The bill also removes any obligations to hold public hearings if no person requests a hearing, if it, quote, appears that no one is directly and adversely affected or if it feels that the applicant has met the rules laid out for it regarding the owners of lands being affected by the construction of transmission lines. The bill can limit the public input to written submissions and not go the route of oral hearings. The bill explicitly removes obligation to determine present and future public convenience and need regarding the construction of new lines. This affects the hearings on system needs. The bill retroactively amends the act on public convenience so all changes become effective as of January 1, 2003, Mr. Speaker, four years ago. That is unacceptable.

That’s why there’s so much public concern. It’s a way of stifling public input into important issues in order that government can get ahead with its agenda, which is not looking after the public interest, not looking after the environment, and it is not looking after the interests of landowners. I think it's interesting that the NDP is here standing up for the rights of landowners against a Conservative government that wants to take them away.

Now, I want to suggest that the principle of splitting oil and power into two bodies or jurisdictions over them is not a bad thing. It's the policy that the government has in those two areas that's really the problem. Our amendment would take this bill out to the public. It's interesting that when the government has its sort of flagship bills, like bills 1 and 2, they're prepared to send them to these committees, but when there's something that the public really has a concern about and something that could hurt the government, they don't want to have public hearings.

They are only interested in having public hearings and looking like they're transparent when it's convenient for them, not when the public demands it, not when the public wants to have input to a bill. When it's a controversial bill, if it hurts the government potentially, there's no way that they're prepared to allow a public hearing on it. I think it's going to be pretty clear in just a few minutes, when we vote on this amendment.

But that's what important. It's not that all of us in our different parties in our greater wisdom can come up with a better decision if we have a committee; it's that the public will provide the wisdom to its elected officials. That's the advantage and the value of this amendment. That's the advantage and the value of these standing policy field committees: if the government is prepared to use them even when it's not convenient. But – I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker – I don't think they will do that. I hope that they would, but I'm not holding my breath.

I would nevertheless reach out to the government on the other side to do the right thing just this once and make sure that we can have an open and public debate so that the public itself has a say, that it's not just an EUB that helps the oil and gas companies get what they want or helps the big utility companies get what they want but something that does make sure that we act in the public interest. We can arrive at that type of bill, Mr. Speaker, if we pass this amendment that we have open public hearings. If we listen to the wisdom to the people, it can be done.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Hon. member, you expressed a degree of cynicism that the government might not take this opportunity to deal with the problems associated with Bill 46. I share that cynicism, but obviously you've put this amendment out in the hope that the government will do the right thing. I've noted that they've done one right thing already: they're dealing with the unfunded pension liability. Do you have hope that maybe there will be sufficient members of the government who have faith in their own committee process that Bill 46 could go to committee and could potentially be fixed?

Mr. Mason: I'm ever hopeful, hon. member, that the government will do the right thing. They have done the right thing once already this session when they agreed to a debate on royalties. Previously, in the last session, they agreed to a debate on the state of seniors' care, which was another motion that the NDP opposition put forward. So they can be persuaded from time to time. But I'm just concerned that no member opposite has jumped to their feet and supported this amendment that we take Bill 46 out to public hearings. I think, you know, that if they do that, I'll be pleasantly surprised. It will be, in fact, something that I think we can all look forward to. If they do, I will be pleasantly surprised.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the hon. member. As you know, we can't introduce amendments until we're in committee. I guess my question to the hon. member would be: wouldn't it be advisable if you had a chance to see the amendments before it went to a field committee?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question because if the government wanted us to know what was in those amendments, they could have given them to the opposition already, but they haven't done that. Second reading is the time when you can get this referred to a standing policy field committee, and that's why we made the motion at this stage. If the government thought that they wanted to share with the opposition their amendments in the hope that the opposition would then support Bill 46, I would have been pleased, and this motion wouldn't have been necessary.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member. The fact is that if you sent it out now, then you would be sending out something that is not complete. Why wouldn't you want to have the amendments introduced in committee and then send it out?

Mr. Mason: Our understanding, Mr. Speaker, of the rules is that this is the time when you can get it referred to the standing policy field committee, and that is why we took the action at this stage. Those are the rules. I think that if the government has some amendments they think that we should support, they should have brought them forward by now.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly, I just wanted to draw to the attention of the leader of the third party that you can in fact refer things to the standing policy field committees after they pass second reading as well. That's a tool that's available, and maybe we should consider this if those amendments are not forthcoming.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you have a comment?

Mr. Mason: No. That's fine.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the next speaker I have is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the chance to rise and discuss the proposed amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Elsalhy: You have 90 minutes.

Dr. Taft: I won't use all 90 minutes.

I think it's worth emphasizing that the roots of Bill 46 really go back in many ways to the shift by this government to a deregulated electricity system and that a lot of the controversy that has arisen since then around transmission lines and the EUB and so on is a direct result of the shift to a deregulated electricity system. We're just seeing here in Bill 46 and in the public protests and the spying scandal and on and on more fallout from a very flawed initiative to deregulate Alberta's electrical system.

When there was a regulated electrical system, people understood that high-voltage transmission lines were there to serve the public interest. They understood and trusted that the electrical system was being governed and managed to serve their interest: to keep their power rates low, to keep the system reliable, and to earn a reasonable but not outrageous return for the electrical utilities. The system worked incredibly well. Alberta had perhaps the best or certainly one of the best electrical systems in the world. It did all those things. It provided virtually the cheapest power rates in Canada. It was very, very reliable. The utilities who were involved in it earned a reasonable return on their investment, and there was tremendous public confidence.

Public confidence has evaporated under the electrical system that's evolved in the last several years under deregulation. People are confused. People do not trust the system. People find that their electrical bills are difficult to read. When they phone to get help, they don't get help. The government put in an attempt to have an advocate for consumers, but that went nowhere. People get hassled on their doorsteps by door-to-door salesmen trying to sell electrical contracts. Then on top of all of that, you get things like the EUB spying scandal. So this government has brought this controversy on itself. Instead of doing the correct thing and reversing deregulation and returning to the kind of system that we have in neighbouring provinces and still have in most of the states south of the 49th parallel, they continue to head down this path of building controversy, building public frustration, and diminishing trust.

Not only that, but we have an electrical system, governed under the EUB, in which there are genuine concerns about unreliability. It's not unusual for alerts to be put out that have the electrical system in Alberta, the grid, operating at the very edge of collapse during peak demand time in summer and peak demand time in winter. When either air conditioners or furnaces are on, when lights are burning, and you have huge industrial use, Alberta's electrical grid is stretched to the absolute limits, and there are many warnings out there from various sources that within a year or two we could see rotating brownouts.

In addition, you have higher costs, which not all but most consumers are paying. The only consumers who may be paying lower costs are the giant industrial users, who can employ people 24/7 to do nothing but monitor electrical prices.

We've got a real mess here, and Bill 46 is not going to correct that mess. Bill 46, in fact, fuels public distrust, fuels public concern about other agendas, and in the process also takes away some important public rights that might have rebuilt trust. People are concerned, when they look at Bill 46, that we're going to end up in a situation where the EUB or its successor agency will ram through transmission lines that aren't going to serve the public interest particularly but that are being built more and more to create a system that feeds the U.S. electrical grid.

If that happens, Mr. Speaker, then the consumers of Alberta understand that for power that may be generated within their own city or within a few miles of their home or places like Wabamun or Sheerness, they may have to be outbidding the people of Los Angeles for that power in a high-stakes poker game in which Albertans are going to be the losers because no matter how it goes on, Albertans are going to end up paying dramatically higher power prices. So that's exactly the kind of fear, backed up by various developments in the electrical system, that's underlying this controversy around Bill 46.

Bill 46, on top of all of that, comes before the Legislature in the wake of a political scandal that was accurately described by observers outside of this Assembly as repulsive. The Premier, to everyone's surprise, I think, and the minister both initially supported the use of spies, of plainclothes security staff at the Rimbey hearings, and frankly Albertans were shocked. I think their lines were something like: what's the big deal here? Well, it is a big deal when you have undercover security staff hired by an agency that is to be unbiased, which is to protect the public interest, not only sitting in on public meetings and chumming up with intervenors but actually listening in on conference calls, sending e-mails, and, in effect, spying on the citizens of Alberta, who are trying to pull together as best they can an intervention to support their own rights as citizens of Alberta and as property owners. So I think Albertans were right to be shocked about the Premier's initial acceptance of this.

Now, we've had changes in the EUB. There's been a handful of firings. But I don't think that goes far enough, and Albertans don't think that goes far enough. When they look at Bill 46, nothing in here – nothing in here – reassures them. The EUB is supposed to be an unbiased quasi-judicial board that protects the public interest. Under this government and under this minister, who is proposing this bill, Albertans are feeling betrayed, and I don't think that's too strong a word. They're feeling betrayed by their own government.

The fact is that the EUB scandal was one of those watershed events that changed the way most Albertans think about this government. It has destroyed their trust in this government and particularly destroyed their trust in the regulatory agencies of the energy industry.

With fundamental principles of democracy under assault, with the future financial security of Alberta at stake, with the long-term success or failure of the electrical grid of Alberta in question, the importance of fixing Bill 46 cannot be overestimated. I agree, in fact, that this bill should be referred to committee, referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment, so that it can be studied further and fixed before it comes back.

Now, the government may claim it's going to make some amendments. Nobody in the public has any idea what those amendments are. We would invite the government to share those amendments with us so that we can properly examine them, so that the interest groups who are so concerned about Bill 46 can also properly examine them. People don't want the wool pulled over their eyes. They don't want this rammed through the Assembly. You can be assured, Mr. Speaker, and all members of the government can be assured that they're going to have a tough time pushing this Bill 46 through before Christmas. If they want to stay till Christmas, we'll stay here. If they want to stay in the evenings, we'll stay here. If they want to be here all night, we'll be here all night because we know what we're fighting for. We're fighting for democracy. We're fighting for the citizens of Alberta. We're fighting to defeat a bill that is deeply flawed. So I ask the members of this government to consider that and to consider the more sensible and attractive option of just referring the bill for correction.

When I look at Bill 46, there are a number of questions that immediately come up. Will this bill help secure Alberta's future prosperity through a strong, effective regulatory system? Will Bill 46 help to protect our environment? Will Bill 46 support and protect the fundamental democratic rights of Albertans? Does this bill respect and defend the interests of the people? Does this bill advance things such as the energy security of the province of Alberta and the people who live here? The answer to each of those questions, Mr. Speaker, is no, and that's why this bill fails. This bill, in fact, is further diminishing trust in this government and in the regulatory process. Without trust there can be no progress.

Mr. Speaker, the EUB is unique in Canada and perhaps unique in North America in terms of the scale of Alberta's economy and society that it affects. The truth of the matter is that the energy industry accounts directly or indirectly for half of Alberta's economic activity, half of this government's revenues, half of personal wealth. Half of jobs depend on the energy sector. Who governs the energy sector? Well, the EUB, so the EUB stands with immense power and immense ability to influence the people of Alberta, and with that comes an immense responsibility.

The people of Alberta have historically placed their trust in the EUB, but that trust has evaporated for an accumulation of reasons, Mr. Speaker, and Bill 46 does nothing to repair that damage. Instead of taking real steps forward, instead of restoring public confidence, this government and the Minister of Energy have proposed this bill, which cannot help but further erode the right of the public to have a voice at hearings. It will have a huge impact on their daily lives, whether that's an impact on their land use because there's a high-voltage power line or a pipeline or some other facility going over or under their land or because it affects the quality of their electrical system. This bill will have a huge impact on the daily lives of Albertans. It's an impact that will not be democratic, and Albertans know that. This government is trying to push Albertans out of the regulatory process, but Albertans will not go down without a fight, and the Alberta Liberals will not go down without a fight. We're backing the people of Alberta all the way on Bill 46.

Now, I could and will in fact take the pleasure of going into some specifics on Bill 46. I might go the rest of the afternoon on this, I'm having so much fun. Let me tell the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, why I believe this bill is unfair and undemocratic and why the Alberta Liberal caucus believes it's unfair and undemocratic and why the people of Alberta feel it's unfair and undemocratic.

One of the most alarming changes under Bill 46 is the new restriction on who can participate in a regulatory hearing. Now, historically there were already limits on who could participate in regulatory hearings. It wasn't just anybody who could participate. There were guidelines. There were restrictions on who could participate. They had to be directly and adversely affected, and that was the test that was applied to Albertans before they were allowed to intervene in a hearing. Albertans who had legitimate concerns for the project were therefore not always given standing. They may have been ruled ineligible for any number of reasons. That's the system that was in place already.

Now, under Bill 46, Mr. Speaker, the minister further narrows this already narrow definition by requiring Albertans to be affected "in a material way."

The Deputy Speaker: I'd like to remind the hon. member that we are debating amendment A1 for a motion to the bill.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I'm speaking to why I think this needs to be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment. It is so offensive. It's so plagued with problems that I support this amendment, and I'm trying to explain to the Assembly why. I can see that everybody is paying close attention to my comments, Mr. Speaker, including you, and I do appreciate that.

That fact that Bill 46 narrows the definition of who can intervene in a hearing by putting in a clause that they must be affected "in a material way" I think is limiting further the ability of Albertans to express their concerns. After all, what is a material way? It can be restricted to almost nothing. Maybe it means they have to be directly affected on their specific piece of property, not their neighbour's property or not a power line that might run a hundred yards from their property, but maybe it has to be right on their property. Or maybe it has to affect them in a directly financial way. So further restricting the ability of Albertans to intervene or to apply for intervention is exactly the opposite of what's needed.

I think that in many ways to rebuild trust, the regulatory system needs to be more open, not less open. It needs to say to the people of Alberta: tell us your concerns; share with us your concerns. Instead, it's saying: you don't have a right to intervene unless you have a very, very specific and narrow clause. So that's one of the concerns here.

As the Environmental Law Centre points out, Mr. Speaker, "any person or group who has a legitimate interest that ought to be represented in the proceeding or process, or has an established record of legitimate concern for the interest they seek to represent," should have the opportunity to participate in the process. Bill 46 doesn't allow that. That's why I'm supporting this motion to refer Bill 46.

Bill 46 restricts people who can participate in a regulatory hearing and other ways, too. Section 96(14)(c)(ii) of Bill 46 attempts to subvert the public interest by removing section 14(3) of the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. Now, that section of that act requires the EUB to determine whether a proposed transmission line for which an approval is sought is and will be required to meet "present and future public convenience and need."

Mr. Speaker, that goes exactly to the heart of the matter that I was making in my comments near the beginning about what we lost when we went from a regulated electrical system that existed to serve the public interest to a deregulated system which doesn't exist to serve the public interest. It exists to maximize returns on investment and exists, therefore, to drive up prices and exists to curtail competition and may well exist within a very few years to put the interests of the United States of America ahead of the interests of the people of Alberta. We aren't interested in that, and the public is not interested in that either.

In the wake of the EUB spy scandal and the disturbing events that transpired from that and the fact that it was more than just Rimbey – there was Redwater, and who knows where else spying was occurring – I find it unacceptable that this government would propose a change to remove that section of the Hydro and Electric Energy Act through Bill 46. This minister and this government are clearly out of touch with Albertans on these issues. They have apparently no respect for the rights of Albertans nor for the public interest and have no intention of protecting that public interest.

I actually look forward to hearing how this minister or this Premier or anybody on the government's side justifies removing the requirement for applicants to demonstrate that their proposed transmission line serves the public need and convenience. I mean, let's be realistic here, Mr. Speaker. Why will anybody want to go along with a big transmission line across their property or in view of their property when they know that that transmission line is going to be carrying power to somebody outside of Alberta and maybe even somebody outside of Canada for the sole purpose of maximizing the profits of investors who might be from anywhere in the world? Why wouldn't you expect people to be upset about that?

Why are we gutting the very public interest requirement of our electrical system? Why are we doing that? We're doing that because this government has no interest in that public interest. This government is only concerned about market solutions to public interest problems, and we all know, Mr. Speaker, that market solutions don't always work. That's why we got into regulated electricity in the first case many, many, decades ago, and that's why most Canadians still enjoy a regulated electrical system. The fact that we got away from that has created all kinds of issues for the people of Alberta, as I outlined.

I think we need to come clean on this. This government needs to come to its senses and not underestimate the people of Alberta. You know, the people might be prepared to say: well, I can live with that transmission line in view of my property because it's serving my fellow Albertans. They're not going to say that if it's serving people in L.A. or Phoenix or Colorado or somewhere else, and I don't blame them. I'd do the same thing, Mr. Speaker. So it's a betrayal of the public interest, nothing less than that in this bill.

The newly established commission under this act is proposed to be given the power to establish its own policies and procedures regarding conflicts of interest. Well, we know what happened when that was done with the health authorities, Mr. Speaker, don't we? We know where that leads. Health authorities were given complete control over conflicts of interest, and where did we end up? We ended up with a patchwork of conflict-of-interest regulations around this province that in Calgary led to some outrageous abuses. Are we going to see those same abuses here? Why aren't those conflicts of interest governed under legislation? Why aren't those conflicts of interest governed under the Public Service Act or maybe even the new conflicts-of-interest legislation? If they aren't, why should the people of Alberta trust the commission to look after the public's interest?

You know, when we saw this in Calgary, what did we end up with in the Calgary health region? We ended up with senior officials of that region on the payroll of the Calgary health region channelling contracts with that region to companies that those same officials owned. That went on for years, and that has been well proven and well demonstrated and well documented, Mr. Speaker. So those are the worries that are in people's minds and should be in people's minds when they see this kind of a provision in Bill 46.

A solution. Maybe the government will bring forward that solution. Or maybe it would bring forward that solution through the Committee on Resources and Environment if this motion is supported, the motion that I am discussing, Mr. Speaker.

The commission as it's proposed now will hold enormous power in Alberta, and the rules regarding conflicts of interest should be well established and, in our view, should be well established in legislation. The commission should not be self-policing. It brings to mind the Alberta Securities Commission, and we could talk at great lengths about the problems that arose there under conflict of interest when you have self-policing regulators. They sometimes think they're above the law, and that leads to all kinds of problems, and that fuels yet again the loss of trust, Mr. Speaker, in regulatory agencies and in this government. So why not bring forward an amendment to have conflicts of interest governed under legislation?

Albertans who participate in commission hearings will be stripped of their procedural rights under Bill 46. Participants should have these rights established and protected in legislation, not removed. We are here, all of us, as representatives of the people of this province. We are here as protectors and trustees of the citizens of Alberta. We are here to stand up for people's rights, not to erode them. Yet, what we see in Bill 46, once again, is the erosion of individual rights. The right to submit evidence, for example, the right to be represented by counsel, which probably goes back almost to the days of Magna Carta, and the right to cross-examine an applicant and make representations by way of argument should all be protected, and under Bill 46, Mr. Speaker, they are not.

Why not? What is this government so worried about? What are they hiding? Are they concerned that the people of Alberta might have ideas that are dangerous? Are they concerned that the people of Alberta might come forward with notions that are somehow subversive? Or are they simply concerned that the people of Alberta might question an electrical system and an energy system that no longer serves the public interest? I suspect it's the latter, Mr. Speaker.

I think we need to think very carefully about things like removing the right to submit evidence. How do we get off removing that right through this Assembly or the right to be represented by legal counsel? Mr. Speaker, that kind of right goes to the heart of our very system of justice. It goes to the heart of our right of fairness. When the citizens of Alberta might be up against huge corporations that have immense resources and entire legal departments and those citizens have their right to be represented by counsel removed by this bill, it cannot come as a surprise to the people of this Assembly that many Albertans are upset by this.

Another concern I have with Bill 46 is that many of the important commission rules, rules that will ultimately determine the details and degree of changes brought forward, are not even known, Mr. Speaker. We don't know what the regulations will be. We don't know what amendments this government might be proposing.

Why not accept this motion to refer Bill 46 to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment and have that committee come forward with a package of amendments? Just like other committees have done some very good work on bringing forward proposed amendments for Bill 1 or Bill 2 or others, I'm sure the members of that Standing Committee on Resources and Environment would be happy to take on that challenge.

Instead, the people of Alberta are left in the dark because so many of the changes are going to be handled under regulation or will be somehow handled under commission rules that it makes up for itself. These rules, which the commission apparently is going to determine at a later time, can impact whether or not a hearing is even held for a power development or for a power plant or for transmission lines or for pipelines. What kind of province will we end up with if those developments can proceed and there may not even be a public hearing into those things? What are we doing to the very foundation of credibility that was built up over decades of outstanding work by Alberta's regulatory commissions? We are gutting that. We are blowing it up, Mr. Speaker. And you can bet that the political fallout will be felt in places like Rocky Mountain House and places like, you know, southern Alberta and places like Calmar and Drayton Valley, all corners of this province. Albertans are rightly suspicious, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 46 allows the commission to refuse a person the opportunity to make oral representations or to be represented by counsel if that person is given the opportunity to make a written submission. How do we even know if a written submission is ever read or ever heard? How can you have trust in the regulatory process if you can't stand in front of it and speak to the people and listen to their comments? How can you know that they've given any attention at all to your concerns? How do you know that they haven't simply taken your written submission and shelved it or disposed of it or shredded it? You cannot. You cannot.

So what you need to have, in our view, Mr. Speaker, is the opportunity for intervenors to make both written and oral submissions. It only stands to reason. Why take away their rights? Why take away – literally take away – the voice of Albertans to express their concerns in a democratic forum? Why the gag order? Why the limitation? Open the doors. Open the windows. Let fresh air in. Let the sounds and the voices and the concerns of Albertans be heard, not be shut down. I ask the people of this Assembly, the members of this government to answer those questions. Justify for all Albertans why you're taking away their voice. Let us know.

Put that out there, maybe run an election on Bill 46, Mr. Speaker. Wouldn't that be an idea? If they are so confident in Bill 46, put it out there and call an election and say: we're going to run on this because it affects every single Albertan, and we will let the people of Alberta judge at the polls whether we like a government that removes our voice, a government that steamrolls our property rights, a government that undermines the public interest and promotes instead the private interest and the interest of big investors over the interest of little Albertans. Well, I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker. We'll run an election campaign, and we'll be on the side of the ordinary person, the little guy. We think we could win that election. So I challenge this government to call a campaign on Bill 46. If you're not going to do that, then have the guts to refer it to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

Without procedural rights the ability for Albertans to take part in a hearing in a fair and effective way is diminished. We should not accept the diminishment of rights, Mr. Speaker.

Of course, there are many others voicing concerns. It's not just all the little guy. It's not always the little farmer in central Alberta or the acreage owner in Redwater or some other small person. Sometimes the big people, the big interests express concerns as well. Interestingly, one of those big interests is nothing less than the city of Calgary, the biggest city in this province. The mayor of the city of Calgary submitted a letter just a couple of days ago asking this government to pull Bill 46. Well, maybe there's a better option, Mr. Speaker. The better option is to refer Bill 46 to the Committee on Resources and Environment so that the bill can be fixed. The concerns that I'm raising here today are shared by many people: by groups, by individuals, by organizations, by municipal governments.

The mayor of Calgary raises several concerns about Bill 46. I hope that this government takes these concerns seriously. The mayor, for example, has pointed out in a letter that goes to some pages – and I think it's probably been shared with every member of this Assembly – that despite the fact that Calgary is home to a third of all Albertans and is owner of one of the major power companies in this province, the city does not have a seat on the regulatory board. It has no voice. Why would you remove the voice of such a major stakeholder, a stakeholder who is elected democratically by the million citizens of the city of Calgary?

The mayor also points out that the Utilities Consumer Advocate as the sole intervenor for Albertans under Bill 46 will not have the ability to effectively intervene on behalf of all consumers. In fact, one of the most worrisome developments for me in Bill 46 is this Utilities Consumer Advocate. I mean, we've seen some of the attempts of this government to put in consumer advocates before, and they've been a joke, an offence to good sense. This is the government that took what was once a department of consumer affairs with a minister of consumer affairs and reduced that to a division and reduced that to a branch and reduced the branch to a desk of consumer affairs.

This government has no interest in protecting the consumer affairs and the consumer concerns of the people of Alberta. I have no confidence that a Utilities Consumer Advocate reporting to this government will do any better than the lame efforts this government has exhibited in the last decade or more on consumer issues. Once again, a reason to refer Bill 46 to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment so that they could consider better ways to protect consumer interests.

Who knows? Maybe they'd suggest that the Utilities Consumer Advocate become an office of the Legislature. Maybe they'd recognize that there's at least a little bit more independence for officers of the Legislature than people reporting to this government, or maybe they'd suggest that the Utilities Consumer Advocate be replaced with intervenor funding for genuinely independent consumer advocates so that those people can come forward fully funded and make their case in interventions. Oh, no, not the Tories. They don't like that. They don't like consumer rights. They don't want markets balanced. They want to steamroll them. This is, in my view, one more step in that steamrolling.

As the mayor of Calgary points out, the single funded intervenor model, that denies other intervenors cost recovery, is unlikely to advance the interests of Albertans in general. It's not. It's going to advance the interests of those people who can squeeze through that narrow opportunity to intervene and who can afford their own lawyers and can muster the case before the board. That's not going to be ordinary Albertans, Mr. Speaker. That's going to be an extremely narrow segment of our society, a very wealthy, well-financed, well-organized, well-connected segment of our society that doesn't have the public interest in mind, who will be there simply to represent investor interests. I have nothing against investor interests, but they need to be balanced.

Once again, the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment could consider that issue if we vote in favour of this motion to refer Bill 46 to them. Who knows? They might find a rebalancing through providing funding for intervenors. Who knows what ideas they'll come up with? I think they could come up with all kinds of them.

The mayor also raises concerns about the Utilities Consumer Advocate and potential conflicts of interest. Why not, as I said earlier, have conflicts of interest regulations clearly spelled out in legislation? Why leave it to chance? Why leave it to public suspicion? What has this government got to hide? If we have clear rules on conflict of interest for this, as the mayor of Calgary suggests, let's put them in legislation. Let's give them some teeth. Let's make it hurt if people violate the conflicts of interest rules. Instead, we shrug our shoulders, and this government seems to care less about conflict of interest concerns.

The mayor of Calgary goes on to state that "although there are problems with the current regulatory framework, we believe there is no reason to implement a new regulatory structure by January 1, 2008." Mr. Speaker, what's important here is not that we get this fast but that we get it right. Let's take the time to think this through. Let's take the time to rebuild trust. Let's take the time to put in mechanisms that protect the public interest. Let's take time so that we don't end up in a bunch of legal challenges to this bill, challenges that might go all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada under the Charter of Rights. How many delays might occur as a result of that? Is this just an exercise in rushing blindly ahead that will in fact lead to greater delays than would otherwise occur if it was carefully thought through? What's the hurry?

Again, if we allowed the motion and referred this bill to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment, we could take the time to think that through. We could realize that maybe it's important to put Bill 46 off or to bring it back in the spring sitting under a new government and bring forward a better solution than Bill 46, a bill that protects the public interest, puts the public first. Remember when governments used to do that, Mr. Speaker? It was a long time ago.

Now, the mayor of course has lots of company in raising concerns. The Environmental Law Centre is also very critical of Bill 46. Their thorough analysis of the bill includes the following statement: "under the proposed [Bill 46], participatory rights are few and are narrower in scope than under the current" Energy Resources Conservation Act. Why are we narrowing rights? Why are we reducing the ability of people to participate in decisions that will affect their lives and affect all of our lives?

The Environmental Law Centre goes on and writes several things on this legislation. For example, it writes: Bill 46 "also authorizes the Commission to create rules to further limit [public] participation." Imagine that, Mr. Speaker. This government is not satisfied curtailing and restricting the rights of individuals to participate in hearings through the legislation. It's prepared to go even further.

It's prepared, apparently, to say to the commission: well, if we haven't restricted people's rights enough, you go ahead and restrict them further. It's clearly – clearly – unacceptable and clearly the kind of thing that could open Bill 46 up to all kinds of legal challenges.

When you have somebody as credible as the Environmental Law Centre raising these concerns, the government should be paying attention. It's exactly the kind of issue that could be addressed if this motion were to pass, referring Bill 46 to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

The Environmental Law Centre raises other concerns too. For example, the proposed Bill 46 “contains consequential amendments to a number of Acts, including the HEEA,” which is the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. “These consequential amendments have the potential to limit public participation.” Again, why are we doing that? Why is this government wanting to curtail the rights of citizens of Alberta?

The Environmental Law Centre goes on. It says that section 9 of this act “operates to place potentially significant limits on effective public participation before the Commission.” It goes on to say that section 9(1) of this act, of Bill 46, “provides the Commission with the power to make any order or decision it is authorized to make without giving notice and without holding a hearing.”

Let's consider that for a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. Maybe we should consider it at great length. Maybe we should consider it through the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment because if this commission struck under Bill 46 has the power to make any order or decision it is authorized to make without giving notice and without holding a hearing, then where are we left with the hearing process? How do we know as citizens of this province that there won't be surprise rulings suddenly posted on the website with huge impacts for all kinds of people and no hearing involved? How do we know that there won't be meetings quietly held with selected stakeholders and selected interest groups rather than public hearings? We don't know any of that because Bill 46 is flawed, and it's deeply flawed. The Environmental Law Centre points that out over and over again.

Another group that's raised concerns, one for which I have a great deal of respect: the Consumers' Association of Canada. The Canadian consumers' association is particularly critical of the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate as foreseen under Bill 46. The Canadian Consumers' Association issued a press release just about a week ago, November 6 – two weeks ago now, I guess – voicing these concerns. I'd like to quote from this release because it explains why we should be accepting the motion to refer Bill 46 to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment. “Consumer groups,” says the Consumers' Association of Canada, “see Bill 46” – and this is their language – “as stomping on their right to oppose ever-increasing electric and natural gas utility rates and question the new costs and complexities of Alberta's deregulated utilities regime.”

When you have somebody like the Consumers' Association of Canada raising concerns that a piece of legislation stomps on the rights of consumers, we should be paying attention. We should be referring this to the Committee on Resources and Environment to get that fixed. The Consumers' Association of Canada says that “Bill 46 virtually eliminates the right and ability of groups such as the [Consumers' Association] to effectively challenge rate increases and ensure fairness among different customer classes.” What are we afraid of? Why are we afraid to have the Consumers' Association stand up for the people of Alberta in these hearings? If they stand up and represent the general interests of the consumers of Alberta, isn't that good? Don't we want somebody to do that, Mr. Speaker? I'm sure we do. So why don't we fix this bill? Why don't we support this motion to refer it?

The Consumers' Association of Canada goes on to say that “Bill 46 stomps” – again, their verb – “on the rights of consumer groups while bolstering the power and role of the Minister of Energy and the government-controlled Utility Consumer Advocate's Office.” Bolstering the power of the Minister of Energy: now, isn't that going to make the people of Alberta nervous? Why do we need to centralize more power in the hands of a minister and in the hands of cabinet? Why don't we do the opposite for a change? Why doesn't this government actually empower the people of Alberta rather than bring more and more power to themselves?

Can you imagine what the Minister of Energy might decide to do with that power, given the history we have? I was reminded just yesterday of quotes from two ministers of energy ago – Mr. Murray Smith was his name, and we all remember him – speaking to an audience in the United States, and speaking to them, Mr. Speaker, I believe, as Minister of Energy, explaining that this government's purpose was to give away Alberta's oil sands to the best investors. Do we want a Minister of Energy who might stand up and say: under Bill 46 we're going to give away the electrical system, give away the rights of consumers, give away the rights of the citizens of Alberta? No, we don't. It shouldn't be up to the Minister of Energy; it should be up to the people of Alberta.

The Consumers' Association of Canada goes on to say that the Utilities Consumer Advocate “was created in 2003 to take the heat off government MLAs for the disastrous debacles arising from deregulation of the utility business by dealing with customer complaints.” Boy, isn't that true? I remember well the debates in this Assembly about electrical deregulation and the toothless responses from the government-created consumer advocate. It, frankly, became a bit of a joke, and I think the fellow who occupied that position for a while eventually left in frustration. Why do that again? Why not just have due process? Why not respect the legitimate fundamental rights of the people of Alberta to be heard by their own government? Why create a paper tiger, a puppet, when we could give the people their own voice?

The Consumers' Association also says that Bill 46 “will also significantly reduce already limited public scrutiny and discussion of intended changes.” Why is this government frightened of public scrutiny? It seems to be a pattern here. Why, for example, are they frightened of the results of the Internal Audit Committee, which are by law concealed from public view for 15 years? What are they so nervous about? Fifteen years. What's the scrutiny? What are the skeletons that this government is wanting to conceal, to quote one of the members of this government. What are the skeletons it's hiding? Why are they frightened of public scrutiny? Why would they force through a bill that limits public scrutiny, Mr. Speaker? I look forward to them answering that question.

The Consumers' Association also says, “Paying for the work of the [Utilities Consumer Advocate] but having no independent voice in utility rate decisions amounts to taxation without representation.” Taxation without representation, Mr. Speaker, is a violation of one of the fundamental principles of democracy and a violation of one of the fundamental principles upon which our country and our province are built. People who pay taxes have a right to a voice of representation, and we're seeing exactly the opposite through Bill 46. We are seeing the ability to have representation removed but the requirement to pay the taxes continue. It's backwards, Mr. Speaker, and it's the kind of thing that could be fixed under the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment if the motion to refer this bill is voted on. I look forward to all the members of this Assembly standing and being counted when that vote comes.

The Consumers' Association also says:

Bill 46 not only tramples landowner rights; it stomps out consumer rights and public scrutiny. The Alberta government needs to drop Bill 46 from the current legislative agenda or risk losing all remaining public confidence in the regulation and oversight of the utilities and energy sector.

I think we need to look at that statement in some detail, Mr. Speaker. I can see that my colleagues agree with me. I'll repeat it: "Bill 46 not only tramples landowner rights." Well, we've discussed that. It removes their right to intervene. It removes their right to be heard. It removes their property rights. It at least endangers their property rights.

That quote also says that "it stomps out consumer rights and public scrutiny." Well, we've seen that. We see a bill that allows decisions to be made without any public hearings. We see a bill that allows the agency itself to make its own conflict-of-interest rules. We see a bill that removes the rights of all kinds of consumers to intervene, so clearly it's a legitimate point.

But I think the Consumers' Association has even stronger points here. It says, "The Alberta government needs to drop Bill 46 from the current legislative agenda." Do you know what? They have a lot of company in that. As I said, they have the mayor of the largest city of this province saying the same thing. They have landowners from central Alberta and landowners from any corner of this province saying the same thing: drop Bill 46.

I just drove highway 2 on the weekend, and I noticed going south and coming north a series of great big, round bales at the side of the highway that say: kill Bill 46. So we have the Consumers' Association saying that. We have the mayor of Calgary saying it. We have farmers saying it. We have all kinds of people saying it. Let's try. They can't all be wrong. Alberta Beef Producers are saying that. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals are saying that as well.

That sentence continues. Its most important point, I think, Mr. Speaker, is its last point. If the government doesn't kill Bill 46, the Consumers' Association gives this warning: all remaining public confidence in the regulation and oversight of the utilities and energy sector will be lost. We need to think about that because, as I said earlier, those agencies govern half of Alberta's economy. Those agencies affect thousands and tens of thousands of landowners. Those agencies affect some of the largest corporations and some of the original homestead owners of this province. Those agencies affect us all, and they are having their credibility eroded.

If Bill 46 is pushed through and they lose even more credibility, where is that going to lead us, Mr. Speaker? That's going to lead us to more public protest and more efforts at public intervention and more frustration and potentially who knows what? You know, when people get sufficiently frustrated, anything is possible. Can we see the day because of Bill 46 when companies turning up to build high-voltage power lines run into protesters blocking access to land? We've seen that occur already in Alberta on oil well sites. Will we see the potential of violence, Mr. Speaker? We've seen that already in Alberta.

People from Grande Prairie well know the history of violence in that area, but people from central Alberta also know. There have actually been deaths because the public has lost confidence in regulatory agencies, so they take the law into their own hands. Anything can happen at that point. So I suggest that this government take the cautionary note of the Consumers' Association very seriously and consider the wisdom of referring this to the Committee on Resources and Environment so that those things can be corrected.

Citizens from across this province, Mr. Speaker – it's obvious – are very concerned about Bill 46. This kind of widespread opposition, vocal opposition, hundreds of people turning up in community meetings, should send a strong message to this government. I hope they're listening, but I don't think they are. I don't think they're listening to those people in central Alberta. I don't think they're listening to the mayor of Calgary. I don't think they're listening to the Environmental Law Centre, and I don't think they're listening to the Consumers' Association of Canada either. I hope I'm pleasantly surprised, but I expect that I and most Albertans will be disappointed.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, I support this motion before us right now. I support the motion to refer Bill 46 to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment. With fundamental principles of accountability, of freedom and fairness at stake, this legislation must not go forward in its current form. It must be amended and it must be amended dramatically, or it must be dropped from the legislative agenda, as so many people have requested.

Mr. Speaker, I'll wrap up with a simple message: this House must not allow the passage of a bill so dangerous to our democracy and our future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a very brief question for the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Should the government ram this through, should they force it down our throats through tactics like closure or time allocation, which they did last year, for example, on Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, what are you prepared to do after the next election, hopefully when you are sitting over there in the Premier's seat?

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and remind me: how long do I have to respond?

The Speaker: About 45 seconds. We're well rehearsed in that.

Dr. Taft: Well, first of all, before and during the election campaign you can expect there to be rallies in all of your constituencies about Bill 46. You can expect that. Secondly, after the election and after there's a new government and a new era in Alberta, we will revisit Bill 46. We will revisit it in the context of reregulating Alberta's electrical system and in the context of bringing in regulations and authorities that protect consumer rights and that do things like protect the environment and protect landowners.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have a question for the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. It's the same question I had for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. What is the position of the Liberal opposition and the Liberal Party on the 500 kV line that had been considered by the EUB?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We support the people who are objecting to the line. We think there are better alternatives to the 500 kV line, and those alternatives could include everything from gasifying coal at Wabamun and building a pipeline to a rapid investment in wind energy and sustainable energy to the construction of power plants much closer to where the power is needed. We're not convinced for a minute that that power line is needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was really a passionate speech. If I didn't know that member and didn't hear his previous speeches before, I would actually believe it. But if he is so sincere about it, why wasn't he the one to table that amendment to the bill? Why, again, is he following the NDP? Where is the leadership of the opposition?

Dr. Taft: Well, trust me, Mr. Speaker; it's yet again a delight for us to see the New Democrats and the Tories working hand in hand, isn't it? I will tell the hon. member from wherever he's from that he can just wait and see how many amendments the Official Opposition, the Alberta Liberals, bring in because you will get amendment on top of amendment on top of amendment. You will regret the day that you urged us on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also listened intently to the speech from the Liberal opposition leader. I noticed that he did mention towns like Drayton Valley and Calmar. I'm just wondering when the last time was that he set foot in Drayton Valley or Calmar because the fact of the matter is that he knows absolutely nothing about those communities.

I'm wondering if he's aware also, Mr. Speaker, that notice must be given to everyone affected with regard to Bill 46. In fact, if even only one person requests a hearing, then one must be held, and concerns must be taken into account. I'm wondering if he understands that intervenor funding is reserved especially for affected landowners and that they can still hire legal counsel if they wish . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader is now recognized if he chooses to.

Dr. Taft: Oh, this is too much fun, Mr. Speaker. This is too much fun. I'd have to check my calendar to see the exact date I was in Drayton Valley, but I can tell you I dined at the Dairy Queen, and I met with a number of constituents there. It's not very long ago. I must say that it may be the nicest Dairy Queen, certainly one of the nicest, in Alberta. I think it was built by an Alberta Liberal although I'm not certain of that.

As for Calmar, I drive through Calmar really quite often. One of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. leader. The time frame for this segment has now expired. The Leader of the Official Opposition for the record should know that he spoke for 60 minutes and a few seconds.

We are on the amendment. Are there additional members who would like to speak on the amendment?

Hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, could you just hold off for a second, please. Could I revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

(reversion)

The Speaker: It turns out that these are my guests who are visiting the Legislative Assembly today. We have representatives from the county of Barrhead headed by Reeve Lawrence Miller – if they would all stand – representatives from Westlock county headed by Reeve Charles Navratil, representatives from Woodlands county led by Mayor Jim Rennie, representatives from Sturgeon county led by Mayor Donald Rigney, and representatives from the municipal district of Big Lakes led by Reeve Alvin Billings. They're all here for the 2007 AAMD and C convention. I would ask them to all stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, and we are speaking on the amendment that has been presented.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tough act to follow, but I do have one or two things that I'd like to add to this discussion on the motion to refer to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment. I started out not sure whether I was going to support this motion. I wanted to get on with the debate and hear some of those discussions. But we are getting to the heart of some of those matters here, and I look forward to that.

This bill is an example of what's wrong with this government. I think it exemplifies what's wrong with this government. We've heard from a number of speakers here today: the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who spoke about cynicism with regard to this government and, I believe, wanted to talk about the political context of Bill 46 with regard to appointed boards. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview spoke about trust and about concerns with regard to this spy scandal, which I think people should be ashamed of, the incidents in Rimbey and in Redwater.

I also would like to see more discussion on this bill, and I have considered whether or not it should in fact be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment in order to have the public come forward and voice their concerns. This matter really cuts to the heart, I think, of democracy and the democratic deficit that's here and, in making the referral, whether or not that would allow for more public input, and we certainly need more public input.

I think there is tremendous power in the hands of these boards, including the EUB. Frankly, these issues came up in the last few months in terms of the makeup of these boards and the democratic process in the makeup of these boards. Frankly, this government's tepid response to the revelations of widespread, indeed almost universal Tory patronage completely fails to justify this government's long-standing practice of stacking boards. Many members of the public have not been pleased with the performance of the EUB.

Perhaps in considering Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, we should give consideration to having it go back to the standing committee on resources in order to have the public have an opportunity to be able to address some of these concerns. Again, the Tory patronage completely fails to justify the government's long-standing practice of stacking the province's public agencies, boards, and commissions with members from the PC Party. Mr. Speaker, this is an issue that calls out to be addressed. These boards are supposed to perform vital work on behalf of all the citizens of this province, and patronage can undermine the public trust in these boards. These boards must be impartial, and there must be no sense of political bias, and they have to be seen to be that way.

The makeup of the boards has also been questioned by Mayor Bronconnier of Calgary, who has indicated that the citizens of Calgary really don't have a seat on the board. We need to be able to take a look at the makeup of these boards. I hearken back to the concerns about the 13-member board of the Peace Country health region, to name just one example, which appears to be composed of a hundred per cent Tories despite the fact that the PC Party makes up just 3 per cent of the Alberta population.

I believe that one of the ministers at that point in time, who should have seen the injustice of this – I think we were talking also about the Fatality Review Board. In this instance he pointed out that there was one competition for the Fatality Review Board but only for one of the positions. The chair, physician, and lawyer positions were all government appointments, but why wasn't there a competition for these positions too? For that matter, why aren't all of these vital positions open to competition? Shouldn't we be searching for the finest possible candidates without regard to their political affiliation? They may have political affiliation, but that shouldn't be a factor here, and I think the public is suspicious of that. Because of the public's suspicion with regard to the integrity of these boards and particularly with regard to the EUB, this matter should perhaps be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

We do raise these issues of the integrity of these boards and the stacking of these public boards. It's a grave concern, and it can call the decisions of the boards into question and threaten our democracy. Once again, we're talking about a democratic deficit, and this bill, I think, comes back to exemplify the concerns that we've got with regard to the democratic deficit in this province. Though there are doubtless many government appointees who do excellent work, widespread patronage of this kind casts a shadow over even the best appointees, and we need to clean this up. The government's defence of the status quo is very troubling because it shows they don't understand the seriousness of this problem. If top-level cabinet ministers feel this way, nothing is going to change. Indeed, this government continues to resist any efforts to alleviate this problem.

Last year my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar introduced a motion in the Legislature to eliminate patronage appointments, and the Premier himself voted against this motion. Again, we've got concerns about the democratic deficit. This bill brings those into the fore, and perhaps that's why this bill needs to be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

Alberta needs to establish independent public appointments, and we need, in fact, an independent public appointments commission to oversee these appointments to public boards and agencies. Such a nonpartisan commission would help to ensure that public boards will be composed of only the best people for the job regardless of which, if any, political membership they hold. So I think that that's a very important issue.

There are many reasons why it is that we've got to be concerned about this bill and perhaps why it is that this bill needs to be referred to the standing committee. One of the concerns – and I'm looking forward to hearing something on this from ministers that might be involved – is questions with regard to the amount of power here that's involved. You know, it seems as though under this bill the commission will be given the same powers as a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench. Now, that's a lot of power, and I'd be interested in hearing how the government is going to explain why it's necessary to give the commission the same powers as a Court of Queen's Bench judge and perhaps even go beyond that with some of the provisions in this bill. How do these powers differ from those of the current EUB?

These are questions that Albertans need to have addressed, and this is why it is that perhaps this bill does need to go back to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment. These provisions are concerning, as are the provisions with regard to the rules of evidence. The commission is given the same powers as the Court of Queen's Bench, yet it's not bound by the same rules in its conduct of its hearings in the same manner. I'm interested in how the government is going to explain this provision.

I think there's an injustice that's at work here, and we've got to be concerned about the democratic process in this province. I'm hoping that the members opposite are going to share those kinds of concerns. Perhaps if we can get this bill before this standing committee and hear from the public, the government will respond to these concerns because as this bill stands, it needs to be killed.

This bill, again, exemplifies the problems with democracy in this province, and I'm hoping that the members opposite will recognize that. If they don't, I believe the members of the public will recognize it. This is again why it is that if it goes before the standing committee and the public has the opportunity to address these issues, then we'll hear from the members of the public. I can assure of you that. I know that from my constituents and the people that I've talked to.

I was happy to be able to join my colleague from Calgary-Varsity and my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar when we went to Camrose and heard about concerns out there from landowners. We heard people time after time coming to the microphone and expressing their concerns that this bill is undemocratic, basically. These concerns continue to grow, and they're growing across the province. We're going to hear from Albertans on that. Perhaps a good opportunity to hear from Albertans would be if this motion was referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

There are any number of reasons why it is that we should be concerned about this bill, but in its essence I think that we need the government to explain to the fine citizens of this province why they've introduced a bill that will restrict their democratic rights. It's really not clear as to why it is that that has been done. I think the minister responsible for bringing this bill forward needs to address those issues to Albertans. Once again, I'd like to see this matter referred to the standing committee.

I'm concerned about whether or not participants are going to have the right to submit evidence. We've heard from a number of people about the restrictions on who will be able to step forward at the EUB and be heard. I'm also concerned about their ability to be represented by counsel. Again, I know that certain members of the government who are concerned about justice issues should in fact be concerned about the citizens' ability to have legal representation when they go before such a board on such important issues. I'm hoping to hear from ministers, in particular, who are concerned about justice in this province. Once again, I think when we're talking about issues that refer to justice and the democratic process, then perhaps referring this bill to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment will allow for the people of Alberta to be heard.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Snelgrove: I'm asking, Mr. Speaker, for a little clarification. It's the member's position that he would without reservation fund the legal fees of the Sierra Club or Greenpeace if they were intervening to stop much-needed power from getting to Calgary, so without reservation pay whatever legal costs for groups such as the Sierra Club from the United States that could step in and be represented to stop power from getting to Calgary? That's your position?

Mr. Cheffins: No, and I think you know full well that it's not my position.

Mr. Snelgrove: It's what you said.

Mr. Cheffins: What I'm talking about here are the draconian measures within this bill that are going to restrict people who would like to address issues that are of serious concern to them and be able to have legal support and legal advice before going up before . . .

Mr. Elsalhy: What is his position? Ask him.

Mr. Cheffins: Yeah. What's your position: that they shouldn't have the opportunity, that Albertans shouldn't have resources to be able to address these issues?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, then Calgary-Varsity, then the leader of the third party.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow talked at great length on the makeup of the board. I guess I'd like to ask him the question on one of the things that many landowners have come and talked to me about, that there is no representative of landowners on that appointed board. Perhaps you'd like to expound a little bit on who should be on that board. Do you feel that debate should go on on how they should be put on that board, whether elected or appointed? Perhaps you could answer a few on that, please.

Mr. Cheffins: We know they're . . .

The Speaker: Please. Through the chair. Okay? The chair feels really sensitive when he's ignored. The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Well, there are concerns about the makeup of many boards, not just the EUB, Mr. Speaker. I'm in agreement that we really do need to take a look at this, and it does need to be referred to a commission. Again, this strikes at the heart of our democracy, so we really need to take a look at the appointments of all the boards throughout this and make sure that they're being done in such a manner that restores the confidence of Albertans.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to what the hon. member had to say, and obviously he was questioning; he didn't understand a lot of the bill. I wonder if he wouldn't be interested in hearing what, really, the bill has to say. If we put it in committee, then we would have the opportunity if there are amendments to be made to put them on the table and then turn it to the field committee. Would you think that that would be a good plan?

Mr. Cheffins: Well, again, what it is that we're addressing here is the amendment. I would give consideration to that, and I am giving consideration to that motion to refer because, again, we don't know what this bill is going to entail. We haven't been advised with regard to what amendments might or might not come forward that might address some of these concerns. These concerns need to be addressed, or this bill needs to be killed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm very interested, as my colleague is our shadow minister for Justice, in what he feels about the totalitarian nature of this bill, that erasing rights back to 2003 effectively removes future rights so that we've got a back-to-the-future totalitarian Bill 46. I'd like to hear from our potential future government Justice minister.

Mr. Cheffins: Well, thank you, hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity. You mentioned the concerns about removing rights that go back to 2003 and the concerns about rights going forward, but I think you have been done one better by other members on this side of the House who have expressed concerns going back to the Magna Carta. So that gives us some idea just what a problem this bill represents.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow about his leader's comments a little earlier and just suggest that if the Liberals are feeling the heat these days from the NDP, it's because they're looking more and more like the Tories.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish.

Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly to my hon. colleague from Calgary-Elbow. You talked about cynicism in your opening remarks. Do you think that just as some members of the Conservative caucus were kept in the dark and not told about our royalties, maybe some of them were reassured that this bill is a good bill and that maybe that explains some of their earnest support for it, maybe because they're really ignorant about what's in it?

The Speaker: I think that's time, hon. members.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize and introduce to you and through you some friends that have stopped by from my constituency, very patient ladies: Dorothy Marshall* and Lorraine Grover.* If they would stand and be recognized, I would appreciate that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are still on the amendment. Is there an additional participant? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak to this amendment to Bill 46 because this bill is one of the most contentious bills to come before this Assembly. It is essential for the health of democracy in a province that prides itself on free thinking that every reasonable vehicle possible is used to encourage participation in decision-making. That is why I am happy to support amendment A1. This amendment to refer to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment supports the principles of democracy. This process can help establish trust with Albertans, many of whom are distrustful of the agenda behind Bill 46 and concerned that public interest will not be served.

Abraham Lincoln described democracy as government of, for, and by the people. We need all three aspects for it to work. It is not democracy if it is of the people and for the people but by one class or party and others do not qualify. It is not democracy if it is of and by the people but for interest groups. The people must be involved in all three ways: as the recipients, as the beneficiaries, and as participants. Anything less is not enough. It is not enough to have the vote if the airwaves are saturated by one point of view. It is not enough if access to decision-makers is limited. It is not enough if the agenda is set by special interests.

My experience with the standing committee was positive and encouraging. Many Albertans participated in educating the committee and in helping us make recommendations. I am proud that we have this opportunity with this Legislature, and I strongly support amendment A1, that this bill "be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment."

It is just a few months ago that Albertans learned that their government had hired private investigators to spy on landowners and other concerned citizens who attended public meetings of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board at a transmission line hearing in Rimbey and at a hearing in Redwater on the northwest upgrader. The EUB spy scandal has made it clear that there are big problems with Alberta's energy and utilities regulatory system. When the government spies on its own citizens, citizens who are only trying to express their concerns with regard to proposed power lines and other utilities that could impact their quality of life, the system is badly broken.

Instead of fixing the problem, the government has drafted Bill 46, which puts new restrictions on concerned Albertans who want to have a say in how utilities and energy developments are managed in this province. This is another reason for supporting this amendment, that this go now to a policy . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but I must interject.

The House stands adjourned until 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[At 6 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 21, 2007 1:00 p.m.
 Date: 07/11/21
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.
 You may be seated.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a few guests joining us today from Delburne school. We have 30 grade 6 students joining us, and accompanying them are their teachers and volunteers. With them is Mr. Larry Neville, their teacher; Mrs. Terry MacDonnell, Mrs. Tracy Jackson, Mrs. Kathy Ivey, Mrs. Teresa Greening, and Mr. Hugh Greenwood, their bus driver. I get to coffee with him once in a while whenever I go to Delburne. I'm pleased that they could make their way up to Edmonton. I have visited Delburne school many times because both of my sons went to school there from K to 12. I just have a soft spot in my heart for that Delburne school. I'd like them to rise.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly students from the Thorhild school. Eighteen students along with their teacher, Mike Popowicz, are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 76 visitors from St. Teresa school in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. We have with us today 70 bright, inquisitive young minds that are here to observe the proceedings of this House and to watch their MLA ask a question in question period. They're joined by three teachers and three parent helpers. The teachers are Mr. Charlie Stuart, Mrs. Thérèse Coates, and Mrs. Tracee Laba, and the parent helpers are Mrs. Susan Garbutt, Ms Kim Frey, and Mrs. Andrea North. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to introduce to you and through to members of the Assembly Dr. Cy Frank, executive director of the Alberta Bone and Joint Health Institute. Under the direction of Dr. Frank the institute is dedicated to creating and maintaining a standard of bone and joint health and health care that is the best in the world. Dr. Frank and his colleagues are well on their way to meeting that goal. The hip and knee joint replacement project at the institute was a great success, signifying reduced waiting times and benefiting patients in need. At the same time, it's garnered national attention for the institute and for Alberta as being a leader in the field. I ask Dr. Cy Frank to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Accompanying Dr. Cy Frank, of course, is my own executive assistant and senior policy adviser, Fred Horne, who has helped as well in moving this initiative along as we are working this week to provide ongoing funding to the institute so that Dr. Frank and his team can continue their great work. I'd ask Fred Horne to rise as well to be recognized and thanked by the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Clifton Purvis, the civilian director of the new Alberta serious incident response team, also known as ASIRT. This provincial unit provides another option under the Police Act to investigate serious or sensitive allegations of police wrongdoing in circumstances where there is a serious injury or death resulting from police actions. Maintaining objectivity, accountability, and public trust are key elements of these types of investigations. With that in mind, Mr. Purvis's extensive legal background, including 17 years' prosecuting all manner of cases, makes him an ideal choice to lead and guide this new team. I would ask Mr. Purvis to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. CKUA radio network has grown from a one-room low-wattage radio station into a full-fledged radio and Internet broadcast network staffed by world-class broadcast and business professionals. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of those world-class staff and board members. Joining us today to celebrate the 80th anniversary of the CKUA radio network is Lynn Friedrich, a board member of CKUA. Lynn, would you rise, please. Joining and with her is Ken Regan, the general manager of CKUA, and Katrina Regan-Ingram, the manager of marketing and communications for CKUA. A wonderful radio station. Thank you so much for the gift of 80 years. Please join me in celebrating and welcoming them.

head: Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Alberta Bone and Joint Health Institute

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been told by some of my constituents in Red Deer-North that waiting for a hip or knee replacement is one of the most painful conditions they have ever experienced. I have listened to people in pain describe their agony and then ask me why they have to wait so long for an operation. Today I'm very proud and happy to let you know and to let all Albertans know about the success of the Alberta Bone and Joint Health Institute. This not-for-profit organization is dedicated to creating and maintaining the best bone and joint health care in the world.

A couple of years ago the Alberta hip and knee joint replacement pilot provided 1,200 hip and knee surgeries using a multidisciplinary team of health care professionals. It was a tremendous success, gaining national attention for Alberta as a leader in this field. An independent evaluation of the project showed these results: there was an 85 per cent reduction in wait times, from 145 days to 21 days, bone and joint institute patients spent less time in the operating room, bone and joint institute patients were discharged in 4.2 days compared to 6.2 days, and 94 per cent of the patients were satisfied with their overall experience.

That's just the start of the good news, Mr. Speaker. Today Health and Wellness announced $18 million in new funding to ensure that the institute is able to keep up the good work and expand what we've learned in new areas of health care. Last June they received $6 million to conduct projects regarding joint disabilities, conditions, and diseases and to share this knowledge of leading practices with regional health authorities and physicians. We need to use the pilot project as a model in other areas of health care to achieve better care and reduced wait times. Perhaps we can even duplicate the bone and joint health institute in other regions.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in recognizing the significant achievements of Dr. Cy Frank and his colleagues and thank him for helping to ease the pain of Albertans. Let's keep working towards the goal of achieving the best bone and joint care in the world and better wait times for all Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Castor Area Grass Fire

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak of an event that happened in my constituency last week. A grass fire broke out within the constituency just north of Castor. If you recall, last week when this event happened, the winds on that day were gusting over 80 kilometres an hour. The fire spread rapidly, with over 2,000 acres burning at any one time. But an amazing thing happened that I think is symbolic of Alberta and Albertans' spirit. Volunteer firefighters from Stettler, Castor, Coronation, Galahad, Forestburg, Hanna, and virtually everywhere else within a 40-mile radius jumped to the call of a local emergency disaster to stave off what could have been a provincial disaster with winds that high. These volunteers fought off a fast, hot fire in high winds. They came together like Albertans do to solve a problem, and they saved farms, and they saved lives.

One of the farms they saved is owned by a young friend of mine, Daryl Fetaz, who I'm sure someday will take my place in this Assembly. His parents, Rosemary and Paul, and his sister Jennifer watched as the fire licked around their farm right up yards from the house, terrified that it would take everything they owned. But it didn't, thanks to the hard work of those volunteer firefighters and locals that came in and joined to save this family's farm.

On behalf of myself, the Fetazes, the government, and all Albertans, thank you to all volunteer firefighters and those that jumped to the call for what you do and what you did that day. Thank you for answering the call. You made us proud.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

CKUA Radio Network Anniversary

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is the 80th anniversary of the CKUA radio network, and I am pleased to be joined by members of the network to celebrate this important milestone. CKUA has the distinction of being Canada's first public broadcaster and the first radio station in Canada to go online. As the voice of Alberta artists, musicians, and cultural enthusiasts CKUA broadcasts a wide selection of music and possesses a music library of more than a quarter million CDs and LPs.

CKUA operates on a not-for-profit basis, relying on listener donations, program sponsorship, subscriptions, and corporate support to continue offering its valuable programming. The annual fundraising drive supported by volunteers like my neighbour Louise demonstrates how important CKUA is to both individual listeners and to the Alberta music scene.

At a folk festival a few years ago a B.C. musician and music promoter spoke to me about how lucky we are to have a radio station that plays local artists and how important that is to promote artists on a wider basis. He was quite jealous.

The CKUA radio network has given Alberta, Canada, and the world many of its most beloved artists. Many of Alberta's well-known musicians have launched their career through CKUA radio network, including Jann Arden, k.d. lang, Amos Garrett, and Tommy Banks, to name a few.

The number of CKUA listeners continues to grow. Its audience has in fact doubled since 1996, with an average of more than 160,000 weekly listeners. A province-wide signal and online presence of 4.5 million hits per month brings in listeners from across Alberta and around the globe. The network has embraced the use of the Internet and iPods to offer its services to listeners.

Please join me in recognizing the leadership and the valuable contribution CKUA has made in its 80 years of broadcasting in Alberta. Happy birthday, and thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

National Bullying Awareness Week

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are in the very middle of National Bullying Awareness Week, November 19 to 24. No one deserves to be bullied, but research shows that 1 in every 4 Canadian children in grades 4 to 6 reports being bullied and 1 in 10 admits to bullying others.

The government of Alberta has taken a leadership role in preventing bullying in our province. Alberta's strategy for the prevention of bullying raises awareness of what bullying is, it identifies what we can do to stop it, and it encourages changes in societal attitudes towards bullying. Under this mandate our government launched the third phase of the bullying prevention and public awareness campaign this morning at H.E. Beriault school in Edmonton. The Reverse It; Be Better than Bullying campaign is aimed at children and youth between 7 and 13 years of age. It builds on previous campaigns and is focused on educating children, youth, and adults in prevention and safe intervention. It's based on research that shows that bullying behaviour is best changed by having the person who is exhibiting the bullying behaviour develop empathy for the victim.

I encourage adults who want to learn more about bullying to visit www.bullyfreealberta.ca. Links are available there for websites for children and youth, as is access to the 24-hour bullying prevention helpline number.

Mr. Speaker, bullying is hurtful and harmful, and in an ideal world it would not be part of growing up. Perhaps we can all agree that bullying can prevent children and youth from reaching their full potential and that together we can decrease bullying and help create stronger communities.

I just want to add that I'm really glad there are many young people in the gallery here today. I trust they will do all they can today and every day to make positive choices for themselves and others around them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Medicine Hat

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I have the great pleasure of visiting a model Canadian city, Alberta's own Medicine Hat. I've called Medicine Hat a model city many times because it really does set an example for the rest of the province and, indeed, the nation. For one thing, it has a fabulous affordable housing program, something the rest of the province desperately needs. Medicine Hat also had the good fortune to be exempted from electricity deregulation by this Legislature. Thanks to that decision and its vast natural gas reserves, Kipling's famous "all hell for a basement," the city enjoys some of the lowest power rates and best reliability in Alberta. By and large the people and leadership of Medicine Hat have done a superb job of managing growth and developing a balanced, diverse economy.

That's not to say that Medicine Hat doesn't face its share of challenges. Access to health care needs to be improved. As in other cities the people of Medicine Hat often face long waiting lists for basic services. Transportation links to the city must be upgraded. For example, my colleague the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has pointed out in this House that highway 3 should be twinned. Citizens in Medicine Hat are also considering the value of a new transportation corridor along Alberta's eastern border, linking the U.S. with Medicine Hat up through eastern Alberta all the way to Fort McMurray.

They want to make sure that their children get the best possible education, recognizing, as we all should, that Alberta's future can be assured only if we create the very best education system we possibly can.

I'll be speaking with the folks of Medicine Hat about all these issues and more and listening to their hopes for the future. In short, Mr. Speaker, I anticipate a productive and enlightening visit to the Hat. It may well have all hell for a basement, but what's above the surface is pretty divine.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

National Housing Day

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and speak about National Housing Day, recognized on November 22. A safe and affordable place to call home is important to our health and to our quality of life. It helps provide an atmosphere for families to grow together, for children to learn, and provides a sense of security and comfort.

This government is taking action to address affordable housing in the province. In April our government announced its response to the Alberta Affordable Housing Task Force with $285 million to address immediate housing pressures, where the goal is to create more than 11,000 affordable housing units over the next five years.

As part of this funding, Mr. Speaker, high-need, high-growth communities will benefit from $143 million in new funding through the municipal sustainability housing program. Smaller municipalities that were not eligible to receive funding out of this program may apply for a share of the $60 million request for proposals fund. Successful projects, announced earlier today, are expected to produce more than 500 affordable housing units outside of Edmonton and Calgary. I was pleased to be a part of this announcement this morning in Beaumont. I'm also pleased to know that an application from my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat was favourably received and approved. I look forward to meeting in the near future with the Medicine Hat Community Housing Society and the city to help present the cheque for nearly $5 million.

Sixteen million dollars was also made available for the off-reserve aboriginal housing program. The successful applicants will be announced later this month. In addition, the rent supplement program funding has been increased from $14.3 million to $33 million. The new homeless and eviction prevention fund has already helped more than 21,000 people, and our direct rent supplement program has helped over 1,800 low-income families across Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we're addressing affordable housing in the true Alberta spirit, by working together with our communities and our partners to give hope and opportunity for our families, friends, and neighbours so they can have a safe and affordable place to call home.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head:

Presenting Petitions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to immediately abandon plans to increase the role of private insurance in the health care system, and instead, commit to strengthening the single-payer, public system.

This is signed by many constituents from Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 182 people, mostly from Edmonton, who are urging the government to ensure that remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across this sector, that these employees are fairly compensated and their wages remain competitive, that they have improved access to professional development opportunities, and also asking the government to provide province-wide service and outcomes-focused level of care standards.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to present a petition signed by 262 Calgarians to the Legislative Assembly that reads as follows.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to introduce legislation that will

1. place a temporary limit of 10% per year on the amount that rent may be increased; and
2. prevent landlords from avoiding the one year notice requirement for [condo] conversions by forcing tenants to leave due to unreasonable rent increases.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Bill 50
Health Professions Statutes
Amendment Act, 2007 (No. 2)

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise to introduce Bill 50, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007 (No.2), for first reading.

Bill 50 proposes providing liability protection to Alberta health care professionals who agree to assess the skills of other health care professionals from outside Alberta who wish to practise in our province. For example, this assessment is often required when health care professionals trained in another province or country apply for registration in Alberta. Providing this assurance will encourage a greater number of health care professionals to assist with these assessments and enable them to be completed on a quicker and more efficient basis. This legislation is another tool government is bringing forward in our efforts to recruit and retain health care professionals.

I move first reading of Bill 50.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 50 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 50 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2007.

This Bill 53 is amending legislation, which will allow for the $25 million payment to teachers which was previously approved in this Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 53 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to make one tabling. It's the program for the very successful community awards dinner in Edmonton-Manning last night. It is a very nice program, and it has a quote on it: "The heart and soul of Alberta doesn't lie in the rich farmland, the majestic Rockies, the precious oilfields or bustling cities. As wondrous and important as those features may be, that heart resides in our people." That's a quote from Lois Hole.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table two messages today. The first one is a letter from Kathy Hogman, chair of the Edmonton presbytery of the United Church of Canada. The letter includes a motion passed by the presbytery expressing deep regret at the forcible eviction of homeless people last summer from a vacant lot in Edmonton and urging the province to implement the recommendations of the Affordable Housing Task Force.

The second one, Mr. Speaker. I table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent to me by Christopher Legere, one of my constituents. Christopher is waiting for minor surgery while appealing his WCB claim decision. He's concerned that the slow appeal process is delaying his return to the workforce.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Dr. Timothy Losey and Mrs. Cheryl Kerpan expressing their concern about a proposal to drill sour gas near Tomahawk, which is near a school attended by 139 students.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have six tablings. They have come from my constituents Ravi Anand, Raminder Gill, Carla Segura, Gladys Segura, Margaret Lenny, and George Lenny. They are all concerned about Alberta labour laws and strongly believe in major changes to encourage fairness to all working people, strongly urging this government to implement and support changes to our province's antiquated and unfair laws and bring Alberta labour into the 21st century.

I have two other tablings, Mr. Speaker, from residents of Edmonton Randie Anderson and Rebekah Movold. They are all concerned about the homeless problem in Edmonton, urging this government to do something.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take great pleasure today in tabling the requisite number of copies of a news release issued today. I'm tabling it just so that all members will be aware of the $18 million that we have provided to the Alberta Bone and Joint Health Institute to continue funding their good work on multiyear projects, focusing on areas of development of guidelines, processes, and clinical protocols to support planning and program design beyond hip and knee replacement to other areas of care such as back, spine, inflammatory joint conditions, joint surgeries, bone fractures, et cetera.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Section 15 of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act as chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to rise today and table the required number of copies of the second-quarter update of the fund.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. They are both regarding Bill 4. One is from Nicole Scharmann, and she says: "This proposal will not help the daycare situation in this province. My daycare will go from 24 licensed spaces to a mere 16. What we need are more daycares and more spaces, not less!"

The other one is from Carol Hanson of Sherwood Park.

As a mother of two boys aged six and seven, I am quite concerned about where our child care system is headed.

First I would like to start by saying it is a little hard for parents to become involved with attending the one and only information session when we find out about it after the fact.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Seniors Advisory Council annual report 2006-2007.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate copies of five letters to table from my constituency requesting that Alberta's labour laws be changed to encourage fairness to all working people in Alberta. These letters are from Antonio Alves, Paulo Ferreira, Ernest Aumond, Ernest Fuller, and Anthony Scowen.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to table the requisite number of copies of letters I received from six of my constituents, all urging the government and the Assembly to look at revamping Alberta's labour laws, which, in their opinion, are antiquated and unfair to all working people in Alberta. These letters are from Larry Casovan, Richard Parks, Hakimeh Hashemzadeh, Dallas Ogilvie, Shauna Warrilow, and Barb Sutherland.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies from an event on Friday. It was at the Military Family Resource Centre. They were honouring corporate and citizen donors who keep the program running. If it wasn't for them, the program would not be able to support the military families.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to table five copies of a letter from Jennifer Dong, who writes concerning the problem of homelessness in Edmonton and calls for federal and provincial governments to commit 1 per cent of their budgets to housing programs.

I also would like to table on behalf of the same member five copies of a letter on behalf of Carlie Smith from the Cross Cancer Institute in Edmonton outlining in well-considered detail concerns about upcoming changes to child care licensing regulations.

Finally, on behalf of the same colleague I'd like to table five copies of a letter from Jules Munteer from the University of Alberta, pointedly expressing concerns with proposed changes to the Alberta child care policy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies from my wonderful constituents, all on the issue of labour laws in Alberta. They're asking for five significant changes, the first of which is a process for first contract arbitration. The letters are from Mary Elizabeth Archer, Lauren Jeffreys, Jay Hannley, Dr. Basaraba, and Seymour Neumann.

Thank you very much.

The Clerk: Tablings to the Clerk.

The Deputy Speaker: We will continue with the Routine after question period is over.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The first main question for the Official Opposition. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Industrial Development in Fort McMurray Area

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government did not collect billions in royalties, insisting this money was reinvested in Alberta. Fort McMurray knows without a doubt that these missing billions were not reinvested in public services in their community. The Premier has refused to touch the brakes on development in the oil sands, ignoring the impacts of unrestrained growth on Fort McMurray. My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier still hold the view that he is not touching the brakes on oil sands development despite the concerns of municipal leaders and residents who have said clearly that they cannot keep up?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the first things our government did was to support the municipality of Fort McMurray with an injection of $396 million. That money is to go to water and waste water, additional infrastructure, look at supporting the municipality with additional staff support in a number of areas: social services, supporting people in education, and other programs. We immediately recognized the need, and we delivered as soon as possible.

Dr. Taft: Well, the people of Fort McMurray are not feeling the love from this government, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker.

Communities at the heart of the oil sands know the difference between private investment and public services. Again to the Premier. This government failed to collect billions in royalties, and industry did not invest that money in public services in Fort McMurray. Industries do not invest in public roads or in schools or in continuing care facilities. Given how critically important additional public investments are in this region, whose job is it to make these investments if it's not this government's?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, when I talked about the $396 million, that's over and above what goes to the community with respect to the basic funding and all the programs. The $396 million: $100 million for the new municipal sustainability housing program, $96 million to the capital enhancement fund, $13 million for homeless support, a $3 million increase to the provincial homeless initiative – that's a $6 million total budget for the community – $14.3 million for rent supplements, $4.3 million increase for support to housing, $45 million for new affordable housing for 300 units in Fort McMurray, $7 million for the new homeless and eviction prevention fund, and $2.5 million for the new Alberta transitional housing initiative.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Radke report clearly indicated the government's failings on the environment in the oil sands region.

The report shows that the Department of Environment has no capacity to complete environmental impact assessments. If there's no capacity to do individual EIAs, then there's no way they can do cumulative impact assessments. To the Premier: why has this government not provided the capacity to conduct cumulative environmental impact assessments in the oil sands as they have in the Industrial Heartland?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the Minister of Environment answer that question specifically. But once again the hon. member is totally wrong.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, sometimes it's easier to perpetuate a myth than to acknowledge reality. I want to point out to the hon. member what Environment has done with respect to the oil sands. We've realigned the department and created an oil sands division specific to the oil sands. We announced in-stream flow needs and a water management system for the Athabasca River. We began the water management framework for the South Saskatchewan River as it affects the Industrial Heartland. We have been involved in various issues with respect to cumulative impact, the in-stream flow needs being only the very beginning.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm sure we'll get to that with the next set of questions, hon. minister.

Second main question of the Official Opposition. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Watershed Management

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has released a cumulative effects framework for the Industrial Heartland as a pilot project. Terrific. However, they've not completed such a framework for the oil sands despite the recommendations of the Radke report and the Oil Sands Multi-Stakeholder Committee. A cumulative-impacts approach is desperately needed in the Fort McMurray region. To the Premier. This may be the largest industrial development on the planet. Is it the Premier's position that a development of this scale should proceed without an understanding of its cumulative environmental effects?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government undertook a policy to study cumulative impacts on all major development. We started with the Industrial Heartland, we're working in Fort McMurray, but we also made a commitment that if there is any large development anywhere in Alberta, we'll look at the cumulative impacts, those environmental impacts. Of course, our top priority in government is to ensure the safety of our air, soil, and water, certainly. That's a new way of doing it, I know, for the opposition, but we're going to find that a much better way to secure the long-term prosperity of the province of Alberta is by doing a very good, solid environmental review of the cumulative impacts.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, most people seem to have a different view on this than the Premier.

Water concerns in the Athabasca are serious. This government's water management framework, which the minister seemed to mention, was released in response to the Radke report, but it does not do enough to protect water resources. As one of our province's prominent water experts, Dr. David Schindler, said, I'm sure they're trying to put the best face on a bad scene. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier assure the residents that its framework provides the best science available to protect the long-term health of the Athabasca River?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have great confidence in the scientists that the Department of Environment uses to evaluate the cumulative effects of the various pressures on the environment, and I have great respect for Dr. Schindler. In fact, I talked to him not that long ago at the University of Alberta when we introduced a new approach for the Water for Life strategy. He is part of that group, and I am looking forward to continued working relationships with all of the scientists involved in this particular area, a very important area.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The heart of sound water management is watershed management planning, but in Alberta only the South Saskatchewan basin has a plan for the entire watershed. There is no way to make sound water decisions in the absence of watershed management plans. Again, to the Premier: why is watershed management planning not mandatory for all river basins, including the Athabasca River basin?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I guess, just another example of where the leader is completely out of touch. In fact, we've had more industry participation, not only from the oil and gas sector but from agriculture as well and forestry, working together towards ensuring the quality of water in this province of Alberta. We understand that good clean water is critical not only for continued economic investment but is also necessary for a good quality of life in the province of Alberta. It's a top priority. In fact, we've put more money towards the Water for Life strategy than ever before, and we'll continue to invest in this very important key area.

The Deputy Speaker: Third main question for the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Finance announced another $2.2 billion increase in the surprise surplus while at the same time – at the same time – we learned that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund actually lost half a billion dollars in value. My question is for the Premier. When will you finally adopt the Alberta Liberals' plan for funding Alberta's future and start saving 30 per cent of natural resource revenue for future generations? When will you do it?

Mr. Mason: Just say never.

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, the leader of the third party gave me the answer, but I won't repeat that.

Mr. Speaker, the government is determined to secure long-term prosperity for the province of Alberta. Certainly, saving for the future is important. It's also very important to make very prudent, necessary investments in infrastructure, and it's also very important to ensure that we've set money aside to maintain the infrastructure that we're building and the infrastructure that was built a number of years ago. Yes, it's good to have savings – we have about $30 billion in savings today – but it's also good to set some money aside so the next generation doesn't reach deeper in their pockets to pay for all the maintenance of the infrastructure we're building.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, if he won't listen to us, perhaps he'll take the advice of his own ministers. "My platform has put forward a plan to save 50% of our non-renewable resource revenue in the Heritage Fund," said the minister of health just over a year ago. Or how about this one: "I will commit to saving at least 30 per cent of resource revenues collected each year to reinvest in the Heritage Savings and Trust Fund," said the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development just over a year ago. When will the Premier start taking the advice of his own ministers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I guess what the hon. member fails to mention is, I suspect, that those statements were made while all of us were on the campaign trail and had resigned from cabinet. So get the facts straight.

With respect to savings what we have done is appointed a commission to review Alberta's fiscal policy. Now that we've eliminated the deficit and paid off the debt, we have to look to further advice to see how we can secure the long-term future prosperity of the province. The Minister of Finance is awaiting the report. November 30 is when the report will arrive, and we'll be able to share that with the public.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, I'm glad that he mentioned the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, because of course I have more examples. Let's look at this gem. "I have recommended in my platform that a minimum of 20% per year be placed into the Heritage Savings Trust Fund." That from the Minister of Finance a year ago. The Premier says he won't adopt the Alberta Liberals' plan. He won't do as his ministers say. My question, once again, for the Premier: how much longer is this Premier going to continue to ignore the advice of his very own Minister of Finance?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you one piece of advice coming from the Liberal party that we will definitely not implement, and that is building an upgrader in Manitoba. That's guaranteed.

The Deputy Speaker: First main question of the third party opposition. The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Homeless Children

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Tories' neglect of homeless children is unforgivable. The lack of emergency shelter space for kids is so acute that they are exchanging sex for shelter just to stay out of the cold. A worker at the Old Strathcona Youth Co-op says, and I quote: it's so common it breaks my heart; they're not prostitutes, they're not addicted to drugs or doing it for money; they're doing it because it's cold outside and they need somewhere to sleep. To the Premier. These kids don't have time to wait for your 10-year plan to end homelessness in Alberta. What are you going to do to protect them tonight?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that question was raised in the House the other day by the other party. We have a very good, solid plan to eradicate homelessness in 10 years. It's following up on a number of proposals that are coming forward from the city of Calgary, the city of Edmonton, and other communities. We just helped in partnership with the city of Red Deer to add another 40 units. We're increasing the number of units available in different communities across Alberta. This is something that, of course, we cannot deal with overnight, but we are making the necessary investment because I do agree with the hon. member that every family deserves a home.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, again, the Premier talks about a 10-year plan to end homelessness, but the government has known about this for some time. Boyle Street Community Services identified this problem last year. In the city of Edmonton there are only 36 beds devoted to kids that are 19 years old or younger, but there are up to 360 children under 17 years of age living on the street in Edmonton alone. Around half of those have fled an unsafe situation at home. There's one person who can do something about this right now, and that's the Premier. My question is to him. Mr. Premier, will you act to get vulnerable young people off the street today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we actually, not today, started a number of months ago with a very comprehensive housing program for the province of Alberta. We're continuing in that direction. We see some very positive signs. In fact, more housing units are available. There are more rental spaces available if you're looking at some of the statistics that are coming both from real estate and also from the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. So we're moving in a positive direction. Of course, we were criticized yesterday by the opposition for spending as much money as we did in the eviction fund protecting families so that they're not evicted and out on the street. That's the kind of compassion that this government shows towards families.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, no government has done more to create homelessness in this province than this government. Instead of spending the money necessary to fix the shelter problem, the Liberals and Conservatives voted for a $265 million corporate tax cut. That money could have solved the shelter problem immediately and made a huge dent in homelessness today, not 10 years from now. My question is to the Premier. Will you do the right thing today and commit to spending the money needed to give every homeless child a safe place to sleep today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've already committed the funds. We have already committed the funds. But this, again, is a difference in ideology from the third party. What they want to do is to tax as much as possible and then share that money out. One of the proven examples in this province is that by working together with the private sector and finding the right model to encourage continued investment in housing, we see more housing units available, we see more rental units available, and in fact we have made tremendous progress in this area in the last eight months. If we would have followed their advice, we would have had less – less – rental units and zero increase in the number of housing available.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Affordable Housing for Students

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituency has experienced incredible growth. Rent increases have skyrocketed, and to find affordable rental accommodation is like finding hen's teeth. Students attending Northern Lakes College in Slave Lake are especially finding it difficult to get housing on their limited funding. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. What is it that you're doing to address the affordable housing needs of students in this province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, I want to say to the hon. member that our programs are designated to address the people that are most in need, as identified by the local municipalities. This morning we were able to make an announcement for affordable housing in rural Alberta. In addition, on affordable housing and how it benefits communities, students are also able to qualify for funding under the rent supplement program, which amounts to approximately $14.3 million more to assist 6,700 households.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the announcement this morning. However, how does that, then, fit into what my needs are in Slave Lake and for the students of that community, who are experiencing such incredible difficulty in trying to find affordable accommodation?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, Slave Lake is a community with a college, and with the growth pressures that that community has in housing, the community of Slave Lake brought forward a proposal for housing for students. Students come into Slave Lake for trade schooling. It could be anywhere from seven to eight weeks to six months. There is no such facility to be able to address those needs. This morning we approved an application for over $3 million for the community of Slave Lake to assist that community with student housing.

Ms Calahasen: I really thank the minister for that, Mr. Speaker. However, there are partnerships that have occurred in the past within my constituency with various groups. My question, then, is to the minister again. Is it partnerships that drive this kind of idea in order for us to be able to get more money for those areas or those communities that need affordable housing?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the criteria for the attainable or affordable housing, one of the criteria, of course, is contribution from other sources, co-operation. It's not necessarily necessary, but it adds to part of the project. I do want to say that it is critical that the communities, the municipalities get together with the schools, with not-for-profit agencies because in actuality communities are working together to one goal, and that is to make that community better. Yes, it is very advantageous to work together.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy and Utilities Board

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it was revealed that a government agency hired private eyes to spy on innocent landowners at EUB hearings, Albertans felt betrayed, violated, disgusted, and repulsed. Not the Premier, though. He initially defended the use of spies by his government. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the government was provided all the details last May in advance of the illegal undercover spying operation in Rimbey, why didn't they do anything to stop it?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, you know, the situation around the EUB is certainly deplorable, I would suggest, to say the very least. None of us – none of us – on this side of the House and not very many, I think, on the other side of the House would agree that hiring any kind of private service to look into the private affairs of Albertans is something that we would tolerate. I haven't tolerated it, and the fact of the matter is that that has been dealt with very severely.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: why, then, are you tolerating the attending board members of the EUB by allowing them to still sit and serve? John Nichol, Ian Douglas, and Graham Lock were aware of the covert spy operation in Rimbey. You hired them. Why don't you now fire them?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I should probably suggest that the member do now is that perhaps tomorrow morning he may want to check with the EUB to see who actually is sitting on the board of the EUB.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister. Now, when the information was provided to the Legislative Assembly security that this covert spy operation was going to occur, why did this government not do anything and stop it, stop it right there before it occurred? It was illegal; it was wrong; it was intolerable. Why didn't you do anything?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, what I can tell you and all Albertans is that I have done exactly that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Affordable Housing for Smaller Communities

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta continues to be a beacon of hope for Canadians looking for a province that provides them with opportunities. The rest of the country and indeed the world is beating a path to our door, a place to call home. November 22 is generally recognized as National Housing Day in Canada, and it serves to highlight the importance of having a safe and affordable place to call home. My first question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Can the minister advise this House about what specific actions he is taking to help smaller urban and rural municipalities to address their affordable housing needs?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do want to acknowledge what the hon. member has presented in his question, and that is that rural municipalities or smaller municipalities are experiencing those growth pressures. This morning we did make an announcement. The program offered $60 million, which individual municipalities were able to apply for. This morning we made that announcement, and there were 15 municipalities with 16 projects that were approved. We will get over 500 units that will be developed from that funding.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Can the minister tell the House more about the projects and what this funding will mean? What does it mean on the ground, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, what's on the ground are 500 units, units that are throughout Alberta in small communities where there is a need. Those projects are projects for education, attainable affordable housing for special needs. They are projects that are needed in those communities. I again suggest to you: over 500 units being built in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Mr. Minister, we all know that partnerships can make a huge difference. You get a bigger bang for the buck. Can you give us any examples of partnerships on these projects?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that one of the best partnership programs or applications that came forward was exactly the partnership from Leduc/Beaumont/Devon. Their project was the three municipalities getting together and working together on a three-year project. In fact, that organization got $7 million for 56 units to be built in their communities. So it does show how communities can work together for a positive, united goal.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Water Licence Transfer

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans expect their government to take their concerns seriously, to listen to them when they have concerns about actions and approvals, especially in relation to water in southern Alberta. Albertans are increasingly distrustful of this government, including issues around Bill 46, coal-bed methane drilling without groundwater testing, and the Balzac situation, and the list goes on. Now, in relation to Balzac the Springbank water provider Westridge Utilities and the Tsuu T'ina First Nation appealed Alberta Environment's decision to approve the water licence transfer from the western irrigation district to the megamall in Balzac and never heard back from Alberta Environment. To the minister: why did the minister ignore the statements of concern from Westridge Utilities?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that decisions with respect to licence applications, water applications are dealt with by a director within my department. If affected parties are dissatisfied with that decision, they have the right to appeal that decision to the Environmental Appeal Board. Then and only then, after the Environmental Appeal Board has dealt with an issue, is the minister entitled to be or in fact legally allowed to be part of that decision-making process.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With a moratorium on all new allocations from the Bow River can the minister outline what principles he followed in determining the priority that Balzac had for this replacement water?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge this particular issue is before the appeal board as we speak, and I think it would be inappropriate for me to comment one way or the other until the board has dealt with the issue.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The fact that the government ignored other water users' concerns and made sure the developers of the megamall got their water raises more questions of public trust and the involvement of this government in the Balzac megamall. This government also gave millions of taxpayer dollars to develop the water system there. They appear to have bent the rules to allow them to access the money. They approved a water licence in the blink of an eye. Did the minister bury the statement of concern because of government promises to the developers in the MD, because this government was involved in the megamall from the beginning?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to comment on this particular licence application, but let me talk about the general issue of dealing with licence and water allocations on the South Saskatchewan River basin. As the member has already pointed out, there are no additional licences that are to be issued in that system. That, then, necessitates the transfer of existing licences. It's not the government that initiates those transfers; it's the licence holders that initiate those transfers. The responsibility of the government is to ensure that in the process of transferring licences, we don't put any risk or additional risk or harm to the ecosystem. That is the overriding policy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Affordable Housing in West Yellowhead

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Later this week affordable housing day is being recognized throughout the province. Can the minister of municipal affairs please advise the Legislature what government is doing to help with the affordable housing issue for all Albertans that are in need?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I need to let this Assembly know that housing is a priority for this government: in fact, 11,000 units planned over five years – 11,000 – $285 million this year allocated to housing and programs, new money, and also $143 million of that going to the high-growth communities; $35 million for homeless support to provide, an earlier question, 3,100 spaces; $7.5 million for the winter contingency funding for 940 extra spaces.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What are you doing to answer the affordable housing issue in West Yellowhead?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this morning's announcement of $60 million there was a program for $4.9 million going to the Happy Creek Estates project in Hinton. This project provides 58 units of low-cost, affordable housing, including 30 units that are accessible to assist Albertans with special needs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. With affordable housing being an issue in West Yellowhead, what are you doing to help those other communities that didn't receive the grants process?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in particular in the constituency of the member $550,000 for 23 community housing units, 85 rent supplements, $4.4 million for 69 units in the Alberta affordable housing program, $2.3 million for off-reserve aboriginal housing for 35 units, more than $900,000 under the municipal sustainability and capital enhancement program. This is just one example in one constituency of what this government is doing to assist in housing and services in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Continuing Care Needs in Fort McMurray

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a shortage of continuing care beds in Fort McMurray, and the few beds that do exist are located within the hospital. A hospital's ability to take new patients into an emergency room or for surgery depends on having the ability to discharge patients into a continuing care facility. To the minister of health. The health region has been asking for and has needed a continuing care facility for five years. When will they get one?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I guess, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is: as soon as I get the money for it. But I can tell the hon. member that, indeed, the health region has a plan in place and has requested as part of their capital request for this year – and we've approved money to buy land for it – to build a facility so that the continuing care facility can be moved out of the hospital, supplemented in terms of the numbers, and that we can reclaim the hospital beds for active hospital acute care.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of health again. I'd be more than willing to write letters to your colleagues when it's budget time to see if we can get you that money.

The region is under great strain not only because of not having the long-term care beds. They are very afraid of a major industrial accident or even a widespread pandemic and being able to go into all of those beds. You have indicated that it might be dependent on the budget. Could I have, perhaps, a little tighter time frame on that?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has offered to lobby my colleagues, I think – that's not the term she used – with respect to the budget process when it becomes time. She ought to be aware, of course, that the budget process for this government starts very early in the process, so it's well past the point where lobbying might be effective.

I can say this: it's a very important part of our capital projects. We put forward the requests, and obviously the result will depend on the number of priorities that have to be funded in terms of the capital that's available. But I'm very acutely aware of the need for a long-term care and continuing care facility in Fort McMurray and the need to reclaim the hospital beds that are currently occupied.

Ms Pastoor: Well, I'm disappointed to hear that I can't do some good, solid lobbying. I'm pleased to hear that this is where the minister is going because continuing care beds in the long run really are less expensive. But my question would be: at this point in time are people who are in considered long-term care beds being charged as long-term care beds, or are they getting them at hospital rates?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I couldn't answer that off the top of my head as to what charges might be levied. In terms of long-term care patients, normally long-term care patients are treated differently than lodge or continuing care in terms of whether they're charged for their housing. I wouldn't believe that anyone is being charged for housing because I believe that's treated as a long-term care facility, but I would have to check into that and get back to the hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Condominium Conversions

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's housing policy stumbles and bumbles from one disaster to another. In the first 10 months of this year the city of Edmonton has experienced 6,915 condo conversions. Before this year the largest number was 4,776, in 2004. To the President of the Treasury Board. You brought us Bill 34. Wasn't the purpose of this bill to give renters a year of relief and peace of mind that they'd at least be able to stay in their homes for at least a year, or was the point of Bill 34 just to make the government look like they were doing something for renters?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there is a balance in governing, where you need to respect the property rights of people, and you need to balance that in some cases against the greater need of others. What we did with our landlord/tenant act was to ensure that people would have time to plan should circumstances change with regard to ownership of buildings or property and, if there were to be conversions or sales, that they would have the opportunity to look for other places to live at that time. It has never been this government's position to arbitrarily assume control or ownership of private property.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, what was the point of having Bill 34, then? We spent all night here debating it, and I thought the purpose was so that they would have that year. Now the minister is saying that they don't. The legislation is so full of loopholes that you could drive a truck through it. It's virtually useless. Service Alberta tells us to take the landlords to court. That's the advice we get when we call. Again to the President of the Treasury Board. Forget about the balance and worrying about the landlords all the time. When will you acknowledge that this isn't working and implement something that keeps people in their homes, like a temporary moratorium, till this has settled down a little?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, Mr. Speaker, what keeps people in their homes are jobs and work. When we can support the people that need help, when we can put in programs that will allow people who for a short period of time need some assistance, we're very happy and able to do that. The only solution to a lack of housing, whether it be expensive or very affordable, is the number of units. If the hon. people would read any literature or just listen to anyone, they would understand that the solution lies in developing more units.

Mr. Martin: We're getting a lecture from Milton Friedman over there in supply-side economics, Mr. Speaker.

Let's put it in perspective. The minister over there is bragging about creating 11,000 units over five years. In Edmonton alone we're losing 7,000 units of affordable housing. That's just in Edmonton. Never mind Calgary and the rest of the province. How can you possibly justify this with this going on?

Mr. Snelgrove: His time, Mr. Speaker, would probably be better spent out looking where they're going to. They're not going anywhere, hon. member. They are housing people in Edmonton and all of the communities around here. Under your plan people quit building, quit providing anything, and they leave. This allows an opportunity for people to transition to whatever kind of housing they choose. Rather than everyone moving in with your grandiose opportunity for Alberta, where we can all live in a cardboard box, we strive to let people go to the top.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, Alberta's livestock producers are facing many challenges due to the strong Canadian dollar and the skyrocketing cost of fuel, feed, and fertilizer. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. While my constituents appreciate the assistance being provided under the recently announced Alberta farm recovery plan, some are wondering why this plan is based on the CAIS program and not on a per-head/per-acre basis. Can the minister explain why.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, a per-head or a per-acre program does not reflect producer need, nor is it trade neutral. For the AFRP we wanted a quick response but not through an ad hoc or a shotgun, scattergun approach. CAIS, obviously, offers the best available data that we have to be able to target producers who require assistance.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, you know that in your constituency CAIS doesn't work for your producers. Minister, you know it doesn't work for your producers. My producers spread manure every day, but they can't spread it as high as the CAIS program. Mr. Minister, tell us: when will you fix this program? When will you get together with the feds and get this right?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've made no secret all along that CAIS has never been my favourite program. However, we are in this with the federal government on a 60-40 deal. We are endeavouring to make some changes to the CAIS program. In fact, I've charged the people at AFSC to come up with a new program. They have done so, and we've presented it to western Canada. It's been fairly well received. We presented it to the federal government last Saturday. It's been fairly well received there. We're now doing a comprehensive report to the eastern Canadian people, so hopefully down the road we're going to get this fixed.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, okay. I give. I'll give in on this point. Can the minister tell us: when will my producers get the cheques from this program?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, cheques have started coming out on the current program. So far we've sent out $14 million, with an average payment of $72,000. Hog producers will be the first to receive this program, and the cattle producers will follow very shortly. In total $165 million will be distributed to all eligible producers by March 2008.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Drug Treatment Courts

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the recent report of the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force one of the simpler recommendations was the expansion of drug treatment courts to meet the needs of Albertans struggling with addictions. Will the Minister of Justice provide a target cost for establishing these institutions outside of Alberta's two largest municipalities?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, it is true that one of the recommendations of the task force was to expand specialty courts. At this point in time we have a very successful domestic violence court program, some eight domestic violence courts throughout the province. That is the template that we use when we talk about this type of court. We've been able to expand that one court at a time as a result of ultimately building the capacity within communities to deal with these matters, and as we go forward with respect to either drug courts or mental health courts, which are the other recommendations, that will be our approach.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The task force report points out that drug treatment courts will only work if offenders receive immediate help getting into treatment. How will the Minister of Justice address the shortage of treatment spaces that currently exists, for example, in Fort McMurray?

Mr. Stevens: The drug court that we have in the province at this particular point in time, Mr. Speaker, is located here in Edmonton. It came about as a result of a federal government initiative. The city of Edmonton and other concerned individuals put forward a proposal to the federal government, so we've now had a drug court here for, I believe, in excess of one year. The involvement of Alberta Justice with respect to the drug court – we do not do the prosecutions because prosecutions are done principally by the federal government; they prosecute adult drug offenders – is the participation of the court staff, and at this point in time the cost is being linked to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A related question. The task force also recommends, based on the earlier work of the Premier's Task Force on Crystal Meth's report, that a minimum of 200 treatment beds are required across this province. How can addictions treatment be expanded in this province given the struggle that service providers face in providing service to those currently involved in treatment programs?

Mr. Stevens: There's absolutely no doubt that treatment goes along with courts like the drug court. But, Mr. Speaker, the issue with respect to treatment beds is not a Justice issue; it's ultimately a Ministry of Health and Wellness issue. Perhaps another day he'll be able to comment on this.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

High-Security Drivers' Licences

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Officials from the United States recently announced that they plan to accept high-tech drivers' licences instead of passports to allow Canadians to cross the border. Such drivers' licences would have embedded personal information, including citizenship, and would be harder to counterfeit or steal. My question is to the hon. President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta. What is his department doing to bring on the proper technology in Alberta to allow Albertans to cross the border without passports?

Mr. Snelgrove: That's a good question. I'm not exactly sure that the premise is correct, Mr. Speaker. There is a group that is working with our American counterparts to understand if there is a possibility to develop a secure document that may take the place of a passport. If that document were able to be included in a driver's licence in some way or another, then that would be good.

The Alberta driver's licence itself is one of the most secure documents in North America, but at this time it is only a document that entitles you to drive a motor vehicle. That's all it signifies.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: what does the minister anticipate in terms of timing in bringing on this technology to allow us to cross the border without passports?

Mr. Snelgrove: To be clear, Mr. Speaker, the standing right now for Albertans to cross into the United States on land without passports is likely going to be this next fall. If you travel by air now, you have to have it. Is the Alberta government going to be ready to produce a driver's licence that would enable them to cross into the United States within a year? I don't think so because the information that would be needed to do that in a driver's licence would very much resemble the information you need to collect to have a passport.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member?

Hon members, that was 83 questions and answers today. We will now resume with the Routine.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today, the first being a letter from Derek Wynnyk, a resident of south Edmonton, who is writing to express his concern about the homelessness situation and encourages governments to commit 1 per cent of their budgets to housing programs.

The second letter is from another south Edmonton resident, Bruce Horsman, with concerns about AISH. He wants to let the government know how difficult it is for people who live on AISH, and he says, "The streets are no place to live in a land so rich."

Mr. Hancock: A point of order.

Mr. R. Miller: A letter from Neil Evans, a resident of Edmonton-Mill Woods, who is writing with concerns about Alberta's parks. He says that every time that he stays in a campground in a B.C. provincial park, a Washington or Oregon state park, or a Canadian or U.S. national park, he wonders why we don't have the same high-quality parks and campgrounds here in Alberta.

The last one, Mr. Speaker, is from Joyce Peeke, a resident of south Edmonton, expressing her concern about unfair bargaining that she has experienced for local 003, chapter 008. She's a 24-year employee of the Alberta government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Were there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate it. I have four tablings today. The first is on behalf of a constituent, Mr. Malcolm Ball, who is writing regarding prospective changes to labour law . . . [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order. We'll deal with it afterwards.

Mr. MacDonald: Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hancock: You don't interrupt question period for points of order, but it's appropriate at other times.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. What's your point of order?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Tablings to the Clerk were called and the Routine was finished.

The Deputy Speaker: We had some left over.

Mr. Hancock: But the Clerk called Tablings to the Clerk.

The Deputy Speaker: I believe it was premature on his part because I still had some on the list. It was a lack of communication, hon. minister, so we're continuing on with this program.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After that interruption I will start over.

The Deputy Speaker: Continue from where you left, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. On behalf of Mr. Malcolm Ball, a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, I would like to table the following letter, which is indicating that we must change Alberta's labour laws in five significant ways.

The second tabling I have is a letter dated September 6, 2007, to the hon. Minister of Energy. This is in regard to the government's slow elimination of the regulated rate option and forcing up power bills.

My third tabling is on behalf of a constituent, Olga Sandberg, who also is very concerned about Alberta's labour laws and is suggesting in this letter that there be five significant changes.

My last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from a constituent from Edmonton-Gold Bar by the name of Mr. Justin Fex. Mr. Justin Fex is also writing requesting that there be five significant changes to Alberta's labour laws.

Thank you very much for your patience. I appreciate it.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Deputy Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

You may be seated.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. When a second or subsequent set of estimates is to be tabled, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that an amended fiscal plan also be tabled. Accordingly, I wish to table the 2007-2008 quarterly budget report for the second quarter, which serves as the amended fiscal plan. This quarterly report was provided to all MLAs on November 20. I also made this report public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The quarterly report tabled by the Minister of Finance provides the framework for additional spending authority for 16 departments of the government. I now wish to table the 2007-08 supplementary supply estimates. These will provide additional spending authority to 16 departments of the government.

When passed, the estimates will authorize approximate increases of about $1.5 billion in voted expense and equipment purchases. The majority of these estimates are for the savings, with $825 million going to the heritage fund and $408 million for capital projects, including capital maintenance and renewal and affordable housing. This is available from higher than anticipated fourth quarter results from last fiscal year and this year to date. The remainder of the estimates are for $197 million in disaster emergency assistance, and $68 million for public service and salary settlements, contracted agency recruitment and retention initiatives, and the Fort McMurray allowance. Also, an additional requirement of $15 million in statutory nonbudgetary disbursements is disclosed in these estimates. Disaster emergency assistance is funded through the sustainability fund, and other changes are addressed through dedicated revenue, expense changes, or the contingency allowance announced at budget.

Mr. Speaker, as was reported yesterday at second quarter, it is important to note that due to lapses operating expenses remain lower than forecast at budget.

head: Government Motions

32. Mr. Snelgrove moved:

Be it resolved that the message of His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2007-08 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion. Does anyone wish to?

The hon. President of the Treasury Board to close debate?

[Government Motion 32 carried]

33. Mr. Snelgrove moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2007-08 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

[Government Motion 33 carried]

Bill 41

Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate November 14: Mr. Oberle]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River? Are there any others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand and speak to the issues of Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. Let me say that this is a bill that raises significant concerns for many of the professions, not only the health professionals. It amends the Health Professions Act to require immediate notification of the medical officer of health, and it amends the Health Professions Act and the Medical Profession Act to give the minister the power to replace the functions of the College of Physicians and Surgeons or to direct the college to adopt bylaws, regulations, and standards.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this raises some significant concerns for the medical profession in particular but all health professionals as it empowers the minister to make orders directing the college to adopt a code of ethics for standards of practice, to appoint an administrator to carry out powers and duties of the college if in the opinion of the minister it would be in the public interest. He could make any regulation, bylaw, code of ethics, or standard of practice that a council may make, and those decisions override any made by the college. This is both a heavy-handed and an unnecessary intervention by the minister, and it violates the principle of self-regulation that this government has said it was committed to over several decades. It raises a number of questions, most fundamental of which is: what problem is being addressed by this, and what is the best way to solve it?

Infection control practices, which appear to have been a stimulus for this new amendment, identify roles and responsibilities for infection control that include the Alberta Department of Health and Wellness itself. It's not clear where the responsibility for some of these breakdowns lies, but quite apart from that there are gross underfunding problems in the Alberta health ministry, low morale is well known, and it may prove just as constructive to look within the department to look at ways that we can improve the supervision and management of infection control in the province.

Another question in relation to this is the question that this amendment may prohibit or discourage doctors from criticizing government and health authorities from pointing out other shortfalls to the system. It's clearly not in the best interests of improving quality of health and improving relations with the medical profession to intervene in such a heavy-handed way.

A further question would be: how does the minister determine the public interest? Again, it's very unclear that politicians would have a better sense of what represents the public interest than those individuals who have spent their lives studying and committed to improving the public health.

Yet another question is: why is the minister undermining the self-governance process that this Legislative Assembly empowered them to have? Would the minister feel equally strongly about other professions, including the legal profession, if this is an important oversight that all professions may need by this government?

A further question relates to that of the cabinet role. Would the cabinet be in a better position to set standards of practice for medical professionals than these professionals themselves? Should politics be in a position to trump professional ethical bodies and their codes?

Yet another question that the minister may wish to answer is why he's focusing this draconian change on the health professions. Surely we have equal and serious concerns with all professions in Alberta.

Finally, will the health minister accept the liability associated with making decisions that affect the practice of medicine in this province, especially if it involves changing the roles and responsibilities of one profession in relation to others? If there are concerns or a failure of communication, as may have occurred in the infection control problems in Alberta East Central, surely the most appropriate and constructive response would be to identify those concerns and participate in solving them.

It's unfortunate that the ministry of health has chosen to use a significant breakdown in infection control practice as an excuse to violate decades-old trust given to a deeply revered profession in the province. This does not bode well in a province struggling to meet minimum health professional numbers and practices.

So it's difficult for this particular member to support this health professions statutes amendment, and I think it would not be in the best interests of the public health and all Albertans to support this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to speak about Bill 41 in second reading, Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. Along with my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View I am also concerned about the kind of powers that are allocated to the Minister of Health and Wellness under this act. It seems to me that the effect of Bill 41 will give the Minister of Health and Wellness power to dictate codes of conduct, namely ethical and practice standards, of the various occupational groups that are covered by the Health Professions Act. It gives the minister power to dictate bylaws; that is, internal constitution and rules. It gives the minister power to order a council to do anything the council can do. It gives the minister power to take over the operation of any of the health profession self-regulatory bodies.

In part 8.1, 135.1, which indicates the minister's direction and the powers of the minister in respect to health care, if you ask the question "What is the safeguard against the misuse of such powers?" the only safeguard really mentioned here is the notion of the minister's opinion whether it is in the public interest or not if the minister interferes or participates and directs the council to do anything. That gives a tremendous amount of leeway, I think, or latitude for the minister because it's open to a tremendous amount of interpretation. What is in the public interest?

I think that's too broad. I don't think that's really in the interest of the regulation of the professions. I mean, Mr. Speaker, this bill seems to actually lead to the negation of the principle of self-regulation because it's suggesting that it's not sufficient for physicians under the college of physicians to regulate themselves. There's going to be some sort of oversight and interference in their ability to self-regulate. I mean, what are such statutes for when it comes to the professions if not to establish the right of professions to regulate themselves? Surely that's what we have in place when we look at various other professions. I might refer to Law Society in this respect. When we have these kinds of acts, they establish the parameters upon which the profession is going to regulate itself. To have this kind of statement in this bill seems to undermine the very authority of a profession to regulate itself.

Now, in the minister of health's explanation in second reading of this kind of change and this amendment in this bill the minister explained. He said, "I want to be very clear that it's not my intention as minister and it's not government's intention, nor would it be appropriate, for us to step in and do things with respect to the standards of practice or the codes of conduct." Well, Mr. Speaker, if that's the case, why have legislative powers to be able to step in if it's not their intention to step in? It seems to me to be inappropriate to have this kind of component in the bill. If the intention is not really to interfere with the ability of the profession to establish its own code of conduct and ethics, then why have legislation like this, which outlines the possibility of being able to interfere?

Now, I agree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View that if we look at the problem – the minister, when he looked at the issue of the problem that it's trying to address, named the complexity of the health care system, the multidisciplinary team approach, questions of collaboration between different professions. He mentioned, you know, the need for a synergizing of standards. Those are the words he used: standards "are synergized." But it seems to me that the solution to that is not through some sort of legislative authority that's laid on the professions. It seems to me that the professions, in dialogue with people in government and, namely, the Department of Health and Wellness, can certainly move forward in a collaborative way to share their expertise and to develop ways of dealing with the complexities of the health care system today.

I have a real problem once you pass legislation like this. Then the onus is on the department to provide some sort of expertise to be able to make decisions about these kinds of things when it's the people in the profession that have the expertise. I've done a lot of reading about bioethics in the past, and it seems to me that of all the professions that we have in our society, it's physicians and nurses, the health care practitioners, who have made the greatest advances in ethics and have developed codes of ethics that apply to their team approach in making decisions within a hospital setting and so on. I don't see the necessity of this kind of imposition through the role of the ministry.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, what we are doing with Bill 1 and Bill 2 in this Legislature is improving on our own codes of ethics for ourselves, so we as members of this Legislature are determining what is the code of ethics that applies to us. No one outside of the Legislature is imposing a code of ethics on us although it is true that we are responsible to the general public. But we are articulating and we are passing legislation outlining a code of ethics for ourselves, and surely that's what all professions are doing, and the physicians and the nurses have done it very well.

Mr. Speaker, I really take objection to this kind of imposition of authority from government upon a profession like the physicians and health care practitioners. My only question is: what profession is next? The legal profession: is that the profession that's next? And so we continue along a path of authoritarianism, which to me is not in the interests of professional development and the freedoms that professionals have to do their work and to get together and determine what are best practices and what is the kind of ethics that they're supposed to follow.

Those are the remarks that I have, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an RN I stand here today very, very troubled with what I see on the pages before me. I returned to school as a mature student. I think that probably might be up for discussion about the definition of mature. However, I felt I was mature, and I worked very, very hard to get my RN. I also believe that once I graduated, I delivered very good care as a geriatric specialist. I loved my job, and I did it well. But now this is making me feel like I'm a widget in some system. I was very proud of the decisions that I could make as a professional because I had to make them often on the fly, but I could stand up and defend the decisions that I'd made because I was that professional. As I mentioned before, I think I feel now like a widget in the system.

An Hon. Member: Bridget the widget.

Ms Pastoor: A Bridget widget. You betcha. I want to feel like Bridget the nurse, not a widget.

Section 8 amends section 36, and it talks about adding criteria that fees have to be paid in order to become a regulated member. That also troubles me. In the old days, prior to this bill – which I hope will be defeated, but never mind – I really believe that the RN association, which was the AARN, which is now CARNA, actually had a very, very strong fiscal policy and were very responsible with the fees that we gave them, the registration fees. They had a very small staff, and they did huge jobs with the staff that they had. My fear with this one is that the increase could go in fees to pay for a huge bureaucratic administration that would be required in looking after these fees. They should not leave the profession.

One of the things that I think may have triggered this although it looks like it may have been in the works for a while is the infection control episode which occurred in one of our health regions. The minister stepped in – rightly so, certainly, at that point – and took over that particular problem and got it solved. However, it's at that point that he should have also stepped back because infection control really boils down to cleanliness. The dollars were cut in the middle '90s, and by cutting those dollars, we also cut the cleaning staff. I believe that that's where part of that infection control is. Even today we can go through hospitals that are public hospitals that really aren't clean, never mind sterile. Let's just go for clean.

The other thing that I have noticed with that particular episode is that there were dollars put towards the solution of that problem. I'm not sure where those dollars have gone, and what has really happened in the real world is that the cleaning component has now been downloaded onto PCAs and to some extent even the LPNs. So now we've got PCAs running around doing what actually should be cleaning staff duties, and now the residents have got even less of the PCA's time.

I'm getting a lot of letters and e-mails to that effect, that PCAs are feeling downloaded upon because of this infection control, and I'm not sure where those dollars went. They may have gone to, God forbid, another study. However, all they have to do is send the money down to the front lines, and the jobs will get done.

The RNs have been a self-governing profession in Alberta since 1916. Three weeks ago in this House we talked about real estate, and we actually gave them the ability to self-regulate. Surely, if real estate agents are capable of self-regulating, RNs, that have been doing it since 1916, certainly should be able to do it. Registered nurses have worked very hard to earn the privilege of self-governance, and the current level of public trust in our profession is very, very high. In fact, might I suggest that the public trust in an RN is a whole pile higher than the public trust in a politician despite the fact that I'm both.

Wellness is the ultimate responsibility for public safety. It does fall under the minister of health. However, I do believe that self-regulation should not come under a minister's jurisdiction. CARNA doesn't have the jurisdiction to review the policies and processes of health authorities, but what they did have and how they did address the infection control episode was that they had specific directions and guidelines for their members, particularly in the self-employed practice, who often then made sure that those guidelines were passed down to the actual front-line workers, the RNs who were really delivering that care.

CARNA also recognizes that infection prevention and control is a science, and it requires a considerable depth of expertise available at that service level. The expertise must be accessible to all health providers, and to be able to get it to those health providers, I believe that RNs are probably the ones that are best qualified for that.

CARNA is also concerned about sections 135.1, 135.2, 135.4 of this bill because it provides sweeping powers to the minister of health or to the Lieutenant Governor to direct that a council of a college adopt a code of ethics, adopt a standard of practice, adopt regulations, and carry out any power or duty of a council under the Health Professions Act in the absence of parameters clarifying prudent use. The proposed amendments can erode self-governance and were developed without the benefit of consultation with the health professionals affected by them.

Again, I see this government not talking to the people on the front lines. It's important to recognize that the foundation of public trust must be very, very clear, that the public totally trusts the people that are delivering their health care. You are at your most vulnerable when you're sick or in an accident and you need the care of an RN or another health care professional, i.e. a doctor or a pharmacist. You want to be able to close your eyes and know that you're going to be looked after.

Damaging the credibility of a profession is not in the public interest, and it's another reason that CARNA recommends clarifying the purpose of giving the minister such sweeping powers. What is the purpose? Why would he want those powers when it's worked well for so long? The precedent has been for government to take a collaborative approach to the college to resolve an identified issue. CARNA certainly supports this approach rather than enacting very broad legislation, which, again, could erode self-governance for all colleges. I believe that in the past this collaborative process has worked very well and served the people of Alberta in terms of being able to trust their public health care.

Section 135.2 allows the minister to appoint an administrator to take over the running of a college. There must be a clarification of the type of situation which would justify allowing the self-governing role of a college to be revoked using a ministerial order. This is very, very troublesome. I think this has to be clarified. If it has to be clarified to such a narrow degree, then why bother with it in the first place? If the intent of this is to provide support for small colleges, there really are other ways. Very small colleges could be partnered with larger ones which have the infrastructure to support them. I'm thinking, perhaps, that under the umbrella of CARNA we could have LPNs, that we could have psych nurses and also PCAs. At this point in time we are hiring people with less than two weeks of experience to work in an industry where vulnerable people are counting on them. We really, simply must have PCA training that could then give them that designation of a PCA professional that could be well looked after and come under CARNA.

The fees in this section 1(7), which amends 28(1)(b), is going to now refer to fees as an application fee. My questions would be: who is this going to become payable to? Would it go to CARNA, or will it fall into that black hole called the general revenue? If it does, then CARNA may be very, very strapped in terms of running its own organization, which really, really, really isn't fair. Should this bill go through, these dollars simply must stay in CARNA so that they can run the organization that they've been running since 1916.

The complaint resolution also troubles me as an RN. As an RN I want a fellow peer to be able to review my behaviour if someone has made a complaint. I want to be sure that all the information is there and that it is totally understood by someone. I could probably agree to an appeal panel that would be outside, perhaps, of CARNA or a professional complaint process. If someone feels that they haven't been fairly dealt with within their own profession, an outside appeal I could support. However, to actually take it out right off the top as a nurse I find really offensive.

I think that nurses have had, certainly, a proud hundred-year history of working collaboratively with the government, but I also think that if nurses hadn't had this self-regulation, we wouldn't have the profession that it has grown into today. We have PhDs in nursing. I doubt very much if this would have happened, if it would have had the opportunity to grow if it was under a government ministry that probably could well be peopled by people who have never even been near a hospital or physically cared for someone or physically stood beside a bed and realized that that vulnerable person only had you.

Sections 135.1, 135.2, and 135.4 should be deferred and should certainly be reassessed to enhance provisions for transparency and accountability. All of this should be very, very open. I feel that if it disappears into a ministry, it will go, again, onto some shelf, into some hole, and it'll take forever. It may well take FOIP to get it out, and as we all know, FOIP comes back with lots of black marks on the pages, so you're really back where you started from.

I would leave you with one thought. Good governance starts in the Legislature, but if you don't listen to the people who work in the system – and that would certainly be the nurses, the doctors, and the pharmacists – then it is doomed to fail. For the many reasons that I have just reiterated, I simply cannot support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there others that wish to participate in the debate?

Does the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness wish to close debate?

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments that have been brought forward today with respect to Bill 41. I can let members of the House know that I have been having discussions with members of the professions, in particular the College of Physicians and Surgeons, CARNA, and the College of Pharmacists, with respect to certain sections of the act. I do anticipate that in Committee of the Whole we will be bringing forward some amendments to help deal with some of the issues or concerns that they have.

We won't be going all the way with respect to those amendments, and we won't be going all the way for a very simple reason. When the public is concerned about an issue, where they look for assurance is to their government, not to the colleges. While I'm a very strong supporter of self-regulation for professions – it's an absolutely important concept – it's not an absolute concept. Self-regulation is delegated to professions by act of the Legislature. When there are issues with respect to health – if there's a SARS pandemic, if there's an issue with respect to water quality – it's not the health professionals from whom the public requires accountability. It is the government, and it's the minister of health. The amendments that are being proposed in Bill 41 are not in fact intended to be derogation of the self-governance of the profession but, rather, to ensure that government has the ability, the role, and authority to carry out its duty of assurance to the public. That is the long and the short of it.

Now, I've indicated, I believe, in opening comments that with respect to sections 135.1, 135.2, 135.3, obviously, when you use language like "if in the opinion of the Minister," that is interpreted at law as acting reasonably. It's not a question of waving a magic wand or showing up one day in the office and saying: oh, it's my opinion that this should be changed. There is a course of construct with respect to statutes that requires an act being reasonably processed.

So it's not a question of the minister or the government interfering with professions just because it wants to, but it is a question, Mr. Speaker, of being able to play that role of assurance, which is so important in a public health system. Particularly in an environment where we're seeing an increase in complexity in the system, where we're encouraging health care professions to work together collaboratively, that all health care professionals ought to be allowed to act to the full extent of their capability, training, and expertise, there needs to be standards of practice, codes of conduct, et cetera, that work synergistically together, that work collaboratively and, as well, when health care professionals are employed or work in the context of a health facility, that the standards of practice and the way in which they operate works in concert with the standards which are expected of the health facility.

Yes, there is a role for the minister of health and for government in making sure that those things happen, not in telling the health professions what to do – they obviously are the experts in the area – but in making sure that when essential issues are necessarily discussed, there's a process in place and an ability for the minister to play a role in bringing the health care professions to make sure that those concerns are addressed and, then, if that in the last resort doesn't work, to be able to direct the profession to do it.

Now, one of the questions that was raised was with respect to it being done by the Lieutenant Governor in Council rather than by the minister. Well, if you read the construct of the bill and the act, the minister can in fact order under the provisions of this act. But if that order is not complied with – in other words, if a college doesn't follow that order – then if you want to change the bylaw or the code, you have to come back and do it by Lieutenant Governor in Council. So in fact that provision is already implicit – well, actually explicit – in the way that both the bill and the act are drafted.

A number of the concerns that are being raised I believe have been addressed. Some of the other concerns will be addressed when we bring forward amendments in committee. So I would ask the members to vote in favour of this bill at second reading because it's essential, in my view, that government have the ability to respond. Quite frankly, I'm surprised that the opposition doesn't believe it necessary for there to be a comprehensive health system and accountability at the apex of that health system, in the minister and in the government, to make sure that the public of Alberta are protected.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 40 Personal Directives Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole to present Bill 40, the Personal Directives Amendment Act. I appreciate the support this legislation received in second reading. It is indeed progressive legislation that helps Albertans plan for a time when they may not be able to make their own personal decisions.

Before I respond to the questions that were raised in second reading, I would like to give a brief recap of the elements included in the Personal Directives Amendment Act. Bill 40 will amend the Personal Directives Act, the legislation that allows Albertans to write down their wishes about personal matters in case they are ever unable to speak for themselves. This legislation allows Albertans to lay out instructions for personal decisions like health care and where they want to live. It also lets them choose someone to act on their behalf and make decisions according to their specified wishes.

The Personal Directives Amendment Act will update this important legislation through providing a voluntary form and a voluntary registry, allowing parents to include in their personal directive provisions for minor children, recognizing planning tools from outside the province, adding a new method for reassessing capacity should the maker of a personal directive regain their decision-making ability, clarifying the roles and responsibilities of the substitute decision-maker, the agent, allowing the office of the public guardian to investigate complaints about the actions of an agent, and, finally, allowing the office of the public guardian to act as the guardian of last resort should an Albertan be without a family member or friend who could act as an agent. Mr. Chairman, all of these amendments will strengthen the Personal Directives Act and ensure that it continues to meet the needs of Albertans now and in the future.

I would like to now address some of the questions that arose during second reading of Bill 40. One of the defining characteristics of this legislation is that it's voluntary. Albertans have the freedom to write a personal directive if they want and when they want, and now they will have the freedom to either fill in a voluntary standard form or use the form as a guide. This is a very personal document, and we don't want to prescribe to Albertans how they should write it. A voluntary standard form will make it easier for Albertans to write a personal directive but will also allow them to have the kitchen table approach, which gives them the freedom to write a personal directive when and how they feel compelled. As well, many lawyers can use their own forms with clients.

There was strong support for a standard form during the legislative review consultations, but Albertans did not want it to be mandatory; they wanted a choice. We also feel that choice is important for the creation of a personal directive in the first place. We agree that young people should plan for their futures and that more public education to reach this audience should be a priority. The suggestion to reach high school students through the career and life management program will be followed up through consultation with Alberta Education.

One hon. member brought up possible confusion around planning documents from outside the province. Bill 40 requires that directives made outside Alberta must meet the requirements of personal directives under our act. These requirements include that a document is written, dated, signed, and witnessed and is about personal matters. This is expected to be a simple process for health care providers. Once again, it's written, dated, signed, and witnessed. If there are any questions, they can contact the office of the public guardian. Translation services would normally be available if the problem is that a person does not speak English well or that the personal directive is not written in English.

During second reading a few hon. members asked about the role of the office of the public guardian as investigator. The investigation process is clearly outlined in Bill 40 and will be further detailed in the regulations. If the maker is concerned about an agent's decision, they will be able to submit a written complaint to the office of the public guardian. If the complaint meets the criteria in the act in section 24.2(2), then the decision of the agent would be investigated. All complaints will be reviewed, and all complainants will be informed if an investigation will proceed or not.

To resolve a complaint, the public guardian could take the matter to court following an investigation or use alternative dispute resolution mechanisms or the complainant could take the matter to court. There is no administrative appeal process set out in the act, but the court can review the decisions of an agent. In the case where the public guardian is acting as agent and there is a complaint, the public guardian has the ability to delegate the authority to investigate to a neutral third party to avoid a conflict-of-interest situation. The third party would have all the same responsibilities to investigate the actions of the public guardian as agent.

The question of regained capacity seemed to be the issue most raised during second reading. Capacity is defined in section 1(b) of the Personal Directives Act, not in this bill. We are not changing that definition. "Capacity" means the ability to understand the information that is relevant to the making of a personal decision and the ability to appreciate the reasonably foreseeable consequences of the decision."

Bill 40 outlines the required process for determining whether a maker has regained the capacity to make a decision about a personal matter. The agent is required to initiate an assessment if they believe that the maker has had a significant change in their condition, change meaning an observable and sustained improvement that does not appear to be temporary. The assessment includes consultation with a service provider who is providing health care services to the maker and may include interviewing the maker, reviewing health care records, and discussing the matter with others who may have contact with the maker.

If both the agent and service provider agree that there has been a significant change, then they complete the determination of regained capacity form and the personal directive is deactivated and the maker regains their decision-making powers in that personal area. Once a determination of regained capacity has been completed with respect to an area of authority – for example, health care treatment or all areas of personal authority – the adult is considered to have the capacity to decide on their treatment and be legally competent in this decision-making area.

A health care provider can also initiate an assessment of regained capacity if they notice a significant change. They consult with the agent and follow a similar process as the one that I just talked about. If there is a disagreement between the agent and the health care provider on whether the maker has regained capacity, a full neutral assessment needs to be completed by service providers, one of whom must be a doctor or a psychologist.

The maker also has many choices to trigger a reassessment if they feel they have regained their capacity. They can ask the agent or any health care provider who provides a health care service to them to do an assessment of regained capacity or ask the office of the public guardian or an interested person to consult with their agent on their behalf. They may also take the matter to court and ask the court to make a determination of capacity.

All of these options will ensure that if the maker of a personal directive does regain their ability to make decisions, their personal directive can be deactivated, and they regain control of their own decision-making. Personal directives speak for Albertans who cannot speak for themselves. These amendments ensure that Albertans have choices, freedom, and that safeguards are in place to ensure that agents are acting in their best interests.

I am encouraged by the support this legislation received in second reading. I hope that I have addressed all of the hon. members' concerns. I urge all members to support Bill 40, the Personal Directives Amendment Act, important legislation that helps Albertans plan for their futures.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Certainly, I commend my fellow colleague from across the way. This is an excellent bill. It is so needed. I will speak further to the bill after I raise my amendment. I believe that it is being passed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, there is an amendment being circulated, and the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East will be moving that amendment momentarily. We shall refer to this as amendment A1.

You may proceed.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The proposed amendment to this amendment of the original bill reads as so: "The Public Guardian must conduct an investigation where there are reasonable grounds to believe that the complainant has been, or will be harmed mentally or physically."

One of the reasons that I bring this forward – it's a small tweaking, if you will – is that I really believe it strengthens the authority of the public guardian by having very clear guidelines in the act rather than in the regulations. Often persons with discretionary powers, particularly when someone is dealing with someone's life or their personal safety or, in fact, just their personal care may feel more comfortable because it is quite a bit different than making a decision about increasing the number of widgets that a factory may turn out.

Bill 40 in section 24.3, the new provision for the investigation of complaints by the public guardian of situations involving the failure of an agent to comply with the personal directive or the duties of an agent, currently says that "the Public Guardian must review a complaint to decide whether an investigation of the complaint is necessary and must notify the complainant of the decision."

I believe that what I'm bringing forward strengthens that by saying that they must review the complaints. It's important as it explicitly states that an investigation by the public guardian is mandatory if there's a reason to believe that physical and/or mental harm to the maker has or is likely to occur. Making an investigation mandatory when harm is evident adds further protection to the maker of a personal directive. When makers write down their wishes, they want that total peace of mind that they know that there will be somebody out there to fight for what has been their wishes, certainly for their end of life and even when they're younger.

There are stories that cross my desk about people who are afraid to come forward. I think that if people knew that that public guardian would go ahead and investigate complaints, they wouldn't have the fear that they have today to come forward. It would give them the comfort to know that they wouldn't be ostracized and, in terms of staff, lose their jobs if they would come forward to make complaints. The other thing that sometimes happen is that families could be complaining about the care or the agent could be complaining about the care that the person they're in charge of would be receiving, and sometimes institutions' attitude to that is: well, if you don't like them, take your loved one home. That's not good enough.

I believe that this is where the public guardian could step in and protect people who have the courage to come forward. It establishes a mandatory duty for the public guardian to review complaints about an agent, but the duty of the public guardian to investigate these complaints is discretionary. Discretionary authority is not problematic on its own; however, there are no explicit criteria for determining when an investigation would be conducted by the public guardian.

should specify the test to be applied by the public guardian in the course of deciding whether or not to conduct an investigation. If the test is met, a mandatory duty should be to investigate, and it should be triggered at that point. This same threshold is applied in the context of investigations of child abuse and neglect under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act.

A similar recommendation was also made by the western Canada law review agencies in its report in relation to investigation of complaints about attorneys under the EPA. That report recommends that investigation should be mandatory where the public official has reasonable grounds to believe that the donor of the EPA has been declared incapable and that the attorney has breached one or more of the attorney duties listed in the EPA. I believe that the comfort zone that this would create would be appreciated by all people who have these discretionary powers.

I would ask the House for support for this amendment for what I believe would strengthen what is already a very good bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for her proposal; however, the current wording of the proposed section 24.3(1) states that "the Public Guardian must review a complaint to decide whether an investigation of the complaint is necessary and must notify the complainant of the decision." The criteria for determining whether a complaint must be investigated are already set out in section 24.2(1) of Bill 40. We should retain the dual criteria of the complainant having reason to believe that

- (a) an agent of the maker is failing to comply with the personal directive or the duties of an agent, and
- (b) the failure is likely to cause harm to the physical or mental health of the maker.

The public guardian should have the authority to screen out complaints that don't meet both criteria before an investigation is commenced.

The existing language also recognizes that there are many agencies responsible for adult protection, and there will be cases where it is appropriate for others to investigate a situation. Examples would be the police or investigators with the protection for persons in care program. We didn't want to create a situation in which the public guardian would be compelled to do an investigation while someone else was already investigating.

For these reasons I respectfully recommend that we do not support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Would anyone wish to participate on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I support this amendment. This is a very, very difficult situation that we're looking at and considering, and I think the amendment strengthens what's here by specifically pointing to the issue of "where there are reasonable grounds to believe the complainant has been, or will be harmed mentally or physically."

There is a case that I had to deal with where a husband came to see me. His wife had a seizure and was debilitated and ended up under care and actually ended up under the care of the public guardian. Even though he was married to her, he was not allowed to be the agent or to have any guardianship whatsoever. He was concerned about the actual care of his wife and complained about the care that she was receiving, but his loud complaints did not meet with any kind of positive response on the part of the public guardian's office. In fact, he was actually excluded from ever seeing her.

I think that having some sort of clause here that ensures that the public guardian must conduct an investigation, especially when there is indication that a patient under care is being harmed mentally or physically – I realize that this has to do with personal directives. In the case that I was referring to, there were no personal directives involved, so maybe that's outside of the parameters of what this bill would cover, but it does still point out the need for vigilance here to make sure that we are actually covering all the cases that we need to cover.

I think this amendment does add a dimension that's not present in the bill, so I would support it, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm also rising in support of my colleague from Lethbridge-East's amendment on Bill 40, the Personal Directives Amendment Act, 2007. I've had a similar experience, actually, in my office just recently to what was just described by Edmonton-Glenora. We're talking a personal directive, which ideally is done while someone is of full faculty and then is possibly implemented when they're not or when they're quite ill; that is, it's ranking along the same level as the trusteeship and the guardianship laws that we have in place. What I'm seeing in my office is that increasingly there are more shades of grey. Either we understand declining mental faculties and acuity more than we used to and see those many gradated shades of grey or perhaps there actually are more levels of that. I'm not the expert to be making a definitive statement on that, but I certainly see the effect of that.

I'm frustrated in some of the other areas I'm dealing with, like trusteeship and guardianship but also personal directives, in how you question these once they're in place. The Member for Lethbridge-East is clearly trying to capture that in saying that there has to be an investigation that takes place "where there are reasonable grounds" – we're not going to, you know, just go charging off on this one – "to believe that a complainant has been, or will be harmed mentally or physically." I think it's important to have those double checks in place there. We can start on this one, and I think we need to move on and look at the trustee arrangements and the guardianship arrangements in Alberta as well.

The other reason that I want to bring this up is that, to me, the personal directives is closely tied to another bill before the House at this time, which is Bill 31. That is a bill that is amending the Mental Health Act to implement or institute community treatment orders. When I spoke about that bill in second reading, I had recommended that personal directives should be used for people that are finding themselves in that situation – that is, they have a mental illness, they're diagnosed schizophrenic or bipolar, I suppose, some other kind of psychosis; not that bipolar is a psychosis – when they are in better health, in clear thinking to be able to make the choices about the kind of health care they're going to receive by issuing a personal directive. When/if their situation deteriorated, they stop taking the drugs, something happened to them, they get ill, whatever, the personal directive could then be brought into play to determine how they would get medical treatment.

I think it's increasingly important as we move forward that people are able to choose or even refuse medical treatment. I think this amendment would also be useful when we look at that idea of someone who may be subject to a community treatment order or perhaps is likely to be subject to a community treatment order. We need to be able to safeguard that there isn't a mental or a physical harm or threat – and I think threat is equally valid – in the way that they're being treated.

We're uncomfortable around people that have mental illness. We're very quick to go, "Oh, they've got a mental illness. That scares me. I'm not going to deal with them," and we back away. We tend not to ever go back to them, so if somebody had a bad day – why is it that all of us are allowed to have a bad day except for people with mental illness? When they have a bad day, that's it. They're tarnished with that forevermore, and people won't deal with them. They won't go back to them and go: "Okay. Was that really true? Was that really happening to you? Are you feeling better today? Is that person still bothering you?" We don't go back and check. From then on anything the person says, it's – cue the scary music, you know – "They're dangerous. They're crazy. We're not going to deal with this anymore." I think we need to be particularly careful as a result of that.

I'm reminded of a small episode that I had with someone that I was visiting in long-term care. You know, they started talking about something, and to me it did not connect with anything that we'd been talking about. I thought: "Oh, oh" – cue the scary music – "this is it. They've lost it. They've lost their faculties. They've gone into dementia-land. They're never coming back." There was somebody else in the room with me who actually said: "Just a minute. They were watching television while you were doing something else. What they're talking about was actually on the TV a few minutes ago."

What it was was an older person talking about those games, Xbox, and those animated, computer-generated games. In my head, an older person, a geriatric person, talking about these young people's games: I thought they didn't know what they were talking about. Where on earth could this have come from? Well, it turned out they were watching TV. It was perfectly legitimate. But I'd already put it in my head that this was not expected or not legitimate. I think that as we move forward with people living longer lives, more likely to have multiple injuries or diseases that they are moving through life with – and we're going to live longer now. Probably the generation that we have in our pages here will live to be 100 and more. Yeah, they're going to be 90. They're going to have diabetes and a new hip and probably a new ankle. They probably will have had laser surgery on their eyes. You know, we're living longer, but the parts are wearing out, and we're replacing them.

We have to be particularly careful that we don't make those kinds of decisions for people without there being a double-check clause, which is what the Member for Lethbridge-East is trying to accomplish with this amendment. I encourage people to give it another look. I think we have to be very careful.

I really like the idea of personal directives. I think that would be a solution for many people, to be able to leave a clear indication of how they want health and other matters dealt with if they're not conscious and/or available to direct those actions around them, but we have to make sure that we don't put them in a position where assumptions have been made and then not let them be able to reverse that.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate on the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East? Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Very briefly,

I stand in support of my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East, who brought the amendment to the floor. I don't think that this amendment is offensive, shouldn't be looked at as offensive to anyone in this House. What she's doing is basically something that really makes sense. You know, a review is one thing; mandating an investigation is another thing. What she's trying to say here is that the public guardian must review a complaint to decide whether an investigation of the complaint is necessary and must notify the complainant of the decision.

I don't think this should be looked at as anything that is aggressive to the sponsor of the bill. It is something that offers clarity. It is something that offers direction. It's a question of a review that is discretionary versus an investigation that is mandatory. I honestly don't think that there is any valid reason for the government side to reject this amendment. Nothing in it, you know, contradicts the bill. Nothing in it actually changes the intent of the bill or the content. It basically sheds more light. It offers the clarity that whenever something is worthy of an investigation, it should be investigated, and the results of that investigation or that decision should be communicated to the complainant.

Her amendment reads: "The Public Guardian must conduct an investigation where there are reasonable grounds to believe that the complainant has been, [in the past] or will be [in the future] harmed mentally or physically." Again, I emphasize that this is actually sort of a friendly amendment to the bill before us. I urge all members from the government as well as my colleagues in the opposition to support it. I certainly do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to be very short, but I'd like to point out two things. I believe that for two reasons this amendment is not necessary. The intention of the amendment is already covered in the existing legislation. The public guardian uses two criteria to determine whether a complaint should go to a full-blown investigation.

But I would also like to point out that the language of the amendment does not appear to me to be accurate, and that is because it says: "where there are reasonable grounds to believe that the complainant has been, or will be harmed mentally or physically." The complainant is not normally the person that will be harmed. The complainant is an agent or somebody representing the maker. It's the maker that we're worried about, the person who cannot make their own decisions. We're worried about them. So the language in the amendment is questionable as well.

I would like to go ahead and recommend that we do not support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill as it is, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to make a couple of comments and just lay out the problems I see developing, that we probably can't do much with the bill. I think it's certainly a good thing that we're trying to make a standard form because often this gets very confusing for people. That's an excellent, excellent suggestion.

Basically, I'm going to support the bill, but there's one thing that I just want to talk about briefly because I do think it's a problem that we're hearing about and we may hear more about. Section 10.1(4) describes what should happen when a person regains capacity to make their own decisions. I know the member said that they looked at the terms for capacity in the previous bill, if I understood it right, and they think that it's adequate. That may well be; I don't know. But I also know that for a lot of elder advocates this has become a major issue. They believe that this capacity is being abused often. They've had news conferences about it. The member is probably aware of that. I'm not sure in legislation how you do that. I don't have a great suggestion to make about how you would lay out that capacity, but I think that we have to be cognizant that this is a growing issue. As I say, I know that elder advocates are certainly making it a political issue that people have their rights being taken away and they believe the capacity is there, and they don't have any way to fight back.

As I said, I'm just throwing out the problem. I'm not sure if in legislation you can do that or not. But as we have an aging population, I think this is going to become more and more of an issue. Once again, I'm going to certainly support the bill, but maybe we should take a look at that whole area because, as I say, politically it's going to be, I think, a growing issue. So just a caution in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Despite having my amendment defeated, I certainly stand to support this bill. I support it as a health care worker because if I have to make instant decisions – and I really am more, I think, projecting myself into an emergency room – I really want to know what those people need me to do.

I think another place where this comes in, certainly as a health care worker, is when decisions are made to insert feeding tubes. If someone wants that feeding tube, then you insert it, but if they've said no, then it's really up to that maker's designated agent to make sure that it isn't, because when you insert a feeding tube, that person can well be kept alive for many, many years. Then the actual decision has to be made at some point to pull that feeding tube, on which, in fact, death follows fairly shortly. That's one of the reasons that clear directives should be made, and as a health care professional I'm delighted to have this go forward.

Also, I like the idea of having public guardians becoming designated agents because certainly in my experience we did sometimes have people that were homeless and were actually admitted to our care facility because it was the only care facility in town at the time. These people really had no one, and it's not fair that somebody has no one. Public guardians actually did a fairly good job in trying to ascertain what these people needed. More often than not it would be alcohol-induced Alzheimer's or dementia, and they're very, very difficult to deal with. That's where the public guardian really assumes the total responsibility for this human being in their care.

The makers themselves would feel very, very comfortable with this bill, knowing that when they have written down what they want, the person that they've designated as their agent understands it, and they trust that they will fight for them should anything happen to their mental capacities. We in the past have thought about creating these directives, and we've thought about it – certainly, I did probably 20 years ago – in terms of long-term care, and that's really wrong. I think we have to start thinking about personal directives the minute we become adults. The minute someone is 18, they must consider a personal directive.

We have a tremendous amount of young people who are injured in car accidents and, certainly, a number of brain-injured young people as a result of these car accidents. We also have young people who have had strokes. We've had young people with neuromuscular diseases that, again, affect their mental capacities to make decisions. I think that the biggest fear of all of us who have been exposed to this and understand is that we would at some point have Alzheimer's. It is probably one of the worst diseases and one of the worst scenarios that can happen to a family.

When a person gets Alzheimer's and they have passed into that particular phase where they really don't know anyone, when they're cared for and loved and looked after, they really are quite easy to care for. For the caregivers, if they're fortunate enough to work with them on a regular basis, it becomes family, and they learn to love that person very much. But it is absolutely devastating on a family that faithfully comes to visit someone who doesn't even know who they are. Every day you come you just think there might be one little kernel of recognition, that your mom actually might know your name. It's very, very sad.

But to know that you've written it down and to know that when you get to that stage, your family doesn't have to make those decisions, that your family can know that they're doing what your wishes are – it's probably one of the most powerful things that we're doing here today, to allow people to age and die with great dignity.

Ms Blakeman: And by choice. It's a decision-making process.

Ms Pastoor: And by choice. Yes, you're right. My colleague is right. It's a decision-making process that they have full control of.

My hon. colleague from Red Deer-North mentioned about the education component of this and having it put into the CALM program, which I think is absolutely excellent because this is just prior to young people turning 18, and it will certainly help them think about what could possibly happen to them. It certainly may never, but there's always that possibility out there.

It's been happening in the past where people will go to make wills or they look at their estates, but lawyers today are really much more aware of being able to sit down with their clients and talk about these personal directives. The obligation of this – it's not mandatory. I think that over the last number of years many, many people – I think that there are hundreds and thousands of personal directives out there, so it probably won't be necessary to have it mandatory. I think that as education comes along, people will realize that this truly is their personal choice, and it's one of the best things that they can do for their family, that may ultimately have to look after them, whether it's an 18-year-old in a car accident and they've got devastated parents dealing with this or whether it's actually looking after your mother that's 95.

One other thing that I think might be at some point, maybe, even put into the educational component or perhaps discussed with lawyers is that we review our estate planning and we review our mutual funds or we review our retirement plans, certainly on a yearly basis. I know some people might even well do it at six months, and for those of us that don't have money, we look at it daily. I think that reviewing your personal directives: as you mature, your life changes, and as you mature, you change what you really want. An 18-year-old with a brain injury may well, perhaps, not want huge, heroic measures done, but as you get older, people aren't quite as willing to want to move on quicker than their allotted time. So it's very important that it be reviewed and reviewed with that in mind. As you mature, what you perhaps wanted at 18 is not what you would want at 85 or even vice versa.

With that, I again thank the member. I think this is very good, and there'll be many, many people who benefit from this bill. I again applaud the Member for Red Deer-North.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the bill?
Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 40 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 1 Lobbyists Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Hon. members, just as a reminder, the last time we adjourned, we were dealing with amendment A1, and we had completed section F. We are now dealing with section G of amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman for this opportunity, and thank you to my hon. colleagues for the warm reception. Now, as you know, I participated in the Standing Committee on Government Services, which was one of four committees established to act as all-party forums, all-party think tanks. Some of us were tasked with reviewing legislation; some were not and had to figure out what their raison d'être was. We were really pleased that in our committee, of which I was the deputy chair, both Bill 1 and Bill 2 were referred to us. They were fairly important bills, bills that talk about democratic renewal. In particular, Bill 1, that we're talking about now, was something that the Leader of the Official Opposition and, indeed, all members of our caucus campaigned extensively on and support very strongly.

Through at least nine or 10 meetings, if I remember correctly, the committee held meetings, received submissions, invited face-to-face dialogue and feedback, and then had to come up with a report because the Assembly was expecting us to. The Assembly was awaiting a report from the committee to offer suggestions, offer a set of recommendations to all 83 hon. members in this Assembly as to how to proceed. We did that. We worked, and we had excellent support in our committee. The end product, the final result, was a group of recommendations, 11 of them, and we numbered them A, B, C, D, and so on. We covered six of them before, Mr. Chairman, and today, hopefully, we will cover the other five.

Now, part G of amendment A1 talks about the offence of lobbying without filing a return, and it reduces the proposed fines in half. It cuts them in half. Now, the committee was criticized by some that in so doing, we seem to be weakening the bill, that we seem to be sending the wrong message, that, you know, fines are being reduced, and maybe we're not too serious about it. But I actually beg to differ. The committee felt that at least initially – at least initially – we wanted to be in line with other Canadian jurisdictions, to see what they're doing and to be, you know, in that ballpark, especially as was more than once explained and expressed to the committee, that the penalty or the fine attaches to the individual, not the organization they belong to or lobby on behalf of or represent. We felt that $200,000 can really put somebody not only out of work, but it can ruin their life indefinitely. We didn't want to discourage people from continuing to volunteer, for example.

Now, one of the things which happened last week, Mr. Chairman, was a comment from some members from the government, saying: "You know, why are you guys speaking so much on this amendment? If you participated on the committee and you liked the outcome and you were active in the drafting of this report, why are you spending time here?" As I explained before, this is what we were elected to do. We were elected to debate and discuss and scrutinize ideas. Honestly, I felt it was important for me, as somebody who really approached that committee with an open mind and really liked to be on it and to participate and to be involved in the true sense of that word, that somebody needed to enlighten the Assembly and to tell all of the other members what we're doing here.

I'll bet you, Mr. Chairman, that not everyone read the report from the committee, but I urge all hon. members – I know some actually raised their hands, very few and mostly on this side of the House. We need to highlight the fact that this is the first time that this has happened. This is the first time in recorded history in this province that we have all-party policy field committees. Let's benefit from this. Let's learn from it.

The report is not terribly exhaustive or thick. It's only about 13 pages. Of note, if members don't have the time to maybe go through all 13 pages, is page 13, the very last page of this report, called Appendix C: Are You a Lobbyist? It offers a chart. It offers a step-by-step navigational tool, if you will, that basically people can refer to, and it tells them where they fit within the act. Are you a lobbyist? Are you a lobbyist that gets paid? Then you go a certain way, and it gives you certain answers. Are you a lobbyist that is mostly a volunteer? Then you go a certain way, and it gives you answers. Are you a volunteer that gets paid? Then you go this way, and then you find your answers. Are you a volunteer that doesn't get paid? Here are the answers for your questions. This is very useful. If hon. members and hon. colleagues don't have the time to go through all 13 pages of the report, I think this one would be the most useful.

We cut the penalties in half because we felt that, at least initially, people had to learn what the act was all about, and they had to learn how to sort of behave within its parameters and within its provisions. When I say learn, Mr. Chairman, I am also referring to a discussion that was initiated by myself and my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East, who sat on the committee as well, that it was an education campaign that we were after. People had to understand what's involved, and they had to be taken by the hand and walked through the provisions of this act. This is the first time we do it, it's a new piece of legislation that affects many, many people, and we highlighted it to be an educational campaign.

Somebody commented that we already do this and we don't need any more, you know, propaganda. We said: "No, this is different. It is not just a press release or a news bulletin on some website." This has to be exhaustive. We have to have workshops. We have to have, you know, tutorial seminars where people get taken by the hand and walked through the closets. This chart would be the first place to start: Are You a Lobbyist?

So section G talks about the offences. It talks about if you lobby without filing a return and what's involved, and it also talks about how much you pay in penalties for the first offence and then for repeated ones, subsequent ones. I think, you know, having served on the committee, that I'm definitely in support of section G, and I urge all members as well to do the same.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, did you want to participate on this?

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You know, looking at section G, I think if we want to go back, it was quite a shift for this government to believe in a lobbyist registry. I remember the debates here for many, many years, in fact, with the previous Premier saying that he didn't know what a lobbyist was and the rest of it. I want to give some credit where credit is due even before the policy field committee. I believe the Member for Edmonton-McClung was there part time on the select committee that originally brought this forward.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, I was.

