Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to join the debate on Motion 504, which proposes to invest 50 per cent of the budget surplus in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and reimburse the remaining 50 per cent to Albertans as a percentage of their personal income taxes and/or property taxes. Motion 504 does not provide a stable, long-term plan for Alberta's surplus funds. Alberta's surplus should be managed to benefit all Albertans now and in the future, not only those Albertans who qualify to benefit from it in years when Alberta produces a budgetary surplus.

With regard to long-term planning, Premier Stelmach has mandated the Minister of Finance to establish a financial investment and planning commission to explore options for long-term investment strategies for Alberta's nonrenewable resource revenues. The Minister of Finance has pledged to include a surplus formula in the 2007 budget. Premier Stelmach set out five priorities for the Alberta government . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the mentioning of names is not allowed in the Assembly.

Mr. Mitzel: I apologize.

Our Premier has set out five priorities for the Alberta government, which reflect the values and priorities of Albertans. Of these five priorities three are directly related to purposeful and responsible spending. They are: to manage growth pressures, to improve Albertans' quality of life, and to build a stronger Alberta. Long-term planning for Alberta's budget surplus will help to safeguard the province against future economic shortfalls and will ensure that the priorities of this government are achieved.

With regard to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the fund was created to provide prudent stewardship and the greatest financial returns from nonrenewable resources for current and future generations. Over its history the fund has supported ongoing government programs and tax reductions, established endowments, and paid for capital improvements throughout the province. In 1996 the mandate of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund was reviewed. A new business plan was implemented, which included increasing long-term investments. In March 2003 a survey was conducted which found that the majority of Albertans wanted the fund to continue to operate as it was.

With regard to the Financial Management Commission, Mr. Speaker, on July 8, 2002, the commission issued its recommendations to the government on how to make certain that Alberta remained a leader in fiscal planning by ensuring long-term fiscal sustainability. One of the key recommendations was the establishment of a sustainability fund as part of the renewed heritage fund, that would be used to stabilize volatile resource revenue. The fund could be drawn on during times of low resource revenues by transferring sufficient amounts to the general revenue fund to cover any deficiency of revenues over expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta has heard from the Calgary Chamber of Commerce, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, and the Certified General Accountants Association of Alberta regarding sustainable management of windfall resource revenues. Their ideas support the government's current direction. The Calgary Chamber of Commerce has recommended that the provincial government commit to the principle of sustainability when identifying and assessing spending priorities. In fact, the Calgary Chamber of Commerce believes that the prudent handling of nonrenewable resource revenues will sustain the Alberta advantage and allow the province to maintain its competitive tax base and to make sustainable investments in education and research.

Albertans experience long-term benefits through spending on capital projects in budgetary surplus years. Alberta's capital account was created in 2003 as part of the new fiscal framework established to help address immediate and long-term infrastructure needs in Alberta.

The 2006 to 2009 capital plan directly supports $13.3 billion in capital projects. Mr. Speaker, this is a 45 per cent, or $4.1 billion, increase from the 2005 to 2008 capital plan published in Budget 2005. This degree of capital support is unmatched in the rest of Canada. Alberta's capital spending on infrastructure is three times the average of other provinces. In 2006-2007 Alberta will spend $4.2 billion on capital projects, or about $1,300 per person. The average per capita spending on infrastructure in other provinces has been about $400 per person. Last year a major increase was provided for municipal infrastructure, including the five-year, $3 billion Alberta municipal infrastructure program. In Budget 2006 major increases have been provided for the provincial highway network and health, school, and postsecondary facilities.

Mr. Speaker, giving back 50 per cent of the budget surplus funds to a portion of Albertans through personal income taxes and/or property taxes will not benefit all Albertans who currently live in this province or who will live here in the future. In its 2007 fiscal performance index, the Fraser Institute recognizes Alberta as having one of the most competitive taxation systems in the country with the lowest personal and corporate income taxes and no capital taxes. This province has a competitive taxation system because of the responsible allocation of nonrenewable resource surplus windfalls, which may not produce a budget surplus every year.

Alberta has also allocated more money to capital projects due to the current economic climate. Alberta's prosperity should be utilized to benefit everyone in the current population as well as its future population. It should be a thriving and successful province for those who are not yet born and for those who choose to move to our great province.

I cannot support Motion 504, however well-intended, and I'll ask my colleagues to not support this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get to participate in the debate on Motion 504 this afternoon. Motion 504 proposes that the government allocate half of the surplus into the heritage fund and the other half into personal or property tax cuts.

Certainly, at some point in the future I would like to think that we will have the financial ability to put 50 per cent of our surplus into the heritage savings trust fund and reduce personal income taxes and/or property taxes and/or corporate taxes. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is going to have something to say about that, but tax reduction is a very, very good thing. Now, this, of course, would occur after we eliminate health care premiums for all Albertans.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is perhaps a visionary here with his idea that we would have 50 per cent of the budget surplus for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and a whole series of tax cuts that we could pass in this Legislative Assembly for the benefit of Albertans.

Hopefully we'll get to that some day, but in the meantime I think we should adopt as a surplus policy the policy from 2004 that the Alberta Liberal party campaigned on in the last election, the one that was so well received by so many voters. We certainly did have a plan. The voters sensed that we had a plan. They didn't know until two years later, when the Premier finally just flat out admitted it, that, no, there was no plan by the Conservatives. I think that with this motion the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner certainly realizes something that many people already knew in 2004, and that's that this government had no plan. Unfortunately, they still do not have a plan. They have five vague pillars there that they talk about, but certainly the one on openness and transparency was exposed for what it was this afternoon: a very narrow pillar that perhaps is made out of plastic that loses its strength in the sunlight and collapses. With the spring here it's not long before that pillar is going to completely collapse.

Now, our surplus plan, Mr. Speaker, called for 35 per cent of surplus money to be into the heritage fund immediately, and no one can tell me that this government has managed over the last number of years the Alberta heritage savings trust fund in a prudent and wise way. It hasn't even grown and met the demands of inflation over the years. I know that the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House is shaking his head there, but it's true. It certainly is true.

Also, we would like to see, Mr. Speaker, 35 per cent of the surplus invested in a postsecondary endowment fund. We would like to see 25 per cent in a capital account towards eliminating Alberta's infrastructure deficit, and this is a deficit that's growing and growing. Why? Because this Conservative government was operating for years without a plan. Without a blueprint you don't build anything because it costs more and more money.

Now, it is interesting to note that we would also like to have a $500 million arts endowment fund for the humanities, social sciences, and arts. Of course, the $500 million would be capped. It's interesting also to note that it is only now that the Progressive Conservatives are talking about a surplus policy, but it's too late. It's too late because it's costing us so much extra, and that's evident again in media reports that were issued today.

When we talk about what the Conservatives are suggesting, we have to look at some of the shortcomings in this, Mr. Speaker. First, governments can reduce the size of surpluses by increasing annual spending. Alberta has a real problem with this, and I'm going to be very anxious to see what this budget is on Thursday. I don't know if the President of the Treasury Board is going to look up from his notes when this budget is being delivered or not. I'm sure he's going to feel guilty that the spending increases are going to be so significant, and he thought: well, we can reduce the size of government, and we could manage our dollars more efficiently. I don't know how he's going to react to this budget on Thursday, but I have a close seat here, and I'm going to be watching with interest to see what expressions he gives as this budget is outlined. Now, last year's total expenses increased 12 per cent from the year before that. In that year there was another significant increase of 11 per cent, and this outpaces the combined inflation and population growth rate.

Second, this government is famous for this spending off budget. Now, a recent report by the C.D. Howe Institute noted that Alberta had the worst record for overspending its budget, and in 10 years – in 10 years – the budget in this province has increased by over 120 per cent. We've still got a lot of potholes to fix, we've got a lot of bridges and roads and schools to build, hospitals to build, but the cost of this now.

The Alberta Liberals tabled Bill 201, Funding Alberta's Future Act. Now, our idea for long-term financial security for Alberta is the same as any prudent householder: pay yourself first. Bill 201 would have provided world-class public services, an outstanding postsecondary education system, and permanently competitive taxes. That's our fiscal policy, and Motion 504 would be an additional step at some time in the future, Mr. Speaker. I would urge the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner and all others to have a second look at the ideas coming from this particular party.

In addition to those ideas of the Alberta Liberal caucus – and the policy to invest 30 per cent off the top of any year-end surplus directly into the heritage fund is a sound and a good idea. I can't believe that members would talk about the heritage savings trust fund and not contemplate supporting that idea. If we build up the heritage fund, Albertans will be in a position to permanently enjoy the most competitive tax regime in North America. We are slipping here.

Now, the province of British Columbia has in some cases a much more competitive tax structure than we do. Again, we are still waiting for leadership and direction from this government. It's a tired government. That certainly is true. It's a tired and listless government, and it's drifting. [interjection] It certainly is. The hon. member says that it's not true. One only has to visit the city of Fort McMurray to realize how tired and drifting and listless this government really is.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: I would like to remind the hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor, and I would be happy to recognize the hon. minister at some point in the future.

I would also like to remind the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that perhaps if you address the Speaker with your comments instead of the members opposite, it would be less provocative.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. You're absolutely right. I must admit that I was provoked.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, if we had a heritage fund that was growing, growing substantially to the point where we could have over a hundred billion dollars by 2021 in that fund, that would be a great addition for this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I give the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner credit for bringing this motion forward because it's a major debate about some of the big issues, whether we agree with them or not. It seems to me that this is precisely the type of big debate we need, you know, within the province. As already mentioned, the member is talking about surplus money, 50 per cent going into the heritage trust fund and 50 per cent into what I think he would call a tax refund. I want to make sure I get the term right.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP has no great objection to putting more money at surplus times into the heritage trust fund. We've called for that before. But I want to remind people that we have different sorts of deficits that we forgot about in the mid-90s. Yes, we had the deficit in terms of the economic deficit, but then we forgot about the social deficit and the infrastructure deficit. Now we're trying to play catch-up in an overheated economy. So the problem that I have in saying 50 per cent of something in nonrenewable resources is that we have to begin to deal with – as I say, we know about affordable housing coming up. We know about green and sustainable energy, the infrastructure deficit, and all the rest of it. I think we have to look at that on a year-by-year basis because if the economy, the overheated economy, keeps going as fast as it is, I'm not sure we can play catch-up, but we have to do something. That's why taking an arbitrary number all the time on a year-by-year basis doesn't make a lot of sense. So I generally agree with the idea that where we can, we should put some money in the heritage trust fund for the future.

Now, the other particular problem. Again, I understand the purpose that the member is talking about in terms of the tax refunds, as he calls them, but I think there is a danger here, Mr. Speaker. I'm told that with the Alaska equivalent of our heritage trust fund, where they automatically gave out money to the taxpayers, now when that fund is going down, people expect to get the same amount even though the same amount of money is not coming in. So it's created a real political problem. It's almost a sense of entitlement now even though it was meant that there would be a certain percentage that would go back to the people in terms of, again, a tax refund. As the amount of money coming is going down, people are still expecting the same amount. So they see it as a permanent sort of situation, and I think we create sort of a sense of entitlement by doing that that we may not be able to keep up in the future, but people don't understand that. I worry about that. I'd rather look to more, if you like, tax reductions, especially for the working poor and the people in the lower income. I think that's what we have to be mainly concerned about.

Again, I reiterate: if we want to really give something that's permanent and sustainable, it's the tax reductions on our medicare premiums. Now, I know that the government doesn't call these taxes, but they are. They are, in fact, taxes. That would be $900 million, a lot of money, admittedly, out of the provincial revenues, but I think we could sustain that over a long period of time. That tax would be directed to the people that most need it, getting rid of our medicare premiums, Mr. Speaker. Frankly, with the refund, contrary to what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar says, the last people that need tax relief is the corporate sector and the well-to-do in this province. They are the last people. If we do a total, if you like, tax reduction to everybody, people that don't need it are going to get it. It's like a flat tax. If we're going to do it, a flat tax helps the people at the top more than it does the people at the bottom.

I worry about this for that particular reason, Mr. Speaker. We need to look at a couple of things. We have to look at our three deficits, and I know that they're going to be trying to grapple with this in the budget. There's also the social deficit. We know what's happening in education, health care, the rest of it with the overheated economy, picking up the pieces from the mid-90s. On the infrastructure deficit we've had much discussion. I think a lot of the budget will probably have to deal with that. That's why it seems to me that in the short run to say that you're going to always put so much into the heritage trust fund – until you've caught up with these other deficits, it doesn't make much sense because you're doing it on nonrenewable resources. We have to do this year by year.

I also think that the tax reductions that we need are the ones that are sustainable over a long period of time. As I said, I think the medicare premiums are the first that we should be doing. Admittedly, $900 million is a lot of money, but that would be directed to people that need it. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner mentioned raising the tax exemption. I think that probably makes some sense if it gets to more people, the working poor and then the people that can't afford housing right now with the rents rising and the rest of it. That's who we have to be concerned about, Mr. Speaker. In an overheated economy to say that we need tax reductions or tax relief for the corporate sector and the well-to-do in this society makes absolutely no sense at all. When you take a broad brush across, that's who a lot of it will go to.

So, Mr. Speaker, for that reason I again commend the member for at least bringing forward the big debate about where we should be going. I certainly understand the reasons that he's bringing forward, but I think it could create more problems than it solves in the long run.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to join the debate on Motion 504 regarding the allocation of any Alberta surpluses. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner for sharing his idea on distributing provincial surpluses. As part of an open and transparent government I certainly welcome these important debates on how to approach our fiscal situation.

Motion 504, as stated, calls for 50 per cent of the budget surplus to be deposited into the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and the remaining 50 per cent to be distributed to Albertans as a percentage of their personal income and/or property taxes. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that there are a few flaws in this rather simplistic equation. The one I'd like to mention: as proposed, I can't imagine that Albertans would stand to have their property taxes, for example, going up and down like yo-yos.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has the lowest income tax level in Canada. It might surprise this member that the majority of the province's surplus revenues are not as a result of taxes. If Alberta's surplus was related to income tax collection, the surplus would be highly predictable; therefore, it would be much easier to abide by the kind of strategy that the member is asking for in Motion 504. The fact of the matter is that Alberta's economy is strengthened by our industries and natural resources while it is supplemented by Albertans' income and property tax contributions.

Alberta's economy is driven by the oil and gas sector, and this industry works with nonrenewable resources. Because of the volatile nature of the value of this commodity prices of oil and gas fluctuate with many factors, such as global conflict, foreign markets, and of course weather patterns. Because much of Alberta's economy is stimulated by the energy sector, surpluses are also linked to the price of our dominant exploration commodity. As has been illustrated over the years, even with strong management the surplus is and always will be unpredictable.

Mr. Speaker, because of the varying streams of resource income in the province, it would not be wise to govern by the plan that's called for in this motion. Although Motion 504 provides an arena for debate, I believe that that's pretty much where its practicality ends. I urge all members of this Assembly to think long and hard about the source and volatility of Alberta's surpluses before even contemplating support for this motion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and speak to Motion 504, sponsored by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. I appreciate that the member at least took the initiative. If we go back to 2004, there was no party that had a policy on revenue or a surplus policy. It was the Alberta Liberal Party who came up with the surplus and revenue policy.

It's very important to discuss in this House the surplus and revenue policy, which was also discussed by some members of the PC Party during the leadership contest. They indicated, you know, especially the Premier – the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development during his campaign was talking about 30 per cent of the resource revenue. Jim Dinning, a failed PC leadership contender, and those approximately 40 Tory MLAs – he mentioned that there should be, I think, 30 per cent during normal times and 50 per cent during boom times. You know, all these Tory leadership contenders started talking about surplus and revenue policies after the Alberta Liberal Party introduced their surplus policy.

Let me read this statement from the Premier's director of communication nowadays – he was a journalist before – Paul Stanway. He mentioned that the Grits are proposing boosting the heritage trust fund to $120 billion over the next . . .

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Agnihotri: A hundred and twenty billion dollars.

Our policies I will talk on very briefly after this. He said when he was a journalist that the Grits are proposing boosting the heritage trust fund to $120 billion over the next 15 years, so when the oil and gas money runs out, the province can use interest from the fund to replace nonrenewable energy revenue; it's simple, it's achievable, and it's likely the prescription for the future most Albertans want. This is a statement from today's Premier's director of communications. It indicates that the majority of the media and a majority of the politicians in Alberta, that includes the former Premier, indicated that the Alberta Liberal Party had a better surplus policy.

I actually commend the hon. member. At least he tried to come up with some ideas. Something is better than nothing. But our policies were commended by the media and some of the Tory top guns, including a former Premier. I think that this Motion 504, compared to whatever we had in the year 2004 election campaign, is not even close. That's the reason I can't support this motion, you know, the rationale.

The Alberta Liberal caucus has a fiscal policy. It's not like Motion 504. In addition to the Alberta Liberal caucus policy, that invests 30 per cent off the top, any year-end surplus will go directly to the heritage fund. Through building the heritage fund, Albertans will be in a position to permanently enjoy competitive taxes.

Here is how the Alberta Liberal caucus policy invests in Alberta's future. An Alberta Liberal government would immediately invest 30 per cent of annual nonrenewable resource revenue as follows: 35 per cent to the heritage fund, 35 per cent to the postsecondary endowment fund, 25 per cent to erase Alberta's infrastructure debt. Once that is accomplished, this 25 per cent will be funnelled to the heritage fund. Five per cent will go into a humanities, social sciences, arts endowment fund to an upper limit of $500 million. Once this cap is reached, 5 per cent will be used to create an opportunity fund, a flexible saving account designed to meet whatever priorities future Albertans assign it. In addition to a 30 per cent off-the-top savings, any year-end surplus will go directly to the heritage fund.

So if the Alberta Liberal Party had this policy 15 years ago – just 15 years ago – according to the economists, according to some of the media we would have at least a savings of $120 billion. So $6 billion of interest would have come out of those savings, and we could have used that $6 billion in the general revenue. If we had that plan 15 years ago, we would have the best universities in the world, the best hospitals everywhere in Alberta. Child care policies, all that, the problems that we are socially facing: we wouldn't have those problems if we had proper policies like we have.

But, unfortunately, this PC government, they never had a policy so far. Even the former Premier admitted himself that he was not expecting a boom, certainly, and they never had a policy and no plan. I think that's the reason, after spending 93 per cent of the resources, we are nowhere. We already spent 93 per cent of the resource revenue, and still if you ask anybody, they will say that we need tons of money in the infrastructure; we need money in the hospitals, education, and child care; and we need some money for the environment. If we include that money which we need, we are still in the red. We are still in the red, you know, because . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Agnihotri: My point is, Mr. Speaker, that if we are not doing good, it is because of the bad planning or without planning of this government. I'm glad at least they have started thinking about planning on the surplus and the revenue base.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join in the discussion of Motion 504 put forward by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. The motion urges the government to invest 50 per cent of the budget surplus into the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and distribute the remaining portion to Albertans as personal and property tax credits.

The motion does not provide enough direction and clarity for something as complex as Alberta's financial well-being. It's the government's role to wisely invest our revenue for the good of all Albertans, but this proposal fails to live up to the revenue objectives that the government is already pursuing. For example, the Alberta heritage trust fund is a valuable asset that should continue to receive sufficient funds to allow future Albertans to benefit from its fiscal potential. For over 30 years it has supported ongoing government initiatives to sustain and improve Alberta's fiscal position.

But the member's proposal neglects many of the other important funds that are administered by the province. Now, these investments include investing in education. The access to the future fund, which invests surplus revenues in endowments for innovations in the postsecondary system, is currently standing at $1 billion. Investing in technology. The Alberta ingenuity fund, supplemented by the Access to the Future Act, harnesses Alberta's vast research potential in everything from agriculture to nanotechnology. It operates as a trust fund and is generating income from the principal, which is currently valued at over $700 million, and investing in health over the next three years. A total of $2.7 billion will be provided to not only increase the assets of the heritage fund and the medical research endowment fund and the just-established Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund.

Mr. Speaker, the heritage fund is valuable, but so, too, are other investments and financial obligations. Myself, I am very much in favour of saving, and I do believe that all of the money that we spend belongs to the people of Alberta. But new Albertans, when they have been coming to Alberta since the 1800s, one of the first things that they as a community work towards are schools. The hundreds of thousands of people that are coming to Alberta need schools, and they need schools where they live, or at least somewhat close to where they live. This is a basic government responsibility, to make sure that we have the schools where we need them. This is an added pressure that comes onto a growing economy like we have here in Alberta. One of the basic responsibilities that we have as a government is to catch up on these schools for all of these people that are coming to Alberta.

The same thing for hospitals, and the same thing for roads. Just because, you know, people come, they haven't brought their roads with them. But they do bring their cars, or they get here and they find the prosperity to be able to buy the cars. To be able to get from one place to another, they've got to have sufficient roads. So it's just much too simplistic a way of looking at our responsibilities.

The motion's intent, I mean, sort of vacillates between the extremes, and it doesn't provide enough detail on the focus of the motion. So due to this simplistic approach, which ignores the government responsibilities to a growing populace, I'm afraid that I cannot support it. I believe that working within our current fiscal framework and fine-tuning Alberta's financial policy is the most appropriate approach to addressing Alberta's budget surpluses. I encourage the hon. member to await the budget to be released in coming days, which will include a formula for the management of resource revenues, among many other details.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others that wish to participate in the debate?

Does the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner wish to close debate?

Mr. Hinman: I certainly do, Mr. Speaker. I rise again to close the debate on Motion 504, and I thank the hon. members that have taken part. I guess I'll start with the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and the research people from the government that prepared the paper to speak on that. First, I must say that I'm disappointed in the fact that most people haven't read the motion closely enough to realize that this is about surplus dollars, not about budget dollars. There's a huge difference. This is about saving surplus dollars, and this is about a refund to the actual taxpayers of the province for the hard-earned money. They know how to spend it better than the government does. Always the people know better than the government how to spend it. When we take the attitude that government knows best, we're in trouble.

I was disappointed with the comment, first of all, that it is too simple. Simplicity is always the best. There's no need to make it complex. That's just to take people out of the debate.

To further look at the situation, the heritage trust fund, if it was really to be one, should be around $200 billion, like Norway's. If we want it to be able to replace the income – that's at a 6 per cent return on investment – that's coming in from our natural resources, then that should be the goal. We should have legislation to save 10 per cent of the actual income from the resource revenue. I'm not talking about the surplus dollars.

But this government is clear in its message that it knows how to spend the money better than the people who have earned it. It's interesting how they go to other institutions and think tanks rather than the people to see what they would like to do with it.

Once again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about an open government. It's interesting that this government in its own AGM is going to limit the discussion to five resolutions. I know that there are constituents that want to bring this resolution forward. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Please, hon. members.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

For the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in describing his worry about entitlement, this isn't anything more than a refund when there are surplus dollars. What the real concern is is that we have a province with so many programs that they think those programs are their entitlement rather than their benefits, so we need to look at this.

I talked to a lot of small businesses in small towns and in Calgary and Edmonton. The taxes are onerous. Many of them have to shut down and move to jurisdictions that have reduced taxes because they can't make a go of it anymore. We need to look at it. When the taxes go up for business, whether that's the grocery store or the hardware store, especially in a small town, they're only turned around to the people in that small town who come to purchase there.

Once again, this is not a complex issue; it's a simple one. This government itself had a simple legislation, that any surplus dollars that came in were to pay down the debt. Had they stuck with that and put it into savings, we would truly be better off today, instead of frivolously spending it and following what Alexander Tytler says about the doom of democracy, that a government is bound on buying votes by providing programs from the public treasury to bring in those votes. Like I say, whether that's rural against urban or north against south, it's not in the best interest of the people to raise taxes and to spend surplus dollars frivolously.

What we need to do is focus on the family. The point of this motion was to focus on the family, to focus on the community, and that was to return the dollars to where they're generated, and that's from the people, the workers of Alberta, and also from the communities and their property taxes. By putting that money back – economists have taught for years that if you want to increase and boost the economy, you lower taxes. If you want to slow down something, for example, our driving in Alberta, you raise the gas tax. If you want to have a boost, you look at that, and you lower the taxes. Whether that's on such things as windmills or geothermal heating, there are many things that we can and should reduce the taxes on, but that's another debate for another day. I'm sure we'll have it this Thursday because we'll see an increase, not a reduction, in taxes.

Once again, I would urge all members to think a little longer, to read a little harder, and realize that this is about the people of Alberta, not the government and its ability to spend its money foolishly, those hard-earned dollars of the people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 504 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We had good debate today. I think it would be appropriate to call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:54 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Title: Tuesday, April 17, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/04/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

On this afternoon, as our work in this Legislature continues, let each of us pray for those who have been taken and those who have suffered as innocent victims of violent tragedy. We resolve to comfort the families, friends, and communities who have keenly felt the loss of loved ones through acts of violence and disregard for the sanctity of that which is most precious, life. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta and the United States have a long history of close co-operation, especially in energy. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Ms Drue Pearce. She's in the Speaker's gallery along with our very good friend, of course, the consul general of the United States, Tom Huffaker. Now, I might add that Ms Pearce is a former Alaska state Senator and is now the U.S. federal co-ordinator of Alaska natural gas transportation projects. Of course, the Alaska natural gas pipeline is such an important initiative that will run through Alberta. I might add that today they will be meeting with our Premier and also met with our Minister of Energy earlier today. I'd ask them to rise in the Speaker's gallery and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a number of guests who are here with us to mark the introduction of Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, for first reading. Some of our guests are seated in the public gallery and others in the members' gallery. Of course, the Mental Health Amendment Act is going to bring in community treatment orders, the legislative side of more focus on how we help persons with mental illness in our community. I'd ask that our guests rise when I announce them and that the Assembly hold their applause until they've all been introduced.

First, we have two representatives from the Schizophrenia Society of Alberta: Dr. Irv Zemrau, president, and Ken Smith, director. We have Ms Elaine Marko. Ms Marco is a teacher at Harry Ainlay high school and a counsellor and someone who as a parent has mental health issues in her family and has been very supportive in bringing this forward. Next, we have members from the Alberta Mental Health Board: Ray Block, president and CEO; Dr. Roger Bland, executive medical director; Louise Laforce-Fertig, a member; and Sandra Harrison, the Mental Health Patient Advocate.

We also have representatives from the Alberta Alliance on Mental Illness and Mental Health. Members and colleagues will recognize Dennis Anderson, who is the founding chair of the alliance and, of course, a former member of this Assembly, a former minister of culture, multiculturalism, and women's issues, Municipal Affairs and Housing, consumer and corporate affairs. We also have with us Sharon Sutherland, who is the chair of the alliance; Tom Shand, the executive director of the Canadian Mental Health Association, Alberta division; and Pierre Bérube, executive director of the Psychologists' Association of Alberta.

I'd welcome as well Dr. P.J. White, the incoming president of the Canadian Psychiatric Association and chair of psychiatry at the University of Alberta, and last but not least Fern Miller, a senior manager in Alberta Health and Wellness, public health division, who has worked very hard to help bring this legislation to fruition.

All of our guests are rising, and I'd ask you to give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House five members of the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force. These people have dedicated themselves till the end of June to travel the province to find recommendations for the Minister of Justice to make our communities safer. They are Jennifer Scheible, our youth representative; Sue Hughson, appellate counsel/Crown prosecutor; Dwight Oliver, the reeve of Clearwater county and AAMD and C representative; Jean Mah, who is from Alberta Justice – she is on our support team – and Chester Cunningham, who is a retired CEO from the native court workers. I'll ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly one Mr. Jason Clampitt. Also, with him today is a man to whom I credit most of my life's successes, a man of integrity and strength whom I strive to be like every day. That man is my dad, Keith Griffiths. I'll ask both of them to rise in the members' gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mike Butler. Mike is a 26-year-old Mill Woods resident who tragically lost his wife last week. Mike's situation raises concerns around funding for programs for persons suffering with mental illnesses and drug addiction. We wish Mike and his family the best and offer our sincere condolences through this difficult time. I would now ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Gail Husum and Barb Billingsley. Barb and Gail are Palace Casino workers who have been on strike for the last 221 days, due at least in part to this government's failure to provide fair labour legislation for workers in this province.

Barb has been at the Palace Casino for 17 years as a pit boss and has worked within the gaming industry for nearly 30 years. Barb works alongside her daughter and son-in-law, and at one time her other daughter also worked at Palace Casino, so this strike has been very important to her and her family's livelihood.

Gail has been a Palace Casino employee for three years and works in the slots department. She went on strike to fight for equality for workers and to see a better standard in terms of wages and benefits for all employees. They are here with UFCW 401 representative Don Crisall. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a real pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a fine group in from the wonderful little village of Dewberry and representing their school, the Lakeland Country school. There are 15 students here with their parents and team leaders Mr. and Mrs. Darren Wiebe, Mr. and Mrs. Doug Loewen, and Miss Lorraine Thiessen. Also helping them on their trip to see the Legislature Building today are Mr. and Mrs. Bill Toews, Mr. and Mrs. Kevin Toews, Mr. and Mrs. Cam Braun, Mr. and Mrs. Brian Reimer, Mrs. Phyliss Loewen, and Mr. Lyle Unruh. I would ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed a pleasure to introduce 45 young individuals from St. Lucy Catholic school. They are here today to see us at work and view our fabulous Legislature Building. They are accompanied by Mr. Eriksson and Mrs. Robinson, their teachers, and two parents helpers, Mrs. Lemke and Mrs. Vetter. I would ask them to rise and accept the traditional welcome of our Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Newborn Metabolic Screening Program

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a rather new father I understand the importance of metabolic screening early on in a child's development. On April 2 Alberta's new metabolic screening program was expanded to screen for 17 different conditions in all babies born in the province. The program includes testing to detect cystic fibrosis, making Alberta the first province in Canada to include routine screening for this serious condition. While metabolic disorders are uncommon, treatment of these conditions within the first few days of life improves a child's chances for normal development.

Alberta is recognized for having an outstanding newborn screening program. Each year about 42,000 babies born in Alberta receive a newborn metabolic screening. The screening program is a perfect example of the teamwork and collaboration that operates within Alberta's health care system. The decision to expand the program was the result of a thorough review of the scientific evidence and best practices in other jurisdictions as well as input from many clinical experts, physicians, and regional health authorities.

Congratulations to all those who played a part in creating the expanded screening program and to Alberta Health and Wellness for its ongoing leadership on this initiative. I'd also like to recognize the many partners who make the screening possible each day. These people include the health authority staff who collect the samples from babies, staff in the Capital health newborn metabolic and molecular diagnostic laboratories who test and analyze the samples, as well as the many specialists and clinical staff who provide care to the children and their families. The newborn metabolic screening program is just one way that Alberta is helping to give every child a healthy start in life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta Order of Excellence Inductees

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to recognize some outstanding Albertans who will soon be invested with the Alberta Order of Excellence. This year will see seven people added to the ranks of those who have served our province with distinction. Six of the recipients are Evelyn Buckley, Chief Victor Buffalo, Donald Laubman, Gary McPherson, Douglas Mitchell, and Patrick Nixon. I'm proud to say that the seventh, Dr. David Leonard, is one of ours; that is, he's an employee of the Alberta government.

Dr. Leonard is an archivist and historian who has helped to preserve and share the stories of our past. He currently works as a historian in the Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture department. Dr. Leonard began his career with the Provincial Archives in 1969 after completing degrees at the University of Alberta and earning a PhD from the University of Sheffield in England. After stints with other organizations Dr. Leonard returned to the government in 1981 and has never looked back. He has been busy over those years. At one point he was the provincial archivist. He has written eight books about the history of the Peace region.

If you ever have the opportunity to hear a presentation by Dr. Leonard, don't miss it. His knowledge and presentations are fascinating. With this recognition Dr. Leonard joins a very elite group of Albertans as he is only the third historian to be given this honour. Dr. Leonard's contributions will stand the test of time, as will the contributions of all the inductees.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the members of the House to join me in congratulating the seven Albertans who will be invested with the Alberta Order of Excellence in 2007.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mini World Cup of Soccer

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in the city of Edmonton a truly unique event was played out that brought together 32 nations in order to participate in and celebrate the beautiful game of soccer. This event, the Mini World Cup, was played in Edmonton's southside soccer centre from March 31 to April 14, and from the opening ceremonies to the final game there was a full house.

The unique feature of soccer is that it is truly an international game that serves to bring together cultures for the love of the game. This event showed the amazing cultural diversity that Edmonton has and how all these cultures can come together and celebrate with joy and passion their common interest: the beauty that is soccer.

The women's final saw an amazing game between Poland and Italy that ultimately was won by Poland 5 to 4 in a shootout. Our congratulations to these teams as well as to Canada for their victory over Scotland in the bronze medal game. In the men's draw the final saw Scotland prevail over Serbia 5 to 1 in a game that was played in front of a packed house, and these two teams did not disappoint. It was truly a game to remember. We would like to congratulate both teams on their gold and silver performances and India as well in winning the bronze after a thrilling 3 to 1 win over Croatia.

With this tournament we have solidified what is Edmonton and all of Alberta, a truly multicultural society that is just as proud of our traditional heritage as we are of being Canadian. Whether it's the Chileans singing songs at the top of their lungs, the Nigerians banging on drums as their team displayed explosive skill, or Northern Ireland and their rallying cry of “No surrender,” the passion was remarkable and the comradery an example to us all of how everyone can live and play together in harmony.

Mr. Speaker, my congratulations to the Edmonton and District Soccer Association for putting on yet another amazing Mini World Cup tournament.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

SAIT Women’s and Men’s Hockey Teams

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize the SAIT men’s and women’s hockey collegiate ACAC champions for 2007. The SAIT men’s hockey team defeated their northern rivals, the NAIT Ooks, to take home the ACAC crown on home ice at the SAIT arena. Both teams traded road victories in games 1 and 2 in the best of 5 ACAC finals two weekends ago, and the women’s hockey team became the first Trojan squad to repeat as ACAC champions since the mid-1990s.

The men’s hockey team was coached by Ken Babey, assistant coaches Jim McLean and Lyle Hamm. The players: Cale Jordison, David Simoes, Aaron Roberge, Michael Ewanchuck, Adam Knight, Marcus Wiebe, Chad Chapman, Brett Yeo, Clayton Bastura, Mike Bulawka, Blair Gray, Cam Doull, Dallas Costanzo, TJ Babey, Kyle McEwen, Kyle Gladue, Steve Stroschin, Patrick McGillicky, Tyler Milford, Jonathan Leinweber, Chad Betts, Bryn Gagnon, Darren Zurkan, Reese St. Goddard, and Jordan Ramstead.

The women players: Kierra Minto, Kristin Miyauchi, Jasmin Sutherland, Nicole Hunter, Michelle Glendinning, Tonya Faasse, Sheena Smigelski, Nicki Robinson, Chilla Fedoruk, Andy Dow, Kelsey Shmyr, Carolyn Bowen, Michela Gellert, Jaime Teichman, Amanda Gushue, and Natalie Gerstmar.

Thank you Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Anniversary of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-five years ago today on April 17, 1982, the human rights of Canadians were enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and added to the Canadian Constitution. While human rights were recognized previously, notably by the universal declaration of human rights in 1948, one of the drafters being a Canadian, John Humphrey, and by the Canadian Bill of Rights in 1960, the ratification of the Charter in 1982 was a significant step forward in the history of human rights.

The Charter has huge significance for provincial Legislatures, enshrining in law the protection of the rights and freedoms of every Canadian and limiting the ability of governments to pass laws or pass legislation which discriminates or infringes on human rights. The Charter provides a measuring rod, a touchstone, a baseline for human rights in Canada. It applies to all governments and protects fundamental freedoms such as freedom of conscience and religion and freedom of the press, Canada’s multicultural heritage, aboriginal rights, and so on. But I believe that section 15, which covers equality rights, is the most important of all. Section 15 enshrines the right to equal treatment before and under the law and to equal benefit and protection of the law “without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability” or other grounds such as sexual orientation.

The Charter is 25 years old. It is not written in stone. As the history of human rights evolves, our interpretations will change. The reality of the conflict of rights remains a huge challenge. For me it is abhorrent that religious groups hide behind the freedom of religion to justify the exclusion of women or gays and lesbians.

There is more work to do in raising the awareness of human rights in Canada, but I agree with Mr. Ed Broadbent, who said in the House of Commons on November 20, 1981: I would like this resolution and particularly the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to hang on the wall of every classroom in every school in every region of Canada; I believe that constitutions are fundamentally about rights, rights are fundamentally about people, and people from childhood on must be encouraged to acquire a deep understanding of their own liberties as well as an even deeper appreciation of the liberties of others.

Mr. Speaker, as an Albertan, as a Canadian I am proud to recognize the 25th anniversary of the Charter. It is a beacon of light to all countries in the world that we respect our own rights and the rights and freedoms of other people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Native Hockey Provincials

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1954 the Alberta native hockey provincials have brought young aboriginal boys and girls of all ages together to display their ability and to compete for the top prize. Earlier this month the 2007 Alberta provincials were held right here in Edmonton for four days, and they were exciting times. I attended as many games as I could to witness the outstanding skills and sportsmanship that these youngsters possess. Oh, my, the skills they did demonstrate on and off the ice were remarkable. There were an impressive 146 teams participating in this tournament.

Every year these native hockey provincials have grown in numbers and popularity. In fact, some of my First Nations and Métis communities were represented at this year’s event. One of those communities is Gift Lake Métis settlement, some 400 kilometres north of Edmonton.

The Gift Lake peewee girls never lost a game in the round robin playoffs and, as a result, won the coveted gold medal. For your outstanding performances special congratulations to Mikayla Laderoute, Stéphanie Cunningham, Larissa Cunningham, Elisha Lamouche, Elisha Cunningham, Ashley Laderoute, Kendra Rosychuk, Hayley Laughlin, Brianna Auger, Danielle Letendre, and Jaylee Wolfe.

But, Mr. Speaker, the Gift Lake midget boys won gold against the Fort McMurray all-star team in the A division in an overtime shootout, just like the NHL. To you Kirby Halcrow, Hector Jr. Lamouche, Micheal Lamouche, Dean Nahachick, Lenny L’Hirondelle, Ira Gladue, Kelsey Lamouche, Theron Gaudette, Alden Tallman, Sheldon Johnson, Wapan Johnson, you’ve done us proud.

I’d ask this Assembly to help me congratulate these exceptional athletes.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Bill 11

Telecommunications Act Repeal Act

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce the Telecommunications Act Repeal Act.

The Telecommunications Act was proclaimed in 1988 to regulate the operation of two public organizations, Alberta Government Telephones and Edmonton Telephones. Neither of these organizations exist as corporate entities any longer.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 11 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Bill 31 Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise to introduce first reading of Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007.

Amendments to the Mental Health Act will amend the criteria for involuntary admission to designated facilities to allow earlier intervention, provide a legislative framework to implement community treatment orders in Alberta, and require that treatment recommendations be provided to patients' family doctors when patients are discharged from facilities.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will be supported by accompanying measures to enhance community-based mental health services that will help Albertans living with mental illness and their families to access early intervention services and enjoy full and productive lives.

I move first reading of Bill 31, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to request of the House that we move Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, a letter from Calgary-Varsity constituent Warren Brooke, who expresses concerns about the government's limited CO₂ intensity reductions and half-priced emission credits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter from April 2, 2007, that I received from the EUB. This letter indicates that the hearing on the AltaLink Management's Edmonton-Calgary 500 kV line is to recommence April 16, 2007.

The second tabling I have today is a letter that I wrote on April 13, 2007, to the hon. Premier of Alberta. This is in regard to Bill 22. It is requesting that the government caucus support an amendment to Bill 22 to mandate that the head office and principal place of business for the proposed Alberta investment corporation be the city of Edmonton, Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and table the required number of copies of just something, a little something, we found lying around collecting dust. It's called A Housing Symposium: Affordable Housing for Albertans, final report, released by Alberta Municipal Affairs, dated November 1998.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Beverly-Highlands.

Mr. Martin: Beverly-Clareview?

Mr. Mason: Which one of us would you like, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview first.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I think. I have two documents to table today. The first is a heartfelt letter from Trevor Allan that was sent to the Premier and the minister of municipal affairs. Mr. Allan is an Edmontonian who experienced a $300 rent increase in just over a year. He is among the many Albertans calling for rent guidelines.

The second document I have is a notice that was recently sent to residents of the Burlington Arms apartment complex in my riding. These residents are among the thousands of Albertans who are being negatively affected by condo conversions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a document which I referred to yesterday during question period. It's an excerpt from a report to Edmonton city council's Community Services Committee. The report shows a sharp rise in ambulance wait times as well as system alerts and red alerts in the Capital health region.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to table some documents coming out of the Gambling Research Conference 2007, attended by a representative of the independent member's office.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today I am tabling with the Assembly the annual report of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for the period April 1, 2005, to March 31, 2006, and the financial report of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner as at March 31, 2006.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today the requisite number of copies of the answers to written questions 5, 6, 7, and 8, which were accepted yesterday in this House. Copies of those answers have been delivered to the hon. member.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The patronage contracts this government signed with defeated Tory MLA Bob Maskell were not adequately monitored. That much is clear. Tens of thousands of dollars were paid out based on completely inadequate billing information. Yesterday the Premier promised to conduct an internal audit of the billings and to make that information public. Taxpayers and Alberta Liberals are skeptical. My question is to the Premier. The government spends millions upon millions of public dollars on contracts every year. If the internal audit body of this government is truly effective, why do departments not have the systems in place to prevent this kind of abuse, or are there two sets of rules, depending on who gets the contracts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House I said that all of the billing that was done by the person in question will be reviewed by a system we have in place, and that's an internal audit system. What will come out of that internal audit I said would be made public. If there are other rules, guidelines that may be implemented as a result of it, maybe more checks and balances, we'll certainly work with the internal auditor and also with the Auditor General to make sure that we keep always improving the checks and balances that we have in government.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, this PC government has a very serious problem with patronage. The problem is rooted so deeply in the culture of this government that its Internal Audit Committee, the one that is supposed to provide independent, objective audit advice, continues to have, according to this government's website less than an hour ago, a PC Party vice-president sitting on the audit committee. To the Premier: can the Premier explain to Albertans why they should have any confidence whatsoever in an audit of patronage contracts when the committee overseeing the audit has a VP of the PC Party on it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the opposition is not understanding the process in place. We're talking about an internal audit. This will be done by staff of the government of Alberta to ensure that the processes were followed, and I said that then it'll be coming forward in terms of any recommendations and also working with the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The international standards for professional practice of auditing require that "internal auditors should have an impartial, unbiased attitude and avoid conflicts of interest." In Ottawa internal audits are overseen by a committee with a majority of members from outside government. In Alberta, as usual, standards of accountability are shockingly and irresponsibly low. Albertans deserve a direct answer on this. To the Premier: will the Premier remove the Tory party vice-president from the Internal Audit Committee and create a truly independent, nonpartisan audit organization that meets basic professional standards?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, he's confusing the two audit committees. But, you know, when you go across the country, constantly you hear that the province of Alberta has the best set of books, the best reporting mechanism to its taxpayers, and the best controls and measures. If there is further improvement, we're again going to take a leadership role and improve on what we have already accomplished as the government of Alberta.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Industrial Development in Alberta's Heartland Area

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the city of Edmonton applied for intervenor status with the EUB in the application of a major upgrader north of Edmonton due to concerns over water and air quality. This move demonstrates just how many holes there are in this government's regional planning when they proceed full tilt on projects without pausing to examine the full impacts on health and the environment. What remains to be seen is whether the province will turn its back on Edmonton's concerns just as it did when Fort McMurray intervened in a project last summer. To the Premier: will this government respond to the city of Edmonton's concerns and conduct a full cumulative impact assessment to determine how this proposed upgrader would impact the air and water quality of residents in the region?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is a very good process in place allowing the municipalities to comment, bring forward submissions on proposed development not only in their own municipality but, of course, in adjoining municipalities. There is considerably more information with respect to this proposed development, and the Minister of Energy can answer that later.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to any development in the province of Alberta and most certainly with the ones that we're looking at in the heartland area, there will be full – there will be full – impact assessments taken into consideration at the time that the EUB has an opportunity to deal with the application.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The key word is "cumulative." Again to the Premier: will this government conduct comprehensive, independent scientific analysis of the cumulative effects on the river and air of the numerous upgraders proposed in Sturgeon and Strathcona counties?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to constantly improving the environment, securing a better environment for the next generation. It's one of the many considerations we have, not only air quality, water. You know, notwithstanding the comments from across the way, even the leader of the Green Party commented and praised the Alberta government on its leadership role in terms of protection of the environment.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's try this a different way. The proposed projects in Upgrader Alley will require a massive draw on the North Saskatchewan River. It's critical that the government ensure that the same situation that occurred in the South Saskatchewan River basin, where there's no water left for future licences, does not occur in the Edmonton region. Water is our lifeblood, and we have to manage it carefully to support future growth. To the Premier: will the Premier assure all Albertans that the industrial activity being planned in Upgrader Alley will not jeopardize the health of the North Saskatchewan River?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again there's a considerable amount of misinformation in the preamble. The Minister of Environment will give the correct information.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make two points. First of all, applications are currently under review under both the Water Act and the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. A thorough review is taking place as we speak. My understanding is that the request under the application is for about .1 of 1 per cent of the total stream flow in the North Saskatchewan River. That being said, I have been very public in recent times talking about the need for a cumulative impact assessment and have committed to . . .

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we thought that sometime this week we might get a look at the report of the Affordable Housing Task Force, but this morning the Tory caucus debated or fought about the recommendations from the task force behind closed doors, with no one ever having seen the recommendations in the first place, and now apparently the minister says that we won't be seeing them this week. However, information has surfaced that one of the main points of contention dividing the Tory caucus is the issue of temporary regulation of rental increases. To the Premier: does the Premier accept the fact that right now, given the serious crisis in housing right across this province, his government needs to show true leadership and enact a temporary limit on rent increases?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government is showing leadership. We initiated a very thorough review of the critical shortage of housing in the province, the first time that we had, of course, all-party participation. Both parties were represented on the committee. We didn't meet this morning as a caucus. In fact, the meeting was last night. It was a long meeting. There were a number of issues discussed, and we're working towards resolution of the many recommendations that came forward in the report.

Mr. Taylor: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the first time the thing hit a bump in the road they all ran for cover.

I've been travelling. I was in Grande Prairie last week. I was in Drumheller yesterday. I've been talking to people all over this province about the fact that people cannot afford a place to live in this province, and it's placing a serious strain on them and their families. Mr. Speaker, everybody needs a home. Will this Premier call for a temporary moratorium on condominium conversions instead of just increasing the length of eviction notices if a landlord is converting a rental unit to a condo? Either way the person is still being kicked out.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, we are taking a leadership role in this whole critical area. I've heard personally from many Albertans in terms of suggestions, in terms of what government may do, again, in partnership with the federal government, with municipal governments, and, of course, with the private sector. This is an issue related to phenomenal growth, and in spite of the many issues that we face as the province of Alberta, many, many Canadians insist on moving to this province because this is where the job creation is and their opportunity to raise their family and retire here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And those people are going back home when they can't find a place to live. They're going back home to Saskatchewan and other provinces.

You know, all Albertans are affected by this housing crisis, and they're placing great faith in this government to actually show some leadership, which involves action, and accept the recommendations in the task force report. You know, the thing that I tabled earlier today called A Housing Symposium: Affordable Housing for Albertans was the result of a symposium to address the then pressing need for more affordable housing for families, chaired by the minister for municipal affairs nine years ago. Why should Albertans expect this Premier, this government, to act now when they were told the exact same thing nine years ago and nothing happened, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the information provided is wrong, but I'll have the minister of municipal affairs inform all Albertans what this government has done to date with respect to housing.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that our ministry and our government is moving forward on recommendations and responses to the housing task force. I want to reiterate some of the work that our ministry and the government is doing in support of shelters: $23 million in support of the homeless, three plus . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] It's time to protect Albertans from the fallout of this economic explosion. Rent increases are putting Albertans at risk of losing their homes . . . [interjection] I'm gonna choke that guy.

. . . and keeping other Canadians from coming here to work. There's a simple solution in the affordable task force report: one rent increase a year capped at the consumer price index plus 2 per cent. My question is to the Premier. Now that the task force report is public, at least for some people, will you quit the song and dance and bring in rent stability guidelines today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, for the record, when he said, "I'm gonna choke that guy," he wasn't pointing to me; he was pointing to someone else. So thank you for that.

With respect to the housing report, as I said, we're putting it through the process. This will be part, of course, of the budget announcement. It is important from two points of view. It's a social issue because people are looking for places to live, the homeless and the working poor, but it's also an issue for those that are trying to attract more people to the province of Alberta to fill the many job vacancies we have. Certainly, in order to attract more people to Alberta, we need more availability of housing for those coming to the province.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta New Democrats have been putting forward this idea; now the minister's task force has put forward the idea of rent review guidelines. Even the Liberal caucus is on board. Now, will the Premier do the right thing for the people of Alberta who are being kicked out of their homes because they can't afford their rent and bring in rent guidelines today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I've always said that our government caucus has opportunity for a complete dialogue and discussion of the many issues that come forward. It is going through the process. We understand the many pressures on housing. As I said before, it has a twofold purpose: one, from the social aspect and the other, to attract more people to the province of Alberta to fill the many job vacancies. We're working very hard. As I said, there'll be Thursday's budget announcements and other news to follow.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the task force on housing made the recommendations a month ago. Surely that has given the government enough time to respond. We need solutions, Mr. Premier, not delusions. That, I'm afraid, is what we're really going to see from this government. So will the Premier stand up and take clear action on behalf of renters and show that this government is actually on the side of the people and not on the side of the big landlords?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I take pride in the fact that this government is committed to improving the quality of life for all Albertans. That's an important priority for the government, and we'll keep working on that very diligently. As I said before, the report itself was an all-party committee, and I know that various members of the opposition have had that report for a considerable amount of time. This is part of the openness and transparency of the government to ensure that we involve both sides of the House in the critical discussion of issues that involve all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government has recently declared a forest health emergency because of the mountain pine beetles. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: how much did the pine beetle situation change or worsen during the last winter?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the order in council declaring a forest health emergency is a procedural requirement that's necessary in the future to access funding from the sustainability fund. Of course, in the budget that'll be tabled on Thursday I've requested core funding for these types of operations. Depending upon what our surveys show in June, if the infestation is as serious as we believe it is, then our ministry will be eligible to qualify for the additional emergency funding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: how will this emergency funding be directed against the pine beetles?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, if our estimates from last fall are accurate and the pine beetle infestation is as serious as we think it is, we're estimating that the numbers have increased from 20,000 to 30,000 infected trees up to 2 million to 3 million. If those estimates prove correct, then we have a real battle on our hands. We're preparing both our core funding and, if necessary, the emergency funding to mount operations to identify and remove infected individual trees and also infected stands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: how is Alberta co-operating with British Columbia to ensure that we have the benefit of their experience with the pine beetle problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. British Columbia has had a great deal of experience with this problem. It's very unfortunate. They're estimating that they're going to have lost 90 per cent of their lodgepole pine by 2012, 2013. Fortunately, they're working very closely with us. We have several different consultative mechanisms. Our forestry people are working with their forestry people. We're also working with the national Forest Service and Parks Canada. I'm happy to report that at the joint B.C./Alberta cabinet meetings next month, I'll be discussing this with my B.C. counterpart.

Thank you.

Mr. Bonko: In 2005 the Alberta Liberals raised the issue of funding to deal with the mountain pine beetle with the then Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. We knew then that the money to deal with the beetle was insufficient. They failed to plan adequately to address the pine beetle for the future. Now we see the results of that failure. Alberta's front-line Canadian beetle-free forest is at threat, and emergency funding is required. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: does he accept that the government has not been proactive enough in recent years when dealing with the mountain pine beetle?

Dr. Morton: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see that the Liberals are at least talking about responsible government instead of government by the judges and the judiciary, like one of their members was talking about before. I'm sure the next thing we'll hear from that side is that the Charter of Rights protects the pine beetle.

Mr. Speaker, my predecessor twice last year requested additional funding, supplementary funding to deal with this emergency. I know that members on the other side would like to see an omnipotent government that can solve all the problems of the world. We deal with problems as they arise.

Mr. Bonko: Parks Canada has recognized the need to harness and control the pine beetle. They know that the pine beetle has two natural enemies: extreme cold and fire. We can't rely on the cold anymore, so Parks Canada has turned to the other natural source. They're using large-scale burns to rejuvenate the forests and to slow down the pine beetle. So to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: will he accept that Alberta should be using a natural approach when holding and dealing with the pine beetle?

Some Hon. Members: Firewall. Firewall.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I am very gratified to see that the members on the other side have finally understood the wisdom of the firewall. Of course, as usual, they've confused things. The firewall is to protect us from Ottawa. It is not to protect us from the pine beetle.