Mr. Martin: Yes, the select committee under the chairmanship of the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. I think that's where we first made it possible, in that select committee. In fact, I believe the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was there, too, at that time. [A telephone rang]

Mr. MacDonald: It's the government whip. He wants to talk to you.

Mr. Martin: Oh, does he? Tell him I'll do it after.

I wanted to say that that's where I think that this came from, because some government members at the time on the select committee actually sat down and listened. There was a great deal of cynicism to begin with about a lobbyist registry, you may recall. Because of the way that committee worked, eventually – not everybody was onside on the government side, but most of them were – we came up with that select committee. I think that made it easier for the new Premier to bring it forward. So I think some credit should go to that select committee. If that hadn't happened, I doubt, Mr. Chairman, that we'd be looking at Bill 1 and the lobbyist registry. I think members on that committee should take some credit for that.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I like the way the policy field committees work. I think that in that particular committee that's probably the way it should work, all parties working together for the common good. We're going to disagree from time to time. That's the nature of the beast. But that's what the purpose of them was.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just to come to G. I don't think it really matters much what the fines are, and I certainly have no great objection to the amount. I do want to say, though, first of all, that I still think there are some major loopholes – we discussed one here, and we'll probably discuss that more in third reading – that I think still make this bill a little problematic.

If there's a lobbyist registry, especially the big lobbyists from business and that, these fines aren't going to deter them; that's not what's going to deter them. It's the fact that they're front and centre and, if they weren't doing it properly, the embarrassment that would come from it. It's not the fines that really matter, in my opinion. I think you have to have some there. That's not the important thing for the people that I'd call the big-time lobbyists. That's not what's going to deter them. A hundred thousand dollars for some multibillion-dollar companies is a drop in the bucket, but the embarrassment, you know, on their business plan, if it comes out that they've done it wrong, is what would deter them.

I certainly have no objections to supporting the recommendations here worked through by the policy field committee. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Happy to have the opportunity to comment on amendment G. For those of you following along at home, that would be amending section 19, starting on page 18 of the actual bill.

A couple of observations on this. I've been talking to some people who would be classified as consultant lobbyists because, basically, they contract with organizations, admittedly mostly in the not-for-profit sector but, nonetheless, they do, and I think they would still be classified as consultant lobbyists under this legislation. One individual said that, actually, it was the right time for them but that this act was part of their considerations in deciding to take a different direction with their career. They're an individual, and they'd don't get very large contracts – enough to make an okay living, pay a mortgage, but nothing fancy – and these fines would be significant.

It was appropriate that the level was reduced because I think there wasn't an intention that someone be sort of broken but that it act as a deterrent. But what's going to happen is that it will affect the business insurance that consultants carry to be able to cover the cost of this kind of punishment or deterrent should it come into effect. We probably will see some people reconfigure their careers and move away from being contract consultants to organizations because of the choices that are made here.

I think it's still important that we have people file. The point of a lobbyist act is that we know who is lobbying whom on what subject. I have no problem with lobbying, but I think it's important that it's transparent and accountable and that we can see in the registry what's going on. I mean, legislation is always a plan – this is what we want to have happen – and there are always punishment sections in there to say: if you don't do it, here's what will happen to you. So it's appropriate that there is a deterrent or punishment section. I think the amount that's been arrived at is fine – that was some of the good work that the committee did – and that it has clarified that the individual who lobbies without a return being filed as required is guilty of an offence, which is, I think, a clarification in addition to the existing legislation.

Section (c) is basically housekeeping, in which "Ethics Commissioner" is substituted for the wording "Registrar."

This act is going to be very interesting as it moves along and becomes implemented in what we will see happen as a result of it. I don't have any problems with this section that's in front of us.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the remarks about the select committee on conflict of interest, which raised this issue of a lobbyist registry and did some work. I appreciate the change that this amendment is bringing in terms of the amounts of the fines, $25,000 for a first offence and $100,000 for a second and each subsequent offence. That actually was recommended by the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee. In fact, when we talked about the lobbyists registry, we suggested:

Each statute contains offence provisions, and if convicted, a person or organization may be subject to a fine of up to $25,000. In addition, some jurisdictions increase the maximum fine to a maximum of $100,000 for second or subsequent offences.

We were quite mindful of the fact that those amounts are bringing this lobbyists registry – the offences, the fines – in line with other jurisdictions. So the field committee, perhaps, got carried away. I don't know, Mr. Chairman, what the reasons were for increasing it so much, but the amendment bringing it back to $25,000 and $100,000 is actually what we recommended in the first place.

The only other point I want to raise is in reference to the amendment here. Section 19 is amended (a) by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) A person who lobbies without a return being filed as required by this Act is guilty of an offence.

Now, I really puzzled for a long time trying to figure out why that should be added when what we have here in the bill is a reference to the registration and the penalties that are to be followed if a person is in breach of this lobbyist registry act.

I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that the problem is that a person can register as a lobbyist but then fail to report his or her activities throughout the year as that person engages in lobbyist activity. It's not enough just to register. If you don't register and you carry out your lobbyist activity, then you're in breach of the act, but if you register and you don't submit a return stating what kind of lobbyist activity you're engaged in, then you can be in breach of this act. So now I understand why this amendment is suggested by the committee.

Mr. Elsalhy: There's a fine every time. It's not just once a year.

Dr. B. Miller: There's a fine every time. It's not just once a year. Right?

I think that clarifies it for me. So I am in support of section 19 being amended by these two changes.

The third change, of course, is to change the word "Registrar" to "Ethics Commissioner," which makes great sense because the Ethics Commissioner is the one that's in charge of the whole process.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1G carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall now deal with part H. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really think that you have psychic powers. Somehow you sensed that I was going to stand up and address the Assembly again.

Anyway, I'm not going to talk much about this one in particular because section H is basically talking about the discussion we had in the committee about the definition of communication. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, we actually went to great lengths in determining the words "to communicate with a public office holder" and what that entailed and what it really meant.

I'm not going to belabour this topic, but I refer everybody in the Assembly to our own Assembly website. If you go there, there is actually a poster that refers you to committee websites, and if you go into there, you'll see that all the committees of the Assembly are listed, and one of them is the standing policy field Committee on Government Services. If hon. members are really interested, you can actually click on that link and then read the transcripts word for word of what we said in the committee. It was really felt that lobbying had to be defined as, you know, an attempt to communicate with a public office holder.

We have a great resource in this Assembly, Mr. Chairman, in the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who understands this stuff and who was also the chairman of that earlier committee, the select standing committee on the Conflicts of Interest Act. He can tell you in extreme detail what the reasons behind this amendment are. I know that once you ask him that question, you'll be confident that this amendment is really offering the clarity that is necessary.

Part of that discussion, as in (e.1), as is suggested here in part H, talks about the time spent. We had extensive discussions as to: is lobbying only the act of lobbying, like during that conversation, during that meeting, or is it maybe the time that you spent assembling a list of MLAs or a list of ministers or the time spent researching an issue, and so on? Section (e.1) actually addresses that.

Overall, I think this is a worthy point of clarification, and I think it shouldn't come as anything that the government side or members of the opposition should be worried about. I'm encouraging everybody to support this one as well.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1H carried]

4:10

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, maybe I should seek some direction here. We have three more sections: I, J, and K. Unless we have amendments coming forth, would you like to have a general discussion and then a vote on each one separately?

Mr. Elsalhy: No. One by one.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Well, we'll deal with section I, then. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, just to offer an explanation to my hon. colleagues. As the bill was written, we initially anticipated that the first review of the act, once it becomes an act, was going to happen five years after. Because of the impact of this act, if passed, on almost everybody that has the ear of government, be it nonprofits, be it a professional organization, be it a union, be it, you know, a management group, whatever – the impact is so huge, and we haven't done this before. This is basically navigating in uncharted waters. So we felt that at least the first time when this act comes up for review again, we would do it in 24 months instead of the typical 60 months.

I think it makes sense. I think it was the right thing to do, to allow people who are potentially unhappy with the act or unhappy with having to adhere to its requirements, its provisions, to maybe come back within two years and talk to us again about what they felt, what their findings were.

It also allows us in the Assembly the opportunity to go over it to determine how effective it was. We've heard the criticism so many times that other jurisdictions, including the federal government, who have similar acts, similar lobbyist registries, you know, are having difficulty enforcing the provisions. They're not meeting with success in terms of catching everybody that should be caught. We definitely anticipate that some issues will arise, and we need to find out about them by not having to wait five years. Let's do it quickly. Let's do it within two years.

Now, I was also pleased with my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, who challenged me on this. He said, "Well, you know, why do it after two years only? Why not allow five years so we can gather better information, so we can gather fuller information, more comprehensive information?" We have done this before in this Assembly, Mr. Chairman, actually, with other bills, which I can't remember offhand. But I was told that we've done this in other situations. I think PIPA was one of them, where the first time it was after only two years and then after that it became every five years. Also the Health Information Act. So we have done it before. This is not new, and we're not deviating from our norm.

This is something that is probably warranted, and as such I think it's a good amendment. I urge all members to support it as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to support this particular amendment probably because I was the one that actually made the motion within the field committee.

While I'm on my feet I will say a few words about the field committee. I think we will see how this plays out right through to the end. I believe that the Minister of Health and Wellness is going to bring forward an amendment which we would probably refer to as the Quebec amendment. Part of the reason, I think, that it had to come forward outside of the committee was that we did, I feel, tremendously good work inside that committee, but we could have probably used a bit more time to go into a bit more depth, which is why I felt that it was very important that we have the two-year review. If something is going wrong, you're going to be able to identify it within two years. So why would you perpetrate a mistake over a five-year period?

Mr. Rodney: Perpetuate a mistake.

Ms Pastoor: Perpetuate. I have just been corrected. Thank you. That would be perpetuate.

Mr. Rodney: You're welcome.

Ms Pastoor: A lot of harm can be done if a mistake – and it could be a very small item that would go on and perhaps affect many, many of the organizations that are going to be considered lobbyists and may well put them to a lot of extra work when, in fact, it could be, so to speak, nipped in the bud. So I'm pleased to support this and certainly support the work of the committee.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1I carried]

The Deputy Chair: We shall proceed with section J. Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1J carried]

The Deputy Chair: Section K. Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1K carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move an amendment to Bill 1. You have the amendment at the table for distribution, and I'd ask if it could be distributed now. The effect of the amendment is to make two changes to Bill 1. I'll give the pages a brief time to circulate it.

The first change is a very minor change, and I can just draw members' attention to it. It's with respect to section 1(1)(f)(iv). It's simply amended by striking out "charitable." The effect of that is to say that an organization includes any of the following, whether incorporated, unincorporated, a partnership, or a sole proprietorship, and (iv) would then read: a nonprofit organization, association, society, coalition, or interest group. So "charitable" is redundant and unnecessary. It's basically all nonprofit organizations.

But the most important part of the amendment is titled B. It amends section 3(1) of the bill. Section 3(1) is on page 7, but we're dealing with inserting something just after clause (h). Basically, section 3(1) is the restrictions on the application of the act, or, essentially, exemptions to the act. The purport of clause 3(1) is to say that the act does not apply to any of the following when acting in their official capacity and then outlines the groups of people to whom it does not apply. We've, I think, amended this already to include, for example in (i.1) and (i.2), members of the boards of trustees under the School Act, persons acting as a volunteer without payment.

The purport of this section is what I referred to in speaking to this earlier on as the public-good exemption. Essentially, what it would do is it would exempt from the operation of the act directors, officers or employees of an organization referred to in section 1(1)(f)(iv) not constituted to serve management, union or professional interests nor having a majority of members that are profit-seeking enterprises or representatives of profit-seeking enterprises.

In essence, Mr. Chairman, the voluntary sector in this province does a lot of work, does a lot of good things in our community and sometimes – and, I think, quite accurately – are concerned that with all of the accountabilities that are built into the governance process, we make them spend about a third of their time applying for money and a third of their time accounting for it, and if we have a registry act with which they have to comply, they would spend the other third of their time complying with the registry act.

Now, that might be an overexaggeration on my part, but I think it's very important that we not overencumber voluntary organizations with unnecessary accountabilities. The purpose of this section is to ensure that for voluntary organizations which are acting, essentially, in the public good – in other words, they're not acting out of self-interest or out of interest for their membership from the perspective that their membership are profit-seeking organizations or unions or management of those sorts of organizations but organizations that are operating in the community interest – we expect that those people will be talking to their MLAs. We want them to be talking to their government. We want them to be adding to the public discourse and public debate, and we don't necessarily need them to be around counting their hours or worrying about whether two members of the same organization have each exceeded 50 hours or those sorts of things.

I believe the committee did some very good work on this bill, but

I think I would have hoped that they would have gone just this little step further and recognized the representations that were being made with respect to this area and understand that while it's very important for Albertans to be able to know who's talking to their government and who's talking to their MLAs about what issues, which perhaps are of a business interest or have a self-interest aspect to it, when we're talking about the public good, we do want to encourage the public debate. We certainly do want to encourage Albertans to engage in voluntary organizations, to be unleashed to give their capacity back to their community, and we don't want to restrict them in any undue way.

This amendment will have the effect, in my view, of relieving voluntary organizations of, even if it's just a perceived burden, having to comply with the act, of being in a place where they have to worry about counting their hours or counting their hours in conjunction with other members of the organization. I would ask the House to consider adopting this amendment, which I believe will go a long way to make sure that voluntary organizations know how well received they are by this government, this Legislature, what important work we think they do, and to relieve them of any burden of having to comply with the provisions of the act.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To the government, thank you for this amendment. Frankly, if the hon. minister opposite hadn't brought forward this amendment, I had already prepared almost exactly the same amendment to bring forward because I think it is about understanding and valuing the contribution that that charitable/not-for-profit/volunteer sector brings to our community. My fear was that members of the government just didn't get it. They're so corporate focused that they didn't get how important this sector is.

Over the last year and a half I've been discussing in a number of debates and in private members' statements: just imagine what our society would look like if we took away some of these organizations. Frankly, capacity is an issue in those organizations right now. Many of them have been operational for a number of years. They've taken on more and more programming that, frankly, used to be paid for by government or run by government. Now they're being expected to do RFPs in order to get contracts when they're the sole possible contractor out there. That one always strikes me as a bit weird. But, essentially, that sector was really stressed, and I have been trying to raise that issue in this Assembly for some time. My fear, when I saw the work both of this bill and of the committee, was that the government hadn't gotten it, and clearly the government did get it, or at least some people got it because we've got a government amendment in front of us for this bill.

I also want to acknowledge the importance of that sector and their advocacy on their own behalf because this is a helping sector. This is filled with organizations that often exist to do good work for others, and they tend to be self-effacing. They tend to be vigorous in defending the interests of their client base but not so aggressive in promoting their own well-being. I had concerns that they were not going to be able to catch the ear and get the understanding of the government members, and, boy, did that community pull together.

Now, there are clearly some individuals who were introduced in this Assembly when we started into the debate on Bill 1. I'm thinking of Bob Wyatt from the Muttart philanthropic foundation, the centres in Edmonton and Calgary for the volunteer organizations. There were a number of key individuals who really worked hard and poured heart and soul into helping government understand how important this was, and I thank them for that effort. It was a lot of work. It probably cost them money that they didn't have to spend.

I think individuals probably paid for some things, mileage and things, out of their own pocket in order to get to Edmonton or get access to MLAs and help them to understand how important this was. I'm very happy to see it.

I can't underline enough the capacity issue. I hope that when this bill has passed, the government will remember this and go back and look at some of its funding formulas and come to understand better what has happened. I remember years ago hearing one of the government backbenchers talking about how great this sector was because everything was free and what else the government could get this sector to do because it was free. I cringed because I knew it wasn't free. Even for volunteer organizations there is a cost to them. There's a cost to the auditing. There's a cost to volunteer appreciation. There's a cost to volunteer recruitment and training. That stuff is not free. But the government has tended to approach this voluntary/charitable/not-for-profit sector with the idea that they are free because they have a lot of volunteers working for them.

As a result we've tended to have line-item funding for these organizations, so if they're, you know, contracted or they're given the responsibility of providing a certain program or service, all the government funds them for is just exactly that line item of that program and service. But when the government was doing it, they were covering the cost of the phone line that the person used and the benefits for the staff person and the desk that they used and the chair that they used and even the extra square footage in the office because you had an additional person running that program. It goes to the not-for-profit sector, and all of that ancillary money doesn't go with it, just the line item to deliver the program.

We have this situation where the not-for-profit/charitable/volunteer sector is actually fundraising the money to pay for that phone line, that phone, that desk, that extra square footage in their leased space to provide the programs. It has come at a cost. Now, those organizations have been happy to provide that and believe strongly in providing those services, but I still will push the government to examine the way they fund these groups.

I won't go into it now, but the other thing that has to be looked at is this ridiculousness of requiring some sort of request for proposal situation when in most cases you have sole providers existing in the community. Who else is going to give you mental health services but the Canadian Mental Health Association? I mean, come on. Nobody else offers those services, but you're making them go through this. It's ridiculous. Anyway, don't get me started on that tangent.

The minister had also referred to accountability in that sector. I can attest to that. I know that there are some, particularly smaller organizations, that to an outsider's eye may appear to be less accountable than you might find, for example, in a small business with a couple of employees, and you've got a charity or a volunteer-based organization with a couple of volunteers. That's true sometimes. People don't know what they're doing, and they make mistakes, and they don't file the correct paperwork or keep up with things. Yeah, that's true. But for the most part this sector is the most accountable sector out of anything you can come up with, including government, because every time they apply to do something, they have to be totally transparent and accountable. They account over and over and over again for their funding, and often they account three ways for the same dang funding because they've applied to the city, to the province, and to the feds. We still haven't managed to mesh our reporting structures so that they can do one report back and it's accepted by all three levels of government. Oh, no. We're going to make them do a different accounting report back to the city, a different one to the province, and a different one to the feds.

So the Minister of Health and Wellness is exactly right. They spend a third of their time trying to raise the money to deliver the programs and a third of the time accounting, and now they're only delivering a third of the programs because that's all the time they've got left. So we have created a number of requirements about accountability, and for the most part they meet them.

I also want to talk about lobbying from that sector. I would argue that that is the sector that we as legislators need to hear from. They are delivering those programs and services on the front line. They have an expertise that we need, so we should be asking for it, but they should also feel free to come to us and give us that information because in many cases that's where we get it. Who was it that first flagged for us the issue of children going to school hungry? It was that volunteer, charitable, not-for-profit sector. Who started to talk 10, 15 years ago or more about the increasing number of people who were homeless? That same sector. They're on the front lines. They're seeing it happen. They were the experts, and we need them to come and talk to us.

I would also argue, Mr. Chairman, that when they are lobbying or advocating to the government, they are not advocating for their shareholders. They're not advocating for somebody to make more money out of this. These groups are always coming forward advocating for their residents, for their clients, for the individuals that they are assisting. Whether they're talking about youth sports or seniors or Meals on Wheels or feeding programs or an arts and culture group, they're not there to improve their own lives even if we're talking about the administrator. They are there talking about how their audience or client or resident base is being affected, and that's information that as legislators we need to have. They need to be talking to us. We need to be listening to them. The idea of the requirements that we were going to subject them to of registering as a lobbyist and all of that other accountability I think would have really stood in the way of service provision.

What this amendment will do in the end is excuse or remove from the requirements of the legislation those groups that I tend to think of as the not-for-profit, volunteer, charitable sector. Essentially, this is the social service agencies, the faith-based agencies, people working in poverty issues, housing and homelessness issues, arts and culture, multiculturalism, youth, youth at risk, youth recreational programming, health and wellness for youth, seniors, the people in the disabled community, services for them, recreational opportunities. We keep saying that we need a healthier population, that we need to reduce obesity. This is how we do it: through those recreational opportunities. Eat less, exercise more. These are the groups that help provide that exercise incentive.

Of course, the health-based agencies like diabetes, heart and stroke, asthma, and a number of other agencies like that: those agencies are operating on behalf of the people they help. They're not there as profit-making ventures. The very definition of a not-for-profit doesn't mean that they're bad businesspeople. They're actually for the most part excellent businesspeople, considering that they can manage to squeeze change out of a penny over and over and over again.

I want to support this amendment. I think it's a good idea. It has addressed a huge problem with this bill. I wanted this lobbyists bill to come in. I've been campaigning for it for years. I would have been really in a position of struggling to support this bill if we had not had this amendment come forward, so I am very pleased to see it. I am very supportive of it. I really encourage the rest of the members of the Assembly to support this amendment, and we will get on with the rest of the bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, I had some questions regarding the amendment. One came from the Chambers of Commerce wondering: in this amendment why are groups like the Chambers of Commerce excluded? Is it because the minister just feels: "Go online. It's free. Fifteen minutes later you're done. You're registered. End of story"? But in the preamble from the mover of this amendment there wasn't much said about fine groups like our Alberta Chambers of Commerce or our local chambers of commerce. What are they to think? You know, they're basically nonprofit organizations that do fine work like many other for-good operations. I just needed some clarification before I put my hand up on this.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member does raise a good point. I guess it depends on the size of the chamber of commerce. There's a huge, big difference between the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce and smaller communities, right?

Again, the focus here, which I appreciate, is the focus on economics. You know, the conflict-of-interest legislation that applies to us focuses in general on issues of personal economic interest. Modern society accepts that as citizens we should be free to pursue our own economic interests, but those of us in positions of public trust who are elected to this Legislature must not act in a manner that furthers our own personal economic interest. That's what we have adopted as our conflict-of-interest legislation.

When we look at a lobbyist registry, we're looking at people who are coming to influence the decisions of people in government and in the Legislature. Again, I think the focus should be on economic interests. If a company has lobbyists and they come and try to influence government, then of course they have an economic interest. That's why there should be a lobbyist registry, so that they register and declare how they are influencing government.

I appreciate the amendment because it takes out of the equation charitable organizations, so the word "charitable" is taken out of section 1(1)(f)(iv). I think that's good because charitable organizations, like religious institutions, do not have an economic interest in terms of economic interest for themselves to further when they are seeking to influence government decisions. I think that's really important.

I, of course, over the years in my former occupation as a minister in a church was very much involved in trying to influence government action. I did actually form a lobby group back in 1993 called Alberta Quality of Life Commission. We would be exempt from this lobbyist registry because as a matter of fact we were all volunteers, and none of us were paid for this activity that we were engaged in, and we had no money. We had no budget. We weren't even an organized society under the Societies Act. But we had great lobbyists because Lois Hole was one of our members and also Douglas Roche and Don Mayne and Kay Feehan, some great, active people in the community. I think we did our best to write good reports and bring them to the government. In fact, the Member for Athabasca-Redwater was the minister of social services at the time when we submitted our report Listen to Me, about poverty in Alberta. Members of the cabinet did listen to us. They didn't follow our advice or our recommendations.

Dr. B. Miller: Oh, yeah. They cut funding. Those were the days of cutting funding to everything. We actually haven't caught up to all those cuts.

Now, that kind of lobbying, I'm happy to recognize, is exempt from this legislation because there's absolutely no interest in furthering private economic interest, and actually there's no element of being paid to lobby.

I'll give another example. Religious leaders in this province have on occasion tried to influence or enter into dialogue with government ministers and even the Premier to express their views. For example, from 1978 to 1985 there was something called the Alberta church consultation. Actually, this church consultation, which included at that time mostly leaders from various Christian denominations, was brought together at the request of Premier Peter Lougheed. I think it was really quite good of him to put that into being because he was sensitive to the fact that people in the churches, especially church leaders, have a lot to say in terms of their value perspectives and addressing various social issues that the province faces.

Now, it's interesting that the Alberta church consultation was not continued with Premier Getty. Although in 1995 Premier Klein did meet with something called the interfaith coalition, which had as one of its members Larry Shaben from the Muslim community and someone named Ron Stevens from the Jewish community, Virindra Lamba from the Sikh community, and Reverend Rob Hankinson from the Christian community. They met only twice. Premier Klein wasn't interested in continuing it.

The reason I mention this is that currently the Edmonton and District Council of Churches actually wants to renew this tradition of meeting with government, cabinet ministers and the Premier, government leaders, to express their views. Now, this is a form of lobbying. Among those people that might meet with the Premier and cabinet ministers would be people who have high positions in religious communities: imams or bishops and so on. So they are paid personnel for their various denominations.

But what we're talking about in these cases is, obviously, charities. It's not just a nonprofit organization, but it is a charitable organization. With this amendment, then, those churches and mosques and synagogues and the leaders that represent them would not be included and come under this lobbyist registry. I think that is extremely important. You know, I was very upset initially when I looked at this legislation because I thought that it was blocking the ability of people who come from various religious backgrounds to express their views to political leaders, and we don't want that to happen. As an MLA I'm open to what people in the religious communities are saying and their concerns, and I think we ought to be responding to them and encouraging them to enter into dialogue with us.

I'm also pleased, Mr. Chairman, that nonprofit organizations are still left in this section. "Charitable" is taken out, but "non-profit organization" is still there. Yet the amendment in B, which amends section 3(1), adds that this act does not apply to any of the following. By identifying the "directors, officers or employees of an organization [who are] not constituted to serve management, union or professional interests nor having a majority of members that are profit-seeking enterprises," I think that makes it a little clearer though the language is quite dense. I'm not sure who the onus is on to prove, you know, that your board only consists of a few people that might be engaged in profit-seeking enterprises but that the majority of the board is not.

I don't know about this language. I mean, nonprofit organizations are nonprofit organizations. They have boards. Mostly their boards are volunteers, and they're engaged in promoting their own organizations. For some of the inner-city agencies a social agency has a board, and their focus is not in furthering their own private interest, their own private economic interest, but certainly trying to influence government on the issues of poverty and so on. So I'm really quite pleased that such nonprofit organizations and faith-based agencies are not included in this lobbyist registry.

You know, all of this is part of an evolution of concern about ethics, and I'm really happy that now, finally, in Alberta, in terms of the evolution of ethics, we've come to this point where we're going to adopt a lobbyist registry. The time has come. We have to do it. I think it's really important to have these exceptions and to recognize the value of nonprofit organizations and charitable organizations in this province and all the things that they do for Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That's all I have to say about this.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to respond briefly to the Member for Whitecourt-Lac Ste. Anne with respect to the questions he raised about how this amendment would impact the Chambers of Commerce. I think the short answer is that it does not. I know that there is some concern among the chambers about where they would fit under the Lobbyists Act. This amendment is specifically related to the many small and not so small, for that matter, volunteer organizations around the province that are dealing with issues in our community.

I know and I appreciate, having grown up in a small town myself and my father having been involved in the local board of trade, as it was called then, that the chamber is a voluntary organization and that there are lots of voluntary interests expressed and that they do excellent work for us in our communities. For us. When I say "us," not government, but for Albertans and for Albertans' communities and Albertans' communities' growth. But this particular amendment does not in my view exempt them from the application of the Lobbyists Act.

That being said, I think the Chambers of Commerce as an organization across the province is perhaps not in the same position as the volunteer organizations that we're dealing with in terms of: they have more structure, they usually have paid staff, they usually are in a better position to comply with the provisions.

Again, the reason I wanted to reply, other than the courtesy of giving a reply, is to indicate that I didn't want to in my earlier comments suggest that the rest of the people who do have to comply under this act should be facing an onerous burden. The act should be implemented in a way which it makes it easier for persons who do have to comply with the act to register, to register online, to make sure that their lobby activities are disclosed in an appropriate way. That should not be an onerous burden for anyone, and certainly not for the Chambers of Commerce. That being said, Mr. Chairman, I think it's still prudent to pass this amendment and make sure that the volunteer organizations that it's intended to deal with are exempted from the act.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I just had a couple of comments to make in regard to this amendment. Really, I'm asking, I guess, from the experience that I had just in being at one of the meetings that precipitated this Lobbyists Act. My understanding – and I can perhaps get clarification on this from the minister who brought forward this amendment – is that there was an exemption of 100 hours for the act to take place, and in my view, 100 hours seems like a long time to not have to worry about registering and whatnot.

Certainly, I can appreciate everybody's comments about excluding the voluntary sector and not placing undue difficulties on what is already an overtaxed system. We've been using the voluntary sector to cover a whole range of essential services that, in my mind, have been dropped by the wayside from responsible governance in this province over the last 20 years.

You know, that being said, when you're creating something like a lobbyists registry or the Lobbyists Act, simplicity I think is the key. Universality is important as well. If the minister who brought this amendment forward could perhaps comment on this because I see the 100-hour exemption working to serve a very similar function to what this amendment is. Certainly, I don't think I'm going to vote against this, but I just want to know if there's a specific purpose that I'm missing here somehow.

I know that the minister has lots of contact and experience with the voluntary sector. In fact, I see his smiling face on the back of buses on a regular basis, which is wonderful although it has almost caused an accident more than once when I was shocked to look up and see him staring at me there. Anyway, all joking aside, as I said before, if I could see clarification of how this is deemed to be necessary, regardless of the fact that we put a 100-hour exemption into this bill.

Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: I think part of the issue, not that I would ever dare to speak on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness, is that you're still going to have to count that 100 hours because as you start to get close to it, you'd better know where you are because at the point where you hit that, you're going to have to register. So basically the burden is still on that whole charitable sector to keep track of it in the same way as that $30,000 mark for GST registration. For most people, unless they know that they're really low, like $5,000, if you have a really good year and it starts to creep a little higher, you're going to have to go back and make sure that you've got all of that in place. The point was that this was an onerous burden on that charitable sector, and the reason for the Lobbyists Act is not specifically aimed at them. It was aimed at others who were trying to influence public policy for their own purposes, and the charitable sector is trying to influence public policy on behalf of members of the public. Not that I would presume to speak for the minister, of course, but that's my reasoning for it and why I supported this particular amendment.

If I might just very briefly, Mr. Chairman, I lost my train of thought earlier and I've now remembered it. The point I was trying to make there is that the not-for-profit sector is not in business to make a profit or to benefit any one of its individual directors. The whole purpose of a board of directors is to represent the public and to oversee the operations of the organization in a policy-setting way to ensure that the organization serves all Albertans or all Canadians and not to benefit an individual. It's considered a huge no-no in that sector if somebody is benefiting financially in a major way beyond a reasonable salary from the activities of the volunteer/charitable/not-for-profit sector. I always put slashes between all those words.

It's not to say that not-for-profits always lose money. They don't. They're very good businesspeople, I would argue. In many cases there are fewer not-for-profits that fail from bankruptcy than there are small businesses, so in fact they're very good financial managers. Any surplus they have at the end of the year is reinvested into the programming, so no one individual benefits from that. They don't get to go to Hawaii. They don't get to give themselves a bonus. That money is reinvested in the product or the service that they provide on behalf of the public.

Again, that's another major difference between that and the corporate sector. That's not to say – please don't misunderstand me, I'm not saying that the corporate sector is some big, bad bogeyman. They're not. They do wonderful things for Alberta and create a lot of opportunities and a lot of jobs for people and generate a lot of money. That's a good thing. Why would I say that was bad? I'm not. But the not-for-profit sector is there for very different reasons, and they are guided and set up completely differently in order, basically, to guard against any one individual or group of individuals benefiting as a result of an activity of the not-for-profit and benefiting in, you know, a major, pay themselves kind of way, is what I'm trying to articulate.

Thank you for the opportunity to clarify that. Again, I urge everyone to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Very briefly, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to also make the distinction that we have different layers when we're talking about the Chambers of Commerce, as suggested by my hon. colleague from Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. We have the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, which is really sort of the umbrella organization, the mother organization, but then you also have individual chambers of commerce in Edmonton and Calgary and then you have the smaller centres, too, you know, Rimbey, Tofield, and so on. The question here is: do you extend an exemption or do you make allowances or do you provide assistance to the bigger organization? Or do you require the bigger organization to register and report but not the medium-sized ones? Or do you go: the big one, the medium-sized ones but exempt the smaller ones?

We're not in any way saying that their work is not crucial and important, that it is not valued and appreciated. They definitely have a role to play, and it is a positive role in the province of Alberta. But the volunteer and nonprofit sector in terms of service provision are different, and that distinction has to be made because a chamber of commerce advances interests that are business related or business minded. The food bank is a different story; the Mustard Seed is a different story, the women's shelters, the Youth Emergency Shelter, Kids Kottage. These agencies are in a group unto their own. They're not the same. They shouldn't be caught in the same category as a chamber of commerce.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as was explained before, if a particular chamber of commerce has a volunteer on board that basically does that without getting paid, that particular volunteer and that particular organization by extension doesn't have to register and report. They don't have to file a return. If they have somebody on staff that gets paid, then they have 100 hours to accumulate before they are required to register and report.

I think that, yes, we're making a concession here to look after the volunteer sector, the nonprofit sector, but I argue that they're two different creatures; they're two different entities, two different descriptions, and that was the concern which we heard. You know, do you do it at the big level, the macro level? Do you do it at the intermediate level? Do you do it even on the minute level, the small level, and target everybody in every town or every city because each of them has their own chamber of commerce? Edmonton, for example: we not only have a chamber of commerce, we also have regional business associations. I come from the west end, and we have something called the West End Business Association. They would argue that if the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce got exempted, maybe they should be as well.

I hear these cries, and I hear these concerns, but we definitely had to draw the line somewhere. In two years if they're still not happy, they can come back as we're reviewing this act and say: "You know what? You've done it for this sector, maybe we should be as well." But if you start exempting everybody, the question will be raised, Mr. Chairman: "Well, who's left; who's caught? If everybody is exempted, then who's left?" Who are we after? We don't want to be weakening it or watering it down. We need to be looking to the future. This is an act that I'm willing to bet on. This is an act that I'm hoping will be enforced, and I am actually looking forward to the first report from the Ethics Commissioner and the registrar as to how many registrations and submissions they received, how many entries were logged on the registry, and how many fines were issued or assessed.

I hear the concerns from the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, but that's something that we need to discuss. We need to draw the line somewhere, and this is a good line I think, and this is a good position.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today in representing the good people of Calgary-Elbow, who have expressed concerns about Bill 1 in its original form. Therefore, I'm pleased to speak to the amendment and the issue before us, section 1(1)(f)(iv). I spoke with constituents often during the by-election, and these and other issues are of concern to my constituents.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora mentioned my predecessor, Mr. Klein. I know that he and his wife had interests in the not-for-profit sector, and I recognize that he and his wife did a lot of good work throughout Calgary. Certainly Mr. Klein as my predecessor and as the former Premier deserves the thanks of Albertans and particularly the constituents of Calgary-Elbow for his service and representation to the constituency. Of course, I'll do my utmost to continue that representation.

I am interested in the local perspective from Calgary-Elbow. I do feel I'm in a good position to represent the communities in Calgary-Elbow. I've been active in the not-for-profit sector myself for some time as well. I view my commitment to public service as an extension of my community work, having been a director, vice-president, and president of two community associations for many years in West Hillhurst and immediately thereafter for many more years in Lakeview. Also, I've done a considerable amount of work in the not-for-profit sector.

My community work has also brought me into contact with many of my constituents as a soccer dad, as a Little League coach, as a referee, and of course having the most important job in and around the local outdoor rinks, that of a rink shoveller, particularly with the children's Grassroots Hockey League, but also in Lakeview. Over this period of time these activities have brought me into contact with and I've been listening to many constituents.

I've been listening to and talking with people for a long time. I've learned from them what matters most to people: it's the issues that affect them close to home. Many of those issues are also addressed within the not-for-profit sector. So I think this is an important bill and it's an important amendment, and I commend the hon. minister for bringing this amendment forward. I think it is something that makes it easier for many of us to support this bill knowing that this amendment will be coming forward as part of the package for us to be able to consider.

As I mentioned, I've worked in the not-for-profit sector going back some time, actually back to my days in Fredericton high school. Just after graduating from Fredericton high school, I was involved with an organization. I can't remember exactly if it was a not-for-profit organization, but we did have a group of us that were working together with young people, students in particular, who were grappling with being able to maintain their level of commitment to education and to reading over the course of the summer. A group of us as students and graduating students took that on. After that, actually, I took a job with the not-for-profit sector at Hull home going back to 1975. That was some time ago. I was actually not long out of high school, with not much more than a high school diploma. They were good enough to hire me, and I began to be able to understand and appreciate the not-for-profit sector and recognize that the not-for-profit sector is quite unique.

Now, I've also been politically active for some period of time. That's brought me into contact with other people who've been active in the not-for-profit sector and with issues that are often addressed in the not-for-profit sector. I worked on Sheldon Chumir's campaigns, who was a Member of this Legislative Assembly for some period of time. While Sheldon Chumir was involved, one of the things that was important for him was, say, public education. Again, I need some clarification, perhaps, on some of these organizations to know whether or not they would be exempted under this legislation. Of course, Sheldon has gone on, and his legacy is now represented by the Sheldon Chumir foundation. That organization is involved in human rights. We'd also need to know whether or not those organizations will be exempted as well. So there are still questions with regard to this bill, and I look forward to future debate on it. Again, I do think that this amendment is a step in the right direction.

Continuing on with regard to what I've heard from community members, I have continued to knock on doors and also hear from people at annual general meetings. The concerns I hear about there are often with regard to the environment. This is an issue that is of concern to people in my constituency, particularly local issues as well, such as the preservation of the Weaselhead natural area. I've been honoured to be a member of the board of directors of the Weaselhead Glenmore Park Preservation Society. The Weaselhead is a tremendous asset in Calgary. It encompasses 620 acres, making it perhaps the largest protected natural area in Calgary and I hear also within Alberta, Canada, and perhaps even North America as far as protected areas, particularly within a large-scale urban environment.

That area was purchased by the city of Calgary in 1931 in order to protect the source of south Calgary's drinking water. Today the Weaselhead area is instrumental in providing drinking water for nearly one-half of all Calgarians, nearly one-sixth of all Albertans. Over the years there have been many different plans for commercial development of that land, but Calgarians have always chosen clean water as their top priority. It's imperative that this area remain protected. In fact, organizations that are dedicated to that type of endeavour, if they're not-for-profit organizations, need to know how this bill will be affecting them.

Again, I look forward to further discussion on this bill, but also I do want to commend the minister for bringing this amendment forward. Certainly, that might go some way to being able to help address some of those concerns, to make sure that the not-for-profit sector is in fact protected.

Other social areas of concern arise in my constituency. I'm privileged to have Mount Royal College involved as a part of my constituency. I've also worked at Mount Royal College and appreciate the importance of this fine institution to Calgarians, and I particularly feel good about representing them. I've had the opportunity to have lunch with the president of Mount Royal College, and I know that the institution itself is also interested in social issues in and around the area and makes an effort each year to reach out into the community. I've also had the opportunity meet with the students' association of Mount Royal College, who have indicated concerns with regard to housing, for example. The housing issue is another social issue in which we know that many not-for-profit organizations work to help to relieve the problems, the issues, the crisis, indeed, with regard to getting housing in Calgary. We need to know how those organizations will be affected by Bill 1.

Again, we're pleased to see that the amendment has been brought forward, and perhaps that may help to alleviate some of the concerns that we have around protecting the not-for-profit sector because it is quite important.

This bill that has been brought forward will be improved. I know there have been comments made in the press with regard to this bill, the lobbyists registry act, and the effect it would have on the whole volunteer sector. In fact, this bill really has got the whole volunteer sector up in arms. I've had people from the Developmental Disabilities Resource Centre into my office as well. That's an organization that I also worked on behalf of, and it happens to be within my constituency. That organization does terrific work on behalf of people with developmental disabilities. Their concerns were with regard to the amount of time that goes into filling out forms. They were concerned that with resources that are already stretched thin, this was going to be an onerous bill because we know that the human resources component, in particular in the not-for-profit sector, is really feeling the pinch these days.

I believe this bill started out with the idea of trying to curb, you know, insider influence, but somehow it seems to have gone in the opposite direction. I know that the press has picked up on this as well and had to bring it to the attention of this government. We're glad to see that the government, perhaps, may be listening. Bringing forward this amendment might be a step in the right direction on that front.

There were concerns that perhaps have also been addressed with regard to how the bill would affect people who are connected to individuals who work in the not-for-profit sector and whether it would affect their ability to seek a livelihood as well. However, it does appear that some of those issues have also been addressed.

This is an important bill, and as it moves forward, we look for opportunities to improve it. I think that this amendment that's been brought forward may be a very significant step, so I will be supporting this amendment. I look forward to more discussion and hearing more from my colleagues on that front because, again, these are concerns for the not-for-profit sector in terms of the number of forms that they need to fill in. It is really quite onerous, I think, for grassroots organizations.

Again on that front, just in terms of a grassroots organization, I think it's important to recognize that there are three sectors in our society and that, in fact, we need to be able to have all three sectors be strong. We know that the private sector is the engine for our economy, and it's important. I know that myself and my colleagues in the Liberal Party are a free-enterprise party. We recognize the value of that sector, particularly the smaller and mid-sized businesses, that are really the organizations, the corporations that hire Albertans on a wide-scale basis. It's important, that sector, but the not-for-profit sector is important as well, as is the public sector.

An influential book for me was a book called Reinventing Government, a book that I understand was influential on at least one president in recent years. I had the opportunity to do a book review on that book for a graduate studies class. That book talked about the importance of all three sectors. I believe the first chapter in the book is actually called Steering Rather Than Rowing. It pointed out that sometimes it's important for the government to recognize that they don't always need to be rowing; sometimes they can be steering. One of the ways that they can go about that is to be able to utilize the not-for-profit sector to do some of the rowing, to do some of the work. And the not-for-profit sector is close to home. It's close to the community. It is generally a grassroots organization.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Centre mentioned, there is a genuine connection between the not-for-profit sector and the community. We have to recognize that while accountability is very important and crucial, in fact, to this particular Assembly and through the government – we need to have accountability; there's no doubt about it – to the citizens of Alberta, there are other ways, other methods, and other means for that accountability to come through. That's through the not-for-profit-sector boards, many of which I've been involved with, sometimes serving, sometimes reporting to. But again, the not-for-profit sector and the boards there are that connection. I think it's important that we're taking a look at this, at how it is that they're affected by this bill, because I'm not sure that the original intention of the bill was to make things more onerous. So I'm pleased to see that this amendment has come forward.

The not-for-profit sector, as I say, is accountable. I squared off with some federal officials at one point in time. We tried to compare some of the work in the not-for-profit sector and concerns that might arise, the concerns that arose through Radwanski and that whole issue, which was absolutely stunning to me. I very pointedly had to set him straight and talk about how the not-for-profit sector is the opposite of that. The not-for-profit sector is a way for there to be accountability because, again, the not-for-profit sector generally does a very good job of reporting back to the community, to whom they report. Again, they're often elected, and there is a process that's in place for the not-for-profit sector.

So there are three sectors. I think it's important to recognize the not-for-profit sector and the accountability that comes forward. In general I'm hearing from Albertans that the not-for-profit sector is already hurting these days – and, really, we don't want to make things any more onerous for them – that the not-for-profit sector is probably, I think it's safe to say, underutilized, underappreciated, and undersupported. In that respect I think we can go a long way to try to make sure that they're not feeling less supported by making things more onerous for them, that they are in fact appreciated. I hope that this amendment goes some way to being able to bring that element into the considerations of this bill.

I think I may have more to say on this in general, but at this point in time I think that's about all it is that we can do to address this particular amendment. Again I commend the minister for bringing it forward. I know that members on this side of the House were looking at similar amendments in order to improve this legislation. I recognize that one of the important roles for the opposition is to improve legislation, so we are looking for improvements in this legislation. I do think that this amendment may take steps in that direction.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm delighted to be able to rise and speak to this amendment that has come forward from the Minister of Health and Wellness. I was a part of that committee, the field committee, that was one of the history-making committees, actually, in this House and for this province. It was, I think, probably an eye-opener for many of us. Although there have been, certainly, within the last 10 to 11 years very few what we would call true all-party committees, I believe this was a good example of how we all sat down and realized that we had a job to do and worked well together.

There was a lot of hard work put into this committee, and there were certainly many, many long hours. We were lucky enough to have excellent staff both from the legal side and from the actual writing of the bill side. For someone like myself who perhaps had never really worked with a bill in its complexities, it was very much appreciated. Anyone on that committee could have asked for a clarification either for a definition or intent or, in fact, the concept of what they wanted to talk about, and they were certainly forthright in helping us interpret it and to make sure that at the end of the day we actually were all speaking on the same page and that we had agreed upon what our definitions really, really meant.

There were huge amounts of information that we had to digest, as I mentioned before, and then be able to put them on an overlay over a complex legal document.

One of the most important things, I think, that happened with this committee was that although we didn't go through the province as perhaps a task force might have, we had the opportunity to have the public come and present to us. Because the nonprofit area was particularly troubled and, in fact, quite fearful of this bill going through as it had been originally thought about, they put together some very, very thoughtful and, certainly, worthy of discussion documents. Their presentations were in depth. They had done their homework, and I think what was very important was that they not only had done their homework locally, but they also had done their homework in terms of what other jurisdictions were doing with this exact concept of lobbyist bill.

The lobbyist bill certainly had been something that the Liberals had talked about for many, many years. Finally it was going to come forward, but the groups that were so concerned, the nonprofits, as I mentioned, had actually gone across Canada to see what other jurisdictions had done. One of the reasons this amendment has come forward is the fact that it was based on how Quebec handles it in terms of what they consider nonprofits.

It was divided into special-interest groups versus special-service groups, those that actually service the community and provide a service in very many ways as opposed to special interests. Perhaps I could say that a special interest might be the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, whereas, in fact, the service industries – and I'd like to mention some that certainly had approached me from Lethbridge. This is a short list, certainly not all: the Kidney Foundation, with the Lethbridge branch.

Our Galt museum, a wonderful museum that has had renovations within the last three to four years. We have a new curator, and some very exciting things have taken place at that museum, and certainly there are wonderful plans afoot to go forward. That was another one that was concerned that they were going to spend more of their time worrying about paperwork than actually getting on with the job and being able to produce the wonderful museum and exhibits that are available for the world to see but certainly southern Alberta. The school trips that come from various schools outside of Lethbridge are numerous, and to a school these children have all said how much they've really enjoyed it, in particular the standing, static artifacts that they have in terms of the history of Lethbridge itself. The kids seem to really enjoy that.

The other ones, of course, were Volunteer Lethbridge, that coordinates many, many volunteer organizations; the YWCA, who run our women's shelter; Boys and Girls Club; Big Brothers and Big Sisters; Heart and Stroke Foundation; and also something that we have in Lethbridge called VoicePrint.

Mr. Rodney: It's fabulous.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. My colleague from Calgary-Lougheed has expressed his full support of the organization called VoicePrint.

What VoicePrint really does is have volunteers from the community read the newspaper so people who are visually impaired can hear it through the computer, and for some they actually can get very, very large print and follow along. Newspapers are read to them. Certainly, they can hear the Lethbridge Herald or the Taber Times. The scope of this is really quite amazing. Already I've had great comments back from the community, and it's only just been up and started probably within the last couple of months. It's these kinds of organizations that were so concerned that they were going to end up spending all their time on paperwork instead of actually, as I've said, getting on with the job.

I think another thing that's very interesting has happened since we've been on this committee and since the chair has put the report forward to the House. What is different with Alberta is that in other jurisdictions when they have what they would call policy committees, which is a little different than what we've done as a field committee, usually that policy committee is all-party, it goes forward, and as a rule it isn't discussed further in the House. What we've done here is brought this forward. There has been a lot of work put into it, and I think that all members in the House can appreciate that, but what it has done is actually open up further debate from outside of the committee, and I think that's a very healthy, democratic thing to do.

One of the activities that has happened – and I'd like to point out that we certainly were time constrained; we did a lot of work in a very short period of time – is that the report went through, and it didn't have a protection for the nonprofits, or they didn't see it that way. They didn't see that they were exempt, and all they could see was mountains of paperwork. What they did was exactly what this lobby was about. They put together an exceedingly hard-working, very comprehensive lobby. I believe there wasn't an MLA in this House that did not get letters from their local volunteer organizations. Certainly, the umbrella groups within Alberta sent letters, and we were phoned, just saying how upset they really were with this.

To me, I think it's the way it was supposed to be. It was a very open process. We all knew who was being lobbied, so to speak. As a result of that, because of the way the process works here in the House, the committee recommendations would have gone forward, the government were next, and then the opposition would come in after that. So we were certainly ready to go forward with very much the same amendment that the Minister of Health and Wellness has brought forward. Now we're talking about it again in a very open manner.

So lobbying does work, but I really believe that lobbying works best when it's out in the open and everyone knows who's involved. I also think that from the other side it does present an opportunity for people to come together, and certainly in this instance the nonprofits definitely came together.

There was a great deal of depth to their information, and I think those of us on the committee were pleased to be exposed to that depth of knowledge because I'm not sure that the majority of us that sat on it have really understood the depth to which volunteer organizations are in our communities. I believe there are 19,956 – don't quote me on that number exactly – nonprofit organizations in Alberta. How many hours does that represent, certainly, in terms of the volunteers that work for these organizations? My question would be: if these volunteer organizations cease to exist, I would venture to say that our society as we know it would fall apart.

We rely so much on volunteers, and to be able to free them up to do the job that they're really meant to do is the right thing to do. But it was the right thing to do, as I've mentioned, because that lobbying effort was so open, so transparent, and there was an accountability factor in here that I think was very strong. We were accountable as a committee. We're now accountable as the Legislature. Certainly, the volunteer organizations and the people that made these presentations were accountable to the people that they were representing and the people that were behind them, the front-line people, saying: you guys have got to get us freed out of this mountain of paperwork.

It was frightening. I think it frightened a lot of people. A lot of our volunteer organizations do have seniors because seniors are retired. If you've been a senior in the workforce probably within the last five years – I'm going to label a senior at this point in time as anybody probably over 55, 60 – you have been exposed to computers, but anybody older than that has not been. A lot of volunteer organizations depend on seniors to do a lot of the small work that can actually be done on a piece of paper. So the fact that some of these seniors were thinking they were going to have to submit things, despite how easy it is, through computers and have to learn a whole pile of new skills – it was very, very frightening to them.

I also believe that the nonprofits didn't think of themselves as special. I think they just thought they wanted to get on with their job and be left alone to do what they had to do. But where they did think that they were special was that they were special in the same way as everyone else was in other jurisdictions, which is why they continually came back to the committee and have continually lobbied that we would then consider what we call the Quebec exemption. They will be, should this pass, exempted under a section where we can divide nonprofits into service, providing a service to society, as opposed to special interests. I did mention the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and even environmental groups. Although you could argue over what is delivering a service to the community, I think that if it's a special interest behind it, it's quite clear on who would be exempted and who would not be exempted.

I believe another exemption that came through – and it actually came through on the committee and, again, as a result of lobbying, that, again, was out in the open because it was quite clear when we discussed in committee, which was Hansarded. The school boards were most upset that they weren't going to be exempted. I, too, absolutely concurred. I believe that if you are an elected person – and I don't care if you're elected to be a dog catcher, a school trustee, an MLA, an MP, or whatever – you represent the people, and you should be allowed to speak to anyone you want, but more importantly anybody that wants should be able to speak to you. You're representing them, not the other way around.

I believe that the proportions of one-third/one-third/one-third were mentioned.

I believe that another thing that's happening to our nonprofits is that the pressure to deliver services within our society has just increased immeasurably – I'm sure it's been squared by whatever – because of the distinct pressures that are in our province at this point in time because of the rapid growth and, certainly, the rapid economics. We have a whole huge segment of society that relies on services. We have young kids that need to be looked after. We have seniors that need to be looked after. We have young families that need to be looked after. We really have to be able to let these people get on with what they're doing. Already we're starting to hear from these nonprofits just how much extra work they are doing. Some of them are saying: you know, we're getting to the point where we really can't deliver the service to as many people as we would like to. That's sad. It is certainly a reflection on our times.

I think the other portion of society that is represented through volunteer organizations are the moms. We've got soccer moms. We've got hockey moms. We've got ballet moms. We've got art moms. These moms devote numerous hours over and above. A lot of these are working moms. Some are stay-at-home moms. But it's a tremendous amount of time driving the kids around. Often the soccer moms are driving the bigger vans. They're taking the kids whose mom can't take them.

I'm not excluding the dads. Often we'll find the dads coaching. Certainly, there are lots of dads that fight – actually fight – to be the coach for their daughter's hockey team. They often have sons that play as well, but the dads want to coach those girls because the girls hockey teams, I think, have a different kind of spirit. Perhaps they don't have the NHL hanging over their head, and they don't have agents looking at them when they're 10 years old. They can just get out and have a good time and play hockey.

It's not cheap to rent rinks. It's not cheap to play on soccer fields, and it's not cheap to have the proper floors to actually do ballet on. Children can be hurt at an early age if they start too early on pointes, and they have to have good floors to be able to do it. The art moms. It costs to have good art teachers. This is all outside and over and above, of course, what they do in school, so funds have to be raised. Huge, huge, huge amounts of volunteer time go toward the raising of dollars for these organizations.

One of the things that I did within this committee – and I am proud that it was I that brought it up and that it got passed – was that we review this in two years instead of five years. This is a pilot project, so to speak, and I think that it's very important that we keep our eye on these things. Sometimes if it goes for five years, it gets lost. Mistakes can keep falling all over themselves, and we could create a really huge problem that might turn off our nonprofits. I think that it would be an absolute shame if we lost even one hour of nonprofit volunteers at this point in time.

One of the things that came up that was quite interesting within this committee was a really different idea, and it was called a reverse onus. The whole concept of reverse onus was: should it really be on the people who are lobbying, or should it be on the people who are being lobbied? I tend to lean towards the people who are being lobbied. We all have Day-timers. We all have BlackBerrys. We all know exactly where we are at any given time of the day and night. Unfortunately, it probably makes our lives a little bit more difficult, but it's the way it is.

For instance, if I was being lobbied, all I would have to do is look at my BlackBerry and say that I talked to Joe on the golf course, and this is what we talked about. I don't have to go in depth. All I have to know is that I talked to Joe, who represented such and such an organization, and this is where we spoke. [Ms Pastoor's speaking time expired] Oh, that went very quickly. I have so much more to say, so I'm sure that we'll be able to go further.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I was really enjoying my colleague from Lethbridge-East's remarks. I just wanted to emphasize again as a member of the standing policy field committee and also as an MLA in the larger context that we have heard those cries, those plights, those concerns time and time again. We have reacted, and I think we have reacted favourably. I'm actually standing to support the amendment as suggested by the Government House Leader.

Now, I know that there was a bit of criticism initially. It was sort of a knee-jerk reaction by somebody in the volunteer community who indicated under a website, I think, or through an e-mail that they weren't pleased enough, weren't impressed enough with the concessions that the committee made, the changes that the committee suggested in the report to the Assembly because they wanted the full-meal deal. They wanted the full exemption. So I'm hoping that today the Assembly has demonstrated our being reasonable, our willingness to listen.

I want to mention a few organizations which I'm hoping would be pleased with this turn of events, with this direction that we're taking. First off, I would like to mention Volunteer Alberta. I was absolutely impressed with the campaign that they launched and the way they and the Muttart Foundation got together to mobilize everybody in that sector to talk to us both in the committee and outside to really listen to their concern, to pay attention to their plight. I think they were very successful in mobilizing. I think they were very successful in their attempt to talk to us, approach us to deliver that message loud and clear and repeatedly.

One has to really commend them on, first of all, the attention that they paid to Bill 1 and to the committee work. If you go under the Volunteer Alberta website, for example, it is quite impressive the way they kept track, the way they actually stayed with the different steps and the different hurdles that Bill 1 went through. I think the website is really well done and well designed, the way they actually kept that up. Every meeting Hansard was excerpted. Every meeting the transcript was copied to their website. They would then, you know, ask questions further to the meeting and what things were discussed, and they would ask their members to start formulating these questions and so on. I was really pleased with this.

I know that the executive director of Volunteer Alberta, Ms Karen Lynch, Mr. Chairman, is actually a constituent of mine.

Ms Blakeman: She's not. She's my constituent. You can't say that.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. Well, maybe her parents are, then. I know her parents. Yes, she's a constituent of Edmonton-Centre, Mr. Chairman. I stand corrected. Her parents are constituents in Edmonton-McClung.

At one point we had a very brief discussion where she indicated that it really annoys them that they will not have the ear of government. Be it for mischief or be it for fairness, I argued that, you know, it shouldn't just be the ear of government, that it should be the ear of the Assembly, and members of the opposition are equal to members of the government. Ms Lynch actually indicated that while she doesn't really dispute that outright, she felt that members of the government, because they make funding decisions, are maybe worth more or maybe deserve more attention from the volunteer community.

So I stand here today to say that while they make funding decisions, the Assembly helps them make those decisions, and the Assembly actually gives direction and offers insight and scrutiny to these funding decisions. I don't think her being a card-carrying member of the ruling party has anything to do with it. I think there might be a sentiment out there that people think the government is where it all begins and ends. I need everybody in this Assembly to know that that's not true. The government is one arm, but the Assembly is the other arm, equally important if not more important.

The other organization I need to reference – and I'm hoping that they, too, would be pleased with the progress that is being made here – is the Calgary Chamber of Volunteer Organizations. Now, people might say: why are you not referencing the Edmonton Chamber of Volunteer Organizations? You come from Edmonton. Well, I met with the people from Calgary based on a request that they submitted to our southern Alberta caucus office. They intentionally wanted to meet with me because they knew that I was the deputy chair of the committee. So I went down and spoke to them. I remember meeting with Katherine van Kooy, Robert Pynn, and Heather MacDonald. I know that they, too, follow Hansard, and that they, too, read the transcripts. They, too, update their website, and I'm really pleased with their keen interest in this. I'm hoping today that they would be pleased.

These people, I'm hoping, are now used to accessing the Assembly and are now used to visiting the website of the Assembly, listening to the audio, watching the video, that they would keep that interest, that it wasn't just a one-time thing, that it wasn't just their own campaign that they were interested in. I am hoping that that interest would continue because we do discuss many important issues in this Assembly. I am hoping that this attention is maintained and expanded. I am hoping that they will now stay tuned to what goes on under the dome. We do have our moments of disagreement in this Assembly, but we also have moments where we actually agree, like today.

The other person who I am hoping is either listening or at least will be made aware of this progress is Carol Aubée-Girard. Ms Aubée-Girard is actually a member of ECALA, or the Edmonton Community Adult Learning Association. She approached myself and the Member for Edmonton-Centre because her association was very, very concerned. I'm hoping that today she would get some comfort that we heard her plight, we heard her organization's plight, and that the Assembly in total, as an entity, in general has reacted and reacted favourably.

Furthermore, two more people who actually met with me and that I am hoping to again give that comfort and reassurance to were Brenda Wentzell and Shabnam Sukhdev. These two ladies actually met with me as representatives of the Edmonton region of the Canadian Mental Health Association. They were board members in Edmonton.

I actually asked the hon. Government House Leader if his exemption, the Quebec exemption, is going to include an organization like the Canadian Mental Health Association. The reason I asked him this is because while the Canadian Mental Health Association itself is a volunteer organization that is a service provider in the bigger definition, members who actually sit on that board may hold a psychiatry degree, may be practising psychiatrists, for example. So in their outside life, the other hat that they wear, they're profit seeking just because they have a visit fee. You know, like, when you visit a psychiatric clinic, well, health care pays. So we are calling them profit seeking in that department. As the mover of the amendment and also given his legal expertise from his previous life, he indicated that in his interpretation he doesn't think that's the case. He's reassuring me that to the best of his knowledge this exemption extends to an agency like the Canadian Mental Health Association.

I am hoping that we have demonstrated flexibility, that we have demonstrated reason and that politicians are not necessarily opposed to good ideas. Here is one that both sides of the House are agreeing on. I'm hoping that that interest, as I mentioned, continues and grows. People have to pay attention. People have to stop tuning out, to stop ignoring the political scene in Alberta. Some think it's the minor league and that, you know, Ottawa is where the fun is. No, this is not the minor league. This is equally important. As a matter of fact, I think that the decisions we make in this Assembly are more important sometimes than the ones made in Parliament.

With that, Mr. Chairman, these were just some remarks. I'm hoping these people are tuned in and listening and, you know, maybe looking forward to more opportunities of co-operation in the future. Maybe this is the beginning of a very close relationship with members of the volunteer community, where we can maybe advance their cause, help them as they go through their projects and funding decisions. It is not just the government; it is everybody in this Assembly. We're all worthy of receiving that lobbying and receiving that communication from members out there.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Some of my colleagues are asking me to keep my comments brief, so I guess I will try to do that. But not having had a chance to speak to this amendment yet and, in fact, not having had a chance to speak to any of the amendments yet on Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, in the committee stage, I think it's important that I have an opportunity to put my comments on the record as well. Although I will try to be brief, I do have a couple of things that I would like to say.

As we know, this particular amendment is modelled after the Quebec model. The idea is to exempt charitable organizations from Bill 1. As many speakers have already said today, Mr. Chairman, we've all heard a lot of concern expressed to us, particularly from NGOs, charitable organizations, nonprofit groups, and so forth. I think it's fair to say that most of the members of this House come from that sector in one fashion or another. I'm going to guess – oh, now I'm getting a questioning look from one of my colleagues which, I believe, is suggesting that perhaps some of the members on the other side of the House may not have the same level of experience volunteering that those of us on this side of the House do. I don't know if that's a fair comment or not, quite frankly. I'm going to guess that most MLAs in this Assembly have a fairly extensive history of volunteerism, and in large measure that's probably how we get to be where we are today.

I know most of us have been lobbied over the last several months, over the summer, by any number of charitable organizations, but I think that even without that, there would have been a general understanding on our parts – and I say "our" collectively, meaning the 83 members in this Assembly – that this legislation as it was presented cast far too wide a net, Mr. Chairman. I suppose the first question that has to be asked is: how did that happen? How did we get to a point where legislation that was contemplated to deal with the Rod Loves of the world, with the Kelley Charlebois of the world, with the Bob Maskells of the world, a situation that was contemplated to deal with those sorts of situations, which are well documented in this House and have certainly raised a lot of questions about lobbyists and those well connected to the governing party, to a piece of legislation that cast its net so wide that we were including not only chambers of commerce, as was mentioned earlier today, but every little organization in every small community and big city in this province that is trying to do some good work for the people that live in their community?

I think there's a very serious question to be asked there, Mr. Chairman, in terms of how this bill was drafted: how did that get missed? How did we go from wanting to capture paid lobbyists – almost every person in this province, I'm sure, would agree there's a need to have those people registered and a need for the people of this province to be able to be made aware of who's lobbying the government as a paid lobbyist for what. How did we get from that to somebody who's doing a hotdog lunch to raise money for a school council in a small community in Alberta who suddenly has to register as a lobbyist because they managed to bump into their MLA at the grocery store?

I mean, I don't know what happened there, but clearly there was a major, major misunderstanding – I'm going to hope that's all it was – in terms of what was contemplated when the Premier made his commitment to bring in the Lobbyists Act to the drafting table, when this was all put together, and somehow we cast this wide net that captures everybody. I don't know how that happened to take place. I didn't sit on the policy field committee that looked at this over the summer, and I'll confess to not having read the transcripts of all of their meetings. Maybe that's been explored, and maybe there is an explanation for how we got from what was clearly the Premier's intention and what, I think, was the intention of all members of this House to a piece of legislation that is so terribly flawed that it has a handful of amendments, several amendments coming from the committee, which have now been dealt with. It has amendments coming from the government side and, we know for sure, amendments coming from the opposition parties.

So great, great concern about this piece of legislation. As I say, I really think it needs to be asked: just where did things go off the rails so badly that this became a piece of legislation that really should never have been controversial? There was some great work done by an all-party committee two years ago. I know there were members from my caucus that sat on that. Edmonton-McClung and Edmonton-Glenora sat on that committee that looked at conflicts of interest. I believe it was chaired by the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, if I remember right, and he did wonderful work chairing that committee. I remember, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, seeing some comments from the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, the chair of that committee, at the conclusion of its work, and I was pleasantly surprised at how progressive his comments were and how progressive his thinking was in terms of the changes that should be made to conflict-of-interest legislation in this province.

Clearly, there were good intentions on both sides of this Legislature to do the right thing, and I'll give credit where credit is due. The Premier lived up to his promise during the leadership campaign, came forward with a lobbyist act, which is great and, I would argue, is meriting its status as a flagship bill. That's all good. But something went horribly wrong, Mr. Chairman, and just where that happened and why it happened, I'm not clear as to how that took place, but it causes me great concern.

Now, it's been pointed out that this particular amendment is going to accomplish, I think, the addressing of the concerns that many of those NGOs and charitable groups have raised over the summer with myself and with my colleagues, and that's good. In fact, I believe it was mentioned that the Official Opposition caucus had precisely the same amendment ready to go. I believe it had been submitted to Parliamentary Counsel and was queued up to be introduced by the Official Opposition. Of course, the Government House Leader and minister of health takes some precedence, I suppose, in this Assembly and was able to introduce the amendment before we were, and that's fair enough. I congratulate him for doing the right thing, and we're pleased that this is happening. [interjection] I'm getting that signal again. You want me to wrap this up. Okay.

I will conclude my comments there, then, I suppose, Mr. Chairman, so that we can conclude the business of the day. I do look forward to having further opportunity to speak to this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, I'd request you to move a motion that the committee now rise and report.

Date: 07/11/22
[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to make an introduction on behalf of the Premier to you and through you to members of the Assembly. I'm advised by the Premier that the group I'm about to introduce, who are grade 6 students from the Win Ferguson school in Fort Saskatchewan, are the very best grade 6 students in the Assembly today. They are accompanied by teachers Rory Larocque-Walker, Kari Archer, and Kelsey Shaw and parent helpers Joanne Burt, Genny Croteau, Paul Kristensen, Jeff Fischer, Bonny Bowes, Janet Wheat, Patrick Wheat, Lisa Spray, Carol Payne, and Patricia Ferguson. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly several classes from Wye school and, not to contradict the Deputy Premier, among the best students in the province. The classes are about 64 students, and they're accompanied by Mrs. Carol O'Connell, Mrs. Crystal Wujcik, Miss Heather Whitney, Mrs. Pat Beerwald, Mrs. Eskow, Ms Segura, and Mrs. Lianna Krook. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 31 students from Meyokumin elementary school in my wonderful riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie accompanied by their teacher, Dr. Wade Pike, and Mr. Stuart Kelm, a student teacher. They are seated I think in the private gallery. I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. I'd request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly four newly elected members of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo's council. In the gallery this afternoon we have Mila Byron, who is a successful young lawyer in Fort McMurray; Mike Allen, a former chamber of commerce president; Gordon Janvier, who is enjoying the new highway 881 that was built; and David Blair, who lives in the undisputed oldest community in all of Alberta, Fort Chipewyan. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister for Capital Planning.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very special guests who should be in the members' gallery. Perhaps they're behind me in the public gallery, but I'll introduce them in any event. They've travelled a very long way to be here for their first visit to Canada and, obviously, for their first visit to our Legislature. In fact, they've come all the way from India. They are Mr. Naranjan Singh Kainth and his lovely wife, Balwinder Kaur Kainth. They are accompanied by two extra special friends who live in my area, Mr. Parmjit Purba, his beautiful wife, Beant Purba, and their two very well-behaved young children, Harmanjit and Ramanjit Purba. Sat sri akal. [As submitted] I'd ask you to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly, please.

Mr. Mason: It's my absolute pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Muriel Stanley Venne. Muriel is a Métis woman who was born in Lamont and grew up in the hamlet of Whitford, which was named after her great-uncle Andrew Whitford. She has three sons and a daughter and three grandchildren. Her oldest granddaughter is an RCMP officer in Whitecourt, Mr. Speaker. Muriel is an ally and advocate for the marginalized and particularly for Alberta's aboriginal women. Please join me in welcoming this dedicated, hard-working, and compassionate woman, Muriel Stanley Venne.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Rutherford I would like to introduce Peter Adamski. Peter is a resident of Edmonton-Whitemud, in fact. He has a very keen interest in environmental issues and particularly in global warming. He's come down to see us in question period today. I would ask that Peter please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you today a couple from Lethbridge in the members' gallery. Donna Bier and her husband are here joining us today. Mr. Marz: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. It's rare when such an important date in the history of our Legislature escapes the watchful eye of the Speaker of our Assembly, so it's my privilege to bring to the attention of this Assembly that yesterday was the 28th anniversary of the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and Canada's longest serving Speaker. Congratulations, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

The Speaker: That was not a point of order.

Hon. Members: Speech.

The Speaker: Well, we have the Routine, hon. members. We have business to do, and that's what we do. Thank you very much for the acknowledgement.

Restoration of Old Wetaskiwin Courthouse

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Monday was moving day for the Wetaskiwin city council as they took up residence in a 100-year-old courthouse that has been modernized to serve as the new Wetaskiwin city hall. Construction of the original $80,000 three-storey brick and stone courthouse began in 1907. By January 1908 the courthouse was completed, with the Wetaskiwin district court presiding for the first time on January 21. The judge had 33 cases before him, many of which concentrated on a prominent judicial matter of the day, namely horse stealing.

Mr. Speaker, the design of the courthouse, which was considered a modern Renaissance when it was conceptualized, would demonstrate that its structure would stand the test of time. Recently the courthouse received its centennial status. It was also designated provincially and federally as a registered historic resource.

Modern times, increased needs, and security concerns called for the construction of a new Wetaskiwin courthouse in the mid-80s. This development raised many questions regarding what would be done with the original building. Together through a co-operative partnership the Alberta government, the city of Wetaskiwin, and the private sector proposed a great alternative and this week saw the reopening of the original courthouse as a newly renovated Wetaskiwin city hall. The old courthouse was transitioned into an innovative building, which will be heated solely by geothermal technology. Next Monday, November 26, councillors will participate in the first meeting within the new council chamber, and I look forward to being there on that special occasion.

The community of Wetaskiwin will now retain all of the historic aspects of the centennial courthouse for Albertans to appreciate while providing a new forum that will allow civic leaders to share ideas for Wetaskiwin's future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Minister's Awards for Municipal Excellence

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge the recipients of the 2007 minister's awards for municipal excellence, which recognizes our municipal partners. Municipalities across Alberta are on the leading edge of co-operation and foresight, and it is important that we recognize the great work in providing outstanding services and programs to Albertans at the local level.

The towns of Banff and Cochrane in partnership with the Canadian Rockies public schools created an innovative transportation system between the two communities for low-income earners that takes advantage of empty seats on returning school buses travelling between the communities, earning the municipalities the outstanding achievement award.

Mr. Speaker, Parkland county, the town of Stony Plain, and the city of Spruce Grove collectively earned the excellence for partnership award. These municipalities have partnered with local RCMP to create a drug unit to combat the problem of illicit drugs within the trimunicipal region west of Edmonton.

The city of Calgary took home the innovation award for creating warm mix asphalt technology, which enables asphaltic concrete to be produced and placed at a lower temperature, thereby reducing CO₂ emissions and fossil fuels.

The town of Athabasca in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, also received the smaller municipalities award for creating a heritage management plan to protect and manage the Athabasca historic places.

These awards were presented at an annual fall convention of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, which wraps up today in Edmonton, and again at the Urban Municipalities Association gathering in Calgary next week. Mr. Speaker, recognizing the success of Alberta municipalities is very, very important, and I invite all members to give warm thanks to these municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Royal Society of Canada Fellowships

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Society of Canada was founded on May 25, 1882, modelled on The Royal Society of London and the Institut de France to promote learning and research in all academic disciplines. Since its first meeting in Ottawa in 1882 it has met annually to induct new members who are recognized as exceptional scholars with national and even international reputations. This year the Royal Society met for the first time outside of Ottawa, here in Edmonton. It was an honour for me to attend their induction ceremony last Saturday evening at the Winspear Centre.

What was noteworthy for me was the fact that among the 80 new fellows elected to the Royal Society, 12 are members of the faculty of the University of Alberta. This is a remarkable achievement. This year's new fellows from the U of A include Sarah Carter, History and Classics; Wiktor Adamowicz, Rural Economy; Timothy Caulfield, Law; Larry Heaman, Earth and Atmospheric Sciences; Philip Halloran, Medicine; Gary Lopaschuk, Pediatrics and Pharmacology; Ronald McElhaney, Biochemistry; Marek Michalak, Biochemistry; Richard Palmer, Biological Sciences; Keir Pearson, Physiology; Diane Taylor, Medical Microbiology and Immunology; Jonathan Schaeffer, Computing Science.

I want to also recognize three other Albertans who were admitted to the Royal Society: Peter Hackett with the Alberta ingenuity fund, Allan Bell from the University of Calgary in Music, and Ian Stirling, Canadian Wildlife Service.

Fifteen Albertans and 12 from the University of Alberta. On behalf of all members of this Legislature we congratulate all of these new fellows of the Royal Society, and we congratulate President Indira Samarasekera and the University of Alberta. The dream of creating the University of Alberta into a world-class university is being fulfilled.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert

School Boards Association Centennial

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A hundred years is a milestone for any organization. This week the Alberta School Boards Association celebrates a century of proudly serving Albertans as the stewards of their educational system in this province.

A good trustee is an invaluable asset to the community. As local residents they have a unique understanding of particular issues facing their jurisdictions. They have an intimate understanding of their community and as such are in optimal positions to help that wisdom serve the public education system. Because of their unique and valuable perspective, school board trustees were given powers which allowed them to tailor educational arrangements for their area. In 1994, however, with the sweeping reforms made to education, much of the powers originally held by school trustees were taken away. The drastic funding cuts that followed put boards in an impossible situation where the new centralized model made it incredibly difficult for them to cater or adjust their local schools' needs or preferences.

Despite this less than optimal situation trustees have continued to distinguish themselves throughout the past hundred years. People such as Don Massey, John Paterson, Dave Fraser, John Shorter, Joan Trettler, Jacquie Hansen, and Lois Hole are but a few of the shining examples of admirable community-minded individuals who have championed our children's education. As with these individuals, a good trustee will hold that single factor as their guiding principle, objectively seeking out what is best for the children of Alberta, clear of any interfering politics.

On this the ASBA's 100th anniversary I wish to not only praise the efforts of schools boards but also raise a little bit of caution. With this latest agreement over teachers' pensions reached without the participation of boards, school boards are yet again faced with new challenges. It would be an incredible loss to our educational system if we were to see school boards' powers diminished even further, Mr. Speaker. Let's make sure that government supports school boards rather than hurting their ability to support children in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

90th Anniversary of 4-H

Mr. Prins: Thank you. I rise today to recognize and bring attention to the 90th anniversary of 4-H in Alberta, which happened on November 17. Mr. Speaker, 4-H is the longest running youth organization in our province, shaping the lives of youth and adults for 90 years; 4-H members and leaders have gone on to be successful and accomplished members of society. I've been a member of 4-H, and I'm sure that in the last 90 years 4-H has touched many lives in one way or another, and we can all be part of the celebrations, slated to last for the entire year.

This is an organization that brings the whole family together because 4-H clubs rely on family support and volunteer leadership from adults and other 4-H members. By following the 4-H motto, Learn to Do by Doing, members take part in activities that meet their interests, increase their knowledge, and develop their life skills. Whether 4-H members are creating and displaying projects or taking part in summer camp experiences of canoeing and campfires, they build lifelong friendships with people from all over the province while developing valuable skills. Members acquire an understanding of livestock production and horse management by owning, caring for, showing, and marketing animals and maintaining records. They learn about pets, poultry, crops, even bees. They learn about running a business, preparing food, computer skills, performing arts, photography, veterinary science, and more, and all the while they are making lifelong friends and gaining leadership skills that will take them through their careers and beyond.

Our youth want to be involved, accepted, valued, and heard. In 4-H they run the show.

I wish to acknowledge the work that Alberta's 4-H has done for 90 years and continues to do: encouraging young people of all ages to take on leadership roles, make decisions, plan events, and participate in activities within their communities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Muriel Stanley Venne

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Throughout her life Muriel Stanley Venne has been speaking out for social justice and the rights of aboriginal women. She is the founder and president of the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women. She's been in the news many times calling attention to the plight of aboriginal women who are missing or slain and demanding action.

Muriel's service includes being chair of the commission on human rights, organizer of the Gathering Our Strength conference on violence against aboriginal women, a former board member of the National Aboriginal Achievement Foundation, and founder of the Esquao awards. She helped spearhead The Rights Path, Alberta, a publication that received international praise and was endorsed by Mary Robinson, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

Muriel's awards include the Alberta human rights award, aboriginal role model lifetime achievement award, the national aboriginal achievement award for justice and human rights, the Hon. Lois E. Hole award for lifetime achievement, and the Governor General's award in commemoration of the Persons Case. Her Excellency the Rt. Hon. Michaëlle Jean said: your work is an inspiration to women throughout the country, and the award is an honour you well deserve. Muriel is also a Member of the Order of Canada. On November 7 Muriel's work was saluted by Canada's ambassador to the United Nations at the General Assembly, and I quote: for over 30 years she has been a leader in Canada's aboriginal communities, working to fight racism and address the obstacles to equality for aboriginal women, children, and family.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, she has been very involved in politics and in the Alberta NDP and was a candidate for our party on four separate occasions.

Please join me in recognizing the awards, the work, and the person Muriel Stanley Venne.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on, I inadvertently failed to recognize an hon. member who wanted to do an introduction of guests. Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly four constituents from the beautiful MD of Rocky View: two newly elected councillors, Hopeton Loudon and Mitch Yurchak, and our vice-reeve, Greg Boehlke, and his lovely wife, Lynn. Could you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a petition from a number of people across northwestern Alberta. They are objecting to the construction of a nuclear power facility at this time and urge the government to initiate consultation with Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is National Housing Day, and I am continuing to table a petition, this time signed by 50 concerned Albertans from mostly Edmonton, Lethbridge, Athabasca, and Leduc. The petition reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 251 individuals primarily from Edmonton. They are urging the government to ensure that remuneration paid to employees working with persons with disabilities is standardized, that they are fairly compensated and wages remain competitive, that they have improved access to professional development opportunities, and urging the government to introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level of care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition today, and it reads: we the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to launch a full public inquiry under the authority of the Public Inquiries Act into spying practices by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and the Minister of Energy's oversight role of the AEUB. This petition is signed by citizens from Edmonton, Daysland, Galahad, Alliance, and Bawlf.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Corrections Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 52, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2007.

These amendments to the Corrections Act will provide for safer facilities and communities, support victims by providing greater access to information about offenders, and enhance inmate disciplinary procedures. The bill will allow for electronic monitoring or recording of inmate phone calls to enhance safety within the correctional facility and in the community. It will also give victims more information about an offender convicted of a crime against them, including the inmate's date of release and conditions of that release that relate to the victim, and ensure that inmates subject to discipline are dealt with by an independent hearing and appeal adjudicators.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 52 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 52 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Bill 54
County of Westlock Water Authorization Act

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 54, the County of Westlock Water Authorization Act.

This bill will facilitate the delivery of treated municipal water within the county of Westlock and, recognizing that the county straddles two water basins, provide for the appropriate legislative approval for interbasin transfers of that water.

[Motion carried; Bill 54 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Bill 55
East Central Regional Water Authorization Act

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 55, the East Central Regional Water Authorization Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will ensure a safe and secure water supply for Albertans living in east-central Alberta communities. These communities have been impacted by drought and increased growth, and this bill will provide these communities with access to piped potable water.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 55 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 55 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table letters from my constituents Bill Elson, David Verklund, Iris Verklund, Mrs. D. Hewitt, Fred Baker, Aaron Stalder, and Gerry Riva-Cambrin. All of them are concerned about Alberta's labour laws, suggesting five changes, but today I will highlight their wish to have full legal recognition of bargaining rights for public employees, including the right to strike combined with reasonable essential services legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters I have received from 200 of my constituents calling for changes to Alberta's labour laws. The letters express strong support for such changes as first contract arbitration, full legal recognition of bargaining rights for public employees, and one labour law for all unionized workers, among other issues.

Thank you.

head: 1:30 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Use of Private Investigators by EUB

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On May 9, 2007, the EUB's security team leader, Ray Ambler, sent an e-mail to the RCMP and the PI company hired, outlining the details of the covert operation that was to take place in Rimbey. Referencing the attachment the e-mail states, "The Sheriffs department has been provided this document under separate cover and at an earlier date." To the Solicitor General. The sheriffs knew what was happening before May 9. They knew about these repulsive tactics long before they happened. When did the Solicitor General himself know that the citizens of this province were going to be spied on, and was it he who alerted the Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me say that our sheriffs' branch is certainly aware that the EUB intended on using some private investigators for security purposes. That's my understanding of it. Unless the hon. member has further evidence, that's the extent of what we're aware of.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Solicitor General. As Alberta's Minister of Public Security – and please underline public – what role did the Solicitor General and his sheriffs' department play in planning and executing this spy operation? The minister knew about it. The sheriffs knew about it. They allowed it to happen, and they took part.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the hon. member talks about knowledge and a spy operation. As I indicated before, we are aware that due to concerns for public safety the EUB had hired the services of private investigators, and that's the extent of it.

Mr. Elsalhy: Those private investigators, Mr. Speaker, were not at the courthouse; they were at the community centre.

To the Minister of Justice, who is also the Deputy Premier. The Premier and the Minister of Energy knew about this spying plan and initially defended it as something that is not a big deal. Now we find out that the Solicitor General and his sheriffs were at least notified, not involved, and that the RCMP was at least notified. When exactly was the Minister of Justice himself made aware of this repulsive scheme to spy on unsuspecting Albertans?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I can safely say that my knowledge of this matter appeared at the same time as others, when they read the newspaper accounts.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In Rimbey this pathetic government allowed a public body to hire private detectives to spy on the very citizens it is mandated to serve. Three board members from the public body have suddenly, mysteriously retired all at once. They took one for this tired old Tory team. Meanwhile, there is an e-mail trail from the EUB to this government regarding this covert spy plan. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister follow the example set by the board members and retire immediately?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, that would be an emphatic no.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. This spy scandal occurred under your leadership. Why will you not resign and accept full responsibility for this dismal action?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, first of all, as the hon. member knows, the EUB and the previous ERCB and other regulators have operated in the province of Alberta, I think, since 1938 or something in that sort of neighbourhood. I was responsible for the EUB from about the 15th of December last to the present day, and I can tell you that anybody that would want to spend the time to see what I've done from that point to this point would understand that I am working in the best interests of Albertans on this issue, and on a go-forward basis I continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy. This is the minister's accountability statement from his own annual report, which he signs off on, and he should accept full responsibility for his actions. Again, in light of the fact that your department and you made a poor judgment in initially supporting the EUB's covert spying operation, will you do the right thing and resign, and resign now?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, you know, here we go chasing things from the past. They live in the past. I've addressed this situation. I think the hiring of a new chair of the EUB and the work that's been done in the interim speaks volumes with respect to what this government is doing with respect to making this issue completely transparent for Albertans, and the actions that we've taken I stand by.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Regional Municipal Planning

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipal leaders from the capital region will be presented with a plan today on regional planning. However, already some members of the region are criticizing the plan as being unfair to them. This reality is, unfortunately, that the city of Edmonton shoulders the infrastructure costs for the entire region and has a population base far in excess of the others combined. To the associate minister of housing and urban development: do you support the idea that the decision-making for the regional government structure should be weighted on proportion of population?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a technical question. As you know, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing is responsible for the regional planning, especially in the capital region, which I understand has been going well. I'll take that under advisement for the minister.

Mr. Bonko: Yeah, there will probably be a lot of advisement today. The municipal sustainability initiative was weighted towards communities with heavy industrial bases. For the capital region this means that as upgraders are built and many more people move into the region, Edmonton will bear most of the support costs; however, they will receive zero tax dollars from the massive upgraders to help pay for the support services. Those dollars will stay in the rural counties, with a fraction of the population and cost. To the same minister. The MSI funding arrangement was unfair to Edmonton and benefited counties with heavy industrial bases. If the new model for the regional planning addresses this inequity, will you support this and ensure that regional counties pay their fair share for the growth costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that this morning the mayor of Edmonton, Stephen Mandel, in his speech for National Housing Day was very supportive of the municipal sustainability initiative. I know the weighting is done by population and assessment, and I'd refer this question to our President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Bonko: Rural counties surrounding Edmonton believe that the regional planning model will take away from the rural power. The mayors of Strathcona and Sturgeon counties have already stated that they oppose any sharing of revenues, any regional model that affects their autonomy. Apparently, they do not care to co-operate for the good of the entire capital region. They will no doubt put political pressure on their MLAs. To the same minister. We already know that certain members of cabinet have been a barrier to this process. Will you stand up to those mayors and any members of cabinet who try and stall the implementation of the Radke regional planning model?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's a shame that the hon. member would present the response to a report that they haven't got yet as already wrong. What this Premier has done is made it very clear to Alberta that he is someone who does the right thing, not the easy thing. No one ever said that to bring the capital region together was going to be easy, and no one ever said that everyone would agree to all the things, but this Premier has tackled a job that has troubled this region for decades. From his past record this year you can be assured that it will be dealt with fairly, and it will be done completely. All sides will be included, involved, and the right thing will result from it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government would have us believe that three board members implicated in the EUB spying scandal coincidentally retired on the same day. Albertans can smell a rat here. They know that these board members were fired for their role in the scandal. The Perras report, which purported to look into this matter, was a whitewash. Justice Perras didn't even investigate anyone higher than the director of security even though the NDP opposition produced documents which proved board members and officials knew all about the spying. My question is to the Deputy Premier. Will you commit to a complete public inquiry into this matter which looks into the role of all officials, including the Minister of Energy?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member of the third party is doing what he does so well, and that is criticizing people who are not here to stand up for themselves. Justice Perras was given an assignment. He's a well-respected former member of the judiciary. He came out with a report that clearly this hon. member does not like the results of, but the fact of the matter is that he's an honourable person who did what he was asked to do. He produced a report that, unfortunately, he doesn't like but which was of assistance to us.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What he was asked to do was to whitewash this matter and protect the government.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Alberta are demanding to know the full truth in this matter. These so-called retirements point to nothing else but a blatant cover-up, yet other officials at the EUB, including the director of communications, the legal counsel, and other top officials, were copied on e-mails in which the board's intention to spy were made clear. This is to the Minister of Energy. When will you end this cover-up and call a full public inquiry?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, you know, the question is phrased a bit differently this time, but nevertheless it's the same question, and I'll have the same answer for it. I've been responsible for the EUB from December 15 or 16 in 2006. Anybody that would want to take the time to have a look at what I've done with respect to the EUB from that point till today would be very welcome to do so. I can stand here and tell the people of the province of Alberta that I believe that we're moving in the right direction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Another thing that the so-called investigation by Justice Perras failed to investigate was what role the Minister of Energy and senior energy department officials had in this affair, so I'll offer the minister a chance to clear the air. Mr. Minister, what did you know about the plans to spy on Albertans by the EUB, and when did you know it?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, you know, questions loaded with innuendo. I think that it would serve Albertans very well to understand that the EUB is a quasi-judicial board, very similar to a courtroom setting and very similar to a provincial judge. I would no more go and influence the hearings that the EUB are carrying on for Albertans than I would attempt to change the decisions of a judge in the province of Alberta. That, in frank words, is the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Water Management

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My grandpa was a wise man, and I learned as much as I could from him while he was alive. He always had a unique way of telling me things that made them stick. He once told me that we often count things as being more important than they actually are. When you think about what is important, he said: remember, you can go for three minutes without air, three days without water, and three weeks without food. Water is critical. To the Minister of Environment: what are you and your department doing to oversee the wise use of our water resources?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct that we have a resource that, we are increasingly learning, is a limited resource. As we have increased growth pressures, that puts increased pressure on our water. That's why the government recognized a number of years ago that it's important that we have an adequate plan to ensure the proper use of that water, the proper planning for that water. We developed something that is world renowned, and that's the Water for Life strategy, that, frankly, is seen as the leading-edge way of dealing with water.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A lot of water flows down our rivers. The Battle River, flowing through my constituency, is the only nonglacial-fed river in the province and, as such, is subject to incredible highs and lows in water flow, which has great impact on the economics of the region. There's not a shortage of water on the river; there's a shortage of water management. My first supplemental to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure that all watersheds, not just the South Saskatchewan River basin, remain healthy?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the South Saskatchewan River basin is the one river basin that is under the greatest amount of pressure, and that's the reason we've been concentrating on that area first. But one shouldn't assume from that that that is the only basin that we're concentrating on. Frankly, plans are currently under way to establish similar kinds of regimes on the North Saskatchewan and the Bow River, and we're also beginning discussion for similar kinds of local decision-making and local input on both the Athabasca and Peace. WPACs, the watershed planning and advisory councils, worked extremely well. This government not only supports the concept of WPACs but supports them financially to the tune of about $2 million in this budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nothing happens without water. You can't ensure ag production without water. You can't do value-added growth, manufacturing, or tourism without water. Indeed, you can't even grow the size of your town without it being able to supply the new homes with water. What is your department doing, Minister, to ensure some balance between the ever-expanding demands and competing interests on our water and water supply sources?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, one thing is certain when it comes to water, and that is that one size does not fit all. That's why we're so proud of the work that we have under way with the WPACs, currently eight WPACs in different regions throughout the province, expanding beyond that very shortly. In addition to that we have in excess of 100 watershed steward groups that are involved with decision-making on a local level.

Mr. Speaker, nothing works better to deal with planning and issues than dealing with them at the local level. However – and it's a big however – at the end of the day if the local groups are not able to come up with the kinds of decisions that are required, the buck stops here, and the government will ensure that those decisions are made.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Oil Sands Royalty Structure

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General, the expert Royalty Review Panel, and the Department of Energy's own reports confirm that Alberta's royalty system for oil sands was a give-it-away policy. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. When it comes to our oil sands royalty system, why did the government simply have this give-it-away policy for the last seven years?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, I'll repeat this until it comes, you know, quite clear to certain individuals in the House. My responsibility with respect to this issue also started in December last year. I will say another thing. One of the very first things the Premier did was call for a public royalty review. He indicated that that royalty review would be placed in front of Albertans when he received it.

That's exactly what he did. We're moving forward on this issue and many others.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm quoting from a speech by the former Minister of Energy, Murray Smith. This speech was delivered on October 16, 2006, in Austin, Texas. "The model that has worked so well for us is that the royalty structure for oil sands is we 'give it away' at a 1 per cent royalty structure." To the Minister of Energy: why is Murray Smith bragging that the government's royalty policy on oil sands is to give it away, when Albertans are told by your government that our policies collect a fair share? Why is that?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would have to suggest that whatever some former individual may or may not have said in Houston, Texas, is not really something that I need to concern myself with today. What I'm concerned with is the policy of the government, and the policy of the government has been and will continue to be that what we will do is get the best benefit for Albertans from their resources. The policy that was in place prior to the time that we've done the new royalty framework did exactly that. I've alluded to the numbers of billions and billions of dollars that have benefited Albertans with the result of this resource and other resources. We will continue to move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy should know what Murray Smith is saying because he has got your top patronage job in Washington.

Now, I'll ask a question of the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. He seems so anxious to get on his feet. Will the Member for Calgary-Mackay be promoting Alberta's royalty policies as a give-it-away royalty system when he goes to Washington? Is this the government of Alberta's real policy, this give-it-away policy?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, under our new Premier and this new administration it is about striking the right balance for all Albertans. Further to that, I remind the hon. member of when this government in future forwarding had a bridge to nowhere. We had $50 million we spent on infrastructure, preparing for where we are today. At the time we had no homes built. Streets paved and fire hydrants but no homes on them. The fiscal regime was the right economic policy to get to this point today, unlike the Liberals, who have a policy on the fly.

Carbon Dioxide Capture and Sequestration

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, last Saturday the Nobel prize-winning Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change issued its synthesis report, which analyzes the probable impacts of increasing greenhouse gases on nations, including our own. Although conservation measures and switching to alternative energy sources may have some effect on reducing the release of greenhouse gases, Albertans are going to continue to rely on fossil fuels for the majority of their energy needs in the foreseeable future, and any meaningful reductions in carbon dioxide emissions will necessitate capture and storage of those gases. My question is for the hon. Minister of Environment. What is the government doing to move ahead with projects to capture carbon dioxide here in Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member makes a very valid observation, that increasingly the technology related to managing CO₂ is looking to be a very significant contributor into dealing with climate change related issues into the future. The government of Alberta will be very much part of working on various projects with respect to CO₂ capture and sequestration. There was recently, for example, funding through the Alberta Energy Research Institute, AACI, and Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry to do a feasibility study into the development of a pipeline from the Industrial Heartland.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can you tell the House why this particular project in the Industrial Heartland would be a project to pursue?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reasons. There are a number of alternatives that can be used for CO₂. One, of course, is enhanced oil and gas recovery, the sequestration of CO₂ that actually increases the production from existing oil fields. The other is the pure sequestration for the purpose of eliminating CO₂. In order to do any of those, you need to have a source of CO₂, and you need to have availability. By having the cluster of industrial development within the heartland, it makes a perfect combination of supply and opportunity to sequester.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, my further supplemental question is to the same minister. How do Albertans know that investing in carbon capture and storage would be a worthwhile step to tackling greenhouse gases?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this isn't something that has been dreamt up by Alberta Environment. This technology has been proven for a number of years. We just need to ensure that it can be scaled up to the kinds of developments that we have in this province. I can give examples of carbon sequestration already under way in Australia, United Kingdom, Germany, the United States. There are 30 years' experience in enhanced oil and gas recovery. Then there are other ways that I think Albertans should be aware of the recognition of this. Even our own Pembina Institute here in Alberta has pointed out the need for carbon capture and sequestration to deal with climate change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Affordable Housing

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is National Housing Day, a day to raise awareness about the housing crisis that exists across the country and especially in this province. As a member of the Affordable Housing Task Force I was deeply moved by the stories of despair from so many people who cannot afford a place to live. We desperately need affordable housing. My questions are for the Associate Minister of Affordable Housing and Urban Development. The task force estimated that delivering a minimum of 12,000 additional units over five years will cost $480 million a year. How can this government build the affordable housing we need by spending less than half of that amount of money? What are you going to build? RVs? Tent trailers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, today is National Housing Day. I'd like to begin by thanking the people in the communities that are working so hard. There are thousands of people in this province that are working hard in providing affordable housing to low-income individuals and people in need. In answer to the question, this member knows that we have had $285 million that was dedicated just six months ago to the issue of affordable housing, and $195 million of that was for 11,000 housing units to be built over the next five years. That began this year alone.

I went on the website for this individual, and I notice that the plan he . . . [Mrs. Fritz's speaking time expired] I'll comment further.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, we hear that amount, $285 million, again and again. But it's not impressive because these are the facts: in 1986 this government invested the same amount of money in affordable housing – 1986 – with half of today's budget. So how can you say, Mrs. Minister, that you are really serious about solving the affordable housing crisis?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, how can this individual say that? It's remarkable to me. As I was going to say, on your website you're calling for a thousand less units than this province is building in the next five years: 10,000 units, and we're building 11,000. To further back that up, yesterday in this House the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing announced $60 million for projects, one in your own riding, in Barrhead, Mr. Speaker. Excellent project, the community worked very hard. Sixteen communities are participating in that. So we are doing some significant good work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If this government is really serious about eliminating homelessness in 10 years, will this government look at the task force's housing-first perspective? It is not enough just to provide shelter space. We desperately need transitional housing with wraparound services so people can move beyond the shelter, through the housing continuum towards independence and self-reliance. To the same minister: are you committed to funding these necessary services? If you don't, there will be a reverse flow through the housing continuum into more and more homelessness.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said to you in this House previously – in the last two weeks I think it's been a few times we've addressed this issue, and we know that Housing first is a model that we as a government are following. We're currently doing that today. We have $16 million in outreach projects given to the municipalities and the communities and agencies, and it is housing first that they're providing. I mentioned one project here alone, and that was the hospital discharge project in Calgary, where 50 chronically homeless individuals who've accessed emergency are being met by a seven-member professional team of physicians, nurses, and they are being provided with housing first rather than being discharged back to their shelters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Air Quality

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency has been blessed to be a hub for oil and gas activity. However, the recent releases of sour gas across the province have all Albertans concerned about the quality of their air. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What is it that you're doing to ensure that we protect all Albertans, even my constituents, about the quality of their air?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the member is quite right. The recent occurrences with respect to sour gas have certainly highlighted in the minds of Albertans the importance of air quality. But I have to point out that sour gas is something that is dealt with in an emergent way. We have the highest standards in Alberta with respect to regulations surrounding sour gas. The fact that we dealt with these releases and have in place the necessary plans is, I think, a compliment. But the greater question is: how do we maintain air quality, generally speaking? That really falls into the announcement that I made a while ago with respect to cumulative effects. How do we regulate airsheds within the region and keep them clean?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's almost been two months since the government announced the cumulative effects management framework, so my question to the same minister is: what programs and what progress has been made in regard to implementing this framework?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, there's been a significant amount of progress on this framework. As an example, we've been seeking public input over the last period of time. We've had some targeted stakeholder group meetings. Just today I've announced the establishment of an airshed working group who will build a system that will allocate, monitor, and evaluate airshed targets. This group represents industry, environmental groups, municipalities, and, of course, representatives from the government. I have to emphasize that if this group can't agree on the system that we use on a go-forward basis, then, obviously, the government will be responsible for making a balanced decision at the end of the day.

Ms Calahasen: Then, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: if this working group is only just getting together now, when can we expect the airshed targets to come into effect? It's only beginning now, so I and my constituents would like to know: when is this going to come into effect?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm expecting an initial report from this group as early as December of this year, but the targets themselves come into effect on January 1 of 2009, so we have in that interim period of time necessary opportunities to ensure that the system that we put in place in fact works to protect the environment and allow industry to continue to grow and also that we have an ongoing review of these programs. Every five years we'll take account of how well the plan is working and make necessary adjustments along the way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Women's Shelters

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The lack of affordable housing in this province has been especially harmful for women attempting to flee abusive relationships. Alberta now leads in domestic assault, homicide/suicide, and stalking and is second in domestic homicide. As the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters states: the impact of these realities on Alberta's families is enormous, and the infrastructure is simply not in place to the extent that it is needed to provide immediate and effective interventions. To the associate minister of housing: why isn't there a provision specifically for women who are victims of domestic violence included in the housing plan?

The Speaker: The associate minister of affordable housing.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will take that question under advisement because we do not have the secretariat membership advertised as yet. I'm assuming that's what you mean, in regard to the secretariat, so I will take that under advisement and look toward that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2006 the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters reported the following aggregate information for all 41 shelters: the number of women forced to return to abusive situations due to a lack of affordable housing in Alberta has increased by over 300 per cent. To the associate minister: what, if anything, will be done to provide immediate affordable housing to these women and ultimately prevent unnecessary tragedies?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious question as it relates to women's shelters. I know that the Minister of Children's Services has told the House in the past that the budget had increased from $15 million to $22 million in '07-08 for women's shelters, but for the emergent needs, which are the critical needs, women can be assisted. We must let women know this as well, about the good programs that we have, that our direct rent supplement programs combined are $33 million to $50 million. A thousand apartments this year in Calgary, for example, were made available through the Calgary Apartment Association, which we're assisting with the first month's rent and the damage deposit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The victims of crime fund consistently runs surpluses of millions of dollars, currently sitting at $18 million and growing every year. To the Solicitor General: why are these funds not used to fund women's shelters or sexual assault centres?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member noted, we do at this point in time have a surplus of funds in the victims of crime fund, and those funds are used to assist people who are victimized by crime. We look at all different aspects of ensuring that the money gets out to those people who need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Logging in Kananaskis Country

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. So the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development gets his way, and the trees are falling as we speak in the Siballd district of the Kananaskis Country, just west of Calgary. Despite more than a thousand letters and more than 1,200 petitioners a beautiful woodland in Calgary's backyard goes down, and an essential watershed for more than a million people is endangered. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: will the minister listen to his constituents and Albertans in general and protect this area and Calgary's water supply?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, as I've explained to the hon. member across the way numerous times, Sustainable Resource Development has not one but two hydrologists on our staff. Any forestry management agreement, any detailed forestry management plan, particularly this one because it's upstream from a big urban centre like Calgary, has detailed water studies and water modelling. We've met with the city of Calgary. If you'd read the article carefully, hon. member, you would have seen that the city of Calgary is satisfied with how we're proceeding with respect to the water issue.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ because certainly there are thousands of people who are not happy with this thing. There is a city of more than 1 million people only minutes away from this logging site. Calgarians are proud to consider K Country as part of their own backyard, and I don't think they appreciate having the watershed for the Elbow River compromised by some half-baked notion of this minister's right to log with imprudence. So I'd ask the minister again: what is the backup plan that he has, then, for Calgary's water supply should the Elbow River be compromised because of this shortsighted logging plan?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite certain that some of my friends on this side would ante up for a one-way ticket for the hon. member to take a trip over to British Columbia. We could send him across the way, and he could see what happens when the let-nature-take-its-way group has their way. That's what they said 10 years ago in British Columbia: let nature take its way. They've lost hundreds of thousands of hectares of land. There are going to be children born in British Columbia now that won't see a healthy pine forest for 40 years. That's what we're not going to allow to happen in this province.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, I find that the logic of connecting this pine beetle crisis and logging the Kananaskis Country is absolutely ridiculous. It comes from some sort of Paul Bunyan idea of logging as opposed to forest management. Albertans were not consulted in this forestry management plan. The plan was hashed out between the Tories and their big-business buddies, and then the public was brought in. Bought and paid: that's what we hear. So the minister should have some inkling that the people in his region do not approve of this logging adventure, and it's taking place right in his constituency. Why is the minister alienating his own constituents and the city of Calgary by allowing the destruction of this important watershed?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the logging company involved here, Spray Lake Sawmills, is hardly big business. It's a family-owned business. It's been logging in the Kananaskis and the eastern slopes since 1946. Many of the recreational trails that we use right now are the result of this logging. Perhaps you've been on the Forestry Trunk Road. The Forestry Trunk Road would be a result of that. I'm sure I could collect another little money from this side to send the hon. member on another trip, over to southern British Columbia, down to Radium to take a look at the Kootenay River Valley, burned out for about 40 kilometres. That's what comes after the pine beetle. If you want to see a half-baked idea, that's the half-baked idea.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Bullying

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, bullying is unacceptable any time and anywhere. This week is national bullying prevention week, and we've seen a number of stories about bullying in our schools and communities. Most alarmingly, bullying seems to have moved out of our schools and into cyberspace, with online bullying becoming a significant problem. Children and teachers are being targeted each and every day by people under the cover of the Internet. My first question is to the Minister of Education. According to the Media Awareness Network 34 per cent of students in grades 7 to 11 report they have been bullied within this current school year. Among those, 27 per cent say that they have been bullied over the Internet . . .

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what the hon. member would like to know is what we're doing about it. I'd like to say, you know, that the Internet is going to play an important role in the 21st century with the 21st century learner, but along with that come bad people who do bad things, and they can remain anonymous. It was my pleasure yesterday to join the Minister of Children's Services as we participated with some 300 students at a west Edmonton junior high school and announced phase 3 of our antibullying initiative. That particular phase is geared towards looking at oneself to ensure that we're not doing things like bullying.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. If we're going to combat bullying, we need to get to the heart of where our students live, learn, and play. To the same minister: is the government's bullying prevention campaign doing enough to reach our children and their parents to make sure that they are getting the message?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, phase 3 is rather a unique campaign that is going to be released throughout movie theatres in the province. It will complement the two websites that we currently have up and running. The one is called bullyfreealberta.ca, and the other is b-free.ca. I guess that out of all three of those phases, quite frankly, our message is that bullying is unacceptable anywhere any time by anybody.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister. I know that the government's bullying prevention campaign is in its third year. What I don't know is whether or not the campaign messages are actually reaching our students. Do you have any proof that this campaign is working and has had any impact?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only thing that I think we can report statistically is that those two particular websites that I mentioned have had more than 2 and a half million hits.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Liepert: Two and a half million hits in about two years.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to that, some 500 people have called our 24/7 toll-free bullying prevention helpline.

Just to conclude, Mr. Speaker, I think one of the things that all of us need to ensure – I don't believe that children learn to be bullies in schoolyards. I think they learn from watching adults, whether it's how adults perform at hockey games or how we speak to one another. I believe that we can give kids the wrong message.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Logging in Watersheds

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A portion of Alberta's oldest, rarest, and most threatened forest, in the Crowsnest Pass on the slopes of Mount Tecumseh, was approved to be logged by the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. This rare forest has some of the most diverse and vulnerable flora and fauna in the province. It's a part of our natural heritage which should be preserved and protected for all Albertans. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: will the government protect the oldest forest in the province and stop the logging from proceeding?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member had better check his facts. I believe Mount Tecumseh is in the C5 forestry area. I postponed the approval of the next forestry management agreement in that area in March precisely because of concern about watershed and habitat issues. We're not proceeding with the forestry management agreement there until we receive the report on the Oldman water basin and we see an updated forestry management agreement for C5.

Mr. Cheffins: Well, then, the minister acknowledges the importance of water basins. If that's the case, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are concerned about logging currently under way in Kananaskis provincial park in the proximity of a vital watershed and within a pristine natural recreational area. Calgaryans are greatly concerned with the effect it will have on the quality of their water supply. Logging of this area can cause increased runoff and flooding downstream and increase the level of contaminants in a vital source of drinking water. To the same minister: will this government stand up for Calgaryans and all Albertans and stop the logging in this sensitive area?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I hate to waste the House's time by repeating the answers I've already given, but we have not one but two hydrologists on staff. Any forestry management agreement is both tested and modelled on water treatment. I met with save a tree, the Kananaskis protection group. I met with them in June. We agree with them that the highest use of the eastern slopes is watershed and recreation. The question is: how do you achieve that goal? It's not by sitting back and doing nothing. That's what they did in British Columbia. That leads to the pine beetle. That leads to the forest fires. If you want to see real water problems, sit back and do nothing; let nature take its way. That will cause worse problems.

Thank you.

Mr. Cheffins: Mr. Speaker, this minister knows that clear-cutting is not allowed in various areas in British Columbia upstream from drinking water sources such as in Vancouver. The minister refers to children in British Columbia. Well, if he'd come into some of the schools in my constituency, he'd see the posters there that say: stop logging in the Kananaskis. To the same minister. These are not normal areas for logging activity. They're vital areas, important watersheds. Will this government start treating these sensitive areas more responsibly and stop the mismanagement, which is outraging Albertans across the province?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we won't even take up a collection for this. I'll personally take the hon. member down to visit. He's new to the House, but he seems to have the same problems as the others: he doesn't listen very well. I'll take you down to the Castle Crown. I will show you areas that were logged 40 years ago that are now in such good shape, having been reseeded, that the same groups want to protect this area as pristine forest. Our concern about Kananaskis is just as sincere as theirs. We're using science, not romantic notions. We've seen what happened over in British Columbia. We're using science to do what's good for the long term – the long term – not what's good for next week but the long-term well-being of the forest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Edible Oil Tariffs

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Agriculture is a highly competitive international and global business. Changes to protocols or import tariffs somewhere halfway across the world can have an impact on Alberta and its producers. I recently learned that China has lowered its tariffs on soybeans and that this is having a negative impact on Alberta's canola producers. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Can the minister explain how soybean tariffs affect our canola exports and the impact that this has had on Alberta canola producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, canola and soybeans compete as edible oils. China is a big and growing market. Their tariff on canola is 9 per cent. Their soybean tariff was 3 per cent, and that has been reduced to 1 per cent. According to industry estimates, equal tariffs could potentially increase Alberta's canola exports by about 1 million tons, or $400 million. To give this perspective, in the year 2000 China's number one and number two agricultural imports were soybeans and canola. Today, Mr. Speaker, canola is not even in the top 20.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amount of potential revenue being lost by our canola producers is of concern, so I wonder if the minister could tell us what the Ministry of Agriculture and Food is doing to address this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My staff of course has been advocating for trade parity and promoting benefits of canola with our Chinese counterparts. We've written the federal minister of agriculture. In fact, I talked to him last Friday and Saturday about the issue, and he agreed to raise the issue with the Chinese authorities. Pursuing change to canola tariffs will probably continue to be a part of trade talks with China as we move forward on this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear that the minister of agriculture is continuing to go to bat for the agriculture industry. I recognize that this is not just an Alberta issue but one also that impacts canola producers across the country. So my final question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Can this minister tell us if there is any other action we can take, perhaps through the World Trade Organization, to remedy this problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must admit our frustration in the fact that the WTO, the World Trade Organization, is moving at a glacial pace relative to the complexities of countries that are involved. But I can assure you that working in partnership with our federal government, our cousins, we want to receive the outcome that, in fact, will serve Albertans and serve them better than presently is in place today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Regional Health Authority Budgets

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The July 2007 contract agreement between the United Nurses of Alberta and the health regions resulted in a 7.7 per cent salary increase for nurses. The minister has refused to provide additional funding to the health regions to offset this increase. My question is to the minister of health. The regions are now forced to choose between cutting programs and services or going into deficit. What should they choose?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, by law they're not able to go into deficit, so they should choose to follow the law, as any prudent board would do. But it should be mentioned that the regional health authorities, working together, negotiate the agreement, so they obviously would have known what impact the agreement would have on their budgets when they signed the agreement and so would have prudently planned for that eventuality.

Ms Blakeman: I think the minister left the health regions in a very bad position. Is the minister going to give the regions any direction on what programs he deems expendable that they can cut?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I was going to tell the regional health authorities what programs they would cut, what purpose would I have in having a regional health authority at all? I would just run it directly. They're the ones that are on the ground in their regions, determining what the priorities are for the region, what the priorities are for the investment of the resources that they get. But I would point out that a significant amount of the $12 billion budget that this province spends on health care goes to direct service delivery through the regional health authorities. They have significant budgets, and they have to allocate those budgets in accordance with the needs in their region.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the minister: why is the minister avoiding accountability by forcing the regions to make the difficult and, most likely, unpopular decisions about cutting services?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the last thing on earth that I'm trying to do is avoid accountability. I expect that I will be roundly roasted by that very member when we get into debating Bill 41 and Bill 48, which set up an accountability structure which brings it right back to the government with respect to having the tools to serve accountably to Albertans and deal with the resources we need. The fact of the matter is that we have a complex health system. We have nine health regions that deliver within the context of a provincial health policy framework. Their job is to take the resources that are allocated to them and to allocate those resources in the best interests of their region, providing the services that are needed in their region. They have large budgets, and, yes, we can always use more. But part of the role of governance, whether you're at this level or at their level, is to allocate resources in accordance with priorities.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period, and that was 90 questions and answers today.

The Speaker: We'll now return to the Routine, where we were at, under Tabling Returns and Reports. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two documents to table today. The first one: five copies of a letter from Doug Wiebe, executive director of L'Arche Association of Lethbridge, regarding the urgent need to increase support for persons with developmental disabilities.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of an e-mail from the Energy and Utilities Board security leader, Ray Ambler, advising EUB board members John Nichol, Ian Douglas, Graham Lock of a contract to spy on the landowners at the 500 kV line hearings in Rimbey, Alberta. Also copied on the e-mail are legal counsel Rick McKee and communication employees Davis Sheremata and Bob Curran, still employees of the AEUB.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of letters I received from six of my constituents, all urging us to look at revamping Alberta's labour laws, which, in their opinion, are antiquated and not fair to all working people in Alberta. One sample idea in the letters is a first-contract arbitration process, for example. These letters are from Jennifer Innes, Joyce Hass, Doreen Long, Harold Kitchen, Jarek Wysokinski, and Brenda Freeson.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is a letter from a constituent, Alfreda Strzelec. This letter indicates that we should have a more positive and fair labour relations climate.

The second tabling I have today is in regard to my questions from earlier today to the Minister of Energy. It's a transcription of tapes from the Austin annual meeting general session October 16, 2006, minister-counsellor Murray Smith, Alberta. This is the speech in Austin, Texas.

The third tabling I have is again another letter from a constituent, Donald George Milford, a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar, of course, who is urging this Assembly to make five significant changes to Alberta's labour laws.

My last tabling is also a letter from a constituent by the name of John McLennan. Mr. McLennan is also advocating there be at least five significant changes to Alberta's labour laws to make them more fair.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings, and they have come from my constituents. They are Jorge Ortiz, Darren Milward, Ben Carandang, Leonila Carandang. They are all concerned about Alberta labour laws and strongly believe in "major changes to encourage fairness to all working people," strongly urging this government to "implement and support these changes to our province's antiquated and unfair labour laws" and bring Alberta labour into the 21st century.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is the victims' assistance program, a document on it from the Edmonton John Howard Society, and that just shows how to provide assistance to victims of domestic violence as they go through the criminal court system. Another is an excellent document, Wife Abuse: I Want the Violence to Stop! It documents 34 of our very necessary women's shelters and other resource centres for this difficult problem.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings. One, a letter from Tina Copp, who came here from New Brunswick to a job but is really concerned about high increases in rent.

I have another letter from Diane Currah, who is really concerned about increases in rent. Also, "What are the Seniors, kids going to school and the Working poor going to do in the near future? . . . We need to get this Government Out."

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(6) I would request that the Government House Leader share with us the business next week, the week commencing on the 26th of November, government business commencing on the 27th.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're hoping to have a very productive week next week.

Ms Blakeman: Hope springs eternal.

Mr. Hancock: It does. Monday being private members' day, government business would start on Tuesday, November 27. After Orders of the Day we would expect to be in Committee of the Whole very briefly with respect to Bill Pr. 1, the CyberPol bill, and I would expect, Mr. Speaker, just for the notice of the House that we would have a statement from the Minister of Justice with respect to that bill and then adjourn it. We would then be in second reading on the appropriation bill and possibly Bill 46, Committee of the Whole on bills 1, 2, 9, 11, 23, 24, 31, 38, and 41. I trust we'll make some progress on some of those.

Wednesday, November 28, under Orders of the Day we could be in Committee of the Whole on some of the bills left over from Tuesday, November 27, and for second reading Bills 47, 48, 49, 50, and 53 and 46 if it's in second or in committee, as well as Committee of the Whole on appropriations.

Thursday, November 29, after Orders of the Day Committee of the Whole, based on progress from Wednesday, including Bill 46 and the other bills in committee, and third reading, time permitting, based on progress from Tuesday and Wednesday, but third reading, certainly, on the appropriation bill. Bills 13, 35, 36, and 40 are also possible. When I mention progress on the appropriation bill, of course, the House will be in Committee of Supply this afternoon. If Committee of Supply approves supply and recommends it to the House, we would then anticipate introducing an appropriations bill on Monday.

That would be the projected government business.

The Speaker: Hon. members, during the Routine, the Oral Question Period, the chair was advised that two points of order would be raised. The first, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order Ministerial Responsibilities

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During the sixth set of questions an exchange between the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Energy responded by indicating he was only responsible for the actions of the department following his appointment as minister on December 15, 2006. I'd like to draw the Speaker's attention to Beauchesne 409(6), which says:

A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.

So it indicates, I think, that quite clearly, but let me also direct you to M and M, page 427, again around question periods. The advice given there is to "ask a question that is within the administrative responsibility of the government or the individual Minister addressed." Further, it comments that one may not "address a Minister's former portfolio or any other presumed functions, such as party or regional political responsibilities."

I'll also note at M and M 432 that Speaker Jerome in his 1975 statement on question period commented:

Several types of responses may be appropriate. Ministers may

- answer the question;
- defer their answer;
- take the question as notice;
- make a short explanation as to why they cannot furnish an answer at that time; [or they may]
- say nothing.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, it is laid out that whoever is appointed and holds that position of minister for a given department is responsible for answering questions to that department, not as of a certain date. Nowhere in here does it say: only from the day they are appointed. They are responsible for the actions of that department. They are the member of the government. It is the government's ministry. They're responsible for answering for the choices that have been made in that particular department. Seeing as we cannot question them on a previous portfolio – and that is specifically stated – it does indicate that they are responsible for answering questions for the portfolio that they're in, and there is no best before date, if I may use that colloquial expression.

So for the Minister of Energy to continue to evade questions by stating that he was only responsible after December 15, 2006, is not an appropriate response, and I do give you those citations in support of my contention that there is a point of order against the Minister of Energy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others to participate? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, there's no point of order. There's nothing in Beauchesne's or M and M, as the hon. member referred to it, which requires the minister to answer the question in the manner that's asked. In fact, with the rules that we have in place now, the 45-second rule, and the abuse of the preambles that the hon. members opposite are engaging in, it is very difficult sometimes to know even what question is being asked.

The hon. Minister of Energy was merely pointing out and I think has pointed out a number of times in this House that the members opposite are often living in the past and they're asking for answers to questions relative to things that go back historically. I guess if the hon. members were to read the rules rather thoroughly, they'd find that the rules with respect to written questions are appropriate to ask for issues of the past and question period is really to ask for issues of the day.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, this is one of the long-standing dilemmas that, I guess, individuals have. Because so much in the question and so much in the response these days tends to be more debate than it is actually dealing with policy, we're invariably going to fall into this kind of a situation.

Now, for me to extrapolate from the Blues with respect to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar:

When it comes to our oil sands royalty system, why did the government simply have this give-it-away policy for the last seven years?

Then the hon. Minister of Energy – and I'm skipping the first sentence in the response – says:

My responsibility with respect to this issue also started in December last year. I will say another thing.

I suspect that one could read all kinds of different things in both of those questions, including the second response. By not saying he's refusing to answer a question – he doesn't have to answer a question in this case if he doesn't want to – I suppose one could make the argument that he did answer the question. That's the subjectivity that goes with this. I'm afraid it's all part of the give-and-take in question period and the phrasing of the questions and what have you. The fact that someone says anything, one might argue that he has answered a question. The fact that someone says nothing, that is within their right not to.

I repeat: this is Oral Question Period. Unfortunately, it's not called oral answer period. So we're going to have these interpretations from time to time. They will continue. They're not new. They've been here for 102 years.

The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the tone of your response to that point of order I will say under 23(1) and 23(i) – if I understood correctly the hon. member mentioned Washington, DC, representative Murray Smith contrary to the fact – and the member may not be aware – that, unfortunately, Mr. Smith no longer works in Washington. It is my understanding from what I heard that he was implying that he still did.

I might add that the Alberta representative, while he was there, did an absolute stellar job and helped with our fiscal regime policy, that has injected billions of dollars into our communities. That was 10 years ago. Here we are today, ten years later: we didn't generate $25 billion; we generated over $100 billion because of some of the good work of that member that he had mentioned.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: This appears to be more of a point of clarification than a point of order. Along those lines one might also want to go to this famous M and M. By the way, M and M is Marleau and Montpetit. There are sections in here dealing with all these sorts of things. I suspect that every once in a while it's a good release of energy. The intention was to have points of clarification, and that's the most we ever had today. It was not a point of order either. So along with the Deputy Speaker's that's 0 for 3 today in points of order.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Before I recognize the hon. President of the Treasury Board, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three members of Greenpeace Alberta. Greenpeace is an independently funded organization that works to protect the environment. These three members of Greenpeace have come to the Legislature today to present their concerns over numerous issues, including Bill 46 and nuclear energy in this province. I would like my three guests now to rise and receive the recognition of the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Supplementary Supply Estimates 2007-08
General Revenue Fund

The Chair: Just a clarification for the chair on how we're going to proceed today. Have the House leaders come to an agreement on whether we're going to go back and forth within the designated time frame, or is it 20 minutes on one side and 20 minutes on the other? Has there been clarification on that?

Ms Blakeman: Well, the Standing Orders are silent on how supplementary supply debate actually gets organized. I left it up to my members to try and organize with their respective ministers. If they'd like to go to the 20 minutes, they will notify you in advance. Other than that, I assume that we're into traditional back and forth, but I do hope that the ministers will be cognizant of the short period of time we have to debate this.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: I don't think anybody on this side would object to answering back and forth if that was appropriate. You know, we want to get as many of the ministries involved as possible.

The Chair: Okay. Then that's what we'll do unless notified otherwise.

The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is now my pleasure to move the 2007-08 supplementary supply estimates for consideration by the Committee of Supply.

These will provide additional spending authority to 16 departments of the government. When passed, the estimates will authorize approximate increases of $1.5 billion in voted expense and equipment inventory purchases. Mr. Chairman, the majority of these estimates are for savings and capital projects. These estimates will see $825 million going to the heritage fund and $408 million for capital projects, including capital maintenance and renewal and affordable housing. This is available from higher than anticipated results from last fiscal year and this year to date. The rest of the estimates are for $197 million in disaster emergency assistance and $68 million for public service salary settlements, contracted agency recruitment and retention initiatives, and the Fort McMurray allowance. Also, an additional requirement of $15 million in statutory nonbudgetary disbursements is disclosed in these estimates. Disaster emergency assistance is funded through the sustainability fund, and other changes are addressed through dedicated revenue expense changes or the contingency allowances announced at budget.

Mr. Chairman, as I indicated in the House yesterday, it is important to note that our operating expense is $77 million lower than at first quarter and $53 million lower than was forecast at budget.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We look forward to answering and addressing any questions that the Assembly may have concerning these estimates.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think I'm going to lay out questions in a number of areas and then allow ministers to respond when they get an opportunity. I would think that the government members would be wanting, crowding, pushing each other out of the way to be here and talking to us about the different departments that are up for supplementary supply. [interjection] Oh, I'm getting an indication talking about the number of members I have present. Well, if you're the government, you want to be accountable. I notice that there are 16 departments that have additional money, and I'm afraid I don't have a corresponding number of ministers here, which is a great disappointment. I would have thought they would be proud to be talking about additional money in their departments, but I guess that's not the case.

I would also note, Mr. Chairman, that members of the Official Opposition received the supplementary supply during the very beginning of Orders of the Day yesterday, so we've had 24 hours to have a look at what is being brought forward in supplementary supply, which is a very quick turnaround for us even with additional staff that we secured. Those staff are for the policy field committees, not to do additional work like this. I'm just querying why the government felt that they had to do such a quick turnaround on this. Most interesting choices there.

We are debating $1.5 billion in today's supplementary supply, which is a honking amount of money. That comes out to about $1.5 million a minute in the time that we will have this afternoon, which indeed is, again, an awful lot of money to be trying to get answers from ministers as we go through.

Starting with the Department of Health and Wellness, for which I am the shadow minister, I'm finding it very interesting that we now don't really get an explanation of what's happening with this money in supplementary supply. We used to get a couple of sentences that described what was happening. Now we're just referred back to an announcement that was made on a particular day, to which I thought, "Oh, great; I'll get a lot of detail out of that." But I go back and I look, and in the supplementary supply on page 44 it says that $53.5 million is available for additional capital maintenance and renewal projects, as announced on August 22. Well, when I go to the August 22 announcement, that's a generic announcement for the entire government, and of course you've got to dig through it a bit to get your particular department out of it.

That announcement on the 22nd was actually an announcement of $350 million in a number of departments, six different departments. So I've been referred to go and look at a press release in which the department I'm trying to inquire about is mixed in the midst of six other departments. I think: "Well, okay. Great. There'll be a lot of detail about what's happening there." No, Mr. Chairman, there isn't. It just talks about the $350 million, and some people say some nice things, but it doesn't actually tell me what the Department of Health and Wellness is planning on doing with the $53 million that they've been allocated.

Mr. Hancock: I'd be happy to.

Ms Blakeman: The minister is indicating that he's happy to tell me right now, and I hope he can give me the level of detail that I'm looking for because a one-sentence referral to a press release that gives me absolutely no information is not cutting the mustard right now.

The second thing I find very interesting is that if you read the small print that's available on page 45, Mr. Chairman, it indicates, "Adjusted Gross Amount reflects the transfer of: $23,172,000 for emerging capital purposes from Infrastructure and Transportation." All right. We've got 53 and a half million dollars coming in, but that actually isn't new money; $23,172,000 is being transferred out of Infrastructure and Transportation.

So I'm going back to this original media release of the 22nd going, okay, that $53 million was also indicated there. Were the transfers from Infrastructure and Transportation included in that $53 million? It doesn't say that in this media release. Were we going to get $53 million on August 22, and now part of it is coming from somewhere else? Where did the rest of the $53 million go? Well, that's my question. If you take 53.5 and subtract the 23 and change off it, you still end up with $30 million. So where's that money? Did we not get it, or did it transfer? Why?

We were told that this was new money in the August 22 news release that we were given, but when I look at it, the $53 million is not new money. Thirty million of it is new money; $23 million of it is a transfer from someone else. So I go: where's the rest of the money? If it wasn't there, if it was never there, then why wasn't that in the August 22 announcement?

You know, this government gives rise to conspiracy theories because when you start to look at stuff like this – I'm not a great conspiracy theorist. I have some experts that are around me, however, and I have to say that it does give grist to their mill because you do start to wonder what is going on here. Now, it may well all be above board, but the amount of detail that is made available to members of the opposition, members of the media, and members of the public for how government is choosing to spend their money is reduced every single year. We get less and less specific information about what's happening.

So in this budget for Health and Wellness we have an additional amount of money of $1,150,000 going to the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. Oh, look, Mr. Chairman. I'm referred back to a press release from November 5. Okey-dokey, let's have a look at that one, then. Well, that, actually, is in the middle of a $26 million investment to help contracted agencies hire and keep staff, certainly something that we've been asking for as very much needed and, I'm sure, that the sector that is contracted agencies really appreciate.

When I'm trying to look at a supplementary supply budget, I'm looking for $1.15 million, and it's buried somewhere in the middle of this $26 million media release. So I start skimming through it, looking for details, and there is, indeed, a paragraph: "The government-funded agencies that are contracted by AADAC [are highly valued and] . . . this funding will help these highly valued agency professionals respond" and continue to respond. Okay, well, what programs? I get no detail at all about this. It's just sort of throw it all in a big pond, you know, and you guys should just trust us that it's all going to be okay there.

You know, Mr. Chairman, when I was elected to this Assembly in 1997, I did trust the government. I believed they were good and pure people, and I'm afraid that in the intervening years I've become a cynical old woman because I've been proven wrong in that trust over and over and over again.

My specific question around the one million and change to the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. I specifically would like to know, because it was through the contracting of other agencies that a previous executive director of AADAC was able to finance himself, in quotation marks, to the tune of some $600,000 or $800,000, and I believe he's now just been brought back into the province to face fraud charges – here we have an initiative where we're putting more money into that contracting. It is supposed to be going for improved wages, one assumes, but what has been done to make sure that we don't end up with the repeat of that situation, where I think it was $600,000 that walked out the door into that person's pocket?

I have a number of questions that are really asking for specifics from the Minister of Health and Wellness. Please explain the discrepancies between the $53.5 million, the money transferred in. How much new money is involved here? Was the infrastructure transfer money in that original press release? If it wasn't, where did the $30 million go? Specifics, please. It's saying that it's for additional capital maintenance and renewal projects. What we're getting here is nothing new, I'm assuming, but I'd like that explained. It is ongoing maintenance and larger maintenance projects on existing facilities. Which facilities, please?

Also some details. I know that there's a new executive director in for AADAC. I'm pretty sure it's a woman, so I'm pretty sure she would have cleaned this up. I'd like on the record, please, what has been done to make sure that contract money is adequately supervised and there's a good audit trail in place there, actually, to prevent this kind of thing from happening.

Now, I'd like to go next, if you would allow me, Mr. Chairman – actually, as I said, Minister of Health and Wellness, thank you for your eagerness, but I am going to put on record a couple of different departments, and then I'll sit down. I'm sure he'll give it to me in writing, so I can peruse it.

The next ministry I'd like to raise some issues around, please, is Seniors and Community Supports. Okay. What we have here is $15 million that "is requested to provide funding for a portion of the $25,000,000 required for cost escalation of previously approved Rural Affordable Supportive Living projects." For those following along at home, this is on page 58 of your supplementary supply estimates book.

Now, I'm assuming that what this is is inflation. You know, I'm sympathetic to the rural areas that are trying to get affordable supportive living projects happening because, given this government's whipping of the horses of the economy, we are now in hyperoverdrive here and are looking at significant cost overruns on anything that's being built or probably even maintained. I'd like some descriptions, please, of exactly which projects are being funded under this amount of money.

Now, the second part of this says, "The balance of $10,000,000 is available from the budget for the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped program owing to a lower-than-budgeted rate of growth in caseloads." I'm really interested, Mr. Chairman, because there was a change in the spring around the eligibility criteria around AISH. My colleague had done a couple of written questions looking for information because we felt that people were now being denied from AISH that would have qualified previously.

I'm specifically concerned about the use of activities for daily living as a criteria for determining eligibility for AISH. That criteria, for anybody that's following along at home, essentially is asking a physician to make statements on things like: a mild deterioration of activities of daily living would be if the patient is generally independent in activities of daily living, only requiring little or temporary assistance, and is fully capable to continue involvement in community, social, and recreational activities as compared to, say, severe, where the patient is markedly restricted in their ability to complete activities of daily living, is frequently housebound, is limited in independent interactions with community, social, and recreational activities, and/or the condition is diagnosed to be terminal.

I'm looking at this and going: hmm, $10 million was not spent in an AISH budget. I believe that there is some evidence to suggest that people not successful in getting onto the AISH benefit program would have been under different criteria earlier.

I'm also increasingly aware of two situations happening, Mr. Chairman. I have a number of people on AISH who are trying to live independently in the community. I have quite a bit of older housing stock, 1950s and some even before that, those sort of three-floor walk-ups, you know, 12 units in a building. I have a lot of those. They were, generally speaking, cheaper rental accommodation, and a number of people living on AISH took advantage of that because they could afford to rent one of those apartments. Let's face it, they were old apartments. They weren't well insulated. They didn't have new windows or anything like that, so utility costs were pretty high. But, you know, they were fairly safe, and they were okay accommodation, not grand by any means. They were able to afford to live there.

Since the government's – I'm searching for a term that is printable – ill-advised decisions on lack of rent control in this province, it used to be that an average one-bedroom unit in these older apartment buildings was around $500, $550. I can't find one for less than $850 right now. Everyone, I hope, is aware that people on AISH are collecting a benefit of $1,050. If the cheapest apartment they can find that is still safe, as compared to, you know, something truly horrific in a basement with bugs, is $850, we've now left these people $300 for all of their additional drugs that they have to pay for, for additional medical testing equipment or whatever else is not covered by the program, their food for a month, personal toiletry items, cleaning supplies, and everything else: $300. So I'm a little bit ticked when I see that 10 million bucks is being handed over to another deserving project. I will say that, but it's $10 million that I think should have been redirected to people who are collecting AISH benefits to help them pay that increased cost of the rent that they're facing in independent living situations.

The other thing that has been brought to my attention recently – Mr. Chairman, you know, sometimes I go to these meetings at night, and I think: oh, man, I'm just too tired for this. But a very interesting evening I had last night. I went to the local meeting of the PDD board in my constituency, and there was a presentation there from a local society – and I haven't actually spoken to them, so I'm not going to mention their name so that I don't embarrass them – that provides services to people with developmental disabilities and also people with mental health issues in a number of locations.

In some cases they offer services, and in most cases they offer services and housing. Their point is that right now for AISH recipients who live in an accommodation that is a nursing home as defined under the Nursing Homes Act, a hospital or auxiliary hospital as defined under the Hospitals Act, a facility or part of a facility approved by AISH as a designated assisted living unit, or in some very unique care needs a residential facility, the private monthly accommodation rate is $1,469, and the standard rate is $1,205.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we have nonprofit agencies that are trying to offer housing for hard-to-house individuals who can only charge the basic AISH rate of $315, these groups cannot stay in business. They will have to stop offering housing because they can't afford to do it. We've got AISH people out there on their own who can't afford the rents. We've got 10 million bucks here that has not been distributed back to those people who need it to pay for rent. For shame. I would like to hear the justification from the minister as to why these choices were made.

We've been talking about the plight of AISH recipients in this province regarding rents for some time now, and we're not getting a good answer back. The department that is dispensing the rent supplements is completely inconsistent as to who gets these rent supplements and who doesn't. My office has been told that AISH recipients can't get it because they're already getting a government subsidy, and other constituency offices have been given different information, and even from the same office they've been told different information on two different people.

It's a mess, Mr. Chairman. What we really have is vulnerable people that are trying to live their life with dignity who are being faced with paying up to 80 per cent of their income for accommodation in independent living, and we have housing societies and assistance societies that want to help them that are going to go broke trying to offer housing on the reduced AISH rate. Why can't that money be given to those housing associations and help associations along the rate of what's being suggested and what's being given to nursing homes, auxiliary hospitals, AISH-approved designated assisted living units? They should be able to get that $1,205 rate that is given to those other agencies.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, it's very obvious that the hon. member is not really interested in the actual answers to the questions she started with by the simple fact that she repeated the same things the first three times, but we're going to give them to her anyhow on behalf of the hon. minister.

She wanted to know about the $53.5 million to address capital and maintenance for health authorities and the $1.15 million to assist AADAC's contracted agencies in their work to deliver many essential components of Alberta's addictions services. The $53.5 million will be used to address pressures facing the health authorities such as the need for additional infrastructure maintenance program funds, totalling $9 million. The funds are needed for building systems and upgrading projects in seven health regions. These projects relate to fire alarm systems, roofing systems as well as heating, ventilation, and air conditioning systems.

We are requesting $8.5 million from the capital maintenance funds under the public health security and safety upgrade initiative.

This initiative was referred to in the Provincial Review of Infection Prevention and Control report, which, as you know, was released August 27 of this year. Funding will be used to correct physical plant design barriers that prevent effective infection control. The ministry is continuing to evaluate the use of this funding. We are requesting that $27.5 million of the capital maintenance funding be used for the purchase and installation of mechanical patient lift and transfer equipment and related assistive devices.

The government is taking action to address health workforce needs. The Health Workforce Action Plan, that was released in September, stated that one of our action areas is to reduce and, if at all possible, avoid workplace injury. This funding will support our efforts in this area. By reducing and avoiding workplace injury, the safety of front-line and support staff will be improved as well as the safety of patients. Subsequent absenteeism costs will also be minimized.

Preservation and renewal projects in Peace Country health, Capital health, and the Calgary health region require $8.5 million of the capital maintenance funding. In Peace Country health funds will go towards three specific projects: emergency department redevelopment and an endoscopic suite upgrade at the Queen Elizabeth II hospital in Grande Prairie, roof replacement and upgrading at the Fairview Health Complex, and roof replacement at the Sacred Heart Community Health Centre in McLennan. At Capital health a food production kitchen at Alberta Hospital Edmonton will be replaced with a food depot to accommodate a food receiving and holding area. Minor renovations will also be done on in-patient units to develop food rethermalization stations. In the Calgary health region funds will go toward upgrading of in-patient unit and emergency department medication rooms at three Calgary acute-care hospitals. This will ensure that current standards are met for the safe storage, preparation, and administration of medications.

In relation to the $1.15 million in supplementary funding needed for AADAC's contracted agencies, funding will go toward addressing staff recruitment and retention issues. These agencies provide services in 25 different communities. They deliver many essential programs in Alberta's addictions services continuum, including aboriginal-based treatment and training programs, gender-specific programs, the AADAC helpline, outpatient and prevention services, residential treatment beds, and shelter services. I know, Mr. Chairman, that the opposition supports all of these initiatives. This funding is essential in order to provide the addictions services that are needed to help create healthy Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, with regard to the questions around the specific seniors' facilities that were requiring cost overrun funding, we will make the program list available to the hon. member ASAP.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Since the minister is still here, maybe he'd help me with this. First of all, the total amount I'm going to be talking about is $110,400,000. As I understand it from what I have here, $97,300,000 is for additional capital maintenance and renewal spending. Specific projects were also announced on August 30, '07: $11,500,000 to enable school boards to provide a monthly allowance to employees in Fort McMurray and $1,600,000 for a higher than budgeted cost of salary settlements for provincial employees.

If we could look at the maintenance aspect of the budget, first of all I think that any additional maintenance that we can do in schools is certainly in order and appreciated. I guess the question is doubtful that the extra $97.3 million will address the infrastructure and maintenance needs of schools in this province. I wonder if he could comment later, because I haven't got many questions. Does delaying routine maintenance and major repairs increase the cost to Albertans rather than doing it on a regular basis?

The other aspect I just wanted to ask the minister. I don't know what's happening in all 62 school districts, so maybe you can help me. There is an interesting situation – I think it's in Camrose-Battle River – where they take all the maintenance and keep it under central control and don't decentralize it to the schools. As a result I've been told there – and you'd know more about this, and you can clarify this – that they have one of the best maintenance programs in the province. The point I'm getting at, Mr. Minister, is the question: when maintenance is decentralized to individual schools across the province through moving the budget from a central office to a decentralized position, much like they do in the public school system in Edmonton, is the maintenance dollar that should be going for the ongoing maintenance in the school being used for other purposes? I don't know the answer to that. Maybe you can help me with that information. I'd really be interested in knowing that, because sometimes individual schools have ways of moving dollars around that are a little easier than, say, at the government level.

Why has the government repeatedly taken the approach to addressing severe maintenance issues of schools in this province? Why did the government choose to announce these funding initiatives at a certain time? Is there a political reason, or is it simply on demand, when school divisions required the dollars? You probably know more about that than I do, so you'd probably be able to help us. Why does the government not adopt a comprehensive list of priority maintenance projects and make it publicly available? It seems that at times the government seems to make somewhat surprise announcements whereas in a school year it may be more helpful if you get an idea where maintenance problems are coming up at certain periods of the year. You could make regular announcements regarding dollars that are required.

The other thing I'd like to know, Mr. Chair, if the Minister of Education would be kind enough to answer, is: given the high cost of living, the cash injection programs in Fort McMurray – this is not a problem that simply appeared in the last few months – why was the high cost of living not factored into the budget and addressed in terms of a longer range plan? In other words, we know that things are escalating in Fort McMurray. I actually worked there. We know that there is some regularity in terms of an increase in the cost of living, and can you anticipate that? I'd be interested in knowing if he has insights into that and would share information with me regarding that particular aspect of cost of living and how to deal with it on a more regulated basis. I'm not sure of the answer to that question. Maybe he could help me with it.

The other question is salary settlements for provincial employees. I'm not sure, but I think this was, if I remember, $1.6 million. Why was this expense not taken into account in the regular budget? Which employees specifically will be getting this increase? Is there a section or a branch or a particular aspect in the department that's getting these incentive dollars? Is that maybe in the reporting mechanism that was going to be set up to, I think, help get parents knowledgeable about the various reporting systems? They were planning to do some work there, and I'm wondering if that's an additional increase in the budget for staffing. Maybe the minister could share some information on that with us.

The other question I'd like to ask him: why has this increase popped up so suddenly as to deserve an additional injection before the next scheduled annual budget? Maybe, Mr. Chairman, if I could just stop there. He's here, and I'd like to take advantage of that.

The other thing I'd like to ask – and maybe I could continue with this later. I don't know how this works exactly. In terms of the minister's goals, I think there were three. I think the teachers' unfunded liability was one of them, and I would formally like to thank him today for the good work he's done there. I actually enjoyed his speech the other day. It was calm. I guess that when you have money on your side, it makes it a lot easier to be generous and smile all through it. I've never had that experience at my age. Maybe the hon. minister would share some money with me there in building those P3 schools, that P3 school that we're looking for, and I would smile with him. I hope it's not going to be moved out of the one district that I want to see it go into, but I hear rumours that it is.

Anyway, two things. You mentioned in one of your goals, Mr. Minister, that you were going to do some things in preventative activities, early education. I know you have an interest in that. For the love of me I didn't see it in any of these supplemental budget items, but I was wondering if you have something you'd like to share with us today because it's not very often I get a chance to talk to you like this. The other thing that has impressed me with one of your goals . . . [interjection] I'm trying to waste time so that I get my 20 minutes, Mr. Minister.

The other thing I wanted to ask you is on this whole question of school completion. I've asked my leader to purchase a condominium in St. Albert. The Premier seems to be living in my constituency, so I'm getting very nervous. He continually visits. He gave us quite a high – he said that it was going to be achieved 90 per cent by the time the election was called. I think he was kidding us.

Seriously, if I could just share some concerns there. I really am sincere when I reach out to you on this. I was at a very impressive junior high school seminar in St. Albert. No. In fact, it was somewhere else. It was, I believe, the night the teachers were receiving their awards at Barnett House. One of the things that really impressed me – and I'm sincere about this – was that a retired principal said that there were two aspects: he talked about junior high school and moving into senior high school. He talked about the mental health of students. He said that we are not doing enough in that area.

The other thing he talked about, bullying – and I heard you talk about it, or someone talked about it today – in terms of children's self-concept. I'm wondering if specifically in junior high school, in terms of that completion that we talked about, the 90 per cent, there is going to be more of an emphasis on utilizing agencies at the junior high school level, social services agencies, to help because we don't have the initiative of the counsellors that we need. He talked about collaboration and co-operation with agencies. I was wondering if the minister could share some insights into that.

The other thing that he emphasized and I thought was very interesting was much more emphasis on careers, because he's saying that the mosaic of the culture in schools, especially in junior high schools, is changing. Some of these kids could be turned on by more information on a career-related curriculum and special opportunities. I know you've talked about visitations and this kind of thing. I'm wondering if there's more emphasis, in your vision, that could be put into careers. Then, going back to grade 9, when I was with the department we had a whole program called decision-making. Decision-making was done with the whole idea of exploring with kids about their preparation for high school. There was an emphasis not only on visiting but on doing some testing and helping kids look at their interest level and their aptitudes in order to move into more of an area of interest in high school. My point in all of this, Mr. Minister, is that I don't feel that kids are getting enough. If you're not going academic, it seems to me the we're losing a lot of kids. Maybe you have some plans on that.

Moving into the high school area, then, if I haven't lost you yet, it's the whole question that, again, I think we need a much heavier emphasis on career development. In fact, one of your good Tory friends in central Alberta, an enlightened Tory, has just stepped down from the chairmanship of the Catholic school board in Red Deer. He's a wonderful guy. He talked to me – I think he got approval from your department – he's a house builder, and he has a project, as I understood him to tell me. He told me many things that day, but he talked about kids – I think they move from grades 10 and 11, if I'm not mistaken – that work in the trades under his foremen, and they're covered by insurance.

I think there is some real merit in that, Mr. Minister, if we could have projects like this throughout the province, because we know that we can't have these expensive shops like we have in Red Deer and all throughout the province. I think that in the vision of Edmonton, for example, we could have the various industries in Edmonton come into a major lab with the various tradesmen and so forth where they could focus in and kids could come in and be stimulated. I know you can't have a house building thing in each district, but I think there's a big area here that we have to turn ourselves to, and we're not doing the job.

As a kid that failed grade 3 and couldn't read – I can't pronounce words properly even today – I think there's a part of this thing we're losing. We're losing a lot of kids because we're not stimulating them. It's not because the kids, your department, and the education group are not doing their best; I believe they are.

I can't use the names, but I'm dealing with a man at the university that goes out to four districts. He's retired, and he's going to set up a company. He tells me – and I do believe him – that we're losing a lot of kids in the rural areas and the cities because they can't do the work of the academia in junior high school. They don't see anything for them in high school, and we're losing them.

Mr. Minister, I appreciate you hanging in today and talking and staying with us. Now maybe you can talk to us about some of my concerns. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I happen to share many of the views and comments that the hon. member just made. Actually, I think that I'm going to have a conversation with his leader and suggest that he encourage the hon. member not to run again. I'd like to hire him as a consultant for the department because I think he actually has some really good ideas.

However, we could spend a lot of time talking about some of the ideas and thoughts that the hon. member just relayed, but I do respect the fact that this is supplementary estimates. I think we should stick to what is in the supplementary estimate book and allow as many members of the opposition to ask questions as they possibly can. So with all due respect, hon. member, we'll go for coffee one day and explore those a little bit further, but I will talk about some of the other issues. I'll try and hit all of those that I can.

The hon. member first raised the issue of the $97 million. I guess the question was, "Why now?" or "Why August 30?" There's a very good answer to that. Under this particular Premier we have now a policy in place that when we report quarterly, we update our fiscal situation. If there are unanticipated surplus dollars, one-third goes to savings – and I know the opposition is supportive of that – one-third goes to capital, and one-third to maintenance. Decisions are made at the Treasury Board level as to where those dollars are allocated. I believe that we were fortunate to get the $97 million allocated, and then it was up to our department to determine how we can get the best value for those $97 million.

The hon. member asked: how do we make these decisions? Well, I would refer to – and I'd be happy to supply it, but I'm sure he has it – the document called Schools for Tomorrow. In the Schools for Tomorrow document are listed every school division's highest priority under modernization. So what we did is take that $97 million – and, quite frankly, we wanted to get the best bang for the buck, and I don't mind using those terms. We could have allocated the $97 million to two or three school boards, to two or three major projects and had 59 or 60 unhappy school boards.