I would just point out what probably every schoolchild knows: responsible forestry leaves buffer zones, riparian zones, wildlife habitat; forest fires take everything. There's nothing worse for the environment, nothing worse for the forests than forest fires.

Mr. Bonko: The minister said that the government's healthy forest initiative will work to make forests healthier through selective harvesting. We don't have the luxury of decades to change our forests, Mr. Minister. How is this minister expecting this measure to take effect in time to offer real solutions for the spread of the pine beetle? Shouldn't the government have been working on this in previous years?

Dr. Morton: Again, the members opposite, Mr. Speaker, assume that governments can foresee the future. It's lucky that they're over there and not exercising the levers of power on this side. We are taking responsible action to deal with this issue as it unfolds. We're not going to hit the panic button the way the hon. member opposite is asking us to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Oil Sands Development

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy is firing on every cylinder possible, and those cylinders are evident throughout Alberta. Therefore, it comes as no surprise that managing growth pressures in this red-hot economy is one of our government's top priorities. For example, the rapid pace of oil sands development is one very important area that must be addressed. My questions are to the President of the Treasury Board. Given the recently released Radke report, which is formally called Investing in Our Future, responding to the needs of high-growth areas, what is this minister doing in response to the 30 recommendations contained in that report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report did identify several areas where there may be gaps in the delivery of our service, whether it be health care, education, infrastructure, housing. All of those departments have had access to the report and are putting together their department's response to the plan. That should appear in our budget in the out years.

One of the recommendations, though, Mr. Speaker, was the development of an oil sands secretariat that would co-ordinate the approach to solving the problem so that we would ensure that the money that we're spending to target this high-growth area would be co-ordinated and would be well used.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, some of those high-growth areas include Edmonton, which obviously reaps a tremendous amount of economic activity as a result of what's going on, economically speaking, in Fort McMurray and, specifically, the oil sands investments there, which top about $75 billion. So we're grateful for that. However, one of the ideas calls for an oil sands secretariat that ought to be created, and I'd like to know when that particular secretariat will be up and running. Is the minister acting on it with expediency?

Mr. Snelgrove: I think it would be fair to point out that not only Edmonton benefits from the McMurray oil sands growth, but indeed all of Canada benefits greatly from it. So it truly is the engine that's actually driving it.

The oil sands secretariat has been put together, and at this time we are searching for an individual that would head the secretariat. We are no different than any other corporate entity, Mr. Speaker. It's very difficult to find people that may be able to do the job. We're hoping to have the individual in place no later than the end of May, but at this point we are not waiting for them. The departments all are working at bringing forward their business plans and budgets to address the situation.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, my final question is simply this: what will this minister do to ensure that this secretariat, once it is up and running, results in a more timely and a more seamless approach regarding oil sands development so that the concerns of businesses and contractors and local communities can be addressed?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, to start, Mr. Speaker, I'll be going to Fort McMurray next week to meet with the local business groups and representatives and the mayor. It's also obvious in this government that it's in everyone's best interest to make sure that the development in Fort McMurray is done in a timely and orderly manner. With the Premier and this government's acceptance of the five priorities, one of which is managing growth pressure, I can assure you that the situation in Fort McMurray and the oil sands secretariat will have my fullest attention.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Grande Prairie Land Sale

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The value of a project should be assessed on a variety of legitimate categories, including economic viability, need, and growth concerns, rather than its Tory connectedness. There's no question about the value to the agricultural and manufacturing community of having a container port built at the crossroads of highways 43 and 2 in Grande Prairie county, for which land valued at over $2 million was given to the county for just $1. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Can the minister assure Albertans that former MLA Walter Paszkowski, who is now the land manager for the county, did not receive preferential treatment with this dollar deal?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, we haven't given any land away to anyone other than a municipality on any dollar deals or to our own. So I would definitely have to look into that, but I would say that no one benefited because they were affiliated with the PC Party.

Mr. Chase: It's about time this minister did his homework.

The city of Grande Prairie, just a stone's throw from the four corners terminal, is bursting at its infrastructure seams, badly in need of schools, a hospital, a new highway bypass, and affordable housing. Can the city expect in the very near future to receive much-needed land from the province for a dollar?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, absolutely, if we have things that the city needs and it's surplus to us, we will make a good deal with the city of Grande Prairie.

Mr. Chase: That's wonderful. Grande Prairians, start celebrating. Your minister is with you.

Does the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation have a set of guidelines, categories, requirements, or rules that a community must meet to receive land for a dollar, or is the process completely at the whim of the current minister, the third person to hold this position in a year?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we have processes for everything we do, and it is not at the whim of this minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Large Agricultural Operations near Waterways

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The proposal for a large dairy farm in the Calmar/Devon area is now before the Natural Resources Conservation Board. Many residents have objected to the farm, but it is still being considered by the NRCB. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who is responsible for the NRCB. Why doesn't the NRCB recognize that the local residents are against having an expanded farm at this location and not allow it to be developed?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the Natural Resources Conservation Board is an independent regulatory agency, which means that it operates at arm's length from the government, which precludes any sort of interference on the part of not just the minister responsible but also any member of the government. The approval process that regulates a dairy farm like this is set out under the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, which is legislation that falls under Alberta Agriculture and Food. As I understand it, there was an opportunity for people that were opposed to this proposed development to speak to the NRCB.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. There have been a number of concerns from residents about this farm causing health and environmental problems. Given that yesterday I tabled a petition asking for a one-mile buffer zone from major water courses for such proposals, will these issues be addressed through the NRCB review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am confident that those concerns will be addressed. As I mentioned already, the NRCB listens to all sides involved in these types of concerns. Water issues are addressed, and there are actual specific requirements for setbacks from water. So as this hearing unfolds, I fully expect that the proper decision will be made. But the key thing to emphasize is that the decision is made according to the rules, the criteria that are set out in the Agricultural Operation Practices Act. It's a rule-driven decision-making process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In that case, my second supplemental is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Since local residents are frequently opposed to these factory farms, is there not a need to review how the Agricultural Operation Practices Act is operating?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to making sure that the legislation is fair to communities, industry, and the environment. Alberta did an extensive review of this act, of the NRCB, and relevant regulations. Changes to the regulations went into effect as of October 1, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, this particular application is currently under review, as the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development said, and we certainly need to let due process run its course on this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Workplace Health and Safety

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 28 Albertans will gather to remember workers who have been injured or killed on the job. In 2006 124 Albertans died as a result of workplace injuries or disease, a rate of almost two and a half deaths a week. Alberta workers experience about 14 per cent of all work-related deaths in Canada, even though Alberta has only 10 per cent of the population. My questions are to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Has the minister examined why Alberta workers suffer a higher rate of work-related fatalities than would be predicted by our population?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does ask a very good question. When we come back to the House, reconvene after the week's break, we plan to have, as we have in the past, some time for recognition of the workers that we have lost. Recently our analysis of statistical information that we collect includes those occupation-related diseases that have added to the numbers of people that have been lost.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I have raised the issue not only in discussions that we've had within the department but with all of the major-sector industries, that we have met and talked about some of the programming that they are bringing forward for safety first. It is not only deaths that we are concerned about. It is injuries on the job. It is issues when the rookie worker has difficulty.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of the 124 individuals who suffered work-related deaths, 10 were under the age of 30. Workers under the age of 25 are 33 per cent more likely to be injured on the job than older workers. Even one death of a young person in the workplace is unacceptable. I think all parents in this province are concerned when their young people go north to work in the oil patch. My question is to the same minister. What specific steps has this government taken to ensure that Alberta's young workers are safe on the job?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we've actually had a number of programs. In September of last year there was a program introduced in the schools so that workers who might be into casual employment or part-time employment would have the benefit of that type of knowledge. We have added to our training programs through the various building and educating tomorrow's workforce programs, so we're doing that with employers on the job. We have very special counsellors, that make sure that these programs are being adhered to. When we talk about the initiatives this coming year, I think there will be some very obvious changes in the way we are working on evaluating the occupational health and safety of part-time employees.

Dr. B. Miller: When questioned recently in the Legislature by the Liberal opposition about providing funding to help employers develop better safety practices for farm workers, the Premier said, "Why should we be funding common sense?" To the same minister: is it the minister's and this government's position that common sense is all that is needed to protect Alberta's workers from harm?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the interesting conversations I've had since I've been in this ministry is with Dr. Louis Hugo Francescutti, who said that many of the things that protect people are the things they learn from the time they are born until they are six years of age. In fact, the very best way to job-proof our workers is to teach them properly from the home. In many respects people would call that common sense, or common sense as tutored within the home. So, obviously, there are a variety of things, very many complex issues that can be taught right from the start at the home and later on as they are trained by employers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that Albertans know about the recommendations in the Affordable Housing Task Force report, I guess it's time for the government to act. Hope springs eternal. We are in a crisis situation. My office is getting calls every day. We have people walking in that are very concerned. The time is now to act. I want to talk specifically about condo conversions. We notice that over 1,000 rental units were converted to condos in Calgary last year. At the same time, they're not building affordable housing. My question is to the minister. When is this government going to take off its philosophical blinders and act decisively to place an immediate temporary moratorium on conversions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that we are continuing to build affordable housing on a continuing basis and also that we do view and see the challenges of the conversion of rental units to condos. We are looking at some of the areas of the report that we need to address. We are doing that as a government.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the point that we're trying to make here is that there are thousands of people right now that are facing a lot of stress with these rental increases and condo conversions. They can't wait while you study it. They can't wait for the slow pace of the affordable housing that's going up. We need action now. My question is again to the minister. If he can't announce it today, when are we going to know when they're going to put a stop to condo conversions? Give us a time.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that we are going to give the opposition and the third party and the residents of Alberta the answers when we have finished the discussion and looking at a positive direction for trying to address the growth pressures in Alberta.

Mr. Martin: The fact that you're behind closed doors having a discussion is not much solace to the thousands of people that are facing pressure, Mr. Speaker. My question to this minister is simply: doesn't he recognize that the longer they wait, the worse the crisis is? People want action right now. I again say to the minister: when are we going to get action and some movement on rent guidelines and condo conversions?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this is a complex issue, and it cannot be solved overnight. I'm very happy that the member from the third party recognizes that we are meeting as a caucus, as a government, to try to find solutions for the growth pressures that we're having now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Litigation against Firefighters

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton and Calgary firefighters advise me that insurance companies have developed a new trend, where they or property owners under the advisement of insurance companies now sue firefighters or fire departments in cases where despite their best effort firefighters were unable to extinguish a fire or save the property. This practice insults the professionalism of our firefighters, drives them into lengthy and costly litigation, and allows insurance companies to download their costs onto taxpayers. My first question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: is the minister aware of the fact that several Alberta municipalities and fire departments are now facing litigation for several million dollars each, which simply is aimed at diminishing insurance companies' liability and results in downloading costs to taxpayers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes. The ministry is aware that there are significant issues that have taken place in this regard. I want to say that our Fire Services Advisory Committee is right now at work trying to find the solutions and will make a recommendation to our ministry later this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. In Saskatchewan and Quebec their respective municipal government acts have been amended, preventing litigation where no gross negligence took place. Will the minister amend Alberta's MGA now to do the same?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, our firefighters are protected under section 535(2) of the Municipal Government Act. That is the protection of municipal employees, which paid firefighters and voluntary firefighters fall under.

Mr. Lukaszuk: In that case, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: are Alberta's volunteer fire departments protected from such litigation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, they are. They do fall under the same category, under 535(2) of the act. The voluntary and the paid firefighters are under the same legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Electricity Transmission Regulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is this government making the Energy and Utilities Board a docile servant of the Independent System Operator when you passed this regulation to reform the transmission system last week?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there would have to be some, again, misunderstanding with respect to the hon. member across the way. There's nothing in the new transmission regulation that makes EUB subservient to any other board or entity that operates within that system. As you know, we're also bringing in legislation to deal with a situation where the EUB will have a separation, and we'll end up with two separate boards that deal with these issues.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: why does the EUB, then, in the regulation have to explain its actions, and the Independent System Operator does not?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would depend, I suppose, on which actions it was that we're discussing. But there is nothing in the old transmission regulation or the new transmission regulation that makes the EUB subservient in any way to the AISO.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister: did you read the entire transmission regulation before you recommended it to the cabinet? Yes or no?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, yes, I did, a number of times.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Safety at Postsecondary Institutions

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The members of this Assembly and people around the world are well aware that yesterday a terrible tragedy occurred at Virginia Tech. A student attending that institution shot 32 people and then turned the gun on himself. My heart goes out to our American friends, and our constituents have concerns here at home as well. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Can you please clarify what your department is doing to ensure the safety of staff and students at postsecondary campuses across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were all horrified by this incident, and our condolences go to the loved ones of the victims and, indeed, everyone affected by this senseless violence, as your prayer indicated this afternoon. I think I speak for everyone in the House when I say that it's unfathomable to imagine the grief of these parents. Our government's first priority is to ensure the safety of students. The government is committed to ensuring safe and secure communities for all Albertans. In Alberta each postsecondary institution is responsible for the security on campus, and under the legislation they're expected to have operational measures but also, within that, security measures, and they do. They work very closely with their local police departments and, in fact, have had exercises in that regard.

Mr. Rodney: A supplemental for the same minister: I just wonder if you have any more points of clarification specifically with respect to Edmonton, Calgary, and/or smaller centres.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, both in Edmonton and Calgary the postsecondary institutions in the two large cities work very closely with the local police forces to the extent of having keys available for buildings, diagrams. The response times in Calgary through training and exercises: they have gotten that down to under four minutes for a tactical team response. I think all of the postsecondaries in the province are certainly taking a very serious relook at the plans they have in place. The important thing is that we do have plans in place, we do have security, and it is a safe and secure environment for our students to learn and thrive.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Are there any plans, Mr. Minister, to arm members of campus security?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We certainly have no plans to arm campus security at this point in time. Providing campus security with side arms is not a simple matter. The potential use of deadly force associated with handguns is a very complex issue with significant related implications. Campus security would require extensive firearms training, training in emergency and rapid response situations, as well as their annual recertification. I want to emphasize that police throughout our province have a strong working relationship with postsecondary institutions to ensure that our students can learn in a safe and secure environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Timberland Investment Loss

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Finance minister provided a written response to questions that I've been asking about $7 million that were given up in supplementary supply. The money was used to address investment losses in a number of pension and endowment funds. The response states that following a $170 million purchase of the timberland asset class, there was an $11 million loss that occurred due to, and I quote: an inadvertent several-month delay in hedging the related exposure to the Canada/U.S. dollar exchange. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. What organizational changes were made or which controls were strengthened to ensure that this $11 million mistake does not happen again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's actually legislation before this House at this present time, that will be discussed later on this afternoon, that shows some of those controls. Timberland was an experience where an individual did make a mistake. It was something that cost us dollars. The fund was not hedged when it should have been hedged, and quite simply we are putting in place in Bill 22 legislative regulations to ensure that this doesn't happen again.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like somebody had a bad day at the office.

I find the minister's response interesting because in his written response he actually indicated that the bill that's before the House this afternoon, Bill 22, and this particular situation were not related. So it's an interesting response from the minister.

My question, also for the minister, is this: exactly who made the $11 million boo-boo? Was it an individual, a fund management team, outside advisors? Who made the $11 million mistake?

Dr. Oberg: First of all, Mr. Speaker, we should not be talking about personal issues such as what occurred with timberland. It was an individual within my department. It was someone who should have known better, in fairness. It was someone who didn't, and subsequently we as taxpayers have had to pick it up. It is something that has been a considerable issue. There's been a huge amount of discussion about this. That's one of the reasons why in AIMCO there are regulations and legislation to ensure that this doesn't happen again. We cannot have these kinds of mistakes happen again with someone who knew better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Then the obvious question is: what reprimands or actions were taken against this individual as a response to the $11 million mistake that was made?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been a full investigation of this particular individual. The incident has been looked at, and we are currently reviewing the recommendations. It has been fully looked at. A mistake was made, and I think we have to recognize that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Climate Change Consultation

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our planet is warming at a faster pace than at any other time in recorded history. In 2002 Alberta implemented a climate change action plan for education and research. In 2007 Alberta introduced the first legislation in Canada for regulating greenhouse gas emissions. Steps are now being taken to give Albertans an opportunity to address future plans for climate change in Alberta. Last week I attended the government of Alberta's public consultation meeting on climate change in Alberta with the Minister of Environment and the MLA for Lacombe-Ponoka. The people who attended were very passionate and wanted to make sure that the government's final plan will reflect their concerns. To the Minister of Environment: can the minister assure Albertans that this is more than a paper exercise, and their opinions and concerns will be taken . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I can most definitely assure the member and her constituents that this public consultation process is taking place for very serious reasons because we are asking Albertans to provide us with important input on a go-forward basis on how we can update our climate change policy. Albertans are taking the process just as seriously as we are. We've had good representation at each of our meetings. I was in Fort McMurray last night, and I anticipate a good crowd at the meeting in Edmonton tomorrow night.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister. In Red Deer we've heard from Albertans with very diverse opinions about what they want in our new climate change plan. Does the minister anticipate that he will be able to address such a wide range of concerns in his final plan?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've indicated at every one of the meetings that I've attended that if everyone agreed with one another, this would be an exercise in futility. There would be no necessity to talk to Albertans. We expect there to be diversity brought forward, and at the end of the day I don't expect that everyone who has contributed to this report will necessarily agree with the final result. What I do hope that they will agree with is that they had an opportunity to participate in an inclusive process that recognized the diversity of their opinions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will the minister strike the balance between those who say that industries are the bad guys and need to pay versus those who are concerned that industries may leave the province if they become the focus for achieving greenhouse gas reductions?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's precisely the point. There are some who will choose to use this as some kind of a political process that will pit one against the other. Frankly, I don't buy that argument. I don't think it has to be either/or. I think we can have economic success and environmental stewardship, and that's really the outcome that I'm looking for at the end of the day from this process.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and answers.

Amendments to Standing Orders

15. Mr. Hancock moved:

A. Be it resolved that the temporary amendments to the Standing Orders that were approved by the Assembly on March 12, 2007, be amended as follows:

1 Standing Order 3.1 is struck out, and the following is substituted:

3.1(1) The Assembly shall be called into session each year for a Spring Sitting commencing the first Monday of February, unless otherwise provided by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and concluding the first Thursday in June.

(2) Unless otherwise ordered, the Assembly shall meet for a Fall Sitting each year commencing on the first

- Monday in November and concluding on the first Thursday in December.
- (3) The Assembly shall stand adjourned for a constituency week every 4th week during the Spring Sitting which, where possible, shall be aligned with school holidays or other holiday breaks, unless varied by a calendar agreed to by the House Leaders of the Government, Official Opposition and other recognized parties in consultation with Members not within a recognized party, which shall be filed with the Clerk on or before January 15 each year.
- (4) If a Fall Sitting commences prior to the first Monday in November, the Assembly shall stand adjourned for a constituency week every 4th week.
- (5) Nothing in this Standing Order precludes the Government from advising the Speaker that the public interest requires the Assembly to meet on a certain date, and the Speaker shall give notice that the Assembly shall meet at that time to transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.
- (6) Nothing in this Standing Order precludes the Assembly from adjourning prior to the adjournment dates in suborders (1) and (2) if so ordered by the Assembly.
- (7) Sitings may be extended beyond the adjournment dates in suborders (1) and (2) on passage of a Government Motion, which shall be decided without debate or amendment.
- (8) The Government shall be called to provide the Assembly with a budget and estimates for the ensuing fiscal year on the 2nd Thursday in February unless, prior to the commencement of the Spring Sitting, the Government House Leader has provided to the Clerk notice of an alternate date, in which case the budget shall be provided to the Assembly on such date.
- 2 Standing Order 4 is amended
- (a) by striking out suborder (2) and substituting the following:
- (2) Notwithstanding suborder (1), evening sittings may be scheduled on a Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday, or any combination thereof, upon passage of a Government Motion, which may be made on one day's notice and is subject to debate.
- (b) by adding the following after suborder (2):
- (2.1) Notwithstanding suborders (1), (2), (4) and (5), during the 2007 Spring Sitting, the Assembly shall meet for consideration of main estimates in Committee of Supply in the evening on the following dates and shall sit from 7 p.m. to 10:15 p.m.:
- May 14 to 16, inclusive;
- May 28 to 30, inclusive;
- (c) in suborders (4) and (5) by striking out "7 p.m." and substituting "8 p.m.";
- (d) by striking out suborder (6) and substituting the following:
- (6) Notwithstanding suborders (4) and (5), on afternoons when there is an evening sitting of Committee of Supply, the Speaker or Chair, as the case may be, leaves the chair until 7 p.m.
- (7) When the Committee of Supply meets during an evening sitting, the Committee shall rise and report at 10 p.m.
- 3 Standing Order 7 is amended by adding the following after suborder (1.1):
- (1.2) If the items in the daily Routine are completed prior to 1:30 p.m., the Assembly shall proceed to Oral Question Period, and any matters outstanding shall be taken up prior to the calling of Orders of the Day.
- 4 Standing Order 8 is amended by adding the following after suborder (3):
- (3.1) On Monday afternoon, if the Assembly is in Committee of the Whole, the Committee shall rise and report prior to 4:55 p.m.
- 5 Standing Order 34 is amended by striking out suborders (3) and (3.1) and substituting the following:
- (3) The Government House Leader shall give the Assembly one day's notice of any Written Questions or Motions for Returns that are to be dealt with.
- (3.1) On the Wednesday preceding the consideration of Written Questions and Motions for Returns, the Government House Leader may, by notice to the Clerk, indicate Written Questions and Motions for Returns that the Government will be accepting.
- (3.2) The Clerk shall read the number, text and name of the sponsor of any Written Question or Motion for Returns of which notice of acceptance has been given pursuant to suborder (3.1) when this item of business is called.
- 6 Standing Order 53 is amended by renumbering it as Standing Order 53(1) and adding the following after suborder (1):
- (2) The Government shall respond to a report of the Public Accounts Committee within 150 days of the date on which the Committee reports.
- B. Be it further resolved that the following temporary amendments be made to the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to give further effect to the March 7, 2007, House Leaders' Agreement:
- 1 Standing Order 8(7) is amended by striking out clause (c) and substituting the following:
- (c) A Public Bill Other Than a Government Bill shall be called in Committee of the Whole within 8 sitting days of the day the Bill receives second reading unless the Bill has been referred to a Policy Field Committee, in which case the Bill shall be called within 8 sitting days of the day on which the Policy Field Committee reports.
- 2 Standing Order 32 is amended
- (a) in suborder (3) by adding "Subject to suborder (3.1)," before "When a division is called";
- (b) by adding the following after suborder (3):
- (3.1) After the first division is called in Committee of Supply during the vote on the main estimates under Standing Order 59.04, the interval between division bells shall be reduced to one minute for any subsequent division.
- 3 The following is added after Standing Order 52: Policy Field Committees
- 52.01(1) Four Policy Field Committees, consisting of 11 Members each, shall be established to consider the following subject areas:
- (a) Standing Committee on Community Services – mandate to relate to the areas of health, education, children's services, seniors, supports for the disabled, tourism, parks, recreation and culture;

- (b) Standing Committee on Government Services – mandate to relate to the areas of government services, government organization, personnel administration, expenditure management, capital planning, revenue, justice, international and intergovernmental affairs, trade, aboriginal affairs, policing and security;
- (c) Standing Committee on Managing Growth Pressures – mandate to relate to the areas of post-secondary education, technology, human resources, labour, immigration, rural development, municipal affairs, affordable housing, libraries, infrastructure and transportation;
- (d) Standing Committee on Resources and Environment – mandate to relate to the areas of energy, the environment, agriculture, sustainable resources and forestry.

(2) The Chair of a Policy Field Committee shall be a member of the Government caucus, and the Deputy Chair shall be a member of the Official Opposition.

Consideration of Bills by Policy Field Committees

52.02 A Policy Field Committee shall review any Bill referred to it.

Consideration of regulations by Policy Field Committees

52.03 A Policy Field Committee may review any regulation, amendment to a regulation or prospective regulation within its mandate in order to determine whether the attention of the Assembly should be drawn to any regulation, amendment to a regulation or prospective regulation on the grounds that it

- (a) imposes a charge on the public revenue not specifically provided for by statute;
- (b) prescribes a payment to be made by any public authority that is not specifically provided for by an Act of the Legislative Assembly;
- (c) may not be challenged in the courts;
- (d) makes unusual use of the authority provided for in the parent Act;
- (e) has an unexpected effect where the parent Act confers no express authority for that effect;
- (f) purports to have retrospective effect where the parent statute confers no express authority to have a retrospective effect;
- (g) has been insufficiently promulgated, is outside the scope of the parent Act, has not been enacted properly, or has been made without the necessary statutory authority;
- (h) is not clear in meaning;
- (i) is in any way prejudicial to the public interest.

Orders of the Assembly take priority

52.04 An order of the Assembly that a Bill, regulation or some other subject matter stands referred to a Policy Field Committee shall take priority over any other hearing or inquiry.

Referral of annual reports to Policy Field Committees

52.05(1) The annual reports of each Government department, provincial agency, Crown-controlled organization, board and commission shall be deemed to be permanently referred to a Policy Field Committee.

- (2) Each Policy Field Committee may
- (a) examine each annual report referred to it and report to the Assembly whether the report is satisfactory;

- (b) consider in more detail and report to the Assembly, on each annual report it considers unsatisfactory;
- (c) investigate and report to the Assembly on any lateness in the tabling of annual reports;
- (d) report to the Assembly each year whether there are any bodies which do not table annual reports in the Assembly and which should present such reports.

Public hearings on regulations

52.06(1) A Policy Field Committee may conduct a public hearing on any Bill, regulation or prospective regulation under review.

(2) A Policy Field Committee shall be required, prior to reporting that the attention of the Assembly be drawn to any regulation or prospective regulation, to inform the Government department or authority concerned of its intention to so report.

Policy Field Committee inquiries

52.07(1) A Policy Field Committee shall inquire into, consider and report on any matter referred to it by the Assembly.

(2) A Policy Field Committee may on its own initiative, or at the request of a Minister, inquire into any matter concerned with the structure, organization, operation, efficiency or service delivery of any sector of public policy within its mandate.

(3) An Order of the Assembly that a Policy Field Committee undertake an inquiry shall take priority over any other inquiry, but a Policy Field Committee shall not inquire into any matters which are being examined by a Special Committee.

(4) All inquiries must be concluded and a substantive report presented to the Assembly no later than 6 months after the commencement of the inquiry.

(5) Funding for the purposes of undertaking an inquiry, in addition to the committee's regular allocation, is subject to the prior approval of the Members' Services Committee.

Additional powers of the Policy Field Committee

52.08 In addition to any other powers of Policy Field Committees, the Committees may examine any matter within their mandate and recommend to the Assembly on the need for legislation in that area.

Response to reports

52.09(1) The Government shall respond to a Policy Field Committee's report on any matter other than a report on a Bill within 150 days from the date on which the Policy Field Committee reports.

(2) No motion concurring in the report of a Policy Field Committee to which the Government must respond under suborder (1) shall be voted upon until that response is tabled in the Assembly.

4 The following is added after Standing Order 55:

55.01 Reports of the Officers of the Legislature shall stand referred to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices unless otherwise ordered.

5 The following Standing Orders are added after Standing Order 59:

Application of Standing Orders during main estimates

59.01(1) The Standing Orders of the Assembly shall be observed in the Committee of Supply's consideration of main estimates except as follows:

- (a) a Member may speak more than once;
 - (b) no Member may speak for more than 10 minutes at one time;
 - (c) Standing Order 5, concerning quorum, shall not apply until the main estimates are voted upon.
- (2) Notwithstanding suborder (1)(b), and provided that the Chair has been notified, a Minister and a private Member may combine their respective speaking times for a total of 20 minutes, with both taking and yielding the floor over the combined period.
- (3) During Committee of Supply consideration of the main estimates, officials of the Government may be admitted to the floor of the Assembly to advise the Minister whose estimates are under consideration.
- Hours of main estimates
- 59.02(1) Subject to suborder (2), the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the main estimates for not more than 75 hours.
- (2) During the 2007 Spring Sitting, the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the main estimates for approximately 60 hours, with the time for consideration concluding upon the completion of 4 rotations of the 15-hour cycle outlined in Standing Order 59.03.
- (3) Subject to the Official Opposition designations as provided for in Standing Order 59.03(2), the schedule for consideration of main estimates shall be determined by the House Leaders of the recognized parties and shall be tabled in the Assembly at least one sitting day prior to the Committee of Supply being called to consider main estimates.
- (4) If the House Leaders fail to reach an agreement, the Government House Leader shall schedule the appearances of departments for estimates consideration by the Committee of Supply.
- (5) On the first day of consideration of the main estimates by the Committee of Supply, the first member of Executive Council to speak shall move that the main estimates in their entirety be considered by the Committee.
- (6) During the consideration of the main estimates, the Committee of Supply shall meet for a minimum of 3 hours at one time unless there are no Members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the 3 hours.
- (7) If the Committee of Supply meets for more than 3 hours at one time, the time in excess of 3 hours shall be available to any Member who wishes to speak and is recognized by the Chair.
- (8) The time spent in Committee of Supply beyond 3 hours any afternoon shall not be included in the calculation of the time for a 15-hour cycle.
- (9) During the Committee of Supply's consideration of the main estimates, the Chair shall interrupt
- (a) at 5:45 p.m.,
 - (b) at 10 p.m. if there is an evening sitting, or
 - (c) when there are no Members who wish to speak prior to the times indicated in (a) or (b),
- and shall order the Committee to rise and report, and the Committee shall immediately rise and report progress without motion put.
- (10) Standing Order 5 does not apply to a report to the Assembly from the Committee of Supply under suborder (9).

(11) When an amendment to a department's estimates is moved in Committee of Supply, the vote on the amendment stands deferred until the date scheduled for the vote on the main estimates.

15-hour cycles, hourly allotments to caucuses

59.03(1) In this Standing Order, "cross-ministry" means the estimates of 2 or more departments to be considered by the Committee of Supply during consideration of the main estimates.

(2) The schedule for cross-ministry appearances shall be designated by the Official Opposition in consultation with the Third Party.

(3) The first 60 hours for consideration of the main estimates shall proceed through 4 rotations of a 15-hour cycle whereby

- (a) a caucus is allotted a particular block of hours during which time that caucus is entitled to designate which estimates are to be considered, and
 - (b) only the designated Minister or member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf and members of the caucus that has been allotted that time will be recognized to speak unless there are no members of that caucus who wish to speak.
- (4) The 15-hour cycle shall be allotted as follows:
- Hours 1 to 6 - Official Opposition
 - Hours 7 to 9 - Third Party
 - Hours 10 to 12 - Private Members - Government Caucus
 - Hours 13 to 15 - cross-ministry appearances with the following allotments:
 - (i) the first 2 hours shall be divided between the Official Opposition, who shall have 90 minutes, and the Third Party, who shall have 30 minutes, and
 - (ii) during the last hour any Member may speak.

(5) During each 15-hour cycle, where the members of a caucus are allotted a particular block of time and those Members no longer wish to speak, then consideration for the entire block of time scheduled for that day is deemed to have occurred and any Member may be recognized by the Chair until the Committee rises and reports.

(6) Following the completion of the 4th 15-hour cycle of estimates consideration, the schedule for the remaining hours in Committee of Supply shall be determined by the House Leaders of the recognized parties in consultation with Members of the other parties or independent Members.

Voting – main estimates

59.04(1) On the date scheduled or at the end of 75 hours of consideration, there shall be one vote on the main estimates unless

- (a) additional votes are required on amendments pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(11) prior to calling the vote on the main estimates;
- (b) on at least one day's notice a Member has provided written notification to the Chair and the Clerk of his or her desire that the estimates of a particular department be voted upon separately, in which case that department's estimates shall be voted separately and the final vote for the main estimates shall consist of the estimates of any departments not yet voted upon.

(2) The votes under suborder (1) shall be taken without debate or amendment except as provided in Standing Order 59.02(11).

(3) The Government House Leader shall give notice of the date for the vote on the main estimates not later than the completion of the 4th 15-hour cycle of estimates.

(4) Notwithstanding suborders (1) and (3), for the 2007 Spring Sitting the vote on the main estimates may be scheduled with a minimum of one sitting day's notice to occur any time after the completion of the 4th rotation of the 15-hour cycle, unless otherwise ordered.

(5) On the date for the vote on the main estimates and prior to the vote on the main estimates, the Chair shall put the question to approve the estimates of the Legislative Assembly, as approved by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, and the estimates of the Officers of the Legislature, which shall be decided without debate or amendment.

(6) At 5:45 p.m. on the date scheduled for the vote on the main estimates, if the vote has not been taken earlier, the Chair shall interrupt the proceedings, and the Committee of Supply shall commence voting and, if required, continue beyond the normal adjournment hour until all matters have been voted upon, at which time the Committee shall immediately rise and report.

Tabling of responses

59.05(1) Ministers must table answers to questions asked in Committee of Supply within 2 weeks.

(2) The vote on the main estimates under Standing Order 59.04 shall not be held until the answers have been tabled in the Assembly as required under suborder (1).

(3) Suborder (2) does not apply to questions asked in Committee of Supply within 2 weeks of the date for the vote on the main estimates.

6 The following sections of the Standing Orders shall have no force and effect for consideration of main estimates for the balance of the 26th Legislature:

- (a) 60(1);
- (b) 61(1) - (7) and (9);
- (c) 62(1) and (2);
- (d) 65(1)(b).

7 Standing Order 62(1) is struck out and the following is substituted:

62(1) In this Standing Order and Standing Order 64, "normal adjournment hour" means 6 p.m.

8 Standing Order 68 is amended by striking out suborder (2) and substituting the following:

(2) The report of a committee is the report as determined by the committee as a whole or a majority of it but shall include any dissenting or minority reports concerning the report or parts of it.

9 The following is added after Standing Order 74:

Referral of Bill to a committee after First Reading

74.1(1) Immediately after a Bill has been read a first time,

- (a) with respect to a Government Bill a member of the Executive Council
- (b) with respect to a Public Bill Other Than a Government Bill the sponsor may move a motion, without notice, to refer the Bill to a Policy Field Committee.

(2) The Member moving the referral motion may be permitted to give a succinct explanation of the motion.

(3) Any motion made pursuant to this Standing Order shall be decided without debate or amendment, and if the motion is decided in the negative the said Bill shall be ordered for Second Reading.

(4) This Standing Order does not apply to appropriation or Private Bills.

Proceedings on Bills referred to a committee after First Reading

74.2(1) When a Bill is referred to a Policy Field Committee after First Reading, the committee may conduct public hearings on the subject matter of the Bill and report its observations, opinions and recommendations with respect to the Bill to the Assembly.

(2) Upon the concurrence of a committee report that a Bill be proceeded with, the Bill shall be placed on the Order Paper for Second Reading.

10 The following is added after Standing Order 78:

Referral of Bills to a Policy Field Committee after Second Reading

78.1(1) Immediately after a Bill has been read a second time,

- (a) with respect to a Government Bill, a member of the Executive Council
- (b) with respect to a Public Bill Other Than a Government Bill, any Member may move a motion, without notice, to refer the Bill to a Policy Field Committee, which shall be decided without debate or amendment.

(2) This Standing Order does not apply to appropriation or Private Bills.

Public hearings after Second Reading

78.2(1) When a Bill is referred to a Policy Field Committee after Second Reading, the committee may conduct public hearings on the content of the Bill.

(2) No public hearings may be conducted under suborder (1) if the Bill has been subject to committee consideration after First Reading.

Report of Policy Field Committee on Bills

78.3(1) A Policy Field Committee to which a Bill has been referred by the Assembly after Second Reading shall be empowered to report the same with or without amendments or to report that the Bill not proceed.

(2) The report may contain a written statement of the committee's conclusions if the Bill was the subject of a public hearing.

Procedure on report from Policy Field Committee

78.4 When a Bill is reported pursuant to Standing Order 78.3, the following procedure shall apply:

- (a) any Bill reported shall be considered committed to Committee of the Whole Assembly unless otherwise ordered;
- (b) when a report recommends that the Bill not proceed, a motion to concur in that report shall be put immediately and decided without debate, and if agreed to, the Bill shall be dropped from the Order Paper but if negated, the Bill shall stand committed to the Committee of the Whole.

C. Be it further resolved that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing shall, without further motion, review and consider

- (a) the amendments to Standing Orders resulting from the March 7, 2007, House Leaders' Agreement by comparing the reforms to the practices in other Assemblies, examining whether the reforms afford open discussion of public policy where Albertans can participate and whether the reforms maximize oversight and accountability;
 - (b) the need for additional amendments or reforms to the Assembly's rules and practices to further objectives of open, public discussion of public policy, the role of the Assembly in overall government accountability and the work/life balance of Members; and
 - (c) following the 2007 Spring Sitting the operation of Standing Orders 59.01 to 59.05 and the process used for Committee of Supply in 2007, and shall report to the Assembly with its recommendations no later than February 2008 with respect to the matters in clauses (a) and (b) and no later than the conclusion of the 2007 Fall Sitting with respect to the matters in clause (c).
- D. Be it further resolved that the Policy Field Committees referenced in Part B of this motion be designated as Category A Committees for the purposes of the Members' Services Committee Allowances Order, RMSC 1992, c.M-2.
- E. And be it further resolved that
- 1 The amendments in this motion come into force on passage.
 - 2 The amendments in this motion and the amendments approved by the Assembly on March 12, 2007, as amended, shall have effect until the dissolution of the 26th Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a proud day, in my view, as I have the opportunity to rise and move Government Motion 15 as it stands on the Order Paper. Government Motion 15 provides for temporary amendments to the Standing Orders of this House. They do some significant things in terms of the way we operate our business as legislators in this province on behalf of all Albertans.

Over the course of the fall of 2006 the Progressive Conservative Party had a leadership process, and during that leadership process all of the candidates talked about how we govern and how we should govern. But the candidate who was successful and became the Premier of the province made it very clear during that campaign that he believed that it was necessary for us to revisit the Legislature and the legislative processes with a couple of objectives in mind. One of those objectives was to make sure that this was a place where Albertans would desire to participate. Albertans would be prepared to put their names forward and serve.

One of the barriers to having people choose a political life and choose to be a Member of the Legislative Assembly is the life that we lead. Many members of the public don't necessarily appreciate the long hours and the service that the members of the Legislature put in. They certainly don't appreciate, unless they have a good look at it, the way we conducted business in the past, where sometimes we would meet at 1:30 in the afternoon and adjourn at 5:30 and then meet again at 8 and go into the late hours of the evening or perhaps the early hours of the morning and sometimes all night. That was not conducive to a good family life, that was not conducive to a good work/life balance, and certainly not conducive to recruiting Albertans, women and men who wanted to have a family life, respected their family, and actually wanted to see their spouses and their children from time to time.

So that was one of the objectives, to help address the issue of the work/life balance and the workload so that it was a place where people could come, make meaningful representation, make meaningful participation but do it without sacrificing their families to a greater extent than is absolutely necessary. That was one objective.

The other objective was to make the process of the Legislature and government more effective. We had had a process, a very good process, where private members on the government side of the House have had very good input into developing government policy, I would say more than in any other parliamentary jurisdiction that I am aware of. In other words, members on the government side could attend a standing policy committee. We've heard lots of concerns raised by members of the opposition about the standing policy committees, but they have been a very effective tool to allow private members to have more participation in developing policy, developing legislation, having input with respect to budget, et cetera, as I say, than any other place that I'm aware of in the parliamentary jurisdiction. And that was a good thing.

But what was not good about it was that it did not allow the public to see that kind of input, so a government member could have input at a caucus, input at a standing policy committee, if a member of Agenda and Priorities or the Treasury Board could have input there, but none of that was public policy being made in public. Now, that doesn't mean that process was wrong. It just means that there needed to be additional processes. That's one of the objectives that our Premier tasked me as Government House Leader to achieve in discussion of how we could renovate our processes, and that's one of the things that I'm so proud of being able to bring forward in this motion today.

We are by this motion establishing policy field committees. Now, that's not a new thing for legislators. Lots of legislators have standing committees of the House to which business can be referred. But it's been a long time, if ever, since policy field committees were a part of the Legislature of Alberta. We tabled in this House early in the session a House leaders' agreement, and I can say that we've had very good discussion with House leaders from the opposition and the third party over the course of the last three months in terms of how we can appropriately bring together this concept of Legislature committees which can bring the public into the policy process and into the legislative process.

So this government motion, which, as I say, arises from the all-party agreement that we had, establishes those policy field committees in the areas of community services, government services, managing growth pressures, and resources and the environment. With those four committees any area, any policy field would fall within the purview of one of those four committees.

The committees would have the opportunity to review a bill that was referred to it by the House, so any bill that this Legislature believes should have the opportunity for public hearings, the opportunity to hear witnesses, or the opportunity for further discussion can be referred, on motion, to a policy field committee. That policy field committee, consisting of mainly private members of the House, can then review the bill, call experts if they wish, call witnesses if they wish, or open it to a public hearing if they wish to get further input. They can recommend amendments to the House. They can recommend to the House whether or not a bill should proceed. In other words, further scrutinization and detail work on a bill can be done with the benefit of testimony and with the benefit of expert opinion and with the benefit of hearing from the public. That's one of the advantages of a policy field committee.

The second advantage of a policy field committee is that this House can refer regulations to it. As you will know, Mr. Speaker, and colleagues will know, regulations are the purview of Executive Council. We've had discussions – and I remember the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo always used to raise the issue of the concern that he had about government bringing forward what I call framework legislation, legislation which set out the policy and direction but which left to regulation the detail. From my perspective that's a very important way of doing legislation. You can have some flexibility to adapt and to make it current on a reasonable basis, but you have the policy framework in the bill. Of course, the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo used to complain about the public not seeing lobbying made by way of regulation. Well, these policy field committees now have the ability to deal with that type of issue.

If a minister, prior to taking a regulation to Executive Council, wishes to have further input and discussion, the regulation can be tabled in the House, as has sometimes been done in the past, but now that regulation, after being tabled in the House, can be referred to a policy field committee for advice. The policy field committee can review that regulation in some detail and provide advice back to the House, and the House would then provide advice to Executive Council. The regulations still remain the purview of Executive Council.

The other opportunity is for a policy field committee to look at a regulation that's already been passed if they believe it's in the public interest to review that regulation and have a public debate on that regulation. So it's an opportunity to take those pieces of law which are passed, quite appropriately, by Executive Council under the purview of an act and have a more public discussion on them.

There's also the opportunity for policy field committees to look further into other issues. Of course, every annual report of every department and of agencies, boards, and commissions tabled in the House is automatically referred to the policy field committees, and policy field committees could on their own account consider any other area within the purview, or the field, of their committee.

By establishing the policy field committees, which we're asking the House to do today, we're really opening up the process, first of all, to give private members of the House a more effective and definitive role in engaging the public in discussion of the public's legislation, whether it be laws or whether it be regulations, and an opportunity to hear from the public and bring what they hear from the public back to this House if appropriate to do so. It's an exciting opportunity – a very exciting opportunity, I believe – and I would recommend to the House that we pass these temporary Standing Orders so that we can establish these policy field committees and really reinvigorate the legislative process in that manner.

Now, there's a second piece to the motion, and that's with respect to the Committee of Supply. Committee of Supply is a very important process in our House. The Committee of Supply is part of the budget process where the government is held accountable for the spending of the public's money. As the budget will be tabled this Thursday and then estimates referred to the Committee of Supply, it's an opportunity for in-depth scrutiny of that proposed spending. What these rules do is provide for a significant increase of the oversight by this Legislature of government's proposed spending on behalf of Albertans.

There's probably no more important role of this Legislature than oversight of the government: making sure that the government is held to account for the spending of the public's money and making sure that in spending that public's money, it's doing so in the context of appropriate policy frameworks and appropriate outcomes that we want to achieve. So a good portion of this motion is about setting up a new Committee of Supply process which will expand the amount of time available and the ability for in-depth scrutiny by all members of the House in terms of the requested supply that's brought forward each year.

There are some other amendments which are being asked for. One of those relates, again, to not only the work/life balance of members but also to the ability of the public to understand what their government is doing, and I refer to the set times for sitting. Traditionally, of course, parliaments are called when Executive Council decides that there is business to be brought forward. That was the tradition of all parliaments. More and more, parliaments are going to fixed sitting dates. What we're proposing here is that there be a fixed sitting date where the Legislature would be called on the first Monday of every February and would sit through till the first Thursday in each June for a spring sitting.

Of course, we're expanding on the concept that was introduced previously with respect to temporary Standing Orders, the idea of having constituency weeks every fourth week so that members can go back and be in touch with their constituencies and their families and bring that new knowledge and that reinvigoration back for the processes here.

We also provide for a fixed fall sitting of the Legislature. The fall sitting would be from the first Monday in November to the first Thursday in December. Now, in either the spring or the fall sitting, of course, it should be noted that the sittings could be extended, if necessary, to complete the business or could be adjourned earlier if that was appropriate. In addition, nothing detracts from the ability of government to ask for the Legislature to be called at other times during the year. So there's flexibility but still an expectation that we would have that we would sit for a certain length of time, for certain periods of time, and the public would know when we're here.

Those amendments will assist in helping with the work/life balance, and the rest of the temporary Standing Orders which are provided for are really supplemental to that in terms of the process, the procedure by which some of the business of the House is carried on. For example, a bill could be referred to a committee either after first reading or after second reading. After first reading, presumably, the committee would talk about the principles before it came back as to whether the bill should actually go forward. If it was referred after second reading, the more in-depth hearing process and committee process could be undertaken, and amendments could be recommended. In either case the time frame for referral would be after the bill had been passed at either first or second reading and before it had been taken up at the next stage, obviously.

But probably the most important piece of this whole process, Mr. Speaker, is to recognize that the rules of the House and the procedures of the House do belong to the members of the House. The final portion of this motion, section C, specifically requests that although we adopt these as temporary Standing Orders of the House for the remainder of this Legislature, they be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing for review and consideration.

In other words, we're proposing these temporary Standing Orders as a reinvigoration of the democratic process in this province, an ability for Albertans to see more and understand more about how their government works and how their Legislature works. But it's necessary for the members to be able to grasp hold of them and make them their own by referring them to the standing committee and asking that standing committee to have a look at not only the processes that House leaders have recommended in the House leaders' agreement and have brought forward in this motion but also to look further at what other democratic assemblies and parliaments do to see if this can be improved upon or if, after some experience with it, there are some of the rules and processes that people don't like, to be able to change them. That's a very necessary process.

So we're asking that the House adopt section C of this, to refer these immediately to the committee, to have the committee review them while we're using them and bring back their experience and their ideas by early next year. Of course, the Committee of Supply process would be needed immediately because, as I failed to mention earlier, one of the things that we're asking for is a fixed budget date, which would be the second Monday in February. That would closely adhere to some of the parliamentary best practices, which really suggest that budgets should come in prior to the beginning of the next fiscal year. So that's why we're moving it as close to the front end of the session as possible.

But the Committee of Supply process is one that is very complex. We're trying it out this spring, but we're asking the standing committee to review the process immediately after we adjourn the spring session to see whether, in fact, it's been effective and whether any changes to that might be brought back to this House even by this fall so that they could be effective for a budget process starting immediately at the beginning of next year's spring session.

Mr. Speaker, I could go into more detail – but I won't – about these Standing Orders. I would ask for the support of the House in these Standing Orders. I think this is a major step forward for our Legislature in terms of how we might both improve the way we do our business and, most importantly, improve the way that Albertans have the opportunity to participate in the legislative process which governs their province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of these Standing Orders. Clearly, I was one of the parties that was negotiating them, and at this point I would urge all members of the Assembly to support what we have worked out over the last three months. It feels like longer, but I think it was only three months.

I have to say that there was an openness to discuss and explore some previously forbidden procedures and processes. I appreciate that flexibility that was demonstrated by the government side, and I'm sure it is reflective of the charge that the new Premier gave to his House leader as he negotiated. I'm also mindful that the new Premier is on record as saying that he would do nothing which would enhance a Liberal or ND's chances to win a seat. So, you know, you take all of those things into consideration and do your best to move forward.

I came into this process with a few goals in mind. I wanted to help to make this Assembly, this Legislature, a more humane place in which to do business. Clearly, I also wanted to make it a place that was more attractive for women to seek out seats and to serve Alberta's citizenry through their serving as MLAs. It has not been particularly attractive in the past, and I wanted to do what I could to change that and to encourage more women to run for provincial political office. Of course, when you start to look at changes that would benefit or would make it more attractive to women, I mean, that makes it more attractive to everybody. I think it does make it more family friendly. So that was part of the package that I was looking for.

I also wanted to see more time for private members' business in the Assembly and more emphasis on private members' business and more flexibility, more likelihood that bills would get more time and attention, be passed, and become part of public policy. So there are a few small things in there that reflect that. We have one small section that notes that if we don't get in a full three hours of private members' business on Mondays, we would conclude that on Thursdays. I don't think that will often be used; nonetheless, it's there. In my opinion, it was something I worked for to make sure that we understood and honoured and had put into writing the importance and value of private members' time in this House.

I've been one of the very vocal critics of the government's very closed shop: total government control, the use of its majority as a hammer with which to beat members of the opposition in various committees and here in the House. After 10 years I can say with some authority that I've seen that used to excess. I wanted to see what I could do to encourage the government to exercise less of an iron fisted control on every single process and to not use majorities in committees as a way of just ramming through a government agenda without ever listening and honouring any of the other issues that were being brought forward by private members on any of the all-party committees.

Of course, much of my experience flows from the 10 years that I spent on the Public Accounts Committee, very frustrating work there. I think we will see a difference in the enhancements that have been brought into the Public Accounts Committee as a result of my predecessors and my work and the current chair of the Public Accounts Committee, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and others who've all worked on that.

I think that on the opportunity that the Government House Leader was talking about, the opportunity that the government private members had to participate in the standing policy committees, one of my complaints about that was that it was done, frankly, at the expense of the private members in the Legislature. By moving the decision-making process behind closed doors, it really affected the way this Legislature operated. What we had was government private members who sat in here, and some of them, I swear to you, Mr. Speaker, never participated in debate of a bill. Their reasoning at the time was that they'd already talked about it in the standing policy committees, and the work was done, and now they were just waiting for it to all be done. So it put a huge workload on the members of the Official Opposition and the third party because we did all of the work in the Legislature, or many nights it certainly felt like that.

I'm hoping that we will see more engagement from the government private members, particularly more participation in the budget debates and in the debates of legislation that's brought before the Assembly. That is my sincere wish, and I think it would make a stronger Assembly and would help us all to be more responsible and responsive to our constituencies.

We have experienced the new timelines already. I'm hearing some people happy and some people not happy. I note that there may well be a period of adjustment, or we may well decide that it doesn't work. I'm particularly noting the extra hour that was added to the day. So although the night sittings have been dispensed with, an extra hour, a half hour at the beginning and a half hour at the end, was added onto the afternoon.

Of course, that's presenting some interesting scheduling difficulties or concerns or challenges with the community. The business community and the charitable community often hold functions over the lunch hour, and at this point we need to try and get members back into the House by 1 o'clock. Many of those functions are set up to run from sort of 11:30 or a quarter to 12 until 1:30. So we'll have to see what happens, whether the community adjusts to the House and moves its timing back a bit or whether we participate less in those occasions in the community. I hope that's not the case because I think it's an important part of what we do, and it does get members into the community, but it is one of the challenges that has already presented itself around the changes in timing.

In fact, although we have dispensed with three evening sittings, which usually average two to three hours a night, we have picked up four hours in the afternoon sittings, so we're really not down by that much time overall in the week.

I would think that as we come close to our second constituency week, those will be deemed to be quite a success. I have already experienced that I'm not as far behind as I would usually be with my constituency work after spending as many weeks as we have in the Assembly. I am able to get back and sort of catch up, which I really valued, and was able to say to people that wanted to meet with me: "Well, you don't have to wait for four or five weeks. In fact, we'll be able to get you in for a meeting, you know, by the next constituency week." It also meant that I didn't have to rush through the meetings at, you know, 20 minutes apiece, trying to get five or six people through on a Friday, but that we could spend more time with the people, as much time as they needed, and I really appreciate that. So I think that the idea of those constituency weeks interspersed with the Assembly weeks will be an innovation that we will all be very proud of and will probably hang on to. If I'm allowed to look at a crystal ball, I think that one is a good bet.

The question period changes we've also experienced a bit and I think have made for, certainly, a livelier exchange. But, also, clearly, as the Speaker is pointing out to us at the end of every series, more questions are being able to be asked and a better exchange happening, and I'm very pleased to see that. So I think that it's been quite successful.

We've now experienced the first round where written questions and motions for returns which have been accepted by the government are not in the House for debate but are read into the record by the Clerk, and I think that that is going to prove to be quite helpful.

A small thing but I'm pleased to see that I was successful in getting an agreement that there would be a government response to any recommendations brought forward by the Public Accounts Committee. Sometimes we on this side feel that when we put recommendations forward or there are reports written, they go into the government side and disappear forever. There are a number of requirements in these new Standing Orders that require the government to report back to the Assembly within a specific period of time. I'm responsible for many of those, and I'm proud of it because I think it's part of that exchange of information which is very important.

The policy field committees, as the Government House Leader mentioned, are not new. Actually, I think we're, if not the last, one of the last in Canada to engage in these more free-flowing and open-ended set-ups for discussion of substantive issues.

A couple of things I'm still trying to achieve for that. One is a venue, an avenue for either an individual from the community or an individual member from the House to get an issue on the agenda. Thus far I haven't been successful in that, and we have a situation where, essentially, it's the majority vote of the House that sends an issue to the committee or a reference from a minister that sends it to a committee. But we did get that the committee could decide to take something on itself. Admittedly, still, that would require a majority of government members on the committee to agree to it. So it still is mostly controlled by government and the agenda set by government. I was hoping that we could have opened that up a bit, but it all depends on how the committees under the leadership of this new Premier decide to behave themselves, frankly.

I've been on committees where there was a great willingness to work together, and they've been very productive, and I've been on exactly the same committee in which that willingness was not there, and it was horrible. It was pretty much a waste of my time even being in the room because my opinions were not welcome and the time that I spent doing the research, I wasn't able to get them put out into the committee for discussion. So we'll see how this works. I'm still hopeful.

I am pleased to see that dissenting reports will now be included. I think that's very important in a democratic society and something that I worked hard for.

There could be an argument that bills that get sent to the policy field committees never come back. I don't think that's what we've done. I have hope that this could be a vigorous working committee which enhances and enriches the ideas and legislation and regulations that we've sent forward to the committee. Part of that is, again, in having the committee be reported back, that there's a necessity that the committee does report back and that there's a timeline for reporting back. The reverse side of that is that there is a requirement that the government respond to what the committee has brought forward. So that's closing the loop there, and I think we were successful in that.

One of my big arguments in the negotiations was around support staff. I'm glad I was persuasive, and I think everyone has managed to benefit from that. I'm not sorry about that. I think that's a great thing, and we should all be able to do better work with reasonable staff support for that.

The Committee of Supply. I think I'd just had it by last year's budget debate, or maybe it was sup supply. I honestly don't remember, Mr. Speaker. But at the point I realized that I was trying to debate $6 million a minute, I'd had it. I felt that the process had reached a point of absurdity, that it was not worth continuing. We are dealing with large sums of money here. This government does have a habit of bringing in now usually two supplementary supply budgets as we go through the year. Particularly with the initial estimates, as we debated that budget, we just didn't have enough time. As a critic, even with multifaceted portfolios or very large portfolios like Health and Wellness – and I was able to get, you know, maybe 20 minutes to 40 minutes of time to be able to question a minister – it was ridiculous.

So we have a new way of going at this. I am hoping that it will be productive and that we will be able to have a much more productive exchange of information with the ministers. Relaxing decorum which allows ministerial officials onto the floor should be able to give the ministers direct support and all of us access to information that we can carry back to our respective caucuses but also to our constituents. Of course, having all of this on the record recorded by Hansard with the public able to come and watch us I think is very important to the democratic process.

The idea of the cross ministries is one that's very important to me. I sure hope this is going to work. I came at this because of my experience in trying to get core funding for sexual assault centres over the last couple of years. Every time I raised the issue in the House, I was told I was talking to the wrong minister. Eventually I had in fact done the round of all ministers that had suggested that I speak to a different minister, which was about four of them. It was an issue that each one recognized that they had a piece of but nobody took responsibility for. The buck didn't stop anywhere, and as a result, frankly, there was no buck. I became very frustrated with this and thought there has to be a way for us in the budget debates to be able to talk about an issue that appears in many different ministries, but nobody is ultimately responsible for it. That's the idea behind the cross-ministry debate days in which all parties, all members of the House will get an opportunity to talk about an issue that crosses over ministries.

Let me give you an example: land use. That's a big issue in many different areas and, in fact, many different ministries in the government. But we don't get a chance to get all of those ministers together in one room and talk about that issue only as it pertains to those different ministries and possibly be able to listen and hear each other and what each minister is saying about it and have other ministers listen to each other, to approach it as a team. I know that's not the way you usually do things in an Assembly, but it's reflective of the working basis that I come from. I think that having more of a team approach to issues like that may well be very helpful, and I hope it's the way of the future. It is based on a different theory than this House has been accustomed to working on, but women have been pretty good at working together as teams and coming up with some darn good ideas, so I'm hoping I can lend that over to the rest of this House and get some good results for it. Some of the ones we're looking at are things like land use, industrial development and health impacts, vulnerable people, and the whole idea of taxation and fees.

I'm pleased to see with the vote process that I was able to convince my colleagues to allow exceptions because sometimes I found myself in a position of having to vote against an entire budget because I disagreed with what was happening in one section of it. So by allowing an exception process where you can ask that a particular vote be pulled out of the entire vote, then you're better able to express where your happiness or displeasure lies with what's been proposed by the government.

Just very briefly, I'm also glad that I was able to achieve agreement to get responses from the various ministers and their departments within two weeks of having the actual budget debate, with a nod to the previous Deputy Premier, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, who was the mistress of the two-week response. She was very good at it and also good to her word. I thought: well, if she can do it, everybody else can. In fact, that's what's going to flow from this.

There are lots of possibilities in what we've laid out here. I'm sure there are other changes that we could make to the Standing Orders that would make some people very happy, and I'm sure there are other ones that would make them less happy, but I think this is a pretty good package that we've got. I'm sure that on all three sides we would like to change a little here or we wish we hadn't gone along so far on some things, but overall I think it's a very good package. I think we can see the results of some of the work we've already done and that it is something that has enhanced this House, and I'm pleased to have been a part of the process.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in support of Government Motion 15 for new Standing Orders for this Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not go through the whole process, I think. [interjection] Thank you. But I do want to make a couple of comments. If it takes leadership reviews to change the Legislature, maybe the government can think about doing it every year. This certainly has been a major change. The reality is that it's to all our benefit to make this Legislature work better. I have to give a lot of credit to the House leader of the opposite side and particularly to David Gillies for a lot of hard work. Frankly, we in the opposition can ask for whatever we want and demand it, but it's not going to happen unless there's a willingness on the other side to move this along.

I think this was an example, Mr. Speaker, if I may say so – and I've said this before – where often the people see us in question period and there's sort of the give-and-take of question period and you think that all we do here in the Legislature is fight. Well, nobody enjoys that more than me, but there's more to the Legislature than that. I say that this is an important move to try to make the Legislature work better for all of us in here so that, more importantly, the people of Alberta have respect for what's happening here in the Legislature.

There are major changes that we've already talked about. The policy field committees and the Committee of Supply specifically, Mr. Speaker, will be works in progress. I don't think any of us can absolutely predict how this is going to work down the way. I'm sure there will be lots of growing pains with it because we're into a bit of the unknown here. But I do believe that the policy field committees and the way we've set up Committee of Supply makes this Legislature more important. It's certainly important for the opposition. I do believe that it's an opportunity for people on the government side to participate in a more meaningful way, too, in the policy field committees, as you see them doing in the House of Commons and others. If we're dealing sometimes with officials or other people, government members don't need to feel that they're attacking the government or the minister. They can be just as involved as anybody else in this process. At least that's what I would be hopeful would be happening.

I do think that this will be an interesting process, and I know that there's probably been some push back on the other side. I can say that for a number of my colleagues it was really hard getting them to move along with this House leaders' agreement, but I was able to persevere and bring them along, Mr. Speaker.

As I say, we all know policy field committees and the Committee of Supply. We know the changes that are going to be made. We know about the review. I think that now is the time, Mr. Speaker, to pass this motion and move ahead so that we can see how this works. As I say, it's a work in progress.

Again, I would thank the other people that worked on this with us. Hopefully, we've done something good for the Legislature and, more important, for the people of Alberta. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a true privilege and a pleasure to be able to get up and finally address this supposedly all-party House leaders' agreement, in which not all members of the Legislature were allowed to participate. I signed this with some reserved support in the fact that it could come to this Legislature, and then I could finally speak on it because I do feel that there are some critical amendments that can and should be put in place here as we go forward in the future. But there are some very positive movements that this government has made, so I'm very pleased about that.

Mr. Speaker, it's obvious from the start of this that the democratic process was not fully adhered to in that they did not recognize all members in the Legislature, and I am grateful for the Speaker's work in acknowledging those who were left out. I believe that that's where much of the benefit for democracy was held, in the Speaker's office instead of the opposition leaders or the House leader, in moving forward and seeing that all members were and are included in the standing policy committees.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the field committees versus the standing policy committees that we've moved forward. I'm very pleased with the changes in question period and the reallocation of time. Forty-five seconds back and forth makes it a true question-and-answer period, that I think will be a benefit for democracy and the people of Alberta. Moving to the field committees is a positive, and I am in favour of that.

But I'm very disappointed in the decision to keep in place the old standing policy committees, thinking that they are the root and the backbone of the policies that they want to bring forward for democratic process here in the province, and that like question period, they didn't extend the time. We still kept the 50 minutes, but it was reallocated.

It would have been a benefit for the taxpayers of Alberta had they just reallocated the committee money and put that towards the field committees rather than having those old standing policy committees still in place. I think that $1.16 million is required to be paid out to the MLAs that are sitting on those committees. Like I say, in a real House leaders' agreement I feel that the field committees or all-party committees would be to the benefit of the taxpayers in efficiency, in prudence, and in the work that would and could be done in this House.

The Committee of Supply. It's an interesting change. I definitely agree with the members that more time needs to be spent on that. We're talking, you know, a $30 billion budget, and still the time is very short. But I have some concerns with the so-called 15-hour cycle for that committee. Once again, it seems like it's a little bit, well, not as democratic as I would like to have seen it. It just seems that perhaps much like in question period, a little bit more of a rotation in there would add to the benefit of the discussion going on.

I haven't been briefed on it, and it's always difficult to know if one really understands the language, but my understanding is that the first six hours would be solely for the Official Opposition to utilize. I think that there's a good interaction as we go through question period and it revolves through the different parties. Different questions come up. Even for myself, as a sitting MLA I have found that often, as we hear the different views from both the government and the opposition sides, it can spark something in our mind, and we can do perhaps a little better job. Rather than just having six hours of the same questions being drilled at them, perhaps if we back up and take a different angle, our eyes and our understanding might be opened up a little bit more and be of benefit to the entire House. I guess the big thing is that, like I say, being left out of the discussion was very disappointing.

I'm thrilled, though, with the constituency week. It really helps, especially for those MLAs like myself that travel a long way. I believe that will be very beneficial, but I'm very disappointed in the fact that the three House leaders all live in Edmonton, and that's the only view that I see reflected in this House leaders' agreement. There is no improvement in my quality of life if I happen to be up here extra time or for any lady who doesn't live in Edmonton, their quality of life. I ask the question: if we were having our conference in Regina or Winnipeg or somewhere else, would we want to extend it? Or because we've travelled there, would we work efficiently and hard through the day and the evening to get the work done?

I understand and I appreciate the two sides, but the majority of the MLAs were not allowed housing benefits because of the distance, the close proximity that they live in. So those 23, I believe, get to drive home at night and improve their quality of life, whereas those who live outside the Edmonton area do not drive home. What was really disappointing, though, is that when they set up the weeks to be off, they said that they would do that in alignment, possibly, with the holidays. This time when we had the time off, it was aligned for those MLAs who actually get to go home every night to be with their families, but they also got the week off. When we came back from our week off, our children were out of school. We're back here working, so we don't even see them the whole week that they have off because we're up here. So I don't think a good view was looked at when it came to that. It was a very close, myopic view, looking solely at the benefit to the people that live here in Edmonton. I think that that should perhaps be looked at and addressed a little bit more carefully, especially, like I say, that week off, if it could be worked so that we could be back home with our families when they're out of school.

To close, again I'd like to say that my biggest disappointment and what I would like to see changed is the money that's being spent on these field committees versus the money that's spent on the standing policy committees. I think that that needs to be looked at, whether it's more field committees or something to be broken down. The House leader mentioned that they're very concerned that these backbenchers participate in the standing policy, but it's not out in the open. It's very easy for them to open up those closed doors and have some meetings in caucus and cabinet and let the public in so that they can see and the secrecy is revealed.

It's always been amazing to me how they said that those backbenchers have to have an opportunity for question period. I think that if the government really wanted to do that, they could have an hour in the morning in their caucus meeting, and if they want to have Hansard or to bring in the news media, whatever it is, it would be very easy to open it up and allow the debate to be made public. It's amazing to me that some of the MLAs that I've talked to have said: "Oh, no. I spoke out on that. Oh, I worked on that, but I lost the caucus vote." We never know. I won't quote some of the specific ones, but I understood that some votes were very close, and if it came to the House and was a true, open, and democratic vote, some of those things wouldn't have passed the way they did. So I would like to see the government move a little bit further in that direction.

If they really want an open and honest debate, bring it into the House, then. That's why we're here, what we're sitting for. There is no shame, no matter which party you sit in, to represent the people that elected you, whether you're for or against that bill, because the fact of the matter is that we're very diverse geographically, you know, economically, and some things just aren't for the benefit of an area, so you need to speak out. I would very much like to see those debates brought into the House. I think that we could move a long way on that. You know, some of the other agreements that didn't go through are kind of, I guess, if you want to say, still behind the back doors.

Question period is another good example. We're currently getting 99 questions a day. What that works out to in calculation is that myself as a single-MLA party should get one question every two days. The independent members should get that. That would be more equitable.

I feel we can move forward. This is a good first step, but as usual it's not a bold enough or far enough step. I hope that we'll have a more democratic process and be able to move forward. Like I say, I appreciate the movement that the government has made. I know that it can move more.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise, and I'll try to be brief. I must applaud the new Premier for pushing these changes to come forward and to the Government House Leader and David Gillies for the hard work that they've done on this. I must also thank the Government House Leader, the Speaker, and the third-party House leader for being so gracious to give some of their time on occasion to inform me as to what has been coming forward on this and to discuss with me the importance of some of the matters.

The policy field committees, I think, are a very important development in our governance. The ability to look at regulations, while we have not really been able to look at them in a meaningful way in the past, in an open and public manner is something that I think will really very much open up the process of another level of government to the Alberta public and ensure that the Legislature itself has some greater credibility to the people of Alberta.

I think that the policy field committees will also have some function in informing all members somewhat more on some of the intricacies and some of the areas in the legislation that maybe they weren't too involved with. Being an independent member, it is sometimes very interesting to look at this whole House and the operations of it a little differently because what you see sometimes is a lot of riff and debate that doesn't say too much in order to fill time on the part of the Official Opposition. Having been there, you see that so much is often said which really isn't too informative and/or informed. I think that the policy field committees will work to help members become more informed and to look at the legislation in a much more detailed manner.

The ability of private members to be more involved in this I think is a great development, and again I support this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Would there be additional members who would like to participate on this motion?

Should I call on the Government House Leader to close the debate, or should we call the question?

Mr. Hancock: Just briefly, Mr. Speaker, to say thank you to the Opposition House Leader, the third-party House leader, and to all members who participated vigorously both at caucus and other discussion opportunities as we brought forward the process to try and revise the rules. The process itself, I believe, notwithstanding the comments of the independent Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, has been a very positive one, and I would ask for the support of the House.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

head: Statement by the Speaker
Standing Order Amendments

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's time for my log cabin story. I arrived in this building in 1979 as an elected person, having been a deputy minister. When I arrived in this building, MLAs basically had no offices. There were 13 of us who shared room 512 in this building. The offices were so small that you could barely put a desk in them. In fact, the former member who was introduced today was a bit more portly than I am. He had a difficult time walking between the side of his desk and the wall to get to his chair.

There were no constituency office budgets. They did not exist. If you were an elected person, you came here. You had no funds for an office back home in your constituency. Previous to that, in fact, when Premier Manning was the Premier of Alberta, MLAs would line up once a year to get a cheque. Once a year you got a hand-shake from the Premier, and you got a cheque, and you went home.

There were no pins available to members in 1979. There was nothing. You literally had to go and grovel to a minister of the Crown if you wanted to get a pin for your constituents.

The Legislative Assembly was rather different. We smoked here. We smoked right in the building, right in here. There were very few benefits. In fact, there wasn't anything. Caucuses had no funding provision. There were no committees of the type that we have today under the standing committees of the Legislative Assembly.

Over the years that has changed. The rules have changed as well. You're now in the 101st year of the history of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I want to congratulate the three House leaders, and I want to congratulate all the members who worked on these Standing Orders changes. In my opinion, they are among the most profound changes to have been made in the 101-year history of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, and I was involved in some pretty profound ones in 1993.

What you've basically done is enhance the funding operation for the various caucuses to do immaculate research work. The funding provisions have been provided for now by the all-party independent committee of the Legislative Assembly, the Members' Services Committee. The Official Opposition will get an additional $360,000 per year. The government caucus will get an additional $720,000 per year. The third-party caucus will get an additional $180,000 per year, and the independents will get an additional $90,000 each to do research associated with these new policy field standing committees. The expectation is that these funds will be spent for the support and the research associated with that. There should be quite a dramatic change in the operation of this Assembly as we go forward.

So I repeat again that this Assembly is now in its 101st year of operation, and things in the past have never, ever provided such an opportunity for members to be as involved as they are today. It truly is congratulations on a very, very momentous occasion. Without any doubt, in my view, these are the most significant changes made since 1993.

Hopefully – hopefully – experience will show that these orders can be made more than temporary although there is some governance in here by what the members have done today in terms of this motion, to basically say that there is an opportunity for certain things to happen. I certainly hope that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing and that committee will without further motion review and consider what has been done.

There's no better opportunity for members to learn about what's happening in other jurisdictions than for members of this Assembly to accept the invitation that's been offered to them to attend the regional meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in Winnipeg this summer, where representatives from every jurisdiction in Canada will meet: all of the provinces, the Senate, the federal government, and the territories. In fact, the Standing Order provisions are a major, major subject matter of the whole conference. That would save a tremendous amount of money in travel. You would meet with leaders from across the country in that particular venue. To date only two or three members have indicated their interest in wanting to do that, but I extend that invitation again.

To all of you: a letter will go from my office tomorrow to the three caucus chairs advising them of this funding provision, and the dollars will become operational tomorrow. There is a subsequent motion that is required here. This motion gives governance to committees. The next step, of course, has to be to fill the committees. To have a blank and vacant committee, the committee can't be very operational that way, so one would look forward to the spirit of co-operation in the next two days to have this done so that when one returns, presumably on April 30 of this year, when the budget process is under way, then in fact a new venue will occur.

Again, to all of you: congratulations. This is very significant. This is very momentous. It will only work, however, if there is the spirit of co-operation. The chair has reviewed every word of this on a number of occasions and understands that there are some grey areas. There may be some interpretations that we'll have to deal with as we go along, but they'll be done in the same degree of harmony that the three House leaders have found among themselves in the last couple of months. Despite all the angst that was in the back rooms and behind closed doors, in public there's love in the air.

Third Reading

Bill 3
Climate Change and Emissions Management
Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Mason moved that the motion for third reading be amended to read that Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, be not now read a third time because the proposed measures to reduce the intensity of specified gas emissions contained therein combined with rapid oil sands development will allow ongoing, dramatic increases in specified gas emissions and make it impossible to meet the requirements of the Kyoto protocol.

[Adjourned debate April 12: Mr. Eggen]

The Speaker: We're on an amendment on Bill 3. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the amendment.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment on Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, in which there is a reasoned amendment, as it's called, to propose measures that will allow that the bill not be read a third time.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the issue of the century, and for us on the other side of the House to support a bill that does so little to move us forward in capping and actually reducing emissions is a very difficult commitment to make in spite of the fact that one could argue that there is some progress. Indeed, after five years of battling this government to admit the science and to acknowledge the will of the people and to recognize the threat that climate change is posing, there is, indeed, as the government argues, a step to place a tax on extra emissions starting this year, which has to be seen as progress. There's a recognition on this side that that is a modicum of progress. What Canadians and what world bodies and the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change are calling for is substantive change in the way we address our energy and our carbon emissions.

We on this side of the House feel that we cannot support Bill 3. This amendment would allow us to in good conscience indicate to the government that there is a much stronger call across this country, across the world for leadership on this issue and that by supporting this amendment, we would not then support Bill 3 but would hopefully move the government forward to a more significant, serious commitment to capping and reducing our emissions in this province, looking at issues like offsets and carbon trading as an important addition to what needs to be done in the province: investments in renewables, real investments in energy conservation, and energy efficiency.

This is, indeed, what we would hope for, and we believe that we represent the vast majority of Canadians and Albertans in this wish. So I stand to support the amendment as put forward by the members of the third party.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, our leader brought this in, and I will be supporting it. I think this is an important issue. This is, sort of, if you like, the big debate that we have to hold in this Legislature. It says that we want to reduce the intensity of specified gas emissions contained therein combined with rapid oil sands development. A point I want to make in dealing with that is the rate of development because it's clear that everything we debated in this session, the problems that we're facing, whether it be in housing, whether it be in health care, whether it be in education or children's services, all are an overheated economy. It seems to me that the government is in a headlong rush to rip out the tar sands as fast as they can. I know there's pressure to get into the American market. It's coming from the Americans. It's also coming from our federal government.

Mr. Speaker, as long as we continue, if you're going to talk about intensity and you keep putting on more and more huge projects, you can never catch up; CO₂ is going to keep increasing at dramatic levels. There's no way to stop it if you want to do that and if your whole economic strategy is this, even though it's creating all sorts of problems. The Alberta advantage is becoming a disadvantage for more and more and more people. At the same time, we're doing exactly the wrong thing in terms of caring for our environment. That's why over here on this side of the House we've been saying that we have to slow down this development. Nobody is really benefiting other than a few CEOs in downtown Calgary.

We've talked about rents, we've talked about health care not being able to keep up, and at the same time we're heading towards an environmental disaster with more and more CO₂ being there, Mr. Speaker. That's why we've said: "Look. For the time being let's at least slow it down, have a moratorium, figure out what kind of Alberta we want in the future, figure out what makes sense in terms of how much CO₂ we can keep putting out, see what makes sense in terms of our needed social programs."

Our infrastructure is falling behind. We can't keep up. It just doesn't make much sense anymore, both in an environmental and an economic sense. How is this progress when we are doing more to foul up the environment at the same time that more and more people are suffering with rising rents? We can't keep up to our emergency services in the hospitals. We have vacancy rates of virtually zero throughout even all small towns. We can't keep people working in the nonprofits because they can't make enough money; they can make more at Hortons. We have a labour shortage. How is this progress, I ask you, Mr. Speaker? How can we possibly say that this is good for anybody? It's certainly not good for the environment and, I would argue, certainly a disadvantage for more and more people in this province.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to us that rather than the government saying, "Well, this is really protecting the environment," it's not. It's going to lead to rapid increases in CO₂. Make no mistake about it. That's the reality. We can do better here. I could even, I suppose, maybe not agree with it, but I could understand it somewhat if I saw that this was benefiting all sorts of people, but it's not. I know that the Premier has talked about not putting his foot on the brakes, but if you're heading for a collision both in environment and with the way your services are being delivered, only a fool wouldn't put his foot on the brake. It's time to stop and take a look at this. That's why we should support this reasoned amendment.

Thank you very much.

[Motion on the amendment to third reading of Bill 3 lost]

The Speaker: We're back to the debate on Bill 3.

Shall we call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the debate on Bill 3?

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak again to Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. Just a few points that will cap my comments and the reason why we have great difficulty supporting this bill.

The international panel on climate change gave its fourth report just in the last month indicating profound changes on the planet, profound threats to habitat, to human beings, to especially coastal communities, spread of infectious diseases, drought problems, obviously a serious loss of glacial-fed streams, which can affect around the world close to a billion people who depend for their water supply on glacial runoff. It's very clearly the most serious issue that this government, the Canadian government, world governments will be facing in our generation, and frankly citizens are looking for more.

A 1991 federal government report indicated that climate change was real, that human activity was contributing significantly to it, and that urgent action was needed. Sixteen years ago we were called to action, and no governments in this country took the lead. We are all responsible, we all are accountable for the inaction of our governments.

Now we are presented with an opportunity in which we are dropping the ball again with the appearance, only the appearance, of doing something with intensity targets, timed for the next 13 years to somehow bring us to some form of reduction in which there is, in fact, a true increase in emissions, up to 70 per cent predicted, with the growth anticipated in this province. How can we in good conscience accept a policy that will lead us to a 70 per cent increase in our emissions in 12 years? This is unconscionable.

There's a serious mismatch between what science, what the public, and what international governance is calling for here and the response of this government. We are looking for real change. We have to move very quickly to a cap on emissions. We have to look at trading and off-setting incentives. We have to move away from the incentives that we continue to give to fossil fuels and transfer those over to renewables and to indeed energy efficiency and energy conservation initiatives.

Citizens are looking for leadership. Action needs investment, Mr. Speaker. Action needs investment. The Stern report last year presented a very credible analysis, a 700-page report, in which Sir Nicholas Stern, supported by a number of economists around the world, indicated that we can spend now or we can spend much more later. One per cent of GDP is what he suggested as a minimum investment each country has to make to start to make the significant reductions in our emissions and our impact on the environment. One per cent of GDP in Alberta would be $2 billion a year. Two billion dollars is what the international experts are saying we need to spend now, or we will be spending $20 billion a year mopping up the mess that climate change is going to make in terms of our food production, our flooding, our droughts, our loss of habitat, our infectious disease impact.

It's hard for us to get our heads around this, but the best experts in the world on climate and the best experts that we have access to in terms of economic sustainability are saying that 1 per cent of our GDP is needed, which is $2 billion a year in this province. We are spending a pittance relevant to this admonition from this international body.

What would this money go to? Well, very clearly, the primary targets have to be to shift towards renewable energy forms: a much stronger investment in solar and wind and geothermal, potentially more in-stream hydro, and then potentially some hydrogen and coal gasification. Any new coal-fired plants in this province have to have the technology for cleaner coal through carbon capture and storage. That's a second area that this investment should be going into, to enable and promote research and implementation of carbon capture and storage in all new coal-fired plants as the cheapest and the quickest way to make a significant difference.

Clearly, we have to reduce subsidies. We could be doing that by transferring the natural gas rebate program into a serious commitment to energy efficiency and not subsidize fossil fuel use but shift fossil fuel use to renewables and energy efficiency. We need a more serious commitment to public transport in this province, rail and electric particularly. We need a more serious commitment to building code changes. Both housing and institutional business building codes have to change.

We can make a very dramatic difference. The National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy said that we could do 40 per cent of the job of reducing our carbon emissions simply through energy efficiency and energy retrofits. That's a huge result from simply using the existing technologies and ensuring that they're used through environmental audits, energy audits on buildings, and government assistance/incentives for retrofits and the shift to renewable energy.

Mr. Speaker, I won't belabour the fact that we on this side of the House feel that there has been an abdication of responsibility in Bill 3. There has been a failure to recognize the seriousness of the investment that's needed and the seriousness of the impacts that are coming our way. Our children are mostly going to be paying for this debt, that we are transferring to them. There has been far too much delaying, denying, and misinforming of our public. The public are now saying that it's time for change. If this government is not prepared to step up and make the significant changes that are needed, to stand up to industry and hold them accountable since industry and transportation produce 75 of our emissions in this province, then we need to change the government. More and more people are saying that in my circles.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will rest and let others enter the final debate on Bill 3.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to spend a great deal of time talking at this stage. I would like to express my anticipated support to those members who have indicated to me that they intend to support this bill again at third reading. Contrary to what we've heard throughout the debate at both committee and third reading, this bill is legislation that will put us in front of virtually every other jurisdiction in this country. We are introducing leading-edge legislation. When this bill passes and we bring the regulations into force on July 1, we will be the only jurisdiction in all of Canada that has not only intensity targets for greenhouse gases but the compliance mechanisms to actually make them stick.

The federal government has been talking about introducing similar legislation, but at this stage, Mr. Speaker, that's all it is: talk. I understand that even if they come forward with a plan, we all know what the situation is in Ottawa, and it's unlikely that they will be in a similar position to us to actually implement a plan because they won't have the legislation to back them up.

I encourage all members to support this legislation. Let's get on with the job. Let's stop talking about doing something, and let's get on with doing something. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

head: 3:50 Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased this afternoon to move second reading of Bill 19, the Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill proposes amendments that will modify the current appeal process of the Court of Appeal to more accurately reflect the realities of how the court is presently doing its business. The bill includes minor amendments to eight provincial statutes that affect mainly the energy and utilities sectors, and overall the amendments are designed to reduce delays and make better use of the court's time.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments are intended to respond to the concerns raised by the Court of Appeal about some unworkable time limits in specific pieces of legislation. To be specific, the current language is old fashioned and dates back to the distant past, when the court had fewer pending cases. At that time the court was able to hear all cases that were ready for argument in "the next sittings of the Court." Today this is unrealistic. Our courts are very busy, and it's become necessary to schedule appearances well in advance. It is very difficult simply to change court schedules in order to hear cases in the next court sitting.

I'd like to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to explain specifically what these amendments are. The first amendment relates to the process for obtaining leave to appeal a board's decision. Under the current provisions an applicant must obtain leave from the Court of Appeal within 30 days after the board decision has been made. Thirty days is not always sufficient time to gather the materials required by the court to hear a leave to appeal application. The proposed change is that an application for leave to appeal must be "filed and served" within 30 days of the board's or tribunal's decision. This gives the applicant more time to obtain the materials and to file them with the court. Overall it will make better use of the parties' and the court's time by avoiding applications to adjourn while waiting to receive materials needed by the court. The provision will also give the court the power to grant additional time to file an application for leave where a judge feels it is warranted.

The second amendment allows an applicant to formally request that a board or a tribunal provide materials needed to make the leave application. Normally, Mr. Speaker, an applicant will already have the materials as they are a product of the board hearing. However, where the applicant may not have the materials, a written request can be made, and the board or tribunal must provide the materials to the applicant within 14 days. This will ensure that when the court hears the application for leave, it has the relevant evidence before it.

The third amendment clarifies that both the application for leave to appeal and, if the leave is granted, the notice of appeal are to be provided to all parties and the affected board or tribunal. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the current wording is ambiguous in terms of who is to be served with an application for leave. It is our desire in this bill to make it absolutely clear who needs to be served.

The fourth amendment brings consistency to the time within which the particular board or tribunal must provide the court with a transcript or record of the hearing and the decision with reasons after leave has been granted. The current wording reads either "30 days" or "25 working days." The proposed wording would be 30 days for all of the affected statutes.

The fifth amendment deals with when the appeal is to be heard. The current wording reads that once the board or tribunal has filed the transcript, the record, and other documents, the Court of Appeal is to set the matter down "at the next sittings of the Court" or "as speedily as practicable." Mr. Speaker, this does not happen now simply because of the volume of appeals being heard, as I mentioned.

A new appeal cannot be set down at the next sittings of the court unless an existing appeal were to lose its scheduled date. In reality the actual practice of the court is to have legal counsel agree on a date that is suitable for them and their respective clients. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the current statutory time limits do not reflect the realities and the practices of the court. This has resulted in time-consuming and costly applications, which are necessary in order to meet these time limits. So this is why this particular bill is necessary.

Overall, these changes will clarify the requirement for giving notice of an application for leave to appeal as well as the notice of appeal itself to affected parties and the board or tribunal. The amendments will also establish consistency in the time limits imposed for filing documents in appeals.

The proposed amendments will involve minor amendments to the following statutes: the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act, the Electric Utilities Act, the Energy Resources Conservation Act, the Natural Resources Conservation Board Act, the Public Utilities Board Act, the Gas Utilities Act, and the Municipal Government Act.

Mr. Speaker, notice of the proposed amendments was provided to the judiciary, to the affected boards through their legal counsel, to the Canadian Bar Association, and to the Law Society of Alberta. Stakeholders reviewed and expressed support for the proposed amendments. They also provided feedback and suggestions for additional changes. As a result, the amendments have been drafted to reflect all of the recommendations provided by the stakeholders.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the proposed changes in this bill will better reflect the current practices within the Alberta Court of Appeal as it relates to appeals from boards or tribunal decisions. They will eliminate conflicting provisions, provide greater clarity about the process, and establish consistency as to when appeals are to be heard.

I encourage all members of this House to support Bill 19. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to respond to the hon. member moving second reading of Bill 19, Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. I actually have to start with a compliment to the hon. member, who I really appreciate having in this Assembly and appreciate his work ethic. He certainly works hard and is, for the most part, a fair and reasonable person to work with.

Now, the bill that we have before us, Mr. Speaker, is amending appeal procedures. I have to admit that not being a lawyer and not having a lawyer in our Official Opposition caucus poses certain challenges. But on the flip side of this, I'm also very proud of myself because I have improved. My ability to read legal bills and to read legal language and to understand through a very critical lens what the government might be trying to bring forward has improved significantly since I joined this esteemed Assembly in 2004.

Before I go into the bill itself, as a matter of procedure or course I usually read the news release, the government press release that announces to the world that the government is bringing forward a particular piece of legislation. This news release, which was dated March 20, talks about building a stronger Alberta and bringing forward legislation to establish new provincial guidelines for appeal procedures.

The hon. member, as he was introducing his bill, was talking about eight different statutes, but when I went through the bill, at least the copy I have, I only counted seven. I know that the one that seems to be the discrepancy is the Gas Utilities Act, which I couldn't at first glance find in my own copy. So unless it's embedded in a certain section that I can't see with a big, bold title, I would appreciate the hon. member alerting me to where exactly it appears in the bill.

It's not a big bill. It's about 12 pages thick, but again it's lawyer friendly, not necessarily layman friendly, and any guidance and any assistance from the hon. mover of the bill would be greatly appreciated.

So what are we trying to do? The bill is intended to bring legislation in line with current practices in the court system related to direct appeals from board or tribunals, which is something I agree with. It provides clarity and consistency with what we do now in appeal processes, which is fine. I don't disagree. The main feature is to bring in a workable time limit, something that people can adhere to and not find onerous or unrealistic in the legislation, allowing direct appeals to the Court of Appeal.

Now, the acts I counted are the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act, Electric Utilities Act, Energy Resources Conservation Act, Municipal Government Act,

Natural Resources Conservation Board Act, and number seven is the Public Utilities Board Act. I'm assuming that maybe the Gas Utilities Act would fall under that one. But, again, this was just my quick first scan of the bill, so I'm going to now maybe scrutinize it a little more. Each of those seven acts being amended involves the decisions of a regulator, a regulator such as the Energy and Utilities Board or the NRCB or the Municipal Government Board.

Those decisions can be appealed to the courts. However, in the existing legislation, as I understand it, each of these acts frequently leads to parties being unable to meet the timelines. As such, we are opening the door for, you know, adjournments or postponements to the court process because of the unworkable time limits.

In those various statutes there were no provisions for the procurement of documents that were requested by an applicant from a board.

I would pause here for a second, Mr. Speaker, and talk about those boards, which have really grown in size, mandate, and authority, if you will. They're becoming almost like government agencies by themselves. While they were initially envisioned to be sort of at arm's length, they are now so huge and their mandate is so widespread that, you know, for somebody to approach them with an appeal process and ask for documents, it's a little intimidating, and it's a little difficult for that person to procure those documents that are in question.

This is one of the reasons why we had so many delays in the process. Those boards, as they were initially set up, were under no statutory obligation to provide the materials requested in any set period of time. So I think that clarifying this and streamlining it is useful, and again I commend the drafters of this legislation for catching this and trying to rectify it.

Now, the bill is in response to concerns raised by the Chief Justice. Again, that's good because now we're listening to the people who are, like, hands on, the people who are in the field, telling us that this is something that they are struggling with, and now we as legislators are responding and reacting to that concern or that frustration.

They were unworkable time limits, which hindered or interfered with people's access to the Court of Appeal with respect to those boards or tribunals, as I mentioned. So in terms of the actual amendments in this amendment legislation, I think the first one is to set those realistic time limits at 30 days for an application for a leave to appeal to be filed. It removes the consent provision from a judge of the Court of Appeal to grant a leave to appeal.

Again, I'm really proud of myself here because three years ago that didn't make sense to me. It was all Greek. But now, you know, what a difference three years make.

The second component is to remove the obligation to actually have leave to appeal granted from a judge. Again, I look at this as improving access. Basically, what we're proposing here is to just have to provide the intent to apply for a leave to appeal, which is, I think, simpler, and it makes it easier for applicants to move forward.

The third component is to add a provision relating to a time limit of 14 days from the day on which the written request is served for the board or that tribunal that we were talking about to provide any materials requested by an applicant. That's, again, wonderful. In this day and age people are asking for quick justice, and they're asking for access to information. If we continued, you know, allowing boards or tribunals to just sit on those requests indefinitely and to waste time and to drag, justice was not being served, and it wasn't being served in a timely fashion. So that is a positive change.

The fourth component, or the fourth attempt that this bill is trying to do, is to stipulate that if leave to appeal is "granted by a judge of the Court of Appeal, the appeal must proceed in accordance with the practice and procedure of the Court of Appeal.” It also states that “the notice of appeal must be given to the parties affected by the appeal.” I think that is, again, a favourable direction that we should be accepting because notice of appeal allows all the parties to be prepared and it creates that sort of even playing field for all parties in that particular court case.

Now, there is a bit of technical wording which I found a little challenging. It basically has to do with the transcripts and records of hearing. But what we did, again, to make sure that nothing fishy or nothing mischievous was being embedded here was we asked two or three lawyers in the field. They replied to us that they don’t see this as any concern about something that might be contentious or something that might be questionable or objectionable and definitely that they don’t see it as being a barrier in the process to appeal to the Court of Appeal.

So we trust those legal opinions, and we trust their integrity because they’re people who are, again, in the field, hands on, and they have no interest in which way this act is amended. They’re fairly impartial, and they said that they don’t see it as having any negative impact on people’s access to the courts or the ability to appeal in the Court of Appeal, so in that regard I’m not going to worry much about that component dealing with transcripts and records of hearing.

Not to consume a lot more time, Mr. Speaker, I don’t think there’s anything in Bill 19 that would raise any significant flags. Again, I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill because he is definitely one of the hardest working in his caucus. We appreciate the fact that he shared the background information ahead of time with members of the opposition, which really makes our lives easier. It allows us to not be as suspicious or not be as critical because now we can do the research ahead of time and not be rushed to participate in debate.

With that, I invite further comments, but the Official Opposition is leaning towards supporting Bill 19, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 19 in second reading. Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, was just introduced by our colleague from Calgary-Nose Hill, and his introductory comments were helpful in describing the nature of changes that this bill proposes to accomplish by way of the amendments that are made to seven different pieces of legislation that deal with a variety of boards, tribunals, et cetera in the province.

Mr. Speaker, some of the changes that are being proposed clearly make sense in terms of the time limits, the requirement of 30 days for serving the intention to appeal and the time limit of 14 days for the boards or tribunals to respond to the request for materials for the purposes of the applicant to be able to seek leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. So the changes in the time requirement I think make sense.

Changes in the language that, again, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill suggested needed to be made in order to make the language more current with the times: I think those are welcome, make sense to me.

The only primary concern that I have, and still have after listening to the member and other hon. members, is the kind of materials that the applicant will be able to ask for when preparing application for leave to appeal. Mr. Speaker, the provisions in Bill 19 make a distinction between requests for materials and requests for transcripts. The distinction is made that certain materials can in fact be requested from a tribunal or a board in order to prepare a leave to appeal, but excluded from the materials are the records of the proceedings in order do so.

I’m somewhat puzzled by this distinction. In terms of general principles I think I would like to see a piece of legislation which doesn’t make it more difficult, doesn’t reduce the probability, if you wish, of the application for leave to appeal to succeed. It seems to me that the fact that the amendment proposed here will explicitly exclude the ability of the applicant to have access to transcripts in preparing the leave to appeal application would make it more difficult, perhaps, or reduce the likelihood of success of the application for leave to appeal. So that is, I think, my primary concern.

It is true that changes need to be made in existing pieces of legislation to achieve greater levels of efficiency, save where effort can be saved in the legal processes when applicants want to take matters before the courts. True, efficiency as a value is important. Saving resources and time and being able to do things in a timely fashion without wasteful effort having to be put in to do so is a good thing, but we have to put the principle of efficiency against the principle of the right of applicants to seek legal redress by way of appeal. In my view, this distinction that’s introduced by way of these amendments in this bill, the distinction between requests for materials which boards and tribunals would be obliged by law to provide within 30 days excepting the transcripts, would tilt the balance in favour of efficiency at the cost of the notions of justice and fairness and the rights of the applicant to exercise the right to appeal. So that remains my concern.

I have thought of introducing an amendment to rectify the problem that I see in the bill, to improve the bill. There are, as I said, you know, very positive features in the bill which I’m in support of. The only matter over which I have reservation is the exception made with respect to the access to transcripts, that the time of preparing the application to seek leave for appeal that is being legislated here will make it more difficult for the applicant, in my view, to prepare an application for leave to appeal in a way that could enhance the likelihood of the success of the application for leave to appeal.

I hope that in the ensuing debate I have an opportunity to hear a stronger defence or a clearer explanation for this bill introducing this distinction between certain materials that must be made available in order to prepare the application for leave to appeal and certain other materials, specifically the transcripts, not being made available. I think the transcripts are an important piece of the materials that the applicant will need and would like to have available to prepare an application for leave to appeal because having the transcripts available, in my view, would most likely enhance the likelihood of the application for leave to appeal to succeed. That is, perhaps, my only major concern with respect to Bill 19.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Any other speakers?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to close the debate?

Mr. Magnus: Question.

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act

[Adjourned debate April 4: Mr. Eggen]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise and participate in debate on this Bill 22, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act. As you know, this act is trying to establish a new provincial entity, a new provincial corporation to manage Alberta's investments. While maximizing return for the taxpayer is something that any government should be looking at, and while maximizing return on investment should be something that any Legislature supports, one has to wonder at the rationale behind this direction and this turn today compared to yesterday or this year compared to last year, for example. What changed? What brought on this policy change to move it from, you know, under the direction or under the control of the Minister of Finance to something that is outside of government, something that might be relatively at arm's length compared to the current situation?

The government is telling us that this new provincial corporation could improve net investment returns by 25 to 100 basis points. They're basically explaining, as per their press release when they announced the introduction of this bill, that every 10 basis points in net value-added would yield a return of something like $16 million per year in net income – that is through the Alberta heritage savings trust fund – or, according to their figures, close to $50 million per year on all the balanced investment portfolios managed by the corporation.

Two questions. Number one, why can't we do this now? Why can't the staff and employees of Alberta Finance as they are structured now offer this better return on investment? Why do we need to go outside of the Ministry of Finance to achieve this better return? The second question that comes from this statement or this observation is: why did we wait so long? If the government is claiming that this is basically following best practices in other jurisdictions – and they use the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan as one of them or the Canada pension plan as another – why did we wait so long?

Now, I'm under the impression that there has been a recent study commissioned by the government which concluded that a stand-alone organization would be, sort of, a better way to invest and to manage the investments. I have to ask the question if this decision was made based on just the one study. You know, if it's just the one study that resulted in such a profound policy change or change in direction, what did that study tell us? What was lacking, or what was not being done adequately that we had to actually resort to a measure of this magnitude?

The government is also telling us that going this way, creating this organization, is going to balance operational independence with the highest standards of transparency and accountability, yet in the same paragraph the government is telling us that "the Lieutenant Governor in Council will appoint a board of directors responsible for the oversight of the corporation." We all know that this is basically language that really means that it's the minister who's going to appoint the board. You know, lay people would probably understand that the Lieutenant Governor is in charge, but this really tells us that the minister is going to appoint people to direct the corporation. How is that granting that organization operational independence if they're still appointed by the minister in charge?

Also, the same press release is telling us that "the government will continue to set the investment policy for all government funds." So my concern here, Mr. Speaker – and I think it's a justified concern – is: are we creating a new level of bureaucracy, or are we creating something that might be not needed, something that might be redundant? Operational independence: wonderful if we can guarantee it. With operational independence there should come accountability, and there should come transparency.

If we move in that direction, and if this House agrees that this is the direction we need to go, who are they going to report to? Who are they going to be accountable to? Will it continue to be the Minister of Finance, or will it now be the President of the Treasury Board, or will they report directly to the Assembly? We need to know. We need to know that chain of command, or that line of authority. Where does it start, and where does it end?

I honestly thought that the Ministry of Finance was doing a fairly good job. This press release and the bill itself tell us that we could do better. I'm all for doing better, but I'm just hesitant to create new departments and new agencies and to appoint people to them. It should come as no surprise to you, Mr. Speaker, that we also have issues with respect to appointments to boards and agencies and, you know, different departments and stuff like that because we have concerns with respect to patronage and redundancy and waste. We need assurances that this is not the case, at least in this particular situation.

Another thing is that today in question period there was a little confusion that arose from a particular question that my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Rutherford raised. We had heard that during supplementary supply there was an entry for $7 million for investment loss. When we investigated, the hon. Minister of Finance told us that it was basically due to an error in hedging, if I remember the term correctly, with respect to the difference in currency exchange between the Canadian dollar and the U.S. dollar. It was an error made by an employee of Alberta Finance, and by the time they caught it, it had cost the taxpayer $11 million.

Now, on the one hand, the hon. Minister of Finance today was saying that now this agency is going to prevent this from happening again and that part of the rationale for its inception is basically to address concerns like this. But in a written response to my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Rutherford, the minister has indicated that the rationale for converting the province's investment management operations to a provincial corporation, I quote, is not in any way related to the losses cited in the supplementary estimates. End quote.

So there is a bit of a mixed message here. Mistakes have to be avoided. Protocols and procedures have to be tightened, Mr. Speaker, and we have to ensure that it's not just one employee that is making decisions like this. There should be checks and balances and people double-checking and triple-checking before a decision is made or a decision is finalized because, honestly, as we were discussing this morning in caucus, we really sympathize with that employee.

The employee has to be accountable, and they have to be responsible for the error they made, but it's really not entirely their fault. They have supervisors, and they have bosses, and those bosses have bosses, and those bosses have a Minister of Finance that actually oversees this entire department and is entrusted to handle those investments and to make those decisions and to scrutinize those decisions on a day-to-day basis. So, yes, someone made a mistake, and they have to be dealt with, but also we have to really investigate what led to that mistake and what led to that mistake not being caught on the day it was made, a month later, or six months later, Mr. Speaker.

Now, we have raised many concerns in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, with respect to different government agencies and boards and commissions. If you remember last year, for example, there was a lot of talk about the Alberta Securities Commission. Now that we're creating this new department and now that the minister will appoint people that are going to direct it – and they would have a lot of autonomy and a lot of power – how can Albertans be confident that the issue of governance and the issue of management are going to be dealt with so we can ensure that, you know, professionalism and ethical behaviour are going to be highlighted and emphasized and that they're going to be of the utmost importance?

The next concern which I'm going to raise is with respect to their budget. We are creating a new board, and this new board is going to require staff. They're going to require letterhead and business cards, and they might be moving to a new building that, you know, you have to pay rent for and then utilities and insurance and all that stuff. With all of this in front of us and with all of this being thought about, are we also going to require them to not only co-operate with the Auditor General because everybody has to co-operate with the Auditor General, but take those new policy field committees that we're going to be establishing, Mr. Speaker, which is really a wonderful turn of events – and I welcome their incorporation into our legislative life. Will they be required to appear before the policy field committee that's in charge of finance and that's in charge of making investment decisions? I would hope that the answer is yes, and I would hope that they would not feel that we're unduly infringing on their autonomy, that what we're doing in fact is helping set that policy direction.

I am not comfortable with the fact that the minister or the government is going to continue to set the policy directions for Alberta's investments. I think it should be a function of one of those four policy field committees, and we should really invite input from all sides of the House and also from outside the House. Alberta has quite a large supply of financial advisers and people who can actually make sound decisions day in and day out. I think we should really invite that input from the public and from stakeholders and not just rely on six or seven or 10 people that are hand-picked by the minister to make those decisions. If we're worried about an $11 million error today with all the checks and balances that we have, I am concerned that we might have larger errors materialize in the future. So the issue of governance, the issue of ethical behaviour is a big one, Mr. Speaker.

Again, back to that operational flexibility, just to assure the citizens of this great province that the corporation will not put the wishes or the views of its creator, a.k.a. the government or the cabinet, above the interests of Albertans. You know, this concern arises whenever you have a political appointment to any board or any commission, and this one in particular is going to be dealing in, I think, excess of $70 billion. The government has investments exceeding $70 billion, and these people have to be held accountable that they don't put the wishes or the directions of the cabinet ahead of the genuine interests of Albertans. Albertans own the investment, and if they benefit, it's them who benefit, and if something wrong happens, it's Albertans whose investments lose value. It's them who suffer.

Now, referencing other jurisdictions, you know, like the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan or the Canada pension plan is wonderful. Let's make sure, then, that our practices and our protocols and the operational manual for this new investment corporation are modelled after those other jurisdictions. So we don't just reference them; we should really learn from their experiences.

So I will take my seat, Mr. Speaker, and invite further comment. But it's something that we are going to cautiously support. I hope that the hon. minister provides us with some answers. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions? The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. I thank the hon. member for some of his insightful comments. I appreciate them as we work together, I would say, as we look at these policy field examples that he mentioned and thank him for his positive comments to the government on this initiative but also on the Legislature. It's going to be really important to understand that good ideas, no matter from what political party, are what we want to embrace. Of course, be it whomever they come from, this government accepts good ideas. Obviously, the responsibility of the government will be to execute those ideas in terms of what we do. So I just want to say: good ideas. No one person or one group has a patent on good ideas, and that's what makes any government successful in terms of embracing those good ideas, which we will continue to do. Who knows? Maybe some day in the future there will be a ministry of good ideas.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 22, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act, in its second reading. This is obviously an important piece of legislation. It will create a new Crown corporation that will be asked to handle very large sums of public money, close to $70 billion, being done on the assumption or with the goal of boosting the returns to investments that now are in public funds by $500 million.

Mr. Speaker, it is an important bill because it does create a new Crown corporation. There are all kinds of questions about what kind of arm's-length relationship this corporation will have with the government. Presently much of the work that this corporation will do is done in-house in the Department of Finance. At least in theory that work currently being done in the Department of Finance is accessible to us in terms of seeking transparency and accountability of decisions.

Once you put these important decisions in the hands of a Crown corporation, you certainly free it from the possibility of political interventions in the decisions that get made with respect to these investments, which may affect financial markets or what have you. That's, I suppose, one of the underlying advantages in establishing a corporation. It frees or prevents or, if you wish, insulates it somewhat from political influence that may come from the government, from the cabinet, from the Executive Council, or from the minister in charge, the Minister of Finance or whoever.

On the other hand, it's a question of public accountability of these funds because these are funds that really in principle belong to the province of Alberta and therefore to the people of Alberta. The people of Alberta have a right to have confidence in the alternative that's being proposed, confidence both in the accountability side and the transparency side.

Mr. Speaker, of course this Crown corporation will be dealing with investments. Many Albertans may have concerns about the investment policies. Ethical investing, for example, would I think be a concern that many Albertans would have. Once you put these matters, important decisions and $70 billion, in the hands of an arm's-length Crown corporation, what kind of access, what kind of control, what kind of influence will the residents of this province have on decisions which relate to whether or not a particular investment decision has respected the principles of ethical investing? So I have questions about what kind of accessibility, what kind of access either Albertans in general or this House on behalf of Albertans will have with respect to reviewing and asking questions about the ethical nature of the investment decisions made by such a corporation.

The related question is, of course, Mr. Speaker – we have seen that once there are investment corporations that have come into being, they make decisions which have been considered not legally appropriate, and some of the public corporations have been taken to the court, and CEOs have been criminally charged in some cases and have faced the consequences of their actions, some cases in progress right now, as we speak, with respect to that.

The premise that this corporation, AIM, Alberta Investment Management Corporation, will deliver benefits in the form of enhanced returns on the investments is just one premise. There are other potential possibilities and difficulties that could arise, and we need to therefore proceed gingerly, to put it in an interesting way, when making a decision on the pros and cons of establishing a Crown corporation that will be responsible for investment decisions on public funds. So the accountability issue becomes very, very important, and the oversight, the ability to oversee the activities, of such a corporation by a legislative body, by a democratically elected forum such as this one, becomes an important issue.