We also tried to look and see where school boards recently had new school construction and where they didn't. What we attempted to do was to try and find some of those school divisions that had not had new school construction or new modernization dollars in the last few years, and we tried to take their highest projects and meet them. I'm, frankly, proud to say that we managed to come up with some 17 projects around the province. They were extremely well received, including, I'm also proud to say, four particular projects for francophone boards in Alberta. So I make absolutely no apologies for anything that we did relative to the $97 million.

I happened to visit three of those school districts the day of the announcement, and I will as long as I live remember the meeting that we had at the Delnorte school in Innisfree, a small town in the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's constituency. Those folks had tears in their eyes because finally they had the opportunity to bulldoze down that, frankly, musty-smelling old school and finally get a school that they were proud to call their own. So that was that particular announcement.

Now, what we also did – and I need to touch on this – is: at the same time we decided to reallocate the hundred million dollars that this Assembly approved in the spring budget, in our Department of Education budget. It was a hundred million dollars for capital, which we can debate back and forth whether it was the right allocation or not relative to P3 projects. The P3 project that we have embarked upon was not at the stage where we would be drawing down the hundred million this year. So we decided at that time to take the hundred million dollars, divide it equally between the four metro school boards in Calgary and Edmonton. We were finally able to address the Western Canada senior high situation, which the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has raised on a number of occasions. We addressed the situation with Archbishop MacDonald in the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora's constituency. The two other school boards, Edmonton public and Calgary Catholic, chose to use three or four projects for modernizations. Again, I was proud of that announcement. It was a good use of dollars that have long been needed.

Now, are we anywhere near meeting the needs for modernization and repair and maintenance? My answer is no, we're not. However, it must be noted that in the, I guess, 2005-06 budget year we allocated $200 million to infrastructure and maintenance. We found, frankly, that there were a lot of school districts that could not use all of those funds, so in this year's budget, which we approved in the spring of '07, the '07-08 budget, we backed that off to $97 million. That's in our three-year business plan. That will be a good start, and I hope that we've got the opportunity that if there are other unbudgeted surpluses that come available, we can allocate more of those dollars to modernization projects around the province because, frankly, I think that really does get us our best bang for a buck.

The hon. member raised an interesting question, first of all, in a situation that he referred to in Camrose-Battle River. I personally do not know of that particular situation, but I don't want to debate. I don't want to sound like I'm a smart aleck here, but, hon. member, it was you specifically in your member statement today who talked about us taking away responsibility from locally elected school boards. I'm not going to go into the 62 school boards around this province and tell them how to spend their maintenance dollars. I believe we allocate the dollar, and it's then up to them. They're responsible to their electors to determine where those dollars are spent at the local level. So I take issue, and I will not agree – frankly, I don't know what they do in Battle River. I trust they're doing the right thing, so I'm going to leave that there.

A couple more questions relative to the $11,500,000 for Fort McMurray. I stand to be corrected here, but my recollection of this particular issue is that we commissioned the Radke report, which came back with a whole bunch of recommendations relative to doing what's right in Fort McMurray, and there was not a specific recommendation made to bring teachers up to the $1,050 per month extra cost-of-living allowance that's paid to provincial government employees. The Radke report recommended nurses and I think postsecondary, Keyano College. There seemed to be this absence as it related to teachers.

In conversation with the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo we agreed that it simply was unfair that all of these other quasi public servants in Fort McMurray were being elevated to $1,050 per month and that somehow teachers weren't going to be receiving that same funding. So we agreed to use some of these contingency funds to ensure that Fort McMurray teachers were treated equally with all other public servants in that particular city.

Relative to the additional dollars, that is directly related to the contract that we signed with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, so any individual in the Department of Education who is a member of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees or was covered by that contract. I guess the short answer: the contract ended up being higher than what we had budgeted for in the spring budget, so that was the cushion that was there.

As I mentioned earlier, the member asked if there is documentation somewhere that would detail school boards' maintenance priorities. They are in the Schools for Tomorrow document.

I think that covers all of the questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to speak on supplementary supply with regard to the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. Before I begin on that, I'm just going to read one piece from the Taxpayers' Platform. This was, I guess, a survey given out to all PC candidate members for the premiership on November 14, 2006. Question 8 says, "Will you commit to introduce legislation that restricts the government from increasing spending during a fiscal year (other than declared emergencies)?" In the minister's supplementary supply here he does have a large component of the $152,600,000 which is allocated for emergency assistance, but the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's response says:

Yes – A Morton government would return to the practice of responsible budgeting. This would include restricting in-year spending. This practice undermines the legislative process by taking away the duty of elected officials to debate and approve spending before [any] money is actually committed or spent.

Given that part, I'm hoping that I can see, in fact, the minister put forward . . .

Dr. Morton: Read the rest of it.

Mr. Bonko: Oh, I could read the rest of it. Sure. "Moreover, I would [like to] implement fixed budget dates to ensure further [sustainability] and transparency in the budgeting process and promote greater government effectiveness and efficiency." But you did get the highest mark. I will give you that one. You did get the highest mark on that one. I'm waiting to see when that part comes, that you're going to put forward that budget.

Getting to this one here, you're asking for a large portion of this for emergency funding except for the $4.6 million, which is for higher than budgeted costs of salary settlements for the provincial employees, so I can see where that one's coming in.

You're also asking for a million dollars to prevent the spread of chronic wasting disease. Well, we can talk about that one. We've been raising this one in the Legislature House for about two years now. In fact, the former member who was the ag critic there was saying that there were no documented cases of chronic wasting disease, but now over a couple of years in fact there are, and it's becoming more concerning as the months go by. The deer population, in fact, has increased. That's why we're having the occasional cull out there, but I don't think that's doing the job.

The root cause of the chronic wasting disease is the game farming. At what point is a ministry and a minister going to look seriously at dissolving and eliminating the practice of game farming, period, from Alberta's landscapes? At one point they were considered to be a profitable pyramid scheme, which a lot of members perhaps got in on, but also for the elk velvet. No longer can that be said. The elk velvet has gone into the tank as well as the industry for the animal game farming.

So that's one question: at what point is a minister going to in fact eliminate the game ranching, game farming, whatever you want to call it, from Alberta's landscape? Pay the individuals off, allow them to get out. Right now there's no money in it, from what I've heard. A lot of these individuals say that they just can't make a buck anymore against it. It's compounded along with the beef industry. They're competing directly. In fact, they're having a tough time making a go of it right now with the increase in the dollar as well as the onslaught of other diseases going on out there. So that would be the first question.

The other one. A hundred and forty-seven million dollars for the following emergency assistance: $117 million, it says, to provide emergency assistance for fighting fires as a result of the high wildfire hazard levels and the fire activity in some parts of Alberta's forest protection area. That I can see. I'm not sure if it's going to be up to a $117 million. You know, I guess that's yet to be seen. But we right now have an unseasonably dry fall and perhaps winter, which will be a devastatingly dry spring and summer.

If we're being proactive there – you know what? – hats off to you. I'll give credit where credit is due. If we can prevent the fires before they happen, fantastic. But sometimes that does get us into trouble because we do a good job at preserving the forest, and it allows us to have the old stands that we do, which leads us into the other problem that we have been talking about. In fact, it came up in question period today with regard to what B.C. did with the hands-off approach and let nature take its course. Well, I've been on the record as saying that that, in fact, was not the best action to take. They should have nipped it in the bud early and taken care of it. In fact, it allowed it to spread, and we've seen the devastation which B.C. has had with regard to the pine beetle. Unfortunately, it has wreaked havoc on the entire industry out there and ravaged thousands and thousands of hectares.

So $30 million here we're talking about to continue to survey the ground and control operations to fight the mountain pine beetle infestation. That's fine. I'm just wondering, you know, how much of that money, the $50 million during the summertime, has been used up? Are we an additional $30 million on top of the $50 million, or are my figures not correct on that? I'm just curious. It seems like an awfully high cost.

I'm not sure how much cut and burn is going to be in here as a prescribed method, or is it just a matter of monitoring still? Because at one point last year we had about 98 per cent effective kill in the northern part of the province, but around the Kananaskis area it was still maybe about 50 per cent, which isn't good enough. I'm just wondering: what area is this concentrated $30 million going to be going towards?

I've had a couple of questions in there. I'll give the minister a chance to respond, and we'll be able to get up and ask him some more then.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The additional supplementary estimate that we're requesting, a total of $152.6 million, breaks down as follows: $4.6 million is for increases in government salaries as a result of the budget agreement, $117 million is for wildfire – that represents, actually, the first- and second-quarter request – $30 million for mountain pine beetle, and $1 million for chronic wasting disease. If you sum those, you'll get $152.6 million.

The hon. member is correct that the majority of this, the forest fire and mountain pine beetle, comes out of the emergency fund and is thus ongoing contingent expenditures, if I understood correctly. I urge support for both of those efforts. So I appreciate that. I particularly appreciate the member's comment that he agrees that the let-nature-take-its-way approach, that some of the communities in British Columbia adopted 10 years ago, was ill advised and has resulted in the type of forestry loss to pine beetle that has occurred since then. I've indicated in the answers earlier today that that's not what Alberta is going to do, not what this government is going to do.

If you'd like some detail on the chronic wasting disease – you didn't get to chronic wasting disease yet.

Mr. Bonko: No. I did touch on it briefly, but I didn't get to any of the details as to the million dollars.

Dr. Morton: Okay, we'll hold off on that.

You asked for some details on the fires. Relatively speaking, this was a slightly better year in terms of actual fires. We saw a total of 1,228 fires through to September 30, 2007, with a total of 103,325 hectares burnt to the end of September 2007. As you're probably aware, we imposed a fire ban in southern and central Alberta, a fire ban in mid-July and then an area closure on August 1 in southwestern Alberta. That was not lifted until mid-September. That was onerous on a number of operators and also recreationists, but it did succeed in preventing any major fires in that area.

The fire risk level during that period, in August and September, was actually significantly higher than the fire risk factor down at Lost Creek in 2003, the last really devastating fire we had, so it was the appropriate thing to do. Unfortunately, it cost us a lot of money even without the fire. We had to bring in, again, as a preemptive measure two CL 415 turbine air tankers we borrowed from Quebec. We borrowed them; we had to pay for them. Those were expensive items. We had additional overtime manpower costs in order to police the fire ban and then the forestry closure. Those contributed to greater costs.

On the pine beetle side we're continuing both our detection and control activities, level 1 and level 2. We're also working with municipalities to assist in the removal of infected trees on private lands, which I know the hon. members are aware of. There was no repeat of the devastating 2006 overflight from British Columbia this year. That's good news. The number of newly infected trees dropped from several million to several hundred thousand. Several hundred thousand is still a lot, but it's nothing in the realm of several million. We feel that a combination of our proactive policies in western central and northwest Alberta is succeeding along with, of course, the cold weather we had a year ago. But we are concerned in the southwest corner, particularly both the Crownsnest Pass and the Kananaskis/Bow River area, that the risk there is high. The number of infected trees, while small in number, quantitatively, did represent a proportional increase, whereas we had a proportional decrease in the north. So we're shifting some of our control and removal activities into those areas.

I think I'll leave it at that, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair, again. I was just hoping, again, for the minister to give some clarification. I did ask specifically on the chronic wasting disease and the $1 million, so an opinion as to where the ministry is going on this. Are they in fact planning on just doing more culls – because that's a lot of money, a million dollars – or are we trying to eradicate, eliminate, and pay out the farmers eventually with regard to the game farming, which, again, as I said, is one of the root causes of the chronic wasting disease? I would like to be able to have an opinion as to where he plans to take the ministry with that and what the money is going to.

As we're getting into winter right now and we're talking about the $117 million and the pine beetle, $30 million, at any point in time are you going to do any of the prescribed burns? I know we're doing the monitoring, cutting, and burning, but at what point are we going to allow some areas to be burnt?

I know there's a fine line there. As long as it isn't going to in fact injure anybody, it isn't going to cause any property damage, if it's out and about in the middle of nowhere, I think at one point we'd be able to go out on a limb and say: "You know what? It's a risk that we're willing to take to prevent and have that buffer zone. Just in case we are able to have that flyover from B.C., we do have those areas where we thinned out." Now, the logging companies might say: "Well, you know what? That's not a good use of the resources. That's an area that we'd be able to in fact log." But, you know, if it's already susceptible to the beetle, are we burning or are we logging it, then?

These are just a couple of the specifics that I'd like the minister to answer. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On the chronic wasting disease control program I can report that as a result of the culling that we did last winter, there were 14 new cases of chronic wasting disease identified out of the deer. This brings it to a total of 29 to date. The concentration of the new areas appears to be in two specific areas near the Saskatchewan border, the Empress area and Chauvin-Edgerton. So we certainly intend to continue with the cull operation in the coming winter.

One change we've made is that, partly as a matter of economy but partly also as a matter of opportunity for hunters, we are trying to increase the number of deer that are taken by hunting and by Alberta hunters rather than by the actual cull operation itself. We've extended the season to include 50 days. That's for the general. Landowner season has been extended to 82 days. The licence has been reduced to a $9 cost as compared to $33 for a normal. The licence entitles you to three deer, whereas a normal licence, of course, is just for one animal. I think that covers that.

As far as the game farming goes, there's no consensus in the scientific community linking chronic wasting disease with game farming. The jury is still out on that. Most, indeed all, of the identified cases of CWD to date are on the Saskatchewan border. Of course, there are many game farms that are much further west than that, and there's no indication of chronic wasting disease in those areas. In answer to his question there, we're not intending to eliminate game farms.

With respect to his question about prescribed burns, those will continue to be part of, if you like, the mixed approach or multi-pronged approach to pine beetle. Most of the prescribed burns are done in areas adjacent to the national parks, Banff and Jasper, because the policy in the national parks is to not cut. So we work in conjunction. All the managers of the national parks recognize the threat of pine beetles, particularly where there are already infected areas. They're willing to co-operate, but they prefer to co-operate using the burn. Burn has a place in the overall pine beetle control operation, and there will be additional burns this winter when the conditions are right. A number of the burns that we had hoped to do in the spring and fall were postponed because fire conditions were not right. So there are several on the books. If the member is interested, I'll provide specific information by memo as to when and where to expect those.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the supplementary estimates here this afternoon. There's quite, I guess, a bit of a mixed bag of things that I have identified in looking at this document. I will try to of course stick clearly to the supplementary supply side of things on this occasion and also stick to the ministers that I think are here to maybe give me a hand with this.

The first interesting number that I just wanted to highlight is actually in the Executive Council section, but perhaps the minister for the Treasury Board could help me with that. I just noticed that there is a line item here for $325,000 for strategic communications. I was wanting to know two things, I guess, Mr. Chair. First of all, what was the price of the Premier's 20-minute television address that he had recently on Alberta television? Did this number of $325,000 sort of correspond to the cost of paying for that 20-minute television address? I noticed it was very high quality, high production. It looked like they'd used film stock and whatnot. So I'm just wondering: (a) what was the cost of that 20-minute television address; and (b) the $325,000 for strategic communications, is that the corresponding number that you required to add to the Executive Council budget?

Also in regard to, probably, the Treasury Board, I noticed that in the municipal affairs budget there's $9 million more for rent supplements that is required for this program. As you would know, Mr. Chair and members of the House, there's been a lot of criticism around this rent supplement program. I think it's problematic in the most basic sort of logical way, that you are throwing good money after a problem that's not tenable, where of course landlords are increasing their rents. There's a range of reasons why rents are going up so quickly in Alberta. Then there's a supplement program to try to cover the balance.

So number one, of course, that rent supplement budget is not large enough to cover the many thousands of people that would require that assistance, if that's in fact the logical way to solve this problem, which it's not. Number two, you would never be able to build that big of a budget to actually make this function. If I could add a third criticism of this, it's that as you continue to add supplements to an inflating market for rents, you risk the possibility of actually adding to the problem. By adding those extra dollars into the system, it creates a systemic problem for rent increases. In fact, landlords can watch this and increase their rents accordingly if they know that there's government money that might bring in the rest to make up that amount that they choose to increase their rent by. So on just so many levels it's not a logical way to deal with what I believe is a regulatory problem, right?

We either use funding in this Legislature to deliver public programs, or we use regulation to deliver public programs. In this case with an emergency situation in the rental market across Alberta it's far more reasonable and entirely logical to use regulation to deal with this problem. I can say with confidence that this is, in fact, a massive waste of money when we could put in temporary rent regulations that would stabilize the situation and allow us to get back to a degree of normalcy for thousands of Albertans with rent problems right now. I think that stands out as a huge, huge problem that needs to be dealt with.

Looking specifically to some other ministries in this supplementary supply estimate, well, globally it's worthwhile pointing out that we appreciate the fact that $825 million is being delivered to the heritage trust fund. It's very, very important that we save for the future, and to see this being enacted is a good step in the right direction. It's avoiding the temptation to spend all of the extra funding and surplus that we have available to us. Rather, saving, I think, is a much more prudent thing to do.

However, certainly in different ministries in different parts of our society in Alberta right now there are emerging situations that we have to deal with probably more immediately than just waiting for the next budget year. The first one that comes to my mind is the crisis that is taking place in the cow-calf industry across the province. Myself, I'm not a farmer or a cow-calf operator, but certainly in my family we have a long tradition of doing so, and I've been monitoring this, of course, as a critic. Quite frankly, I don't think it's ever been this bad in terms of pricing and expenses for cow-calf producers in the province of Alberta. This is an emerging problem that is unfolding by the day and by the week, and it certainly requires attention in this fiscal year. We lose whole operations and herds every week. People are losing their farms and a lifetime of work on these farms, again, by the week.

There's a basket of problems associated with this, Mr. Chair, that we simply have to deal with immediately. For our larger society losing that capacity to produce food inside the province of Alberta I think is a potential crisis. Losing a lifetime of work to build up the herds, especially with family farms, is again a crisis that is not tenable to deal with. [interjection] Sorry?

The Chair: Hon. member, there's no supplementary estimate in agriculture.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. That's right.

An Hon. Member: There is no supplementary estimate.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, but I think that the absence of spending on this in the supplementary is what I'm saying – right? – that the agriculture budget requires . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, we're debating the supplementary estimates that have been presented here.

An Hon. Member: He's talking about what's not there.

Mr. Eggen: It's in the absence, right? [interjection] Well, yeah,

I'm trying to help you out, right? I mean, it's fair enough. Okay. The point is taken. I'm sure that the minister is aware of the situation. The immediacy of the problem is something that we have to deal with.

In terms of the K to 12 education budget, then, we . . . [interjections] There he is. There we go. See? I'm willing to accommodate my audience here.

An Hon. Member: They're still listening; that's good.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Oh, they're listening, all right. Yeah. Absolutely.

It's interesting to see that there's $97 million for capital maintenance and recovery. I guess I need clarification on that issue, more specifically for my own edification, as to where that is going and if that's an ongoing additional expense that we need to incur. Of course, we have a serious infrastructure deficit in schools, and it's been a long time coming for maintenance that has been deferred over the years. It's made for, I guess, sometimes a situation where you can't even begin to repair; you simply have to demolish and start again. So I'm curious to know about that.

Considering that we're going to be building quite a number of schools here with the new plan of using private/public partnerships, Mr. Chair, I think it's very problematic. It has a lot of sort of unanswered questions about that. The one that's come to me straight off with that from two constituents of mine is the government sort of quietly stopping funding for cafeteria infrastructure building in the province of Alberta. Of the constituents that I spoke to, the one lady has a PhD in nutrition. Her child is going to Victoria school in downtown Edmonton. The parents and parent council and a lot of people in that area are very concerned that there's no longer capital funding for cafeterias. So considering our focus on nutrition and health and preventative medicine, preventative procedures and lifestyle, I think that, you know, I would certainly like to see this policy reconsidered. Or at least perhaps the minister can give us some explanation as to why that has been dropped from the policy for building new schools in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Chair, I think I'm going to sit down. Perhaps I can get some answers to those questions. I appreciate the opportunity. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Certainly. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The supplementary estimate for Executive Council, as the hon. member would be aware, was for the salary settlements and had precious little to do with anything else.

For municipal affairs I'm not exactly sure whether his statement about the $9 million meant he didn't support rent supplements, and then he said that we should make it more for rent supplements. So I think that, obviously, they do know where the money is going; they might just not agree with it being there. Certainly, the money has been accounted for in supplementary estimates.

Mr. Eggen: I was saying that, categorically, it's not a tenable thing to continue with. Certainly, the emergency that has been created and the necessity of people to try to access some rent supplement is appreciated. It was a very sort of ad hoc program that I noticed was at first difficult to access, and then it sort of disappeared into the ether. So I'm suggesting that, categorically, it's not the way to deal with the problem we have at hand.

I do apologize. I just didn't quite catch what that $325,000 for strategic communications was for. Maybe I missed it. But if you could repeat that for me, I would be honoured.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: The Executive Council dollars were to pay the budgeted salary settlements for the provincial employees.

I'm still not exactly sure. Does that mean you don't want rent supplements or you do want rent supplements?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you. I'd just like to make a couple of comments because there were some questions and comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Caldor. Both the Member for St. Albert and the Member for Edmonton-Caldor had sort of indicated without saying so that somehow there was some clandestine effort here to not divulge where all this money went, this $97 million in modernization projects. Well, I could take the time of the House to read the news release, read the list of all of the projects, if we so chose. I'm happy to table the document. It's already public. But if the members would so choose, I'm happy to stand here for 10 minutes and read it all out.

The member also made a comment relative to: he'd be curious to know what additional expenses we're going to incur as a result of this maintenance project. Well, I would venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that these 17 modernization projects will actually save us money because we're actually now going to have newer facilities with newer, updated lighting and everything else rather than a bunch of old buildings that cost a lot of money to heat. Rather than additional expenses – I'm not sure what he's referring to – there would be, I would believe, savings on behalf of the school boards.

Finally, he made mention of stopping cafeteria funding. The Department of Education has never funded cafeterias as part of the capital cost. Cafeterias have always been paid for, if school boards desired, as part of a project, that it would fund in addition. Cafeterias have never been part of provincial government capital funding, to my knowledge.

That's it. Thank you, sir.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I would just like to congratulate all hon. members on your third anniversary in this Legislature, here in the happiest place on Earth. It's also, coincidentally, the third time we've had supplementary spending estimates, three times in three years, at least for us anyway. So three straight years.

We do have a few questions here on Advanced Education and Technology, which I'm sure the minister will be able to handle handily. I was looking back in the history books here, and the last three years we've had supplementary spending in advanced education for substantial sums every year: in '05-06, $99 million; in '06-07 we had $107 million, I think; and now, $145 million. [interjections] I'm letting secrets out, am I?

I have to compliment the minister. The minister knows the keys to the Treasury Branch vault, apparently. He knows the keys to the vault.

Mr. Strang: The combination.

Mr. Tougas: It's a combination, is it? Fine.

We do have some questions, though. There are only three major items here, and I would like to get some explanation from the minister about them. In particular, we have $30 million to the U of A to upgrade its district utility system. This clearly needs a little bit of explanation. I'm wondering if it's one of these matters, deferred maintenance that's sort of built up over time, or is it some sort of serious problem? It sounds like the whole system is going to crash if you need $30 million at one time. If he could expand upon exactly why the $30 million is needed at this stage.

Four million dollars for Keyano College to provide a monthly allowance to employees in Fort McMurray: I understand what that's all about. It's pretty well straightforward.

Then we also have $111 million for capital maintenance and renewal projects, as was announced on August 22. It took a lot of looking around to find the announcement about what that was all about. I couldn't find it on the advanced education website. It took quite a lot of looking to find that. I'm wondering why, instead of just actually having that, we had to go looking for press releases, why it wasn't actually listed in this document. This is a problem that has come up frequently over the last several years, that we have one-line mentions of $100 million expenditures. I think it wouldn't take too much effort to add a little bit more explanation in these documents. I understand it's for a variety of capital maintenance and renewal projects. Maybe there were too many to list. That's a possibility. Perhaps the minister could expand upon that, please.

If he could just fill us in on some of these problems, then maybe I might have some more questions afterwards.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would congratulate all the members on their anniversary of the third year of being honoured to serve in this illustrious House.

In answer to some of the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the $30 million for the University of Alberta district utility system is actually to augment a total system upgrade to meet the requirements of the Edmonton clinic and the Cross Cancer expansion and other areas around the campus. It's their power plant for the entire campus. This brings it totally up to capacity, to ensure that when we open the Edmonton clinic and we open those other buildings – we're doing a lot on construction over at the U of A – they'll actually have the utility requirements met by the plant. So that was the $30 million.

Of course, the $4 million grant to Keyano College is obvious. It's for the allowance for Fort McMurray.

The remaining $111 million was for capital maintenance and renewal projects at various postsecondary institutions. The hon. member mentioned that there are probably too many to list. He's pretty close to being accurate on that one because what we tried to do was hit every one of the top priorities as far as capital deferred maintenance that the institutions had given us. Certainly, the ones that came out as their top priorities were the ones that we wanted to hit first, things like $13 million for the safety system upgrades at the University of Lethbridge, $2.2 million for fire alarm security system upgrades at Lethbridge College. We did eight different postsecondary roof replacements, that totalled around $32 million. In total, Mr. Chairman, these deferred maintenance items were as requested by the postsecondaries, numerous ones around the province.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The $30 million for the U of A: is this not something that was known about for some time? I mean, would this not be something that you'd see in previous budgets, or was it something that came up later when they said: you know, "This whole system is going to crash if we don't get this infusion of money in a big hurry?" It sounds like something that would have been in the works for many years, and why we need to go off budget to get the money for this is interesting to me. If you could explain that a little bit.

Some of the other ones: the hundred million dollars. Again, are these the result of years where there wasn't enough money put into the system and now we're playing catch-up, or are these predominantly newer projects intended to fill in the gaps that have existed previously?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Chairman, there's no secret to the fact that there are a number of deferred maintenance issues within the capital that we have built up over the province. When you have institutions that are closing in on a hundred years old, you're going to have some issues around when you start to build brand new beside it. Is the plant and equipment that is on-site going to be capable of handling that type of expansion? If it's not, do you replace it, or do you augment it, or do you change it?

In the case of the University of Alberta, we're talking about close to probably a billion-dollar project in the Edmonton clinic going in. You have the interdisciplinary sciences building going in, you have expansion projects in the engineering field, you have expansion projects on a number of the different faculties at the U of A, all of which are dependent upon the power plant that the U of A has had there for some time.

In fact, by doing the project costs for the utility system that we're talking about, it's actually probably going to be a total cost of around $89 million when you add it all up. But that utility system has proven to be very cost-effective for the university, so why would we replace it? We want to expand it so that it can handle the newer infrastructure that's coming on stream. We believe that we're probably looking at potential savings with the plant and equipment there of close to $22 million once the Edmonton clinic is up and operational.

In terms of some of the other projects, Mr. Chairman, obviously around the province there are various issues related to institutions that have been there for quite some time. We've done a lot of expansion in the system as well as this deferred maintenance. All we're talking about here is the deferred maintenance.

Mr. Tougas: One more question on Keyano College. If you could just expand on that a little bit. Is this just also catch-up, or is this setting a precedent for increasing salaries for people elsewhere? Can you expand on that a little bit, please?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Chairman, that's the result of the negotiations around the province as it relates to allowances for northern Alberta. We want to maintain a competitive position for our institutions in the north and thus gave them the authorization to move forward with that grant so that they could augment those faculty and staff up there just as other government employees are getting the same type of allowance.

Mr. R. Miller: Just further to that, if I could, Mr. Chairman. Every time that I visit Grande Prairie – and I was up there again just recently – I hear this question from public service employees and educators and whatnot in the Grande Prairie region, arguing that they face the same pressures and the same challenges that residents of Fort McMurray do, yet they don't get the northern allowance that the minister just spoke of. I'm wondering if he would address the situation, for instance for Grande Prairie College, if he would consider offering the same sort of benefit to the people that work at Grande Prairie College.

The Chair: The Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, it's probably not really a part of the discussion of supplementary estimates at this point in time to be discussing what might or might not be happening in other areas of the province, but obviously there's a difference in the cost of housing between Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie, and I know the hon. member knows that. There are also differences in the cost of living that are related to Fort McMurray as it relates to Grande Prairie. We are always looking at ways and means that we can encourage the postsecondary system to be more accessible, affordable, and, of course, of a high-quality calibre, and that's simply all that we're doing here.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to participate in the supplementary supply question-and-answer period. I have two ministers that I am responsible for. The hon. President of the Treasury Board actually happens to be the Minister of Service Alberta, and I have one or two questions for him. I also have a few questions for my hon. colleague who is the Solicitor General.

I'll start with Service Alberta because in this supplementary supply we're being asked to approve $4 million, and I have two questions. The first one is with respect to consumer awareness and advocacy. I know the hon. minister remembers back in the spring, when we were talking about Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act. I made the argument then that consumers need a voice and that they need a representative voice, somebody to advocate on their behalf, somebody to defend their interests. The hon. minister back then argued that we have the mechanisms in place to adequately and sufficiently do this. I'm just wondering, you know, where this $435,000 is going to be spent and if he can give us a brief update as to what was done with the $20 million that we approved in the spring in the regular budget, not in sup supply.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, you know, we've pointed it out, and I know it would be probably beneficial, like the Minister of Education said, to someday sit down with the hon. members and talk about the budget as it goes along and are programs working or not working, but supplementary estimates are simply to be voted on money that has been reallocated within government to a pressure. In this case for Service Alberta we have nearly 2,000 employees, and with the settlement that was reached with AUPE, this was the money required to fund those settlements. Really, today, with all due respect, I'm only going to talk about what's in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Elsalhy: Actually, I should have maybe quoted which section I am referring to. On page 63 of supplementary estimates, which is the ministry's own page, section 2.2.1 talks about $435,000 more, as in supplementary supply, as in money that wasn't in the budget in the spring, as in money that is being spent outside of the regular budget on consumer awareness and advocacy. I know about the AUPE settlement. That was not the question. I am asking about consumer advocacy and awareness and where this money was going to be spent.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, where it's being spent is on the staff.

We have a huge department of consumer awareness and advocacy and the many different departments, and that is salary, staff benefits.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. So I'll take the minister's answer as indicating that anything from section 1 all the way to section 4.0.3 is being spent on staff. I'll accept that answer.

Then I'll move on to my bigger department, if you will, Mr. Chairman, which is the department of Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. I appreciate the fact that the minister is here, and I thank him for the effort to address some of the questions. The hon. Minister of Service Alberta has moved over so that the line of communication would be direct. You know, he doesn't want to intercept any of my questioning, which is okay.

The Minister of Public Security is asking the Assembly to approve $9.45 million. I know that some members agree without even checking the details. I'm going to maybe focus my questions on three or four areas. The first one is crime prevention. I'm going to reference the section again for the benefit of the minister: page 67, section 2.2.1. He's only asking for $11,000. While I'm always an advocate of not spending anything outside of the regular budget, I notice that other areas, other arms of his ministry, are getting a lot more money where, in fact, crime prevention should be highlighted, especially, Mr. Chairman, in light of the international crime reduction conference that both the minister and myself attended in Banff about a month ago and then also in light of the recent announcement from the government with respect to the safer communities task force.

Mr. R. Miller: That would be the announcement that had no dollars attached to it.

Mr. Elsalhy: And that would be the announcement, as I was reminded by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford, that had no money whatsoever indicated in its documents. You know, we had a press release. We also had a background document. It told us about what the government's response was to the recommendations of the task force, but nowhere in these documents and actually nowhere in the media event was there any talk about money except when the Premier was challenged and some reporter asked him: well, how much exactly are you allocating? And he came up with that number of $470 million over three years.

So my question is that $11,000 doesn't seem like much if we're really serious about crime prevention. I'll start with that to get the ball rolling.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. To answer the hon. member's question, we pride ourselves in trying to stay within our budget, so $11,000 is not a lot.

In regard to the comments on the task force recommendations we do plan on implementing I think it was 29 of those 31 recommendations. Again, as I had indicated earlier in this House, stay tuned because those are going to be items that we will be discussing in our next year's budget.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The second question I have is on the next page, which is page 68, talking about gaming research. Now, we have had report after report that indicates that gambling in Alberta is out of control, and we've had report after report that indicates that gambling itself is a social ill and that it leads to the breaking up of families, it leads to people losing their money, it leads to people committing suicide, and so on. However, there's also research that indicates something that I refer to as a comorbidity, which means a coexistence of other ills, a coexistence of the tendency or the propensity for gambling itself to lead to other crime, as in theft, as in domestic violence, as in even murder or assault, and so on and so forth.

Now, I was really, really surprised that there isn't even a cent that is allocated in this sup supply to gaming research, regardless of the fact that Alberta is now the highest gambling jurisdiction in North America. We're really rivalling places like Nevada now. If you look at the initial amount, which was only $1.6 million in the spring, we argued back then that was hardly enough, and now we have nothing more to actually alleviate that concern, nothing more to address that concern because the government doesn't think that there is an issue with gambling in this province. I think they're addicted to that revenue. They like the fact that in this second-quarter budget update we're making $60 million more from gambling, and gambling is the second-highest source of income for this provincial government after oil and gas.

It comes as no surprise to me that they're not interested in collecting that type of research because if they do, maybe we will find out about it, and maybe we will hold them accountable. To the Solicitor General again: why the lack of interest in research that might give you a clearer picture about the gambling situation in this province?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you again, Mr. Chairman. Just to be clear, we're here to be talking about supplementary appropriation. Under this particular question around gaming research, again, we pride ourselves with staying within the budget.

The Alberta Gaming Research Institute is a recipient of this grant. They do a number of research projects every year that are passed on to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. For the hon. member's information, I recently met with the chair of the Gaming Research Institute, and they are actually meeting this week with the AGLC to ensure that the research they do is applicable to the challenge that we see facing gaming in our province today. We are serious about those who do not participate in that recreation activity for that purpose but get addicted. We take that very seriously.

We have, as the hon. member knows, a whole number of programs that are in place, that we're putting in place to ensure that those with problems have every opportunity to have them addressed. Again, it's an indication that we take seriously that we want to stay on budget. In this particular case the research institute is putting those monies to good use.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll now switch to something that is being spent. I'm going to start by talking about the remand centres. We all know that the Edmonton Remand Centre is in really, really bad shape. We were promised in the spring that the new remand centre was going to be constructed and that the government already owned the land and the site was chosen and that we are progressing and moving forward.

You remember, Mr. Chairman, that earlier in this fall session, on November 6, I actually asked the minister what seemed to be the problem. Why the delay? I then also asked about why all of a sudden the estimate for the amount of money it would take to construct and complete the Edmonton Remand Centre, the new one, more than doubled. It was actually more than 101 per cent extra. We got some answers from the minister that indicated that this kind of stuff happens. When challenged, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation struggled to come up with an answer where basically he indicated that the contract is being reviewed, and the contractor is in negotiations with the subcontractors. Well, I don't think we can wait any longer. We need to start construction, and we need to finish it as quickly as we can.

Now, in this sup supply, the minister is requesting $3.1 million, and that is on page 67, Adult Remand and Correctional Centres, section 3.2.1. So $3.1 million. How much of this money, hon. minister, is going to the existing crumbling, deteriorating, and decaying Edmonton Remand Centre? How much of this money is going to be spent on that cost overrun for the construction of the new one? How much of this money might find its way to the Calgary Remand Centre?

The Chair: Okay. Hon. member, we're not talking about infrastructure. That's not part of the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Elsalhy: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, there is a line in the sup supply that talks about remand centres. This money is going to the remand centre. I want to know where it's going and what it's going to be spent on. That's a valid concern.

The Chair: Hon. minister, respond if you wish.

Mr. Lindsay: I'd like the hon. member to clarify for me what page of the estimates he's looking at.

Mr. Elsalhy: I started by saying page 67.

Mr. Lindsay: The supplementary estimates that he's talking about, Mr. Chairman, are because of salaries. They actually don't have anything to do with the new remand centre. But just to answer the question as he indicated regarding the existing remand centre, we are doing some improvements to that centre because we're obviously going to be needing it for a number of years until the new one is built. So there is some money in capital that's being used there.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Chairman, this is quite interesting, actually, because it seems like the stock . . . [interjection] Oh, the Minister of Education is also equally upset. I don't know why.

It seems like, Mr. Chairman, we're being asked here in this Assembly to approve $1.5 billion in extra spending that is happening outside of budget.

An Hon. Member: Then ask about it.

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, that's what we are doing. I'm asking about $3.1 million, and the stock answer now is that it's going to staff salaries.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I have to read you something from page 67, a footnote. The footnote says: "Adjusted Gross Amount reflects the transfer of $5,500,000 for infrastructure planning purposes from Infrastructure and Transportation, pursuant to the Appropriation Act, 2007, section 5(4)(a)." This particular footnote is telling everybody who takes the time to read it that, basically, not everything on here is for staff salaries. It is telling us that some of the money is going to be allocated towards infrastructure projects. My question was: how much money from this $3.1 million extra that the minister is trying to approve is going to be finding its way to the new Edmonton Remand Centre, what percentage is going to make its way to the old Edmonton Remand Centre, and what percentage is going to make it to Calgary?

Mr. Lindsay: Again, Mr. Chairman, maybe I can clarify. There's none of the $3.14 million going to the new remand centre. Let me explain. The $9.4 million: $6.3 million of that pertains to higher than budgeted salary settlements. The $3.1 million is for enhanced policing agreements. To elaborate on that, as allocated under section 22(1) of the Police Act the ministry has entered into numerous agreements with communities that require enhanced levels of policing. The costs of these enhanced policing agreements were billed to the ministry by the RCMP; however, we recover 100 per cent of these costs from communities. However, on direction from the Alberta Treasury Board we needed to change how we account for these reimbursements. Previously they were recorded on a net basis. Now these reimbursements are recorded to reflect both the revenue and gross expenses. Therefore, the operating budget needs to be increased accordingly to show the changes in accounting.

Mr. Elsalhy: I appreciate the answer. I mean, the minister had the opportunity to actually give this at the beginning instead of the push back, instead of raising their hands and shaking their heads and looking at us as if we don't know what we're doing.

You know, Mr. Chairman, the amount of scrutiny that we allocate and award to something like this is really minimal, and we have to use this opportunity to ask those questions. This is money that was not in the budget. This is the first opportunity we get to ask questions about this extra money. For them to want us to assume that all of this money is for staff salary and for staff salary settlements I think is inaccurate and I think is deviating from the norm. This is not the first time we've discussed supplementary supply. This is not the first time some of these ministers were on the front bench and answered these kinds of questions. I'm just curious why this, you know, hesitancy to share the answers with us.

Now, moving on to sheriffs. Provincial policing, as the minister indicated, is receiving an infusion of money, a shot in the arm. The sheriffs' branch seems to be getting a lot of money. I'm referring to page 67, section 2.3. Protection services is getting some money, security operations, traffic safety, investigative support, and warrant apprehension. Now, the minister might say that, yes, this is all for staff salaries – and I am going to accept this answer – but I'm comparing this to the overall expenditure. The supplementary request for the sheriffs' branch totals $1.4 million, while provincial policing overall is $3.2 million. If I do the math correctly, Mr. Chairman, that's about 30 per cent.

I know that initially the argument from the government was that sheriffs were going to save taxpayers money and that they were going to do very targeted and focused work. We were complaining that maybe our payments to the RCMP were, you know, huge or exaggerated and that sheriffs for their targeted and focused mandate were going to save us money. Now we're led to believe that, first of all, the difference is not that big. It's about $4,500 or $5,000 at most between what a sheriff costs the taxpayer and what an RCMP officer costs the taxpayer. That margin, that difference, is actually narrowing and shrinking, especially today when we're actually spending all this money on the sheriffs' department. My question to the minister is: what exactly was missed in the spring budget that we're now trying to catch up? Does he feel comfortable with a 30 per cent cut? Is this maybe indicative of things to come next spring in the budget, that sheriffs are going to occupy 30 per cent of that picture, that they're going to take up 30 per cent of that funding allocation?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, first of all, Mr. Chairman, to set the record straight, just so that the hon. member understands, when we talk about sheriffs, we're not only talking about highway sheriffs; we're also talking about the 400 of them that are involved in prisoner transfers, court security. We also have a number of specialty units who are assisting police now in regard to warrant apprehension, surveillance units, and investigative work inside corrections. So, again, as I alluded to before, those dollars are for higher than expected salary settlements, and that's where that money is going.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not disputing that sheriffs do good work for the mandate that they're given. Recently it was brought to my attention, though, that sheriffs have been reclassified. Their pay scale has been adjusted whereas people like corrections officers in our jails and remands, people like Legislature security, people like courtroom security have not. My question to the minister today in light of this sup supply and the $1.4 million extra for the sheriffs' department collectively: why were these other, equally important arms of law enforcement left out? Why were they ignored? And are they, too, going to be reclassified or moved up the pay scale?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me point out to the hon. member that we respect the services of all government employees. You can't be comparing apples to oranges. In regard to sheriffs and corrections officers there are different levels of responsibility, different levels of training. They add different value to the government. Again, I want to reiterate that we appreciate the services of all our employees. It's also interesting that the new agreement was approved by not only the corrections officers and the sheriffs, so we believe there's fair compensation there.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. One last thing. I'm looking at the ministry support services, and on page 67, if I may add, section 1.0.5 talks about information technology. We're only adding $41,000 there. That's not a huge expense. I'm not necessarily opposed, but I wanted to know how that fits with information gathering and intelligence gathering and the integrated electronic system that the minister was talking about back in the spring.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, $41,000 under information technology is just an indication of salary increases for the people who are employed there doing great work for us and justified and very necessary.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now back to the Minister of Service Alberta if he switches his other hat and is now the Provincial Treasurer. On page 12 of the second-quarter fiscal update I just have to seek clarification. If I'm reading it right, for the first six months ended September 30, 2007, it shows that income taxes and other taxes are going up, transfers from the government of Canada are coming down, nonrenewable resource revenue is coming down, and then premiums, fees, and licences are going up. The flip side is in terms of expense. The other things were revenue. Expense is going up by at least $938 million, so almost a billion. We're comparing the first six months in this budget to the same period in the previous budget. If I look at both curves, expenses are going up; revenues are coming down. I think that if this trend continues, at one point we might be hitting a deficit, or we might be venturing into deficit territory. I want to seek the reassurance of the President of the Treasury Board as to what he's doing or what cabinet is discussing to avoid taking the province into a deficit situation. That's page 12.

Mr. Snelgrove: Once again, Mr. Chairman, it would be a very exciting discussion. We have it in here virtually every day about what we're doing to try and promote a balanced, diversified economy with different revenue streams, whether it's corporate tax, personal tax, the stability of a more appropriate royalty structure. Obviously, we've talked about the proceeds from responsible gaming, licences, and fees. We obviously want more transfers from Ottawa because we're paying such a disproportionate share to the rest of the country. So, of course, we're working on all of those to try and maintain a balanced portfolio if we could, less dependent on resources and more dependent on a diversified, value-added economy.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Minister.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to start the clock because we know that it's a million and a half dollars every minute that we're debating, a million and a half dollars every minute. We'll just see how long I can talk and how much money we approve at a million and a half dollars a minute. Let me just begin by saying that I'm not proud of that fact, quite frankly. I remember the very first time I rose in this House to speak to a budget, and I said that the numbers made my head spin. Three years later my head still spins. A million and a half dollars a minute.

Mr. Chairman, as was pointed out by my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark, this is not the first time that we've had the opportunity in my three years here, three years today – and I would echo my colleague's comments. Congratulations to those of us who are celebrating a third-year anniversary. I suppose all of us in here today are celebrating an anniversary of one sort or another. It's not the first time in the three years that we've stood to debate supplementary supply, and I don't believe it's only the third time. I am quite sure it's probably the fourth or fifth or sixth time already that we've debated supplementary supply, because we usually end up with two of these every year.

I went back and I looked at my comments from the spring, the last time we debated supplementary supply. I indicated at that time, Mr. Chairman, that I was hopeful that that would be the last time that we would stand in this House and debate supplementary supply. The Finance minister had actually made a comment when he was first asked to handle the Finance portfolio, and his comment was – and I'm paraphrasing – something to the effect that he was hoping to bring in a surplus policy that would see an end to in-year off-budget spending. Of course, you'll know that that's something that as the shadow Minister of Finance I've been calling for for three years now.

I was hopeful that the Finance minister would have enough influence in the cabinet and in the government that we might actually not have been here today debating supplementary supply, but as we learned yesterday, when I was discussing resource revenue savings policy, the Premier doesn't always take the advice of his Finance minister. Clearly, he didn't take the Finance minister's advice when it comes to supplementary spending either.

So here we are today with a billion and a half dollars being asked for. We're only – let's see; this is the end of November – seven months postbudget, and we're already spending a billion and a half dollars above what the budget was. I'm going to guess, Mr. Chairman, that by the time this House sits again in February, there may well be another supplementary spending bill in front of us. I think the President of the Treasury Board should be ashamed that this continues to happen with a government that claims to be more fiscally responsible than the previous administration was. Yet it isn't wholly backed up. I will say that there is less in the way of operational spending being asked for here than we have seen in the past. So I think that maybe with the help of the Official Opposition and groups such as the Canadian Taxpayers Federation we are slowly edging them forward in terms of eliminating this practice. But clearly – clearly – we have a lot of work to do.

I'd like to begin with a couple of generic questions for the President of the Treasury. I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board how he can assure us that these supplementary supply amounts will actually help the departments to meet their stated performance measures. In other words, is this going to be the last time? Are we going to be back here in February, debating even further supplementary supply estimates because the money that we're giving the various departments today still doesn't manage to get them to where they need to be in terms of meeting their performance measures? So that's the first question I would have for the President of the Treasury Board.

Obviously, this is a question we ask every time. Why did the budget that was passed in April in this House not have sufficient money included in the various places for these departments so that we wouldn't be here? Most of the things that are being asked for in here were perfectly predictable, and it completely defies the purpose of supplementary supply as far as I'm concerned.

I know, for example, that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development agrees with me because of his comments that were read into the record earlier today from the survey that went out from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. The minister, Mr. Chairman, indicated at that time that he believes that this process that we're doing today is undemocratic. He says that it must be stopped now, and I agree with him. So here we are once again with a number of expenditures that are being undertaken. Some have already been undertaken, and the money has been spent without having come to this House first. That is undemocratic, as the Sustainable Resource Development minister pointed out. I think it's worse than undemocratic; it's just plain wrong.

My second question to the President of the Treasury Board, as I said and I reiterate, is: how do we know that by giving this money today, we're going to avoid the need for further supplementary amounts? Has the government established any sort of benchmarks or outcome measurements to determine that, in fact, when we give supplementary supply, it does meet its intended goals? I suppose the cynic in me might wonder once again whether or not this is not just a political move by the government to intentionally lowball their budgets, and then they can announce more program spending throughout the year. In this case it's capital expenditures, but it's the same idea, Mr. Chairman.

Those would sort of be the general questions for the President of the Treasury Board.

Now I get to talk about my favourite subject, and that is the heritage savings trust fund. The Department of Finance is asking for $825,000 to allocate to the heritage savings trust fund. As the Minister of Education pointed out earlier in the afternoon, the Official Opposition is supportive of the fact that we're putting money into the heritage savings trust fund. You will never see this member stand here and complain about money going into the heritage savings trust fund. I'm very pleased to see that that's happening. My displeasure, however, as is well known, comes with the fact that we do not have a savings plan for the heritage savings trust fund. What we have is a surplus plan. The two are very different. It might be too fine a point for some members opposite, Mr. Chairman, to understand, but the two are very different.

The Alberta Liberals had a surplus plan three years ago. Three years ago today we went through a provincial election with a very well received surplus plan that allocated surplus dollars and defined exactly where those dollars would go. We recognized, however, particularly in a time of economic boom with unprecedented oil and gas revenues coming into this province, that a surplus savings plan was simply not good enough. It did not accomplish what this province desperately needs; that is, a strategic effort to remove us from the continued boom and bust cycle that we've experienced for so many years and get us past the point where we're so terribly reliant on oil and gas revenues.

We took our surplus plan and turned it into a savings plan whereby 30 per cent of all oil and gas nonrenewable resource revenues would automatically go into savings. Automatically, not wait until the end of the year and see if there's money left over, not wait until the second-quarter update and find out that there is extra money and then you put some of it away but a little bit of self-discipline, a little bit of commitment on the part of the government to say: we're going to save some of this money for later. That has not happened.

So as happy as I am that we're putting $825,000 in there, I'm displeased that three years on despite the fact that there are many members on the other side who I know personally support the idea – I've read some of the names into the record yesterday; there are others as well – despite the fact that we have a lot of support on that side of the House for a savings plan, we've yet to have one. Interestingly enough, when you go back and you look through the leadership candidates in the PC leadership race last year, all but one of those candidates supported the idea of a savings plan for nonrenewable resource revenue. Unfortunately – and I mean this sincerely – for the province of Alberta the one candidate that didn't support a savings plan is the one who ended up leading the party.

Without any question the Premier of the province has a certain amount of influence over his cabinet members and his caucus members. We now have a person at the helm who does not believe in a savings plan, didn't support a savings plan specifically during the leadership race. Therefore, despite the fact that a lot of the members over there believe we should be saving money for the future, we have a government that is not committed to doing so.

An Hon. Member: We are.

Mr. R. Miller: No, you're not. You're not committed to taking money off the top and saving it, and that's the problem.

I'm happy that you're taking some of the surprise surplus and putting it aside. That's good. Let's get real about this. Let's get serious about this. Let's start paying attention to chambers of commerce and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and everybody else out there who's saying that this is something that we should be doing. It's not good enough to wait until there's a surplus and take part of it. It's time to get serious about this.

The other thing, of course, that drives me crazy is the fact that we continue to have a law on the books that dictates that every single penny of revenue generated by the heritage savings trust fund after administration fees are paid and after it's inflation-proofed – and let me point out once again that it was the Official Opposition that called for years and years and years to inflation-proof the fund, and it was finally done two years ago – gets transferred into general revenue. Then it's only through the largesse of this government that we take some of that money and put it back into the heritage savings trust fund. So the money that we're putting back into the fund, Mr. Chairman, is in fact the same money that was generated by that fund, that was earned by that fund, that was raided out of that fund and put into general revenue.

Now, because the government wants to look good, they want to appear as if they're actually making an effort, they take some of that money, not even all of it – budget documents indicate that about $1.4 billion will be earned by the fund this year – and they put it back into the fund. Good for them. I'm happy. But I called it a shell game the other day, and I'll do it again. It really is nothing more than a shell game because what you're doing is you're putting a cup over it, you're moving it around, and you're hoping people aren't paying too much attention. Then you say: oh, look, we're going to put $825 million into the heritage savings trust fund. That's good. As I say, it's good, but it's not good enough.

I think I'll give the President of the Treasury Board an opportunity to respond to my specific questions in terms of the general practice of supplementary supply spending. Then I hope he might also wish to comment on the idea of a savings plan and how desperately I and others believe we need one.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm surprised because the hon. member has consistently been, I would consider, someone who is a fiscally responsible person in the House with his questions and consistently supported a controlled in-year spending saving. When we come back with a supplementary estimate, he knows and all members in the House know that this is not about spending; $825 million of it is going into savings, exactly what he asks for.

Then he tries to make that something bad, that in the middle of the year we're here telling Albertans we've been able to put another $825 million into the heritage savings fund. They've got to make a big statement: you're spending a million and a half dollars a minute. We're putting that in the bank. When you talk about $1.5 billion, you take $825 million out, and put it in the bank; you take $408 million out, and you put it into projects that they ask for every day in here to move forward our maintenance programs, to help out with affordable and renewables for housing and things. Of the money, $200 million, firstly, is into emergencies and things like the pine beetle and forest fires that have to be addressed.

So we come in with the second-quarter supplementary estimates, which is an accounting procedure. We have to tell Albertans where the money is. We're $77 million lower than at first quarter, and we're $53 million lower in spending than we budgeted. Yet a question that I would have expected him to ask is: what about the $15 million in nonbudgetary disbursements? Where's that going?

Well, we're not just into savings; we're into investment. We have started the process to set up AIMCO, which will invest Alberta's dollars into the long-term future for this province. It's good to use your money wisely. It's good to have it available to put into investments. But to simply say to Albertans, "Well, we're going to save it" – you know, a lot of people say when they're gone: boy, I wish I'd spent a little instead of putting it all in the bank. We're saying: let's invest it. Let's take what we can and reinvest in Alberta and in other areas that will provide long-term return to us. So the $15 million, which I'm sure he would get to as he went through, is basically a loan, an interest-bearing loan to the AIMCO corporation to set up for us to look at if we can better use all of the dollars from the many, many different funds, including the heritage fund, to reinvest.

But I have to go back because the hon. member brought it up, Mr. Chairman, about his commitment to put 30 per cent of our resource revenue into the bank. Effectively, this year if they had done that, that would have shut the departments off: Children's Services; Employment, Immigration and Industry; Energy; Environment; Executive Council; Finance; Justice; Municipal Affairs and Housing; and/or Service Alberta or the Solicitor General, whoever you wanted. That $4 billion would have been gone, and those departments or other ones – that would have just wiped out Education except for a little bit or shut down a third of health care. That's an option you have if you want to live under a number that's arbitrary. Let's take a third of something – we don't know what it is – and tell people that we'll put it in the bank. Here are the consequences of saying that's what I would do. Those departments: Solicitor General – I'd shut him down because I like my job – Municipal Affairs, Justice, Finance, Executive Council, Environment, Energy, Employment, Immigration and Industry, and Children's Services.

Albertans expect that when we live in a province like ours, that has been as bust as that, we do provide. We probably provide far more services to people than I personally believe in. I'm more cold-hearted than most people in Alberta. I still believe in the old adage: you get out and work. Get a kick in the butt and do it. That's where I come from. But average Albertans are saying that there has to be a compassionate part of our society, and this government has addressed that, and it's the balance. The Premier talks about the balance.

So you can't pick an arbitrary number and say that one-third will go and tell people somehow in a responsible way that that was doable or even appropriate. Those are the departments that would have been shut down if you'd take it, or mix and match, but that's $4 billion worth of spending that you would have had to come up with if you were going to put it in the bank to save it for some future. And the future without those departments in Alberta, Mr. Chairman, would be very bleak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Yes, it'll be as much fun as the time the Minister of Education was in Lethbridge. I happened to be in the city at the same time, and I turned on the evening news, and there's the Minister of Education holding on for dear life. His speaking notes were already in Montana. That looked to be a lot of fun. His feet were just touching the ground; the breeze was that stiff. I just looked at him. His hair was straight back, and I just figured his speaking notes were in Montana.

Now, the first thing that I would like to ask for regarding supplementary supply estimates: on page 6 under Notes is a series of Treasury Board minutes. They are designated here, any number in 2007, but the details surrounding these Treasury Board minutes – yesterday, after this document was tabled, I thought I would go to the Legislature Library and get these minutes. I assumed, Mr. Chairman, that they were publicly available. We all know – we are told – that there has been a new page turned in the history of Alberta, and we now have an open, transparent, accountable government.

Mrs. Ady: And we do.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw is assuring me that we do, and I'm really glad to hear that.

So I'm wondering if it's possible if the President of the Treasury Board could tell me where in the library downstairs I can find these Treasury Board minutes, whether they're publicly available not only to myself but to the taxpayers of Alberta. Certainly, when we look at some of these minutes and the expenses that are associated with them, it would be very interesting to see how these sums were finalized and the rationale behind them, whether it's for Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture; Justice; Health and Wellness; Education; Agriculture and Food; or Service Alberta.

You know, there are two here, Treasury Board minutes, for over $6 million for Service Alberta. The hon. minister in charge of Service Alberta – I'm certain that Steve West would have provided that information to the public. You know, you're following in Mr. West's footsteps from that constituency. [interjection] If you don't, I'm not saying that we're going to phone Mr. West and ask him to take you to the political woodshed or anything like that. But I would be really interested to get those documents and read them on my own time, outlining the reasons why this money was available.

Now, what I did find down there in the library was a series of Treasury Board directives.

Mr. Liepert: You've got time to do that.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Yesterday.

Some of the Treasury Board directives are interesting, particularly the credit card policy directive that's dated the 16th of May, 2007. Initially I thought these directives were the Treasury Board minutes, but they were not. You know, I can see why with the lax, loose manner in which credit cards were being administered by this government, there would be some tightening of the rules, but there are some exemptions. The Legislative Assembly offices are exempt, and also (b) "entities exempted by regulation from sections 37 and 38 of the Financial Administration Act." This is the sort of information, Mr. Chairman, that is available but not the details that I expected. I must say that I'm disappointed, but hopefully these Treasury Board minutes will be provided forthwith in the course of the debate.

Now, going through the details of the supplementary supply budget line by line, I certainly would be interested to know more about the $30 million to the University of Alberta to upgrade its district utility system. If I could have some more details on that, I would be grateful. With our tight electricity supplies it's reassuring to notice that on occasion the University of Alberta's power plant is supplying electricity to the grid here in Alberta.

An Hon. Member: Deregulation.

Mr. MacDonald: Deregulation. Yes, hon. member. With deregulation the university is like a lot of other outfits, supplying electricity into a very tight market. If any of that money is being used to help out that power plant, I'm just curious about that.

Now, on the next page, Mr. Chairman, we are looking at apprenticeship delivery here. From the total gross amount of $30 million to the amount of $22 million: if I could have an explanation for that, with the credit or recovery of $8 million, I would be grateful on that question.

Certainly, other people have talked about the supplementary amounts regarding staff recruitment and retention initiatives, whether it's in Fort McMurray or whether it's in contracted agencies around Edmonton. I know it's an issue that we have heard at the constituency office. I'm sure that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has had people come to her office with passionate pleas for more money so that not-for-profits can retain their staff, particularly to look after Albertans that cannot look after themselves. There is some money in here for that, and I think that's a wise use of public expenditures at this time.

Mr. Chairman, we're also, as I say, looking at 11 and a half million dollars for school boards in Fort McMurray to facilitate this. Again, the basic education programs – and this will be on page 22, hon. minister – there seems to be a change in the credit or recovery here of $42 million. If I could have an explanation for this, I would appreciate that.

Now, we go on here to some of the immigration policies under Employment, Immigration and Industry. Earlier in question period today we had an opportunity to talk about the former Energy minister Murray Smith and the speech that he delivered in Austin, Texas. I don't know if after he delivered the speech he went to Austin city limits or not. It's hard to say. At the end of his speech in Austin a little over a year ago Mr. Smith talked about the labour market mobility and how we need to continue to tell people how important labour market mobility is. Mr. Smith is putting a rather passionate pitch in here for anyone who is interested to come to the "naturally air-conditioned comfort of Fort McMurray as opposed to this oppressive, humid environment of Austin." Those are the words of the former Minister of Energy in his recruitment drive. He's talking about the temporary foreign worker program and how that may meet some of the needs here.

However, with this budget estimate here, when we're looking at the immigration policy support and the additional $200,000 here, is that enough to meet the need? There is confusion among those who have temporary foreign worker visas, many of whom do not read or write the English language. Certainly, they're intimidated by their employers. The visa itself restricts and limits them to only that employer. Is this additional amount for the immigration policy support program being used to give advice or show support to those temporary foreign workers who may feel that they need more information about working in Alberta, whether it's information about the Workers' Compensation Board or about their rights under the Employment Standards Code or their rights under the Alberta human rights and citizenship act, or any of those questions that they might have? If I could get some advice from the minister on that, I would be very grateful.

The $400,000 for workplace health and safety regional services: is that being used to hire additional OH and S inspectors, or is it just to top off the salaries of the ones that are currently employed? Certainly, we just have the one line item on that.

Now we get to the Energy department. I'm pleased to see that there is $2.1 million going to resource development and management revenue collection. I was astonished, as were a lot of other Albertans, to realize that for a period last year, in the previous fiscal year, we only had one – one – auditor working for a significant portion of 2006 in the production audit group. I believe this was the production audit group that's associated with the EUB. There seems to have been a fire put under the feet of the minister, so to speak, and we have six individuals in there now. Historically I think there were 14 in that production audit group.

When we look at this $2 million amount to begin implementation of Alberta's new royalty framework, it tells me that we're finally getting started on trying to get some sort of control back into that department. Now, I'm surprised that the government thinks that $2 million is enough in this case. Perhaps they could take money from other sources and allocate it to the Department of Energy. I'm sure we could cut the communications budget; we could cut the travel budget of other areas. In fact, last year the travel and communications budget for the government was $159 million. For 2007 it is anticipated to be about the same, a million dollars more: $160 million. There's a lot of money there. Maybe we should reduce our travel and communications budget and dedicate the savings to the Department of Energy.

When we look at implementing Alberta's new royalty framework, what we're really saying is that we've got to fix up the messes that have been identified not only in Mr. Hunter's report but also in the Auditor General's report. I don't know which report, Mr. Chairman, to start on. Certainly, Energy's royalty review systems, audits and recommendations, volume 1 from the Auditor General, Mr. Fred Dunn, for 2006-07 I think is a suitable place to start. Now, is this kind of money enough? I don't think so. Whenever we look at this report, we only have to read some parts of it to realize: what a mess; what mismanagement. The current Minister of Energy has a lot of work to do over there. His dilemma reminds me of a political speech I heard recently where a member of the federal House of Commons was commenting upon some of the Conservative cabinet ministers, and he said this: he's the worst minister since the last one.

An Hon. Member: Would you say that again, please?

Mr. MacDonald: He's the worst one since the last one.

I heard this at a political dinner, and it was in reference to a federal Conservative cabinet minister and his predecessor. I think it was the Foreign Affairs minister, to be precise, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I must admit that I thought of this government.

Now, let's have a look at this, Mr. Chairman, the Auditor General's report. In here he writes:

Since at least the year 2000, the Department identified significant changes in Alberta's oil and gas industry and analyzed their impact on the province's royalty regimes. In general, Departmental staff have produced quality analysis. During this period, the Department has adjusted aspects of its royalty regimes.

It was slow in coming, but the Alberta royalty tax credit was eventually phased out. It's currently a work in progress, but it was a program that cost us over $7 billion in the last 25 fiscal years.

An Hon. Member: Twenty-five?

Mr. MacDonald: Twenty-five. Yes. I didn't go back any further in public accounts. I was going to go back to whenever it started, hon. member, but I just decided that 25 years was enough.

Mr. Snelgrove: That's enough. Good. That's enough to have a good vision of the past.

Mr. MacDonald: Yeah. But it's $7 billion. Again, to the hon. minister in charge of Service Alberta, I would remind him that if he is not a student of history – and he says he's not – he's going to repeat the mistakes of these past Tory regimes.

Mr. R. Miller: Just look what's happening in Ottawa right now.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Isn't that an interesting observation by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

I can understand why the Conservatives are reluctant to talk about the past after what is being rolled out on the front pages of the Globe and Mail and other daily newspapers across the country. I can understand why this government doesn't want to have anyone look at its record. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, if I'm being distracted by the government members over there.

The Department of Energy "has identified critical issues that have not yet been addressed publicly." Now, this $2 million is a start on fixing this problem. But the Auditor states:

The Department estimates that it could collect an additional $1 billion or more per year without stifling industry profitability. However, neither this information nor the reasons why changes have not taken place have been made public.

I wonder if the $2 million is going to be used to get together a series of royalty reports that the government will not release and send them over to myself and to Sean Kochan from the research staff so we can read them over on our own time.

The Auditor states that readers of his report will ask . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We'll start where the hon. member started but work through the irrelevant parts, though. The Treasury Board minute is the legal minute required for departments to transfer money either from department to department or to move from an allocated expenditure of, say, capital to another one. So that's the legal requirement to do it.

Mr. Chairman, there would be absolutely no point in trying to verify the numbers with the hon. member because his questions and his actions in here – the truth would just get in the way of all he does. There is really no point. He can make the numbers up much better than the truth, so we won't try and verify the numbers.

Ms Blakeman: Don't let him just get you annoyed. Come on, give him a challenge.

Mr. Snelgrove: No. I give up. Our colleague in the back says regularly: the truth will set you free. He's got a life sentence, I'm telling you.

His question about the central heating at the university was already asked by the hon. member from the third party. It's in fact being put together to try and maintain and keep up to the huge – huge – and appropriate growth at the University hospital here in Edmonton, giving Edmonton, if not the best, certainly one of the best facilities in the world. Albertans want that, Mr. Chairman. They want to have that University hospital, the research that goes with it, the new clinic that's being built, the Cross institute. It's fantastic that they're able to locate there and provide virtually to all Albertans, to a lot of the world, the opportunity to teach and to heal and to look after them. So I know the hon. member would support the expansion and the upgrade of the central heating plant and also because of the sound financial sense it makes.

Then, Mr. Chairman, we got into questions from the hon. member that had nothing to do with the supplementary estimates, but we appreciate his colourful way to appeal to our benches here about his flavour for immigration policies and the advanced ed issues and the questions around subjects that have no relevance whatsoever to the supplementary estimates. We all know his ability to look backwards into Energy and to use hindsight and to use his best attempt at whatever number he wants to pull out of the hat today, whether it's $7 billion or $25 billion or $150 billion. We just wish him luck in keeping track of his birthdays, and that's about it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today.

I'll have a couple of questions, and I'll be brief. One will be to the Minister of Education and one to the Solicitor General.

First off, I'd like to, you know, commend the government for showing restraint this time in supply in a way that I think is very encouraging to the budgetary process and how we look at the budgetary process in the running of our province of Alberta. Of course, there are going to be supplementary items that are involved with things that cannot be controlled, that are beyond the control of the government. Certainly, the government is not going to control wildfires, not going to control flooding, not going to control the way the pine beetle and all the rest of that happens. Certainly, I think the provincial employees in all of the departments' estimates are quite happy to get an increase in their wages that'll be voted in these estimates.

Now, just a question to the Minister of Education. I see on page 21 under School Facilities, the infrastructure spending, there is something over $97 million there, and it's actually quite welcome by many of the schools that are receiving this funding. In the P3 approach that we're seeing coming around, some of that maintenance will be taken up, and my question would be: would we be avoiding that maintenance cost down the road in future supplementary estimates by the P3 approach and by the ability to have that put over onto a long-term contract where the maintenance would be taken care of?

A second question would be to the Solicitor General, and that would be regarding the sheriffs' branch. I'm not exactly sure where the Legislative Assembly sheriffs come into play in this, but I was just wondering if as a part of the supplementary estimates there is any increased cost from the change from having commissionaires to sheriffs – and I understand we're going to be phasing out the commissionaires pretty much in the near future – and if the use of sheriffs is an increased cost or if there is some other reason for that.

Those are all the questions I have, Mr. Chairman, and that concludes my comments.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to respond briefly to the Member for Edmonton-Manning. I would not want the Member for Edmonton-Manning to confuse modernization with maintenance. In most cases the $97 million went towards modernization. As an example, in Camrose the $10 million for the Battle River regional division at the Camrose composite high school was to put the third of three phases of their industrial arts, their heavy equipment training into the composite high school. It's something that has been on the capital plan for quite a number of years, and that's clearly addition to capital.

In most of the other cases I know, as in the case in Innisfree, that I mentioned earlier – the Innisfree school is kind of a compilation of a whole bunch of additions over years. Due to declining enrollments the school is larger than it needs to be for the number of kids they've got there today. So their project was really to bulldoze down about three-quarters of the school, keep the gym and a couple of newer classrooms, and add a smaller part to the school. That ended up being I think it was about $4 million or $5 million.

There were a whole bunch of different kinds of projects, but when we move into the P3 process and we talk about maintenance, we're talking primarily about things like roofs and the changing of boilers. The maintenance there would not be what it was in most of these cases, which was really modernization, maybe bulldozing down part of the school, building part of it back up. As I say, in the case of Camrose it was additions onto their industrial arts area. Each one was a little bit different, but by and large I don't think we could consider the kinds of expenditures that we made, the kinds of investments we made in August to be taken up in the future by the maintenance component of the P3 project.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member asked a pertinent question. First of all, let me say that the change from reducing some of our commissionaires on-site to sheriffs is not reflected in the supplementary. On a yearly basis it's going to increase our spending there by about $100,000, but we have that within the existing budget. Let me comment on why we're doing that. We had a comprehensive security review to determine that we required an increased level of security both in the Legislature and on the grounds. As a result some of the commissionaires will gradually be replaced by sheriffs. The sheriffs have the proper training, and they have the authority to ensure a better level of protection for the public, for the staff, and for MLAs.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for a second opportunity to be able to question the government on its financial decisions and policies and what's there and what's not there. I'm hearing that if you get people riled up enough, they get up and read from their briefing notes, so you get real answers. So I'll do my very best, Mr. Chairman, to get them riled up so that I'll get real answers.

What I tend to do around this is actually do a feedback loop with my constituents about what they think we need to see in supplementary supply and/or other comments that they have around funding from the government. I have a number of different areas that were raised by my constituents, and energy, not surprisingly, was raised a number of times. The specific issues that were raised around energy – and I did go through and try and cross-check to see if anything they were asking about was in here, but frankly some of it is a bit vague, and I can't tell if it's here or not. These debates are about what's in there and what's not in there and why the government made those decisions.

To the Minister of Energy. A concern about peaking oil, the oil and gas resources starting to decline and what the government is doing. His questions are: how will we heat our homes, grow and transport our food, the need to implement renewable energy? Under the Department of Energy I am seeing salary costs and the implementation of the new royalty framework. Under that does any money flow to alternative energy sources? That is essentially my question.

Another Energy question. Actually, several people, including Ryan Warden and also David Smith, asked me about not caving in on the royalty structure. Now, I know the government members feel strongly that they didn't cave in on the royalty structure that came from the Royalty Review Panel, but if we could get more details. If this has already been asked, my apologies. I did step out briefly. I'll take it in writing, then, on what the money is to implement the new royalty framework. There's money going into a number of different votes under the Department of Energy: ministry support, $25,000; $3.2 million into resource development and management. How does that all shake down, and what are we doing with new sources of energy?

The other Energy question that I had were concerns that were raised around Bill 46, so I'll raise those at a different time.

Mr. MacDonald: No. Go ahead.

Ms Blakeman: Well, you know, that is an interesting thing. With Bill 46 and around the money for that, was there a strategy behind that to save money?

Mr. MacDonald: It cost $500 an hour. It must have come to more money.

Ms Blakeman: I'll let my colleague ask you the questions about the $500-an-hour guy. I'm more interested in the strategy around Bill 46.

Was that partly to save money for the Department of Energy? My understanding was that they weren't actually paying for any of the payment of lawyers and intervenor status, so I'm not sure. Can the minister tell me if there is a link between the Department of Energy budget and trying to save money with the policies that are being implemented in Bill 46?

Under Environment, for the Environment minister, a number of issues have been raised: water quality, and does the province have any piece in putting fluoride in the water? What we have is $2.5 million requested to provide for a higher than budgeted cost of salary settlements for provincial employees. Okay. Then there are a bunch of different areas where people are getting raises, but it doesn't look like there's any money going into any kind of water quality stuff. The other issues are around the environment and environmental practices with the oil sands and putting pressure on industry to clean up their act, to pressure industry to do that: they need our resources, and if they're good corporate citizens, then they will want to do that.

Air quality. That was the other question. Is anything being done specifically around air quality, particularly when you look at what's being anticipated in Upgrader Alley? Are any special initiatives being expected under that?

The next area is municipal and the questions there. Now, in going through this, I see $148,700,000 for mostly disaster recovery and flooding: extensive flooding, rain and snowstorm damage, again flooding, groundwater seepage, overland flooding. Okay. It's all flooding. Then $100 million to municipalities to increase the supply of affordable housing. The issues that have been raised with me around that: homelessness. When I spoke earlier, I was talking about the subsidies that are available for people on AISH. This money that is going out to these municipalities is not likely to actually create any more rental units for us or affordable housing units for us. A hundred million dollars isn't going to go very far when it's spread out amongst all of these municipalities. What other longer range policies does the government have in mind for this? I heard the minister speak about increasing a thousand units or something, but then she wasn't able to back that up with how that was actually going to happen and how new units were going to be created. I'm looking for additional information on that.

Now, the eviction prevention fund: that's gone over budget. There is an additional $6.6 million that is being put into that fund, but really this is just subsidizing private landlords. At this point we've now got a system where private landlords can charge whatever they want, and the government will then fund some low-income person to make up the difference in the rent by getting money out of this prevention fund month by month by month and paying it to landlords. I don't understand. How is this the free market? If it's okay to interfere and subsidize landlords directly, why isn't that marketplace interference when putting a temporary rent cap somehow is a terrible interference in the marketplace? You guys seem to agree with marketplace management occasionally but not frequently and sort of pick and choose when you're going to do this.

Mr. MacDonald: Why don't you give an example of that?

Ms Blakeman: Well, I just gave an example of that where we're subsidizing landlords, but we're not actually creating any tangible new rental units, and we're not subsidizing in some cases, like people on AISH. They're going in the hole between $300 and $500 a month, and that's not being paid for out of the homeless and eviction prevention fund.

Then we have $2.7 million to Alberta Social Housing Corporation for maintenance and renewal work on health and safety issues in three housing projects in Shaganappi Village in Calgary. Now, that's interesting. That's quite specific. Why is that such a specific project? I don't see anything comparable that's happening in, say, Edmonton or Lethbridge or Fort McMurray. I wonder whose constituency that is. Okay. So I had people raise issues both around affordable housing and around homelessness.

Finally, education. Issues were raised around teachers' pay, which I found very interesting. They felt teachers weren't paid enough. I thought the Minister of Education would enjoy that. Yeah. The money here is going to a monthly allowance for employees in Fort McMurray, which will be part of that initiative that the government had that was specific to Fort McMurray.

Higher than budgeted cost of salary settlements: now, that's interesting. How come the government can manage to come through with $1.6 million for higher than budgeted cost of salary settlements for provincial employees, but they can't manage to do that to the health regions when they settle on a nurses' contract settlement? That was the question I asked in question period today. How come there's an inconsistency in government policy around that? Maybe the President of the Treasury Board can explain that one for me.

The last two ministries to go. Health again, and the minister can supply written answers to me on that one. Drug affordability. We still have a number of people that don't get Blue Cross coverage through their workplace, nor can they afford to do it themselves if they're working low income. So drug affordability has become a huge issue. Also those sort of newer drugs where you can get them on a compassionate program for a period of time. Doctors are prescribing them to people. They're not okayed by the expert drug committee, so now people are out of pocket by significant amounts. There's nothing in here about that. Where can we expect to see some movement on that? Also about funding for coverage of midwifery.

Finally, when I look at page 73 under the culture and recreation portfolio, once again, it's referring to that really generic media release from August 22, which really doesn't tell us what is happening in a given area. I'm wondering if the minister can explain. There's $26.7 million for additional capital maintenance and renewal of provincial parks and protected areas. Which ones, please? If you could give us the details of what location, what is being done, that would be helpful. I don't know why there's this hide-and-seek. These budget debates would go significantly faster if the government would just provide us with the information.

You know what, Mr. Chairman? They could print it in the book. When I go back and look at the budget documents that used to be given out in the Assembly, you know, prior to 1993, there was information in them. You could actually tell. When there was a lump sum, it was broken down. You could tell exactly where it was going, what program it was supporting.

Earlier in the day I asked the minister of health which programs, which contractors through AADAC were actually getting this money. Well, we get nothing. So I can't tell if the money's going into smoking cessation or youth drinking issues or drug treatment for crystal meth. None of that information is given in the documents, nor is it given when I ask the question, you know, in the Assembly. This would go faster if we just had the information. It's not that difficult. It really would. I can pretty much guarantee that.

There is $5 million to complete projects at the Canmore Nordic Centre and at various centennial interpretive centres. Once again, where are the various centennial interpretative centres? What are they? Where are they? How much? Break it down and give us some details on this stuff.

Mr. R. Miller: The minister is here. Maybe he'd get up and tell us.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, the minister is here. Excellent. Okay.

I do note that in 2005 in a supplementary supply budget the Canmore Nordic Centre was given $2.97 million. So here we are getting – well, I don't know how much out of that $5 million is going to the Canmore Nordic Centre. They don't break it out between the Canmore Nordic Centre and the various centennial interpretative centres. But that's very interesting. Two years ago they got almost $3 million. Now they're getting – what? – another $3 million. I guess my question is: if this is a project that's worth doing, why isn't it in the budget? Why do we keep seeing this Canmore Nordic Centre, as an example, come up and get money only out of surplus money? I find that a really interesting choice.

Again, if we could get the detailed information under the expense and equipment/inventory purchases section for a breakdown of the $2.5 million that is requested to support additional capital maintenance and renewal of provincial parks and protected areas as was announced on the 22nd of August but no detailed information was given at that time.

You know, if I go into the detailed vote, it just says: parks, $1.5 million. That doesn't tell us anything. Under equipment/inventory purchases it says: parks. It doesn't tell us where, why, who, what's being done. Nothing. So I'm happy to get that information. Yeah, I'd like to get some information, please. It would just be so much easier if I could get it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Affordable Housing and Urban Development.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to make a brief comment. The question was, I think, regarding the issue of rent supplement and the direct rent supplement program. The housing management bodies throughout our province do administer that program. It's a program that's working well. It's been in place for a number of years. We have enhanced it with additional dollars. As you know, the housing assistance represents the difference between the market rents and 30 per cent of a household's income.

I know that your view is that it's subsidizing landlords. My view is completely different. My view is that when you have – and I've met many, many people, you know, over the past number of months who have truly appreciated this program because if they didn't have the program in place, they would not be able to stay in a home that they've been in for some time, whether that be an apartment or a condo or a dwelling.

Ms Blakeman: I didn't say they didn't appreciate it.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, that's what I heard. That's what I heard.

The other thing, Mr. Chairman, is that today the referral was to a thousand apartments through the Calgary Apartment Association. I had referred to the Calgary Apartment Association making those apartments available for individuals of low income, that would be assisted through the Calgary Housing Company with a rental subsidy. It's not that we are going out and building a thousand apartments as a government but more that the Calgary Apartment Association has made them available for low-income people. It was that clarification I wanted to make.

Thank you.

5:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm hoping that we have enough time. Is it till 6, or is it till quarter to?

The Chair: Quarter to.

Mr. Bonko: Well, then, I'll do my best to make the time that I have . . .

An Hon. Member: Profitable.

Mr. Bonko: Yes. I'd like to talk on a couple of the ministries, one of which was just up there: the Associate Minister of Affordable Housing and Urban Development. The budget here says that it's $148,700,000. I'm trying to remember with all the numbers that are being tossed around. In the budget it says $100,400,000 for municipalities to increase the supply of affordable housing. I'm looking to have maybe a bit of a breakdown as to how much of that's going to be allocated to Edmonton and Calgary specifically, those that house or don't house the amount of people out there. I recognize that the homeless count through the summer, obviously, is going to change, but can you give me some sort of a number as to how much of that $100,400,000 is going to be directly for Edmonton and Calgary specifically?

We talk about $9 million for the rent supplement program. The Member for Edmonton-Centre somewhat alluded to it as well. I'm just wondering, you know, what would have been better: to go with the rent cap, the rent freeze, the temporary rent controls, or with this? Have we done, maybe, a comparison to see what would have cost less? We know that we're already over budget with regard to the emergency funding and the rent supplements versus just capping the whole thing. As we say, right now we're subsidizing the landlords. Well, I don't see the whole difference in the other one.

The homeless and eviction prevent fund. Now, I've had a couple of constituents that we have taken down there. This fund hasn't worked for them. In fact, they didn't get the funding that they needed. You go to the office here in Edmonton, and it's absolutely astonishing to see the amount of people that are lying there, that are hoping to get in. It's almost like the passport office, but these guys are hoping to keep their home, not be able to go to another place for a couple of weeks. They're hoping to keep their home. The need in that office is unbelievable. It just seems to be a nonstop revolving door. The need is there. I'm hoping this fund is going to continue because it doesn't look like there's going to be any end to that one. So that is what I wanted to specifically ask on Municipal Affairs and Housing.

The other one was Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. There's $34,224,000. Again, the Member for Edmonton-Centre asked about it. It specifically talks about the amount that's going to be going into particular parks. Well, I didn't see exactly which parks are going to be spoken about. I'm a person that actually is able to get out and around and do some camping. I don't do the hotel thing. I don't drag the trailer. I do the tent. [interjection] That's right. I do the roughing stuff. When you go to these parks, they're falling seriously behind what they were, say, 20 years ago. I haven't even got to the fees. They don't even justify being able to camp there, what you get for the $25. You've got to pay for the wood in some cases, or there is no wood.

But the amount of parks that are in disrepair is just outrageous. I don't care where you go. It does not compare to what we get in British Columbia. I'm going, you know, apples to apples. It's a big difference there. They do in fact put their money into the parks because they realize it is a big tourist draw. We have the mountains. People want to come and see them, but they want to sit in squalor. A perfect example is up in Banff.

Title: Monday, November 26, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/11/26

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, and welcome.

I would ask members to remain standing after prayers so that we may pay tribute to a former colleague who has passed away in the last few days.

Let us pray. As we commence proceedings today in this Assembly, we ask for divine guidance so that our words and deeds may bring to all people of this great province hope, prosperity, and a vision for the future. Amen.

Mr. Dallas Wilbur Schmidt
August 9, 1922, to November 22, 2007

The Speaker: On Thursday, November 22, 2007, Dallas Wilbur Schmidt, DFC and Bar, passed away.

Mr. Schmidt was first elected in the election held March 1975 and served until 1982. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Wetaskiwin-Leduc for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his term of office Mr. Schmidt served as a cabinet minister without portfolio from April 3, 1975, to August 29, 1976, associate minister for energy and natural resources responsible for public lands from August 30, 1976, through to March 22, 1979, and as minister of agriculture from March 23, 1979, to November 18, 1982. Mr. Schmidt served on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, Standing Committee on Public Affairs, and the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing.

Mr. Schmidt was a distinguished veteran of World War II, having served with the Royal Air Force with No. 227 Squadron from 1940 to 1945 and from 1951 to 1956. He was the recipient of the Distinguished Flying Cross, 1942, and the Bar of the Flying Cross, 1942.

The archives of the Royal Canadian Air Force includes the following for Flying Officer Dallas Wilbur Schmidt, DFC and Bar, of Wetaskiwin, Alberta, who served with the 227 Squadron in the defence of Malta.

On his first sortie he shot down an Italian aircraft. In September 1942, he obtained a hit with a heavy bomb on an enemy merchant vessel which subsequently sank. A few days later he attacked a destroyer, in a convoy, with gunfire. In spite of intense opposition he pressed home his attack causing an explosion behind part of the ship's gun positions, which probably indicated hits on a magazine. On another occasion in November 1942, he destroyed two Ju 52s and assisted in the destruction of a Dornier 24. His aircraft was hit in some thirty places by return fire and the port engine was set afire, but he succeeded in extinguishing the flames and flew the damaged aircraft back to base landing it safely in very difficult circumstances. F/O Schmidt's total score was 5 1/2 enemy aircraft destroyed.

A memorial service will be held on Tuesday, November 27, 2007, at 2 p.m. at the Mulhurst Community Hall, Pigeon Lake, Alberta.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family, who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember hon. member Dallas Schmidt as you have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Now, hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I will invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Mr.

Lorieau is in the Speaker's gallery. Would we all participate in the language of our choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we sit, let me just point out Mr. Paul Lorieau again, who Saturday night last on national TV did an absolutely magnificent job singing the national anthems of both America and Canada in an evening dedicated to the dedicated, hard-working, and courageous men and women of our Canadian armed forces. Well done, Mr. Lorieau. [applause]
 Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you three very special guests seated in your gallery today. First, Mr. Michael Chisholm. Mr. Chisholm has recently been re-elected as the member of the Saskatchewan Legislative Assembly for Cut Knife-Turtleford constituency, a large rural constituency that borders our province. Mr. Chisholm has also recently been appointed the legislative secretary to the Premier of Saskatchewan, responsible for western Canadian economic co-operation. From the number of green and white jerseys in our streets last night I suspect there is some significant potential for co-operation at least till spring.

The second guest, Mr. Speaker, is Chuck Moser. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce him to you. He currently works with the University of Alberta with their faculty of physical education, alumni relations department. I suspect that most of the members of this Assembly know Mr. Moser as he is an active member of the Edmonton community and an example of community service that makes this city and province the best place in the world to live and raise a family. Mr. Moser is also no stranger to this Legislature as he formerly served as the executive assistant to the former minister of transportation Henry Kroeger.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you Mr. Bradley Chisholm. Bradley Chisholm was recently hired as my executive assistant. Prior to joining my team, Mr. Chisholm was a commercial real estate lawyer with the Calgary firm Macleod Dixon. Bradley attended the University of Calgary law school. Prior to attending law school, Bradley received his undergraduate degree in economics from McGill University and his international baccalaureate from the United World College of United States of America.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Mr. Premier, do you have a guest?

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly, seated in the members' gallery, the nominated candidate for the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta for the riding of Airdrie-Chestermere, Mr. Rob Anderson. Rob is a lawyer with a very successful law firm; a very, very active member of his community; and somehow finds the time to raise a young family of three children with his wife, Anita. I'm proud to have Rob as a member of our team as we build Alberta's future. I would now ask that Rob rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 25 grade 6 students from George P. Nicholson school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud; in fact, located in my neighbourhood of Twin Brooks. Accompanying the students is their teacher, Maxine Sprague, along with parent helpers Raylene Palichuk and Lora Lee. The class is here at the Legislature participating in the School at the Legislature program, and I can say that that's a very excellent program. I was able to answer some of their questions today. I'm looking forward to an opportunity to meet with them again and answer further questions because, of course, we can't do our jobs as MLAs unless citizens do their jobs as citizens and raise important questions with us. I can assure you that this grade 6 class can and will. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 97 visitors from the city of St. Albert, Muriel Martin school. These three classes of grade 6 students are in the middle of their studies on government. I can tell you from when we had the pictures taken earlier this morning, asking them questions, that they had all the right answers. I look forward to visiting with them in their classrooms. They are accompanied by teachers/group leaders Mrs. Jody Bialowas, Mrs. Katie Boyd, Mlle Danielle Jean, Mrs. Linda Foley, Ms Shelley Verlik, and parent helpers Mrs. Dixon, Mrs. Gamble, Mr. Martin, Mrs. Roche, Mrs. Kielt, Mrs. Jones, Mr. Nelson, and Mrs. Beaubien. I believe they're in both the members' and public galleries. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. Two of my favourite schools in Edmonton-Rutherford are joining us today. The first are 21 students from Sweet Grass school. They're accompanied by Mrs. Fiona Mark, their teacher. I don't believe they're in the gallery yet. They're coming in at 1:30 to watch question period.

The second school is Greenfield school, celebrating their 40th anniversary this year, by the way. Twenty-one students as well from Greenfield are with us today, led by teacher, Mr. Jeff Webster, and two parent helpers, Mr. Riad Ghazal and Mrs. Shari Johnson*. Again, they're joining us at 1:30.

I would ask that all members give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of staff from the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. Too often the spotlight on government business is focused on the Legislature, but it's important to note the significant work carried out by our many public servants in Agriculture and Food staff offices across the province, including many who are located right here in Edmonton at the J.G. O'Donoghue Building. Today I am proud to welcome 10 valued employees of our strategy and business planning division. Their work to support and guide our agriculture and food industry is critical, and they certainly do a tremendous job. Today these folks had an opportunity to tour the Legislature and learn more about the official government process that helps them carry out the good work that they do. With us today and located in the members' gallery are Marcia Hewitt-Fisher, Dale Dowswell, Bill Olive, Eileen Chauvet, Elaine Kalynchuk, Debra Van Gaalen, Isabel Simons-Everett, Amber Gosselin, Shamim Rajani, and Laureen Kennedy. I'd ask that they please rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly someone I had the pleasure and privilege of working with in this building a few years back. Charlene Adam is here with her daughter Julie today. They are in the members' gallery. The Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon and I had an opportunity to speak to the grade 6 class at their Leduc school a month or so back, and I can tell you that the questions were a lot tougher than the ones we get in this particular House. I would ask Charlene and Julie to please stand and receive the warm applause of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Morningstar Mercredi and Lorraine Hoffman. Lorraine Hoffman is an elected member of the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation council and is currently serving her second term as councillor. Morningstar Mercredi is a member of the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation and a committed advocate of her people. Both guests are actively involved in bringing to light the health care crisis caused by tar sands development and the lack of adequate resources to deal with the mounting health crisis in the area. On behalf of my constituents and all Albertans I'd like to thank them for their efforts and advocacy on behalf of all First Nation people and for all Albertans. I would ask that they both now please stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today Marton Kiss, a resident of Mill Woods. Marton and his wife, Lisa, are challenged with medical concerns and are faced with a critical housing situation. I'd ask Marton to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Human Trafficking

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 13, 2007, I attended the Alberta Symposium on Human Trafficking in Red Deer, hosted by Changing Together, a centre for immigrant women in Edmonton. Human trafficking has been described as a modern form of slavery. It is a serious human rights violation and is reported by the United Nations to be the fastest growing form of transnational organized crime.

At the symposium I discovered that I was among the many people who find it hard to believe that slavery still exists. I learned that there are more than 27 million slaves in the world today, including people in forced labour, women and girls trafficked for the sex trade, and children kidnapped and brutalized to be used as child soldiers. Slavery is flourishing in many parts of the world, and it is still every bit as ugly as it was 200 years ago.

Human trafficking nets organized crime $7 billion each year. It is the third most profitable criminal activity after dealing in illegal weapons and drugs. According to Interpol a trafficked woman can bring in anywhere from $75,000 to $250,000 a year. In Canada organized crime groups have used young aboriginal children as well as eastern European women and children in trafficking between provinces for the purposes of sexual exploitation and other activities. In 2004 the RCMP estimated that 600 to 800 persons are trafficked into Canada annually and that an additional 2,000 persons are trafficked through Canada into the U.S. each year.

Mr. Speaker, 2007 marks 200 years since Britain abolished the transatlantic slave trade, thanks to the tireless work of William Wilberforce, a British MP. Today there are 27 million slaves worldwide, and we must work together with other nations and organizations like Changing Together to bring this international human rights tragedy to an end now and forever.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Health Care Aides

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand before you to recognize health care aide awareness week, beginning today, November 26, as promoted by the Alberta Continuing Care Association, Alberta Home Care and Support Association, and Alberta Senior Citizens' Housing Association. We all know that Alberta has experienced a critical shortage in health care aides, and stakeholders are working hard to raise awareness about training and employment opportunities in this compassionate, caring career.

Health care aides provide personal assistance and support services to people of all ages, including the elderly, the disabled, the acute or chronically ill, and those in need of short-term assistance or ongoing support. It is estimated that 80 per cent of the hours of care provided to Albertans receiving continuing care services are provided by health care aides. I can attest to that, Mr. Speaker. During my father's short stay in the Strathcona care centre, he received the greatest care, and it was the health care aides who were always there, patient, caring, and with total kindness.

The Alberta government supports the provincial health care aide promotion awareness campaign. This campaign aims to increase the health care aide workforce across Alberta as well as increase enrolment and generate the largest number of employable graduates in provincial health care aide programs. I'd ask all members to please join me in recognizing the significant value of health care aides in this province's health workforce and the positive difference they make in the lives of Albertans in their care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Affordable Housing

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to talk about Marton and Lisa, two brave Albertans whose lives are crumbling around them. Lisa has fibromyalgia. Marton was just diagnosed with MS. Confined to a wheelchair, Lisa's inaccessible apartment has become a prison. She has been stuck there since August. Medical expenses have eaten up their savings, and now they're supporting themselves by selling off one piece of furniture at a time to pay for necessities like food and rent. Lisa is unable to evacuate in an emergency. She can't make it to medical appointments or physiotherapy.

This is unforgivable. As public servants we have a sacred duty to ensure that the people we represent have at the very least enough food to eat and an affordable place to live. We have a duty to see that all Albertans share the benefits of our economic growth. You expect to hear stories like this in war zones, not in Alberta. I fear for Marty and Lisa, Mr. Speaker, and I fear for all Albertans in similar situations because, clearly, public support for less fortunate citizens is woefully inadequate.

How much worse will it be in years to come, after the boom is over? This government is spending nonrenewable resource revenues as quickly as they come in, setting barely any of it aside for the future. How will even modest programs like AISH be funded in the years to come? History shows that Alberta's most vulnerable will pay the heaviest price for the government's failures. Do we want to be remembered as presiding over a regime that allowed people like Marton and Lisa to fall through the cracks amidst unprecedented wealth? Or are we prepared to take a hard look at our priorities and invest a reasonable amount of our vast resource wealth to properly support disadvantaged Albertans?

Simple human decency demands that we do more for Marton, for Lisa, and for the thousands of Albertans like them. We need to do more today, and we need to start saving our nonrenewable resources now, creating sustainable revenue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Political Party Donations

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is long overdue for reform of its campaign finance laws. Big money dominates the donation list of both the Liberal and the Conservative parties. These parties accept hundreds of thousands of dollars per year from big oil and other large corporations. Let's not kid ourselves. These donations come with strings attached. When big oil writes a cheque, they do so with the expectation that there will be minimum change to the royalty system. They do so also with other issues.

Tenants face gouging rent increases so big landlords with deep pockets can profit a little more. Big landlords make bigger political donations than tenants, so the needs of ordinary families are swept aside, and rent guidelines are rejected. The effect of big money even shows itself in long-term care facilities. The recommendations of the Auditor General are ignored, and conditions at long-term care facilities get worse instead of better. Big money and big political donations have a corrosive effect on democracy, Mr. Speaker. It means that the needs of regular families get put on the back burner in favour of the needs of large, profitable corporations, who can take care of themselves.

It's time for Alberta to follow the lead of the federal government and Manitoba and ban all political donations from corporations and unions. Our democracy has as its basis the individual citizen acting freely in their own interests and the interests of their community. Individual citizens should also be the financial basis of our democracy. It should not be undermined by special interests using their wealth to distort public priorities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Grey Cup

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Close to a million Saskatchewan residents and countless others across the country and beyond breathed a collective sigh of relief yesterday as their beloved Roughriders prevailed over the Winnipeg Blue Bombers in the 95th edition of the Grey Cup. Christmas came exactly one month early as the Riders did just enough to win 23-19. It wasn't the most exciting game ever, but that happened in 1989 with the same Riders. At that point Kent Austin was the quarterback. Yesterday he was the coach leading the team, the Green and White, as they ended the CFL's longest Grey Cup drought. That's over. The SkyDome became Riderville. It was a sea of green.

When I saw Jack Layton at the airport in the morning, I wondered if he'd like to know that, number one, his provincial cousins did not win the last election in Saskatchewan and that, number two, every time the Stampeders, the Eskimos, or the Riders have won the Grey Cup, the NDP were not in power. With the new Premier in Saskatchewan, Brad Wall, and the new administration in this province I believe the future does look very bright for Saskatchewan and Alberta, even brighter than this tie, I might say, Mr. Speaker, even if we do cheer for different football teams. I encourage families, friends, and neighbours to enjoy this victory because, pun intended, I do hope that the Saskatchewan party lasts a long time. But let's face it; we want that cup back here in Alberta.

In the meantime, I do have to say that we have a guest here, Mr. Chisholm, a representative from Saskatchewan. I hope he'll convey our warmest wishes to the new Premier. We look forward to working with him and the Saskatchewan government to make the new west even better, a strong force throughout the country and the world.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the Riders for the entertainment.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, another milestone has been reached between the Alberta government and the Alberta Teachers' Association, representing the province's 35,000 teachers. In a meeting of over 400 representatives across the province the ATA's emergent representative assembly overwhelmingly endorsed ratification of the historic agreement. This memorandum of agreement will ensure labour peace for teachers, parents, students, and school boards for over five years.

Some of the details of the agreement are that the government will assume the teachers' pre-1992 pension contributions, teachers will provide five years of labour peace, teachers will receive a lump-sum payment of $1,500 in the spring, and teachers' pay will increase by 3 per cent in year 1, with 2 through 5 based on the Alberta average weekly earnings index. School boards and students will now have guaranteed funding and budget predictability. Mr. Speaker, there will be uninterrupted classroom instruction for the next five years.

The next step is for teachers at the local level to ratify the MOA, and then the ATA locals and local school boards can work together to finalize their collective bargaining agreement by January 31, 2008. The Minister of Education, our Premier, Mr. Frank Bruseker, and, frankly, all teachers ought to be congratulated on this deal.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly today, and it reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seventy-six more signatures on this disability petition which urges the government to ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across the sector regardless of where they work, ensure that these employees are fairly compensated and that their wages remain competitive to reflect the value of the services they offer, improve those employees' access to professional development opportunities, and introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level of care standards.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Affordable Housing

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple in south Edmonton needs this government to take some real action on affordable housing. Marty suffers from MS, and his wife, Lisa, has severe chronic conditions and requires a wheelchair. The wait list for an appropriate unit is long, and their rising medical costs are driving them into poverty. Lisa and Marty have applied for assistance from the rent supplement program, AISH, home care, Aids to Daily Living, and income support, and they are still forced to sell their furniture in order to pay their rent and medical expenses. My question is to the Premier. What else can they do, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is an issue that has just been raised in the House, and I'll ask the ministers responsible to further investigate this particular situation.

I know that the taxpayers provide substantial support to those in need of housing, those with disabilities also through the rent supplement program. We're doing a lot in terms of finding housing that's compatible with the needs of the particular family in question. If someone has fallen through the cracks, we certainly want to know about it, and we'll deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They've tried to tell everybody they can about it, Mr. Premier.

This government held a housing symposium in 1998 that clearly identified the need for more accessible housing. Ten years have passed with precious little done. Now this government comes out with another 10-year housing plan. Desperate people do not have decades to wait. My question again is to the Premier. Why are people like Marty and Lisa still forced to wait for an affordable place to live when the need for accessible housing was identified almost 10 years ago?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, progress has been made on affordable housing, but the hon. member forgets the fact that between 500,000 to 600,000 new Albertans have moved to this province to seek opportunity. Affordable housing and housing available for special needs, those individuals that quite rightly should remain in their home rather than institutionalized, is, of course, a very top priority of the government. It's centred around the quality of life, and we expect that all Albertans should have some equitable quality of life in this province. That's why we'll look into this particular situation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Marty and Lisa also face enormous costs for medications. In 2004 the first ministers' conference agreed that "no Canadians should suffer undue financial hardship in accessing needed drug therapies [and that] affordable access to drugs is fundamental to equitable health outcomes for all our citizens." My question again to the Premier: when will this government finally implement a public pharmacare program that reduces the burden of rising drug costs on low-income Albertans like Marty and Lisa?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the mandates, of course, to the minister of health is to put together a pharmaceutical strategy so that it encompasses all Albertans. I know that a number of years ago Alberta was proud to have the longest list of insured drugs. So many more drugs have been added to lists covering various diseases, obviously with the new research that's being done in the province of Alberta, so we're constantly upgrading that list. But we do have to look at an overall strategy, and I also submit to this House that Alberta can't go it alone. We develop our strategy in conjunction with the federal government because there's dual responsibility.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Affordable Housing in Fort McMurray

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I spent Friday, Saturday, and Sunday in Fort McMurray. There are many wonderful things about that community, but over and over I heard intense concerns about how this government is managing, or rather failing to manage, the growth of that region. The single biggest concern is with housing, which, I was told, is now more expensive in Fort McMurray than in either Toronto or New York City. There is real frustration, verging on despair and anger, over this government's delay in releasing Crown land for housing. My question is to the Premier. Why is it taking years and years for this government to release enough land for housing development in Fort McMurray?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, one of those baseless allegations that the hon. member is known for. Municipal Affairs and Housing has made three land parcels available in the Timberlea area, totalling 1,000 acres, available for new housing. These developments are well under way, and new houses are being constructed. We're also working right at the moment to secure another 700 acres for housing in the Saline Creek area. There's a considerable amount of money being invested in housing. Plus, there were affordable dollars that were transferred over to the municipality of Wood Buffalo. So there's substantial support there.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, it's a real puzzle why this government will not release more land for development. I'm told that there are up to 40,000 people – 40,000 people – living in work camps in the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo region and unknown numbers of others living in the bush. These people use the hospital but don't generate funding for it. They use police services, the water systems, and the roads, but they don't bring revenue in for these because they don't count as permanent residents. To the Premier: what is the plan from this government for managing this out-of-control boom so that Fort McMurray can attract more permanent residents and have fewer people living in camps and the bush?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, $396 million was advanced to the community of Fort McMurray immediately after the swearing-in, the reason being that we recognized the need. A lot of the money is going for water and waste water. It's one thing to build a house, but of course you also have to deal with water and waste water and the construction of additional roads. We've also committed to four-laning highway 63. We're completing 881. There was recent completion of an overpass on King Street. There's other work being done around that area. There are millions and millions and millions of dollars that are going into the community.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberal plan for funding Alberta's future includes a steady, strategic approach to addressing infrastructure debt. This government refused to make those strategic investments for years, including under this Premier's watch as infrastructure minister, and is now trying to cover up the mistake by driving spending through the roof. A recent report by the TD bank described this government's approach to infrastructure spending as, quote, throwing fuel on the fire. To the Premier: can the Premier appreciate that it is better to have a long-term plan for roads and hospitals and schools than to depend on ad hoc announcements made off-budget every few weeks by this government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, his plan for infrastructure in this province is probably similar to the position they took on the royalty framework, which is zip. They don't know where they are. It must get pretty difficult sitting on the fence all that time.

Dr. Taft: Point of order.

Mr. Stelmach: Raise another, a couple more.

There have been significant investments made in Fort McMurray. One of the critical areas is tied around housing, and this is where the industry, the government have come together to look at ways of moving construction further on housing. We also realize that housing is critical to the social well-being of the family, and the more houses we build in that area, the easier it will be to attract people to that region as well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Low-income Support Programs

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Prosperity in this province is obviously not reaching all Albertans. Statistics gathered by the Edmonton Social Planning Council and Public Interest Alberta indicate that 22 per cent of our workforce is earning less than $12 an hour and that 36 per cent is making less than $15. Last Thursday the President of the Treasury Board said in this House, "We probably provide more services to people than I personally believe in," and that "you get out and work. Get a kick in the butt and do it." But for countless Albertans work does not pay. They don't need a kick in the butt. They need this government's compassion to help make ends meet. My questions are for the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Will the minister review the adequacy of benefits for low-income working families? The Alberta family package of benefits consists . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has been called three times.

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, budget 2007 delivered the highest basic personal tax exemptions in Canada, meaning the greatest earnings with no taxes paid. The highest. We increased tax credits by 3.6 per cent, saving Albertans $92 million. For those that are not able to work temporarily or full time, we were able to provide additional supports. We increased supports this year. A typical working family with two children can earn up to $38,200 before paying any provincial tax. Through our subsidy programs, through income support programs, through Children's Services subsidies this government provides the best.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta families making $40,000 per year pay the same health care premiums as families earning $400,000 a year, and those with better paying jobs are more likely to have their employer covering the premiums. Eliminating health care premiums will do two things. It will eliminate the need for complex administration. It will also put more money in the pockets of low-income households. Will the minister convince her cabinet colleagues to once and for all eliminate the Alberta health care premiums?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am no longer health minister, but we have health care supplements for children, which increased again this year, covered a broader knowledge and number of children that needed health care premiums.

Relative to health care premiums I defer to the Minister of Health and Wellness.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A critical area for low-wage workers is the prevalence of part-time work with no benefits. Some Albertans are working three different part-time jobs and are still not able to make ends meet. This is an issue relevant to employment standards, but the results of the review of employment standards has somehow disappeared into a black hole. Will the minister look at those standards and change the code requiring employers to provide prorated benefits and pensions for part-time workers, at least those who work at least 15 hours a week?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you listen to the opposition today, you would think the sky is falling and that we don't care for poor people. We improved the minimum wage this year to $8 per hour. We put in a new indexing formula, so as of April next year we will have average weekly wage used to calculate what should be available to people on minimum wage. We have today the highest minimum wage in Canada after taxes and tied for highest among the provinces even before taxes.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just this month the state of Alaska raised royalties by 30 per cent retroactive to July 1. This is Alaska's second increase in just two years. Alaska will take in three times as much money per barrel of oil as Alberta. My question is to the Premier. Why can Alaska earn three times more per barrel of oil than Alberta can?

The Speaker: Well, the Premier is the Premier of Alberta, not Alaska.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can only talk to the Alberta royalty framework, which is going to be implemented January 1, 2009. It's a framework that really, truly represents Alberta's entrepreneurial spirit, and that is that as oil prices rise, we will capture the upside, but if they do drop, then all Albertans will share in the risk. It's the kind of model that's going to provide the certainty and the predictability for continued investment in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, entrepreneurial spirit really sounds like it's a spirit of giving to big oil companies.

Alaska produced a hundred thousand barrels of heavy oil less than Alberta but brought in nearly $2 billion more in royalty revenue. Alberta has been shortchanged by billions on its royalties for years, and neither this government nor the Liberals have a plan which will fundamentally change that. My question is to the Premier. Why is it that Alaska can get $2 billion per year more by pumping less oil?

The Speaker: Once again, stick to Alberta, please.

Mr. Stelmach: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I think the leader is a bit confused. He's comparing oil to bitumen, significantly different, and probably has to get a little bit more knowledge in the whole area of the differences between bitumen and conventional oil. However, this is the regime, the royalty framework, that works well for Alberta. If you look at the macroeconomic indicators in the province of Alberta in terms of the amount of corporate tax paid to the province, of course personal income tax paid, and the huge investment that consumers are making here in the province of Alberta, that speaks well for the royalty regime.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, perhaps if the Premier familiarized himself with the royalty rates of other jurisdictions around the world, he would hang his head in shame for the pathetic royalty regime that he has brought forward.

Mr. Speaker, the reports that we're quoting indicate that the costs to recover the oil in Alaska are actually higher than the costs of recovering oil in Alberta's tar sands, yet Alaska can earn between two and three times as much as Alberta can per barrel of oil. Why,

Mr. Premier, does your royalty regime fall so pathetically short of Alaska's and other jurisdictions'? Why have you left so much money on the table?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm just wondering where the hon. member has found oil sands in Alaska. But if he has, I'm quite sure that he'll inform the House tomorrow as to where he made this great discovery.

All I can say is that the framework is working very well for the province of Alberta. Obviously, my response has really aggravated him because he's continuing to chip away. The framework is good for Alberta. It's going to provide the certainty and predictability that I mentioned before, and in the future we'll see more wealth generation in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Industrial Development in Alberta's Heartland Area

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oil sands upgraders and other new construction in and near Edmonton will soon create one of the largest phases of growth in Alberta's history. It will create good jobs for generations. It will create wealth that will be felt for a hundred years and more. It has really just begun. The growth must be done right. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Albertans want clean air, clean water, and clean work. With the accumulative impact of Heartland construction affecting much of northern Alberta's environment, how will the cumulative Heartland impact be measured, kept clean, and communicated to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the member has pointed out a very important fact in his question, the fact that Albertans have clean air, clean water, and clean work, and Albertans want to make sure that it stays that way. That's what cumulative impact is all about. It's not about fixing something that's broken; it's about ensuring that we maintain that clean air, that clean water, and that clean work. The cumulative impact program talks about including monitoring and allocation and verification. It talks about setting up the necessary infrastructure so that we can ensure that we make the necessary decisions now that will keep the pristine environment that we respect so much in place despite economic development.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the minister of municipal affairs. As part of the recently released Kline report looks to Edmonton's grey water as a natural economic source for industrial water needs for the Industrial Heartland region, what will your ministry do to ensure that the city of Edmonton gets a fair return to its taxpayers for this resource?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member speaks of grey water, or recycled water, and the industrial area. I know this subject is being discussed by the Capital region integrated growth management plan as well as the Industrial Heartland cumulative effects. I know the Minister of Environment has brought forward a committee that has two phases. One of those phases is working on the short-term needs, and the second phase is working on governance, funding, and establishing a foundation. I do believe that the first phase is to report to the Minister of Environment by the end of this year, if I'm correct.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, the second supplementary is to the Premier. As groups such as the Construction Owners Association are working to smooth out demand for labour and matériel as well as other issues impacting industrial construction of the Heartland region, we will see completion schedules extended. Construction work may continue for at least a generation: good work and good jobs. Mr. Premier, how will your government keep this wealth, this work in Alberta for Alberta and for Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, definitely we're focused on adding more value to bitumen and, of course, increasing the size of the petrochemical industry in the province of Alberta. Other than what we heard from the opposition, wanting to build upgrading plants in Manitoba, we're not going to do that. We're going to keep it in Alberta. The next step, though, is to have a large workforce. Of course, we just issued a construction workforce strategy that's going to train more people. It's focused on Albertans. We want to of course work with the First Nations and Métis nations to ensure that they all have a good opportunity to share in Alberta's wealth and also then work on an immigration policy so that we can build these plants in a very competitive manner.

Rural Alberta's Development Fund

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Drayton Valley-Calmar and chair of rural caucus I know just how important rural Alberta is to our province, unlike the opposition over there. While we often think of rural Alberta in terms of our roots or our past, there's plenty of opportunity to branch out and create new growth, create a bright future. My questions today are for the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Last year our government invested $100 million in the rural Alberta's development fund to help nurture economic growth and strengthen rural communities. How are those taxpayer dollars being used to benefit rural Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have to thank the hon. member for his advocacy on behalf of rural Alberta and the development of this fund. We have some 21 projects that have already been approved, totalling $18.4 million. They're helping us improve the issues related to providing interns for rural Alberta, wildlife stewardship, a number of very innovative things to build community capacity, including a $3 million announcement recently to create a centre of excellence in Medicine Hat to develop unmanned vehicle exploration opportunities for land, sea, and air.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the same minister. Given that the RADF annual report was a hot topic of discussion at the recent AAMD and C conference held in Edmonton last week, one thing the rural communities need is newer, updated infrastructure. Why aren't these capital projects being approved by this fund?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, first of all, of course, all members of the Assembly are aware that this government spends this year more than a billion dollars on infrastructure throughout Alberta, so there's a hefty amount of money already there. The amount of money that this approves provides long-term economic development opportunities by engaging communities and regions in working together to develop things beyond the brick and mortar of replacing an arena roof or looking at other things that are capital. This is instigating an opportunity for learning and development through the use of the SuperNet and new connections, new innovations, and new networks that rural Albertans are creating based on their own capacity to develop things that can improve their own lives.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you. My last question is also to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. With the RADF operating as an arm's-length initiative, what mechanisms are in place to ensure that the disbursed funds are used appropriately?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there is a grant agreement with terms and conditions to be met. There is an accountability framework within that grant agreement. The offices that are currently provided for in the Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village to house the secretariat for the development fund have been retrofitted in a way that if the fund should no longer be in place, they can be very nicely used to support the administration of that particular centre. So on all fronts the RADF is being accountable for taxpayer dollars.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the next member is the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. I'd just like to advise all hon. members of the House that since we last met, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has now arrived at a new point in his life. He's arrived at his 60th anniversary of life on planet Earth. I understand from people who have arrived at the age of 60 in the past that there's a new form of wisdom that kicks in automatically at that time.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Highway Construction

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's failures to plan for the boom are obvious on so many levels. One of the many is our province's inadequate, substandard highway network. Highway 63 is only now being twinned, something the Alberta Liberals have been urging since the 1980s. For too long this government has waited while the safety of Albertans has been compromised and the connection to the oil sands, so important for our prosperity, incomplete. As a result the government is paying exorbitant, inflationary costs due to their failure to plan. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: after waiting so long, when can the residents of Fort McMurray and those who risk their lives . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we're spending over a billion dollars on twinning highway 63.

Mr. Boutilier: How much?

Mr. Ouellette: Over a billion dollars, Mr. Speaker. We started this year. We're twinning right now from 881 into Fort McMurray. We're starting on our five-lane bridge crossing the Athabasca River in Fort McMurray. We're also doing some twinning on highway 43 north of Fort McMurray. We did some widening on 881, so now or next year, when we've completed that little short piece of twinning that we're doing, there will be two choices to go to Fort McMurray at least. We've got 881 and highway 43.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question was: when will the twinning of highway 63 be completed?

Another case of the government consistently behind the times can be found in southern Alberta with highway 3. It is a vital component in the international and interprovincial trade route that is the Canamex corridor. The Alberta Liberal caucus has been consistently pushing this government to twin this east-west connection that is so key to the prosperity of the region and our province. To the minister: why, despite all of the urging of residents and businesses along this corridor from Medicine Hat to the Crowsnest Pass, has the twinning of this road been put on hold?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as minister of transportation in Alberta I have to look after the whole province from one end to the other. We have criteria that we have to follow. We try to keep all of our highways as safe as possible, and where the construction is needed the most that fits into the capacity of the construction to be done and the money we have to spend, that's what we work on in order.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The residents of northeast Calgary felt completely out of the loop when this government pushed through the revised route for that leg of the city's bypass earlier this year. Now it seems that the residents of Grande Prairie are suffering the same fate. Grande Prairie residents and their city council do not feel adequately involved in the planning for the southwestern bypass. Will the minister commit to collaboration, not just meaningless consultation, with the mayor, council, and the residents of Grande Prairie to ensure that both local and provincial goals are achieved?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the wisdom you were talking about earlier I'm sure hasn't come through.

Mr. Speaker, I meet with all councils of all municipalities, and I always meet with municipalities any time they want. I met with a bunch last week at AAMD and C, and I plan on meeting with a bunch more at AUMA in Calgary on Thursday and Friday. I always try to work the best I can with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, the Canadian dollar is the highest it's been in nearly 40 years. The results with respect to tourism are that costs are rising for American travelers, our largest economic partners. There is also growing confusion among Americans as to the Canadian passport requirements. My question is to the Associate Minister of Tourism Promotion. Has there been a decline in tourism from the United States to Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for my first-ever question on the floor of the Legislature.

The member raises an important point because the U.S. is our largest tourism market. In fact, in the year 2005 almost a million visitors came to Alberta from the U.S. They spent some $624 million. So they are very important. But to the member's question. I think it's great to point out that in this year alone we've seen, actually, an increase of 3.5 per cent U.S. visitation through direct ports of entry, while the rest of Canada has actually seen a 3.5 per cent decline. We think that's because we have the greatest product ever in Alberta, but there are also some advantages.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What is happening regarding the passport requirements to minimize the impact on our visitors?

Mrs. Ady: Now, Mr. Speaker, passports are a federal jurisdiction, but we also know that they're very important to this tourism market. There is a bit of confusion out there. Sometimes the U.S. isn't sure whether they need a passport or don't, so we're working very hard with our partners and with the Travel Alberta website to let people know that you can still come into Alberta without a passport if you come via car. You only need a passport when you come by air. But there is some confusion, and we are continuing to work to clear that up.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. What steps is our province taking to ensure it retains the growth in its tourism market share?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, he's right: tourism is a very, very competitive industry. In fact, all other places in the world as well as Canada want this industry, so they're competing against us. Our closest, most ferocious competitor is British Columbia, but they also bring us one of our greatest opportunities, which is the Olympics that are coming to us. The world is now travelling to Alberta to compete on our world stage, and we're going to use that opportunity to bring the eyes of the world to us. Some hundred million people and some 70 countries will see Alberta in World Cup in the coming two years, and we hope that we'll see more of Jan Hudec's victory this week in World Cup as we go forward. But Alberta is a great place, and the world is going to see it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Research and Development Funding

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The latest figures from Statistics Canada show that industry in Alberta is not spending remotely the same proportion on research and development as industries in other provinces. Industry in Ontario, for example, spent eight times more on research and development as industry in this province in 2005. Alberta is clearly punching below its weight here, and it is vital for our future prosperity that this change. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: does the minister believe that this level of research and development spending is remotely sufficient to provide for Alberta's future prosperity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member brings up a very valid point, and that is that industry in Alberta has not been contributing, perhaps, as much in certain areas as what the ratio to government expenditures might be in other provinces. But one must also remember that the province of Alberta spends a considerable amount more than most other jurisdictions on research and development within our postsecondary institutions, within our institutes. The Institute for Nanotechnology is one that comes to mind very recently. We are working with industry to encourage additional partnerships to take advantage of and leverage the government dollars, the taxpayer dollars that we have out there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is notoriously difficult to raise venture capital in Alberta. The Alberta Liberals have had a policy for years that would change that by creating a joint government and industry venture capital fund. To the same minister: why hasn't this government moved to address the lack of venture capital in this province?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as part of the mandate for my ministry we had a task force created by industry and academics that reported back to us. I'm sure the hon. member has already read the report as well as the ICT strategy report as well as the fibre road map report. In fact, I recall speaking about those here in this House.

There are a number of other things besides venture capital. It's not just venture capital. It's what you do after the research component to get it into that precommercialization stage and then into that commercialization stage. Then you bring in the venture capitalists. We're looking at that valley of death for these bright young minds are creating these products. We want to help them with that, Mr. Speaker, and the venture capital will come.

Mr. Tougas: A clear example of this government's failure to plan for a sustainable, prosperous future can be seen in energy research funding. In '05-06 this government put less than a million dollars into alternative energy research at the Alberta Energy Research Institute. This clearly is not planning for a diverse future prosperity. To the same minister: what possible justification does this government have for giving alternative energy research such minimal funding?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to see where he derived the numbers from because I think I could probably add up from the various departments and various research institutes that we utilize that we have a great deal more than a million dollars being invested in alternative energies. We have programs running at the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, the University of Alberta as well as the Alberta Energy Research Institute as well as Climate Change Central. We have a number of programs. It's unfair to simply pull one number out of one report and say that that's the entire width and breadth of alternative energy that this province is doing. In fact, we are leaders in almost all of the areas of alternative energy: clean coal, wind, solar, the alternative energies that are nonhydrocarbon. We are considered global leaders in all those areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Aboriginal Economic Development

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government has voiced its commitment to ensuring that all Albertans share in our province's unprecedented economic growth. Aboriginal Albertans make up the fastest growing and youngest population in our province, and many are in my constituency. My questions are to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What is being done to ensure that aboriginal Albertans benefit from our province's healthy economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the hon. member and to the Assembly I want to say that in the past two years our ministry has viewed this as a tremendous opportunity. This opportunity, if I could give one example, is that we've supported 27 economic First Nation partnership initiatives, 27 of them. Of course, this helps in terms of developing First Nation industry as well as working with existing industry in developing capacity to create jobs, create capacity for the future, and for young people in Alberta, so we have a tremendous opportunity that we are certainly building on for the future. I want to say that those 27 initiatives are very positive in terms of the results that have been produced.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Can he please provide some examples of the kinds of partnerships between First Nations communities and industry that the Alberta government is helping to support?

Mr. Boutilier: I think, Mr. Speaker, that's probably one of the best questions I've heard in here today. Let me give you examples, concrete evidence of those partnerships that are going on: a joint venture between three First Nations and Enbridge on the proposed Gateway pipeline project to British Columbia, to the coast, is one example; an agreement with International Business Machines, IBM, in terms of First Nation and Métis communities who are creating opportunities with youth and education and also within small business in terms of opportunities. Of course, these are examples of a business incubator which we are working with. One final example: we're working with economic co-ordinators in the hon. member's constituency for communities in Hobbema, an economic example that we're working on as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Some of these developments are occurring on reserve, where the federal government has constitutional authority. How is the province working with the federal government to facilitate these important economic projects?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, this is so very important. I use the example in our own backyard in Fort MacKay, north of highway 63, where the highway is being twinned and being twinned very well. I want to give the example that we have just signed an innovative agreement between the province and the federal government with First Nations to commercialize land received under its treaty land claim. What this means is that the federal government have conceded that pertaining to commercialization Alberta's constitutional responsibility and Alberta regulation will apply. This is a great example of a partnership that we have with the federal government, and I think it should provide assurance to all Albertans that we're working together: government, provincial and federal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Health Issues in Fort Chipewyan

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2006 medical examiner Dr. John O'Connor publicized evidence of extremely high rates of cancer in Fort Chipewyan. Residents there are 583 times more likely to have bile duct cancer than the population at large. More than 18 months have passed since this information was in the media. This community is still waiting for action. One big problem is that the 1,200 residents of Fort Chipewyan are not as important to this government as the big oil companies that contributed to their Conservative Party election funds. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why has the government failed the people of Fort Chipewyan by continuing to do absolutely nothing but produce questionable reports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That question is so inflammatory and so wrong. In fact, we've discussed this matter in the House a number of times. I've indicated each time that we took the allegations of Dr. O'Connor very, very seriously, and we investigated. We asked Dr. O'Connor for the evidence behind his suppositions, and he didn't provide it. We asked again, and he didn't provide it. We asked again, and he didn't provide it. Finally, in August of this year he provided some information but not all the information. The Cancer Board has gone back to Dr. O'Connor asking for the information, and he hasn't provided it. In the meantime the Cancer Board and Alberta Health have reviewed all the deaths in Fort McMurray, a hundred per cent of the deaths in Fort McMurray, to determine whether there's a higher rate of cancer there or not, and it found that it's not a higher rate of cancer.

2:10

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Environment. There is no dispute that arsenic is a known carcinogen and that arsenic levels in the environment are compounded by industrial processes and industrial development, which has skyrocketed in the Fort McMurray region. A recent report found high levels of arsenic in the food chain in the Fort Chipewyan area, but with only two environmental compliance officers in the whole region almost nothing gets reported independently. Why has this ministry endangered the lives of thousands of people downstream by engaging in unreliable self-reporting systems?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's quite the contrary. There is ongoing testing of all toxins throughout the region, and they are not just related to self-reporting. There are a number of different organizations that work along with Alberta Environment. There are literally thousands of tests done every year. The member is correct: there is evidence of arsenic, but there is naturally occurring arsenic in the area. It is directly the reason why there's economic development, and the reason is because there are arsenic and other contaminants that are associated with oil sands that occur naturally in that part of the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eighteen months ago we knew that Fort Chipewyan residents are very much more likely to contract bile duct cancer than counterparts in other parts of the province. My next question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. How can you ignore the findings that show that this specific group of people is adversely impacted in larger proportions than Albertans elsewhere in the province? How can you justify putting big oil's profits before the well-being of people living in your constituency?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'm not quite sure what the hon. member is smoking, but I want to say this. The research that was made reference to: first of all, it was indicated that independent researchers out of Ottawa have indicated that the research that is being done by the independent general practitioner was not proper or protocol research that was done, yet Alberta Health has moved forward in a very prudent and responsible and measured way relative to the residents in Fort Chipewyan, which is of course the oldest settlement in all of Alberta. I might add that we are taking prudent action, contrary to what is really unresearched information by the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Agricultural Assistance

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Amidst all the oil and gas prosperity the farmers who feed us have been dealing with economic hardships. One concern is that they're not getting fair compensation for the petroleum wells and pipelines on their land. They're also left to clean up the land after poor land reclamation by the companies. Rural counties have been fighting to get this on the government's agenda. To the minister of agriculture: why is the government not listening to the concerns of the landowners, and how are they working to resolve this particular issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think, probably, to say that we don't listen to the concerns of agriculture is a bit of a stretch at the best. In this particular instance, of course, the Surface Rights Board is not under my purview, but any time they have concerns, they can go to the FAO, and they will give them some guidance about where they might want to go when they have their problems.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, money is not the only thing that is needed to solve this crisis. Structural resources are needed to help our farmers. In 2002 your government closed regional agricultural offices, which provided important support and advice to these farmers. Again to the minister of agriculture: in this time of crisis for farmers why have there been so many quick fixes instead of addressing the long-term sustainability of Alberta's family farms?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, it would be, probably, helpful if the hon. member would describe what she means by quick fixes, but I suspect that she may be talking about some of the programs that we help the agriculture industry with, so we're certainly out there when we can and however we can do it.

The talk about agriculture offices: in this day and age of IT abilities I think probably we've got that covered off very well. I have very, very few questions or concerns about that, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Cow-calf producers around my constituency are very worried about their futures. I received a call today from a cow-calf producer who is concerned that government programs are not reaching all the farmers and the meat producers. Further, the Auditor General also noted in his annual report that there are significant problems with aid delivery. Again to the minister of agriculture: why is the government failing to properly monitor and administer its support programs, whether they are alone or in conjunction with the federal government?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, certainly there are concerns out there, and there's bleeding, and there's hurt very much in the red meat industry right now. But to say that we're not there is not quite true when we've just come out with a $165 million program for the red meat producers out there. This is strictly a transition program. We've charged these people to come back with a long-term plan, with which we will once again assist them on delivery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Emergency Management Agency's programs respond to emergencies in Alberta communities when the need arises for its disaster recovery programs. I know that the residents are very grateful for the funding that they receive in these circumstances. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Can the minister tell us what the province is doing to prepare for future disasters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. Financial services is one of the primary issues that this government deals with; in fact, this last year approximately $50 million in support. The main focus of emergency management is co-ordination, co-ordination between the first responders, firefighters, different agencies, volunteers, municipalities, ministries, and of course the federal government. Also, education is a primary focus of our ministry in looking at how we can handle disasters in a better way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final and only supplemental is for the same minister. Mr. Minister, responding to these emergencies is a large undertaking that goes way beyond this agency's mandate and abilities. How is the response co-ordinated with other government departments?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have a working group that works with the Sol Gen, with Transportation, with different agencies, Environment, SRD, looking at mitigation, working with the federal government to try to mitigate some of the effects of flooding, of disasters so that we are better prepared, making sure that we have a warning system that is not only top of the line but has the advancement to be able to warn people in case of tornadoes or severe storms.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago the Premier said that he could not see any examples of where this province has been shortchanged. A $500 million decrease in the value of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund since March certainly sounds like shortchanging to me, and I'm going to guess that most Albertans would agree. To the Minister of Finance: in this time of prosperity in Alberta how can you possibly justify losing half a billion dollars in the heritage fund when this province records multibillion dollar surpluses?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I would have to ask the hon. member if he's kidding in that question. We've seen the Canadian dollar go up from 84 cents in February to $1.10 at one point in time and now settling back in essentially the $1.01, $1.02 range. We've seen a huge amount of tumultuous times in the market in the past six or eight months. Five hundred million dollars is certainly a huge loss in the value, but I will suggest to the hon. member that he also take a look at the amount of income coming in from the heritage fund. You actually see an increase of about $125 million from Budget 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to remind everybody that they take all of the income from the heritage savings trust fund and put it into general revenue. There is a dark side to Alberta's boom, and it comes in the form of this government's fiscal mismanagement. Edmonton leads the country with the highest inflation rate, house prices are soaring, 64,000 kids in the province living below the poverty line: that's what the future holds, and people are becoming anxious. To the Minister of Finance: when, when will you ease the anxiety of Albertans, take advantage of the prosperity that we're experiencing, and commit 30 per cent of resource revenues into the heritage savings trust fund?

2:20

Dr. Oberg: A couple of things. First of all, Mr. Speaker, each and every year, as the hon. member knows and realizes, we do inflation-proof the fund. This year alone there was $400 million that was put back into the heritage fund, which is a significant amount. On top of that we have another $1.3 billion that has gone into the heritage fund this year. Certainly, there are significant issues when it comes to people who are not earning the amount of money. Currently in Alberta, though, as the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry noted, a family of four making $38,200 does not pay any income tax to the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In July of this year the Finance minister stated that he wanted to see the heritage fund double in size in five years and hit $50 billion in the next decade. At the rate we're going, it's going to take 16 years just to double the size of the fund. Every day we wait is another day of lost opportunity. To the Minister of Finance: can you explain to Albertans how you plan to more than triple the heritage fund when your government continues to drag its feet by postponing the decision-making? When are we going to start saving this money?

Dr. Oberg: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I will say that unfortunately the hon. member does not necessarily know exactly what he is talking about. Currently, today, in the province of Alberta we have very close to $36 billion in savings, $36 billion in savings. Do we need to increase savings? Yes. I think it's a very laudable cause to increase savings and will provide security in the future, but what is actually happening today is that we have a committee that is taking a look at this exact question. Theoretically, we'll be submitting this report within the next two weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I am a fan of savings. I think it's great. I think it's savings for the future, and certainly you will be seeing more savings from this government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 82 questions and responses today. We'll now return to the Routine.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. the Premier I'm pleased to rise today to table the 2007 annual report for Alberta's Promise. In it are success stories from some of the more than 1,100 partnerships Alberta Promise helped to develop. Alberta Promise partnerships understand the need to invest in Alberta's future. As the annual report shows, these organizations, communities, and individuals have invested a total of $139 million since Alberta's Promise was first established five years ago. Children and youth feel the impact of that investment and are being given more opportunities to grow into happy, healthy adults. As the province's future leaders and shapers their growth and development means building an Alberta with continued prosperity. The report is also available at www.albertaspromise.org. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two sets of tablings today. The first from Pauline Alakija, who is actually a physician working in Calgary who is writing to me with her grave concerns over the current proposals in Bill 41 giving the Minister of Health and Wellness power over the College of Physicians and Surgeons and other self-regulatory agencies.

The second tabling is actually a series of tablings, Mr. Speaker. I have letters from constituents Sidney George Langston, Charles Foster, Philip Allan Judge, Daniel Corriveau, Jason Galarneau, Al Southwell, Allan Mullholland, Brian Raymer, Michel Parisien, and Jake Armstrong, all of them with serious concerns about Alberta's current labour laws and asking for changes. I'll highlight today "one labour law for all unionized workers, so that Alberta labour law would treat all working people the same."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is on behalf of a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Mr. Bernie Douglas, who is writing to my office expressing his strong view that "Alberta's labour laws require major changes to encourage fairness to all working people in Alberta."

The second letter that I have is from Mr. Orest Yakimishyn. He is also requesting that there be at least five significant changes to the labour laws in Alberta.

The third tabling is also from a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Mr. George Jurak, who is expressing his concern about the Alberta labour law and what he would like to see to have it changed.

My last tabling. It's a flyer, Mr. Speaker, called Kill Bill 46 Rally, which is going to occur tomorrow at noon sharp, Tuesday, November 27, on the steps here at the Alberta Legislative Building. This flyer is a what, when, where, why, and who.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of my letter and the cheque dated August 17 to the Coaldale food bank society. As per my pledge of April 2 half of my MLA indexed pay raise, $146.25, is donated monthly to a food bank until AISH is similarly increased and indexed. The Coaldale food bank has 15 volunteers and helps 300 to 400 families yearly and is co-ordinated by Mr. Vaughn Caldwell.

My second tabling is five copies of a letter from a constituent, Doreen Brazier, in which she expresses her fear that if Bill 46 is passed, it will be at the expense of the basic democratic rights of the people and that for a bill to be retroactive is further infringement on those rights.

My third tabling I will table five copies of a letter from Marion Ellerman, who states that for some who need care, the change from long-term care to assisted daily living has been a huge mistake. People are needlessly suffering.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. One is a set of documents outlining the recommendations regarding the northeast Edmonton study area to the executive committee of the city of Edmonton. That looks to soil maps as smart investment and looking to get some of the value-added opportunities for northeast Edmonton.

The second is the program for local 955 of the operating engineers' 20-, 30-, 40-, and 50-year award recipients. There were over 200 this year. One of those of that 450,000 member organization was N. Budd Coutts, who rose to the secretary-treasurer position. He is from Stony Plain, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings, and they have come from my constituents. They are Aylene Reynolds, Susan Lumley, Gayla Boake, Diana Rickard, Parminder Singh Pannu. They are all concerned about Alberta labour laws and strongly believe in "major changes to encourage fairness to all working people," strongly urging this government to implement and support changes to our province's antiquated and unfair labour laws and "bring Alberta labour laws into the 21st Century."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters that I have received from 200 of my constituents, calling for changing Alberta's labour laws. The letters express strong support for such changes as first contract arbitration, full legal recognition of bargaining rights, and one organizing law for all unionized workers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter I received from Joyce and Edward Tona, concerned parents of a child who has been a developmental client of Michener Centre in Red Deer. While they feel their daughter has received excellent care at the centre, their concerns are with the PDD board, that they believe seems more interested in moving the clients into group homes than in building on the success of the Michener Centre.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter written by Jenny Hoops on behalf of Parents for Quality Child Care. The letter was written to the Minister of Children's Services, and in it she notes:

We applaud your continued efforts to improve the quality of child care in Alberta, however imposing higher standards without provincial or federal funding will likely cause availability to decline, worsening an already critical situation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, during Oral Question Period today a point of order was raised. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again during an exchange between the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition during the beginning questions in question period today, the Premier indicated that the Official Opposition of Alberta had failed to produce a policy on the royalty review. Citing 23(h), 23(i), 23(j), Beauchesne 484(3), I think it's unbecoming for the Premier to pay so little attention to the briefing by his staff, or perhaps this is just stubbornness about not paying attention to tabled documents.

Essentially, this point of order was raised exactly the same 11 days ago, on the 15th of November. The documents have been tabled. The Premier under 23(h) is making an allegation that the opposition has no policy on this royalty review. In fact, on November 15 I tabled all those documents. They exist as sessional papers 789/2007, 790/2007, 791/2007, 792/2007, and 793/2007.

I'll even note that during the exchange on November 11, the Minister of Energy got into it and pointed out that he had asked the Official Opposition to express our opinion with respect to a royalty review. Two of the documents that I tabled on that day, Mr. Speaker, were in fact copies of the presentation that our shadow minister for Energy had made to that very same royalty review in response to the invitation from the Minister of Energy. We have repeatedly tabled that presentation to the royalty review itself as proof that we were there. We've tabled media releases and copies of two public speeches that were made prior, in fact, to when the government's response was released.

The Premier has spoken contrary to the fact and is continuing to do so. In doing that, under 23(l) he is creating a disorder. Under 484(3) the documents have been requested and have been tabled, Mr. Speaker. To continue to make statements otherwise is, I believe, to take Beauchesne's 494 off the table as a defence.

The Liberal policy on the royalty review is public. It is tabled. This point of order has been made before. I don't know why the Premier insists on repeating this. I hope that he listens to his staff, but clearly he's not willing to or not willing to pay attention to the documents that have been tabled in the House.

I would ask that the Premier withdraw the remarks today and to please not repeat them again because they are flat out inaccurate. To continue to do so knowingly, Mr. Speaker, would certainly make me question why he continues to do that. I think he starts to move into a different area entirely.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pile of paper, whether tabled as sessional documents or not, does not necessarily a policy make. As you pointed out in your ruling on this very same point of order a number of days ago, there are differences of opinion, and those differences of opinion happen all the time.

In fact, if the hon. member raising the point of order wishes to rule out or have a point of order on any misstatement or any difference of viewpoint raised by hon. members during question period in their first 45 seconds, when they harassed a minister of the government, saying, “You don’t have a policy in this,” or “Why don’t you care” when you do care – as my hon. colleague from Peace River indicated to me just now, that’s entirely a difference of opinion, a viewpoint, and has nothing to do with the fact.

The fact of whether there’s a policy or not is entirely in the eye of the beholder. What the Premier has referred to a number of times in this House and I think is irrefutable, actually, is that back in 2004 there was an election, and there was no evidence then and I don’t believe now – and I say it’s not policy; it’s a question of evidence – that the Leader of the Official Opposition or the opposition at all spoke about the need for a royalty review. There’s no evidence that I’ve been able to discern – and I have it on reliable authority from others who have taken the time to look – that the Leader of the Opposition spoke between that time and earlier this year with respect to the need for a royalty review.

In fact, it was this Premier, this leader of the party that now is in government, his initiative which brought forward the royalty review. He first spoke about it during the leadership process a year ago and then followed through on the commitment that he made earlier this year, at which time the position of the Official Opposition, it would seem – and I stand to be corrected – was that the royalty panel that was appointed was not going to be able to do the job because it was somehow bitter and twisted.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that when the Premier was referring this afternoon – and I don’t have the Blues in front of me – he clearly was making a statement of opinion. It’s not something that he needs to be asked to withdraw. His opinion is his opinion and, in fact, probably is shared by most government members of the House, that the Liberals have no policy in this area. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. Official Opposition House Leader, in response to your last question, which was, “Mr. Speaker, how long will this go on?” that will depend entirely on the members. As long as the members want to raise questions with preambles and give answers that respond in kind and pretty much test the line in terms of debate all the time, it’s going to go on forever. This is not going to stop. Without any doubt one of the privileges that members have in this House is to express positions that they believe in. Whether or not other members agree with them is secondary to the fact that they have an opportunity to make a statement.

Oftentimes I’ve sat here and I’ve listened to members saying: the government doesn’t know what it’s doing. Then a government minister gets up and says: oh, yes, we do know what we’re doing. That’s part of the debate. So if somebody says, “We have a policy,” and somebody else says, “No, you don’t have a policy,” that’s part of the whole problem of the exchange in the debate with respect to this. You know, we’re governed basically by Beauchesne, paragraph 494, which is relevant. It basically says that statements by members respecting themselves and within their own knowledge must be accepted. Oftentimes we will have a difference of opinion with respect to that, and oftentimes we’ll have to deal with two versions of the same thing and accept both of them.

There’s one last point that I do want to raise with respect to this, and that is a quote from Rules of Order and Decorum, page 541: “A Member may not direct remarks to the House or engage in debate by raising a matter under the guise of a point of order.” In essence, what we’ve got here is another extension of an opportunity to continue debate and clarification under the guise of a point of order. The statement that was made by the Premier at this point:

Mr. Speaker, his plan for infrastructure in this province is probably similar to the position they took on the royalty framework, which is zip. They don’t know where they are. It must get pretty difficult sitting on the fence all the time.

The chair is absolutely, totally neutral on the words involved, but the chair recognizes that if one looks at other questions and looks at other responses, this is not abnormal at all. It’s part of the ongoing debate, where “That minister is doing a lousy job,” and then the minister gets up and says, “Well, I’m doing a wonderful job” and proves it. I don’t know how you deal with this. As long as we have our preambles and as long as we have other statements and we’re always on the edge of this, this is going to continue forever.

There’s no point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we’ll call the committee to order.

Bill 212 Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Hon. members, we are currently dealing with an amendment, amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking to A1 of Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, I had an opportunity to present to the task force that toured the province. I had an opportunity to present at the University of Calgary and then at sort of a follow-up in northeast Calgary, and at the follow-up in northeast Calgary a number of the suggestions I had made were in evidence by virtue of the Hobbema cadets.

The Hobbema cadets showed what positive interaction can take place when students and youth are involved in proactive, preventative measures. The members of the Hobbema cadets were trained by an RCMP individual, and they had such pride not only in their discipline but in their uniforms, and they were very supportive of each other. The precision with which they went through their parade and drills showed the type of pride that young people experience when adults take into account their willingness to do things right. As a teacher for 34 years I have seen the value of preventative and proactive programs such as school resource officers, and that's why in amendment A1 the notion of being proactive and preventative is so very important.

In order to achieve safer communities and neighbourhoods such as Bill 212 purports and amendment A1 attests to, we have to deal with problems of the cause of crime. These problems include such things as food insecurity. I noted that 85 per cent of families that are receiving benefits from the province, whether those benefits are through AISH or PDD or community living or through welfare, are more likely to experience food insecurity. If they can't receive the food in supportive, subsidized fashion, then they're forced to look otherwise, and sometimes crimes occur out of desperation, when food is shoplifted.

Poverty affects a growing number of individuals. Amendment A1 of Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, takes into account that factors such as poverty, such as homelessness are ever present in our province despite its boom circumstance. As I've noted before, so many of the factors that we are experiencing now are more likely to be experienced during a depression than in a boom time.

We know, for example, that one of the contributing factors to crime is illiteracy. Unfortunately, 40 per cent of Albertans in the workforce are workplace illiterate. That lack of literacy shows up in a large proportion in our jail system. We have an awful lot of individuals who are incarcerated who are drug dependent, who suffer from infant fetal alcohol syndrome, which is carried through their lives.

As a teacher I have noted the disenfranchisement, the lack of connection with ESL students, 75 per cent of whom fail to complete their high school education within a three- or four-year period. We know that, unfortunately, there are a number of young immigrants who get drawn into the gangs because they're not receiving the support that Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, purports to provide.

So in speaking in favour of amendment A1, it is important that in trying to achieve safer communities and neighbourhoods, youth and support for youth and parents of youth be taken into account. If we want to prevent crime in the future, we have to deal with the problems of poverty, food insecurity, illiteracy, that are, unfortunately, ever current in the present.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I also rise to speak in favour of amendment A1 of the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act and to add my views to my hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity with regard to the root causes that this bill purports to address. I know from experience and working with the not-for-profit sector, as my colleague knows from his experience working in the education sector, that these root causes are and should be of concern to Albertans, particularly in this day and age with the economic climate that we face and the growing gap between the well-to-do and the not well-to-do in this province. It's like a magnifying glass that these boom times provide for us on all of that and all of those issues and all those items that are out there in our communities, and we need to be aware of them.

I know from speaking with people in the not-for-profit sector, with the Elizabeth Fry Society and the Calgary John Howard Society, for example, and other organizations that attempt to address these concerns, that we do need to address these in bills such as Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, and particularly with regard to amendment A1.

Illiteracy is something that, again, is recognized by people who are involved in the education system, recognizing that there are people seeing it, particularly those trying to get a foothold in the workforce and how difficult that is. Of course, we're all pleased when those people have the courage to bring those issues forward. It's an issue that people want to often see . . .

Ms Evans: I am sorry, but am I to understand that the hon. member's microphone might not be working?

The Deputy Chair: To the people who are managing the microphone system, it appears that we have low volume on this particular mike, if that can be attended to, please.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Cheffins: Okay. I'll try to raise my voice a little bit for the sake of the members in the Assembly.

As I mentioned, I do wish to raise my voice also in conjunction with my colleague from Calgary-Varsity with regard to the roots of crime and the need to address those in Alberta. My colleagues mentioned literacy and the attempts, that we need to address those through the education system, and mental health issues. Again, in the not-for-profit sector, where I have experience, we're very well aware of the number of people who are incarcerated who suffer from mental health issues. We need to address those. Hopefully, we'll be able to come to some of those through Bill 212 and this amendment A1.

My colleagues also mentioned poverty concerns in this province. Again, what I was trying to say, and perhaps what I need to speak up a little bit more about, perhaps what we all need to speak up a little bit more about, is the growing gap between the well-to-do and those who aren't well-to-do in this province and how that gap is magnified in times of a boom. We need to address those issues because food issues are of concern, the percentage of crimes that are committed that have to do with people trying to find some desperate way to be able to address their basic needs.

Just one issue I'd like to raise in conjunction with this is what it is that I hear from the Elizabeth Fry Society, and that has to do with the percentage of crimes that are committed by females in this province and have to do with trying to provide basic needs for themselves and their families. Frankly, this is a travesty in a province with the resources that we have. It should be a concern to all Albertans that people are falling through the cracks here in Alberta.

Again, I rise in support of Bill 212 and encourage this Assembly to consider addressing those issues in whatever manner possible, including through amendment A1. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by St. Albert.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and contribute to the Committee of the Whole debate for Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I'd like to start by commending the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing this legislation forward. I certainly believe that the possibility of changed safety levels in our communities for the better is definitely inherent in this bill.

I'd like to speak to that, the intent of the bill, and the amendment proposed for it. Generally, the aim of the bill is to make Alberta's communities safer by decreasing the prevalence of hazardous and disruptive activities within our neighbourhoods. The proposed act would accomplish this by empowering community members who observe events which negatively impact on their health or security. The situations that one should report are occurring are outlined in section 3 of the bill. Perhaps we can all agree that having an informed citizenry contributing directly to the safety of communities, as outlined in this section, is arguably the best method of crime reduction and prevention.

The bill also provides an additional avenue for community members, no matter where they live, to make a complaint to a special law enforcement agency. They can do so if their neighbourhood is adversely affected by activities on a property in a community.

I'd like to add briefly that proposed amendments B, J, and Q all enhance the intent of this bill. They do so by making it possible to include all mobile homes, even those on rented lots, under the scope of this bill. This would be a commendable change as it reinforces the fact that Bill 212 is aimed at the safety of all communities in Alberta: urban and rural, north and south.

Mr. Chairman, the enforcement agency under Bill 212 is different from the current resources available because it would be dedicated to the investigation of specified disruptive behaviour. Therefore, it would have the capacity to perform larger, in-depth investigations into citizens' concerns.

The information needed for these investigations must be made available while respecting the rights of the person being investigated. Proposed amendment F solidifies these aspects of the bill and would go a long way in ensuring that both sides of the equation are addressed appropriately.