I think our colleague from Edmonton-McClung raised the issue of whether or not the policy field committees relevant to this area will have any role in not only overseeing the activities and decisions of this corporation but, in my view, should have a central role in examining this bill. We should invite financial experts, advisers, people from the academy perhaps, regular citizens to come and give advice to this government on this very crucial piece of legislation, which is really the establishment of a Crown corporation dealing with, at the moment, $70 billion.

Who knows? If this government did see the light and, in fact, agreed to enhance the revenues that come into the public purse from revenues generated from the exploitation of nonrenewable resources by their royalties, if the royalty rates were to increase, as I hope this review will make certain that happens, that Albertans get a higher rent on the resources that will not be there within two or three or four generations, then it won't be just $70 billion. It may be $200 billion or $300 billion. We know that other jurisdictions in the world such as Norway or Alaska have used their royalty rates to in fact accumulate very large sums of money available to the citizens of those jurisdictions for investment.

So the role of this corporation could in fact be far more crucial given the possibility of the $70 billion fund to grow into a much larger fund, hundreds of billions of dollars. Given that that possibility is open to us, whether this government will help Albertans achieve their goal is another matter, and I have very serious doubts that the government has any intention, really, of enhancing royalty rates so that Albertans in general will benefit from the historically unprecedented high rates on these resources that companies benefit from. We as Albertans are stuck with the royalty rates established when these oil prices and gas prices were one-third or one-fourth of where they are now, yet the royalty rates haven't changed.

Assuming that the royalty rate change can be made by the government of Alberta, whether this one or another government that replaces it, the role of this corporation becomes even more crucial in shaping the future possibilities for Albertans, and the decisions that this corporation will be making will therefore be of great significance to them. So I raise the question of whether or not the Minister of Finance is in fact willing to heed the advice coming from this member to refer this bill to the policy field committee that would be relevant for this particular area.

It's a very, very important bill, Mr. Speaker. I can't overemphasize the importance of this being looked at more closely. We need to give ourselves time. We need to give Albertans the opportunity to have input on giving us their advice as to the features of this bill, the contents of the bill, and what they would like to see changed or what provisions they would like to see enhanced and where they would like to see new provisions added so that their interests are fully protected and the accountability and transparency issues are well addressed.

That said, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and hope that the Minister of Finance will give me an answer in the affirmative with respect to my suggestion that this should be the first bill that is referred to the relevant policy field committee that will come into place now that the House today voted on the motion from the Government House Leader, which will now enable us to establish those policy field committees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Any other speakers?

The hon. Minister of Finance to close debate.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I want to say thank you to everyone who has debated this bill at second reading. There has been a lot of thought put into this bill. There have been a lot of issues that have been dealt with regarding this bill. Indeed, this has been something that has been contemplated for the last four to five years. It culminated in a study, which I tabled in the Legislative Assembly roughly a month ago, which showed the potential upside for moving to this type of format, for moving to this type of investment opportunity. I think it would be extremely difficult for us as a Legislative Assembly to turn our backs on the potential savings, the potential increase in income of close to $500 million a year, which is what 100 basis points would give us.

Mr. Speaker, there have been questions raised about the administrative costs. There have been questions raised about numerous other costs, but I will say to the members in this Assembly that when I talk a hundred basis points – and I will give the range of 25 to 100 basis points – in actual fact, that is a net increase in the amount of dollars that have come forward.

Would it have been easier simply to keep all of our investments within the Department of Finance? Yes, it would be. Is that the best thing for our $70 billion in investments? The answer is no. The study that was brought forward showed us that, and it showed us that we do need to take the next step, which OMERS, which the teachers' and the various other pension funds around the country have done.

The second point – and I would certainly hope that the members from Edmonton would adhere to this principle – is that by centring in Edmonton a Crown corporation that has $70 billion in assets, we hope to get a spinoff financial industry in Edmonton. By having that critical mass of $70 billion here, we really feel that that spinoff will occur.

So, Mr. Speaker, this bill has been done with a lot of thought. It's been done with a lot of consternation, but we have made a decision to move ahead with this bill because we feel that it is the best for our investments. It's the best for our pension plans, and I will add that all of our pension plans, some $25 billion worth of pension plans, are in agreement with moving to this format, in this direction.

The last thing that I want to say is quite simply that this board will not be political appointments. This board will be put on for expertise. We cannot have political appointments, Joe's friend or anyone else's friend, put on this board to manage $70 billion. The hon. member across the way talked about the policy field committees. Unless I'm wrong, there is no one in this Legislature who can manage $70 billion worth of investment, and I include myself in that particular group of people. That's a huge task. It's a huge responsibility, and we need to ensure that the proper people are in place to manage our money as Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

So I anxiously look forward to the Committee of the Whole on this one.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Hon. Minister of Justice, are you rising for this?

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to begin discussion this afternoon in committee on Bill 28, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007. This bill amends the Provincial Court Act to permit a judge who is more than 70 years of age and working full time to be appointed a part-time judge if he or she wishes. Currently the act permits part-time judges to be reappointed after age 70 only if they started part-time service on or before their 70th birthday. I'd like to start by thanking the members opposite and my colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness for their comments in second reading.

Today I'd like to summarize the benefits of Bill 28 and answer questions that arose in debate at second. Extending the option of part-time service to full-time judges over 70 years of age will benefit Albertans. More highly experienced and competent judges will be retained to continue serving Albertans on a part-time basis. As my colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness stated in debate, the provision for part-time service was made available at the request of the Provincial Court.

Part-time service is one way to keep judges who have put in considerable service serving on the bench. The other way is to appoint supernumerary judges, who are called upon to serve from time to time as needed. Supernumerary judges are retired judges who are paid on a per diem basis. Part-time judges sit on a consistent and scheduled basis as opposed to a supernumerary judge, who sits on a periodic basis. Other benefits of part-time service are that judges receive regular exposure to current trends and access to professional development opportunities.

As I pointed out in second reading, there is a financial benefit to the government with these amendments. On an annual basis two part-time judges sit the same number of days as a full-time judge but cost the government $60,645 less. This is because part-time judges are already receiving their pensions, and the government is no longer required to make contributions to their pension plans.

Mr. Chairman, another benefit of Bill 28 is that it will provide the Provincial Court with more flexibility in scheduling their sittings. The act now requires part-time judges to sit full-time for two three-month periods in each year. Bill 28 will change this requirement so that part-time judges sit for the equivalent of six months on a full-time basis in each year of their term.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview requested an update about the need for this bill at this particular time. He wondered if this legislation was related to the courts being very busy as a result of a booming economy. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the courts are increasingly busy, and this is due in part to a growing population. The impetus for this legislation, however, is to help us retain experience and knowledge on the bench, which are valuable assets to Albertans at any time. I would add that these changes were initiated at the request of the Provincial Court of Alberta, and it is fully supportive of this bill.

I believe this addresses all of the questions raised in debate, and we should move forward with this bill at this time. I would ask, as a result, that all members of the Assembly support the bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed a pleasure to rise and participate at this stage of debate on Bill 28, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007. If I remember correctly, this is probably my first chance to speak to it, and I thank the hon. Minister of Justice for the bill briefing ahead of time and also for his responses that he just gave to some of the comments and concerns raised in second reading.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. Chairman, is to amend the Provincial Court Act to allow judges to continue to work after they reach the age of 70. The second substantive component of this bill is to require a part-time judge to sit the equivalent of six months on a full-time basis. This is versus, maybe, the current practice of potentially serving two separate three-month periods on a full-time basis in each year of his or her term. So with respect to this second component I don't understand whether it has a different value or if it's, in fact, not the same thing. I suspect that maybe it has something to do with scheduling simplicity for the Chief Judge and the Assistant Chief Judge to assign, you know, roster duty or to schedule those part-time judges. So counting the days, really, it doesn't make a big difference whether somebody works six months or two three-month blocks. I suspect that it has to do with the scheduling, to make it easier for that Chief Judge or for the Assistant Chief Judge to stipulate who works where when.

Are we trying to keep experienced judges on the bench for a longer period? Yes, we are. Are we supportive of this direction? Yes, we are. It does two things. It actually achieves two favourable outcomes, Mr. Chairman. One, for judges who want a reduced but guaranteed amount of judicial service after retirement, it allows them to have that option, which is favourable. It also allows for a reduction in the pressure on the court. Both volume and gravity or complexity of cases are of concern, so now we're allowing an enhanced speed, if you will, with which cases are processed. I've always maintained – and many people like me – that slow justice is bad justice.

If we can accelerate processing and if we can move things quicker and restore the rights of people who have been wronged or offer them compensation or restitution or, indeed, provide them with closure for their ordeals and for their suffering, that's definitely something that is favourable and that I am in favour of. The interest of having access to justice and fairness is definitely paramount, Mr. Chairman.

Now, allowing judges to work part-time after they reach the age of 70 and extending that lifespan, if you will, is favourable, like I said. I just hope that one of the reasons why we're leaning towards this amendment is not to cut down on costs. We all know that two part-time judges might actually do the same work that one full-time judge might; however, the government is not required to contribute to their pension plans, for example. So hopefully this is not one of the reasons, you know, in terms of cost savings.

The other thing is that while we are eager to extend the working life of judges who are experienced, it shouldn't be coming at the expense of or placing younger judges at a disadvantage, interfering with, let's say, a young Crown prosecutor who is qualified and who meets all the criteria and all the requirements to be promoted or to be appointed to the bench.

So on the one hand it's great that we're creating this opportunity for retired judges to carry on their duties and to participate in the judicial process, but also we have to be cognizant of the fact that younger ones might be coming through, going up the ladder, basically, and we shouldn't be putting them at a disadvantage. It should be an accommodation of both. I think that we might be achieving this accommodation of both because we have tremendous backlogs, and we have tremendous workloads in our courts. So maybe my concern is not as warranted, or maybe I'm being too concerned.

Moving on. With respect to allowing judges to participate and to carry on their duties, remember, Mr. Chairman, when we discussed Bill 16 in this House last week. Bill 16 is the Police Amendment Act, 2007. The Alberta Liberal caucus introduced an amendment to Bill 16 which asked for the inclusion of a retired judge in the special investigative unit, the unit which was basically established to investigate serious allegations of police wrongdoing, incidents involving death or injury or situations with respect to sensitive information or situations of a sensitive nature.

Now, we asked for a retired judge to be on that integrated investigative unit, and we also asked for a retired or former Crown prosecutor, a retired or former police officer, and at least two members of the public. We were talking about members of the public that don't fit into any of those three categories: judge, Crown prosecutor, or police officer. It was unfortunately rejected by the government caucus. One of the arguments we heard is, basically, that we might be putting ourselves in a legal conundrum because we might not find a retired judge to serve on the integrated investigative unit, and if we go ahead and establish the investigative unit without a judge in it, then we might be breaking our own law.

That was an excuse which I found a little weak given that on the Order Paper we have Bill 28, which basically extends the working lifespan of judges and allows them, should they choose, to continue to practise. So that tells me, in a way, that we do have a healthy supply of judges who are around age 70 or older than 70 who are willing to continue to work even on a part-time basis. Their expertise would be critical, and we all appreciate the fact that they've been doing this for many years, and the qualifications and the experience that they have amassed are to be noted.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar indicated in the debate on Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, that we should leave judges alone to enjoy their retirement. He indicated that, in his book, his definition would be that once you're retired, you're definitely retired; you're done. I quote from Hansard where he said: "I want to grant them that opportunity to stay retired. I want to let them be retired because that's important. I know that when I retire, I hope that people will just let me retire. Yes, they have lots of skills; they have lots of abilities." I disagree because we have tremendous backlogs, and we have pressures on our legal system that can be addressed fairly and adequately by allowing those judges to continue to practise.

Definitely, this amendment in Bill 28 enhances that ability of the courts to retain the services of qualified and experienced judges who have both the capacity and the ability to continue to serve Albertans and the interests of justice. I emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that slow justice is bad justice. As MLAs – and I'm included, and you're included as well – we hear from constituents all the time that the wheels of justice sometimes turn slower than expected or slower than they should. Maybe this way we can accelerate, you know, the processing of court cases.

They are willing to continue to work, and we have to offer them the legislative framework with which they are allowed to continue to work. This is an enhancement over supernumerary judges, who are called in from time to time to fill in like locums, for example, but who are unable to continue with their professional development. It provides a better way of retaining the services of judges, as opposed to the supernumerary status.

So, in essence, Mr. Chairman, we don't have any major concerns with this. I just hope that this is done in a structured way. I will definitely lend my support to any measure introduced in this House that would increase access to justice and provide a mechanism to expedite the movement of cases through our court system. As such, I encourage all members of this House to join me in voting in favour of Bill 28. I thank you for this opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise with some interest in speaking to Bill 28, Provincial Court Amendment Act, for the first time. Certainly, as my colleague just very eloquently, I thought, pointed out, this is a positive and innovative means by which we perhaps can help to expedite the swift and equitable passage of justice in our provincial courts. Considering the backlogs that we have to deal with so often in provincial courts, then perhaps this is, in fact, an innovative way to change that around.

This bill is a simple amendment to the retirement clause of the Provincial Court Act and will allow judges to continue perhaps on a part-time basis past their 70th birthday. Currently the act states that a judge approaching their 70th birthday must state in writing that the judge is willing to give up their appointment and that also a judge may be eligible for a one-year extension. Under the part-time provision of this bill judges must serve for two full terms, three months each, if they want to get the part-time status. So this bill simply puts a little subclause in there that the judges have received a one-year extension of their full-time status and then be appointed as part-time judges, making it easier for the process to unfold.

It also amends the time frame to some extent that judges must serve by loosening it, I believe, to something more like six months rather than to a three-month term. So, certainly, this just seems like a simple and useful way to continue, on a voluntary basis, of course, the wisdom and the skills that judges have developed over the course of their careers and, if they are choosing to do so, to continue to contribute to our judicial system.

Certainly, it's, I believe, also sending a positive message in regard to options that individuals in other professions might have in regard to retiring or choosing not to retire. We have a tendency in our society here recently to loosen the constraints that have been placed in previous times in regard to mandatory retirement ages. You know, I believe that this is a step forward for people's freedom of choice, and certainly it acknowledges the accumulated wisdom and capacity of long-serving professionals in all different walks of life to continue to contribute to society in a positive way and, in fact, probably contribute in a most positive way.

I have to look no further than my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona just to see, you know, how much wisdom and positive contribution an individual can continue to make long past what some people might consider to be a retirement age. In fact, the University of Alberta just recently lifted their mandatory retirement age . . .

An Hon. Member: It's about time.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Exactly. About time, indeed.

We consider the value that we like to pay lip service to towards wisdom and accumulated knowledge and to all of those things. Finally, we have an actual acknowledgement of that here with the University of Alberta changing their retirement policy and now, potentially, with Bill 28 in regard to judges.

So, you know, this bill we certainly do support as a caucus, and we consider it to have the potential, as I said before, to alleviate the pressures from our court system. It certainly is part and parcel of other mechanisms by which we could in fact impose positive change on our court system to clear the backlog and to offer other alternatives that perhaps can serve our justice system better.

With that, Mr. Chair, I would certainly once again like to reiterate our support of Bill 28, and I would invite other members to do so as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 5, Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. We had an exchange of information during second reading of this bill, and I had made a couple of observations. Essentially, this act is amending five pieces of legislation. For the most part, I have no trouble with what's being done here, but I was a little curious about a couple of things.

The first section, which is amending the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, removes the requirement for a practitioner to provide permission to the department to review patient records and establishes a penalty for a practitioner who refuses to give this permission. So it's no longer required, and if somebody does actively try and obstruct it, there is a penalty involved. My concern around this is: continuing to protect patient confidentiality. So I was looking for some comment on that and a clarification on how the reviews are currently conducted. I think my primary question around that is: are patients notified when their files are released to the department as a way of checking up on the physician or as a way of reviewing the physician's current practice? I know the Health Information Act well enough. I should know the answer to that, and I apologize for not having it in the top of my head, but if I could get clarification there.

I also had a bit of a concern on that same first section with the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act around the minister's ability to select members of the committee that then reviews the claims that are submitted. I note that some professions are mandated, and others are not. I think that was the reasoning that I was given as to why this change was in here. I'm always a little cautious when I see that kind of control in the hands of the minister without some sort of extra filter there. I think that what was happening was that there were certain professions that were required to be on the review panel but not others. This is removing that now to allow the minister to just select people. I think my caution there is that we should always have members of the public involved in this so that we do have an independent view that's being brought into play.

I've got no problems at all with section 2.

Section 3 was the Health Insurance Premiums Act. This was making it easier for Albertans to opt out of the health care insurance plan. Essentially, if you're going to do it now, you have to do it by a certain date, and you can only do it for a year. This is making it easier for Albertans to opt out of this. My question would be: why on earth would you be doing that? Of course, my suspicion is always that this is making it easier for people to engage in private insurance plans, which of course helps them to proliferate, and I'm not keen on that at all. But, you know, there really are not very many people that would be involved in this. Why are we spending so much time and effort trying to facilitate very few people, really very few people, who are trying to get out of our public health care system? Why would we be trying to be more consumer friendly on this issue? I guess this whole thing has always puzzled me, and I know that the media was interested in it as well. It's really taking a seemingly simple administrative change, and it's making it one of your top priorities. We haven't had that many health bills in front of us. This is one of them, and this is what's part of it, so I'm a bit curious.

The fourth section is mandatory testing and disclosure. Really, that was about capturing the definition of guardian that's contained in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. Ah, a cell phone ringing in the Assembly. How interesting. I think the hon. minister for government services is desperately trying to cover for one of his colleagues.

All right. Capturing that definition that's used in Children's Services to pertain here is fine by me.

There's a clarification in section 5, the Pharmacy and Drug Act, about the authority of Health and Wellness to adopt national drug schedules as they change over time. Of course, I hope what will come with that is the national pharmacare program. Perhaps the way is being paved for that. That would be good news.

Finally, the Public Health Act, which should bring us in line with current policy enabling the adoption of documents that change over time, don't require new regulatory amendments each time a new version of standards is produced. I think that should also help us with some of the pandemic responses that we're gearing up for.

Those were the issues that I had raised. I'm assuming that I can get some answers back in third reading, but at this point I'm happy to exhort my fellow colleagues in the Assembly to give their assent in Committee of the Whole to Bill 5.

Thanks.

5:20

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak for the first time on Bill 5, Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, my first time, anyway. Yes, certainly, Bill 5, the scope of it covers a number of technical and administrative changes of less consequence.

However, the thing that struck me and raised my critical interest was the section that deals with the Health Insurance Premiums Act. This was, I believe, on page 5 of this bill as it's printed and section 25(9)(b). This is the part that's talking about streamlining the process by which people can step out of paying health care premiums. In the language of the bill these are called registrants. Then it's extending the time frame that they can do it from 12 months to 36 months and also makes the opt-out effective from the point of filing with the ministry.

So considering, as was just previously mentioned, that there are only a few people that actually do opt out of the Health Care Insurance Act – our count is 255 people last year – just sending the message somehow that we will make it easier for you to do so, I don't know. It gives a negative impression in regard to the universality of our health care system, first of all, and in my estimation is telegraphing an intention somehow that perhaps some people, if they have the means to do so, should do so because more things are coming down the pipe in regard to privatization and/or making it easier for people to choose to not use universal health coverage.

So I certainly oppose this in a very fundamental way. Although it is appearing as a reasonably innocuous line item in Bill 5, certainly it does raise the ire of people who are concerned about the potential for further privatization in the health care system.

The substantive changes otherwise in this bill lie, again, in the Health Care Insurance Act and where this bill is purporting to establish a reassessment of the claim committee and also seeks to strengthen the investigative powers for the purposes of assessing health care records. We don't particularly have a problem with that.

Premiums account for only 9 cents on the dollar that we spend on health care in this province in general; in other words, 9 per cent of the total health care costs. So by stepping out of paying premiums – really, essentially it's just that 9 per cent of the total health care cost for any given unit on average – then registrants really would have to cover 100 per cent of their costs incurred during the nonpayment period, including, presumably, medically necessary treatments as defined by the Canada Health Act. So I just need clarification on that because there is some ambiguity there. The Canada Health Act outlines minimum conditions on provincial health care for the purposes of transfer payments, and dependents who choose not to opt out presumably become liable for the costs. That includes children? Again, I would like to ask about that because, of course, we have a responsibility to individuals under the age of 18 to provide medically necessary procedures. So I just would like to see how that would work together with this ability for an individual or their family to opt out of the health care system.

So although these amendments only make nonpayment of premiums immediate from filing and extend the effective time for them, it seems to be an opportune time and, in my mind, a moment to raise overall concerns with the health care structure as it stands now. For example, I would like to ask: what, if any, are the ramifications from a user standpoint of opting out of premium payments in cost/accessibility? People opting out of the premiums: are they still insured for medically necessary treatments. Right? So if you have an individual who is perhaps in an emergency situation, I mean, how can you sort of choose? Again, this goes back to the nub of the debate.

An Hon. Member: Will we deny them?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Exactly. Of course, we don't deny. We're legally bound as well to provide that treatment. So, you know, how is it that these people are somehow jumping in and jumping out? It goes back to the old debate that we've been fighting for years and, of course, we're ready to fight any time again.

As well, I would like to ask, then: do we pay for the full coverage of additional services provided by Health and Wellness? I mean, how is that going to work out? Right? According to the current wording of the act, in my mind, dependents choosing to opt out of the registrant's declaration would have to assume the responsibility of paying the premium costs. Right? So, would the registrant's children also be personally liable for the premium costs since they, of course, are dependents? I would like to see clarification on that too. Then, what measures are in place to ensure that onerous financial burdens are not placed on extended family or dependents and such? You know, the whole thing just seems a little bit half baked to me.

My feeling, then, is that, really, without some change to this section, although other parts are probably necessary and technical in nature, I would be tempted to oppose this bill on the grounds that it in fact strengthens a negative view towards public health care by (a) making it easier for people to opt out and stay out of the health care system; (b) downloading all related costs onto these individuals, misguided as they might be; (c) exempting people once they've decided not to pay the 9 cents on the dollar for necessary medical treatment; and (d) somehow downloading costs potentially onto these people's families.

Mr. Chair, cumulatively, just on that section I have some significant, I think, and well-founded concerns about this bill. As I said, certainly we have lots of opportunity to seek clarification on these questions that I'm asking. But I do want each member here today and the public as well just to identify and flag these sections of Bill 5 because, in fact, they do point to something that is potentially quite serious, in my estimation.

So thank you for the opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 22

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get this opportunity to discuss Bill 22 in committee. Certainly, I would like to express my appreciation to the Minister of Finance for providing detailed answers not only to the questions I had in regard to Bill 22 and how it's going to affect the heritage fund. How will the Alberta Investment Management Corporation be affected by Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act? Will the Alberta Investment Management Corporation be subject to the Conflicts of Interest Act? It was great to see a response to that. It was really comforting to finally discover that Alberta Finance has consulted with the clients. Hopefully, the letters of support for Bill 22 from these respective pension plans can perhaps be tabled, if they have not already been, in the Assembly. On the role also, Mr. Chairman, of the government's chief internal auditor: what role will he have with the corporation? I'd appreciate that as well.

Now, certainly, when we're talking about the Alberta Investment Management Corporation and their work with the University of Alberta to train students who might want a career with the organization or with the industry – the hon. minister talked about that earlier this afternoon in second reading – hopefully through the School of Business at the University of Alberta this will be more than just a work in progress. I think the entire province would benefit from that initiative.

So I would just like to be on the record. I appreciate these answers, and I appreciate the time that they came in.

The report that was tabled by the hon. minister earlier during this session – and this is from Capelle Associates. Hopefully there are more detailed studies somewhere in the department to support Bill 22. If there are, I would certainly appreciate it. They also could be tabled not only for the benefit of this member but for all members of the Assembly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, certainly with Bill 22 I have been following the debate, and I have been reading with interest a number of things that are going on. We can go back to previous annual reports from the government of Alberta. We can go back and we can see where in December of 1999 the Minister of Finance at the time, the hon. Stockwell Day, is talking about investigating a separate pension plan for Alberta and improving CPP, not only for Albertans but for all Canadians. That was one step, and then the second step was a pension plan for Alberta.

I would like to know how Bill 22 could possibly fit into any future plans the government has for an Alberta pension plan. Perhaps it hasn't been thought about, but certainly it was discussed in the leadership debate last fall, as I understand it. It's not the first time that this has come up, and my research indicates that the former Treasurer certainly had some interest in this proposal.

Now, earlier in the Assembly today, Mr. Chairman, I tabled a letter that I wrote to the Premier last Friday. I was alerting the Premier that I would be presenting an amendment to the Legislative Assembly on Bill 22, and I would like to do that at this time, please.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, make sure you forward the original copy to the table.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have an amendment before us which is being circulated. The amendment shall be referred to as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you may proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment to Bill 22 as it has been circulated would read that the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act be amended in section 2(5) by striking out "Alberta" and substituting "the City of Edmonton." This amendment would permanently place this 70 billion plus dollar corporation, and I can see the assets of the corporation growing significantly well beyond $100 million and, hopefully, at some point in the near future even beyond $200 million. This Crown corporation would be an ideal fit to the corporate community in this city. If this amendment was to be accepted, it would be an endorsement by this current government of this city. I would really encourage all hon. members to have a look at this amendment and give it serious consideration because we talked about this before, if this asset base were to remain in the city.

We look at the consultants' report. They talk about the difficulty there is in recruiting people to manage these funds. Well, we can start training our own. If we're confident that this asset base will remain in the city, we can work in conjunction with the university to train individuals, and hopefully they will have long professional careers, successful professional careers, managing this fund in this city.

Certainly, if we look at the Alberta Treasury Branches, it's sited in this city. This is the capital city. We need to increase the corporate base within Edmonton, and this is an ideal start. In fact, last week the Premier made a commitment to the city of Edmonton in his speech at the Shaw Conference Centre, at his leader's dinner, and this would be the first commitment to the city, by supporting this amendment.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would cede the floor to any other hon. colleague who would like to participate in the debate on amendment A1. Again, in conclusion, this is good for the city of Edmonton, and it's also good for the province of Alberta. I would urge all hon. members to accept my amendment to permanently site the head office and principal place of business of this corporation in the city of Edmonton, the capital of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I certainly recognize the hon. member's intention, and indeed it is our intention that AIMCO be placed in Edmonton, that it be resident in Edmonton, that it spin off its financial benefits, as the hon. member talked about, in Edmonton. I would not, however, support this amendment and say that it must be in the physical constraints and physical boundaries of the city of Edmonton. I will not take away the flexibility from this corporation. It does have to be in Alberta, but it could just as easily be in Sherwood Park. It could just as easily be in St. Albert. It could just as easily be in some of the other communities around. [interjection] Not Lethbridge, unfortunately. Edmonton is the place where it will be.

I will go on record as saying that my intentions are that this corporation will be housed in Edmonton, will be centred in Edmonton, but I will not second-guess the market when it comes to where the best value is for rental space. It makes all sorts of sense to be housed in the capital community, in the capital city, Mr. Chairman, and I'll give that as my intention, but I do not want to inhibit, to allow them to make bad decisions if at some time in the future there is a need to move to Sherwood Park or a need to move to St. Albert or a need to move to Spruce Grove.

Mr. Chairman, the importance is – and we have to remember it – that this is a Legislature for all of Alberta. I have the full intent to house this in Edmonton. I think it's a good fit here. But I do not want to state in the legislation that it must be within the physical constraints of the city of Edmonton, and I would urge members not to support this amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Well, I am rising to voice my support of this amendment to Bill 22. Certainly, when we're talking about the intention of placing something into a certain place, we've had a long experience here in the city of Edmonton where you have an intention for something to stay where it is. All of the good intentions in the world certainly didn't stop the telephone company from leaving our fine city and even our fine province in very short order. You know, we can look at a whole long history of these things. I appreciate the minister's comments in regard to that we're perhaps not anticipating where we're going to be in the future, but certainly one thing that we know will be in the future is that Edmonton will remain the capital of the province of Alberta.

This is a very large fund that administers public monies for the province of Alberta. To have it connected to the city of Edmonton is not just perfectly reasonable; I think it's absolutely essential. Of course, Mr. Chair, I am supportive of Bill 22 in most ways, but I can't help but have some reservation just because of the magnitude of the money that we're dealing with here. We're talking about creating one of the largest investment funds in Canada. You know, to have that in the capital city I think is absolutely essential.

One of the big items that we've gone out of our way to stress with Bill 22 is to keep the political machinations or influence out of the investments that we make with this fund. You know, moving the hundreds of people that might be associated with the management of this fund hither and yon at some political whim in the future, whoever the government happens to be, I think, again, would be quite a major disruption to the integrity and the security of one of the largest investment funds in the country.

I think it's not unreasonable at all, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, to just emphasize the importance of having this fund located in the capital city. We, in fact, are the capital city of this province, where it is all located. So I certainly do support the amendment, and I encourage all other members to do so as well.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Any others on the amendment? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, you wanted to speak on the amendment before us?

Mr. R. Miller: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just very briefly, the Minister of Finance has outlined his concerns and made a commitment to keep the head office and the base of the operations of the corporation in the capital region. I'm wondering if there might be some consideration, then, to amend the amendment to reflect the capital region as opposed to the city of Edmonton, and if that would be favourable to the government, perhaps we could go there. It would accomplish both the intent of amendment A1 and also the concern that the minister has expressed. I think that might be a way for us to wiggle out of this particular situation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would suggest that the answer to that is no. I will not prejudge. I'm hoping that this fund will be there a hundred years from now, 150 years from now, and that it will indeed be $200 billion, $300 billion, $400 billion. It's fully our intent to have it in Edmonton. It makes all sorts of sense to have it in Edmonton. A lot of the employees are going to be centred in Edmonton, so everything is pointing to Edmonton.

I don't believe that we should inhibit in any way this corporation by saying that it must be within the physical constraints of the capital region or Edmonton in general. Is that our intent? Yes, it is. Will I shackle future governments on saying that that is their intent? No. I think each government has to stand on its own merit, and the merit of this corporation is for it to be in Edmonton.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, this government has put such a great and, I might add, wise effort into extending SuperNet across this province. The last time I checked, we had telephone access to all corners of our province. I'm wondering why the hon. member didn't suggest the great municipality of High Level in my constituency in which to locate this.

An Hon. Member: Bring money to a higher level?

Mr. Oberle: Yeah. Bring money to a higher level. I mean, I cannot fathom why that municipality was not considered in this amendment.

The structure of this organization has to be around management reporting relationships. It doesn't matter what town it's located in. It's got to be located in our great province of Alberta. End of story.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:47 p.m.]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce two guests who are seated in your gallery this afternoon. The first is someone that many members in this House know quite well, Mr. Stan Woloshyn, who represented the fine constituency of Stony Plain in this Legislature from 1989 to 2004, and I for one am glad that he retired when he did. During that time he also served as government caucus whip, minister of public works, minister of community development, and minister of seniors. I also have very fond memories of sitting across the table from Mr. Woloshyn when he was president of local 10 of the ATA when I was a negotiator for the Parkland school board.

Accompanying Stan today is his grandson Tyler Hrynyk. Tyler is a very impressive young man whom I had lunch with today. He is a very skilled hockey player and springboard diver, a bright student at Lymburn school, and a future PhD in mechanical engineering. I'd ask that all members join me in giving the traditional warm welcome to our guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two visiting students from Yokohama, Japan. They are visiting our province for two weeks on an exchange program. They're here to see how western democracy works, so let's be on our best behaviour. They are staying at the home of Jean Easton, mother of one of our pages, and Mrs. Easton is accompanying them today. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery. The students are Takeshi Kuwahara and Makoto Otake. I ask them to please rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you 12 grades 5/6 students from the Meadowview school, which is currently located in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency, right adjacent to the Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teacher Rod Manson and two parent helpers, Aaron Wesenberg and Bernice Harrison. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly 19 very bright students from the Clear Water Academy, which is situated in the Calgary-Elbow riding. I understand that they're all very enthusiastic Calgary Flames fans as well. They're here today to learn about how the Legislature functions. They're accompanied by teachers Miss Janley Grant, Mr. Matt Sartorelli, and parent Mrs. Sharon Van Der Sloot. I would ask them to rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It does give me great pleasure as well to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 12 students and two staff from the Ehpewapahk community alternate school, also known as the Erminskine Cree nation. We have 14 visitors today, including Paul Jespersen, the teacher, and Charlene Wolfe, the teacher's assistant. I think they had a tour a little bit earlier, and we got a photo. They're sitting up in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a great pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 50 visitors from Callingwood elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung. Those guests are visiting us here today to see us in action and to observe what goes on in this very esteemed Assembly. They're joined by their teachers and group leaders, Mr. Close, Mrs. Brown, Mr. Wilcox, and Ms Cassidy, and by parent helper Mr. Owre. This is an extremely active school in the constituency, and it's always referred to as the heart of the community. Wonderful students and wonderful staff. I even attended their concert three or four weeks ago, and I was really impressed by their creativity and energy. I encourage them all to rise, please, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two individuals seated in the public gallery. They are Roseline Richardson and Cathy Hilderman. Roseline and Cathy are workers at the Palace Casino and are currently on strike. They've been on the picket line for 222 days now, due in part to this government's failure to protect workers from employers who engage in unfair labour practices.

Cathy has worked at the Palace Casino for the past eight years and works as a dealer and pit boss at the casino. Roseline has worked at the Palace Casino since 1991 and is also a dealer and pit boss. She has an extensive background in the arts and brings a tremendous amount of passion to the cause that she and her co-workers have taken on. They are joined today by UFCW local 401 representative Don Crisall.

I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if my guests are here yet, but I will go ahead and introduce to you and through you to the members for the record four guests that I have up from Banff-Cochrane today. First is Ron Casey, mayor of Canmore; Mike Western, councillor for Canmore; Don Kochan, acting chief administrative officer of the town of Canmore; and Eric McAvity, who is with the Lamphouse Centre for the Arts Society. If they are in the House, I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our members.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure today to recognize a number of people up in the members' gallery. I would like this Assembly to recognize the volunteer board members from the Science Alberta Foundation. They are meeting with the board today. I'm sorry. I think I just stepped on somebody's toes here. Sorry, President of the Treasury Board. I met with one of the members early this morning. Maybe I will cede to the President of the Treasury Board to finish the introduction.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it just shows how important to this province the Science Alberta Foundation really is. They're recognized from north to south, east to west. We're just one big, happy, recognizable family here. I, too, had a very enjoyable breakfast with their chairman and vice-chairman. If the board is as talented and as engaging as these two, they must have a wonderful discussion. I would like to introduce them to the Assembly, starting with their chairman, Mr. Ron Kuchinka; the vice-chair, Chuck Shultz; the secretary-treasurer, Barry Travers; and their directors Paul Clark, Art Froehlich, Brad Klak, Gordon Olsen, Linda Palladino, and Sid Shugarman. Also with them is their CEO, Arlene Ponting, and their office manager, Regula Lewis. I would ask them to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, did you give notice for a ministerial statement?

Appointment of Alberta Senator

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some very, very good news for this Assembly and for the people of Alberta and perhaps especially for Mr. Bert Brown of Kathryn, Alberta. As of 10 minutes ago Mr. Bert Brown became the second-ever elected member of the Senate of Canada. Bert Brown has worked for Senate reform for over 20 years. He was a candidate in both of Alberta's Senate elections. Nobody is more deserving of this honour than Mr. Bert Brown. Senate reform is a much-needed and long overdue reform of our national institutions, and I congratulate Bert Brown and his wife, Alice, on their commitment to the good of the province of Alberta and the good of our nation.

Ms Blakeman: Well, we weren't given any notice on this ministerial statement from the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, but I'll join in the congratulations that were offered, and I hope that along with this comes substantial reform to the Senate. Aside from election, I think we have long been looking for a better balance of the number of seats that are available across the country plus a number of other issues that need to be changed constitutionally before we achieve true Senate reform. I'm interested to hear of Mr. Brown's appointment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. leader of the third party, in order to participate, we need unanimous consent.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, like the hon. Official Opposition House Leader, we did not receive notification that this would be a ministerial statement. I also note that this is not a ministerial statement within the purview of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

With respect to that, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I would congratulate Mr. Brown. However, contrary to what the minister has said, he was not elected. He received an unofficial mandate through an extra-legal procedure in the province of Alberta, and he was appointed – he was appointed – by the Prime Minister of Canada. So he has not been elected.

Mr. Speaker, we continue to maintain our position that the Senate of Canada is superfluous, a centre of patronage on the part of both the Conservative and Liberal governments that have inhabited the government in Ottawa, and it should be abolished. [some applause] I thank the hon. members for their applause on that point.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Henry Bergen

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the accomplishments of a Little Bow constituent. Mr. Henry Bergen of Coaldale embodies some of the finest qualities Albertans are known for. Henry is hard working, innovative, and has an entrepreneurial spirit and a deep respect for the land. Over the years Henry has taken these qualities and not only created a successful business; he has made significant contributions to our agricultural industry.

Born in the Ukraine, Henry's family moved to Germany after his father was killed in the Stalin era. In 1948 his family emigrated to Canada. With his roots in Alberta and experience working in horticulture at the Lethbridge Research Centre, Henry went on to study mechanical engineering at SAIT in the 1960s. Henry combined these two disciplines and began to design and manufacture seeders that are used in zero tillage farming today. For those of us with a farming background, we know that zero till helps prevent soil erosion and conserves moisture.

To this day Henry Bergen's company, GEN Manufacturing, continues to provide farmers with innovative tools that promote soil conservation. GEN Manufacturing received the industry achievement award from the American Society of Agricultural Engineers in 2001. In 1999 Henry received the technical excellence award from the Alberta Society of Engineering Technologists.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to share with you that Mr. Bergen is being recognized not only for his work in Alberta but also for having positively influenced agricultural practices across Canada. In May Henry will be one of three Albertans receiving the Order of Canada for these contributions, and I ask the members of this House and all Albertans to join me in offering Mr. Bergen sincere congratulations. I think it's especially fitting that we acknowledge his upcoming honour this particular week since this is Soil Conservation Week. Henry's achievements remind us that we're all true Albertans.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Physician Supply

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's red-hot economy has created shortages in many fields, including the medical profession. While these challenges are daunting, this province has taken many steps to attract and retain doctors to serve the health care needs of Albertans.

Alberta leads the country in increasing the number of physicians. Between 2001 and 2005 Alberta increased its supply of physicians by 20 per cent, Mr. Speaker, second only to Prince Edward Island, at 25 per cent. The province has also developed strategies to recruit and keep doctors in rural communities. Statistics show that the Alberta rural physician action plan has helped maintain the ratio of doctors to patients in rural Alberta over the past five years. The Alberta rural family medicine network provides rural family medicine training opportunities to encourage graduates to choose rural practice once their training is complete.

Earlier this year the government provided additional support to the Northern Lights health region to address the critical issues of maintaining adequate medical services to residents of Fort McMurray and other communities in the region.

Alberta has also expanded education spaces for medical students and residency spaces for international medical graduates. In September 2006 Alberta created 30 new first-year medical school spaces, bringing the total to 255 at Alberta's two medical schools. This year international medical graduates represented almost 20 per cent of all medical graduates entering residency.

Yesterday the Alberta Medical Association ratified an amending agreement with the Alberta government and the regional health authorities. Beyond fee increases the agreement addressed physician recruitment and retention issues with innovative new programs that include a benefit that will recognize physicians for the number of years that they have practised in Alberta and special funding to address extraordinary increases in practice costs.

Despite enormous pressures Alberta has found successful solutions to make this province an attractive place to live and work for physicians.

Volunteerism

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, the nonprofit voluntary sector is one of the most vital components of our society. Those who donate their time and energy without any expectations of rewards or recognition for themselves are true heroes. It is these individuals who help play a key role in enhancing our quality of life, which, as we know, is one of this government's top priorities. This week we pay tribute to these often unsung heroes by celebrating Volunteer Week. I would like to ask this Assembly for its unanimous support in recognizing April 15 to April 21 as Volunteer Week in Alberta.

Through a unique partnership between the Wild Rose Foundation and Volunteer Alberta our province has become a leader in honouring its volunteers. All across this great province events and activities are taking place to acknowledge and thank the many volunteers who play such essential roles in our communities.

This year 142 Alberta communities representing more than 1.2 million Albertans are participating in this week-long series of events. According to the 2004 national survey of nonprofit and voluntary organizations there are approximately 19,000 nonprofit and voluntary organizations in Alberta. It is estimated that the voluntary sector in our province collectively contributes approximately 214 million hours of volunteer time. This is equivalent to approximately 111,000 full-time jobs. The annual economic impact of Alberta's nonprofit voluntary sector is estimated at $9.6 billion.

Alberta leads the way in the voluntary sector, and we can all take pride in this great accomplishment. Through the Wild Rose Foundation this government supports Alberta's voluntary sector in many important ways. I encourage this Assembly to continue its support and dedication to volunteerism in the province. Throughout Alberta our volunteer spirit is contributing directly to the health and well-being of our citizens and communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

McClung Goes Green

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to talk about an initiative that my team and I in the constituency of Edmonton-McClung have undertaken as of one month ago. We call it McClung Goes Green. In essence, we're encouraging individuals, families, groups, and businesses to think about ways to cut down on energy waste and reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

As far as we know, Mr. Speaker, we are the first and only constituency in the province of Alberta to make the decision to go green. We're hoping to reduce our constituency's environmental footprint. In so doing, people not only help reduce damage to the environment and to the planet; they can also realize some financial savings.

This stems from the realization that we can all help, and we should all get involved. It's not only industry that is to be blamed, and it's not only industry that has to come up with the solutions. We're all in this together.

The way we designed this was to have three challenge levels: poplar, shamrock, and jade. We have suggestions for what steps people can take to achieve each level, but we also allow them to come up with their own ideas and changes. A participant would start at poplar and move on to shamrock and ultimately reach jade. Poplar, or entry level, involves simple attitude and behaviour changes. Shamrock, or the intermediate level, is for people who are motivated beyond poplar and are on their way to jade, on their way to implementing physical or structural changes to their residence and/or workplace. All participants are winners and will be recognized. Once a year, however, the constituency office will be hosting an official green challenge celebration for people or groups who stand out. Their stories will be told and their achievements highlighted.

In terms of the ideas we're presenting, we group them under five general headings: natural gas, water, electricity, waste and recycling, and automobiles, all things we can control or make decisions about. I encourage members of this Assembly who may be interested in this experiment to approach me for details. Maybe we can spread this energy around and get more Albertans motivated.

Sunday, April 22, Mr. Speaker, is Earth Day. Perhaps all hon. members can start by evaluating what each of them can do individually.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Climate Change

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earth Day 2007: the science-based warnings about the fate of the earth can no longer be ignored. Alberta must take action now, yet our Conservative government, despite its claim to now believe the science, encourages uncontrolled growth and worsening carbon emissions in the coming decade. This is part of a consistent and willful ignoring of inconvenient science at least since the government of Canada report in 1991 on the risks of irreversible climate change. We are at a tipping point on the planet if we are to avoid hundreds of millions of lives lost and uprooted from their homes, food and water shortages, and new infectious diseases.

Albertans have always been prepared to make short-term sacrifice for the future. According to the renowned Stern report, if we fail to invest 1 per cent of our GDP now, our children will inherit a failing planet. One per cent of GDP would be approximately $2 billion annually in Alberta. The Alberta government investment so far is pitiful in comparison.

How would a Liberal government in Alberta manage this grave challenge? We would cap carbon emissions by 2012 and, with the federal government, move toward a 30 per cent real reduction by 2020. We would eliminate subsidies to fossil fuel development and give greater financial incentives to energy efficiency and clean, renewable energy – wind, solar, geothermal – while enabling carbon capture and storage technology to assist in the transition to a new, sustainable economy.

An Alberta Liberal government would establish, one, an all-party council on carbon emissions and climate change; two, strong public education programs; three, convert the natural gas rebate program to a green fund to reduce everyone's energy use; four, a province-wide composting and recycling program in every community; five, a minimum 15 per cent renewable energy for all new energy producers; six, rebates on energy efficient appliances and energy retrofits for homes, businesses, and institutions.

Alberta's opportunity as we celebrate Earth Day this weekend is for a bold new course grounded in a commitment to confront climate change, protect people's health, and create a new economy or be left behind by the world.

Dr. Bruce Naylor

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret to inform the House that our friend and colleague Dr. Bruce Naylor, director of the Royal Tyrrell Museum, passed away peacefully on Friday, April 6, 2007. Bruce leaves behind his wife, Judy, and two children, John and Connor.

Dr. Naylor was the driving force behind so many of the successes and accomplishments of the Royal Tyrrell Museum. We have been very fortunate to benefit from his knowledge and passion for the museum for the past 25 years.

Dr. Naylor received his PhD from the University of Alberta. A vertebrate paleontologist specializing in fossil amphibians and mammals, his accomplishments include naming a new genus and five new species of fossil salamanders. While a student at the University of Alberta he collected the jaw of a new species of primitive primate from the Paleocene of Alberta, subsequently named Saxonella naylori. Bruce was not only well liked and respected by staff; he was also recognized nationally and internationally for his knowledge and scholarship in paleontology.

Bruce joined the Royal Tyrrell Museum in 1982. Over the years Bruce and his team won many accolades, including recognition for their work with a gold Premier's award of excellence in 2004 for the ATCO Tyrrell Learning Centre project and two bronze awards, in 2003 for an advanced ticket management system and in 2000 for the redevelopment of the Pleistocene Gallery.

We extend our deepest sympathy to Bruce's family, friends, and co-workers. While we mourn his passing, we can celebrate his life and his accomplishments. He will live on through our memories.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table two petitions. The first one is signed by 221 Albertans mainly from the constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs, petitioning the Assembly to urge the government to "reconsider the location of the new Edmonton Remand Centre and to work with the federal government to relocate [it] closer to the Edmonton maximum security prison."

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, is signed by 89 Albertans from throughout the province but predominantly Edmonton and surrounding areas urging the government to "take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have approximately 100 signatures from a petition that reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to give oral notice of a motion to establish the standing policy field committees that we approved yesterday. I would move that be it resolved that the following members be appointed to the Assembly's four new standing committees.

- (1) Community Services: Cindy Ady, chair; Weslyn Mather, vice-chair; Dr. Raj Pannu; Jack Flaherty; Tony Abbott, Art Johnston; Thomas Lukaszuk; LeRoy Johnson; Rob Loughheed; Shiraz Shariff; and Dan Backs.
- (2) Managing Growth Pressures: Clint Dunford, chair; David Taylor, vice-chair; Ray Martin; Bruce Miller; Denis Herard; Victor Doerksen; Ray Prins; Len Webber; Gene Zwozdesky; George Rogers; and Dave Rodney.
- (3) Resources and Environment: Denis Ducharme, chair; David Swann, vice-chair; David Eggen; Rick Miller; Ty Lund; Len Mitzel; Doug Griffiths; Frank Oberle; Gord Graydon; Pearl Calahasen; and Paul Hinman.
- (4) Government Services: Harvey Cenaiko, chair; Mo Elsalhy, vice-chair; Brian Mason; Bridget Pastoor; Richard Marz; Neil Brown; David Coutts; Heather Forsyth; Alana DeLong; George VanderBurg; and Moe Amery.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I wish to give notice that on Monday, April 30, 2007, written questions and motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 30 I wish to give notice that at the appropriate time I intend to move that the ordinary business of this Assembly be adjourned in order that we may hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the immediate and pressing risk to the health and well-being of the residents of Fort McMurray caused by the recent fire and resulting inability of the community's social, housing, and health systems to cope with the impacts of this crisis without immediate provincial support.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Impacts of Apartment Fire in Fort McMurray

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A fire yesterday left 300 people in an affordable housing complex in Fort McMurray homeless. We can all be thankful that there are no reports of serious injuries. But Fort McMurray is one of the most expensive places to live in Canada, and the vacancy rate is virtually zero. This is going to have a serious impact on those 300 people and on many others. My first question is to the Premier. How many of the 300 people made homeless by the fire yesterday in Fort McMurray are children?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of municipal affairs responsible for housing has been working very closely with the municipality, and he may answer all of the administrative questions with respect to this unbelievable fire. But thank the good Lord that everybody was safe.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do want to say that there were no major casualties or injuries, and we are very happy for that. There were 94 units that were involved with approximately 300 individuals, some of which included families. I can't give you an exact breakdown of the number of children because I don't know that according to age.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's well known that the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo region is very short of doctors. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How many doctors were on duty at the hospital at the time of the fire?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, how could he possibly expect me to know that?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The availability of medical services in a major emergency is straightforward.

There were already 400 people on the waiting list for affordable housing in Fort McMurray. Overnight there are now hundreds more in need of affordable housing. I guess to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: will the impact of this situation be that those 400 people who are already on the waiting list for affordable housing are now 300 spaces further down the list, or is there another option?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, just to address the needs of the individuals that were part of the fire, the Wood Buffalo housing authority has placed or has found temporary and permanent housing for all of those individuals, and part of it is because they have 55 units that are coming on board at the Millennium centre, that is near completion. We also have the Parsons Creek Village, that has some units that are just about at completion, as well as the good, kind hearts of Fort McMurrans.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Fort McMurray the fire at Edgewater Court has left over 300 people wondering where they're going to live now even if there are new units coming on stream soon. They're not on stream quite yet. Of course, the people of Fort McMurray are pulling together and coming together to provide every bit of help they can, but still these days housing in Fort Mac is in critically short supply at the best of times, and for the residents of Edgewater Court these are the worst of times. This is very real, very focused, and it tests this government's ability to deal with a crisis. To the Premier. Church basements aren't adequate. Families need their own cooking facilities, their own bathrooms, some privacy. What is the Premier doing, what has he done, and what will he do right away to find suitable interim housing for these folks?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the member is in response to, of course, the preparedness of the government in terms of disaster services. Again, I said that the minister of municipal affairs, who's also responsible for that area of responsibility, may want to answer all these administrative questions.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Part of our preparedness in the Emergency Management Alberta agency is to prepare for disasters, and the government has done that in conjunction with the municipal districts and municipalities. We need to prepare for crises or emergencies or disasters of such magnitude, and we have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the government needs to prepare. My questions have been more along the lines of whether the government was prepared and what they've done in this regard.

Is the government prepared to provide emergency financial assistance for displaced people who have had to be put in hotels? I know that there are some who had no other options. And can the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing indicate to this House whether he has an estimate of how much that will cost?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, right now I don't have an exact number of the amount of money that it'll cost, but what has happened is that the Wood Buffalo housing authority has not only moved the individuals to different housing authorities but is also supporting them in the same way that they were supporting them in the Edgewater apartment buildings.

Mr. Taylor: But, Mr. Speaker, some of them are in hotels. They're not all relocated in new housing units.

The residents of Fort McMurray have rallied around to help the people of Edgewater Court, but this event is going to put a strain on other residents of Fort McMurray, on churches, on quite possibly the food bank, on other social agencies, on the Wood Buffalo housing agency. Will this government be providing any emergency funding for social agencies to help them deal with this crisis?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we need to understand that this is a disaster and that this is a situation where the community comes to help. Are we there to support? Yes, we are. Will they have a place to stay? Yes, they will. And we will support them the best way that we can.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent rent increase in a Calgary-Varsity apartment complex has created great desperation. This is not a time for accusations; it's a time for answers, for action. I'm appealing to the Premier for dramatic, immediate intervention. To the Premier: do you still believe that it is unnecessary to tap the brakes of Alberta's economy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where he's going with that question, but, you know, the last time a government in this country tapped the brakes on the economy, all of us in this Assembly paid 22 per cent interest rates. Let's not forget that.

Mr. Chase: In this 297-suite apartment building many of the residents are seniors and disabled people who are on fixed incomes, including AISH. Many have lived in their homes for several years. This apartment building was sold, and there are no new rental units coming onto the market. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: what advice do you have for these individuals who are about to lose their homes?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we know, the growth pressures that have taken place on housing have been extensive at this time, and it is, I may say, a factor of growth. We are trying to deal with those issues and challenges, and the housing task force has brought forward recommendations. We are looking at those recommendations, and we're hoping to deal with some of those challenges.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are two other buildings on the same city block that used to be apartments but are now converted to condominiums. My final question is to the Premier, who should feel free to call upon any of his ministers. What immediate solutions does your government have for Albertans who are suffering as a result of this runaway economy?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, may I try and supplement some of the answers we're providing? First of all, there is certainly great concern among the ministers that share the views of many of the colleagues on the opposition side that we should be doing something, and indeed this ministry does do something. We provide income supports for low- and moderate-income people if they're evicted, if there's a natural disaster. In the months from September '06 until today we've put some 9 million dollars into supports for people who have suffered just exactly what the hon. member is referencing. We spend about a hundred million dollars supporting these folks all of the time, but for those who suffer immediate disaster, we can get involved.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Disclosure of Leadership Campaign Contributions

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. A cloud now hangs over tomorrow's budget because of this Premier's failure to ensure open and transparent government. The Finance minister has failed to disclose his campaign donations for his PC leadership bid and has broken his own deadlines for doing so.