This is also a different type of legislation because it targets behaviours on public and private properties. This proposed act places attention on the property that facilitates the questionable behaviour whereas the current focus is frequently placed on the individual and the crime. Under this bill, however, individuals who engage in dangerous activities in a private residence could be evicted from the residence if they rent or be barred from the property for a period of time if they own it. In any event the property could be closed over a certain time frame specified by the Court of Queen's Bench. By supporting amendments C and H, for example, we can ensure these caveats or interests that are placed on the property's land title will be appropriately assigned and in line with Alberta's legal and land systems.

The idea behind the bill is twofold. First, it gives residents an increased role by providing them with access to the resources needed to end activities which adversely affect their quality of life. Second, by closing the property where these activities are occurring, all individuals involved are basically removed from the community. Their ability to conduct the activity would be curtailed because they would simply not have a location to do it in.

Bill 212 makes a link between property and dangerous activity. Inherent in this legislation, Mr. Chairman, is the assumption that by taking away a person's access to their property, we can impair their ability to commit unwanted acts. I think that committing a crime or a nuisance act is more than just a matter of personal choice. Even if someone willfully chooses to engage in an activity that could cause harm to others, an appropriate environment is also needed. If a criminal knows he or she may be caught and lose their residence, they may not follow through after all. I think that poor intentions can in some cases be rectified when opportunity is taken away and more consequences are put in line.

The Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act goes further than that, Mr. Chairman. Once a legitimate complaint is received, the wrongdoers are given a chance to clean up their act before the property is targeted. After a complaint or a concern from a community member is received, the agency has the option to approach the situation in a variety of community-based ways. For example, as per section 4(1)(c) a warning letter may be sent to the owner of the property or its occupant. The letter could go a long way in informing the landlord of what's happening on the property, and perhaps after receiving that kind of information, the landlord could and would take action to eliminate the problem-causing behaviour.

Furthermore, the agency can try to resolve the complaint by agreement or informal action as outlined in section 4(1)(d). This is where the idea of a community-based approach may help the situation before it gets exacerbated. In some cases the disruptive activities can be solved by calling for further involvement from a parent. In many situations a warning can address the problem when a disruptive behaviour is in its initial stage.

In other jurisdictions, Mr. Chairman, this approach has worked very successfully. It's been found that individuals who are just heading off the track usually get scared straight with this type of warning. The problem is identified and addressed before it turns into a larger issue. This proposed act is effective at preventing activity because it rectifies the situation before it has the chance to get worse. It is more preventative than some other legislation. It sends the message that this kind of behaviour is not acceptable, is not wanted in our neighbourhoods, and that wrongdoers can't get away with it, because the whole community is alert and engaged.

Activities can be dissuaded with avenues other than the criminal justice system. There is no question of actions that are still to be dealt with under the Criminal Code, but Bill 212 attempts to resolve issues before they need to be dealt with through the Criminal Code.

Mr. Chairman, part 2 of Bill 212 aims to implement a process by which dangerous and excessive fortifications on a property can be forcibly removed. The rationale behind this provision is that excessive fortifications are associated with increased levels of dangerous activity. There are very few legitimate reasons why homes in our communities require bulletproof windows or metal cladding on their exteriors. It's my belief that if these fortified buildings are allowed in our communities, they may pose a threat to the safety of others in our communities by endangering the lives of police officers and emergency response workers amongst others.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to digress just a little and comment on a few style and grammar changes included in the amendments that are before the committee. Much like the fortified properties this bill seeks out to avoid future danger to the community, errors in language can cause problems down the road for legislation, and many of the amendments brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays clear up some of these linguistic issues. The proposed amendments given as D and P clear up style inconsistencies, amendment G is a grammatical revision, it appears that amendments N and O are simply correcting cross-referencing errors, the amendment listed as R is reflecting a terminology change, and all of these proposed amendments will help this legislation in the long run.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I want to reiterate my admiration for the intent of the member. The safety of all Alberta communities is of paramount importance to me and, I'm sure, for all members. I ask my colleagues to lend support to this bill and the proposed amendments as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also would like to support this document as worthy and compliment the member from Calgary for doing a job on this. He talks about one of the highlights of the bill. Looking at it, it promotes community safety by providing a mechanism for the government of Alberta to respond to public complaints about property.

I would like to take the word "property" out and use the words "community issues relative to crime" that are faced in the particular neighbourhood. For example, it would be worth while considering if I could lobby with the member to put functions such as property under the function of the safer communities and neighbourhood committee: say, in St. Albert put the property matter in there – curfews, drugs, community policing, youth – so that the function could be identified throughout the community as all under that particular heading, and people would be less confused and know where to go for one-stop shopping relative to their concerns.

Now, obviously, if you set this up with a board like an FCSS board, you would have to have some incentive funding. I think it would be worth pursuing that, broadening your scope from a property to a larger number of matters that are under the umbrella of crime. I think there would be some merit in doing that. I think this has a lot of merit.

One of the things that I would even put under a committee of this type is community policing. It's interesting that in my particular part of St. Albert where I have an office, the main core of St. Albert, I have obviously not seen a policeman over the last three years visit our office. I see them going by in police cars and stopping me on the highway once in a while. I'm suggesting to you that I think under a safer communities and neighbourhood structure you would get some co-ordination of this service. That's where I'd like to see this broaden up from just a property aspect to a more total picture of the crime issues in a particular community, and I think it would have a lot of merit.

I want to emphasize that I do support this. I think it has a lot of merit. I think with a few changes it would even make it more worth while for communities such as ours in St. Albert to follow this through and follow the model of the FCSS board in making this effective. It would cost them money, yes, to set it up, but I think it would be worthy, and it has a lot of possibilities.

I'll stop with that, Mr. Chair, and thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, we have about four minutes.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise again and speak during Committee of the Whole for Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I would like to take some time to address the various points which were brought up in the debate up to this point.

The hon. members for Edmonton-Mill Woods and Lethbridge-East asked for more information about who exactly the individual acting as a director would be. As was stated during the second reading debate, the director plays a significant role in the execution of the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. The director or the individual acting as director must deal with and initiate many of the mechanisms set out under Bill 212. This includes receiving and acting on complaints from Albertans, collecting information, applying for and serving community safety orders, closing properties, registering caveats based on a community safety order, and at times asking residents to vacate properties.

Under the Police Act the director of law enforcement has a number of important responsibilities. Among many other duties the director is mandated to monitor police services to ensure that adequate and effective policing is maintained throughout the province. Furthermore, this individual develops and promotes crime prevention and restorative justice programs and works to enhance professional practices, standards, and training for police services.

Amendment A will allow the director of law enforcement to delegate the day-to-day operational and administrative functions to a qualified member of the department under the purview of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. This will provide the most effective use of staff to ensure that front-line resources assigned to this important initiative are responding to the needs of Alberta's communities.

Mr. Chairman, the Member for Lethbridge-East also wanted further clarification on how local police services would interact with the agencies proposed by Bill 212. As I explained previously, in other jurisdictions these two agencies are distinct but work co-operatively. For example, as of October 31, 2007, Nova Scotia's public safety investigation section had 37 active and ongoing investigations throughout the province and had completed 68 investigations since it became operational in April 2007. Thirteen of those investigations were concluded through co-operation with other Nova Scotia agencies. In those cases the public safety investigation section responded to requests from police services for technical assistance.

More specifically, in October 2007 the public safety investigation section teamed up with the members of the Cape Breton regional police for the investigation of a property. At the beginning of that month the police conducted a warrant search of the property and seized marijuana, hashish, LSD, and other drugs. The tenant of the property was charged with drug trafficking and firearms offences as a result of the police investigation.

The Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act investigation established that illegal drug activities taking place at or near this property were having an adverse effect on this particular neighbourhood. The problem tenant was subsequently issued a Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act notice to vacate the premise. By the end of the month the tenant voluntarily complied and vacated the premise.

Fostering strong working relationships and partnerships with other law enforcement agencies is a strategic priority for other jurisdictions' safer communities and neighbourhood agencies. They provide both investigative and technical resources to a growing number of police agencies while maintaining a focus on their specified public safety mandate. Clearly, there are open communication lines between both agencies to ensure that safer communities and neighbourhoods investigators do not interfere with the investigations already in progress by police.

Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would also like to respond to the concerned voice by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona regarding the Privacy Commissioner's news release on November 7, 2007. The information the Privacy Commissioner stated that overriding the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act in Bill 212 is not necessary. Because it is imperative that a complainant's personal information remain absolutely confidential during this process, Bill 212 contains a provision which states that the identity of the complainant is to be confidential and cannot be disclosed without the written consent of the person in question.

Please allow me to clarify why this is the case. Section 30(2) ensures that the complainant's privacy rights are clearly established. Having all of the privacy expectations actually within the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act provides for the direct protection of privacy. This section simplifies any possible confusion about complainants' privacy. Bill 212 was fuelled by the observations of Albertans, their privacy of the utmost importance.

Healthy Futures Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am thrilled and pleased to be able to move second reading of Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act.

I've been in this Assembly for 11 years – this is my 11th fall sitting – and I'm trying to remember if I've ever actually managed to get a bill into debate. This could be my first time, so I really am delighted. Thank you.

This bill has excellent genealogy. It, in fact, comes directly flowing from the famous red book put out by the Liberal opposition, which is our plan for public health care called Creating a Healthy Future, made famous in this Assembly by the previous Premier, who made it into an airborne missive and had to withdraw that and apologize for it.

I can refer people to page 23 of that document for anyone that would like to read further the policy document that we produced that has resulted now in Bill 214. This is our policy position number one, which is to "require major policies and funding decisions to undergo 'Health Impact Assessments'." Essentially, many of the important factors in determining our health really have very little to do with the health care system, but they have an awful lot to do with lifestyle choices, injury prevention, the environment, et cetera. That is what we are trying to capture in this bill, that the government would adopt a policy of doing health impact assessments when they were considering either licensing or giving approval for large projects or looking at funding large projects.

I don't have to think very hard to come up with a number of situations that we are looking at in Alberta where a health impact assessment could be put into play, I think for very good effect; for example, the situation that we have in Fort McMurray and north of Fort McMurray and the situation soon to come in Strathcona county with the upgraders, what they call Upgrader Alley. Even a little further east from there is the new coal mine that's being opened up in the Dodds/Round Hill area. Or even I'm thinking back to the work that I did around the Turner Valley gas plant and trying to make that into a historical public heritage site and the problems they've had there with the ongoing leakage from the plant into nearby water sources and trying to test for that and get to the bottom of it. So there are just a couple of ideas of where a health impact assessment would be useful to have in place to help inform our decisions.

I think there's a fairly wide range that the bill would take into consideration.

The purpose of the health assessment process is

- (a) to support the goals of prevention and sustainable development and wellness,
- (b) to create and update, in the monitoring and audit stages of assessment, a body of information about health determinants and the impact of certain activities on health,
- (c) to predict the health consequences of a proposed activity and to assess plans to mitigate any negative health impacts resulting from [that] activity, and
- (d) to provide for the involvement of the public, proponents, the Government and Government agencies in the review of [those same] proposed activities.

We're suggesting that there would be a director of assessment review put in place, who could then oversee and administer these reviews, and there would be a screening committee, as well, that worked hand in hand. Proposed activities for the director of the assessment review are: a description of the proposed activity; an analysis of the need for it; consideration of alternatives to the proposed activity; identification of potentially affected populations, including residents, workers, vulnerable populations, and other identifiable groups; an analysis of site selection; identification of existing health status of the population that might be affected; an analysis of possible effects on sociocultural well-being, et cetera. The list goes on. I encourage people to actually read the bill on this.

Certainly, one of the things that I have really come to understand as the Official Opposition shadow minister for Health and Wellness is how important those social determinants of health are. I started out by saying that a lot of the factors in determining our health really have very little to do with the health care system. Well, the social determinants of health take into consideration things like income, economic status, social equity, education, the environment, family life and community support, social stresses, job security.

I think one of the things that we find really important when we look at this policy of health impact assessments is agriculture and food production. If we're going to protect our food sources and also the farm workers that work with it, we've got to be very conscious of what we're putting into the air, the water, and the soil that they, then, have to work with. I argue all the way through this that it doesn't get us further ahead if we end up with massive development and a sick population or massive development and we've poisoned our land.

You know, I'm not saying that that's imminent, I'm not saying the sky is going to fall, but I am saying that we've reached a point where the level of our development gets larger and larger and larger. Who would have comprehended 50 years ago the kind of development that we are now looking at in Fort McMurray? Who would have contemplated work camps of 5,000 to 6,000 people, and not just one, Mr. Speaker, but many, many, many work camps with that many people in them supporting a number of different developments in that area? [interjection] Someone from across the way is saying that, oh, they knew about it 50 years ago, which frankly is making the member older than I thought he was. That was an interesting thing to learn today.

The World Health Organization supports the use of health impact assessments. From their point of view, they say that it's based on four values, and these values provide a platform from which the benefits of a health impact assessment can be derived and link health impact assessments to the policy environment in which the assessments are being undertaken: democracy, which allows people to participate in the development and implementation; equity, because it's examining the distribution of impacts from a proposal on the whole population, not just on the people that are going to expend the money or make the money but on everybody that's around it, and I think that's really important; sustainable development, which we with limited natural resources in this province really, you know, understand we need to get a handle on, but those short- and long-term impacts have to be considered for sustainable development; ethical use of evidence. I really believe in evidence-based decision-making using the best available quantitative and qualitative evidence to be identified and used in assessment.

That's coming out of the World Health Organization. Clearly we're not the only ones who are anticipating this, but the Liberal opposition issued our policy paper in 2003. That's when we came out with this recommendation. It's taken me this long to get a bill drawn to be able to actually transform that idea into what you see before you as Bill 214, but I think that those concepts that are behind this bill are very important. We are in second reading of Bill 214, so I am generally speaking about the principles of the bill, but that is what is behind it.

I've mentioned some of the places where I think it would be useful when we're just looking at current development proposals that are in front of us, like Upgrader Alley and Fort McMurray and some of those other areas. But, very quickly, when I go through and look at some of the newspaper articles that have been done around problems that have cropped up, you think we should be able to see this.

Mr. Ouellette: I was daydreaming. Sorry.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, boy. Yeah, you are. Might want to put that cellphone on vibrate.

I think this is a very exciting opportunity for this Assembly. I know a number of times in the past the government has stolen our ideas. I'm happy to have that happen with this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act. This act proposes that any major government project or legislative proposal be assessed for how it may potentially affect a myriad of factors, including income, poverty, social equity, education, environment, family life, social stress, job security, and agriculture and food production.

Mr. Speaker, one of my main concerns with this bill is that it could effectively bring the decision-making apparatus of the government and this Assembly to a grinding halt. There's a long list of government departments that are mandated to address the factors in this bill. Income, poverty, and social equity involve at the very least Finance and Service Alberta. Social equity, family life, and social stress are topics covered by Children's Services, Health and Wellness, Municipal Affairs and Housing, and Seniors and Community Supports. Our education system involves Education and Advanced Education and Technology while Environment consists of not only the Department of Environment but also Sustainable Resource Development and Energy. Agriculture and Food is obviously affected by the inclusion of agriculture and food production in this bill. This means that at the very least the operations of 13 of the government's 18 ministries, more than two-thirds, would be interrupted by this bill.

There's nothing necessarily wrong with a bill that would affect a lot of ministries, but this bill goes much too far, Mr. Speaker. The problem is not that the idea of health assessments is a bad one; it's that the mechanism this bill proposes to implement is simply unacceptable. There's no doubt there are numerous factors that contribute to human health. The question for this government is whether these factors can be studied in the manner that this bill proposes and still be timely and economical with respect to legislative decision-making.

Now, when I consider the study mechanism proposed in Bill 214, I think the clear answer to that question is no. First, the bill does not propose a mechanism that would work in a timely manner. Depending on the scope of the proposed changes or project, developing, carrying out, and analyzing the results of a study could take months or even years. In addition, making these health assessments available for public review before legislation is approved would require at least several weeks in the Legislature to ensure there is adequate time for public input. It seems that, in the end, the mechanism proposed by this bill adds unnecessary bureaucracy and duplication.

I also wonder whether the Member for Edmonton-Centre considered time constraints when Bill 214 was prepared. I think most members of this House would agree that the process to pass laws is already quite lengthy. It's hard to justify extending the process to accommodate the assessments proposed in the bill.

Second, Bill 214 does not propose a mechanism that will work in an economical manner. There have been many studies done by Health Canada, the World Health Organization, and other respected health groups to determine how health impact assessments might best be implemented. Many of these studies suggest including health impacts in the environmental assessment process, in part because there's really no need to conduct two separate assessments and pay for similar assessments twice. As MLAs we require information on a broad range of issues when we assess policies or projects. At the very least, we look at how a proposal would affect Alberta's economy, our environment, and our citizens' health. To do this, we need information on each of these concerns at once, not only information about health to the exclusion of other issues. Why assess health separately from other issues when often the concerns involved are common to all of them?

The third question I have about the mechanism proposed in Bill 214 is whether these health assessments would provide additional information that allows me and others to better make decisions. I don't believe that they would. The problem here is that assessing health effects is nowhere near as straightforward as the bill may suggest. It's very easy, for example, to develop toxicological information about the effects of a specific chemical, to say that exposure to so many parts per million has a particular effect over a certain amount of time, but even very specific information like this is difficult to use. Most people are exposed to mixtures of substances. Another related problem is that there are only risk assessments for a few effects on physical health, particularly cancer. There are few ways to assess other physical health effects or effects on psychological and social well-being.

In short, mandating the study of health effects is absolutely useless if there's no systematic and scientifically agreed upon way to conduct those studies. In some situations health assessments may be scientifically possible and legislatively advisable and worthwhile given their potential effects. In those situations I don't see anything wrong with conducting such assessments, but that's not what this bill proposes. It would have us study legislation without regard to the need for such study or the costs and time required, not to mention whether it actually produces meaningful or useful information.

For the purposes of this debate, Mr. Speaker, let's assume for a moment that all of these issues I just listed are not concerns. The question about health assessments then becomes: who's going to conduct these assessments? It's clear that they're not the sort of thing to be undertaken lightly or by a layperson. Like so many health care issues, we need health professionals to perform these studies. Yet I hardly think I need to remind anyone in this House that Alberta is looking around the world for more health professionals. Doctors, epidemiologists, and public health experts, just to name a few: they're not easy to come by within our borders or beyond. Where would we find these professionals to carry out these studies? Should we divert health professionals already working in Alberta from their current excellent efforts to carry out health impact assessments? I don't think so.

The core issue in this debate is whether the positive effects of this bill would outweigh the negative effects, resulting in better legislative decision-making. I think it's clear that the negative effects outweigh the positive, no matter whether we're discussing time or money involved or the information that these studies would produce.

Health is not the only issue that must be taken into consideration when public policy is made. To give an obvious example, as MLAs we must also consider the impact that a given measure will have on the public purse. Moreover, it's not as though our present policy-making process has failed to consider health. These processes do so with far less expense and in far less time than this bill would require.

There's simply no justification for enacting a process that would effectively halt the legislative process for at least 13 of the government's 18 ministries.

Having given careful consideration to the Healthy Futures Act, I'm opposed to the passage of the bill and I encourage my colleagues to join me in opposing it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A few comments on Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act. I certainly commend the author for the intent of what was attempted here, to establish a health assessment screening committee of each ministry, the Health Quality Council of Alberta, and an expert in preventative health. I certainly understand the reason for this. We know from just the simple things about health, you know, the hospitals, what we tend to spend most of our time on, that in the long run we really want to deal with health in a much different way. We all agree with that, or at least I hope we all agree from time to time.

I'd certainly be prepared to take a look at this health assessment screening committee, but I tend to feel it might be more of a bureaucracy. I mean, I think we know right away, but we want to get some action. When I look today, we talk about the social determinants of health care. We know, for instance, by where you live and by the amount of income coming into your family that the chances you're going to have health problems increase dramatically. We know all these things, Mr. Speaker. I think what we need is some mechanism for action. Now, if this could do that, I certainly would be quite prepared to support it. I'd have to see how it looks, not just to set up a screening device with things we know that we should be doing immediately. Maybe it would be helpful in some environmental areas, you know, where we're looking at toxins and what they might mean, Fort Chipewyan perhaps being an example of where something like this might have worked.

You know, when I look today just at poverty – and it was alluded to in this Assembly earlier on in question period – when we see that 64,000 Alberta children are impoverished and the working poor in this rich province topped the national average, well, I can tell you right there that down the way we're going to have some health problems. Rather than a screening mechanism I would like to see how we could begin to bring these kids out of poverty. Of course, they're coming from poorer families. Many of these families are working in this rich province. How do we deal with that? How do we deal with the minimum wage and all the things that we need to do, Mr. Speaker? How do we deal with housing? All these are the issues that we need to deal with immediately. I don't think in this case that we need a screening device to know that we have to do some things to deal with poverty. It's self-evident. The evidence is clear that, again, depending on where you live and what your income is, chances are that you're going to have problems with the health care system in the future. That's self-evident. So what are we doing to start to eliminate poverty?

It reminds me of a 10-year plan back in 1989 to get rid of homelessness federally. We were going to end child poverty federally. It was brought in by Ed Broadbent. Now, we haven't made a dent in that, but we know that we should be dealing with that, Mr. Speaker. It's self-evident. But if there's no political will to do these things, it doesn't matter how many screening devices you have.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, certainly, it's an interesting idea. I would rather see, I guess, action in dealing with some of these issues – environment, housing, education, all the things that we know have an impact on health – and I don't think we need a screening device to do that. Now, if this could move this ahead somehow, if I could be shown that it's not just, you know, another bureaucracy that we deal with, I certainly would be open to looking at how this might work. Of course, this is very hard to explain in the bill. I understand that. But one must take a look at it and say: well, it looks a little bureaucratic on the procedure when we know some of the things that we have to move on. We have a disagreement with the government about this. They tell us, say, with housing: everything is hunky-dory; we're moving along; there aren't any problems there. Well, it doesn't matter how many screening devices. If they take that attitude in government, they're not going to move whether they have a screening device or not.

As I say, with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I really would tend to think that there might be some things that might work in this bill, like green screens, for example, especially dealing with the environment. That's probably where something like this might be of some use, which obviously leads to health problems, you know, if we don't have those types of screens. I think the member was right in saying that a lot of things 20 years ago that we took for granted and we didn't think were health problems we now know. Maybe something like this, especially in that area, might have some bearing, that we would not make those mistakes with our younger people in the future down the way. So I guess I'm prepared to take a look at it. I'm worried about the bureaucracy, but there may be some use for this in certain areas.

Thank you very much for the time.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Egmont, followed by St. Albert.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is willing to take a look at Bill 214. That's the whole point of why we're here in the Legislature.

I very much appreciate the fact that government members took a look at my Motion 511 on establishing a unified family court. To make it more palatable and potentially to make it more implementable, the amendment was changed to implement a unified family court process.

The government in its wisdom established a series of standing policy committees so that bills could receive the scrutiny of sober second, third, fourth, and fifth thought. What I am suggesting is that we have a number of opportunities. When we have the Committee of the Whole process on Bill 214, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview might wish to introduce an amendment which he feels would help to establish the clarity of the process in terms of creating the assessment. Likewise, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who believes at this point that this bill appears to have high precepts, imports, and intents. If he doesn't believe in his wisdom that it has the mechanisms necessary to actually achieve accomplishment, then I would suggest that, both in the process of Committee of the Whole or potentially as a referral. The ideas that Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act, puts forward I very strongly support and would like to see implemented. If, using the wisdom of the House as a whole, we can turn the concepts and the details into actual effect, then we'll have achieved a terrific result for Alberta.

For too long we've been flying by the seat of our pants in this province. We have taken the good fortune of the nonrenewable resources, and we've extracted them at rapid paces, which has had some negative effects. A former member of this House was very fond of expressing one of the primary laws of physics, which is that for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction. What has happened in this province is that while we've enjoyed the wealth associated with harvesting our nonrenewables – gas, oil, the bitumen from the oil sands – it comes at a cost. What Bill 214 is suggesting is that before you undertake a development, let's do a cumulative assessment of the effect that that development is going to have. Is the amount of effort, time, money, and the process going to achieve the results that were intended? Can wealth end up buying happiness, or by sacrificing a significant part of our environment, are there going to be repercussions and ramifications that highly outweigh the intent of the project?

Now, we have this wonderful asset north of Fort McMurray in terms of the oil sands, but there are limitations to the aquifers that underlie that area. There are limitations to the Athabasca River. We have, through various studies, noted that there is arsenic and there is mercury. We have known that the amount of water that is contained in the Athabasca is going down. Of course, with any of that water that gets used in the refining process, whether it be in an upgrader in the corridor in central Alberta or whether it be in the oil sands itself, we have to know what that effect is. We cannot blindly go forward. Another statement is that if we don't learn from the mistakes of the past, we're doomed to repeat them. Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act, says: hey, before we go ahead, let's think this out. I would suggest that the time taken in thinking it out is a worthy investment.

In the urban areas we are encroaching on wells that were drilled in years previous. The most significant example of that was the proposed Compton well within a kilometre of the southeast hospital. Compton argued that the chances of a blowout of that particular well given modern technology and the pilot light and that as soon as the gas is leaked, it's immediately ignited – well, the Compton individual associated with that Energy and Utilities Board hearing suggested that the chances of a well blowout were the square root of zero. Yes, that's rhetoric, and, yes, that's hyperbole. He was trying to assure the 350,000 residents in the southeast area of Calgary, one-third of our population, that there was nothing to worry about. Fortunately, through the process and through the intervention of the city of Calgary and the Calgary health region, that well site was not allowed to go ahead. It was a lengthy process, but if lives can be saved, then that has to be taken into account.

We've had examples where because of a lack of due diligence, projects were allowed to go ahead; for example, the Lynnview Ridge project in Calgary, which was built on top of an old refinery site. We've had examples of trying to build greenhouses on former oil sites, thinking that there wouldn't be any problem with doing so. We just needed the space, so put the greenhouse in that area. The effect of what was coming up from the ground, whether it be creosote along the Bow River or, as I say, chemicals in the ground: these things weren't taken into account when all these homes were built in Lynnview Ridge.

The fact that the city had surrounded the Hub Oil recycling plant wasn't really taken into account when approval was given to carry out the type of recycling work that was done. Unfortunately, two individuals lost their lives when that event took place. We have examples. Turner Valley and Black Diamond, for example, have expressed desires potentially to amalgamate, but that area is a pincushion of early development. The good folks in Turner Valley have had to redesign, redraw their plan for their water reservoir twice, at great cost to the town of Turner Valley. Initially the locations of well sites weren't taken into account, and when it turned out that there was a well site smack dab, well, not quite in the middle but towards the southeast edge of that reservoir, then a number of environmental concerns were raised.

If we don't do due diligence, if we don't realize – I'll use a teaching example. Kids who are hungry don't learn well. If we don't address the issues of poverty in connection with education, in connection with health, then we're going to pay for it to a much greater extent after the fact. If we don't try, for example, to keep individuals in their homes as long as we can by providing subsidies and supports and they end up having to be institutionalized, then we know it's going to be more expensive.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by St. Albert, followed by Stettler-Drumheller.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 214, Healthy Futures Act. We all recognize the importance of health to our quality of life. It is the personal obligation of each of us to take the initiatives to better our physical, social, and psychological well-being. I hear somebody saying over there: look at who's talking. As elected officials who make decisions that influence the health of Albertans, we acknowledge our collective responsibility to be conscious of the consequences that government policies have on people's lives in this province. I'm proud that the government of Alberta has governed with the health and well-being of Albertans at the forefront of our agenda. Our government appreciates the potential health impacts of all our policy decisions and will continue to operate with due care and diligence.

Still, we recognize that there are numerous factors which impact health, and those factors are often very complex. Therefore, a broad health impact assessment may not be able to provide an accurate analysis. For the assessments to be effective, they will have to be specific and systematic. Unfortunately, the health impact assessments that are proposed through Bill 214 would examine the effect of policies on a vast amount of factors, including the technology being used, effects on a population's sociocultural well-being, and the environment. I feel that this spectrum is too large and would ultimately provide information that may not be an accurate representation of the impact of a certain policy, procedure, or program.

I think a more beneficial example of an impact assessment would be the blood tests currently being performed by Alberta Health and Wellness. The tests are examining the blood of 30,000 Albertans to determine whether contaminants from industrial sources, food, water, and household products are entering the system. The study will provide our government with a baseline which we can then use to take appropriate action if necessary. This form of biomonitoring provides us with comprehensive information. However, with a study of this size there is the chance that additional variables could influence the results. The larger the spectrum of a study the more factors there are to consider, which can be problematic when wanting to make direct correlations of the policy's impact on health. It's difficult to precisely and accurately predict how a set of factors will interact and impact public health.

I would urge this Assembly to continue to support the assessments that are conducted in certain circumstances. It is more effective to design an assessment with a clear objective that studies a specific area. We have performed successful assessments in the past that have been done in various circumstances. An example was the April 2006 report titled Health Effects Associated with Short-term Exposure to Low Levels of Sulphur Dioxide: A Technical Review. The study focused on a small sample and a specific element and concluded that in some conditions sulphur dioxide exposure can negatively affect the respiratory system. Another example was the August 2006 report titled Wabamun and Area Community Exposure and Health Effects Assessment Program, which analyzed the effects of coal-fired power stations and oil and gas operations on the air quality and human health in Wabamun and the surrounding area.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few examples of health assessments that have been conducted under the auspices of our government. These studies all involve thorough and strategic research for a certain purpose which was then used by our government to improve Albertans' health and wellness.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I support detailed, focused assessments, and our government should continue to ensure that Albertans are consuming nutritious and safe foods and drinking clean water. Nonetheless, we can't conduct health impact assessments that try to gauge the effects of policy decisions on a wide range of factors as this bill proposes. It would be exhausting and ineffective. Even if this bill were amended to narrow its scope, I believe there are far too many determinants to assess what makes Albertans healthy or unhealthy.

As an example, take an individual who is in hospital for treatment of a concussion, and imagine if we had to analyze every aspect, every component of why their accident happened. First, we must determine why the individual has a concussion and if their concussion will pose additional risk to their health. Maybe it was because they were riding a bike in heavy traffic and were struck down by a passing vehicle. The bike rider was not wearing a helmet because they forgot it at home. Why did they forget their helmet? Well, they were in a rush to get to work since they had slept in because the individual had been up late the night before, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we can all see where I'm going with this fictional scenario. There are far too many factors and conditions that determine health. Overarching health impact assessments would have to deconstruct even more variables. The task would be endless, and the cost of administering adequate assessments would be daunting.

As a government, of course, we will continue to take into account the impact that policies and procedures have on Albertans' health and wellness. There are few, if any, decisions that are made without considering the impact on Albertans' health. After all, we have a responsibility not only to our constituents but to our families, our friends, and ourselves. We all share this province, and we all are impacted by the decisions made in this Legislature. This is why each of us has a responsibility to identify what we can do to live healthier and more active lives. I've been doing that for years, Mr. Speaker.

The government cannot be expected to manage every complex detail that may affect the health of Albertans, but what we can do is acknowledge that there are ways in which we can make improvements to our health and our quality of life. Maybe it's through organizing a recycling drive or a community choosing to walk to the corner store for groceries. They may be simple actions, but they'll have positive health outcomes that can reverberate throughout the community.

Healthy eating is essential to great health and is the key component of a person's development through life. I'm told that a healthy diet and good eating habits will contribute to reducing a person's susceptibility to chronic disease and increase their life expectancy. I've been told that and told that and told that, but you have what you have; it is what it is.

Albertans can also choose to become more active. Through physical activity a person can integrate healthy values that will guide them through their daily lives. Where have I heard that before? An active lifestyle provides many benefits. It can be done in various ways. There are hundreds of activities a person can do that are suiting to their abilities. Funny, I've heard that before, too. It seems like the abilities tend to reduce as you get older.

Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage each of us to continue to take responsibility for what we can control. If there are changes we can make to improve the quality of life here in Alberta, then let's do it. All of us have an interest in the health of Albertans as elected representatives and as individuals.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I do believe we have the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East next, followed by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today to add some comments on Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act. When I look around in society today and I see what's happening to some of the products that are coming in from China – toys, dyes, medications, clothes – many things that are coming and bringing, certainly, health risks into our country, I think we really have to look and realize that we are one huge, big neighbourhood. When we look at just one small portion of it, it truly can affect the whole system, which is why I think it's so important that we can't just take a small, little portion of Alberta, that we can't just take one small farmer's area. We have to look at how (a) it's actually going to affect his neighbours and (b) what that cumulative effect is as it spreads out like a ripple in a stream from that particular area.

We need a government policy that will undergo health impact assessments to examine the policy's effect on a wide range of factors. It will ensure that the government's decisions could potentially affect the health of Albertans, and it makes them subject to a greater scrutiny for the protection and the enhancement and the sustainability of the health of all Albertans. I think many people have said this before me, and I'm sure it'll be said again: health is great, but if you don't have your health, it really is nothing.

The EUB currently considers applications on a project-by-project basis, and it results, in my mind, in short-term decision-making. It doesn't really consider over time what those environmental or health impacts are going to be. We really don't live in isolation, and we really do live in neighbourhoods. I think that here in Alberta we hear about how independent we are and how we've pulled ourselves up by our bootstraps and that sort of attitude that we can make it on our own, that type of thing. I beg to differ with that. We've had farmers and ranchers helping each other, certainly, in the pioneer days. They've helped each other build houses. They've had barn raising. They've helped each other with their harvest when it was necessary. They shared combines. They shared horses. They shared what they had to do. No one really built this province on their own.

It isn't just this side of the table that thinks that something like this should happen. Former EUB chairman Neil McCrank commented to the Calgary Herald on March 15, '07, that we should look at the possibility of regional hearings where we examine the broader issues, the broader societal and environmental issues. It's expected that McCrank would be familiar with the flaws in the current process and see cumulative assessments as necessary as we look forward to the future. I think that when a man of his stature makes those sorts of comments, we certainly should be listening.

The oil sands development on the scale that we have in Alberta. I'm not sure how many people in this House have actually had the opportunity to take an airplane or, preferably, a helicopter, but either one, to actually fly over and see the immense tailing ponds and the total disruption of the environment in Fort McMurray. I cannot believe that anybody would have done that and just not realized that the development up there is bound to have an impact on the environment and, consequently, the health of nearby residents. I would contend that it would certainly have an impact on the entire province over time. People who live in Fort McMurray for a while may well get sick, and they may come down to southern Alberta, depending on what types of maladies they may have picked up. In fact, they'll need health care, and they've moved from one region to the other, so it does affect us all. They will be using our hospitals in southern Alberta.

The Radke report stated that there are about 3,000 oil sands lease agreements with the provincial government totalling 49,000 square kilometres. Approximately 97,000 square kilometres, or 69 per cent, of leasable oil sands are still available. That's a tremendous geographic area to have so much more development into it. We need to see where those impacts are going to be. I don't believe that there have been proper studies to this point in terms of the cumulative effect or, in fact, how far the ripples of that development affect every community and our citizens. Rapid population increases have tremendous implications not only just for the small city, that has now become a gigantic city, but for all the small areas around them. Small towns are being absorbed in many ways. They're either being absorbed by larger cities or they're actually having to deal with people who don't want to live in the large city and are moving out to the smaller areas and putting tremendous pressures on their communities.

I think we all know that there's the potential for many more upgraders on the horizon, and we really should be understanding exactly what those upgraders are going to be doing. Whenever I hear "upgraders" and I hear words like "cooling towers," I can't help thinking of Erin Brockovich. I think that the movie, needless to say, had a Hollywood spin on it. Nevertheless, this was a woman that had done tremendous work in terms of the fact that although this company believed that they weren't having any effect and that they contained their damage within their fences, it was quite well proven with a very successful court case that, in fact, that wasn't the case.

The key issues related to the amount of surface and groundwater used in the extraction process: the overall impact on the quality of surface and groundwater, levels of greenhouse gas and other air emissions, land disturbances in the size of the footprint on the land base, land reclamation, impacts on wildlife and endangered species, and population health. These are only some of the ones that I believe should be considered. In fact, it might be interesting to have three independent opinions to look at the overall effect and see where they meet in the middle.

I heard that these would be very difficult to do because there are so many different government departments involved, but I believe that if there was a good template that was quite clear with very clear criteria, it would speed up that process. Public input is always necessary. I also believe that public meetings can be set up quite easily, not barring, of course, the time that it takes to advertise for it. I think it can be done quite easily when you don't have as many organizational people putting it together. Give it to a couple of organizational people that have experience in the logistics of putting together public meetings; that could be done very, very easily. I have been exposed to all-party committees, and I've seen just how effective staff can be in getting the notes from those meetings back to you the next day. So I'm not sure that I buy that argument that it's too much work to protect the public. The health impact assessments are a very prominent part of the Alberta Liberal health policy and have been for any number of years now.

Development is crucial to Alberta's continuing economic success. I don't believe that anyone would argue with that, and certainly I wouldn't. Of course, we must always be moving forward. Of course, we must be always developing what we have been very blessed to have in this province, our natural resources. But we have to do it with the idea of sustainability, and we have to plan – we don't have to go hell-bent for leather – and go forward. The oil isn't going anywhere. The workers will always be, in the foreseeable future certainly, difficult to obtain. However, I think we all know how many temporary foreign workers are actually working in the oil sands.

The quality of public policy decision-making needs to be improved by taking the health of Albertans into consideration.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to join the debate on Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act. This bill will require that health impact assessments be conducted for any major government project or legislative proposal that may affect public health. The bill requires that the health impact assessments be available for public review before legislation is approved. It would create a third-party office called the health commissioner.

The health commissioner would be responsible for collecting and reviewing health impact assessments to assess the government's overall strategy for improving health. In Alberta there are presently no legislated requirements to conduct health impact assessments. However, other types of legislated assessments, such as an environmental impact assessment, often address health issues. Needs-based assessments are also conducted to ensure public health and safety under unique circumstances.

Our government is fully committed to ensuring that the information used in creating policies is verifiable and accurate and, as well, that those policies represent the best interests of all Albertans. As a result of this commitment, our government is continuously finding innovative methods for information gathering and establishing effective planning tools. The Cabinet Policy Committee on Community Services works with Albertans, allowing them to have input into health policies, programs, and legislation by facilitating open discussions between government and the public. This committee meets with health care professionals and various stakeholders to hear their ideas pertaining to Alberta's health system and health policies. The Cabinet Policy Committee on Community Services studies Alberta's health policy in detail, hears public submissions, and sends its recommendations to cabinet for final approval. In some cases cabinet may refer the matter to caucus for discussion to ensure that a full examination of the health policies is in place.

Furthermore, our government recently established four policy field committees to deal with matters of public importance. Each policy field committee is mandated to oversee a portfolio of government departments and agencies and is responsible for further reviewing issues related to its assigned areas. By establishing all-party policy field committees to review legislation and call on outside organizations for additional information on health issues, our government is providing for sound decision-making throughout the legislative process.

The policy field committee on community services is mandated to deal with issues of public health. A bill can be referred to this committee right after first reading, at which point the committee conducts public hearings, reports observations, and offers expert opinions to enhance the bill. By having mandated committees to deal with provincial health care issues, we as legislators are able to highlight any danger or discrepancy in a proposed policy or legislation. This process ensures that sound policy decisions are made and that Albertans' best health interests are maintained.

Aside from establishing all-party committees to ensure sound decision-making, the Alberta government has shown its commitment to continuous improvement in the area of health by creating the Health Quality Council of Alberta. This council evaluates quality improvement initiatives, identifies improvement opportunities, and reports the progress of our current health system to our government. This independent organization is legislated under the Regional Health Authorities Act and is mandated to achieve world-class excellence in all dimensions of quality and safety across Alberta's health system. It plays a key role in ensuring that objective, well-researched facts are behind policy-making decisions in our province. Given the existence and excellent work of the Health Quality Council of Alberta Bill 214's establishment of a health commissioner seems unnecessary.

Alberta is a world leader in health and wellness, and we're open to continuous improvements based on the best ideas, innovation, and the sense of shared responsibility. The Alberta government is continuously addressing the health impacts of policy decisions and effectively reviewing them to ensure that Albertans' best interests continue to be a top priority. As a result of the strong emphasis on Alberta's health and well-being, just last year the Alberta government allocated more than $30 million in funding to create seven new programs helping to put Alberta's children and youth on a path to lifelong health. These initiatives include newborn metabolic screening, a healthy weight social marketing campaign, and a wellness fund for healthy school communities. They exemplify our government's dedication and proactive approach to ensuring the health of Albertans. I believe this government is doing an excellent job of promoting sound policies which have a positive impact on the health of Albertans.

The Alberta government is not only determined to sustain and enhance the general health of its population, but we are also taking the initiative to examine areas of specialized concern in our province. By focusing on unique circumstances in certain areas of Alberta, our government is able to ensure that appropriate health laws and policies are implemented for the benefit of all Albertans. For over 10 years the government has focused on conducting assessments to examine air contaminants in various regions of Alberta containing industrial facilities. On a case-by-case basis Alberta Health and Wellness has conducted community exposure and health effects assessment programs to examine health conditions that may be related to exposure to contaminants. These types of thorough assessments provide decision-makers with knowledge of unique health concerns occurring throughout the province, thus allowing them to create policies and laws reflective of the needs of the entire population.

The government of Alberta is already recognized as a leader for having an innovative public service which provides high-quality policy analysis and advice to support elected officials. Alberta Health and Wellness works diligently to provide timely, reliable, and relevant information to ensure that key decision-makers have quality information to support them in making informed decisions and setting priorities. To further expand their reach and accessibility to health information, Alberta Health and Wellness seeks out research conducted by various organizations to ensure that high-quality information is always available.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the Alberta government already has a strong and effective policy process, which places Albertans' health and wellness at the top of its priorities. As a result, legislated health impact assessments as proposed in Bill 214 are unnecessary. Their implementation will not achieve any positive effects which are not presently realized under the current system. The proposed legislation will just create more bureaucratic channels to achieve the same results. Therefore, I'm not at all convinced that an entirely new institutionalized assessment process would aid our government in improving public health in our province, so I ask all members to vote against Bill 214.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that has happened to Alberta, it seems to me, in the last number of years is the tremendous expansion in terms of population and industrial growth, and this is I think covered in the objective of this particular bill, where it states: to ensure that government decisions that could potentially affect the health of Albertans – and this includes mental health – “are subject to the greatest scrutiny to promote the protection, enhancement and sustainability of the health of Albertans.”

I think, for example, that in my constituency of St. Albert this particular bill would enhance the way we could take on issues before they become major problems. One of the things that has impacted our community and, particularly, our quality of life is the development of road systems around St. Albert. Certainly, we appreciate the fact that we have to have a better network of roads to get us into and around St. Albert and to the city and to areas beyond St. Albert, into Morinville and Legal and Redwater and so forth. I think that if we could have had something like a health impact assessment to ascertain, for example, the communities that were going to be affected by these changes in road designation, in dealing with things like noise, the well-being of people in terms of their own emotional and economic health, making sure that it wasn't going to have the impacts on property that they feel that it has had or is going to have, dealing with making sure that their homes would not be affected by the impact of roads on their quality of life, I think the west regional road and the Anthony Henday would have been a much easier task to relate to the community and to better explain what the impacts were going to be.

Another aspect of the health assessment methodology that I'm intrigued by is that we could be doing things like, for example, what we just had in the community of St. Albert: a major award to Neil M. Ross Catholic school. This was a very impactful thing on the physical education program that I think could be assessed in terms of its benefits and transferred to all other schools in the province at the elementary level, 1 to 6. I do see this particular bill assisting us to do those things.

The other thing that I think is impacting St. Albert greatly is the whole question of upgraders and what impact that is going to have on things like air, water, rural farmland that surrounds us, and wildlife. These are all things that could be looked at ahead of the impact of upgraders to see where we are now and to see if our quality of life and our health is maintained in terms of future development.

Another area that would be very valuable in terms of our own constituency would be the whole question of – I think we have one of the best aquasize programs in all of Alberta. Not only has it helped some of us older people maintain our ability to stay healthy, but it also works very well and is helpful in the mental health area. For example, it seems to me that in utilizing Bill 214, we could take a group study of that particular project: how people are doing with it, what's happening, look at the model now and what could impact us in the future, follow it over a period of three years, then utilize that in different centres across Alberta.

I think basically I'm supporting this bill because I do believe it enhances a lot of what I call preventative measures in order to equip communities and areas where massive changes are going to take place so that they can be better prepared to handle these things in a much more healthy and sustainable manner.

I'll stop, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to speak to this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 214 as well. I'm assuming that many thousands of Albertans are already making good choices anyway of how to maintain and improve their health. Many put a lot of effort into physical activities like walking, running, biking, skiing, and hiking, to name just a few. Then, ironically, they have health issues which require corrective surgeries in later life. Many also make good lifestyle choices in other ways, like eating the right foods, following the Canada food guide, washing their hands after using the washroom – funny, they didn't listen to their mother when they were growing up – changing their underwear, drinking plenty of water each day, as well as getting enough sleep. All those sound pretty commonsensical to me. I don't know why we insist as governments in trying to legislate what's good for people when so much of it is common sense.

Every day more Albertans realize the benefits of making healthy lifestyle choices. Perhaps they're choosing to make these changes based on the advice of a doctor. Perhaps they believe the many contradictory news and so-called scientific reports about the benefits of being healthy. Maybe they choose to live well simply to feel good. Regardless of their reason for changing their lifestyle, they're making a smart choice that they feel good about. Those choices are the kind that we want to encourage.

Here in Alberta our health and wellness system is the envy of the world. Our doctors, our nurses, other health care professionals provide exemplary service for our citizens. Our facilities are state of the art and operate to the highest degree. Our medical research is world renowned for being on the cutting edge. A system of this calibre isn't free, however. In this last year's budget Health and Wellness program spending increased by $1.3 billion – over 12 per cent, Mr. Speaker – to $12 billion.

I don't know and I don't have to remind the members present here today or the general public of the many debates we've had on how to address rising health care costs. But regarding these debates, there is one point which I think most everyone would agree with. The most affordable health care is preventative. Preventative health care is, I think, what this bill intends to propose. However, what I believe the bill is actually proposing is a Liberal tenet of administrative prevention that would crush the ability of the government, and particularly this House, to exercise good judgment in making public policy. I think the mechanism is a little too broad, too all-encompassing, and there may be better ways for the government to be proactive in promoting health and wellness. In fact, I think we've already demonstrated that there are several initiatives that encourage sensible lifestyles that still strike a balance between the use of public and private resources.

Included in last year's budget was a 16 per cent increase in tobacco taxes, an effort to reduce smoking and promote a healthier lifestyle. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that just this weekend I spoke to one of the small-town businesses in our riding, a recent newcomer to the community who'd bought a hotel and restaurant. Without any government or municipal intervention the restaurant was smoke free for the past four years, the period of time in which he owned the restaurant. But now he asked me in his very straightforward way if, in fact, his little business was now going to have to be smoke free on January 1, and I said: yes, it was. Given his background, I could understand his frustration. He came to this country a number of years ago and used his hands to supplement his English. He basically told me that this was like putting us in a box, in a jail. It was up to people to decide whether they wanted to smoke or not. In reality, I think he fears for the livelihood of his business because, quite frankly, the people that don't want to smoke in that small hotel just don't go there anyway.

However, back to this little bill. This means that $167 million will be dedicated to injury and disease prevention initiatives and health promotion and protection activities. Of particular note is the $95 million over the next three years that's being dedicated to vaccinations.

Many of you have heard of Healthy U. I think this is a great public information and education campaign that encourages Albertans to lead healthier lives by providing information on proactive ways to improve or maintain their health. As part of this initiative the Healthy U crew travels around the province attending community events, where they provide tips and resources on healthy living.

Another part of Healthy U is the Community Choosewell Challenge, that recognizes communities for making a positive impact on the health of their residents. I would imagine that many of us that are fortunate enough to represent rural ridings have had a number of communities that have these little competitions amongst each other. They do it on a yearly basis, and they encourage innovative programming, promotion, and participation driven at the grassroots level. Communities of all sizes are rewarded for making use of their local resources and encouraging healthy choices. In 2006 112 communities took the Community Choosewell Challenge, and the 2007 challenge is shaping up to be an even more competitive situation.

One recently announced initiative is the Alberta healthy school community wellness fund, that will fund projects that promote healthy school communities and improve the wellness of school-aged children and youth. Grants of up to $50,000 are available for large projects, while grants of $10,000 can be used for the smaller ones. Again, I would imagine there's a community or two in some of our ridings that have already approached us on whether or not a new playground area, a wellness area could be the beneficiary of these particular program funds.

While these programs address wellness through community initiatives, this government is also taking further steps to encourage wellness through our health care system. Primary care networks are being organized by physicians in health regions across Alberta. These networks provide wellness services in ways that best meet the needs of patients. By linking family physicians to specialists, nurses, dietitians, pharmacists, physiotherapists, and mental health workers, we are ensuring that Albertans' health is maintained and improved without needing to involve the health care system. Again, I would imagine that quite a few of us can relate to the small family clinics that some of us have in our communities that access a computer that is basically online and provides good information, takes away the need for people to contact specialists, and can actually find out where in a timely fashion some of their health care needs can be met.

In the past 20 years the health care system itself has placed greater emphasis on prevention and wellness. Tests like mammograms, pap smears, osteoporosis screening, and colorectal cancer screening are far more common today and are making a real difference in preventing health problems before they start. This is just a sampling of the programs we currently have in place to encourage wellness in Alberta. There is no question that we've done a lot in this regard. In fact, for public health measures Alberta spends more per capita than all but one other province. This per capita amount is almost 50 per cent more than the Canadian average, Mr. Speaker.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

These initiatives are definitely having a beneficial effect on the health of Albertans. In its 2004 report the Health Quality Council of Alberta reported that Albertans' health status compares well with that of Canadians in other provinces. Almost 9 in 10 Albertans rated their health as excellent, very good, or good. That same year Alberta had the third highest life expectancy at birth among Canadian provinces. Why, then, is it necessary to require health impact assessments for virtually every government action? I doubt that anyone is against encouraging Albertans to live healthy, active lifestyles, but I don't know that they're ready for another bureaucratic set-up that evaluates and sets up other positions of administrative predominance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of this bill. Through the course of my comments I hope that we can bring the conversation back to what this bill is really about, which is health impact assessments and collectively what it is that we need to do, instead of talking about what we need to do individually as far as our health goes and dumping things back on the individual citizens, which is just a red herring. It's not what we're talking about at all with regard to this bill.

Ms Blakeman: Do you think they read the bill?

Mr. Cheffins: That's a good question. That's a good question as to whether or not they're really attentive to what this bill is and what this bill could be.

I commend my colleague from Edmonton-Centre for introducing a bill that is forward thinking and that is proactive, that is trying to address larger scale issues in this province which have needed to be addressed. We're, frankly, maybe at a critical point in terms of whether we're going to be able to move forward and start to take a look at the larger picture in terms of the impacts that we're having on this province.

I just want to take a few moments to talk about that in general and then to address some of what it is I think has been raised here today just because I really think we need to dismiss some of the red herrings that have been raised here today and move back to a discussion of the value that's in this bill. Again, I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre has noted – and I'm in agreement – that development is good in this province. Development is crucial to Alberta's continued economic success, but such development must be sustainable and carefully planned and carefully considered for the sake of the health of Albertans and for the sake of future Albertans, the generations to come.

Now, this bill requires government policy decisions to undergo health impact assessments. I mean, if we think about it, that just makes sense. This bill ensures that government decisions that could potentially affect the health of Albertans are subject to the greatest scrutiny to promote the protection, enhancement, and sustainability of the health of Albertans. Again, this just makes sense because: what's more important that the health of Albertans? We need to look after that collectively and not just individually. Yes, there are things that we can do as individuals, but that's not what we're talking about here today.

The truth of the matter is that what we're talking about are the collective actions that we take in this province. We need to remind ourselves that we are part of something greater than ourselves here. We're talking about life itself here, and because life, in particular human life, is dependent on the systems and the environment as a whole, therefore the actions that we take collectively affect the health of Albertans, affect us all individually.

We're taking very large collective actions in this province. Again, a collective action is not a bad thing. We do need economic development, but the impacts of the current collective actions that we're taking, as far as the development side of things goes, is just huge. Again, colleagues here mentioned Fort McMurray and the development that's going on there. It's really almost difficult to comprehend the amount of development going on there. Upgrader Alley has been mentioned and the development that's going on there and coal mining also and the development there. Again, these are all good things. We're just talking about taking a look at the collective impact of our actions here.

What hasn't been mentioned very much today is logging and the importance of considering the impact of logging on our environment and, therefore, on our health. The reality is that the air we breathe, the land we rely on for our food sources, and in particular the water that we all depend on are just absolutely critical. This is something that this government has been too slow to consider, but particularly over the most recent years, with the help of members on this side of the House, we are paying more attention to the importance of water.

Now, I want to take a few moments to address some of the things that have been raised here by other members. To begin with, you know, my colleague from Calgary-Varsity has indicated that considerations can be taken in, and it's worth while that people are bringing up concerns that they might have. I know the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talked about green screens, and he sees the value of that. But he'd like consideration of this bill, further consideration of this bill, and I think that that's a valuable position to take.

Again, my colleague from Calgary-Varsity indicated that perhaps there are ways to be able to go about that. Perhaps we can look at amendments. Perhaps we could look at a referral motion on this bill to a standing committee as something that might be of value because this bill is a valiant attempt to address issues that are critical and is worthy of full consideration. Once again, we're trying to be proactive. We're trying to be future looking. We need to take a look at what it is that we've done collectively, what we're doing collectively, and we have to figure out how we can act collectively to address those issues.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed talked a little bit about: "Well, can we do this? Have we got the resources to do it?" Realistically, we're talking about Albertans' health, so I can't think of other areas that are more important for us to address those resources to. The same member wondered whether the mechanism was timely and economical. When you talk about timely and economical versus the importance of health, it strikes me that Albertans would let us know where it is that they think the priorities lie. Again, we recognize that all of these things do need to be taken into consideration as far as the environment and economic factors. I don't see where this bill is going to stop that from occurring.

In fact, I think that what we're trying to talk about is taking a look at how things can be done across the spectrum of government activity. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed talked about 13 departments needing to be involved. Well, that's exactly what we're talking about: trying to get it so the various areas of government are working together and taking a look at the larger picture. We're talking about it as far as the environment goes and the impact on the environment. We have to talk about the collective actions and across departments take a look at the impacts that our actions are going to have on the health of Albertans. I think that if he has concerns, let him bring them forward. Let's take a look at some amendments if they think that improvements can be made. Let's take a look at referral if that's necessary as well.

I can't let things pass without mentioning some of what I think are really quite outrageous comments with regard to dumping this back on individuals. I know the Member for Calgary-Egmont talked about a healthy diet and if we walked to the store more, and I believe the Member for St. Albert said something to the same effect. I'm not exactly sure what they're recommending, that if we do a few more jumping jacks, we're not going to need health impact assessments. But, again, we need to take a look at the collective impact that our actions are going to have.

Then to, I think, really add insult here, the Member for Little Bow was talking about: well, if we washed our hands more and changed our underwear – he actually used those words – this is somehow going to limit the need for health impact assessments. I think it's an insult to Albertans to use that kind of language when we're talking about something that's as important as this, something that's as future looking and as far sighted, I think, as this bill is really attempting: for this Assembly to take a look and be far sighted and be future looking.

Other members have talked about how we're putting our children on the road to health with individual actions that parents can take. Those are all things to be commended, but realistically that's not going to do it when we're talking about collective action and the impact that it has on our health and the need for us to act collectively and take a look at the broader picture because far too often what we've been doing is too reactive, too after the fact. I think that this bill is an attempt to be proactive and to deal with issues before they become larger issues. The member is to be commended on that, and I would encourage the members of the Assembly to give every consideration to this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 214, Healthy Futures Act, would require that health impact assessments, or HIAs, be conducted for any major government project or legislative proposal that may significantly affect public health. The Alberta government has historically assessed these specific concerns and continues to do so.

This bill does not take into account, Mr. Speaker, the cost involved in conducting a health impact assessment for all government projects or legislative proposals that may impact public health. The government of Alberta conducts assessments on government projects that include impacts on the health of Albertans, projects such as proposed waste facilities and industrial developments. This method of conducting assessments on those projects that may have an adverse effect on health takes cost into account and is more fiscally responsible than completing an assessment on nearly every possible undertaking of the government.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 214 proposes that a health impact assessment be completed for all proposals that influence health, including income, poverty, social equity, education, environment, family life, social stress, job security, and agriculture and food production, pretty much everything, almost, under the sun. As you can see, the list of all factors included in Bill 214 is very broad and does not at all consider the cost of providing assessments that affect any of these areas.

Mr. Speaker, it is likely that every proposal or project is going to fall under at least one or, maybe in many cases, a lot of these factors. Performing a health impact assessment on all of them would, in my humble opinion, be extraordinarily costly. Completing an assessment of this nature on all major government projects or legislative proposals is not necessary and, frankly, is fiscally impossible.

Currently the Alberta government requires various impact assessments such as environmental impact assessments, as I mentioned previously, Mr. Speaker. These assessments already include many of the areas described in Bill 214. For instance, the environmental impact assessment includes environmental effects, risks, and consequences associated with development proposals. The assessment report must usually contain such things as the potential positive and negative environmental, social, economic, and cultural impacts of the proposed activity. Normally it will also contain plans to mitigate potential adverse impacts, how to respond to emergencies, information on public consultation programs related to the proposed activity, and the identification of health issues.

Environmental impact assessments already analyze a number of factors related to health. Mr. Speaker, requiring health impact assessments on top of other current assessment methods would produce duplication and a lot of information overlap.

Mr. Speaker, some projects or proposals affect multiple jurisdictions. Ministers can enter into agreements with other provinces, territories, or the federal government on the assessment process. This encourages co-operation between governments on important issues and ensures that duplication is eliminated or minimized.

Mr. Speaker, performing health impact assessments on such a wide range of factors and so frequently may result in other jurisdictions choosing not to collaborate with Alberta as they may not have the budget, desire, or need for such an increase in the volume of assessments and related costs.

One example of jurisdictional co-operation occurred in 2005, Mr. Speaker, when Canada's four western provinces shared $8 million in federal funding to implement common data standards and electronic messages to manage information related to three chronic diseases: diabetes, hypertension, and renal failure, commonly known as kidney disease. Common data sets and definitions facilitated the sharing of information to support clinical decisions by primary health care teams. The benefits of working toward a chronic disease management solution through a multijurisdictional collaboration led to benefits not achievable independently. It led to a clearer understanding of the common issues that are faced across the provinces and improved the collective knowledge base from which to make prudent policy decisions. Not collaborating with other jurisdictions can lead to duplication of information, which of course is very costly and also counterproductive.

Mr. Speaker, health impact assessments will require a considerable number of health care professionals. Health care professionals are already in extremely high demand and short supply across our province. The health sector is experiencing a global shortage, and their skills should be much better utilized by serving all Albertans. Reallocating the current supply of health care professionals for health impact assessments would increase the labour shortage very much in this industry. Clearly, there is not an abundance of health care professionals to perform the tasks required of the health impact assessments.

Mr. Speaker, some government projects and proposals involve many locations and different populations with specific needs. Some related projects are grouped together into one initiative but still target particular areas and their individual needs.

Mr. Speaker, early in 2007, 32 new projects were announced to enhance Alberta's telehealth network and provide Albertans living in rural and remote areas with better access to health care services such as chronic disease management, mental health care, cancer care, and hospital follow-up through technology that links specialists to patients.

If health impact assessments were necessary before these 32 projects could go forward, it would be years – and I repeat, Mr. Speaker, it would be years – before any of these programs could get off the ground or even be implemented. The cost would be astronomical. Because of the different health effects on these individual populations, it seems that Bill 214 would require that the HIAs be completed on all of these projects. The government of Alberta allocated $33 billion in budget 2007 from programs and capital grants. The complexity of subjecting all of the programs and proposals related to the budget to HIAs would be horrendously – horrendously – time consuming, not to mention extremely expensive.

Under Bill 214 it appears that all future budgets would be under scrutiny for health effects, wasting taxpayers' time and money. Implementing Bill 214 would be astronomically and excessively expensive. The time it takes for a project to reach the implementation stage would increase dramatically due to the time required to complete a health impact assessment. Mr. Speaker, you know what happens the longer we take to get projects off the ground. You've seen what has happened to costs over the last year or two. The cost of projects and proposals would significantly increase due to the cost of completing a health impact assessment prior to a project or a proposal receiving approval.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot support this bill, and I would encourage my colleagues to oppose it as well. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak briefly to Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act. I was reminded as I've been listening to some of the debate that I attended the Calgary health region's report to the community on Thursday last in Calgary. I was pleasantly surprised and impressed that the entire report to the community was focused on wellness.

There's a very good reason for that, of course. The Calgary health region realizes that in the situation that it finds itself in – woefully short of hospital beds, woefully short of doctors, woefully short of nurses, woefully short of health professionals of all description and facing a future where it runs the risk of losing a great number of the people that it has now to retirement, to attrition and looking at what's happening to our population, to our aging population, as the baby boom demographic bulge starts to work its way through the acute-care system – there is no way that our health care system can continue being a sickness repair business, an illness and injury repair business. There are just too darn many of us baby boomers. We're getting too old, and we're only going to get older and sicker.

Now, some of us walk; some of us use a treadmill; some of us use a Stairmaster; some of us eat right. Some of us do all those individual things that a person should do to try and stave off the Grim Reaper for as long as possible and stay healthy and productive for as many of those years that we're actually still drawing breath as we can, but statistically, actuarially, there is just no way around the fact that we have a huge bulge working its way through the population, the leading edge of which turned 60 years old last year. And that's going to cause no end of problems for the acute-care professions.

So we have to switch our focus. We have to switch our focus to wellness, to illness prevention, to injury prevention, and we have to do that not just on an individual basis, Mr. Speaker, but on a community basis, on a global basis. It is no longer good enough to lunge forward blindly – I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in terms of wellness there are perhaps many on the other side of the House who could do with a visit to the optometrist to improve their visioning skills – and say: we'll develop economically everything we possibly can without regard to the consequences of doing so because there's money in it for us to shove into the pockets of our jeans right now.

We need to start considering something beyond, in the way of long-term planning, what we're going to have for lunch next Tuesday. We need to consider something beyond the value of our portfolios at the end of this fiscal quarter. We need to start considering what kind of province we're creating – I'm not even going to go the children and grandchildren route; I'm going to be totally selfish about this for argument sake for a moment – for ourselves, the baby boom generation, that's about to start getting a little too old and a little too sick to clean up the mess we've already made. Mr. Speaker, this is a vital bill. Health impact assessments are a vital tool to employ going forward to ensure that what we're doing in and to this province is not having a negative mitigating health and environmental impact on our population. We need healthier Albertans, not sicker Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to address Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act. Certainly, this bill proposes that before proceeding with a major project or legislative proposal of any kind that may affect the public and the public's health, a health impact assessment would be conducted. When a bill or a motion is brought before the Legislative Assembly for its consideration, the sponsor believes that a certain law or a regulation or an activity must change because the current standard is in need of improvement or the current standards are not being met.

Bill 214 suggests that this government conducts projects without concern for the public health, income repercussions, or educational or environmental concerns. It has been mentioned in this Assembly this afternoon: a lot of concern around the social issues and that it hasn't been attended to. Certainly this is not the case. This government has proven itself a steward of healthy environments for Albertans, and in every action this government takes, all Albertans' health and wellness is the first priority. Given the overwhelming prosperity, health, and high quality of life that is found here in Alberta, it is clear that development in our province has been conducted in a thoughtful and responsible manner.

Health impact assessments are used as a mechanism to gauge the potential positive and negative effects that projects may have on a wide variety of factors that may influence health. Some of these factors include the environment, quality of life, safety, and, as I said earlier, the social issues. Health has been identified and defined as bodily, mental, and social quality of people's lives. Because quality of life can be affected by government policy, this government has placed the enhancement of quality of life on the top of its priority list. I would like to detail a few of the many ways this government continues to uphold Canada's best interests in all its undertakings.

One way this government already meets the goals of Bill 214 is through its commitment to sustainable development.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Alcoholic Beverage Pricing

514. Mr. Tougas moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation that will set minimum drink prices in licensed establishments as recommended in the 2006 report of the Alberta Roundtable on Violence in and around Licensed Premises, which will help curb the overconsumption of alcohol that may lead to violence.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to present to the Legislature Motion 514, the establishment of minimum drink prices. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I realize that advocating for minimum drink prices in Alberta is no way to endear yourself to voting-age males between the ages of 18 and 25, who are most likely to take advantage of rock-bottom liquor prices. I feel, however, that the motion would ask the government to make a significant and important change to liquor laws in the province of Alberta.

Despite efforts to get some control over alcohol consumption in Alberta, there's still very much of a Wild West mentality to alcohol in this province. Perhaps it is because we are still, relatively speaking, a young province, still somewhat lacking in maturity when it comes to alcohol consumption.

It is interesting to see the evolution of liquor laws in Alberta. My father tells me that during the Social Credit years the sale of vodka was prohibited because it was too difficult to detect on your breath. Not long ago, certainly in the lifetime of many members present, there were segregated beer parlours in Alberta, where men and women had to drink in separate establishments.

Some Hon. Members: Right on. We like that.

Mr. Tougas: We're in favour of that, are we?

We had very early closing hours, no liquor sales on Sunday, rules against taking a drink from one table to another. The list goes on. Today's liquor regulations are light years removed from the puritanical laws of not long ago, and I think that this is overall a positive. Unfortunately, I think the pendulum may have swung too far in the other direction.

There's nothing new or radical about regulating liquor prices. In fact, Alberta would simply be getting in line with other provinces. The province of Saskatchewan, where alcohol sales no doubt set some sort of record yesterday, has had minimum drink prices for many years. In fact, the minimum drink prices in hotels, restaurants, and nightclubs will be increased next year by 50 cents, from $2 and a quarter to $2.75. In military and paramilitary messes and veterans' canteens the minimum drink price will go from $1 to $2.

Ontario, Canada's most populous province, has quite detailed minimum drink prices: a 16 ounce or 455 millilitre bottle of beer must sell for a minimum of $2.67; a six-ounce glass of wine goes for a minimum of $2.40; one and a half ounces of spirits cannot be sold for less than $3. Going further afield, in Aberdeen, Scotland, the licensing board there saw fit to implement minimum drink prices in light of shocking statistics. In Scotland alcohol kills four times as many people there as it did a generation ago.

In our Wild West bar scene there are no limits at all on liquor prices. I've gathered some examples of the giveaway liquor prices in some drinking establishment in Edmonton. Rest assured, hon. members, I did not gather these examples through personal experience but by asking the younger members of the Official Opposition staff to detail some examples of the discount drink prices they have witnessed. Since everyone in this Legislature today is on the far side of 40, these prices may come as a bit of a surprise.

An Hon. Member: I'm still only a few years over.

Mr. Tougas: Okay. Maybe not so far. Fine.

For example, a number of bars offer highballs for $1, and some will sell you as many as you like. Another bar has had an event called "spare change Wednesdays," which simply meant you could buy any drink with whatever spare change you had in your pocket. Along the same lines is a promotion called "any coin, any drink." There are dollar shots on ladies' night, 25-cent glasses of draft, 75-cent highballs, for the ladies again. The list goes on. Of course, the main reason for deeply discounted liquor prices is to bring in patrons. In the retail trade they call this a loss leader, selling something at below cost in order to bring patrons into your establishment. Unfortunately, they're not selling toothpaste but intoxicants. I've heard of carloads of young people, mostly male, swarming into bars for cheap drink prices, slamming back glass after glass of cheap booze and then either staggering off into the night or to continue their drinking.

The link between alcohol and violence is well established and undeniable. The option of minimum drink prices was advocated in the government's own report, the Alberta Roundtable on Violence in and around Licensed Premises. Edmontonians remember with some embarrassment the spectacles of riots on Whyte Avenue following Canada Day celebrations and during the Edmonton Oilers' Stanley Cup run two years ago. Mr. Speaker, you can be certain that the rioters on Whyte Avenue were not intoxicated on the thrill of Oiler victories.

Of course, this is just one idea to address the problem of excess drinking and violence in Alberta's bar culture. I understand that the Solicitor General is actively looking at making changes to liquor regulations in Alberta dealing with a number of issues like happy hours that last for hour after hour. This motion should not in any way impinge upon the government's decision-making in regard to liquor regulations.

As all hon. members know, a motion does not order the government to make a decision but is simply an expression of the opinion of the Legislature. I hope, too, that hon. members will not look upon this motion as an attempt to throw a huge wet blanket over the bar scene in Alberta. There are dozens of laws related to liquor consumption in this province, and they haven't stopped anyone from having fun in Alberta's bars yet. Nor should it be interpreted as an attack on free enterprise or freedom of choice. There are many examples across this province of regulated prices on a number of products. The price of milk, for example, is much more heavily regulated than the cost of liquor in bars.

This motion does not seek to set minimum drink prices. Those prices should only be established after extensive consultation with bar owners so that the price would not be too high so as to discourage sales but not so low as to encourage overconsumption. The actual numbers are beyond the scope of this motion. Mr. Speaker, this motion would ask for a progressive, reasonable change to liquor regulations in Alberta. Minimum drink prices would encourage moderation in consumption with the likely result of less gross intoxication and a reduction in violence.

I encourage all members to give this motion serious thought, and I look forward to the debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and share my thoughts this afternoon on Motion 514, which proposes that the government introduce means to implement minimum drink prices. Our government will continue to support legislation and regulation that will improve the safety and security of Albertans. However, we must ensure that these actions have a practical and proven effect, and those are key words, as far as I'm concerned: practical and proven effect.

We must take a pragmatic approach to all issues, and if the objective is to deter overconsumption of alcohol in licensed establishments and decrease the potential of violence that can follow, then we must be confident that creating minimum drink prices would be the most effective action. I appreciate that the Roundtable on Violence in and around Licensed Premises report stated that setting minimum prices is and should be looked at as an option. The necessary research on this suggestion is being done by the AGLC, and without evidence supporting its implementation, it would be irresponsible for legislators to move forward. Therefore, at this time Motion 514 is not the most appropriate action to take.

Alberta requires licensed establishments to be accountable to their clientele and to not promote intoxication. These businesses are accredited to serve alcoholic beverages, not to support destructive behaviour. The operations of licensed establishments should be conducted in an appropriate manner that respects the laws which pertain to them. To ensure that these businesses are operated legally, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, AGLC, has inspectors who regularly conduct inspections and operating checks on licensed premises to assist in preventing overservice and intoxication. To bolster Alberta's enforcement efforts, our government will be hiring seven additional inspectors in the next brief while.

The AGLC ensures compliance by investigating all licensed premises, including private liquor stores, restaurants, and lounges. The inspections ensure that licensed establishments are complying with regulations regarding the enforcement of operational hours, asking customers to produce proper photo ID, restricting service to those who are intoxicated or under the age of 18 years. These measures are taken to prevent practices that may potentially lead to undesirable or unsafe circumstances. The inspectors along with police services and business staff contribute to ensuring that licensed establishments operate in a safe manner that deters violent or illicit behaviour.

Still, in some instances there remains the possibility for harmful behaviour to occur. This behaviour may or may not be mitigated by minimum drink prices. We want to enable businesses to have the flexibility to control their prices. They can operate in productive and innovative ways. This flexibility should not be misconstrued as a means for promoting gross intoxication. As consumers we're all conscious of the price of a product, and the price is almost always a determining factor in a purchase. Setting minimum drink prices would interfere with the ability of a business to adjust their price to attract customers. Furthermore, establishing minimum drink prices may not reduce overconsumption.

The Alberta government takes measures to promote individual responsibility and to reduce further service to intoxicated individuals. Mr. Speaker, it is important that we have healthy environments for Albertans to socialize in. The practices have been regulated and are being promoted through the AGLC. Police services and stakeholders support safe and secure drinking atmospheres. Unfortunately, at this time the measures of Motion 514 are not based on proper investigations and/or research, so it does not offer a concrete method for reducing overconsumption of alcohol in licensed establishments.

That sums up the reasons that I would not be supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to take part in the debate over Motion 514, the establishment of minimum drink prices, a motion which reads as follows: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government." Let me repeat that because I don't think the previous speaker necessarily got that.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to . . . set minimum drink prices in licensed establishments as recommended in the 2006 report of the Alberta Roundtable on Violence in and around Licensed Premises, which will help curb the overconsumption of alcohol that may lead to violence.

I'm just trying to understand, Mr. Speaker. If I got it straight here, my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark consulted with a bunch of different provinces, but that research wasn't sufficient, wasn't valid, wasn't acceptable, didn't adhere to the established orthodoxy. Goodness knows, those other provinces probably don't let you smoke in bingo halls either. I am just amazed that I can come in here on a Monday afternoon on private members' day . . .

Ms Blakeman: Time rolls back.

Mr. Taylor: Oh, it does. Suddenly I'm on the set of Happy Days, man, and there's The Fonz back there in the back row talking about how we want to create healthy drinking environments. Healthy drinking environments, jumbo shrimp, and other oxymorons. Just amazing. Just amazing. It's absolutely amazing that it's always perennially 1957 on the other side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind members present that this is supposed to be private members' business, and as such you would think that all Members of the Legislative Assembly gathered here to debate private members' bills and motions, regardless of who put forward the bill or the motion and what party he or she may or may not be affiliated with, would come to this House prepared to engage in productive debate and make good legislation. Yet I'm amazed Monday after Monday after Monday to come in here and watch as the members opposite get up and read their scripted debating notes, explaining why private members' business doesn't jibe with Conservative orthodoxy. I just don't understand why these guys opposite – most of them are guys – are so afraid of lurching into the 21st century, so afraid of our dragging them kicking and screaming into the 21st century.

Where is it written in our Constitution or any other law . . .

Ms Blakeman: The Alberta Act.

Mr. Taylor: . . . the Alberta Act, the federal Constitution, that it is the inalienable right of a Canadian citizen or a citizen of Alberta to attend drink-and-drown night or dime-a-draft night? Where is that written? Where is it written that when my son or daughter, who are 20 years old and 18 years old respectively, decide to go out with their friends to what should be and what otherwise would be a perfectly respectable establishment somewhere in the city of Calgary or anywhere else in the province of Alberta, for that matter, on a Friday night or a Saturday night, to have a few drinks and a few laughs, they have to be watching over their shoulder constantly for people who might do them harm because those people are involved in questionable activities or a questionable state of sobriety, have been partying and drinking their face off since, you know, 8 o'clock at night, and have a hair-trigger?

I think that asking people to pay a minimum amount, a set minimum amount, for a drink is a perfectly reasonable request to make of them and a requirement to have of them in a society such as this where we have among the lowest drinking age in the nation: 18. I don't have a problem with that, Mr. Speaker. Never have had. I've always figured that if you're old enough to vote and old enough to go off to war and, you know, shoot live ammunition at somebody in Afghanistan and have them shoot back at you and put your life on the line, then you're old enough to have a beer or a glass of wine or a scotch or whatever your poison is, you know. Old enough and responsible enough.

Responsibility at any age, although at the age of most of the people in this House today, certainly those on that side of the House – you know, I don't suppose those people would find themselves inside licensed establishments all that often for the sole purpose, you know, unless they're pounding back scotches with their steak.

Ms Blakeman: Not unless they do pink martinis with Geritol.

Mr. Taylor: As my colleague from Edmonton-Centre said, maybe some of them do pink martinis with Geritol. I don't know.

In any event, I don't see that it's an unreasonable limit on our freedoms or our rights at all to say that if you want to go out for drinks on a Friday or Saturday night or any other night of the week, it's going to cost you five bucks for a beer or two bucks or whatever the minimum price is, whatever the government decides. This House isn't even going to set that price. All this House is trying to do right now is urge the government to for once in its life do the right thing, you know. For once in its life.

We're not saying that a bottle of beer has to cost $5 or $2 or $10 or $20, you know. We are saying that it would be a wise and prudent idea to do away with the ability of licensed establishments to set ridiculously low prices, well below the cost of doing business, well below the rate of inflation, just to get primarily young people through the door in great numbers and get them good and hammered so that they'll buy even more after happy hour is over and the price goes up.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think there are too many people in this House who are against having fun. I don't think there are too many people in this House, although there may be a few, who are vehemently opposed to alcohol in moderation. I don't think there would be too many who disagree with the basic philosophy of life that says everything in moderation, including excess. You know, it happens from time to time. But there are reasonable limits in a civilized society that governments can impose on their citizens, and I think setting a minimum drink price is a reasonable limit.

Going to a bar in the city of Calgary or the city of Edmonton is proving increasingly dangerous and life-threatening, and it shouldn't be that way. There's no reason that it should be that way because on any given night the vast majority of patrons in just about any bar in this city or Calgary or any other in this province are honest, upstanding, law-abiding citizens. But when you mix in a great deal of alcohol with people's best intentions, people's best intentions tend to go in the rhubarb. When that happens, when inhibitions are broken down and violence breaks out and arguments turn into fights and fist fights turn into knife fights and knife fights turn into fights with clubs or guns or something like that, that's unacceptable. There's no reason why we should put up with that or encourage it.

I know Fonzie and the gang will have a hard time with this, but I really think they should hold their noses, jump into the deep end of the pool, and take a shot at living for a few minutes in the 21st century. It might do them some good.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to this motion. Last Remembrance Day I attended services in Manning, Alberta, and then returned to my home in Peace River and attended the Legion there. Because I was late and a little bit of jostling around, I had to buy a round for the members remaining in the house. There were a number of legionnaires. There were also some active duty members there, some rangers and, actually, active military personnel. So I bought a round – it was personal funds, Mr. Speaker – and imagine my pleasant surprise that the round cost me less than 20 bucks. I'm legendary cheap, Mr. Speaker, and I greatly . . .

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Oberle: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker, you know, to the best of my knowledge legions are not hotbeds of trouble in serious activities, crime, those sorts of things. I say this in jest, but only partially in jest, that I want to point out that this is a complex issue and that there is research necessary. There are other factors at play here, lots of other factors. The safe communities task force did in fact identify drink prices as a possible factor, but there are other factors involved as well, I might point out: municipal planning, the density of bar seats in a region. There are a whole host of reasons.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie chastises us for not accepting the research of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I just want to point out that phoning around finding out what minimum drink prices are in other jurisdictions does not constitute research, maybe fact-finding. But what about connections: cause and effect? That research is not available, Mr. Speaker. And the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie chastises us, you know, that we're supposed to be in here making good legislation. Well, at the moment we're not making legislation; we're considering a motion before this House.

He chastises us for sticking to the Conservative ideological approach, entirely missing the irony of the fact that when he makes statements like, "For once in its life this government should do the right thing," that that's not apparently a Liberal ideological position. That's somehow productive debate standing on the floor of this Chamber. It's embarrassing is what it is, Mr. Speaker.

My approach to this motion is entirely nonpartisan. I don't object to this motion on the grounds that it doesn't meet our Conservative ideological viewpoint; I disagree with this motion because it's ill considered and poorly researched. If there is any ideological approach involved here, Mr. Speaker, it would be that this party wants to use the tools of this Legislature wisely and carefully, not frivolously.

Mr. Speaker, I would lastly point out to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie that I made this speech, ideological though it may have been, without prepared notes or any ideological notes from some leader on this part, which is something that I doubt that I can say for that hon. member over there.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: I do not have a single note.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. members.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, are you rising on a point of order?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, I am.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, 23(j). And I do need notes for this, unlike the member opposite who perhaps has nothing better to do.

Do you want 23(i) or (j)? I'll go for both of them, Mr. Speaker. What the heck, I'll throw in 23(h) as well:

- (h) makes allegations another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Listen to the hubbub. Listen to the hubbub opposite. Can you imagine if this was drink and drown night? What they would be like?

Mr. Speaker, I want it on the record that other than for reading the text of the motion out loud, I spoke entirely without notes, as I often do, as the government whip opposite should know if he was paying attention. I don't know; was he paying attention? I wouldn't want to allege that he wasn't because I'd hate to have him call a point of order on me.

You know, I would like the member opposite to withdraw the remark. Thank you. And apologize.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure which remark I'm supposed to withdraw, actually. But under 23(h), (i), and (j) I might point out it was that hon. member that started the comments about ideological approach. [interjection] You don't consider it insulting to say that this party has never made a right decision in its life?

Mr. Speaker, I'm quite prepared to withdraw the remark that suggested that the hon. member made his speech with notes. I'm quite prepared to withdraw that remark. Actually, on reflection I'm not at all surprised that that member came up with that speech without notes.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else? Well, hon. member, I presume that with those remarks this matter is settled.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 514. The intent of it seems to be to encourage moderate drinking and to remain sober. I think the need is for all of us in this House to sober up for a moment and return to a more moderate tone of debate on a very serious issue.

I represent a constituency in the city, Edmonton-Strathcona, which has a sort of bar alley, you know, that they call Whyte Avenue. It's an attractive part of the city to visit, or used to be, at least. But about 10 years ago things began to spin out of control, and now there are at least 30 bars that stretch out over about nine blocks, eight blocks in the constituency. Remember, these bars don't exist on their own in a vacuum. They're in the middle of communities. So there is an impact of what goes on that's related to those bars: drinking and noise and shouting and loitering and violence, sometimes, and my constituents are very concerned.

I in fact had to convene a meeting which brought together community leaders who were very concerned about what was happening to their neighbourhood as a result of what had happened to Whyte Avenue, the bar owners and the Old Strathcona Business Association. This was three years ago. I brought them all together in my constituency office and asked them to talk with each other and find some ways of addressing the concerns, not just of businesses, not just of business associations, not just of people who go there for occasional fun, but also the people who live there and raise their children there. There are several well-known schools in the area, including Old Scona high school, Strathcona comp, and many wonderful elementary schools. All of these children and their families live in the area, and they are impacted by the excessive consumption of alcohol.

Ask them if they would like to see some measures taken by this Assembly before we have watertight proof, you know, that links the cause to effects. They would say: use common sense. You know that when people overdrink, their behaviour tends to get out of control. They engage in violence and noisy behaviour, rowdy behaviour, behaviour that's not conducive to a good quality of life for people who live in those surroundings.

Ask the Edmonton Police Service, who have to intervene and break up those fights right in the middle of Whyte Avenue, on the intersection of 104th and Whyte Avenue, 82nd Avenue, and they'll tell you that overdrinking is a problem. Overconsumption of alcohol is a problem.

Why do people overdrink? Why do people converge on Whyte Avenue to drink? Well, partly because of these competition rates. Each bar tries to attract as many people as they can, particularly on days when there are not that many customers around to attract these people. They come from all over the place: from Fort Saskatchewan, from St. Albert, and beyond, and you name it. These are young people. Often they get injured or hurt driving back. You know, they get drunk. They fall on the dance floor. They cause injuries to themselves and to others. So I think something that will encourage moderation in the consumption of alcohol is a good thing. This motion I think is an attempt to do that.

We know that other provinces do this. The concern here is that we will be sort of limiting the freedom of businesses to do what they want to do, we'll be reducing the competition. But I think places like B.C., Saskatchewan, Ontario – I've been looking at some of their regulations that were brought in to encourage social responsibility both on the part of people who consume alcohol and those who sell it. It's a hospitality industry, a hotel industry, a tourist industry. All of those are involved in it. Even if we are not totally convinced that having a floor price in the bars and the restaurants for alcoholic beverages necessarily reduces overall consumption, we have to look at the other side and ask the opposite question: does it really hurt businesses?

Well, Toronto wouldn't have those rules there if it hurt because they get a huge number of tourists. It's a city that really thrives on the hospitality industry. There are wonderful restaurants, bars, and hotels, and all of those are used by people who visit from outside, in addition to Ontarians and Torontonians who live there. My daughter lives there, so I know a little bit about Toronto, more now than I used to. Similarly, in Vancouver, B.C., you know, the best city in the world to live – the best city in the world to live – yet they have a floor price.

The gaming and liquor control authorities in those provinces pay due attention to the interests of businesses, the hospitality industry, the prospects for tourism, and they know that bringing in these floor prices in fact encourages – it makes cities more livable, places more hospitable, safer for people to come from wherever they do to have fun downtown and in certain parts of the city without having to worry about running into people who are overly drunk and who are rowdy because they are drunk. So I don't think there is any doubt that introducing some sort of floor pricing, regulating that there be some minimum price for liquor, hurts businesses.

As a matter of fact, I worked with the Old Strathcona Business Association. Shirley Lowe, who is the executive director of it, was present at this meeting. She is quoted in the press as saying that bringing in these floor prices, some sort of regulation on how little you can charge for a drink, will not hurt the members of her business association. All the bar owners are members of their association. That's why Shirley was at the meeting that I convened three years ago. I then went with them to city hall to talk about, sort of, how many drinking spaces there should be in Old Strathcona.

There are all of these measures, you know: perhaps limiting the number of spaces, having some floor price related to the sale of liquor of various kinds, all multiple measures that we need to take in order to both promote social responsibility on the part of everybody, to make everyone feel safe and to assure communities that their life will not be disrupted simply because somehow we assumed that bringing in these measures will hurt the interest of business. Businesses themselves recognize that they have to put up with violence, put up with the breaking of their windows and their glass frames and everything else. They don't want to see that happen in their own bars. So businesses are not necessarily averse to the introduction of some price so long as all of them know that there's a level playing field, that everyone cannot reduce prices below a certain level.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I'm speaking in support of this motion, and I encourage other colleagues in the House to consider supporting the motion as well. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak to Motion 514, which urges the government to set minimum drink prices in licensed establishments. As I understand it, it's an effort to address overconsumption that could lead to violent behaviour. I for one am fully in support of promoting safety in our communities and of encouraging good behaviour, but I do not believe that setting minimum drink prices is the way to accomplish this objective.

5:30

For people in Alberta, anyone over the age of 18 years, alcohol is a legal substance. Indeed, for many people it is one of life's small pleasures. For most people alcohol in moderation is a pleasant experience, and for most people it makes them feel better. For a lot of people a few drinks would make them enjoy life.

Do some people drink to excess? Of course they do. No doubt. For some people alcohol might tend to make them misbehave, but I would suggest that the price of drinks is not the cause of their misbehaviour. It is, rather, within their own makeup, their own personality. A few people having a few drinks might be inclined to get behind the wheel of a car and do stupid things, like driving after they've been drinking, but I do believe that drink prices are not the way to pursue this. I believe that this is another instance of the creeping nanny state.

We have lots of establishments which cater to a clientele in our society which doesn't necessarily have a lot of money to spend. We have such establishments as the Royal Canadian Legion, which has moderately priced drinks. We have some pubs even in my own constituency which have moderately priced drinks and which are patronized by those in society that can't afford to partake in necessarily expensive activities, like going out to a Flames game, where it could cost hundreds of dollars and where a beer costs seven bucks.

Mr. Rodney: It was $9.50 at the Grey Cup.

Dr. Brown: Well, my hon. colleague from Calgary-Lougheed states that it was $9.50 at the Grey Cup. But it shows you there is certainly a diversity of different establishments in society which cater to different clienteles and people with different incomes.

I would also like to refer to a number of initiatives that the government has held. In November 2005 and March 2006 the government did hold some round-tables on the issue of violence in and around bars. As a result of those round-tables the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission along with the government launched the Cage Your Rage campaign, which is a new campaign to reduce bar violence. That was initiated in June of this year. This campaign was aimed at discouraging fighting as a result of drinking in bars and nightclubs by targeting males in the 18 to 24 years of age category. The campaign did have some effect of spreading awareness about the dangers of alcohol and violence and the value of peaceful environments in the bars.

As I said, these are a very small minority of individuals. These are individuals who have certain tendencies. I think to penalize the public at large – as I said, we are a government which believes in free enterprise. The price of drinks should be set by the free market and certainly not by the dictation of the government.

Mr. Tougas: That's free enterprise, isn't it, allowing smoking in restaurants? Should they be allowed to do that?

Dr. Brown: Well, you make a very good point, hon. member. Yes, it certainly is, but one could also argue in those instances that it's a detriment to society in terms of the cost, as a societal cost. But I would argue that the price of two or three drinks in a bar establishment does not have any societal costs. It's not detrimental to your health or anything else.

Mr. Tougas: It's detrimental to the health of the person having a drink.

Dr. Brown: Not necessarily. No, it isn't. In fact, there are plenty of studies out there which show that drinking in moderation is, in fact, a very healthy thing to do. In fact, it reduces the incidence of heart and stroke.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, it is, in fact, for many people one of life's small pleasures. It is also an area into which I do not believe that we as a government ought to intrude. Therefore, I would urge my colleagues to vote against this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to go back to the original wording of the motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to . . . set minimum drink prices in licensed establishments . . . And here's the key portion of the motion.

. . . as recommended in the 2006 report of the Alberta Roundtable on Violence in and around Licensed Premises, which will help curb the overconsumption of alcohol that may lead to violence.

Tomorrow when your constituent asks you, "Did you vote in favour of a motion that had the potential of reducing consumption?" and you say to that constituent, as the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill said, "No, I don't believe in a creeping nanny state," and then you talk to a member of Mothers Against Drunk Driving and you say to them, "Yes, I had an opportunity in this House to vote on a motion that would potentially reduce consumption, but I believe that individual rights triumph collective civil responsibility," and if you can look at that mother or constituent and say that individual rights trump societal responsibilities, if you can do that with a straight face, then I guess I know where you're going to be voting on this.

This government and this province have this maverick quality to them. They were fine with children going in the backs of pickup trucks, in the box, because it was fun driving down those bumpy gravel roads; it was fun going across the fields. We don't have to license children on ATVs on private lands. They don't have to wear helmets because that's an individual right. It's an individual responsibility, so we're not going to interfere with that. This government had difficulty with helmets for motorcycles. It had difficulty with seatbelt restraints. This is just one more example of the potential of cutting down on an unsafe practice of continuing to serve liquor at cheap prices.

The member across the way suggested that it would have cost him more than 20 bucks to buy a round. Now, if that's the depth of the wisdom associated, then I have great concern. It's the cheapness of the liquor and its availability that take away a person's reasoning power.

I was fortunate. By basically age 19 I realized that for myself smoking and drinking just weren't worth it. I spent too much time over that big white phone, as you would say, before I got the message, but eventually I did, and I didn't put anyone else's life at risk in the process. I might have done a little bit of temporary abuse to my body, but I learned my lesson early.

Also, in my youth I played rugby for the University of Calgary Stags, and I played rugby for the Calgary Saracens, and I played rugby for the Calgary Saints. Those were 17 years of liquor-associated games and sports. Being one of the few individuals who did not indulge because I'd learned my lesson early, I was the keeper of the welfare of those individuals. I was the designated driver. You get tired of putting on the boots and putting on the coats, but you have a responsibility to your teammates. I would suggest that this government has a responsibility to its citizens to enact legislation that has the potential of making establishments safer.

Now, I appreciate what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out when he referred to Whyte Avenue. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, incidentally, is my MLA when I'm up at the Legislature. We have the equivalent of Whyte Avenue in Calgary. It's called the Red Mile. The types of celebrations that go on and the extra cost in terms of policing and the violence associated with what is supposed to be a celebratory circumstance is overblown.

Here we have Motion 514, which simply urges the government to follow up on the 2006 report of the Alberta Roundtable on Violence in and around Licensed Premises. It says to consider this: will harm be done by setting base prices? If you say that harm will be done, that the entrepreneurial spirit of Alberta will suddenly be damaged, and you can live with the results of the violence and the rowdiness and the police placed in a circumstance of threat, trying to do their best to protect the public, then you'll vote against Motion 514. Then, as I say, live with the consequences of your constituents and organizations like Mothers Against Drunk Driving and Alcoholics Anonymous. Could you have done something, a small something, by setting minimum prices? You have a chance to do it. It's a small step. It's not made to be the major cure-all. It's one step in terms of creating responsibility.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to join the debate, too, on Motion 514. I would like to start by commending the member for bringing this forward. It shows his concern and his compassion for people who have faced violence in the streets, particularly in the evening after drinking establishments close, but I'm sincere when I say that I do have concerns that this motion will be viewed as a magic bullet that's supposed to cure all the violence issues that happen outside of bars in the evening.

Now, I know that the minister – I've spoken to him – is doing a comprehensive review about drink prices and a myriad of other issues to try and solve the problem of violence outside of bars. I appreciate that, but I'm concerned about setting minimum drink prices through legislation or regulation. I don't want to do it on a whim, Mr. Speaker. In fact, last week we had a discussion about rules and regulations, and most every member in this House recognized that we as members in this Assembly have the responsibility to make good legislation and good regulations and to do so in a way that doesn't cost taxpayers or business owners or society a tremendous amount of time or energy. We discussed that for quite a bit of time last week.

I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie suggested that excessive drinking leads to violence. I'm not going to dispute that. That could very well be one of the causes of violence, particularly out in front of bars in the evening. But again, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that that is the only issue. The Member for Calgary-Varsity talked about this perhaps maybe being able to curb the violence.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk about rules and regulation and legislation in this House, I have a principle personally that I don't support anything that I don't know is going to work. I don't believe we should make rules or regulation or new legislation on the hope that it will work, on the anticipation that it will work, or on some myth that it might work without some concrete proof and evidence that it will do something to solve the problem we're addressing. Otherwise, we make decisions that aren't necessarily based on truth but are based on urban legend or are very heartfelt and done in good conscience but don't actually serve the purpose we intended and lead the public astray, leave warm fuzzies in everybody's heart that we're doing something but don't actually address the issue. I don't support something like that.

Mr. Speaker, a number of years ago I investigated going to the Cayman Islands for work. I talked to a lot of people on the Internet because it's very expensive to go down there, and I couldn't afford to go down there until I'd found a job. Talking to people on the Internet, I found something incredibly interesting. There was a lot of discussion on the Internet – you can probably still see some of this discussion going on – and that's that a lot of people who were investigating going to the Cayman Islands to work got advice that the Cayman Islands was very expensive. There was an entire discussion board about how people who lived in the Cayman Islands who were foreigners and understood that things were expensive there actually had predrinking parties. They went to each other's house and drank because they couldn't afford $10 a drink in the Cayman Islands. Now, that didn't stop them from overconsuming. That didn't stop them from going to the bar and getting drunk or causing violence in the evening when they came out of the bar. It just meant that they didn't drink in the bar, where it was expensive. They drank at home, before they got there.

That could very well happen in this circumstance. You could raise drink prices to $20 thinking it's going to curb consumption, but if the bottles are still just as cheap in the liquor store, people will just go home and get drunk, and then they'll go to the bar and still cause the same problems. It won't necessarily be a solution.

Mr. Speaker, there's also the circumstance – when I was 16, between grades 11 and 12 I went to Switzerland for two months on a work exchange with a family. I was so excited because they didn't enforce any minimum drinking age. I thought: "Great. This is going to be my first chance. I'm 16 years old. I'm going to get to go to the bar." But when I got there, all of the people that I met didn't want to go to the bar. They were all allowed, but because they were allowed, it took all of the interest and excitement away, because they weren't prohibited from doing it.

In fact, in Switzerland when they were celebrating, I believe, their 701st birthday as a country, there was a huge party and a huge bonfire, and everybody went down there. Myself and another 16-year-old boy from the United States had a few drinks with the rest of them. The only two people out of hundreds at that big celebration for the 701st birthday of Switzerland who wound up becoming very, very ill were me and the American friend that I had. But no one else, none of the other 15- and 16-year-olds, overconsumed. Because they were allowed to drink, they didn't find any interest in it. There was no appeal.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if that barrier, that legal age when you're allowed to suddenly do it, doesn't create this image that the bar is an exciting, great place and that alcohol is a wonderful, great thing. Eighteen years of anticipation leads to the very first night of binge drinking and in some people's circumstance many, many years of binge drinking because it's an exciting place.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, my wife's family is all from Portugal. We've been over there a couple of times, and we went out for drinks with some of the family. The one thing that I noticed is that there were bars that opened at 7 o'clock and closed at 11 o'clock. There were some that opened at 10 o'clock and closed at 2 in the morning. There were some that didn't open until 4 in the morning.

Being in Portugal in some of their happening places that would be the equivalent of Whyte Ave. or the Red Mile, one thing I noticed, Mr. Speaker – at 2 o'clock in the morning here when we close the bars, we push everyone out into the streets drunk. That's what leads to violence: when you have thousands of people in the streets suddenly, inebriated and looking for a party and nowhere to go. But in Portugal when I was there, not once did I see a single act of violence because there weren't thousands of people in the street partying. People came and went all night. Some showed up and didn't start to party until 2 o'clock. Some went to bars at 10 and left at 2. Some didn't come out till 5 in the morning. I'm not going to explain who those were or how I know.

It was an interesting observation, Mr. Speaker. Putting the Cayman Islands and my experience in Portugal and my experience in Switzerland together means to me that we have to address the entire situation around here of when bars close. Perhaps the concentration of establishments all along the same place is part of the problem.

I applaud the member for bringing this forward. If there's evidence – I know the minister is doing research – that shows that this will work to curb violence and curb overconsumption, I will be the first member to stand in this House and support this. But until I have proof, I won't support bringing in new regulations or new legislation that could cost businesses a lot and make the public think we've addressed the violence issue and it's magical unless there is some evidence that it works. If this is part of an entire comprehensive plan that deals with concentration of establishments in a place or deals with closing times – and I think it should deal with the legal age of consumption of alcohol – then, Mr. Speaker, I hope that will be the plan that will curb violence in our streets, especially in the evenings.

I won't be supporting this, but, again, I do support the member for bringing it forward. It's a debate and a discussion that needs to be had, and I encourage all members to vote with their conscience and make their choice.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me get this straight. We have an Alberta government-sponsored panel, the Alberta Roundtable on Violence in and around Licensed Premises, that makes a recommendation that one of the things that should be tried to try and deal with some of the violence and community safety issues – and didn't we earlier today debate a bill about safer communities? But here we have an Alberta government round-table that recommends something. That recommendation is incorporated in a motion brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

While I'm at it, I went and looked at the AADAC annual report, that was tabled in this very House within the last couple of weeks, and what did I see on page 23? A performance measurement: prevalence of regular heavy drinking amongst young Albertans, 31 per cent, one-third of our young people. Let me read the small print for you just so you don't argue with me about the facts. Once again, it's on page 23: "Regular heavy drinking is defined as the consumption of five or more alcoholic drinks on one occasion, 12 or more times a year for Albertans 15 to 29 years of age." So in your own AADAC report, your own government-funded agency, it says that this is not a good thing. One-third of our young people are binge-drinking. Now, "binge" is my word. They don't say binge-drinking in here. Five or more drinks at least 12 times a year. So two, not one but two of the government's very own funded . . .

Mr. Elsalhy: Actually, three if you add the safer communities task force.

Ms Blakeman: If you add in the safer communities task force, there are three that have all made the same recommendation, but this government gets up one after another, those private members, on this private members' day and says, "Oh, no. We really need to leave it up to individuals," completely negating the work that you collectively as a government have set out in front of us. You make me laugh sometimes. You really do. You have absolutely contradicted the work of your own government.

All of this "Oh, don't interfere in the marketplace" stuff: you interfere in the marketplace all the time. I wish my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar was able to get up and speak with me right now. He could list all the times that you've managed to interfere in the marketplace. [interjection] Oh, for heaven's sake. You want to address the entire situation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), language that's likely to insult or cause unrest in this House, not a single member on this side of the House stood up and said that this issue should be left to individuals. Not a single one. What we said was that perhaps a well-reasoned, well-researched approach that addresses this issue in its totality might be the approach to take. Not a single member suggested that this should be left to individuals. I would ask the member to withdraw that remark as being flippant and inaccurate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I won't withdraw it until the Blues are available to have a look at what's been said. Then I'll look at withdrawing it. I sat here for this whole debate. I listened to it all, every word, and that's what was being said: leave it up to the individual; don't curtail it; don't bring in anything; don't put any restrictions on the marketplace. So, no, I'm not willing to withdraw that.

I don't think there's a point of order here. I think they're just trying to run out the time so I can't speak, and it'll impinge upon the mover of the motion. They've been successful in doing that, so I hope you're all proud of yourselves there, boys. Did you have a good time?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I know that it is Monday afternoon, that we've had a long weekend and have come back here, but it has opened up some interesting debates this afternoon. The hon. Member for Peace River rose on a point of order. I guess the subject matter before us today was one on which people were speaking from their heart and their mind. I do not have the Blues in front of me. I do not believe any allegations were made against an individual, but certainly there were statements thrown out at the government. I hope that members will take an opportunity tomorrow to read the Blues and reflect, and if they so wish, they can bring forward a point of order at that time, and we may deal with it then.

The Acting Speaker: At this stage we are at 5:55. I hesitate to interrupt, hon. members, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I will invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to close debate on Motion 514.

Mr. Tougas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been amazing to listen to members twist themselves into knots to come up with reasons to vote against what seems like a very straightforward motion. We're just asking the government to say: look into this. We're not saying: do it. We're not saying that this is a panacea, that it's a cure-all for everything. We're not saying that it's going to solve every liquor problem in the province of Alberta. We're just saying: "Will you look into it? We feel that this is something that should be investigated. Please give it some thought." It's as simple as that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I forgot to mention one province that has minimum drinking prices, and that's Manitoba. I want to tell you why Manitoba instituted minimum drink prices. There was a university student by the name of Kris Howard. He was a student at the University of Winnipeg, a second-year education student. One night he went out with only 20 bucks in his pocket and went to a nearby bar where they sold discounted drinks. It's estimated that he drank three beers and at least eight doubles for $20. Then he went out that night. He said, "I'm going out to get a breath of fresh air," and he disappeared. It took three weeks to find him. The police believe he got so drunk that he fell down a riverbank into the Red River and drowned, where they found his body three weeks later.

We can make a simple declaration to the government that we need to get some alcohol consumption under control before we have a tragedy like this happen in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of yourself I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 19 grade 6 students from Neerlandia in your constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teacher Jim Bosma and parent helpers Jina Greilach and Jannie Slomp, Rudy Sybesma, Garry Wood, Evelyn Krikke, Patrick Fountain, and Krista Fountain. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 29 bright and wonderful grade 6 students from one of my favourite schools in my constituency, and by that I mean Ormsby school. These 29 students are joined by Mrs. Liz Branco, Mr. George Diduck, and Mrs. Joanne Zuke on a tour of the Legislature. They're in the Assembly today to experience some of question period and to see what hon. members on both sides of the House do as we conduct ourselves in this Assembly and, you know, deliver democracy to the people of this province. I would ask them to please rise, and I encourage all my colleagues here to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to have the opportunity to introduce through you and to all members of this Legislature 45 of Edmonton's brightest students from the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, in fact St. Augustine school. They are accompanied today by two teachers, Mrs. Nancy Darwish and Mr. David Masluk, as well as three parent helpers, Mrs. Valerie Mallon, Mrs. Laurie Simons, Mr. Ken Ferguson. As my colleague from Edmonton-McClung said, they're here today to watch the proceedings of the House and learn a little bit about our democracy. I would invite them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four distinguished members of the Alberta medical profession. These gentlemen along with nearly 50 other doctors and staff from the Alberta Medical Association are in the Legislature today to connect with their respective MLAs, share their views and concerns with their elected representatives, and learn more about our system of parliamentary democracy and, quite frankly, how to influence us to the greater good. I would ask that our guests stand when called but that the Assembly hold its applause until all of our visitors have been recognized. I won't introduce all 50 by name, but I would like to personally introduce Dr. Darryl LaBuick, president of the Alberta Medical Association; Dr. John Huang, chair of the AMA's government affairs council; the hon. Dr. Grant Hill, former interim leader of the Official Opposition in the House of Commons and former Member of Parliament for Macleod; and Dr. Michael Auld, a constituent of mine from Edmonton-Whitemud. I'd ask all of the other members of the AMA group to stand and join them, and I'd ask the House to give them our warmest welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sitting in your gallery today are two gentlemen. First will be Mr. Carlo Amodio, the president of the National Congress of Italian Canadians for the Edmonton district, and Mr. Leopoldo Sorgiovanni, producer of the Italian radio station here in Edmonton on World FM. Both of these individuals have been decorated with the cavaliere de la república designation by the Italian government. They're here to observe statements and tablings of petitions relevant to a possible closure of the Italian consulate in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you two guests. My first guest immigrated to Canada from Ethiopia. His name is Ibsa Befakadu. He now lives in Edmonton and volunteers much of his time as a human rights and peace activist, volunteering with Amnesty International. My second guest is Mary Boloweza, who is visiting her friends Sylvia Krogh and Alan Boyle in Edmonton. Mary is from Blantyre, Malawi, Africa, and works as a tourist information and HIV/AIDS prevention person in her home country. On behalf of my constituents I would like to ask both of my guests now to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Italian Consulate

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. What makes Alberta a great province to live in, do business in, and raise our children in is due in part to the diverse ethnocultural makeup of our citizens. Our Italian community, now boasting some 67,000 Albertans, is definitely an important part of our social and economic fabric. Why do I make reference to our Italian community? Well, Mr. Speaker, it is because Alberta's Italian community is concerned with the Italian government's recent decision to close its Edmonton consulate. This is an occurrence for all of us to be concerned with.

Presently Italy is Alberta's eighth-largest export market, with annual exports averaging $156 million. We also import some $429 million worth of goods from Italy, which include some of their famous wines, olives, and tiles. Italy is also an important partner in academia, where the University of Alberta has created a Faculty of Arts in the town of Cortona in Tuscany and where the U of A is a signatory to an agreement of academic and scientific co-operation with the University of Siena.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, Italy serves as the head office of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; therefore, it is a hub for many multinational agriculture projects.

Mr. Speaker, Italy is important to Alberta, and as such I urge all members of this House to contact the Italian authorities and respectfully encourage the Italian government to reconsider their decision to close their consulate in Edmonton, Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Jan Hudec

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend at the World Cup downhill ski race in Lake Louise a friend and an Albertan made history. Calgary Jan Hudec crossed the finish line with the fastest time, which is the first time in the event's history that an Albertan, let alone a Canadian, has won at home.

It must have been an incredible feeling for the 25-year-old to stand on top of the podium in front of friends and family, singing O Canada, especially considering all the things that he has been through over his lifetime. He's battled through multiple knee surgeries, including one that left him off the hill for almost a year. Other athletes might have packed it in and moved on, but not Hudec. Adversity and following a dream runs in his family.

When Jan was a baby, his parents escaped communist Czechoslovakia, which included a harrowing trip in a leaky, homemade boat across the Adriatic Sea. They eventually came to our province, and Jan grew up on the world-class ski hills of the Alberta Rockies.

His victory is a sign of great things happening in sport in our country. The 2010 Vancouver Olympics are just over two years away. The excitement is building across the province for good reason. With our tremendous facilities and successful athletes the road to 2010 travels through Alberta, and it will also return here after the Olympics are done.

I ask that all members of the House join me in congratulating Jan, his teammates, and his family for this historic win. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

1:10 Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By introducing Bill 46, the Minister of Energy proved that this government has lost its credibility with Albertans and does not trust Albertans. Fuelled by a culture of entitlement and arrogance, this government doesn't want to hear what Albertans think, and now it's trying to silence them by implementing Bill 46.

After it was caught allowing a government body to hire private spies to spy on citizens, this government should have apologized to the very citizens it spied on. It should have fired those responsible, including the Minister of Energy, and made fundamental changes to how the EUB operates. Instead, the minister refused to accept responsibility, refused to hold anyone accountable, and introduced the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, Bill 46. Just when the public's confidence in the regulatory system was at its lowest, the Minister of Energy has delivered a knockout punch. Bill 46, if passed, will forever destroy Albertans' trust of this government and of the energy regulatory process.

After the spy scandal Albertans demanded more transparency and accountability. Bill 46 eliminates both. The government has been repeatedly defending this autocratic legislation, claiming that it has been misinterpreted, claiming that the concerns of Albertans are false. They point the finger at people who they see as troublemakers. These troublemakers are simply fearmongering. And who are these troublemakers that the government has identified? They are rural landowners. They are people who do not believe a government should spy on its citizens. They want true consumer protection. They are the mayor of Calgary. They are the Environmental Law Centre. They are the Pembina Institute. They are members of industry. They are urban utility consumers.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I remind all hon. members of this House that it was the government's own member, the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, who on November 7, 2007, told a crowd of Albertans . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Ukrainian Famine/Genocide

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With deep respect, I rise today to acknowledge the memorial tribute that took place last Sunday regarding the man-made famine that was forced on the Ukrainian people in their homeland in 1932-33. During this communist-imposed famine, millions of men, women, and children perished because of an ideologically driven communist Soviet government in Moscow. The purpose of the communist Soviet government was to break the spirit of the Ukraine and drive its people into submission to their totalitarian rule. Grains and other food were taken by the ruthless communist authority and kept away from the starving citizens.

Mr. Speaker, the Soviets later sent their advisers to China and to Vietnam and used the same method to implement the communist ideology. As a result, millions more people suffered and perished in those two countries. In 1954 my parents brought our family away from the communist regime, and my grandparents could not make the trip. I still remember the last goodbye to my grandmother. Part of our family suffered and perished in a similar famine created by the same communist policy.

Every year I have attended the Ukrainian famine memorial tribute in Calgary, and I share the deep feelings for the victims of the Ukrainian famine. I know that our Premier and the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Creek attended the same tribute in Edmonton last Sunday. Our thanks go to the Ukrainian Canadian Congress and their local organization for co-ordinating these important tributes. Our thanks also goes to organizers who helped to erect the first monument in Canada right here in Edmonton in tribute to the victims of this horrific man-made famine.

As we remember those who perished, let us honour those who survived to tell us about the inhumane policy driven by the communist socialist ideology. Vichnaia pamiat'. Eternal memory.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute, the VVRI, is an indispensable part of the social fabric of Calgary. Described as the gem in the northwest, located in Calgary-Varsity, the VVRI is a multi-use hub of activity that offers so much to the community. Providing excellent services to people with disabilities is what they are well known for. Are you aware that thousands of families avail themselves of its day camps, swimming lessons, birthday parties, preschool programs, and parent/child drop-in activities? The VVRI runs the only nonprofit bottle depot in Calgary, and they go to Calgary schools with messages about recycling and going green. The VVRI also operates Calgary airport's baggage retrieval service, serving 11 million passengers a year.

All of these socially responsible businesses operate with a fully integrated workforce, where people with disabilities work side by side with others to get the job done. With all the activity at the VRRRI let's not forget the primary reason for its existence: to be leaders in innovative services and research to support persons with disabilities to live as valued and contributing members of the community. They've been trailblazing and providing a wide array of research and services for 40 years, but the fact of the matter is that the VRRRI's 40-year-old building on five acres of land in the University Innovation Park is not sustainable for the disability services and community resources that it continues to provide. So the VRRRI has been doing their homework, planning and seeking the resources needed to build a world-class facility for the next 40 years and beyond.

They are working hard to find the very best ways to support people with disabilities in the community at large, and they are very deserving of the support of all of us here today. I urge all MLAs to throw their support behind this institute as it continues its progressive and proactive evolution to meet the needs of the growing and aging population of Albertans with all levels of ability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Goodwill Industries of Alberta

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in this Assembly today in recognition of Goodwill Industries of Alberta. On November 9 I had the pleasure of attending their annual charity fundraiser. This event really brought home to us how important it is to support Albertans with disabilities. Disabilities can do more than simply impair a person physically. They can overwhelm individuals with feelings of helplessness and despair. That's why I believe it's incredibly important for us to take a moment to acknowledge the good work being done by Goodwill Industries of Alberta.

Goodwill is an international nonprofit agency that was founded in Boston in the late 19th century by Reverend Edgar Helms to offer a hand up, not a handout to impoverished members of the community. Today they still uphold this notion, valuing the independence, sustainability, and dignity given to an individual through the power of work.

Goodwill's mission is driven by donations. They operate thrift retail stores stocked with gently used household items from the community, both providing these goods at affordable prices and recycling items to help our environment. Every dollar earned counts towards enriching people's lives. When you support Goodwill, you're making a difference in the community by helping them provide employment and training services to individuals with disabilities and other barriers to employment. It's important for all Albertans to be proud of who they are and to continue to strive for a better quality of life for themselves, their loved ones, and their communities. This is what Goodwill Industries is all about.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly today, and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to launch a full public inquiry under the authority of the Public Inquiries Act into spying practices by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board (AEUB) and the Minister of Energy's oversight role of the AEUB.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This particular issue is not going away, so today I'm actually tabling 26 more signatures on the petition which reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents . . . hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government . . . to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

1:20

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition on behalf of several southern Albertans. It's regarding, of course, the passage of Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007, and asks us to "not dilute its contents so as to compromise the version approved at second reading."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition with some three and a half thousand names on it, Italian Albertans expressing their dismay relevant to the closure of the consulate.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister for Capital Planning on behalf of the hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Bill 56 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 (No. 2)

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the President of the Treasury Board I beg leave to introduce Bill 56, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 (No. 2). This bill will provide additional spending authority in the amount of $1.5 billion to 16 departments of government for purposes of savings and for capital projects. Because it is a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 56 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table the appropriate number of copies of amendments to Bill 46 as well as a background document explaining the amendments in more detail. Albertans have expressed their views about this bill, and we have responded to the concerns, particularly those about landowner participation at utility hearings and about continuing to allow third parties to apply for funding when they intervene.

I look forward to further discussions about this bill and in particular these amendments when it comes before this Legislature at a later date.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is from the very successful open house of the North Edmonton Seniors Association that their more than 600 volunteers held there recently, a very successful day.

Then also one from the circle of safety family violence program from the Aboriginal Consulting Services Association of Alberta, a document outlining their services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Dave Denholm concerning the cancellation of a program for outpatients at the Edmonton General hospital. The program provided valuable physical therapy for seniors with a variety of health problems.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business in reference to building quality child care together. They are writing on behalf of their private child care members in Alberta to raise their specific concerns about how the proposed regulations will impact their human and financial resources.

The second is from William Parker, a letter out of concern for the proposed child care licensing regulations.

The third is from Cathy Pasula-Jones about the proposed changes to child care licensing regulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter to the Premier from the president of the Coalition of Seniors Advocates, Stan Nykiel. The letter is requesting that the province of Alberta "immediately re-instate the Seniors' program that existed in the 1990's, exempting all senior citizens from having to pay the education portion of their tax bill."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have tablings today. My first group of tablings are proposed amendments from the Official Opposition regarding Bill 46. The first one is an amendment to section 8(2). The second amendment is to section 8(5). The third amendment is also for section 8, striking out subsections (3) and (4), and the next two amendments are trying to clear up some of the confusion that has been caused by this government regarding section 9. These amendments were prepared with the able help of Mr. Joe Anglin.

Also, I have a constituent letter here from Mr. Garry Grykuliak. It is concerning changes to the Alberta labour code. I have another letter from a constituent, Mr. David Lunt, also concerned about Alberta's labour laws and how they can be improved. I have a third letter from Quinn Nichols. It is also concerning the Alberta labour code and how it should be improved. My last tabling is from Mr.

Roger Berger. It is a letter indicating that we need to make the labour code fair.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the seniors' centres funding report presented by the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta and the Alberta Council on Aging to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. I'd like to thank the more than 200 seniors' centres that helped with this report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling copies of letters I received from seven of my constituents, all urging us to revamp Alberta's antiquated labour laws to ensure fairness for all working people in Alberta. One of their ideas, for example, is for full legal recognition of bargaining rights, including the right to strike. These letters are from Angel Rowsell, Michelle Rowsell, Lois Boyd, Vivian Crowell, Nancy Forget, Zodie Kebede, and Charmaine Smythe.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail from Wendy Nelson asking this government to not put in passing lanes but actually twin highway 3, on which her daughter Ashley was killed when rear-ended and pushed into oncoming traffic a little over three years ago.

With this e-mail I am also tabling the appropriate number of copies of Ashley Nelson's 2003 graduation photograph.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings. They have come from my constituents A. Meads, Glenda Tarnowski, Shernett Paes, Mary Kutschke, Eufemia Cabarrubias. They are all concerned about Alberta labour laws and strongly believe in major changes to encourage fairness to all working people in Alberta, strongly urging this government to implement and support changes to our province's antiquated and unfair labour laws and to bring Alberta labour laws into the 21st century.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter to His Excellency Gabriele Sardo, the Italian ambassador to Canada, encouraging him and his government to continue with the tremendous opportunities with the Italian consulate here in Edmonton as well as the over 70,000 Italians that are represented here in our great province of Alberta.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Melchin, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: a report dated 2007 entitled Seniors' Centres Funding Recommendations, presented by the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta and the Alberta Council on Aging to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Oral Question Period

Soccer Ban on Religious Headgear

Dr. Taft: Alberta and Canada are proud to welcome people from all corners of the world. Just the other day in Fort McMurray I was speaking with people who came to Alberta from the Middle East and are thrilled at the welcome they receive. They told me, and I quote: if God were ever to outsource running the world, he should give it to Canadians. But sometimes, Mr. Speaker, we slip up. A few days ago a 14-year-old Muslim girl in Calgary was ejected from a soccer game for wearing a hijab. She left the field in tears. My question is to the Premier. Does this government see this as an issue of religious and cultural freedom and of human rights or not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is an issue relating to a sporting event. The minister responsible has been involved and working with the two organizations, and the minister responsible may wish to comment.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This incident is the latest in a long line of needless controversies that should be behind us, including the wearing of turbans, religious symbols, and the like. The Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture, who is also responsible for the Human Rights Commission, said yesterday that he has to support the referee's decision. My question is to the Premier. Why is this government allowing soccer rules to trump basic human rights?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister is supporting, I believe, the referee who made the decision but has also advised that he will meet with the parties to make sure that this doesn't occur, to work out an arrangement. In this particular case the referee was only following, apparently, the rules and regulations that he's supposed to for safety reasons, according to the association. The minister has offered to intervene, meet with the two parties, and I know that we'll be able to resolve this situation.

Dr. Taft: We should not be allowing soccer rules to trump human rights in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Safety was cited as a reason for disallowing Muslim girls from wearing hijabs during soccer games. I don't think this is about safety. After all, we live in a province where this government allows children to ride all-terrain vehicles without helmets, even though many Alberta children die in ATV accidents every year. Again to the Premier: will the Premier take steps now through Alberta's human rights legislation and commission to ensure that this sort of incident does not happen again in this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to ATVs, the minister responsible will be bringing forward regulations and/or legislation, if necessary, on public roads. Apparently, he wants to get involved with private land. I guess that's his business, but that's the Liberal way.

Anyone who believes that they have been discriminated against by any amateur sports organization because of religious beliefs can contact the Alberta Human Rights Commission. It's their responsibility to hear the case, and they will listen to the individual and make the appropriate decision. That's their role. It's not the government's. It's the Alberta Human Rights Commission that's assigned this responsibility.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Treasury Branches Investments

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Treasury Branches is a treasured institution in Alberta and plays an important role in Alberta's prosperity, particularly outside the major urban centres. The government has an important obligation to ensure that it fulfills its mandate to the people of Alberta, yet the ATB recently revealed an $80 million loss due in part to exposure to the highly speculative U.S. subprime mortgage sector. Ultimately, the exposure could be far higher. This is more than just another bad day at the office for the Department of Finance. My question to the Minister of Finance: can the minister explain what happened? Why was the ATB in a position where it was exposed in this way to such risky ventures?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The ATB's total exposure to asset-backed commercial paper, which, by the way, is not all subprime mortgages, is about $1.2 billion. They've been reassessing this. They've been looking at this very carefully. They determined through several consultants as well that their exposure, their potential for loss, was around $79 million. They certainly hope that this won't occur.

To put this in perspective, Mr. Speaker, that's about a 6 and a half per cent writedown which occurred. The National Bank of Canada, which is exposed considerably more, took a 25 per cent writedown. Would we sooner have had no writedown? Absolutely. But 6 and a half per cent is better than the rest.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. To put that in perspective, $80 million would help an awful lot of seniors, would hire a lot of nurses, and would feed a lot of hungry schoolchildren.

The Minister of Finance claims that he has no legislative authority to control ATB investment policy, but the Alberta Treasury Branches Act actually provides clear authority for this government to set some rules about the ATB investment strategies. To the Minister of Finance: given that the taxpayer is ultimately on the hook, why does the minister allow the ATB to take on such risky investments, which any responsible financial adviser would recommend against?

Dr. Oberg: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I find that incredibly humorous, what he just said. This whole subprime mortgage issue, the asset-backed commercial paper, is an issue that has hit all financial institutions: the Royal Bank of Canada, Scotiabank, TD Bank, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, and so on. As I stated before, the National Bank of Canada was exposed for 25 per cent. The ATB is conservatively estimating $80 million, or roughly 6 and a half per cent of their financial exposure is what the writedown is. Ultimately, we hope none of that writedown will occur, and in fairness it may well be that none of that writedown occurs.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the ATB is a valued institution in this province. It's been there for people when other institutions have not. But under this government the ATB has gone way beyond its original mandate, into high-risk U.S. investments and large Bay Street corporate financing. Alberta taxpayers are on the hook for this added risk. To the Premier. It's one thing for this government to own a financial agency that supports rural Alberta; it's quite another to own what amounts to a quasi-bank that competes with the credit unions and chartered banks. Does this government have any interest in reining in the ATB, or does it plan to continue operating what amounts to a full-fledged bank?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just listening to the member, he's made two statements that are totally wrong. First of all, he's talking about $80 million. This is a writedown. It's not something that comes to the government that the government allocates to different programs. This is a writedown, and those securities that do not fail will go back into the revenue side. That's very clear. The other thing is that this government is a very, very strong supporter of the Alberta Treasury Branches. It has a very good board in place, which has increased the assets of the Alberta Treasury Branches. It will continue to not only serve rural Alberta but every Albertan. I see them in Edmonton and in Calgary and in any other major city in Alberta.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Sustainable Water Management

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sustainable water management in Alberta is a vital issue for all Albertans. The introduction of up to 15 upgraders in the Industrial Heartland will have serious consequences for our water supply, and this government is about to pass yet another bill for interbasin transfer from the Athabasca River to the North Saskatchewan. To the Premier: is the Premier going to set limits on regional water use, or will we continue this unsustainable practice of pulling water out of the north for the south?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the interbasin transfer that the individual was talking about is with respect to treated water. In terms of the process and how hearings are held in terms of any transfer of water or allocation of water, I'll have the Minister of Environment answer because it is a very detailed public process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a guiding principle in making wise water decisions, and it relates to the need to know how much water we have and where it is. Unfortunately, the government continues to make decisions about water without the critical knowledge that we need. There is no complete mapping of aquifers in the Industrial Heartland, according to the department. We still don't know the relationship between surface and groundwater, and there's no independent assessment of cumulative impacts. To the Premier: will you continue to make decisions on massive upgraders without this key information?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member knows perfectly well that the government recently talked about and implemented, in fact, for the Athabasca and is in the process of doing the same for the North Saskatchewan an in-stream flow need that recognizes the quantity of water that is required to maintain the ecological viability of any particular water stream. The cumulative effects regime that is in place ensures that we do not exceed that minimum amount of in-stream flow need that is required to maintain the economic viability of any river in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As all of us know, Alberta is experiencing industrial development on a massive scale, particularly in this area, and the environmental consequences of unrestrained, unmanaged development are extremely serious. Already in the capital region there are water concerns, and this is before the extra upgraders. One of these concerns is that a major groundwater aquifer has been contaminated under the Industrial Heartland, the Beverly Channel. That aquifer has already had a significant degree of contamination. To the minister: does the minister have any scientific evidence to assure Albertans that this channel or others will not be further degraded by these 15 upgraders?

1:40

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this issue was discussed at the time that we talked about cumulative impact. We talked about the fact that there has been monitoring of this particular issue for some 30 years and that there has been no appreciable change and that the cumulative impact program that was put in place is designed to ensure just that: that there will be no significant impact on groundwater. That's why we talked about the need to manage the sulphur that will be stored as a result of the development in the area, to ensure that we maintain the viability of the groundwater in that particular part of the province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While the Premier claims to be raising royalty rates, his Minister of Finance is setting the stage for a bait and switch of epic proportion. Usually governments wait until after an election to break their promises, but just yesterday the Minister of Finance told big oil executives that the new royalty structure might have to be dramatically changed to suit the suits. The royalty consultations are still on but only behind closed doors and only with big oil. Ordinary Albertans are being left out in the cold. To the Premier: having already caved in to big oil by keeping Alberta's royalties among the lowest in the world, what assurances do the people of Alberta have that you won't sell them out again and give away even more of our wealth to your corporate backers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, a number of allegations that are totally wrong.

An Hon. Member: You always say that.

Mr. Stelmach: They say that I always say that. Well, because they always make those wrong allegations. That's why I'm saying that.

Our Justice minister has very publicly tabled lists of all of the individuals that he met with while we're listening to all Albertans with respect to the positions they've taken on the royalty regime. To say that we're meeting behind closed doors is wrong, simply wrong. Unless the member has something else to offer, have him ask another question because I'm not going to answer something that allegedly is totally wrong.

Mr. Mason: So allegedly totally wrong.

Well, Mr. Premier, it's well known that both the Conservatives and the Liberals collect significant political donations from big oil. With the Liberals saying virtually nothing about royalties, the Conservatives are scrambling to keep the donations coming. Now the Finance minister has suggested that the royalty review was due to Tory leadership candidates jumping on a bandwagon. On the one hand we have a Premier trying to convince Albertans that he's delivered a fair share, and on the other hand we have a Finance minister saying something else to the people who really pull the strings of this Tory government. My question is to the Premier. Why is he telling Albertans that he got it right when his Finance minister is telling big oil that maybe he got it wrong?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the Minister of Finance answer the latter part of that question.

This government is committed to the royalty framework. There is no part of it that's negotiable in terms of the 20 per cent. We are working with the oil industry. We're working with those that supply services. Once again, the implementation period is January 1, 2009, and for a very good reason: so that we have an opportunity to meet with all Albertans during this period of time to make sure that the implementation is done right.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, the Finance minister is suggesting that there will be dramatic changes to the royalty regime. I understand that he claims he's been misquoted. I would like to challenge the Minister of Finance to table the speech that he gave to the oil sands executives down in Calgary so that we can see what he really said.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd be more than happy to do that from a couple of points of view. First of all, the comments about change in the royalty review were in regard to a review of the royalties. It was put out that it was going to occur every five years. I suggested that the hon. Minister of Energy had been misquoted on that and that it is actually 10 years and beyond and that we hoped that this framework would last forever because there's price and volume sensitivity built into it.

Second point, Mr. Speaker. This was an oil sands conference that the media was at. This in no way was behind closed doors or anything at all like that, so I really don't know what the hon. member is talking about. Realistically, the hon. member should start attending some of these things as opposed to listening to CBC.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ethics in Government

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The smoke and mirrors continue, and the deception is greater than ever. Our Premier says he's going to post an imaginary guard at his front door and make sure any Albertan registers before he comes in and speaks with him. All the while his campaign donors and his buddies go in the back door and go golfing to discuss important matters. My question is to the Premier. If he wants to be open and honest with Albertans, will he record and report who he meets with and make it public to all Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, it's about minus 15, so I'm not going golfing today. I can assure you of that.

The other, Mr. Speaker, is that I made a commitment to all Albertans that we're going to pass two pieces of legislation, one very important, that's the lobbyists registration, and the conflicts of interest. Those bills are proceeding through the House. These are good bills, and I know that the House will support them and so will the hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, hopefully he's not going this evening on a flight south to do some golfing.

Mr. Speaker, the Lobbyists Act will be even less effective than the gun registry, and he might as well open up a volunteer gang registry. His own party members go out and solicit donations from school boards, counties, towns, and other things. Will the Premier send a strong message and stop having taxpayers fund party fundraisers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the hon. member is not aware of some of the clauses in the Municipal Government Act that do not allow municipal officials to use public funds to participate in any political function, to buy tickets. That not only includes the Progressive Conservative Party, the Liberals, and the NDs, but the Alberta Alliance, I believe, unless they play by different rules.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, he knows that he's been getting donations in there and has to keep returning them, so he needs to tell his party members.

Mr. Speaker, will the Premier please explain to Albertans how the Lobbyists Act is going to protect Albertans and the taxpayers who spend an exorbitant amount of money with such things as the Milk River bypass, where the meeting was held but it was discontinued?

The Speaker: No. We're not going to accept that question. Within a matter of minutes from now this particular bill will be in committee. We've had second reading. We're in committee stage. That's not an appropriate use of question period for this.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Land-use Development Framework

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quality of life depends on our commitment to protecting our land. Unfortunately, our need for oil makes us forget this. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: will you commit to a system for conservation offset to balance lands impacted by development?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to tell the House that very shortly I'll be bringing the land-use framework draft to the cabinet and to the Premier. Caucus will look at it over Christmas and January. We're bringing it forward. Those issues are addressed at length and quite specifically in the land-use framework.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even with the small amount of land that is protected, there are no standards to ensure that the provincial land is managed with the same level of care. To the same minister: will you implement a mandatory provincial parks management program to ensure that Alberta's land is used and maintained properly?

1:50

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of this government's management of public lands. In the green zone and forest areas our integrated land management is reducing the footprint, the impact, of forestry and oil and gas activities by significant amounts. The target for the integrated land management is in the 15 to 20 per cent reduction. Two of our pilot projects are achieving reductions of impact in the 40 to 50 per cent range. In Crown grazing leases in the white zone we have policies in place to protect native grasslands. So we have nothing to apologize for. I'm quite proud of our public land management.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Provincial parks and protected land improve the quality of life for Albertans. Unfortunately, other sectors within our economy such as oil and gas can impact the quality and sustainability of the protected land. To the same minister: when will we see a provincial land-use strategy?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I've already answered that question. You'll see a land-use framework in January.

I want to make it very clear that the object of the land-use framework is not to stop growth; it's to manage growth. This party understands that good environmental policy costs money. The best environmental regimes in the world are in wealthy, prosperous countries. That's what we're going to do: we're going to have a strong economy and a strong environmental regime.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Alberta Utilities Commission Act Amendments

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before question period I noted that the Minister of Energy tabled amendments to Bill 46, which will be discussed once they come before the Legislature during the committee phase later this session. I know that many of my constituents, especially those in rural areas, have expressed concerns about this legislation. I am hopeful that these amendments will address many of the concerns I've heard, and I would like more information from the Minister of Energy. To the Minister of Energy: can you advise the members of this Assembly how the legislation will address concerns raised about third-party groups who wish to intervene during regulatory or rate hearings?

The Speaker: Well, the hon. member would have heard my comments to the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner before. This had better be policy questions and nothing specific; otherwise, we're moving on.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, the government's policy with respect to the ongoing development of the infrastructure required for utilities in the province of Alberta is going to be very clearly laid out and debated as we go forward. As I'm sure you know, the amendments, of course, are imminent, and we will deal with them in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question for the same minister is: how will these amendments address landowners' concerns . . .

Dr. Taft: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prins: . . . particularly those who feel that they won't be able to participate in hearings?

The Speaker: Okay. There's a point of order on it. I'm not going to rule the question in order unless there's another item, so no. If you have a third one, go with it.

Mr. Prins: No. That's it.

The Speaker: Do you still have a point of order?

Dr. Taft: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Treasury Branches Investments

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was mentioned earlier today, the Alberta Treasury Branch is an institution that represents a pillar of financial strength and independence for both rural and urban Albertans alike. But I am very concerned about the losses reported and the investment strategies undertaken. The minister is concerned, too. I quote: I don't want them coming back and saying we've had to do another writedown. To the Minister of Finance: how can Albertans continue to put their trust in the Alberta Treasury Branches if even you are concerned that the actual loss is higher than what's being reported?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under the due diligence that I have as Minister of Finance I wanted to be absolutely sure that that was the correct number. I did not want the Alberta Treasury Branch to be coming back two or three or four months down the road and saying: by the way, there needs to be a further writedown. The asset-backed commercial paper has been a large issue in the banking industry, and we had to ensure that these were absolutely accurate numbers. I am confident in the Alberta Treasury Branch, that the numbers that were put forward by them were the correct numbers, that they had the due diligence applied to those numbers. Hopefully, that $79 million writedown will not be realized as a loss. Hopefully, the asset-backed commercial paper issue will turn around and will survive.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Investment in risky, asset-backed commercial papers is not normally recommended by financial consultants, so I do have concern that the board of directors for Alberta Treasury Branch would feel that it's an appropriate move. To the Minister of Finance. It is within your legislative powers to ensure prudent loan and investment standards. Can you explain why this $80 million loss happened? Should it not have been avoidable with these high-risk investments?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, obviously, there has been a writedown of $80 million, and as I stated previously, we would sooner not have had any writedown at all. Two years ago asset-backed commercial paper was looked upon as being a very positive investment with high returns, and indeed at some point in time it did give better returns than other investment modalities. This is something that has caught the whole financial industry in North America in investments that have decreased liquidity, which has caused significant issues with them. Is the Treasury Branch any worse off than any other financial industry? The answer is no. At 6 and a half per cent I am confident that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Yukon Territory the Official Opposition considered this type of risky investment of public money serious enough to call for an audit, and they got it. The Auditor General of Canada has agreed to investigate $37 million of public money invested in high-risk credit markets, so for us to call for an investigation regarding more than double that amount seems quite reasonable. To the Minister of Finance: will you be asking for a complete audit of the financial decision-making processes and risk management policies within the Alberta Treasury Branches to ensure that public money is not lost due to unnecessary financial gambles?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, once again this side of the House is way ahead of that side of the House. The Auditor General has been working very closely with the Treasury Branch and has been involved with the Treasury Branch right from the start on the asset-backed commercial paper issue, and indeed the $79 million was done in conjunction with the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Support for Seniors' Centres

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Council on Aging has partnered with the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, which I chair, to learn about the financial status of seniors' centres in the province. From our findings recommendations were developed to help the seniors' centres access the funding that some of them may need to remain open. More than 200 seniors' centres helped with this report. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Can the minister tell us what he's doing to address these recommendations, and when is he going to do them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd first like to thank the Alberta Council on Aging and the Seniors Advisory Council of Alberta for their outstanding work as they go around the province and meet with seniors and seniors' organizations to get the feedback and help us ensure that our programs do meet their needs. There are three recommendations in this report that came back to us on seniors' centres in particular. One is to provide more information on all the sources of financing and funding that could be available to them. We were happy to see that we could act on that quickly. The other is to get into some of the financing sources that seniors' centres could access. One of those in particular would be easy for us to start actively working on instantly. The other will take a little bit of time. Excellent report.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I thank the minister for the pat on the back, but I guess I'm looking for a more conclusive action. The FCSS funding of more than $60 million is available, but many of these seniors' centres complain that they don't get access to that funding. Can the minister explain why not?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, family and community support services actually provides substantial funding for seniors' organizations and family organizations throughout the province. About 80 per cent of those funds are provided from the provincial government, and about 20 per cent of the total funding from FCSS actually goes to seniors' organizations, many of them to seniors' centres. So they are actually accessing it. It was intended that this structure would be community based, that they could respond to the individual and local needs. In that respect, I am pleased to see that this program continues to be a viable support of seniors' centres and programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Surely, there are other sources of funding that seniors' centres can apply for. Utilities are an issue that our seniors' centres are all facing, probably the number one issue. Can the minister explain maybe other sources of revenue to volunteers for these centres?

2:00

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, one of the recommendations that they did give was to ensure that the new community spirit program for charitable giving be designed so that seniors' centres receive donations that would be eligible for matching funds from the community spirit fund. Now, that's been designed, and it's certainly working with our colleagues in the other departments to see that that would and could qualify. That is the intent of the spirit of giving. That is what makes our seniors' organizations very viable as a volunteer base and the charitable contributions and the support from the local people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Logging in Watersheds

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's approach to forest management on the eastern slopes of the Rockies/Kananaskis is unacceptable. It's an approach that privileges industry over environmental well-being in a vitally important region. Our concern is not with the forestry industry. It's with what this government allows the forestry industry to do and where they allow them to do it. Our problem is with a minister who thinks: "If you want to see real water problems, sit back and do nothing; let nature take its way. That will cause worse problems." To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: how can a minister in this portfolio be so afraid of nature?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we've explained to our friends across the way many times that water is the highest value that we manage for in our forestry in the eastern slopes. We work closely with our counterparts in British Columbia on both the pine beetle and the fire strategy.

Half their questions are: why don't we follow science? The other half is: let nature take its course. The message from British Columbia is very clear. They sat back and listened to messages like this in the late '90s. The result is that they lost 90,000 hectares of lodgepole pine. We're not going to make the mistakes that were made in British Columbia.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cheffins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the 2004 elections Spray Lakes Sawmills, the forestry company who has the forest management agreement in Kananaskis Country, gave $2,000 to the current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's election campaign. That same minister refuses to make public his Progressive Conservative leadership campaign contributions. There's a clear potential for a conflict of interest arising when the minister responsible for forest management agreements has a history of campaign support from the company holding the FMA for the most sensitive region in this province. The question needs to be asked. Will the minister release his donor list so that Albertans know the full situation here?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, Spray Lakes Sawmills has operated in the Cochrane and Kananaskis area since the 1940s. They are a family-owned local operation. If you visit Cochrane, I'll be happy to take you out there. The local community centre is donated by Spray Lakes. They're the kind of company that have helped build Alberta – north, south, and centre – and I'm very proud to have them as constituents.

Mr. Cheffins: Are you in a conflict or not is what we want to know. Continued clear-cutting in this area is having a negative impact on Calgary and the surrounding region's watershed. It is ruining the valued leisure and recreation resource in this area, and it hinders attempts at wildlife protection. Will the minister do the right thing: end these damaging logging practices and declare this entire area a fully protected provincial park?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, nothing will damage more the watershed and recreational value of the eastern slopes in Kananaskis Country than devastation by pine beetle and/or forest fire. That's what we're managing the forest for. That is our goal. I've met with the Friends of Kananaskis. We've discussed it. We share the same outcome. We see recreational watershed as the highest use. But the question is: how do you achieve that? Again, we've learned from British Columbia and we've learned from the Canadian Forest Service that sitting back and doing nothing is not the solution. It didn't work in British Columbia. It won't work here, and we won't make those mistakes again.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, according to CMHC the average two-bedroom apartment in Calgary is currently $1,075 to rent, and we know it's going up. Recent figures from Stats Canada show that over 20 per cent of Albertans earn less than $12 an hour. Those working for $12 an hour in the city of Calgary would have to work 69 hours a week to afford this average, ordinary apartment. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Could you explain to these people how the Alberta advantage is supposed to work for them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member very much knows, there is an influx of people into this province, and this government is very much trying to address the challenges of a hundred thousand people coming into Alberta and providing housing. We do have a program that is in place looking at providing 11,000 more units into the marketplace over five years. Also, Mr. Speaker, the philosophy of this government is very much to deal with the individuals that are in need, and through the rent supplement and other programs we are going in that direction.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess working 69 hours is okay by this minister.

The other figures from Stats Canada show that 36 per cent of Albertans earn less than $15 an hour. Again to the same minister. Also, at the same time housing prices are going up. Mortgage payments would cost twice as much as rent. House payments, if they went that route, would cost three times as much. They're between a rock and a hard place. What do we say to these hard-working Albertans who can't afford to buy, and the rent keeps going up. What is your message to them?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been working very cooperatively with the municipalities. In fact, in the city of Calgary through housing support this past year we have given them $63 million, and those municipalities have that autonomy to be able to choose how they feel that funding should be spent – whether it should be spent on rent supplement, whether it should be spent on new units, whether it should be spent with support from different agencies – to work for the betterment of their community.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're talking about hundreds of thousands of Albertans that aren't sharing in this so-called Alberta advantage. Apartments being turned into condos means this: what cost you $1,000 a month in rent now will cost you $2,000 a month for a condo plus $33,000 down payment. This is a crisis. My final question to this minister is simply this: does the minister finally get it? In the short run there are only two things you can do: rent increase guidelines and a moratorium on conversions. For the sake of thousands of Albertans, will you at least take a look at this and commit to it?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I do want to say that the Premier brought forward a task force that the hon. member sat on. The hon. member also brought forward in that task force some of the directions that this government is using at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you also that when we look at the delivery of services in the two communities, it is in conjunction with the municipalities; it is in conjunction with the agencies. All of these individuals are working in the best interests of where the needs are most needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Affordable Housing in Calgary

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the unprecedented population growth in Alberta, our Premier is right in putting affordable housing among the top priorities of our government. However, some of my constituents have expressed concern that they are struggling to find rental accommodation that is affordable for themselves and their families. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. With the mandate given to him by our Premier on affordable housing needs for my constituents, what is the minister doing to address this affordable issue in Calgary?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brought forward: what is the government doing? As I stated earlier, the government is looking at programs and assisting municipalities: $63 million for Calgary; $45 million for the city of Edmonton. In fact, recently $60 million was announced for rural Alberta to support units. Also, I want to say that, in fact, last Friday we had an announcement that was made for $450,000. That was a Canada-Alberta affordable housing project that was very much a cooperative effort between the municipality, the agency, and two levels of government.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that the housing demand is outstripping supply, is the government participating in any other projects to address affordable housing in Calgary?

Mr. Danyluk: Very much, Mr. Speaker. We very much look at what is needed the most, as I talked about before: the number of units, the rent supplement, the homeless and eviction prevention fund. We are bringing forward programs. But this is a challenge. We need to look at housing in different ways. We need to look at homelessness in different ways because this challenge is not going to go away. And we are doing exactly that. This Premier has brought forward a secretariat to end homelessness over 10 years.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Confined Feeding Operations

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his 2006-2007 annual report regarding confined feedlot operations the Auditor General noted that the Natural Resources Conservation Board "cannot demonstrate that it uses its resources effectively to manage the risk of environmental harm." The risk identification was incomplete, reports were lacking important information, and this issue was raised previously in the Auditor General's report in 2003-2004. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why has the NRCB not addressed the issue in the past three years?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I can only answer that question with respect to the last 11 months, and I can say that internal reforms are under way to address the Auditor General's concerns.

Mr. Bonko: Environmental risks at confined feedlot operations are a significant concern to Albertans. They've raised it in the past, and they continue to raise it, especially over this wintertime. When we receive calls and letters from outraged Albertans about filthy water and pouring manure on the land, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development said that these concerns should be taken up with the Natural Resources Conservation Board. Yet it's clearly not working. When is the minister going to oversee the NRCB and ensure that they're taking responsibility for these actions?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is now making baseless accusations against good people who work on the Natural Resources Conservation Board. He didn't give a single specific example. He's just making things up. I'm not going to answer questions like that. Thank you.

Mr. Bonko: Okay. The Auditor General has described very clearly what needs to be done to address environmental concerns at CFOs. To the minister: will he finally commit to fully implementing all of the recommendations outlined in the Auditor General's report 2006-2007? Is that specific enough?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, like the other departments of this government, we absolutely are committed to resolving any problems identified by the Auditor General, but we decide how to solve those problems.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Italian Consulate

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No longer than a month ago I had the honour of hosting the Italian ambassador to Canada here in Edmonton. During our discussions many areas of potential co-operation were explored. Learning of the imminent closure of the consulate definitely was bad news not only to me but to all Alberta Italians. My question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What impact, Mr. Minister, will the closure have on Edmonton and Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for the excellent work he's been doing here rallying the troops in terms of the Italian community, with over 70,000 proudly living here in Edmonton.

I could give you an example. Did you know that Italy is one of the top 10 exporters, of course, that Alberta deals with, which is very important? The employment opportunities, the tremendous jobs that are provided here, and also the tremendous traditional value that Italians have brought to Edmonton are significant not only to this city but to all of the province of Alberta. I want to say that we are working very closely with the consul general relative to keeping the office open.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: since the value, not only economic but also cultural value, is of such paramount importance to this province, what is the minister doing to prevent the closure of the consulate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say what I am doing and this government is doing is. I tabled in this Assembly earlier today a letter which was sent on behalf of our government to His Excellency Ambassador Gabriele Sardo in Ottawa. We're encouraging him to meet with us as well and are also reminding him of excellent examples of Italian companies who are doing work, in fact, in my own constituency of Fort McMurray, where over half a billion dollars are being spent. That is being done by Snamprogetti, which is, as you know, an environmental company that is building three hydrotreatment plants in Fort McMurray. It's another example of Italians who are working with their expertise here in our province, and we welcome it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Energy Efficiency in Government Vehicles

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has adopted the lead filter standards to reduce emissions in public buildings, yet this government seems to lack an implementation strategy to modernize its vehicle fleet in a similar way. Can the Deputy Premier explain to Albertans why similar steps have not been taken to reduce vehicle emissions?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue with respect to emissions of the government fleet is something that came up quite frequently during the public discussions we had on climate change this summer. I can advise the member that it's the government's intention to respond not only to that issue but to a number of other issues as we bring forward our updated climate change strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister, then. Alberta currently produces the bulk of Canada's fossil fuel emissions. The minister should know that at present technology is available to reduce automotive emissions and is being deployed in provincial service fleets in jurisdictions like British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Ontario. To the minister: will the government commit to making our provincial vehicle fleet more energy efficient and less polluting? I appreciate the answer. My question, then, is: when?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of issues. There's the government fleet of vehicles, and then there's the broader perspective of vehicles at large. There are two issues related to this. One is that older vehicles tend to be much more emitting than the newer vehicles, so as the vehicle fleet in Alberta begins to move into newer vehicles, there will be a natural improvement. We've also been working with CASA, and they'll be presenting at their next board meeting, on December 6, a program that will include incentives, antitampering, a hotline for visible emitters, and inspection and maintenance issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was mostly interested in the government fleet itself, automobiles that are under the control of this government. The Alberta Liberal caucus has always viewed fleet conversion as a measure for reducing emissions and mitigating environmental stresses: things like hybrid, ethanol, or NGVs, for example. The government should lead by example and demonstrate its commitment to reducing emissions. Can we expect the same from this government, or will they continue to be oblivious and resistant to the realities of climate change?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government should lead by example too. That's why I as the Minister of Environment am leading by example by buying and using and driving a hybrid vehicle, and I'm encouraging all others in government to do the same. In answer to the first question, I answered that clearly this is something that the government needs to take under consideration. At times it is appropriate. At other times the use of hybrid vehicles may not be available to serve all needs, but clearly that's the direction we should be heading in.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 82 questions and responses today.

On a lighter note I would like all to know that, actually, the Sergeant-at-Arms leads all of us by example. He rides a bicycle to work every day.

Speaker's Ruling Use of Laptop in the Chamber

The Speaker: Now, hon. members, during Oral Question Period I received a number of notes with respect to an item that I think I have to clarify. In the letter that I sent to all hon. members March 5, 2007, with respect to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, 20 different items were covered. One was called 17, Laptop Computers in the Chamber. Essentially, my request was that laptops are not to be used during the question period or on ceremonial occasions. Today when we had Members' Statements the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow used not a laptop but a notebook. That brought forth a number of notes. So a dutiful investigation was conducted during Oral Question Period, and the response was that, yes, a notebook was held in the left hand and was read from. That is a no-no. That violates the rules of the Assembly. I suspect that in ensuing months and in ensuing years there will be another technological innovation that will come forward, but that is generally covered under the whole guise of the laptop definition.

There was no point of order.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill Pr. 1 CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to stand and make a few comments with respect to Bill Pr. 1, CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act. This bill essentially is an effort by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to establish a centre which has a very, very good purpose. The bill itself sets out the purpose on page 2, section 3, where it says:

The objects of the Centre are to use the funds entrusted to it to establish, construct and operate an international centre for the co-ordination and advancement of public safety, intelligence gathering and government response related to cybercrimes such as child exploitation, financial systems fraud, threats to critical infrastructure and intellectual property and identity theft.

I can tell you that all of those threats, all of those crimes are indeed serious crimes that we are facing today.

I will use the example of child exploitation to give you some example of how it has grown over the last handful of years. In 2003 Alberta established its first specialized prosecutor in the area of Internet child exploitation. In 2003-2004 throughout Canada there were something in the order of 60 prosecutions of child exploitation involving the Internet, child pornography, and such. I can tell you that it has grown, Mr. Chairman, so that today here in Alberta alone we have in excess of 60 cases before the courts. In other words, one jurisdiction, this jurisdiction, has the total that there was in 2003 throughout Canada, and we now have four dedicated prosecutors in this specific area dealing with nothing else. All I'm talking about, so we're absolutely clear, is the one crime of several that are mentioned here, namely child exploitation.

The object of CyberPol is also to deal with financial systems fraud, which is huge, threats to critical infrastructure, intellectual property, and identity theft, which are also huge. Indeed, the federal government has just recognized that by introducing legislation in this session to enhance the criminal law with respect to identity theft. So I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that this is indeed very, very important work that the CyberPol centre proposes to do.

This government is completely supportive of this initiative. We think it's a wonderful initiative. This initiative, however, is in its very, very early days. I know that people have been working hard, the people who are behind it, in trying to raise dollars to support a business case, to support a feasibility study, and, indeed, have I believe received funding from the city of Calgary and also from the federal government. We as a province are prepared to provide funding for a feasibility study and a business plan, and I believe that the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security will be able to speak to that.

What I want to say today to the Assembly is that the government is supportive of this idea. I personally as the Minister of Justice and Attorney General see this as a potential incredibly important tool in dealing with Internet-based crime, which is a proliferation and which requires incredible skill, which, candidly, we do not have enough of at this particular point in time either in Canada or in Alberta.

Furthermore, this is an initiative which would see CyberPol here in the province of Alberta, and we would be able to provide guidance and leadership, not only for all of Canada but also for North America and, indeed, probably Europe, the way the proposal is being structured.

We need to know the answers to a number of questions before we determine what type of vehicle is appropriate for the centre. What we have in this particular act, Mr. Chairman, is essentially a corporation by private bill, and that is what it is trying to do. I think the issue here that I want everybody who is interested in this to understand is not a lack of support by the government – we have complete support for the idea – but, rather, the idea of committing to this particular vehicle today when a number of questions have not been answered. Those questions, I respectfully submit, require a business case and feasibility study to be done so that they can be answered. We need to clarify roles, functions, mandates, and day-to-day operations of the centre.

Some of the specific questions, I think, that need to be addressed are: should the centre have the authority of a law enforcement agency? Should there be government oversight of the centre? Should the centre be a public body for the purposes of FOIP? With regard to the sharing of information, it's unclear whether the centre itself, as opposed to law enforcement agencies that work within the building provided by the centre, will actually collect or have custody and control of any personal information which it could share. I know that there has been some guidance provided by the FOIP commissioner with respect to this particular bill. When I read it, I could tell that there were a number of questions that were left unanswered. Obviously, whatever goes forward will have to comply with the laws of Alberta and Canada as appropriate.

Other structures that can be considered for an organization like this are quite numerous. We have the possibility of a society under the Societies Act of Alberta. We have the possibility of a nonprofit corporation under part 9 of the Companies Act of Alberta, a for-profit corporation established under the Business Corporations Act of Alberta, a nonprofit corporation established pursuant to the Canadian Corporations Act, a statutory corporation pursuant to a private act, and a statutory corporation pursuant to a private member's or government bill. Of course, Bill Pr. 1 is the statutory corporation pursuant to a private member's bill.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the government I wish to say that we are supportive of this particular program. We are prepared to provide funding with respect to a feasibility study with respect to some business planning. That is the responsibility of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, and he will have further to say about that in due course. We firmly believe that more work needs to be done there before we can proceed with this particular bill today or, perhaps, at all. Once we have more information with respect to the matter, it may be that a different vehicle, a different corporation will be appropriate for the go-forward on this.

For the time being, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move that the debate on the matter be adjourned.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1
Lobbyists Act

The Chair: Are there any amendments, comments, or questions to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, indeed, Mr. Chairman. I do have an amendment, and I have sent it to the table already. It's held by the table under the heading of L1.

The Chair: We will just allow the pages a moment to distribute it, and we will refer to this amendment as amendment A3.

Okay, hon. member, you may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, as the House is aware, I have worked closely with the not-for-profit sector in trying to make sure their voice is heard in this Assembly on the debate around the Lobbyists Act. This is one of the things that they would really like to see happen.

I know it's a bit unusual because what the amendment is asking is under the Regulations section, which is section 20, appearing on page 19 of the original bill. They're asking that a subsection be added in that says, "Any exercise of the above regulatory powers must involve consultation with the voluntary sector to address adverse impacts of any regulation." What they're really seeking here – and I, obviously, agree with them because I've brought forward the amendment – is to try and enshrine a consultation process with the members of the not-for-profit sector when regulations are being made or changed for this Lobbyists Act.

Now, for those of you that have been following along with this debate, you'll know that a fairly large group that was classified under the not-for-profit sector has been excluded now from the effects of the Lobbyists Act. One might say: well, why, then, are you still trying to make sure that this group is being consulted under regulatory changes? The reason is because there's still a number of not-for-profit organizations that are captured under the Lobbyists Act, and regulations that will fine-tune the act will likely affect that sector.

Let me give you an example. One of the qualifiers, criteria, or tests in the act is around whether you're paid or not paid. But there is a clause in there that talks about being paid in other ways, and in the voluntary sector, charitable sector, no, we don't pay our volunteers – and we certainly rely on volunteers – but we do try and recognize them in other ways. Some organizations for their annual general meeting pay for all their members and their spouses to go to a retreat, which may well be in quite a nice place and might be regarded by some people as a darn nice treat. What's that worth? Should that be counted as part of a payment, perhaps?

If the government starts to make regulations through this Lobbyists Act that will reflect upon that NGO sector, sooner or later that is also going to travel into the part of the NGO sector that has now been exempted out of this bill. I think it's important that the NGO sector is included with some sort of consultation because what happens here is really going to affect them in a very immediate and visceral way. So the amendment is asking that that consultation be enshrined.

I'm noticing that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed is involved in a very energetic conversation, and I'm wondering if, perhaps, he and his colleague might like to step outside with it. I'm sure he wants to keep going with it, but maybe he could take himself outside. I'd appreciate that.

I've done the example of the trip, for example, for the individual and a spouse, but at what point do you include gifts? Is there a value? For example, often at a volunteer appreciation night volunteers will be given a token. They'll be given a coffee mug, let's say, so everybody gets a coffee mug. All right. Do we count that as payment? I'll put that in quotes. All right. The government may decide that a $5 coffee mug is indeed deemed to be payment. Okay. Fine. But what about the volunteers who didn't come to the appreciation night and didn't get their coffee mug? What happens to them? Are they now a different kind of volunteer? Are they an uncompensated volunteer versus a compensated volunteer? Do we now treat them differently in what they're doing?

I think it's important that we recognize that there are still a lot of details to be worked out in this act, and I think it's important that the NGO sector is included in what happens, that they're consulted. There's no expectation here that they would have a veto power, that they would somehow dictate what was happening, but they really want to know what is going on, and they want to be consulted in how these regulations come forward.

That is the essence of this particular amendment. I hope I have explained it satisfactorily, but I would like to get all of my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly to support it. I realize it's a bit unusual. I'm the one that's usually standing up here shaking my finger at the government, saying, "Thou shall not make regulations behind closed doors," and now I appear to be saying, "You can make regulations behind closed doors if you consult the group that is going to be affected by it." I suppose it could be read that way.

I still am no keener on having regulations developed as part of legislation than I was before, but I am speaking on behalf of a group that is very concerned about how this will affect them, and they want to make sure that they will be consulted. Without it being in the legislation, that consultation – you know, this minister, I'm sure, would say: absolutely. He would do that, but ministers turn over every two years. We have no guarantee that the next one or the next one or three or four down the road would honour that same commitment that the first one might have. This is trying to make sure that we have an ongoing requirement that that sector is consulted and consulted in a thorough way.

Having said that, I'm not sure if I have a few members who want to speak in support of it – I hope so – but I do urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think this amendment is extremely well intentioned, but I would ask that the House not support it. This would set, perhaps, a potential precedent for suggesting that in every act which has regulations, there would be a litany put into the act of who should be consulted before regulations be promulgated. The reality is, of course, that there is consultation before regulations go forward, but more than that, we now have in this House a process which the House can avail itself of with the all-party committees, where a minister can in fact refer potential regulations to a committee for review ahead of time, or the committee can determine that it wants to review the regulations once they're passed. So there are opportunities in the area of regulations which should have greater public scrutiny or discussion, or if there are concerns about them, there are opportunities for those to be determined.

Again, I understand the sentiment behind this. Certainly, the issue that the hon. member is concerned about and one that I and many members, if not all members of the House, are concerned about is that we do not want to put undue regulation, undue framework around voluntary organizations that are doing wonderful things in our communities and our province to build our province.

As I said when I spoke to another amendment earlier, we already find ourselves in a position where because of the accountability frameworks that are in place, we find voluntary organizations spending a lot of their time and effort and passion applying for grant money and a lot of their time and effort and passion accounting for the grant money and some of that time running bingo's and fundraisers so they can actually fund their activities and not enough time actually doing the activity that the people are passionate about. If there's anything we should do, it should be to unleash those organizations so that they can actually expend their passions on the good works in the community.

We probably can't get there from here right away because we have this fondness for accountability structures. Even the hon. Minister of Employment, Industry and Immigration brought in a program this year for the homeless and eviction fund. I thought it was a brilliant program because at the front end of it it basically said that we're not going to put an undue amount of strictures around it. We're going to let the front-end people use their judgment and make the expenditures that are necessary to help people.

The first piece that comes back, of course, is a question of: "Are you giving some money to people who shouldn't get it? How can you be accountable if there aren't more rules?" All of those sorts of issues. Well, we shouldn't be doing that, and we shouldn't be doing that particularly to volunteer organizations, wasting their time and effort on an overabundance of accountability. I'm afraid that with this amendment we're going to actually add to that burden.

All sides of this House agree, I think it's fair to say, that voluntary organizations and volunteers are very important to the fabric of our community, and we shouldn't unduly restrict them. Obviously, the concern about regulations under this act is that you don't want unintended consequences. You don't want to catch volunteers. I think that that's understood in terms of any regulation that comes forward. There needs to be discussion with affected parties before they're promulgated, but if by chance you miss that or if by chance there's an unintended consequence, there's a venue for reviewing those regulations at our all-party committees. I would suggest that that's a more appropriate route to go.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry, I can't remember the rules, which I shouldn't be admitting, but may I speak again in an amendment without closing the debate?

The Chair: We're in committee. You can rise as often as you wish.

Ms Blakeman: We're in committee. Thank you. Just double-checking.

I hear what the minister is saying, and I understand that. My only caution about that is the same concern I've had all the way along about that. It's government controlled. It's the minister supported by a majority government who will vote a referral of something to a policy field committee, and/or the policy field committees are set up with a majority of government members on the committee itself. So once again this agenda is controlled by government, and a non-for-profit representative or an individual not-for-profit has no way of getting an agenda item up in front of one of those policy field committees without convincing the majority of the government members to in fact support it.

I would agree with the minister except for that process itself has problems in it. That's my argument around this. I'm sorry, I don't accept that that is a valid replacement for actually putting it in the legislation because, once again, it continues to be controlled by government.

I guess what I could say is, you know: how happy would the government members of today feel if members on this side formed the government in a few months and they start controlling all of those committee memberships? How pleased are they going to be at that point with the government controlling all of it? I think the answer is: not so much. So you can understand my small alarm at hearing that the way that that sector could try and be involved in consultations is depending on a majority of government members to allow it onto the policy field committees.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just rise to briefly comment and support the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Clearly, the major issues that we've heard about in Bill 1 are from nongovernment organizations, nonprofit organizations, who are deeply concerned that the existing bill will seriously impact their sense of freedom and their security about lobbying, and at the same time they're being excluded in some areas where they feel very powerfully the need to participate.

Examples abound in our recent history of NGOs having to respond to fairly draconian changes in the regulations or in the implementation of guidelines, and as the minister himself has stated, there are tremendous implications if there are fines or if there are found to be irregularities according to this new act.

This, I think, will help us to encourage meaningful consultation. It will enable nongovernment organizations to feel that they are being meaningfully involved in decisions that ultimately will affect their viability and their ability to do the good work that they have been doing. There is no evidence that this would be seriously delaying or denying any of the good purposes of a lobbyist act.

I think, in short, that this will satisfy a significant number of nonprofit organizations particularly and make it much more accountable, much more democratic, and much more likely to include relevant and important considerations in government.

I'll be supporting this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, will be supporting this amendment. With respect to what the hon. health minister and Government House Leader had to say in arguing against this amendment, the sense that I have from the voluntary sector people that I know is that they would be quite happy to take a few minutes out of their day from time to time to be consulted by the government over the exercise of these regulatory powers.

The Government House Leader made some very valid points about the stress that's put on voluntary sector people and organizations following the rules of accountability and so on and so forth. That is true: it does sometimes very much get in the way of those volunteers' ability to do what their passion is. But this amendment, I believe, Mr. Chair, speaks to part of their passion and their need to be informed and be part of the process, so I will be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of the amendment introduced by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Consultation with the voluntary sector to address the adverse impacts of any regulation is very important. Recently, you know, so many NGOs, the charitable organizations, and volunteer organizations in my constituency approached me, and they think this is not fair. They shouldn't be exempted, and they said to voice their concern in the Legislature, so that's the reason I'm supporting this amendment. I think we shouldn't exempt them from the Lobbyists Act. I know lobbying itself is not a bad thing, but excluding important institutions, especially those volunteers – we have I think 3 million volunteers working all over Canada. I don't know the exact number of volunteers in Alberta, but they are doing a wonderful job for our community, and they shouldn't be exempted. We should consider them as a servant, just like all the MLAs and Members of Parliament and some other elected officials.

Thank you very much.

2:50

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A1?

Ms Blakeman: No. A3.

The Chair: A3. Thank you for that, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a second amendment, that I have already sent to the table in a package labelled L2. If you would be so kind as to ask the pages to distribute that at this time.

The Chair: We will refer to this as amendment A4, and we will just allow a moment to have them distributed.

I believe you can proceed, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment A4 is striking two sections in each of two schedules. In schedule 1, which is page 21, under section 1(3)(c) it's striking the section that says, "Any individual who formerly occupied a prescribed position with a prescribed Provincial entity." That's actually repeated under schedule 2 and appears on page 25, and exactly the same clause is struck again. What these are definitions, essentially. Earlier in schedule 1 it says, "For the purpose of section 2(1) of this Schedule, 'former public office holder' means," and then it gives a long list.

I've already talked about how the face of volunteerism is changing in our province. We've long ago left behind the 1950s, when all of the nice housewives were available during the day to go out and volunteer for all kinds of good works. We are now dealing, for the most part, with families where two parents are working, where children are very involved in a number of activities – parents actually have to volunteer for those activities – so the availability of people's time and dedication and resources as well, if we're talking about donating money, is really quite precious. The concern that was voiced to me was that if we describe people that used to hold a position with a provincial entity as being named under one of the groups of people with whom lobbyists couldn't associate, we've essentially said that someone that used to work for the Alberta Mental Health Board, for example, couldn't volunteer.

That, I think, could be problematic for us. We don't have a huge pool of volunteers to pull from. We're not New York. We don't have millions of people that we could use as a volunteer pool. We're a lot smaller than that. It's harder to find volunteers with expertise in certain areas. I think what we've done here is we've discouraged or in some cases made it wrong to allow someone who used to hold a position with a provincial government entity to be involved with a volunteer organization.

Now, we have exempted the charities and sort of the good-works, charitable groups out of this, but you are still dealing with things like professional associations, chambers of commerce, the Alberta Medical Association, who was in here today, business groups, umbrella associations, unions, for example. They are still looking for volunteers and people willing to serve in their executive positions as well. Especially when you start looking at some of the groups that need a specialized interest and a specialized background – at least it would be a really steep learning curve for somebody else to pick it all up – I wonder if it's really advisable for us to be cutting out people who may have gained their expertise by working for a provincial entity or, more to the point, formerly working for a provincial entity. The request was made to me to see if we couldn't agree to exempt those individuals in this one particular section, which would open up that pool of volunteers. I agree, and I was clearly willing to bring the amendment forward and to argue for it.

I hope that others in the House will see how difficult it can be to recruit volunteers in this day and age, especially when we're looking at specialized or niche groups, where the hope is that there would be some kind of knowledge around the organization from the people who become involved with it, especially in executive positions. I mean, our civil service is not huge, but it's a good pool of volunteers for us to be pulling from, and to say that anyone that formerly worked for a provincial entity is out, I think we've narrowed that pool of experts that might be able to contribute by quite a bit.

I'm encouraging members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I don't really have a lot to add except that I'm certainly supportive of this amendment and would echo the comments that have been made by my colleague from Edmonton-Centre, particularly when it comes to striking section 1(3)(c): "Any individual who formerly occupied a prescribed position with a prescribed Provincial entity." As was pointed out, this could encompass so very, very many individuals and, in fact, limit the pool of those who might be willing to serve in this capacity.

A number of my caucus colleagues and I were recently in Grande Prairie, and we met with the Grande Prairie and region chambers of commerce. This was one of the concerns that they raised, actually, so I'm going to guess that if the Grande Prairie chambers of commerce have that concern – and I know that they do a lot of work with the Alberta chamber – this is something that chambers of commerce across the province would share with many, many others. As my colleague from Edmonton-Centre was just whispering in my ear: the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. It goes on and on and on. In fact, I can think of several examples: certainly, with the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, people that work for that entity now who previously worked with provincial government entities. I can think of similar examples with the Insurance Bureau of Canada, and I'm sure the list is endless, Mr. Chairman.

Indeed, I think this is probably more far reaching than was contemplated when the act was first drafted. I think it would be the appropriate thing to strike these two sections from the proposed legislation, as is being suggested by this amendment. I do support it, and I would urge all of my colleagues in the Legislature to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I at first glance cannot accept this amendment. We had a discussion with the Ethics Commissioner when we looked at that, and we were trying to expand who should be included in terms of conflict of interest, a cooling-off period. We eventually moved that it wasn't only cabinet ministers that had this sort of influence; it was people that worked, say, in the Premier's office and for some of the cabinet ministers. If we look at the previous bill, we were trying to do that. Here we seem to be lessening or watering down some of the impacts of people that would have that sort of influence. It's not that they can't do it forever, Mr. Chairman; it's a cooling-off period. These people could have as much power.

In other words, I'm worried about moving on the Lobbyists Act and watering it down as we go along to the point where it might be meaningless. I think that any individual who formerly occupied a prescribed position – we've already taken out the voluntary sector generally, so it's not going to impact them. So it's going to be precisely, it seems to me, the people that we might want to know are lobbying the government.

You know, unless somebody can tell me differently, I see no reason why we should not have that in (c). If this was a concern, it should have been dealt with. Probably the people that had more time to look at it were the people in the policy field committee. They must have thought it was important for a reason. Unless something I'm missing totally jumps out at me, I think that's why you want those particular people there, because they may have influence. We want to know who's talking to government. It's not that they can't talk to government. But who is talking to them? That's the whole point of a lobbyist registry.

Again, I accept the argument from the nonprofit sector, but we have already taken them out of the picture. So who else is left, Mr. Chairman? We are concerned that there are some people from some of these groups that are mentioned. I'd like to know if they're talking to the government. That's precisely what a lobbyist registry is. Not that it's illegal or anything else, just that we know who's talking to them. That's the whole purpose of the Lobbyists Act, Bill 1.

I certainly would not support removing 1(c) from this act. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A4?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We're back talking to Bill 1. Bill 1, as you know, Mr. Chairman, was the flagship bill for this legislative session. It was referred, as you know, to one of the four standing policy field committees, which met over the summer a number of times and invited feedback and input from members of the public, identified stakeholders. They did in fact come back to us with recommendations both in written submissions and also in oral presentations when they appeared before the committee. Some of the recommendations were dealt with earlier in the Assembly, and now we're talking to the bill itself.

Let me tell you a bit of history from the committee, Mr. Chairman. You don't need me to remind you because you sat on the committee as well. We had a fairly extensive discussion in the committee about the words "to communicate" with a public office holder, and we spent some time trying to narrow it down and define what constitutes communication. It was an area where the committee actually had some serious discussions and serious thought on the idea that lobbying in itself, as you know and agree, is not forbidden. It is not prohibited. Lobbying is something that goes on and should be allowed to continue to go on. However, we wanted to give clarity to the word "lobbying."

We arrived at the destination, if you will, that lobbying is basically attempting to do two things. You're either attempting to influence policy or you're attempting to influence funding decisions, maybe securing funds for your organization or, you know, setting policy where funds can and should be allocated over where funds cannot and should not be allocated. So policy decisions and funding decisions.

Now, if I can draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to page 3 of the proposed act, that's the section that talks about the interpretation. What does the act do? What does the act attempt to accomplish? Section 1(1)(e) talks about lobbying, and it says here as it's worded: "lobby" means, subject to section 3(2),

- (i) in relation to either a consultant lobbyist or an organization lobbyist, to communicate with a public office holder in an attempt to influence.

Then it lists various areas from section (A) all the way to section (G), talking about the development of any legislative proposal, the introduction of any bill or resolution, the development or the enactment of any regulation or any order in council, the awarding of a grant, a decision by Executive Council, and so on and so forth.

Mr. Chairman, I want to offer that clarity, building on the excellent discussions and presentations we had in the Standing Committee on Government Services, and as such I am proposing an amendment, which I have already delivered to the table. I'll await its distribution.

The Chair: We'll refer to that amendment as amendment A5.

You may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As hon. members know, the registrar and the Ethics Commissioner expect the registry to be up and running fairly soon after this bill passes. If we consider the fines and we consider breaches of the act, somebody who fails to register will be held accountable. Somebody who registers and fails to report will be held accountable. What this amendment is trying to do is tighten the bill a little more and offer that clarity which I talked about. Somebody might appear before the Ethics Commissioner or a court of law even and say: "Mr. Ethics Commissioner or Your Honour, I was not attempting to influence any of these areas. I was basically stating my mind. I was making an expression. I was making a statement." I am afraid that this might be used by some people who maliciously and intentionally break the law, basically, and breach the act by saying: I was not attempting to influence; I was basically making an observation or making a comment.

So I think that this amendment should be agreeable to all members of the House. It is basically making a good bill even better. It is tightening it up in such a way that if you consider this a loophole, it is not going to be available for those people who maliciously want to break the law, maliciously want to circumvent or sidestep the lobbyist registry, that we're all eager to have passed and have implemented, you know, in this Assembly.

Mr. Chairman, I invite comment, and I'm hoping that members of this Assembly are going to agree to this amendment and help make a good bill even better.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, am pleased to stand to address amendment A5 to Bill 1, and I also served on that committee, as you are aware, I'm sure. I think that this is a very good amendment. I believe that it does tighten it up, as my hon. colleague has noted, because to my mind it really does make it too easy to get around what really should be the intent. The intent is that if you are lobbying or you're speaking to someone, the information that should be available is: who spoke to whom, and what did they talk about? I don't think that the details of that conversation are particularly important, but it really has to be registered at some point in time. So that's why I believe that the words "in an attempt to influence" make it too easy.

One of the things that came up in the committee was that we spoke about transparency, openness, and accountability. I believe that the way it sits, it will not address those three parameters that really should be respected in this process. We talked about something that was interesting in a way, and it was called reverse onus, and that was going to be about who actually was responsible. This is a conversation that I'm hoping will still come up at a later date. I believe that if we had that reverse onus, where in fact the onus is on the elected official to say whom they've spoken with, where they spoke to them, and what they spoke about, it would take away all of these abilities or intents for someone who wants to get around this bill.

So for those reasons I'm supporting this amendment. I hope that the House has paid attention to why they should be supporting it, and therefore I will.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to amendment A5, which I think does exactly what the member has indicated. I think we would be wise to support this amendment because we want to give clarification to the whole issue of lobbyists. We want to tighten up the regulations around lobbyists, and we want to be seen doing that as well. I think this does both. I think it tightens up the regulations in a couple of key areas, and it is seen to do that as well and sends a powerful message to the people of Alberta that their provincial government is serious about a lobbyist registry act.

I think that, quite frankly, when you look at the substance of the amendment, which is to strike out the phrase “in an attempt to influence” and substitute the phrase “with regard to,” and then you read it the way that the legislation would read, it makes a lot of sense in regard to that. So if the amendment were adopted, it would say, for instance:

“lobby” means, subject to section 3(2),

- (i) in relation to either a consultant lobbyist or an organization lobbyist, to communicate with a public office holder with regard to
 - (A) the development of any legislative proposal.

I could go on because there are a number of sections there, obviously, as opposed to reading: “in an attempt to influence” the development of that legislative proposal, et cetera, et cetera.

Again in subclause (B):

- (ii) only in relation to a consultant lobbyist . . .
 - (B) to communicate with a public office holder with regard to the awarding of any contract by or on behalf of the Government or a prescribed Provincial entity.

This reads considerably more strongly than “in an attempt to influence the awarding of any contract.”

My colleague from Edmonton-McClung I think is right that when you phrase it in terms of an attempt or an intent to influence, you leave a very large amount of wiggle room for the alleged lobbyist, if he’s called on it, to say: well, no, that wasn’t my intention at all; I wasn’t really trying to do that. I think that if you change the language to “with regard to,” that makes it good and clear to everybody – to prospective lobbyists, to lobbyists registered and not yet registered, to anybody considering getting into the lobbyist business, to MLAs, to cabinet ministers, to anyone involved in the process of government – what the expectations are around that. Clarity like that I think makes for better legislation.

So, Mr. Chair, I’ll be happy to support amendment A5 when it comes to a vote. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This particular amendment I will support because I think it makes good sense. I don’t know how you would talk about a, b, c, d, and e, the semantics. You say: I want to talk to you, but I don’t want to influence you. I think this makes it clear, and I hope the government would take a look at it. If you’re going to discuss these matters, the semantics are fairly important because, as I say, the person said: I just happened to be chatting with the minister about this, but I didn’t really influence him or try to influence him.

Now, I don’t know how you have a discussion about a bill or any other matter coming from the government without having some bias towards it, and I think this amendment says that discussion about this – and we don’t get into that debate about what’s an attempt to influence or not – about a particular bill or resolution or anything coming from an order in council: if there’s been that discussion and you’re a lobbyist, we should know about it, plain and simple. So I think this does add to the bill, and I will support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just briefly, I would like to point out that this amendment was approved by Parliamentary Counsel on the 20th of March 2007. Of course, you will understand that that was actually in advance of Bill 1 having been referred to the policy field committees. In fact, I’m quite sure it was the first bill that was ever referred to the policy field committee on government services.

I think it’s important to note that because what that shows me is that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung actually had these concerns way back in the spring, prior to any discussion ever having taken place at the policy field committee. I know that in speaking to my colleague from Edmonton-McClung and other members who sat on the committee that this particular issue, this particular wording was discussed at length during the meetings of that Government Services Committee and apparently never really came to any full resolution, certainly not to the satisfaction of the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

You know, what we’re doing here when we debate these individual amendments, of course, as has been discussed previously, is trying to make what we believe is a good bill even better, even stronger. I just feel that we leave too many doors open too far when we don’t nail down the wording exactly.

If what we really mean is that an individual has to register as a lobbyist if they’re discussing a particular issue with a minister, we don’t mean whether or not they were attempting to influence because if they’re required to register as a lobbyist and they’re having the discussion on a particular issue with a minister, as an example, clearly that’s why they’re doing it. They’re not chatting over coffee. This is an issue that is important to the lobbyist. It’s important to the relative minister or whoever it might be that is being lobbied. To leave the door open by saying that it would only qualify under this legislation if, in fact, there was an attempt being made to influence is just a little too broad.

In the last amendment I discussed how I didn’t feel that when the drafters of the bill drafted the act, they intended it to be that broad. In this case I would have to think that the drafters of the legislation actually intended it to be as broad as this amendment contemplates, and narrowing the wording to simply talk about an attempt to influence I believe doesn’t capture the intent of the Premier when he first contemplated bringing forward a lobbyist act. And I don’t believe it captures the intent of the drafters of the bill when they put it together.

I, too, speak strongly in support of this amendment, and I would encourage all hon. members to support it as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It’s my great honour to rise and speak in support of amendment A5. If we really want to strengthen Bill 1, which is a good bill, we must consider the intention of the lobbyist. In this amendment the Member for Edmonton-McClung is trying to say that we should clarify the difference between intention and influence. It’s very important because with this amendment we will be able to clarify more about intention and influence. If we really want to strengthen this bill, we should clearly make important changes.

This amendment is very important. This definitely will make this bill even better. That’s the reason I support this, Mr. Chairman. If we find out the difference between intention and influence, we definitely will be able to see the intention of people who come and see the government, who apply for grants, or who apply for contracts. The public has every right to know. We will definitely, you know, strengthen this bill with this amendment.

Thank you.

Second Reading

Bill 50
Health Professions Statutes
Amendment Act, 2007 (No. 2)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to commence debate on Bill 50, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007 (No. 2), in second reading.

This bill proposes an amendment to the Health Professions Act and the Medical Profession Act. The amendment extends liability protection for Alberta health care professionals who conduct competency assessments of health care professionals who are educated in other provinces or in other countries. A competency assessment must be completed before these health care professionals are allowed to practise in Alberta to ensure that they have the proper credentials and expertise to treat patients safely and proficiently.

The Deputy Speaker: You're going to move this, are you?

Mrs. Jablonski: Yes, I am. Thank you. I am moving this bill in second reading, Mr. Speaker.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta has requested the amendment to provide liability protection for those who carry out these assessments. In considering this request, it became clear that the amendment should apply not only to doctors but to professions under the Health Professions Act as well. This amendment will encourage and enable more health care professionals to assist with assessments, enable more health care professionals to work in our province, help improve the capacity of the health care system, and ensure that Alberta's quality standards are upheld.

Mr. Speaker, I have finished my speech in second reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I am certainly willing to support Bill 50 in principle. As the member opposite outlined, this is really an enabling bill. It's essentially expanding the liability protection to members of a number of other health professions and colleges who complete competency assessments of health professionals trained outside of Alberta.

Given the struggle that we're having not only with physicians and nurses but with other health professionals in recruiting them into Alberta and being able to retain them, I think it's important that we look at innovative ways to complete this work. Part of the struggle that we have experienced is that even when we're trying to train people, we don't have enough trainers, and certainly in the medical profession the trainers are themselves physicians or hold MDs.

I think this is a good step to be taking. I believe that it is part of the health workforce plan that the government finally tabled after more than two years of the Liberals urging them to do so. So I'm willing to support it for that reason as well. I would even look further down the line and recommend that the government research wooing some retired health professionals to come back and, maybe with a small amount of in-service upgrading, be able to then serve in a similar capacity as a mentor or a trainer of residents or a tester of capacities because, again, we don't have enough people that are currently working. Maybe there's a way to get a couple of people out of retirement willing to do this on a part-time basis, which would still be helpful.

The real stumbling block was liability. Medical liability, as you know, is staggeringly expensive because the payouts are staggeringly expensive. Some of the people that were willing to do this said: well, you know, I'd love to, but not if it's going to cost me, and if I have to look after increased liability insurance, then no. So this bill is really trying to address that to make sure that we've looked after the people who have come forward and offered to work with us to offer those competency assessments of health professionals that are trained outside of Alberta, again stressing that it's not just about physicians and nurses but all health professionals, that are sometimes called the allied health arts.

At this point I'm certainly willing as the shadow minister for Health and Wellness to support Bill 50 in second reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand and speak on Bill 50, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007 (No. 2). Clearly, this does go some distance in helping us to train, recruit, and increase our health professional workforce. I think it's a positive amendment, one that will be felt not only in the medical profession but across the professions.

I certainly hear, and did today, from physicians who are concerned about not only the lack of physicians in the province but also the speed with which we help new Albertan physicians, new Canadian physicians trained elsewhere to get into the workforce, many of them frustrated, not contributing as they would like to and could. It raises the question of just how well we are streamlining and attending to the individual strengths and weaknesses of physicians trained in other jurisdictions. It also speaks to the need to protect the trainers in the assessment of these folks, who for many reasons – not only one of liability but remuneration, resources, and other factors – do not choose to be either trainers or evaluators in this very vital time when we desperately need new professionals in the health system.

So there's every reason to think that this will do nothing but good to help promote among physicians and other health professionals the interest in and willingness to take on the sometimes onerous responsibility, with marginal returns, of this evaluation process. To remove the liability is a very positive step. I will be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Thank you. I'm not used to that. Will you even like what I'm going to say this time?

Actually, this is an important step forward. As the previous speaker talked about, with the College of Physicians and Surgeons in lobbying us today about Bill 41 and the shortage of doctors, as mentioned, health professionals generally, we know that we have a lot of people that are trained as medical practitioners here in Alberta. You run into some of them, Mr. Speaker, you know, if you're driving in a taxi or other places. I think there's a great need to bring these people in as quickly as we can.

Apparently, one of the things that was very concerning for the medical profession was the fact that if they were training people, legally they could be sued if something went wrong. I think that this is an important step for them so that they can work with these people that we need to bring into the profession. Certainly, we know that there's a shortage there, a huge shortage. According to them it may be a bigger shortage if Bill 41 goes through as such.

I want to say that this is probably a step in the right direction. I think there are other impediments there that we're going to have to look at, Mr. Speaker. We just cannot afford to have a number of these people that have these sorts of skills that we can use. Any impediments that we can do without in terms of getting them into the profession – and it's not only the medical profession but throughout the health professions. We need a lot of skilled people. Now, in the health professions it is not only a shortage here in Alberta. It's a shortage across Canada, and to some degree it's a shortage around the world. This becomes an important, I think, first step in trying to at least do something about that.

When the member is commenting later down the line, obviously they've had the discussions with the medical profession. I think the question to be asked of the medical profession would be: are there other impediments that we need to deal with? Maybe that's part of what the profession has to look at themselves. Are there things that they can do within their own profession that can move this process along?

This is a good bill and a necessary bill and a step in the right direction. I would certainly be glad to support it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to stand as a health professional and speak to this Bill 50, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007 (No. 2). I, too, support this as an RN. I have never been in this particular position because I've obviously been sitting in the House for the last little while, but there were a number of times when certainly people would have been presented in various ways, where I was asked an opinion on if I thought, not necessarily if they had the skills but if they were competent in actually using those skills. I think probably everyone in the House that knows me knows that I wasn't, probably, very reticent with my opinions. I saw it, I called it the way I saw it, and away I went. However, in an instance with this to protect me, I would probably feel a lot better in being able to express those opinions, making sure that we do get more people into the health profession, either doctors or nurses or pharmacists or any other number of people that are considered health professionals.

Language often is a barrier. They do have to have a certain English competency, which is fine, but what I saw sometimes with working with people with language barriers is that it was very, very clear that the knowledge was there, the experience was there, and certainly their desire to help their fellow man was there. As has been mentioned, perhaps we should be looking very carefully at other aspects of this in terms of the language training. If you look at somebody on a piece of paper and then you look at them face to face and you can talk to them, you have a far better idea of what this person can actually provide to our society within the Health Professions Act.

For those reasons I very much support this. I'm glad that it's coming forward. It does give the protection to the Health Professions Act, of which I'm a member and proud to be.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and speak to Bill 50, Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007 (No. 2). First of all, I want to applaud the Member for Red Deer-North for introducing this bill. I think this is a very important piece of legislation, a step forward, and it was a long time due.

In my personal experience I met so many foreigners with education from a different part of the world. They have the right qualifications, but they are not eligible to work in this country. Some people are doing odd jobs. If we pass this legislation, I'm definitely sure it will not only help those people; it will help all Albertans as well as all Canadians because we can utilize their educational background, we can utilize their expertise, and it will help their families. It will help Alberta as a whole because once somebody is doing the right job, it gives a person satisfaction. Once a person is satisfied and working happily, they can definitely contribute something for the nation.

The Alberta Liberal Party has been asking for a long time and pushing very hard to bring forward legislation something like this, but I think we should have some more training centres to upgrade them here in this country. You know, they are complaining that they can do certain jobs here, but they don't find the training centres. Some people are even saying that some doctors from overseas come to this country, but no other doctors are ready to take them to work as an assistant doctor to get the training while working. I think it's a very good idea.

I don't know the intention of the Member for Red Deer-North:

how she can help those people right away. You know, they get permission to enter this country from overseas, and for many, many years they are doing odd jobs. Sometimes they get fed up, and some people go back to their own country. Some people do the odd jobs, and after a few years they go back. This is not a good sign.

I definitely applaud the member. At least she is trying to bring forward something which is badly needed. If we could do something for those people who need the right legislation to help them out, I think we should. I definitely support 120 per cent this legislation. I've met so many people who are desperate. They want to do something in this country. They are capable of doing fantastic jobs because they've been doing so in the past in their own countries. I'm sure that if they get the proper tools here, the proper certification which we require here, they can be very helpful for our province, for our country.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise this afternoon and add a few comments to Bill 50, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007 (No. 2). As my colleague from Edmonton-Centre spoke about earlier, the Alberta Liberals have a primary focus when it comes to wait-time strategy, and that is recruitment and retention of health care professionals. Any measure that will increase health care workers and improve services available for Albertans will receive the strong support of our caucus. I, too, would like to personally congratulate the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this forward because it looks to me that that is exactly what will happen.

The reason I feel compelled to rise this afternoon and add my comments to the record, Mr. Speaker, is because I have fond memories of the period after I was elected on November 22, 2004. One of my fondest memories is of the very first constituent visit that I had in the office as MLA. It was from a young lady who had received her training as a medical doctor in South America and was experiencing all sorts of difficulties and barriers in terms of having those credentials recognized here.

I often think of Irma and wonder how she eventually made out and whether or not she is in fact practicing now. I hope that things worked out for her because as a newly elected MLA trying to find some help for this young woman, it was clear that there were any number of barriers to people in her situation. If removing liability from somebody that might be looking at those qualifications and passing judgment on whether or not that person is qualified to practise their profession in Alberta is a step towards removing some of those barriers, then clearly it is a good and proper thing for us to be doing.

I, too, as my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie has said, have had many, many visits to the office or calls and concerns from constituents who find themselves in similar situations. And you know what? If it's happening in Edmonton-Ellerslie, and it's happening in Edmonton-Rutherford, I'm going to guess that it's happening in Red Deer-North and probably every constituency in this province. I'm going to have to assume that most if not all MLAs have had similar visits in their offices. As I say, if this is a step towards attracting and retaining more health care professionals for the province, it's got my full support and that of my caucus.

I'm pleased to have had the opportunity to put those comments on the record. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate in the debate?

Does the hon. Member for Red Deer-North wish to close?

Mrs. Jablonski: Just call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 50 read a second time]

Bill 53

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Education I would like to move second reading of Bill 53, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2007.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's my pleasure to respond on behalf of the Official Opposition to Bill 53, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2007. It's quite a journey that's brought us to today. As everybody in this Assembly and, I'm going to guess, probably by this time almost everybody in the province is aware, the Alberta Teachers' Association and the provincial government have finally come to a resolution on this issue. That's a good thing. It's something that I as the shadow minister for Finance have been calling for action on for a long time, ever since I've been in this House actually. This bill is a part of that. It's a part of what got us to where we are today.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the $25 million that is contemplated in this bill to put towards the teachers' unfunded pension liability is something that was announced in the budget that was introduced and passed in this House back in the spring sitting. But it's interesting to note that at that time the $25 million was somewhat more controversial than it is today. I think it would be wrong to let this particular bill go by without examining the history of that $25 million. [interjection] I hear some grumbling from the other side. I know there are a number of people on the other side who accuse the Official Opposition of living in the past and don't want to acknowledge what history has taught us and what brought us to where we are today, but it's important because, as we all know, if you don't pay attention to the lessons of the past, you're bound to repeat them, and Lord knows we don't want to be repeating this particular situation.

Back in April – actually, it was April 19, budget day – when this $25 million was first announced, it was trumpeted by the Minister of Education as a sign of good faith to teachers. You will likely remember, Mr. Speaker, that at that time the $25 million was contemplated to address particularly teacher attraction and retention, and the minister talked about aiming it specifically at new teachers. As a result of that, teachers would have found that for a whole year 100 per cent of their contributions, or approximately $1,400 on a $50,000 salary, would have been looked after by the government for teachers in their first to fifth year of teaching. However, if you were a teacher with six to 10 years of experience, the government was only going to look after 75 per cent of your UFL contributions. In fact, if you were a teacher with 11 to 15 years of experience, the government was only going to look after 50 per cent of your contributions. If you were a teacher with 16 to 20 years of experience, the government was only going to address 25 per cent of your contributions.

Mr. Herard: Because they get all the benefit.

Mr. R. Miller: The Member for Calgary-Egmont seems to have a lot to comment on. I hope he's going to get up when I'm finished my comments and put them on the record rather than just mumbling in the background.

The most important thing to note here, Mr. Speaker, is that if you were a teacher in this province with more than 20 years' experience, the Minister of Education was willing to completely discount that contribution and was not going to contribute whatsoever – whatsoever – with this $25 million to the unfunded pension liability that you were paying for.

An Hon. Member: They're the ones that screwed the others.

Mr. R. Miller: Now I think I also hear someone else on the other side. I'm really looking forward, Mr. Speaker, to these members getting up and putting their comments on the record officially. I'm going to guess that there might be any number of individuals, particularly teachers, who would like to hear what the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has to say on this issue. Oh, no. Now he says he's not going to put those comments on the record. Why should I be surprised?

So there we have it in a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, where the more time that you had spent as a teacher in this province, the more time that you had spent contributing to the growth and the prosperity of this province by sharing your knowledge and helping to raise youth into successful, contributing members of our society, the less recognition you got from the Minister of Education in terms of looking after this UFL. I can assure you that despite the fact that it was trumpeted as being a sign of good faith, it was not received as such by the teachers of this province. In fact – let's be clear about this – if it were not for the Premier stepping in and mandating that the $25 million would be shared equally amongst teachers, we probably would not have the agreement that was announced just days ago between the Alberta Teachers' Association and the government to address the unfunded liability.

Mr. Danyluk: How do you know that? How can you say that?

Mr. R. Miller: Are you going to stand up and put your comments on the record, too? I hope you do because this is a really important issue, and Albertans deserve to hear what members opposite have to say.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the floor, so I'd appreciate the comments going through the chair.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you also meant to remind me that I'm to make my comments through you and not directly to members opposite, and so I will accept that.

Mr. Martin: You're self-regulating.

Mr. R. Miller: Yes, I'm self-regulating. That's right.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, it is important for us to recognize how we got to where we are today. You can't just pretend that this situation didn't develop back in April. It festered throughout a period of time before, as I said, the Premier stepped in and changed the rules of the game so that the $25 million would be shared equally, which I'm sure everybody would agree – well, maybe not everybody would agree, but certainly everybody on this side of the House would agree – was the right thing to do.

Now, the other thing that I have to say, because we have an opportunity to talk about the unfunded pension liability, is once again reiterate the fact that the Official Opposition is really, really pleased that an agreement has been reached. We believe that this is a good thing for teachers. It's a good thing for students. It's a good thing for parents. It's something that we've been calling for for a long time.

[The Speaker in the chair]

My disappointment continues to be that the Alberta government has taken no step whatsoever to this point to address the unfunded liability, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, our unfunded liability, the debt that we as taxpayers carry, has now officially gone from $4.3 billion to $6.6 billion overnight. At the snap of my fingers we increased our debt to the unfunded pension liability by 50 per cent. Again, I'm not necessarily suggesting that that was the wrong thing to do because we needed to have an agreement; we needed to get on with dealing with this situation. However, we've heard absolutely nothing from the Minister of Education or the Minister of Finance or the Premier as to how that, what is now a $6.6 billion debt, is going to be addressed.

Mr. Speaker, I'm on the record and the Finance minister has acknowledged and the Auditor General has acknowledged that if this is not . . .

Mr. Agnihotri: They don't accept this as a debt.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, no. My colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie is suggesting that the government doesn't accept that this is a debt. They don't necessarily talk about it as being a debt, but they do accept it as being a debt. I've had the Finance minister on the record in the House admitting that it is a debt. So I think they accept it. They don't like to publicize the fact that it's a debt, but clearly it's a debt. The Auditor General certainly calls it a debt, too.

The concern is that we now have this $6.6 billion debt, which has been acknowledged by the Finance minister will cost us $45 billion by the end of the current payout scheme if, in fact, we don't address it sooner, $45 billion to the taxpayers of this province. Despite the fact that we've been talking about it for three years in this Legislature, in my time here, and I'm sure it was talked about for many years beyond that, and despite the fact that the province continues to post multibillion dollar surpluses year after year after year – I think we're up to 12 years now – there has been no movement on this $6.6 billion debt. That is the real concern I have, that despite the fact that we've done the right thing for teachers and students here, we haven't done the right thing for taxpayers. We haven't announced yet how we're going to address the $6.6 billion debt, which is in danger of ballooning to $45 billion if we don't do something about it quickly.

I think those are the comments that I have today for Bill 53. [some applause] Although if I continue to get encouragement from the other side, I'm sure I could find other things to discuss on it. In particular, Mr. Speaker, as I said, the upshot is that anything that can be done to attract and retain teachers in this province and provide some stability for parents and their students in school is a good thing and will get our support, and this bill will get our support.

I thought it important to remind members as to how we got to where we are today, and it wasn't all a rosy picture. In fact, there was an awful lot of animosity created by the announcement of this $25 million on April 19, and an awful lot of hard work and goodwill was required to get past that animosity. It wasn't an easy thing, I know, on the part of teachers. I know that for a fact because I had any number of correspondences into my office, many of which I tabled in this Legislature back in the spring, expressing displeasure with the position that the government took on the unfunded liability in general and in particular on this $25 million and the way that it was originally to be applied. I'm glad that we are where we are today, but it's important that we learn lessons from history, and it's important that we remember how we got to where we are today.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 53, and I do look forward to the many members opposite who had comments to make while I was speaking. I look forward to their getting up and putting their comments on the record. I think that that would be a good thing for all Albertans, to hear exactly what they have to say on this issue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to the second reading of Bill 53, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2007. When the Premier was sworn into office, he pledged that ministers in his new cabinet would listen to and meet Albertans' priorities. One of the priorities identified by the Premier was solving the teachers' unfunded pension liability issue, and this legislation represents one of the first steps forward in honouring that commitment.

As part of Budget 2007 the government of Alberta allocated $25 million to assume the payment of the teachers' portion of the pre-1992 unfunded liability of the teachers' pension plan for a period of time. The pension relief was part of an initial step while a reasonable long-term solution could be identified. The payments are to be made until the $25 million is exhausted. That is expected to cover payments for all teachers who contribute to the pension plan where the government is the employer contributor for the period from September 1, 2007, to the end of December 2007. The decision to assume these payments was a clear sign of the government's commitment to finding a long-term solution to the issue of the unfunded pension liability.

The requirement of teachers hired after 1992 to pay off an unfunded liability they did not help create was seen by many as a barrier to attracting and retaining new teachers and to creating an intergenerational inequity. It was also a constant irritant in relations between the Alberta Teachers' Association and the government and could serve as some barrier to the stability of an education system that would truly meet the needs of the 21st century learner.

In keeping with the government's commitment, the Alberta Teachers' Retirement Fund Board was asked to notify boards to stop deducting the additional 3.1 per cent from teachers' pay that was previously allocated to paying the teachers' portion of the pre-1992 unfunded liability. The Alberta Teachers' Retirement Fund Board did as requested, Mr. Speaker, and the teachers of Alberta saw an immediate difference in their take-home pay.

Bill 53, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2007, will authorize government to make a retroactive payment of $25 million plus interest costs to cover the teachers' share of the pre-1992 unfunded pension liability from September 1 to the end of December. Contributions made by the government during the September to December period will be treated like any other Crown contribution and therefore will not be reflected on a teacher's T4A for income tax purposes as this would provide an additional benefit for pension contributions that were not made by the teachers. This payment of $25 million plus interest to the Alberta Teachers' Retirement Fund Board cannot be made until this legislation is passed, Mr. Speaker, so I would urge all hon. members to move the legislation as quickly as we can.

It has often been said that one reaps what one sows. It's worth noting that by making this financial commitment, the government was intent on planting the seeds for a new era in education. By doing so, the government has clearly indicated to the Alberta Teachers' Association that it was truly committed to finding a fair and equitable long-term solution to the unfunded pension liability and that it would negotiate a solution in good faith. Mr. Speaker, as the events of the past few weeks have shown and as has been mentioned by other hon. members, those seeds have borne real fruit, and the students, parents, teachers, school boards, and taxpayers of Alberta will reap those rewards.

By making this significant first step, the government in cooperation with the Alberta Teachers' Association is helping to create a positive environment for change in education. Bill 53 is a first small step among many this government is taking towards ensuring that Alberta's K to 12 education system remains one of the best in the world, Mr. Speaker, a system that will prepare students for the challenges and opportunities that will face them in the 21st century.

Alberta has one of the best education systems, and it ranks among the best in the world. There are several reasons for that: our teachers, our curriculum, our students, our parents and volunteers, and the range of choice available in our schools. All of these factors mean that our grade 12 students compete in a global education system. They have a well-rounded and comprehensive education that makes them prepared for their future, including our postsecondary system and the world of work.

The first wave of the baby-boom generation is preparing for retirement, and there are implications across the workforce, and clearly the education system is not immune. The loss of our most experienced teachers from the classroom environment is a concern. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, I have a brother who recently completed 30 some-odd years in the education field and has retired. He was very proud of the contribution that he made to our province, but that just goes to show that we are losing some very experienced teachers to retirement.

It's my opinion that the pre-1992 teachers' portion of the unfunded pension liability serves and served as a disincentive for young Albertans to enter and to continue in the teaching profession. I believe that concern is recognized by both government and the teaching community, and that's why it is so important for both plan sponsors to work together to resolve the issue, which is what they have done. That's why it's so important for this province to recruit the best into the teaching profession and to retain those excellent teachers.

Bill 53, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, requires the wholehearted endorsement of all members of the Assembly to ensure that this enabling legislation can come into effect. It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that while the opposite side of the House will say that they support this, they also want to continue to claim that they could have predicted the future and that they can correct the past. Instead of talking about what we can do to make our system better, they continually want to take credit for what we have already done.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this House to support Bill 53 so that we can continue on with the good work of the relationship between the government of Alberta and our education system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for five minutes should there be takers.

There being none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened intently to the minister of advanced education. If I heard him right, I think he's making a case for increased spending in the next budget for education so that we can maintain this wonderful system that he's talking about. I think we'll have to take a look later on.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to bore you with the past. The past is the past. Certainly, we support the bill. We support the agreement. It was a necessity, I think. We've been saying that before, and we'll say it again. I think the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had an important point to make, though, and that is that now that we've solved the problem with the teachers, we have an extra debt for the people of Alberta. Again, it was the right thing to do, but I think it's important that we try to figure out how we're going to deal with it. I know that maybe "planning" is a bad word with the opposite side, but now it is part of the province's debt, if you like. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford alluded to that, and he was right.

This is a debt right now, and if we don't deal with it fairly quickly, it will be a bigger debt down the way. Then if you deal with it quickly and with the infrastructure deficit and the social deficit and all the rest of the problems that we have, it creates a problem that way, Mr. Speaker. But I think it's incumbent on the government, now that they've accepted this teachers' unfunded liability, to tell us exactly how this is going to be looked after. Is it going to be short term, that we're going to bite the bullet and try to save the money down the way? How is that going to happen? Is it over one year? Two years? Five years? Or are we just going to let it sort of drag along over the period of time? I think this is an important point to make.

As I say, now that the government has accepted this debt, I would hope that very soon they would tell us how they're going to deal with this. At the latest, Mr. Speaker, I'd take it there might be a budget coming down in the spring, early – who knows? – and that they would at least by that time tell us as part of the financial picture of the province how this is going to be handled.

As I say, I'm glad that this is settled, and this is the first step. Certainly, we'll support it here. I'm glad that the Minister of Education and the Premier were able to come to an agreement with the teachers. I'll give them credit for doing that. I'll give credit to the teachers. There's no point, as I say, in going back in history, but I really think the future is something we have to look at. The future is: how do we deal with this $6 billion that is clearly on our books right now as a debt? I think it's incumbent on the government to very quickly show us how they are going to handle this particular debt.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It indeed is a pleasure for me to rise and respond to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Hon. member, I do want to respect, you know, your position, and your position is very clear. It's very straightforward. It's very clear. It talks about: how are we as the government going to respond? I suppose I want to ask you: how do you feel that that response should happen? What commitment do you feel should happen? I mean, it's much better than the comments that were made by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, where he typically rode the fence from one side to the other and couldn't decide what side of the fence he was on: deciding that we're spending too much money, not spending enough, then spending too much, and not spending enough.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the comments from the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. To the hon. member, my first comment would be that that's why you guys get the big bucks over there: to decide this. Mr. Speaker, I guess what I would say is that I think probably we should try to get rid of it along with our other priorities as quickly as we can. Maybe it can't be done in one to five years; the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is right. I mean, we know that it will just keep going up to $45 billion. We have to pay the price one way or the other.

As I said, that's a decision you would have to make. It's ours to criticize after if we don't like the decision, but I just don't think you can allow it to keep going up because it is a debt, like anything else. Trying to find a balance, Mr. Speaker, between the problems that we have now with our overheated economy and how we deal with this – it's going to be easier to deal with it while we have money coming in rather than later if we hit a recession, I can tell you that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister rose first. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, then, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford if we have time.

4:10

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's very obvious that this government has taken the first step, that this government has moved forward, that this government has looked at the solutions for the unfunded liability, and this Premier has led the way in that focus and in that direction. I think it's wrong for you to make that assumption, in comparing and aligning yourself with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, suggesting that the unfunded liability would be at $45 million. That would happen if nothing was done, but something has been done, so I ask you the question. I know you said one to five years, and I appreciate that. I just wanted to compliment you on that comment.

The Speaker: A comment, hon. member?

Mr. Martin: Well, yeah. I didn't suggest. I mean, what we're saying is: if nothing was done down the way. The point I'm trying to make is that we haven't seen the plan from the government yet on how to deal with that. I'm looking forward with bated breath to see this, if we may, to the hon. minister, in a very short period of time. I think that's incumbent on the government. I mentioned whether it be by the budget or sooner, but I think it's important that we do see that fairly quickly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview whether or not he would support taking some money out of the sustainability account, which currently sits at $8 billion, taking some money from there and making a paydown on the $6.6 billion debt, which for the information of the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing is actually a position that I personally have espoused in the past.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, you know, I'd be prepared to look at it. What I would suggest is that we have this debt, that we figure out whether it's best out of the sustainability fund or the general revenues or whatever. The point is that that is there. That's the most important thing, that we see how the government is going to deal with it, whether it's, as I say, out of the sustainability fund or out of another fund or whatever. It's a debt, and we have to deal with it. That's what I'm looking forward to seeing from the government in a very short order of time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll now move on.
The Associate Minister for Capital Planning.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to add a few comments very briefly myself from the perspective of being a former teacher in this province and having enjoyed every minute of it and also from the perspective of having been privileged to serve as the Minister of Education for over two years. Obviously, I'm supportive of anything that helps with our teacher recruitment and teacher retention plans because this is extremely . . .

An Hon. Member: Are you going to get a pension?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, I'm not getting a pension, hon. member. I wish. And there's no pension in this job either, neither as a teacher nor as an MLA.

Anyway, I'd just say these few words, Mr. Speaker. We are privileged to have a world-class education system in this province, as everyone knows, and I think the first reason for that is the outstanding teachers that we have, truly. Of course, there are many other reasons: the students are very good, the facilities are great, the province-wide curriculum serves us well, and our resources and our labs and everything else that we have all dovetail into that. But the first reason for our excellence is our teachers.

Secondly, I just want to add that this particular bill, which covers about four months of time of teachers' pensions, is similar to what we did a few years ago, five or six years ago, when we provided something like $63 million to take over the pension liability from the teachers. I'm hoping everybody will support this because it's really not any different than that, and that was immensely popular with all teachers, and so, too, will this be. Our teachers do deserve this full support.

Now, of course, we have the companion piece coming along, that being the full takeover permanently of all of the teachers' unfunded pension liability by the government. So let us not feel that this is not good value for our education system because it truly is. I think the taxpayers are well served by our teachers, and this bill recognizes that service, at least in part, and the value that we place on teachers in our province. So let's celebrate the positive aspects of what we have here and move on.

My last comment is simply to say that during the two years that I served as Minister of Education, I met many times with teachers, with parents, with the ATA Executive Council. We did a lot of negotiating to help set up some of the deals that we're here today saluting and, hopefully, supporting. But the credit on this one really goes to our Premier, who had the courage to take this on with our Minister of Education at present and get the deal moving and get it done. This particular introduction of this takeover for this portion of the unfunded liability was a good signal that really set the tone for the rest of the negotiations that have occurred.

With that, I want to indicate my full support for Bill 53, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2007. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as we all know, turnabout is fair play, so I would like to ask the Associate Minister for Capital Planning: what is he recommending to his cabinet and caucus colleagues as a plan for addressing what is now a $6.6 billion debt to the Alberta taxpayer and will become $45 billion if it's not addressed over the lifetime of the agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, there will be an opportunity to address that very question in a much larger and more detailed fashion. The reason that I provide the answer that way is because we know that it's a complex issue that the government has far more ways of addressing than does any private citizen or any private body, such as the Alberta Teachers' Association, or anyone else. The hon. member should take some solace in knowing that we will be dealing with this. It will in the end prove itself out to have been a very good deal for teachers and for settling things with our teachers and the students and the parents in the province. The other part we will get to in due course.

The Speaker: Additional questions or comments?

Shall I call on the Deputy Government House Leader to close the debate, or should I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 53 read a second time]

Bill 54

County of Westlock Water Authorization Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to move second reading of Bill 54, the County of Westlock Water Authorization Act.

The purpose of this act is to provide for the development of a regional water system within the county of Westlock and specifically to transfer treated potable water from the town of Westlock to the hamlet of Vimy and the village of Clyde. It's an area of the world I think you may be familiar with, Mr. Speaker.

This particular regional water distribution system is really no different than a number of other regional water distribution systems that we have throughout the province. However, what is unique about this one and a few others throughout the province is that geographically the county and the area that will be served by this regional water system are located in and straddling a major water basin. Part of the county is within the Athabasca watershed, and the other part is in the North Saskatchewan, so in the town of Westlock treating water and putting it into a pipe and sending it to the hamlet of Vimy and the village of Clyde, who will in turn treat the municipal waste water that results from the consumption of that fresh water out of the municipal water source. Their return of that water into the system would go into the North Saskatchewan, thus we have the legislative requirement – I think a good requirement, frankly – of requiring an act of the Legislature to authorize that interbasin transfer.

I want to talk about the fact that this is a regional water system.

The reason why we have these regional water systems is to ensure that we have a cost-effective way to provide safe drinking water. We eliminate the need for a number of smaller communities to build, maintain, and operate very expensive water treatment facilities. By any yardstick, Mr. Speaker, I think anyone would have to agree that regional water systems are the appropriate way that we should be serving our municipal water needs throughout the province.

I want to emphasize that this water under question here is for basic human needs. It's not a sufficiently large quantity for large developments. The bill specifically limits the annual amount of water that can be delivered to 208.78 cubic decametres. That's enough water for about a thousand users over the 50-year projection, so it allows for some growth. But let's put it all into perspective, Mr. Speaker: it's a very small quantity of water in the grand scheme of things.

There have been public consultations throughout the region. The public is very supportive of this water system. I want to also emphasize that there are absolutely minimal environmental impacts. This is piped potable water. It's not raw water. As a result, there is virtually no transfer of any biological organisms. We're not going to be moving fish from one water system to another.

There is a conservation plan in place that will be enhanced over time to ensure that the users of this system, like all other users, quite frankly, ensure that the use of water is kept to a minimum. Above all, this is a way that we can ensure that we have quality drinking water and that we meet the quality drinking water standards for large municipalities as well as small ones.

Alberta Environment is committed to safe, secure drinking water supplies for all Albertans. This kind of a regional municipal water system is exactly what we need to ensure that those safe, secure water supplies are in fact available to all Albertans. I would encourage all members of the Assembly to give their strong endorsement and support to this legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this bill before the House, the water transfer bill. It's an important issue, obviously, to all Albertans, probably the most important issue in southern Alberta and growing in importance as a result of climate change and the implications that that has for both quantity and quality of water in our province.

Many volumes have already been written and concerns expressed by both scientists and the lay public about how we're managing water in the province and real concerns about sustainable management plans based on good information, based on projected models around climate change and its impacts, and better knowledge about how clear-cut logging is impacting our water systems, particularly in southern Alberta, Calgary in particular, with the Elbow and the Bow rivers being the lifeblood of the city.

Water management has to be seen as the primary role of government, and there are real concerns that we're not putting the resources and the expertise into assessing our water, both surface and groundwater, and to analyzing the prospects for the future in relation to climate change and its negative impacts on both quality and quantity in the future.

I think the bill has some positive dimensions to it and recognizes the need for better quality control, better cost efficiency in delivering potable water to individuals and to businesses. I think some of the reservations we have about this have to do with the fact that this is the fourth or fifth interbasin transfer since I was elected three and a half years ago. It raises some questions about whether we have a long-term management plan that is going to be sustainable or whether we are going to continue to transfer water from north to south as the demands outstrip the local resources. That's really what Albertans and scientists are asking: how can we get a better handle on reducing demand, primarily water conservation, on measures to use water more efficiently and to find substitutes, for example in the oil industry, where we're now using water that is being lost to circulation?

Clearly, there are a number of concerns around our quantity and quality of groundwater: how well we understand its connection to surface water, and whether we will in fact begin as a government to take back some control over our water resources when, especially in the south, roughly 70 per cent of it is controlled by irrigation districts, and how that will translate into the best water management and for the highest purposes in southern Alberta, where we're seeing increasing business and development demands as well as even recreational and domestic uses.

So it's with real concern that we see yet another bill addressing the question of interbasin transfer. I think we all appreciate the fact that this is potable water; it's treated water. It may not have all the risks associated with interbasin transfers that the minister has referred to, but I think it's fair to say that microflora, microfauna can easily be transmitted in treated water. What the long-term implications of that are I don't know. I don't know what the scientists are thinking about that.

What we do know is that interfering with natural flows, natural processes, risking in-stream flow needs in some areas, which is the support system for the ecosystem within the river and on the banks of the river, is a dangerous proposition. We seem to be doing this more than once per year just in the last three years. I think that the writing is on the wall, Mr. Speaker. If we don't start looking at limits to growth on these river systems, we are going to be faced with very severe economic as well as, I think, biological and ecological impacts from this penchant to pipe water from wherever it is presently in abundance to areas where it's presently or predicted to be in shortage.

There are some real concerns about this whole process, and I think some questions that need to be addressed include some of the following. It's not clear to me as the opposition critic and to many in the public what process Alberta Environment follows when addressing the question of an interbasin transfer. Is there any kind of public consultation both in the receiving communities and in the donor communities? In the broader context do Albertans have a vehicle for having input into this decision-making that is of vital concern to the future of the province? It's not clear that there is a transparent public process where issues can be discussed and debated, including the issues that I raised earlier.

Secondly, are there restrictions on the purpose for which the water is used in an interbasin transfer? How is the provincial Legislature, for example, to evaluate a bill before us to recommend a water transfer? On what criteria would we say that it's either in the public interest in the long term, which we increasingly have to look at, or it's not in the public interest in the long term? Maybe the minister could help to define some of that for us in terms of what restrictions are placed on the purpose for an interbasin transfer.

A third question is: in such an important decision for the future of the province have we done any environmental impact assessments on any of these interbasin transfers? What, if any, are made public, preferably independent assessments, to assess, again, the risks and advantages of interbasin transfers?

Fourthly, for these specific bills, bills 54 and 55, you've indicated that about a thousand users will be supplied for the foreseeable future. It's not clear what that means and what volumes, what small businesses might expand, what domestic needs might expand. Will we be facing another request for an expansion of this water transfer in the next few years if there is, perhaps, more growth than is expected there, or are we in fact going to establish these interbasin transfers on the basis that there are significant conservation measures implemented, significant efforts to reduce the demand, and we're actually going to put a limit on growth in that particular community, or will we simply allow them to grow and grow and grow and be faced on an annual or semiannual or semidecadal basis with more requests for more transfers? This does not appear to be a responsible way to manage our water.

There are some concerns about these continued requests for interbasin transfers when it's the most serious decision that we can make in the province. We bring it to the Legislature for that reason, because it is a serious decision, yet we see no criteria on which to make our decisions about whether this is or isn't in the longer term best interests of the public of Alberta.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would welcome the opportunity to hear more from the minister and hope that we can take very seriously our role as legislators in this most vital time in our history in how we manage our water and whether we can be assured that this government has the backbone to set limits on development and water use for the purposes of ensuring a future, not only an economic future but an environmental future, a future for people where their basic needs are going to be met.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the bill before the House is Bill 54. Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly am glad to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 54, County of Westlock Water Authorization Act.

You know, I was struck when I saw this bill come forward just recently because, interestingly enough, I believe it was last winter that I was approached by a number of people in this area that were having concerns with their water quality. I actually ended up going out to a number of these towns and even took some water samples, so it's interesting to see how life has its twists and turns.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I'm thus very aware, as I'm sure you are as well, of the importance of having potable water to communities. Quite literally, people are making decisions to either move to or move away from a community based on water quality. This can be a determining factor, and a number of these communities aren't so terribly large in the first place. This can be a crucial factor as to the survival of the town or village itself.

Also, I certainly have been an advocate of building some shared water systems because, of course, you realize efficiencies through using economies of scale and building both the water treatment systems and the sewage treatment systems and sharing those collectively.

Those two things being said, still I'm having some serious concerns about the manner in which these regional water systems are coming forward and being developed not just in the county of Westlock but right across the province. Of course, this isn't the only bill for a water transfer that we have before us here this session, Mr. Speaker. We have another one. It's a water transfer that we already started to work on last spring, and lo and behold after a few months what was a very modest expansion of a water transfer to facilitate potable water to a small community in central Alberta now has come back in a completely different form in terms of volume and scope and everything, really, that you could use to define a water system, just within a very few short months.

I guess the question that comes to my mind, then, is: do we have the capacity to make a water plan that encompasses the larger region, both in central Alberta with Bill 55 and then with this particular bill, Bill 54? Interbasin transfers are only one part of the equation, Mr. Speaker. I believe that we are also looking at the concern about conservation and land-use planning and making the most efficient use of the resources that we have available to us. Water, as we've heard people say innumerable times, is perhaps the most valuable commodity we have in any given region, the absence of which would of course preclude any development or habitation at all.

I guess when we're talking about building regional water systems and piping water out to areas, we have to not just look at the immediate efficiency or usefulness of this but also in terms of conservation. This particular one, of course, Bill 54, is only 208.78 cubic decametres of water, and this is municipally treated water being pumped from one basin to the other. But, you know, as the next bill here, Bill 55, tells us, nothing ever stays the same, necessarily, with the province expanding like it has been expanding and particularly with people choosing to move to smaller centres around the province, which is a good thing. Certainly, it's good to distribute the population around the province. It makes for, I think, healthier and stronger communities. But then, you know, we're making the decisions. The water is kind of following those movements.

Of course, when you build a water system, as I said at the outset of my comments, then people are more likely to move to a place if it has a good potable water system. I know that in this particular area the water, if I recall, has a very high sodium content, the water that the people are having to use now, a high sodium and particulate content as well as sort of dissolved solids in some places that seem to give the water a certain colour. All of these things are problems that undoubtedly Bill 54 was designed to overcome.

My point is that, certainly, when you build a water system, this is going to enhance the population in growing. If we built in the provision for a thousand people to live on this system now, because people would have a choice up in that area to get better water, then probably you'll end up with more than a thousand people. Let's not forget, as well, that this is a growing part of the province. I know, Mr. Speaker – and you would know this better than me – that they want to expand services with the airport in Westlock, which is great, so people can work in different parts of the province and, you know, go back to those smaller communities. All of this is good, but I just would like to see a regional water plan that says we're going with 208.78 decametres, that that's the allowable limit sustainable for the water basins that we are talking about here, and not just perhaps building these things in an ad hoc manner.

I look forward to the continuation of the debate on this particular Bill 54. As I said before, I have sipped the water in this region before and do recognize the need for something better. Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I suspect that the chair should preclude himself from having an opportunity to comment.

The hon. Minister of Environment, then, to close the debate.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I've noted with interest the comments of the members opposite and look forward to addressing them during committee and call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 54 read a second time]

4:40

Bill 55

East Central Regional Water Authorization Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 55, the East Central Regional Water Authorization Act.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are becoming increasingly aware of the value of a safe and secure water supply. For many communities across the province, particularly in southern and central Alberta, water is a precious and often scarce resource. Due to drought and increased growth, communities in east-central Alberta are facing serious drinking water quality and quantity issues. Some communities have even been forced to truck their water in from neighbouring towns. This is just not acceptable. These Albertans need a long-term solution.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

A regional supply line is a cost-effective way for providing these Albertans with safe drinking water. A supply line will eliminate the need for smaller communities to build, maintain, and operate expensive facilities. The Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act and the Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act authorized licences for interbasin transfers of treated municipal water to some but not all of the communities and residents along this line. I would say here that this is a co-operative effort that's taking place now that involves over 30 communities who have come together to do this. The East Central Regional Water Authorization Act will repeal the two previous acts and supply water to the entire area. If passed, Bill 55 will allow Alberta Environment to amend or issue water licences to transfer up to 10,800 cubic decametres annually of piped potable water to those east-central communities in need.

Mr. Rodney: How many?

Mr. Hayden: Ten thousand eight hundred.

Mr. Rodney: Cubic?

Mr. Hayden: Cubic. Sorry.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you. Just clarifying.

Mr. Hayden: Yes.

The act covers the regional water needs for the next 50 years, at a time when the population is estimated to increase by 74,000 people. The act also includes controlling conditions to allow rollbacks if the population projections are not met. With the passing of this act, Mr. Speaker, no further special acts of the Legislature are expected for these areas.

Let me remind the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, that the South Saskatchewan River basin water management plan sets a limit on the amount of water that can be allocated out of the Red Deer River. Those limits were developed through extensive public and stakeholder consultation and were taken into consideration when developing this act.

Interbasin transfers require thorough scientific studies and public consultation prior to being brought to this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, this has been done. The transferred water will be treated, drinkable water, not raw water, so no transfer of biological organisms is expected. Public consultations conducted throughout the region show great support for this proposal. Red Deer already has enough water to cover projected growth for the next 50 years. In fact, in a written statement the mayor of Red Deer stated he does not oppose the transfer.

These communities need this water for drinking, bathing, watering their gardens, and for other municipal purposes. Without this transfer the residents of these counties and towns will continue to face uncertainty of their water from both a supply and a safety perspective. Bill 55 will ensure that the approximately 35,300 Albertans currently living in the counties of Lacombe, Stettler, Camrose, Paintearth, and special area No. 4 will have access to the safe, secure water supplies that they need to survive and to thrive. I urge all members to support Bill 55 to end the uncertainty.

Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to ensuring safe, secure drinking water supplies for all Albertans. It is a major component of Alberta's Water for Life strategy, North America's most comprehensive water management plan.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand and speak to Bill 55 and the important issues that again it raises with respect to water management in the province and the concern that many Albertans have expressed to us, including scientists, that we need a better management plan for the province. It's clear that people all over the province need to be guaranteed safe, potable water, and in no way would we want to jeopardize that right. The responsibility of government to provide that is a fundamental human right.

At the same time we want to be sure, as stewards of the environment and stewards for future generations, that we are recognizing limits. There's the question of how many of these interbasin transfers we will continue to approve, again without clear criteria, without a sense of setting limits, without any clear sense of what demand-management procedures are in place, and without a strong sense that we understand the impacts of climate change and what it's going to mean for the whole province. Obviously, the best of science is needed here. It's not clear to us on this side of the House what kind of expertise the Alberta Environment department has called upon to make these recommendations and to support these kinds of decisions.

While the hon. member did say that they're looking at a 50-year growth pattern in the area and that this should cover all the needs for 50 years, it's unclear to this member what that means and what kind of growth is expected and what kind of industry demands there might be. While no special acts in the future might be anticipated, I don't see how it's possible to make that suggestion without knowing more about the future of Alberta in terms of immigration and agricultural development, oil and gas development, and the demands that people might place on this particular area.

It's reassuring, of course, that some scientific assessment has been made of in-stream flow needs for the Red Deer River, but there is still lots of controversy in the nongovernment community and among scientists about what in-stream flow needs are, how they are defined, and to what extent we are actually intending to meet them, especially at the lowest flow times in the late summer. It's not at all clear to us that the protective mechanisms have been put in place and established and that this will be honoured when human needs supercede everything else. Given the possibility in the next 30 years that there will be significant shortages in flow in the Red Deer River, it's not at all clear that we anticipated the declines and flow and the capacity of the Red Deer River.

We are not at all reassured that the government has done its homework in assessing the true implications of yet another interbasin transfer or that they have the backbone to set limits to growth and ask or give incentives for people to move to where the water is as opposed to continuing to shift water from north to south as a result of expectations that people may have or industries may have that they want to locate in a particular area when there is no guarantee of water. Then we'll be faced with increasing numbers of applications in this Legislature for interbasin transfers from north to south at a huge public cost. Mr. Speaker, that needs to be addressed and continues to be sidelined or not treated as seriously as we need to.

Just in 2005 the Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act was passed in this House, Bill 11, another interbasin transfer. It's not clear to us how this new bill relates to Bill 11 and the Stettler water needs in that particular area and why these needs weren't anticipated back in 2005. Again, Mr. Speaker, it raises serious questions about whether we are simply going to be a reactive government, looking at "Wherever people need it, we're going to supply it," or whether we're actually going to have a plan for this province, that we're going to set limits, we're going to demand accountability at local levels, we're going to give incentives for people to move to where the water is and for businesses to move to where the water is as opposed to continuing to look at this unsustainable approach to water management.

I think that summarizes the comments from this side. We would like to see some amendments coming forth in the committee stage to look at some of these concerns and to responsibly show Albertans that we are simply not a rubber stamp in this Legislative Assembly, that we simply react to problems that arise as a result of both climate change and increasing pressures on our water systems.

That concludes my comments, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to further debate in the committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I rise with interest to speak to Bill 55, East Central Regional Water Authorization Act. It's not dissimilar in a way, theoretically, to the circumstances that we had before us with the previous Bill 54 in that it's an interbasin water transfer request. However, the scope of this one is far more extensive, looking at 10,800 decametres of water and expanding the access to the system to nine different communities this time around in central Alberta, southeast of Edmonton. This is interesting in a number of ways in my mind because, of course, we are repealing the act that we passed only two months ago and putting in a much more wide program of piping water into communities in this region.

Once again, I don't certainly dispute the requirement of each of these communities to have a system that provides potable water to their communities. It's a qualitative leap forward to be able to access a system like this. You have to weigh different elements. What sort of resources are you using to provide, say, for example, water to these communities before this pipe system is put into place? For most of these communities I would suspect that people are trucking their water in, so of course that has an environmental impact of its own. If you're transporting water, which is a very heavy commodity, by vehicle to different places around central Alberta, that is problematic and expensive, too. I mean, pipelines do have their merits. There are no two ways about it.

But just even looking from the outside, the fact that we brought in the Ferintosh bill in the spring and then repeal it a few months later does give the impression that there is a lack of a comprehensive plan that's encompassing this whole region. I have serious concerns about that because, of course, the drought that is precipitating this requirement for the transfer of water between basins and a regional system is not just ending at the end of this pipe. It continues all the way to and past the Saskatchewan border through this part of the country. It's been becoming progressively drier in this region for a long time, and this has been causing problems for both agriculture and cow-calf operators in the area and for human consumption as well.

At what point does one make the decision to say that the circumstances aren't going to reverse themselves? How sustainable is it to continue to expand this system into east-central Alberta? I mean, those decisions are difficult, but those are decisions that, I guess, are meant to be made here at this level of government. I think we all have to think hard about this because unless things change, the drought and the dry circumstances that east-central Alberta is having to deal with will only continue and, perhaps, will even get worse. So we have to think about that.

As well, we have to think about the basin to which we are drawing more and more attention to meet our water needs, at least in this part of the province, and say: at what point do we need to have a comprehensive water plan for not just the South Saskatchewan River basin but for the Red Deer, Athabasca, and the North Saskatchewan basins as well? Again, I don't want to be creating policy just on the fly here. It would be, I think, wiser and easier to manage to know that we are working with a plan here that will meet these needs over a long period of time but will also be sustainable at the same time.

Just the fact that we're repealing the Ferintosh act here a few months after we created it to bring in a quantitatively much larger water allocation for nine communities instead of two does raise my concerns. I think we need to continue to work on this, and we need to debate it in this House. I would recommend as well that we do gather more data so that we can make the best decision possible.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for those who wish to participate.

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to comment briefly on this bill and some of the comments that have been made regarding the repeal of the Ferintosh act that was just passed. Frankly, I share the concerns of members that have expressed concern with this. The truth of the matter is that shortly after the House adjourned last spring, I had an opportunity to travel out into that part of the country. In talking with some of the municipal councillors in the area, they were thanking me and thanking the Legislature for passing the legislation so they could get on with providing water to Ferintosh, and in the course of that conversation they said, "Oh, and when can we expect that you'll introduce the legislation to take it on to the next town?" My reaction was, "Well, what next town?" If there was an intent to have this water delivered to more than just Ferintosh, why didn't we deal with it? Why didn't we acknowledge it at the time that it was in the House? Every time we extend this waterline by another 30 or 40 miles, are we going to be back in the Legislature with another piece of legislation?

My instructions at that point to my staff and to everyone in the area was: get your act together. Figure out what the plan is. Figure out what this regional plan is going to be, and let's deal with it all at once. So, Mr. Speaker, if there is someone to accept responsibility for repealing legislation that was just passed this spring, I accept that responsibility; it's mine. Frankly, I think that we have a much better approach dealing with it this way than the piecemeal approach that had been undertaken in the past.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Swann: Yes. And thanks to the minister for acknowledging some leadership issues that are needing to be filled.

I did ask for some guidance about the principles that are involved and how we make these decisions and the extent to which we could open up that process so that Albertans could be assured that we are making decisions in the longer term interests of Alberta. I wonder if he could comment at this time or would like to comment later on the principles. We're talking about the principle of the bill in second reading. What are the principles that we are using to make these kinds of decisions?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issues regarding the approval mechanism that would be allowed by this legislation are the same as for any other licence that is issued by Alberta Environment. There is a process by which notification is required. There is a process by which affected parties may submit a letter of concern. At the end of the day, like every other decision that is made by Alberta Environment, ultimately individuals have an opportunity to ask the Environmental Appeal Board to consider an appeal of any decision. All of those same kinds of ongoing requirements of the Water Act will continue to apply to any licences or amendments that would be granted under this act.

All this act does is take off the table the interbasin transfer because, frankly, that's now been decided by the Legislature. Everything else to do with the water application remains in effect and will continue to be dealt with in the normal manner.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: under what conditions would we as a Legislature turn down an application for interbasin transfer?

Mr. Renner: Well, my crystal ball is no better than yours, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what the conditions would be where that would be turned down. I can think of some conditions where I would not bring forward a request. Those conditions would be where we would be suggesting a wholesale transfer from one water basin to another through very large diversions. That is my understanding of the intent behind having the legislation that we have currently in place: to ensure that we didn't have massive, wholesale diversions from one water basin into another. I would suggest that that may be something that the Legislature would consider.

5:00

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: would the minister entertain any notion of setting limits to growth in communities particularly that are clearly straining the limits of water supplies in southern Alberta? Are we going to continue to see the freedom to completely grow and make more demands as time goes by as water supply is outstripped by demands?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond. The answer is no. I would not consider that we should be restricting growth, but – and it's a very big but – what we do have to do is start to consider how we use the water, how we can conserve the water, how we can accommodate growth. I actually made reference to it earlier today in question period when I talked about the development of in-stream flow needs for rivers. Those are what I think we should be basing our decisions on, whether or not the ecological health of the river would be impaired by additional withdrawals. If that's the case, then we don't restrict the growth; we restrict the use of the water and require that the new development live within the set limits. There is only so much water to go around, and we'll have to figure out how to share it better.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there's a lot of background noise, making it difficult to hear those who have the floor.

The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. Thank you for those responses. What is emerging in southern Alberta is a market for water. The Balzac situation clearly illustrates what happens when we don't have a plan in place to address demands that outstrip supplies.

The Deputy Speaker: That concludes our time under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Back on the debate, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 55, East Central Regional Water Authorization Act. You know, I think Albertans will always come to the aid of those who are in need, especially in times of drought. I remember stories from my mother of the time of the Great Depression, which was a great drying time, a great time of warming on the prairies, so to speak, where the dust would rise against the walls of the farmhouse above the windows. People would come to help. Nobody wanted to take help and all the rest of it but were certainly happy to see some when it came.

The need for water and the need for a policy on water to look at what will happen in the future is becoming increasingly clear. We're seeing the glaciers drying up at the end of an ice age. The ice used to be a kilometre or more thick here not too many thousands of years ago. There are glacial cirques in the mountains, if anybody knows land forms or anything, that are already dry. Anybody that's gone to the Columbia glacier knows that that's been receding for 10,000 years. It used to be here, but it's getting much, much less. Those are decreasing the water supply and the flow of the rivers, and they will continue to decrease as time goes on.

Having been in a fairly high precipitation area in the Peace at one time and seeing those that would move our water down there, there were always a lot of concerns that that might happen. I don't agree with the idea of arbitrarily moving people to the water because a lot of the places where the water is are muskeg, are not the greatest places to live. You know, I don't think it would be sensible to try and force people.

I do agree with market systems, and I would appreciate, you know, if the minister could in Committee of the Whole come back with some sense of how the market for water allocation transfers and the use of incentives will work in the long term and how we will see those develop in the long term as water becomes, in effect, more valuable and as those who are in areas of a lot of water or less decreasing water become more protective of their water. We don't want to see water wars, and we don't want to see areas unnecessarily restricted in their economic development, but a market allocation system that is properly priced in the long term may be the way to do that so that those places have the right sort of feeling that they are ensuring that they're getting the proper return for their resource.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to keep my comments brief. I just noticed a couple of things that I'd like to comment on, the first being that when the mover of the bill, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, suggested that this allocation – and we're talking 10,800 cubic decametres annually. I have to confess I don't know how much water that is, but it certainly sounds like it's an awful lot more than we dealt with previously in Bill 54, which was only 208.78 cubic decametres annually for the county of Westlock. Now we're covering off several counties, several communities, and 10,800 decametres annually, so an awful lot of water, clearly. That's not necessarily a bad thing. [some applause] I hear some applause from the other side of the House.

You know, as has been mentioned I think by every speaker so far, nobody is going to stand in the way of getting potable water, safe drinking water, to those people who need it. But I share the concerns mentioned by the Minister of Environment earlier in that we were here just last year dealing with the county of Ferintosh. As much as the mover of the bill contemplated that this should address the needs of these various communities for the next 50 years, I'm not completely confident that we won't be back here, perhaps not next year – I would certainly hope not next year – but at some point in the relatively near future contemplating moving even more water into these counties.

I guess the thing is, as was mentioned by my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, that we're here to discuss the principle. I think it has to be asked: how many times can we come to this Legislature? How often are we going to be coming to this Legislature, moving water from north to south? It has become almost a pattern already. The legislation contemplates a special act of the Legislature when this is required. Just that wording itself, I think, Mr. Speaker, would indicate that this is not something that should be contemplated as routine but, rather, in special circumstances. What we're seeing, unfortunately, is that the special circumstances contemplated by the legislation are in fact happening more and more often. My suspicion is that given that the rivers in the southern part of the province are fully allocated, we're going to continue to see these special circumstances and these special acts of the Legislature being asked more and more often to address the serious situation that we're facing with water in this province.

Now, the other comment that was made by the mover of the bill – and I'm going to ask him if he could clarify this for members of the House before we deal with this bill in committee stage. He said that the act currently contemplates rollbacks in the allocation if, in fact, the population forecasts are not met. Well, it's clearly not in this act, so I'm not sure where that is. Perhaps it's in a regulation or perhaps it's in another act. As a member who will be voting on this ultimately and who has constituents that I have to answer to, that is something that I would like to know about because if, in fact, we do contemplate rollbacks if the population growth doesn't take place, that would give me some small measure of reassurance, I suppose. If you could undertake, hon. member, to have an answer on that particular question for us when we come back to committee, I would appreciate it.

5:10

As I said I would keep my comments brief, I'll stick to my word, Mr. Speaker. In particular, I wanted to raise the question about the rollbacks. I think it's important that we all think in a more broad sense about how often we're doing this and what it might mean for the future if we continue to come back every year or two and ask for ever more water transfers from one basin to another.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to comment about this bill. As we all know, the very first bill that moved potable water, water that had been treated, from one system to another was the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act, and I can tell you how successful that was for the people who received the water. The question has been asked: how often do we move water from north to south? I would say to you that we should only do it in special circumstances, but as often as it is necessary for life and quality of life is how often we should do it. At no point in time will we ever refuse to give water for drinking and livelihood purposes to any Albertan.

Now, I do have to admit that I had a problem with using water for irrigational purposes and that sort of thing, but that's not what we're talking about here. We're talking about domestic use only for people and for animals, and it's treated water, so I have no qualms whatsoever about supporting this bill. I think it's absolutely necessary and important. At the same time, after having said that, we do need to be cautious about how we do things with our water in the future. But in this case it's important and necessary, so I would ask all members to support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Again under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Member for Red Deer-North. When she says we should transfer water as often as is necessary, that in effect implies that there would be no end to the amount of water transferred, that if a town in a dry area got a new subdivision, we'd transfer it, and if they got another new subdivision, we'd transfer more water. Does this member really mean what she's saying, or does she actually see some requirement to limit water transfers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. I think that what you're referring to is planning. It wouldn't be very clever to be planning to build neighbourhoods in communities and areas where there is no water available. So I wouldn't be supporting that at all. Let's not build new communities in places where there is no water. Planning is the answer to that, and planning is what we need to do. However, when people are living in a community and they run out of water and we can help to support their livelihood by a simple transfer, I would be very supportive of that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments of the member. I guess my question in a follow-up would be: do you see any basis for limiting growth? It's one thing to say that the people run out of water when they've been established in a community; it's another thing to say: "We will not put any limits on growth. If you have problems in five years or 10 years, we will simply increase the demands from this resource."

Mrs. Jablonski: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the key issue here is planning. Obviously, it's not a very clever plan to continue to grow in an area where there's no water to support that growth. So I look to the wisdom of the planners.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the comments made by the Member for Red Deer-North is certainly something that intrigues me, and that is her assurance that in both Bill 54 and Bill 55 the water is for domestic use only. I understand it's potable water, it's drinking water, but I have concerns that some of this water will end up being used for commercial or industrial use. I don't know how you could possibly stop that from happening once it's moved into a community. So do you not share the same concerns I have that some of this water may end up being used rather than simply for domestic use, as you said a minute ago, that some of it may actually be for industrial or commercial use?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the amount of water that is allowed for this bill has a cap. I would say to you that because we know how much water is going to be transferred, that's where I take some comfort in knowing that it's not a never-ending supply. We know it's the 10,000-whatever decametres that's in the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. I really appreciate this exchange. I hope that the Member for Red Deer-North urges her colleague in the cabinet the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to address the kind of planning she's talking about in his land-use plan. It doesn't make sense, we agree – at least you agree with us – to allow development in areas where there's no water. That may well be the kind of restriction that we would look for in the land-use framework, whatever you're calling it, that's going to come out soon. Lean on your minister to make those plans happen.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member for Red Deer-North wish to respond? Others on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there others that wish to participate in the debate?

Does the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler wish to close?

Mr. Hayden: Let's vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 55 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2

Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today before the Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007. As you know, this bill passed second reading on May 9, 2007, and was then referred to the Standing Committee on Government Services on May 30, 2007, very shortly before the spring session adjourned.

The Standing Committee on Government Services met a total of 10 times and received six written submissions on this bill from individual citizens and associations, people who had issues or people who had some ideas or remarks. A number of issues then came forward, came to the forefront throughout the committee's review, and we had the opportunity to explore them both as members, amongst ourselves, and with stakeholders. The committee issued a report, and I'm sure everybody in this House actually read it and read it very thoroughly.

This was the same procedure we used for Bill 1. The report is actually available as a sessional paper because it was tabled in the Assembly. It's also available online for those members who care to go to the Assembly website and read it. Unlike Bill 1, though, it is not as thick or dense as the recommendations from that particular legislation. This one here is roughly two and a half or three pages, so I urge all members to check that out.

Most of the amendments that the committee is proposing are of a technical nature. We had extensive help, assistance from officials in the Ministry of Justice as well as our own Legislative Assembly Office, and I actually have to express my gratitude as the deputy chair of the standing policy field committee and on behalf of all members who sat on the committee for the assistance we received from those officials from Justice and from the LAO.

The committee actually made some recommendations. Those recommendations were tabled earlier. Today I would like to actually introduce these as an official amendment in Committee of the Whole. Hopefully the pages can distribute that.

5:20

The Chair: We'll allow time to do that. We will refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

The amendments that are written here say moved by Mr. Cenaiko.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. On behalf of the chair of the committee.

The Chair: You're moving it on behalf of him, so we'll change the wording to that?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes.

The Chair: Okay. I believe you can proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The first thing I have to ask you to do, please, is that we are hoping that the amendments get severed. We have amendments A, B, C, and D, as per that sheet, and we don't want to proceed as an omnibus amendment. We want them severed into their individual clauses, please, as is customary.

The Chair: So you're suggesting that we deal with them in four parts: A1A, A1B, A1C, A1D?

Mr. Elsalhy: Please.

The Chair: This has been done in the past, and we'll allow that to happen again.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much. As such, I will start with the first one. The first one is amendment A1A now. It's a committee amendment that was proposed by the Department of Justice. It recommends that a member should only be required to disclose those legal proceedings of which he or she is aware. This proposed amendment would bring the provision more closely in line with the recommendations of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, which I also happened to sit on about a year ago. That committee actually did extensive work on the Conflicts of Interest Act itself and made wonderful recommendations which led to the introduction of Bill 2. Now we're making it extra clear. We're making something that is good even better.

People have indicated to us that sometimes there is a legal proceeding that is brought against me that I'm not aware of. Maybe somebody is a vexatious litigant. Maybe somebody is doing some frivolous lawsuit just to get me in trouble or just to maybe distract me from my duties. That extends to all other members of this House, and it also extends to members of cabinet and so on. There might be a legal proceeding against me; there might be 10 of them, and maybe I'm not aware of any of them. This particular amendment, as suggested by the Department of Justice, deals with this in terms of me disclosing to the Ethics Commissioner based on what information I know. If it's something that I'm not aware of, how could there be an expectation for me to report it to the Ethics Commissioner?

I think it makes sense. I'm urging all members of the Assembly to support amendment A1A.

The Chair: Okay. Does anyone else wish to participate?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A1A?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1A carried]

The Chair: Do you wish to proceed to some more?

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. Now moving on to amendment A1B, this is a committee amendment as well that was proposed again by the Department of Justice. This proposed amendment would allow a person who has been financially affected by a member's breach of the act to pursue an action against any person, including the member himself or herself who has gained financially from the breach. The proposed amendment would bring the provision more closely in line, again, with the recommendations from the select special committee which reviewed the act a year earlier.

Basically, it talks about furthering the interests of somebody. Furthering their interests resulting in a financial gain or otherwise doesn't only apply to the member in question; it also applies to any other person out there who might or might not be related to the member. So we're just extending that definition. Again, it's a recommendation that was supported by both the earlier committee and the latter one.

Dr. Taft: You know, my advice to members is to pay close attention to some of these because everyone of us will get caught up in this kind of legislation.

My questions to the Member for Edmonton-McClung: are there any limits to the scale of restitution that might be sought, and can that include both punitive as well as compensatory aspects? In other words, could an action be brought against one of us that seeks not only to be compensated but also to punish, which is not uncommon in some courts of law?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. While this is definitely a technical question, a legal question that I'm not qualified to answer, my understanding as a layperson is that if as a member of this Assembly or a member of cabinet I did something that basically amounts to a proven or evident conflict of interest that led to somebody benefiting and then maybe also led to somebody, you know, being unduly impacted or being negatively impacted, that person can bring action against myself and also can bring action against the people who benefited from my conflict of interest. That is my understanding. Whether it is punitive or whether it's only restitution, I honestly am not qualified to answer that, but I know that one of my colleagues who sat on the committee has the legal expertise to address it, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. In response to the hon. leader's inquiry, my understanding of the provision is that restitution means that. It means to restore to the previous state of affairs prior to the ill-gotten gains. In other words, there is no limit on the amount deliberately because it's limited to the amounts which are in fact ill-gotten gains. I think that responds to his question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again, I suppose, to the Member for Edmonton-McClung on this particular issue. This will involve a case in the Court of Queen's Bench, as I'm reading the section here, which could be very costly. I'm wondering if there was any thought given to who might cover those costs. You know, if there was a prolonged legal battle and in the end the case from the government fell apart or the case from the person seeking restitution fell apart, is the MLA personally exposed to paying the costs of defence?

Also, a second question would be: I suppose there's a safeguard in here, but is there any risk here of mischievous actions?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Actually, we discussed the issue of mischief and people just suing for the sake of suing. We felt that nothing that we do here is going to prevent people whose minds are set to sue us and to make us look bad from doing that. What this is dealing with, to the hon. Leader of the Opposition, is basically when I as a member use inside information or use accessed information that is not available to other people to further the interests of either myself or people I know and in doing that somebody gains either financially or otherwise and somebody may be hurt or loses financially or otherwise, that person, who in their opinion experienced that loss, would now have the ability to sue to get restitution and potentially even for fines or other sanctions against me.

I have to have committed the conflict of interest initially to be subject to this. It's not just any MLA, and it's not just anybody suings any MLA because they feel like it. It's basically because I put myself in that conflict that somebody has experienced a loss or experienced some ill effect or side effect from my action as somebody who has inside information, and maybe I used it to, you know, further the interests of a friend of mine, for example, or somebody the government is in a contract with. There is nothing to stop people from continuing to sue us vexatiously or frivolously. This is only if I am asking for it. As a member of this Assembly or a member of cabinet who did something wrong, I deserve what's coming.

The Chair: Are there others on this amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again on this particular amendment, I think people should be paying close attention. As I read the section, it says: "any person affected by the financial gain, including the Government or a Provincial agency, may apply to the Court of Queen's Bench." So one of us could be taken to the Court of Queen's Bench by a government agency, which is quite a different situation and, I think, one that we might want to consider the wisdom of. I don't have any specific concern, but I just want to point that out.

I also wish to ask the Member for Edmonton-McClung if he can tell me if this would have any retroactive applications. For example, if somebody last year was discovered to have made a tremendous amount of money through a conflict of interest and was found in breach of the act as laid out here, could they be taken to Court of Queen's Bench by a government agency next year?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. Let me start by saying that I definitely don't have the legal expertise to maybe give as full an answer as the Leader of the Opposition is hoping for, but I'm going to reply to him again as a layperson and someone who sat on the committee.

I don't think the act would be applied retroactively. I think the act comes into force and then moves forward. The discussion in the committee and even in the earlier committee, if I remember correctly, had to do with how much time those records are kept in terms of potential conflict, you know, our returns, submissions to the Ethics Commissioner, how long he keeps them for, and so on. I don't think the act could be applied retroactively.

Now, in terms of a government department or a government agency going to the Court of Queen's Bench to sue, I actually don't view this as a negative. I think it's also a positive because it offers that added accountability and that added layer of openness. If a government agency – they're not all necessarily bad, and we have to make this clear in this House. Government agencies sometimes discover things through their own internal audit mechanisms, or the Auditor General might unravel something that a government agency would then investigate further. If they discover wrongdoing against myself or against the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry or whoever, maybe we should give them that tool, give them that licence to go to the court and alert the court and say: "You know what? We discovered that this particular MLA or this particular minister has done something wrong. We think that the money should be paid back, and maybe compensation should be offered to the other person or entity that got adversely affected."

I look at it as a positive, actually. I don't think it is particularly negative or particularly unsavoury. You know, yes, if they discover that there has been wrongdoing and that money changed hands because of it, I think they have a duty to report it, and they have a duty to pursue it. If we can save taxpayers money by doing this, or if we can reclaim some of the money that was maybe inadvertently lost or misplaced, then I think that's the way to do it.

Would the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill care to supplement?

Dr. Brown: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has certainly covered it very well. As I mentioned previously, the purpose of that particular subsection of the legislation is to require anyone who has wrongfully benefited or made a personal financial gain to disgorge those gains. I think that's equitable.

The amendment that the hon. member refers to, part B, is just expanding the concept to include any other person who has improperly gained. That could be the member's brother or the member's spouse or anyone else. That's simply, I think, a reasonable provision, to require anyone who has benefited improperly by reason of a conflict of interest to not gain financially by those deeds.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now moving on to amendment A1C . . .

An Hon. Member: No. We have to vote.

Mr. Elsalhy: Oh, we have to vote. Okay.

The Chair: Has everybody spoken on A1B that wishes to? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you wish to speak on this particular clause?

Mr. Eggen: No. Thanks.

The Chair: Are we ready for the question on A1B?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1B carried]

The Chair: Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, you may proceed on C.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the committee section C here is a committee amendment that was proposed by the Department of Justice, again, and it's basically cleaning up some of the language. The word "activity" is inappropriate in the context of this provision. An activity cannot be awarded, approved, or given. An activity is undertaken, but it's not awarded or given or approved. This proposed amendment reflects a simple improvement in the drafting language, something that was missed initially.

Then sub (b) under there is also a committee amendment that was proposed, one more time, by the Department of Justice, as you guessed it, which would allow a person who has been financially affected by a former minister's breach of the act to pursue an action against any person, including the former minister himself or herself, who has gained financially from that breach. While the original recommendations of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee did not contemplate claims against persons other than the former minister, we're now offering that extra accountability mechanism. We're opening the door, basically, for anybody who benefited to be held accountable, to be held liable. This proposed amendment would bring this provision in line with the restitutionary provision applicable to members. So now we're extending it as well to ministers and then to anybody who benefited from the conflict of interest.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again I urge the members of this Assembly to pay careful attention because we are on the hook here.

Would the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, who is doing a marvellous job, for the record, be able to advise me – and this may sound farfetched, but I don't believe it necessarily is – when it says in this amendment “or any other person,” if that person might be liable for an action against them, recovering money obtained through a conflict of interest, if there was not knowingly a conflict of interest there? I'm thinking, for example, if a cabinet minister's daughter or any other person – a cabinet minister's business associate or, indeed, the way this is written, a cabinet minister's business associate's daughter; I could go on and on because it says “any other person” – benefited thinking that a deal had been conducted properly, only to discover after the fact that somebody in that chain had been in a conflict of interest: was there any consideration of that sort of possibility, if you're understanding what I'm saying? We may be casting the net a little bit casually here.

5:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, as a layperson I'm going to explain to the hon. Leader of the Opposition how I understand this and how the discussion of the committee went. Basically, I think the rate-controlling step, like we deal with this in the laboratory or as a pharmacist – this is something that we've discussed. You have an equation, you have a chain of reaction, but then there's usually a rate-limiting step or a rate-controlling step. In here the rate-controlling step is: who is the person going to the court asking for sanction? The person who has been adversely affected by a conflict of interest: this person lost money, lost business, lost an opportunity somehow and is now seeking compensation. So that person goes to the court and says: through a conflict of interest the government awarded, you know, a contract or a benefit to X, Y, and Z, and I think that because of that conflict of interest X, Y, and Z should pay the money back, and I should maybe be considered for that particular contract.

Now, the court will make that decision. The court will study the case, will study the circumstances surrounding the case, and will say: okay; was that particular minister in a clear and proven conflict of interest? Could we prove that he knowingly advanced the interests of his daughter or his business partner, that through inside information that's how the business partner or the daughter submitted their tender, for example? And so on.

Based on this, the court is going to make that decision. If it's not convinced that there was a clear conflict of interest, that it wasn't malicious, that it wasn't criminal, the court might dismiss it. If the court is convinced that it was, then both the minister or that person who had that inside information, had that conflict of interest, is going to be held liable. Then that person or entity who benefited is also going to be brought into this court case, and maybe they'll be forced to relinquish, pay back the money, give up the contract, or there might be other sanctions as the court deems necessary.

I'm not a lawyer, unfortunately, and this is a question that is best directed at somebody who has the legal expertise. But that's my understanding. As such, I don't think it's an unfair amendment. I think this is a fair amendment, that that third party that benefited is brought into that court case.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let's just take an example that's very newsworthy right now, or let me use an example that will echo with the newsworthy example just so there's, you know, no problem. Let's assume a senior elected government official obtained $300,000 in cash in brown envelopes. Let's just imagine that might happen. Then that person who received the $300,000 cash left office and got into a business deal, and it wasn't discovered at the time, and that $300,000 of cash was mixed in with the interests of the other business associates. They didn't know that it was obtained inappropriately, and they continued to develop their business. Is there a point at which those people, because it does say in this amendment “any other person,” might find themselves on the hook for that $300,000 cash even though they never had any idea that it was obtained inappropriately?

Mr. Elsalhy: Now, that's an interesting example. I know it's hypothetical. This kind of stuff, hopefully, doesn't happen in Alberta, but should it happen in Alberta, with the act as it's presently worded, the Ethics Commissioner will now hold that person liable and accountable because that person failed to disclose income.

You know, Mr. Chairman, we all disclose income annually. Even gifts and stuff that are given to us if they exceed a certain limit have to be reported. Everything we own, everything we invest in, all the investments, all the companies we hold, and so on have to be disclosed to the Ethics Commissioner on an annual basis. So that particular politician, before having left office, made that kind of money or received that kind of money and has not reported it to the Ethics Commissioner: in this particular case that person is in deep trouble, is in extreme hot water.

Now, if that person used this money to advance the interests of that other person and knowingly did this to circumvent the rules or to bend the rules or to give an unfair advantage to that person, well, yes, that person should be also brought into it because that person gained from that arrangement, gained from that relationship unduly. He didn't deserve to make that money or he didn't deserve to win that contract in particular, and that conflict of interest right there led to that award, and maybe that should be reversed. The person who had the conflict of interest should be dealt with forcefully, and he should be made an example of. The person who, you know, unduly secured that benefit or that award should also be at least asked to repay it to the public purse.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If the recommendations are made by the Department of Justice, why don't you, the Member for Edmonton-McClung, ask the question to the Minister of Justice?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Just for clarity, it was basically officials from the Department of Justice who helped the committee all along. They offered the technical assistance, they offered the expertise, and they actually acted as a resource for the committee, so it's not really a question of us versus them. This was an all-party committee, and whenever we needed that support, whenever we had questions that maybe we couldn't answer ourselves, we had Parliamentary Counsel and we also had the Ministry of Justice staff that were there at our disposal. I'm actually quite envious because I think we can use some of those same officials in our own caucus whenever we're doing internal discussions and internal deliberations. Maybe in the future there might be a provision for, you know, legal expertise to be made available to us.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. Just picking up that comment from the Member for Edmonton-McClung, do you think there's perhaps a conflict of interest or an unfair advantage when one caucus gets access to the legal resources of the Department of Justice and the opposition caucuses do not?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you. I am basically going to restrict my comments to the committee. The committee was an all-party committee, and it's a creature of this Assembly. As such, it was deemed appropriate and prudent to offer the committee that resource.

Now, if the Leader of the Opposition has any proof or evidence that members from the ruling party get access to government expertise and government advice, then definitely I think it's an issue of fairness, and maybe that courtesy should be extended to all caucuses operating in this Assembly.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A1C?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1C carried]

The Chair: Hon. member, on section D.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Section D has two parts: part (a) and part (b). Part (a) is something that we discussed in the committee, and it was brought forward by Justice. Again, the word "activity," just as we did briefly before, is inappropriate in the context of this provision. This is basically a drafting fix – you know, we're fixing some of the language – so it's really minimal, and I hope we don't spend any time on this particular one.

Amendment (b) under there is allowing a person who has been financially affected by a former political staff now – we talked about MLAs; we talked about ministers; now we're talking about political staff – when they breach the act to pursue an action against any person, including that former political staff member, him or herself, who has gained financially from the breach.

While the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee made a general recommendation in that regard, you know, with respect to the cooling-off period, we felt that those political staff, those senior officials, also have a lot of access and a lot of clout. We felt that bringing them in under here was also a measure of accountability and a measure of tightening up the rules a bit because we felt that they, too, have a lot of access and a lot of clout. Their cooling-off period should be introduced, and that is something that everybody agrees to. The length of that cooling-off period is a question that maybe should be brought up in the Assembly because we all agree that cooling off is a done deal. How long, I think, is the question.

The committee felt that it didn't address questions of punishment and restitution for violations of the cooling-off provisions. This proposed amendment would bring the provisions in line with that restitutionary direction that is applicable to both members and former ministers who are now bringing in senior political staff in this mix.

5:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A question for either the Member for Edmonton-McClung – I guess I need to identify a specific one – or if he's unable to respond, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill could respond perhaps. My question is really pretty straightforward. How extensively was the Ethics Commissioner and/or his staff involved in developing this amendment or, for that matter, any others?

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Ethics Commissioner was actually involved and engaged from day one. It was basically the committee, that Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, which did the initial work. The Ethics Commissioner was not just invited as somebody who presents to the committee; he was actually engaged more like a partner to the extent that the Ethics Commissioner and his staff actually made a presentation. They made a submission to the Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee detailing what they would like to see. They actually told us: if you're coming to us to tighten the act and to make it, you know, less leaky and to rid it of some of the loopholes that are in it, these are things that we would like you to discuss. They didn't tell us we had to do it, but they told us that these were things they wanted us to go over and to discuss and to evaluate.

We heard the Ethics Commissioner and his staff. We actually addressed most of his concerns, but this is basically taking it a step further. This is basically offering that extra layer of accountability. I think, to answer that question, that the Ethics Commissioner was actually a partner in this process from day one.

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A1D?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1D carried]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I certainly appreciate the opportunity to speak back on the actual Bill 2. I actually had an opportunity to sit in on one of the meetings where Bill 2 was being drafted. It was an all-party committee that seemed to be functioning quite well. Certainly, the spirit of co-operation was more prevalent than not, although in one section that I happened to attend, I did have a problem with the fact that the cooling-off period was changed in Bill 2 from I think it was 12 months down to six months. I was wondering about that because it seemed as though people had voted on it before, and then it was as though it was being rescinded. Certainly we didn't see that in the energy and environment committee. You know, once we organized it, we organized it. I felt as though there were larger forces at hand somehow, pulling this committee back from making a reasonable decision and perhaps nefariously influencing the causes of democracy within the committee.

I was a bit concerned about that, and I was curious to perhaps seek clarification as to why that sort of happened in the 11th hour of the formation of Bill 2 through this all-party committee. Of course, whenever you're making these sorts of regulations and the amendments that were brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, forwarded from the chair, I was struck globally by looking at these as to the importance of all-inclusivity when you're making rules about conflict of interest. You can't pick and choose too much because, of course, you can always find exceptions to any circumstance. We do that all the time when we're making legislation in this House.

You know, while the accommodation for exceptions is useful, when you're talking about conflict of interest, I don't think that that is the best path necessarily because when you're dealing with the highest level of government decisions, the capacity to influence legislation that might benefit one group over another or one individual over another is massive. By definition you are, by choosing, making a potential opportunity for one or another group, right?

I believe that this does not just extend to the elected members of this House. It seems to me that there are people behind the scenes that are making these decisions at least at the same level or even more so. Referring back to the example of my one time in this fine committee, the elected people all decided something, and then somebody else obviously had decided something different. That could very well be nonelected officials who are making those recommendations to the elected officials. That very example I think proves the necessity of actually extending that 12-month cooling-off period to all individuals and not just to the ministers involved.

I think that that is an eminently reasonable condition to bring forward. Thus, I will do so with an amendment that I have available to me here now. I have an amendment that I would like to pass on to each member . . .

The Chair: Did the hon. member wish to make a motion to rise and report progress as well?

Mr. Eggen: I'd like to rise and report progress of the evening thus far.

The Chair: Do you move that we rise and report progress?

Mr. Eggen: Sure. Absolutely. Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate the members for making some considerable progress this afternoon and suggest that given the fact that it's 5:58 we give ourselves a break and go home a little early, call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:59 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 28, 2007 1:00 p.m.
Date: 07/11/28
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Fred Underwood, a state of Texas transportation commissioner. The Texas Transportation Commission is much like our provincial ministry of transportation. Mr. Underwood is meeting with several of my cabinet colleagues and ministries, and together we're exploring areas where our great province of Alberta and the great state of Texas might work more closely together, such as in transportation, energy, and enhanced trade. Mr. Underwood will also be visiting our oil sands developments in Fort McMurray and learning more about Alberta's position as a secure, reliable, and growing supplier of energy to the United States.

Accompanying Mr. Underwood are Mr. Michael Reeves, the president of the U.S.-based Ports-to-Plains trade corridor commission, and Mr. Scott Flukinger, adviser, cross-border affairs, with Ports-to-Plains trade corridor commission. The Ports-to-Plains trade corridor is potentially a sister corridor to Canamex but on the eastern side of the Rockies.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask our honoured guests to rise – they're seated in your gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two different introductions today. The first is of a young woman who is volunteering in my constituency office in Edmonton-Centre. Madeleine Kobi was born in the Democratic Republic of Congo and was schooled in Ottawa, where she also participated in a gospel band. She has now moved to Edmonton and is starting in January in the social work program at Grant MacEwan College. She wanted to volunteer some hours in my constituency office to give her a better view of her future career. She has now stood in the public gallery, and I would ask you all to please welcome her to the Assembly.

My second introduction is for Victoria school. This is a very special school to me, Mr. Speaker, because it is a fine arts based school. We have 47 grade 6 students joining us in the public gallery today along with their teachers, Mrs. Stacey Taylor and Ms Carla Kerr. This is a terrific group of young people. They had very good questions for me when I met with them earlier today. I'm delighted that they've come to join us in the Assembly, and I hope they'll come back again. I would ask them all to please rise now and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is really a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a grade 6 class from John Paul I in Edmonton-Mill Woods. We have 23 students visiting today along with two teachers, Mrs. Elizabeth McKay and Mr. Dave King, and two parent helpers, Mrs. Pam Vona and Miss Faye Johansen. I'd ask them to please rise and accept the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure today of introducing to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Debra Jakubec, vice-chair of the Alberta Community Council on HIV, ACCH, and executive director of HIV Edmonton. Debra is here today to witness the member's statement recognizing HIV/AIDS Awareness Week and World AIDS Day 2007.

The Alberta Community Council on HIV understands the importance of emphasizing prevention, public health initiatives, education, and community support in ensuring that people can be well and that our health system is available for all Albertans when they most need it. Members saw when they walked into the Chamber today that red ribbons were placed on their desks. By wearing a red ribbon, one can demonstrate understanding and concern for the issue of HIV/AIDS as well as recognize its impact on the lives of many Albertans and people around the world. I'd ask Ms Jakubec to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this House student leaders who have played such an important and vital role in the development of the roles and mandates policy framework. We ensured that student voices were heard through the consultation process because that's what the postsecondary institutions serve. We have with us today Mr. David Hayes, chair of the Alberta Graduate Council; Matt Koczur, vice-chair, Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council; Adam Boechler, executive director, Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council; Duncan Wojtaszek, executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students; Mike Selnes, chair of the Council of Alberta University Students; and Steven Dollansky, vice-chair of the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the dedicated student individuals who I've had the pleasure of working with over the past months along with a huge array of other stakeholders. They are in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly three people. The first is Sam Libin, who is a very typical nine-year-old except back in June he raised over $5,000 for Kids Cancer Care by having his hair cut off. His brother Austin Libin, who is eight years old, is with him. Austin is starring, very much like his father, as Mortimer in the Robert Munsch play of the same name. They've brought their dad, Sean Libin, with them today.

They had the opportunity of meeting the Premier and talked to me and asked me some very, very difficult questions. I would ask Sean, Sam, and Austin to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister for Capital Planning.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure now to introduce some very special guests. Over three days during this past weekend and in honour of the birthday of Guru Nanak, the founder of Sikhism, the Punjabi media along with our Sikh gurdwaras and some local Punjabi organizations raised over $72,000 in cash, and that amount is growing. [some applause] Yes. They also gathered three full two-tonne truckloads of donated food, all for the Edmonton Food Bank. They did an amazing job and have just received the personal thanks and congratulations from our Premier and myself during a brief luncheon that we had.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask each guest to rise and remain standing as I call their names, and then we can applaud and thank them all ensemble. The co-ordinator of the group, Mr. Gursharn Buttar, SurSangam Radio and Guldasta TV; Miss Rajwinder Klair, SurSangam Radio and Guldasta TV; Mr. Sukhdev Aujla, Desh Punjab Radio; Jasbeer Singh, Parivartan magazine; Gurbhalinder Sandhu, Des Pardes Times and Virrasat TV; Kanwal Lyall, Des Pardes Times and Virrasat TV; Ranjit Singh Powar, Punjab Guardian newspaper; Ashok Gangwani, Guldasta TV; Sukhdev Dhillon, Radio Punjab 101.7 FM; Harpreet Sandhu, Desh Videsh Times; and Dr. P.R. Kalia, Asian Times.

Bohut, bohut shukria. Lakh, lakh wadania. Many, many thanks and one million congratulations. [As submitted]

Please join me in saluting these outstanding members of the Punjabi community. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this House Dr. Jason Dewling. Dr. Dewling is a professor at Lakeland College in Vermilion. He sits on the Wainwright town council and lives in my constituency, and he's also a close personal friend. Jason is the gentleman who asked me if I first wanted to go to Guatemala to build houses with Habitat for Humanity. It was an incredible, life-changing experience, and I thank him for that. He's leading another delegation to the Dominican Republic in May, and if anyone is interested, they can contact my office as I hope to be going again, too. I'd ask Jason to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you several guests visiting today who have a very strong interest in Bill 41. They believe that a profession that has been very successfully self-regulating for the last hundred years should remain self-regulating. Margaret Hadley is the president of the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta. Unfortunately, her son Robert, who was to join her today, who is also an RN – and, as we all know, most RNs do double shifts, and that's where he is today. We also have Mary-Ann Robinson, the executive director of CARNA. I would ask them to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a member of my constituency, Mr. William Eady, who is here. He's interested in educational issues, and he's here to see a letter by him tabled later in our proceedings. I'd invite him to stand and please receive the warm welcome of this House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Bishop Routhier School

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Academic excellence is not a level of distinction which is easily achieved. It requires many hours of work and a tremendous amount of dedication by teachers and parents alike. One particular school in the beautiful constituency of Lesser Slave Lake has attained this standing. Bishop Routhier School in Peavine has made its whole community very proud with the latest provincial academic test, or the PAT, results.

In Alberta the PAT is used as an instrument to help monitor student success. It is a comprehensive test based on the curriculum for the entire year. In June 2007 a hundred per cent of the school's students wrote the test, and a hundred per cent of them passed. On top of that, 21 per cent of the students were in the excellence range. This was no easy task, Mr. Speaker. Parents diligently engaged their children to make sure their homework was being done while teachers made sure that each child received the attention necessary and understood the material being covered.

Furthermore, one of the main reasons these students improved so rapidly is the school's focus on reading. Bishop Routhier implemented the precision reading program, PRP, again this year. Under the program every day includes 40 minutes of reading time with each staff member meeting with a small group of students to do so. Every student in the school has gone up at least one year's reading level, and PRP has certainly played a key role in this.

What is most impressive of all is the school's determination to continue achieving such good grades. They are now focusing on elevating their excellence level for the next PAT. I commend the students of the Peavine school of Bishop Routhier, principal Brian Dewar, all the teachers, and the parents for working together to achieve such great scores.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Support for Seniors

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors are the fastest growing demographic. This is not new information. It has been talked about for the past 25 years. The planners knew it was happening, but it appears that no one even tried to guess what the consequences were going to be to society at large. Not only are the numbers increasing, but people are living longer. In my riding I gave out 13 centenarian medals in 2005, and my dear Mrs. Yvonne Harris, who I took to see the Queen at 100, is now 103 and bright as ever.

Seniors can be loosely generalized into three categories: the independent senior with enough money to ensure that they can live with dignity and have enough hired help when required; seniors independent but on a tight, often fixed income and who find it difficult to meet inflation; seniors requiring health care on an ongoing basis.

Seniors want to stay in their homes as long as possible but not at the expense of their sanity. Worse, senior suicide is on the increase.

People can die of loneliness. We need senior community centres that provide one-stop services, government information offices, small health rooms for basic assessments, exercise opportunities, outreach for shut-ins. This approach would save the health system millions and keep seniors active, healthy to live out their lives in the dignity that they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Stoney Trail Project P3 Award

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to share a success story with you, with members of the Assembly, and with all Albertans. This week the government of Alberta and the Stoney Trail General Partnership received a national award of merit for P3 implementation from the Canadian Council for Public-Private Partnerships. It's a very prestigious award, and it's very difficult to win, and I congratulate all involved for this great achievement. The northeast Stoney Trail project is an innovative partnership between government and the private sector that will save taxpayers millions of dollars over the life of the road.

This award further demonstrates that Alberta's P3 process for highways is a great success. The recently opened southeast Anthony Henday Drive in Edmonton was the first project to be built this way, and it was made possible by the innovation and progressive thinking of the minister at the time, who happens to be our Premier, and the outstanding staff at the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. We're partway through the process for the northern section of Anthony Henday Drive.

The P3 process delivers these vital roadways sooner than the traditional approach, plus government receives a fixed price, which is especially important given the double-digit cost escalation we've experienced during the past few years. Government also receives a 30-year warranty on the work while we only get a one- or two-year warranty on most projects delivered conventionally.

This government is committed to exploring more P3 opportunities where they make good business sense and where they save taxpayers money. Mr. Speaker, the P3 model of building major projects is a major success story for Alberta, and I congratulate the Premier, the minister, department staff, and the Stoney Trail General Partnership for this prestigious award.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Violence against Women

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Violence against women is one of the most serious human rights violations on the planet. Across Canada and around the world there is a growing momentum for organizing around men's roles and responsibilities in ending violence against women.

I think violence against women troubles us so deeply because women are seen as caregivers, as mothers, as the foundation of family life. When a woman is assaulted, it's an attack not only on an individual but also on the community, on the collective values we hold dear.

Sadly, no community is free from the spectre of violence against women. This madness is a real and undeniable problem. It is a problem without a single solution. There is no magic wand that will make it all go away overnight. But we are not helpless. This is not an insurmountable problem. With a good education, with respect for women, with the conviction that violence is never the answer, we can dramatically reduce violence against women.

Colleagues, it's our duty to pass comprehensive laws against all forms of violence against women and to fund programs for survivors of this violence such as shelters for battered women and rape crisis centres and for services to treat violent men.

I believe that respect for girls and women and equality between men and women are preconditions to ending the violence. It has been the longest war, the greatest epidemic, and the biggest disaster. With strength and love we commit ourselves to work alongside women to bring this violence to an end.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

HIV/AIDS Awareness

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to speak about the important issue of HIV/AIDS awareness. Please join me in recognizing HIV/AIDS Awareness Week and World AIDS Day 2007. Canadian HIV/AIDS Awareness Week begins on November 26 and culminates with World AIDS Day on December 1. It's a time to remember those lost to HIV/AIDS and recognize those who continue to live with the effects of HIV/AIDS.

As many of you know, HIV weakens the immune system. When the immune system is damaged beyond repair, infections and cancers overwhelm the body, resulting in the final stage of HIV infection, AIDS.

HIV/AIDS is still with us. It affects people from around the world as well as at home here in Alberta. There is no cure. In fact, in this province in 2006, 218 new cases of HIV were identified in Alberta compared to 170 in 2005. Most recent estimates from 2005 indicate that approximately 3,700 individuals are living with HIV in Alberta. The good news is that this government together with stakeholders and community organizations is developing a long-term strategy to address the prevention and control of HIV and sexually transmitted illnesses in all groups.

As an example of what great accomplishments can be made through strong collaboration, I refer to the Alberta prenatal HIV screening program. This program currently tests more than 95 per cent of pregnant women each year for HIV and routinely screens all for syphilis and hepatitis B. It is regarded as one of the best screening programs in the world.

Mr. Speaker, scientific data leaves little doubt that the presence of sexually transmitted infections facilitates HIV transmission through direct biological mechanisms, so early testing and treatment are critical to a high quality and comprehensive HIV prevention strategy. Additionally, we are increasing funds to AIDS service organizations in Alberta for 2007-2008 and continuing to provide fully funded testing for HIV to all regardless of health care coverage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to bring to the attention of this House a concern I have for the future prosperity of all Albertans. In comments yesterday the hon. Premier displayed a profound and fundamental misunderstanding of the oil and gas industry and the investment world. When asked about the slashing of drilling plans in Alberta's natural gas industry, the Premier's answer was very naive. The new rates don't take effect until January 2009, he said, so the current slowdown is a result of other things.

It's a very basic concept in the oil and gas and investment world.

A business plan reflects what will happen in the next few years, not just this moment. Gas wells drilled today will pay royalties in 2009. Investors will be looking for returns in 2009. Apparently, the Premier does not understand this.

Preston Manning wrote about similar concerns earlier this month. Speaking of renegotiation of the Syncrude and Suncor deals of the Premier, he said: this creates long-term uncertainty and questions the competence of his government to lead on major energy issues. While this government may not be looking beyond the next election, the people and companies that have made Alberta great do look and plan long term.

Looking forward, there are real negative consequences of the new royalty framework. I quote BMO Capital Markets global portfolio strategist Don Cox, a respected financial adviser whose Basic Points column is read by investment world-wide. Cox said:

We considered the report such a poorly-written, poorly-reasoned, mean-spirited betrayal of the traditions of a great province that we assumed it would be treated as an embarrassment. It failed to achieve even mediocrity, so it could be safely ignored . . . Premier Stelmach stunned us by endorsing both the tone of the Panel's collectivist rant and most of its recommendations. Most importantly, he broke a promise he had made publicly not to accept its recommendation to break promises made to Suncor and Syncrude, the pioneers of the oil sands development . . . With deep regret we are forced to remove Alberta from the shrinking list of politically-secure regions of the world for the oil industry, taking its rating from AAA to A . . . Once a political region has violated its vows, those who believe it can be trusted not to break its new pledges are betting their companies' . . .

[Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, a petition.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter and petition from 128 Albertans from Lac La Biche and the surrounding area in support of Métis harvesting.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give notice of a motion to be moved tomorrow with respect to a motion to hold sittings on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evening, December 5, 6, and 7.*

I'd also like to give notice of a motion under the Standing Orders to allot one hour of time to debate the motion I just gave notice of for tomorrow.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise in this Legislature to make two tablings. The first is to table the appropriate number of copies of the roles and mandates policy framework for the publicly funded advanced education system. This framework was developed in consultation with Alberta students and our publicly funded postsecondary institutions. It more clearly defines the roles and mandates within our system while supporting a high degree of collaboration and fulfilling the goals of Campus Alberta.

The second tabling contains letters of support from three of Alberta's postsecondary student leaders, including David Hayes, who on behalf of the graduate students commended the ministry for the leadership and vision for an integrated, sustainable system that clearly recognizes the strengths of graduate students in the future; another letter from Jonathan Hill, who represents students in colleges and technical institutes, who calls the framework a blueprint for a better postsecondary system; and finally from Mike Selnes, from the Council of Alberta University Students, who writes that this step will ensure that instructional excellence will remain at the core of Alberta's advanced education system and that they are excited about the possibilities that this framework can create. We will continue, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, to work with these students to ensure that that happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the June 12, 2007, by-elections held in the constituencies of Calgary-Elbow and Drumheller-Stettler. Copies will be distributed to all members early next week.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have letters from constituents Sandra Hill, James Hollett, Chris Byrne, Alice Bartram, Lorne Marr, Sylvia Wolowidnyk, Jijun Yuan, Yongjie Liu, Marie Kopr, and Jason Ness. All of them are expressing their concerns with Alberta's labour laws and, in particular, asking for the outlawing of the use of replacement workers.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Geoffrey Pounder of Rocky Mountain House. He is concerned about the number of weeks he has to wait for a simple doctor's appointment and asks how many people are unable to have their short-term ailments treated due to such waits.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is five copies of my letter and cheque dated September 6 to the Kainai Food Bank. As per my pledge of April 2, '07, half of my indexed pay raise, $146.25, is donated monthly to a food bank until AISH is similarly increased and indexed. The Kainai Food Bank has 300 volunteers and has helped 3,000 families yearly. The executive director is Kimberly Jimmy.

I will table five copies of a letter from a Marg Triskle, in a long-term care facility, who suffers from multiple sclerosis. She is 58 years old, with all her mental faculties, and lives with very little social or mental stimulus. She states that she now is paying twice as much, the care has declined drastically, and this care is going to have to be increased as her condition does decrease.

I will also table five copies of a letter from Edward and Geraldine

*See p. 2249, left col., para. 8

Buchanan, who are my constituents and object very strongly to Bill 46. They feel that it is fundamentally wrong and has a profound impact on the democratic rights of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to rise today to give two sets of tablings. One is a program from the Royal Canadian Golf Association. A few months ago the Royal Canadian Golf Association held the extremely successful Canadian Women's Open in Edmonton and made Alberta and Edmonton proud. It was at the Royal Mayfair golf club and had thousands of volunteers.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a document on advanced affordable housing solutions from CMHC and how people can contact that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table the requisite number of copies of a report entitled Alberta Health Care Insurance Plan Statistical Supplement, 2006-2007. It is essentially an annex to the annual report of Alberta Health and Wellness and provides some very interesting statistics such as: 24 per cent of Albertans paid reduced premiums or were exempt from paying premiums, the number of physicians in Alberta increased 21 per cent in the last four years, a total of $1.6 billion was paid in fee for service, and very many other very interesting statistics that members might want to see.

I'd also, if I might, Mr. Speaker, just indicate that I misspoke when I said December 5, 6, 7. I was looking at the November calendar. It should have been December 3, 4, 5.* I assume the Clerk caught that, but I did definitely say Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Fall Session Timetable

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Assembly has about 30 bills before it that have not yet had full debate, yet the legislative session is scheduled to end next week, as far as we know. These bills include the Premier's own flagship bill and others that impact the fundamental rights of Albertans. My question is to the Deputy Premier. Will this government commit to extending this session beyond the end of next week until these critical pieces of legislation have had full debate?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we'll consider anything that's appropriate in order to deal with the business of the week. But as I've just given notice, we anticipate that we should be able to accomplish that by having not unduly extended evening sittings next week, and if we make appropriate progress on bills without undue repetition, we should be able to accomplish the full agenda in that time. But if that's not the case, I will certainly look to the opposition to assist with unanimous consent, if necessary, to extend the sitting.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, there are 30 bills before this Assembly; six days left. Legislation that touches on Albertans' fundamental rights deserves full debate. All the impacts need to be understood, all the voices need to be heard, and all amendments, including many from the government, need to be considered. One particularly contentious bill, for example, has had less than four hours of debate here, less than four hours to decide whether and how rights are going to be respected. Again to the Deputy Premier: will the Deputy Premier commit that time allocation or closure will not be used to stifle debate and stifle democracy?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very interesting in that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition attended in the House not too long ago when Bill 46 was up for debate and used 60 minutes of time to speak to an amendment, which is clearly, of course, within his right to do. But if he had been a little bit shorter and focused on why the amendment should have been voted on and we could have moved on to the other amendments, he might have afforded other members of his caucus and other members of the House the opportunity to actually speak to the amendment that was on the floor.

The Speaker: We're not going to use the question period for debate of bills.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'll look for a straightforward answer from the Deputy Premier. The question is this: will this government commit that it will not impose time allocation or closure to ram through legislation next week?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would never want to have anyone consider that legislation is being rammed through. There will be an appropriate amount of time available for debate on Bill 46 and other bills, but certainly, if necessary, time allocation is one of the tools of the House, one of the Standing Orders that this House passed, and it's available to be used.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Support for the Homeless

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the mercury drops outside, thousands of Albertans are on the streets freezing. These people rely on organizations such as the Bissell Centre in Edmonton to provide basic necessities, such as warm clothing. The demand is so great this year that the Bissell Centre is turning to the public to help people in need. They've run out of supplies. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. You talk about helping those in need, but what about walking the talk? Will you commit to helping the Bissell Centre and other similar organizations across the province by providing emergency funding so that they can meet this emergency demand?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We do provide $35 million to agencies for the homeless to support approximately 3,100 spaces. We have also added 7 and a half million dollars for emergency funding for the homeless. The Bissell Centre has and will continue to work with the government and provide services that they provide to individuals that aren't as fortunate as us.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I visited many shelters in Alberta: the Mustard Seed and Drop-in Centre in Calgary and last week the homeless shelter in Fort McMurray operated by the Wood Buffalo housing corporation. At each shelter I heard the same message: one-third of the homeless have mental health problems, one-third have addictions issues, and one-third are in situations of distress because of abuse. What these people need is the ability to move beyond the shelter into transitional housing and, even more, into permanent supportive housing. To the same minister. The homeless need two things. They need a roof over their heads for sure, but they also need support services to help them deal with the issues that they deal with daily. Why have these two solutions not been linked together and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we have linked those two solutions together. In fact, we have put funding aside and are using funding for transitional housing. It's important to look at housing or the homeless in four different aspects. First of all, prevention. The second one, shelters, making sure that all the homeless have a space. At this present time in Edmonton and Calgary there are still spaces available. All shelters are not full. The third one is transitional housing. The fourth one is independence. We are working with the agencies, and we are working with individuals that need support.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, everybody needs a home. In the case of the homeless they need a place to move beyond the shelter. It's not just single adults. There are thousands of children who will end up in shelters, and the numbers keep growing in this province. In this rich province of prosperity no child should be without a safe place to live. We have to govern with compassion and not assume that the homeless should have their butt kicked and just get a job. That's what the President of the Treasury Board said in this House. We need compassion on the part of this government. To the same minister: I mean, a 10-year program for homelessness? We need action right now, not something that's going to happen 10 years from now.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously the member opposite wasn't listening to what the government is doing right now. I will tell the hon. member that we are working not only for today but working for tomorrow. About a month ago the Premier did announce a project to end homelessness in 10 years. At that time he also appointed an hon. member from this side of the House to be the secretariat for that committee. We are compassionate, and we are looking at the future to end homelessness.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Support for Seniors

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2005 Auditor General's report on seniors care stated that the Seniors and Community Supports department has not reviewed or assessed whether the monthly disposable income rate of $265 for lodge residents is appropriate. Seniors in Lethbridge and throughout the province have told me that they cannot get by on $265 a month. My question to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: as the monthly disposable income for lodge residents was set in 1994 and has neither been reviewed nor increased since, will the minister adjust the monthly disposable income so that it reflects the lodge residents' increasing personal income requirements due to the increased care needs . . .

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I want to first point out that that program that we do have to see that seniors can be in supportive-living arrangements and have some form of income left on their behalf for disposable income is still one of the best among any of the provinces in this country. While you may look to some in the past, much of our supports have been much more targeted to the greatest need, ensuring that we have more spaces available.

Ms Pastoor: The rest of the provinces do not have our economy, which is why they can't afford it.

The dental assistance for seniors program provides up to $5,000 for dental care. However, it is only of benefit to those who have dentures or require basic dental care. This program completely excludes seniors who have different varieties of dental care needs that exist, such as crowns, caps, implants, et cetera. A program that does not assist is not a benefit. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: will he review and amend this benefit so that it reflects and includes all dental needs required by our deserving low-income seniors?

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do review always the programs that we have available. We try to make sure that we have a good, comprehensive package that's available to seniors. It's in that response that designs were made to include optical and dental expenses. Those were recent additions to the program. Also, to ensure that supports are there, we give the targeted financial assistance to those in greatest need.

Ms Pastoor: They don't reflect the reality of dental care today. We're all going to be there, and we've all got caps.

A comment I heard in Public Accounts this morning about low-income seniors requires me to ask this question. Is it the position of the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports that 40 per cent of Alberta seniors require Alberta seniors' benefits because they failed to plan for their future, keeping in mind that a goodly portion of these seniors are single women who spent a lifetime raising children?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, 40 per cent of Albertans, which is correct, do receive some form of the Alberta seniors' benefits. That's a correct statement. That's not an issue of design as to whether a person is prepared or not prepared; it was the design of our program. In that sense 40 per cent have qualified to receive those benefits.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

New Royalty Framework

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I start, I want to indicate that it's very difficult to prepare questions when the list of ministers in attendance constantly changes, almost by the minute, leading up to this session, and that's a serious concern.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Institute's 6th annual oil sands conference last week in Calgary was attended by a room full of big oil executives who paid $2,000 for the privilege, among other things, of listening to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance at that time, according to reports of people who were there, indicated that the review of royalties in this province was an idea that came from the media and was picked up on by some of the leadership candidates, who all then jumped on the bandwagon. I would like to ask the minister . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, but the time has now evaporated, so I don't know where we're going with this one.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a well-documented fact that the royalty review was picked up by all of the leadership candidates in the past election, and everyone agreed. Our Premier was the one who won, and subsequently he instituted exactly what he had promised.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It would be interesting to know whether or not the Minister of Finance supports this process. Apparently, the Minister of Finance also voiced his concerns about the impact of changes to the royalty system to the Royalty Review Panel, but they told him to mind his own business. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Did he attempt to influence and interfere with the Royalty Review Panel in its discussions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much for that question, Mr. Speaker. My comments were in jest at that particular conference because I had absolutely no contact. I had absolutely zero contact with the people. Indeed, even if we were at a social occasion, it would be that the royalty panel would go to the other side of the room. So the royalty review report was 100 per cent absolutely independent. There was no government interference, and there was no interference from myself.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I wonder if the Premier shares the Minister of Finance's sense of humour.

If there are unintended consequences, said the Premier, they will change the royalty review framework. I'd like to ask the Minister of Energy now: what changes are you considering? When will you tell Albertans exactly what you intend to do about royalties? Are you not concerned that the government's position on royalties is becoming as vague and confused as that of the Liberals?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I would indicate to you and all Albertans is that who is confused here is the member opposite. The fact of the matter is that the Premier has come out very solidly and said that the new royalty framework is in place, it is solid, it's a framework for the future, and we'll move ahead with that framework. There is no intention with this government or this ministry to stray from that particular pathway. Twenty per cent, $1.4 billion by 2010: that's what we're expecting. If there's any confusion, it rests over there.

Roles and Responsibilities for Advanced Education

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, it would be clear to everyone here in the House that the key to the future of Alberta, of course, is within our postsecondary system, the postsecondary institutions that we have throughout the province. The Minister of Advanced Education and Technology has tabled his roles and responsibilities mandate framework, and I want to question him on this from this perspective. In the late '90s and the early part of this century there was a fair amount of work and also political capital invested in terms of Campus Alberta.

The Speaker: I think the time is gone, so if the minister wants to respond.

Mr. Horner: Well, perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I would let the hon. member go to his next question. Being one of the members of this House and this government that actually started the idea of Campus Alberta, it would be most interesting to find out what his question is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. If I may continue, then. What I'm most concerned about are the principles that surrounded that whole concept of Campus Alberta. Have they maintained their presence in the new roles and responsibilities mandate?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. One of the concerns that we've always had during the consultation that we started some 11 months ago was to ensure that we had a document that had some meat to it, that had the principles that everyone agreed to that would make the system that we have in this province the best in the world: the best at collaboration, the best at transferability, the best at access for our students, meeting the three goals of what our postsecondaries should be doing, and that is for the students, for the taxpayers of Alberta, and for our society, and they are entrenched in this document.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I have two very good institutions in the city that I represent: the Lethbridge College and, of course, the University of Lethbridge. The Lethbridge College had written the minister and used the term "diminished framework" in terms of their ability to look at degrees. I'm wondering now: can Lethbridge College continue to have flexibility and move forward in degree granting?

Mr. Horner: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, a good question. This is about our institutions working together as a single system, Campus Alberta system, but we also know that all institutions can't be all things to all people at any given time. We want our institutions to focus on their strengths. We want them to focus on the delivery mechanisms that they do best. But we also recognize that there are exceptions. They are going to be rare. After consultation we have provided within the document some flexibility for colleges in very limited circumstances and, after a very thorough review as it relates to the Campus Alberta concept, the ability to offer degrees should the system see the need for that to happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Electricity Exports

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are still more scandals in the Department of Energy. Electricity deregulation has increased prices and reduced supply. Last year there was a net decrease of 335 megawatts in the installed generating capacity in our province. Now we find out this Progressive Conservative government secretly wants to increase electricity exports even though there is a shortage of electricity here in Alberta and our prices are increasing at an alarming rate. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why does this government want to export large volumes of electricity from this province . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, this question relates to the fact that there had been a question put forward from our department to the AESO with respect to our interconnect capacity in the province of Alberta. I've answered this question previously, and again I'll say the same thing. Perhaps the member wants to climb a pole someplace and watch the electrons. They can go both directions. This whole issue has nothing to do at all with exporting electricity. There is a particular merchant line that's involved in an export capacity. The intertie connections in the province of Alberta, according to our interconnected capacity, are weak.

1:50

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I'm shocked by that answer.

To the Minister of Energy: how does the minister explain the Department of Energy's own proposal, which indicates that we want to export thousands of megawatts of electricity per day from this province to the American market by the year 2020?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, the AESO has the responsibility and the mandate to ensure that the electricity utility system in the province of Alberta, both on the generating side and the transmission of that commodity, is robust and meets the needs and requirements of Albertans. That is the number one priority of the Energy department and, most certainly, any of the bodies that work in conjunction with the Energy department. Our number one priority is Albertans, and interconnection may or may not allow the increased export of excess capacity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the Minister of Energy cannot pass the buck to the AESO. This is your own report, which indicates you're planning to export large volumes of electricity. My next question: given that Tonbridge Power Inc.'s own documents acknowledge that the rationale behind the Montana/Alberta tie-line project is to export Alberta's power to California, where it is needed, will the minister admit that this project is the first step in the plan to export large volumes of electricity to U.S. consumers? This isn't about Alberta's interests. It's about Americans with their interest in our power.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the situation that we have here is that Alberta is actually connected to a number of different places in North America with respect to commodities that we produce. We export grain. We export oil. We export natural gas. If a circumstance would arise through the prudent use of the systems that we have in Alberta, and perhaps 4,000 or 5,000 of megawatts of energy that could be produced in conjunction with cogeneration, some of our other industries – if that excess capacity became available, I don't think that commodity, if it wasn't needed in Alberta, should not be exported to someplace where it could be used.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Alberta Office in Washington

Mr. Lukaszuk: Castle Downs? Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This was such an electrifying conversation, I just couldn't stop listening.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a number of foreign offices throughout the world, and one of them is our office in Washington, which we've had for some three years. It is colocated with the Canadian embassy, and the official over there has the title of minister-counsellor. Can the minister of intergovernmental affairs please tell us: what actual value is there to taxpayers of having that office abroad?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that our neighbours to the south, as we're all aware, are the largest trading partner in the world, with almost 90 per cent of Alberta's exports, almost $75 billion a year worth of goods and services, that go to the United States. I might also say that of Alberta's top 25 trade destinations, 21 of them are in the United States. It's very obvious that our office in Washington is doing very good work.

I might add that I'll be announcing, of course, as the Premier has done yesterday, that Gary Mar will be filling that position effective December 3.

The Speaker: That was inappropriate use of a member's name.
The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the United States is Alberta's largest trade partner and is also very important in the world economy. What will that newly appointed individual do to make sure that Alberta's views are duly represented to the U.S. government?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, in this past year the Washington office has given numerous examples. You may not be aware, but did you know that in the past year two federal government cabinet ministers, the Secretary of Energy and Secretary of the Treasury, have visited Alberta, have visited the oil sands capital of the world. They are clearly getting the message in Washington from our office: Alberta is a reliable, safe place, politically and otherwise, to be able to invest dollars. Billions of American dollars are being invested in Alberta, which is clearly excellent news for Albertans, with tremendous opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each office abroad has a different priority and a different focus. What will be the focus for the next few years of our Alberta office in Washington?