Dr. Oberg: A question of privilege.

Mr. Mason: Bring it on, Mr. Speaker. Bring it on.

Worse, the minister has continued to fund raise even while preparing tomorrow's provincial budget. My question is to the Premier. Why does the Premier think it is acceptable for a Finance minister to be seeking financial donations from the very same corporations and individuals who may benefit from his budget?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, raising funds before, during, or after a campaign is part of the political process, and, you know, the two opposition parties are in the red, in more than one place, but they're also in debt. I'm sure that they're raising dollars every day trying to catch up with their deficits.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why doesn't the Premier see that with respect to a Provincial Treasurer preparing a provincial budget, which the opposition does not do, this at least creates the perception of a potential conflict of interest?

Mr. Stelmach: That's one of the reasons this government moves very quickly in so many different areas. One, of course, is with respect to the Lobbyists Act, the first kind of legislation in this particular House, followed by the fact that on a quarterly basis – a quarterly basis – all Albertans will know what transactions are made on behalf of them, including how much the opposition leader gets paid by the month because I'm sure that people are interested in hearing what he gets paid, but all those transactions will be crossed. That's one opportunity to see who is lobbying the government and then on a quarterly basis who gets paid by government. That's, I think, the best test that you can have right here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we want some action, not distraction.

The Premier is very able to try and get the focus on something else other than the fact that his Finance minister has not disclosed his campaign contributions, is continuing to fund raise at the very same time that he's writing tomorrow's provincial budget, and this creates an enormous cloud over the budget. Why won't the Premier get serious for a minute and address the question that's put to him?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow there will be significant announcements in the budget. I want that member to get up in the House and to any capital announcement that's made say that there's a cloud over that announcement, whether it's a new hospital for a community that's badly needing it or going to seniors that require more help or to schools or to universities, to hospitals, to any of those. I want him to get up in the House next week and tell me where the cloud is.

The Speaker: At the conclusion of the Routine we will deal with a question of privilege with respect to this, and the hon. Minister of Finance will be given ample opportunity to present his case.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we all know that it is a proven fact that the development of new apartment units seriously declines when a government imposes rent controls. We are, however, living in extraordinary times that call for extraordinary measures. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Will the government consider reviewing the possibility of regulating rent increases for a temporary period of two years to allow one increase in rent a year of no greater than 10 per cent of the existing rent?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that as the Alberta government we are supporting housing and we are supporting rent supplements. We are providing over $19 million to subsidize rents for more than 4,600 households. We are supporting with $100 million a commitment to affordable housing, 3,700 units. We are supporting homeless shelters to the tune of $23 million. We also have committed $16 million for a new pilot project for an outreach program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: in these extraordinary times that call for extraordinary action, is that enough?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member that we are examining those exact issues in regard to the task force report. The government annually reviews the programs and the funding allocations that we have presently in making sure that we address the needs and the challenges that are involved in housing and the homeless.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Timberland Investment Loss

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's revelation that a mistake in the Ministry of Finance cost Alberta taxpayers $11 million has left Albertans with a lot of questions. How long before this was discovered? Who discovered it? Who informed the minister's office, and when did the minister's office know? Yet the best that the minister could do yesterday was to hang out one of his employees as being personally responsible. Shame on you, Mr. Minister. This was clearly a breakdown in management and accounting systems. The buck has to stop at your desk, not at the desk of a civil servant. My question is for the minister. Why is this minister making a scapegoat out of one single employee when his department should have had the processes in place to make sure that this type of mistake never happened in the first place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, a mistake was made. The timberland asset was purchased on May 30, 2005.

Typically, what occurs when we have an investment such as that: the American currency is hedged to ensure that if the currency goes down, our money is safe. Unfortunately, the hedge was not made until September 22. During that time frame the American dollar changed significantly and caused the loss. I will say, though – and I think this is very important – on the timberland investment that since that time the rate of return has been 36 per cent, $61 million.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, then, why did we have to put $7 million into it last month in supplementary supply?

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister said that there's been a huge amount of discussion on this issue, but I haven't been aware of it. I'm the one asking questions. We're not getting answers. It's like trying to pull hens' teeth. Why was this $11 million mistake not brought up in the Department of Finance annual report, in the Auditor General's annual report? It wasn't discussed in the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee when timberland was discussed. Why was it buried? Where is the openness and transparency?

Dr. Oberg: I do believe that there were supplementary estimates that were brought forward about a month ago in which this was part of it.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, I learned this morning that the Auditor General's office had a series of meetings with department officials on this issue. There were apparently several reports made, yet none was ever made available to the public. Alberta taxpayers have been kept in the dark. My question again is for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister assure this House and all Albertans that there was not in any way, shape, or form any influence from department officials to the Auditor General's office to keep this file quiet?

Dr. Oberg: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Bullying

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know from speaking with parents and children from my constituency that bullying and harassment leave scars that last a lifetime. Bullying poisons the school environment for everyone. Increasingly we have been hearing about serious incidents of bullying in our schools. Some cases get so bad for a victim that they turn to suicide as seen when a 14-year-old girl in B.C. hanged herself. Her suicide note read: if I try to get help, it will get worse; they are always looking for a new person to beat up, and they are the toughest girls. My questions are all to the Minister of Education. Would the minister consider a provincial antibullying/harassment policy with zero tolerance?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that all of our schools in the province have a zero tolerance antibullying policy. The issue of bullying is not just one for schools; it's one for society. Students don't just learn from other students. They learn from all of us. If they see us doing things that are inappropriate, I'm afraid they're going to be doing some things that are inappropriate. So we all have a role to play.

Mrs. Forsyth: Would the minister consider a reporting mechanism so students can report bullying and harassment and ensure that it remains confidential?

Mr. Liepert: In May of 2006 we launched a toll-free, 24-hour helpline for students who were struggling with bullying to get advice, information, and support. There are crisis centre counsellors who answer this helpline. They're trained, and they provide information to any student who is suffering from the inappropriate behaviour of others. It is policy, as far as I know, that this would remain anonymous, and any student should feel comfortable contacting that line.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister enact a provincial law that prohibits bullying and harassment on school property, at school-sponsored programs or activities, on a school bus, or through the use of a computer in the school system?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess I've always believed that you can't legislate against stupidity, and to me bullying is stupid. I go back to what I referred to in my first answer. This is a greater issue than just in schools. As a society, whether it's on the streets, whether it's in hockey rinks, we should make sure that we don't tolerate any kind of behaviour such as bullying. However, if the hon. member has suggestions relative to legislation that in fact could work, I'd certainly be open to that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On August 17, 2005, Greg Stringham from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers e-mailed the Minister of Energy of that day asking him to provide comments, corrections, or changes to a document that CAPP was creating to convince Albertans that the royalty system worked great. My first question is to the Premier. Whose interest is this government standing up for? Is it CAPP, or is it the owners of the natural resources of this province, the people of the province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the responsibility of this government of course is to represent all Albertans, and that's what we're doing.

Mr. MacDonald: The government's own documents show that from 1995 through to 2003 the effective royalty rate for oil averaged 16.42 per cent and for natural gas 17.2 per cent. Now, my question again is to the Premier: given that your government has failed so badly in meeting its own goals of 20 to 25 per cent of royalties, how much money have Albertans lost due to your government's failure to collect a fair and balanced amount under the royalty program?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my government is conducting a very independent royalty review not only of oil sands but conventional oil and gas and coal-bed methane. That information will be very public, and it'll be transparent, again trying to find the balance between Albertans that are owners of the resource and, of course, those individuals and companies that make multibillion dollar investments in this province in a very volatile marketplace.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, this hon. member was part of the last government as well. Things are bigger in Texas, including the amount collected on oil and natural gas royalties. Yesterday the Minister of Energy indicated that Texas was the best jurisdiction for Alberta to be compared to in terms of oil- and gas-producing states.

In a report prepared for Alberta Energy by Wood Mackenzie, it is suggested that Texans receive 25 per cent in royalties. My question to the Premier: why are Albertans getting so little when Texans get so much in royalties?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that hon. member was a member of the opposition at that time. So what's he saying? He didn't follow up on his duty, I suspect. [interjections]

In light, of course, of not upsetting him a bit and creating more disturbance in the House, that's the purpose of the royalty review. It will be completed by August, and all Albertans will have that information in a very transparent manner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Health Care Funding

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A two-year agreement has been reached between the Alberta government, the Alberta Medical Association, and the regional health authorities. My questions are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Coming from a region that has faced and continues to face a chronic shortage of physicians, I'm wondering if this deal will help cure the shortage of physicians in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very hopeful that this agreement will help us with the issue of physician shortage. First of all, hopefully, members of the House will know that members of the AMA voted 91 per cent in favour of the agreement over the last two weeks. So the agreement that will now be ratified and in place signals overwhelming support by physicians to work enthusiastically with government, health regions, and all stakeholders to advance primary care reform, improve productivity and sustainability of the system. Every province is facing a shortage of physicians, so this agreement will help to build on our past success. We've attracted 250 new physicians in the past year. The retention bonuses that are available to physicians will assist us in retaining . . .

Mr. Graydon: To the same minister: how will the new clinical stabilization initiative, which is part of the agreement, help address the extraordinary expenses and increases in physician practice costs across the province? How will it help communities that have these very serious health system issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, a very important part of this new agreement is the clinical stabilization initiative, and that will help in two ways. First of all, it will help us to deal with specific costs in regions where higher costs have occurred such as in Grande Prairie or Fort McMurray or those areas to target resources to those specific areas. It will help with clinical practice. So those doctors who are practising in the community and have costs rising but who, because we have a single-payer system, don't have the ability to raise their fees to cover those rising costs, we can assist them in this way. It should not detract, however, from the responsibility of the AMA to rebalance their fees as well so that internal to the agreement on their side of the agenda they can make sure that those doctors facing higher costs and higher pressures get the higher increases.

Mr. Graydon: To the same minister. A goal of every member of this Assembly is to advance primary care in our province. I would ask the minister if this new agreement will help in the advancement of that primary care.

Mr. Hancock: One of the most important initiatives that's been undertaken in this province is the primary care networks. There are in excess of 19 primary care networks now serving over a million Albertans and involving 900 physicians but, most importantly, involving those 900 physicians in teams with other health care professionals to lever the full value of our health care professionals in our communities and to broaden the access and the service that's being shared. Under this new agreement there will be $175 million set aside to assist in the establishment of more primary care networks and to expand those networks so that they involve more health care professionals acting to the full extent of their capability and expertise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Police Funding

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday at an AUMA session, which I attended along with four other members of the Alberta Liberal caucus, the main concern discussed was crime. The mayor of St. Paul was especially concerned that in his community the crime rate was going up, yet because St. Paul's population was sitting at 5,061, his town was forced under the Police Act to bear the full policing costs. At $900,000 per year for a town with a small budget this is a major burden. To the Solicitor General: given that St. Paul is experiencing a rapid escalation in crime, especially with crystal meth, what is the minister going to do to help St. Paul deal with this very serious problem?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, revenues to police agencies have gone up over 20 per cent in the last two years. We've put more than 280 new officers on the street and also introduced a number of programs because it's not only just a matter of more police officers; it's a matter of those police agencies working together. I would ask the hon. member to stay tuned to the budget, and we'll see what's in store for next year.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 280 new officers were the first increase since the early '90s.

Crime concerns in St. Paul are shared by other rural communities such as Westlock, Redcliff, and Morinville. They all have populations exceeding 5,000 but just barely, and they now have to pay full policing costs. Their small rise in population does not translate into any significant growth in their tax base. The mayor of St. Paul joked that he would put 61 people on a bus to another community so that he can get his police budget. Police funding should be more equitable. It doesn't make sense that a town with 5,001 has to pay; a town with 4,999 does not. What does the minister have in mind to address this funding flaw? Where does he stand on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Police funding for communities over 5,000: when they reach that number, they're at a point where we believe that they can sustain their own police force. They have an option to conduct their own policing through an agency of their own, or they also have an opportunity to get a contract with the RCMP. When they reach 5,000, we give them the opportunity over two years to put a policy in place. I would also mention that the police funding formula works very well in the province of Alberta, but at the same time we also do review it, and we will continue to review it, to make sure it works well for all Albertans.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the government was providing enough policing, why would every mayor, reeve, and organization like the AUMA say that addressing police funding inadequacies is one of their top priorities? The AUMA would like to see the province pay the full policing costs for the first 5,000 residents in every municipality and $35 per capita for those exceeding 5,000 in population. How can the minister say that his government takes crime seriously when every year, despite the pleas of municipal government leaders, this government fails to increase the police funding formula to address the rapid rise in criminal activity both in frequency and severity? Three years in a row they're asking for the same thing.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me say again: I already addressed the issue on police funding in regard to the AUMA and their request. We're quite familiar with that request; I have met with them. But keep in mind that there isn't only one taxpayer in the province, and the majority of work that's done in these municipalities is done for the citizens of those municipalities and should be paid for by the municipal taxpayer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The members here were asked to participate in the housing task force, and we did and were glad to do it because it would be good for all Albertans. It was extremely disappointing, though, yesterday to see the Premier, in being scammed, say that he is outright going to reject one of the recommendations, mainly dealing with rent guidelines. We haven't even had the report made public yet. We've mentioned this: thousands of people are suffering and hurting because of gouging and rapid rent increases. My question to the Premier is simply this: will the Premier take off his ideological glasses and bring in temporary – and I stress temporary – rent guidelines so that we can get through this crisis?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that housing is an issue in the province of Alberta. We recognized that very early, and that's why we moved very quickly with the report. I do thank both parties for contributing to the report, for being members of the committee. The report is almost complete in terms of the government responses to all of the recommendations that have come forward. It will be tied, of course, to the budget. Yesterday in the scrum I said to the media that we are going to of course release that report with all its recommendations on or around the budget delivery.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that there are a lot of other things in the report. I was there. But the point that we've been trying to make is that there are thousands of people here – and some of the MLAs, I know, from Calgary are getting these same calls. We're saying: in the short run what's going to happen to these people? If you reject immediately because of an ideology something that's so important in the short run, what can we say to these people that are facing evictions, who are one day away from being homeless? Is the answer as the Premier said yesterday: go to the government, and we'll put you up at the Super 8, the Super 8 suggestion? Is that the answer to this?

Mr. Stelmach: That's a very good question. Here's a government that's compassionate. As a government on behalf of Alberta taxpayers we actually put people that have no place to live in a hotel. Where else are you going to find the space on a very quick, ready basis? The taxpayer covers those costs. I heard across the way some of the opposition members say: well, that's too expensive. Well, it's a lot less expensive, Mr. Speaker, to pay $100 or $120 a day to keep a family intact in some proper living accommodations than putting them – where? In a tent?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, what I'm trying to get to is this: as compassionate as the Premier is, if he wants to even be more compassionate to more people, to thousands of Albertans, he will recognize, you know, and allow the triumph of ideology over common sense not to prevail and say in the short run: we need rent guidelines. I come back to the minister. Let's talk about rent guidelines, not the other things that are in the report. Why is the Premier outright rejecting this publicly before the report has even come forward?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, while the report was being reviewed there were discussions with respect to rent controls. They're twisting words and saying guidelines. What are guidelines? They're rent controls. All the evidence that has come forward doesn't matter. Even from the Liberal province of Ontario there has been a monumental change in policy because they found out that with rent controls, controlling to that limit that they wanted, there was no response in terms of building additional low-income rental units in that province. We want to learn from their experience, not fall into the same trap.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An issue has been presented to me by my vulnerable constituent who used to be employed but can no longer work due to severe disability. As far as I've been told, the AISH program allows for a monthly earned income of up to $400 without any clawback, but income from other sources is deducted from the basic AISH cash benefit. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Will you consider a change in policy to make it fairer by allowing vulnerable AISH recipients to keep the first $400 of their total income regardless of the sources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This program, AISH, was developed to target and ensure that the needs and the resources were put to those in greatest need. When that program was developed, it was looked upon that the federal and provincial governments would work together. So it wasn't a matter of eliminating or replacing a federal government program; it was to supplement to ensure that all AISH recipients would receive a level amount of income. That's exactly what this does accomplish. So whether there are other federal programs, be it CPP or Workers' Compensation Board on the provincial side, they were meant to work together to ensure that all AISH recipients would receive . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As far as I've been told, the Alberta AISH policy states that CPP income is considered at the gross level because income tax deductions are not mandatory, and the CPP guide states that the Canada pension plan disability pension is considered taxable income. So my question is to the same minister. Given that a few dollars make a difference for our vulnerable Albertans, will you consider changing the way that we calculate incomes of the AISH recipients with CPP income at its net level?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, once again, the design – and I would say still the best design – is to ensure that our federal and provincial programs do work together, that we will act as a supplement to the federal program, not to replace one or the other. That said, two years ago we did increase the level of income that an AISH recipient could receive, up to $400 as a single and up to $975 for couples or single parents. That was all to acknowledge: how do we get rid of some of the barriers so that those that can work can start earning some additional funds? We will continue to work with every person – they are individuals – to help them find employment, find the opportunities that they can if they're able.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same minister. Given that our vulnerable AISH recipients are faced with costs rising, are you considering to increase the income threshold before clawback and the basic AISH payment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a lot of work done on this question. Previous reviews looked at those recipients of AISH, their monthly payments. Some of these are budget questions, so we'll have to stay tuned to talk about those in the budget. I'd be happy to deal with that when this department's estimates come up before the House. I'd be happy to answer those questions at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Toxin Screening

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is essential for governments to understand the impact of decisions on health and well-being of the population; however, it makes more sense to require all major government, policy, and funding decisions to undergo an assessment to determine the impacts on health and environment before the decisions are made. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that there is no commitment to modify industrial development or government policies based on the results of the toxin screening of 30,000 people, why is this screening being done?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the screening program that's happening is actually a research program that's being done to understand the baseline in terms of the effect of environmental impact on toxicity levels, and it's being done on the 30,000 blood samples that have already been collected. So it's basically a background review, a research process that's undertaken to provide an understanding of where we are with respect to the impact of toxicity on individuals.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister assure Albertans that environmental pollutants from coal-powered plants and oil sands upgraders will be included in the list of toxins for which tests are being done? Let's make it relevant to Alberta.

Mr. Hancock: I would hope that everything we do in our department, Mr. Speaker, is relevant to Alberta.

This process that's being undertaken here is clearly a pilot study, a research study that's being undertaken to see if there's been an impact on toxicity levels. Obviously, in the approval processes that go on with respect to new industrial approval and new industrial developments, Health and Wellness will be working with other departments of government and particularly with Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to ensure that the health and wellness aspects of any future development are part of the considerations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. Again to the same minister. We still haven't seen a study protocol that would explain the design and objectives and answer many of the concerns that Albertans have like why was the decision made to analyze the results by region rather than by proximity to major industrial developments, or why are only pregnant women and children being screened rather than seniors or adults? So my question to the minister is: will the minister make the study protocol public immediately?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to look at the protocol behind the study. Obviously, this is a study that was embarked upon before I became minister. I will look at the protocol behind it, determine what the nature of that protocol is and, if appropriate, make it public.

But I should respond to the issues that are being raised. This is a research program that was being done to take a look at toxicity levels in Albertans. It's important for us to know and understand what's happening as a result of changes to the environment from whatever cause, not just industrial causes but whatever cause. The purpose, as I've said over and over again since this came up, of using the samples of pregnant women is because for pregnant women the blood samples in prenatal care go to the provincial lab on an ordinary basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Municipal Taxation

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently our Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing has been presented by a submission report negotiated by the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability, which consisted of Mayor Bronconnier, Mayor Mandel, and the presidents of AAMD and C and AUMA. As a result of this report there are concerns in the community now that the minister may be considering some new taxation powers, particularly property transfer tax. My question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: have you decided to allow municipalities new taxation authority relative to transfers of property?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that the minister's council's report on sustainability was exactly that: it was a report by that council to my ministry. At that time there were 12 recommendations that were brought forward from the $1.4 billion replacement of the education tax to the energy revenue, or resource taxation. But, in all, it is now before this government to look at, and there's no decision on that direction. I have to reiterate that the report asked for the government to allow municipalities to tax.

Mr. Lukaszuk: In response to that, to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: since there are many good recommendations in this report, can the minister tell us what process will take place prior to decisions being made on each individual recommendation of the report?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there are good recommendations in that report, and as it goes through the process, the ones that are able to be acted on and that this government feels are important to be acted on will be acted on. For those that need to be consulted on, we are looking at consulting with the municipalities from after the budget through the summer and into fall.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Consequently, to the same minister: as a result of this process and as a result of these recommendations, can our municipalities and particularly the capital region count on better planning processes and more stable funding for such municipalities?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, one of the major recommendations in that report was the issue of planning. I as the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing feel that planning is critical for municipalities to be able to look in a positive, unified direction, to maintain sustainability, to have predictability. When we talk about regional planning, I think it is very important, but at the same time we have not made recommendations and responses to that report as of yet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

School Transportation in Calgary

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within the past few weeks the school bus shortage in Calgary has gone from bad to worse. The work-to-rule campaign by the city transit workers has further diminished the number of available buses, leaving parents and administrators scrambling to get kids to school on time. To the Minister of Education: what has the minister done to assist Calgary school boards to address these increased shortages?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raised the question around school bus driver shortages several weeks ago. I'd like to report that, actually, the situation has improved significantly, where the school bus companies in Calgary have actually filled a number of the vacancies, and the issue is not nearly as serious as it was several weeks ago.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's failure to build schools in new and growing communities has put tremendous strain on school boards' transportation budgets. The recent shortage of buses proves that the current situation is unsustainable. To the Minister of Education: will the minister admit that the failure to build schools in Calgary has put unsustainable pressures on the school transportation system in Calgary?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this government this year will launch several initiatives to get schools built where kids live, and we'll be looking at all kinds of arrangements to get those schools built. I agree with the hon. member. It makes no sense to be paying twice, when, first of all, students are inconvenienced because they can't go to school in their own neighbourhoods, and secondly, we're paying transportation costs. So we're going to be looking at some creative, alternative ways of getting schools built where kids live.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, Mr. Minister, would you answer this question honestly? It's from my daughter. School boards have suggested that without more government funding for transportation, higher school fees to cover the cost will be the only way to make ends meet. To the Minister of Education: is it the minister's position that parents should be made to pay for the failure of this government to plan for growth in Calgary?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that every answer I give is honest. There is nothing dishonest about anything that I say. I would assume that every question he asks is also honest.

The hon. member has a bill before this Legislature, Bill 208, which is up for debate in about, I think, two or three weeks. I look forward to debating the issue around school fees and fundraising, and I'll answer the question in all kinds of detail in about 10 or 15 minutes, whatever I'm allowed at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Secondary Suites

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Affordable housing is an issue of huge interest and concern across the province. I know that the minister is working so tirelessly and diligently to deal with the problem and find a solution. In some municipalities the solution includes secondary suites, also known as basement suites or granny suites. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Now that the government has introduced building and maintenance standards for secondary suites, when will these begin to be utilized as a viable housing option?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I first of all want to say that secondary suites can and should be a viable option for affordable housing. The standards that took effect on December 31, that are in place right now, are standards that meet the fire codes and the construction codes for those secondary suites.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what are the minister and his department doing to expedite the implementation of these suites, which would at least temporarily ease some of the pressures facing this province?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have had consultation with the public. We have had consultation with municipalities. We have also supported municipalities in regard to funding for secondary suites. I think it's very important to say that secondary suites can be implemented, but it has to be done with a bylaw by those municipalities.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: as a result of your contacts with the municipalities can you inform the House and Albertans as to the status of these standards and when they will be implemented?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, those standards are in place right now. I do want to say that we have been having discussions with municipalities. The municipalities need to make the choice. We have provided them with a template for those bylaws if they so desire to have secondary suites in their municipalities. If I can say, I would encourage municipalities to get involved because affordable housing is an issue and a concern in this province, and that is one direction that we can co-operate together with municipalities and with industry and with household owners to alleviate some of those affordable housing problems.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 94 questions and answers today.

Before we go to the next section of the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My guests have now arrived, and I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House three very special constituents from Banff-Cochrane. They are sitting in the members' gallery, and we have Ron Casey, mayor of Canmore; Mike Western, councillor for Canmore; and Don Kochan, acting chief administrative officer for the town of Canmore. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and members of the Assembly 13 seniors from the Sears Plus Club, and they're here to join us. The group leader is Mr. Frank McCloy, and along with him are – I hope I don't kill too many names here – Doris Hirsekorn, Mrs. Anne Kawchuk, Mrs. Ann McCloy, Mrs. Anne Kostiuik, Mrs. Emily and Mr. Walter Andruchow, Mrs. Jean Miskew, Mrs. Betty Carnegie, Mr. Frank and Mrs. Gertrude Schoblocher, Mr. Ken Bell, and Mrs. Betty Weyts. They're in the public gallery. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 2, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill aims to update the rules governing elected members of this Legislature. First and foremost, the bill lengthens the time former ministers are limited in their ability to influence government decisions or to accept certain kinds of employment. Instead of lasting for six months, the cooling-off period would apply for a year. The bill also sets out stricter guidelines around the activities former ministers can participate in during the cooling-off period. As well, it increases the fine for breaching the act during that period.

Mr. Speaker, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act also sets the framework to establish cooling-off periods for nonelected political staff and deputy ministers. There are a number of other provisions in the Conflicts of Interest Act that have been revised in this bill. These amendments were recommended by an all-party committee that reviewed the act last year.

I would like to acknowledge the contributions of my colleagues who assisted in the work of that all-party committee: the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, who served as vice-chair, and the hon. members for Calgary-Bow, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Edmonton-Castle Downs, Edmonton-Glenora, Edmonton-McClung, Foothills-Rocky View, Highwood, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, Lethbridge-East, and Peace River. In addition, the Ethics Commissioner and his office were most helpful in assisting the work of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to accept Bill 2 on first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 2 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, in response to a question raised a few weeks ago by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent by the general manager of Access Roads Edmonton, the P3 contractor for the Anthony Henday Drive southeast. The company gave me the courtesy of copying me on the letter. The letter dated April 4 is addressed to the Member for Calgary-Varsity and explains that the P3 contract has a fixed price for Anthony Henday Drive southeast. The letter clarifies that there have not been any overruns on the project, and the letter goes on to say that as a P3 project, if there were any cost . . .

The Speaker: I think this is tabling time.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of documents to table today. I'm tabling an appropriate amount of copies of two letters and an attachment from April 12 from Chris Goss. Mr. Goss is very concerned about the possible seismic testing at Marie Lake. He's been expressing these concerns to the ministers of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. He has also attached a draft letter . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member also heard my advice to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: tablings.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Okay, thank you.

I also have a letter sent to the Premier on April 3 from Dwight and Shelley Homister, who are writing, again, about their concerns in regard to seismic testing at Marie Lake.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table a letter with the appropriate number of copies from family members of Bill Mowbray, a 30-year police veteran in our province. His family is very concerned about how his health care was dealt with by our health care system and how the dignity of patients should be respected everywhere.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tabling today has to do with my private member's statement earlier today, titled the McClung Goes Green campaign. I have the requisite number of copies of my newsletter, the McClung Quarterly, which explains the green campaign and tells people how to reduce their environmental footprint. Also, incidentally, it's available online at mcclung.ca.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today with appropriate copies. One is from Kim Troy in Edmonton, a child care provider running a day home through Southgate Medalion day home agency, expressing frustration about the state of the child care system, especially in not meeting the demands for children under two years.

The other is from Karen Burns in Grande Prairie, asking for provincial support for all children zero to 12 years, including before- and after-school care, wage enhancement, and PD funds for all workers for school-aged children too.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Danyluk, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, a letter dated April 11, 2007, from the hon. Mr. Danyluk, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, to Mr. Taylor, hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, responding to questions raised during Oral Question Period on March 21 and 22, 2007.

2:30

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll now deal with a point of privilege as raised by the hon. Minister of Finance.

Privilege
Reflections on a Member

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I initially rose under section 15(5) of our Standing Orders, which states:

A Member may always raise a question of privilege in the Assembly immediately after the words are uttered or the events occur that give rise to the question, in which case the written notice required under suborder (2) is not required.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also rising under page 81 of Erskine May, which states, "On the one hand, the privileges of Parliament are rights 'absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers'." I would also bring forward Beauchesne 24, which states very similar to what was just stated in Erskine May. It states, "The privileges of Parliament are rights which are 'absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers'."

I would also draw attention to section 69 of Beauchesne, which states:

The Speaker has reminded the House, "It is very important . . . to indicate that something can be inflammatory, can be disagreeable, can even be offensive, but it may not be a question of privilege unless that comment actually impinges upon the ability of Members of Parliament to do their job properly."

I would also suggest that section 64 applies, which states, "The House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members."

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that on page 52 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it states that "any conduct which offends the authority or dignity of the House, even though no breach of any specific privilege may have been committed, is referred to as a contempt of the House."

I will follow that up with my last citation, which is the misuse of freedom of speech, page 76 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice.

The privilege of freedom of speech is an extremely powerful immunity and Speakers have on occasion had to caution Members about its misuse. In a ruling following a question of privilege, Speaker Fraser urged Members to take the greatest care in framing questions concerning conflict of interest guidelines. Since the question raised affected the very nature of Members' rights and immunities.

I quote again.

There are only two kinds of institutions in this land which this awesome and far-reaching privilege [of freedom of speech] extends – Parliament and the legislatures on the one hand and the courts on the other. These institutions enjoy the protection of absolute privilege because of the overriding need to ensure that the truth can be told, that any questions can be asked, and that debate can be free and uninhibited. Absolute privilege ensures that those performing their legitimate functions in these vital institutions of Government shall not be exposed to the possibility of legal action.

This is necessary in the democratic process, in the national interest.

Mr. Speaker, there were allegations made against me personally that affect my right to do my job. As Minister of Finance I will be bringing in a budget tomorrow. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood impugned my reputation and impugned my motives for bringing down a budget by stating – and unfortunately I do not have the Blues in front of me as they have not been delivered to me yet, so I am going a little bit by memory – that because there are still leadership funds to be raised, it somehow implicated the bringing down of the budget tomorrow. I think that in conjunction with all the applications that I have talked about, this does indeed constitute a question of privilege. I have been in this House 14 years. This is the first time that I've ever raised a question of privilege because it is the first time that I feel that my rights have actually been impugned.

Mr. Speaker, you yourself have ruled on numerous occasions in the last month in this House that the questions must be questions about government policy. They must not have to do with the politics of the leadership, which occurred six to eight to nine months ago. This was a definite decision by the hon. member to bring this forward today.

I was asked coming into this session the exact question that the hon. member just posed to me. My stated answer to the media at that point in time was: the gentleman is a very nice man, kind of funny; I'll let it go.

Mr. Speaker, when he brought it into this House, I truly strongly felt that he impugned my ability to bring down a budget tomorrow by impugning my credentials, by impugning my motives and stating that I potentially could be corrupted. It's a very serious charge, and I fully understand the consequences of this charge.

Mr. Speaker, we tolerate a lot in this House. We tolerate a lot of personal attacks, but I will not have the hon. member impugn my personality and call me corrupt, although not using that exact language, in this House regardless of the rights of this House.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, are you going to participate in this point of order?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the adage that a lawyer who has himself for a client is a fool – something like that. I'm going to let the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview as the third-party House leader.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite amazed that one sentence has created this much controversy. The hon. Treasurer said – this is when he stood up. [interjections] Would you listen, please? This is what happened. This is the question. It says, "The Finance minister has failed to disclose his campaign donations for his PC leadership bid and has broken his own deadlines for doing so." That's in fact the case, and it's well documented. That's when he stood up.

Now, at the very minimum he may have a point of order. He certainly doesn't have a point of privilege from that. He's quoted a lot of different areas, but if he wants to go by the facts on that, it's well documented, and the minister even admitted himself outside that he's still fundraising.

We're saying that it's not about the character, that we're asking to the Premier. It's asking if this is good public policy. Most other places in Canada have leadership funds, and they control this sort of thing so that a person doesn't inadvertently have this happen. Nobody was accusing the minister of anything wrong. We're saying that as a government policy, this is wrong. Surely, the perception must be evident to even members of this government. That's what we're talking about. We're talking about government policy here.

That was the only sentence that was uttered when the member stood up and called for his point of privilege.

I would just conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that if we're going to look at categories, I'd say that we look at section 75. This should be the most important thing in Beauchesne. Section 75 states clearly, "The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House and in committee."

So, Mr. Speaker, I just can't see how that one sentence that I read could create all this worry for the Treasurer, that he somehow can't do his job. Well, maybe he should have released the people that were donating to his campaign earlier on, and he would not be facing this problem. So if anybody has put himself in this bind, it is the hon. Treasurer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others to participate? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member quotes briefly and incompletely from the record. I'm sure that you have the Blues before you and that you'll correct that. In my mind, the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood drew a clear line between corporations that would be donating to the hon. member's campaign and those same corporations that might be receiving favourable treatment in the budget. In so doing, I believe, first of all, he brought into question the member's ability to act impartially, and I will refer you to Beauchesne 66. Also, isn't that the very definition of a bribe? In making that suggestion, I would refer you to Beauchesne 65.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a very serious matter, and I beg your ruling. Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: I think it's simple timing. In this House we all know that there's a budget coming down tomorrow. For the hon. member to at this time raise the question of the Finance minister's involvement with these corporations or individuals and impugn the total budget as it's coming down is simply wrong. I don't know all the numbers that you want to quote in papers, but I know what I hear and I know what's wrong, and that was wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Finance did quote Erskine May at page 69 talking about freedom of speech, which certainly is our privilege here in the House, but I'll also go on to page 70. It says:

Freedom of speech was important and the Crown ought not to act against a Member directly for something said in the House; but it seems to have been common ground that decorum and obedience to the Sovereign's wishes ought to be respected. Just as the House increased its ability to protect its Members from arrest and molestation, so it was frequently ready to take punitive action, without waiting for the Crown or Council, against those who overstepped the mark in debate.

And I think this member has overstepped the mark in debate.

The Speaker: This is always a very serious, serious matter, and anything that impugns the integrity of one member, when that member rises to make an argument with respect to it, should be treated with dignity and concern. I am going to review everything, and I'll report back to the House tomorrow.

In the interim should the leader of the third party or the Minister of Finance want to convey further thoughts to me on this matter, I would be pleased to receive them prior to 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. Official Opposition House Leader, you're going to be making an argument on a Standing Order 30 on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition?

Impacts of Apartment Fire in Fort McMurray

Ms Blakeman: Yes, I am, and thank you very much for the opportunity to do that. Oral notice was given at the appropriate time for this Standing Order 30 during the Routine, and I believe that the Speaker is in receipt of the letter and the written notice as of 10:55 this morning.

The notice has now been distributed to everyone, but essentially we are asking for an adjournment of the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss the urgent matter of the immediate and pressing risk to the health and well-being of the residents of Fort McMurray caused by the recent fire and resulting inability of the community's social, housing, and health systems to cope with the impacts of this crisis without immediate provincial support.

As always, Mr. Speaker, I am mindful that the arguments are on the urgency and other opportunities to discuss this particular issue. The urgency is the compromised capacity of Fort McMurray to react to this disaster and the emergency created by the fire. This is stemming from unmanaged growth for the most part, so we have several components of that urgency.

One is the housing now of 300 people. There was already a homeless list that they were trying to address of 400 people. We've now added 300 people to that. We've heard that housing is coming at some point. I can't remember the exact words that were used by the minister, but it's obviously not available today as housing is being built, but it's not open today. Coming on board and almost completed: those were the words that the minister used, so that housing is clearly not complete to have somebody move into. We have an urgency on housing 300 now homeless people. This is not a one-day problem. This community of Fort McMurray has pulled together and has addressed things over the last 24-hour period, but they don't have the capacity to sustain this, and being homeless is not a one-night deal. The immediacy of the problem and the likelihood that they could find other accommodation is slim to none. We're dealing with a place that has a vacancy rate of zero. As I said, there are units coming but not available now. So there's a housing issue.

There's a health resources issue. It's well known that this community is at capacity. It's actually short-staffed as far as nurses, doctors, and allied health professionals. They are lacking in some of the other equipment that they would like to have up there. They've been asking for additional infrastructure, et cetera. Part of your ability to deal with emergency is excess capacity to be able to absorb this, and this community does not have excess capacity.

So we've got housing, and we've got health care, and also on the health care issue are the stress and the risks on health as we look at the ability of the community to come forward with things like medication replacement for people that have been removed from their homes and weren't able to take medication with them: aids to daily living – sleep apnea machines, crutches, wheelchairs – anything else that they were not able to take with them as they vacated the premises.

In addition, we're now looking at increased risks around infection control. If we are housing groups of people together in common areas for any extended period of time, you are running a greater risk there of spreading things like colds and flu and outbreaks of other disease and possible infections.

The voluntary sector, which is the sector that we most look to for assistance in crises like this, is well beyond maximum capacity. Included in things like that, Mr. Speaker, would be mental health services, emergency accommodation, transition housing for those who are moving from addictions treatment, for example, or battered domestic disputes into transition housing – that's also been affected by this fire – donations of clothing and toiletries and furniture and bedding, animal shelters. All of those not-for-profit, volunteer-based organizations are already operating at maximum capacity. Their ability to absorb this addition is not there that I can determine. I think that is very much a part of the urgency. It does compromise safety.

There are a number of citations, Mr. Speaker. The first I go to, of course, is M and M 584 and 585, both talking about urgency and importance and requiring urgent consideration, 585 talking about the relevancy and attention and concern throughout the nation. I think we've dealt with that. This is coming out of a disaster. It's not something that is chronic. It's something that was unanticipated and could not have been anticipated or prepared for. I mean, fires happen, unfortunately. You try and prevent them, but they still happen.

We have parameters set out in Beauchesne 387 to 398 on emergency debates: specifically, whether there's an opportunity for debate under the rules and provisions of the House. This issue is not currently before the courts. There was a mention of new units of housing in the throne speech, but as I've said, those housing units are not immediately available in this case. There is a government bill on the Order Paper around disaster services, but it is a house-keeping act to change the statute name and set up a new delegation of power section. It's not dealing with the emergency services themselves. There is no bill that is yet to be tabled that was outlined in a pre-session media release by the government that we could be expecting might address this. As far as I can see, there is no private member's bill or public or private bill.

Mr. Speaker, the budget is tomorrow, but there's no prebudget indication that there be any new initiatives for Fort McMurray that could have been anticipated that would affect their capacity immediately. There are no government motions on the Order Paper, and there are no motions other than government motions that would be coming in the near future which would assist us in an emergency debate on this issue. I argue that the opportunity for debate on this issue is nonexistent. After the budget is brought forward, we have a calendar that sets out the remaining days of this session that are allocated strictly to budget debate on the estimates.

In Oral Question Period today we did raise a number of questions, but we're also admonished under 408(1)(e) that questions should "not be of a nature requiring a lengthy and detailed answer," and (f) "not raise a matter of policy too large to be dealt with as an answer to a question." Of course, with the changes in Standing Orders we're now dealing with a 45-second answer rule. So getting a level of debate and comprehensiveness is not possible with our current situation in question period. I also note in 410(7) that "brevity both in questions and answers is of great importance."

So under Beauchesne 389 we do have an issue that is "so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention," and I think that's particularly true for the public in Fort McMurray, Mr. Speaker. Those residents are tremendously resilient. They are creative, and they are tough, but they are already at maximum capacity. This situation is very urgent for them. They have all pulled together and come through in the business sector and volunteers and individuals, but that has an effect of one day, and we are dealing with a situation that goes beyond one day. Emergency preparedness does require some reserve capacity in staff and infrastructure, and as I've laid out, that capacity is not there.

I argue that this is an urgent situation, and we should adjourn the order of business today to provide the debate on that. Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm prepared to argue that this matter does not constitute a matter of urgent public importance as is defined under our Standing Orders. I'd like to point out to you that Standing Order 30(2) states that the Speaker shall entertain debate as he considers appropriate to determine whether the matter is "relevant to the question of urgency of debate and shall then rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order." I'm prepared to argue that this, indeed, does not meet the test of 30(2).

Mr. Speaker, the issue was raised in question period earlier today. I think the responsible minister made a very adequate response to the question that was raised in debate. I would further point out that with respect to future opportunities to discuss the matters at hand, we'll indeed have ample opportunity in days to come as we begin a great deal of discussion and debate on various ministries' business plans and during the budget submissions.

I'd also point out, Mr. Speaker, 30(6) of our Standing Orders: "An emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly." So whether or not the discussion takes place this afternoon, the status as it pertains to the issue resulting from this fire will not be affected by any decision of this Assembly.

Finally, Standing Order 30(7)(a) talks about the fact that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." Well, Mr. Speaker, while any kind of a fire and this one in particular is a tragic loss of property, there was no loss of life in this case. I would suggest to you that the emergency plan that the municipality has in place thus far has done a very good job of dealing with the situation. The emergent needs of putting out the fire have obviously been met, and the municipality activated its emergency management plan, as does any municipality in this province.

It's the responsibility of the minister of municipal affairs to ensure that each municipality has an adequate emergency plan to deal with incidents just like this one. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I was in Fort McMurray myself on Monday, and I was participating with the municipality in the development of their emergency management plan around the potential for flooding. It's a little bit easier to predict floods than it is fires, but at the same time I can assure you that the municipality is doing a magnificent job in their preparedness surrounding possible flooding, and I can assure you also that I am just as sure that the same degree of thought and preparedness that they've put into their flooding plan is also in place when they exercised and activated their emergency plan with respect to a fire of the magnitude such as we're dealing with here. The people are being temporarily housed, and work is under way to find permanent housing for them.

I would suggest that for all of these reasons this motion does not meet the test for a matter of urgent public debate and that we not proceed, that you rule accordingly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak against this motion of urgency. I have spoken in this House very clearly in the past in favour of improving the situation in Fort McMurray, and I have some experience with Fort McMurray. I do know that the emergency preparedness forces in place in Fort McMurray are highly professional, some of the best in the province, and certainly should not be questioned in any way in how they may have dealt with this fire. There was no loss of life. There was no loss to any of the families in terms of injury. They dealt very professionally. I know these agencies, and I know that they are very good.

I would like to add to the Deputy Government House Leader's citations in saying that in 30(7)(c) "not more than one matter may be discussed on the same motion." I believe that many matters in this application under Standing Order 30 have been raised, ranging from all sorts of things: health, mental health, addictions treatment, animal shelters. I think that this is far, far too wide-ranging of a Standing Order 30 motion to be dealt with by this House at this time.

That's all I have to say. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as I did have notice of this earlier today, I am prepared to deal with this matter under this request under Standing Order 30(2). Just a quick reminder that the request here is that an application under the Standing Order 30 is to "adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance.” I repeat: I did receive notice from the Leader of the Official Opposition’s office at 10:55 a.m., so the requirement under Standing Order 30(1) has been met with respect to that.

Before the question as to whether this motion should proceed, the chair must determine whether or not the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that “the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.” The Leader of the Official Opposition’s proposed motion is to hold an emergency debate on risks to residents of Fort McMurray “caused by the recent fire.” Both the Official Opposition House Leader and the Deputy Government House Leader quoted from Beauchesne, paragraphs 387 and 398, and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589. The chair has listened very attentively to all of the arguments of the members participating in the debate and appreciates the members who did provide quotations from the various standing authorities that we have.

However, when I look on page 587 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, there is one key consideration. Although the Speaker is not required to give reasons for his decision, there is one key requirement in this that I think is important. “The Speaker determines whether a matter is related to a genuine emergency which could not be brought before the House within a reasonable time by other means, such as during a Supply day.” Tomorrow the budget will come down. Very, very quickly we will be in supply and will be in supply probably for four to five to six weeks. As a result, the chair does not believe that this request meets the requirements under the standing order for an emergency debate to proceed today. The matter is a serious one – no doubt at all about that – but that is not the rationale behind the decision with respect to Standing Order 30. So the request for leave is not in order.

 Committee of the Whole

The Chair: I’d like to call the committee to order.

Bill 22

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments in respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It’s my pleasure to rise this afternoon during committee debate on Bill 22, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act. The first order of business for myself this afternoon is to advise the Assembly of an amendment that I would like to bring forward on this act. I’ve provided the table with the original copy of the amendment, and I believe the pages are in the process of distributing it.

The Chair: We’ll just have a moment before we proceed so that the pages can distribute it to the members.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you.

The Chair: Okay. Hon. member, would you wish to proceed?

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment that I would like to move this afternoon to Bill 22 – and I believe we’ll refer to it as amendment A2. Is that correct?

The Chair: We’ll refer to this as A2, yes.

Mr. R. Miller: The amendment would amend section 17 of Bill 22 by adding the words “but the Corporation shall not make any direct investment of any funds or any portion of a fund in securities of corporations in the tobacco industry” after the words “with the regulations.”

Mr. Chairman, I think the intent of this is quite clear. Last year in this Assembly, through a tremendous effort of co-operation and collaboration and last-minute manoeuvrings between the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, we were able to convince all members of this House to support an amendment to the Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, which as much as possible this amendment mirrors. I’m hoping that the goodwill of this Assembly will also extend to broadening that amendment which was put into the cancer legacy act and thereby instruct at the will of the government and this Assembly the AIM corporation not to invest knowingly in any funds anywhere that hold tobacco companies in their portfolios.

I’m not sure that I have to spend an awful lot of time on this. I did have a conversation with the Finance minister yesterday afternoon wherein he expressed some concern, Mr. Chairman, that he didn’t think that it was the role of AIMCO to tell the various fund holders where they should be investing. Yet my response to the Finance minister – and I hope that upon 24 hours of reflection he will have shared this with his caucus – was simply that these various funds and endowments are putting an awful lot of faith and trust in AIMCO. Should Bill 22 pass, they’re putting an awful lot of faith and trust in AIMCO to manage their assets. Given that for the most part these are taxpayers’ dollars that we’re talking about, what’s really required here and what we’re asking for today is the political will of this Assembly to instruct a Crown corporation not to invest in tobacco companies whenever knowingly possible.

I think it’s well within the purview of AIMCO that should they be instructed by this Assembly not to invest in tobacco companies, we can do that. It would be written in legislation, and it would be very clear for the board and directors of AIMCO what the policy and legislation states, and they would be mandated to follow that. So I think it’s very much within our purview.

I would just like to point out that I mentioned in debate not that long ago that any number of funds around the world have ethical investing policies, including a ban on investing in tobacco companies, where I can show that those funds regularly outperform the heritage savings trust fund, for example. One example of that that I’m well familiar with is the endowment fund at Harvard, which has an ethical investment policy, including an exclusion on tobacco companies, and that fund regularly outperforms our funds here in Alberta.

Since the minister himself has indicated that the whole intent of establishing AIMCO as a Crown corporation is to improve by anywhere from 25 to 100 points the performance of the various funds in Alberta, and since it can be shown that making a move such as excluding tobacco investments from those funds doesn’t hurt but can actually be proven to help the performance of funds, I think this meshes well with the intent of the legislation as it’s proposed.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I won’t elaborate any further. I think the amendment is pretty much self-explanatory. As I indicated, it is based as much as was possible on the wording that this House supported last year when we passed the cancer legacy act, so I’m hoping that this amendment will find the same favour of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on amendment A2.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to address the issue of this amendment and urge members not to support this amendment but not because I don't appreciate the intent of this amendment. Just as the member indicated, this House on a previous occasion, in dealing with another piece of legislation, did pass a very similar amendment, but I don't think that the comparisons made between this bill and the bill that was dealing with the establishment of the legacy fund for cancer are nearly close enough that we should be considering using that as a precedent. When you establish a fund exclusively to be used for cancer research, I think it's reasonable to argue that you should do your very best to exclude from that fund issues or investments that specifically support the tobacco industry. In this case, though, we aren't dealing with investment strategies that are exclusive to one fund, but in fact we're dealing with investment strategies that go across all of government and will deal with significantly more than that one fund.

I would suggest that if the members of this Assembly feel that there should be some kind of an investment philosophy or an investment policy that is overlaid on the directions that are given to this organization, this is a rather piecemeal way of doing it. I think that the kind of direction that the member is referring to is talking today about tobacco. There are other members in the room that might suggest: well, we also should consider whether or not these funds are environmentally damaging in someone's opinion. Others might have other suggestions. I would suggest that we get into a very ad hoc basis of passing amendments like this.

For that reason alone, I can't support dealing with this amendment. I might be convinced at some point in time down the road to deal with legislation, not in the form of an amendment but legislation that deals with the issue of whether or not public funds that are invested in the marketplace should have some kind of policy associated with them, an overarching, broad policy. That's not what's before us. That's not possible at this committee stage of this bill.

For that reason, I urge all members not to support this amendment.

The Chair: Are there others on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to rise and speak in favour of the amendment proposed by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and to address some of the comments made just moments ago by the hon. Minister of Environment. I understand what he's saying, that in the perfect world you would take a very, very holistic approach to this whole process and consider the universe of possible investments that might not be advisable to pursue in a fund like this. Part of me can understand his argument in terms of this being an ad hoc approach; however, this particular ad hoc approach is backed by over 40 years of research and experience that proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that tobacco was a harmful substance. It may be a legal substance, but it's a harmful substance.

The intent of this amendment, I think, is at least in part to make sure that as the government of Alberta, as representatives of the people of Alberta, we take steps to not endorse bad behaviour, to not endorse substances which are dangerous to public health, to take steps to endorse initiatives that are good for public health.

We have had issues before in regard to government investments in tobacco funds, in securities of corporations in the tobacco industry, and it doesn't set a very good example for 3.3 million Albertans, Mr. Chair. This amendment seeks to set a good example. This amendment seeks to set some boundaries around what it is that the corporations do with the people's money, because it is the people's money. I think it is a very reasonable and rational restriction on how AIMCO can invest funds. I think it's in the public interest to keep those funds out of securities of corporations in the tobacco industry.

Not only do I fully support this amendment, but given the body of scientific evidence and knowledge about the harmful effects of tobacco use in all its forms, I can't imagine why anybody in this House would vote against this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. On amendment A2 it's with great pride that I recognize that the city of Calgary is one of the first cities in Alberta – in fact, it may be the only city at this point – that has an ethical investment plan, that looks at investments that basically do no harm or are not at the expense of anyone else's well-being.

There's no doubt about the fact that not only first-hand smoking but second-hand smoking kills people. The idea that we would benefit from the profits of a substance which is killing individuals and continues to kill individuals in a province with very lax regulations, in a province where the government refuses to come up with rules for a province-wide ban, citing individual rights as an argument, and recognizes the rights of a small minority over the health concerns of the vast majority – the minister suggested that this wasn't the way to deal with ethical investments.

I would suggest that today we could make a major decision in cleaning up our investment policies, which is what Bill 22 is all about: improving our investment strategies. We could point out not only to the rest of Canada but to the world that Alberta believes not only in transparency and accountability, but it believes in integrity and ethics. This simple amendment accomplishes this end in a very compact, efficient manner.

Canada has indicated, for example, that it will not support mines. It will not manufacture mines. It recognizes that mines destroy and kill people and maim people. In a similar manner tobacco has no positive benefits other than the historical symbol that was used in trade. I don't want to put down the First Nation exchange. Tobacco was considered a special herb that was exchanged. But in that comparison of historical recognition we can burn sweetgrass at a number of ceremonies. We do not need to invest in tobacco companies.

To me – this may seem like stretching the point – it's the equivalent of investing in prostitution. Is the Alberta government serving as an unethical pimp for tobacco companies? By profiting from the revenue of tobacco, we are in fact acknowledging that any type of investment that brings money into the province is acceptable. I take issue with the idea that a drug, an addictive substance which is responsible for a tremendous number of deaths, would be sanctioned and held up as an acceptable investment in this province.

We have an opportunity to do the right thing. There are many ways of diversifying our economy. There are a number of wonderful opportunities to invest, particularly in green energy production. There are opportunities to invest in environmental reclamation. The list of investment possibilities is practically endless.