Mr. Boutilier: The message has to be very clear. Our royalty regime, one of the lowest taxes of provinces in all of Canada, in fact the lowest, clearly our commitment to resource development, environmental responsibility, and being good partners are good examples of what Albertans are doing in terms of investing and the opportunities and jobs that all members and their constituents enjoy because of how we manage the resources we enjoy in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Local Government Issues

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week Alberta's urban municipalities are holding their annual convention, and they're bringing with them many resolutions for the province to consider. The Municipal Government Act provides no formal consultation mechanism on matters affecting local government, so the resolutions are really the only available method they have to get the province's attention, and they have many concerns. To the Minister of Environment. A common resolution is ending the practice of giving water licences for deep well flooding with fresh groundwater. AAMD and C passed a similar resolution this year, and this has been brought up many times in the past. Will the minister commit to immediately phasing out this practice and protect fresh groundwater sources for human consumption?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this issue has been under discussion for quite some time. The member opposite should understand and should know that, in fact, we are moving in that direction, that we have recently initiated an agreement, put into place guidelines with respect to the use of fresh water for oil field operation. One of the first things that I did when I became minister was to ensure that those guidelines were implemented as quickly as possible.

Mr. Taylor: I guess he missed the word "immediately" in my question, Mr. Speaker.

Another common resolution that we've seen before and are seeing again is enhancing the ability of municipalities to protect natural areas within their boundaries. Cities and towns are willing to step up on this issue. The question is whether the provincial government will allow them to take strong environmental protection action. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: will you commit to amending the Municipal Government Act to give municipalities more authority to protect natural areas within their jurisdiction?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to add to the first question that the hon. member talked about, saying that there is no other way of consultation. First of all, the association, the AUMA, meets, has resolutions so that they can discuss the issues and have a democratic process to bring forward an idea and at the same time bring to the government those ideas, those directions. It is not the only way of consultation. In fact, this government through many ministries goes out and has meetings and has consultation with municipalities, with their associations throughout Alberta, making sure that the voices of municipalities are heard.

Mr. Taylor: You know, Mr. Speaker, I was going to be nice to him. All he has to do is answer my questions and I'll sit down. Affordable housing continues to be a critical issue in Alberta. Providing funding to municipalities is only part of the solution. A key element is bringing developers into the equation and making them an integral part of the solution. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, who I guess isn't going to do anything on the natural areas file. In order to motivate developers to construct new affordable housing, there must be incentives offered. Will the minister follow the Alberta Liberal caucus affordable housing plan and the resolution of the city of Calgary and provide tax incentives to developers to get more affordable housing built faster?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, tax incentives are under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and we are continuing to work with the federal government to look at incentives of taxation for increased housing. Also, $285 million of new money has been put into the housing portfolio, $143 million given to municipalities for them to have the autonomy to decide how they feel that the areas of concern in their municipalities are addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bow River Fishery

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not much of a fisherman, but in the past I enjoyed being able to see trout or whitefish in the beautiful Bow River, that flows through our constituency. Recently as the representative for Calgary-Bow my constituents have been telling me that they have been catching fewer fish than normal from the Bow River. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Is the minister aware that the quality of the fishery in the Bow River has degraded?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of this change. The fishery in the Bow River is changing for the better, but you have to distinguish between upstream and downstream from the city. SRD's research on the fishery below Calgary this year confirmed very healthy trout populations and high densities of fish. I want to assure the House that I spent several hot, hard, long days personally verifying the research of our people.

Now, upstream is a little different. The good news, though, is that the water is cleaner. There are fewer nutrients, but fewer nutrients mean fewer fish. But there is a self-sustaining population both above and below the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us whether his department plans to supplement the fishery in the Bow River and increase the number of fish by stocking the river?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is no. The Bow River has not been stocked since 1954, when we put rainbow and cutthroat in. Restocking is not appropriate on a river like the Bow. Fish stocking works best when fish populations have been eliminated either due to overfishing or a catastrophic change in the habitat, and neither of these situations applies here. I reiterate: there is a good, healthy fishery both above the city and below the city on the Bow River.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My second supplemental to the same minister: are there any conditions under which his department would consider stocking the Bow River with trout?

Dr. Morton: Well, if the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow will let me set up a barbecue in her backyard and fish off the bank, maybe; otherwise, the answer is no. Our practice is not normally to stock rivers and other flowing bodies. This is due to the adverse effect on fish that are in the river – there's a risk of changing the gene pool – and also the poor survivability rate of the stocked fish. We believe in sort of free love when it comes to the fish: let the fish reproduce on their own. This is the most biologically sound and cost-effective way to maintain our fish populations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Childhood Obesity

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School board trustees in Red Deer and Edmonton have shown phenomenal leadership in the efforts to curb childhood obesity and have committed to ban the sale of junk food in schools. The Ministry of Education would do very well to make the most of this momentum and aid school boards in their efforts to promote healthy eating in schools. Will the Minister of Education implement initiatives in order to encourage this pattern to continue across the province of Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, just last week this hon. member was rather critical in a member's statement of the government interfering with what school boards' jurisdictions are. Clearly, this is a matter for school boards to assess, and I applaud those who have. But that is clearly something that school boards are elected to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought the department was a leader in things. I may be mistaken.

A second critical factor to addressing the efforts to curb childhood obesity is poverty. Last May the Minister of Education stated, "It is not the government's responsibility to feed, clothe, and shelter every child in Alberta," yet the Centre for Science in the Public Interest emphasizes government responsibility to ensure access to healthy foods for all children. In 2005-06 the provincial spending average was $5.54 per student per year for school meal programs. This government spent nothing. To the Minister of Education . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] We're out of time, hon. member. [interjection] The hon. Minister of Education has been recognized.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the provincial government through the Northland school division, which is the only one that we are directly involved in with a hot lunch program – again, the hon. member is asking the provincial government to get down into the day-to-day operations of school boards, and we simply don't do that. It is up to school boards to determine places of need where they feel that a hot lunch program would be appropriate. There are a number of those that are under way, and that's the way it should be.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, what about envelope funding, Mr. Minister?

Can I just go into this? Promoting physical fitness is another crucial aspect in fighting childhood obesity, yet high school students all over the province are often charged an annual fee in order to access their school's wellness centre. If the government and the minister are serious about tackling obesity problems, will they commit to elimination of exercise facility fees for students across the province?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this is just another spending ask of this particular opposition. I would ask this particular member to have the discussion with his colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who at the same time wants to put 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue directly into the heritage fund. Where is all the money going to come from?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Support for Cow-calf Producers

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has been talking about their losses every time the Canadian dollar goes up a penny, but the big hit is being taken by family farms. Low cattle prices and the high dollar make it near impossible to turn a profit these days for cow-calf producers. In the mid-1990s cow-calf producers got 60 cents to the pound while packers and retailers took a dollar. Now farmers get 35 cents for the same pound while packers get almost $2.50. To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: will you do the right thing and help family farmers now, or will you just hand out subsidies to big packers like you did the last time with the BSE crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, I just have to say this over and over again, that we just came out with a $165 million package for the red-meat industry. I think that if the hon. member across would check, at the present time the red-meat industry is in great distress, including the packers, who just happen to be all losing money at this particular stage of the game.

Mr. Eggen: Well, that's interesting, Mr. Speaker. Last year Cargill set a record profit of $2.3 billion while family farmers across Canada had a combined debt of $54 billion. Putting taxpayers' dollars in the pockets of the world's second-largest privately owned corporation does not help farmers here in Alberta. What would help farmers is a base price that would make sure that farmers got paid first for their cattle. To the same minister: when will you put local ranchers and farmers ahead of big-business profits?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would check, Cargill is an international company. It operates in Canada. Right now with Cargill the monies they make are international at this stage of the game. I think that probably the truth of the matter is that if he could come up with a program that he's talking about that's not countervailable, I'd certainly like to listen to it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. You know, I definitely sense that there's something wrong here. Farmers are going broke raising beef, but prices keep going up in the grocery store. Maybe the Minister of Agriculture and Food doesn't have an answer for farmers, but farmers do have an answer for him. For long-term success: number one, restore farmers' market power and limit the economic power of the big corporations. Number two, in the short term there is an answer as well: set a base price so that farmers don't go broke putting food on the table for all of us. Farmers are not asking for handouts. What they want is control over their own business. To the same minister: when will you do the right thing and set a base price for beef, paying the farmers first?

Mr. Groeneveld: I suspect, Mr. Speaker, I would have to move across the House before I could come up with a solution like that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Groundwater Stewardship

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no question that water, both above and below ground, is important to all Albertans. As we see more and more development in rural Alberta, we're also seeing more demand for both surface water and groundwater. While it's often easy to see how surface water is doing, it's much harder to see what's going on with groundwater aquifers. To the Minister of Environment: what is your department doing to gain more understanding about groundwater and groundwater supplies in Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is indeed a need for us to learn more about Alberta's groundwater, in particular the interconnection between groundwater and surface water. We've made a significant commitment to work with Alberta's Geological Survey and the pool of knowledge that they have. We're working in conjunction with that data as well as completing groundwater protection mapping and a preliminary look at underground geology.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, on Friday of this week we will be announcing an aerial survey down the highway 2 corridor, further enhancing our knowledge of underground water. You might wonder how you study water from an airplane, but I'm told that the technology exists to actually use radar-like equipment that will actually allow them to view underground from an aircraft.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many people in my constituency who rely on groundwater for their household use and for their livelihood. There are also a large amount of oil and gas developments in the area, which some residents worry could impact the safety of the groundwater supply. How is the minister making sure that my constituents' groundwater supplies are not negatively affected by the oil and gas activities?

Mr. Renner: Protecting water supplies, Mr. Speaker, is critical. We first of all investigate each and every complaint that we have. To date there is no conclusive evidence of well contamination from coal-bed methane activities. All of our investigations show that in most cases well location, construction, and maintenance tend to be the main causes of water problems. Nevertheless, we will continue to work with the EUB as well as oil and gas companies to ensure that if there are issues that are identified, they're corrected and rectified as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The largest river in my constituency, the Battle River, has some unique constraints since it's not glacial fed but, rather, fed by runoff and groundwater. The river is often dry, and the groundwater levels fluctuate. Will the minister consider on-stream and off-stream storage to regulate more consistent river flow and enrich groundwater supplies for the Battle River watershed?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, considering off-stream storage and implementing are two different things. So the answer to "Will I consider?": of course I will. Will we in the next short period of time be able to implement? That's a bigger question. Frankly, work is under way to identify, first of all, opportunities for storage of upstream water and then, secondly, to prioritize those opportunities. Once that work is complete, I can assure the member that it will be part of the Water for Life strategy and is part of the Water for Life strategy to begin to develop some of those storage opportunities as they become available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Infection Prevention and Control in Hospitals

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have learned that former patients of Vegreville's St. Joseph's hospital have tested positive for hepatitis B and C. There are still some outstanding questions that need to be answered to assure Albertans in this community that their health is not at risk. To the minister of health: how is the minister going to determine if these hepatitis cases were linked to poor sterilization at St. Joe's?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That may not be something that can actually be determined. But what I would want hon. members to know and the public to know is that if you test any population within the province, any group of people within the province, you will find a certain incidence of hepatitis C and AIDS. What we've found in the testing that's happened with respect to East Central and particularly in Vegreville is that the incidence that has been discovered in the testing is no greater than one would expect in the normal population. So the conclusion that one might draw is that there hasn't been a linkage to that particular incident.

Ms Blakeman: You still need to identify the other risks.

Again to the same minister. Since day one the Alberta Liberals have been encouraging this government to put monitoring and enforcement mechanisms in place for infection control. You have plans but no action. When will the minister re-establish monitoring and enforcement responsibilities within the ministry?

Mr. Hancock: Well, we have plenty of action, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the Health Quality Council report, the infection prevention control report that we did relative to a review of standards for professions. We've brought forward Bill 41 and Bill 48, which deal with both the professions and with the health authorities and voluntary organizations, to put in place the structures. Within the department we're preparing a provincial standard with respect to infection prevention and control, and part and parcel of that will be an auditing and enforcement mechanism.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June the minister said, "It would be unnecessary and premature to assess the risk of lawsuits." Now that people are testing positive for hepatitis B and C, will the minister now begin to determine the scale of this government's liability?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this minister and this government are focused on people, on making sure that they get the services they need when they need it, the quality of care they need when they need it, that there is an infection prevention control standard, that there is an assurance for the people of Alberta that standards are in place and that they're being followed. If there are legal implications of anything that happens in the province, those will happen, and we will deal with them as and when they happen, and we'll prepare for them where appropriate and where necessary. But our focus is not on our potential liability; our focus is on service to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Water Management and Erosion Control Program

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years many of my municipalities and, of course, my constituents and other Albertans have received financial assistance from the government's erosion control program. This funding is necessary to help cover the costs of water management of erosion control projects. My question is to the Minister of Environment. As there is such a high demand for this kind of funding, can Albertans expect to see more stable funding for the Alberta water management and erosion control program?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a very interesting question because, although a very popular program among municipalities, this has traditionally always been funded with a minimal amount of dollars. We have found in Alberta Environment that the opportunities to actually accomplish some significant amount of work have always been compromised by the relatively small budget that we have available. Given the fact that the government this year has announced that there will be $1.4 billion made available to municipalities through the municipal sustainability initiative, we are in fact reviewing this policy.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as much as I love to have reviews done, there are some issues relative to the water erosion control program in my municipalities. To the same minister: because this is such a well-used and critical grant program for Albertans, when can my constituents and other Albertans expect to see the results of the minister's review of this grant program? It is truly needed, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, we are reviewing this program to determine whether there are some better alternatives to accomplish similar objectives. That review should be complete by September 2008, and that would be sufficient time to incorporate any outcomes from that review in the '09-10 budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Ms Calahasen: No. That's good.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier announced his response to the Royalty Review Panel's recommendations, he proudly boasted that his government had delivered. Well, that remains to be seen. My question is for the Minister of Energy. Last week a former Royalty Review Panel member stated that the new oil sands royalty system may in fact leave Albertans worse off than they were in 1997. Given that the minister likes to ignore expert opinions and advice on royalties, how does the minister respond to the claim put forward by this expert economist? Is the economist wrong?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, certainly, everybody in the province of Alberta is entitled to an opinion with respect to what we may or may not collect at some point in the future in a royalty regime. There are a number of parameters around how we calculate the expected outcome from our royalty regime. We have continued to hold true to the idea that our framework is solid. I believe it's solid on a go-forward basis. The Premier has indicated that we will have an increase of 20 per cent in the royalties we collect, and I am sure that we're going to attain that.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals committed to the same total increase as called for by the Royalty Review Panel. We acknowledged that reaching the benchmark would require further consultation with industry. Now, after weeks of criticizing us for our position, the Premier has admitted that details in his plan have unforeseen consequences. Will the minister admit that the Premier's plan was flawed from the start and that the government has now adopted the approach taken by the Alberta Liberals except that we're missing out on $500 million?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what we have in front of us today is a framework that's a very solid framework to move forward and move the royalty structure forward in the province of Alberta to the benefit of all Albertans. There needs to be a balance reached here. Although the members opposite may not be responsible for Albertans' jobs, I believe that I am responsible for Albertans' jobs. The balance that we will find will provide jobs for Albertans, and it will also provide a maximum return for Albertans on the resources they own.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. The expert Royalty Review Panel strongly opposed the idea of ending the Crown agreements with Suncor and Syncrude. Doing so may cost Albertans tens of billions of dollars in settlement costs.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. R. Miller: Tens of billions. Further, Alberta's reputation as a secure place to invest may be irreparably damaged. How many billions of dollars will this government decision to ignore the expert advice once again cost Albertans? How much is it going to cost us?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, you know, I'm not going to go into this diatribe again that we keep hearing and answer these questions that have to do with what may have happened, what might have happened, what could have happened in the past. There are very clearly hundreds of billions of dollars and thousands and thousands of jobs that have been created for Albertans by the policy set by this government. Those members and any panel that's structured by this government are not responsible at the end of the day for government policy. We're responsible for the policy. We will develop sound policy to move forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, that was 88 questions and responses during today's Oral Question Period.

We'll now return to the Routine. We were on the subject of Tabling Returns and Reports. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Cardston-Taber-Warner Progressive Conservative Association Premier's golf tournament advertisement that they took out, indicating their platinum sponsors, one being a school division, which they accepted money from in that Premier's golf tournament.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings this afternoon. The first is from the parents and staff of Mr. Cake's Daycare in Sherwood Park, indicating that under the new Child Care Licensing Act, if they are required to comply, "the consequences would be devastating."

Another one is from Kathleen Vestby, indicating that "increasing the regulations and restrictions for licensed childcare facilities will only worsen the current crisis."

I have another one from Fred and Leah Sacha. "Currently wait lists are long and the new regulations [for child care] will increase the lists."

One from Marcie Whalen concerning the problem of homelessness in our city and province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters I've received from 200 of my constituents calling for changes to Alberta's labour laws. The letters express strong support for such changes as first contract arbitration, full legal recognition of bargaining rights for public employees, and one labour law for all unionized workers, among other issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today. The first two are in regard to my questions earlier today regarding electricity exports. This is a document from the National Centre for Upgrading Technology, An Integrated Energy Solution, dated September 25, 2006, Alberta Department of Energy, oil sands business unit.

My second tabling is a PowerPoint presentation from Tonbridge Power Inc. It's regarding Merchant Transmission and Wind-powered Generation: A Natural Fit? It's the background to the Montana-Alberta tie project.

My third tabling is a proposed amendment that the Official Opposition caucus asks for to the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. This is amending section 28.

My next tabling is also a proposed amendment to Bill 46. This is regarding section 29(2).

My last tabling today is also an amendment to the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. This is a proposal to amend section 91.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter to table from Mr. William Eady, who was introduced earlier, whose concern is about education, that young people are not learning how to use a cash register, especially grades 8 and 9, so they're not ready to take up their employment with adequate training and typing skills.

Thank you.

Second Reading

Bill 56
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply)
Act, 2007 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. the President of the Treasury Board I would like to move Bill 56 for second reading.

It is, of course, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 (No. 2). The Committee of Supply dealt with the details of the bill on Thursday afternoon in committee. Certainly, with respect to the supply that's requested there, I think there was three hours of debate at least on Thursday afternoon with respect to the responses. I would commend the bill to the House and ask for its support.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I'm looking forward to this opportunity to begin discussions about Bill 56, the appropriation bill. I have great concerns that a number of fixed-income individuals – those on AISH, those on PDD, seniors – are not getting the subsidy and the support that's necessary for them, whether they're fortunate enough to be able to maintain an independent residence, live in an apartment, or whether they're in a long-term care or an assisted living facility.

This past spring I brought up the fact that in a 292-complex apartment the individuals there, who are primarily on fixed incomes, received an increase in their rent of 50 per cent. What that resulted in was that for one individual on AISH, who lived in a 540 square foot apartment, his rent went up to $1,100 a month. Keeping in mind that AISH payments were $1,050, that provided him with a great deal of hardship. That hardship that this individual faced is repeated over and over again not only for residents of this particular complex but in apartments and basement suites throughout the province.

The failure of this government to provide subsidies other than through the eviction fund does not provide the type of stability that renters, especially the most vulnerable on fixed incomes, are reliant upon. Therefore, when we're talking about Bill 56, the appropriations bill, I would hope that the government, if not now at least in the very near future, would consider giving renters some kind of predictable, sustainable support and would consider what we have long said, and that's the idea of a temporary rent cap, a sunset clause, a rent cap which would provide the predictability and the sustainability that currently isn't available. Government subsidies have gone from $10 million to $21 million. This continual increase in subsidies, which go directly into the landlords' bank accounts through the tenants' temporary fingers, is not sustainable, and it is not a very good usage of taxpayers' money.

I also, when it comes to Bill 56 appropriations, have concern over support for education both in terms of programming and in terms of infrastructure. There are 60 schools in Calgary alone that have reported leaks in their roofs. There have been examples, Brentwood elementary in Calgary-Varsity, where an entire ceiling of one wing and hallway collapsed after a heavy rainfall. Previously there was evidence of collapsing tiles in the library.

What adds to the concern with regard to the collapse not only is the concern for the children who are living underneath these roofs but the fact that a number of these schools were built in the 1950s, when asbestos was one of the key components of the roof tiles. When these roof tiles are damaged and the asbestos fibres are then exposed, it's not only the children who face the risks; it's the teachers and the maintenance staff who then go into these schools to provide the repairs.

When it comes to infrastructure, again, the average age of schools in Calgary is 40 years, and the Western Canada high school in my colleague from Calgary-Currie's ward has fencing around the front of the school because of fears of the windowsills falling out. Already we've had examples, and you can see on the school where plywood has gone over what used to be windows because the windows have actually dropped out.

The repair bill for that school has gone from an initial estimate of $32 million to well over $60 million now, and I'm just talking about one particular city, the city of Calgary, where the combined infrastructure deficit of both the Calgary public and the Calgary separate is now well over a half a billion dollars, at $700 million and rising. With regard to appropriations, my suggestion would be that we have the pay now/pay later concept. The longer that these infrastructure concerns are not dealt with, the greater becomes the risk to the inhabitants: in this case, the children, their teachers, and staff caretakers. There is no acceptable reason in a province that is reporting billion dollar surpluses to not invest in education infrastructure.

Another infrastructure concern I have is that with Calgary's growing population and the area that the Calgary health region supports being well over a million individuals, the ability to keep up and provide programming through the health care – and, again, I'm going to refer to the health care infrastructure – is inadequate. The cost of the southeast hospital, which has recently at least had its ground broken, rose from approximately $500 million to well over $1.2 billion. While I appreciate the fact that the government has maintained its commitment to the project even though the price has escalated, with proper planning this hospital would have been up and built before the General was imploded.

A similar concern with regard to the Tom Baker cancer centre, which borders my constituency. It actually falls into the constituency of my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View. The Tom Baker cancer centre is so oversubscribed that the CHR is coming up with plans on how to alleviate and provide timely cancer care, and in their desperation they've considered leasing more space at great public cost at the Holy Cross hospital. Again, this was a hospital that had $32 million of renovations to it before it was sold to the Huang brothers at a price of a little over $3 million.

Since that time the Calgary health region has been forced to lease space from this facility of dubious infrastructure components. We're all very well aware of the asbestos that was found in the facility. We're aware that the government in its wisdom shut down the seniors' care facilities, yet the government seems willing to consider the temporary arrangement again of going back to the Holy Cross, which should never have been sold in the first place, to provide care for cancer patients. At some point we have to invest our money wisely the first time so that we're not doing band-aid repairs and continually contracting out and leasing space that was once public.

We had in the constituency of Calgary-Mountain View the wonderful Grace hospital, that was probably among the top hospitals for serving women in Canada. That hospital, again, was sold, and what we're left with now is scrambling to keep up with the population.

The University of Calgary, while younger than the University of Alberta, recently reached the enviable age of 41 years and celebrated that anniversary. The buildings are starting to feel the wear of that 41 years of existence. I will credit the government for the $260 million injection into the ISEEE building, the institute for sustainable energy, environment and – it has been changed from economy to experiential learning. But that $260 million arrived about a year and a half too late. Then to cover the costs, it was estimated by the former head of the institute, Dr. Mansell, that to provide the thousand spaces that that $260 million was supposed to cover would now in fact require closer to $320 million to achieve the same effect.

These ad hoc decisions and this delay in agreeing to write the cheque but then deliver that cheque so that the actual construction could take place has proved extremely costly not only at the University of Calgary, in the constituency I represent, but also at the University of Alberta. The government has recently provided money to the University of Lethbridge. It has provided money to the college in Medicine Hat. While that money is appreciated, the longer we wait and the disbursement in sort of bits and pieces as opposed to having a long-range plan are very disconcerting.

Another concern, because I represent the University of Calgary, that comes out of Bill 56 and the appropriations is the fact that for two years the government held back on increases to postsecondary tuition. Well, that cap is now gone, and students are experiencing the additional costs not only of their tuition. When you apply the costs that they're experiencing from increased rents, then it is very hard for a student not to be simultaneously studying and holding down one or two jobs. In a province with such wealth based on our current nonrenewable energy, we need to be looking forth into the future and consider the effect of not providing the education and tuition support.

Last year with Bill 40 the decision on tuition raises went from legislation into regulation, and the opportunity for the discussion of tuition increases left the floor of this House. That's why with regard to Bill 56, the appropriations bill, I want to encourage the government to recognize the investment of postsecondary institutions not only in their infrastructure but also in tuition.

I would like them to recognize that providing residences on the universities enlivens the facility. Right now the University of Calgary cannot cope with more than 8 per cent of its population in student residences on the campus. That adds the extra costs of getting to and from their basement suites, whose exorbitant rents have gone through the sky, from apartments, taking transportation. All kinds of bills are added to those students.

The government has suggested that the ideal amount of money spent on housing or accommodation or rent for an apartment should not exceed 30 per cent of an individual's wages. But whether it's the students at Mount Royal or whether it's the students at the University of Calgary, Bow Valley College, SAIT, the Alberta College of Art and Design, these students are faced with putting forward 50 to 75 per cent of the money that they manage to scrape over the summer into accommodation as opposed to directing it towards their learning, their studies, their books, and decent food.

The government needs to realize that not only do they have to spend wisely, do they have to make investments wisely, but they need to realize that we have passed the peak for conventional oil and gas. If we don't put money away at this time in a balanced approach such as the Alberta Liberals have recommended, the saving of 30 per cent and putting that into the heritage trust fund and then creating separate endowment funds for postsecondary – we recommended that 35 per cent of the 30 per cent of nonrenewable revenue that we receive be set aside for postsecondary. We recommended that 25 per cent of that 30 per cent be set aside for infrastructure, and we've said: let's take 35 per cent of that 30 and put it into the heritage trust fund so that we could wean ourselves from this one-trick pony of oil and gas revenue so that by 2020, using the old royalty scheme, we would have $120 billion sitting in our heritage trust fund, which would . . .

Mr. MacDonald: How much?

Mr. Chase: A hundred and twenty billion, using the old figures. That would provide us more money through interest than we're currently receiving on conventional oil and gas.

When the government is deciding on areas to invest in, I would suggest that more of the money that comes from lotteries, slots, and casinos be put into preventative programs like AADAC. Currently AADAC receives only 3 per cent of the total monies that are earned from lotteries and casinos, et cetera. Therefore, what we have is kind of a revolving door. Whether it's addiction to gambling, whether it's addiction to alcohol, addiction to drugs, the pressures of a booming economy are driving people to areas that are of great concern not only to themselves individually but to the well-being of this wonderful province as a whole. So when we look at Bill 56, the appropriations bill, I would encourage you to put more of the profits from gambling, from lotteries, back into prevention programs like AADAC, also into shelters for individuals that have ended up on the street as a result of their addictions or the mental illnesses that have arisen from the stresses placed upon their lives.

We have a wonderful opportunity, but it's an opportunity that is rapidly drawing to a close, to invest in programs such as education, such as health care, such as crime prevention as opposed to the necessary expansion of remand centres because crime prevention wasn't a primary concern.

We are fortunate, but in Alberta our good fortune, dependent solely on nonrenewable resources, has an expiry date on it. So I'm encouraging this government to look at the investments: the investments in safe roads, in schools, in health, in education, in keeping seniors in their homes as long as we possibly can, in recognizing the contributions of caregivers, whether they're ones that are contracted directly by the government or are subcontracted and, unfortunately, on a different level of wage than those working directly for the government.

Our most important resources are people, and until we recognize that people require an investment and a security, a predictability, and a sustainability, Albertans will continue to be underserved. Let's make the expenditures right the first time so that we're not having to continually remake them into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 56, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 (No. 2). This is the second time around that the government has come to the Legislature to seek funds to continue funding its business by way of supplementary supply estimates. This time around the government is asking for an additional $1.498 billion or so towards defraying the further charges and expenses of the public service, classed as expense and equipment/inventory expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, looking at the various departments and the amount of money they are asking for by way of this bill and the supplementary supply, I note one particular department; that is, the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. While Bill 56 shows that department asking for only an additional $15 million, the supplementary supply estimates indicate, in fact, that it will be $25 million that the department will be putting to new uses. Of that $25 million, $10 million have been slashed off the budgeted amount for one particular program, the assured income for the severely handicapped program, usually known as AISH, and those $10 million are being transferred to approved rural affordable supportive living projects.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The fact that the rural affordable supportive living projects need more money is not something that I find difficult to understand given the growing costs of housing, whether it's new housing or rental housing or whatever. The concern that I have is with the transfer of funds out of one program which is in great demand by those Albertans who use AISH program arrangements and putting it in another area of high need. What worries me is that what's happening here resembles the old adage of robbing Peter to pay Paul.

I'm reminded of various phone calls and letters that my constituency office received in the summer in the wake of exorbitant rent increases that recipients of AISH in my constituency had begun to receive, the alarm on their part and desperation expressed in their letters as to how, with the given AISH amounts that they receive under the program, they're going to be able to pay for their increased rents and at the same time pay for other necessities of life in order to live a life which is more or less living at the margin of mainstream society. With these $10 million being transferred from the money that was potentially available to AISH recipients, I am worried that their concerns are going to become even deeper and more serious.

The presumed argument that is given for this transfer is the fact that there has not been the expected uptake in the AISH program and that the lower than budgeted rate of growth in caseloads is the reason that there was this $10 million sitting around to be transferred to some other areas. Mr. Speaker, my concern with respect to this alleged lower than budgeted rate of growth is that I wonder if the assessment criteria have been changed and altered in order to disqualify a larger number of Albertans, a larger percentage of applicants who try to access the assured income for the severely handicapped program. I must confess that I'm not entirely sure if those assessment criteria have in fact been changed to the detriment of applicants being accepted to the program. My fear is that that may be the reason behind the lower than budgeted rate of growth in caseloads in the AISH program.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the minister and the staff responsible for the AISH program are listening and would read the comments that I'm making and will address the two concerns that I've expressed: the need to perhaps bolster the minimum payments made to AISH recipients in order to enable them to not have to cut back on their food budget and other life necessities in order to pay for the increased rents that they must pay given the housing crisis that we face; secondly, I want some assurance that the lower than budgeted rate of growth in caseloads is not due to changes in assessment criteria which make it more difficult now than was the case before this current budget was passed for people to be able to access the AISH program.

With those two concerns expressed, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and let other members speak to Bill 56. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

There being none, the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I would like to address in terms of the debate on Bill 56, I believe, is the question of school maintenance. I've talked to a number of trustees about this in the last 10 days. They're really asking the government to consider regular ongoing maintenance dollars, and they're suggesting that they would like to have it in a three-year plan so that they can plan on it, do some planning in terms of school maintenance across different parts of the province. That's one of the things that seems to be very, very important in terms of giving them some idea of when the dollars are coming and how to plan for using the dollars.

Now, in terms of my own constituency, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk about roads. We have two major road considerations in St. Albert. One is referred to as the West Regional Road. The fact is that we really don't have a clear understanding as of this moment, as I understand it – I was just talking to a person from city hall this morning – as to the dollars that are going to be allotted to the West Regional Road. The main thing I'm trying to speak to here is the fact that if St. Albert has to pay the total cost of the West Regional Road, it will have a very difficult impact, an insurmountable impact, on our tax base.

The other road that we're looking forward to hearing more clearly from the government about is what we refer to in St. Albert as the Anthony Henday extension. About a month ago, maybe two months ago – I think it was in September – we had a meeting regarding this in terms of the alignment of this new road. A number of citizens from the Akinsdale, Heritage Lakes, and Grandin Park areas of St. Albert attended those meetings regarding the alignment of the road and the issues related to it such as noise, pollution, et cetera, et cetera. It was their understanding that there was input taken from them which would have some bearing on maybe adjusting the alignment of where the road went. We're anxiously waiting to hear from the government if the concerns of the citizens of the communities mentioned will be taken into consideration. So that's dealing with roads.

One of the serious situations in St. Albert is housing, housing for young people and for seniors. We have a series of apartments in St. Albert that have just got an increase of 17 per cent. I was talking to one of my constituents on the phone this morning. Her rent in St. Albert went from $860 to $1,010. This particular lady is a mother with one child, and 45 per cent of her salary goes for rent. The other thing about this apartment that we're talking about with this increase of 17 per cent: there are a number of people living in that apartment that work at one of our largest long-term care facilities, Youville Home. Many of those people are going to have to relook at where they're living and may have to leave St. Albert. This really quite concerns me.

There is another issue in St. Albert facing us in long-term care. We have people now in our Sturgeon hospital waiting for long-term care facilities. There is not accommodation available to them, and they're waiting for this move. As a result, some of them are required to pay after I believe it's 30 days – Bridget is gone. I think it's some period of time before they have to start paying the hospital a stipend for daily care. This whole question of not having long-term care for those people is a concern. We have the Youville Home in St. Albert, which I've already mentioned. Unfortunately, the question there is: we have accommodation, but again we don't have the staff, and certainly all those people can't fit into that type of facility. It's a big issue for us. The long-term care issue for our seniors is a big issue for us in St. Albert.

Another area of concern is our agencies, our nonprofit agencies, particularly the agencies dealing with services for persons with disabilities and another agency called Help Society, offering seniors help staying in their own homes: maintaining them, supporting them. The issue here with these nonprofit agencies, as I've mentioned, Help and services to persons with disabilities transitions, is that there's not the dollars for staffing, there's not the dollars for professional development, and dollars are not available for these people for their benefits. This is becoming a very serious problem as to if these agencies are going to be able to carry on and not only provide service but maintain their staff. In fact, Help is down to having a board with two people on it. So anybody that's retiring, like Mr. Loughheed, and willing to sit on a board in St. Albert, we'd welcome that.

Ms Pastoor: He missed your offer.

Mr. Flaherty: Yes, I know. He wasn't paying attention, and he said that he was going to listen to my speech. I'm quite disappointed.

So we're talking about nonprofit agencies needing dollars for salaries, benefits, and . . .

Ms Blakeman: Capacity.

Mr. Flaherty: Excuse me?

Ms Blakeman: Capacity. Build capacity.

Mr. Flaherty: Build capacity. Thank you.

Another area that concerns us is a school. We understand that the Protestant board is receiving the possibility of having their prayers answered for a new school. The problem is, of course: where will that school be located? The whole question of school location is, to me, paramount. At one time this school was going to be located in the Erin Ridge community. Of course, it's very significant because it was going to be dedicated to Lois Hole. The rumour has it that that placement has changed now with what we call political implications. So the question is: where will the school be located, and, again, how long will it take for that school to get started? We're reaching a crisis stage. We understand it's a P3 school. It will be interesting to hear from the government, hopefully soon. Maybe when the election is called, we'll get some insight on where they plan to put this school. Unfortunately, right now we seem to be in muddy waters.

Mr. Speaker, I've tried to touch on school maintenance. I've touched on, in St. Albert specifically, the west regional road issue in terms of dollars, the Anthony Henday extension in terms of where the alignment will be, where we'd get the information on that. I've talked about, again, the question of housing and this whole question of how we look after people that can't take these heavy increases. This has been a discussion in this House in the spring and now. People are not going to be able to live in our constituency if this continues. They just can't do it. I've talked about the long-term care issue, by the way. I think it was when the audit was done. Was it in 2005?

One of the things that is very, very sad is that the most important people, in my opinion – maybe because I am one of them – have given us yeoman's service. I'm going to be at a Christmas party with our aquacize group. You know, we don't even have someone that could advocate for them on a day-to-day basis. I think it's so sad. Our seniors are not getting the help they need, and it's a crisis.

I see the minister of health smiling. I can tell you, Mr. Minister,

I wish you'd come out and talk to our seniors. You wouldn't smile. It's a serious matter, I'm sad to say, even when you have lots of money, sir. My good friend who is a multimillionaire can't get help for his wife. It's serious, and I'm sad about it. Money doesn't solve all the problems – that's what we're finding – because there are no people. People can't go in his home. She's so big and heavy – no disrespect to her; I love her dearly – that they can't lift her. He can't lift her anymore. He's 76 years old. Now we're trying to fight for a place, hopefully the Citadel or somewhere, for him. It's a big issue, sir, and I feel very, very badly about that.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll close up. Thank you very much for allowing me to address the issues that I think are facing our good citizens of St. Albert. I appreciate it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I may be repeating some of the things that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona has said, but I think that they bear repeating. The ministry that has supplied this, Seniors and Community Supports, has transferred $10 million from the budget for the AISH program to rural affordable supportive living. I was absolutely flabbergasted when I read that. I could not believe that this type of thing had happened, so I have to find out how on earth they could have possibly had a $10 million surplus when people who are on AISH are suffering. They can't afford the rent, they can barely afford their food, they're living in substandard housing, yet $10 million is taken out of their allotment.

I suspect that the changes in the intake procedures include provision for vocational assessments and medical file reviews. There really should be a formal policy and procedure to reconcile conflicts between these and the opinions of the treating physicians. This is also where there are quite a number of appeals created. Many of these appeals I think would probably just be straightforward if we didn't have these arguments between different doctors on who is eligible and who isn't eligible.

On page 4 of the AISH medical exam there's the following question: given the impact of a patient's medical condition on their activities of daily living, in your opinion what is the degree of impairment caused by the diagnosed condition? There are four choices that the physician can choose. This is where the problems occur. Varying physicians obviously have different ideas on what constitutes the activity of daily living and how that actually would transfer to the ability of someone to carry on a position in the workforce. To my knowledge there's only one program available in Canada in which disability is assessed in terms of activities of daily living, and that's the federal disability tax credit. All other plans use variations on employability to define eligibility for benefits.

Again, to my knowledge there is no reference in the AISH or regulations to the activities of daily living. There are questions about them in the medical exam questionnaire, yet they aren't in either the act or the regulations. I find that a bit peculiar.

It also would appear that this is a criteria that they're using to assess employability, and I believe that that really is quite inappropriate. I think that this is the mechanism that has been used to decrease the number accepted into the AISH program for funding. If this is the case, then no wonder they've got $10 million in the kitty.

To call this a lower than budgeted rate of growth in caseloads and then create $10 million to transfer out, I think is just wrong, particularly wrong when the economy, inflation, and the cost of living are so beyond the vulnerable in our society. These people often use 80 per cent of their income for rent. Yes, AISH recipients do receive health benefits. They receive child care and transportation costs. Yes, they have benefits that are over and above the actual cash payment that they get; however, these benefits are not useful to be able to pay the rent or actually buy basics like food. I find this transfer of dollars to housing to be very, very wrong. These dollars could have created a small increase and certainly indexed AISH payments.

Reviewing AISH payments every two years is probably commendable, but it really isn't acceptable because people wait year after year to find out if they get a raise if it will even remotely catch them up to what inflation is. It's not fair to keep people dangling year after year after year. Be fair. Increase it, and index it. Increasing it based on the dollars that were at least six or seven years behind in terms of their meeting inflation . . .

Ms DeLong: No. It was already brought up to date. It is brought up to date and increased every year.

Ms Pastoor: I would beg to differ with my colleague sitting on this side of the House from the opposite party. That isn't true. They are not even close to what they should have been in terms of where it was. They have not caught up to inflation. On top of that, I then want it increased, and I certainly want it indexed. I only think it's fair. If MLAs can be indexed and they never have to worry and they know that every year they're going to get an increase, then so can AISH people. They deserve it. In fact, they probably deserve it a lot more than we do.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Members, Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a question for the Member for Lethbridge-East. I'm wondering if she is aware – and perhaps it was before her time – that there were actually a couple of groups. There was a social advocacy group from Calgary that recommended that AISH be increased from I believe it was either $800 or $850 up to a thousand dollars a month. Also, the AISH review committee made the same recommendation, you know, in conjunction with this advocacy group from Calgary. They made this recommendation, and the government followed it. Since then the government actually increased AISH again more – more – than the cost of inflation for the past two years since we did that major increase. I'm wondering if she's aware of that or if she has done any research or if she is just kind of making these statements off the cuff.

Ms Pastoor: Oh, I can't thank my hon. colleague for that question; I couldn't possibly thank him enough for that one. There have been three increases since 1993. May I point out that two of them were under the auspices of the former minister, Yvonne Fritz, of Seniors and Community Supports. Two of those were made under her, and there are three since 1993. A very admirable job on her part, may I point out.

Yes, they did get increases, but as I've pointed out – and I will stick to that, and, yes, I have researched it and, yes, I know what I'm talking about – the original dollars that they started with and have then been given the increase for still were behind inflation because they started way back in '93. They still really do not have the money that would reflect this economy today. No one can live on a thousand dollars and fifty a month and actually pay the rents that they have to.

The Acting Speaker: We'll move on.

Ms Blakeman: I wonder if the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has a comment or a suggestion, given the housing crisis that we're experiencing in the urban areas, where the baseline studio apartment has increased from $550 to $850 a month. We now have people on an AISH rate of $1,050 who are paying $850 for their rent, which is far away and above the 30 per cent that is recommended. Has she considered whether it's appropriate to be advocating to government that they should be increasing the AISH rate by that same $300 a month increase that most people on AISH have experienced with their rent increase?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you for that question. Certainly, I would advocate that. I think what might be better is that there would be that rule that many subsidized housing projects go by that it's actually 30 per cent of your income that goes towards your housing. That could easily be applied to people on AISH, and it would free up that money.

I think part of the point is that, really, we don't have any kind of affordable units that these people can live in. There is no supply out there. Yes, I sat here all night saying that we should have had a temporary cap, and I use the word "temporary" because whoever puts on the temporary cap also has the power to take it off. It would be only political will. If the political will has to put it on, then the political will would be there to take off a temporary cap. In my mind, I still believe that that's one of the things that would help not only the people on AISH but the working poor that we have in this province.

Ms Blakeman: I'm just wondering if the Member for Lethbridge-East has a comment on the fact that we are in need of 7 per cent of our housing units to be wheelchair accessible. Again, a large percentage of people in the wheelchair-using community are on AISH. Some are not and have employment of their own; they still require housing that is specifically wheelchair accessible. If she has any comment on that.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, you have 30 seconds.

Ms Pastoor: No comment other than to agree that the 7 per cent is just a number that really has to be addressed. People are house-bound, people are not getting out of their houses, and, yes, we have to start keeping track of suicide rates because it's happening because of those reasons.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Member by Name

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I just want to caution everyone that there is a practice in this House of not referring to members by name. That has already happened three times in the last little while, so I'm just cautioning you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 56, the appropriations bill, and add my comments to concerns on this side of the House regarding the extra requests each year. It's almost become a routine, and I guess it reflects, again, on the lack of planning and the lack of recognition that Albertans expect. They expect a budget to be followed, and they expect an investment in the future that would recognize that the resources we're so richly blessed with, that we can take no credit for having, will be gone in just a few decades. We need to do ever more careful planning and hold ourselves to account for this wonderful province and the planning and investment that's going into it and not focus so much on the short term but look at the longer term impacts of some of our decisions.

Clearly, the public in Alberta has an appetite for improved infrastructure and education and all the important services that government provides. They also have a tremendous anxiety, I think, about the future and how we're going to manage within a much more stringent budget and are looking for signs that the government has a vision for the future, is setting aside an appropriate investment in the future, as we on this side have been advocating for a number of years, and are looking to diversifying and, again, get off our addiction to fossil fuels, to move us towards a more sustainable economy and the ability to live within our means.

Increasingly Albertans are asking whether it's possible for a government to have a backbone and stand up for sustainable planning, sustainable investments, and not continue to spend as if we don't know where we're going and allow for issues like infrastructure breakdown and maintenance costs as well as the investments that are needed in issues like housing and in people. If there's one area that I hear a lot about in my constituency of Calgary-Mountain View, it's people struggling with the rising costs of living, housing among them, but other expenses including medications for seniors are a big issue, some of which is covered by Blue Cross, but a good deal of the newer drugs are not covered by Blue Cross and represent an increasing load for seniors to bear.

I'm also very concerned because I have a number of housing support institutions in my constituency that house handicapped folks who are increasingly struggling to make ends meet. The notion that $1,050 a month is adequate to have a quality of life in Calgary is absolutely absurd. The cost of living in Calgary has gone through the roof, and it's an embarrassment to me as their MLA to say that our government only provides $1,050 a month for you to live, of which up to two-thirds or more of that goes into basic housing.

With my other colleagues on this side of the House I look forward to the time when we'll see an indexing of the benefits to people with AISH and those who need supports for living. It's clearly the case that we have fallen way behind what the real needs of people are, and we are paying very seriously in terms of their health, mental health, physical health. They end up in the health care system if they're not adequately supported financially. It's penny wise, pound foolish in terms of not investing in people and those who care for the handicapped, the persons with developmental disabilities. Unless we start to invest more fully in those areas, we are going to have to be facing increasing health care costs and criminal costs and lack of productivity among the very people that this government says they want to be more productive. People cannot be productive if they're not secure, and in many ways we have added to their sense of shame and powerlessness through not adequately supporting these folks.

Let me say that it's also an embarrassment for me as a member of the Legislature to receive an annual cost-of-living increase when the most vulnerable in our society are not treated in the same way. I find it difficult to stand up here and proudly represent a constituency when we are not treating the most vulnerable fairly by indexing their incomes each year.

On the issue of Environment, there is a small two and a half million dollars under supplementary budgets going into Environment. It's clear to me that this department is so inadequately funded that it is no longer able to be trusted in caring for, protecting, monitoring, and enforcing the legislation that we have to protect water, air, soil, and, indeed, human health. Until we take that more seriously, I think we're going to fail Albertans in a very significant way, not only in the present but for the future.

The government has less than 1 per cent of the annual budget. It's clear that the massive growth and development projects – the complexity of these projects, the cumulative impact of these projects – are inadequately assessed under the present dispensation for Alberta Environment. If there's any department that does need a supplement, it is the Department of Environment. People in the field, both some staff that I know of and those who are out in the field as private industry and landowners, call me on a regular basis about the lack of oversight, the lack of monitoring, and the lack of enforcement.

It gives me great anxiety about the future in terms of our groundwater, where 600,000 people depend, with the growing evidence from scientists of the U of A and the U of C that there is in fact gas migration into groundwater from oil and gas resources, and it's not being addressed. In this case we've been waiting two years since the minister instituted an investigation of groundwater and gas contamination for people living in the Horseshoe Canyon formation in southeastern Alberta.

Other aspects of the Environment department that are critically underfunded: the Water for Life program, that continues to rely heavily on volunteers and lacks technical and expert scientists to advise. We have talk by the Minister of Environment about a cumulative impacts framework for three areas in Alberta, including the Industrial Heartland. There's no talk of new funding, no talk of new expertise to assess the cumulative impacts, the total impacts on a region. It's hard to believe that a new program with such demands could be initiated without new resources and expertise, but that's what we're led to believe, that they're going to institute a brand new way of assessing development, called cumulative impact assessment, without any new resources.

The whole question of groundwater assessment has been alluded to, and the government, to its credit, is investigating more of the inventory of groundwater, its location and volumes and flows and its connection to surface water. That's welcome, and that's an appropriate investment. For many of us there is a need to speed this up and to expand it. Water is the critical issue for this next decade. In that context climate change has a tremendous potential for putting us in a very compromised position economically, not to mention socially and environmentally. The in-stream flow needs have been compromised in southern Alberta, and clearly climate change is only going to add to those problems, which have arisen partly because of seasonal rainfall shortages over the last while.

So if there is any need for supplemental supply, I would strongly encourage the other side of the House to look at its totally inadequate investment in the environment. Albertans have said that that is a number one consideration, right next to health care, and it's very clear that our future depends on a much more rigorous capacity to monitor and enforce existing environmental legislation, to upgrade environmental legislation to some of the best. It could be much, much better in the world than it is. It falls short even of the United States in many respects and certainly far short in terms of its monitoring and enforcement and prosecutions, which are extremely rare in this province.

The other area that needs, clearly, more adequate government involvement is the monitoring for gas leaks. There have been increasing numbers of hydrogen sulphide exposures of people in this province. The EUB website documents roughly 800 gas leaks per year in this province, most of them very minimal, but it reflects an increasing risk and liability that all of us sustain as a result of lack of maintenance, lack of early identification, and prevention of these leaks in the first instance. It cannot be overstated: the risk of even a tiny leak in proximity to people and animals will cause death within minutes. So these are very significant issues that a supplemental supply, if it's serious, would have to look at in terms of the future.

Those are the key comments I needed to make in supplementary supply, Mr. Speaker, relating to housing issues, AISH and the indexing of their incomes, seniors and their supports, which are progressively being eroded, and the environment and our capacity to properly monitor and implement the legislation we have for the environment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I have travelled with my colleagues to areas such as Ponoka, Trochu, Stettler, Drayton Valley, and I wondered if the hon. member could comment on what we heard from so many rural individuals about concerns over coal-bed methane intrusion and whether my colleague feels that .5 per cent of the total general revenue spent on the Environment ministry is sufficient for them to be stewards of our water resources.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, this is a grossly inadequate capacity in Alberta Environment to do the technical isotope assessment of groundwater. We've been waiting two years now to get the CBM assessments on groundwater. There's indication from scientists that there is migration into groundwater but no action and no communications about that. It's clear that it's a very serious concern and a threat to our rural folks. Rightly they're concerned about getting to the bottom of this with an independent assessment.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. When we met with members of the town of Nanton and the Pekisko Group about concerns over Compton's well proposal and fracking, did you share their concerns about the lack of their ability to intervene in the process for the drilling of that well that could affect the town's water supply and that of all the ranchers along the southeast slopes? Do you believe that Bill 46 will improve the appeal process, or will it further limit their availability to ask needed questions?

3:30

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, we're dealing with Bill 56, not 46. Go ahead.

Dr. Swann: Within the context of Bill 56 I think what we're talking about here is where we're spending extra money and are we seriously considering investments in what is going to be a long-term threat to not only the environment but to human health? I would definitely agree that the definition of directly affected needs to be expanded. It does not look like it's going to be expanded this session, and that is going to create increasing anxiety and anger in the rural area about the future.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, with Bill 56, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 (No. 2), we're looking at, as they say, considerable ka-ching, and we first must look, whenever we are examining this bill in detail, at the estimates in supplementary supply. It's interesting to note that there were not only the estimates for expenditures, but there was a reallocation of previously approved estimates.

When we look at what happened in the Department of Agriculture and Food, we see that from the middle of October of this year the government, of course, announced the $165 million farm recovery plan, a new financial assistance program to assist livestock farmers with rising fuel and feed and fertilizer costs. Benefits under this plan will be distributed by the Alberta Agriculture Financial Services Corporation using CAIS, Canadian agricultural income stabilization, program data and processes. Funding to the corporation for the plan will be provided using a portion of the department's $62 million-plus that lapsed in crop insurance premiums and the entire $135 million that was lapsed in its CAIS program. That is interesting, and I think we should note that because, certainly, Agriculture and Food has not been listed under the schedule here to receive additional monies under Bill 56, and one can only hope that that money – it's a significant amount – is well managed and goes to those who need it and fit the program criteria.

Now, there's also a reallocation of previously approved estimates for the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation, and there is a surplus of money that is going to provincial highway systems and safety and also to Crown-owned facilities for preservation, $20 million. Now, as I understand it from this information, Mr. Speaker, this is due to a decrease in anticipated natural gas rebates, and the voted authority on that was $137 million, which remains unused. Of this amount $22.6 million is being reallocated to provide for these capital maintenance and renewal projects. Now, I don't know where the rest of that money is going.

Not the past weekend but the previous weekend I had an opportunity to visit the project in Riverdale, a house being constructed that, actually, if everything works out – and I'm confident that it will – will have extra energy that possibly could be put into the electrical grid.

Mr. Liepert: For export. You could export it.

Mr. MacDonald: It's not for export. The hon. Minister of Education should be very careful before he promotes this government's plan on electricity exports. I can understand why the Minister of Education gets nervous whenever energy issues come up because the government's handling of any number of energy-related matters has been scandalous, to say the least, and I'm going to get to that in a minute, Mr. Speaker, with the Department of Energy.

Why some of this money in the natural gas rebate program – and the Alberta Liberals have been talking about this for a couple of years – could not be used to encourage more projects like the one in Riverdale, which is going to be very energy efficient, is beyond me. Conservation is a large part of the solution to our increasing energy use, but it seems to be lost on this government. Whenever they hear about conservation, I don't know what they think about, Mr. Speaker.

However, the Department of Energy: over $3 million allocated here, but $2 million of that, I believe, is going to be used to implement the royalty review program. Yes, $2 million is to begin implementation of Alberta's new royalty framework. Now, I would like to know how much of that $2 million is being used to deal with the Suncor and Syncrude issue around their orders in council that were issued, again in secret, behind closed doors, by this government over 10 years ago, these orders in council that provided these special deals for Syncrude and Suncor, and if any of this money is going to be used to try to resolve these issues with these two corporate enterprises.

As I understand it, there's a bit of a rush on this because, initially, it was thought that this matter could be concluded by December 31, just like the implementation of Bill 46, which, as I understand it, if the bill goes forward, is going to be implemented on January 1. Now, I know you've got the $500-an-hour guy hired to head up the implementation team, but that gentleman is probably going to have to work a lot of overtime, Mr. Speaker, in the month of December to get that project done.

The Crown agreements. How is all of this going to work for Syncrude and Suncor? Is any of this money going to be used to hire outside legal help to try to get around this? We know that this is an important issue, and we know that it's a complex issue. I would just like to know if any of that money is being used for that matter.

Also, is any of that money being used to resolve the issue over bitumen pricing? The Hunter report states, "Let the markets decide" appears unlikely to resolve this issue in the best interests of Albertans." Now, we both know, the panel and both sides of the Legislative Assembly, that the bitumen valuation methodology has been under discussion for quite some time with this government, but the Hunter panel thought that this issue should be resolved. Now, again I'm going to quote, Mr. Speaker.

A permanent, generic "bitumen valuation methodology" (BVM) applicable to all calculations requiring such a value, used by all participants in the exploitation of Alberta's bitumen resources where a bitumen price needs to be calculated, should be put in place by 30 June 2008. It would replace all current or intended uses of temporary BVMs and alternatives to the permanent BVM would not be allowed.

In very strong terms, the Panel recommends that a truly independent, unconflicted, world-renowned and highly experienced advisor be hired to consult widely, consider relevant international practices and then develop a permanent BVM, or bitumen valuation methodology.

Now, is this what part of the 2 million bucks is going to be used for? This is a very, very important issue, and I don't think it's good to deal with this behind closed doors. I'm not convinced that this government wants to deal with the issue of the bitumen valuation methodology. They've been working at it for quite some time unsuccessfully for whatever reason. Some of the producers of oil sands that appeared before the committee had a lot to say, as does Mr. Hunter and his panel, regarding this whole issue of bitumen valuation. In light of the time – and that's only seven months – is any of the money being used to deal with that? Also, with the $2 million are there any calculations being done to determine exactly how the government's proposed oil sands royalty program is going to work?

I had the pleasure, Mr. Speaker – and I almost felt like I should have to pay something to attend. One of the panel members, Professor André Plourde, conducted a lecture in the basement of the Faculty of Business over at the U of A last Friday afternoon. Quite frankly, I was surprised to look around and not see any of my colleagues in attendance, particularly from the government side. I thought there would be at least two or three, if not four or five, of them over there with pens and notepads in hand getting advice from the good professor. Now, maybe there was an agent sent there. I don't know what goes on with agents these days, if the government or government agencies . . .

An Hon. Member: A spy.

Mr. MacDonald: There could have been a spy there. It wouldn't surprise me with this government. They laugh, but possibly that may have been how the information, if it did get back to the Department of Energy and the minister, got there. Or they could pick up the local newspaper the following day and read an interesting account of Professor Plourde's presentation.

The professor had a lot of questions, a lot of very good questions, about how this royalty rate would be calculated and whether it would be calculated on a credit or a deduction. I would strongly urge this government, if necessary, to use part of this $2 million supply budget to maybe get some more advice from the professor. Maybe he'll give it to you for free, but his information is very sound. If he were to say, "Well, I need a few dollars for my time," I couldn't object to that. You're paying 500 bucks to a fellow to implement Bill 46. Surely, it would not be unreasonable if this gentleman asked to at least be provided with a modest sum for his time because we could collect, if we were to listen to this gentleman, I think, additional revenues for the resource owners of this province.

As the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has pointed out, we could really make our heritage savings trust fund something special with millions and millions of dollars in it. The public is finally waking up to the fact that the current government has done a very, very poor job of looking after their heritage savings trust fund.

Also, perhaps if it's not suitable for this government to go over to the university and talk to Professor Plourde, maybe they could go to PricewaterhouseCoopers with this $2 million. Did I hear the hon. Minister of Justice say that $2 million wouldn't be enough? No, I didn't hear that. Oh, dear.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Just a question to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Mr. Speaker, on the matter of the $500 per hour consultant. I think it was to the Minister of Energy you were talking, and it was regarding bitumen. Would you prefer, hon. member, that there be a boilermaker or an operating engineer there? Which would you choose?

Mr. MacDonald: I would have to say that the operating engineer would be asking for a lot more money than the boilermaker, and I'm not convinced that he would do a lot more work.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? Any other speakers?
Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 56 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 9

Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my understanding that you do have the amendments that I will be tabling. If you could go ahead and pass those out, it would be great.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendments that are being proposed are being circulated, and we shall refer to them as amendment A1.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. May I go ahead?

The Deputy Chair: No. Just a minute.
You may proceed now.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment that is being put forward is a very minor amendment. It applies to a situation where employers have their employees living in a work camp. The proposed amendment expands the exemption to independent contractors who also stay in those work camps and who are providing services to the business. It is sometimes the case that a business, for example, operating in a remote location will hire both employees and independent contractors to work in this business. This exemption will put them both on the same footing. The other amendment clarifies that the work camp exemption does not apply to hotel operators who hire a contractor and provide a free room for the service. In those situations, the room is subject to a tourism levy.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to raise a few of the other issues that were brought up in second reading. First of all, when it comes to overcharges, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had commented about the number of overcharges. In fact, there were only a couple of these cases, and the amounts overcharged in both of these cases were less than $1,000. There were also some cases where operators charged purchasers who had stayed in the room for more than 28 days, which obviously they're not entitled to. What Bill 9 does is allow those operators to be compelled to refund the overcharge to the customer or to remit it to Alberta Finance, which at the moment it does not.

There was a question about administrative costs. The annual costs for the tourism levy program are estimated at around $200,000. System operating and maintenance costs cannot reasonably be estimated. They are not really that significant.

The other question that was brought up was about performance measures. Mr. Chairman, Travel Alberta has several performance indicators. First of all, there are five objectives: number 1, to increase awareness of Alberta as a tourism destination in all markets; number 2, increase and diversify tourism product marketing in primary geographic markets; number 3, expand and improve the market readiness and marketing capacity of Alberta industry operators; number 4, provide timely, accurate, and comprehensive travel planning information to customers; and number 5, collect, package, and distribute tourism data and market intelligence to the tourism industry. Mr. Chairman, included under these are 14 specific performance measures that support these objectives, which include things like total number of inquiries to Travel Alberta and so on.

There was also a comment about the Leitch report. Mr. Chairman, the Leitch report looks at the governance of Travel Alberta whereas this amendment act proposes only administrative changes and improves clarity and compliance within the industry and does not deal with governance.

Mr. Chairman, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007, is before you, and I move the amendments as circulated. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the sponsoring member for clarifying some of the questions that were put on the record by members of my caucus previously.

Essentially Bill 9, Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007, is a housekeeping bill that seems to be trying to keep pace with the times. Clearly, the government listens very carefully to the Alberta Hotel & Lodging Association. I'm sure they'll turn up on one of our lobbyist registry lists right away quick here because they seem to talk and be very persuasive in getting the government to put in the changes that they're asking for. The industry does seem quite happy with this bill.

I know that when we first talked about this tourism levy, we had been raising concerns about how that would be affecting those that were in the work camps, and we were talking about the increasing number of them that we're seeing in the province. So the amendments that are being brought forward here appear to continue to protect those who are in a work camp situation or are getting lodging as a result of work in remote locations. Maybe I can put it that way as well.

At this time I believe that this tourism levy is functioning pretty well. We've had a significant amount of money returned to the tourism, marketing, and development fund. I sure hope that's being used to bring more people into Alberta. I'm sure it is.

Again, I thank the minister for providing answers to the most vexatious of our questions, which was primarily about the small operators being charged more in a fine than they seem to be for the original. So I appreciate that.

At this point I am happy to give our okay to Committee of the Whole for Bill 9. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, I'm just looking at the consolidated financial statements from 2005-06 and the tourism levy, the hotel tax. We've seen in 2005 a $61 million amount and a $58 million amount collected in 2006. I realize this is primarily a housekeeping piece of legislation, but the hon. member alluded to the purpose of this money. I'm just curious, with the expansion of the cabinet, if any of the money that has been collected in this is being used for tourism promotion here. It's the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw who is the associate minister of tourism, parks, and culture and something. Is any of the money here being used to fund that office? That would be one question. The second question would be: is any of this money dedicated to the Olympics in 2010 in Vancouver?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Currently, the associate minister's office is not funded by this tourism levy. It is purely for projects within Alberta and is utilized as such.

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A1?

Mr. Backs: Mr. Chair, just a point of information or a clarification. I can ask a question on this amendment?

The Deputy Chair: We are at committee stage. You can do that.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. I just saw this, Mr. Chairman. A question to the minister on section A2(a)(vi).

(B) is not in the business of selling lodging, in a work camp that is owned by the employer or managed by or on behalf of the employer.

The practice that I've seen quite often is that there will be those types of situations where, for example, Suncor will own their main camp. There will be other situations where, for example, PTI will manage a camp for Albion. But there may be other situations as well where they are, in fact, work camps that are deemed commercial camps that are not at all in any way for tourism and that are in a situation where they are sometimes taking people for a week or two or for the short term for contractors that are not managing that camp. Would those fall under this provision?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Those camps that have occupants under 28 days would be required to pay the tourism levy. If they are over 28 days, they would not be required to pay the tourism levy. This covers a situation where an employer owns a camp and is having private contractors working on that particular project so that the private contractors can stay there and not pay the camp. But there are some commercial camps, as the hon. member has alluded to, which in essence and in reality are a variation on a hotel. They will have to pay the tourism levy unless the person is there for longer than 28 days.

Mr. Backs: Just another question or comment to the same minister. There's a very large industry in terms of shutdowns in this province, most of which actually employ people for less than 28 days. They may have as many as 4,000, 5,000, and 8,000 tradesmen on these shutdowns, which encompass the shutting down of a plant for debottlenecking, for annual maintenance, for fixing up certain projects. Contractors come in on behalf of these employers come and live in these camps. Would these employees be exempt?

Dr. Oberg: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

4:00

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to speak on the bill itself? Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 9 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 11
Telecommunications Act Repeal Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West I would like to offer a few comments at the committee stage on the Telecommunications Act Repeal Act. This act received first reading during the spring session and second reading during the fall session and is now being considered for Committee of the Whole.

The Telecommunications Act was proclaimed in 1988 to regulate the operations of two public organizations, Alberta Government Telephones and Edmonton Telephones. Mr. Chairman, the reason I'm asking for this act to be repealed is because both of these organizations no longer exist as corporate entities. Furthermore, the regulation of all telecommunication companies remains under federal jurisdiction through the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'll be extremely brief. I realize that Bill 11 is strictly housekeeping, but I just wanted to get on the record that I miss the idea of government-regulated, publicly owned companies, such as Alberta Government Telephones. I miss the regulated services and the stability that organizations like AGT provided. I miss the same type of reliability, sustainability, predictability, and influence of the government, whether it be on water suppliers or telephones.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

In other words, governments in the past and in other provinces adjoining us continue to be in control of their public utilities and consider the greater good. While this Bill 11 is moving us to our current state, I just want to sort of bemoan the historic fact that public utilities are no longer regulated, controlled, supported, and as sustainable as they once were under the government's auspices.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity to speak very briefly to Bill 11, Telecommunications Act Repeal Act. This certainly is a bill that reminds one of the history of the privatization drive that this government adopted and pushed forward with in the '90s and, in the process, left lots of roadkill.

AGT, Alberta Government Telephones, was one of the most successful public utilities. It was sold, and I think that in terms of the quality of service provided by its successor, which is a private unregulated utility, there has been a decline in that service. Lots of people complain about the way that one of these companies that replaced it, Telus, has not been upfront in terms of charges that it introduces once in a while, which people have to then object to. They can only read their bills and find out that if they don't buy this or that as part of this service, they will be charged. There's a question of the transparency of the business practices of this private company that replaced this wonderful, publicly built, publicly regulated, and publicly owned utility that Albertans once had. The revenues that it generated for the public treasury were quite considerable.

While this bill is housekeeping, the repeal of the act is to finally bury AGT for good from the records and the statutes of this province. It is regrettable, but it's history.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 11?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 11 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 24
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've had some very good debate on this bill so far, and I'm looking forward to the conclusion of that debate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I second the member's comments. The Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie waxed eloquent in second reading of the bill and provided the House, as I previously mentioned, with a fantastic in-service. The questions were answered in a very forthright manner, extremely knowledgeable, and concerns over property were dealt with. I, too, support the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon and wish to get on with our next process.

Thank you.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I also echo the statement and the position that's expressed by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity. The NDP caucus is in support of this bill. I think the bill does update the language and identifies ways to investigate suspected fraud or mishandling of mortgage transactions. Legislative changes include, of course, a criminal record check as a prerequisite for real estate agents, mortgage brokers, and appraisers who wish to be licensed. I think this is certainly a move in the right direction given the overheated real estate market and all kinds of fly-by-night types who want to enter it as agents to take advantage of that market by buying and selling. The changes in the language and the legislative ability to investigate suspected mishandlings is a good thing. We are supportive of the bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 24, Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 23
Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act

The Chair: Are there any amendments, comments, or questions with regard to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm doing the cleanup batting for today. I just wanted to recognize, as I mentioned with Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007, that questions and concerns had been covered, such as if a property title was transferred and then there seemed to be confusion as to the ownership five years into the process, it would revert back to the original title and an individual's proprietary rights would not be lost.

I, again, commend the government and thank you for the thoroughness in which Bill 23 was debated and for the answers provided.

The Chair: Are there others?

Dr. Pannu: I'll be very brief, Mr. Chairman, again. The bill, I think, certainly has our support. It outlines policies and procedures over unclaimed properties and vested properties while at the same time repeals the Ultimate Heir Act. The bill outlines how unclaimed private properties and vested properties are to be dealt with. For unclaimed properties the bill certainly outlines the rights and responsibilities of the holder of the land in dealing with the owner of the land and regulations set out when the land is considered unclaimed.

All of these provisions, Mr. Chairman, are quite unproblematic. We have no problem with the provisions of this bill, so it has our support. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move to adjourn debate on Bill 23.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2
Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Thank you very much. I cannot guarantee the speed with which the other bills were passed because there is controversy associated with the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007. Part of that controversy relates back to Bill 1, the lobbyists registry act. The purpose of Bill 1 was to increase the transparency of the lobbying process, but Bill 2 after the fact contradicts some of that transparency. Under Bill 1 the government is not necessarily obliged to reveal to whom they are initiating the contact. On our first discussions of Bill 1 the sort of phrase I used was that if the government comes courting, there's no reporting.

We're very aware that there are so many individuals who were appointed to boards and committees, whether it's the Energy and Utilities Board or whether it's a local health region. Without having elected individuals, who are the true representatives of the people who they've been elected to represent, then there is the potential for conflict of interest because of the old expression: you can't serve two masters. An individual who is appointed to a board by the government to represent the interests of the public is in a conflict of interest because: to whom do they report? The government. Who pays their salary? The government. Who are they expected to represent? The people. As such, there is a conflict.

It concerns me that we had the brief experiment with elected health regions. After a period of only nine months the government decided that there was just a little bit too much public contribution going on at board meetings and that the people who were elected did not necessarily represent the wishes and intent of the government. So after a brief sortie into the world of elected health boards, that ended.

In terms of elected boards I can't help but remember in the late '90s the firing of the entire Calgary public board. The individual who was the chairperson of that board at that time has now received the Conservative nomination. While that individual has worked very hard for a number of ethnic organizations and supports, it concerns me that the individual who was elected by the constituents basically called the then Minister of Education and indicated to that minister that in her opinion the board was dysfunctional. Therefore, the entire board, the elected members of the Calgary board of trustees, at that point were fired.

I would suggest that that was very much a conflict of interest, that the Education minister overrode the rights and responsibilities of a duly elected board that had very successfully managed at that point an over $500 million budget, basically firing some individuals over allegations of note passing and considering that this was a dysfunctional board because there were divisive factions within that board. But despite those factions they were able to carry out the trusteeship that the people of Calgary had elected them to do. This is just one more indication of a conflict of interest.

What we need to be having is the best person for the job, and that best person for the job, whether it's on a board or a committee, should be reviewed in an elected fashion. Let the individuals – the electors, the voters – and the democratic rights of Albertans be recognized. Let them hear from the various candidates. Let them have a say in the decision that is made as opposed to strictly a government appointment.

In terms of conflicts of interests, I had and continue to have respect for a former Finance minister who recently received a government appointment. Given the rency of that appointment, I am not sure that the year-long aspects took place. There are just too many sweet deals going on. It seems that there's a board or a committee chair or some kind of an appointment for just about everybody that at one point served this government in some fashion or another, whether they were elected to serve or whether they worked within the ministries, and that is definitely a conflict of interest.

The individual whom I've replaced in Calgary-Varsity, former Energy minister Murray Smith, cost Alberta taxpayers $500 million because he single-handedly decided that they should be paying for the transmission lines that formerly provided the service and continue to provide the service primarily for industry, that the taxpayers should be on the bill for half a billion dollars' worth in private transmission lines. For that act and for his warming comments of "If you're cold and you don't like the price of gas, put on a sweater,” based on that resumé, the individual was promoted to a very plum position in Washington, DC.

Now, I don’t dispute the idea of having a trade office in Washington, DC, but the candidate who receives that position should be able to demonstrate a tremendous understanding of international relations. They should have a background in diplomacy. Simply finding a cozy, cushy job in a Washington appointment because they had a former Conservative connection is not acceptable.

Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007, doesn’t go nearly far enough in resolving the current and past conflicts of interest. I know several of my caucus colleagues would like to address other concerns with regard to conflicts.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Today is the second opportunity the House gets to talk to Bill 2 in Committee of the Whole, and I appreciate the opportunity to participate.

As I said yesterday, I sat on the first committee which studied the Conflicts of Interest Act, the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, in 2006, and then this year I also served as the deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Government Services, which was tasked with the job to review Bill 2 and to solicit input and feedback from stakeholders and interested members of the public. We did that, and we issued a report, Mr. Chairman, as you know, and the recommendations contained in the report appeared before the House yesterday in the form of an amendment. That amendment was comprised of four parts, which were all passed yesterday, and I’m pleased about this.

Today we’re talking about the bill itself after it was amended by the committee. I think that overall, Mr. Chairman, I have to start by saying that I am quite pleased with the progress that has been achieved both in the House and in the committee. Bill 1 and Bill 2 are very important to the endeavour to renew democracy in this province. We all know that the Alberta government has been criticized on numerous occasions for failing to deliver on their promise to be open and accountable. The Alberta Liberal caucus, even in the 2004 campaign, when we were all candidates, advocated three things. We advocated for a lobbyist registry. We advocated for a revamping or strengthening of our conflicts of interest laws. The third thing, which hasn’t happened yet: we wanted a whistleblower protection mechanism to be put in place to protect whistleblowers, should they come across any wrongdoing, in coming forward and to not fear for their jobs and not fear for their employment or employability. I would say that this is two down, one to go in terms of our major democratic renewal initiatives.

One of the other ones would be to strike a citizens’ assembly to engage citizens in the dialogue with respect to proportional representation or some form of proportional representation and so on. So two initiatives are before the House: the lobbyist registry, Bill 1, the conflicts of interest act, Bill 2, and I have to say that I am quite pleased with the progress both in committee and in this House.

Now, let me recount a discussion we had in the committee, Mr. Chairman, whereby I actually moved a motion in the committee to strengthen a good act even more, to make it even better by extending the cooling-off period to senior political staff and deputy ministers and people like that in those capacities from the current proposed six months in the act to 12. This was done in the proper legislative fashion. It was basically moved by myself in the committee, and members of the committee had the opportunity to debate it back and forth, and then we had a vote. To my pleasure – and it was something that I felt was really reassuring as it’s an all-party committee – members from all sides of the House agreed that this was actually a good move and that we would better increase that cooling-off period from the proposed six months to 12 to make it, you know, in line or uniform with what we’re doing with former ministers, for example.

Now, why are we doing this? Well, I know, Mr. Chairman, and you know that we’re doing this because people who have either held ministerial posts or people who worked with ministers, like chiefs of staff, like executive assistants, like deputy ministers, have a lot of inside information. We feel that it would actually give them an unfair advantage if shortly after they leave that post, they come back as a lobbyist and have the ear of government because these are the same colleagues and the same people they worked alongside, that they had many dealings with, that they had many interactions with. They probably worked in the same office space or, you know, shared elevator rides or water cooler talks. They know these people, and they’re using that information to further the interest of someone out there who is hiring or contracting that person to lobby his former colleagues, his former employees and subordinates in some cases to get stuff done for that entity that’s out there. So we felt that by, first, sending the message and, second, actually doing it, we are definitely moving in the right direction. I was really, really pleased that the committee in its wisdom actually agreed with the direction of that motion. It was voted for, and it was adopted. It was accepted.

Now, one week later, because the committee had not finished yet, my hon. colleague from Calgary-Bow came along and introduced a motion that basically rescinded the earlier motion. While I am not an authority on parliamentary practice, Mr. Chairman, I think that in my three years here I have learned a thing or two about parliamentary procedure. I checked Marleau and Montpetit, for example, and there is a clause – I can’t remember which page in particular – that basically talks about the fact that this is a practice that is frowned upon. When a motion is adopted by the House, you don’t come right away and reverse it immediately thereafter. Granted, it was a proper motion – the motion in its language and its content was proper – and there was another vote. The composition on the committee had changed, and the vote was reversed, so today I am willing to reintroduce my motion in the form of an amendment, Mr. Chairman. It was tabled with the table officers yesterday, and I will wait for the pages to distribute it, and then we’ll get the discussion going in this House.

4:30

The Chair: We will just give the pages a moment to distribute it. We will label this amendment A2.

I believe you may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I think that part of Marleau and Montpetit was in chapter 19, talking about committees of the House. I think that basically, in layman’s terms, it was talking about the fact that no negative motion should be adopted immediately after a positive motion. So if you’re asking the House or the committee to do something, another motion should not be presented to negate it in effect or in language.

Anyway, regardless of the fact, today we have an amendment before the House, and the amendment is doing two things. It’s basically amending two sections. In section 22 subclause 32.1(1) modifies that six months to 12 months. That first part is on page 14, talking about former political staff. It basically extends the cooling-off period from six months to 12. Then the second section is on page 21 in section 30 on section 23.1(2), again, for deputy ministers extending it to 12 months from six.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me reassure you. I am not attempting to restrict anybody’s employability after they leave office. I’m not jeopardizing their right to seek work, to seek meaningful employment, to make tons of money should they choose. What I'm saying here is that the only restriction we're placing on them is a time restriction, that they cannot act as a lobbyist and use that inside information for the duration that is stipulated here. I'm not saying they can't go work for another department in government. I'm not saying that they can't work for private business, that they can't start their own business, and so on and so forth.

What I'm saying is: why are we so worried about some deputy minister or some executive assistant to a minister or chief of staff for the Premier, for example, after they leave their post, that they absolutely have to become lobbyists and they absolutely have to come and lobby within six months? Why is that? I don't think it's sending the right message, and I think anything we do in this House to tighten that law and to make people out there more comfortable and make us more transparent to those people out there is an advisable move. Again, nothing in here to restrict their employment: it's just basically restricting one activity that they cannot engage in before 12 months have elapsed.

I have to remind everybody that it was adopted by the committee, and the committee was an all-party committee. We had the discussion in the committee. I was really dismayed that that other motion came one week later, and it was actually reported in the media, too. People were puzzled. How come a good committee, a good group of people working together, has agreed to do something and then it was reversed just because the composition has varied from one week to the next? It was basically something that I felt a bad taste after in my mouth.

So an amendment before the House. I encourage all my hon. colleagues to support it, but should they choose not to, I really would like to hear why. What is the rationale that we have to go out of our way to protect people's right and ability to become lobbyists right after six months have elapsed? I think 12 months is not an unfair request and not an unfair restriction, and I honestly hope that members will show that progressivity today and adopt that amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on the amendment before the House, amendment A2. I was also pleased to have had the opportunity to take part in those policy field committees that considered bills 1 and 2. I found that the exchanges and the discussions and the debates in those committees were very helpful. They were frank. We engaged each other in good faith and came to some interesting conclusions that reflected a broad-based consensus across party lines on some important issues related to bills 1 and 2.

I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has summarized my feelings as well with respect to the rescinding of some of the decisions that the committee had made just a few days prior, the recommendations to amend the bill to make the provisions for the ministers and the political staff not to be able to engage in lobbying activities in relation to departments or in government entities for which they had worked prior to their retirement. A 12-month period seemed quite reasonable. If they're reasonable for ministers, we thought it's equally reasonable, if not more so, for senior deputy ministers and political staff. In fact, the senior political staff and deputy ministers and others get paid very well, so I didn't think that it was asking too much for the political staff and the senior ministry officials to be included in the provisions in the bill which would prevent them from being able to lobby vis-à-vis the departments they had served in.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, one of the submissions that the Standing Committee on Government Services received was from the Sheldon Chumir foundation. That bill notes that the cooling-off period for ministers in the federal act is five years. We think that we needed to go farther. But at least the bill as it was considered by the committee was, we thought, a move in the right direction. So we tried to address the minor problem that we had with that exemption for the senior ministry officials and the political staff and to make it identical to the prohibitions that the bill intends to apply to the activities of ministers. I was very disappointed that the decision that had been made in its wisdom by the committee after full deliberation was quickly reversed within days after the committee made its first decision.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung raised issues about the procedural propriety of it. I'm not sure where to go with it. But I think it's a matter that perhaps needs to be addressed more clearly both by Parliamentary Counsel staff and by the committees in future so that we can clarify the procedures that we want to be guided by and be bound by. There was some confusion as to whether a motion passed two days ago or three days ago could be reversed so quickly by the same committee. It seemed to me a rather arbitrary use of the procedures at the time. But we are new committees, and I'm willing to give some leeway for us to have time so that we can find the right procedures and/or follow procedures well established and that seem to have done well in other jurisdictions so that we don't engage in a similar exercise again.

Mr. Chairman, I had prepared the exact same amendments that have been brought before us, so I am pleased to support amendment A2, introduced by the Member for Edmonton-McClung, which is identical to the amendment that I had also approved from the Parliamentary Counsel. With that, I'll take my seat and hope other members will have opportunity to speak to the amendment as well.

Thank you.

4:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise to join debate on the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. I would like to take this opportunity to recognize his contributions through the all-party committee to the work in examining Bill 2 very, very carefully and making some definite improvements with respect to the bill, which have already been accepted as amendments to the bill before the House.

Bill 2 proposes a six-month cooling-off period for the Premier's chief of staff or deputy chief of staff, for the head of the Premier's southern Alberta office, as well as executive assistants to ministers. Certainly, there were some members of the standing committee who felt that these officials should be subject to a full one-year cooling-off period. Indeed, I was in favour of that proposal as well. However, as the hon. member and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona have mentioned, there was a motion put by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and upon reflection the majority of the committee agreed that six months was a more appropriate time period for that cooling-off or postemployment provision.

However, Mr. Chairman, I would say that there is no perfect time. There's no magic formula for a cooling-off period. A cooling-off period is a restriction in postemployment activities. As I stated in the report of the select special committee, the appropriate length of a cooling-off period is a question of judgment and balance. The right of the former employee to obtain gainful employment after leaving elected office is certainly a consideration. Desirability of encouraging interchange between the public and the private sector is another consideration which was brought to our attention during our deliberations and the need to encourage qualified and successful people to public service. All of these factors mitigate for shorter cooling-off periods.

On the other hand, the reality or the perception that former officials may use inside information or close contacts to improperly benefit themselves or their employers or their clients mitigates for longer postemployment restrictions. Unlike ministers, however, policy officials do not have automatic transition allowance of three months per year of service, and I respect the fact that a majority of the members of the committee felt that the six-month period strikes a good balance between avoiding conflict of interest and the need to attract and retain good public servants. I think that all members can appreciate, as the committee did, that a fine balance is required here. While it is not the decision that I would have made, I'm prepared to support it in the interests of democracy and moving forward with the good parts of this bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I have been listening to the discussion on amendment A2 to the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007, as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. I would urge all hon. members of this House to consider supporting the amendment in section 22 as proposed, to increase, essentially, the cooling-off period from six months to 12 months, and also in section 30 as well, which deals with the Public Service Act.

If we are to look at the three basic principles of the Conflicts of Interest Act – public disclosure, independent ethics commissioner, and rules for public office holders – this certainly would fall into all of that and more. When we consider that if we are to improve the integrity in government and in politics, I think this is worth while and certainly has merit. If we look at other suggestions that have been made over the years and what the committee has done in the recent past, then this is an amendment that I would encourage all hon. members to support.

It's interesting to note with this bill that, you know, the current time period as proposed is six months. This is regarding the dealings with government by former political staff members. Many of the former political staff members are members of whichever respective party is in power. In Alberta here, Mr. Chairman, for the last 36 years it's been the Progressive Conservative Party, so this is not an extraordinary request. I think this is fair.

We look at, for instance, ourselves, Mr. Chairman. If we were to have a cabinet minister that did not resign but for one reason or another – and I'm not going to get into this – was removed from cabinet, let's say at the middle of November, and they carried on their duties as an MLA until the middle of December, perhaps the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill could clarify this for me: does the six-month cooling-off period for that person start with their resignation from cabinet or their resignation from this Assembly?

There are a number of things that confuse me with this legislation, and that certainly would be one of them. What exactly is that cooling-off period for a cabinet minister who is removed or resigns from cabinet and then a month or two later resigns his or her seat? What is the cooling-off period? How is that determined? Is it six months from the resignation from cabinet or the resignation from the House?

With that, I would in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, encourage all hon. members to please have a close look at amendment A2 and consider supporting it. I think to increase these time frames from six months to 12 months will go a long way to restoring public confidence in the whole political process. I'm not going to get into the long list of people who, in my opinion, have been not in violation of the act, because the act is too broad and too general, but have left one form of employment or another with the government and taken up another form of employment that certainly would not be suitable. I think if we strengthen this conflict of interest legislation, we're all better off.

Thank you.

4:50

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, I may be able to clarify for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar the point which he raised, which is with respect to the application of the cooling-off period to ministers. Nothing has changed in that regard except for the time period which is proposed in Bill 2, which would extend it from six months to 12 months.

The purpose of that cooling-off period is to ensure that the minister in question does not take undue advantage of the special knowledge or the contacts that they've had in their position as a minister of the Crown. In that regard, I can advise that the cooling-off period would begin to run from the time at which they ceased to hold office as a minister regardless of whether or not they continued to be a member of the House. Of course, there aren't any cooling-off periods which apply to members at large in the House. They only apply to ministers of the Crown and now the policy officials which are stipulated in Bill 2.

Mr. MacDonald: I would just like to thank the hon. member for that explanation. I appreciate it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to make some brief remarks on this amendment A2 to the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007. Everything that has been said by my other colleagues is certainly correct. We all sat on the same committee, and I believe that it really was a good process to have the all-party committee. However, this little manoeuvre disappointed me because up to that point it looked like we were all working together, sort of leaving party colours at the doors, so to speak.

I'm still puzzled. I just found that the complete reversal within one week, using different people on the committee, was very, very interesting; in fact, probably quite odd. It almost appeared to be staged, and then it was done, probably before we really thought about it. It just sort of appeared to be that, obviously, there was something going on in a different arena, and it really wasn't going on in the open committee. So I am disappointed about the process, the way this particular six months to 12 months has been reversed.

I think everything else has been covered, but I do believe that this should be approved by the House, which would then, I think, give even greater authenticity to the all-party committee. I guess it would send a message that maneuvering and questionable reversals wouldn't be allowed. Certainly, I think that, as has been mentioned, Parliamentary Counsel should look at this kind of behaviour and perhaps speak with all the other committees in terms of that.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The Member for Calgary-Nose Hill appeared to be suggesting that when a person applied for their first government job, they should potentially be lining up their next job as a lobbyist internally. If a person is qualified and they're the most qualified person for that job, under most circumstances that job will wait for them for the time period necessary for them to assume that position. Asking people to sit back for a year is certainly a minimal expectation.

Now, the Premier, when he first was chosen by his Tory colleagues, started off with great guns in terms of bringing forth a number of innovations such as the all-party standing policy committees. I credit him for that consideration that combined wisdom trumps any wisdom that belongs to any one party. However, when it came to another action that he did in terms of cutting down the size of the number of ministries, again I was applauding him, sort of cheering from the sidelines.

I was extremely pleased, for example, when he got rid of RAGE, restructuring and government efficiency, and put it back under the auspices of Government Services. That was a good move. What I wasn't pleased about, however, was that there appeared to be a make-work project for every government member. When it appeared that there was a complaint about too many rural ministers, the Premier decided: well, I'll appoint a Deputy Premier from Calgary, and that will assuage some of the concerns of Calgarians.

Then when the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing seemed to run into a degree of trouble, we had a secretariat individual appointed. Actually, before the secretariat we had an associate minister, who then assumed the responsibility for a secretariat. As though there wasn't enough work involved for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, then we had an associate minister of, I believe it was called, sustainable development appointed to help out the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. So very quickly we ended up with just as many faces and places, only with new titles. They were no longer the full-fledged minister, but we had so many associates, and we had so many chiefs.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, yes. Relevance.

The Chair: Just one moment, hon. member. Hon. members, it's very difficult to hear with the background noise.

Mr. Hancock: I believe it's 459 of Beauchesne's on relevance. We are speaking to the amendment, and the amendment is relative to the time, whether it's six months or 12 months, relative to how long the cooling-off period is for a former political staff or a senior bureaucrat. It specifically mentions a deputy minister or other senior person under the Public Service Act. We should really try to stick to the point. That's the question. The question really is a very narrow one. It's a question of: how long is enough time for a cooling-off period? That's what the amendment is. I would hesitate, normally, to interrupt, but this is a very narrow amendment with a very narrow purpose.

The Chair: I'm assuming that the hon. member was going to link his remarks back to the amendment very quickly.

Mr. Chase: I am going to try and get into the framework of narrowness, and I will achieve that very quickly.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: You cannot talk about transparency and accountability if you keep voting on something until you get it right. It was the decision of the committee to extend the cooling-off period to 12 months. Then some members of the committee didn't like that original decision, so they revoted on it. What we have here today is a chance to bring it back to its historical significance, agreed upon by the members of that committee, and I suggest that we vote on the amendment and show that we are a transparent, accountable, collegial group.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In regard to (b) of this proposed amendment A2 could any member of the House clarify for me in regard to the Public Service Act how, if in any way, this would catch contracted employees, individuals who are contracted for one reason or another by the government to provide advice or expertise for one reason or another?

5:00

It comes to my attention that we have started a process in this province of hiring individuals through contract that are outside, as far as I know, the Public Service Act. Would this cooling-off period affect them? We hired an individual on contract, Mr. Chairman, from California to advise and consult and direct the electricity business unit in the Department of Energy. I'm wondering if a position like that, that Mr. Kellan Fluckiger used to have here, would be caught in this cooling-off period. Or are those contracted individuals outside the Public Service Act?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will try to maybe explain my understanding as a layperson to my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. On page 14, part 6.1, Former Political Staff Members, Dealings with Government by former political staff members, 32.1(1)(a) talks about "on behalf of himself or herself, solicit or accept a contract or benefit from a department of the public service or a Provincial agency with which [that person] had significant official dealings." This offers the clarity and the focus that it's not all of government. It is not all of government boards, commissions, agencies, and departments. It's basically those particular ones with which that person had significant dealings, not even in passing. These are significant dealings, so a contract for either himself or herself.

Then sub (b). Now, my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar would be interested to find out that it talks about "any other person." So you're talking about the person himself, and then you're also talking about any other person as in advancing the interests of other people as well. The example you gave would probably be caught.

The idea behind my amendment is to basically extend that restriction time zone from six months to 12. I think it's a fair requirement. If we're doing it to ministers, why can't we do it to, you know, former deputy ministers and former chiefs of staff and former executive assistants to ministers? They have the same access to information, if not even more sometimes.

I can give you examples of people in the government in the front bench who probably know a lot less than the employees that work with them. Occasionally they even admit that, and they bring them here to the House and thank them, and they say: you know what, without you guys, we can't function and we can't shine and we can't conduct the business of the government as we're supposed to. So I would argue that if we're doing 12 months for ministers, we should do it for the same length of time for those staff that have all the information at their fingertips. They know where things are, they know where the money is, and they know who to talk to.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A2?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. This may seem like just the rejection of an amendment, but it goes much deeper, into the whole democratic fibre of the intention of Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007. The government finally caught up with the rest of the nation by having all-party policy committees, and the reports that I've had from all my caucus colleagues were that these were effective representations on the committees, that, as my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East expressed it, people park their partisan beliefs at the door. They came forward and recognized that there was one goal in mind, and that was achieving the best interest of Albertans.

What we have witnessed today is the type of rewriting of history that I have referred to before. When a decision is made within the standing policy committee process and that process is then brought to the larger House for approval, there is an expectation that in some ways while we may not agree with the whole idea, we support it. What we've seen today is that you'll just keep voting in that committee until the majority gets its way, which totally defeats the reasoning of having an all-party committee.

I just wanted to go on the record for saying that I'm disappointed in this process, that takes away from the validity of all-party committees, and I hope each of the four committees does its best to restore confidence in the process, which I believe has been damaged in this House today.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, normally I wouldn't be provoked to rise, but I do want to make sure that I have some brief comments on the record with respect to the last comment. First of all, our rules provide that one should not go back and debate a matter that's already been voted on.

Secondly, the all-party committees did good work. They worked through the course of the summer, and all of the committees did excellent work and reported out to the House. The report says, as we've seen with respect to Bill 1 and are now seeing with respect to Bill 2 and which we will see with respect to Bill 31, that there are pieces that come back to the House. There was an amendment which I brought forward with respect to one of the bills which was with respect to volunteers. As we know in this House, once you've put a bill on the table, once you've seen a report, there's always some more opportunity for work. Even when a bill is passed and becomes legislation, the process of evergreening that legislation always continues.

I would not want someone reading the last speaker's comments in Hansard to not perhaps go to the next speaker's comments and would say that the field policy committees that we've set up, the all-party committees of this House, did good work, heard from the public, and responded. It is not in our mouths, then, to come back and say that the House itself, which is, of course, the master of the work, does not have the opportunity to come back and visit that and deal with it. It is not appropriate at all, in my view, to say that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It seems that revisionism suits at some points but not at others. I was not discussing the quality of the committee, and I want it on record that the committee made the right decision the first time. It was the revisiting that caused the problem. Then, when we had an opportunity to recognize and support the initial committee decision, that was turned down.

The Chair: Hon. member, we're debating Bill 2, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, not the committee process.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate that, and you're seeing the conflicts of interest that are occurring today over Bill 2.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour for me to rise for the first time and have an opportunity to speak to Bill 2, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007. I want to commend the committee for its diligence and its work on this important issue for all Albertans. Clearly, the foundations of public trust rest in the ability of people to know what's going on and to recognize and address real and perceived conflicts of interest. So it's important that this be done. Obviously, from many of our points of view it's overdue that we have a strengthened conflicts of interest amendment here.

For the record, this amendment extends the ministerial cooling-off period to a year from six months. It creates the six-month cooling-off period for senior political staff, including EAs and the Premier's chief and deputy chief of staff. It extends postemployment restrictions to the deputy ministers. It strengthens postemployment restrictions for ministers and increases fines for violations. It also strengthens rules against using office, including information, to further private interests of any individuals. This is all positive. It makes substantial improvement in a number of critical areas, including those that have been recommended for years by this side of the House and the all-party review committee.

It affirmed, basically, three principles of the Conflicts of Interest Act: public disclosure, an independent Ethics Commissioner, and rules for public office holders. It recommended but did not support the legislation against apparent conflicts of interest and the general impartiality clause to cover activity that's unethical or inappropriate, even if it doesn't involve financial conflict of interest.

I want to recognize that in my experience these all-party committees have been positive and constructive and useful, and I look forward to more of the kinds of activities and dialogue that is possible within these committees. Indeed, this has been a step forward, and I acknowledge the Premier for fulfilling his commitment during his leadership to establish these all-party committees. It's a very progressive step for democracy in Alberta, and people, frankly, have been dismayed and rather discouraged, shall I say, prior to these signs that the government of Alberta is interested in democracy and interested in a full and an open discussion and participation.

To close remarks, Mr. Chairman, I think I can say with some support from this side that in general we have positive feelings, and certainly I will support this bill in its final reading.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007?

The hon. leader of the third party opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to just very briefly put on the record my support for the passage of this bill. I certainly think that it's one of the issues that we've been talking about for many years, and we've seen many instances where high profile individuals, including our most recent Premier, have taken appointments or positions with law firms or other organizations. We felt that this is not right, that they possess so much knowledge of the government's plans . . . [interjection] Well, I'm speaking generally, hon. House leader, about your previous leader.

In general people who leave government as a senior official or an elected official in cabinet will have a tremendous knowledge of policy and plans of the government. It's the plans, the knowledge of what the government is planning to do, that are extremely valuable and give any firm or private interest that's able to acquire that individual a tremendous and an unfair advantage. That's why this kind of legislation is so important. To not have this kind of legislation really ends any sort of sense of a level playing field in business or in law or in professions or in any activity where lobbying or a government policy is of critical nature.

I just want to indicate that I think in some cases these cooling-off periods could have been extended even further, and it would have been in the public interest to do so. But this is a step in the right direction, Mr. Chairman, and I am prepared to support it. I think the whole question of conflicts of interest is something that we all need to be concerned about regardless of what political party we're from because a failure to deal properly and completely with conflicts of interest does undermine public confidence in the ability of government to provide equally for all without bias or unfair advantage for any party.

I think this is indeed a step forward. If the government continues along this line, they will, I think, move in a way to eliminate some of the tarnished reputation the government earned under the previous Premier. I think it's clear that this Premier wants to put some distance between himself and the type of things that went on under the previous regime.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and indicate we'll be supporting the bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very brief. I'd just like to rise in support of this bill. I think it's an indication of a new attitude in government and a new approach to government that we're seeing under the new Premier. I very much support this bill, and I commend the government for coming forward with it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 2 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 38

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I, again, cannot be as succinct as I was for bills 9, 11, 23, and 24. This is my first opportunity to speak on Bill 38; therefore, I want to point out my concern that Alberta did not follow the B.C. example of bringing the concept of a trade and labour mobility agreement to the Legislature and to its people first. In B.C. the democratic discussions took place before the fact, not looking for a simple rubber-stamping after the fact.

Now, what I find difficult with Bill 38 is that we're talking about sort of an economic bond between the province of British Columbia and the province of Alberta that potentially realizes the least standards of both. In other words, if there's a minimum wage in B.C. that is even lower than that of Alberta, it seems that the least attractive would be the concern expressed.

What I find surprising is, for example, when our leader from Edmonton-Riverview put forward the notion of a western tiger. He put it out there for discussion rather than that, you know, had we formed the government, the concept would have been discussed before it was rammed through the legislative process. The western tiger takes the TILMA concept and makes it considerably more transparent and accountable. What the western tiger recognizes is that instead of transferring our wealth to the south, having our bitumen and our raw gas and our raw oil upgraded in refineries in either Chicago or down in Texas, why not realize that advantage across western Canada? It also recognizes that we have limited water resources. We can't necessarily upgrade all the bitumen in this province in the upgrader alleys that are proposed, the 10 upgraders, without it having a very damaging, detrimental effect on our water.

Bill 38, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007, or in its acronym and briefer form, TILMA, does not take into account that we could, as is proposed by the western tiger concept, be sending some of our upgrading via pipeline to B.C., for example, or to Saskatchewan or Manitoba. Instead of relying on our current preoccupation with dirty, coal-fired generation, we could be using the much cheaper hydro from B.C. We could be trading bitumen processing for considerably less expensive power.

Likewise for Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Instead of us using all our water, whether it's potable or grey water, in the refining process, some of that refining could be shared with our western neighbours. I gather that with the election of the new government in Saskatchewan that process is more likely to occur. This government seems to be more ideologically connected to the new government. What we're commenting on in the western tiger is that not only do we share the potential gain of a western co-operation, such as Bill 38 suggests, with B.C., but we would expand that concept to include Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Manitoba has the advantage of also having hydro power. The transmission lines that the Minister of Energy noted in question period this afternoon, which go both ways: we could be trading the power, which would not result in extra emissions in Alberta but would result in hydro from Manitoba or hydro from B.C. powering the industrial separation and refining here. The western tiger concept recognizes that Alberta can be a leader in not only the transference of energy resources and refining but also the transportation of innovation and technology and, sort of, intellectual properties, sharing with the provinces and decreasing our dependency on our southern neighbour.

At some point I am sure that the province of Alberta will be urging their federal counterparts to revisit the trade agreements over natural gas because when our market does recover, with the type of cold winter that we're experiencing now and that is going to be prevalent throughout the States, with our current dollar being almost at par, we're no longer having the advantage that we once had with the higher American dollar.

What the western tiger says is: let's negotiate within our Canadian provinces, increase the economic clout of the western provinces, and do trades that work to the mutual benefit of our western Canadians. By sharing the bitumen, we share the stress. We recognize that we don't have the resources, whether it be using natural gas as an energy source for refining bitumen, nor do we have the water. So in order to eliminate those stresses, we share them as well as the profits with our neighbouring western partners, not just British Columbia but Saskatchewan and Manitoba. What we achieve as a result of this sharing is cleaner skies in Alberta, cheaper power for both industry and consumers, and a win-win circumstance for western Canada.

Bill 38 looks very narrowly at a trade deal with British Columbia. The western tiger concept looks at what's best for western Canada, not just what is best for the B.C. or Alberta internal governments.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. Colleagues, the Alberta/B.C. trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, or TILMA, does what the national agreement on internal trade, AIT, which has been around for quite a while, was supposed to do, and it eliminates interprovincial trade barriers.

I would just like to remind the House that politics is the art of the possible. What we're doing here is we're doing the possible. We're doing the step that we can do with B.C. now when it comes to TILMA. This is a barrier-busting agreement and the most comprehensive internal trade agreement. The TILMA effectively creates a single market of 7.7 million people in Alberta and B.C. Yes, we can expand that, but it creates Canada's second-largest economy.

The TILMA came into effect April 1, 2007. On that date the movement of goods and services between Alberta and B.C. became a whole lot easier. For example, commercial vehicles no longer need additional registration and permits to carry loads across the Alberta/B.C. border. These changes have reduced administration and costs for Alberta companies that rely on commercial trucks, also for B.C. companies that rely on commercial trucks. Under TILMA Alberta and B.C. companies are now able to bid equally on more government procurement in both provinces. We've also made a commitment to end business subsidies that favour an Alberta company at the expense of a competitor in B.C. and vice versa.

When the TILMA is fully implemented in 2009, businesses and workers in both provinces will have seamless access to a larger range of opportunities across all sectors, including energy, transportation, and agriculture. A business registered in one province will be deemed registered in another, and there's no residency required, no added administration cost, and commercial vehicles no longer need to be reregistered for temporary travel in another province.

With a skilled tradesperson like a plumber or a welder, or a highly trained professional like a teacher or a nurse, they'll be able to move to Alberta or back to B.C., either way, and keep working without having to go through extensive recertification or retraining.

The TILMA is all about treating citizens within our country equally no matter whether they happen to be in Alberta or in British Columbia and, hopefully, the rest of Canada very soon. With the TILMA we cut the needless red tape put in the way of skilled Canadians seeking employment opportunities in another province within their own country. We break down the needless barriers in front of businesses seeking opportunities in another province within their own country.

We know from years of AIT disputes – that's the agreement on internal trade for Canada – that the national agreement lacks teeth. Provincial governments have ignored six of the last eight dispute panel decisions because there are no consequences for noncompliance. For example, Quebec continues to ignore a 2005 AIT panel ruling that prohibited the sale of coloured margarine in that province, and it's an impediment to interprovincial trade. It's estimated that the economic benefit from the opening of the Quebec market to coloured margarine may be worth as much as $17 million per year to Alberta margarine producers and canola processors. This kind of thing won't happen under TILMA. Under TILMA Alberta and B.C. have taken firm steps to show consumers, workers, and businesses that our two governments are serious about dealing with interprovincial barriers.

Bill 38, the Government Organization Amendment Act, would be implemented in an enforceable dispute resolution process under the TILMA to ensure that provinces comply with dispute panel rulings. The legislation will allow for a penalty imposed by an impartial dispute panel established under the TILMA to be filed in Alberta courts. Such a penalty is strictly a last resort.

The TILMA itself lays out the process to resolve disputes, starting with dispute avoidance and then dispute resolution. The TILMA has a three-step dispute resolution process: dispute avoidance, consultation, and finally, if none of these are successful, resolution through an impartial panel. In the third step complainants will be able to make their case before a dispute panel. The panels are independent and impartial. They have the ability to levy a financial penalty against a government but only if it does not change a measure that has been found to violate the TILMA.

The maximum penalty is $5 million. The amount of a penalty, though, would depend on such things as the extent to which any harm is occurring in the province and on the complaining party. Monetary awards under TILMA are only available if a province has acted contrary to the agreement and only if that province does not comply with a panel ruling. If a government changes an offending measure, that's where the process stops. There's no penalty. This is to encourage compliance, not compensate individuals or companies for business losses.

Remember, the dispute resolution process is also a tool for Albertans to use to ensure open markets in B.C. Private parties cannot sue through the courts for damages under the TILMA. They can access the dispute resolution process, and they can seek recourse only on measures related to trade, investment, or labour mobility. Under the dispute resolution process only one dispute can be launched on what is essentially the same complaint at any one time. That allows the situation to be supported or corrected, reducing grounds for further complaints. To reduce the likelihood of frivolous complaints, the dispute panel can charge the full costs of the dispute resolution process to losing complainants.

Now, in no way does the dispute resolution process or Bill 38 put provincial authority at risk. The TILMA is very clear about what it does and does not cover. It specifically excludes legitimate public policy objectives; for example, water, labour standards, social policy, environmental and consumer protection, workers' health and safety, and provisions of health and social services. Okay? That's very, very clear in the agreement. It will not prevent local governments from acting in their citizens' best interests through such things as zoning bylaws or land-use decisions. Bill 38 is part of the process to fully implement TILMA by 2009. This amendment parallels legislation introduced in B.C.

During previous debate on Bill 38 some hon. members have stated that the TILMA process has been secretive, or that nobody knows about TILMA. In fact, TILMA includes a two-year implementation period so that Alberta and B.C. can get input from interested stakeholders to help shape what the final agreement will look like. The government of Alberta is working with regulators and professional organizations for more than a hundred occupations to ensure that their credentials are recognized in both Alberta and B.C. by 2009, when TILMA is fully implemented.

We consulted with municipalities, academic institutes, health authorities, Crown corporations, and financial institutions all across Alberta to get their input on TILMA provisions that may affect them by 2009. We discussed TILMA with groups such as the AUMA, the AAMD and C, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. We met with the city of Edmonton, the city of Calgary along with dozens of other cities, towns, counties, and municipal districts from all parts of Alberta. Consultations have been carried out with more than 60 professional regulatory bodies, such as the Alberta Association of Architects and the association of registered nurses.

Government has discussed TILMA with such diverse groups as the Council of Canadians, the chambers of commerce in Calgary and Edmonton. Officials have met with industry groups such as the Alberta building trades council, the Alberta Construction Association, the Alberta real estate council, and the Alberta funeral directors association.

TILMA has been presented to other governments in Canada through the committee on internal trade. We met informally with officials from the federal government, from Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Yukon about TILMA. TILMA was even praised in the March 19 federal budget.

So has TILMA been a secret? I don't think so. If it is, it's the worst kept secret yet.

Lack of consultation with those who will be affected: if this is not a consultation to the highest degree, I don't know what is. TILMA has received positive reactions from various groups in Alberta and B.C.

A few weeks ago Alberta economist Mike Percy was quoted in the media as saying: I think TILMA should be the template that the rest of Canada looks like because it actually does allow for free trade in labour and investment across the provinces.

TILMA is consistent with our obligations under the pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade. Now, AIT public consultations in 2002 in Alberta indicated a strong desire to have government pursue further liberalization of interprovincial trade and labour mobility, and that is what we have done. We can ensure the benefits of TILMA by also ensuring that the agreement has teeth, and that's what we're doing today.

We've seen the negative impact on Albertans from the lack of an enforceable dispute resolution process under the pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade. Alberta's agrifood sector is still being denied access to the Ontario market for many of their products. Approval of the amendment that is before us will give the TILMA dispute resolution process teeth. TILMA panel decisions will be enforceable, unlike the decisions handed down by AIT panels that years later some Canadian governments continue to ignore.

Alberta has never been brought before a panel in the 12 years that we have been a party to the AIT. Any issue that was brought to our attention was resolved through consultation. Clearly, this is a demonstration of Alberta's commitment to dealing with unnecessary impediments to interprovincial trade and mobility. Alberta has a record of fairness in trade deals. Alberta has a record of compliance with its agreements. Alberta is not threatened by enforcement provisions.

I encourage all members to support Bill 38, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007, to make any panels handed down under TILMA dispute resolution panels enforceable. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 38.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it would be prudent at this time to move that the committee rise and report bills 9, 11, 24, 2, and report progress on bills 23 and 38.

Bill 52
Corrections Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move Bill 52, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2007, at second reading.

The proposed amendments to the Corrections Act will enhance inmate disciplinary procedures, provide for safer correctional facilities and communities, and support victims of crime by providing greater access to information about offenders. Bill 52 will ensure that inmates subject to discipline are dealt with by hearing and appeal adjudicators who are external to the correctional centre, give victims access to more information about an offender convicted of a crime against them, and allow for electronic monitoring or recording of inmate phone calls to enhance safety within the correctional facility and in the community. Mr. Speaker, at this point I will speak to selected sections of Bill 52.

Amendments to section 15. These amendments respond to the December 4, 2006, ruling of the hon. Justice Marceau of the Court of Queen's Bench that some aspects of the current inmate disciplinary process breach the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Justice Marceau found a potential lack of impartiality when disciplinary boards are comprised entirely of staff members who work within the same correctional facility as the inmate who is subject to discipline. As a result, he struck down section 15 of the Corrections Act. The proposed amendments to section 15 will have disciplinary hearings and appeals conducted by individuals external to the correctional institution.

Hearing adjudicators may be appointed by the minister to review breaches of rules or regulations of the institution and determine punishment. Appeal adjudicators may be appointed by the minister to conduct appeals of decisions made by a hearing adjudicator in a disciplinary hearing. If an inmate or the director of a correctional facility is not satisfied with the decision of an appeal adjudicator, they can apply for a judicial review of that decision. We believe these amendments to section 15 will increase impartiality and independence of the hearing and appeals process.

Mr. Speaker, with the inclusion of section 14.4, which is a new section, this amendment would allow the electronic monitoring and recording of inmate phone calls in certain circumstances. Similar legislation exists at the federal level and in Manitoba and British Columbia, where inmate calls have been monitored for some time. Telephones are an important way for inmates to communicate with individuals, including family members, outside of institutions. However, they can and have been used by some inmates to connect with gang members, to threaten, intimidate, or harass individuals, including witnesses or victims, or to continue their involvement in illegal activities. All monitoring would require the prior approval of the director of the correctional facility. The director could decide to monitor and/or record telephone calls if there are reasonable grounds to believe the calls, whether made or received by the inmate, would contain evidence of an act that would risk the security of the correctional facility or the safety of any person, be it a criminal offence or a plan to commit a criminal offence, harass, or intimidate the recipient of the call. Notice will be prominently displayed in all correctional centre admission areas and inmate housing units that telephone communications may be monitored or recorded.

Before drafting this amendment, we sought legal opinion with respect to possible Charter challenges and incorporated that opinion in the language of the proposed act. We are therefore confident that this amendment fully complies with the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Inclusion of section 14.3, Mr. Speaker. This amendment would specify the kind of information the director of a correctional facility or a community corrections manager can disclose to victims about an offender convicted of a crime against him. There are similar sections in the federal Corrections and Conditional Release Act. The information provided could include the offender's name, the offence for which the offender was found guilty and the court that found the offender guilty, the date of commencement and the length of the sentence, the location of the correctional facility where the sentence is being served, the date of the offender's release from custody or on a temporary absence, the conditions attached to the offender's release that relate to the victim. Providing victims of crime with this information may contribute to their sense of safety and acknowledges the importance of victims' concerns at all stages of the criminal justice process.

Mr. Speaker, those are my comments regarding Bill 52. I'd like to move that Bill 52 be moved through second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: A point of clarification, hon. member. You're moving on behalf of another member?

Mr. Cenaiko: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm moving on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, and I'd like to adjourn debate as well.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 5:57 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 29, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/11/29

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have the great pleasure of introducing two different groups. First are 18 members of the Public Affairs Bureau that I'm introducing to you and through you to all members of the Legislature. Seated in the members' gallery, they are Jared Majeski, Cora Halter, Lucas Warren, Ruth Anne Beck, Miss Carrie Clifford, Miss Jill McKenzie, Miss Cyndi Hoekstra, Miss Mahjabeen Hussain, Bobbi Klettke, Beth McKinley, Wendy McGrath, Trisha LeTilley, Donna Doyle, Tim Chander, Dean Turnquist, Briar McGinnis, Jennifer Raimundo, and Sorcha McGinnis. I would ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it also gives me great pleasure today to introduce you and through you to all members of the Assembly an outstanding young lady seated in the members' gallery, and her name is Miss Alana DeMelo. Alana is an excellent student, attends Louis St. Laurent junior high school in Edmonton, greatly interested in helping people, very active in her community, participating in activities such as babysitting, Pathfinders, providing product input as a member of the international advisory committee for Build-A-Bear Workshop. I had the opportunity to meet Alana at the recent opening of the Robbins health centre at Grant MacEwan College. Her family tells me that she is interested in becoming a nurse. However, after seeing her work the room, I know she's going to have a tremendous future in politics. Alana is accompanied today by her parents, George and Selena, and her grandparents Patrick and Joan Gaughan. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, what an honour today to introduce a very special gentleman, a professional engineer, 27 years of age, who is a graduate of the University of Alberta in chemical engineering. I've been told that Jorj Sayde's strong technical/professional skills have been also topped by strong interpersonal skills and interest in business, and he's an active leader and volunteer in his community. He lives in Edmonton and is a process engineer with SNC-Lavalin. Jorj has worked in the pharmaceutical, oil and gas, oil sands upgrading, and consulting sectors, where he excelled in developing technical solutions for the challenges faced by industry in Alberta. As accomplished as he is, he is here today so that we can acknowledge a milestone in the history of Alberta's largest self-regulating professional group; namely, the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists, and Geophysicists. He is seated in your gallery. He is the 50,000th member of this organization and he is seated with Neil Windsor, Pat Lobregt, John McLeod, and George Lee. I would ask them to please rise so that we can acknowledge Jorj and the engineers, geologists, and geophysicists.

Mr. Speaker, I have yet another group of very special people: 54 students, two teachers, and 10 volunteer helpers who are here from Our Lady of Perpetual Help school. Pam Gravelle and Cindy Seewalt have brought their classes along with parent helpers Donna Gravelle, Lisa Fairhurst, Gene Eberley, Suzanne Orht, Barb Kamstra, Cathy Henbest, Maureen Landry, Diane Young, Vicki Hildebrant, and Don Kolybaba. I apologize if any of those pronunciations were poor. I would ask them to please rise so that we can warmly welcome the group to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of energetic grade 6 students from Graminia community school, which is located in my constituency of Stony Plain. There are 63 students here today accompanied by teachers Miss Poliakiwski, Miss Boyle, and Mrs. Wolff; parents and helpers Mrs. Gargas, Mrs. Ballard, Mrs. Wack, Mr. Normand, Mr. Aves, and Mr. Kanigan. I had the pleasure of meeting with these students today, and I can tell you that they are a very bright and intelligent group. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon, if you'll indulge. First, it is an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of House two of my former constituents. Luke and Melissa Pantin are from Yukon now, but they were in Spruce Grove for a number of years. Many in this House will remember the great work that Luke did in the constituency, in the Edmonton region, on Edmonton Economic Development. Luke is now the director of the business and trade branch, Yukon Economic Development, for the government of the Yukon. Melissa is very involved with the MADD campaign in Yukon and also works in the area. I might add that since Luke has moved to the Yukon he's become quite an outdoorsman, I'm told, as I had an opportunity to have lunch with them. They are in the public gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled Dr. Austin Mardon. Austin is a member of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. I've come to know and appreciate his wisdom and insight. I'd ask him to please rise in the public gallery and be recognized.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the vice-president of communications and public affairs for the Alberta Research Council, Mr. Steve Hogle. Many of you probably remember Steve for his 25 years at CFRN, where he was director of news and public affairs. Obviously, his decision to join ARC speaks very highly of the people and the programs there. Mr. Hogle is in the members' gallery, and I'd like to ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have one more introduction. Again, an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two of my constituents, Brent Korte and his son Mark Korte. Brent grew up in Peace River but has been a resident of Spruce Grove for more than 15 years. He works for Janssen-Ortho as a government relations manager and is actively involved in the community as a coach in both minor hockey and minor football. Mark Korte is a grade 6 student at St. Marguerite school in Spruce Grove. He's currently studying government in social studies, and after touring the Leg. Building with his class, he wanted to come back and see question period one more time in action. He plays both hockey and football. They are, as well, seated in the public gallery this afternoon. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a very special introduction today. Joining us in the public gallery is a student at Laurier Heights elementary/junior high school in my constituency named Melissa Wilk. Along with some of her classmates she has written me an excellent letter, and we look forward to dealing with it later in the proceedings. She's joined by her parents, Karen and Steve, but that's not all who is joining us today. Her teacher, Mrs. Kirchner, and classmates are watching today's proceedings live from their classroom. That will be very good for them. I'd like our guest to rise and receive the warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the chairman of the board of the Aspen regional health authority, Mr. Robert Jackson, and the CEO of the Aspen regional health authority, Andrew Will. They're seated, I believe, in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I was able to introduce the first half of a school that is visiting, so today I'd like to introduce to you and through you all members of the Assembly the second half of Victoria school, who is spending some time here at the Legislature and visiting us I think in the public gallery today. There are 26 students, and they are joined by their teacher, Ms Carla Kerr. While these students are here, if I might gently nudge the Infrastructure and Education ministers to kindly provide these students with the school infrastructure they need to really support their talent. I would ask those students to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the House.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Premier's Awards of Excellence

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday it was my honour to attend the 13th annual Premier's award of excellence ceremony alongside our Premier and many of my colleagues to recognize the excellent work of Alberta's public service. On behalf of all the hon. members I would like to extend the government's congratulations to the 30 teams that have been honoured with gold, silver, and bronze awards that have joined the more than 300 teams and thousands of employees recognized for their exceptional work in helping deliver high-quality programs and services.

Five of these teams were also honoured this year with Canada awards for excellence from the National Quality Institute. These teams are the bridges treatment program, which is an open custody residential treatment centre that provides care and treatment to male youths with mental health or addiction issues; Persons with Developmental Disabilities Central Region Community Board, ensuring that adults with developmental disabilities in central Alberta are supported to live, work, and participate in their communities; the office of the public guardian, providing decision-making support and respecting individual autonomy, helping to resolve conflicts that threaten family relationships; the Health Benefits Review Committee, providing access to health benefits that fall outside of the agreements with professional organizations for Alberta Works and AISH clients; and Alberta Aids to Daily Living, assisting people with long-term disability or chronic or terminal illness in maintaining independence in their own residence.

These national awards were presented last month, and it should be noted that Alberta received five of a total of 21 awards given. Mr. Speaker, This clearly illustrates that Alberta has one of the most adaptive and innovative public services in Canada.

The Premier's awards honour distinction, hard work, and teamwork, but probably most important, the awards recognize the respect that these individuals have for each other, both their character, their wisdom, and the individual and collective strengths they bring to the table.

Alberta is well positioned to move forward into the future, a very bright future, thanks to employees who continue to commit to best practices such as effective planning, project planning, implementation, communication, evaluation, and teamwork. The individuals are making significant contributions to the Premier's commitment to improving the quality of life for all Albertans.

Again, congratulations to the recipients of the 2007 Premier's awards of excellence. All public service employees should take great pride in their colleagues that were on the teams that received these awards.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to respond to the minister. To begin, I'd like to offer my congratulations and those of my colleagues in the Alberta Liberal caucus to the award recipients. The recognition is well deserved.

Civil servants don't often receive the credit they should despite their tireless devotion to the public good. Without regard to which party is in power, they carry out their duties, understanding that their work has a huge impact on the lives of their fellow Albertans. The winning teams should all be very proud not just of last night's awards but for their exceptional commitment to excellence and public service. We should all be working toward improving the quality of life for all citizens of this great province. Our civil servants sure put words into action. They get it, and they do it.

As the hon. minister said, these awards were bestowed upon a wide variety of public service departments. I note with special appreciation that the recipients of the national awards, the Canada awards for excellence, share one valiant distinction: they all do essential, crucial work for the most vulnerable members of our society. I'm very proud to live in a province, Mr. Speaker, where so many dedicated professionals work so hard under very difficult and stressful conditions to provide essential services to those people who need them most. Perhaps we can offer these fine institutions more public support so that they can serve the public even better.

The Alberta Liberal caucus is united in admiration for the good work of these dedicated public servants, and we congratulate the administration for recognizing their efforts. To the winners, thank you so much for stepping up and making a difference. To everyone else, let's follow these wonderful examples in our everyday work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview I'm sure would want to rise now to seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to participate. Hon. members, I'll only ask one question. Anybody opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the Members of the Legislative Assembly. I, too, would like to add our congratulations to the excellent work of Alberta's public service. I think often we underestimate the work that is done by the people in our public service, and they're often not appreciated.

If I may say so, often we worship at the altar of the private sector. It's all right to reward the private sector. The private sector works well in the economic area where there is legitimate competition. No doubt about that. I would say that the public sector works best in monopoly situations and dealing with human needs. Some of the examples here are exactly the type of work that they can do, so I say that perhaps the government in the future will recognize that these excellent people can do even more valuable work for us. We'd look forward to more excellent work from our public service with more responsibility in the areas that they should be involved in.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Statement by the Speaker

Gary Mar, MLA for Calgary-Mackay

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call upon the first of six to participate today, I would like to draw to the attention of all hon. members that today will be the last day in this Assembly for one of our colleagues, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, who was elected in 1993 and will have served now until 2007 as a distinguished member of this Assembly and as a distinguished member of Executive Council. It is very important that men and women of good character and good integrity want to participate in this Assembly. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay leaves us today, this being his last day in this Assembly, we all want to wish him the very best. [Mr. Mar shook hands with colleagues on both sides of the Chamber while they accorded him a standing ovation]

So as to ensure that there is not a suggestion that the crossing of a floor in the midst of the Assembly is to become a daily routine, we will accept this as being a practice only when a member has been designated to be leaving. No other occasion.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Dr. Austin Mardon

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Order of Canada is Canada's highest civilian order, and I'm privileged today to recognize one Albertan who recently was invested as a member. His name is Dr. Austin Mardon, and his personal story is an inspiration to anyone who lives with mental illness. Dr. Mardon holds masters degrees in science and education and a PhD in geography. He has written or coauthored nearly three dozen books and over a hundred academic articles. He has explored Antarctica, recovering meteorites for NASA, and has had a personal audience with Pope John Paul II. He has been an adjunct professor for several universities.

In addition to the Order of Canada, Dr. Mardon has had a host of honours and awards bestowed upon him, a list too long to mention now. Many of these accomplishments, including his PhD, were achieved after Dr. Mardon was diagnosed with schizophrenia in 1992, at the age of 30. This is a remarkable achievement considering that schizophrenia is a lifelong illness that can only be controlled with medication and lifestyle adjustments. Schizophrenia affects about 1 in 100 Albertans, and managing the illness is a constant daily exercise.

After being diagnosed, Dr. Mardon worked hard to help health professionals, emergency workers, employers, community leaders, and elected representatives to understand what it means to have a mental illness. He speaks extensively to groups in the hope that one day we will learn that people with mental illness can live normal lives if they receive the proper support and understanding.

I've known Austin for a number of years and appreciate his advice and his insights. I know he has helped many people reclaim their place in society because of his advocacy and support.

Austin received the Flag of Hope from the Schizophrenia Society of Canada. I can think of no other person who is more deserving. Thank you, Austin.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Alberta Research Council

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently had the honour of attending the Alberta Research Council's employee day. It was a time to recognize the work of some 600 people for work that diversifies and sustains our province's economy. It has been a banner year for the people at ARC. Their innovation on the environmental front is symbolized by their expert on the capture and storage of carbon dioxide. Dr. Bill Gunter, a distinguished research scientist with the Alberta Research Council's carbon and energy management business, contributed to a report for the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and was then honoured as a co-winner of the 2007 Nobel peace prize.

ARC is also home to three people who were named distinguished lecturers by the Society of Petroleum Engineers. It is an outstanding accomplishment when you consider that the society has only 30 distinguished lecturers in the whole world.

On the sustainability front the people in the heavy oil and oil sands group have been working for 25 years refining the process for extracting oil. Their work has increased the rates of oil recovery, found ways to reduce the impact on the environment, and has just been honoured by Alberta Science and Technology.

As for diversification, recent news stories have detailed the research with hemp. Scientists are combining the plant with plastics to try to come up with everything from car parts to housing materials. That is an example of the innovation at ARC at this time. That kind of thinking has also positioned ARC at the forefront for research in Canada. ARC has put forward a proposal to lead a national consortium called Innoventures Canada, a group that would elevate our nation's ability to compete on the world stage.

From what I witnessed at the employee day, the people at ARC thrive on challenge. They are intelligent and industrious, and their impact is felt in this province. On behalf of the ARC board of directors I was honoured to be there to salute their work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

HIV/AIDS Awareness

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. December 1 is World AIDS Day. To commemorate World AIDS Day and AIDS Awareness Week, HIV Edmonton is holding a series of community discussions, the annual AIDS vigil, and a memorial tree that can be visited all week at the Edmonton HIV office, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Similar events are being held in Calgary and other Alberta centres.

As of June 2006 there were 4,400 people living with HIV in Alberta. There were over 200 new reported HIV infections in Alberta in 2006. These were as the result of intravenous drug use; sexual encounters, both homosexual and heterosexual; people identified as heterosexual but who come from countries where there is an HIV epidemic; and from other and unknown sources.

HIV Edmonton reports that only 2 per cent of Albertans are getting adequate testing and suggests that at-risk populations account for far more than 2 per cent of the population. Concerns for anonymity, lack of access to testing facilities and education may be concealing a higher number of cases. While most people living with HIV and AIDS are still gay men, one of the largest new groups is young women. They are getting HIV because they thought birth control pills would protect them.

The World AIDS Day theme this year is Stop AIDS; Keep the Promise. The goal is to urge national governments and policy-makers to meet targets to provide universal access to HIV treatment, support, and prevention service by 2010. The blood-borne pathogen and sexually transmitted infection strategy, which unfortunately has not been released by this government, would assist in planning and preparing strategies for future programs.

As we go about our business this weekend and the rest of this week, I ask that you take a moment to reflect on the impact of AIDS in Alberta and think about how you can support the Living Positive community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Fort Macleod Santa Claus Parade

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The town and district of Fort Macleod in my constituency is very high on tradition. This small, historic community has nurtured another tradition. For the past 26 years Fort Macleod has launched the spirit of the holiday season by hosting the biggest and best Santa Claus parade west of Toronto. This parade has grown over the years thanks to the promotion of the Main Street office and the dedication of long-time parade organizer, Mr. Garnet Stevens, who was distinguished this year as the 2007 honorary parade marshal.

The theme, Candy Cane Christmas, was organized by Kim Driscoll and Gordon McIvor with a committee and 100 community volunteers and sponsors raising funds to host 90 floats, entries, and bands, like the Stampede Showband, the Stetson Show Band, Bishop Grandin and James Fowler high school bands, all from Calgary; the Cranbrook girls bugle band; and the Spirit of Alberta Pipe and Marching Band from Magrath.

Town employees, RCMP, and volunteer firemen provide security and traffic control for over 9,000 spectators who jam picturesque, historic Main Street, appreciating festive outdoor decorations and beautiful store windows. Moms and dads, grandmas and grandpas, and many children line the streets and wait with anticipation for the appearance of the main attraction, jolly old St. Nick. The entire weekend is truly a memorable one, beginning with the Friday night carolling and community tree lighting, Saturday morning parade, giant stocking sale, Rotary Club charity auction, food fair, seniors' luncheons, and the famous family dance.

Many communities across the province host Santa Claus parades, and all MLAs support these festivities by showing their appreciation for all volunteers. As a resident of Fort Macleod and their MLA I am proud of all volunteers, neighbouring towns, and villages and cities for their involvement in this event. The last weekend every November is truly a homecoming in Fort Macleod as children who once participated in the first parades now bring their children home to extend a Merry Christmas to family and old friends. Thus the holiday tradition continues.

Merry Christmas, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Questions from Laurier Heights School Students

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Students at Laurier Heights school in my constituency are taking part in an initiative that shows their commitment to democracy and learning. These students sent me letters and e-mails raising important issues that should be heard in this House. One student, Teagan Wensel, is her class's patrol captain. When she's patrolling, she sees people distracted on their cell phones driving straight through the school crosswalk. This kind of dangerous distraction, of course, is easily prevented. My question is to the Premier. Why won't this government put in place a ban on cell phone usage while driving?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, well, clearly now they've outlined the opposition position with respect to this matter. My understanding is that there's a private member's bill that will be going before the House, and we'll have a great opportunity to debate this legislation and look at other areas of improving not only driver attention but confidence on our city streets.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another student from Laurier Heights, Melissa Wilk, is sitting in the gallery today. I introduced her a few minutes ago. She's really concerned about the lack of seatbelts on buses. She has seen the same tragic stories about recent accidents in Calgary and near Grande Prairie as the rest of us have. My question again to the Premier: has this government assessed the merits of requiring seatbelt use in buses, particularly school buses?

Mr. Stelmach: First, let me commend the students on the questions that they've asked today. Much better job than the opposition asked for the last couple of months.

The matter of seatbelts on school buses has been researched considerably. There are two authorities here, not only the provincial authority but also a federal authority. A number of various case studies have been done. I remember, from the time that I was minister of transportation, that the evidence presented and research done was inconclusive in terms of seatbelts in school buses. Some changes have been made in the construction of school buses, where the seats are much higher and they're very well padded, so of course if there's a sudden stop, then the student will hit the seat in front. But there are other issues, especially when the bus flips over and you're hanging upside down in a seatbelt.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Melissa is also deeply concerned about the amount of litter on our streets and sidewalks. I'm sure we can all agree how bad things look in the cities particularly, and it's even worse when the snow melts in the spring. This affects everyone's quality of life, as Melissa points out, and, frankly, can be a danger to wildlife as well. Again to the Premier: will this government undertake a comprehensive, province-wide antilittering campaign, an aggressive one, to get on top of this issue, including working with school boards to promote antilittering awareness?

Mr. Stelmach: That is a good question because there are times of the year, especially in spring as the snow melts, when there's a fair amount of litter not only on city streets but on provincial highways. I first of all have to commend the 4-H clubs of Alberta, that on every first Saturday of May pick up garbage along provincial highways. I know that various municipalities have drives by their citizens to clean up city streets and make them more presentable. This is a great opportunity for citizens to participate, teach their youth not to litter, and I'm sure that practising the good practices of not littering, making sure that the garbage is put away where it's supposed to be rather than thrown on city streets or on provincial highways, will improve the aesthetics.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Children in Care

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a report was brought forward to the Ministry of Children's Services reviewing conditions surrounding particular cases of fatalities of children under provincial care. This report was requested by the ministry to review current practices and explore recommendations so as to ensure that the safest possible conditions exist for children under provincial care. Will the minister briefly outline the findings of this report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I just want to say that I do assume that you're talking about the foster care report. Is that correct? The first thing I want to say is that I agree with this hon. member. A couple of weeks ago she had stated in a member's statement that she wanted to make injuries and deaths among government care kids our number one goal and an objective of ours. I can tell you that I agree with that. It is a goal of this department. I can also tell you that any injury of a child or death of child in our care is tragic and devastating. When something goes wrong with children in our care, the heartbeat of Children's Services stops.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree wholeheartedly with what the minister is saying. But since this report was funded with taxpayer dollars and Albertans have a right to know, when will it be available to the general public?

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Speaker. I can tell you that I do expect the report, hopefully in the next several weeks.

The other comment I want to make is about these tragic events. I think it should be noted that as terrible as they are and as devastating as they are, we are very transparent and open about these events. They're publicly reported. The circumstances around them are reviewed, like the report that you're referring to, and in most cases we also have a fatality inquiry. We also have to make sure, in terms of the case reviews, that we don't get in the way of those fatality inquiries.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess my next question would have to do with how you plan on actioning the recommendations. Who will be involved in planning the implementation of the recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. First I would have to see those recommendations. I can tell you that I take this report very seriously, that I will take a look at the recommendations.

I just want to end with this. The Auditor General did a fairly intensive audit on Children's Services. This is related to this topic. It's just something that he said that's really important. While he found Children's Services systems to be comprehensive, generally well designed, and operating as intended, he said:

However, no system can absolutely guarantee the safety of all children at all times, whether in government care or not. The unpredictable nature of human behaviour has caused tragedies in the best designed and operating systems.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Alberta Federation of Labour issued a report titled Temporary Foreign Workers: Alberta's Disposable Workforce. Its documentation of the abuse of temporary foreign workers, especially unskilled workers, is quite disturbing. Coping with the affordable housing crisis is hard enough, but they also face lower wages than promised and illegal deductions from their paycheques for airfare and accommodation. When questioned about establishing a licensing authority similar to the United Kingdom, the minister for Service Alberta praised the strict legislation coupled with severe penalties for brokers who would abuse temporary foreign workers, yet despite numerous cases reported, there has not been a single broker prosecuted under these laws. My question is for the Minister of Service Alberta. What is your policy in respect to brokers, and when are you going to actually enforce the rules and laws?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, to suggest that we're not enforcing the regulations or the laws is unfair. The penalty for this is jail time up to two years, fines up to $100,000. The department is working very diligently and carefully with any foreign workers that have been either reported to us or have themselves come. If the hon. member has others that haven't been addressed, if he would please get their names to us as soon as he can, we'll start the process of investigating whether a contravention occurs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I asked the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry about available assistance programs for temporary foreign workers in Alberta, she applauded the nonprofit organizations, and she mentioned by name the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers. But let's set the record straight. This agency and all other immigrant agencies are designed and funded to help new immigrants and refugees, not temporary foreign workers. So I'll ask my question again. What programs are in place to assist temporary foreign workers with employment standards issues, housing issues, and human rights issues? Why is it left to the Alberta Federation of Labour to fill in the vacuum? Isn't it the government's responsibility to fix this terrible program?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, since October 2006 there are whole hosts of advocates at the top of the Oxford building off Jasper Avenue, people who answer the temporary foreign worker hotline and deal with issues, most of which are questions for information and most of which deal with the kinds of information you want to know as a newcomer to the country.

I will read and pursue the AFL recommendations. We intend to have a response next week to the issues surrounding temporary foreign workers, but let me point out a good-news story in the face of all this gloom and doom. There's a group in Fort McMurray that took new workers off to buy the proper clothes. One came back with . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The AFL report points out that for the first time in Albertan history, in 2006, more temporary foreign workers arrived in this province than permanent immigrants. There are between – I don't know – 20,000 and 40,000 temporary foreign workers in the province. I don't think the minister really knows. She has told this House that she's not sure how to protect them because she doesn't even know who they are. But in the first five years of the provincial nominee program fewer than 2,000 workers were accepted into Alberta. Why are we lagging behind in attracting permanent immigrants into this province?

1:40

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's true that about six years ago we had about 126 provincial nominees, and we have expanded on that. It is a function of an expanding economy and the needs that have been presented by employers. In Manitoba, by contrast, it's true that they had about 10,000 provincial nominees last year, but they were trying to build their communities. There was a targeted effort. Now the kinds of activities that we find ourselves doing are in support of the kinds of initiatives our employers and our companies and our universities are tackling today. So we are expanding the program, and we are making strides in improving our relationship with the federal government to do it as well as we possibly can.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Auditor General

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's Auditor General recently released a scathing report highlighting many ways the government had failed to collect Alberta's fair share of royalties. The AG has also sounded the alarm over appalling conditions in Alberta seniors' homes and long-term care facilities. The list goes on and on. It's no wonder the Conservatives don't want to hear from the Auditor General anymore. Every time he issues a report, Albertans learn more about the incompetence of this government. My question is to the Premier. Does the government support having an Auditor General who has the mandate and resources necessary to hold the government accountable regularly?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, going back to the preamble, let it be very clear that the Auditor General in his report said very clearly – it's right in front – that no rules, no breaches of any contracts, no breaches of anything had been done. The government has followed all the rules and has co-operated with the Auditor General in every way possible, ensuring that there was a good flow of information to the Auditor General.

With respect to the issue of budgets those budgets are held within the offices of the Legislature. This whole Assembly makes that decision, not the Premier of the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Not really quite on the question that was asked.

The federal Auditor General reports three times per year. In B.C. the Auditor General issues reports between eight and 12 times a year. Alberta's Auditor General wants to issue reports twice per year in his business plan, which was adopted by this House. But this government doesn't like to be held accountable. Half a million dollars was wasted on the Lieutenant Governor's residence that was never built, but $20,000 to print a second report is too much. My question is to the Premier. Is it government policy to restrict the Auditor General to issuing only one report per year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the Auditor General can put the reports on the web, on the Internet, and the cost would be considerably less than the $20,000 the member is talking about. In fact, it'll be free and easily accessed by all Albertans. But, once again, the budget is set by Legislative Offices. There are members of every political party on the committee, and that committee makes the decision.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, money spent on the Auditor General is the best investment this Legislature makes. For every dollar we spend on the Auditor General, the taxpayer saves hundreds or perhaps even thousands of dollars. The Auditor General is an effective thorn in the side of this government, and I have no doubt government members are often embarrassed by his reports. But it's not reports of the Auditor General which embarrasses the government; it's the waste and incompetence that he uncovers. My question is to the Premier. Will he tell his MLAs to stop trying to muzzle the Auditor General?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's a totally inappropriate statement for the Legislature and complete disrespect for the members of the committee.

Speaker's Ruling Criticizing a Committee

The Speaker: And it might be viewed as contempt of this Legislature as well, so let's be very careful. Legislative committees are created and elected to by the Members of this Legislative Assembly. They are made up of members of all political parties in this Assembly. They have their own agenda, they have their own powers, and they also have their own authorities. They cannot be controlled by a government, a leader of the government, a minister of the Crown. If ever a case were to come to the floor of this Assembly, that particular member of Executive Council will be held in contempt. The same is true of the opposite, for anybody to make a suggestion.

Now, if any hon. member who sits in the Legislative Assembly wants to stand up and raise a point of privilege, they're welcome to do it with that kind of language. I'm sorry, but the wrath of the chair will come down because there is integrity associated with this business, and all of us associated with this business must be honourable.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Dodds-Round Hill Coal Gasification Project

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that EPCOR has announced a plan for building a power plant along with water and waste-water treatment facilities that would provide power for the Dodds-Round Hill coal gasification project in east-central Alberta. To the Minister of Environment: the scope of this project is growing, and I would like to know how the government of Alberta will ensure that environmental issues relating to this development will be addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I answer the member's question, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the partners on signing the MOU this morning, EPCOR as well as Sherritt. I think that in agreeing to co-operate the way they have, they in essence have answered the member's question because it falls exactly in line with what we have in mind with respect to cumulative impact. We're maximizing the use of the resources. They're going to talk about using municipal waste water as an alternate source of water for the project. They're going to talk about how they can most effectively use energy multiple times in the course of this project. Overall, I think this project fits very well with the direction the government is heading.

Mr. Johnson: My first supplemental is to the same minister. It's encouraging that proponents of this first project are being innovative, but how will the government ensure that other developments will follow the same approach?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we talked about the fact that we're using a cumulative effects approach in the Industrial Heartland. I've also announced that we'll be initiating a number of other pilot projects throughout the province. This is the second of the pilots. The same approach that we'll be using in the Industrial Heartland will apply here. We'll be consulting with industry stakeholders and the community to set targets, to set the environmental standards that we want to meet, and then each of the proponents that are involved in industrial development within this region will work towards ensuring that we're able to achieve those overall targets. I can assure the hon. member that there will be plenty of opportunity for community and for industry to be involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that we know that traditional coal-fired generation has been a major contributor of greenhouse gases in Alberta, is there still a future for electricity generated by coal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The answer to that is a resounding absolutely. We feel that EPCOR's announcement today is further proof that there's a very bright future for the use of coal and clean coal technology in our province. We have proven reserves of about 34 billion tonnes of coal, and EPCOR and TransAlta are currently leaders in technology to use coal and reduce carbon emissions. We think that the Genesee 3 and proposed new Keephills 3 plants go forward meeting environmental requirements, including the Alberta air emission standard, mercury reduction standards, regulations, and current requirements for greenhouse gas management. This new development will even improve on that track record.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

School Construction in Edmonton-Ellerslie

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of the nine new schools requested for Edmonton's most rapidly expanding communities, three were denied by this government, as I have repeatedly – repeatedly – brought up in this House through tablings, statements, and questions. My questions are to the Minister of Education. The constituents of my wonderful riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie would like to know why their need for a new school was not deemed significant enough to deserve a new school at this time.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I trust the hon. member is asking a question relative to our P3 announcement in June because that's the only announcement we made on new schools. I can say that what we did with our announcement was that we announced three new Catholic schools and six new public schools in Edmonton, and in each one of those cases they were the highest priorities of the two school districts. I'm not sure exactly where the Ellerslie school was on the priority of either of those two school districts, but I presume it was not the highest priority.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That school has been postponed. It was in the capital planning for the year 2009, but the school is still not there.

Anyway, my second question. With the population increasing considerably every year, in my constituency it is unavoidable that this need for a new school will have to be met sooner rather than later. The most recent capital plan critiques the practice of backlogging projects as they will only carry forward into a growing list of priorities. My question to the same minister: when will this government finally address the need of the constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is not alone in terms of those of us who have needs for new schools in growing communities across the province. I think almost all of us have that issue to deal with. The difficulty we have is that our enrolments are not increasing. It's just that the students are not living anymore where the schools happen to be located.

But I do need to mention, Mr. Speaker, that when we announced our modernization program in August, it's my recollection that the Edmonton public school board chose the Ellerslie school as one of its projects for modernization. So I think the hon. member should be quite pleased with that announcement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this government will not commit firm dates for when we can expect them to address my constituents' needs for a school, can this government tell us what they expect my constituents to do in the meantime to work through their school shortages?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my last answer, it's not that there is a school shortage. It's that as communities grow, the schools are not exactly where the students live. It is causing school boards to make adjustments relative to transportation. We are attempting as best we can, and our announcement relative to the nine new schools that'll be coming on stream in September of 2010 will certainly be going a long way to address this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Noise Attenuation along Freeways

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our city of Calgary road construction is at a hectic pace almost everywhere. It is great to see many major overpasses, interchanges completed during this year's construction time. It is also great to see beautifully designed sound barrier walls constructed in many parts of the city and along the Deerfoot Trail area. However, my constituents in the area of Dover Glen backing directly onto Deerfoot Trail have suffered a great deal from the traffic noise level, and no noise barrier walls exist. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How do you address traffic noise that has become day and night suffering for residents in areas next to a highway?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, my department has guidelines for noise attenuation that mirror the city of Calgary's noise bylaws. We take potential noise issues into account as part of the planning process before we build something. If noise is or is going to be an issue, my department considers mitigation measures such as sound walls or berms. However, we first must make sure the noise levels actually support building a wall or a berm, and we also consult with the affected residents beforehand and try to accommodate their wishes as best we can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Dover in my constituency about a hundred homes backing right onto the increasingly high traffic of Deerfoot Trail and Peigan Trail have asked me to bring the day and night suffering from traffic noise to the government's attention. In fact, I visited the area and took some photos of the heavy traffic congestion right behind the houses. My question to the same minister: what is our minister going to do to address this noise-headache environment for my constituents?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that we will be doing a major improvement project in '08 on the very intersection that he has just mentioned. According to the planning work we've done for this project, the improvement shouldn't have any more effect on noise in that area. However, we do take residents' complaints very seriously, and I can assure the hon. member that we will look into this issue. I'll also remind the hon. member that we need to make sure that the noise is actually close to or exceeding our guidelines before we go ahead and start building those walls.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. I would certainly host your visit to our area to actually see and hear the noise of the traffic. I just want to thank you for this initiative to go into the area and investigate the noise.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Did you want to respond, hon. minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can tell his constituents that we take their concerns very seriously, and we will be looking into the issue.

As for building a sound barrier this upcoming summer, I sure won't promise that today, Mr. Speaker. As I stated in my previous answer, we first have to make sure the sound barrier is warranted and what type of barrier may or may not be needed. We follow very well established engineering criteria for these types of things that need to be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Water Quality in Fort Chipewyan

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the minister of aboriginal and intergovernmental affairs. The Fort Chip First Nations continue to plead for attention to the environmental and health risks in their community raised repeatedly by Dr. John O'Connor and others. A recent independent study by Dr. Timoney, supported by Dr. David Schindler and now an eminent U of A epidemiologist, strongly suggests more investigations. They simply want government to investigate their concerns. It's my understanding that the MLA for Wood-Buffalo hasn't even visited the community since these concerns have been raised. To the minister: what are you doing for the First Nations in Fort Chip and their health and environmental concerns?

The Speaker: Okay. Hold on. Is this a question to the minister as a minister of the Crown or to the member as a member of the Legislature because that question can be totally out of order. That kind of slur: you know, we're way above that. We're way, way, way above that. Way above that.

Mr. Boutillier: Mr. Speaker, I didn't see the hon. member joining me as minister when I was travelling the Athabasca downward to the very community that he speaks of.

Second of all, I might add that the minister of health in this very Assembly the other day indicated doing the proper protocols, ensuring that the health of citizens in all of Alberta and certainly in the oldest settlement in Alberta is protected and secured. This government is taking very serious action, serious investigation of that action relative to their well-being, contrary to what the hon. member has indicated and intimated here in this House today. He honourably should apologize.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the minister of health. First Nations residents in Fort Chip tell me they have experienced a heavy-handed and arrogant response from Alberta Health officials in relation to their concerns about water, air, and soil contaminations with polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, arsenic, and mercury. Mr. Minister, you must know that science has no idea what the combination of these contaminants does in the long term to people's health. An eminent U of A epidemiologist has called for with the Timoney report a need to look beyond cancer rates and mortality rates to chronic conditions, immune effects, neurologic impacts. What are you doing to move beyond this?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We take the issue of health very, very seriously, and environmental health is a very important part of that. The department has an environmental health division. We work closely with the Department of Environment with respect to what they're doing with respect to monitoring both naturally occurring chemicals and materials but also to monitor what's happening with environmental load. We're very interested in the impact of the environment on health, and we'll be doing a lot more in that area.

With this area in particular, in each incidence where there's been a suggestion of a higher level of arsenic or a higher level of some other complex, we've engaged studies to determine. With respect, for example, to the arsenic we've determined that in the food supply in that area the level of arsenic is lower than in other areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Environment minister. Water is the most fundamental human need and a measure of government's willingness to do its job. Safeguarding water is a public trust. To his credit the Minister of Environment is recognized in the community and has expressed his willingness to monitor the situation there. Leading scientists have suggested that more study is needed and that conditions are worsening downstream from oil sands plants. To the minister: why is your department dismissing Dr. Timoney's report and not showing why the conditions are changing and deteriorating downstream from the plants?

2:00

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary. Our department is as interested in this report as any. The fact of the matter is – and the member seems unwilling to accept the facts – that we have been doing extensive monitoring of this river basin since the early 1990s. There are literally thousands and thousands of samples taken throughout this region, and there is no evidence to indicate that anything is changing. The minute quantities of various substances that have been identified are naturally occurring, and there's no evidence to indicate that they're changing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Health Facility in High Prairie

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans living in the Peace Country health region are going without many services such as renal dialysis, cancer treatment, and CT scans. I have ragged incessantly on the Minister of Health and Wellness regarding these needed services in the High Prairie area being included in the new proposed High Prairie facility. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the new High Prairie health complex finally get these needed services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Ragged incessantly" would be an understatement.