So I would urge as a very first step that members of this Legislature recognize that there is no good side to tobacco as an investment or as a killing substance, and I would urge members opposite to join us in condemning investment in tobacco and support the amendment A2 to Bill 22. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to rise and speak against this amendment for some very simple reasons. The amendment simply asks us not to “make any direct investment of any funds or any portion of a fund in securities of corporations in the tobacco industry.” Speaker after speaker from the other side has raised the health reason and the ethical reason for not investing in these companies. I have to point attention to the fact that if they are going to follow the same reasoning, then people can ask: why don’t you stop investment in fast food companies, too, because trans fats kill people? Also there are many people killed in automobile accidents. Maybe we should stop investing money in the automobile industry too. Right? If you keep following that insane reasoning, eventually you get to a point that, you know, you cannot invest money into any company, and that is very, very dangerous.

On top of that, I think that the simple basic requirement for this corporation is to maximize the return of our investment of taxpayers’ money. The more strings you put on it, the more conditions you put on it, you make the job of those people who invest the money on behalf of our citizens more difficult.

Therefore, I urge all members to vote against this amendment and focus on the goal of what we are trying to do with this corporation: maximize the return on the investment of our money.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m delighted to be able to speak on this amendment, which I think everyone should really view in a very positive manner. This is the time to show leadership. This is the time to stand up and be counted as an ethical government looking after the citizens of this province and not always just worrying about the bottom line. But having said that, I can’t believe for a second that if there was a part of a portfolio – or at least this is what should happen – that was losing money, it would not be changed in a second. It would be the press of a button to be able to get rid of the part of the portfolio that handles this tobacco investment.

The other thing is that, yes, the argument appears to be that we can make money. But, believe me, the health care costs for people who are dying of lung cancer far outweigh the damage that is done. They don’t just die of a heart attack. It takes months and months and months. As an RN I have helped people towards that end, and it certainly isn’t pretty. It’s a long, drawn-out process; it’s very painful; but, more importantly if you’re only going to talk about money, it requires a great deal of money to care for people that are dying of lung cancer.

So I won’t say any more, but I would really, really like to see this government take an ethical leadership on this issue, press the button, and switch that part of the portfolio that handles tobacco into something else that would make probably even more money if they took a minute to look for it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m pleased to rise in support of this amendment A2 to Bill 22, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act. I certainly understand the arguments put forward by the Minister of Environment and the Member for Calgary-Montrose, and I don’t think that this should be the beginning of a list of matters that should be brought in to affect the investment of this very important instrument in the development of the Alberta economy.

There are other bottom lines at play here, and it’s important to note them. I think the Member for Lethbridge-East was wise in stating that the health care costs are an additional bottom line that should be looked at in this amendment, and that’s why I support it. I think it’s important to note also in this House that we at least make statements that tell the investment managers who come to work for this fund that this type of investment is taken by members of this House to be not in the interest of Alberta and Albertans.

There’s little benefit by investing in Big Tobacco in the economic development of Alberta. The tobacco industry has very little direct involvement in the agricultural industry in Alberta. It’s not grown here. It’s not developed here. It’s not processed here in any meaningful way. I think it is important that there is a precedent that was established in looking at our cancer endowment last year, that we would not be looking to invest in this type of investment in the tobacco industry.

The importance, I think, of this amendment is clear. It could be worded a little bit differently, but I think it’s clear in its intent.

I stand in support of this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I think the question that we need to ask ourselves is: in being stewards for the people of Alberta and making sure that this money is well invested, do we want to make money for the people of Alberta by investing their money in companies that are responsible for the deaths of thousands of people? It’s said – and I think it’s very true – that tobacco is the only product which if used according to the instructions, if used properly according to its intent by the manufacturer, can kill you. I don’t think you can say that about other products. So in that sense it is quite different than other types of investment.

I am sure that if we asked people of Alberta this question, a clear majority of them would say, “Yes. I want to make sure that you do not invest my money in tobacco companies,” for those reasons. As a result, I think that this is a reasonable position to take. It’s a position that would be supported, in my view, by most Albertans, certainly not all but by most, and it is, finally, a responsible position to take.

So with respect to the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we will be supporting it. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Just very briefly, Mr. Chairman. I was interested in the statement from the Member for Calgary-Montrose. I believe he said that the idea is to maximize profit, but the question, to me, that we should ask is: at what cost? I mean, do we invest in, like, the weapons industry? Do we invest in the pornography industry? Where do we draw the line? This is a line to draw right here. It’s ethical investing. It makes perfect sense. Tobacco kills people in this country by the thousands. It’s outrageous that we should be investing in the tobacco industry. It’s common sense. It’s ethical, and it makes perfect sense. I wish the members of this House would vote for this amendment.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford back on the debate on the bill.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Back on the main bill in committee, just a couple of points that I want to raise. Section 8 talks about employees, and it says, “the Corporation may engage employees for the purpose of carrying on the business of the Corporation and may determine their conditions of service.” Now, the Minister of Finance was kind enough to provide myself and my researcher with the so-called three-column document that the government uses in their discussions. When I look at row 11, which talks about employees, the rationale behind this particular section says:

AIMCO employees will not be subject to the Public Service Act, including position classification, salary, and vacation rules. AIMCO employees will not participate in Crown benefits. Participation in existing pension plans is to be determined.

In light of the revelations that have come forward regarding the $11 million loss that I spoke of in question period today, it does simply cause me to question, Mr. Chairman, a number of things regarding conflict-of-interest rules and lobbyist registry rules if, in fact, the AIMCO employees would not be subject to the Public Service Act. I have to confess that I’m not infinitely familiar with the Public Service Act, but I think that that is a question that deserves to be asked: just exactly how would AIMCO employees be dealt with in terms of both the lobbyist registry and conflict-of-interest acts if they’re not part of the Public Service Act? That’s the one question I would like to get on the record.

Also, section 17 talks about the investment of the corporation’s funds. It says, again, “The Corporation may invest its funds, including reserve funds, only in accordance with the regulations.” Of course, as everybody is now well aware, we just had good debate on an amendment to that which, unfortunately, failed. But the amendment would have seen a restriction on any corporations under the umbrella of AIMCO investing in tobacco funds.

Both the Minister of Environment and the Member for Calgary-Montrose spoke in discussion to that amendment regarding section 17, and I think the Member for Calgary-Montrose actually quoted almost verbatim from the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act, which says that the objective is to maximize the investment of Albertans and the fund. As my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark just pointed out, that leaves it absolutely wide open in terms of no restrictions, no limitations.

It really does cause one to pause and wonder whether or not there would be any restriction as to what investments might be made by AIMCO, whether it might be pornographic websites, whether it might be arms companies. In fact, we know that there could very well be investments in companies that deal in arms already. So I have a real concern with section 17, and I’m really disappointed that the members of this House did not see fit to approve amendment A2 because I really think it was the right thing to do.

Mr. Chairman, section 18 talks about borrowing and guarantees. In particular, it says, “If authorized by the Minister, the Corporation may borrow money in accordance with the regulations.” I’m wondering if the minister could outline for us under what circumstances the corporation might be borrowing money. Considering that they’re managing in excess of $70 billion in funds, I can’t offhand imagine why the corporation would then need to borrow money with all of those assets available in their investment portfolio. I would like an explanation from the minister on that.

Then, in particular, I do have to go back to the situation regarding the $11 million that was lost by the Finance department on the timberland asset class. I can’t help but be a little bit confused by some mixed messages that the Minister of Finance is sending, and I don’t mind saying publicly that it’s not the first time this minister has sent mixed messages. I’m confused by some of the comments that have been made.

Mr. Chairman, I first started asking questions about this $7 million supplementary supply, and then we learned more recently that it’s actually an $11 million loss that that $7 million was meant to address. When I finally received a response in the way of written answers to my questions that I’ve been asking for some time, I was interested to note that the minister said in his written response that, in fact, there are clauses in Bill 22 that are designed specifically to address the situation that happened with the timberland asset class. Yet in this House during debate on supplementary estimates the minister had said that there was no correlation whatsoever between Bill 22 and what had happened with that $7 million that was required in supplementary supply. So I’m confused by that.

In speaking to the Auditor General’s office this morning, they told me that from their point of view there would be no correlation because, in fact, the changes that were required to be made to policy would have been made in regulation already under Alberta investment management and that those regulations would just flow through to AIMCO if Bill 22 passes and we now have a corporation. So I’m really a little bit unsure. Are there actually clauses in Bill 22 that address specifically the situation that happened with AIMCO? First the minister says no. Then he says yes. The Auditor General is saying no. I look through Bill 22, and I can’t find anything in Bill 22 that specifically addresses the situation that happened with the timberland asset class.

Now, it’s possible, I’m sure, that there may be something coming in regulations, which, of course, we don’t get to see in this Legislature until after they’re passed. They don’t get debated publicly, so there’s very little in the way of public oversight. It’s possible that there may be some regulation coming after the passage of this bill that would deal specifically with what happened with the timberland asset class, but I don’t see it here. So, again, this adds to the confusion that I’m having with what happened in that particular situation and whether or not, in fact, the passage of Bill 22 and the creation of this Crown corporation will deal with that situation and help to ensure that that sort of mistake, at a very hefty cost to taxpayers, doesn’t happen again.

I found it interesting this morning – and I don’t mean to be picking on the Auditor General’s office, Mr. Chairman – that a comment was made to me by one of the staff members that this $11 million is a very small amount in terms of the big picture, that, you know, as is made clear in the government’s press release outlining the reasons for Bill 22, we’re managing at this point in excess of $70 billion. So the comment was made that $11 million is a very small amount in the big picture.

Well, I challenge anybody in this House to go out to their constituents, particularly those that are having difficulty finding affordable housing, and tell them that $11 million is a very small amount and that, you know, we shouldn’t be making such a big deal out of an $11 million loss because of a mistake that was made and because, as I pointed out in question period today, of the really poor accounting and systems management practices in that particular department. So $11 million, although it may be a small drop in the bucket to this government, is a huge, huge amount to the average taxpayer. In fact, I'm willing to guess that the average taxpayer can't even really wrap their heads around how much money $11 million is. That's how much it is. My experience in this Assembly is that people can better relate to a $22 glass of orange juice than they can to an $11 million loss in a pension fund.

Mr. Chairman, the fact of the matter is that this is a lot of money and deserves an awful lot of careful consideration and scrutiny by the members of this House. That is, in fact, the reason why I'm asking the questions that I am today as we debate Bill 22 in committee stage.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will look forward to other questions and comments from members of the Legislature on this bill, and I would hope that prior to dealing with this bill in third reading, we may be able to have some answers to those questions that I've raised this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yesterday during the debate in second reading of Bill 22, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act, I covered a number of points, but one important point that I made, to my regret somewhat more briefly than I would have liked because the time ran out, was the issue of ethical investment principles when dealing particularly with public funds.

I talked about the issue of ethics in investments. There are various aspects to this, you know, the issue of investing in corporations whose products may directly do harm to individuals, to their health. The tobacco industry is one area. Corporations which either produce products or trade in products that are produced through child labour or companies that deal with jurisdictions or countries which are in a very clear and blatant violation of human rights around the world are some of the instances where the ethical concerns arise when making decisions about investing money, particularly money that's owned by democratic governments and their citizens and is at the disposal of Crown corporations, such as the one being proposed here, for investment on behalf of the people, citizens who are the real owners of those funds and capital.

This particular amendment, Mr. Chairman, does speak to that concern that I expressed about the ethical side of these investment decisions. That must always be in the minds of people who make those decisions. This bill doesn't provide for this kind of a filter, this kind of a check, this kind of an instruction to the people who'll be responsible for this Crown corporation to in fact be not only sensitive to ethical issues but to respect the principle of ethical investing and make their decisions in light of the obligation to not invest in corporations that do not respect those ethical standards and ethical principles.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to rise and lend my support on behalf of the NDP caucus to this amendment which does specifically . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, are you introducing an amendment?

Dr. Pannu: No, no. I'm speaking to the amendment.

The Chair: That amendment has been dealt with. We're back debating the bill.

Dr. Pannu: Then, Mr. Chairman, with your advice I'll just speak to the bill in general, then, in its committee stage. May I?

The Chair: You can't speak to the amendment anymore because the amendment is defeated, but you can speak on the bill itself.

Dr. Pannu: Absolutely. I'm speaking to the bill, then. Thank you for your advice and correction.

I think that because it does not have a clear requirement in it that makes reference to the need for the corporation that this bill will create to respect ethical principles and bring into play ethical considerations, the bill is seriously flawed. It's a bill that leaves open the possibility that we as a province, that we as a government, with this Legislature as part of that government, will be seen as having not addressed its obligation to address the serious question of ethical investing. Making a profit at any cost: that kind of orientation is something that must be discouraged, certainly, by a Crown corporation which is being established by virtue of the legislation that we are debating here.

If this corporation is in fact to represent the real interests of Albertans, then it must commit itself to respecting human rights issues, paying due attention to those when making those investment decisions, paying due attention to and respecting the principle that child labour must not be part of the production activity or part of the goods that that corporation trades in and in which this corporation invests.

Similarly, Mr. Chair, the whole issue of our being sensitive to environmental issues now. We've stretched the definition of ethical concerns. I think one of the concerns that has an ethical, moral dimension is the activities of corporations that might do irreparable harm to the environment, particularly harm with reference to the global warming issue.

A whole flood of studies by academics, by scholars located in different parts of the world, by international bodies such as the international panel on climate change, a group of close to 2,000 top-notch scientists around the world; the Stern report, which was prepared by a well-known, famous economist who is the special adviser to the Prime Minister of Britain; over 900 pages of a book that's available in our Library, The Economics of Climate Change: all of these documents, all of these reports, all of these discussions and their summaries, all of the recommendations coming out of these reports made by these experts indicate to us that we need to take action. We need to take corporations on board to take this action, action directed at doing everything that we can to mitigate, to start with, and then to reduce in absolute terms the emission of greenhouse gases identified by these experts and scientists as one of the key factors which is leading to an ever-growing rate of climate change in the form of global warming.

Ethical issues, I think, must be at the heart of the debate when it comes to putting in place the legislation that will create a Crown corporation to invest the publicly owned funds in this province. So, Mr. Chairman, speaking to this bill in committee, I think it's important that we be reminded of the flaw in the bill, which has to do with the absence of any mention referencing ethical concerns and putting some ethical limits and boundaries around how such a Crown corporation should arrive at decisions for investing these funds.

Mr. Chairman, with that note on the problem with this bill, a problem having to do with the absence of any ethical concerns formally expressed in the bill with respect to the obligations of such a corporation when making decisions to invest, I close my brief remarks at this point.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on the bill.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise in support of Bill 22, Alberta Investment Management Corporation

Act. This act, I think, is a very prudent and far-sighted approach to changing the way that we deal with our investments here in Alberta. "Securing maximum value," as the press release says, "for Alberta's investments is a key part of Premier Ed Stelmach's plan to build a stronger Alberta." I think that if we can gain greater basis points in the full investments that we are dealing with in Alberta – and that is the future Alberta – if we were to gain . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I would like to remind you, as I reminded some members opposite yesterday, that the use of proper names, including the Premier's, is not permitted.

Mr. Backs: I'm sorry.

To gain, say, potentially 100 basis points would be $500 million per year, and that would be an incredible gain for the citizens of Alberta.

Looking at the way the bill is structured in how it would look for excellence in investment I think is a very appropriate and far-reaching move. As we do look forward, even though the amendment on tobacco was defeated, I think that there should be some understanding and ability by the investment managers to avoid these types of investments and to avoid, in fact, any investment that would act to the detriment of Alberta or Albertans. You know, something like Osama bin Laden mountain resorts might be one they should flag as one not to look at. Something like the al Qaeda infrastructure industries might not be a good one to look at. We could maybe have some sense and sensibility in the way that those investment managers look at how they deal with the bottom line and how that deals with Alberta.

I do support this bill. I think it's a wise move forward, and I commend the government for moving on this one. Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 22, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this Act? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture I'm very pleased to rise this afternoon and begin discussion in Committee of the Whole on Bill 27, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007. The amendment to the emblems act will allow cabinet to add any Alberta symbol of distinction to the list of official symbols. Bill 27 proposes to grant authority to cabinet to officially recognize symbols of distinction through an order in council. This will allow cultural groups to obtain a symbol of distinction to celebrate important milestones such as the 25th anniversary, for example, of the Franco-Albertan flag.

In fact, it was kind of interesting. After the debate on that particular bill the media were all after those of us who could utter a few words in French as to why we killed the bill to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Franco-Albertan flag, which is not what we did. We voted to in fact create a bill, such as Bill 27, that essentially would make it easier for every organization, every culture in Alberta to approach its government for official recognition.

Bill 27 will provide an efficient process to ensure that important symbols of distinction that recognize the valuable contribution of Alberta's diverse population can be recognized in a timely manner. Much easier to bring something through an OC process than it is to find a private member who could either win or not win the lottery in terms of being drawn for a private member's bill. This will streamline the process for everyone so that every single individual group dealing with respect to language and culture can be duly recognized in an easier way to do things.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I trust that we'll hear good comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Merci, M. le Président. Je suis très triste, très désolé que les membres de ce gouvernement ont dévalué l'importance des contributions francophones dans l'histoire de cette province. Plusieurs députés de cette Assemblée ont raconté l'histoire excellente des francophones en Alberta, symbolisée par les noms des villes, des fleuves, et des lacs qui reconnaissent l'histoire d'un groupe qui a beaucoup contribué à la fondation de cette province. Les membres des Premières nations avec les habitants francophones et anglophones ont travaillé depuis des centaines d'années pour créer et établir l'Alberta que nous sommes fiers de partager aujourd'hui.

Les francophones ne sont pas seulement un autre groupe. Leur symbole, le drapeau, appartient à l'histoire de la formation de cette province. L'emblème francophone mérite plus d'honneur.

Just in summary, I am very sorry that members of this government have devalued the importance of French contributions in the history of this province. Several MLAs from this Assembly discussed the excellent history of francophones, French speakers, the French culture in Alberta symbolized by the names of towns, rivers, and lakes which recognize the history of a group which contributed tremendously to the foundation of this province.

Members of the First Nations together with French and English settlers worked for centuries to create, to establish the Alberta which we are now proud to share today. French speakers, the French culture is not just another group. Their symbol, their flag, belongs to the history of the formation of this province. The French emblem deserves greater respect.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 27, Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007. Let me express my deep regret at the failure of this Legislature on Monday to proceed with Bill 204, Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007. My constituents are deeply disappointed and, in fact, angry that this bill was not allowed to proceed through the Legislature on the pretext that another bill, a government bill, Bill 27, was coming up and therefore there was no need for the Legislature to pass Bill 204.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 204 was a very specific bill, a very powerfully symbolic bill in that it was designed to recognize the historic contributions made by the Franco-Albertan community as the first pioneers to this part of Canada. The bill was being debated on the 20th anniversary of a rather ugly incident in this Legislature which denied a Franco-Albertan MLA, Leo Piquette, who was a member of the NDP caucus at that time, from speaking French in this House. This happened despite the fact that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of Canada had been in place for five years before that incident happened. So I thought it was a fitting way of recognizing in this Legislature last Monday that we indeed had erred in disallowing Mr. Piquette to ask his question in French and that on that day 20 years later we were going to make a statement in the form of a piece of legislation that would make appropriate and due amends to that error that was made in this House. That wasn't done.

Now to Bill 27. Bill 27, Mr. Chairman, is a sort of framework legislation which will permit the government of Alberta, the cabinet, the Executive Council through order in council to bestow such important recognition to a variety of ethnocultural groups and other groups in our province who seek such recognition who are making important contributions to the development and growth of this province over time and now.

There's nothing wrong with that. That's a very laudable thing. As a matter of fact, I was reading through some of the remarks made on Monday, one last paragraph from a speech on Bill 204 that was made by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Egmont. Except, Mr. Chairman, perhaps this is just the beginning, speaking to Bill 204. That's how I treated it too. That's a good beginning. Perhaps this bill brought forward by the hon. Member for Peace River will be the beginning of a celebration of all cultures found in this great province of Alberta. I think that is absolutely appropriate and the right thing to do. So there is no contradiction, no problem with passing this bill in the Assembly and then moving on to creating opportunity by way of Bill 27 to permit other groups to be able to seek similar recognition by way of an emblem or other means of choice that they have at their disposal.

This bill will now make that possible for other groups, and to the extent it does that, I support it, but I have a problem with another aspect of it. It takes away from this Legislature the opportunity to both debate and through that debate recognize and express appreciation on this floor for the contributions of other groups who seek similar recognition by way of making application to the government for a recognition emblem or something.

This Legislature plays a most central role in the government of Alberta, and any bill that takes away from it the opportunity as a House, as an Assembly, to be able to express, to have the chance to express appreciation in a debate, appreciation for the contributions and the work that has been done to make this province better by ethnocultural groups or religious groups or other groups I think is a real loss of opportunity. This House should never relinquish without serious consideration its right to insist on having that opportunity to do what the Executive Council is allowed by this piece of legislation, Bill 27, to do. So that's the only part that I find objectionable about Bill 27. It robs the House of that opportunity to officially and formally express appreciation for the contributions of various groups and give a form of recognition to them.

With that said, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. As I said, you know, I have some problems with this bill, but it is a bill that will now allow groups to seek recognition for the contributions that they make, and to that extent it's a bill worth supporting. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I did listen very intently to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I guess I have to say that I really do feel that he's incorrect in some of his statements because what happened is that Bill 27 has come in basically as a replacement bill for Bill 204. As much as I appreciated Bill 204 – and I know that I spoke in favour of it. I don't remember if it was here or if it was in caucus, but I did speak in favour of Bill 204. Actually, what has happened is that I absolutely support Bill 27 as a replacement bill for Bill 204.

Let me just tell you a little story, Mr. Chairman. As one who was a sponsor of Bill 209, a private member's bill for this Legislature 2007, I had a very good bill on community treatment orders. What happened was that the minister of health came in, and he actually kind of adopted that bill as Bill 31. He took it as a government bill, Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, and he did not only what I was going to do in a private member's bill, but he went above and beyond what I wanted to do as a private member. He really dug into the Mental Health Act and made it so that it suited all of the areas that needed to be kind of amended in order to implement community treatment orders, and I really think that's exactly what happened with Bill 27.

What happened here is that we had the government come in and say: "Lookit, this is a good bill. This is a bill that a private member has put forward." In this case the hon. Member for Peace River. "It's a good bill. We want to take it. We want to do not only what that bill says, but we want to do above and beyond what that bill says." Thus, we have Bill 27, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Chairman, I am very supportive of this because I think this is how democracy works. This is what it's all about. This is when a private member puts forward a bill, kind of piques the interest of government. It might be an opposition member. It might be a government member. It doesn't matter. It's a private member who piques the interest of government and says: this is something that we have been overlooking and that we need to take on as part of the government agenda.

Mr. Chairman, this is exactly what's happened with Bill 27, so I guess I want to thank the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture for recognizing the importance of Bill 204, the private member's bill put forward by the Member for Peace River, and taking this on as a government bill.

I want to just support this in Committee of the Whole wholeheartedly, and I hope that all members of this Assembly will join me in supporting and in endorsing Bill 27 in Committee of the Whole because this, in fact, is not only an encompassment of Bill 204, but it is an expansion to recognize the culture and the emblems and all the history that Alberta has to offer to all Albertans. So let's do it. Let's get on with it, and let's go forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 27, Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 19

Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any amendments, comments, or questions with regard to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, a pleasure to stand and respond to a justice bill, this time in committee, to Bill 19, Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. The purpose of Committee of the Whole, Mr. Chairman, as we all know and as some members of the public also know, is to dissect and scrutinize pieces of legislation line by line, paragraph by paragraph, and page by page. Now, today I'm not going to belabour this process because most of my remarks have been put on the record in second reading. Like I mentioned before, this appears to be a housekeeping bill, and it doesn't really warrant a lot of debate unless members from the government caucus would like to stand up and further tell us why it's such a wonderful thing. However, I just have very minor clarifications to seek from the hon. mover of the bill.

The first one is basically with respect to the application for leave to appeal, and it appears, you know, seven different times in the bill because we're dealing with seven different acts that we're amending. Usually the way I read bills is the before and after, you know, what it presently reads and what we're trying to make it say. I notice that now we're talking about 30 days. In the current language it says one month. So I was just wondering if it really makes a difference, you know, one month versus 30 days. Or is it just the hon. mover of the bill exercising his legal background and expertise and playing with us in the House? However, I don't think it's really a major thing.

It talks about the leave to appeal, and then the other one, the new one, is talking about the application for the leave to appeal. So if he can walk us through an example of, you know, somebody who learns of a decision from one of those boards or tribunals mentioned and would like to raise a concern or appeal that decision or that statement or that decision. How is he or she going to do it and what are the steps? Just walk us through an example or, you know, a case scenario of how it's done. Because, really, as a layman – and I keep admitting that I am – 30 days is one month and one month is 30 days. So I don't understand the value.

Moving on to the other section, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the written request for materials. I think that's positive because we're now saying 14 days, but again I was just reading in the old language, and it says two weeks. Maybe it's clearer. Maybe it is more reader-friendly to say 14 days, and I think it's positive, you know, because we don't want boards and tribunals to sit on a request for information or a request for materials indefinitely. So that is basically telling them that they have to do it within a prescribed period of time, which is positive.

The other question I have, again something that appears frequently in this amendment act, is about the request for the transcript. It's a little technical. I have to admit that I don't fully understand whether the transcript should be automatically released or whether it should be the court, on application or on its own motion, releasing it. Again, if the hon. sponsor of the bill can tell us an example of where that might be warranted, why it's a good decision, why it's a good move.

Then, having said that, I think I just have one last comment, Mr. Chairman, with respect to those boards and tribunals and commissions and agencies. We have a few of them, and they have grown both in size and in scope. Sometimes the public has a concern with respect to how the public is being notified of those decisions, and they're usually decisions of major consequences. They're decisions that have implications, and they might affect people's lives and their livelihood and the fees they pay, you know, the access to services that they're granted, and so on. So it's basically a request to maybe mandate somehow that notifying the public and making the public aware of the decision, trying to inform people what the decision is and what potential implications it might have, should be standardized. It should be mandated in legislation that this is how you do it. You advertise on television, you advertise in major print media, and you do it repeatedly and you do it over a certain period of time before the effect or the decision comes in operation.

We keep hearing from people saying, "I didn't know about this," or "When did this happen?" Now we're requesting them to only file the request for appeal or their intent to appeal within 30 days. So I think that maybe in fairness we should also have a special, you know, hard, set way to inform the public of those decisions, again noting that they're usually decisions of major implication and magnitude. So just minor clarifications.

I would really appreciate the hon. sponsor giving us an example or a case scenario of how it's done and why it's better this way. I don't think I'm going to disagree with him, and I don't think I'm going to hold up this legislation. Just a point of clarification if he might.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm prepared to stand today to move Bill 19, the Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, in committee. I spoke somewhat extensively with regard to the details of the bill in second reading, so I will attempt to be brief. The bill does include some minor amendments, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung had referred to, which do affect a number of provincial statutes, eight in number, in fact. These are designed to reduce delays and to make better use of the court's time.

The amendments will reflect the current realities in the Court of Appeal that make it impractical to hear all of the cases that come before it "at the next sittings of the Court," as the legislation currently requires. Unfortunately, those types of restraints do not reflect the realities and practices of the court as the cases are scheduled many, many weeks in advance to allow materials to be distributed and for counsel to prepare. In practice the hearing date for the appeal is one agreed on by all of the counsel for the parties. So this bill will allow the court to schedule new appeals in a time frame that is appropriate for the parties involved and in consideration of other previously scheduled matters. It will also bring consistency to the statutes in terms of the time limits for filing and serving appeal documents.

Mr. Chairman, the proposed changes in the bill will better reflect the current practices within the Court of Appeal as it relates to appeals from boards and tribunals. As I mentioned earlier, the stakeholders are supportive of these amendments, and the changes already reflect their input.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung had requested some clarification on what steps would be entailed in order to have an appeal of one of these tribunals proceed. The steps essentially are that within the 30-day period after the decision by the board or tribunal there would have to be an application for leave to appeal. Then, if necessary, under the new provisions if there is an appeal granted, the appeal would proceed in the normal course with the procedure and practice of the Court of Appeal. If there is a written request for materials in the interval between the initial decision to appeal and the actual appeal, then the tribunal has to provide the materials required within 14 days on which the written request is served. Basically, that's the procedure.

I would like to respond to some specific points that the hon. members made in second reading of the bill yesterday. First of all, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung had expressed concern that he could not find the Gas Utilities Act in reference in the bill. He is correct, but there is a good reason for that. The appeal provisions, it turns out, for the Gas Utilities Act are actually contained within the body of the Public Utilities Board Act.

So based on his remarks, I'd also like to clarify for the same hon. member how the appeal process works. Permission is still required from the judge to proceed with an appeal – and this is what we call the application for leave – and when you seek permission, that is based on the principles of law that allow the court to determine if the board erred in law in making their decision. So it's not always a requisite to have all the materials or the transcript for that leave to be given. It could be something that is obvious.

Yesterday the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had also asked why there was a distinction between the materials that the applicant can request when preparing for the application for permission to appeal versus the appeal itself. The first point that I would make in that regard is that transcripts are not normally given to the court at this stage because, as I said, they're not always required. In fact, they're often not required to determine whether the court will hear an appeal. Normally the court would have a copy of the board's decision as well as the applicant's other documents. Those by themselves might explain the reason for the appeal.

Now, if permission for the appeal is granted, then and only then would the transcripts be provided with the other material to be reviewed by the court which is actually hearing the appeal. I can also assure the hon. member that there need be absolutely no concern over whether the lack of transcripts at this stage would affect the applicant's success at the actual appeal stage. Again, this is because transcripts are not required for the court to decide whether it will simply grant permission to proceed with an appeal. The grant of permission to proceed with an appeal, as I said, is based on legal criteria that are separate from what is contained in the transcript.

So I trust those comments have answered my hon. friends' queries. I would ask for your support on this bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for his response to some of the questions that were raised yesterday in second reading of the bill. It was a serious response on his part. I do thank him for it.

I continue to have some concerns about the leave to appeal application provisions here and the fact that those leave to appeal provisions in the bill do make a distinction between the materials to which the applicant would have access and the transcript, to which it will not have access when preparing the leave to appeal application.

These boards and tribunals are quasi-judicial bodies. They have fairly extensive powers. I'm not entirely certain that the law requires all of these tribunals and boards covered by these seven pieces of legislation that are being amended by this bill to keep transcripts. In conversation with some people it has been suggested to me that not all tribunals and boards have a legal obligation to keep transcripts.

If that is the case, then the provision in this bill of not requiring these boards and tribunals to issue these transcripts in order for the applicant to prepare the leave to appeal application causes me concern because this could further in fact send a signal to those tribunals or boards who do not keep transcripts – and I use the word “if” here: if they don't already have a practice of keeping transcripts, they will find encouragement not to have these transcripts. Given the fact that these boards are quasi-judicial boards and tribunals, I think it's important that they keep those transcripts. For that reason alone I find a problem with this bill because it would send a signal for these tribunals to continue with the practice of not having the obligation to keep the transcripts.

Mr. Chairman, my second reason for seeking some change in the bill has to do with the issue of efficiency and costs. The provision in the proposed piece of legislation, Bill 19, whereby section 26 is amended by (3.2) – I think it is here that I'm talking about. At the time of seeking leave to appeal, the transcript can be certainly requested on the motion of the judge himself or herself, or an application can be made to have this transcript made available. This back and forth with both procedures that are implicit in here in my view will prolong the number of appearances before the court, adding to inefficiency and extending the time over which the case can be concluded. So I'm also concerned from the point of view of the efficiency argument for keeping this provision in the bill, which by legislation, in fact, takes away the ability of the person preparing the application for the leave to appeal to request transcripts.

In order to be able to do this one, we have to appear before the judge in the Court of Appeal. To me that's expensive for the client's side. Every time a lawyer appears before a court on behalf of the client, it's expensive, I think more expensive, perhaps, than getting the transcript. If the issue is the concern with the cost of transcripts, I think it should be left to the counsel for the applicant or the legal representative of the party that's seeking to make an application to seek leave to appeal as to whether to undergo that cost or not. It shouldn't be by legislation. It looks to me to be too arbitrary to at the very outset deny the opportunity to the counsel or the applicant to have the ability to have the transcripts if that party deems it necessary to have them attached.

So both on grounds of efficiency and on the grounds that this might encourage, in fact, some boards and tribunals to not keep transcripts or to discontinue the practice of having transcripts because they're not required at least in part of this law, it makes it necessary for me to seek to amend the act, and for that, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here. The original, I think, goes to the table, and I have the copies for distribution.

The Chair: We'll allow the pages a moment to distribute them and bring the original up to the table.

Dr. Pannu: I should wait, I think.

The Chair: Yes.

We'll refer to this as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to move that Bill 19, Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended as follows: (a) in section 1(2)(d) by striking out the proposed section 27(4.2); (b) in section 2(2)(c) by striking out the proposed section 26(3.2); (c) in section 3(2)(c) by striking out the proposed section 70(3.2); (d) in section 4(2)(a) by striking out the proposed section 41(2.3); (e) in section 5(2)(a) by striking out the proposed section 688(2.2); (f) in section 6(2)(c) by striking out the proposed section 31(3.2); (g) in section 7(3) by striking out the proposed section 70(5).

Mr. Chairman, the effect if this amendment were to be voted in by the House would be to improve the bill in two respects that I've just drawn attention to: making sure that the boards and the tribunals keep the transcripts and making sure that those transcripts are available on request by the party interested in appealing the ruling of the decision of the tribunal or the board and, secondly, to improve the efficiency of the procedures through which the appeal process can be and will be conducted if this bill is passed.

Just the last point, Mr. Chairman. If this amendment were to be passed by the House, it will impact all the seven statutes proposed to be amended by Bill 19: the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act, the Electric Utilities Act, the Energy Resources Conservation Act, the Municipal Government Act, the Natural Resources Conservation Board Act, and the Public Utilities Board Act. All these seven statutes will be impacted if this bill is amended as proposed by my amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Does anyone else wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief. It's something I just asked earlier of the hon. sponsor of Bill 19. He explained that the request for the transcript – whether it's made through the tribunal or the board or whether, in fact, there's an application through the court or maybe the court on its own motion asking for the transcript to be released, that circumstance doesn't really affect the processing or the outcome of the appeal process.

I'm puzzled as to the rationale as explained by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona. I'm going to reserve my decision on this amendment. At first glance I don't think it's warranted or necessary, but I'm going to trust some comment from the hon. mover of the bill because, you know, I think he actually provided that clarification earlier. As such, I am inclined to oppose it, but till I make that decision, I'm interested in hearing him one more time, explaining the issue with respect to transcripts having no effect on the outcome of the appeal case. Or the Minister of Justice if he's willing to participate.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make a couple of comments with respect to the thrust of what we're trying to accomplish here. First of all, what we want to accomplish is a common standard or common process with respect to these leave to appeal applications. The leave to appeal applications are from an administrative tribunal, which will keep a record of the proceedings before it. That record would include, perhaps, a transcript but more likely something that could be turned into a transcript. There may be a digital record, for example, of the proceedings, which could upon request be turned into a transcript. Nonetheless, there will be a record of what goes on there, including the evidence before the tribunal, the documents filed as exhibits, and so on and so forth.

Under the provisions of this amendment it's contemplated that the applicant would make a written request for the materials to the board for the purpose of the application for leave, and the applicant is not to request a transcript of the hearing unless the court believes that a transcript is absolutely necessary for the purpose of determining that the leave to appeal application will proceed. In other words, they don't want the applicant to expend the money on behalf of the leave to appeal application unless absolutely necessary.

So this is a good thing. What it essentially says is: don't spend the money on the transcript unless we the court in looking at it think that it's necessary for us to see that to determine that a leave to appeal application should be granted. So this is, if you will, a cost reducer for the typical applicant at this stage. In other words, you might make a leave to appeal application, lose, and in that particular case, if you haven't got the transcript, you're not out the considerable amount of money in many cases for the production of the transcript.

So I think that the approach that is taken here is quite rational, is beneficial for all parties included, particularly the applicant. I would remind the members of the Assembly that this particular initiative is being brought before the Assembly with the support of the court because they see it as advantageous to the administration of justice and access to justice. I do believe that the amendments as currently drafted accomplish that.

I would ask the Assembly to vote against the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, although I know that he is well motivated in bringing this forward, and I do appreciate the opportunity to have further discussion regarding it. I think what we currently have does the trick.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister for his comments. I agree with him that the one purpose of Bill 19 is to rationalize the procedures and to bring in common standards. That's a good thing. Yesterday in my remarks on the bill, in fact, I quite clearly recognized that and supported that part of the bill. That's a good thing. I also note that the minister is making a serious attempt to make the whole system work better. There's no question in my mind that that's what the minister is trying to accomplish.

That being said, I'm still not totally persuaded that the amendment in the bill, which denies the availability of transcripts at the time of preparation of the leave to appeal application, would necessarily cut costs. If the court is the one that has to determine whether or not the transcript is needed, someone has to go to the court to hear that from the court. You increase the number of frequency of visits by the lawyer to the court by this procedure, in my view, not reduce them. Lawyers representing you in a Court of Appeal is not something that's without cost. That in itself, I think, has the potential to increase costs. It won't necessarily, but it has the potential to increase costs rather than reduce them.

As I said, if you don't legislate that ability to have access to a transcript out completely, you then leave it to the discretion of the parties seeking the leave to appeal as to whether they, he or she or it, want to attach a transcript to the leave to appeal application. To me that leaves, certainly, the possibility open that one could save costs if one so chose to or that one could spend money on getting the transcript but then have the opportunity to save money by reducing the number of appearances before the Court of Appeal because you don't have to go to the Court of Appeal to determine whether or not you would need a transcript.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 19, Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 19 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 15
Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution
Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is a very important bill, and I feel that it's a privilege to be part of this process. The highlights, as I see it, are that this amendment will change the terminology of the act from "Children Involved in Prostitution" to "Sexually Exploited Children," improve legal services to apprehended children or youth, improve privacy measures to protect apprehended children and youth, and expand access to voluntary treatment for young adults up to the age of 22. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for her efforts in the original Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act and again now with amendments to increase the potential to meet the intent of the original PCHIP.

The amendments are largely improvements, but in general I want to say that they do not deal with prevention, increasing penalties for perpetrators, or increasing services for children who are sexually abused in their homes or communities. There are ongoing concerns that PCHIP criminalizes children who are themselves the victims of a crime. I know that PCHIP has been most effective in the cases of addictions. With drugs, children are often unable to recognize or react to their situation. Pimps and other adults may use drugs to control children, and PCHIP, I know, can pull children out of that fire.

Looking first at the name change, I think it's very positive. This continues to shift public consciousness and is closer to reality. It reflects the fact that children are exploited in other realms than just the street. Previously the name implied that children can make choices of this nature. However, this new title misrepresents this bill. Inclusions of the terms "sexual abuse" and "sexual exploitation" into the text of the act is a valuable step that recognizes the reality of these children's situations; however, the title of the amended bill is misleading. The intention of this bill is not and will not be the protection of all sexually exploited children but, rather, a small subset, I would say, of sexually exploited children. Children who are exploited in their homes and their communities will not be protected by this act.

While the name change is likely well intentioned, it is not accurate. However, I believe the name change will have an impact on how the act is implemented. I understand that the previous program made clear that unless there was direct evidence of prostitution, services could not be accessed under the act. There are many children who are sexually exploited, however, who are not engaged in prostitution as we know it. So we could be helpful in cases where the victim does not think they are being sexually exploited, say a 12-year-old who just thinks that, well, dad loves them in a special way.

I think with the existing enhancement act in a case like this the child would not get secure services. The name change implies changes to the existing practice and that specific secure services might be provided in the case that I just mentioned, for a specific reason. On the other hand, I think under the old act there were specific, almost black and white criteria to work with. So with the name change I'm wondering if it could open up to some confusion.

Again, PCHIP focuses on apprehending the victim, not the offender. It has some token punishments for offenders, but the Criminal Code offers much stronger sanctions. At its core this act still apprehends and confines children who are being sexually exploited through prostitution, so there's a danger of this further criminalizing and ostracizing an already vulnerable group of individuals who should be able to access services without first being apprehended. We need to focus on those preying on children as well, but this is difficult to control since the criminal aspect, I understand, is handled federally.

My concern, other than apprehending the victim, not the offender, is also that we're not looking at preventative steps here. It is widely documented that the majority of children involved in prostitution have been previously sexually abused. This act makes services available after the situation is already very severe. Better services for children, families, and communities early on would increase the chance of successful intervention. Given that PCHIP does indeed infringe on civil liberties by imposing that secured care without charges, this could be a cause for concern. The publication ban is a real improvement; so, too, is making legal representation fall under the jurisdiction of the children's advocate much better than the legal aid approach.

I do think that anybody receiving secure services under this act should be entitled to due process; that is, a judge should determine if there is sufficient cause for secure in the first place, and second, there should be a requirement for some sort of service plan to be presented and approved by the court. Too often, I think, we take action and then we take too long to figure out what the plan should be, what the resources should be, and what steps are going to be taken in terms of the crisis that we're dealing with.

The Child and Youth Advocate roles in this amendment, again, I think are really good. I appreciate that that change has been made from the other approach with legal aid.

Now, I know that some social workers see this legislation as being about saving kids' lives, but some other workers in the system tell me that kids under PCHIP seem to run back to the street over and over again, that true success is far and few between. I think what the program tries to do is to link the youth to a job, school, work, home, and to some community integration, and it's difficult because these young people find the lure of money hard to ignore as the alternative, seemingly, is poverty for a number of years till they get on their feet. It's not surprising that the program is most effective when you just catch somebody who's starting out in prostitution as opposed to those who are more into that culture. How much better we could do if we had dedicated programs to help the sexually exploited before they turn to prostitution.

These amendments will extend services to youth beyond the age of 18 in order to provide better supports during the transition into adulthood. Services past the five days are voluntary and include such things as addictions treatment, counselling, health services, and training. Service providers have largely approved of this step, and I'm hearing good things from the community in terms of the pleasure or delight with the increase in the age range. The struggle is the same whether one is 17 or 18, but at 18 they become criminally liable. The increase in age range is good news, but I'm wondering: will they be criminally liable if they seek services?

If services and treatment that are voluntary are funded for those over 18, this is really a positive thing because we need to provide services to kids beyond 18, when there's a real benefit to a youth, and being told that we can't because of the youth's age just doesn't make sense. If we truly want rehabilitation and the youth to have a chance for positive change in their life, we can't just say: "Well, too bad. You're 18 today, so you're on your own."

I really need more clarification on that last point: increasing the age beyond 18 so that youth can continue to receive services into early adulthood. This sounds really good because often youth who reach the legal age of 18 are not emotionally or mentally mature enough to deal with many factors because of varying things that have happened in their lives. So offering support and protection to age 23 I think is a wonderful thing. But I understand that this is for individuals who have an open file with Children's Services. That's something I would really support, but I'm wondering: what if they've never had a child welfare file? Would we then apprehend legal aged people up to 23? That would be a slippery slope, I think, but good for some. So I need more explanation there as to what criteria would be followed to determine who is covered and who is not.

I'm wondering if there have been any implementation reviews of PCHIP. Does the government know if it works? I believe that there is an urban/rural difference in how this act gets used. I understand that in Calgary and Edmonton there are specific workers who work in this area and have the ongoing support and training and connections, but I believe that rural workers do not get assigned in the same manner, meaning that there's sort of a jack-of-all-trades approach. What happens in the rural areas is that unless you have a working knowledge of the act through experience, perhaps you tend not to use it and go with what you do know.

The existing act is very black and white, so unless the youth was involved in prostitution, you could not use the act, meaning that any other sexually exploited youth had to be dealt with under the standard legislation. Do we have any information on the effectiveness of this program? I also wonder who actually implements the act. I know that there are some private services that are contracted to perform some or all services under the act. In terms of results, the community approach; that is, supporting kids in their own home, I know is generally seen to be very effective. I believe Catholic Social Services has a big role providing services under the act, but I'm not sure of that. I have been told that region 6 has two workers dedicated in this area.

Another question is that I understand that this act is one of three that links apprehension with service provision. The other two are Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, PCHAD, and to some extent the Drug-endangered Children Act. However, this act differs from PCHAD in that the individual being apprehended and confined is him or herself the victim of a crime. So it's unclear how successful this program will be in terms of real numbers. There's no information in the annual report as to how many individuals have been apprehended or have received services, nor how many perpetrators have been arrested or charged.

I know that drug trade and addictions are fuelling sexual exploitation. It's hard to tell if PCHIP is driving the sex trade underground or if technology is doing it. Those who intend to perpetrate will always try to be one step ahead of us, and this shift was happening before PCHIP was ever enacted. Law may or may not have an impact, and the Internet is a new factor. Apparently, johns are getting organized and warning each other about police stings and so forth. The ICE team, the integrated child exploitation team, is another effort to curb illegal activity.

My understanding is that presently the police charge the youth. I'm wondering: is that correct? If so, I would like to suggest that maybe if we had a team approach, an assessment team similar to CART, the children at risk team, assessing to take the onus off the police, that might be a better way to go. Presently, I believe, the kids have to disclose they are prostituting where a team could assess, and the disclosure would not be required, perhaps. In most cases I can't see a young person disclosing. I think that when they take a look at where that might lead, they might be inclined not to disclose.

I'm wondering also: can parents use PCHIP? I think that it's important to take a look at the role of parents and their responsibilities and their desire to do the best for their children. That leads me to wondering if there is any arrangement that we could have between PCHIP and PCHAD. Probably not because one is Children's Services, and I believe the other one is AADAC. However, it seems to be that most working youth do have addiction issues, and maybe there should be some consideration there.

Overall, again, I want to say that it's a privilege to be involved in this process because this is so important. The sexual abuse and exploitation of children is a critical problem, and we as government and community leaders must do everything in our power to prevent abuse and to provide the supports and services needed to make sure that Alberta's children are safe and secure. So I appreciate the intent of Bill 15, and I'm happy to support these amendments. I look forward to getting some of my questions answered.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be brief because I think when I was speaking in second reading that I answered a lot of those questions that the hon. member has asked.

I want to reiterate that this particular piece of legislation and the amendments that we're bringing forward did not come from the government. When I happened to be the Minister of Children's Services, I put together a symposium about a year ago November because I thought it would be a good time to see what was happening in the act: if it was working, what we needed to do. So at that particular time we brought many, many people together in the field; that is, social workers, people who had worked on the street with these kids.

We even brought some of the kids who had been apprehended under PCHIP to this particular symposium. In fact, Mr. Chairman, we had about seven children there. We asked them if they would like to come, and they said yes, that they felt it was important for us to hear their story. When they were speaking very eloquently and telling their story in their own words with swears and everything, there was not a dry eye in the house, and every one of those children that spoke at this particular symposium – and there were girls and boys – indicated how PCHIP had saved their lives.

I can tell the hon. member that currently we have apprehended 770 children under this particular piece of legislation. I can tell you that the social workers in this province, the police in this province, and kids who have been apprehended under PCHIP like this program. In fact, Mr. Chair, it was to the point where the children were calling the police and telling them what corner they were going to be at so that their pimp didn't know – but the police knew – so that we could apprehend them and take them into a safe house.

The member talked about dealing with perpetrators. We deal with perpetrators. The Crown will go in once a charge has been laid with two charges: one under the PCHIP and one under the Criminal Code. Their hope is always to get a conviction under the Criminal Code because of the sanctions, and of course then you have a criminal record. But if they have to, they will take a conviction under the PCHIP, and yes we've had convictions under that particular piece of legislation.

A lot of the things that the hon. member talked about were and can be services under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that that particular piece of legislation that was brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, when he did a review of the old Child Welfare Act, is a wonderful piece of legislation, being watched right across the country. In my time in the Ministry of Children's Services, I can tell you that it was one of the highlights on the successes that were seen under that particular legislation.

She also talked about due process. That due process comes from the judges. It's the judges that determine if the child is apprehended on a voluntary component or if we have to apprehend them. The judge makes that decision.

Does this legislation work? Absolutely, Mr. Chairman. It's been watched all over the world. I've fielded questions all over the world. I always believe, if a particular piece of legislation is working, in going to the people that it's affecting, and the kids have told us over and over again that it is. It was the kids that talked about extending it to 22, very similar to what the Member for Calgary-Buffalo recommended when we brought forward the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, about extending those services till 22.

The rural and urban issue. All of the workers are trained. We're well aware of the issue of child exploitation, and it's not just confined to the big cities.

I can tell you that the name change is what the kids wanted. They found that when we talked about prostitution, they were unwilling or unable to – they felt that they were being segregated, and they had asked us to change the words to sexual exploitation. That also encompasses much more than prostitution because sexual exploitation covers many, many things. While I have a great deal of love for the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, because it was my piece of legislation, and the acronym PCHIP, it was time to change it, get into the year 2007.

We're excited about this piece of legislation. The workers, the Kate Quinns of the world, are all very excited about this particular piece of legislation.

The member has asked many, many questions, and I hope I've answered most of them.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to rise and make some comments with respect to Bill 15. I wanted to say at the outset that I think that Bill 15, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2007, or PCHIP, is a good bill, and we will be supporting it. It introduces some components to the current act that greatly augment the service delivery and the effectiveness of protection for children.

It does so in three ways. It strengthens privacy regulations by ensuring that no child or guardian can be identified if they have come under the attention or care of the ministry. Previous privacy regulation would only be applicable during legal proceedings. Second, it changes the immediate point of contact for the children during detention from legal aid to child and youth advocates, who are better trained to deal with the issues that might arise from such situations, and the bill extends the age at which children can continue to receive services provided through the ministry from 18 to 22. That, I think, Mr. Chairman, is one of the strongest elements of the bill, and I would congratulate the government for taking that step. I think it's a very positive step given that there's no cut-off point at which a child becomes an adult in reality other than arbitrary dates that are set around legalities. The extension of services represents a strong component in the recovery and protection of those children who are abused.

Mr. Chairman, I have a constituency in which prostitution, drug-related issues are a serious and ongoing concern for the community. I think that anything that can deal with this in a compassionate way and particularly by focusing on people who are just entering into this kind of lifestyle is a very positive step. I think much tougher laws are needed to deal with the kinds of situations that give rise to this. Certainly, there's a close relationship with drugs, and the community, I think, is very aware of that, and the community has taken very strong and clear positions with respect to this issue.

The whole question of pawnshops came up at a large public meeting in Alberta Avenue the other night. It was a meeting to deal with some planning proposals in the Norwood and Alberta Avenue area and the Eastwood area, and there were nearly 400 people at that meeting. A big concern was the whole question of pawnshops and the relationship of pawnshops to crime and break-and-enter crime. That, of course, is connected to drugs, and the drugs are connected to the prostitution, and all are connected to bad housing and absentee landlords.

So there's a complex mix of problems that the community is struggling to deal with, and I commend the community for the work that they have done and are doing. It's a beautiful community, Mr. Chairman. It has many beautiful older homes dating from after the First World War, has beautiful tree-lined streets. It's close to downtown, and it has a major commercial strip on 118th Avenue that has enormous potential, so this is a community that has a great deal going for it. Lots of young families are moving in, but they don't always stay because of the activities in that community relating to prostitution and relating to drugs and some of the break-and-enter criminal activity as well.

The community is very united around this question, and they need support. I think whatever we can do to strengthen the supports for people to keep them from getting involved in prostitution and also by taking stronger steps against drug houses, stronger steps against people who would exploit children and women, and even matters like traffic circulation or dealing with pawnshop licensing in the area: all of these things are part of the solution. I think that this act, this bill, can also be part of the solution for that community.

Mr. Chairman, 10 to 12 per cent of those involved in street prostitution are children, and 85 per cent of children involved in prostitution were sexually abused prior to becoming involved. What really concerned me when I started looking into this matter a bit more is that the average female gets involved at the age of 15 years; the average male – and there are a number – at 17 years. I believe that there are steps that can be taken – and this is part of the solution – to eliminate or reduce this problem for our communities.

I want to say that there's a real concern in the community about the attitude of police with respect to this issue. Many times people in the community have heard the answer from the police: they have to go somewhere. So we've seen examples of people who are homeless, for example, being picked up on Whyte Avenue and dropped off in this community, and that's not acceptable.

Mr. Chairman, if, in fact, we care about people and we put the proper supports in place, the proper programs to keep people out of prostitution, and we take a hard line on people who have been involved in supporting that trade and the drug trade in our communities, we can eliminate it, I'm convinced. I think the conventional wisdom is that you can't really eliminate it. You can only move it around. Well, the people in my constituency have had enough, and if society and the police cannot eliminate it, then they are taking the position that it's somebody else's turn, and they're not going to put up with it anymore.

I know that there are some members, both in Edmonton and in Calgary, who have similar sorts of problems, and I want to recognize the work that's been done over the past number of years by some of those members as well.