There is a need. The High Prairie hospital complex has been an ongoing project for a number of years. The nature and extent of it has been under discussion for a number of years as well in terms of what should be located there, what should be collocated there, including learning opportunities. I first was involved in this project when I was minister of advanced education. So there has been a long history, but it is coming together. The funding is in place. Yes, there's going to be an increase in the scope of it so that it can include provision for renal dialysis at the appropriate time in the future and CT scan and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, if that's the case, can the same minister tell me that the architectural drawings can now go on? We've been waiting and waiting and waiting.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I've sent a letter to the chairman of the board of Peace Country health advising that they can include an increased scope in the building to include the space for renal dialysis, to include the space for chemotherapy, and to increase the space for the CT scanner that they may acquire in the near future. It's important when we're planning health facilities for communities around the province that we look to the future and build them so that they have the capacity that they will need.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope to God that there is no stoppage of any of this facility because we've seen that before. Mr. Minister, can you ensure and tell my constituents that you will not allow any stoppage to occur as a result of this announcement?

Mr. Hancock: That, Mr. Speaker, might be a little beyond my powers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Anthony Henday Ring Road

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his response to me dated September 25, the minister of infrastructure indicated that when daily average traffic noise levels exceed 65 decibels, noise mitigation is considered, not implemented but considered. The minister also denied that his department keeps any inventory of corresponding maximums in other Canadian jurisdictions. My constituents are concerned about noise levels on the Anthony Henday. A quick search reveals that B.C., for example, has noise guidelines where levels as low as 55 decibels are considered for noise mitigation, and at 65 they're certainly implemented. How can the minister do his job properly if he does not know how we compare to other provinces? Will he take my constituents' concerns as seriously as he would those from Calgary-Fort?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member was listening – and I take all Albertans' issues very, very seriously – I would like to say to the hon. member that right now we follow the same bylaws and guidelines of the other cities, and we do make sure that we will test and we will look after the issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, what's worse than the noise are the delays and long waits, the safety and navigational challenges at those locations where the Henday intersects Lessard Road, Callingwood Road, and Cameron Heights Drive. Again, my constituents have been asking for overpasses to replace these intersections, but the minister's letter indicates to me that there is no room for us in his current three-year plan. To the minister: why are those residents in the west end treated this way as compared to those travelling the southwest and southeast and now the northwest leg, who enjoy faster and smoother commutes with no signal lights? This is a freeway, right? We're all equal, right?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we do plan on making both ring roads, the full ring roads, a freeway at some point in time. The second and third legs that we've been doing were done under a P3 partnership, and the full, complete freeway status was part of the RFP.

Also, I will say that when we took over the roads in that west end, they were city of Edmonton roads and the city of Edmonton had done a survey and a review that showed that we wouldn't have traffic counts until a lot further out. We have now got those traffic counts when we opened the east leg. I am proceeding as fast as I possibly can, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Funny the minister should say that the city of Edmonton now is raising and stating its concerns about the status of these intersections because the minister is now responsible for them. So has the Edmonton Economic Development Corporation. So has the chamber of commerce. It's not only a convenience issue anymore; it's actually starting to adversely affect business. Higher than expected growth across the city, particularly in my area, means that the department's forecasts, not just the city's but his forecasts and timetables, were also off and they need to adjust and move forward quickly. To the minister: when can the city, businesses, and my constituents expect to see these overpasses finally built?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I had stated before, on the Stony Plain Road one we're getting the functional engineering done as we speak. I am trying to move ahead as fast as I can to get it within our three-year plan. We do plan on trying to move it ahead as fast as we possibly can. I'm not sure we could move any faster than we're moving on it right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Public/Private Partnerships

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government likes to talk about how great P3 funding initiatives are, but ordinary Albertans are skeptical. They see P3s for what they are: private businesses out to make as big a profit as possible. But it's even more fishy than that. Many of the companies involved in the major P3 projects this government has announced have made tens of thousands of dollars in donations to the Conservative Party and, I might add, a significant amount to the Liberals. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Studies and previous examples have proven that P3s add costs and reduce accountability. Isn't that too high a price to pay your Conservative Party donors?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely have not seen – I have not seen – anywhere where the typical ordinary Albertan has ever come out and said that we're paying too much on a P3 and are skeptical of our P3s. When they look at the last two or three P3s that we've just done and look at the market comparisons and also see, because of the double-digit cost escalations we've been into, the kind of money we've saved, people are saying: why aren't you doing more of these?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, they really get excited when you mention privatization, don't they? They howl like the wolves.

My question is simply this. A recent report on P3 models for the Federation of Canadian Municipalities shows that P3s are basically a tool to get government off the hook for bad management, and they cost more than traditional financing. That's what the studies say. My question is to the minister. These companies are private companies. Their job is to make the biggest possible profit. They've made thousands of donations to your party. How is this a good deal for the taxpayers of Alberta?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have to tell this hon. member that it doesn't matter what walk of life you come from or what side of the fence you're on, everybody has to make a living, and profit is part of that. Absolutely, when you're in private competition, you only bid to get the job. Yes, it would be nice to have a big profit, but you have to get the job, and if there's a competitive way to do that, you have to be in the right ballpark.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's precisely how traditional financing was done, the bidding. It's the maintenance after that is the problem. This government has managed to rack up $56 billion in infrastructure debt. Now they're looking for the quick fix, but instead they'll be making it worse by incurring debts to these private companies. They'll be paying these P3 debts for 30 years in some cases. How can the minister claim that Alberta is debt free when he's incurring these 30-year P3 liabilities?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, if he considers a 30-year warranty a debt, then there's something wrong with his thinking. Just to bring to his attention: we just won an award as one of the best in Canada in doing P3s and delivering them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Operation of Traffic on Multilane Highways

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since we have the minister on the ropes, let me pitch in. There are ongoing requests to twin highways and build new highways, yet we don't maximize on the infrastructure we already have. There are no laws on the books in the highway traffic act that require vehicles to stay in the right lane unless they're passing or about to turn left. Can the minister advise us why the highway traffic act doesn't require Alberta drivers to drive in the right lane unless they're passing or turning left?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it's understandable that motorists become frustrated when these rules are not obeyed. God knows I'm one of them that gets frustrated. But under the rules of the highway and road regulations a provision is in place for the operation of traffic along a multilane highway. Drivers are required to use the right or outside lanes unless their travelling speeds are at or near the posted speed. The inside or left lane is intended to accommodate faster traffic on most multilane highways in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Infrastructure and Transportation has placed signs all over Alberta highways indicating to drivers to stay in the right lane, but these are merely suggestions to stay in the right lane. When will we have a law on the books so that we can actually enforce these signs and move traffic to the right to get rid of the frustration that the minister indicates?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I just mentioned that we do have a regulation in place. The Solicitor General does the enforcement of the highway traffic act, and maybe the Solicitor General would like to comment on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member mentioned, we currently do not have any legislation in place in Alberta that restricts driving in the right lane, but we do have legislation that indicates that when you're in the right lane, when you're not passing, and the left lane when you are, you do have to make sure you're not driving too slowly to compromise traffic safety. Our sheriffs and RCMP are on the road every day to ensure that those laws are adhered to.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, since we don't have a law and only signs that make suggestions, can the minister look at reviewing the highway traffic act so that it reflects the rest of the civilized world where drivers do drive in the right lane?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you and this hon. member that traffic safety is a very high priority of this government. We are always looking at ways to improve our roads and the safety of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mount Royal College

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mount Royal College is working towards being accepted into the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada by spring 2009 in order to ensure the credibility and recognition of its undergraduate degrees. To be accepted into AUCC some criteria need to be met first. This includes a new library and learning centre as well as some additional laboratory facilities totalling around $90 million. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: will the government commit to providing full funding and support for these projects in the 2008-2009 budget to ensure their completion?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, he's asking me to answer a question about our budget, which has not been tabled in this House yet, and quite frankly I can't do that. Secondly, I would like to add that we've been working with Mount Royal College over the past year under the roles and responsibilities framework document, which I tabled in this House yesterday. The hon. member might want to have a perusal of that. It sets out very clearly that Mount Royal College will be an undergraduate degree granting institution for the foreseeable future in exactly the type and methodology that they have said they want to do. The AUCC accreditation, if you will, is not an accrediting body. It is simply an association of university faculty members that have gotten together. There is no accrediting body for universities in Canada.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I did peruse the framework, and that's why I'm asking these questions.

Mount Royal's acceptance into the AUCC is essential for ensuring that students are receiving degrees that are recognized around the world. Students with degrees from institutions which are not part of AUCC have found that their credentials are not being recognized elsewhere, not even in other provinces in this country, leaving them high and dry with $20,000-plus degrees that get them effectively nowhere. Calgary students at Mount Royal need to have the government's full support to ensure that their degrees are recognized internationally on the same footing as universities. To the same minister: can the government commit to students in Calgary that they will do everything necessary to ensure that Mount Royal is accepted into the AUCC and its degrees are recognized internationally without question?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the hon. member doesn't understand the postsecondary system very well. Simple membership in the AUCC does not guarantee that any institution is going to readily accept your degree or your credentials. Every institution has to have a bilateral agreement with that institution to say whether or not their students will be accepted by way of their degrees. To simply state that this membership is the all-encompassing, all-important item is wrong. Mount Royal College is a very high-quality institution which delivers a high degree of quality in their education system. That is the credibility that will get those students into those other institutions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think the minister is the one who is wrong here. Not being a member of AUCC virtually guarantees that your degrees will not be recognized to the extent that they need to be.

The Alberta Liberals have been advocating for some time to make Mount Royal a university. The college is already well on its way to having the credentials and the environment of a university provided that this government makes sure that they get the appropriate tools. We believe that once an institution has received the necessary accreditation, there should be a name change to reflect this. To the same minister: will the government commit to a naming policy for Alberta's postsecondary system which would see institutions named to reflect their accreditation and the nature of their instruction and research?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I would encourage the hon. member to actually read the document, not peruse it, because it's obvious that he has not. It's unfortunate that he's neglecting the fact, as an example, that for Grant MacEwan College degrees, arrangements have already been made for transferability outside of this jurisdiction and within this jurisdiction. Grant MacEwan is not looking to become an AUCC member. They're doing it based on the quality of the degrees that they're providing, which is exactly what the president and chairman of Mount Royal College and I have spoken about. The idea that AUCC will simply automatically grant them that type of transferability is wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Physician Supply

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is in desperate need of health care workers to meet its ever-growing population. To meet this demand, we need to ensure that postsecondary spaces are available for students to complete their health care education. Some people are concerned that Alberta is losing its future doctors because the province doesn't have enough seats for them. In fact, we've heard that 50 Canadian graduate students were turned away from Canadian medical schools and are about to begin their physician training in Australia. Nine of these students are from Calgary. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What are you doing to ensure that Alberta doesn't continue to lose medical students to other provinces and countries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did see the article as well. We are working to increase access, quality, and affordability across the spectrum of Campus Alberta. It is a high priority for this ministry. In fact, as I mentioned earlier in a response to another question, we recently released the roles and mandates framework and tabled it in the House.

As part of the health workforce action plan, which we're working on with my colleagues in the other ministries, we recently increased funding for health programs and created 258 new health spaces for 2007-08 alone. As the students move through their programs, the total number of spaces is going to increase by 704. Specific to doctors, 50 new spaces have been added to the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta over the past two years. We'll continue to work with those institutions to expand their capacities as we can, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is currently short 1,100 physicians. As forecast, our health care system will be short 1,800 physicians by 2016. Clearly, we won't be able to train as many physicians here in Alberta as we will need to address the shortage. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: what is your ministry doing to attract and recruit physicians from outside the country?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the Alberta health workforce plan and the participation of the ministries of Health and Advanced Ed and Technology we're investing $3.8 million quite specifically in the recruitment and repatriation of health care professionals offshore. To this end we're assisted by the college of physicians and other organizations, including health authorities. Just recently in Dublin we reconnected with 18 Alberta students who are over there studying medicine. It's our hope that some of these particular candidates will come back and provide physician support in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council I've been lobbied by many municipalities who are indicating their shortage of medical doctors. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. In light of the demand for more physicians in Alberta what is the Department of Health and Wellness doing specifically to attract doctors to rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important question. I want to start out by saying that while we talk about a shortage of physicians, in the nature of 1,000 to 1,800, we can deal with that shortage in another way: by making sure that we make the most effective use of our health care professionals, working together. The revamping of our primary care through primary care networks and bringing health care professionals together will put primary care at the forefront, and that in itself will be a real boon to rural Alberta.

I want to also say that the hon. member as chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council has done a lot of work with that council to bring this issue to the forefront. One of the areas where there's been some recent success is not in the department of health, actually, but under the rural development fund, which has recently funded 24 internship positions for rural Alberta, which is extremely important to attracting and keeping physicians in the rural areas.

There are a number of other programs I'd be happy to elaborate on.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 84 questions and responses today.

When we moved to Oral Question Period, we were in the Routine under the segment known as Members' Statements. I'll now call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Buffalo Hotel Housing First Project

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to tell you a great story about the Buffalo Hotel and a very unique and inspiring Housing First project in Red Deer. This project has been funded by our provincial and municipal governments as part of the goal to end homelessness in 10 years. Not only does this project provide homes for the hard to house, but thanks to a consortium of social organizations working together, on-site addictions counselling, on-site mental health counselling, on-site employment training, and on-site hot meals are provided for those in need.

This unique Housing First project, oddly enough, was born from an old, historic icon in Red Deer called the Buffalo Hotel. The Buffalo Hotel has stood in its place for over 100 years, providing shelter and food for tired and hungry travellers. It was well known for its bar, that gathered people from all over to partake of refreshments, to socialize, and to nourish their spirits. Musicians and stars, like k.d. lang, have been fans of the Buffalo Hotel, and k.d. even starred in a musical production with the hotel called the Buffalo Caf , that won a Gemini award.

The newest owners of this historic building, Potter's Hands, will maintain the historic appearance of the Buffalo and its history of nourishing body and soul, but they intend to change its focus from a hotel and bar for the tired and hungry traveller to a home and chapel for the tired and hungry homeless.

Herd of buffalo once roamed this province, providing food, clothing, and shelter for our First Nations people. The buffalo also brought bright hope for their future. Perhaps it's not just a coincidence that this new, unique Housing First project will bring food, shelter, and a bright hope for the future and will continue to be called the Buffalo.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What about nuclear? Nuclear plants are supported by certain influential and credible Albertans as the way forward for hydrogen production. Some supported a paper released some months ago under the auspices of the little known McIntyre Collegium. This document advocates Alberta nuclear plants as the answer for oil sands hydrogen production. It provides one side of the discussion in an advocacy approach. This paper seems oddly out of touch, using the term "tar sands" rather than "oil sands" and not even mentioning geothermal as a potential energy source. It is relatively comprehensive but not complete. We must be careful with nuclear in relying on any such advocacy documents as a source for public policy development.

Nuclear is dangerous. Spent fuel simply cannot be stored safely. It takes 10,000 years to break down. Deep underground storage of radioactive debris sounds good, but who knows what hell we may be hiding for future generations? Above ground storage of radioactive junk may provide such a hell even sooner. Chernobyl was state of the art at one time. The McIntyre paper tries to downgrade this human disaster. Ask the human victims. I wish the McIntyre sponsors would have attended the Chernobyl anniversary memorial and vigil for the victims at Edmonton city hall in 2006. The human and environmental toll was set out clearly. Those that care for Chernobyl orphans in Alberta know that toll.

What about new technology? Terrorists destroyed the World Trade Center towers in New York City. When will they find a way to do a dirty destruction of plants upwind of Edmonton or the oil sands? A Peace River nuclear facility spewing radiation could shut down all of the oil sands region for years, not to mention the death and destruction.

Alberta should concentrate on its strengths and develop clean or carbon neutral alternatives. Uranium mining produces CO₂ in abundance. We have oil. We have gas. We have incredibly abundant coal. We have wind. We have lots of sunlight. We can develop geothermal. Let's be careful. Let's be conservative.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I proudly rise to present a petition consisting of 2,385 Métis people's signatures from across Alberta petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to "continue to accommodate Métis harvesting for food, throughout the province of Alberta, through a negotiated harvesting agreement with the Métis Nation of Alberta."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions. The first one, further to my questions earlier today, has 43 signatures mostly from people in the west end urging the government to as soon as possible finish the overpasses and interchanges at the locations where Anthony Henday Drive, otherwise known as the Edmonton ring road, intersects Lessard Road, Callingwood Road, and Cameron Heights Drive.

The second petition is actually two parts. One has 15 signatures from citizens of the neighbourhood of the Woods and 14 from the neighbourhood of Jamieson, both asking the ministry of infrastructure to immediately and again in six months measure the noise that's emanating from the Anthony Henday, and if these levels are found to exceed acceptable provincial or municipal thresholds, that noise attenuation and reduction measures be implemented immediately.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice today of a motion.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling some green ribbons and brochures to highlight the national campaign Christmas for Darfur: Troops on the Ground. Ribbons were created by Barbara Butt of Calgary to encourage people to communicate their concerns about the genocide going on there to MPs and the Prime Minister. MLAs can request the ribbons and brochure from the pages.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have letters from my constituents Dwayne White, Mohamed Jama, Akhtar Ahmad, Feroza Akhtar, Aileen Byzanko, Catherine Kankam, Harold Guignard, Carmelita Fernandez, Steve Dearing, Gloria Cote, Theresa Frauenfeld, Mathew Neuman, John Krieger, Surya Rambarran. They are expressing their concern with the Alberta labour laws and strongly believe in major changes to encourage fairness to all working people in Alberta.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is from a concerned student in my constituency at Laurier Heights school, Melissa Wilk, who was here earlier. We're fortunate to have her in the public gallery today. She writes, "Why does no one ever receive fines for littering?" As well, Melissa wants to know why school buses don't come with seat belts.

My second tabling is from another student at Laurier Heights school, Teagan Wensel. Teagan is her class school patrol captain. She writes, "While patrolling, I see people who are talking on their cell phone and driving right through the cross walk being completely irresponsible."

My third tabling is a list of the names of 298 Edmonton-Riverview constituents concerned about Alberta's inadequate labour laws. They state, "Alberta's labour laws require major changes to encourage fairness to all working people in Alberta."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Two tablings that I have today. On one I was more prescient than I thought I would be. This is five copies of a letter from myself to the hon. Government House Leader expressing concerns on possible closure, particularly in Committee of the Whole, for Bill 46.

My second set of tablings are letters from constituents Saba Habte, Deron Bilous, Myrna Eggen, Amanda MacKenzie, Nadine McConnell, Hans Vullings, David Marar,* Tina Bak, and Younes Sakil. These constituents are all concerned with Alberta's labour laws, and I'll highlight one of their issues: "Automatic certification of workplaces where more than half the employees have clearly indicated their desire to be represented by a union by signing a union card."

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. The first is a letter that I wrote today, November 29, 2007, to the Minister of Energy, and this is demanding the immediate release of all the draft regulations for Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, the bill that's going to have closure implemented on it, unfortunately.

My next tabling is a notice of amendment for Bill 46, and this is an amendment to change how section 17 operates.

I also have another amendment to Bill 46, which is to section 9(4), Mr. Speaker. I have another tabling here, which is an amendment again to Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, and this is an amendment to section 11.

I have another amendment here to Bill 46, and this is an amendment to section 23(1).

I have another amendment still to Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, and this is an amendment regarding section 24.

I also have on behalf of a constituent, Neil Parks, a letter requesting that we change the Alberta labour law.

I have another letter from a constituent, Mr. Sean Grykuliak, and he is also requesting that we change our labour laws in at least five significant ways.

This is also a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Mr. Siegfried Hauke, who is requesting that we change the Alberta labour laws.

My last tabling – and I thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker – is from Mr. Michael Dahl, who is also a resident of our constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and he wants to see five significant changes to the labour laws as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter from one of my constituents. His name is Mark Hopkins. He is an AISH recipient, and he had a part-time job and was able to save money through his part-time job, but he doesn't meet the requirements for applying for rental supplements, and he's really, really upset about that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of 200 letters from constituents of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood calling for changes to Alberta's labour laws. The letters express strong support for such changes as first contract arbitration, full legal recognition of bargaining rights for public employees, one labour law for all unionized workers, among other issues.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. Both are letters. The first one is from the Central Area Council of Community Leagues in Edmonton. This organization is concerned about the way Bill 46 reduces the ability of groups such as theirs to access funding for intervening in decisions before the board, decisions which nevertheless affect the neighbourhoods that this organization represents.

The second letter is from Linda Cheu of Edmonton, Mr. Speaker. She writes that Albertans need more open and transparent government but that regrettably Bill 46 delivers the exact opposite.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, and they relate to my member's statement on nuclear energy. One is a Reuters report, released internationally, which has a quote that says that the parliamentary committee "recommends that no decision be made on using nuclear energy to extract oil from the [oil] sands until the repercussions of this process are fully known and understood."

The second is The Oil Sands: Toward Sustainable Development, a report of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, chaired by Lee Richardson, MP, from our national Parliament, which contains that recommendation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a senior citizen in Edmonton whose rent, after eight years of living in his current home and five rent increases, now takes up two-thirds of his income, and he expects another increase this year. He asks: when will the government realize it must legislate rent guidelines?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is, again, more letters I've received from constituents urging us to revamp Alberta's antiquated labour laws to ensure fairness for all working people in the province. One of the ideas, for example, is to have one law for all unionized workers. These letters are from Dianne Buga, Gordon Buga, Mercedes Araya, Don Kennedy, Roxanne Swook, Herbert Schmidt, Julie Parsons, and Noreen Walker.

My second tabling is a letter from a constituent, Kim-Mia Rudiger-Prybylski, detailing how she suffered from Crohn's diseases and polyarthritis and how pasteurized milk made her condition worse. She actually shares with us even some pictures as to how raw dairy products helped her, but she complains that they're considered illegal or dangerous in the province and in Canada, and she wants us to consider maybe offering that choice in product offerings.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling of seven letters from constituents of Edmonton-Mill Woods expressing concerns about Alberta labour laws; for example, asking for “legislation outlawing the use of ‘replacement workers’ to break strikes, a measure that will vastly reduce the likelihood of violent labour conflicts.” The letters are written by Monique Bellinger, Jeanette Berg, Twila Rurka, Brian Wilson, Maureen Humble, Lyle Halvorson, and Patricia Halvorson.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Health and Wellness, the Alberta Cancer Board annual report 2006-2007, Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors annual report to government 2006-2007 with attached financial statements dated June 20, 2007;

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, the Advanced Education and Technology public postsecondary institutions’ audited financial statements.

On behalf of the hon. Dr. Oberg, Minister of Finance, speaking notes of the Canadian Institute’s sixth annual oils sands conference, November 26, 2007.

head: 2:40 Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader to please share with us the projected government business for the week commencing Monday, December 3, with government business commencing I guess it would be Monday night.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, in anticipation of favourable consideration this afternoon of the motion requesting that the House sit on Monday night, December 3, and potentially Tuesday night, December 4, and Wednesday night, December 5, I would include the anticipation of those nights in projected government business.

Therefore, on Monday, December 3, in the evening for third reading Bill 56, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 (No.2), and second reading of Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act. Time permitting, we may proceed with Committee of the Whole on Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, or Committee of the Whole on bills 41 and 31, 52, 48, 49, and 47.

On Tuesday, December 4, in the afternoon under Orders of the Day in Committee of the Whole Bill 46, which we anticipate would take most of the afternoon, but time permitting, the Committee of the Whole could proceed on bills 41, 31, 52, 48, 49, and 47.

In the evening on Tuesday, December 4, at 8 under Orders of the Day third reading of Bill 46, Committee of the Whole on bills 31, 38, 41, 50, 53, 54, 55; in other words, Mr. Speaker, as per the progress on the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, December 5, both in the afternoon and the evening it would be first with respect to remaining matters in Committee of the Whole and then anticipating third reading on all bills on the Order Paper under third reading.

On Thursday, December 6, presuming that we’ve made progress, we may anticipate the attendance of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I’m not sure as to whether his schedule will allow him to give royal assent, but failing progress, we may need the afternoon to complete third reading on bills remaining on the Order Paper in that position.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is really a great honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very strong Métis leader within the province of Alberta. Audrey Poitras, president of the Métis Nation of Alberta, and Shelley Wegner, who’s the executive assistant of the Métis Nation of Alberta, are seated in the members’ gallery, and I’d ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Evening Sittings on December 3, 4, and 5

35. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4 the Legislative Assembly convene, if called, for evening sittings beginning at 8 p.m. on December 3, December 4, and December 5, 2007, for consideration of government business.

Mr. Hancock: I think I was clear on those dates, Mr. Speaker, this time. The fact remains that under our Standing Orders we have set sitting times so that people can plan their schedules. The House is scheduled to rise on December 6. That leaves two options for remaining bills in place because there is no automatic vote, as there is in many jurisdictions that have fixed sitting times, where there’s a process by which bills can come to an automatic vote after a certain amount of consideration. That not being the case, our two options if there is remaining business are to – sorry. I guess I should ask: is this debatable?

The Speaker: Very debatable.

Mr. Hancock: The two options we have are to extend the sitting date, which we could by motion, or ask the House for leave to sit in the evenings. We've chosen first to do the evenings process in the anticipation that we might make progress on the remaining bills in that period of time. I don't anticipate that the evenings will take us into the wee hours of the morning. I'm anticipating that with goodwill around the House we can achieve the business that remains on the agenda that needs to be accomplished. But, Mr. Speaker, given the interest in Bill 46 and some of the other bills that remain on the agenda with amendments, and given the time it took for us to make the progress we made on Bill 1, for example, with amendments there, I'm anticipating we will probably need those evenings.

If this motion is passed, Mr. Speaker, I can say that we would be for certain meeting on Monday evening, and I would anticipate that Tuesday evening would be for certain as well. Wednesday evening we would call if we needed it, based on progress. But I think, given the nature of the work that remains, one can anticipate that if the Legislature approved this motion, we should plan for all three evenings. I think it's prudent to do so given the amount of business that is remaining on the agenda, as was pointed out by the Leader of the Official Opposition just the other day.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition. Speaking time is 20 minutes for the second responder on this motion. After that, it reduces itself.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. On behalf of my colleagues in the Official Opposition we, in fact, support Motion 35 to institute evening sittings to allow progress on very important bills that we have before this House at this time. We would prefer that the sitting itself was extended. I can tell you that as House leader I was quite firm, in the negotiations for the temporary standing orders, that there were not to be fixed end dates because of this situation which starts to arise, that the end dates needed to be a goal but not an absolute rule and needed great flexibility around them. So we believe that it would be far better to extend the sitting for a week or two until the business could be completed.

Well, the situation that I'm now looking at next week is that there are a number of committee meetings that were scheduled to take place, and despite protests being raised, those committee meetings are still taking place. Now we have a situation where there are both evening sittings and all-party committee meetings happening at the same time, and some of them, actually, have been scheduled for early in the morning.

I had heard the Premier say that he wanted this to be a better quality of life for MLAs, and I would have to pretty strongly refute that statement, given the choices that have been made by government in proceeding with the business next week as they have. At least two members of the opposition are now scheduled into two different all-party committees, one at 8 in the morning and one across the supper hour, and of course expected to be here for duty in the House in an evening sitting. [interjections] Well, it's worth pointing out because I think it's an important part of how this government is making decisions and the arrogance that is preceding that.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the effect of this motion because I think that government is not supposed to be what it has become in Alberta. We are seeing what has become of government in this motion and in the plans this government has for the next week of Legislature business. Mr. Speaker, governments and barns have at least one thing in common. They need a regular supply of fresh air, and goodness knows no animal ever suffered from some time in the sun, and no truth ever covered from exposure to light.

When deals are made behind closed doors, when open debate gets quashed and replaced by the whisper of lobbyists; when caring and concerned citizens, just regular folks, get spied on; when reports gets ignored, shelved, shredded; when secrecy stops citizens from simply finding out what's what – well, my colleagues in the Assembly, ladies and gentlemen, when those things and more are happening, I think we've got a problem. If that's not exactly what you think government should be – top secret, confidential, for their eyes only – well, I can tell you that's what government in Alberta has become. If you don't think that's wrong, terribly wrong, I can only stand before you and tell you that I do, because it is wrong.

Now, folks, I understand the loyalty that many Albertans still feel to the party that is now in power. But you need to understand that I'm not talking about the values or the beliefs once put forward by that party. I am talking about practice, not theory. I'm talking about how well they do what they were voted into power to do. I'm talking about government and governing. To govern means to conduct policy. It means to manage, to make and enforce rules and standards, and we all hope to do so fairly and openly and accountably in the light, not in the darkness of night and not at a time when the public and the media will be sleeping. There was a time when this Legislature did its business far more openly, but under this regime and under this Premier those days are long gone.

In the 1970s the opposition of the day was able to take stands on the issues and bring public attention to them over days and weeks, and the government and the Alberta Legislature made room for that. I remember the famous Bill 11 debates of seven years ago, when the rules of the Legislature allowed weeks of debate on a highly contentious and fundamentally important bill and, through that, gave voice to the public concerns. We saw the public, and we heard the public, and the public, the people of Alberta, won the day over government scheming. [interjection]

See, even trying to talk about this in the House brings the Minister of Education to such angst that he has to heckle me, Mr. Speaker. Very interesting.

Today the government has placed such a stranglehold on this Assembly that such options are no longer available, and this motion is part of that strategy. It's not that there's just one contentious bill on the books. There are still 30 bills on the Order Paper, and several of them are highly controversial. Thirty bills this government is determined to ram through next week. Among them we have Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act; Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 31, Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 38, Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007, which is representing our one and only chance to debate TILMA in this Assembly, I'm told; Bill 41, Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, also highly contentious; Bill 46, the most contentious bill this Legislature has seen in many years; Bill 48, the Health Facilities Accountability Statutes Amendment Act, 2007; bills 54 and 55, concerning interbasin water transfers; and there are many others.

Some of these bills have genuinely odious provisions in them, provisions such as allowing regulations to be made that supersede legislation, Mr. Speaker, that supersede legislation. The desire of this House can be superseded. The trend there is obvious, a trend that accelerates the decline of the role of this Assembly and the decline of democracy itself in Alberta.

These bills also represent another trend, a trend to undermining local authority, a trend towards centralizing control. We see it in Bill 46 around interveners. We see it in Bill 41 around the professions. Mr. Speaker, where's the Premier on these issues? Where is the Premier on Bill 46? The Premier remains silent. The Premier who promised openness and accountability is instead leading a government that with the aid of this motion will ram through any number of these bills.

Mr. Speaker, let's look at Bill 46, which is about spying. It restricts the ability of citizens to intervene on the approval procedures of major developments that could practically be on their doorsteps. A bill so flawed that the government has over 20 of its own amendments. It looks like it is now scheming to arrange these things so that the opposition's amendments, developed in close conjunction with the citizens of this province, won't even get entertained. In fact, it looks like a striking irony is at play here. Bill 46 restricts the rights of citizens to be heard, and the strategy employed by this government to push it through makes it impossible for this Assembly's own members to be heard. The cone of silence is descending.

We all know how government is supposed to work, and I can tell you that what we are seeing here now is not it. The point of all of this is not any one particular bill or issue, though there are many of those. What I'm talking about is how this is not the way government is supposed to work. It's not the way government here used to work, but it is the way now, and I'm concerned because under this Premier it is getting worse. Locked-out technical briefings, phone systems disconnected, microphones shut down, frozen out of government buildings like McDougall Centre in Calgary, and now this.

The Speaker: Are you rising on a point of order, Government House Leader?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely.

The Speaker: Okay. We'll deal with the point of order right now, please.

Point of Order False Allegations

Mr. Hancock: Under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) and reserving the right to bring forward a question of privilege if it is appropriate, the allegations that the hon. member just made are without any substantiation, without any evidence at all. She's suggesting that they're actions taken by or under the direction of the Premier, if I heard her right, which clearly she has no basis for. Suggesting that the Premier is shutting off her microphone. I mean, this is going a little bit beyond.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to I'm not sure what citation, but in fact all of those things have happened and have been put into play by this government, of which the Premier is the leader. [interjection] Indeed it has when there have been a number of media conferences. When the government member had left the room, the telephone lines opening, allowing the media in other centres to listen in, were shut off, and when members of the Opposition tried to use those lines, they were removed and shut off. When we inquired about it, we were told that that was the choice of the Public Affairs Bureau and that they would not remain open for the Leader of the Official Opposition or our shadow ministers. Microphones as well have been turned off. The microphones that worked through the public system in the basement, which feed out into the various reporters' offices: when the government member leaves the podium and the opposition member goes up, those microphones are shut off. So, I mean, these things have all happened.

Again, we have been given access to McDougall Centre for meetings, for media conferences, and a variety of other activities, certainly during my time here, and that is no longer allowed. All of these have happened. They've all happened under the auspices of the Public Affairs Bureau, which reports directly to this Premier, so I don't think that I cast any aspersions there. What I stated has in fact happened and has certainly been my direct experience.

The Speaker: We're on a point of order here. Are there other participants?

I don't know where we're going to go with this. The hon. Government House Leader raised a point of order with respect to this. The hon. Official Opposition House Leader responded. It seems to me there's a pretty important point of clarification here. I don't know if it's a point of order. I have never been contacted by anyone with respect to any of these things that have been identified here this afternoon. It would seem to me that should such things be happening, hon. members might be in a position to rise on a point of contempt or even privilege, perhaps. But I have never seen or heard of anything in here, so I'm going to take this under advisement, if nothing else, for the future.

I also want to remind hon. members that what we're discussing and debating here right now is a motion that calls for evening sittings at 8 o'clock on December 3, 4, 5. We're a long ways away from that, but that's what we're debating.

Proceed, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be happy to get you the names of the officials that we have raised this issue with.

The Speaker: No, raise all of this in the House. All of this will be dealt with in the House. Any kind of contempt, privilege, or anything else affecting a member's role must be dealt with in the House.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you for the advice.

Ms Blakeman: To continue, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we are talking about here is a government motion to institute evening sittings throughout next week. I have said that the opposition will support this motion, but I've also said that the opposition believes that we should be extending the sittings. To us this is signifying a number of other choices that the government has made that we think signify something much larger than just being disorganized and needing to have additional night sittings.

Now, a number of the members over there have been saying: oh, well, if we didn't get up and speak to anything, then this would not be a problem. They could just pass every bill without anyone speaking to it. If you go back and look, Mr. Speaker, you will find that most of the speaking times to the bills that we've already had up have been less than four hours, and four hours is not very much time. As a matter of fact, even for every member on the nongovernment side to speak for an allowed 15 minutes would take something in the range of over seven hours. Just for those members on the nongovernment side that would wish to speak to a bill, express their constituents' point of view, raise some concerns perhaps, or even support the bill, that's how long it would take us to each speak once. So there is an issue here about where the government is shaping things to go, and this particular motion is indicative of other things.

I think that we need a better government. We need one that is more open and out in the light, one that we can trust again. We need the public to know what they know about royalties. We need the public to know all the details of the government spying on its own citizens.

Clearly, what is occurring here with this motion is to facilitate Bill 46. We hope we're going to get extended time on that, but I have the feeling – and we've already seen closure brought in on second – that what this is foreshadowing, Mr. Speaker, is closure being brought in on every stage of the reading of Bill 46, which we have as yet had four hours of debate on. Not even all the members of the opposition have been able to speak to it once, and they are talking about bringing in closure on it.

We need the public to know the details of the government's spying on its own citizens, how common it has been, and why the Premier and the Energy minister are defending it. We need to know that the government is enforcing the rules and not playing favourites, and I hope that we will be able to hear all of this during the debate that is now going to be brought in through this Motion 35. We need to know that professions can speak up and govern themselves, and we need to know what deals are being made by whom and for whom. I think we need to see changes to how government works and changes to level out the playing field.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this Motion 35. As I said, we do support it, but we do see in it shadows of many things to come, which we do not believe in and we do not support in the same way that we will support this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Having been involved with the other House leaders working out the fixed election dates, one of the cardinal things that we tried to deal with was night sittings. We said that only if a necessity arose would we have to worry about night sittings. Now, I recognize at this stage where we're at. With supposedly a week left, as the House leader said, there are two alternatives if they want to pass this legislation. If they want to pass it, we have to either extend the days or go to night sittings. I guess at this stage – I'll come back to the organization – night sittings: I've seen for a long time, and I don't think the best work is done at those particular times. I think it's much preferable, if we had to, to add to the number of days we're sitting to deal with the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I guess I'd say to the government, though, that this is organization on the government's part, why we're at this particular perspective. We've had five weeks, and there's some major legislation here. Now, we'll talk about Bill 46, but major legislation that I think, contrary to what some of the government members would say, has to be debated and discussed in this Legislature. That's what we're elected to do. We had a whole spring session, and now we're into the last week of the fall session. Why we'd still have all these bills on the Order Paper, I would say, was organization.

Let me come to Bill 46, Mr. Speaker. The government knew that this was going to be controversial, and they knew that people across the public, across Alberta were very concerned about this bill. It seems to me that we did some other things. We set up policy field committees to try to deal with these sorts of issues. If they wanted to take a look at this bill, what was the hurry to all of a sudden have this pushed through in five weeks? Even if we had a debate on it, Mr. Speaker, what is the hurry? We could have put this off to a policy field committee, dealt with it in a way that people could have had public hearings and gone through it because there was no hurry to do this.

This is why we're in the situation we're in: because of the government's disorganization, if you like, and wanting to push a controversial bill forward, you know, in a minimum period of time. So now we're into night sittings. We're into the start of closure. We're into all sorts of things that are unnecessary, Mr. Speaker. For the government to say that now they need to do this, with a little bit of planning and organization with some of these bills, we could have been dealing with some of these in the spring session. We could be dealing with them if need be by having a few more days. That wouldn't kill us. But we certainly could have dealt with Bill 46 in a much more democratic way than this.

The fact is that the government knew that this was controversial, knew this. People have been having demonstrations, have been talking about it. This has been through the spring. Now to say that we're going to deal with this in five weeks, and now we're going to deal with it at night, and now we're going to deal with it, at least in the first part, with closure is just simply unacceptable. I would say to the government: if they want this bill and they think it's fair, take the time. Send it back to the policy field committee, have the public hearings, and you'll probably have a bill. The fact that they brought in all these amendments after the fact: they must recognize that they have a political problem here. But rather than deal with it in the proper way, now we're going to try to cram this through in a week, Mr. Speaker. It's unacceptable, and it's – well, it's disorganization or deliberate or whatever. It's unacceptable.

The point that I make and conclude with, Mr. Speaker, is that we can do better than that in this Legislature. That's why we sat down as House leaders and tried to work out rules that were meaningful to both sides of the House: so that the government members would have a more meaningful role; so that all of us would. It was not meant to come back and deal with all these major bills and deal with Bill 46 in the way we're dealing with it. It was not meant to do that. The hon. Government House Leader, if he says that was the case, then I was misled by what we were trying to do in those House leaders' meetings.

The Government House Leader must recognize – I think he has instincts about democracy – how wrong this is, what we're doing here today with this particular bill, why we have to rush it through this House at this particular time in a week, along with some other major bills. It's just totally unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, and totally unnecessary. But, you know, I mean, I understand. I've been in this Legislature a long time. I understand the numbers, that we can get outvoted on everything when you're in opposition, but that doesn't make it right. A lot of people are going to be very disappointed that are especially following Bill 46 closely. They're going to be very disappointed. No. Let me restate that. They're going to be absolutely angry about this.

Thank you very much.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

The Speaker: Hon. members, the next speaker I'm going to recognize is the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, but I want to bring the point of relevancy back into this discussion. I'm sitting here chairing this discussion. I'm looking at the item. The subject we're talking about is Motion 35, which calls for the sittings on December 3, 4, and 5 in the evening, which adds more hours to the Routine that we have, and all I keep hearing about is Bill 46, which I don't see anywhere in this motion. This motion has to do with evening sittings next week. We're going to now deal with some relevancy – okay? – associated with this.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Debate Continued

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Specifically, I want to talk about the motion in front of us. It's ironic that the past two speakers from Edmonton, not from a distance away that have not slept in their beds: you guys have had the opportunity to sleep in your beds, go to your homes, go to your families. [interjections] You know, I hear a lot of whining from across the way here.

3:10

The Speaker: Hon. member, it is not important information to the members of this Assembly where they sleep unless the member is leading to some definitive conclusion about why they sleep where they do.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, these are the issues that I'm trying to raise. You know, I am quite supportive of the times that we have to sit in this House. When I got elected, I knew exactly what was expected of me: to spend time here in Edmonton and spend time in the Legislature. I was very supportive of the times that we had adjusted our schedules to for a fall sitting and for the spring sittings. You know, you adjust your family lives and your work in your constituency accordingly. So I have done so, and I haven't complained that I haven't been home for the last month or so. Now the opposition members say: well, let's keep you here another week. Well, I'm not prepared to, and that's why I'm supportive of this motion.

You know, while I'm here, I'll put in the hours. I work 15 hours a day, and I don't mind it. I'm quite proud of it. The members opposite complain about working a few hours in the evening so that the majority of the members here, whether you're from Dunvegan or Slave Lake or from Calgary or from Fort McMurray or from Whitecourt, can go home to our families – I think this is a little bit of team play – and work in our constituency, where it really means a lot to the people that elect you. Mr. Speaker, I'm in favour of this motion, and I think that in fair play everybody here should support this motion.

Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

Second Reading

Bill 48
Health Facilities Accountability Statutes
Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 48, the Health Facilities Accountability Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill proposes a number of amendments to the Hospitals Act, the Nursing Homes Act, and the Regional Health Authorities Act. The proposed amendments respond to recommendations made by the Health Quality Council of Alberta about the need to clarify accountability for hospitals and nursing home services. This bill follows through on this government's and this minister's commitment to make needed legislative changes to assure Albertans of the sound governance of our health system.

The Hospitals Act and the Nursing Homes Act predate regionalization. Amendments are required to bring these statutes in line with our current regional governance structure and ensure that regional health authorities and ultimately the minister have the tools and the authority needed to carry out their duties.

I'll just briefly outline, Mr. Speaker, the areas of need. The Health Quality Council of Alberta asked the ministry to review the RHA Act and clarify final authority for all matters and each component part of the matters pertaining to the operation of health care facilities in a regional health authority. We've clarified the final authority by ensuring that all hospitals are accountable to their respective health authority and to the minister.

Now, I want to be clear here, Mr. Speaker. We have a number of voluntary organizations, faith-based organizations, which have been part of our health system for in excess of a hundred years. They provide good service to Albertans, and they are a continuing part of the health system. This bill is not about taking them out of the health system, and it's not about putting them subjectively under the thumb of a regional health authority. They will continue to operate. We have met with the Catholic Health Corporation and others who are representatives of the voluntary service providers and assured them of the fact that they will continue to be part of the health system and a respected part of the health system.

The authority that's clarified under the act will be followed up, of course, with discussions that we're having now with the parties with respect to what's known as the master agreement, or the minister's agreement, relative to what role and function voluntary service providers and faith-based providers have in the system and the value that they bring to the system. That agreement and the service agreements, which I'll come to in a minute, will clearly spell out the faith-based principles or the values that are brought to the table and must be inherently part of and considered in the operation of the system and in the service provided by those organizations to their respective RHAs and ultimately to Albertans through the ministry. This act is setting up an assurance process whereby Albertans will know that there are clear lines of authority and that the ambiguities that were identified by the Health Quality Council have been cleared up. Albertans will also know that this is not in any way an intention to change the role and function of faith-based providers and voluntary providers in our health system.

The amendments that are being put forward will broaden current inspection practices and allow for inspections in places where health services are provided or funded directly or indirectly by a regional health authority. The expanded authority will better allow us to ensure that all publicly funded health services meet quality standards regardless of where they may be provided.

The key Hospitals Act amendments will include areas where matters of public health and safety are called into question. When we responded to the issues in East Central health and, in particular, with St. Joseph's hospital in Vegreville this spring, I found as minister that I had very few tools available under the Hospitals Act. The actual role and function of the procedures that were set out under the Hospitals Act were circuitous, to say the least.

What these amendments are bringing forward is a very clear regime which will allow the minister to respond more quickly to put in place a necessary plan for a hospital in a circumstance such as we saw arise. The current act provides for boards of management, which may be required to carry out a plan for the hospital. That board of management under the current act requires the existing board of directors of both the hospital in question, if it's a voluntary hospital, and the RHA, the regional health authority, that's impacted to ask the minister to put in place a plan. That's not really a clear role or a clear pathway for a minister to follow if you have a situation which you clearly believe to be in the public interest and a public health issue. This will allow the putting in place of a plan and establishing an administrator in appropriate circumstances. It's an authority which is similar to that established in the Nursing Homes Act and provides a consistent set of tools for the minister and the ministry. Without this amendment the ability of the minister to respond to emerging and urgent matters in the health authority may be compromised.

The recommendations of the Health Quality Council of Alberta are addressed by amendments requiring hospital boards to comply with the act or the regulations, the terms of a contract or agreement with the regional health authority, or direction of a region or a minister.

Other amendments to the Hospitals Act clarify that all hospitals in Alberta must operate in a co-ordinated fashion within the regional governance system and the requisite accountabilities and authorities that are in place to protect the integrity and the safety of the patients.

Mr. Speaker, again, I want to make it clear because it may not be, and we want it to be clear – and I've had meetings, again, with the Catholic Health Corporation and with others who carry out duties in the voluntary sector and the faith-based sector. The intention here is that those requirements that may be put in place by a regional health authority would be in the context of the service plan. In other words, a regional health authority would not be able to come along and issue a directive which would be outside what the service provider had contemplated, had agreed to under their service contract. We're continuing those discussions, and we may be back with amendments in Committee of the Whole – in fact, I anticipate we will – to clarify that, that there will be parameters around this and assurances that regional health authorities will not be able to act outside the confines of the service agreement.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments that are being proposed here also provide, of course, for some fines so that the provisions can be enforced, liability protection for those acting in good faith, and regulation-making authority, which is necessary, prescribing the basis upon which one can deal with a situation which has gone to a point where land or buildings or property used for a nonregional hospital can be dealt with, clarifying the role and authority of medical officers of health and the chief medical officer of health, et cetera.

Now, again, there are some concerns around that that have been raised in discussion since the bill was tabled. Of course, what we want to do is to be able to have people take a look at the bill and provide feedback. I've received that feedback and, again, anticipate making sure that we bring clarity to the Committee of the Whole when and if the bill gets there to show that this is not about expropriating anybody's property. In the normal course if there's a plan put in place and as a result of that plan it's not determined to be appropriate to return the facility to the board of management that was in place, to its original ownership or use, what happens then? We've seen that circumstance under the Nursing Homes Act, certainly, and this just brings it into the Hospitals Act.

The key element here is to make sure that our health facilities serve the public interest, that they're operated in a manner which is consistent with the best quality of care and infection prevention and control. That's got to be a priority. It's got to be auditable; it's got to be enforceable. These amendments to this bill will give us the tools that are necessary to make sure that that framework is in place and can be done in an appropriate way.

Amendments are being brought in this bill to the Nursing Homes Act. The language and concepts for both the Hospitals Act and the Nursing Homes Act are similar. We're basically ensuring a uniform and functional set of tools in place in our key health facility statutes to clarify authority and accountability. Currently under the Nursing Homes Act the minister may order that a correction plan be prepared but only in response to a contravention of the act or regulations. Another tool available allows the minister to suspend or cancel a nursing home contract if the nursing home is operated in a manner that could place the residents' health or well-being at risk.

The nature of this bill that we're bringing forward, Mr. Speaker, is really one of making it clear what the authorities are, what the lines of accountability are, how they operate in a health system, clearing up the issues of the ambiguities that were identified by the Health Quality Council by making sure that it's clear that service providers, if they're nonregional hospitals or nonregional facilities, operate within the context of a region. Their accountabilities have to be spelled out under a service contract, but the facilities have to be auditable, and there has to be an enforcement mechanism.

Ultimately, it comes back to the minister of health to be responsible and accountable, and it comes back to the minister of health to provide assurance to Albertans that their health facilities are being operated in a comprehensive and competent way, and we need the tools in place to make sure that that can be done, not only can be done but can be done in a timely and effective way.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House to approve Bill 48 at second reading and allow us to take it on a timely basis to Committee of the Whole, where I will advise the House that I am engaged in discussions with the various service providers who will be affected by the bill, whom we've had discussions with throughout the course of this year but certainly starting in August about master service agreements, which are not in the context of this bill but certainly affected by it.

Now that we've tabled the bill and they've had a chance to look at it, we're talking about how we can make sure that they see themselves in the public health system in this province and that this bill is not intended to put them out of business but rather to enhance the accountability framework, which was called for by the Health Quality Council and is certainly necessary to make sure that government can play its role of assurance and the minister can assure the public of Alberta that health facilities across the province are being operated in a safe manner, are operating in accordance with appropriate standards.

We will be putting out provincial standards. We will, as we've talked about earlier, make sure that there will be an appropriate provincial audit and enforcement mechanism for those standards. This bill is one of the pieces in that whole process.

Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate at this time.

Time Allocation on Government Motion 35

36. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Government Motion 35 regarding evening sittings on December 3, December 4, and December 5, 2007, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration to the motion, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the motion shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we start this debate, there is a time allocation with respect to the participation of speakers with respect to this. In essence, two people will be recognized at a maximum of five minutes each.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It had been my hope that I wouldn't actually have to move this motion. I had hoped that maybe in moving Motion 35 and outlining for the House the need for the evening sittings and the options that were available, we would hear from the Official Opposition and hear from the third party, but it became quickly apparent that other members were deciding to get into a debate on what I consider to be a procedural process. I don't have any problem with that. I understand the need for debate and people desiring to do it, but it is a procedural motion, and an hour should be sufficient time to dispose of that.

I won't respond further at this time to the issues that came up on Motion 35 but, rather, will speak to that in closing debate on that motion. I would ask the House under this motion to allot up to an hour for debate on Motion 35 – it doesn't have to take that long – so that we can get on with, as the Opposition House Leader pointed out, the rather extensive number of bills that are on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader, maximum five minutes.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that reminder and for recognizing me. Well, on behalf of the Official Opposition we are not in favour of Motion 36. As I tried to think of how to respond to this, a number of sports metaphors came to mind. Having just heard the hon. House leader speak, I'm really starting to see this particular closure motion as a warm-up pitch for an entire game of closure motions to come, particularly on Bill 46 because we've already had the oral notice from the government that a closure motion will be brought in on second reading of Bill 46 on Tuesday night. I'm expecting that the government will probably try and do closure on every single stage of reading on Bill 46.

In some ways I've been trying to research how many of the many recommendations that were made at the 2004 Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying had actually been implemented. I'm finding not very many of them. The community has certainly done some work, and there's been some grant money, but the number of recommendations certainly haven't fulfilled the expectations from that round-table.

In considering why, I thought, well, I guess that's no surprise because I'm finding increasingly that this government is acting as a bully itself. In this case I find that the government is using the power that is granted to it by parliamentary process to tromp on, stomp on, smash, ransack democracy. They can call it anything else they want, but the point is that this House is here to debate ideas and bring forward the voices of Albertans. What I'm seeing is that like a schoolyard bully who breaks the baseball bat or punctures the soccer ball when they don't get their way or when they don't win the game, this government does the same thing for a process which should allow full debate on motions and bills.

Yes, today we're talking about a closure motion on a procedural motion to give us night sittings, but as we already know, it's the first of many motions. In my 11 years in this Assembly I've seen this government go from allowing dozens of hours of debate before bringing in closure to – this time what did we actually manage? – 20 minutes, 25 minutes before they brought in closure on it. There were three speakers. Interestingly, a number of the other speakers that appeared on the list were in fact government speakers, private members who wanted to get up and speak and are not being allowed to. I have to wonder, you know, that there has to be a great deal of fear about what might get said in this place to work so hard to shut it down even on a procedural motion, Mr. Speaker.

The government is given a great deal of power in the parliamentary rules, but with that comes a responsibility to not abuse it. That set-up happens again and again and again. It's outlined again and again and again in the parliamentary books that I spend time trying to read, like Beauchesne and Marleau and Montpetit and Erskine May. They say we have freedom of speech. Yes, that's very special. Don't abuse it. Don't unnecessarily shout at people or call them names. That freedom of speech is not to protect you getting up and abusing someone. Well, I would argue the same thing comes into play here. The ability that is given to government to process business through should not be turned into an abuse of that process. I would argue that that is what we are seeing now with this motion and with the other closure motions that have been indicated to us already.

We know that it's only the first of many closures the government is bringing in. We've got three government sitting days and three nights now that we're expecting, and my spidey sense is telling me that closure will be used a number of times. I just think that's an aberration of what the parliamentary process is supposed to be about. I think it's wrong, frankly, and I think it's an abuse of that parliamentary power that the government side is given. The rules are weighted towards the government so they can get things done, but that power should not be abused.

Frankly, 25 minutes of speech: that's got to be shut down? Four hours of debate on Bill 46, and it's got to be shut down so they can move something through? Why? That is an abuse. I don't see how this Premier is more open or more democratic or having more participation from all the parties. You know, if closure is used to ram through Bill 46, even the government backbenchers won't get a chance to get on the record so their constituents can see what they did. How do the rural MLAs prove they fought for their constituents? This is wrong.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 21(3) is very clear in this matter. I must now call the vote, bringing the matter to the attention of the House.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 36 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:32 p.m.]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, do you want to continue?

Mr. VanderBurg: No, thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Hon. members, now we have a maximum of one hour allocated for this before it has to come to a resolution.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have listened to the previous speakers debate Government Motion 35. We are talking specifically in this motion about having evening sittings next week on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday if necessary. I, for one, certainly don't have any objection to working in the evenings, but there's more to this motion than just working in the evenings.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talked about the fact that this government has no plan, and it's clear, whenever you look at this motion and you look at what's happened in the previous four weeks of this legislative session, that this is a government with a new leader but still operating without a plan.

With this motion, as the hon. Government House Leader has suggested, there is a need for additional time to discuss a heavy legislative agenda. I don't disagree with that, but I think the other option that he suggested, which was to extend the session, is the direction, Mr. Speaker, that we should go in. The session should be extended far beyond next week, and if we have to rearrange our schedules, so be it. If the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne has difficulty finding a place, well, then he can come over, and we'll put him up. If his members' services allocation is not adequate to find a place for the second week of December, we'll certainly make sure that he has a warm place to sleep and nutritious meals so that he can further discuss Bill 46.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

If we are to have a valid discussion and a meaningful discussion on not only Bill 46 but Bill 38 on TILMA, I don't think we can do it just between 8 o'clock and 10 o'clock Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. In fact, I know we cannot do it.

Now, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne said, "I'm not prepared to" stay beyond next week. That really disappoints me because I have heard directly, Mr. Speaker, from constituents of the hon. member who have concerns specifically regarding Bill 46. I have heard concerns from citizens across the province who have concerns about Bill 46, and they're not addressed in the amendments that were proposed. I'm quite suspicious that we can deal with this contentious matter in a matter of a few hours, and this is what we're proposing here with Motion 35.

I have no problem coming in here a Monday, a Tuesday, a

Wednesday evening. I have no problem whatsoever. What I do have a problem with is the heavy-handed manner of this government. It's only two days ago that we saw 24 amendments to one piece of legislation which will be discussed either Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday. That's Bill 46. We've had 24 amendments to this, and the amendments are quite interesting. I don't think we can deal with them in a short period of time if we are interested in improving Bill 46. If we just want to force it through the Legislative Assembly and force this undemocratic legislation on Albertans, then so be it. This is what's going to happen. We're going to force this, through closure, onto Albertans, whose opposition to this bill intensifies every day.

Perhaps this is the reason why the government wants to have these night sittings and not extend the session. They know that as opposition to this legislative proposal intensifies, their support goes down even further, not only in rural Alberta but also in Calgary. The issues that His Worship Mayor Bronconnier articulated regarding Bill 46 are not addressed in those amendments. They're not addressed in those amendments. Some of the issues that he brought forward: certainly, there is an attempt to address the issues but not all of them.

Now, I don't have, in the time permitted, an opportunity to go through all the amendments A through X that have been proposed by this series of tablings of these amendments. When we look at this, Mr. Speaker, are we going to have time next week in debate to get to the bottom of the repeal of part 5 of Bill 46? In the hours, whether it's Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday, will we have time to get an explanation from the government on why part 5 is now being deleted from Bill 46?

Part 5 talks in section 34 about water and about electric energy and natural gas. It goes on at length, and it mentions water. Water is an added commodity in this bill, but when this section is removed and we look at the amendments, we look specifically at amendment S, Mr. Speaker. S for Speaker. Okay. Amendment S, the letter S – we see where water has been removed. It's not a commodity like electric energy or natural gas, but the government has conveniently through regulation given themselves a wide open window to, at a later date in cabinet, when no one has an opportunity to watch or listen, secretly add water as a commodity. Now, is this democracy or democracy gone off the rails? I would say that it's democracy gone off the rails.

I was asked yesterday to sum up how I felt about Bill 46, and I had to go back and think. I thought: this government is still not listening to the many people who have valid, legitimate questions regarding the direction the government is going in with the energy regulatory process through Bill 46. But we find with this motion that those opinions, those concerns are not going to have an opportunity to be discussed in here, not if we support this motion and don't extend the session. There's not a chance that the issues that the landowners have with this bill, the issues that farmers have with this bill, the issues power producers have with this bill, the issues the city of Calgary has with this, the issues the Consumers' Association has – they're not going to have an adequate chance to hear this government out.

Why the rush to force this bill through the Assembly during the evenings next week? Why the rush? Certainly, the hon. member previous said, well, there's a lack of plan from this government. We know this. I can understand why this government is very sensitive. They have had to deal with some very embarrassing issues here, whether it's the spy scandal, whether it's the fact that we have not collected our fair share of royalties for an extended period of time, costing the treasury billions of dollars in lost, uncollected revenue. I know the Minister of Finance is very disappointed that the heritage savings trust fund is not worth at least $30 billion. I know he feels very disappointed that those royalties were not collected. There are so many issues that this government has handled poorly because it had no plan.

I can see why you would want to support this Government Motion 35, so you can exit this place and carry on with the social gatherings of the season. But I really think we should forgo our usual social gatherings of the season, extend the session, and deal with these very valid matters. You just can't escape.

I can't imagine what citizens in rural Alberta are going to think when they hear that we're going to meet briefly Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, and at the end of the week, if this hon. Government House Leader and his colleagues have their way, Bill 46 will become law. We won't have an opportunity to examine publicly all the amendments that are being proposed.

I understand the Premier said earlier this afternoon – and I stand corrected if I'm wrong – that he wants to co-operate with the Official Opposition regarding Bill 46. Well, if he does, we're going to have to have a lot of time to discuss the many amendments that we have to try to fix this rather flawed bill. If we're going to run it through and we're not going to have any public consultations – and this is what Motion 35 is going to do. It's going to put Bill 46 on an express line, and it's going to become a law, and it's going to be in force on January 1.

Sure, you can hire these $500-an-hour consultants to plan an implementation of this bill. You can do that. But you don't want a full public discussion on the bill, and we can't do it in the time that you are proposing here. It just cannot be done.

The regulations. There are in this statute many, many opportunities. In fact, there are 22, Mr. Speaker. There are 22 opportunities for the government to write these regulations behind closed doors, quietly in secret, and there will be not a thing said. Then in the amendments that were tabled here on Tuesday, there are an additional 10 mechanisms available for this government to rule by regulation. In total you have over 30 sections of this bill that will allow this government to rule by regulation.

This is a government that maintains that it wants to restore public confidence in the process that we follow for energy regulatory hearings. You want to restore public confidence, but you do not want to have any public consultation. It's not going to work. We just can't act in a draconian fashion. Whenever this government caucus assembles and they discuss among themselves, I can't imagine which governments they admire most.

Mr. Elsalhy: Russia?

Mr. MacDonald: It may be Russia.

An Hon. Member: Or Cuba?

Mr. MacDonald: It might be Cuba. It might be some of those old regimes from eastern Europe. But, certainly, it's not a progressive, enlightened democratic focus, you know, Mr. Speaker. This is what disappoints me about this government. Motion 35 is not the way to go.

4:00

Certainly, as I said, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will set aside time and in the spirit of democracy will try to propose amendments to fix a proposed flawed law, which is Bill 46. When this motion was written, the hon. Government House Leader must have been very nervous because rural support for this party is going to be diminished if this . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening to this member and the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I must tell you that some of the comments that they were making were nothing less than offensive. [interjection] The Member for Edmonton-Decore might be moaning and groaning, but first of all, to compare this House and members of this Assembly to that of the Soviet Union is not only indignant but it's really insulting, not only to members of this House but to those who elected all of us to this House. This member obviously – obviously – may be ignorant enough not to know what he is talking about and what he is comparing this House to. He has obviously not lived in a regime that is totalitarian to be comparing this House and the government system that we have to the totalitarian regime in Cuba.

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a point of order.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs in my view is totally out of hand, and I rise under Standing Order 23(h), making "allegations against another Member." I would simply at this point ask the hon. member to retract his comments that he made.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, on the point of order. I would remind everybody that during a point of order the clock keeps running.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that this member is ignorant in his statements of comparing this House to that of the Soviet Union. Ignorance is lack of knowledge, and I maintain that this member has clearly exhibited profound lack of knowledge and ignorance relevant to this House and those of others throughout the world where we know there are dictatorial regimes. So I have no apology. I can't apologize for the member's lack of understanding of the differences between different governments.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on the point of order?

As was pointed out earlier this week, there is back and forth in debate. I think an opinion was expressed, and opinions get expressed back and forth. I think we would be better off if we stuck with the gist of the motion, which is talking about convening for evening meetings. [interjections] Order.

We're debating Motion 35, which is calling for evening sittings beginning at 8 p.m. on December 3, 4, and 5 for consideration of further government business. That's what we're debating, so let's stick to the debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. Now we have this comparison of this government to that of the Soviet Union. This is the government that in the last 11 months has reformed the Public Accounts Committee, which this member is the chair of, and opened it up to all government departments for full and thorough examination. It is this government that created all-party field committees, so members of the opposition have the ability to fully participate in the democratic process. [interjection] The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is obviously insulted by having to hear the facts and truth, but let me carry on.

This government is the one who has limited night sittings, so we don't have to sit at night unless a situation like this arises. It is this government that is posting travel expenses of ministers on a publicly accessible website. It is this government that has created the lobby registry. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs has the floor.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's obvious that facts really irritate them, but let's carry on.

It is this government that has created a lobby registry so that all Albertans know who the government is meeting with and who the government is lobbying with. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, should I sit down and allow the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to speak? He obviously will not allow me to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Were you finished?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I wasn't. I was trying, Mr. Speaker, to keep on talking, but I can't.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is finished.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This ought to be fun.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there have been only a few occasions in my three years here that I've considered to be black days. This is certainly one of them because as has been pointed out by many speakers already this afternoon, clearly . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the floor, and we will allow that to happen.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, today is really a black day because, unfortunately, as has been pointed out by a number of speakers, this motion, Government Motion 35, which would allow us to sit evenings next week, is really just a precursor for what we all know is coming. The Government House Leader this afternoon gave oral notice that they will be using closure on Bill 46 next week.

I have to say up front, Mr. Speaker, that we're actually in support of Motion 35. In fact, as I know the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne indicated, he would be more than willing to sit evenings. So would this member be more than willing to sit evenings, as many evenings as it takes to deal with the very, very important piece of legislation that is in front of this House, and that is Bill 46. There are 22 amendments coming from the government side alone. I have no idea how many might be coming from the opposition side, but I'm going to suspect that it might be as many. Three evenings clearly are not going to be sufficient to deal with the legislation that's in front of this House.

Mr. Hancock: Who said it had to be three? There could be more.

Mr. R. Miller: It could very well be many more. The Government House Leader is indicating that perhaps there are more than 22 amendments coming on Bill 46.

Mr. Hancock: No, no. I meant days. Let's start with three and see how it goes.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, let's start with three days. Let's see where it goes. In fact, if the Government House Leader had been paying attention, Mr. Speaker, he would have heard that I said that I support this motion. I think this is a good motion. I think it's a great place to start.

What causes me concern, however, is that the Government House Leader has already signalled that he doesn't think that those evening sittings are going to be very long. He's quite confident, in fact, that they won't be late evenings. Well, I look at the Order Paper, and there are approximately 30 bills in front of us, and the Government House Leader is contemplating short evenings. Well, that can only tell me one thing, Mr. Speaker, that he's also contemplating closure. There's just no other way around it. The smugness that comes from the other side when we have a serious debate about democracy or lack thereof in this province and the number of times that this government has now taken to using closure to get through debate just astounds me.

I heard the Government House Leader in the media last night talking about the Leader of the Official Opposition and how if he hadn't spoken for 60 minutes the other night on some little amendment on Bill 46, then perhaps there would be more time to discuss Bill 46. Well, let me remind all members – let me remind all members – that when the Official Opposition leader spoke for 60 minutes on Bill 46 the other day, he was speaking to a very, very, very important amendment. The amendment was moved by the ND opposition, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the amendment was to take Bill 46, which is probably the most controversial piece of legislation that this House has seen in many years, and refer it to the policy field committee on energy and the environment, which, quite frankly, is exactly where that bill belongs, exactly where it belongs. This bill has been trouble from day one, and the government knows it.

Mr. Speaker, you look at a government that comes back after a whole summer off, 22 of their own amendments, and what happens?

Mrs. Jablonski: You might have had it off.

Mr. R. Miller: Actually, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North is suggesting that the Official Opposition had the summer off. Well, quite clearly, the Official Opposition works a whole lot harder than that member does. There's not much doubt in my mind about that, Mr. Speaker.

4:10

Mrs. Jablonski: Point of order.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North on a point of order.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm raising a point of order on Beauchesne 23(h), making an allegation.

Mr. Elsalhy: That's not Beauchesne.

Mr. Martin: That's a standing order.

Mrs. Jablonski: I was standing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member on the point of order.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly the member who's raising the point of order doesn't even know the standing orders of this House. She's not familiar enough with Beauchesne to cite the proper citation. I would argue immediately that there is no point of order. But if there were to have been a point of order, the only difference between my comments and hers would be that mine were while I was standing speaking and I had the floor. Hers were in a heckling manner. If anybody contravened Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), it would be the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, who was making comments which clearly . . . [interjections] And they continue to do it while I'm speaking now.

The Deputy Speaker: I believe I'm ready to rule on this. I just ruled the same ruling on Edmonton-Castle Downs. Opinions are expressed back and forth, and I think that if everyone that had the floor expressed their opinions through the chair and the rest would listen attentively, we would have fewer of these points of order that aren't points of order.

Hon. member, continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll continue with my arguments in favour of Government Motion 35, which would see us sit evenings next week, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. As I was indicating, the government members had the entire summer to prepare amendments to Bill 46.

Mr. Bonko: How about getting it right the first time?

Mr. R. Miller: Well, clearly, as the Member for Edmonton-Decore suggests, had it been properly drafted in the first place and had proper consultation been done, none of this would have been necessary. Unfortunately, that didn't happen. Then, of course, the summer goes by and we come back and we start to hear rumblings of amendments, and in fact it turns out that 22 government amendments are to be dealt with. But, Mr. Speaker, for whatever reason – and remember, the government is in control of the agenda in this House, not the Official Opposition – the government chose to continue to defer debate on Bill 46 until here we are entering the last week of the fall sitting, the last projected week of the fall sitting, and the most controversial bill that has been in front of this House in many, many years has had I think less than five hours of debate to this point.

Now they want us to deal with 22 of their amendments, and Lord knows how many amendments might be coming from the Official Opposition party and the third party and the independent members of this House. I know that they all have amendments that they would like to have discussed in this House. Now suddenly the push is on. With only three government days left in the sitting calendar, the push is on to suddenly not only deal with these 22 amendments plus whatever amendments there might be coming from the opposition side of the House, Mr. Speaker, but, as well, the remaining 30 pieces of legislation that are on the Order Paper. It's insanity, if nothing else.

How can anybody reasonably expect us to do a legitimate job of debating legislation in this House, 30 pieces of legislation, in three sitting days? That's not democracy. It is a black day. Frankly, it causes my heart to sink to look across the way and see the smugness on the faces of the government members who somehow think that this is democracy in action when they shut down debate and ram through legislation in the manner that everybody in this House knows is going to happen next week.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Start debating the bill, then.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, you know what? I would love to start debating the bill, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I would love to start debating it. I would love to stand here and have the opportunity, as I should and as every member of this House should, to debate every single amendment that the government has on Bill 46, Mr. Speaker, and then to debate every single amendment that the opposition has on Bill 46 and to allow every single member of this House the same opportunity. But that is not going to happen. Everybody in this House knows that's not going to happen because these guys are going to use closure, and they're going to use closure more than once. They're going to use it at this point three times on Bill 46. We know that. They've telegraphed that to the whole world. This is no longer a secret. They're not going to allow proper debate to take place on their amendments, let alone on the amendments that the opposition might have prepared through consultation with Albertans. So this is not democracy in action in any way, shape, or form. What it really is, Mr. Speaker, is bad management, bad administration, and . . .

Mr. MacDonald: A Soviet style regime.

Mr. R. Miller: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar suggested it is also a Soviet style regime. Now where have we heard that before?

You know, I know that there's a long list of speakers who wish to debate and probably not an awful lot of time left on this particular motion. I'm not going to take my entire time, Mr. Speaker, but I really – well, I'm actually being encouraged now to take my entire time, but I know I have colleagues who wish to debate on it as well. I just really, truly believe that as legislators we should all be ashamed of the action that is being taken in this House today and over the next several days as we watch a government that is desperate to cram through legislation without proper debate. There is no way that anybody in this House should be proud of that. If they are, well, they'll have to answer to someone greater than myself, I'm sure.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've been in this House now for quite a while, and I have never heard so much nonsense in my whole life. I cannot believe that when we have a situation where our time to speak is going to run out next Thursday and the government offers you more time to speak, you spend all of this time talking about how you don't want it to happen and that it's a terrible thing.

If you really have something important to say about any of these bills that are coming up, then I encourage you just to get to the point. Get to the point. Get rid of this silly messing about. Give us more time next week to be able to speak, and let's get on with it, for goodness' sake.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. MacDonald: Please. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow: I have a question, and it is this. Do you think that the opinions and the concerns of those who are opposed to Bill 46 will have an opportunity in this short period of time to be addressed?

Ms DeLong: I believe that if you are just concise and make your points concisely, then you will have plenty of time to get those ideas across. If you are simply putting in time, no, you will never have enough time to get those ideas across.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow. The mayor of Calgary, Mr. Bronconnier, on November 8, 2007, wrote a very concise four-page letter regarding Bill 46. Not only did he have concerns with the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office as it was proposed, but he had concerns about section 8, section 10, and section 22 of that bill. Do you think in the time that we're providing . . .

Mr. VanderBurg: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Point of Order

Question and Comment Period

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, under our Standing Orders, you know, we do have an opportunity to rebut and ask questions on bills, but I never thought that on motions this opportunity existed. Now, I stand to be corrected.

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(1): "Time limits on speaking in debate in the Assembly on Government motions, Government Bills and orders and private Bills shall be as follows."

Then you get down to Standing Order 29(2)(a): "Following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly" on the subject matter in the debate.

There's no point of order.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be quick with my question. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow: will the mayor of Calgary's concerns regarding section 8, which is power of the commission, section 10, reviews and variances, and section 22, local intervenor costs in Bill 46 – in your opinion, are Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings of next week an adequate time to deal with his major issues?

Thank you.

Ms DeLong: I believe that the issues that were raised by the mayor were expressed very clearly, very succinctly, and they can be dealt with very quickly in this House.

Thank you very much.

Mr. VanderBurg: I'd like to ask the member from Calgary that just spoke if she thought that the time in the House has been well spent on Bill 1 and Bill 2. Given the 10 trips that many of us have had to make to Edmonton and the hours that we've had to spend out of session hearing the debate that we've had and hours and hours spent on bills 1 and 2, if she felt that that was time well spent.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. I do believe that those field committees were very effective in terms of really exploring some of these issues, and I don't think that anybody that was there was actually putting in time as opposed to what I have heard today in the Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the comments from the Member for Calgary-Bow, I'm curious to know whether or not she's completely comfortable with the way that we do business in this province because the other day when we were discussing Bill 38, which dealt with TILMA, she indicated that it's been available since April of '06. She said that according to the custom, we bring things forward into the Legislature; that's how we debate them. But did she fully understand at that time that the government had already signed the agreement and then brought it into the Legislature for debate? So that's my question for the hon. member. Is she comfortable with the way we do things, where we sign an agreement and then bring it into the Legislature for debate, after it's already a done deal?

Ms DeLong: I very much look forward to our finally debating TILMA. You are holding us back from actually getting to the debate. If we could just get on with the business of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support Motion 35, which is basically allowing the Legislature to sit evenings, if required, beginning at 8 p.m. on December 3, 4, and 5 for consideration of government business. As was expressed by some of my hon. colleagues, Motion 35 and Motion 36 really should be looked at together because one motion is inviting us to sit evenings, and we don't mind. I've certainly done it before in my three years in this Assembly, and I don't particularly mind it. I can appreciate where some of the members find it a bit difficult, you know, in terms of travel arrangements and in terms of their being away from their families.

Well, I'm away from my family as well when I'm here. I live in Edmonton. It takes me forty minutes to drive home. People think that I have this edge over them. Well, you know what? I have recently got blessed with the arrival of my third kid. My third kid, Mr. Speaker, is two months old, and I want to spend some time with my kid. But what I am doing here in this House is basically looking after him for when he is at that age when he requires those decisions that were made in 2007 to be favourable towards him and his future and his life and that of his kids as well. When he's 18 . . .

Mr. Liepert: Then he'll vote Conservative.

Mr. Elsalhy: No. I don't think he'll ever vote Conservative. As a matter of fact, I am really hoping that when I'm done politics, maybe he'll enter this field as well and carry the Liberal flag in Edmonton-McClung or whichever name the constituency is named then.

So both motions, one motion asking us to sit longer – and I don't mind – the other motion telling us, not asking us, that we are going to be allowed one hour of debate. They're worded in such sanitized and innocent language, you know, that it's a matter of fact that the Assembly needs to move on. It's no big deal. Nobody should be worried.

Well, let me put on the record that the first reason why we're sitting nights is to catch up because the government itself had some difficulties in the drafting and in the introduction of their own bills. This government has many inadequacies, not the least of which is Bill 46, for example, this year arguably the biggest and the most controversial and the most contentious bill before this Assembly in many years.

Mr. R. Miller: Would you say they're incompetent?

Mr. Elsalhy: I'm saying that these are inadequacies.

An Hon. Member: Inept.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, inept would be a description that I would use.

Bill 46 was introduced in the Assembly on the last day of the spring session. If they thought it was such a huge deal and they wanted it – you know, “That’s an A bill; the government wants that bill to pass” – they should have introduced it the first day of session or the second day or the third day or the second week. They introduced it on the last day of the spring session. The reason, Mr. Speaker, is because they don't like the attention and the scrutiny that this House affords to all bills but, in particular, controversial ones. They know that when this House is sitting, for example, Mr. Speaker, their polling and their public opinion surveys indicate that they're actually going down. So they like to be out.

They bring it in the last day of the spring session, and then they wait and wait in this fall session. Now they say, “You know what? We're running out of time. Let's actually invoke closure. Let's bring the hammer down and censor everybody and not allow everybody to speak” because they know that when we're in the House, public opinion of them gets lower, gets weaker.

This is the same government, Mr. Speaker, that spied on unsuspecting Albertans in Rimbey and God knows where else. I have to tell you that these people who were spied on were not troublemakers, as was initially said. These were concerned citizens, citizens that have lost faith and confidence in this government, and they were expressing that concern.

Mr. Liepert: We'll see.

Mr. Elsalhy: The Minister of Education is saying, “We'll see,” and I agree with you. You know, only time will tell.

But this government also doesn't trust these citizens. This government finds it appropriate and okay and no big deal to spy on them. That's exactly what the Premier and the Energy minister initially said, that that was no big deal, that these were troublemakers. What's the big fuss? They also equally don't like the scrutiny and the questioning that they're subjected to when they're in this House, so they want out: let's just wrap it up and move on.

The Minister of Education earlier on blamed the opposition for what remains on the books. He says: because of you we can't move through our legislative agenda. [interjection] Yes, and I'm proud of that record. The Minister of Health and Wellness is saying that I spoke on Bill 1 repeatedly. I was doing my job. How many members from this government, including the Premier himself, spoke on Bill 1? That's the flagship bill of this government. How many times did members of the government speak? Let's actually tally up their speaking time. Let's tally up how many pages they generated in Hansard. [interjection] Yeah, this government likes to make those decisions in the back rooms. We have to bring our ideas forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Elsalhy: Through the chair, yes.

We have to bring our ideas forward. We debate their ideas good or bad, and they're mostly bad most of the time. We're the ones who actually do the legislative work in this Assembly. These guys are just happy to do their little talks in their own caucus room, and their whip tells them: vote yes en masse; vote no en masse. He shepherds them through these bills.

I challenge these people who are now yelling and heckling across the way to now tell us how they think. Tell us what you think about Bill 46.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Oberle: Under 23(h), Mr. Speaker, the member alleges that I tell the members on our side of the House how to vote, and I take exception to that. As much as they like to think of themselves as independent members, they must realize that we are all independent members. No member in this House can order another member on how to vote. I ask him to withdraw that remark. I would point out to him that that party has a whip, and none of us has made any similar allegation. The whip has duties with regard to House staff, with regard to research staff, and that's the position. I don't tell anybody in this House how to vote. It would be a violation of their privilege to do so.

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on the point of order.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? This is really not the issue I am speaking about, so I will retract that comment.

An Hon. Member: Withdraw the comment.

Mr. Elsalhy: That's what I did. If you were listening, I was basically telling the Speaker that I was going to retract this statement. I don't want anybody to think that I don't think that some members in this caucus are free thinkers and really pay attention to the debates and participate.

Mr. R. Miller: Some of them are ignorant, though.

Mr. Elsalhy: My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford says that some of them are ignorant, as in not aware of the facts.

You know what? I think what we're doing here is twofold. We're allowing ourselves three days . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I haven't ruled on the point of order. Have you concluded your remarks on the point of order? Okay.

The member withdrew his remarks. I would like to make a comment on that. Every member here is elected by his electors in his constituency. They have the right in this House to vote however they choose. Yes, party whips on all sides of the House can make strong suggestions in certain situations. We all know that. But ultimately at the end of the day every member can vote according to the dictates of their heart.

I trust that the withdrawal of the comment puts an end to the matter, and we'll move on.

Mr. Oberle: Has he withdrawn the comment?

The Deputy Speaker: He has withdrawn his comment. If we can keep the side comments down, perhaps we could hear, when people make comments, what exactly they are.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Debate Continued

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, back to the issue. Do I mind sitting nights? No, I don't. Do I mind closure? Yes, absolutely. You bet I do. Closure basically amounts to censorship. It amounts to a limit of my freedom of speech and a limit or restriction on my ability to represent the people who voted me in. Let me remind you, further to your comments, that 30 per cent of the population voted for members of the Official Opposition. Some more voted for the third party, some more voted for the Alliance, about 7 or 8 per cent, and some voted for the independent Member for Edmonton-Manning. Collectively we probably, you know, add up to at least 50 per cent, if not more.

Mr. R. Miller: More than 50. It was more than 50.

Mr. Elsalhy: It was more than 50 per cent in the 2004 election.

So for a government that doesn't have that clear of a majority, they indicate that they've had it, that we've heard all we need to hear. For them to actually expect to move and pass 22 or 23 amendments in whatever, three hours or four hours, well, that's unrealistic. I mean, even if they just move, somebody speaks on it and sits down, and then move another one, speaks on it and sits down, they will not do it in, you know, three hours or so. They're basically invoking closure on themselves, not just gagging us and preventing us from speaking. They're actually invoking closure on their own. I will be really interested to see how that is done. You know, how can we do this in the span of three hours? I don't know. And then 40-plus amendments from the Official Opposition, some from the ND and maybe others. That is totally unacceptable.

Bill 46, Mr. Speaker, is really offensive to many people in rural and urban Alberta. You know, it deserves more attention than this.

The Deputy Speaker: We're debating Motion 35, not Bill 46. We'll get to Bill 46.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to belabour this more because I know some of my colleagues want to speak, and maybe they, too, will get points of order in the process. I don't know. But it seems to be a trend.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, on Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. minister of health.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I just would like to ask the hon. member if he has ever had occasion to go to any other parliaments, perhaps maybe the Parliament of Canada, with in excess of 300 members, or the Mother of Parliaments in London, with in excess of 600 members, and whether he really believes that every member should get up or have the opportunity to get up on every bill. I can tell you that no progress would ever be made on a bill if that was the test. And the volume of printing on the pages of Hansard with respect to every bill, if that's the test of success: I'm wondering whether he really believes that. That's what he seems to be suggesting, that you can't effectively discuss and debate a bill unless every member has the opportunity to speak to every bill and every amendment. Surely, he doesn't mean that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This House has 83 members, and we're all duly elected to speak on those bills and those laws that we feel affect either directly or indirectly our constituents. Let me also remind you that in the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee we actually expanded that definition of a constituent to everybody who lives in this province. If I think that the government is moving 50 bills and I choose to speak to 30 of them, I should be given the opportunity to do that. Most of the time I speak when I have something to contribute. I speak about things that are relevant to either my constituents locally or geographically. I speak to things that I understand in terms of health care. I speak to things that I understand as a parent, and so on. I pick the ones that I want to research, and I pick the ones that I want to speak on. I don't speak on every bill, and I don't speak on every amendment. Some of the members across the way were surprised that I was speaking on Bill 1 repeatedly. Well, I sat on that committee. I was the deputy chair of that committee, and I was doing on behalf of the entire committee some of that work.

Mr. Snelgrove: The hon. member mentioned that they had a new baby in the family. That's great. Then he mentioned that they pretty well do all the work in government or for the province. I'm wondering if he might suggest the fact that he's away doing all this work has contributed in any way to that event.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, we have a duty in this House to scrutinize and to go over government ideas and government decisions, either policywise or fundingwise. I'm not saying that I'm actually doing what the government is doing or doing all the work. I'm just saying that members of the Official Opposition and the third party and others have a role to play, and I think we're doing it. I think we're doing somewhat of a fine job here. We were the ones who stopped Bill 11. We were the ones who stopped privatization. We were the ones who voiced a concern to Bill 20 last year, when this government was talking about FOIP and trying to make our supposedly open and accountable government secretive and more secretive. You know, I would argue that this year as well. Every year there's one contentious bill; there's one area that the government tries to sneak in very unsavoury and very bad policy. Well, this is it. Bill 46 is that one this year, and we will not allow them to get off that easy.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on 29(2)(a)?

Okay. On the debate, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I support Motion 35 to sit evenings, and I have the same reasons for supporting this motion as the member opposite from Edmonton-McClung. I'd like to congratulate him on the birth of his third child. I'm very happy for him. I agree with him that it's important to spend as much time as you can with your children. In fact, it's something that I really like to do, and by sitting evenings I get that opportunity because I don't have to be here for what I might think is an inefficient time when we can save time by sitting evenings instead of coming back for another week or two. Not only are we then fulfilling my desire to see my family more often and, as well, my constituents – my constituents are very, very important, obviously; I'm here to represent them – but I think we make things more efficient for this government. We save the government money by sitting evenings. We save time.

For those reasons I just wanted to stand and support that motion and also let the members opposite know that I agree with the importance of having more time to see your family. That's why I think sitting evenings for three days is important, especially in this season.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing no one, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore on the debate.

Mr. Bonko: On the debate, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. Well, I'll tell you that this afternoon has been one of the more interesting ones. It seems to get a little bit more engagement out of all members when they do take exception. Well, exception has been taken on several accounts, starting with the first one, which was Government Motion 36, time allocation.

Quite frankly, when I was elected, Mr. Speaker, I thought I was going to be able to have a democratic, free voice – and so did the citizens who elected me – and that it wouldn't be stifled with time allocation. Unfortunately, you know what? Certain governments do that when they don't want their citizens to have voices. It was raised already. Those are communist governments. [interjections] That's right. The Progressive Conservative Party is becoming partially communist because that way . . .

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I don't believe that it's parliamentary in this Assembly to be referring to any government in our nation, a free nation, as communist. I would like to give you the opportunity to withdraw that.

4:40

Mr. Bonko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves. When we do that sort of action, the only other place to be able to compare it to is some communist states that withhold and suppress their citizens. We're becoming that way more and more all the time, and I think the comments fit.

The Deputy Speaker: I believe the term "communist" is unparliamentary to refer to any government in our country, and I will give you an opportunity to withdraw the comment.

Mr. Bonko: Well, I could take it back and then label it as corrupt, then, perhaps, Mr. Speaker. Because you know what? [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Are you withdrawing the comment? I'll ask the member one more time. This is the third time. Do you want to withdraw the comment?

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, I did say that I could withdraw the comment of communist and slip in corruption, then. I said that would be fine by myself as well. So I'll withdraw communist, and I'll put in corruption, then. What other government withholds $14 billion from its province, from the constituents, from Albertans and denies it? That's corrupt.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'll accept withdrawal of the comment, but I also will rule that the term "corruption" is unparliamentary and ask you to withdraw that as well.

I'll ask you the second time on withdrawing the remark on corruption.

I'll ask you the third time. Do you wish to withdraw the comment?

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, at the urging of my colleagues I will withdraw the . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair. You withdrew the comment?

Mr. Bonko: Well, perhaps I wasn't able to be heard because of the heckling over there when I was able to make my statement.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll accept that. You may continue.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to continue. That's part of censorship here again, having to retract remarks here, but we'll continue.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you referring to the chair as censorship? Are you referring to the Speaker's ruling as censorship?

Mr. Bonko: No. I think there was a misunderstanding there, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, thank you for that clarification, then.

Mr. Bonko: Can I continue, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: You can continue, but I'll warn you one more time that the chair is not going to tolerate any more challenges in that regard. If you want to continue on the debate on Motion 35, keep your remarks relevant to the motion at hand.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will again continue, and I will choose my words carefully so as to not offend the sensitivity of some of the members across.

Debate Continued

Mr. Bonko: I have no problem sitting nights as I've sat nights several times in here. You know what? The point is: people don't plan to fail; they fail to plan. I think that's exactly what happened again, another example of this government not planning. They set on a specific date that we were to end session, and now we're going to stick to that mark because we're going to be sitting nights. That's breaking what they had originally agreed to in the House rules, that we aren't going to have any more nights because it was going to be more humane to the members. Well, quite frankly, if we're sitting nights again, that's breaking a rule, and that's again . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The time for this debate is over, and it's time for the vote on the motion. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Yes. I just have a question, Mr. Speaker. I had my clock running as well as the table officers did, and we've had several points of order throughout the hour. I'm wondering if you could clarify for me whether or not the time does stop or if the time continues to go.

The Deputy Speaker: No. The motion has received one hour of debate. I must now put the question on Motion 35.

[Government Motion 35 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 56
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply)
Act, 2007 (No. 2)

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today to move Bill 56, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 (No. 2), through to Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will begin my comments by expressing displeasure for the way this afternoon has unfolded. There was a House leaders' agreement last Thursday, and if you look at the projected government House business, everything went off the rails before we began doing government business on Tuesday afternoon. So whatever was planned to have been discussed this week, everything has gone sideways.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Again, as far as I'm concerned, mismanagement and . . . [interjections] I'm sorry. Did you wish to comment? We're in committee, so if you want to comment, hon. minister . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. R. Miller: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If the minister of advanced education would like to comment, we are in committee, and I'm happy to sit down and let him get up. If I could have the assurance of the chair that I would be allowed to respond to his comments, I'm happy to cede the floor to him and let him get his comments on the record.

The Deputy Chair: Well, we are in committee. If that's your intent, you can sit down, and I can recognize you later.

Mr. R. Miller: Anyhow, Mr. Chairman, my comments in respect to Bill 56 in committee. As I said, I was going to begin by talking about how badly things have gone off the rails. Here we are this afternoon, quite frankly, with Bill 56 not even on the most recent draft of the House leaders' agreement, which was concocted during question period today. It's not there. Now suddenly we're dealing with Bill 56. I'm looking at House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and on page 790 it says, "Often a Committee of the Whole examines non-controversial bills or bills dealing with matters of political importance on which arrangements on the use of House time have been made."

4:50

I suppose a point of order could have been called because this arrangement was not even made this afternoon between House leaders. I'm frustrated, quite frankly, because I did not bring my notes over on Bill 56 because the House leaders had an agreement, and Bill 56 was never contemplated being discussed this afternoon. That is a frustration, and it's likely to lead to even more disorder in this House this afternoon, Mr. Chairman.

However, I know a number of these issues quite well, and in particular the $825 million that is contemplated to be moved into the heritage savings trust fund is certainly a part of the appropriation bill. The other day when we were in Committee of Supply, when we were discussing the monies that are being asked for by the government, first the President of the Treasury Board, I believe, and then also the Minister of Education, if I remember correctly, made comments about the Official Opposition's plan to save 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenues by putting that money up front, off the top, pay yourself first, into the heritage savings trust fund and a number of other endowment funds. There was a lot of discussion back and forth about the wisdom of putting money into the heritage savings trust fund and building the fund as opposed to the current practice, which is to take all of the money after inflation-proofing and administration fees are paid and put that money into general revenue. That is what we do now. Of course, I've expressed an awful lot of concern about that in the past.

Well, in response to some of that debate – and, as I say, I can't recall whether it was the President of the Treasury Board or the Minister of Education who went on and on about how the Official Opposition plan to save 30 per cent was actually not achievable. The Minister of Education, I believe it was, actually contemplated that four government departments would cease to exist, would have to be done away with because the Official Opposition plan to save 30 per cent wouldn't allow enough money to be in the treasury to operate those departments.

Mr. Chairman, you will know that members on the government side of the House, particularly during question period, often accuse members of the Official Opposition of fearmongering. Well, I guess that turnabout is fair play because I'm about to make the same accusation to members of the Executive Council. Very clearly – very, very clearly – this plan that we've put forward is achievable. All you have to do is look at the second-quarter update. As I say, I don't have my papers in front of me, but it contemplates approximately $12 billion in nonrenewable resource revenue flowing into the government coffers this year, and 30 per cent of that, clearly, is less than one-third, so less than $4 billion would be taken and set aside into these various savings trust funds and endowment plans under the Official Opposition plan.

Now, that would mean, as I said, that less than $4 billion would go into savings, and in fact the government's own surplus projections for this year are in excess of $4 billion. So I don't know where the math comes from, but clearly if the political will was there to adopt this plan, it's achievable using the government's very own numbers, using the second-quarter update. It would have been achievable this year to take 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenues, put that aside right off the top, and there would still have been a surplus at the end of the year according to the government's own numbers.

I see the Finance minister nodding his head, and I think I know why. The Finance minister has examined this document in great detail. Back in the spring sitting he had it in front of him on his desk almost every day that we were sitting. I was curious to know what the Finance minister thought of the plan, so we actually initiated a FOIP request to find out. "Okay. You know, the government is clearly paying attention to the Official Opposition's plan to save resource revenues. Let's find out what they think." So we did a FOIP request. Well, you know what we got back, Mr. Chairman? It's actually quite comical. What we got back was almost a complete refusal to release any information in terms of what the government thoughts were on our resource revenue plan because of ministerial briefing notes. Under the FOIP legislation they were able to take everything – everything – that the minister might have contemplated in response to our savings plan and hide it away due to the FOIP legislation exempting ministerial briefing notes.

Of course, you'll know, Mr. Chairman, that I have asked questions in this House of the Premier, of the Minister of Finance, of the minister of health, of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development about their thoughts on saving 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenues, and we can't get those answers. Well, okay. So then we'll try the FOIP legislation and find out what they think about that. We can't get answers through FOIP either. As I said, the Minister of Finance was nodding his head. I can only assume that that means he's in agreement with me that, in fact, based on the government's own second-quarter update, it would have been very doable to adopt a savings plan.

I've always said that if the Minister of Finance or the President of the Treasury Board comes to the conclusion with all of their experts – clearly, they have an awful lot more in the way of resources than I have at my disposal – that 30 per cent is not doable, so it's 25 per cent. Maybe it's a sliding scale so that in really successful years it might be higher. It could be as high as 40 or 50 per cent, as some others have called for, and in the years that are a little more difficult, maybe it's only 10 per cent. I don't really care what the number is. What I care about, Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. President of the Treasury Board, is that there be some concerted effort on the part of this government to save some of this money for the future.

Simply throwing the dog a bone, as we do now, where we take all of the money out of the heritage savings trust fund and then we throw some of it back in, is not good enough. It's not a plan. I've congratulated the government in the past for at least moving to a surplus plan. It's better than not having any plan at all, which is where we were in previous years. We now have a plan which in some respects mirrors the Official Opposition plan of three years ago. It's better than nothing, I suppose, but it's not a firm commitment by this government to save money.

In fact, the only savings plan they have is if there's a surplus above and beyond the projected government surplus. The only time that their plan contemplates actually putting money into the heritage savings trust fund is if there's a surplus above the projected government surplus. So we could have a budget that projects – let's just pick a number and say that the budget were to project a billion-dollar surplus. The government's own legislation, their own savings plan, doesn't contemplate actually saving any money until there's a surplus above the one-billion-dollar surplus that they've actually projected. It's just not good enough because, of course, we all understand that there is no guarantee that there would be a surplus although this government certainly has now conceded that they have been intentionally lowballing revenue figures for years. In fact, when you look at the last many years, we've had not just surpluses, but we've had multibillion-dollar surpluses for most of those many years.

I believe the only year that we didn't was 2001, and of course we all know the events of 2001. Whether it be the September 11 terrorist attacks or whether it be the dot-com meltdown, clearly that was a difficult year. Maybe that's a year when a sliding scale would have contemplated less than a full 30 per cent of savings going into the heritage savings trust fund. But without any question, Mr. Chairman, every other year with the exception of that year has seen dramatically underestimated revenue forecasts, and it has seen dramatically significant surpluses at the end of the budget year. Yet most people in this province feel as if there's nothing to show for those multibillion-dollar surpluses.

You know, this isn't just the shadow minister of Finance for the Official Opposition talking. This is people all across the province. Everywhere I've travelled for the last three years since I've been fortunate enough to serve as the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford people say that we should be saving more for future generations. I know the government members have heard this, too. I'll run through the list again: the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canada West Foundation, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, and on and on it goes. Everybody is talking about doing this. It's the right thing to do.

5:00

Eight out of the nine leadership candidates in the PC leadership race last year talked about it being the right thing to do. I think it's, frankly, unfortunate for the people of this province that the man who is now Premier was the only person out of those nine who didn't believe in a savings plan. Had any of the other eight candidates succeeded the former Premier, we would probably not be having this conversation today because I'm going to guess that they would have been good to their word, and we would now have a savings plan for nonrenewable resource revenue.

An Hon. Member: We do.

Mr. R. Miller: No, we do not. We do not. Somebody on the other side is saying that we do have a savings plan for nonrenewable resource revenue. We do not. That is simply a falsehood. It's just not true. We certainly should have, but we don't.

I think that that's a really unfortunate thing for the people of this province, that we find ourselves in a situation once again this year with what is now projected to be a $4 billion surplus, and the only money that is going into the heritage savings trust fund is in fact a portion of the money – not even all of the money – that was taken out of the heritage savings trust fund and transferred into general revenue, and it's simply not good enough, Mr. Chairman. That causes me untold concern. I've expressed those opinions ever since day one in this Legislature. I will continue to do so until somebody on that side finally recognizes the wisdom.

I shouldn't say it that way because I know that there are many members on that side who recognize the wisdom. In fact, the former Deputy Premier and former Minister of Finance, Mr. Chairman, actually told me one day: I agree with everything you're saying about a nonrenewable resource revenue savings plan. She told me this. I sat one evening in the Premier's chair while we were in committee. I sat beside the Deputy Premier, and she said: I agree with everything that you're saying about a nonrenewable resource revenue savings plan, but I'm only one vote. Then she told me: if you tell anybody that I said that, I'm going to have to hurt you. So I guess I'll be watching in my rear-view mirror now for a few days to see whether or not there are headlights approaching rather closely.

I know that members on the other side understand how important this is, Mr. Chairman. This is not a fly-by-night idea. This is not something that's way out there. This is the right thing to do. It's common sense. It's a no-brainer. It's an automatic. Why we see so much resistance to it, I cannot for the life of me understand. It doesn't make any sense. We all understand that this tremendous resource revenue boom that we're experiencing right now is not going to go on forever. It can't. It never does. We've been here before.

I won't read into the record the bumper sticker because the last time I did, I got called on a point of order. But you all know what I'm talking about. Here we are again, 25 years later, and we're doing exactly the same thing we did in 1982-83. We're no better off than we were in 1982-83 in terms of economic diversification. In fact, I would argue, Mr. Chairman, that we're probably ever more dependent on the oil and gas sector today than we were in 1982-83.

So all of those lessons that we should have learned, that we promised we would learn have gone by the wayside, and we've not learned anything, or at least those on the other side of the House don't seem to have learned anything. In fact, I could probably say that they're ignorant to the fact that this is the right thing to do. Earlier today the Speaker ruled that that word used in that context is okay, so I'm going to continue to use it, I think, because it astounds me that when everybody, everybody is calling for this to be done – I shouldn't say everybody. I'm not sure about my colleagues in the ND opposition, whether or not they're supportive of a nonrenewable resource savings plan. Oh, they are, too. So, you know, everybody, from those on the far right to those on the far left, is saying that this is the right thing to do.

How can a government oppose an idea simply because the opposition says it's a good idea, simply because any number of stakeholder groups, most of whom would not normally be considered in alignment with the philosophies of the Liberal Party, all say that it's the right thing to do? In fact, Mr. Chairman, not only myself but our caucus have actually been accused of being more fiscally conservative and fiscally prudent than the government that's currently in power. I would argue that that's true. I've always considered myself to be a fiscally conservative citizen with a social conscience. I've always said: if that makes me an Alberta Liberal, then I'm perfectly happy to be where I am.

Now I hear, Mr. Chairman, the minister of health and the minister of advanced education say that that's the definition of a Progressive Conservative. You know what? They're probably right. In fact, I think they are right. The problem is that this so-called Progressive Conservative government is no longer progressive. We've seen that year after year. They've lost that side of it. In fact, when Nancy MacBeth became the leader of the Alberta Liberal Party in 1999, there were a lot of questions, quite frankly, from members of the Alberta Liberal Party as to her liberalism. What she said to me then was: I didn't leave my party; they left me.

Mr. Chairman, I could cite any number of other examples. In fact, the minister of health told me one day when he learned of some of the activities that the Official Opposition was undertaking: you guys are doing the right thing; you're doing what we used to do. Emphasis is on the word "used." So there's some understanding now – the minister of health is looking a little confused, so I'll remind him. It was actually a discussion that we had undertaken about the Official Opposition's outreach activities and the fact that rather than summoning people to Edmonton to come meet with politicians and officials, the Official Opposition en masse was going out to communities across this province to meet with stakeholder groups in their communities. The minister of health said to me: you guys are doing the right thing; you're doing what we used to do. I think that is one more example of how this government has moved away from being progressive conservatives and have more and more become conservative.

All you have to do is look at some of the people that they're nominating for the next election, Mr. Chairman, and clearly when you look at some of the nominations that are taking place across this province in that party, this is not a progressive conservative party anymore. This is a hard-right conservative party with, admittedly, some so-called red Tories in the caucus. I guess all I can say is: thank heavens that there are still some red Tories in that caucus.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, you know: where to start with this guy? This is the group that wants more time to debate bills. They can't understand why we'd want to move things in an orderly fashion, and for whatever time you allotted, he made references to Bill 56 only accidentally.

Let's remember what he said last week about it. He said: automatically, automatically. He didn't say, "Wait until the end of the year" or "Wait until second quarter." He said: automatically we're putting the money in the bank. Then today he said, "Well, I don't really mean that. I mean, if you've only got 10 per cent, we'll put 10 per cent. If you've got 25 per cent, we'll put 25 per cent." What he said is that he's starting to learn, like his leader, that whatever way the weather vane is blowing that day is where he's going. "Oh, put all the money in unless it means we won't have programs. Oh, then we wouldn't do it."

So we stand very high up here in our principle of looking backwards, and we'll spend the whole 20 minutes talking about nonsense. To even suggest at the start that this was something out of the ordinary, to have the supplementary supply now, means he's either not paying attention or he's not listening to his House leader or he's not watching. Either way, there's a difference, I guess, between not knowing and not caring. I think he really does care about his job. He just doesn't know what it is yet.

So, Mr. Chairman, unless there's going to be more productivity, this is a little bit of a waste. They don't want to discuss the bill, so I move we adjourn debate on Bill 56.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 31

Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today before the Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007. This bill passed second reading on May 10, and on May 31 it was referred to the Standing Committee on Community Services, which I had the pleasure of chairing along with the deputy chair from Edmonton-Mill Woods.

The committee met a total of nine times, including a full day and evening of public hearings. We heard from 65 citizens and associations through both written submissions and public hearings. A number of issues were raised throughout the committee's review, and we had the opportunity to explore those issues with stakeholders.

Based on our consultation and deliberations, the committee had recommended a series of amendments, and I'd like to provide a brief summary at this time. Before we do that, Mr. Chair, I believe there are copies of the amendments for distribution, and if it's your pleasure, we'll just allow a moment for the pages to distribute them.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. Hon. members, the amendments that are being introduced are being circulated, and we shall refer to these sets of amendments as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed now.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Before describing the amendments, I'd like to recognize the ongoing assistance and co-operation from the Ministry of Health and Wellness, which facilitated the committee's consideration of amendments, some of which originated with the minister and were supported by the committee. The amendments are broken down into several sections, and I'll go through them one at a time.

Part A. This particular amendment to section 2 outlines the definition of health professional for the purpose of the Mental Health Act. This is necessary to give effect to the committee's recommendation that Bill 31 authorize other categories of health professionals in addition to psychiatrists and physicians to be involved in the issuance, renewal, amendment, and cancellation of community treatment orders, or CTOs. This recommendation is based on the premise that only those health professionals who meet the professional requirements and standards to be established through regulation will be authorized to issue community treatment orders.

Part B. This amendment to section 4 is one of the technical amendments proposed by the minister and subsequently approved by the committee. This provision clarifies that where a person who is subject to a CTO is apprehended and conveyed to a facility for an examination, the appropriate process for conveyance and examination after apprehension is that which is outlined in section 9.6(3) of the bill.

Part C. This is the lengthy amendment. Clause (a) replaces the existing wording for section 9.1(1) of the bill, which outlines the criteria for the issuance of a CTO. It addresses the following recommendations of the committee.

First, it allows for a broader category of health professional to be involved in the issuance of CTOs. The language now provides that two health professionals must be involved, and according to the definition section health professional means those classes of health professionals set out in regulation or designated by a board, a regional health authority, or the minister.

Second, the proposed section 9.1(1)(b) responds to the committee's recommendation that the category of persons eligible for CTOs should be expanded beyond what was originally provided for in the bill, which was restricted to formal patients, meaning that in order to be eligible, a person must be a patient in a designated facility under the Mental Health Act. Under the proposed amendment there are now three categories of persons that would be eligible for a CTO. The first category would be those who have been a formal patient or in an approved hospital or a custodial institution who satisfied the admission criteria for formal patients. The relevant time period that applies is the immediately preceding three-year period on two or more occasions or for a total of at least 30 days.

The second category of persons who are eligible would be someone who has been subjected to a CTO within the immediate preceding three-year period.

The third category of individual who would be eligible would be someone who in the opinion of two health professionals exhibits a pattern of recurrent and repetitive behaviour suggesting that he or she may likely cause harm to himself or herself or others or that the person will suffer substantial mental or physical impairment if he or she does not receive treatment and care while living in the community.

Another of the committee's recommendations is reflected in the proposed clause (f), which narrows the original provision of the bill, which allowed for what we termed a consent override if the issuing physicians were of the opinion that there would be a likelihood of harm to others if the person did not receive treatment. This consent override has been restricted to those persons who are deemed to be incompetent only.

The wording outlined in clauses (b) through (e) is consequential to the recommendation that allowed for health professionals to be involved in the issuance, amendment, and renewal of CTOs.

Clause (f) deals with the committee's recommendation that the bill include a requirement for interim steps to be taken prior to the issuance of an apprehension order where a person fails to comply with the terms of the community treatment order. In accordance with the committee's recommendation this resembles the wording used in Newfoundland legislation and would require that reasonable efforts be made to inform the patient of his or her failure to comply. Reasonable efforts must also be made to explain to the patient that failure to comply may lead to involuntary psychiatric assessment, and reasonable efforts must be made to provide assistance to the patient to comply with the CTO.

Clause (g) provides new wording for the proposed section 9.6(3), and it accomplishes two things. First, it includes a consequential amendment to change the reference to either psychiatrist or physician to health professional. Secondly, this wording addresses a technical change recommended by the minister that provides clarity regarding the examination process that applies when a person who is subject to a CTO is apprehended.

Clause (h) is a consequential amendment to replace the reference to either physician or psychiatrist with health professional.

In part D this amendment to section 11 was proposed by the minister and adopted by the committee. This makes the criteria for transferring a patient into Alberta consistent with the new admission criteria.

Part E, the amendment to section 12, is a technical amendment that corrects a typographical error in the bill.

Part F. This amendment addresses the committee's recommendation that the bill provide for an automatic review by the panel after the first renewal of a CTO, which would occur after six months and then every second renewal thereafter except where the person has made an application for review within the preceding month.

Parts G, H, and I. These amendments include consequential amendments regarding the use of the term "health professionals." These amendments also address the review panel and hearing provisions and will require a supervising health professional where that person is different from the issuing health professional to receive notice and to attend hearings and court applications. The amendment was originally proposed by the minister and approved by the committee.

Part J. This is an amendment to section 49 of the act, which deals with ministerial powers. This addresses the committee recommendations discussed earlier that allow for other classes of health professionals besides psychiatrists and psychologists to be involved in the issuance of CTOs, and this will enable the minister to designate or identify the class of health professionals that will have this authority.

Part K. There are a number of different sections to this part. They're all amendments to the regulation-making power provision in the act. Clause (a) allows for regulations to be made in connection with examinations required for the issuance of CTOs or apprehension orders. Clause (b) addresses the earlier recommendation regarding health professionals and allows for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to establish by regulation the qualification required by health professionals in connection with the issuance, supervision, renewal, amendment, or cancellation of CTOs. Clause (c) is another consequential amendment.

Part L has two sections. The first section deals with the committee's recommendation that there be a review of the provisions in this bill by a committee of the Assembly within five years.

Finally, the last amendment is a consequential change to the Health Information Act to allow the nearest relatives of persons subject to CTOs to access health information in order to carry out their duties and obligations under the Mental Health Act.

In conclusion, I would like to thank all the members of the committee for their hard work and diligence in this new process, and

I'd also like to thank the Premier of the province for setting up this process. I would encourage all members of this Assembly to support the committee's recommended amendments.

I would now move these amendments as a whole and seek the advice of the chair in debating them perhaps a section at a time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I have been informed by the deputy opposition House leader that we will be voting on this section by section as we proceed.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that request, but I would like to speak to the amendments that have been tabled and then move a subamendment.

The chairman of the committee has made some introductory remarks relative to the work of the committee, and I'd like to echo those remarks. This has been a very important subject, a very important topic for Albertans for a number of years. As I said in second reading, the issue was brought forward by this minister after having encouraged it to be brought forward in a number of previous years and from a number of previous chairs. I really believe that the community treatment order tool is very essential for us to be able to allow families to work with their adult children who have forms of mental disorder which can be controlled with appropriate treatment, with pro-active treatment in the community and to allow the individuals to have a good quality of life and to give the families of those individuals the opportunity to help those individuals in an appropriate way. So a very important tool.

I'd like to commend the committee because it'll afford Albertans the opportunity to be heard on this important issue. It then reported, reflecting what it had heard in many cases, and showed that the process can really work and be really beneficial. So I want to thank the committee for their work. I want to indicate that I believe that the committee members have done very, very good work on this on behalf of all Albertans, never losing sight of the bill's purpose: to improve care, to provide to those suffering from mental illnesses.

I want to indicate that I support the committee's amendments as they've been tabled, with some important exceptions, and I want to highlight that. Even since the bill has been tabled, since the committee has reported, there has been an opportunity for more input to come back. There are a couple of areas where the community, particularly those people who are actively involved in the mental health community and working with persons with mental health conditions to which this bill might apply, have raised some concerns.

The subamendments that I would propose are important because, first and foremost, one of the issues in the amendments that were put on the table is the question of changing the bill from a doctor and physician, essentially, which is the practice throughout the Mental Health Act, to two health professionals. By doing so, that impacts a number of the sections throughout the bill. By having that process of making that change, there is an issue about whether that's appropriate. Really, allowing two health professionals in the act without further definition could suggest, for example, that it could be two LPNs or two others. Clearly, that's not the intention. The intention is people who have been identified as having the appropriate competencies.

It's my submission to the House that we need to adjust the amendments that were just tabled to reflect that reality, so I'm going to propose a subamendment which in a number of the sections will deal with the issue of the words "health professionals" versus the issue of "physicians, one of whom must be a psychiatrist." So a number of the sections would be amended by removing "two health professionals" and substituting "two physicians, one of whom must be a psychiatrist." That would be the first subamendment, and it does apply to a number of sections throughout the amendment.

The second one would be the issue of the consent override. It's important in this community to recognize that the fundamental purpose of the bill is to allow families and health professionals to intercede at the appropriate time. The appropriate time to intercede would be before . . . [interjection] Yes. I've moved the subamendment and asked that perhaps it be distributed so people could see it.

The Deputy Chair: Just a minute, hon. minister.

Hon. Government House Leader, I am being advised that because of the number of subamendments that exist, the best procedure for us would be to deal with each section at a time. As we deal with section A, you may move the subamendment to section A, and we would vote on it and then move to the next one.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I would ask that we not deal with it in that way. The subamendments are integral as a package. They deal with issues that run throughout the process. So it's important to deal with the subamendments as a package and then deal with the section by section. Alternatively, we can move the subamendments as a package, and then if you wish to go to a vote on each section, we could have two votes on each section: a vote on the subamendment on the section and then a vote on the amendment. That would be preferable because if you don't pass the whole thing, you shouldn't pass any of it. It doesn't make sense to split it up and do it one by one.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the chair is being advised by the opposition deputy House leader that what you are recommending is acceptable to them. We will deal with them as a package; however, the vote will happen individually.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, because we can't accept one without the other because they're all related.

It having been distributed, I will end up very quickly because I would like others to have the opportunity to speak this afternoon, and we have used a lot of time. So the piece is the health professional issue with respect to physicians and psychiatrists. This accepts the concept that the committee wanted, which is that there is an allowance for an expansion passed, a physician, one of whom must be a psychiatrist in certain circumstances. We've kept the concept, but by bringing these subamendments, we clearly defined that the expectation is it will be two appropriate health care professionals, being two physicians, one of whom must be a psychiatrist in the normal course, and then only in exceptional circumstances would you allow it to be other health care professionals and then only when it's appropriately defined by the regulation and the structure. So that would be the gist of the subamendment.

The consent issue. It's important that the CTO be available even if the individual does not consent when competent if they have an exhibited history.

Mr. Chairman, I think that that gives the gist of these amendments. There is some detail in there, but I would leave it at that and ask the committee to consider the subamendments as well as the amendments.

5:30

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the subamendments that we're going to deal with now are subamendment A1, which deals with part A; subamendment C1, which deals with part C; subamendment G1, which deals with part G; subamendment H1, which deals with part H; subamendment I1, which deals with part I; and subamendments J1 and K1, which deal with parts J and K.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I first of all want to go on record as saying that the standing committee process, in my view, was very positive. We've been able to take a bill which we believe will improve the mental health structure in our province and then give people who are concerned about the bill an opportunity to be heard. We've taken comments and recommendations under very serious consideration to bring forward the best we can. So this is an encouraging demonstration of democracy.

What confronts us here is a real issue. We can tell it is a real issue because it's crossing party lines. When we face such issues of life importance, there are no Liberal and Conservative stands, no clichés of left and right, only members wrestling each with his or her own conscience and indirectly with each other in debate as we strive for an awareness of what is right. It is here that I begin. I respect the deeply held different positions held by my fellow members in this House, and what I have to say is that my statements grow from my own experience as a mother, a grandmother, a human being, and only incidentally as a trained psychologist. Before the bar of human need, there is no hierarchy of expertise. We are all equal here.

I'm personally well acquainted with the challenge of those who are struggling to maintain autonomy yet often find themselves incapable of meeting their own basic needs. I know this as a mother and as a daughter of a parent in care. I know the dilemma of good days when they seem to be making it and bad ones when the world seems to be falling in. I've been torn with the angst of respecting their choices and protecting others also near and dear who may suffer as a result of those choices. Many times the protection we most need is not from others but from our own less-conscious selves.

These are not abstractions. What we call rights, rules, and regulations are attempts to abstract something that seems external and solid and lasting as a basis for making decisions. Ultimately abstraction fails us for, as we're discovering in other parts of life and in the universe, all is relative. What is most real are the relationships of which we are a part that we must face on a case-by-case basis.

To apply individual rights here, we have to know the individuals. Each of us acquires rights as we mature and enter relationships. Birthdays and other rights of passage mark those rights in the eyes of the law, but in reality exercise of these rights is a reflection of responsibilities we take on for ourselves and for those around us.

At an extreme level all the rights of a CEO of Encor are suddenly negated by acts of social irresponsibility. Society then must act to protect others from past and possible damage, and the person proven incapable of responsibility must go back to kindergarten or whatever level until they learn what this means. In the lesser case of individuals suffering from various types of addictions and mental disorders the stakes are not as high for society. They have no shareholders or investors whose pensions or life-savings are at risk, but they have families and neighbours and next of kin, and they have the damage they inflict on themselves.

With less monitoring that exists of the choices these people make – that they take their meds, how they handle their money – we have had to rely on a very imperfect instrument, the criminal law. Only when a person crosses this line can he or she be taken into care or placed under supervision. With some of these chemically induced mental conditions the results are as predictable as for a person deprived of food or water. Their health will decline, and they will be drawn either to begging or stealing to avoid starvation. To refuse to intervene proactively here is as inept as the earlier practice of heavy sentences for stealing a loaf of bread. To justify this on the basis of the other's free choice was to abdicate our own responsibilities. For in a community and on a planet where we are all connected, we are all called to be responsible and to assume responsibilities for those who cannot do so themselves. Simply stated, we are all our brothers' and sisters' keepers, foster family to each other.

The intent of this bill is to balance our general responsibilities for each other and our individual needs, strengths, and weaknesses.

The role and the necessity, as this amendment is saying, of having a psychiatrist or physician as one of the consulting personnel is just that, a consulting one. It does not place some people or professions in a hierarchy over other people. Rather, it uses them as a resource to determine if those we fear are at risk are, in fact, capable of assuming their own responsibilities or whether they need help. It does not leave these people to run afoul of the law before we can help them and place them in holding tanks and other facilities that are unsuitable. It provides help without being a formal patient in a hospital. So it can save beds for those that need them.

The amendments that are proposed here I think reflect what the standing committee . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the chair is being advised that the noise level in the Assembly is pretty high, and there are some very diligent, dedicated individuals who would like to listen to the debate who cannot listen as they would like to. So, please, I advise you. I know it's Thursday afternoon.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. The amendments that are proposed here I think reflect what the standing committee heard from a variety of people who appeared before us, and they reflect the collective wisdom of the committee on some of these issues. The bill is the beginning of the recognition of a problem that we have in our province. It is a really good step, but in order for it to work, I need to stress that we need the experts to implement the services, and they need the services. Without the services and supports this bill will be meaningless.

I appreciate the correspondence I've had with the minister in regard to a subamendment that I had, which now is being taken care of with the subamendments from the government. I feel it's necessary to specify in legislation that the oversight and implementation of community treatment orders be led by a physician. I believe that was the intent of the Standing Committee on Community Services. The intention of the committee was also to broaden section 8 of Bill 31 to ensure that community treatment orders could be issued in all areas of the province, even when there's no psychiatrist available. That is why the addition of "health professionals" was approved in committee.

"Health professional" means a health professional or a member of a class of health professionals as set out in the regulations or designated by a board or a regional health authority under section 9.7(1) or by the Minister under section 49(2).

But we neglected to ensure by stating in fact the need to always have a physician's participation in issuing and overseeing CTOs.

In my opinion, the optimum situation is to have a psychiatrist oversee and supervise treatment; however, this is not always possible. We know that there is a shortage of psychiatrists in this province, especially in rural areas. We are trying to facilitate, particularly in small groups, the availability of help for people who suffer with mental illness when they need it and as soon as they can get it. It is essential that physicians be involved to ensure proper implementation of standards of care to individuals who require a high level of care. Physicians are more familiar with long-standing, noncompliant, and potentially aggressive patients.

Prescription and supervision of medication is also a key component of CTOs, and this is a key responsibility of physicians. A physician has the training and expertise to prescribe and oversee proper and conducive treatment and to consult with the psychiatrist. Critical public policy issues such as this should be established in legislation, not regulation. We owe it to Albertans to ensure that our intent is reflected in legislation. We want to ensure the best possible care is taken when implementing and supervising CTOs.

I acknowledge with thanks the hon. minister's reply to my proposed subamendment and his effort to address that issue with the guarantee of a physician being involved in the first of the accompanying regulations, which now he has put into legislation with these subamendments. We are agreed on the substance and now the form of this matter.

I guess that when I was thinking about this, I had to ask myself if it was sufficient that this be put into regulation rather than legislation, whether the difference between the matter's inclusion in the legislation itself or in the first of the regulations that flow from the legislation makes any material difference in the implementation or the outworking of the legislation. After some thought and discussion I have concluded that it does. Regulations can be changed behind closed doors without our chance to review and revisit them in this Assembly. I respect this minister's judgment and trust his integrity, but no one wants to give carte blanche to what may happen under his successors or to what officials may lay before a future minister.

I was thinking about a situation I could envisage five or more years down the road. With continued growth and demand on medical services and facilities, there may not be a physician in every community near enough to respond to the situation every time it arises. Rather than placing a person at risk in a holding facility of the kind in which they do not belong or having to transport them to the nearest centre where a physician may be located, the pressure may arise to have a physician designate a paramedic or another staff officer to make this call. In fact, some medical practitioners approach that line already. I'm aware of former students who would obtain a medical exemption from high school phys ed from the medical doctor's nurse because she had a stack of forms with the doctor's signature on them already.

These things happen, but as long as the physician is personally and professionally responsible for what goes out over his or her name, the buck stops there. If, however, the right of determining a person's competence is assigned a step further from the physician, the degree of judgment and accountability that goes into this call is reduced. Such a change could be made in the future if the consulting professional is specified at the regulatory level rather than in legislation.

The scenario I'm describing in the medical realm applies to our role as legislators as well. Some powers, rights, and responsibilities cannot be delegated by societies to their executive officers, by shareholders to their boards of directors, by legislators to those among us who hold ministerial posts. We can see where the path of delegation has led over the past century and a half in our parliaments and Legislative Assemblies. First, the powers gained by Assemblies, what we call responsible government, were claimed by the majority party in those Assemblies. Then they were claimed by the cabinet, or front bench, of the parties. In the past generation they have passed almost exclusively into the hands of individual ministers and first ministers, Premiers, Prime Ministers, and their staff.

As an elected member of this Assembly, not merely a representative, I cannot abrogate my responsibilities as an MLA to another no matter how great his integrity or how sound his judgment. Likewise a physician, who is a member of a professional body that oversees training, certification, practice, and discipline, cannot delegate a professional status to an intern or resident, nursing assistant, or receptionist.

I'd like to affirm that we're making sure in legislation of the physician's involvement, the physician and possibly psychiatrist, and I believe that that's a really positive step.

In terms of the other amendments, I think that we recognize that this bill addresses concerns about a very small group of people. We have situations where families are dealing with an adult child, and they don't have the tools that they need to get treatment on a timely basis. If we require that the individual . . .

Bill 56
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply)
Act, 2007 (No. 2)

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, but under Standing Order 64(4) I must put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill referred to the Committee of the Whole. Does the committee approve the following bill: Bill 56, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 (No. 2)?

[The voice vote indicated that Bill 56 was approved]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:45 p.m.]

[Motion carried; Bill 56 approved]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the committee has to now rise and report.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 56. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 31. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I was hoping to do was ask for unanimous consent to waive the rise and report and allow the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to finish her speech, which I understand has about 10 minutes, on Bill 31. I thought it would be in the spirit of goodwill after the afternoon we've had if the House was agreeable to doing that. I'm sure she would undertake to adjourn as soon as she's finished if the House would allow us to go back into committee for the period of time necessary to finish that.

The Acting Speaker: Government House Leader, are you asking for unanimous consent that the Assembly go back into committee for another 10 minutes?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 31
Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The intent of Bill 31 is in consideration of chronic illness with a subset of the mentally ill population. It is in reference to the needs of individuals with limited insight who are incapable of making decisions for themselves. These individuals may be addicted; they may have chronic schizophrenia and have bipolar mood swings. Undoubtedly, there is disruption for their families as well as for society. Their life is falling apart, and they may not be aware. At present certification for treatment is dependent on an assessment of dangerousness. Unfortunately, we often have to wait until the patient becomes dangerous.

Bill 31 amendments and subamendments will enable professionals to intervene earlier. Some patients will be dependent for a lifetime. If we put investment at the front end, there will be benefits for the long haul. Every individual has a right to treatment even if they are not capable of making that decision. We must not deny appropriate care to this small and very difficult population, the majority of whom are unable to make decisions for themselves. It is not a coincidence that the main groups who care for this population, physicians and mental health workers along with families, are in support of Bill 31, and that would include these subamendments.

There is overwhelming clinical evidence that it is needed for this population.

I think that I would like to just open up the idea briefly here of treatment as being more than medication. If we're just going to talk about issuing drugs, we're missing the target. I think that in looking at this, therefore, we need to broaden the spectrum here of people who are properly trained within mental health and have the skills – that could be psychiatric nurses, psychologists, and so on – so that treatment, again, is not just prescriptions and medication but that treatment involves other resources. We're making them available through this subamendment, that I feel covers the total intent of the standing committee; that is, a psychiatrist, a physician, and on other occasions possibly a health professional, which could be someone like a psychologist or a psychiatric nurse.

I will conclude by saying that I am in support of these subamendments. I want to stress again that if we don't have the experts available and the resources and supports for this wonderful intention that we have, then this will all be meaningless. We must keep in mind that we need to look at what supports are needed and address them in other ways.

With that, I'd like to adjourn debate for now.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the House. I think that was very worth while to do. I would now move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 31.

[Motion to report progress on Bill 31 carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 31. I wish to file copies of amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly some distinguished guests from the state of Jalisco, Mexico. I know they met with you earlier this morning and with the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, and I think that individually we all apologized to the delegation for the weather that we served them when they came here.

The province of Alberta and the state of Jalisco have a memorandum of economic co-operation and protocol, which includes a Spanish language development exchange program and an educator exchange program. It has significantly enhanced Spanish language programs in Alberta schools, as over 10,000 students now study Spanish at the K to 12 level.

I'm honoured today to introduce my counterpart, the Secretary for Education for Jalisco, Mr. Miguel Martínez Espinosa. With him in the Speaker's gallery I would like to introduce the following: Pedro Díaz Arias, co-ordinator of teacher training; Ana Bertha Guzmán Alatorre, co-ordinator of basic education; Eduardo Díaz Becerra, co-ordinator of high schools, higher and technological education; Héctor Salgado Rodríguez, principal of the polytechnic school of the University of Guadalajara; Enrique Valdez Tort, director general of the Higher Technological Institute of Puerto Vallarta; Gerardo Acosta Pazos, co-ordinator of international outreach and follow-up for the international affairs office; Mr. Franco Antonio Osuna Garzón, director of international affairs for Panamerican University – and Mr. Garzón, by the way, if any of us have experienced this: Air Canada lost his luggage, and that's why he's dressed the way he is – Benito Gutiérrez Levy, chief of an academy at Panamerican University; Francisco Lancaster Jones, director of Canadian studies, Autonomous University of Guadalajara; Raúl Rodríguez, director of internationalization, University of UNIVA; Ms Mónica Sánchez, director general of international affairs for the governor's office; also from the governor's office, Ms Melissa Fierro, sister states co-ordinator; from Cecytej high school Hídalía Ahumada Quintero, principal, and Alejandro Fernández Paniagua, the state director general. They are accompanied today by Waldemar Riemer and Carole Pelé from our department. I would ask all of them to stand and be recognized by the members of the Assembly.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm likewise honoured today to introduce somebody from a very warm and wonderful country, Malaysia. It's the first visit to Alberta for the consul general of Malaysia, who is located in Vancouver. He is with us today. His name is Mohd. Hassan bin Bal. He and I share in common the fact that we have three sons, although his are younger than mine.

Malaysia and Alberta, of course, share much in terms of oil and gas exploration, the wonderful opportunity we have for trade, for importing and exporting telecommunications and other kinds of electronics. Mr. Speaker, our honoured guest today shared a luncheon where we discussed many of the partnerships currently under way with universities in Alberta and some of the other opportunities he has to visit with some of the nonprofit groups that are helping to make our Malaysian people coming to Alberta feel at home. We have about 1,100 people of Malaysian descent in Alberta.

I would ask Consul General Hassan to stand. He is accompanied by Tim Marriott on behalf of IIAR. Please, let's give them the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 42 grade 6 students from Brander Gardens elementary school located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Each year Brander school comes under the capable guidance of their teacher, Ms Natalie Gago-Esteves. She's accompanied this year by teacher Alissa Sept and student teacher Jocelyn Lee. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise. Each year I ask that the students who come help us with our job as MLAs by doing their job as citizens, by letting us know what's important to help build their community. I'd like to ask you to give them a warm welcome to this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I cannot believe how lucky I am today because on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview I get to introduce Lynnwood elementary school. Lynnwood is participating in the School at the Legislature program for the week. I'm just delighted that I got to be the person that is introducing them. They are very bright and inquisitive and asked excellent questions, I hear. We have 21 students joining us in the public gallery today. They are here with their teacher, Mrs. Heidi Medhurst, and parent helper Mrs. France Boucher. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also delighted and truly honoured to be able to introduce some child care operators and parents also joining us today. I'd ask you to please rise as I say your name: Judy Babyi, Patricia Drake, Le-Ann Ewaskiw, Roxanne Fournier, Kyle Dowdeswell, and Becky Quigg. They are here to express their concern and, hopefully, see some action on child care. Please join me in welcoming them to the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with an interesting number of introductions: two and a half. Of course, my wife, Jennifer, is expecting our first child in just a few months. As you know, Jen is a friend of this Assembly. She continues to be the general manager of SpiritQuest Enterprises. She is my manager personally and professionally. On the political side I often say that Calgary-Lougheed has two MLAs for the price of one. She also continues to run our charity, the Top of the World Society for Children, which leads me to my next introduction, a very special one.

Danaru Sherpa is a dear friend. He comes all the way from the other side of the world, the village of Phortse in the Solo-Khumbu Valley beneath Mount Everest. He's a great inspiration to me. He's incredibly innovative, and he's an extremely hard worker and a wonderful husband and father. His wife is Yangzen Doma. His 14-year-old is Nawang Tshering, also 11-year old Paljom Tsomo, and nine-year-old Pemba Neru. For over a quarter century, Mr. Speaker, he has helped to make dreams come true for Canadians who go to the Himalayas to trek and to climb. He has climbed Cho Oyu, the sixth highest mountain in the world, three times; Makalu, the fifth highest; Kangchenjunga, the third highest; and Mount Everest, the highest mountain in the world, not once or twice or three times or four times but a five-time Mount Everest summiteer. He will tell you that that is not the most important thing in his life, though. I will tell you that the strongest person I know in every way is Dawa Sherpa, not the biggest man but the biggest man in heart. He is gentle and strong, and I have literally seen him give the shirt off his back.

I say a big namaste to our friend, Dawa Sherpa, and my wife, Jennifer. Please rise and accept the warm congratulations of our House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you two people who are outstanding and tireless advocates for persons with disabilities. First, Dr. Austin Mardon, Order of Canada. Today Dr. Mardon was the keynote speaker at city hall, where International Day of Disabled Persons was recognized with a day-long fair. Dr. Mardon was diagnosed in 1992 with schizophrenia and advocates on a national and local level for those with schizophrenia. He is also a prolific author, space researcher, and world explorer. Dr. Mardon is the author of some 40 books, some in collaboration with his father, Dr. Ernest Mardon, and they tell Alberta history. They are presently working on a book that tells the story of political figures in the history of Lethbridge from all three levels of government.

The second person is Bev Matthiessen, who is currently executive director of the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities. Bev has volunteered over many years with numerous organizations and service clubs. She was instrumental in the creation of the Alberta Disabilities Forum, an advocacy partnership of 35 provincial disability organizations. Bev is a social justice advocate who believes in equality and fairness for all and works hard toward that goal.

They are sitting in the members' gallery, and I would ask them, please, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House six more child care operators and parents who are visiting the Assembly today to observe the proceedings and to express their concern about child care spaces in this province. Please stand as I call your names: Robyn Zimka, Patricia McEwen, Jan Lawrie, Sue Bowman, Paulette Prosser, and Colleen Ruhl. Thank you very much for coming. Please enjoy your day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly today a group of child care operators and parents who are visiting us for question period. I'd ask them to stand as I mention their names: Teena Tesluk, Leon Comer, Suzanne Vokurka, Jayne Brzezicki, Elaine Levy, Wendy Smith, Mima DeLilla, and Karen Sanderson. I'd like to have you all stand and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I introduce to you and members of the Assembly members of the Alberta Métis harvesting council and fellow Métis harvesters. These harvesters come from all parts of Alberta, including the most southern and northern communities. They are here today to observe the Alberta government in the hope that they will respectfully accommodate Métis harvesting rights. These members are: Wayne Hadley-Roberts, Valleyview; Matt Hadley-Roberts, Valleyview; Jim Lambert, Robb; Ron Jones, Leduc; Sam Stephenson, Boyle; Dennis Gable, Fort McMurray; Brian Hamelin, northwest of Cochrane; Jeannette McLelland, Edmonton; Pat Ronald, Okotoks; Robert Lee, Edmonton; Phil Leveque, Brooks; Ralph Servo, Edmonton; Josh Slager, Edmonton; Jordan Reves, Edmonton; Deanna Whitelock, west of Edmonton. They're in the public gallery. They are now standing, and I would ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My guests have arrived, no doubt due to the weather today and the large amount of traffic that we have coming in from St. Albert, and no doubt we'll get that fixed in short order with the help of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. I have 53 students and eight adults in the galleries with us, five parent helpers and two teachers from the J.J. Nearing elementary school, whom I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. The teachers with the group are Mrs. Christine Sowinski and Mrs. Jody Sekundiak; teacher aide Mrs. Rosemary Demers; parent helpers Mrs. Kim Ciampantelli, Mrs. Lorie Kary, Mrs. Wendy Battenfelder, Mrs. Renée Whitefield, Mrs. Jennifer Medwid. I know the school well, have been there many times. They're great kids, great staff, and a great facility. They are in both galleries. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four introductions today. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two outstanding constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Mr. Philip Rowe is a councilor and deputy mayor of the town of Vegreville, volunteer firefighter, and outstanding community supporter. Philip is accompanied by his daughter Jenna. Jenna is a grade 4 student at A.L. Horton in Vegreville, has been studying government and, I understand from her dad, has a very keen interest in politics. I would ask them now to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure again to introduce two more outstanding constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to the Assembly. I recently had the pleasure of attending the high school awards at Vegreville composite high school. The gentleman I'm going to introduce was the recipient of many, many awards, including the citizenship award, the Alexander Rutherford scholarship, without a doubt an outstanding student, an outstanding citizen of Vegreville. Mr. Curtis Steinbach is, indeed, a promising young Albertan. Curtis is accompanied today by his father Al, and I would ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. I believe Curtis is really interested in engineering, so we're in good hands.

The next gentleman I'd like to introduce to you, Mr. Speaker, and again to all members of the Assembly is the nominated candidate for the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta for the riding of Athabasca-Redwater. His name is Mr. Jeff Johnson. Jeff is a very active member of his community, raising significant funds for the sports complex in Athabasca, very involved in the local business community. He's a proud father of three young children, whom he raises with his wife, Kim, in the constituency. Of note to all hon. members in the House, Jeff is the son of our current MLA for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and I am thrilled to see that this lineage will continue in our caucus. I'm proud to have Jeff as a member of our team, and I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, again my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the nominated candidate for the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta for the riding of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and his name is Mr. Verlyn Olson. Verlyn has a great deal of experience both in his professional and community life. He has worked as a lawyer assisting farmers, seniors, and small-business people in the area; very active in his community, not only as a sports coach but a member of his church. Verlyn and his wife, Mardell, have raised three children in the community of Camrose and have recently been blessed with a grandson, Joshua. I am proud to have Verlyn as a member of our team, and we look forward to building our future. I would ask that Verlyn now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Members' Statements

Hockey Alberta Centennial

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last week I attended the Hockey Alberta centennial gala at Rexall Place here in Edmonton. The 100th anniversary event showcased the core of Alberta values. One hundred awards were given to recognize the contribution of 100 individuals, including coaches, players, officials, parents, teams, and hockey enthusiasts, people who encouraged and built a game enjoyed and loved by young and old.

I'm sure that many of the hon. members have fond memories of playing hockey: putting on the pads and lacing up the skates, tripping over a battle for the puck or sliding into the boards, skating down on a breakaway or scoring in overtime, all the while thinking and dreaming of the thousands of fans cheering you on as the TV cameras follow your every move. In those moments, Mr. Speaker, nothing else mattered. We all played in the Stanley Cup finals and scored the winning goal at one time or another. Even though it was fictitious, it meant the world. It was real to us. Of course, as kids we all wanted to make the NHL. It was not the money, though, that motivated us; rather, it was the love of the game, the desire to be the best.

Mr. Speaker, Hockey Alberta prides itself on allowing kids here in Alberta this same experience that we and many before us have had. I would like to commend Hockey Alberta and all the volunteers, parents, and contributors that make the minor hockey experience possible in our province. After 100 years we can reflect on the possibilities available in our next century of hockey here in Alberta. As we look forward, we must also embrace the past. By honouring the past, we can inspire the future.

Mr. Speaker, our colleague and friend the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose received one of these Hockey Alberta centennial awards. He has been a key figure in the development of hockey in Camrose, from founding the Camrose Sports Development Society to bringing the Viking Cup and junior A hockey to Camrose. He is truly deserving. I would like to acknowledge his contributions. He truly deserves this award.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child Care

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The need for accessible quality child care is no longer primarily an issue for single-parent families or a narrowly identifiable sector of our population. It is no longer an issue of party politics since the hon. Premier declared support for increased child care availability on taking office a year ago. It is no longer primarily a matter of the pressures of growth or an expanding economy that implies it will go away next time we have a downturn or when supply catches up to demand in the housing market.

Each of these angles on this story is only a small part of a much larger picture of what is primarily a human issue and an issue of priorities. I therefore appeal to the Premier to make good on his promise and to the government to move this issue forward on its agenda. This is a season when our priorities are challenged. There is the contrast between the warm fireside ads and stories of homelessness, between spending on a new gadget for someone who has everything and sustaining a basic standard of living for those who struggle to make ends meet.

In the matter of child care I note with appreciation that Alberta Children's Services is rethinking its regulations for existing operators. This is a good step and a necessary one, yet it is only one small step to where we must go to make children's needs a primary focus of public policy. To go further will take more than programs and institutions. It will take a shared commitment to build a child-friendly society. It will take a new approach that looks at each new initiative in Health, Environment, Education, Justice, Energy, and Finance and asks: how will this affect Alberta's children? When we do this, Mr. Speaker, it will be able to be said of us, as it was of Ebenezer Scrooge after his awakening: he knew how to keep Christmas with the best of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Awards of Excellence

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, 2007 marks the fifth anniversary of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities awards of excellence program. The program was begun to highlight the good work of individuals or organizations that enhance or enrich the lives of persons with disabilities in our province. The awards are usually presented on December 3, which is the International Day of Disabled Persons as recognized by the United Nations.

It's my pleasure to announce to the Assembly the 2007 awards of excellence winners. Faith Jahelka of Red Deer has been awarded the Gary McPherson award for outstanding leadership or achievement. Mrs. Jahelka has been an unrelenting advocate for survivors of brain injury and their caregivers since her husband suffered a head injury more than a decade ago. She has played a lead role in getting the voices of the brain injured heard. Her leadership and persistence were responsible in part for the creation of the provincial government's successful Alberta brain injury initiative in 2000.

Bill Hurley of Calgary has been honoured with the award of excellence in public awareness. Mr. Hurley is the game night entertainer at Calgary Vipers' baseball games, and thousands of fans look forward to his energetic performances as he interacts effectively with those of all ages. He's well respected by his employer and the fans.

The winner of the award of excellence in education is the Calgary public library. The library has had a long tradition of providing collections, programs, services, and facilities in a way that makes them accessible to Calgarians of all ages and abilities. In 2004 the library opened a diversity services department to integrate and coordinate accessible services.

The Grande Prairie Residential Society is being honoured with the award of excellence for community work. The society was formed in 1986 to provide affordable and accessible housing for persons with disabilities, and today the society has three major housing projects to its credit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Royal Alberta Museum 40th Anniversary

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 6, 1967, the Royal Alberta Museum under its original name, Provincial Museum of Alberta, officially opened its doors. Then Premier Ernest Manning and former Lieutenant Governor Dr. Grant MacEwan were on hand for the opening ceremonies. For the last 40 years the Royal Alberta Museum has educated, entertained, and enlightened Albertans and visitors alike. Both in-house and travelling exhibits displayed at the Royal Alberta Museum over the last 40 years have covered all aspects of our society, including nature, culture, history, and technology.

To celebrate this 40-year milestone, Mr. Speaker, the Royal Alberta Museum will be holding a four-day extravaganza from December 6 to the 9th. Admission will be free, and the celebrations include a behind-the-scenes open house, new interpretations on 40 of the museum's most exciting objects, and special movie presentations. Exhibits like the immensely popular Southesk collection will continue to be on display.

For these last four decades the Royal Alberta Museum has been helping Albertans play an active role in shaping their world and inspiring Albertans to explore and understand the world around them. The museum tells the story of Alberta and preserves our rich natural and human heritage.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask all the hon. members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating the Royal Alberta Museum on reaching this significant milestone. The name may have changed, but it truly remains Alberta's museum.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Energy and Utilities Board

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The scandals and controversy plaguing the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board have made all Albertans aware of the critical role it plays in each of our lives. The independence of the regulatory process is crucial to the integrity of the board and to trust, public confidence in its decisions. Last week the Minister of Energy said in this Assembly that this government "would no more go and influence the hearings" of the EUB than "attempt to change the decisions of a judge." My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier concur with his position that direct government interference in the EUB is inappropriate?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Energy and Utilities Board is a quasi-judicial authority, and there are rules clearly established through legislation that not only conduct the way the business of the board is held but also any interference by any individuals.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government spent $26,000 on a propaganda campaign in rural newspapers last week to support a bill many Albertans oppose. This same government would have the people of Alberta believe that it does not interfere in hearings of the EUB. That simply is not true. The Alberta Liberals have obtained a letter written by a top official of the Department of Energy to the EUB pressing the EUB to rush through a decision on the 500 kilovolt power line through west-central Alberta. Given that the Minister of Energy said in this House last week that interfering in an EUB hearing was akin to interfering in a court case, how does the Premier justify such meddling by his government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, at least the Alberta population knows what the cost of the ads were. We're still awaiting in this House the cost of the radio ads that the Liberal Party put out last spring. So much for openness and transparency from the other side.

I believe the 500 kVa line he was talking about is AltaLink. Those hearings, Mr. Speaker, are no longer proceeding. There will be a new board, that will hear the hearings on that particular line. There were many other issues that were assigned to it, and we want to make sure that it's open and transparent.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as an aside, if the Premier did his homework, we released the cost of those ads, which were last February, in a news release the day the ads began.

My next question is to the Minister of Energy. Is the Minister of Energy aware of any conflicts of interest in this case, the 500 kilovolt line, involving the official as executive director of the electricity branch who wrote the letter to the EUB, a Mr. Kellan Fluckiger.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the situation with respect to the gentleman in question I think is a matter that has, again, been dealt with, as have most of the matters around that particular piece of business involving a hearing with respect to a 500 kVa line, that was an application in and before the EUB. As I had indicated, I believe that I have taken very appropriate steps and used the procedures that are set out for me, the appropriate procedures to in fact deal with that particular issue. I believe I've dealt with that properly.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's well known that Mr. Fluckiger, the top government official who wrote the letter meddling in the EUB hearing, had a personal relationship with the top official at AltaLink, the owner of the project that he was supporting. The former Minister of Energy claimed that Mr. Fluckiger had no conflict of interest in his role with the department, but my question is to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why a senior government official is taking sides on contentious issues and undermining the independence of the EUB?

Mr. Stelmach: A couple of things. First of all, the hon. member said that they communicated the cost of the ads. I happened to miss that, so he has an opportunity to tell us what they were here in the most public forum.

The other is that the individual that's in question is no longer with the government of Alberta. Gone. He's retired.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, not only did the senior government official interfere in EUB deliberations; that same official does, as we say, have a conflict of interest. My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier agree that the interference and disregard for conflicts of interest raise serious questions about the entire process of regulating Alberta's electrical system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy took appropriate action with respect to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. We appointed a special chair to assume the duties and look at how we can make changes to ensure that the appropriate action was taken. A number of decisions have been made by that individual, and it's again to ensure that the confidence of Albertans is maintained in the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's well known that this same Mr. Fluckiger is the chief architect of one of this government's most controversial pieces of legislation. In fact, he was the one who signed on behalf of the government a $500-an-hour contract with a consultant to implement changes before the bill has even passed this Assembly. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier do the right thing and pull this flawed piece of legislation until we can get to the bottom of this, until we can understand the full extent of Mr. Fluckiger's interest in the 500 kilovolt transmission line decision?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the bill is working its way through the process in this House. We're looking forward to debate over the amendments that have been tabled. This is a bill that's necessary, and we're working very hard with all parties in this Assembly to make sure that we pass the legislation.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If there was ever a day for all of us to think about those in our society who are living without a home, today is it. Right now, as the mercury drops and the snow falls, there are thousands of people on the streets. Addictions, mental illness, abuse: these are very real traumas that lead to chronic homelessness. We are the ones who are supposed to help them, and for so long we've neglected this duty. To the Premier: when are we going to see a specific plan from this government and a real commitment to end homelessness?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I find it amazing that he's asking that question today because the member was present when we made an announcement with respect to our plan to deal with homelessness. We are working with the Calgary Homeless Foundation. We're also doing the same work here in the city of Edmonton to ensure that over a period of time we find solutions to an issue that's really plaguing not only the province of Alberta but others across Canada. As I said when I made the announcement, every Albertan deserves a home, and we're working towards that.

Mr. Taylor: The Premier is right. I was there when he made that announcement. He announced a secretariat on homelessness and a plan to come up with a governance model for it next April. That is a plan to make a plan. That's not a plan of action. To the Premier: when will the government commit to specific assistance to cities and towns in implementing their own plans to end homelessness, specifics like funding assistance with permanent support of housing or Housing First initiatives?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, over and above the $11.3 billion that will be going to municipalities over the next 10 years, we have committed this year $7.5 million for winter emergency funding for Alberta communities: the city of Calgary, $4.3 million, and that's for 450 spaces; Edmonton, $2.2 million. Red Deer, Grande Prairie, High Level, Lloydminster, Lethbridge: there are an additional 940 winter emergency shelters. That's in addition to 3,100 spaces that are already available throughout this province. We are monitoring. As of last night I was given the fact that there were about 87 beds available in Calgary and about an equal number in the city of Edmonton.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, last night they were all full. You know, what I'm looking for is a commitment, a specific timeline from this government to start shutting down emergency shelters because it has done its job properly and those shelters are no longer needed.