This is something that can be dealt with. It's unacceptable that any community should have to put up with it or that children going to school would be harassed or children playing in parks and playgrounds should come across needles or condoms. That's unacceptable. I think it's a duty of all of us, Mr. Chairman, to see to it that this problem is eliminated. I would encourage all members in the Assembly to support this bill as one piece of that answer.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 15, Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 15 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 27, 22, 19, and 15.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 22, Bill 27, Bill 19, and Bill 15. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 28

Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and to move Bill 28, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, for third reading.

This bill, briefly, amends the Provincial Court Act to permit a judge who is more than 70 years of age and who is working full time to be appointed a part-time judge if he or she wishes. The amendments also change how sittings for part-time judges can be scheduled. I've commented at some length in second and at Committee of the Whole with respect to the detail and don't intend to do so again.

I appreciate the comments and support of members who have spoken to this particular bill, in particular the Member for Edmonton-McClung. That member raised a question about whether this bill changes the number of days a part-time judge will sit each year. He also wondered whether the bill makes scheduling easier for the Chief Judge or the assistant chief judges. Bill 28 does not change the number of days a part-time judge is required to sit in each year of his or her term. It merely changes how those days are scheduled. Currently it's two three-month blocks, and this particular amendment will allow a number of days to go into the accumulation of the total of six months. So it's really a facility change for the court. It provides more flexibility to schedule part-time judges as caseload requires.

The member also asked whether amendments to the act might interfere with the ability of younger, qualified people to be appointed to the bench. These amendments do not in any way put younger qualified people at a disadvantage. In fact, the policy that we have in place is that when two full-time judges start working part-time, that creates a vacancy for another full-time judge and so effectively gives rise to an opportunity for a younger qualified person to go to the bench.

The great benefit, actually, Mr. Speaker, in this amendment is to allow judges who are over 70 years of age to be appointed on a part-time basis and retain their experience and knowledge for our Provincial Court and for the benefit of the justice system in Alberta generally. This gives very experienced judges an opportunity to use not only their knowledge in the disposition of cases but, equally as importantly in terms of the overall court, their mentorship for the younger, less-experienced judges who are just coming on.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I believe that those are the questions that were raised by the hon. member and by hon. members. This is a piece of legislation that is supported by the court, and I would ask members of the Assembly to support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to say a few words on Bill 28 in third reading. I thank the hon. minister for such clarity in answering the questions of my colleague from Edmonton-McClung. The effect of this bill is clear. The change will allow for experienced judges to keep working for a longer period of time, and it gives judges who are full-time the choice of a reduced workload after 70 if they so choose. Having more experienced judges in the court system for a longer period of time will only enhance the system, providing more access to justice.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and the hon. Minister of Justice commented during second reading and Committee of the Whole that this change is an improvement on the system of appointing supernumerary judges, who fill in as the need arises. With full-time judges becoming part-time judges and continuing to be of service, we will have more reliable, up-to-date, informed judicial expertise on a longer term basis. If this has the added effect of speeding up the process of justice, then that is an obvious added benefit.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister wish to close?

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

Bill 16
Police Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, I move third reading of Bill 16.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to the hon. minister moving third reading on behalf of the Solicitor General. We have already discussed Bill 16 at considerable length in the earlier stages of debate, second reading and Committee of the Whole. I just want to emphasize that I'm really pleased that in the province of Alberta we're finally moving towards bringing in oversight of our police and law enforcement services. We have long advocated for such an oversight mechanism to be brought in, and we're really pleased that, finally, the government is responding favourably.

During debate, Mr. Speaker, we have highlighted the fact that oversight has to be civilian oversight, public oversight. It has to be a mechanism where members of the public at large are put in charge of evaluating and investigating incidents, you know, involving serious allegations of police wrongdoing. These are not simple mistakes or little inconveniences. These are serious cases where death or injury or, indeed, corruption are brought forward, and those allegations have to be investigated thoroughly and decisively. But also to ask members of the public to be on that investigative unit is the right thing to do.

The police are entrusted to uphold the law and enforce the law, and we entrust members of the law enforcement community to protect us and to protect our interests and our rights. We expect them to be efficient, and we expect them to be effective. But, then, we also expect them to conduct their business with the utmost integrity and with the highest ethical standards. No one arm of that equation outweighs the other arm. They're both equally important: efficiency and effectiveness on the one hand, integrity and ethical behaviour on the other.

So bringing in oversight of police services is a good decision, and it's a good move. It serves two purposes. One, it basically offers the public the assurance that things are going to be investigated, you know, when there is such a serious allegation. Number two, it also, probably, sends a message to members of the law enforcement community that there are consequences, and people should be thinking twice before maybe being tempted to do something that is contrary to the law.

We brought an amendment, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we brought two, but the more important amendment that we brought in required the government to stipulate the composition of the integrated investigative unit. I particularly asked for two members of the public – true civilians, people who are independent, at arm's length, lay people if you will – to be on that investigative unit. The government, unfortunately, decided that it wasn't worthy of their support, but the hon. Solicitor General indicated that that's a commitment of his, to have members of the public sit on the committee.

While I commend him and thank him for expressing that commitment, I still think that a verbal commitment is not adequate and is not binding. I would have much rather seen the composition or the structure of that special investigative unit and who sits on it to be embedded in legislation so it's not left up to the will or the whim of the Solicitor General of the day. I wanted it to be enshrined in legislation so it's basically something that is mandatory, and it has to be done.

As always, Mr. Speaker, members of the Official Opposition struggle with certain dilemmas. You know, we have certain questions that we ask each other: whether, in fact, anything is better than nothing, or do we vote for, like, all or nothing? In this particular case we voted in favour of Bill 16 because it really builds on something we brought forward two years ago in 2005 when we were debating Bill 36, which was also called the Police Amendment Act back then. We brought up the Ontario model, and we brought up true civilian oversight. The government had the opportunity in 2005 but declined to seize that opportunity.

Two years later we're pleased that, you know, we're seeing movement, and it's a positive movement. We're also pleased that the mandate of the integrated investigative unit is not only to investigate cases of death but also to investigate serious injury and to investigate cases of corruption or using police resources inappropriately or things like that. So that is a favourable turn of events.

The other comment, Mr. Speaker – and we've expressed this before – is that many people in the Official Opposition, including my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, have said that the way the integrated investigative unit is invoked or triggered should be, again, something that would be mandatory, would be automatic whenever an allegation of serious misconduct is brought forward. Unfortunately, again, the Solicitor General prefers to have the freedom and the room to manoeuvre, so he or she would make that decision according to what he or she deems appropriate or whether in fact it's necessary. We wanted it to be automatic, we wanted it to be in legislation, but unfortunately the government side did not see the wisdom of accepting that recommendation.

Mr. Speaker, again, it's a step forward. Anything, as we deemed in our caucus discussions, is better than nothing, and this is something that we called for, something that the public is calling for and members of the media are supportive of.

With that, I encourage all members to vote in favour of Bill 16. Who knows? Maybe two years from now we can bring it back and amend it further and make it even stronger. You know, I would like forward to such a day coming.

I'll take my seat, and I call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007. I'm prepared to support the bill in that it amends the act so that an integrated investigation unit can look into complaints about police behaviour and serious incidents involving police.

Mr. Speaker, we believe it's very important that there actually be civilian oversight of police actions, particularly when there are serious allegations against police. You know, we depend so much on the police in our society, and certainly in my communities the police are highly respected and valued. People absolutely depend on the police.

But from time to time there are allegations that the police abuse their authority or get off the track of being there for the community.

Robert Peel said that the police are the community and the community is the police. I believe that. I've seen community policing, in particular in Edmonton, work very effectively, not only in cracking down our criminals but removing ongoing sources of criminal activity and, in fact, bringing about changes within community that give rise to a greater sense of security, participation of the public, and so on.

So I'm a big fan of community policing. I don't think community policing in any way means that police are somehow softer on crime. In fact, what I think it means is that in many ways they confront the crime and criminal activity and factors that lead to crime more aggressively and more proactively rather than just waiting until the crime is committed and try and catch the person who did it. In my view, strong police with close ties to community is important and valuable.

There have been a number of instances in different parts of the province and particularly in Edmonton in the last number of years that have given rise to concern that not all police officers are necessarily playing by the set of rules that we've all agreed on. It's those instances that I think require us to ensure that there's a vigilant nonpolice public body that looks after the public interest when some police may have left the agreed upon path with respect to how they deal with individuals within our society.

There are a few cases. One, I think, was the question of the Overtime sting, where very significant police resources were put into what seemed to be an attempt to catch a critical journalist and the chairman of the Police Commission at the time in a drunk driving offence. Like some members opposite and others, you know, there were concerns. Some politicians were present there, and there is an ongoing inquiry. But that was very inappropriate. In my view, we still haven't got to the bottom of it. I think it would be important to have some independent ability to deal with this, and I specifically think that citizens, nonpolice civilians, need to be at the core of that.

There are other cases of abuse, large and small. There was a case where one officer repeatedly tasered a First Nations man but was related to the chief at the time and was not charged. That is something also that cries out: when police abuse helpless people. It's very rare, thank goodness. Those people need to have somebody in their corner who will protect them.

Recently some members of our staff – one gentleman was aggressively dealt with by police on Whyte Avenue, and there were some slurs involved. Those kinds of things are not as serious as cases of clear misuse of power, but they are still a matter of concern.

So I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that consistent with the principles of the police being part of the community and the community being part of the police and consistent with the goal of making sure that we have the very best police and that they work in the interests of the community and not against the rights of individuals, this is a step forward. But our party has called for a considerable period of time to make sure that there is some more comprehensive, civilian-based, democratic oversight of police activities, including the investigation of serious allegations against the police.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, of course there will always be frivolous complaints or complaints directed against the police by individuals who don't have the public interest at heart. I think we're not particularly looking to support that kind of activity in any way, but legitimate concerns of people need to be investigated properly and objectively.

Mr. Speaker, I think that that's pretty much what I wanted to say. I think that this is a small step towards the kind of oversight that we need, and I look forward to more initiatives along this line in the future. With that, I'll just indicate that we'll be supporting this bill and thank the House for their attention.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to address the Assembly regarding third reading of Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007. I'll be brief given the fact that the hon. members from both the Liberals and the NDs made some very good points regarding the fact that civilian oversight is critical in today's policing world, in the 21st century, and will continue to be ever so important as we move into the future as technology expands into the day-to-day operations of police investigations.

This legislation really does provide for the evolving of the Alberta Police Act. In 2005 a major overhaul of the Police Act was brought before this Assembly and was approved. This act and the amendments that are brought before us today took months and months of work in 2006 of consulting and working in a partnership with police commissions, with the police services, to ensure that this legislation is moving forward on a positive front, looking at best practices from across Canada, internationally and the United Kingdom and, as well, throughout the United States to look at what some of those areas are where we want to ensure that public oversight is in place in investigating serious incidents.

So this legislation really does provide the minister with the opportunity to set in place an integrated investigative unit that will be able to do investigations throughout the province on any police service regarding any serious allegation.

The other component I wanted to just touch on as well. The amendment will allow the minister to direct the lock-up facilities, which include our arrest processing units in both Calgary and Edmonton and in our major centres. We have highly trained and skilled police officers working in those facilities right now, where the legislation that's being provided here will be able to provide for the transfer of those officers back to the front line and be replaced with corrections officers within the minister's department. So, again, utilizing the appropriate skills and the appropriate officers in the right locations and facilities, as the Solicitor General's department did with protecting our courts throughout the province, utilizing sheriffs versus RCMP officers, provides positive direction and provides this government with the opportunity to look at legislation to ensure that it evolves in the future and doesn't remain static.

So I support this bill and would like to call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Does the hon. Deputy Government House Leader wish to close on behalf of the minister?

Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture I am pleased to move third reading of Bill 27.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is my first opportunity to be able to stand up and speak to this Bill 27. The very first thing that jumped out to me was where it says that Alberta symbols of distinction will be decided in cabinet and not the Legislature. I think that is probably an insult to all of us who have been elected to represent everyone in this province. I see no reason why this has to be decided behind closed doors. I would like to know exactly how many ethnic representations of nationalities we have sitting in this House, that it can't be discussed here.

Having said that, I would like to speak to the bill. I think it's very important to remember that we are unique as a nation called Canada to have two founding languages and nationalities: French and English. But we must not forget that there were nations here before us, the First Nations of our country, the indigenous peoples of our lands. However, at that point they were separate nations and, to a point, remain so. They are a very important part of the mosaic of the mind of our nation.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak about my French heritage. My first Quebec ancestors on my mother's side of the family were Jean Royer and Marie Targer. He came in 1640, and they were married in 1663. Many, many hundreds of families can trace their heritage from the same group of women that my great-ancestor came from. Both of them were born in France. He was a tanner, and she was a fille du roi, a girl of the king. These young women came at the expense of the king to New France to be a part of creating this new land. We can trace her village back to France, but we can't his. They lived in L'Île-d'Orléans, near Quebec City, and to this day there are Royers living on the lot next to the original housing property. The original house is now a bed and breakfast and is still standing.

One of their great-granddaughters, Marie Giroux, lived from 1756 to 1861, which I believe started the longevity which is on that side of my family. She married Johann Théodore Besserer, an army surgeon, in 1776, and they lived in Château-Richer.

Their son, Louis-Théodore Besserer, was a notary, soldier, politician, and businessman. When he was admitted to the profession of notary, it was noted that he was a man of good counsel, an alert financier, sound and rarely at fault in his judgment, and who quickly won the confidence of his fellow citizens and built up a fine clientele. In the War of 1812 Louis was a lieutenant in the second military battalion of the Quebec City district. He was transferred to the sixth battalion and was promoted to captain. He enjoyed the confidence of the governor, Sir George Prevost, and was entrusted with a number of special civilian missions and established settlers along the portage road between Rivière-du-Loup and the Quebec and New Brunswick border. He received a land grant for his military service and settled in the Eastern Townships.

Now, this is where I can relate to my ancestor. He was a politician, as well, and he represented the county of Quebec in the House of Assembly from October 7, 1833, to March 27, 1838. Although he agreed with the 92 resolutions, he was one of the patriots of the Quebec region who were more prudent and deliberately preferred constitutional methods to rebellion. The difference between Montreal and Quebec mentality showed in their discussions, and it was clear that Louis would not follow Louis-Joseph Papineau in the Papineau rebellion.

He did escape arrest and retired to an immense estate, part of which is Bytown in Ottawa, and to this day there remains a street named after him. He donated vast lands to the bishop for the Catholic Church and the schools.

He was my grandmother Charboneau's grandfather, and she married a Jobin from Pont-Rouge, Quebec, and they came west. My grandfather was a railroad man with the CNR, and that was during the time when it was a prestige and a very high-paying job.

My mother, Florence Antoinette, was born of that union, and there the story ends. My mother, much to her French father's displeasure, married the love of her life, an Irishman named Brennan, and then they had me. So my family started to be the multinational Canadian of modern times. I married a Dutch immigrant, and so the story continues. This is a very, very brief part of my rich French-Canadian history, and I haven't even started on the Irish side, that started at approximately the same time in Canada.

I believe it's very important to remember where we came from, but it's also important to respect all of the nationalities that make up our great country. So we should have all of our symbols to honour and in this case a symbol of the founding culture of our nation.

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 22.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Earlier I stated my objections to the lack of an ethical investment strategy, but I definitely support Bill 22. There has been a tradition within this government of losing or abusing our savings account. Bill 22 would see that wiser investments took place. I credit former Premier Lougheed with establishing and having the wisdom to establish the heritage trust fund. Under the authority of previous ministers who are currently serving in this House, that fund has decreased in value tremendously. In one year it dropped from $13 billion to pretty close to $11 billion because of mismanagement. So with the aim of Bill 22 to improve the accountability and management process, Albertans in general will benefit.

I would hope that in the application of Bill 22 this government would take into account the idea that we have put forward of setting aside 30 per cent of our nonrenewable energies, oil and gas specifically, and come up with a similar situation that we have proposed whereby 35 per cent of the 30 would be saved into the heritage trust fund, which would rise to the sum of $120 billion by 2020. I would hope that this government would see as part of its investment management the importance of setting aside 35 per cent for postsecondary promotion, the idea that we must get rid of our infrastructure deficit, which 25 per cent, according to the Liberal plan, would accomplish, and of course the importance of the 5 per cent that we have proposed for arts and culture, which would grow to an endowment fund very rapidly of $500 million.

So the investment management act is extremely important. It's a welcome first step. The sooner we have ethics as a part of our investment, the better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Others?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a third time]

Bill 19

Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to move Bill 19, the Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, at third reading.

We have had good debate on this bill. I've appreciated the questions from the members as well as the input and support that we continue to receive from all of the stakeholders, including the Canadian Bar Association, the Law Society of Alberta, the judiciary, and, of course, the legal counsel for all of the tribunals and boards which are affected by the legislation. I also appreciate the support of members to date, and I would ask for their further support on third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to say a few brief words – brief – about Bill 19. I'd first like to thank the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for shepherding this bill through the House. He did a very good job, as my friend from Edmonton-McClung has assured me. The Member for Edmonton-McClung tells me that there are no ticking time bombs in Bill 19. It's intended to streamline a number of processes and bring them up to date with current practices. I believe that this bill has been adequately debated in this Chamber. We've looked at it very carefully and believe it is worthy of support as it stands.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to close?

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

Bill 15
Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution
Amendment Act, 2007

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, it's with great pride that I move Bill 15, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to thank all of those people who participated in this piece of legislation and all the children in this province. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 6
Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to move third reading of Bill 6, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

I now ask for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've looked over Bill 6 very carefully. It appears to be just as it claims to be, which is a housekeeping bill, and we'll just let it go as is.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the excellent progress that we made this afternoon, I would like to move that we now call it 6 p.m. and adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 5:53 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 19, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/04/19

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Is the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry to introduce some visitors?

Ms Evans: I am, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce some very special guests that will also join us at the time of the budget. They are seated in your gallery. First of all, may I introduce Ambassador Karel de Beer of the Netherlands. May I also introduce Consul General Hans Driesser and our very own Allan Bleiken, who is our honorary consul general.

Ambassador de Beer is a graduate of the University of Amsterdam. He entered the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 1976, has served in several embassies world-wide and was appointed ambassador to Canada in 2005.

Consul General Driesser received his law degree and entered the foreign service and has served in several important positions, among them being involved in foreign affairs in the Middle East.

Of course, my wonderful friend Allan Bleiken, who resides in Sherwood Park, has done many things for economic development, so he's a perfect partner for this minister.

Would the House please honour and recognize the wonderful guests we have in your gallery, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very dedicated community volunteers from the constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Doug and Brenda Beagle are very active in the community and lend their talents to many worthwhile efforts. Doug is a very busy realtor in central Alberta. In addition, Brenda has a keen interest in the political process and is a volunteer board member on our local constituency association. I've known Doug and Brenda for many years. I would invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it is a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all of my colleagues in the Assembly two friends. The first introduction is a gentleman by the name of John Thornewell. John and I have been friends for many, many years through school and job-related, work-related. Now in later life John gets to sit and watch while we attempt to perform, and I believe that he is enjoying himself, indeed.

Along with John there's a lady, Valerie Nourish. Valerie is from Derbyshire, England, and she is a lecturer in history and heritage. Mr. Speaker, it's her first visit to Canada. She's had a long interest in family history, and she discovered that there were English family relatives here that have settled in the Northwest Territories and another that settled in Alberta, so thanks to the Internet she made contact with John and his family. They're distant cousins.

Valerie and John are here in the gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly on behalf of my colleague for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert a group of grade 6 students from Camilla school in Rivière Qui Barre. There are 49 visitors with us today, and they're accompanied by teachers and group leaders Mike Paustian and Amanda Langford and parent helpers Mrs. Berube and Mrs. Crossley. I'd like all of our guests in the public gallery to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly some constituents of mine who have joined us in the gallery this afternoon. Hon. members, I would like to introduce David and Pat Jamieson, who are spending the afternoon with us. They'll be here for question period, and then they're also coming back to witness the budget speech.

Members may be familiar with an organization in Medicine Hat, Medalta Potteries, a historic site. David Jamieson is one of the individuals, in my opinion the major individual, who is responsible for the establishment of the Friends of Medalta and the restoration of this national historic site.

I'd ask them both to rise and receive the recognition of all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have guests to introduce today. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 35 students and three teachers and parents from the Rich Valley school, which is located in my constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne. Accompanying them today is a guest, Lorne Olsvik, from the council from Lac Ste. Anne county. Most of you knew Lorne in his former days as the president of the AUMA. He's here to join his favourite niece, Mackenzie, with the Rich Valley school. I'll ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly my assistant Peter Pilarski. You see, today Peter is leaving and moving on to a new and productive job with the chamber of commerce here in Edmonton. Peter is one of the most hard-working people I've ever had work with me. The chamber's gain is for sure my loss. I'd ask Peter to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly and a fond farewell and best of luck.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 15 enthusiastic students from the Kneehill Christian school. They are here today to learn about how the government deals with the many challenges of the fastest growing economy in the country. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Ms Terri Miller, along with parents Mr. and Mrs. Ron and Dolores Reimer, Mr. and Mrs. Lester and Flora Reimer, Mr. and Mrs. Andy and Bev Mandel, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne and Arlene Penner. I'd ask them to rise in the members' gallery and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been looking to see if my guests have arrived. They left at 7 this morning. I'm going to introduce them in case they may be in one of the galleries.

Mr. and Mrs. Don and Doreen Miller from Carmangay are coming up for their first time ever. Don and Doreen have farmed their whole lives. They were families of homesteaders in the area. He was also my Scout leader as a young guy. His wife came from England to nurse in Carmangay and retired a few years ago as the director of nursing, and I don't think she's regretted a day in her life that she has lived along the Little Bow River with her husband, Don, raising their three kids. I'm most pleased that they've made the trip up here. They're going to take in the budget later. I would wish that everyone here would give them a warm welcome.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of workers at the Palace Casino who are currently on strike. They're here today on the 223rd day of this long and arduous strike. These are hard-working Albertans who simply want a fair and safe workplace. They're forced to be on the picket line in part due to this government's failure to protect workers' rights. They are Brian Clelland, Brenda Campbell, Elaine French, Hellen Shiloff, Barbara Billingsley, Hazel Jorgensen, Jeremy O'Haver, Menar Ibrahim, Joan Harvey, and UFCW 401 representatives Christine McMeckan and Don Crisall. I would now ask that these individuals rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and the Assembly three bright student leaders. They are members of either the incoming or the outgoing executive of the University of Alberta Students' Union.

Led by long-term student leader and president Samantha Power, the 2006-2007 executive has been one of the most effective and active student unions in a number of years. This year's students voted overwhelmingly in favour of a historic universal bus pass that will make the cost of transportation much cheaper for struggling students. Mr. Speaker, this executive ran a strong campaign for accessible and affordable education for all postsecondary students by advocating an effective tuition rollback and serious student loan reforms. Internally they were highly successful in achieving greater input into the classroom experience through projects like mid-term professor evaluations. I would like to thank the outgoing executive for their dedicated service and enlightened leadership and wish them the very best in their future endeavours.

Samantha Power is joined today by members of the incoming executive, who were elected in early March to their respective positions. My congratulations and best wishes to them. I'm sure they will be carrying on the good work of the student union as they embark on their exciting year. I will now ask that they rise as I call out their names and for members to hold their applause until each has been introduced: Samantha Power, outgoing president; Michael Janz, incoming president; Steven Dollansky, incoming vice-president external. They are now up on their feet. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my honour and my pleasure to introduce my constituent Kevin Pizzey. Kevin is a teacher, a representative from the ATA, and a member of my board. Kevin is in the members' gallery. I'd like him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very dynamic woman that lives in Lethbridge. Her name is Maureen Calder. Besides being a wife and a mother, she's also chair of the Lethbridge public school district No. 51 and is a very, very strong advocate for children and their education. But, more importantly, while I'm very proud to recognize her, she has led in the co-operation movement that's gone on in Lethbridge between the public and the separate school boards: very, very good in Lethbridge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, Adolf Hitler said, "Who remembers the Armenian genocide?" and then proceeded to methodically exterminate the lives of over 6 million people. Every year in April we remember these innocent victims on Holocaust Memorial Day. On April 24 of every year Canada and the world recognize another genocide, the first genocide of the 20th century, the massacre of over 1 and a half million Armenian men, women, and children by the Turkish government.

Over 90 years ago my grandparents, Mariam and Paravon Kalagian, escaped the brutal massacre of the Armenian people. Ironically, it was a Turkish family that saved their lives.

While many justly condemned the horrific acts of the extermination that took place, I want to take a moment to thank the Turkish people who risked their lives to protect innocent Armenians from the brutal soldiers and their butcher battalions. My Armenian grandmother survived because of a courageous Turkish family that raised her with love and kindness after her family was murdered.

Mr. Speaker, our world survives these periods of terror because of just and kind people who have a great capacity to love one another. Today I ask everyone to remember so that we might prevent future holocausts. Should another person in history ask, "Who remembers the Armenian genocide?" we can stand up and say: we remember.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Taddes Korris, Speaker's Page

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to participate.

There are a number of young students who assist the members while they are here in the Chamber, and all should be recognized for the fantastic service they provide. Today I rise to recognize one of our Legislature pages in particular. He is the hon. Speaker's page, Taddes Korris.

Taddes is currently completing his final year of high school here in Edmonton at Archbishop MacDonald high school. Taddes does an excellent job of balancing his education with his time here in the House on Mondays and Wednesdays. This is demonstrated through his numerous accomplishments. First, he was selected as a semifinalist from over 4,000 students who applied for the Canadian merit scholarship. After being shortlisted, he was flown to Toronto, where he was presented with a $3,000 scholarship. Shortly after receiving this honour, he was also shortlisted for the millennium scholarship. Following a successful interview, he was made a semifinalist.

Somehow, while making fantastic grades and providing superb service to officers and Members of the Legislative Assembly, he also managed to take the time to fly to New York to audition for Juilliard. Juilliard is one of the world's top-ranked schools for the performing arts. While Juilliard is a fantastic institution, this young man has been accepted into the music program at McGill University, another great postsecondary school in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, while we would like to keep Taddes here in the province, he will not be spending his summer here in Alberta as he is off to Edinburgh, Scotland, to play in the Edinburgh Festival Rehearsal Orchestra.

Please join me in congratulating Taddes Korris on all of his accomplishments. I know he will go on to do great things in life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

National Victims of Crime Awareness Week

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next week marks the second annual National Victims of Crime Awareness Week. Whenever a high-profile crime is committed, the offender's name is the one name that people remember. The victims, on the other hand, often fade into the background, faceless and nameless. This year's theme is It's Time to Listen. Victims deserve to be heard, and above all else they must be treated with compassion and respect.

In March 2006 the Solicitor General and Public Security launched a three-year campaign to let Albertans know that there is someone they can call or programs they can access if they become a victim. Earlier this month the government of Alberta unveiled the first step-by-step guide ever developed in Canada to help victims of crime through the criminal justice system. Work is always being done to ensure that victims who qualify receive some financial benefits. The province is providing increased funds to organizations that support victims of crime. Over the past five years the number of programs supported by the victims of crime fund and the number of victims receiving financial benefits has always increased.

The government of Alberta believes that victims of crime should be heard. We will continue to develop programs and services that ensure that victims, like all Albertans, can live, work, and raise their families in safe and secure communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Baker to Vegas Challenge Cup Relay Race

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to recognize an outstanding Alberta team of law enforcement personnel who will soon be on their way to participate in the 2007 Baker to Vegas Challenge Cup Relay, also known as the Super Bowl of law enforcement competition. The 120-mile relay race, being held this weekend, begins in the eastern Mojave Desert community of Baker, California, and ends in Las Vegas, Nevada. The run itself takes about 20 hours to complete, making it the largest and most unique law enforcement race in the world, with more than 200 teams participating from around the world.

There are two teams from Canada: the central Alberta team and the Calgary team. The central Alberta team consists of 20 runners and three alternates and about a dozen support staff, including Dr. Dennis Ethier. The executive consists of team captain, Constable Scott Lowther with the Lacombe Police Service; assistant captain Special Constable Vanessa Hartung with commercial vehicle enforcement; and assistant captain Special Constable Tina Brackenbury with Red Deer county enforcement. The secretary and chief financial officer is Sheriff Bob Reich with Alberta sheriff traffic enforcement.

The purpose of this highly competitive event is to promote camaraderie, physical fitness, pride, and teamwork, which I believe has already been achieved. It was an honour for me to attend their official team send-off on April 17 in Lacombe. The members have trained for this race with enormous dedication, determination, and commitment while continuing their day-to-day work protecting our communities.

These members are role models for all of us, showing a commitment to healthier lifestyles and a firm dedication as team players. Lacombe's chief of police, Dave Lock, is pleased to have established a very strong working relationship with the Alberta sheriff service, commercial vehicle enforcement, and Alberta special constables and has commented on how encouraging the spirit of co-operation outside their day-to-day operations has been.

Our new and fit police force is making great strides in fighting crime, and the strong bonds of friendship they have established from the north to the south will only serve to strengthen working relationships. We are proud of this team. We must all work together to provide safe and secure communities.

As this is not an easy race and some teams may not finish, I believe our team will do very well. As a good central Albertan I must add that even if we can't win the whole race, at least we'll try to beat Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

First Contract Arbitration

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Palace Casino workers have been on the picket line for 223 days. That's 223 unnecessary days of lost wages and workplace acrimony. And I'm using the word "unnecessary" because this strike could have been avoided if the government had done the right thing and brought in legislation that allows for first contract arbitration.

The Palace Casino workers are only the most recent victims of this government's employer-friendly approach to labour relations. Before Palace Casino there was the Lakeside Packers strike, and before Lakeside there was the Shaw Conference Centre strike. A-Channel workers suffered through a long and fractious battle, as did staff at the Calgary Herald. These were bitter disputes that divided communities and turned colleagues into enemies. It all could have been avoided if this government had done the right thing and protected workers who chose to join a union with first contract arbitration.

Without first contract arbitration there is a disincentive for employers to engage in real dialogue in negotiations with workers. By refusing to implement first contract arbitration, this government takes a de facto pro-employer position at every workplace where workers choose to organize and demand fair wages and working conditions. The lack of first contract arbitration also has a chilling effect on other workers who think that a union could help them gain a living wage or a safer workplace.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is one of only three provinces where workers aren't protected by first contract legislation. This government has given Alberta the distinction of having the most backward labour laws in the country. If collective bargaining is to work effectively, there has to be a level playing field. Surely even this government must now recognize that the labour laws in this province have to change to bring stability and fairness to the workplace.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Everyone in Alberta, outside of this Progressive Conservative government, knows that electricity deregulation has been a huge failure. We've all suffered the consequences. It's a fact.

Alberta farmers have suffered under this government's electricity deregulation experiment. While farm electricity costs in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia have increased only slightly since 2001, in Alberta they have skyrocketed as a result of electricity deregulation. Since 2000 Alberta farm electricity costs have increased by an unbelievable 38 per cent. It's a fact.

Alberta families and business owners have also paid a high price for this government's electricity deregulation experiment. On several occasions the actual posted pool price on the Alberta Electric System Operator website has reached its peak of $999 per megawatt. Consumers are getting ripped off. It's a fact.

We have all been forced to pay a very high price for this government's electricity deregulation experiment. In the past 12 months the AESO has issued several emergency energy alerts due to a lack of available electricity. This has resulted, unfortunately, in blackouts. Despite the government's claims that deregulation has increased their capacity, the Department of Energy's annual report shows that our electricity generation capacity has actually decreased since 2003. It's a fact.

During the Progressive Conservative leadership race the Premier publicly pledged to initiate a review of the deregulation scheme to assess the degree to which consumers have benefited. I sent the Premier a letter asking him when he would unplug deregulation and save Albertans from any further economic suffering. He did not reply. It's a fact.

In the wealthiest jurisdiction in Canada with all our resources we can't even count on a reliable electricity supply. This is due to electricity deregulation. It's a fact.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bill 32 Animal Health Act

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure on behalf of the Hon. George Groeneveld . . .

The Speaker: No, no, no.

Mr. Mitzel: . . . on behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food to rise today and request leave to introduce Bill 32, the Animal Health Act.

The Animal Health Act will repeal and replace the existing Livestock Diseases Act, which was created in 1946. This new act will allow Alberta to better prepare for the outbreak of highly contagious livestock diseases and respond to emergency disease situations quicker and more effectively to protect both animal and human health.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: My intervention was not about the member's ability to introduce a bill. It was about the usage of a certain name.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bill Pr. 1 CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill Pr. 1, CypberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act.

The objects of the centre are to establish and operate an international centre for the co-ordination and advancement of public safety, intelligence gathering, and government response related to the problem of cybercrime such as child exploitation, financial systems fraud, threats to critical infrastructure, and intellectual property and identity theft.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Bill Pr. 2 Crest Leadership Centre Act

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill Pr. 2, the Crest Leadership Centre Act, which provides for the incorporation of the Crest Leadership Centre.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, would you like to deal with an additional motion with respect to Bill 32?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would. I'd like to move that Bill 32 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter dated April 3 of this year. This letter comes from a number of individuals and groups, including John Cross, the Chief Mountain Group, Bagg Creek Environmental Coalition, Chinook Area Land Users Association, Pembina Institute, South Porcupine Hills Stewardship, and the Alberta Wilderness Association. They're all very concerned about the current and the future state of the eastern slopes. They strongly endorse the concept of a pause or a time out for many resource developments occurring now in the southeast slopes of Alberta.

Thanks.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Timberland Investment Loss

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are eager to see real progress on the Premier's promise of more openness and transparency from this government. Yet every time I ask questions of the Finance minister about the $11 million loss in the timberland asset class, I come away with more questions than answers. So I figure it's time to go to the top. My questions are for the Premier. Will the Premier please tell us how the government learned about this situation, whether or not the Auditor General was called in immediately, what recommendations were made by the Auditor General, and when they were implemented?

Mr. Stelmach: The other day they were answered by the minister. If they didn't get clarity on the answers, put it down in a letter to me. I'll get it to the minister. We'll put it down in writing so they have the answers once and for all and will not keep bringing this up every day.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't really expect that the Premier would be able to give them to me today, but I will put them in a letter, and I hope to have those answers from him by next week.

Can the Premier please tell us why this situation was not reported in the Department of Finance's annual report, nor was it reported in the Auditor General's annual report?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite sure that question will also be included in the letter that the hon. member will be sending to me sometime later this week.

Mr. Elsalhy: It'll be a long letter.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. I expect it will be a long letter, and hopefully the answers will be just as long.

Yesterday the Finance minister went to great lengths in this House to explain that the timberland investment is performing very well, having generated $61 million in revenue. My next question is for the President of the Treasury Board. If the investment is performing so terribly well, why did the President of the Treasury Board, the man who controls the purse strings in this province, approve $7 million in supplementary spending to reimburse the various funds?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, one thing the government does and one thing we do with our Auditor General is make sure that our books are balanced, are accountable, and are open. It's kind of ironic that not one of the questions in here comes with the good investments that that department does and the hundreds of millions of dollars that these people make for the people of Alberta. Unfortunately one employee made a mistake and lost money. That's unfortunate.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're going from $11 million in lost funds to many, many millions of dollars in lost revenue in this province because we're not collecting enough on our royalties. On October 28, 2005, Mr. Bary Rodgers, a royalty expert from the Department of Energy, sent a new e-mail updating his colleagues on the ministry's internal royalty review. This e-mail states in part, and I quote: we are not capturing our fair share at high prices. End of quote. Meanwhile, the state of Texas collects a royalty of 25 per cent on oil and gas revenue. How much should we collect in this province in royalties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The items that are quoted by the member opposite are exactly the reason that the Premier of the province of Alberta has asked for and is today receiving information and conducting a review with respect to the royalty structure in the province of Alberta. We have tabled information in this House, public information available to all Albertans. We have nothing to hide, and the review is ongoing.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the review has been ongoing for years, and nothing has been done.

Again to the Minister of Energy. Texans receive 25 per cent royalty for their oil and natural gas. Why do you allow Albertans to collect significantly less?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, a bit of a shotgun approach here with respect to the situation in the province of Alberta. We can pick pieces out of someone's royalty revenue from anywhere in the world, and we do. If we pick a piece out of some information that comes from the state of Texas, please let's compare apples to apples. When this royalty review is completed, it will become very clear that Albertans have been well served by the system, and they will continue to be well served by the system. I will also say that there was conclusion to four separate programs, and the royalties last year saved Albertans $300 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A point of information. The hon. minister is the one that wanted to compare Texas to Alberta, and we fall short in that comparison because we're not getting enough in royalties.

Now, again to the same minister: why does this government insist on collecting only 10 to 15 per cent royalty on oil sands projects after initial construction costs are paid off when over in Texas they're getting 25 per cent royalty?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, there are many, many parts to a very complicated question with respect to the royalty structure. These percentages: if you pick a snapshot anywhere inside of a structure like that, you may or may not find areas where there are lower percentages and higher percentages. The thing is: the y're open, public; the review is being done; and the royalty structure will be well explained to Albertans and will serve Albertans very well in the future.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Royal Alberta Museum Renovations

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years this government has been planning to renovate and expand the Royal Alberta Museum, but now all the hard work, imagination, creativity, and money that has been put into this project has been wasted as architects have been forced back to the drawing board. My question to the Premier: does the Premier show appreciation for arts and culture in Alberta by scrapping plans to turn the Royal Alberta Museum into a celebrated cultural symbol?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again wrong information. This government has not scrapped any plans to refurbish or build a new museum. In fact, we're working feverishly, trying to finish the planning. This is a massive, massive project. It does require great detail in the construction, so we're certainly following up on it. Any other detail in terms of the planning the minister responsible can answer.

Mr. Agnihotri: Mr. Speaker, the Premier claims that his government is open, transparent, accountable. If that is actually true, can the minister explain why senior staff working on the project were directed by this government to keep quiet about the design and delays?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we certainly have not stopped the project at all. We're trying to be responsible. We initially had committed about $180 million to this project. Last fall we added another $20 million to the project. We recognize that the tenders and the amounts are coming up slightly higher than $200 million, and we've directed our people to work within the $200 million budget. Two hundred million are significant dollars, and certainly we're just trying to be responsible and work within the budgets that we have.

Mr. Agnihotri: Well, why didn't you inform the public?

My question to the Premier again. Funding for this expansion was supposed to be a partnership with the federal government. Did the Premier request extra funding from the federal government, their own cousins, to help cover the additional costs of the expansion before cancelling it, or is this another example of this government's firewall against Ottawa?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're talking about cousins and relatives. I'm sure that our cousins in Ottawa are still dealing with the issues, the work left by the cousins of those across the floor, so we'll be debating cousins and relatives for quite a while. But all I can assure you is that we're moving on this project. It's critical – we're into our second century as a province of Alberta; we have such a tremendous wealth of artifacts and good information – so that we give that to the next generation so that they can be equally proud of their province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

1:40 Electricity Line between Edmonton and Calgary

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the EUB hearings into the 500-kV power line erupted in chaos. Hundreds of concerned Albertans became incensed when the EUB told them that oral objections to the 500-kilovolt line would not be accepted. It's no wonder that things got out of hand at the hearings. The lack of due process and fairness at these hearings is staggering. This is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister stand up for landowners in this province whose democratic rights have been trampled by the AEUB's lack of regard for fair process and direct the board to rehear the application on this controversial line?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, I will stand up for all Albertans. With respect to the issue regarding the transmission system in the province of Alberta, the EUB has a very tried, true, tested, and honest process to deal with these issues. This is the first time in the history of Alberta that this has happened. At some points some people do not respect other Albertans, and this is what happened here. There's been, unfortunately, a breakdown of respect at this particular set of hearings. The EUB will deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's this government that doesn't show respect for Albertans.

We do not need this power line. Ordinary Albertans don't want it. It's designed for one thing and one thing only: the export of electricity to the American market. I want the minister to stand up for hard-pressed electricity ratepayers in this province and make sure that this merchant power line, intended for export of power to the United States, is paid for by those who are going to profit by it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the NDP, this government cares for all Albertans – all Albertans. We care for the Albertans in southern Alberta, in the city of Calgary, in Red Deer, and in Grande Prairie that require a robust electrical system that will continue to provide good service to Albertans now and in the future.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if this government cared about ordinary Albertans, it would be concentrating on developing power and transmission for Albertans and not for the American market, which is what this is all about.

I want this minister to stand up and tell the people of Alberta whether or not we're going to burn coal, have pollution, disrupt the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains in this province, and have ratepayers pay, all so that you can export electricity to the American market. Will you put a stop to it, Mr. Minister, and make sure Albertans get the power that they need?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, which one of the 15 questions would he like me to address first? With regard to supplying reliable electricity to the people of the province of Alberta – all of the people – Albertans include industrial ratepayers. They include small-business enterprises, they include the agricultural sector, they include ordinary Albertans that turn the light switches on and off day in and day out, and this government – this government – is standing very firm to supply those Albertans with a reliable electrical system that they can count on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Aboriginal Training and Employment

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Aboriginal entrepreneurs are key role models for our aboriginal youth. To improve economic opportunities for all aboriginal Albertans, we must ensure that educational and financial capital and job skills are ready and available to them. Yet high school dropout rates remain high, unemployment is more than twice the rate of nonaboriginals, and aboriginals are the fastest growing sector in our population. My question is to the minister for aboriginal relations. How will the government bring down the aboriginal high school dropout rate and make sure that all aboriginals get a quality education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for the question because it's an important one. Aboriginals, First Nation, or Métis settlement and Métis nation: they are all part of our solution because our Premier and this government have always taken the approach that Alberta, first, other parts of Canada, second, and then international, third. And I want to reassure this House and all members of this House and the hon. member that, let's be clear: First Nations and the aboriginal apprenticeship programs we've had – I'm very proud to say the largest employer of aboriginals is Syncrude Canada, where over 25 per cent of the workforce is made up of aboriginals. That is a vision and we're looking for others to . . .

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the same minister: what will the government do to ensure that aboriginal entrepreneurial opportunities are fostered in our growing upgrader, pipeline, and oil sands sectors?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, again an important point. Through our strategic economic initiative program there have been 17 partnership agreements signed between industry and First Nations. How many, you ask? Seventeen partnerships, in fact, have been signed. This is real proof that this government has a plan, a plan that is working today and well into the future.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the same minister: what will the minister's department do to increase the way that aboriginal entrepreneurial success stories are celebrated and pushed as role models in Alberta?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, role models are important to all of us. Recently the Premier and other members were at the Chambers of Commerce resource night, recognizing aboriginal award winners that night, and I want to say how proud we all were of the young people and the women and young leaders that were involved and their entrepreneurial spirit. They are role models for all Albertans. We're following that. I've very proud of that partnership with the Alberta Chambers of Commerce and of everyone in this Assembly who did attend that night.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There seems to be some confusion regarding a supposedly Alberta government report regarding new municipal taxation powers. To the minister of municipal affairs: could the minister please explain to this House who prepared the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability report, and what is the makeup of this council?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that the composition of the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability includes the mayor of the city of Edmonton, the mayor of the city of Calgary, the president of the AUMA, and also the president of the AAMD and C. The report was compiled by that council, and that report was presented to us. Let me say that again. The report that was presented to the government was a report that was made up of the recommendations from this council, which represents the municipalities of Alberta and the citizens of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: what is the current status of the report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that the government has received the report. The ministry has received the report. We are going through the government [not recorded] trying to have responses. Today we will have some recommendations in the budget.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is currently some difficulty with some of the microphones in the Assembly. [not recorded] The operator is attempting to find a solution. Okay?

Ms DeLong: Mr. Speaker, does the report provide new taxation powers for the municipalities?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, let me make this very clear. The report does not provide taxation powers. The report has requested the opportunity or tools for taxation ability. So the minister's council has asked for taxation powers from this government for this council to be able to use voluntarily with their own municipalities. This is not something that the government is bringing forward. It is from the minister's council to this government. [The sound system made a noise]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. Taylor: For those about to rock. The minister of municipal affairs looks like he might have been an AC/DC fan in the day. I was just wondering.

Federal/Provincial Relations

Mr. Taylor: Albertans don't want a political firewall around their province. The overwhelming majority of us are both proud Albertans and Canadians. Alberta Liberals share this view. The overwhelming majority of Albertans want a government that defends this province's interests within Canada constructively and practically, not based on some extreme agenda or driven by some tired ideological fetish. Alberta Liberals share this view. It's unfortunate that not all members of the PC government do. [not recorded] To the Minister of Justice. On Tuesday the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development championed the wisdom of the firewall to protect us from Ottawa. Does the government and the minister believe such a firewall is wise?

The Speaker: Questions must come within the ministerial responsibility of a particular minister. If the minister finds such, proceed.

Mr. Boutilier: It would be my pleasure to talk about such nonsense as what the person has just talked about. We're Canadians, proud to be Canadians. But one thing is for certain: we will protect the interests of all Albertans. That's why we are clearly a province separate from every other province, because of this government's great work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of intergovernmental relations, then. As the minister knows, one of the other signatories to the infamous firewall letter that was signed some years ago by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is the current Prime Minister. Now, on this side of the House we already know what's so scary about Stephen Harper, but we're wondering if the minister can explain what scares the government about the Prime Minister.

Mr. Boutilier: You know, on the Flintstones it's called 'boulderdash,' the comments of the hon. member. Truly, our Prime Minister of Canada, Stephen Harper, who comes from Alberta, is a great Prime Minister. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we compliment the Prime Minister for selecting an elected Senator from Alberta, again showing Alberta's leadership to the rest of Canada. I'm very proud of what has happened. To the students here today, they should be very proud of the elected process that we have, coming proudly from Alberta.

Mr. Taylor: So, Mr. Speaker, maybe the minister of intergovernmental relations, then, can explain why the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development would think that we would need a firewall to protect us from Ottawa. Can the minister assure us that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who I hear chirping in the background, is aware that the PC leadership race is over and that he lost?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, that statement and that comment – that dog don't hunt. I would ask the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to talk about the important intergovernmental components of what you're speaking of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Lobbying Government

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Northern Gateway, Living Waters, and Grande Yellowhead school boards and their staff do a great job in Whitecourt-St. Anne and the neighbouring constituencies. The board members believe that under the new legislation these volunteers will have to register as lobbyists before they're allowed to discuss education issues with elected members of this Assembly. To the Minister of Education. The board members feel that this is unfair and want to know what you will do to rectify this situation.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the issue has recently been brought to my attention. I know that the president of the Alberta School Boards Association has also made the case known to the Premier via letter because I happened to get copied on it. Like the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne I happen to agree with the school board trustees.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's not really what I was looking for. I want to know what the Education minister is going to do to rectify this situation.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was kind of giving the member a chance to ask a couple of supplementaries. I know that before the House we currently have the lobbyists legislation. I know that as part of our open and democratic process we've established all-party committees. It would be my suggestion that this would be a good bill that we could refer to one of the all-party committees, and the Alberta school board trustees could make their case to all members.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify this before I go home next week and talk to the school boards. The minister is saying that rather than amending this legislation, the school boards should lobby the all-party committee to change the lobbyists registry. Is that right?

The Speaker: Well, hold on here, members. This bill is slated to come before committee. I cannot recall, standing here, if it's been called yet for committee. We just passed new rules this week, so let's be very careful with what we're talking about here.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I appreciate your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I'm just assuming that it's going to happen.

The Speaker: The question is: what will happen? Sorry to get involved in the debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Judicial System

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in this House the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development stated that he believes that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms means government by the judges and the judiciary. It appears that this government member does not believe that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is here to protect all Albertans and Canadians. He probably thinks that we and the government are at the whim of the courts. To the Minister of Justice: can the minister tell us if, indeed, his government takes its direction from the courts, as his SRD colleague seems to believe?

Mr. Stevens: Well, I'm not sure that it's a matter of policy, Mr. Speaker. But I think it's fair to say that the Canadian system of justice recognizes our courts as independent, and they have a vital role to play in the justice system. The Charter of Rights is one of the fundamental pieces of legislation that is applicable in all of our courts. There is tension within society as people argue about that Charter, and the courts are a very important part of helping us move forward.

Mr. Elsalhy: That was a good answer, Mr. Speaker.

From comments heard in this House, we must ask whether this government is committed to being a part of Canada. There was a comment about the wisdom of a firewall around Alberta to protect us from Ottawa, as was previously mentioned. This is troubling and disturbing when a minister of this government takes a shot at a unified Canada and the Charter, which protects his as well as all of our rights and freedoms. To the minister of international and intergovernmental affairs: can the minister tell us in what direction his government will be taking this province? Are we pursuing an isolationist agenda that separates us from Canada and negates the protections that we're all granted under the Charter?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, let me just say that letters from six years ago reflected at that time what the world was at that time. But I do know that the Minister of SRD and all of this side of the government clearly . . . [interjections] I will finish if one of the Liberal members would maybe listen to what I am saying. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, through you let me say – I'm sure I'll get more time now – that it's very important that we take an approach that we will protect the interests of Alberta as proud Canadians.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister prefers judges who think like him, so he started altering the makeup of the 12 regional judicial advisory committees, trying to turn them into bodies that will do his bidding rather than choosing the most qualified judges. It seems Mr. Harper is trying to Americanize the Canadian judicial system without any checks and balances. He wants to politicize the judiciary, showing contempt for the time-tested Canadian tradition of judicial independence. I'd find it very disturbing if a high-ranking minister of this government feels the same way. To the Minister of Justice again: can the minister tell us if his government is going to change the way members of the judiciary are appointed in this province? Is he going to follow the lead of his federal Tory cousins in Ottawa and erode . . .

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the federal government appoints within this province members of the Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal. Our responsibility is to appoint members of the Provincial Court. I can tell the hon. member and all people listening that we have an excellent process, which is different than the federal process but an excellent process, that's been in place for a number of years now. It involves the Judicial Council. It involves the Provincial Court Nominating Committee. These bodies interview the people who have applied to become judges. There is a list of qualified people that is provided to the government through the Minister of Justice, and it's from that list that we make recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Secondary Suites

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Affordable housing is such an issue in Calgary and across this province. Basement suites have been a source of affordable starter housing for decades; however, regulations across the province have been severely limiting this opportunity. Can the minister advise the House what changes in regulation have been made to help alleviate this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Secondary suite standards were adopted in December of 2006, and those standards basically flowed from the MLA committee, which made recommendations to make more flexible and less onerous regulations yet to have an acceptable protection for the public. If I can use a couple of examples: the flexibility of having a single entrance into a basement suite, more flexibility for fire separation in living units, flexibility in separate heating and ventilations are achieved, flexibility in all requirements because of safety.

Mrs. Ady: For the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if basement suites provide a real opportunity to make a dent in the housing shortage, how many suites would be required to meet this need?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the regulations provide municipalities with the flexibility to address this housing shortage. I want to say that if there's anything that we can do to eliminate or decrease the waiting lists, it is going to be totally positive in nature. For an example: we have approximately 2,400 people in Edmonton that are on the waiting list; we have 2,700 people in Calgary; and we have 2,600 homeless in Edmonton, 3,400 homeless in Calgary. So if municipalities . . .

Mrs. Ady: My final questions are to the same minister. The explosive growth in the city of Calgary and other centres cries out for simple solutions like more basement suites. If these regulations are applied, how many suites would be made available, and how do we make this happen in Calgary immediately?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that this is at the discretion of municipalities. The government of Alberta has given the opportunity for municipalities to look at their bylaws, to look at their zoning, and to look if this could be achievable. When we talk about the assistance of the government, the government has also, as I stated previously, developed a template that municipalities could use to pass these bylaws. If we get any support from municipalities, which I would very much ask municipalities to do to alleviate some of the affordable housing, it would be a benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Industrial Development in the Eastern Slopes

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Rocky Mountain foothills are a network of endangered ecosystems, of which less than 2 per cent is protected from industrial use. A moratorium on new industrial activity in this area is urgently required until an integrated network of protected areas is established. Recently the state of Montana enacted a moratorium on development on the eastern slopes of their Rockies. Why can't our minister of sustainable resources do the right thing and declare a moratorium on new industrial activities in the Alberta Rocky Mountain foothills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the minister opposite asked a question that might involve constitutional issues, and I'm tempted to go on that, but I'll restrict myself to the immediate question. I'm happy to report that we have a land-use framework process under way. The use of public lands and private lands on the eastern slopes is exactly the focus of that. I spent the last three months meeting with all sorts of private-sector groups, environmental groups, other types of user groups, and I'm very confident that by the end of this year we'll have one of the best land-use frameworks in Canada.