Today the Alberta Liberal caucus released a draft strategy for ending homelessness for public feedback and response. We're looking for that feedback by January 15. We will incorporate this into a final draft by the beginning of February. Just so the government knows, these are firm deadlines to develop a plan. We're committed to helping communities end homelessness. We're committed to helping people move beyond the shelter, Mr. Speaker. Since the Premier's government has not developed any policies yet, I'm wondering whether he will commit to accepting and implementing the Alberta Liberal plan for ending homelessness.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it sounds good that they're finally getting down to work. They get a paycheque every month just like anybody else in this building, so I hope they're doing something.

On December 2 Calgary occupancy was 1,955; available spaces, 2,042. That leaves 87 unused. Edmonton occupancy was 810; available spaces, 880. So that leaves about 70 unused. Those are the facts.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Métis Nation started negotiating with the Conservative government over a year ago to develop a harvesting policy that satisfied the Métis constitutional right to harvest outlined by the Powley case in the Supreme Court. A draft agreement was negotiated by the Métis and members of the government. Instead of implementing the agreement, the Conservatives betrayed the Métis and unilaterally cancelled the agreement. My question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, why did your government lead the Métis Nation to believe that they were negotiating an agreement in good faith and then suddenly cancel it without notice and unilaterally impose another, less favourable agreement?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the member mentioned "without notice." If I recall correctly, in the discussion on this item we extended the period by 90 days, and we held very intense consultation and discussion and dialogue within an additional 90 days. But I'll await the next question, and maybe the minister for SRD or IAR could give further detail to it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. There were 10 months of negotiations between this government and the Métis Nation. There was an agreement reached in principle that satisfied all the conditions of the Powley case. The Conservatives threw all of this work out the window. The Conservatives have given the Métis Nation little reason to believe their word means anything. Mr. Premier, your government has betrayed the Métis people. What plans do you have to restore their trust in your government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe Alberta continues to be the only province that has recognized the Métis in many different ways. This special agreement: I believe we celebrated – what? – 25 years of agreement. That was under former Premier Don Getty. You were a member of the committee. We are also treating all Métis settlements as municipalities, so they receive funding on a similar base to other municipalities. We've also extended the municipal sustainability initiative to the Métis Nations. So we are working with them and continue to work with the Métis, and we'll find ways of resolving this issue, I'm sure.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's clear from this case that if you're not a powerful group, like the oil industry or a big landlord, working within the Tory government is a dead end. Other groups like building trades workers, the homeless, the seniors in long-term care, and Alberta landowners have learned the same bitter lesson: if your interest conflicts with someone with more money or more power, this Tory government will leave you out in the cold. To the Premier: why does your government consistently favour the rich and powerful over ordinary Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, that kind of preamble is pure nonsense. I'd like to stand in front of this House and say that I'm not one of the rich and powerful. I happened to be raised on a farm south of Andrew. I didn't ever earn as much money as he did driving a bus in the city of Edmonton. I don't know where the guy is coming from.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The acclaimed international newsmagazine The Economist last week featured Canada's temporary foreign workers mess. Alberta was central to that story. It hit the mark in saying that the worst shortages are with unskilled labour. It also spoke of abuse. It spoke of the Chinese workers killed during unsafe work practice in Alberta. Treatment of temporary foreign workers is getting to be an international embarrassment. My question is to the minister of employment and immigration. When will the report on the deaths near Fort McMurray of the Chinese temporary foreign workers be released, and what will the government do to make sure this doesn't happen again?

The Speaker: The Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The death of any worker anyplace is always a tragedy, and the tragedy of the death of the Chinese workers is something that we certainly regret. A thorough investigation by occupational health and safety has taken time, but that file has been completed, and it has been passed to Alberta Justice for the review of Alberta Justice to make sure that the file is in an appropriate fashion. If any charges need to be laid, Justice will be the ones to make that determinant.

I would like to just respond to the second portion about: what will we do to make sure it doesn't happen again? Continually, in our government we work at adding people when it's necessary. Our monitoring has increased, and we've done employer sessions to make sure that we're getting more informed employers about health and safety regulations.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the same minister. Mr. Speaker, my father didn't speak English when he came to Alberta. My mother was born here and didn't learn English until she was eight years old. Neither spoke French even though they wished they did. They lived and prospered while they learned the language. Many Albertans have had the same experience. Many unskilled and semiskilled workers from places like eastern Europe are refused immigration because of poor English skills, yet those with English are readily employed nearby in Europe. We are losing out on a potential group of reliable and hard-working people because of rules that don't work. Will the government rectify this problem through its rapidly expanding provincial nominee program and pressure the feds to do better nationally?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have similar lineage from my grandfather, who did not speak English well when he came to Canada and had to learn on the job. The point that we're I think moving forward on at an accelerated pace is the provincial nominee program. We expect to have 2,500 PNPs, as they're known, this year. It's up from about 986 last year. Employers can bring them over and provide them with the support to make sure they're able to work and learn the language if they need more application.

Mr. Speaker, with the federal government we are working to add to our language training with a million dollars to an enhanced language training program as well as $12 million for English language training, separate from the enhanced training. We're doing a variety of things to try and help people who need language skills.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the second supplementary is to the Premier. Building trades say that some contractors use temporary foreign workers to avoid or undercut their work rates. These same contractors complain that these tradesmen won't work for them. Mr. Premier, what can the government do to end this unproductive war in our workplace, to create more harmony and make better use of Alberta and Canadian labour?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the construction trade organizations are working very closely with the minister and this government to increase the number of people in the workforce. There will obviously be some temporary foreign workers, but we're looking at expanding, reaching out to different corners of the world to bring skilled immigrants to the province of Alberta. We're working very hard to give our First Nations and our Métis opportunity to participate in very positive job opportunities through improved access and training in all of the trades. As the economy grows, certainly, we're feeling the pressure of a shortage of skilled workers. I do want to say that our labour laws don't discriminate against temporary foreign workers, but we're going to make sure that any issue that comes up is dealt with immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child Care Licensing Regulation

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. We all know how important it is to have the best child care possible for our children. Earlier this fall the Alberta government released the results of a consultation on proposed standards for daycares and other child care programs licensed by the province. At the time the minister said that the feedback would be used to develop the child care licensing regulation. What is the status of this regulation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand up today and give an update on where we are with the child care regulations. Also, I'm pleased to see that we have so many operators and parents that have joined us today in the galleries. Just to let the House and the member know, today we have launched the second phase of our consultation process. A consultation document and a questionnaire have gone up today. It's posted on the Children's Services website and does reflect the input that we have received to date and also has some revised proposed standards. I would encourage anyone that has an interest in participating to complete the online survey. As well, we will be holding some information sessions early in the new year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. You say that you've made changes to the standards originally proposed. What types of changes have you made?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We feel it's important to approach the development of these regulations as a partnership between government, parents, and the child care community with a common goal that the regulations support quality, affordable, and accessible child care. I can tell you that our suggested responses for discussion coming from the first phase of consultation are that we move forward on the standards where we had overwhelming support, that we reconsider changing the standards that govern the provision of meals and location of washrooms and modify the standards related to staff/child ratios and staff certification requirements. Again, the document is on the website, and I look forward to getting feedback.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister again: when do you expect the new child care licensing regulation to be finalized?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The consultation document and the questionnaire will be posted and available for people to participate online until February 4. Information sessions will be held throughout the province in January. We'll take a little bit of time to analyze the results. My intention is to have the regulations finalized when we proclaim the child care act in the spring of 2008.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Child Care

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development a shortage of good-quality child care options not only diminishes the numbers among a potential workforce; it could also lead to a dangerous reliance on an underground economy of unregulated child care services. Other provinces have addressed these issues with a comprehensive plan to tackle affordability and availability with phenomenal results while this government continues to simply dole out occasional funding to the problem here and there. To the Minister of Children's Services: other than intermittent injection of funds, which has not seemed to be effective in the wake of recent daycare closures, what is the ministry's plan to address this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I wouldn't call it occasional funding. We made $134 million available today for parents in this province to access the five-point plan. I would also remind the member that the five-point plan, that we have in place today, was based on consultation. It was based on what families and child care operators wanted in this province, and it supports parental choice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. New proposed regulations within Bill 4 only work to further exacerbate the problems facing the availability of child care spaces. Will the minister commit to ensuring that any regulations coming forth will not have any negative effects on space availability?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Just a reminder that what we are after is quality, affordable, and accessible child care, so I think that we have the same objectives in mind.

I would also make a comment on the effectiveness of the funding, that you had made a comment about. As I mentioned just a couple of weeks ago in the House, this past year we have seen 1,600 additional spaces in this province, and we have also seen over 400 child care workers come back and work in the industry.

As far as your comments, I think they're good ones with respect to the regulations for Bill 4, and I think that's all the more reason why we have to be very careful as we move forward and why I've committed to doing this with the child care community, with parents as a partner with government.

Mrs. Mather: And we're delighted to hear that.

Earlier this year the Banff Child Care Centre was presented with a $75,000 grant from the community initiatives program to assist with the centre's interior renovations. This is the largest grant of this type to a child care facility in recent years. To the minister. While there are a number of city daycares that are forced to close due to lack of funding to attract staff, this facility receives a considerable sum for renovations. How are these grants prioritized?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Yeah. First of all, just to comment, the project that you're talking about in Banff is a very good one. It was one that was put through the community initiatives program. To my knowledge I think many daycares are able to apply to that application.

In terms of how it was supported, they had community support, including the town council supporting that application.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Forest Products Industry Sustainability

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we learned of the indefinite closure of the Footner Forest Products mill in High Level. Now, this is just the latest forest products manufacturing facility to shut down temporarily or permanently in Alberta this year. Only a few months ago, for example, Weyerhaeuser announced the closure of its oriented strandboard mill in Drayton Valley, which will cease operation sometime this week. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is causing Alberta's forestry industry to close their mills?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is correct. We have had a very high number of permanent and temporary mill closures in Alberta this year, and he's also correct in noting that this is very unfortunate. The government of Alberta appreciates that in this particular instance 150 employees have lost employment, and we are working with them to assist with that.

With respect to the industry itself they're in the second or third year of sort of the perfect economic storm: high input cost in terms of transportation, the high dollar. Everything has gone wrong for this industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that this is such a hard blow to rural Alberta, what steps are being taken by the Alberta government to address the economic downturn in our forest products industry?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we're working closely with the industry to address the issue of global competitiveness. As I mentioned on November 6, I've appointed a special committee, three MLAs and three industry representatives, to develop policy recommendations that will address competitiveness. In fact, this committee met in Edmonton last week, and I had the opportunity to have dinner with them on Tuesday night. They have some exciting new ideas that address such things as cost savings in transportation and labour, new investments, and value-added opportunities. I put a high priority on this committee and expect to hear from them early in the new year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Good to hear.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. What is your department doing to provide support to the employees in High Level and Drayton Valley and other places around rural Alberta affected by these closures?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Works, my department staff, have been in touch with the mayor of High Level. Also, for December 4 and 5 we'll be working with Footner, the human resources department, and High Level to see what we can do for the employees. We intend to run advertisements to let employees and their families know how they can gain extra supports when required. We're very confident that we'll find other placements for them. I think the important thing is to deal one-on-one with the individuals, find out what their preference is, and find out what they're best suited for. The skills evaluation is taking place as we speak.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Supports for Disabled Persons

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. December 3 marks the International Day of Disabled Persons. The theme for 2007 is Decent Work for Persons with Disabilities and will raise awareness of the benefits of including people with disabilities in every aspect of social and economic life. My question is to the minister of seniors. People with disabilities are disproportionately poorer and more frequently underemployed. The salary for graduates with disabilities is 20 per cent lower than for other graduates. What is this government going to do to close the gap between people with disabilities and those without?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we were already at an event today honouring the international day for persons with disabilities. Those with disabilities, it's true, do not and have not had the same inclusion in the workforce as the rest of Albertans. It is in response to that that we are putting a very aggressive effort into employability of those with disabilities, trying to assess: how can we, not just with those on AISH but all forms of disabilities, recognize the many talents and strengths that they have to offer?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the minister of advanced education. While 50 per cent of Albertans have a postsecondary education, that number falls to 36 per cent among people with disabilities. When will the minister commit to providing Alberta's institutions with the funding, the resources, and the supports that are necessary to fulfill the recommendations outlined in the A Learning Alberta report?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, we are working on incrementally increasing the supports for all of our postsecondaries, not only for access but also for supports to the students with disabilities to ensure that they have a quality experience within our postsecondary system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Statistics released today said that there will be an increase in people with disabilities of 21 per cent. However, it looks like in Alberta the future will be 24 per cent for people with disabilities. My question to the minister of seniors: how can the ministries working together, i.e. yours and education, coordinate efforts, programs, and funding so that people with disabilities have the opportunity to go to school and not only go to school but find work without undue hardships?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I would say that's a very appropriate suggestion, that we do correlate a lot of the work that we have to ensure that they have opportunity for education, that they can have the skill sets that the employers would seek. In that regard, I'd be happy to see that we follow through with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

2:00 Capital Infrastructure Planning

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In his most recent report Alberta's Auditor General made several recommendations about process relating to capital infrastructure planning, guidelines for assessing and prioritizing capital projects, and so on. Given the Auditor General's comments I have some questions for the Associate Minister for Capital Planning. What have you done to specifically address the Auditor General's recommendations in this important area?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a very important area, and I'm happy to report that we've made great progress in this area. We have to keep in mind, though, that our capital infrastructure plan this year alone is a record $7 billion – it's the greatest ever in our history – 19-plus billion dollars over the next three years. That's nearly four times the national per capita average spent on infrastructure, so it's quite a challenge. The Auditor General has pointed out to us as well that we have taken some significant steps already to improving our capital planning process overall, and I'm happy to tell you that we're right on track, right on time in finalizing those improvements.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that's very encouraging. However, the Auditor General specifically indicated that you should finish developing guidelines that describe roles and responsibilities surrounding assessment and prioritization of capital infrastructure projects. So where are you with respect to these guidelines? Are they ready?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we are indeed finishing those guidelines. We have under way a number of very significant projects to assist. For example, we have a new capital planning manual coming out. We have a new accountability policy on grant-funded programs. We also have a new framework for capital projects, and so on. All of these will be completed quite soon, but we have to keep in mind, too, that our capital infrastructure plan has nearly tripled in size over the last couple of years, so it's quite a daunting task. In the end we will do what's right to secure Alberta's infrastructure future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I note that the Auditor General also recommended that Treasury Board develop objectives, timelines, and targets for reducing deferred maintenance. I'm certainly in favour of recent announcements of new buildings, new roadways, new schools, and new hospitals, but we must also do a better job of maintaining our existing infrastructure such as Bowness high school. What have you done to address deferred maintenance projects?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, in short, Mr. Speaker, we've done a great deal. I've worked very closely with our Premier and with our President of the Treasury Board and other colleagues here on implementing the Premier's new unanticipated surplus policy, which requires one-third of those monies to go to savings and two-thirds to go toward capital infrastructure projects. Of the two-thirds amount more than half must obligatorily go toward deferred maintenance. For example, when the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation rolled out 1,100 kilometres of new roadway work this year, over 800 of those kilometres were for repaving projects that sufficed the deferred maintenance area. I could give numerous other examples, but suffice it to say that the 350 additional million dollars that we put out earlier also helped a great deal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative government's incompetence and mismanagement of municipal funding is colossal. They've amassed $56 billion in infrastructure debt. That is bad enough, but the government is playing favourites. Instead of addressing the problem honestly, the Conservatives use public dollars as a way to try to fix their political problems in Calgary. Calgary hollered for more funding; now Calgary will get $393 a person. Edmonton will only get $357 a person. Meanwhile, Strathcona county gets $415 per person. To the minister of municipal affairs: how can you justify this blatant unfairness to the citizens of Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This ministry went out and did consultation in the province. In fact, we visited eight locations across the province, talked to municipalities, had input from the associations, had input from both the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary. There are different views. Of course, the city of Calgary wanted to have the funding distributed by assessment. The city of Edmonton wanted it done by population. Mr. Speaker, in our consultation the municipalities asked us to be fair, and that was the priority.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, is the minister saying that it's fair that Edmonton gets $357 a person, Calgary $393 a person, the county of Strathcona $415 a person? How is that fair to the citizens of Edmonton?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the allocation was not done on a per capita basis alone. The allocation was done on 48 per cent per capita, 48 per cent assessment, and 4 per cent by kilometres of road. On top of that, municipalities got a base of $120,000, and there was also an allocation for sustainability. This focused on fairness for all of Alberta. Do not forget that Calgary has over a million people whereas Edmonton has over 700,000 people.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, we're talking about per capita funding. That's what we're talking about. Edmonton is getting shortchanged.

My question to the same minister is simply this. What, then, is your message to Edmonton? Is the message: be happy with your status and accept being treated as second-class citizens? Because that's exactly what you seem to be saying.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this is about fairness. It is a focus on fairness. This formula is not a population formula alone. This formula looks at a balance. It looks at a balance for all Albertans and municipalities. In fact, when we were in Calgary this last weekend, the AUMA very much supported this allocation and this direction. In fact, if you took the AUMA, the AAMD and C, the city of Edmonton, and the city of Calgary, this formula met 85 to 91 per cent of what they asked for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In discussions with a Calgary columnist last week a very positive alternative for the remaining approximately $4.5 million which will no longer be spent on the Lieutenant Governor's residence was suggested. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Will you consider designating this available infrastructure money for a specific affordable, accessible housing complex in Edmonton?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we haven't made any decisions yet at all about where all this money is going to go at the time that we finish all of the plans that have been done so far. But I can tell you as Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation that it's my responsibility to make sure that we are very careful with taxpayers' dollars. I also believe that we have a very capable President of the Treasury Board and a very capable Finance minister, and I believe that when we finalize the project costs, all the remaining money will go back into general revenue, and they will address issues that need to be addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that accessible, affordable housing is a constant challenge, will you consider making accessibility a priority for a project such as this?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing along with the associate minister worked very hard to develop affordable housing options for people in need. I'm sure that the associate minister would be happy to provide the hon. member with information about the work that she is doing in her department to address this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again I'm referring to a specific project, and I'll provide you with a little bit more detail. Considering the tremendous contributions of the Lieutenant Governors, the Queen's representatives in Alberta, will you consider a name for such a proposed complex which reflects their dedication to public service?
2:10

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has several significant buildings that we've named after Lieutenant Governors from the past. Grant MacEwan College in Edmonton, for instance, comes to mind along with the Lois Hole hospital for women. I'm sure that when the time comes for Alberta to recognize the contribution of our current Lieutenant Governor, we will find an appropriate way to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Legislation

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In its first year of implementation the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act has shown some very positive results, with about half of the youth who participated seeking voluntary treatment after discharge and more than half reporting improved quality of life. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: after evaluating the effects of this program for the past year, is there any evidence to suggest ways of improving outcomes even further?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the results of the PCHAD evaluation are encouraging and demonstrate the importance of government, community, and families working together, particularly with troubled teens and teens that are using drugs. The evaluation results indicate high levels of satisfaction by both parents and youth in the provision of assessment and information, and as the hon. member mentioned, many youth have continued further treatment through AADAC's voluntary services.

Amendments to the PCHAD legislation are being considered to address areas for improvement. The changes would consider, for example, extending the length of stay, helping parents to be more aware of voluntary services, and improving family involvement, which we know from the evaluation increases positive outcomes.

Planning for the next phase of evaluation is currently under way. We'll look at the effectiveness of the service and examine the youths' and families' understanding of the voluntary resources before they reach the stage of filing a court order.

Mr. Marz: Thanks very much for that very excellent answer.

To the same minister. Many parents thought that the program was too short, while many of the youth thought it was too long. Is there any evidence to suggest that perhaps 10 days as opposed to five days would improve outcomes and reduce reoffending?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wouldn't use the word "reoffending" because we're talking about young people who have not in fact been charged with or convicted of a criminal offence, at least not in the context of this treatment.

This is a mandatory treatment for substance abuse issues, and the legislation is put in place to address those issues. The purpose of PCHAD is to engage youth, provide detoxification, and begin a treatment plan to which they can commit. In some cases an extended period of time may increase the chances of engaging the young person or getting to the point where we're actually resolving the problem, so we will be looking at amendments to the act to accomplish that. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force actually recommended that, and those recommendations have been accepted by the government.

Mr. Marz: Again to the same minister: depending on what substance is being abused, is there a case to be made for longer mandatory detoxification orders?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is evidence that some drugs, like crystal meth and cocaine, require a greater period of time for detoxification. That can occur, of course, in the mandatory setting or in a voluntary setting. AADAC offers youth detoxification programs that are driven by the individual assessments and have the option to extend time in detoxification as required. PCHAD provides a link to the youth treatment services that are based on what the young person needs. So it may be appropriate to have a longer period of time. Right now that's being done on an individual assessment basis. With the amendments which we hope to bring forward with respect to the act, we may provide for a longer time for that initial assessment period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Blood-borne and Sexually Transmitted Diseases

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past four years rates of HIV have been increasing, and for those same four years the government has refused to release the blood-borne pathogen and sexually transmitted infections strategy that would address these issues. My questions are to the minister of health. Why has it taken more than four years to approve this report?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question and one that I don't have a very good answer for. I have met with the chair of the committee and am very interested in the report and where it got hung up in terms of the process. I've been working on how we could bring that forward. It's a very important issue. We are seeing an increase in infectious diseases and sexually transmitted diseases in the province, and it's important that we address those issues. What I'm looking at is to see whether the strategies need to be updated so we can bring them forward on a timely basis. I'm not sure why the report didn't come forward at the time it was created. I wasn't aware of it at the time, but I'm certainly working actively on it now.

Ms Blakeman: So we could have it updated before it's actually been released.

All right. To the same minister. There has also been a rise in sexual transmission of HIV as 73 per cent of infections in 2005 were sexually transmitted. Is there another plan to reduce HIV rates, or will the minister finally approve and implement this strategy?

Mr. Hancock: Well, as I said, Mr. Speaker, I think the prudent course of action is to look at the strategy that was presented in the context of today's information and determine whether it's still the most effective strategy or whether another strategy would be more effective. That's what we're in the process of doing.

Ms Blakeman: Well, okay. To the same minister, then. Capital health's medical officer of health pointed out that this region has become the STD capital of Canada. What preventive action is the minister taking in the meantime to reduce the risk for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I should reference that the comment that the hon. member is referring to was made during a forum on public health that was located at the university. That is one of the strategies that's very important, that we talk about public health issues and that we not be afraid to talk about those public health issues in public and raise awareness levels. It's very important that we raise awareness. We in fact issued a news release and made a public statement in the fall about the prevalence of sexually transmitted disease and the concerns. If I remember correctly, I made a statement in the House on that. I think it was earlier in the spring.

The first and most important thing is to raise awareness of the issue. Secondly, the provincial lab is gearing up to be able to do more testing to make sure that people know how they can deal with it themselves, but it's important that we bring a strategy forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Strength of Canadian Dollar

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Calgary-Fort has a major industrial park, the Foothills industrial park, where tens of thousands of Albertans are working hard in hundreds of manufacturing companies. In recent months these businesses have suffered many drawbacks, resulting in some downsizing. One of the drawbacks is the high Canadian dollar negatively affecting the exports, that results in low production and job loss. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. What do you do, Minister, to address the negative effect of the high Canadian dollar on our Albertan manufacturing businesses?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we are functioning today globally in an extremely competitive economy, and Alberta is no exception. It is both the best of times and the worst of times: low unemployment and a high need for labour. The Canadian dollar, of course, putting it on par and even better than our American neighbour has meant that some people have to be looking at sharpening their pencils on productivity and innovation and ways to cope and still be competitive. It is a greater challenge. Our department offers the lean assessment. We will go in on the short term, help people assess how they can become more productive on the lines. We do industrial assessments for medium- and small-sized companies. We've done almost 40, and in our program . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Besides the high Canadian dollar, manufacturing management told me that their production costs are rising in spite of their productivity improvement efforts. One company told me that the new forward rates for electrical energy were about 60 per cent over their previous contract because of the supply/demand pressure in our province of Alberta, and energy costs are the highest cost driver. My question is to the same minister. What is our minister going to do to help address these production costs?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the cost of electricity is going up everywhere. There are pros and cons of doing business in Alberta, and this is one of the challenges. There are many other kinds of things that you can find in doing business in Alberta that are an extreme advantage, along with very many things in terms of our tax rate and the ability for workers to have a great service in education and in health care support services. The businesses admittedly will have higher costs in electricity than in some places, but across the globe, when you're using power, consuming power, you will pay the cost.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you. My question is to the same minister. Do you have any plans to help sustain the Alberta manufacturing industry like the government helps other industries in their time of trouble?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we talked earlier about how Alberta Works helps people who have had the misfortune of being unemployed for any reason. We continue in Alberta to have many advantages, many represented by ministers on the front bench who will tell you the piece of the economy that they hold dear, that helps them assure Albertans that they are getting the most competitive costs and the best living opportunity and place to raise a family anywhere in Canada. Where would you rather be than in Alberta to live, work, and do business?

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 90 questions and responses today.

Now we will return to our Routine that we were on prior to the Oral Question Period, and I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for a member's statement.

International Day of Disabled Persons

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the International Day of Disabled Persons. It was proclaimed by a collaborative effort of the United Nations in 1992. It is to celebrate and acknowledge the experience and capabilities of people with disabilities. The day is to remind us to promote understanding about disability issues and to increase awareness of the gains to be derived from integrating disabled persons into all aspects of political, social, economic, and cultural life.

Let's think of science: Dr. Stephen Hawking, Dr. Austin Mardon. Sports: Rick Hansen, Special Olympics athletes. Politics: Gary McPherson, a candidate for the leadership of the Alberta PC Party, and MLAs Percy Wickman and Weslyn Mather. Economics: foot and mouth painters who support themselves with their paintings, the kids in the Champ program who live with limb prostheses. Heros all.

But – and it is a big but – the intestinal fortitude to fight through all these hardships is theirs and theirs alone. Yes, there has been support. We've come a long way but not nearly far enough. The government must admit that Alberta's boom is a bust for most people with disabilities. There is a crisis in the human-service sector, and blaming it on a lack of workers is a cop-out when, in fact, decent wages for workers and obtaining decent employment for the disabled is a prime concern. In a province this rich a cop-out borders on immoral.

The Speaker: The hon. member violated a long-standing rule of the Assembly during that last statement.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Alberta Urban Municipalities Association

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Urban Municipalities Association recently held its 102nd annual fall convention in Calgary. This year's convention theme was Sustaining Our Success, which this government certainly embraces. It was attended by more than a thousand delegates from across the province, representing 284 municipalities. Mayor Lloyd Bertschi of the town of Morinville was elected by the delegates as association president. Alderman Bob Hawkesworth of the city of Calgary had served as president for the past three years. Our AUMA partners held this convention knowing that they will have sustainable, predictable, and long-term funding as promised by our Premier.

The association recognized the Premier's dedication and involvement in municipal politics by presenting him with an award of excellence. The purpose of this award is to recognize outstanding civic leadership by present and past municipally elected officials. It should be noted that our Premier received a standing ovation twice when he spoke and received the prestigious award. Also at this event the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing presented the Alberta municipal excellence award to a number of outstanding municipalities. They are the towns of Banff and Canmore, Parkland county, the town of Stony Plain, the city of Spruce Grove, the city of Calgary, and the town of Athabasca.

Mr. Speaker, the success of Alberta's municipalities is important. I invite all members to join me in congratulating the AUMA on their achievements of more than a century and for continuous success in the future.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my duty today to give oral notice of two motions, which would be, first, Government Motion 38:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, is resumed, not more than three hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

Also, which would be Government Motion 39:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, did you send me a note about a notice of motion?

Mr. Martin: No. About a notice of motion?

The Speaker: That's what we're on, Notices of Motions.

Mr. Martin: Oh. Sorry. I was thunderstruck by what he was saying.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I wish to give notice for the introduction of Bill 225, Mines and Minerals (Alberta Value Added) Amendment Act, 2007, a bill to ensure greater upgrading of bitumen in the province.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, a notice of motion?

Dr. Pannu: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to give notice for the introduction of Bill 230, Protection for Persons in Care (Clients' Bill of Rights) Amendment Act, 2007, a bill to ensure that the rights of seniors in care are respected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007 (No. 2)

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to seek leave to introduce a bill being Bill 57, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, (No. 2).

By tradition, Mr. Speaker, miscellaneous statutes contain typically a number of provisions which are noncontentious. I'll just briefly list those acts which are affected by this particular bill: the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act, the Legal Profession Act, the Provincial Court Act, the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, and the School Act.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a petition. It's not in order for a petition, so I have to do it as a tabling. There are 185 signatures on here. It says that we the undersigned petition the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to act immediately on the motion passed at a public meeting on the overstocking of walleye in Pigeon Lake, held in Thorsby on April 24, 2007. The motion to catch and retain one walleye per day, no size limit, on a regular license, from May Long Weekend to March 31 2008 was passed by 90% of the nearly 300 in attendance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today. The first is a letter to the hon. Premier of Alberta dated November 26, 2007. It's from the Alberta Wilderness Association outlining their concerns and their opposition to the proposed Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act.

My second tabling is a letter from a constituent, Mr. Lawrence Kaban. Mr. Kaban is concerned about Alberta's labour laws and is suggesting five significant changes.

My third tabling is also from a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Wilma Nerenberg. She, too, is concerned about our labour laws and what should be done to change the Alberta labour laws.

Marilyn Wells, also a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, is writing expressing her concerns, as well, regarding the Alberta labour laws.

My final tabling is from Bruce Nelson, and he is a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Mr. Nelson is also proposing five ways to change and improve the Alberta labour laws.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a card being distributed by ACTRA Canada asking people to support more Canadian films and asking Canadians to demand that big theatre chains and the Motion Picture Theatre Associations of Canada show more Canadian films. So far we've only got 1.7 per cent of the box office in Canada.

My second tabling is copies of letters from constituents Kevin Guenetta, Siu Yu, Robert Taylor, Miranda Mach, Trevor Semper, Linda Smith, Brendolyn Clarke, Brian White, Meredith Day, and Gloria Menjivar, and they are all concerned with Alberta labour laws. I will focus on one today, "Full legal recognition of bargaining rights for public employees, including the right to strike combined with reasonable essential-services legislation."

Thank you.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is from Leon Comer, who is talking about child care and the proposed regulations. These changes being proposed assume a utopian situation currently exists in the province of Alberta in respect to child care, be it daycare, day home, or preschool level.

The other tabling is from six constituents of Edmonton-Mill Woods expressing concern about Alberta labour laws. A number of requests are listed, and I will just mention one, "The introduction of a process for first-contract arbitration."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is an article from last week's The Economist, which I referred to in question period.

Another is the program for the International Day of Disabled Persons at Edmonton city hall today. That was mentioned also in Members' Statements by the Member for Strathcona and the Member for Lethbridge-East. Also, there was a speech there by the Member for Calgary-North West, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings here today. I've got correspondence from the Seniors' Action and Liaison Team. They're a group of seniors devoted to working towards a civil society. They're urging the government to withdraw Bill 46.

The second tabling I have is the appropriate number of copies of a government study from December 2006 concerning the Métis population in Alberta.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, the international day for persons with disabilities, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from Matthew Russell. He writes that Alberta's postsecondary institutions are not providing adequate accessibility for disabled students and suggests that the postsecondary system could learn how to do so from the province's K to 12 education system, which he gives high marks in this regard.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is more copies of letters from my constituents urging us to revamp Alberta's antiquated labour laws to ensure fairness for all working people. One of their ideas, for example, is to prohibit the use of replacement workers that break strikes. These letters are from Marinela Gonzales, Olga Berry, Joan Daniel, Patricia Lundie, Reynaldo Espiritu, Scott Brannon, Edward J. Robinson, and Angela Manning.

The second tabling contains two letters from two corrections officers, Trevor Hansen, with seven years' experience, and Thomas Keenan, with 20 years. Trevor states the changes corrections officers experienced over the past seven years but more profoundly over the last two or three and how they have taken on more but have not been appreciated or compensated by this government like sheriffs are. Mr. Keenan tells us how similar . . .

The Speaker: Let's go on.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. The third one is an e-mail from Donna Cardinal expressing her support for raw milk being offered as an option, especially from a health promotion perspective.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling is a series of signatures from my Calgary-Varsity constituents on a petition that reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

My next two tablings are from citizens concerned with lack of investment in Albertans who truly need a hand. The first is an e-mail and document from Dave Hughes calling on the government to immediately invest in supports for people with developmental disabilities.

The second is a letter from Linda Lyster outlining the negative and costly impacts of homelessness on children and urging the government to make affordable housing a priority.

My next set of tablings includes a program from Calgary's seventh annual Disability Arts Festival, entitled Balancing Acts, along with a poster advertising Balancing Act's visual art exhibits. I'm very proud of the organizer of this year's event, Nicole Dunbar, a fantastic former student from F.E. Osborne junior high school.

My next tabling is from Dan Hogg, a grade 10 constituent of mine who has chosen to exercise his democratic right by expressing his disagreement with requiring that at least 75 per cent of social studies curriculum be legislated as dedicated to Canadian history and requesting that I vote against Bill 215.

My last tabling is a $26,000 taxpayer-funded government announcement running in rural papers entitled What Alberta Landowners Need To Know about Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. This brings the two-month taxpayer advertising total close to $400,000.

The Speaker: Anybody else? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of my letter dated October 16 to the Crowsnest Pass Food Bank. As per my pledge of April 2, '07, half of my MLA indexed pay raise, $146.25, is donated monthly to a food bank until AISH is similarly increased and indexed. The Crowsnest food bank has 2,185 volunteer hours, filled 426 hampers, and helped 2,125 people between January and September of this year. It is co-ordinated by Carmellia Saretzky.

My second tabling is my donation for November to the Vulcan county food bank. It operates with 960 volunteer hours per year, preparing 290 hampers per year. Brenda English is the administrator of the Vulcan county food bank.

My third tabling is five copies of a letter from Marg Triskle at the Good Sam's facility in Medicine Hat, who feels that younger people who suffer from MS should at the very least have a small wing of the building dedicated to their needs instead of being separated throughout the huge building. This separation produces social isolation because the majority of the residents are elderly, and their needs and interests are very different.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 24 letters from my constituents Zena Rohoman, Carolyn Arcala, Mary Goberdhan, Muhammad Shahid, Anna Francis, Jeff West, Stuart Passey, Tracy Passey, Gemma Diaz, Rosita Hinds, Esmeralda Jose, Anita Escalona, Christine Dickson, Usha Belas, Maria Corpuz, Elisa San Jose, Deen Khotz, Sepina Williams, Nilesh Bali, Christine Buck, Mary Watson, Vilma Vasquez, Helen Savage, Judy Salicon. They're all concerned about Alberta labour laws and strongly believe in major changes to encourage fairness to all working people in Alberta.

Thank you.

Bill 212

Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and move third reading debate for Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act.

Throughout the various stages of the debate I have been pleased to hear the numerous insightful comments made by the hon. members of this Assembly. After thoroughly engaging and contemplating this innovative legislation, it seems that my colleagues see how it will benefit their constituents and impact their daily lives.

We have all listened to countless ways that this bill will enhance Albertans' quality of life. Powered by a strong investigatory agency, they will be able to voice their concerns about wrongdoings, and if need be, these concerns will be addressed. Whether the crime or disturbing behaviour in our communities is subtle or overt, it can touch and affect many people in unimaginable ways such as instilling fear, paranoia, and insecurity. Having a safer communities agency dedicated to hearing and addressing Albertans' safety concerns will help Albertans find true enjoyment and appreciation of their neighbourhoods.

With every story I hear of properties in our province being used for less than honourable purpose, I am reminded that this bill will be an outstanding addition to our current resources. Based on the various conversations I have had with constituents and stakeholders, I know this bill will be put to good use. Specifically, I am sure the province's Block Watch associations are looking forward to this additional tool in their quest for safer communities for their families. Their work is invaluable and ought to be supported and bolstered in any way possible.

I have also heard from aldermen in Calgary and police officers throughout the province with respect to this act. They have championed it as a new way to deal with the continual crime and disturbances that cannot be addressed through our traditional means. By targeting properties, this bill covers another avenue to strengthen our crime prevention and reduction strategies.

Mr. Speaker, crime touches us all and is, therefore, everyone's responsibility. It requires committed efforts from citizens, governments, police services, and community organizations. Bill 212 allows all stakeholders to work together and penalize criminals and peace disturbers in an effective manner. Be it rural or urban area, all Albertans have the right to feel safe and secure in their place of residence. Bill 212 will help achieve this. By ridding a community of activities which adversely affect the health, safety, or security of its residents or by stopping activities which interfere with the peaceful use of a property in the community, this bill will effectively make an increased number of communities more enjoyable and safe for Albertans.

I am honoured to have been given the opportunity to bring the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act in front of my colleagues as a government member. While this bill truly complements this government's many efforts towards safe communities, it is also very much in line with its approach to community safety. This bill involves working with and engaging Albertans as was done with the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force.

I am quite happy with the prospect of this legislation actually becoming an additional tool available to Albertans in their quest to continue and enhance our strong tradition of safe and pleasant communities. This type of legislation has made a huge difference in communities across Canada. I look forward to seeing it at work in our province.

In closing, I would like to thank my colleagues on either side of the House for their positive remarks and co-operation with respect to Bill 212 and hope that they will continue to lend their support to this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and say a few words with respect to Bill 212 in third reading. First of all, I'd like to congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing it forward. The hon. Premier, as one of his priorities about a year ago, asked that I as Minister of Justice and Attorney General put together a task force to address the issue of crime reduction and safe communities. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was appointed in the spring together with other members on that committee. They travelled to some 14 communities, held meetings, received input via the Internet and other fashions, and this fall produced their report. It was on November 6 that the government released that report together with its response to it, where the vast majority of the recommendations at that time were accepted.

The purpose of the report was to lay out a comprehensive plan, which, candidly, Mr. Speaker, is unique in Canada, with a view to crime reduction and making our communities safer. One of the specific recommendations in the report – and this is of course based on what Albertans asked – was that we adopt a safe neighbourhoods act. Indeed, the specific recommendations included the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays' Bill 212 because it was known to the committee. So the committee at page 49 of the report had this to say:

Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, was introduced as a private members bill in the spring 2007 session of the Legislative Assembly. This bill should be reviewed, adjusted as necessary, and passed, if not in the fall 2007 session, then as a government bill in the spring of 2008.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased that the member and other members of this Assembly obviously took that recommendation to heart because amendments were introduced. They were debated. They were passed. Bill 212 is a better bill as a result of that. It provides very much the thrust of what the task force was asking for in their recommendations. I can tell you that as a member of the executive of this government I am in full support of this bill on a go-forward basis. I think it will accomplish what safe communities legislation does.

I first became aware of safe communities legislation on becoming Attorney General in 2004. I had an opportunity at that time to spend a day or so with colleagues from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia. It was at that time that I heard of the Manitoba and Saskatchewan experiences. Manitoba brought in similar legislation in 2001. It is the principal and earliest piece of legislation of this kind in Canada. I believe that since then Saskatchewan, the Yukon, and Nova Scotia have brought in similar legislation. Saskatchewan was second, so they have had some considerable experience with it also.

Effectively, many of the situations which make our communities less safe are criminal in nature, but there are also other aspects to them, and that is what this legislation deals with. It doesn't deal with the criminal aspect; it deals with the health and public safety aspects. Essentially, what it does is disrupt activities which are sometimes incredibly difficult to deal with through the criminal law. So what we have is a situation where prostitution houses, grow ops, drug houses, and other such activities, which can go on in our communities and avoid the criminal law because of some of the difficulties associated with enforcing that, can now be disrupted through this provincial legislation.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that this is a good bill. I will be supporting it as, importantly, it is one of the very early indications of the response of this Legislature in support of the safe communities task force recommendations, which is, indeed, a good thing for all Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, then Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Please proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, support and thank the Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing forward Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. One of the main ingredients of this bill is the fact that residents will have direct reporting to police agencies and therefore help to make communities safer.

I would like to suggest that, unfortunately, at this time in Alberta there are a number of people who don't have residences, and their ability to report, therefore, is considerably limited. Of these who have no residence, the group that I'm very concerned about are children. A number of denominations not only in Calgary but in Edmonton and I'm sure in other municipalities run programs the equivalent of Calgary's Inn from the Cold, where children and their parents are sheltered in a church basement by, as I say, interdenominational groups. The stability that the children receive during the day in going to a designated school, unfortunately, is not paralleled in the evening because the parents line up at different churches each night to receive that shelter.

One of the ingredients of a safer community is having adequate food resources. As I pointed out in an earlier member's statement, 85 per cent of Albertans on fixed incomes or welfare are food insecure. Of course, children are among the most vulnerable. There are a number of creative programs that are run by nonprofit organizations, such as the food bank, that provide limited access to food, but unfortunately after I think it's five or six visits within a year, that is your absolute limit.

At a wonderful production of Theatre Calgary on Saturday night Dickens' A Christmas Carol was performed. The proceeds for that event went to the food bank. It was noted that no funding from the government supports the food banks. If we're going to be supportive of safer communities, such as Bill 212 puts forward to a small but important extent, then we have to take into account not only home security in the sense of having a home to be secure in but then having the security of food so that vulnerable individuals have the same type of opportunities as those who are less vulnerable.

Another organization that helps to provide security to children, to the homeless working poor, and to seniors is the Meals on Wheels program. I thank the government for this summer having announced a sum of I believe it was $5 million for this very worthy program, that helps children with their nutritional needs in a program called duck soup. It provides lunches for those children. Similar programs are happening in Edmonton and in our outlying communities. This program, Meals on Wheels, has been operating for 41 years. It has extended its program, which originally helped seniors who were at home, to now making bagged lunches for individuals who are in the drop-in centre who are able to work but don't have the luxury of a roof over their heads other than that mat on the floor in the drop-in centre, but they have the support of Meals on Wheels dropping off bagged lunches each day so that they can contribute to a small extent to the security of others through their employment.

If we're going to deal with safer communities, we have to also consider the vulnerable seniors beyond just the support that they receive from groups like Meals on Wheels. We know that from an economic standpoint as well as a moral standpoint seniors would like to be housed in their homes as long as they possibly can. In order to have the type of security that Bill 212 proposes, the seniors need to have the support. This can't all be put onto their families. Quite often the seniors' grown children live in other communities, and they can't provide the day-to-day support.

One of the things that would help with their security is bringing back the notion of seniors not having to pay the educational portion of property tax. This was an initiative that was taken away from them in the mid-90s, and it would provide them with some financial security and a safer community if the government were to restore that program. They do help some fixed-income seniors with their health, paying their health care premiums, and there is some assistance for extremely low-income individuals, seniors, living in their homes and trying to maintain them.

There are a number of seniors who would like to have greater security that are living in apartments, in rental accommodations, whose rents continue to rise. To provide them with the safer, secure communities that Bill 212 is beginning to address, then some type of control or ongoing support subsidy for those individuals who are vulnerable and could lose their accommodations.

Also in terms of safer and secure communities there are a tremendous number of seniors living in assisted living and long-term care where the ratio of caregivers to those in care has been dramatically reduced. These caregivers are doing their best to provide the security that the seniors require, many of whom are suffering from dementia and for whom these individuals are their only advocates. In terms of providing a more secure and safe community for those individuals, I would encourage the government to increase the wages of the caregivers, both the RNs, the LPNs, and the many individuals whose pay barely puts them above the poverty line.

Alberta is a wonderful province. It could be a more safe and secure province, as Bill 212 suggests, if we took into account the needs of individuals. We have attracted people from all over the world with our promises, and those promises stem primarily from our nonrenewable resource base: the oil and gas that is in the ground, the bitumen that is being extracted from the tar sands. To provide secure and safer communities, as Bill 212 suggests, then we have to make sure that the money that comes from these various enterprises, as the royalty commission noted, is sufficient to provide that quality of life for all Albertans.

We need to work to make Alberta a more inclusive province. We need to encourage immigration rather than just sort of a temporary taste that the temporary foreign workers receive. We need to provide them while they're here, helping our economy to prosper, with the same type of safe and secure communities that Bill 212 recommends for regular landed immigrants and Canadian citizens living in Alberta.

Alberta is a wonderful province. There should not be a need for a 10-year plan to end homelessness.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, Edmonton-Ellerslie, Red Deer-North.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to just make a few comments on Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I was very heartened to see this legislation appear because, in fact, I probably almost two years ago had a meeting with the Manitoba Solicitor General, and he was discussing a number of innovations that they had enacted in regard to law and order in the province of Manitoba. He described in some detail this basic framework that is outlined here in Bill 212. Considering the, I suppose, similar types of constituencies that both the Manitoba Solicitor General and myself represent in each respective city, his description of the program in Manitoba was very encouraging. I can't wait to see this functioning and enacted here in the province of Alberta, in Edmonton in particular.

I recognize from several experiences over the last three years that it's very difficult to target and close a problem house in a community. I also know that a problem house can be the source of a crime wave in an immediate area where certain residents might be engaging in criminal activity. It really just is quite miraculous when a certain house might be closed where there's known criminal activity because suddenly everything just changes and becomes like night and day in terms of break-ins and selling of drugs and prostitution and all other manner of activities that you don't want in your neighbourhood. You know, having a tool to target houses that are at the centre of criminal or illicit activity and just giving another tool available to the police is fantastic. I know that the police officers in Edmonton-Calder and across the city of Edmonton and in Calgary and other cities as well will welcome this with open arms because the traditional mechanisms by which you have to engage in surveillance and court orders and whatnot are certainly cumbersome.

Having the capacity to just focus on a landlord and on the tenancy side of the agreement allows the police to do an end around and save a lot of time once a house has been identified as a centre for criminal activity. As I said before, it's miraculous how a place will become safe and how criminal activity will disappear in the night when it's perhaps just a small group of people in one home that is causing the problems that hundreds have to suffer under when there is this sort of activity about.

We were talking, I guess about a year and a half ago, about bringing this very thing forward as a private member's bill. I guess the power of positive thinking and interaction between our government and the Manitoba government as well as Saskatchewan's – and I think even Yukon now has something like this – have brought about the potential for positive change here in the province of Alberta. Certainly, the Alberta New Democrats recognize the value of this, and we will support it wholeheartedly.

It's interesting to see. Manitoba, I think, was the first government that brought this forward and then Saskatchewan and then Nova Scotia. I know for a fact that Manitoba in conjunction with some other innovative tools has reduced the crime rate in certain neighbourhoods quite dramatically with this. There's another piece of legislation that the same solicitor general was describing to me which was sort of working in concert with this particular bill on focusing on houses. It's to move certain types of court activity into the neighbourhoods as well so that you had the swift delivery of justice within reasonably close proximity to where the crimes were taking place so that people who had been aggrieved and were victims of crime could see justice unfolding in the neighbourhood in a reasonably swift way. Again, this was a very positive piece of legislation that I believe is part of a package of things that we need to do to prevent crime, which is much more cost effective and positive as opposed to chasing down crime after it's already happened.

Of course, the keystone to building safer communities is to encourage and to properly fund the capacity for municipalities to engage in neighbourhoods. Community policing in its truest sense, not just some lip service to it, is the lynchpin that can make all of these other pieces of legislation function. When law enforcement officers are assigned to a smaller geographic area and engage in community policing activities over time with the same officer staff, it's quite transformative and the very best sort of crime prevention model that can help reduce crime and increase a sense of community and safety in neighbourhoods all around the province of Alberta.

[Mr. Lukaszuk in the chair]

It's the model that I'm sure many people are familiar with. I believe it's called the London constabulary model of community policing as opposed to what often is used in North America here, which is the Ulster, sort of more military organization for policing. I believe that it's been proven that the London constabulary model, if it's properly funded and maintained, over time prevents crime, especially violent crime and property crime, more than any possible alternative that you could have. So having the London constabulary model of community policing, Mr. Speaker, in communities such as Edmonton-Calder – and Edmonton-Castle Downs as well, certainly, can use the same type of model. [interjection] Yeah, I heard that there is a certain church that talks about the imminent Apocalypse, and sometimes you see signs of the imminent Apocalypse. I don't know if I'm seeing something like that now. Anyway, I don't believe in that kind of thing. I don't believe in it and respect the chair in all of its various forms. Certainly, we have to. [interjection] Yes, that's right. Nothing ever stays the same.

Bill 212 is a good piece of legislation, and the Alberta New Democrats will wholeheartedly support it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing such a timely bill forward. Clearly, there is a growing need to address some of the problems that criminal and disturbing activities present to the safety of Alberta's communities, not to mention the impact on the children and youth who live in these environments.

This is not to say that the tools which currently exist to deal with crime and crime prevention are ineffective. In fact, Alberta's police and law enforcement services do an admirable job of serving and protecting the people of this province, a task that grows more challenging in the face of continued growth pressures. Law enforcement cannot do the job alone, however. They require the help of concerned and engaged citizens who care as much about solutions and effectiveness as they do. Whether it is an organized committee such as the Neighbourhood Watch program or as simple as knowing who our neighbours are, law enforcement agencies have said over and over that simple awareness goes a long way to preventing crime from taking place.

The busybody in your neighbourhood that is constantly in everyone's business and knows all the goings-on in the neighbourhood may be intrusive, but they may also be on to something. It seems that we used to know more about those who lived on our streets and who our children were playing with. It seems that we used to be more aware of our neighbourhoods and less concerned about offending people. Maybe we need to be more active in our communities by helping our neighbours and observing activities that look suspicious. Bill 212 gives citizens the ability to put this awareness to use and allows them to monitor those who are disruptive in their neighbourhoods and hold them accountable for what occurs.

Not only can this act be useful in removing criminal elements and activities which interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of our own property, but it can also do a lot to discourage them. Whether it is prostitution, illegal drugs, or gang activity, we can make the business of crime inconvenient in our communities. Crime can be thought of as a disease affecting our communities. All diseases require a hospitable host in order to thrive and grow or a safe place where they may lay dormant until one day deciding to strike. The key, then, is to make our communities inhospitable hosts for criminal activities that affect the safety of our homes, our communities, and our children. Ultimately, we can discourage criminals from locating in Alberta's neighbourhoods and remove the influence they can have on our young people. This is particularly important in thwarting the activities of gang members.

Gang recruitment practices operate in specific ways that target young people in order to keep their numbers up and perpetuate their existence. This is particularly true in cases where youth feel more disconnected from their parents and communities. Gangs prey on this and provide the sense of belonging that these youths believe they are missing. By forming friendships with their peer group, new recruits may become desensitized to and more forgiving of the violent activity that they are eventually urged to commit due in part to a misplaced sense of loyalty.

Perhaps the most troubling aspect of gang behaviour is this groupthink that it promotes and supports. Gang success is based largely on destroying self-identity. What better targets than children and young people who are still trying to determine who they are and what their identity is? Individual identity and responsibility is replaced by the collective identity of the group. It allows them to remove themselves from responsibility and culpability and dissociate themselves from the real impact that their crimes have on communities. A study by the John Howard Society refers to this as the proud dynamic, sometimes referred to as the mob mentality, for normal reason and judgment seem to go out the window. Being a part of a crowd or group gives a kind of permission for people to commit the actions as a member of a group that they would never do as individuals.

Gangs have also become more clever, Mr. Speaker. Rather than only operating on the fringe as they used to, gangs are now trying to normalize themselves in the eyes of young people by becoming a legitimate part of the community. We see examples of this normalization in the popular culture that bombards our children and reinforces the impression that criminal activity is simply another lifestyle choice, in some cases a glamorous one.

At the same time, by entrenching themselves in these communities, criminals and gangs shelter themselves from scrutiny and attention by hiding in plain sight. The mechanisms of Bill 212 allow neighbourhoods to shine a very bright light on these and other interrelated disturbing and inappropriate activities in our communities, including illegal drugs and prostitution. This helps to remind our children who and what these people really are.

Now, we are not talking about sheltering our children from the world or placing them in a bubble. That's not the goal. The goal here is to reduce the likelihoods. By removing these criminal elements, we reduce the likelihood that our children and young people fall prey to these activities either as victims or participants.

One of the ways we prevent our youth from going down these paths is to reach them before the gangs do. The mechanisms of Bill 212 can be a very effective part of this strategy by working in conjunction with many of the things that the community organizations are doing right now. Rather than just addressing the criminal activity, community prevention awareness programs specifically target youth at risk and try to create a more negative attitude toward gang activity and gang membership. As funny as it may sound, making gang life uncool is one of the best means of prevention.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that whether it is gangs, prostitution, or drug houses, like attracts like. The more that criminal activity is left unchecked in our communities, the more it signals to criminals that these are safe havens for them. Silence is permission, and standing by because of either fear or indifference only allows these activities to thrive and grow. We must assure our children that we will protect them and that we will not let fear or indifference silence us when our homes and way of life are threatened.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 212 will go a long ways to help Albertans bring safety to their communities for themselves and their children. We cannot always control the influences our children are exposed to, but we can teach them about choices. I'm in strong support of Bill 212, and I encourage the other Members of the Legislative Assembly to join me in supporting this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. First of all, I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for introducing this badly needed legislation. The main purpose of this bill is to enhance community and neighbourhood safety by providing a way for people within the community to make a complaint to the government about properties that habitually negatively impact the health, safety, or security of one or more persons in neighbourhoods or interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of one or more properties in the community or the neighbourhood.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, will provide for a government agency to respond to these complaints and put an end to activity that adversely affects or harms a neighbourhood. I'm sure this bill allows for communities and neighbourhoods to have a say in the safety and security of their communities, and this is all about community empowerment and allowing people to be active in ensuring the safety of their neighbourhoods.

This will enable another tool for people to access above and beyond calling the police, who sometimes do not have the resources to effectively gather the necessary evidence to deal with some illegal activities. For instance, there may not be the necessary resources to conduct a full investigation of a possible house being used for purposes of meth production, drug trafficking, illegal liquor sales, or any other criminal offences.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

People within the community are witnesses to critical circumstantial evidence indicating illegal activities – vehicle traffic at odd times, noxious smells, and disposal of certain toxic substances – that police services could only determine through constant surveillance. Given the pressure the police face, this is another tool to be utilized for community safety.

A director in the Ministry of the Solicitor General and Public Security can investigate the complaint and take a number of steps, including informal resolution, warning letters, or application to the courts for a community safety order. These are all effective tools to discourage the illegal activities that may be harming the security of a neighbourhood.

This bill will be effective in putting more pressure on criminal organizations that use property to carry out illegal activities. It will also allow for people to take control of the direction their neighbourhoods take to ensure safe and healthy communities. [interjection] I'm not sure. They have the tools. What we need is a will. If there is a will, there is a way. The government has everything according to the recommendations of the task force, and my constituents are eagerly waiting because they have been suffering for a long, long time. This is a good bill. I am hopeful that this bill will definitely help the Edmonton-Ellerslie constituency as well as the other 82 constituencies throughout Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will be effective in putting more pressure on the criminal organizations as well that use property to carry out illegal activities. Investigators can also call in the support of police services or peace officers if need be, depending on the evidence. This ensures the safety of the civilian investigator and creates an integrated dynamic between the investigative unit and police services. A number of other jurisdictions have already passed a very similar version of this legislation. The provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, and Yukon all have brought forward this type of legislation. Bill 212 is very similar to the Saskatchewan version, and I'm sure it will help to combat crime in Alberta.

This is also about empowering citizens to take back their communities. It is another tool in the fight against illegal activities in our communities. The police do not have the resources to deal with all the complaints they receive. Even if the information is reliable, there simply are not enough police officers. This is a big question. Even though we had the task force and, you know, all the recommendations are on the table, I just want to know whether Albertans will see enough police officers on the road to protect Albertans. They are eagerly waiting because without a number of police officers, whatever we need, whatever is recommended in the task force – it is very important. With their help we can definitely reduce the crime in Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

This bill will create another investigative agency, staffed by trained investigators, to deal with problem properties in neighbourhoods where illegal activities are operating at this moment. Any tool to deal with the rise in crime in Alberta is welcome. This sends a message to criminal organizations and those who commit illegal activities that the people are watching and that they will not tolerate criminal behaviour in their neighbourhoods. The stakes can be high: meth houses, child exploitation. These are serious offences, Mr. Speaker, that need to be monitored by all sources, not just the police.

This bill provides that mechanism to help reduce crime. Empowering citizens in the war on crime is highly effective. People know what is happening in their neighbourhood and often can gather the evidence that is crucial in obtaining a community safety order, evidence that can only be discovered through proximity to the trouble property. For this reason, having a mechanism to allow them to gather evidence and direct it to an agency of the government for investigation is a positive step in combatting crime.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, this same legislation has been passed in other jurisdictions. This legislation does not change much from province to province and even retains the same name. The legislation improves community safety by targeting and, if necessary, shutting down residential and commercial buildings and land that are habitually used for illegal activities. This bill is very close to the recommendations made by the task force, as the Minister of Justice already mentioned, and this bill is critical in the fight to win back our neighbourhoods from criminal activities. This bill is definitely worthy of support. The Alberta Liberal Party always works hard and finds . . . [interjection] Oh, no.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, anything for crime reduction, making communities safe, is always welcome. I raised this question many times in a different way through members' statements, tabling letters, and asking questions about crime reduction in my constituency. It's a big issue. I hope that with this legislation and the task force recommendations, which I really like – the task force worked really hard, and most of them are worthy of implementation – it will definitely help to reduce crime in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red-Deer North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad to rise and contribute to the discussion on Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, and I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing this legislation forward. There's been a great deal of debate over the issue of crime prevention, and within this discourse Bill 212 has emerged as a very proactive and pro community initiative that seeks to protect the neighbourhoods of Alberta. I know that my constituents in Red Deer-North would embrace this legislation as I've had many discussions with frustrated constituents who've had to observe drug activity going on in their neighbourhoods and have suffered, some actually with physical contact.

Essentially, this bill would create a mechanism for citizens to report suspicious activities taking place on private property which are considered unsafe or threatening to their surrounding locality. As a result of these reports an appropriate public safety agent would launch an investigation and, if warranted, would hold the private property owners accountable for the threatening activity. The intent is to enhance the public safety of our communities through a more direct fashion than currently available via city bylaws and criminal legislation.

I recognize that we have previously engaged in a great deal of dialogue regarding this issue. However, I feel there are still some points we should look at before we close our discussion. In Committee of the Whole concerns came up regarding how quickly the directors of these public safety organizations would be able to operate. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, who brought this up, expressed that people could move in and out of drug houses as fast as they need to so that they don't get caught.

The questions, Mr. Speaker, are: how long does it take for a complaint to be resolved when we engage in the process suggested by Bill 212, and what time frames are we looking at? As this bill has yet to become law, I feel we can best answer this question by looking at other jurisdictions with similar legislation already in place. In Saskatchewan the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act is legislation that was created to improve community safety. It allows communities to shut down residential and commercial buildings that are habitually used for prostitution, solvent abuse, or the unlawful sale and consumption of alcohol and illegal drugs.

When this program started in Saskatchewan, they found that with the caseload at the time, they were able to begin an investigation within a week or two. Their successes with the program led to an increased caseload, and they are presently at six to eight weeks before they can get to a new file. This will be remedied in Saskatchewan by the addition of two more investigators in the new fiscal year. Overall the Saskatchewan Department of Justice has indicated that the resolution of complaints normally takes two to four weeks. The program has been extremely successful so far.

The province of Nova Scotia also has a version of the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. This has created a public safety investigative unit which targets illegal activity such as the sale of illegal drugs and alcohol, prostitution, and illegal gambling. Mr. Speaker, in Nova Scotia I understand there has been a definite sense of public satisfaction that something was being done to address the problem areas in both rural and urban neighbourhoods. The manager felt that the increased workload the investigative units are currently experiencing can be correlated to the public accomplishments of this program.

The province of Manitoba also has a Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act in place, which works by holding property owners accountable for threatening or disturbing activities that occur regularly on their property. The manager of the province's public safety investigation unit has stated – this is in Manitoba – that there have been more than 100 arrests and that 99 per cent of landlords have been co-operative in evicting drug dealers.

There have been only five repeat dealers among the 258 crack houses shut down since the Saskatchewan government legislated the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act five years ago. Manitoba does not have statistics that indicate reaction times. They prioritize each complaint based on its seriousness; for example, if children are at risk or if there is an imminent threat of violence. Due to the degree of complaints they receive and their current resources, more serious complaints take precedence. This circumstance varies the reaction times. Some complaints are dealt with rather quickly while others are handled over an extended period of time. Mr. Speaker, it seems logical to assume that enacting Bill 212 will play out in a very similar fashion as in the provinces that have been mentioned although we can certainly learn from them as we move forward.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the House that these other provinces have reported an overwhelming success rate in reducing crime in their communities. I would also bring up that with the additional niche role of this legislation and its agency, the traditional involvement of our police services is enhanced, not hindered. This synergy has led to the types of accomplishments that have been observed in these jurisdictions.

Safer community initiatives in other provinces have successfully helped people protect themselves and their properties and reduced the fear of crime by means of greater diligence and accurate reporting of suspicious incidents to the police and by fostering a community spirit. Communities with problem areas will keep investigators busy. This is a fact. However, with this legislation the message is being conveyed that law-abiding citizens won't tolerate criminal activities in their neighbourhoods. As this sinks in, it's reasonable to conclude that communities will shift from a stance of fixing their problem areas to one of maintaining the safety and order in their locales. In the end this community-based approach to crime prevention is an important one which has enjoyed a tremendous degree of success in other provincial jurisdictions.

I would conclude that the passage of Bill 212 would be in the best interests of all Albertan communities, and I urge my colleagues to support it. Thank you.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to add my remarks to Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, in third reading. I appreciate the hon. Member for Red Deer-North and her comments about the possible effects of this bill because in third reading we're talking about the effects of the bill. I'm really glad to hear that in other jurisdictions, in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, there has been positive feedback about the effect of their legislation, that it really makes a difference in the community. As I mentioned previously, in second reading, I meet on a regular basis with a group in my community called the safe and caring communities committee, which is obviously the committee that needs to look at this kind of legislation and the effect of this legislation.

I think that what is really important is the proper follow-up to this bill. It's one thing to pass legislation in this House, but it's another thing to trace how it's going to be followed up in the community. So, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I expect that it's probably the Solicitor General's department that needs to follow up on this and to especially educate the police so that they can educate the community to be able to put this into practice.

In our safe and caring communities committee that meets on a regular basis there are Edmonton Police Service constables that meet with us so that to the extent that they are aware of this kind of legislation when it is finally enacted, then they can help people in the community to be educated to look for signs in the community of the kind of criminal activity that this bill is dedicated to investigating.

In terms of the effect I noticed that there is a very fine website that the Saskatchewan government, Saskatchewan Justice, has to educate the public to look for the signs of when there are buildings that are being misused for criminal activity. On their website they ask the question: what should I look for in my neighbourhood? And they list common signs of illegal activity. Alone any of these activities or signs may not necessarily mean that drug dealing, drug producing, substance abuse, prostitution, or any variety of other illegal activities are occurring on a property; however, a frequency of these signs would lead one to want to do something about it. So this legislation outlines the process that a person can pursue to deal with their concerns.

What I'm concerned about is that if this bill is truly to be effective, we have a similar kind of website and a similar kind of educational process so that people are alerted to what the signs are that they should be watching for. Some of these signs of a particular building include frequent visitors at all times of the day and night, frequent late night activity, windows blackened or curtains always drawn, visitors with expensive vehicles coming up – Mr. Speaker, through this committee that I meet with, that has been reported in terms of some buildings in our neighbourhoods, so I think that's really an important factor – unfriendly people who appear to be secretive about their activities, people watching cars suspiciously as they pass by, extensive investment in home security, garbage that contains numerous bottles and containers, particularly chemical containers, and putting garbage out in another neighbour's collection area. That's a useful list.

I think that in the follow-up to this kind of legislation we need to have that kind of publicity because this bill I think is about empowering people in the community to assist.

The Deputy Speaker: The time for this order of business has elapsed. I will now call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays to close debate on Bill 212.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a great honour and privilege to bring this legislation forward on behalf of the constituency of Calgary-Hays. I also appreciate all the supportive comments that were voiced during third reading. If passed, this act will work to make our great Alberta communities even stronger and more welcoming to good, hard-working Alberta families, business owners, and associations.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are smart people who are well connected and in tune with their communities. They know when something is off. I am glad that we as legislators are recognizing the tremendous resource that is at our disposal for the combat against activities which slowly eat away at our quality of life. Alberta communities on the whole are overwhelmingly safe and friendly. Families flourish, grow, and thrive in our province. We chat with our neighbour, have social events to stay connected, and bring our children to these activities to make friends.

However, there can be trouble spots in any community. These areas require a bit of help to eliminate any inappropriate behaviour. With this bill Albertans can feel comfortable about calling their local safer community and neighbourhoods agency when they observe a lot of suspicious traffic on their streets, when there is rowdy and disturbing behaviour on a property, or if they constantly find paraphernalia in certain locations. Communities are for raising families and enjoying our prosperity and good health. They should not be a place which is overshadowed by illegal activities or disturbing behaviours as is sometimes the case.

Mr. Speaker, our police services work nonstop to keep communities as clean as possible. They do a remarkable job. I commend them for that and have the highest respect for each man and woman who wears a uniform. I hope the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act helps ease the load of our protectors. As was demonstrated by my colleagues, I believe that our current law enforcement services stand to gain tremendously from the tools this legislation brings. I am confident that having the ability to shut down a property or evict certain troublemakers is a good complement to our highly developed systems. I look forward to seeing Alberta's strong police services work with the safer communities and neighbourhoods agencies to achieve greater peace where our homes and families are rooted.

I thank all the members who spoke in favour of Bill 212. I kindly ask my colleagues to support this bill on behalf of all Albertans and our great province. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 212 read a third time] head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 214
Healthy Futures Act

[Debate adjourned November 26: Mr. Coutts speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and speak in support of a different bill, which is Bill 214, Healthy Futures Act. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for introducing this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to require government policy decisions to undergo a health impact assessment to examine a policy's effect on a wide range of factors like income, education, and environment that influence the health of our society and to ensure that government decisions that could potentially affect the health of Albertans are subject to the greatest scrutiny to promote the protection, enhancement, and sustainability of the health of Albertans. A health impact assessment is a decision-making tool for predicting the effect of a proposed activity on the health of the population.

The World Health Organization supports the use of health impact assessments. HIA are based on four values. These values provide a platform from which the benefits of HIA can be derived and link HIA to the policy environment in which an HIA is being undertaken. The four values are democracy, equity, sustainable development, and ethical use of evidence. Democracy: allowing people to participate in the development and implementation of the policies, programs, or projects that may impact their lives. Equity: a health impact assessment assesses the distribution of impacts from a proposal on the whole population, with a particular reference to how the proposal will affect vulnerable people in terms of age, gender, ethnic background, and socioeconomic status. Sustainable development: both short- and long-term impacts are considered along with the obvious and less obvious impacts. Ethical use of evidence: the best available quantitative and qualitative evidence must be identified and used in the assessment. A wide variety of evidence should be collected using the best possible methods.

The EUB currently considers applications on a project-by-project basis, which results in short-term decision-making that doesn't consider environmental or health impacts. The perfect example of this is how completely unprepared the government was for the pace of development in northern Alberta. Former EUB chairman Neil McCrank commented to the Calgary Herald on March 15, Mr. Speaker, and I quote: we should look at the possibility of regional hearings where we examine the broader issues, the broader societal and environmental issues. It is expected that McCrank would be familiar with the flaws in the current process and sees a cumulative assessment as necessary as we look toward the future.

Mr. Speaker, oil sands development on the scale that we have in Alberta is bound to have an impact on the environment and, consequently, on the health of nearby residents, yet development continues with little consideration for the health of the community. Conducting health impact assessments on proposed developments would allow decision-makers to consider both short- and long-term impacts and prepare to mitigate potential health risks. According to the Radke report there are about 3,000 oil sands lease agreements with the provincial government, totalling 49,000 square kilometres. Approximately 97,000 square kilometres, or 69 per cent, of leasable oil sands areas are still available. For such an enormous geographic area with so much development the government should have a clear idea of what the impacts will be.

The 2006 urban service area population estimate represents an increase of 27,989 residents, or 77 per cent, an average annual increase of 8 and a half per cent per year. The 2006 population also includes some shadow population living in motels and campgrounds in the Fort McMurray urban service area. During the same seven-year period the number of people living in camps increased significantly and in the summer of 2006 stood at 10,442. Quite rapid population increases have implications for the entire community.

Mr. Speaker, the area northeast of the capital region centred in Strathcona and Sturgeon counties is within easy reach of the one million residents of greater Edmonton, and within 500 kilometres of the oil sands development around Fort McMurray. It is a prime area for growth in the oil and bitumen processing industry.

According to the Inventory of Major Alberta Projects, March

2007, there are potentially 12 more upgraders on the horizon. These upgraders, Mr. Speaker, would have an impact on air. They give off numerous harmful emissions, including sulphur dioxide and nitrogen dioxide, volatile organic compounds, acids, ammonia, et cetera, and they require a large amount of water for processing. The key issues relate to the amount of surface and groundwater use in the extraction process, the overall impact on the quality of surface and groundwater, the level of greenhouse gas and other air emissions, land disturbance and the size of the footprints on the land base, land reclamation, and the impacts on wildlife, endangered species and population health. Health impact assessments are a prominent part of the Alberta Liberal Party's health policy, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 214 ensures that prevention and planning will secure a healthy future for all Albertans while maintaining our economic advantage. This bill enables health objectives to be considered on par with the socioeconomic and environmental objectives, bringing sustainable development closer. Development is crucial, Mr. Speaker, to Alberta's continued economic success, but such development must be sustainable and carefully planned.

The quality of public policy decision-making needs to be improved by taking the health of Albertans into consideration. The promotion and protection of health is essential to the well-being of society as a whole. This is a crucial time in Alberta's history, and we need to make the right decision to guide Albertans into the future. It is more sensible and cost-effective to focus on prevention rather than dealing with the problem created by unhealthy public policy, Mr. Speaker.

I think this bill is worthy of support, and definitely I'll support this bill introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. The Healthy Futures Act would require health impact assessments to be conducted for any major government project. These assessments would scrutinize government proposals in regard to the effect on public health. The focus would be on the potential effects on income, poverty, education, and the environment, among other things. Further, Bill 214 proposes the creation of a new committee which would collect and review all assessments and provide a generalized yearly analysis of the health regime. Bill 214 then aims to publicize all human impact assessments for public review before any projects are approved.

Mr. Speaker, if misunderstood, these assessments could precipitate misguided outcries. An example comes to mind. In February of 1998 Alberta Health released the Assessment of Respiratory Disorders in Relation to Solution Gas Flaring Activities in Alberta. Within the report no significant correlation between flaring and asthma was established, yet the fact that the assessment was conducted at all elevates unnecessary suspicion and fear in the public. Numerous articles were written regarding the potential effects of gas flaring in Alberta. Even those studies performed thus far negate any claims of harm. Public health impact assessments have the potential to become a public forum of opinion rather than informed decisions on empirical evidence.

Another concern is that the analysis of the data compiled by health impact assessments is subject to a significant degree of personal judgment and, therefore, is subject to misrepresentation or misappropriation. Mr. Speaker, personal judgment can often challenge the empirical data to represent a certain outcome. According to a May 1997 World Health Organization report . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time for this order of business is concluded. I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and my thanks to everyone that did stand up and participate in the debate on Bill 214, the Healthy Futures Act. I listened carefully to the points that were raised by members of the government caucus. You know, in going over the notes that I made, I really didn't hear good arguments as to why this particular bill shouldn't be passed. One of the strongest ones was, "Well, we can't do it because we're so short of physicians," which didn't strike me as a particularly good reason not to actually bring in something like health impact assessments. One person even said: health impact assessments are okay, just not this bill. Well, I'll come back to that a little later because I think there's something else going on here. We had another member who seemed to think that the bill was about joining a fitness club and some sort of wellness lifestyle and: get your vaccination, and everything will be good.

Really, the bill was based, in fact, on an environmental impact assessment, which this government currently uses or professes to use. That's the same sort of setup, and it is intended to be evidence-based. So contrary to what the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was just saying, the whole point of this is that you gather information and then decide whether, in fact, it is a good idea on the balance of all things considered to proceed with a particular kind of development, not only one that government is doing itself or is funding or licensing in a large way. I think that's important, that it is evidence-based; it is not subjective. But it does require the government to work together.

I heard a lot of, "Oh, we couldn't possibly," but no reasons as to why that couldn't happen. It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, because at the very same time that you often hear members of the government caucus raising great alarm over the rate at which the health budget is increasing, when you put something in front of them that says, "Okay. Let's take a step back. Let's take a long-term approach to public health and wellness. Let's look at what we're developing in the province that may be affecting our health and costing us a lot of money, and let's do something about it," it's, "Oh, well, gee. No. Maybe not that. It's a good idea, but not this bill."

What I think might be happening here, Mr. Speaker, is that like many great Liberal ideas, they get pooh-poohed by the government caucus, but I suspect that the health impact assessment will miraculously be reincarnated as a government bill. We've seen that one before. We've got a health workforce strategy that the government just brought in. But oh, my goodness, when it was raised by the Liberal opposition, "Oh, we couldn't possibly; absolutely not." Or maybe the family violence bill that was originally brought in by the previous Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Beverly by two, Alice Hanson. Or we've just had a bill come through on promoting awareness of personal directives. In fact, that's another policy position that is in the Alberta Liberal health policy book, called the red book, Creating a Healthy Future. So we have some 20-odd policies in here that, interestingly enough, are making their way into government policy. They don't want to give the Liberals credit, but there it is. This document has been out since 2003, and we're slowly seeing it turn up in government policy.

I suspect, Mr. Speaker, and I'm taking heart, that we will in fact see health impact assessments brought into place. This is an idea that Alberta needs. We need to balance industrial development with environmental protection and with public health and wellness. As I said, we have environmental impact assessments. Next I think we will see health impact assessments. That's what we need to have, or we could be a very, very wealthy province with a lot of not very well people in it and not a lot of environment to support us once that development is gone. I don't think anybody in this Assembly wants to see that.

This is a very practical idea, and I expect that we will see it come back. I'm glad that a number of people got a chance to explore the idea. They could save themselves a lot of time if they'd like to vote for it now, but I suspect – and it's kind of sad – that just the very fact that it was brought forward by a member of the Official Opposition is enough for the government members to not support it, although, in fact, if they actually did look at it, or if it was coming from one of their members, they would support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for second reading of Bill 214 lost]

Bill 215
School (Canadian History Content)
Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in the Assembly as the sponsor of Bill 215, the School (Canadian History Content) Amendment Act, 2007. The central amendment to the School Act proposed through Bill 215 would enable the minister to prescribe a required number of hours of instruction in Canadian history for social studies courses in grades 10, 11, and 12, which shall be not less than 75 per cent of the total number of hours for each course.

Mr. Speaker, since the time I first introduced Bill 215 in the House, I have received lots of encouragement and support on the principle of the bill; that is, to have more Canadian history study in school. Support was expressed in e-mails, letters to the editor, editorial columns, conversations. They are from individuals and organizations such as the Calgary Military Museum, the Historical Society of Alberta, history tellers, and book publishers. An interesting fact is that a few weeks ago a readership polled by the Calgary Herald indicated that 86 per cent of respondents agree that we need to learn and teach Canadian history in school. I would like to thank those who expressed their support for learning and teaching Canadian history.

Of course, like any matter of public interest, there is opposition and concern on the bill. I would like to address this concern as follows. The current School Act allows the minister to prescribe the content of school courses, so Bill 215 is just enabling that. It's not new; it's not a strange legislative process to specify content of school courses. The draft of Bill 215 currently specifies that the social studies courses must contain at least 75 per cent of Canadian history content. I plan to introduce an amendment to change 75 to 50 once the bill gets to committee stage, but it must be the first 50 per cent.

Bill 215 doesn't specify when the change in Canadian history content must be made in the curriculum. Certainly, I recognize the great effort spent developing and implementing the curriculum, so I leave the timing of the inclusion of Canadian history content to the next planned changes either in textbooks or teaching materials or the next overhaul of the curriculum. One university professor told me that Canadian history should be taught right at the beginning as part of the bachelor's degree in education or teacher professional development so that they can teach it in school.

In other words, Bill 215 doesn't and certainly doesn't propose to throw away everything now and to start all over. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Bill 215 addresses the why and the what, not the how and the when, why we need to study and teach knowledge about our nation and what the content of our history is, the knowledge of our nation's past. The how and when are up to the experts, up to our hon. minister: the timing of the changes.

With that clarification, I can talk about the principle of the bill, but before I do that, I realize that the order of business in the House at the moment is not favourable for Bill 215. At best it can only be debated in second reading before the session ends, so I call on Albertans and my colleagues in the House to continue this initiative of requiring the learning and teaching of Canadian history. I will introduce similar legislation when the next opportunity arises.

Now, I would like to articulate in this Assembly that Bill 215 will serve a practical education purpose, will play a great role in enhancing societal awareness of Canadian identity and culture. Canada is defined by its land, people, and culture. Our Canada is a nation of citizens, a confederation of provinces with a past history, present loyalty, and strong patriotic pride. Canadian citizens must have a sense of belonging to and ownership of the nation. As a place to live, Canada is not a rooming or boarding house where residents are separate from the owner. As a place to live, Canada is more like co-operative and condominium housing, where ownership is the pride of caring residents.

What do we need to do to instill such caring ownership and pride in Canadians about our nation, Canada? There are many starting points, but we need to start somewhere, and that is what Bill 215 is about: starting at the learning stage in school. Mr. Speaker, hon. members of the House, if we don't fill the young minds with Canadian content, they will be filled with some other things, and some of it may be non-Canadian or anti-Canadian even. And if the minds have already been prefilled with only non-Canadian matters, what can we balance them with or tip them towards Canadian content for Canada's national interest?

Mr. Speaker, at this point I want to mention a number of points beyond the school class. Our citizens have the obligation for the future direction of our country, and this land is a place we belong to, the community we developed, and a nation of provinces we built together. Canada is not a place from which we demand and take but a place to give and to build collectively. Canada's citizens should have an appreciation for their country that goes beyond the shallow exterior or material layer. It's not just a place to make our living and pass our time. This country affords us the rights and values that are denied to many of our fellow human beings throughout the world. We must not take this for granted. We should encourage our citizens to learn how much effort and what sacrifices were made by people before us so that we can enjoy the freedom and the values of fairness, equality, and justice of Canada today.

Canada is not just a place to take refuge from patriotic activity in other countries. Any patriotic feeling and activity of the residents here must be, first, toward Canada. Canada has so much to offer. More than a place to emigrate, to make money, and then leave, Canada is a home country, a homeland of residents. People should not think, feel, or say that their homeland is somewhere else and take up residency in Canada and become Canadian citizens. Mr. Speaker, I believe the country where we live, work, play should come first. When we are citizens of Canada, it becomes our homeland, our home country. Canada is not like a shopping mall, where commerce takes place and everyone goes home after. Our country demonstrates some of the greatest aspects of unity, with cultures working harmoniously together to create a better life for ourselves, our children, and our grandchildren. We need to have our hearts and minds behind our nation so that citizens will be empowered to enable our country to continually prosper and develop.

If we cannot concentrate on Canadian history or knowledge about Canada's interests, then citizens will seek other alternatives. These alternatives may negatively influence citizens' participation in decision-making. I believe it is important for our citizens to first have a thorough knowledge of our country as well as expanding the knowledge of other countries.

Although I encourage all citizens to take active engagement in Canadian affairs, Bill 215 is focused on educating a specific demographic of young Canadians to instill within them a passion for our nation. Canada has an eloquent history that, if we do not make an effort to study and learn, may be forgotten. Our understanding of the past will further our appreciation of who we are in the present and where we are going in the future.

Mr. Speaker, an interesting point. The two largest populated nations in the world, India and China, whose nations both have long histories, were only established as nations in 1947 and the other one in 1949 respectively. Canada was established in 1867. Unfortunately, recent statistics indicate that only 26 per cent of Canadians aged between 18 and 24 know this information. What's even more concerning is that when the same demographic of young people were asked this question a decade ago, a higher percentage of youth responded correctly.

Now, I believe that education is crucial in reversing our population's declining understanding or competency in Canadian history. Our current curriculum development process, which is designed to teach Alberta students to think critically and analytically, is important, but it cannot be the sole focus. Thinking critically, analytically is a skill set that we want all our students to have. However, we need to ensure that the content is Canadian history.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to commend the Member for Calgary-Fort on his initiative 215 to in fact increase the amount of Canadian content taught in our schools. As a previous school trustee this is something that I struggled with, as to how much our students actually grasp as far as the history. I know that with their counterparts in the States, it's almost pounded into them, and they're very patriotic because of that fact, I think.

Getting back to Bill 215. I think the object of it is to prescribe that at least 75 per cent of the instructional time be allocated to the study of Canadian content through 10, 11, and 12. I think that does have some merit, like I said, but I believe that the decision should be left up to the school boards to determine that, obviously with a little bit of specific one-on-one with trustees, perhaps, or with the officials to find out exactly if they'd be in favour of this. Ultimately, I don't think that the government should be dictating this level of prescription for content in the social studies curriculum. I believe it should come from Alberta Education and/or from the school board itself.

Quite frankly, like I said, there is nothing wrong with it. I think it is an admirable thing. A lot of the individuals, as he was saying, later on maybe don't retain it. Maybe in the younger years they did retain it. Perhaps they need to do it in the earlier years, more content from K to grade 6 versus 10, 11, and 12. In the TV show right now Are You Smarter than a 5th Grader? these kids certainly are able to rattle off a number of specifics, whereas the adults seem to be dumbfounded when it comes to naming even some of the Great Lakes. These fifth graders are able to rattle it off.

Perhaps it would be more advantageous to give that Canadian content between K to 6 years versus the last years, when they're worried about specifically the mid-terms as well as departmentals. You know, you could be able to track that at 3, and they have 6 and 9, where they do the dip test, I guess, to find out exactly where they are with regard to the curriculum. That would be maybe a better route to find it, when you do it from K to 6, because you're going to be testing them twice as to some of the content that they would have in fact inherited through the program there.

One thing that kind of puzzled me when the member was talking – I'm not sure; I'm not trying to put words in your mouth, obviously – is when he says that when people come to Canada, this would be their country of choice. First and foremost they should in fact be, I guess, dedicated to it. It almost sounds as if you were trying to I guess tell people that Canada should be number one, and regardless of what other country you were from, that should be in the past. It almost was saying that, you know, you give up religious freedoms on that as well. I'm not sure where you were going on that one when you were strictly saying: "You know what? Once you're in Canada, Canada is first. The heck with the other places where you've come from." I'm not sure where you're going on that one.

Mr. Cao: Studying history.

Mr. Bonko: Oh, okay. History studies, he's saying. But for those particular reasons that I've listed, Mr. Speaker, again I think it would be better left up to the school boards. If we're going to do it, perhaps it would be better formatted from the high school level but drop it down to the K to 6, where they've a little bit more of an ability to grasp it and retain it a little bit better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to speak to Bill 215, the School (Canadian History Content) Amendment Act, 2007, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. As we know, Bill 215 seeks to amend the School Act and establish a legislated minimum amount of 75 per cent Canadian history content to be taught in Alberta's high school curriculum. Currently the School Act permits school boards to prescribe an element of patriotic instructions to students and allows the Minister of Education to establish and prescribe courses. However, this is not an exceptional amount of Canadian history content required to be taught in any grade throughout the Alberta school system.

Canadian history is important in that it forms the foundation of who we are as a nation and as a people. With other interests, such as pop culture, becoming increasingly dominant in today's society, some feel that our youth are becoming less and less interested and engaged in acquiring historical knowledge. Today youth often find their cultural identities from beer commercials, and they are relying on the Canadian post ad to realize a sense of patriotism. The Ipsos-Reid annual Canada survey of 2007 found that only 70 per cent of Canadians could identify the beaver and hockey as the most unifying Canadian symbols, and as many as 31 per cent of Canadians felt strongly or somewhat attached to Tim Hortons Timbits as a Canadian symbol.

Perhaps as a result of the dwindling interest in history among this generation's youth population as well as the culture shift from historical matters, we as a nation and a province have seen a significant decline in voter turnout and civic participation. After the 2004 federal election Elections Canada conducted a thorough investigation into voter turnout and found out that on the federal level 18- to 20-year-olds had only a 39 per cent average turnout across Canada and a 36 per cent average voter turnout in Alberta.

With Canadians fully engaged in globalization, it is important that youth leaving Alberta's high schools are well educated, knowledgeable individuals with patriotic ambitions. This is essential in making Alberta's future leaders more competitive in the global economy and better positioned to guide our province towards a successful future. We know that unified beliefs among a group of people are integral to creating a strong and dynamic citizenship. Thus, by teaching more Canadian history content in our high schools, we can empower the youth of our province to create cohesive and vibrant identifying perspectives. This would possibly translate to helping create a stronger nation as well as serve as a key factor in helping individuals find their own cultural identities with a broad focus of Canadian patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's schools are first class. Time and time again we see the comparison studies from around the world. But when Alberta Education undertook a review of the social studies curriculum beginning in 1999, it found that there were gaps in the historical knowledge of some Alberta students. This was especially prevalent in the area of history relating to aboriginal people and Franco-Albertans, both of which have a significant impact in the formation of our province.

High school serves as an important tool in assisting youth in developing their identities by helping them find a definition for who they are in relation to the world. It is only fair to provide students in Alberta high schools with more resources and knowledge to be able to more accurately assess their roots, hence solidifying their identity.

Canada is also largely comprised of immigrants who have already had strong cultural ties, which, I might add, Mr. Speaker, is a great asset, but it's also important to have a unified force to increase commonality and belonging to all Canadians. With our strong economy and boundless potentials our province is a destination of choice for many international immigrants, which provides a welcome boost to our labour needs.

As a requirement to be granted Canadian citizenship, potential immigrants are asked to write a quiz on our country's history, politics, culture, and geography. It has been recorded that an overwhelming 70 per cent pass the exam. A poll by Ipsos-Reid released in July of this year found that when asked to write the same citizenship test, only 40 per cent of the current Canadian citizens actually passed due to the lack of knowledge of Canadian history and facts. Interestingly enough, according to the Ipsos-Reid study 69 per cent of Canadians believe that part of what makes Canada a successful society today is that Canadians share a common history, heroes, and national symbols.

Tell me, Mr. Speaker, how we can have a strong identifying force in our nation when a large portion of our population can't even answer a simple question: is Canada a constitutional monarchy? According to the annual Canada Day history quiz conducted by the Dominion Institute in 2005, out of a random sample of a thousand Canadians, it was found that the average Canadian could only answer 40 per cent of the questions correctly. Again, a failing grade. The survey also found that university graduates achieved the highest average score of 9.5 while respondents with only high school education or less performed the most poorly, scoring an average of 6.9 over 20. This fact shows that for the most part with only high school level education in social studies Canadian students are only knowledgeable on about 35 per cent of Canadian history content. From the evidence presented, it appears that the average person either entirely loses interest in Canadian history or doesn't have a solid enough foundation to build upon in future years.

Mr. Speaker, to further prove my point, out of 1,000 respondents only one individual answered all 20 questions correctly. If taken, potentially, to Alberta's population of 3.1 million, this equates to only 3,500 individuals that could answer all the questions presented on this general knowledge questionnaire. The survey has revealed that respondents overwhelmingly agree that knowing their national history, especially key economic events, is important and that they will have to learn more.

Albertans and all Canadians require an increased historical foundation so that tomorrow's youth can move around and be knowledgeable about citizenship. This would also help immigrants to Alberta and all our population, for that matter, to gain appreciation for roots and perhaps adopt a patriotic spirit through identifying with Canadian culture, a spirit that would nurture communities and increase the quality of life for all of us.

Alberta's current social studies curriculum supports students in their journey to become responsible citizens and powerful leaders. Since the social studies 10, 20, and 30 review was completed in 2003, the Alberta high school social studies curriculum has already been more focused on anticipating and planning for direct needs of the future in trying to teach our children a full view of history. However, we can see from recent studies that the knowledge acquired by youth when going through Alberta high school . . . [Mr. Strang's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. O Canada, our home and native land. O Canada, terre de nos aïeux. Pride isn't something you can simply cram into a series of memorized capitals, provinces, and territories. It's something you acquire through life experience.

Today I tabled a letter from a grade 10 constituent of mine, Dan

Hogg, who wrote expressing his disagreement with requiring that at least 75 per cent of the social studies curriculum be legislated. Earlier on the mover of this motion suggested: well, let's take it down to 50 per cent. Do I hear 25 per cent? 15 per cent? 10 per cent? 5 per cent?

I would like to start off by giving a little bit of background on my national identity. I had the good fortune of being the son of an air force pilot. As a result, I had a chance to live in each of the provinces with the exception of the Maritimes or British Columbia. I began my grade 1 schooling in Saskatoon, finished my grade 1 in Winnipeg, where I also did grades 2 and 3. The first part of grade 4 was again in Saskatoon. The rest of grade 4, grades 5, 6, and 7 were in Edmonton, Alberta, on the Namao air base. Grade 8 was in Toronto, grades 9 through 13 in Ottawa. As a young preschooler I lived in Quebec, in St-Jean, just outside Montreal. I also lived in Aylmer, Ontario. I said that I was fortunate because I got to live the life of Canada as opposed to just having it produced second-hand through textbooks or tests.

As a teacher for 34 years I taught Canadian history, and I taught it proudly. Within that teaching I always incorporated choice so students could choose which part of Canada they wanted to study, which province they wanted to specialize. In grade 4, when Alberta was a major component of the curriculum, I gave the students choices as to which western tribe or eastern tribe, for that matter, they preferred to study, and they, based on their personal interests and their personal pursuits, followed the curriculum with a degree of creativity and enjoyment because they had an opportunity to choose what they were going to study.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In junior high school in grade 8 we again studied Canada and got into a comparative circumstance between the economy and geography of Canada and the United States. We saw the similarities and the differences both geographically and politically.

I've heard comments that suggest to me an insular attitude: let's wrap ourselves around the flag; let's sing O Canada to the loudest potential. These outward acts do not make us more knowledgeable or better Canadian citizens. The best way to understand and appreciate the Canadian fabric is to travel and have that first-hand experience. We have had national programs that encourage students to go from province to province. I know that when I was teaching French at the junior high level, we partook of a particularly enjoyable French exchange down to Montmagny, Quebec. Then the students came back and had their Alberta experience. This was very meaningful for a number of the students who had never been out of either Quebec or out of Alberta, to have that first-hand experience.

Another troubling aspect that I see is pushing one more thing onto the school system as opposed to parent initiatives in terms of the education of their students. Mr. Speaker, 75 per cent or 50 per cent of the social studies curriculum: I'd be interested in what parts of the curriculum the member feels are not appropriate at this point or how many more hours he is potentially suggesting be added to that curriculum to fit all the Canadian content that he would like to see in place.

Then I would wonder: what specific parts of the Canadian content would he like to have included? For example, one of the things that isn't very much mentioned is our persecution of Ukrainians during the First World War. What also doesn't get a whole lot of mention is our persecution of black citizens who fled as United Empire Loyalists to the Maritimes and how badly they were treated there. We could talk about, perhaps, and provide a little more background for students about Mackenzie King and how he was very unwilling to support Jewish refugees fleeing during the Second World War. There is a lot of history that does not get taught, but as we mature and as we become more informed through touring museums, through travelling across Canada, that is where we get the first-hand experience.

I was born, as I said, in Saskatchewan, but because of the number of eastern postings we had, travelling back and forth across the country was just part of my growing up. When I married the daughter of an Ottawa dairy farmer, the desire to connect with the Ottawa Valley was very strong. So those trips were very frequent. We spent a lot of enjoyable days and nights along the Trans-Canada with my daughter. We travelled to Newfoundland. She got a first-hand experience being on Signal Hill, where the first radio signal was received. She got to understand why they call Lake Superior a Great Lake. It's that kind of experience, rather than something grocery-listed or of a textural nature, that makes Canada great and appreciated by students.

Advocating that immigrants who come to Canada should have a knowledge of the country to which they have come is important, but I would suggest that a number of immigrants have a very good understanding. They did the research before coming here, some for economic benefits, others fleeing persecution. What we have in Canada is what I would refer to as a multipatched quilt as opposed to the traditional American melting pot. We want people to leave behind their baggage of past conflict, and we want them to embrace the Canadian values of inclusivity, of tolerance, but we don't expect them to leave behind any kind of cultural quality, arts, and background when they swear allegiance to the Canadian flag. The beauty of this country is that it's made up of immigrants from the first immigrants who crossed the Bering Strait thousands of years ago and joined with our first peoples. Canada has always been a country of immigrants, and that's what makes Canada so strong.

Pride is not something that you can teach. You can set it out. You can give reasons why a person would potentially want to be proud of the country, but mandating it in the form of an assigned curriculum, whether it be 75 per cent, 50 per cent, 10 or 2, is not going to accomplish the goal of creating better Canadian citizens. Giving students every opportunity to learn will achieve that goal.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a few comments on this particular bill from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. First of all, I just want to say that we've heard a lot in this House this session about Bill 46, how controversial it is and how the entire province is in an uproar. I would have to say that as the MLA for Calgary-West I haven't received a lot of letters about Bill 46. In fact, I've received almost none, so I'm sure that some of the hon. members in the opposition are probably texting out to their friends right now in the Rocky Mountain House area saying: write letters to the Member for Calgary-West. I say that because since the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort introduced his bill, I think I've received between my office as Minister of Education and MLA for Calgary-West in excess of a hundred letters because this is something that really resonates with people. I would say that there were probably as many that were supportive of the initiative as there were opposed, and I think it's fair to say that there were as many opposed as were supportive. So this particular bill clearly does generate good debate.

Mr. Speaker, the current curriculum in Alberta requires that a social 30 or 33 class is taken in order to receive a high school diploma, but in addition to that we also offer Canadian history 20 and western Canadian history 20. It's very important to note as well that the development of a curriculum and what is taught in the curriculum needs to be done in conjunction with our postsecondary institutes because you very much want to ensure that the entry that postsecondary institutes are requiring is met and probably in many ways exceeded in our high school teachings.

Now, as you're probably aware, Mr. Speaker, the department has just in fact implemented a new curriculum in social studies. It went into place this year in grade 10. It will be implemented in grade 11 next year and grade 12 in '09. In the development of that curriculum there was intensive research and consultation that occurred as it was being developed. I'd like to outline some of the steps that took place in the development of this new curriculum.

There were three independent literature reviews that guided the development of the foundation document, the framework, and ultimately the Alberta program of studies; focus groups and consultations with departments of history at the University of Alberta, University of Calgary, and the University of Lethbridge; and continued contact with these postsecondary institutions to ensure that the history components of the program were meaningful and relevant to students. Finally, there were over 200 separate information sessions, workshops, provincial consultations, meetings, and working groups over a four-year period to complete the writing and revising of the program.

I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, to note that the development of the new social studies curriculum was not done in isolation by someone holed up in an office somewhere in downtown Edmonton. It was developed with a very extensive public consultation process.

I think it's also important to talk a little bit about the emphasis of the new curriculum. I think there are probably three areas that were attempted to be enhanced. First, it was determined through that consultative mechanism that our social studies curriculum needed to focus more on our First Nations, on our Métis and Inuit, and on francophone perspectives. That's clearly what is part of the increased focus.

Also, the new curriculum, Mr. Speaker, increases focus on historical thinking. It's important to note that in order to do historical thinking, students need to study history, not only Alberta's history, Canada's history, but world and ancient history. These histories are being examined through historical and contemporary perspectives within and across those cultures.

Now, I believe it's important to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the student of today is the business leader of Alberta tomorrow. To do business worldwide, it's important that when we're dealing with different countries around the world, we understand their cultures; we understand their history. I think many of us have on occasion really questioned. In some cases we might see a particular television program where a reporter from Toronto will go down to the U.S. and ask the Americans some dumb question about Canada, and we're always astounded about how little the U.S. knows about our country. I want to ensure that our students and our future business leaders understand all parts of the world as well as they understand our Canadian history.

In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I thought it was important to explain a little bit about the development of our new curriculum, but I listen with interest and appreciate the opportunity to not only participate in this debate but to listen to other members of the House.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of minutes to just make some comment on this private member's bill. At the very least I would certainly value bringing up this topic of Canadian history content because I think it is, certainly, a perennially much talked about and discussed part of our public school system. But just the way in which this particular bill is constructed, I think I got the impression that the hon. member was talking about moving this from 75 to 50 per cent. Is that what you had mentioned previously? Yeah.

I guess regardless of where the number comes from, I just do question mandating the percentage of the content from this House. As the hon. Member for Calgary-West just pointed out, we've in fact just gone through an extensive change of the social studies curriculum here in the province of Alberta, and that is the page which school boards and schools and individuals teachers are drawing from. As a high school teacher myself, and a high school social studies teacher, in fact, I can attest to the fact that probably the Canadian content of the old curriculum – I've looked at it, but I haven't taught the new curriculum – is at least 50 per cent already.

I guess it calls into question the notion of picking an arbitrary number out of the sky and somehow dropping it down onto the schools here in the province of Alberta. Certainly, we do have a lot of power and responsibility here in terms of public education, but we also have a mechanism by which we develop the curriculum in a reasonable way to meet the needs of not only high school students but to have it integrated into postsecondary education and into the needs of our society as a whole in terms of social studies education, not just with history but geography, political science, sociology, and all of these important fields of study that fall under the larger umbrella of social studies.

Yes, certainly, people can be shocked and appalled about the lack of knowledge of Canadian history amongst our general population, but I would not say that that is a function of having a higher or a smaller percentage of Canadian history within the content but, rather, how much, number one, is that information sticking in the public's mind? How relevant does it become for them as they walk out of a high school and into the larger world? Are they retaining that knowledge? That opens a whole other can of worms of education pedagogy and of relevance and, certainly, doesn't have very much to do, I would venture to say, Mr. Speaker, with the actual percentage that we would be placing on Canadian history as part of the larger social studies curriculum.

Let's not forget, as well, that while Canada exists as a sovereign nation, our integration into the world in the past and the present and the future is integral to understanding what people we are and what our role is as a nation in the world. Considering the brief history, really, of Canada as a sovereign nation, it's absolutely essential to understand what is leading up to the formation of Canada as a nation from our global perspective, different European colonial manifestations and from other countries as well around the world. That all adds to the mix of understanding what and who we are. Simply drawing an arbitrary line of Canadian history I believe is somewhat deceiving because, of course, Canada is still forming its identity based on the widest swath of inferences from around the world.

So, certainly, as a parent and as a citizen and as a former teacher I encourage a very high value of Canadian content to exist in our provincial curriculum, and I do believe that it has been increasing and has been fortified over the years. As I say, the larger question is to make that information relevant so that it sticks with people and that people have the critical thinking skills to use that knowledge in the broadest possible way. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that's when you will actually get Canadian content and Canadian history knowledge entrenched into the public's mind, and they will be able to use that information in an active way and become better citizens for it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak on Bill 215, the School (Canadian History Content) Amendment Act, 2007. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort brings forth an important issue for Canada, which is educating Canadians on their culture and history. While it is very important to educate Albertans on their history and promote Canadian culture, our education system should also reflect the diversity and growth of our society.

For example, in my own community Red Deer is the midpoint in the Calgary-Edmonton corridor, located in an area of rolling hills and aspen parkland. The name of this community came from the large herds of elk, or red deer, in this area. The Cree called the district Waskasoo, while the Blackfoot called it Ponoka, which meant elk. The first Europeans saw that the elk of western Canada were very similar to the red deer . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, but the time consideration for this item of business has concluded.

Hunting and Fishing Tradition

515. Mr. Mitzel moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize the tradition of hunting and fishing for all Albertans.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to begin the discussion on Motion 515. Every so often we have an opportunity to assemble to recognize the important contributions that certain groups have made in our province. We have a chance to provide them with the proper tribute that they deserve.

Motion 515 recognizes those that participate in hunting and fishing. Their contribution should not go unnoticed. From the early explorers to the settlers to the groups and organizations that still participate in these activities, I feel there should be an understanding of the important function these people who hunt and fish have made in Alberta throughout the years. Hunters and anglers are symbolic of our province's growth and success. This province was built upon those who are successful at these skills. These early people hunted and fished in order to survive and to earn a living.

Since these early days we have come a long way. We now earn our living in many, many other ways but still continue this tradition of hunting and fishing. Alberta can boast of having some of the best hunting and fishing spots in the world. Our diverse landscape provides for ideal opportunities to pursue these activities. There was a reason why early explorers and settlers immigrated to North America and eventually settled here. We have an abundance of wildlife.

We still have an abundance of wildlife, even after over 200 years. It's the hunters and fishers who keep most of our species going. They put in the money and they put in the hours. They really care about what happens to our wildlife. They contribute millions of dollars to the economy. In 2006 the government of Alberta generated over $150 million from fees, permits, and licences. This does not include the amount of revenue they provide to businesses across Alberta through rentals and purchasing equipment, not to mention the tourism each activity generates.

When it comes to the environment, the participants in outdoor recreational activities are some of the most educated and eco-friendly people in the province. These conservationists assist in the preservation of Alberta's natural habitat and the species through a variety of means, from acquiring private lands to put back into the public domain for the sole purpose of conservation, to the transplanting of species to encourage repopulation in areas which may have been depleted. Ask anyone from Ducks Unlimited, the Alberta Conservation Association, Pheasants Forever, the Foundation for North American Wild Sheep, or the Alberta Fish and Game Association to only name a few, Mr. Speaker, and they will proudly tell you what they have done in order to enhance habitat and conserve and increase the species.

Hunting and fishing are well-regulated recreational pastimes that are available for all Albertans to enjoy. They're often used for sport but also to provide a necessary function to the province. There are many who work with conservation groups such as the Alberta Conservation Association that assist the provincial government to properly manage the environment. Hunting and fishing groups are the closest to the land and can do spot situations that, with notification to wildlife officers and conservation officers, can be investigated and rectified. An example of this includes reporting a poacher or even witnessing a situation where a source of pollution is endangering habitat and wildlife.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 515 enables all Albertans to recognize and understand the importance of hunting and fishing as a tradition, both in the past use and in the present day. Some anthropologists would argue that humans are still programmed for this chase since our species has been doing this far longer than any other activity. After emerging from the plains of Africa, our ancestors began hunting more than a million years ago, doing so in order to survive. In the traditional cultures the skilled hunter was a respected figure with a relationship to the species he sought. If you could not hunt, you could not eat. In our culture as we've become more urbanized, many of us have lost this connection with the natural world. The further we get away from the wild, the less we understand it. Those who hunt and fish are still connected to this natural way of life. They understand the past, and they embrace the future.

Conservation organizations as well as those who take part in outdoor recreation are vital to the preservation and sustainability of the environment. Not only are these activities a benefit to our economy; they also provide support for our natural habitat. Mr. Speaker, we need to acknowledge the positive impact that hunters and anglers have made on the province of Alberta in the past and today.

Thank you.

5:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 515, hunting and fishing in Alberta. The mover is trying to make it sound like this is a tradition that all Albertans have. You know what? I don't know how many of us in the House have actually gone out and hunted or fished. It might be a little more of a catch on that one. But trapping? I come from a family that does hunting and fishing, but we don't do trapping. I wouldn't call it a tradition in our house. It's kind of like a sport. We do it because we enjoy the sport of hunting as well as fishing, and it's become part of a tradition to go out and do it on a certain weekend and a certain month. To call it a tradition such as, you know, the Métis have done, that in itself is different. I'm not sure if this is to replace the interim Métis harvesting agreement with just the interim harvesting agreement for Albertans. I'm not sure where this one is coming from. Perhaps the mover would be able to clarify that one.

To call it a tradition where all Albertans go out, like on the annual hunting day, September 22 – the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development declared one day to be Provincial Hunting Day. I'm not sure if this is, you know, to up that one and make sure that everyone has the ability. Well, we all have the ability to go out. We just have to write an FAC, we have to go get a licence, and we have to make sure that we in fact have training in safe firearms use, that we're not going to angle the next person next to us with a long cast and hook them somehow. The other ones: make sure we don't get our leg irons caught when we're out there putting these big traps or snares out there.

But to ensure that this is a tradition for all Albertans I think is a bit of a stretch. A lot of people don't in fact own guns, don't in fact take part. [interjection] Yes. It's true. A lot of us don't own guns. In fact, there are vegetarians out there. To tell a vegetarian that, yeah, you have the right to go out there and hunt is, I think, a little bit of a stretch.

Like I said, the fact that we're trying to make this a tradition – I don't know. I'm not sure that we're trying to give the rest of the province and the rest of Canada the idea of where we are as Albertans. I mean, it's a great opportunity for us to get out in the wild and out in the wilderness to connect with our rural roots, to go out there and march within the trees and everything. We have to be environmentally sound as well as make sure that we respect nature. But to declare it a tradition I think is a little bit of a stretch.

You know, again, I talked about the First Nations people. I'm not sure if this is meant to, you know, take part in that or if it's to replace that. [interjection] The member is saying, "Not at all," but it's fairly vague in here where your motion is coming from. I'm not sure what the whole point of it is. It does recognize a tradition for all Albertans to be able to do it. I think we have that right right now without having this as a motion. Anyone can go out there and do it.

I just wanted to make a couple of specific points on that. I'll hear what some of the other speakers have to say, but I wouldn't be in favour of this particular motion as it is right now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Motion 515, which proposes to recognize the tradition of hunting and fishing within the province of Alberta. I believe that tradition as it's used in the motion is meant as a collective tradition rather than a tradition that would necessarily apply individually to all Albertans, so for that reason I think it's a question of interpretation.

But I am supportive of the motion. I do believe, in fact, that the motion could have been somewhat broader, and I believe that it could have been inclusive with respect to providing some provision for the tradition of trapping in the province of Alberta. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am proposing to move that Motion 515 be amended by inserting the word "trapping" after "hunting." The amended motion would read as follows: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize the tradition of hunting, trapping, and fishing for all Albertans."

Mr. Speaker, hunting and fishing and trapping have all played a key role in the development of our province, and I support the goal of the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, which is to recognize the importance of that tradition in our history. Trapping has certainly been an integral part of the development of Alberta long before we were a province, when we were, in fact, a territory that was owned and fully governed by the Hudson Bay Company, and then for a hundred years following that period, we were also part of Canada as a part of the North-West Territories and later as a province. But in the early days of development of our province of Alberta through the Hudson Bay Company the trapping industry certainly was the most important industry. It was also a strong tradition in the First Nations and the Métis citizens before that time, and it continues to be an important part of our culture, particularly for the First Nations and Métis citizens of the province of Alberta.

I believe that the proposed amendment allows Motion 515 to reflect the importance of the activity of trapping for subsistence and recreational purposes. Mr. Speaker, that would conclude my remarks with respect to the amendment which I have proposed.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, we have an amendment before us. On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill attempting to make this a more palatable motion. Mr. Speaker, are we going to designate it A1?

The Speaker: There's only one that we have. We'll assume it's A1, yes.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Thank you.

Well, speaking to motion A1, to me what would have been considerably easier to accept is instead of flipping trapping and hunting, if we took out "for all Albertans" and just put "in Alberta," then it would make sense.

I've had the good fortune of having a father who thoroughly enjoyed outdoor pursuits, and last year, when he was 83, he managed to get two whitetail deer because he enjoys being out hunting, and for a number of years I enjoyed that same pursuit. By age four I had a pretty darn good aim with a .22, and I graduated, maybe to some people's horror, from bottle caps to gophers. I dispatched quite a few in my younger age. My father would pull me out of class, which I know my teachers were very appreciative of, and we'd go hunting, and what we would do is reward the teacher for having let me out of class by coming over and having a duck dinner or a goose dinner or pheasant or partridge, and it was very much appreciated.

When we lived on the bases throughout Canada, my father had the reputation of being a fantastic guide and sportsman, and therefore people would seek him out for his services and recommendations on where to catch the big one or, potentially, the big game. I can remember once having an air commodore come to visit our house at lunch and asking the air commodore if he could please pass his skin across the table – that was the duck skin – and, needless to say, my father was not appreciative of my comment.

But from an early age, as I say, I learned to shoot both with a gun and bow and arrow. Unfortunately . . .

An Hon. Member: Are you in favour of this amendment or not?

Mr. Chase: I'm speaking on amendment A1. I'm speaking on the joy that I personally experienced hunting and fishing. My trapping, I must admit, was limited to mice, and it was out of necessity.

By suggesting that the pursuits that I enjoyed and that my father enjoyed numerous times, being the chairperson for Sarcee Fish and Game and having won numerous awards for his stewardship, such as the Order of the Big Horn – I at one point in my life enjoyed the experience of hunting and fishing, and it continues to be a pursuit enjoyed by my father. But pushing it to “for all Albertans” I think is too much.

If people choose to enjoy the outdoors, that’s their choice, but to sort of lord it over them as though this is an historical expectation for them in being part of the province of Alberta, I think, is taking it too far. People have to decide for themselves whether they want to pursue hunting and fishing and trapping. I will note that some of the greatest conservationists are in fact hunters, and the hunters and the fishermen serve as the first alert when a stream shows up with fish floating on it or when there is some kind of a disease that is affecting the wild animals.

There is a role for hunting and fishing, and some would suggest there is still a role for trapping although given what we’ve done to northern Alberta, that possibility is rapidly depleting because of the industrial development. The few animals that are left, especially when it comes to trapping, are having a hard enough time. The woodland caribou are being depleted. I’m not suggesting that anybody would consider trapping kit foxes, but the point is that sometimes traps that are intended for a particular animal end up taking another one. While we may have improved our trapping from the old-style vise traps to leghold traps and so on, in seeing a gnawed-off limb in a trap of an animal that found its only way of exiting, I question, given the space left in Alberta, whether trapping is still a pursuit. It’s not one, at least, for all Albertans, whether we stick it, as A1 suggests, before “fishing.” I don’t quite understand the change in the order. As I say, I would much rather see it: tradition of hunting, fishing, and trapping in Alberta.

I don’t want to denigrate our history, but I found it rather foolish, I would suggest, when the ministry of sustainable resources found it necessary to announce that we would have a special hunting day. We have a hunting season for various animals. We have fishing seasons for various types of fish. Designating a specific day I question. Also, the justification that if you shoot them in the woods, you’re less likely to run over them on the roads: I found that a little bit hard to deal with.

One thing I did know was that on that hunting day, when I was out in the area that the hon. minister represents, I surely wore my red jacket because I did not want to take any chances. I knew it was open season.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I have the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Did you wish to participate on this amendment?

Dr. Morton: Not on this amendment, no.

The Speaker: The President of the Treasury Board caught my eye first. On the amendment?

An Hon. Member: Question on the amendment.

The Speaker: There are no questions. There’s no question period.

An Hon. Member: Call the question on the amendment.

The Speaker: Well, no. There are still people wanting to speak. The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. I want to talk about the trapping. It’s not so much, Mr. Speaker, that people around the rest of Alberta would go do this, but I think it’s really important that children growing up in every part of Alberta have the opportunity, if they choose, to go hunting, to come out to the rural areas where we live and hunt and, if they wish, to apply for a trapline licence. My father had a trapline many, many years ago by the Mountaineer Lodge, so as young adults we could go there and actually really participate in trapping. When time permitted, as young people we obviously hunted and trapped rodents around the country.

One of the single biggest issues we face is the lack of respect for nature. I think the hon. member talked about the respect that hunters have. Many hunters are the most ardent conservationists we have because they know you have to look after your environment to ensure that what they care so deeply about is looked after, it’s replenished and regrown, it’s stocked, it’s managed, and it’s there for future generations.

I would hope that all the people that have had to live in the cities, where their parents moved for their jobs, know that as an Albertan, if they choose, they have the opportunity to come out to rural Alberta to hunt, to fish, to trap, to be a part of what many grandparents never had the opportunity to do because they weren’t in this country or be part of what the grandparents did because they pioneered this country. In fact, as early pioneers lived, much of what they ate was trapped, hunted. Many fish are trapped, and many of you will have probably watched or seen fish traps built that work much the same as an animal trap. So trapping was a part of gathering food for subsistence. Now it’s sport.

I think this is an appropriate amendment, and I think we should support it.

The Speaker: Speakers on the amendment? The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that this amendment is very fitting because when you think of our history, hunting and fishing for subsistence, as the hon. President of the Treasury Board just commented, was very, very important, but so was the trapping. When you think of Rocky Mountain House, the Hudson’s Bay Company established there. The big reason that they established there was for the furs. Most of those furs were trapped. I think that this amendment fits right in with the whole intent of this motion.

The Speaker: Additional speakers on the amendment?
Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, on the motion as amended.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just to show that collaboration works well between the parties of this House, I appreciated a suggestion, basically an amendment to the now amended motion, that came from the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, and that motion will be provided to the tabling officer and to all members shortly. I would think that it’ll probably end up being called A2, and I’ll speak to that motion at that time.

The Speaker: We have no amendment approved, the table officer is telling me.

Mr. Chase: It's being produced. That's what I was saying, that we collaborated.

The Speaker: Well, we're not going to deal with something we haven't seen yet.

Mr. Chase: No, no. It was just an introduction of the fact that it'll be coming forward.

The Speaker: We don't do it that way.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

The Speaker: We're back to speaking, then, on the motion as amended. Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill spoke on the amendment, but he was speaking on the motion.

Dr. Brown: Correct.

The Speaker: Well, then you're out of this round too.
Who's next? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to stand as a Calgary MLA and speak for this particular motion. I grew up in Saskatoon as an only child, and my father was an avid hunter and fisherman, not so much a trapper, though he did snowshoe. At a very, very early age I had the opportunity to have a gun placed in my hand, probably at the age of four or five, because my father believed that if you eat it, you'd better learn how to hunt it. That not only went with hunting, Mr. Speaker, but it also went with fishing. In fact, my dad always used to laugh when we were at the lake fishing because he'd have these grown men that would come out once or twice a year to fish, and they'd see this little tyke of about 12 or 13, and I could outfillet them on any of the fish. Again, I think people need to understand the importance of having the ability to get out and do some hunting and some fishing and some trapping. We've had the privilege on several occasions of enjoying some of the – what do you call that stuff?

5:20

Dr. Morton: Jerky.

Mrs. Forsyth: . . . some of the jerky that the Member for Foothills-Rocky View has brought us. It is really very, very tasty, and we've enjoyed it. So when he's been hunting, we keep asking him how he's doing so that we can have the opportunity to do that. [interjection] Well, Mr. Speaker, the opposition wants to try some of his jerky also, but I think that's up to him.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say that I do support this particular motion from the member and will be supporting it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since I always enjoy contributing to discussions on quality of life with my colleagues, I'm delighted to rise today and address Motion 515 as amended. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for his drive to recognize the tradition of hunting, trapping, and fishing for all Albertans. Hunting, trapping, and fishing play a very important role in Alberta. They're part of our culture and are beneficial to maintaining a healthy environment.

The sponsoring member is right. Alberta does indeed have a very rich history with respect to these activities. For many years these activities were performed out of necessity and for sustenance. However, they are now predominantly done for a very different reason, such as spending time with your family, recreation, and enhancing one's quality of life. My husband, Bob, has always said: if you don't want to hunt for your children, take them hunting; if you don't want to fish for your children, take them fishing.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans work exceptionally hard every day to bring our province the economic standing that it has. In order to achieve a healthy lifestyle, this work ethic must be balanced with challenging and relaxing activities. I also believe that hunting and fishing support the ancient hunter-gatherer habits buried deep in our genome. Many people find strength and peace when they go out to the beautiful countryside. For me this is a time to energize myself and get a little closer to nature. As Albertans we are privileged to have lush forests all over our province. Our citizens don't have to go very far to have adventure and fun-filled weekend getaways. Within Alberta's parks there are a number of activities they can choose from. Whichever they select, they will realize many benefits by participating.

Mr. Speaker, some people think that fishing is a very relaxing activity. The idea of being out in the middle of a lake with nothing to do but wait for a fish to bite your hook is a pleasant prospect for many people. Although putting a worm on a hook and waiting for a fish to bite is not my idea of a pleasant experience, I love to accompany my husband and read on the banks of the river while he fishes.

As of November 1 of this year 231,958 anglers had purchased a sport-fishing licence in Alberta. This is an increase of 2,618 over the same period in 2006. I guess this just shows that fishing is a very popular activity. Going out to Alberta's lakes and rivers also provides for family-building activities where parents can teach their children a new skill, and like Bob always says, it's better to go fishing with your children than to go fishing for them.

Hunting is another activity that requires Albertans to connect with nature, especially bowhunting, where wits, practice, and preparation combine to challenge the instincts and senses of the animals. Hunting is a very popular pastime in Alberta. When additional hunting opportunities were made available on September 4, 2007, nine hunting areas were sold out in the first 45 minutes, better than some concerts that come to Alberta.

Trapping is perhaps one of the oldest forms of harvesting wildlife and has been a traditional pursuit in Canada since the mid-1600s. Today there are over 2,300 trappers operating in the province of Alberta. Trappers are concerned with the well-being of the creatures they harvest. They seek to ensure that animals can be replaced by naturally reproducing wild populations. Indeed, without concerned trappers in the field constantly assessing fur-bearing populations, we would not be aware of the status of many species of Alberta wildlife.

Mr. Speaker, all of these activities promote healthy lifestyles, and they serve to develop characteristics such as patience, determination, and respect for nature. Spending more time on these types of expeditions also helps Albertans gain appreciation for and an understanding of the importance of wildlife in our province. Because of this hunters and fishermen and women are the best conservationists in the province.

I recognize the positive tradition of hunting, trapping, and fishing for all Albertans. I encourage all members to support Motion 515. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, on the motion as amended.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and add my thoughts to Motion 515 as amended. Mr. Speaker, I've discussed in this Legislature in the past my fond memories of growing up in this province and the many wonderful times that I had travelling I think pretty much to every corner of this province as a young person. My parents had one of the very first motorhomes on the highway. Between the Easter weekend and the Thanksgiving weekend myself and my siblings were never in the city on the weekend. We were always out somewhere in the motorhome camping and fishing, not necessarily hunting or trapping but certainly camping and fishing. I think it gave me and my brothers and sister and the many foster children that we had in our home a wonderful opportunity to experience some of what has been discussed in this House this afternoon.

I have particularly fond memories of fishing not just in Alberta, but having been born in a small community in north-central B.C. called Burns Lake, I spent an awful lot of time fishing in the lakes district. In fact, I did a fair amount of fishing in the Morice River as well, fishing for freshwater salmon. So fishing is certainly particularly close to me.

Mr. Speaker, myself and a number of other members of this Legislature have also taken advantage of an opportunity offered to us by Trout Unlimited, where every couple of years they do a float trip down the Bow River, starting in Calgary and spending an afternoon on the river learning a little bit about the river, particularly the trout population and so forth. A wonderful experience, and kudos to those folks for making that opportunity available because, once again, I think it gives members of this Legislature an opportunity to experience some of the things that we're talking about in the House this afternoon. For those of us that spend the majority of our time in the city, it's important that we have that experience.

There's a long history of trapping in my family, Mr. Speaker. My grandfather was a trapper in Burns Lake, B.C. I used to go out on the trapline with him, in fact, and check the traps. We'd occasionally bring in the odd beaver or the odd cougar.

An Hon. Member: Now, you're talking.

Mr. R. Miller: Yeah, there's an animal: the cougar.

You know, I have good memories of trapping. My uncle, my mom's brother, and then his children took over the trapline when my grandfather passed away, and as far as I know, they're still involved in that activity.

I also have a history, which I don't know if I've spoken about in this House before, and that is that I spent some time in Fort Smith in the Northwest Territories with the Hudson's Bay Company as a management trainee. At that time – this was in the late 1970s – that was a location that still collected pelts. The locals would bring them in, and we had a buyer right in the store who would assess the pelts and purchase them from the locals. Although I didn't train in buying, I certainly had exposure to it, and it was a fascinating process to watch.

I took a hunter training course, Mr. Speaker, when I was in grade 8 and very much enjoyed that. In fact, some of my fondest memories of school relate to that hunter training course. We went camping in the middle of January, a three-day trip up near Athabasca somewhere. Probably the reason it's most memorable is because it was colder outside than it has been this week. I think it was about minus 30, minus 35. That was quite an experience for grade 8 students to be out winter camping in those conditions.

So I respect what Motion 515 is trying to do here. I've experienced some of these myself. I've made an effort to make sure that my children have had similar experiences, so it's all good on the surface, but I'm just not sure. There's something about this that is rubbing me the wrong way. I'm just not sure what the mover is trying to achieve with this motion. Perhaps when he has an opportunity in a few minutes to close the discussion, he may be able to express that. What's bothering me, I think, Mr. Speaker, is that I'm unsure what is being asked for by this motion when it says to encourage the government to "recognize the tradition of hunting, trapping, and fishing" because I'm going to guess that in many respects the government already does recognize that tradition. I guess my reservation hinges on the word "recognition" and what exactly we are asking for here.

As was alluded to earlier, we already have a Provincial Hunting Day, that was new this year, where the minister of SRD and his department officially recognized hunting. So I'm not sure now: are you asking for an official trapping day or an official fishing day? Maybe that can be rolled into the official hunting day, and we could change the focus of the official hunting day to capture trapping and fishing as well. I'm not sure.

I don't mean to belittle the motion because, as I say, I think there's a lot of good that can be recognized, but I'm just not sure what exactly we're trying to achieve here. It's sort of, quite frankly, motherhood and apple pie the way it reads right now. I hesitate to support something that is maybe going to go much further than that; that is, at least without knowing how much further it might go.

As I say, I've got great memories. I think the intention is honourable and probably something that I would vote in favour of, but I will need a little more information before I can make that determination because I'm just a little bit unsure as to exactly what it is that the member is trying to achieve.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will allow others to have the opportunity to speak to this motion as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development on the motion as amended.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to arise and speak to Motion 515, and I'm most happy to support the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and his motion. A lot of the comments to this point have been retrospective in character, looking back upon the tradition and heritage of hunting, fishing, and trapping in Alberta. My remarks will be more prospective, looking forward on the important connection between hunting, fishing, and trapping and the protection of our environment and the very significant support that the hunting/fishing community gives to conservation of important habitat.

There's been a long-standing and mutually beneficial relationship between hunters, fishers, and trappers and the environment. The hunting and fishing community has always recognized that healthy habitat and abundant habitat is the key to healthy animals and healthy game. If you go back into the conservation movement in North America and, in fact, also the parks movement, it was led by people who were active in the outdoor sports of hunting and fishing. In fact, even in our province of Alberta, if you go back to the 1880s, even prior to provincehood, the record shows that it was hunters that lobbied for restrictions on hunting to protect the dwindling buffalo herds.

Today hunting also has an important commercial value to our province. Hunting tourism: we have not reached our potential there, and I'm sure this government will look forward to doing more in that respect. Thousands of hunting tourists come to Alberta every year to hunt and fish, and of course many others come just to enjoy the wildlife, which are supported by the kind of habitat we're talking about. These tourists, whether they're hunting or just viewing, are an important stimulus to local economies, particularly in rural Alberta, because they purchase many services provided by Alberta businesses.

As we grow as a province, from 1 million or 2 million residents to 3 million and soon 4 million and then 5 million, the importance of conservation and stewardship of habitat both for fish and for wildlife becomes more important. I want to point out the important role in Alberta that hunters and fishermen play in preserving this through the licence fees they pay, through what's done publicly, their public support, and also private donations and volunteer efforts. For example, the Alberta Conservation Association, or the ACA, is a nonprofit, nongovernmental association that works collaboratively to conserve, protect, and enhance our natural biological resources. It receives funding from a variety of Alberta conservationists, including significant contributions from hunters and anglers. Every time a hunting or fishing licence is purchased, the ACA receives a portion of the funds to allocate to conservation projects.

In the 2007-2008 fiscal year the ACA received just under $1 million for conservation work in Alberta. The purpose of this funding is to ensure that existing ACA habitat protection enhancement projects – ACA is the funder of the buck for wildlife program that was instituted in the 1970s, so this has deep roots in Alberta policy already – continue to operate as intended and the ACA meets their legal and ethical obligations towards Alberta's public.

On the private side I want to point out also that there are many groups that are very active in Alberta in raising funds for habitat conservation. I'd mention Ducks Unlimited Canada, Pheasants Forever, the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, and also the Foundation for North American Wild Sheep. The Foundation for North American Wild Sheep raised over $200,000 for conservation in Alberta at their annual convention in Salt Lake City last January. I'd also, on the fishing side, like to point out and also thank groups like Trout Unlimited and Streamwatch, both of whom have taken me out this summer and shown me the importance of not just a good day of fishing but the importance of our water policies to make sure that fishing stays good.

Our efforts here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, are just one part of a much larger puzzle of North American conservation. I want to give the House a sense of the magnitude of this effort by the hunting and fishing community of North America. I'm going to reference an article that the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat drew to my attention earlier last month. This is from the November 2007 National Geographic. It's a 30-page article. It's the lead article, actually, in the November issue of National Geographic. It's entitled Hunters: For Love of the Land.

National Geographic, which is a well-respected and completely authoritative and unbiased source, emphasizes the importance that North American hunters and fishermen have played both on the public side and also on the voluntary side in raising money, over $280 million a year in the U.S. for scientific research on habitat. That's by Ducks Unlimited. Since 1937 Ducks Unlimited has protected 11 million acres of wetlands in North America, many of those on the Canadian prairie. I'd like to quote, if I might, from page 130 of the National Geographic article. National Geographic states, "The . . . irony is that many species might not survive at all were it not for hunters . . . the nation's 12.5 million hunters have become essential partners in wildlife management."

That's my basic message, Mr. Speaker, that the hunting, fishing, and trapping community are essential partners in wildlife conservation. They understand that healthy game populations require healthy habitat. These groups spend a great deal of volunteer time, volunteer money to make sure that that habitat is there. For that reason I'm very proud to offer my support to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and to Motion 515.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on Motion 515 as well as to speak in favour of the amendment that was introduced earlier. This motion is designed to recognize the important role of hunting and fishing activities in Alberta, past and present, and the economic benefits they bring to the province. In its 2006-07 annual report the Department of Sustainable Resource Development points out that hunting and fishing generated social and economic benefits for the province valued at more than $1 billion.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Cenaiko: One billion dollars. These activities continue to have an important impact on the province and its economy either as industries or through recreation.

In addition to the $5 million generated every year by the 800 commercial fishing operations in the province, recreational fishing contributes significantly to the Alberta economy: $350 million in 2000, which rose to $440 million in 2005. Much of this can be attributed to the economic trend emerging among the approximately 300,000 recreational anglers enjoying fishing in Alberta's lakes, streams, and rivers. Alberta's anglers are spending more time on sport fishing than at any other time in the last 30 years and in the process are generating real dollars for tourism and sport and recreation.

From 2000 to 2005 there was an impressive 28 per cent increase in spending on fishing packages, that include such things as guided trips, tours, and lodges. Rather than just heading to the nearest lake for an afternoon, fishing enthusiasts are planning vacations and weekend getaways that allow them to escape the city and spend time with their family and friends while picking up the latest in modern fishing gear. Much of this can be attributed to the continuing and sustained prosperity that the people of this province have been able to enjoy. With more money in their pockets Alberta's hunters and anglers can now spend more time and money on activities they enjoy and contribute to the economic growth of sport and recreational fishing.

Efforts are also being made to help these industries continue to grow and prosper by encouraging those who are currently non-anglers to take part in increased participation. In 2005 both the Family Day long weekend and the 9th and 10th of July, which coincide with National Fishing Week, were devoted to allowing anyone to fish without an Alberta sport fishing licence.

Not to be outdone, there were a number of game hunting opportunities provided for nearly 105,000 hunters in 2006-07, representing an increase of over 5,000 participants, almost 200 of whom were youth hunters. The popularity is growing, Mr. Speaker. Alberta recently designated September 22, 2007, as the first ever Provincial Hunting Day to promote hunting activities and awareness. Last year the province issued more than 381,000 big game and bird game licences to 100,000 hunters in Alberta, helping to contribute more than $100 million annually to the provincial economy.

Mr. Speaker, hunting and fishing activities are clearly part of the active lifestyle of many Albertans as well as vital industries which contribute to the economic prosperity of this province. I therefore encourage the passage of this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the opportunity to rise and speak to Motion 515. This certainly, as others have said, is a very important activity that occurred primarily for sustenance years back but has now evolved into being more of a recreation activity. Many have mentioned, of course, the various groups that have surrounded these activities, like the Alberta Fish and Game Association, Trout Unlimited, ACA, and others. Ducks Unlimited, of course, is a very, very active group in conservation. These people have been hunters and fishermen and trappers over time. They all know how important it is for the habitat, but also they've got to make sure that they leave enough seeds so there's a crop next year. That's where they became very much conservationists.

I can remember. We think of it being quite a number of years ago. I'm not so long in the tooth, but I do already remember that as a young person our family relied very heavily on the ability to go out in the fall and early winter and harvest a number of animals, not close to home like we are today where you can stand on the veranda and shoot a moose in the wintertime but having to travel long distances with a sleigh and team and then come back with a wagon box full of wild meat. Then there was a great canning bee, and believe you me, by midsummer you were sorry that the folks went out and got those animals because you got pretty tired of the canned meat.

I remember, as well, as a young fellow the family going out to fish. There was a lake called Swan Lake that was a good day's drive by the team and wagon. That lake even today has a unique type of trout in it, a salmonid, that has a very red flesh, and years back they always referred to it as the lake salmon. The flesh was very similar, very, very good.

Trapping, of course, was a major activity. I remember that as a young person we walked about a mile and three-quarters to school, much of it through bush, so we had a little trap line all along the way. We would set traps and catch weasels, mink, squirrels, et cetera, and made a few dollars. It was a great activity. I didn't enjoy the smell of catching the weasel and having to skin it, but my dad always said: if you go out and set traps and catch animals, you have to harvest the fur. So we had to go through that. I think it's a great idea that we would make sure that we remember and honour what happened.

I want to talk a little bit more and zero in on the fishing part of it. Fish are arguably the most important component of Alberta's lakes. There are some 51 species of fish believed to be native to the province, with an additional eight introduced species that are reproducing and maintaining a viable population. Our province is also home to some of the top fisheries in North America, and our lakes, rivers, and streams house many unique and varied fish species, like the walleye, for example, the largest member of the perch family, which is seen in Alberta lakes and is world renowned and highly valued as an excellent sport and commercial fish. Lesser Slave Lake has acquired a reputation for being one of the top walleye fisheries in North America and has become the prime destination of anglers seeking walleye in this province.

Over time fishing has broadened its scope from solely food provision to becoming a popular sport and an enjoyable recreational activity. As I believe some of my colleagues have mentioned, currently it is estimated that there are over 300,000 active anglers in the province. In addition, there are over 800 commercial fishing operations. Although the dynamics of fishing today are very different than when the province was first established, I am confident to say that the tradition of fishing lives on.

With increasing fishing pressure on Alberta's waterways, there being an increase in creative fishing opportunities, lately there has been a trend for remote fly-in fishing lodges, such as the ones located in northern Alberta. Due to the pristine and undeveloped wilderness of that area these lodges offer some of the best sport fishing in all of Canada. In recent years Alberta's major urban centres have gained popularity among residents and travelers.

As a result there has also been an increased focus on expanding fishing opportunities in waterways across major metropolitan cities such as Edmonton and Calgary. With the North Saskatchewan River being known for its walleye, pike, and grayling populations and the Bow River being internationally acclaimed as a superb trout fishery, these modern fishing locations have been providing vast opportunities to anglers, with all the comforts and amenities that a big city has to offer. As time has evolved, so has our province's approach to fishing. However, its core purpose remains unchanged, and that is the fact that fishing has always served to unite the people of Alberta and give our province momentum. However, it has never gained adequate recognition.

In 2006 through the draft discussion paper entitled The Need for an Alberta Heritage Hunting, Angling and Trapping Legislation, the Alberta Fish and Game Association acknowledged the need for legislation to be passed which recognizes the heritage of these outdoor pursuits in Alberta. The Alberta Fish and Game Association stated that the current legislation in Alberta, the Wildlife Act, does not give adequate meaning to protecting the rights of hunters, anglers, and trappers and that without proper legislation there will continue to be no measure for these rights.

It is clear that hunting, trapping, and fishing have played vital roles in the historical and cultural development of our province, and to this day they are not fully recognized. I hope to finally give hunting, trapping, and fishing the recognition they deserve, and for these reasons I fully support Motion 515 as amended.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to voice support for Motion 515. I don't personally hunt, nor do I trap. I do fish, and I think I should do more of this as a sport, as an outdoor activity.

Mr. Speaker, I know that hunting and fishing and trapping have been a tradition that goes back many, many years in this province. You know, the First Nations and aboriginal people, for example, have used it as a way to sustain their communities and so on, but I have an issue with the words "all Albertans." As such, I would like to move an amendment, which I have prepared.

The Speaker: And we'll have to have it circulated as well, please.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. By striking out the words "for all Albertans" . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, sorry. Parliamentary Counsel advises that it has not been approved by the House officers yet. Did you hear what I said? Parliamentary Counsel has advised me that the amendment has not been approved by the table officers yet. That's a requirement in terms of our amendments.

Mr. Elsalhy: Sure. Thanks. I'll just speak to the motion, then.

The Speaker: You'll speak to the motion as amended.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Elsalhy: We will not bother with this amendment. I'll just tell you what I was trying to do, Mr. Speaker. We don't have an issue with the intention of this motion. We just felt that it's assuming that everybody in this province likes hunting or likes fishing or agrees with it. We were just saying that while we want to preserve the intention of this motion by recognizing it as something that people in Alberta do, we didn't want to be making a statement that it's acceptable by everybody in this province.

Now, some people oppose hunting or fishing or trapping because of religious or cultural reasons. Some people oppose it because of the angle that it's cruel to animals and that it's cruel to those wildlife that are hunted or that are caught. I don't personally have this issue, and I know my colleagues in the opposition don't as well. [interjections] Some do.

What this motion as worded is presuming is that everybody is okay with it, is okay with the practice, that it's an outdoor activity, that it's a pastime, that it's a sport. We just wanted in our amendment to remove that clause "for all Albertans" and just make it "in Alberta," as in geography.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I'd invite the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to now close debate on Motion 515 as amended.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, I'd like to thank all that participated in the debate. Motion 515 as amended urges the government of Alberta to recognize the tradition of hunting, trapping, and fishing for all Albertans. Throughout the history of our province these activities have certainly, as many have mentioned, played a key role, and the goal of the motion is to recognize that importance.

To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, I would like to assure him that there was never any intention on my part or any part of this motion to have any part of this replace the IMHA, the interim Métis harvesting agreement. There was no intent whatsoever.

I think also, to the other hon. members, the MLAs from Calgary-Varsity and Edmonton-Rutherford, what I was trying to recognize was that getting back to nature is getting much more difficult. Our rights are being challenged by many, many groups, as perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung started to allude to, groups like PETA, the animal rights activists, and others like that. What we were trying to do is recognize a tradition.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford mentioned, the memories that we have of what we did when we were kids are in danger, and we may not in the future be able to do some of these things. The numbers that were suggested on the number of tags and everything else perhaps are impressive, but in the future there could be some problem with that, and that's the reason for this. Really, traditionally hunting and fishing and trapping were used as means of survival, which made them a necessity for early inhabitants. These activities helped foster the country's growing population and economy. Also, I recognize that today hunters, trappers, and anglers play a large role in the conservation of our wildlife and the management of it.

I think Motion 515 as amended recognizes this as well as the recreational aspects of these activities. Caring for our province's natural habitat I think is important to all Canadians and all Albertans. Our wildlife is now continually managed and preserved by government, individuals, and groups. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, hunters and trappers are some of the most educated conservationists in Alberta.

Motion 515 recognizes the recreational benefits of hunting, fishing, and trapping for entire families in these activities in the healthy outdoor environment. They are an escape from the stresses of everyday life, which are so predominant in contemporary culture. It is also a way of reconnecting with nature as our forefathers did, something that is getting lost. I think this speaks to what I was talking about earlier: that we're in danger of losing that ability.

The positive contribution that hunters, anglers, and fishermen have made and still make in Alberta is considerable. Whether for necessity or recreation, the participants, including the people who first came to this province and those who hunt, trap, and fish today, have contributed significantly to conserving the province's natural habitat.

Motion 515 is a chance – a chance – to give these Albertans the recognition they deserve and to ensure that these activities continue well into the future. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 515 as amended carried]

The Speaker: Now, this was a very interesting debate this afternoon. Without any doubt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore is correct that not every Albertan carries a gun. I want hon. members to note, to the three hon. members who sent me a note wanting to know if the reason the chair wore a gown is to hide his two pearl-handled Colt .45s, that such is not the case.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to a government motion that was passed by the House last week, I would move that we now adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Time Allocation on Bill 46

37. Mr. Renner moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill has already had in excess of four hours of debate in second reading. There are, as all members are aware, a number of very critical amendments that the government wishes to get onto the table, and with an additional one hour that will be in excess of five hours at second reading. We feel that it's reasonable to move forward at this point in time so that we can move into the Committee of the Whole and introduce the amendments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course I am speaking against this motion, and again I will raise my deep concern with the government choosing to use special power that is granted to it through legislative or parliamentary procedure. Truly the government benefits from our parliamentary process. There are special provisions that are set up to allow or intended to be used for extraordinary circumstances. In a case where there had been, you know, hundreds of hours or tens of tens of hours of debate on a bill and some need to move along with it to meet a court ordered deadline or something like that, I could see a justifiable use of time allocation. But that's not what we're experiencing here.

Frankly, it takes over five and a half hours for every member not in the government caucus to speak in second to a bill, and we have not even been able to achieve that. In fact, given the time allocations that have already been brought forward, we will not be able to achieve that. So never mind backbenchers, never mind rural members of the government caucus who need to be able to be on the record to explain to their constituents why they would be supporting – or perhaps they're not – a bill that has a disproportionate effect on rural landowners. That's not even including time for them, Mr. Speaker.

There's the government with horror in their hearts that we might be going over five hours' worth of debate in second, Mr. Speaker. This is an appalling abuse of a special process that is granted to government under extraordinary circumstances that they now use, you know, like a glass of water. It really is abusing the situation. This Bill 46 is a bad bill. It should have been taken off the table and repaired or, perhaps, it could be argued, never brought in. It is curtailing democratic participation. It continues to do that despite the rumoured amendments that are coming. It does preclude that democratic participation from the government caucus's strongest supporters, and perhaps that's why they feel the need to rush this bill through so quickly.

Let's have a look at how much time has been spent in debate on some other bills. In British Columbia, a government that this government says it admires greatly, they spent over a hundred hours debating the land claims issue that they had a couple of years ago – over a hundred hours. When we were debating Bill 11, which is the biggest bill that has been debated in this House in many years, we, I believe, were up in the 60-hour mark before closure was brought in, and here we have a government bringing in closure after four hours of debate in second.

I don't need much of a crystal ball. Actually, we've already had oral notice that the government plans on bringing in closure in committee after three hours tomorrow afternoon and closure again in third after one hour. So we'd be looking at approximately nine hours' worth of debate on this entire bill, Mr. Speaker. That is an appalling – appalling – misuse of legislative process to be able to cover up a government embarrassment, and that's what's going on here. This is a government embarrassment. They're trying to get it off the record, get it off the page as quick as they can, and they have misused a parliamentary process in order to do so. I think it's about saving face for a minister who is in trouble. All I can see is a peevishness to get out of the session by Thursday in order to, I presume, attend Christmas parties.

Certainly, I can see a much better reason for staying in the House, debating this bill and other bills, but, no, there is a hell-bent for leather push to get out of here by Thursday. I cannot describe to you my disappointment in this government and in the tactics that it has chosen to use. None of it justifies the use of closure, and I object to the use of it strenuously, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this is a nondebatable motion. The mover and the Opposition House Leader each have five minutes to speak. They have done so.

[Government Motion 37 carried]

head:

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 46 Alberta Utilities Commission Act

Mr. Eggen moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 46, Alberta Utilities Commission Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

[Debate adjourned November 20: Mrs. Mather speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to rise and speak briefly on Bill 46, the principles of the bill. I think that it is very necessary that we do split the EUB and that we establish the ERCB and the utility commission. The reason I say that, of course, is because there is so much work going on on the energy side, and at the time when we amalgamated the two boards, there was not anywhere near the activity that there currently is. So I think that it's really important that we do split them and that we do have a utility commission.

I think that another principle of the bill, of course, is to enhance the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. Having been responsible for that position for some time, I can tell you that it played a very, very important role speaking up for the consumers of the province. As we move forward, giving it even more ability and setting a board up that it would answer to is going to, I think, really enhance the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

When we look at the personnel that are involved, particularly if we can somehow use the services of David Gray, who is currently the Utilities Consumer Advocate – this gentleman knows the system. He knows how it all works. He's very, very intelligent. Mr. Speaker, I know that he's the type of person that if he needs some more expertise, he will get it. He will simply admit that there's something that he needs help with. I believe that they will do just a tremendous job for us and protect the consumer in the province.

Particularly as we move forward and we see the amendments – I know that the amendments were tabled so we know now that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is going to be housed. It has to be housed someplace, and it will be housed . . .

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, on a point of order?

Point of Order Relevance

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I'm sorry to interrupt the member, but we are speaking on a referral motion to refer this bill to a standing policy committee. If I may use citation 23(b), or also relevance under Beauchesne 459, and call the member to order.

Mr. Lund: Hon. House leader, I apologize.

Ms Blakeman: Well, you're supposed to be talking to a referral motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, on the point of order?

Mr. Lund: Yes, on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I apologize if I'm speaking about the wrong thing. I did not know that it was simply with the motion to refer it to the committee. I'm sorry. I thought it was on Bill 46 as it's presented. Okay. I'm sorry. That'll be all I have to say for now.

The Deputy Speaker: We're on the amendment. Okay? Anyone else on the motion to refer? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would vote in favour of this motion. [interjection] For a little while.

It really is sad that we want to call this a democratic process. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has brought up a lot of the points that I would like to bring up in order that we can go forward. We haven't spent any time on this. This is a new bill. It's going to make a dramatic change in how business carries out business in the province and how they expropriate land from landowners, and it needs more studying.

We had the bill in front of us, Mr. Speaker, for over five months, and they threw the 23 amendments, which goes to speak to how faulty this bill was, last Thursday and expected us through the weekend to be able to have digested that and to say: oh, everything's fixed now. It isn't fixed. It's not in the interest of Albertans. This is a bill that's making a major change in how business is going to be conducted and in the ability of landowners to say no to transmission lines, pipelines, and other things that cross their land and that are going to affect them for a lifetime. Maybe, you know, three, four generations down the road are going to be affected by this bill, and to invoke closure is totally undemocratic.

We need to send this to committee. It needs to be studied. It needs to go out to rural Alberta again and the landowners so that they're comfortable with it. Even if it is a good bill, they're not comfortable with it. This government should know and understand that, but they're going to shove it down the throats of Albertans. I think they're going to pay a price for it, and that's fine, but then we still have to rescind the bill. So, Mr. Speaker, I think it's critical that this bill goes to committee, that it's studied, and that Albertans are familiar with it and not just a $27,000 blitz campaign to say: oh, it's okay; trust us.

Mr. MacDonald: How much?

Mr. Hinman: I think $27,000 just this weekend, taxpayer funded to promote their expropriation bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Is this after they rejected the Auditor General's report?

Mr. Hinman: Yes, after they rejected the Auditor General's report.

Anyway, I vote in favour of this amendment, and I hope that all the MLAs sitting in this House will consider that and the importance of this. This isn't a quick little amendment to some bill that's been floating around. Why didn't they use closure on 20 other bills that aren't as critical as this one?

I support this amendment, and I hope everyone will think it over twice before they vote. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Others?
Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is typically my pleasure to rise and participate in debates in this House, but tonight I am of two minds. Part of me is of course pleased that I am here advocating on behalf of my constituents and expressing either support or opposition to a government bill, in this case definitely opposition, but the other part of me is also angry, first of all, at the government which drafted Bill 46 and then also at members of the government caucus for now limiting debate to one hour in second reading, three hours in committee, and then one hour in third.