Mr. Eggen: Well, I was very interested, Mr. Speaker, to read the hon. minister's leadership platform that said that he would stand firm to protect the mountain parks in the eastern slopes. Four months have passed since he became the person who could actually do something about it, and I'm asking him now: why doesn't he step up to the plate to declare a moratorium now while there's still something left to protect?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the members opposite have never formed government. A hundred years ago, of course, the Liberals that used to sit in this House understood that effective government follows a certain process. This caucus works together to make decisions. I'm proud to be a member of this caucus, and what we decide together, we stick to together.

Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Well, I find that interesting, you know, because there was a moratorium that was declared 30 years ago, when a much more responsible government here in Alberta halted development while conducting a province-wide land-use hearing on the eastern slopes.

Mr. Speaker, the Rocky Mountain foothills belong to all Albertans. It's a place where we go to rest and to re-create ourselves, and we want to stop the cutting of this beautiful place into pieces. Surely, the minister must recognize the thoughtful pleas of thousands of Albertans who want to preserve our foothill region and declare a moratorium until a proper land-use structure is in place. You can do both.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it's very obvious that all the members opposite except possibly the one missing don't want to manage growth like we are. They want to stop growth. That's what this party stands for. Our land-use framework will strike an appropriate and responsible balance between economic growth, protecting the environment, and the social concerns of Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is inappropriate to call attention to the absence of any member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Health Workforce Wellness

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to a StatsCan report nurses suffer significantly higher rates of workplace injuries, stress, and chronic health conditions such as depression and high blood pressure than other workers. Registered and auxiliary nurses in Alberta had to take over 180,000 days of sick leave last year. My questions are to the minister of health. One of the obvious ways to counteract this severe staff shortage in the health region is to improve workplace conditions so fewer staff take sick leave, but in Alberta the number of sick days continues to rise. Why is this situation so out of control?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's actually a very good observation, and I'm pleased to have the opportunity to address it.

As part of looking at the workforce strategy issue, one of the areas we're looking at very closely is those exact statistics. In fact, it may interest the members of this House to know that we lose approximately 560 person-years of nursing to back injury. So one of these workforce strategies could be to purchase appropriate lift aids so that nurses and other health workers would not strain their backs in the course of doing their jobs. We note on looking at the data, for example, that we have an aging and, unfortunately, a weight-gaining population and an aging nursing workforce, which contributes to that. So we're looking very closely at these sorts of issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister. The rates of sick leave more than doubled in the Calgary health region over the last year. Why are the days of sick leave in the Calgary health region so much higher than other regions? Seventeen per cent higher than the Capital health region: why is that?

Mr. Hancock: Well, as I was indicating, Mr. Speaker, we're looking very closely to determine exactly why those situations occur and what we can do. The first place to deal with the workforce strategy is of course to value the workforce that we have, to make sure that our workplaces are safe and that they're places that people want to get up and go to work to. Addressing the specific issues of time loss due to sickness and stress is exactly the important place to start in that process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals have recommended following Saskatchewan's lead by setting up a health employer innovation fund to develop and implement creative retention programs to improve the workplace environment. It sounds like the minister is willing to support that idea and establish a fund like this as a one-year pilot project for Alberta. Is he willing to do that?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe it was last Friday when the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry together with the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology and myself sponsored a workforce summit to bring in stakeholders to discuss issues and ideas like this. We said that we were interested in all ideas that were brought forward. I'd certainly be interested in looking at that one to see how it matches with the proposals that were on the table and the other ideas that we have. It's very important that we value our workforce, that we make sure that we get the highest productivity and the best value from our workforce because that's the best place to start.

Ms Blakeman: It's not happening.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member says that it's not happening. I beg to differ. Our regional health authorities across the province have been very interested in this issue and are looking at ways in which we can deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Watershed Management

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been brought to my attention that members of the watershed planning and advisory councils throughout Alberta are actively working to secure funding in order to accomplish their goals such as taking action to sustain and improve the health of watersheds, including rivers, in Alberta. However, they still rely on continued support from the government of Alberta in order to make this happen. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Will the government of Alberta commit to provide ongoing funding to watershed planning and advisory councils, and specifically in my area for the Battle River Watershed Alliance, to ensure that their work to protect local watersheds can continue long into the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the first things that impressed me most about Environment when I became minister was the involvement of organizations like the WPACs, the watershed planning and advisory councils, grassroots organizations that are committed to work to resolve issues, to plan together at the local level. Our department provided last year, as an example, $1.4 million in direct grants to these councils. Those grants are used to establish watershed councils, to pay for research studies on watershed health, and to work on watershed management plans. I can assure the hon. member that we value their efforts and will continue to do so well into the future. I'd like to also add that we also provide administrative staff to all of these councils to assist them in their work.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the continued involvement and participation of all partners, including First Nations, is vital as watershed planning and advisory councils work towards a full understanding of the ecological, social, and economic needs of Alberta's watersheds. My first supplemental question is again to the Minister of Environment. In carrying out their work, are watershed planning and advisory councils permitted to conduct consultations with First Nations on behalf of the government of Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that we encourage these local advisory councils to engage all stakeholders, and that certainly does include First Nations. I think it's important that First Nations be involved in these advisory councils whenever they possibly can. But I need to point out that consultation with government is a separate process from the watershed councils. So we encourage water councils to work with First Nations and First Nations to do the same, but that does not replace the need for the government to consult with First Nations when it is appropriate to do so.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental question is to the same minister. Can the minister advise members of the House and all Albertans what role watershed planning and advisory councils such as the Battle River Watershed Alliance play in the province's Water for Life strategy?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, these councils are critical in the implementation of the Water for Life strategy. Watershed councils build partnerships within the watershed, set regional outcomes, develop watershed management plans to achieve shared outcomes. For example, I know that the Battle River Watershed Alliance in this member's constituency is working on a water management plan for their watershed and is planning to raise awareness of water issues, including water conservation and water quality. This diverse group of people is a great example of the power of committed Albertans in their own communities taking action to learn about and improve water conditions in their own watershed.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Bonko: This week the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development stated, "There's nothing worse for the environment [or] forests than forest fires." He claimed that every schoolchild knew this. Perhaps the minister needs to go back to school for that. Hamish Kimmins, who is a professor of forestry ecology at UBC, writes that fire is a natural component of the forest ecosystem and stated that the northern boreal forests owe their character and in some cases their entire existence to wildfires that frequently happen there. Parks Canada and the Canadian Forest Service agree. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Is the minister suggesting that these experts are wrong and fires are not a beneficial part of the natural forest cycle?

The Speaker: If that question can fit into government policy, proceed.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, although it does sound like another firewall question. All forestry experts know that fire does contribute to the opening of coniferous seedlings, and there's a natural reforestation process that happens that way. Of course I know that; our forest managers know that. When you have the eastern slopes in the situation they are now, with the lack of age distribution and older forest and now the pine beetle on top of that, you have the potential for forest fires on an unimaginable scope. The question is: does the hon. member opposite want to, quote, let nature take its course and let the whole thing burn, or do we have responsible logging . . .

Mr. Bonko: It's not only experts in academia who disagree with the minister on this matter. His own ministry seems to have a far better understanding than him. For example, from the FireSmart section of the SRD website we also have listed the positive impacts of forest fires as well as the Canadian wildland fire service strategy declaration signed by every single member of the provincial forestry ministry, including the previous minister. It says that using natural and prescribed fire can in fact enhance the forest's ecosystem. With his outburst the other day, the minister was not only going against science but also dismissing his ministry's knowledge.

The Speaker: Again, if it has anything to do with government policy, proceed.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to repeat the obvious: we do under certain circumstances use controlled burns to manage the forest. But I suggest that the member go down to the Crowsnest Pass and talk to the citizens that live in the Crowsnest Pass, towns like Blairmore that experienced what it was like in 2004 with the Lost Creek fire and how it almost burned those communities down. Then let him stand up in here and say: just let nature take its course and burn down those communities.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, there's such a thing as controlled burns as well. Perhaps the member is not aware of that. Parks Canada is using fire to change the base of the forest naturally, removing old and vulnerable pine. Has the minister reconsidered his uninformed dismissal of this natural approach to tackling the pine beetle?

The Speaker: Once again, proceed if you wish.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member opposite did his homework, he would learn that, in fact, Parks Canada is working with the officers of Sustainable Resource Development, forest management branch, on this burn on the edge of Kananaskis and Banff national park. Of course we know this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that as a result of the Calgary health region's new brain injury service model and funding policy changes, the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, or ARBI, will be losing their core funding from the health region. I am very concerned about this situation as the withdrawal of the core funding to ARBI will impact this unique rehabilitation program's financial stability and future. So my question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why did the Calgary health region discontinue funding to the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary health region until last year provided about 26 per cent of ARBI's $1 million annual budget, a little over $400,000. As with any contract over $100,000 in the public sector they're required on renewal to go out with a request for proposal of a public tendering process of the contract. They did that, and proposals were received, including the one from ARBI. They were reviewed by a committee, I understand, made up of brain injury clinicians and financial representatives and others, which recommended, actually, that the contract be awarded to a different entity whose proposal in their view ranked higher than that put in by ARBI. So the contract was moved to the new entity.

In September 2006 ARBI was given notice that the CHR would be giving them an additional six months of funding to mitigate the impact of the transfer and to assist with the transition, and I'm also given to understand that they offered one or two pilot projects that ARBI might participate in. The Minister of Seniors and Community . . .

The Speaker: We'll probably get it in the next answer.
The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, thank you for my second supplemental question. I'll go on to my third. Can the minister provide any indication of how the province will ensure the provision of adequate support services for Albertans living with brain injuries in the future?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to answer the next part of that question that was already anticipated so wisely by the Speaker. The Minister of Health and Wellness and I met with the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured just this past Monday. They said that their contract was retendered by the Calgary health region. My department also has a contract with the same association, an $85,000 contract to fund a community integration program. It's working very successfully with our department. We actually also have undertaken that we will work with them to see if there are other services that they might provide. This is all about caring for those that have brain injury. We want to ensure that we have the best services available. This is an association that's done some great work, and we'll ensure that that's available.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, that's it for me.

The Speaker: Today, hon. members, we basically had 88 questions.

Tabling Returns and Reports (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings today. The first is from a constituent, Robert Halldorson, who is very dismayed by the lack of any kind of rent guidelines or controls. He notes that he makes $14 an hour, double the minimum wage, but he's already spending more than 30 per cent of his income on rent, and he would be joining the increasing number of homeless people if rents go to $1,600 a month.

The second tabling is from a well-known and well-loved constituent, John Zyp, who is writing of some of his experiences in a recent hospital stay, which he describes as utter communication chaos. He describes how his file was lost, surgery dates were changed, and he wasn't notified. He was assigned a case manager who then went on vacation, et cetera. There's quite a long list of things.

The third is from Clyde Freeman from Calgary, who is writing about the anticipated changes to the Mental Health Act. The biggest concern: he believes it would be a human rights violation to involuntarily hospitalize someone who was unable to pay for psychiatric drugs and wants to ensure that people have access to treatment in their communities before we remove them from their communities to receive treatment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Do we have a long list of tablings today? We're going to have a time factor this afternoon, so let's go with brevity, please.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table today a copy of an e-mail that was sent on Monday, April 16. It is regarding the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This e-mail is to confirm that Capital health will be pleased to meet with the Standing Committee on Public Accounts on September 12 this year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Mr. Joe Anglin, demanding greater Energy and Utilities Board accountability and democratic process in public hearings.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today from two members of the Chen family in Wedgewood urging the government to work with the city of Edmonton to ensure that the traffic noise from the Edmonton ring road near their neighbourhood is evaluated immediately and repeated in six months and that if noise levels are found to be exceeding acceptable levels, noise attenuation and reduction measures should be implemented.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a number of Albertans asking this Assembly to support that the accused killer of Joshua John Hunt be tried and sentenced as an adult.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Tarchuk, Minister of Children's Services, pursuant to the Social Care Facilities Review Committee Act the Social Care Facilities Review Committee annual report 2005-2006.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to inquire of the Government House Leader if he could lay out the projected government business for the week we return, which would be commencing on Monday, April 30.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the week that we return after the constituency week, which follows today, of course, on Monday, April 30, is private members' business.

On Tuesday, May 1, under Orders of the Day government motions with respect to Committee of Supply and the Budget Address motions will be on the table, and then subsequent to that, other government business.

Now, on Wednesday and Thursday, May 2 and 3, members will be aware that under the Standing Orders we would be contemplating going into Committee of Supply. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(3) a schedule of Committee of Supply will be tabled, probably, on the Tuesday. So the day before going into Committee of Supply, the schedule will be tabled. But we anticipate that that schedule will include on Wednesday, May 2, the first of the rotation in supply. We anticipate the opposition calling the Department of Health and Wellness. On the second day we anticipate the opposition calling the Department of Energy and the Department of Children's Services. Of course, in each case, should time permit, other government business as per the Order Paper.

Privilege Reflections on a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday there was an exchange in the House which led to a question of privilege, and there was some discussion with respect to that. I'm prepared to deal with this matter today. Considerable time was spent last evening and earlier today in responding to the question.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance raised a purported question of privilege in response to statements made by the leader of the third party, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Questions of privilege are very serious matters and should arise infrequently. This is a serious matter. As it is, the chair will give it the attention it deserves.

The basis for the question of privilege is found at page 638 of Alberta Hansard for yesterday, April 18, 2007. In the preamble to his main question the leader of the third party alleged that the Minister of Finance "has failed to disclose his campaign donations for his PC leadership bid and has broken his own deadlines for doing so." At that point the Minister of Finance indicated that he wished to raise a question of privilege. Undeterred, the leader of the third party engaged in some unparliamentary behaviour when he said, "Bring it on, Mr. Speaker. Bring it on." This attitude does absolutely nothing but lower the respect and dignity of this Assembly.

The leader then went on in the remainder of his 45-second allotment to make another allegation against the minister when he said, "Worse, the minister has continued to fund raise even while preparing tomorrow's provincial budget." His question to the Premier was: "Why does the Premier think it is acceptable for a Finance minister to be seeking financial donations from the very same corporations and individuals who may benefit from his budget?"

Before dealing with the merits of this purported question of privilege, the chair reiterates that the Minister of Finance gave oral notice of his intention to raise a question of privilege during the question and presented his arguments later in the afternoon. Under Standing Order 15(2) written notice of a question of privilege is to be provided to the Speaker "at least 2 hours before the opening of the sitting." However, under Standing Order 15(5) a member may raise a question of privilege "immediately after the words are uttered or the events occur that give rise to the question, in which case the written notice required under suborder (2) is not required." This is what occurred yesterday. Privilege is such an important issue that any delay in raising the matter may serve to deny the request. In this case there is no doubt that the issue was raised at the earliest possible opportunity.

The Speaker's role is to determine whether the matter raised constitutes a prima facie question of privilege. In this case the chair can rely on a similar question of privilege that was raised against the same member by the then Minister of Environment and is found in Hansard for May 28, 2001, at pages 808, 809. It is the Speaker's role to ensure that all members are allowed the greatest latitude to express themselves in line with centuries of tradition attesting to a member's freedom of speech. The fundamental right carries a corresponding duty to act responsibly consistent with the Assembly's rules and traditions.

The general rule in issues of this nature is found in Joseph Maingot's book, Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, the second edition, at page 254, where he states, "Language spoken during a parliamentary proceeding that impugns the integrity of Members would be unparliamentary and a breach of order contrary to the Standing Orders, but not a breach of privilege." This passage was quoted by the chair in the above-noted May 28, 2001, ruling and in a November 17, 1998, ruling on a similar issue, which is found at page 1909 of Alberta Hansard.

In his arguments yesterday the Minister of Finance read from page 76 of the House of Commons Practice and Procedure, edited by Marleau and Montpetit. The passage quoted by the minister was from a May 5, 1987, ruling by former House of Commons Speaker John Fraser. As was the case in 2001, the chair examined that ruling, which is found at pages 5765 to 5766 of the House of Commons Debates.

In that case allegations were made against the then minister of fitness and amateur sport, the Hon. Otto Jelinek, concerning a purported conflict of interest. Speaker Fraser found that while the allegations were serious, they did not amount to a prima facie question of privilege as the member's ability to perform his functions was not impaired.

On that point it is important to remember that despite what the minister argued yesterday, parliamentary privilege is concerned with the rights of members in their capacity as members in their parliamentary work and not in their capacity as ministers. The chair would refer members to Maingot's at page 224 for an elaboration of that point.

In this case the comments raised could have given rise to a legitimate point of order. The chair does not, however, believe that this is a case that falls into that very small category of comments that would impede a member in performing his or her parliamentary duties. As done in 2001, the chair would like to draw members' attention to Speaker Fraser's 1987 ruling, where he made some very good points. One is that the absolute privilege that was extended to members for what they say in the House came about in the British House of Commons "in a different age when things said within that House would probably not be heard throughout the length and breadth of the kingdom." He then said, "Today, as a consequence of television and electronic broadcasting, anything said in this place is said on the street right across this country, and that has to be borne in mind." He also reminded members "to take the greatest care" when framing questions relating to conflicts of interest.

The chair is not unmindful as to what might lie behind these questions, which is to use innuendo to create a certain atmosphere. In some respects this is part of the process of holding the government to account or just plain politics, but as the chair has commented earlier this session, it is unseemly to cast aspersions on members without any specific allegations.

Perhaps one day the leader of the third party will be able to tell his grandchildren what the phrase, "this at least creates the perception of a potential conflict of interest" means. And when doing so, he might want to explain the meaning of these words in that phrase: "at least," "the perception," "a potential," "conflict of interest." Additionally, what does "an enormous cloud over the budget" mean, especially when these words follow "is continuing to fund raise"?

Let me remind all members that all 83 members of this Assembly – and I include the chair – fund raise, whether by selling memberships in their party, accepting donations and tickets for events such as party dinners, or accepting donations in cash or in kind for election campaigns.

Further, it is all 83 members of this Assembly who participate in the debate on the budget, advocate for causes or projects during and outside of the budget process, and finally vote on and approve the budget. It is not the Minister of Finance who presents and votes on the budget by himself. In the narrowest sense – in the narrowest sense – it could be interpreted by some that none of the 83 members of this Assembly may be able to participate in the budget process and vote on the budget estimates.

It is the chair's impression that the recently passed changes to the Standing Orders represent efforts to achieve democratic reform. At the same time and almost in a parallel track this Assembly has been uncharacteristically mired in borderline allegations and innuendo that in the chair's view do nothing to elevate the role of the Assembly with the public. The chair notes that this unfortunate development appears to correspond with the 45-second time limit for asking questions. The chair hopes that the standing committee examining the Standing Orders revisions will inquire to see if there is a correlation.

To conclude, the chair finds that there is no prima facie question of privilege. However, the chair is in no way condoning the comments that were the subject of the purported question of privilege.

The chair sincerely hopes that members reflect on these matters over the constituency week. I believe that we can all do better.

Policy Field Standing Committees

18. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the following members be appointed to the Assembly's four new standing committees:

- (1) Community Services: Mrs. Ady, chair; Mrs. Mather, deputy chair; Reverend Abbott; Mr. Backs; Mr. Flaherty; Mr. Johnson; Mr. Johnston; Mr. Lougheed; Mr. Lukaszuk; Dr. Pannu; and Mr. Shariff.
- (2) Managing Growth Pressures: Mr. Dunford, chair; Mr. Taylor, deputy chair; Mr. Doerksen; Mr. Herard; Mr. Martin; Dr. B. Miller; Mr. Prins; Mr. Rodney; Mr. Rogers; Mr. Webber; and Mr. Zwozdesky.
- (3) Resources and Environment: Mr. Ducharme, chair; Dr. Swann, deputy chair; Ms. Calahasen; Mr. Eggen; Mr. Graydon; Mr. Griffiths; Mr. Hinman; Mr. Lund; Mr. R. Miller; Mr. Mitzel; and Mr. Oberle.
- (4) Government Services: Mr. Cenaiko, chair; Mr. Elsalhy, deputy chair; Mr. Amery; Dr. Brown; Mr. Coutts; Ms. DeLong; Mrs. Forsyth; Mr. Marz; Mr. Mason; Ms. Pastoor; and Mr. VanderBurg.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion. The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in support of Government Motion 18. It's nice to have come to this point and a step closer to establishing the policy field committees and to having them populated by a number of members of the Assembly, including members from all parties.

So I speak in support of Government Motion 18 and encourage my colleagues to support the motion as well.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 18 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we very briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a great and tireless champion of northern and rural Alberta, a constituent of the Peace River area, a councillor for Northern Sunrise county and currently vice-president of the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. I'd ask Mrs. Carolyn Kolebaba to rise and please accept the welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a great pleasure for me to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 15 wonderful students who have come from the Northern Lakes College in High Prairie, the High Prairie campus. They are accompanied by Mrs. Chris Neidig and Dr. Kam Kamnasaran. I'd ask that they all rise – they are seated in the members' gallery – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a notice of advice that due to network contractual obligations, Access television is only able to provide coverage of the Budget Address until 4 p.m. today. Coverage will continue in the webcast of the proceedings on the Assembly website at www.assembly.ab.ca.

Now, in order to prepare the House for the Budget Address by the Minister of Finance this afternoon, the House is recessed until 3:30 this afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:39 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.]

head: Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Prior to moving Government Motion 16, I wish to table the 2007-08 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2007-2008 government estimates.

In addition to these estimates, the Government Accountability Act requires that the government at the same time table the government's business plan and consolidated fiscal and capital plans. The hon. Premier will table the government's business plan, and the hon. Minister of Finance will table the consolidated fiscal and capital plans.

16. Mr. Snelgrove moved:

Be it resolved that the messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2007-08 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates, the 2007-08 government estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion, but shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 16 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the government of Alberta strategic business plan as required under section 7 of the Government Accountability Act. The strategic business plan sets out the government's vision and long-term strategic plan. It also includes the government's three-year business plan, which outlines the goals, strategies, and measures necessary to track results over the next three years. This plan recognizes the challenges that our province faces due to unprecedented growth and our focus on achieving results for today and the future. It captures our five priorities, which are to govern with integrity and transparency, manage growth pressures, improve Albertans' quality of life, build a stronger Alberta, and provide safe and secure communities.

Also being tabled for the information of the Legislative Assembly are business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of the same act.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving Government Motion 17, I wish to table the government's fiscal and capital plans for Budget 2007. The consolidated fiscal plan is required under section 4 of the Government Accountability Act, and the consolidated capital plan is required under section 7.1 of the same act.

Budget Address

17. Dr. Oberg moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, Clem Gerwing, a son of a homesteader, was born in Saskatchewan after World War I. He served as a fighter pilot in World War II, began farming, and started a family. He then moved his wife and children to Alberta in 1963. Five years later he bought a business that sold western boots. Today, well into his 80s, Clem is still active in the business, and his son Tim is the president. The Alberta Boot Company has grown into an award-winning enterprise that supplies boots around the world. Today I am very proud to wear a pair of Mr. Gerwing's boots for my first budget as Alberta's Finance minister. [some applause] I would do higher, but I can't.

Mr. Speaker, this is our government's budget for 2007.

Last year saw unprecedented growth in Alberta. There are 100,000 new Albertans this year, with 57,000 of them coming from elsewhere in Canada. Alberta created more than one-quarter of the new jobs in the country. Unemployment was the lowest in any Canadian province in the last 30 years. Economic growth was the highest since 1993.

Our government must be in sync with this economic climate. This rampant growth presents special challenges and opportunities. Most Albertans feel positive about the quality of life here. However, we know that some people don't feel the benefits of this boom. Many worry that the good times will end in the next few years. This is why we are preparing for the future today.

Under the Premier's direction our government and this budget are focused on five priorities: governing with integrity and transparency, managing growth pressures, improving Alberta's quality of life, building a stronger Alberta, and providing safe and secure communities. To meet these priorities in a roaring economy, we must do two things. First, we must manage our growth in the short term, and second, we must remain fiscally responsible in the outgoing years.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Boot Company also has prepared for the future. It succeeds because it recognizes that its competition is not across the street. It's not in another city or in another province. It is, in fact, all around the world. Like the Gerwings' business, Alberta must judge our success not only against our Canadian counterparts but also our international competitors.

This budget follows that premise. We consider global as well as domestic conditions and then look ahead and move forward. We know where we've been and where we have to go. Our mission here is clear. We will manage growth in a transparent, sustainable, and compassionate manner.

Mr. Speaker, this is Alberta's 14th consecutive balanced budget. We estimate our total revenue to be $35.3 billion. That's down from an unusually strong 2006. We forecast a surplus but a smaller one than in the last two years. We expect Alberta's oil and gas and income tax revenue to moderate. Thus our projected surplus is $2.2 billion. This will drop to $1.4 billion and $925 million in the next two years.

We have the most volatile energy stream of any government in North America. Fluctuating commodity markets and other global factors cannot be controlled by any one government. Energy price forecasting is extremely difficult for everyone. For this year we are forecasting $58 U.S. per barrel of oil, and $6.75 Canadian per gigajoule of natural gas. Our forecasts are near the average of estimates by other organizations. Even so – even so – Mr. Speaker, our surplus may be $2 billion to $3 billion higher. That's why we are introducing a surplus allocation strategy. On the other hand, our surplus could be $2 billion to $3 billion lower than forecast.

Energy and taxes are very strong sources of government revenue. Another is investments, which this year will contribute 7 per cent of our income. Our largest source of investment revenue is the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. We will ensure that this fund keeps pace with inflation. This year we will retain $284 million in the heritage fund's income in the fund itself.

Since 1976 the fund has generated $30 billion in income. This money has funded Albertans' priority areas like health care, education, and infrastructure. Due to exceptionally strong equity markets our investments earned nearly 15 per cent last year. The fund's current market value is $16.3 billion. Our forecasted annual return for the next three years is 8 per cent.

The heritage fund has taken advantage of high-quality investment opportunities at home as well as abroad. Its holdings in Alberta include $700 million in public market investments and $800 million in private equity. This includes infrastructure, real estate, private mortgages, and private debt. About 20 per cent of the fund's Canadian equity holdings and 30 per cent of its private investments are Alberta based. In total about 9 per cent of the assets are here in this province.

Family-run businesses like the Alberta Boot Company succeed by working hard, strengthening their assets, and focusing firmly on future growth. In that spirit we are taking steps to maximize the long-term value Albertans receive from their assets.

First, a new financial investment and planning commission will review the province's savings and investment funds. The commission will recommend ways to ensure that our savings are invested to maximize the long-term benefits for Albertans. Most of these assets will be administered by a new Crown corporation, the Alberta

Investment Management Corporation. This new body will administer – yes, Mr. Speaker – $70 billion in government public-sector pensions and WCB funds. It will be an integral part of the financial services sector in this province.

Second, an independent panel of experts is reviewing our royalty and tax regimes. Public meetings will ensure that Albertans have their say. This open and transparent review aims to strike a balance. Albertans must receive a fair share from the development of their natural resources. Meanwhile, we must preserve an internationally competitive oil and gas system, which supports our continued prosperity. This review should be completed by this fall.

Our third step will involve a thorough review of the Employment Pension Plans Act. This act governs private-sector employee plans. We hope to attract and retain workers and ensure that Albertans are confident about their pension plans. Both employees and employers must be treated fairly, and we need to be competitive with other jurisdictions. Options are going to be presented later this year.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's tax advantage is well known and will be maintained under a Stelmach government. If we had the same tax system as other provinces, Albertans and their businesses would pay up to $4,400 more per person every year.

We also recognize that arts and culture contribute greatly to our quality of life. These sectors add enormous economic value as well. We are encouraging more support for these and other nonprofit sectors. This government values the tremendous contribution of the voluntary and charitable sectors. Mr. Speaker, combined with the federal tax measures, Albertans will now receive a 50-cent credit for every dollar donated above $200. The charitable donations tax credit will jump from 12 and three-quarters per cent to 21 per cent this year. This measure speaks to Albertans' shared values of self-reliance and community spirit and is the highest in Canada.

Postsecondary education is something that is important to all Albertans. To that end, we are increasing the education tax credit for postsecondary students to $600 from $475 monthly for full-time students. For part-time students the increase is to $180 from $143. Mr. Speaker, this will help them or their parents with the students' cost of living.

Along with the indexing of personal tax credits to inflation and the increase to the small-business threshold from $400,000 to $430,000, these changes will save Albertans $179 million this year.

In this budget we will also parallel changes in the federal income tax. This will save Albertans an additional $40 million. Areas affected include income splitting of seniors' pensions, the lifetime capital gains exemption for small business owners and farmers, and an accelerated capital cost allowance for generating clean energy. However, Mr. Speaker, we will not automatically parallel the federal decrease to the oil sands accelerated capital cost allowance. This question will be considered by the independent panel reviewing our energy royalty system. We'll also investigate accelerating capital cost allowances further to encourage the building of environmentally sustainable energy sources, like biofuels, in Alberta.

We will also allocate more resources to enforcing both the letter and spirit of our tax laws. We want to protect law-abiding Albertans from tactics putting our overall low taxes at risk. Certain corporate tax avoidance schemes pose such a risk. Without our intervention, Mr. Speaker, known schemes would cost Alberta $200 million a year in lost taxes. The Ontario shuffle involving interest expenses and the Quebec truffle – yes, those are the names – involving shifting income are two examples of tax avoidance in our global economy. To address this concern, we'll add auditors, increase co-operation with other jurisdictions, as well as amend legislation.

With this budget there's one area where Alberta's tax rate will be the highest in any province, and rightly so. While Alberta's economy has raised incomes, tobacco rates have stayed the same. The disincentive to smoke is not as strong as it once was. This is especially so for young people, who are more sensitive to price changes. That's why we are raising tobacco taxes by 16 per cent. That's $5 on a carton of cigarettes. Our aim is to help discourage smoking. Mr. Speaker, smoking kills. This change takes effect at midnight tonight.

On the expense side our total estimated spending this year is $33.1 billion. Included are substantial increases in both capital and operating spending. This is the price of prosperity in Alberta today.

We are responding to local needs. Our annual commitment to municipalities is $1 billion more than three years ago. [some applause] Thanks, Neil. We are committing $600 million per year to the municipal infrastructure program. A further $400 million comes from the new municipal sustainability initiative. This fulfillment of a commitment by our Premier addresses pressure on local infrastructure. The new long-term funding will help municipalities manage their growth in Alberta's booming economy. Funding will ramp up to $1.4 billion by 2010-2011. That includes incentives for joint planning initiatives and funding for affordable housing.

Another $900 million a year goes to areas like public transit, policing, and water-related projects. Our total capital and operating support to municipalities is $1.9 billion this year. Support to municipalities has increased more than sixfold in the last four years. Mr. Speaker, I said sixfold in the last four years.

Overall, our capital plan is $4.9 billion higher than last year. That's up by 37 per cent and almost four times the per capita average in other provinces. Under our government's three-year capital plan we will spend about $18.2 billion in grants and investments. The plan includes $1.3 billion to cover escalating costs of construction on approved projects.

Mr. Speaker, northern Alberta has been under particular strain. The population growth of our northerly census areas is higher than the provincial average. We are addressing these pressures. For example, in Wood Buffalo the population jumped by almost one-quarter from 2001 to 2006. Our investments of $396 million over three years will cover priority areas, including affordable housing, health facilities, and water and waste-water treatment systems.

We are targeting $679 million, mostly capital spending, over three years to water and waste-water management. Our goal is to ensure a safe, secure water supply, healthy aquatic ecosystems, and a sustainable economy. We will invest in planning, monitoring, and research to improve water management. Municipal waterworks systems will be enhanced. Learning more about groundwater quantity and quality in high-risk areas is also going to be a focus.

Provincial highways, bridges, and resource roads will be improved. We will pave 2,500 kilometres of highway. Mr. Speaker, as you well know, that's almost enough to get from High Level down to Waterton park and back. Some of our projects include ring roads in Calgary and Edmonton, a highway bypass at Milk River, and a new bridge over the Smoky River west of High Prairie.

Albertans will see much-needed new health facilities. The new Queen Elizabeth II hospital in Grande Prairie will serve the growing population in that area. Also addressing health needs in the province are the Edmonton Clinic and the south Calgary health campus as well as other projects such as planning for the Medicine Hat hospital renovations.

There will be 71 new or significantly modernized school projects over the next three years. This includes building schools in Fort McMurray, Cold Lake, and other centres soon to be announced. It also includes modernizing schools like Balwin school in Edmonton and the Ian Bazalgette junior high school in Calgary. Schools in Raymond, Hythe, St. Paul, Lacombe, and other districts and divisions will also be upgraded.

In addition, Education and Advanced Education and Technology will each receive a further $300 million in capital spending. This will be allocated towards future projects. We'll help maintain, upgrade, and build facilities for culture, wellness, recreation, and sport. This includes $280 million over the next two years for the new major community facilities program. This provides grants supporting community public-use facilities. The nonprofit municipal and aboriginal groups operating these facilities contribute tremendously to our quality of life.

A province-wide information technology system for police, a new remand centre in Edmonton, and the opening of the new Calgary Courts Centre are major efforts towards supporting safe and secure communities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on to the operating side of our government expenses. We will spend an estimated $27 billion this year, up 10 per cent from last year. This will address Alberta's combined nearly 7 per cent jump in inflation and population growth in 2006. Three-quarters of our operating spending is in four areas: health, education, advanced education and technology, and assistance to Albertans.

Alberta's health care operational spending, Mr. Speaker, is $10.8 billion. That's up from $4.2 billion 10 years ago, and it's the highest per capita in the nation. Today for the first time operational spending for health will consume 40 per cent of our budget. Last year Albertans received on average for health care almost $10,000 for each baby less than one year old, almost $2,100 for each Albertan aged 15 to 44, and $22,500 for every senior over 85. Our spending increases support regional health authorities, physician services, and assistance with rising prescription drug costs. These increases also support services like public health labs, vaccinations, and ambulances.

This year's increase in education spending supports several efforts, Mr. Speaker. Funding for our small class size initiative is increased by nearly 22 per cent. This allows schools to retain the 2,500 teachers hired over the last three years. Our 9 per cent boost in special-needs student funding will serve 14,700 kindergarten children and 16,200 students in grades 1 to 12 with disabilities. Other spending increases support teachers' professional development, teachers' pensions, accredited private schools, early learning opportunities, and projects to improve schools, the AISI projects.

Advanced education and technology are also vital to building a stronger Alberta. As of this fall, Mr. Speaker, tuition fee increases will be limited to Alberta's inflation rate. On average this will save two-year diploma students $1,600 and four-year undergraduate students $3,800. Our assistance to students goes up by 37 per cent. This supports $95 million in scholarships, bursaries, and grants, $20 million in RESP programs, $116 million in student loans, and $71 million in debt relief. We're also spending $559 million over the next three years on research, innovation, and commercializing technology. That's an increase of 16 per cent. It supports energy, agriculture, forestry, life sciences, information and communications technology, as well as the new science of nanotechnology.

We must, though, never forget the most vulnerable people in our society. Children, seniors, and Albertans in need of assistance will benefit from spending increases this year. Support for child care and intervention goes up by a combined $37 million to $491 million. Funding towards preventing family violence and bullying rises 11 per cent across our partnering ministries, to $46 million. We are increasing supports to the Alberta seniors' benefits and to dental and optical programs. A 15 per cent increase to lodge assistance programs funds 250 more units. Funding to our assured income for the severely handicapped program increases by 18 per cent, to $644 million. Further help also goes to income support clients and to Albertans with developmental disabilities. Over the longer term we are committed to looking at imaginative and cost-efficient ways to assist an aging population. Mr. Speaker, under the Premier's leadership we will examine options in creating an Alberta pension plan. Our goal is to improve benefits available to all Albertans.

Beyond our main spending areas we're launching several other efforts in service of our government's five priorities. Each effort aims to help us manage and sustain our growth and our province. We will develop an immigration strategy to encourage more skilled workers to come to Alberta. A new workforce strategy will be developed to help retain and recruit workers and increase productivity in the agricultural industry. Funds will go towards detecting and controlling mountain pine beetle infestations in our forests. We will boost our prosecution team dedicated to family violence cases and our court services staff. Our contribution towards First Nations policing will increase. More highway sheriffs will be hired to target aggressive drivers and speeders who endanger other motorists.

Mr. Speaker, these are just some of the efforts funded by our government this year. We are addressing the pressures of growth and the price of prosperity in Alberta. Family businesses like those managed by our Alberta boot makers, the Gerwings, need value from their staff and suppliers. That means watching how much they spend and on what and when. This helps them provide the best possible products and service for their ultimate boss: their customers.

We, too, need to manage our expenses. We just can't keep raising our spending at these levels even if strong energy prices and economic growth continue. We must never return to the shortfall scenarios that plagued Alberta in the past. The facts are clear. Hiking our operating spending by 10 per cent, as we're doing this year, can't continue. If we did that, we would have a deficit, and government deficits are illegal in Alberta and will continue to be under a Stelmach government.

In the words of the mildly famous Wainwright bard: we can't get where we're going if we forget where we've been. Albertans haven't forgotten the downturn of the 1980s or the government deficits that followed. We must reduce our spending increases to match Alberta's economic growth. My colleagues and I are committed to holding that line. This requires more disciplined fiscal management. When you make a cowboy boot, you start with the absolute best pieces of leather that you can get. Our approach with this budget is similar. As we work towards managing our growth, we strive for best practices at every step.

We are starting today with four key steps. First, our Treasury Board ministry will review existing government programs. It will identify ways to achieve program goals more efficiently. It will scrutinize government spending to ensure that Albertans receive the best value for their investment. It will also better co-ordinate our planned capital and operational spending. In addition, Treasury Board will explore options towards achieving more cost certainty in capital construction.

Second, there are no plans, zero plans, for in-year increases in operating spending. Potential emergencies like wildfires, floods, and pine beetles will be addressed through our sustainability fund.

Third, we will establish a formula to govern any in-year surpluses beyond our budgeted forecasts. One-third of any budgeted surplus will go to savings and investments such as the heritage fund. The remaining two-thirds will go to capital spending, and of that two-thirds at least half will go to capital maintenance rather than new projects. It's absolutely critical to keep our capital assets in good shape.

Fourth, we will look at ways to address the unfunded liability of public-sector pension plans. This includes teachers' pension plans. One possibility for savings is refinancing the government's portion of the liability at a lower rate. Mr. Speaker, this simple step would save Albertans $60 million a year and a total of $1.6 billion over the term of the liability. This could be extended to the teachers' portion of that liability, saving them money as well. We will discuss other options for pension liabilities also.

In summary, this budget is about managing our growth today as well as ensuring our economic future for tomorrow. We have increased our operational and capital spending to deal with the incredible growth that we are experiencing. Mr. Speaker, this is the price of prosperity. We have also committed to an expenditure management plan and a surplus allocation formula to ensure that taxpayers' dollars are being spent wisely. Lastly, our promise to look at options for an Alberta pension plan aims to ensure prosperity and sustainability for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Boot Company has grown and succeeded in the face of competition from around the world. The Gerwings see challenges as opportunity, and as a government we understand that. As we look to the future, we recognize the great challenges before us. We see them as great opportunities. Our government will build on these opportunities to benefit all Albertans. We will do this with the utmost respect: respect for this Assembly, respect for the land, and respect for the people we are so privileged to serve.

Mr. Speaker, this is the Stelmach government's economic plan for 2007. Thank you. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I beg leave to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that we probably need a week to reflect on the messages that were delivered today, I would move that we adjourn to Monday, April 30, at 1 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 4:09 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday, April 30, at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please remain standing for the singing of O Canada after the prayer is done. Shall we bow our heads.

On this day let each of us pray in our own way for all those who have been killed or injured in the workplace. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. In a moment of silent contemplation may we now allow our thoughts to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered through tragedies, and reach out to the families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll continue with the moment of silence. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a pleasure for me today to introduce His Excellency Smail Benamara to all members of the Assembly. He is the ambassador of the People's Democratic Republic of Algeria.

Just as in Alberta, energy is such an important part of the Algerian economy, with over $75 million per year being exported to Algeria from Alberta. It's my pleasure to introduce His Excellency. I'd ask our honoured guest to rise and receive the warm welcome from the members of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House three very special guests: Mr. and Mrs. Zile Singh, accompanied by Neena Amarashi. Mr. Singh is the deputy consul general of India in Vancouver. He is moving to North Korea as an ambassador for India there. Before coming to Canada, he was the Indian consul general in Herat in Afghanistan. His previous postings were Laos, Nepal, Panama, Finland, Philippines. Neena Amarashi is owner of the IT firm Acrodex. She's from Vancouver. I would like to thank them for coming to the Legislature. They have already risen. I'd ask everybody to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly several people who are closely associated with Alberta's organ and tissue donation program. They're seated in the members' gallery to remind us all of the importance of talking to our loved ones about organ and tissue donation and the positive difference that it can make.

I would ask our guests to stand when I announce them. First, we have Erik Williams. Erik is the program educator for Capital health's Comprehensive Tissue Centre; Tracey Clare, a donor coordinator with Capital health's human organ procurement and exchange, or HOPE, program. We're also honoured to have with us Stephanie Ostrander. Stephanie is the wife of an organ and tissue donor. Her husband, Greg, tragically passed away in December 2003. Through many conversations with her spouse Stephanie knew that Greg wished to give the gift of life. We also have with us Beth Tchir. Beth is the mother of a cornea recipient and an active public advocate for organ and tissue donation. She has seen first-hand the difference that a donation can make to the life of a loved one. All of our guests are standing. I'd like to thank them publicly and ask the House to give them a traditional warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 33 of the very brightest young minds in the entire province. Of course, they reside and attend school in the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, and they are from Duggan school. I'd like them to please rise along with their teachers that are accompanying them today, Mrs. Nancy Adamson Cavanaugh, Ms Bonnie Eliuk, and Mrs. Carlene Wong, and parent volunteer Mr. Greg Randall. They are in the public gallery. If they could please rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Ms Jennifer Harris. Jennifer is actually back in Calgary, which is her home turf, after studying for a PhD in speech pathology in Cambridge, England. I would ask Jennifer to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 61 wonderful students from Mary Hanley school in Edmonton-Mill Woods, who are accompanied by teachers Mr. Steve Bain, Ms Philomena Bruch, and Mrs. Lorraine Williamson and parent helpers Mrs. Cheryl Schneider and Mrs. Susan Stein. I'd like to ask the students and staff to rise and please accept the warm traditional welcome from the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly guests from the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. We have in the public gallery today seven residents from the Ottewell lodge, which is operated by the Greater Edmonton Foundation. They are accompanied by one staff member and also an individual who is gracious enough to volunteer some of her spare time at the lodge. I would now ask them to please rise. They're in the public gallery. They enjoy politics, and this is their first visit to the Legislative Assembly to observe our proceedings. Welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Brent Southwell. Brent lives in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and has been a member of the plumbers' and pipefitters' local 488 for the past 25 years. Brent was seriously injured on the job and has been unable to work since. Despite his injuries Brent continues to play a role in the upcoming May Week and the Arts on the Avenue workers' art show. Prior to his injury he was a volunteer with the Folk Fest for 10 years and has worked on fundraisers for WIN House, the fund for underprivileged children, and the Youth Emergency Shelter. I would ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The next person I would like to introduce is Mr. Gil McGowan, and he is the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour. Previous to this he worked as communication staff for the Alberta Federation of Labour and played a key role in the Friends of Medicare campaigns on behalf of public health care in this province. He has been the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour for nearly two years. He's been outstanding in his role as a spokesperson for Alberta labour. He's been on the picket lines and working behind the scenes to settle labour disputes at Telus, the CBC, Finning, the Brooks strike, and the Palace Casino strike, which is ongoing. He provides dynamic, new leadership for Alberta labour. He's taken a strong initiative with respect to the safety of workers in this province. I would ask all members to please give him a warm traditional welcome.

My last introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Angeline Moellmann. Angeline Moellmann is the wife of the late Grant Moellmann, who was a member of local 720 of the ironworkers here in Edmonton. He was killed near the end of his 42-year career in a fall from a bridge that now bears his name. The city of Edmonton has commemorated his life by dedicating the bridge by the coliseum that goes over the LRT and the railways as Grant Moellmann Bridge. His wife, Angeline, has been a strong advocate for workers' safety since her husband's passing. She is always willing to speak out on issues around occupational health and safety. I would ask that she please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Nicholas Ameyaw. He's the co-ordinator consultant for the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission. He has been working in this role for over 20 years and has done a fantastic job by having sessions across the province to educate people and companies about human rights. I would like to ask Nicholas to stand and receive a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Hazel MacLeod and Marion Eggen. Marion Eggen, I'm proud to say, is my mother, and Hazel is my aunt. Both Hazel and Marion are farm girls, originally from the Vermilion area. Hazel is now retired from her long career as a teacher in Alberta, and she is a proud grandmother with five grandchildren. I think they're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them now to rise, please, and receive this warm traditional welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a delegation from the Professional Association of Residents of Alberta. They are Dr. Kathryn Andrusky, Dr. Trevor Chan, Dr. Milli Gupta, Dr. Kerri Johannson, Dr. Eldon Loh, Dr. Paul Belletrutti, Dr. Jen Williams, Dr. Lanette Prediger, Dr. Jessica Minion, Dr. Mike Kalisiak, Dr. Aisha Mirza, Dr. Hughie Fraser, Dr. Ivan Kropyvnytsky, Dr. Martina Puchyr, and Sarah Thomas. I ask that they please rise to accept the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Darlene Werkman and Francine Willard. Darlene and Francine along with the Palace Casino strikers have been on the picket line for 234 days, thanks in part to this government's failure to put in place labour laws that are fair to working Albertans. Darlene has been a dealer at the Palace Casino for nearly 16 years and is a proud union member. Francine is a slot attendant and has been working at the Palace Casino for five and a half years. Francine originally hails from Montreal but has lived in Alberta for many years. They are joined today by UFCW local 401 representative Don Crisall. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled Dr. Gary McPherson, who will soon receive the Alberta Order of Excellence. Gary is accompanied today by Hazav Man, who is here from Israel on a 39-month working permit. I would ask that the members assembled recognize them.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you have another guest?

Mr. MacDonald: No. I've already made my introduction. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I had intended to introduce a couple of visitors. Unfortunately, they haven't arrived yet. However, I'll take advantage of the opportunity and inform the members of this Assembly that 63 years ago the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills came into this world and is celebrating his birthday, and today he's seated as the Speaker. Hon. members, please recognize the birthday.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll have to check the Standing Orders to see if mentioning the age of a member is permissible.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

International Day of Mourning for Workers Killed and Injured on the Job

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Saturday, April 28, was National Day of Mourning for workers killed on the job. Last year 124 people in Alberta died from job-related injuries or illnesses. The previous year there were 143 who died. While there were significantly fewer deaths than in the previous year, 124 deaths are still too many. One death would be too many.

There are no excuses. Everyone – government, employers, and employees – must do a better job to ensure that Albertans can get to work in full confidence that they will return home safe at day's end. We must educate ourselves and make all Albertans more aware of creating a culture of wellness and safety. We need to help Albertans understand the importance of being our brother's keeper. We must look out for the safety of our fellow workers, providing cautions where appropriate. Finally, we should all accept responsibility to lead societal change and move to a more knowledgeable Alberta attitude about the need for a safer workplace in memory of all those we honour and whom, so sadly, we lost.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to pay tribute to all the workers who lost their lives while pursuing a better life for themselves, their families, and all Albertans. Every day tens of thousands of men and women across the province go to work simply hoping to put food on the table and to contribute to the comfort and prosperity of their families and their fellow citizens. A simple wish, one shared by the vast majority of Albertans. Yet every year too many workdays end tragically in preventable workplace accidents. Not long ago four temporary foreign workers were injured and two were killed on the job in a terrible roof collapse at the oil sands project near Fort MacKay. This dreadful accident has deprived the world of two precious human beings and left behind grieving families, friends, and co-workers.

Compounding this tragedy is the fact that these were not the first nor the last workplace fatalities in Alberta. The price of progress in this province is far too often paid by workers who are often forced by circumstance to work in unsafe environments under unsustainable pressure to do the job faster and more cheaply. With Alberta's economy growing so rapidly, we need to rededicate ourselves to workplace safety. A single life lost is too high a price to pay for a few extra dollars in the public or private purse.

We also must not forget the most vulnerable working population, especially our young people. Parents are concerned when their sons and daughters go north to work in the oil sands sector. Mr. Speaker, one of my sons joined a crew north of Fort McMurray a few months ago, and with only two days of general safety training and no specific safety training for the job he was to do, I was more than a little concerned. I asked him if his job was dangerous. He laughed and said: Dad, the most dangerous thing I do is drive on highway 63. But that did not make me feel better because included among the 124 deaths in the workplace last year were 33 who were killed on our highways.

Many ceremonies took place last Saturday, April 28, the day of mourning. We remembered workers who died because of accidents in the workplace, also through vehicle accidents, and also those who died because of work-related diseases. The stories told by the children and the spouses of those workers left us who were there listening in tears.

This day of mourning is a time for all of us to remember and to give thanks for the talent, dedication, and simple hard work of Alberta's workers. It is also time for us to pledge our commitment to workplace safety and better working conditions for all workers, including vulnerable workers such as young people, single mothers, recent immigrants, persons with disabilities, and our aboriginal population. We need to pledge better support for injured workers and their families and the families of workers who have died on the job. Their sacrifices have made Alberta what it is today. We must honour those sacrifices by taking action ourselves, action that will reduce workplace injuries and protect the working families of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent is required for the third party to participate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last year 124 workers and 20 farm workers were killed at work or as a result of their work. On April 28 Albertans took time to remember these workers and to express solidarity with the families, friends, and communities left mourning. Members of this Assembly will perhaps be acutely aware of this problem because of the recent deaths of Genbao Ge and Hongliang Liu and the injury of four of their fellow workers. Twenty-seven other workers have been killed in the workplace in the first two months of this year alone.

The labour movement and the New Democrats have stood shoulder to shoulder in fighting for policies that protect workers. Despite the carnage year after year the Alberta government has not taken meaningful action. The false dogma of voluntary compliance combined with a serious lack of inspections have contributed to the intolerable levels of injury and death on Alberta work sites. Until the provincial government adopts a zero-tolerance policy for unsafe work sites, these injuries and deaths will continue. The cost in lives and the devastating impact this has on families of killed workers is already far too high.

Mr. Speaker, this government's responsibility goes far beyond saying a few good words once a year. Safe workplaces in Alberta can be a reality. All that is needed is the political will to act.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner and the hon. Member for Edmonton-

Manning have also expressed their desire to participate, which requires unanimous consent.

Supportive Living Project in Jasper

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to congratulate the municipality of Jasper on the sod-turning event we did on April 16, 2007. This event commemorated the development of new, affordable supportive living units comprised of 16 designated assisted living and 21 lodge units.

This was all made possible by a great partnership between three levels of government: Alberta Seniors and Community Supports with a grant of $1,766,500, the Aspen regional health authority, Evergreen Foundation, plus the Yellowhead county, the towns of Edson, Hinton, and Grande Cache, and the municipality of Jasper. Another partnership of this project will be with the Seton hospital. Being connected to the Seton hospital, food and laundry services will be shared, and seniors will be able to age in place.

This is a project that the municipality of Jasper has specifically identified as being important to the needs of their citizens. We know that people who move into this new project will have their health and accommodation needs met, and here's the most important part: while being in their community. We all know how important it is for our neighbours to remain close to family and friends, their support network. It is important for their quality of life, and it is important for our community. That's what makes this announcement so special. Thanks to all involved.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Gary McPherson

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise and recognize Gary McPherson, one of the latest inductees to the Alberta Order of Excellence. Gary is no stranger to members of this Assembly and is a highly distinguished Albertan. He's being inducted for advancing the status of persons with disabilities and building caring communities.

There's no question that Gary has been instrumental in improving the lives of persons with disabilities in Alberta. He served as chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities for 10 years. Since 1998 he has served as the executive director of the Canadian Centre for Social Entrepreneurship in the faculty of business at the University of Alberta. In Gary's words, the centre works to combine the heart of business with the heart of the community through the creativity of the individual. This is an excellent summation of Gary's vision of the potential for our society.

Gary is called upon frequently as a speaker at conferences and public events. His life experiences allow him to speak authoritatively on issues such as health care delivery, home care, disability and sport, volunteerism, and advocacy.

He has received numerous other awards and recognitions for his work in stronger and inclusive communities. He was inducted into the Edmonton and Alberta Sports Hall of Fame for his contribution to wheelchair basketball. In 1995 the University of Alberta awarded Gary an honorary doctor of laws.

Last year Gary participated as a candidate in the Alberta Progressive Conservative leadership race, and Gary added to the debate by highlighting quality-of-life issues and undoubtedly added to the process with his quick wit and humour.

Gary is an outstanding Albertan, and his investiture into the Alberta Order of Excellence is well deserved. Mr. Speaker, I would ask all members to join me in congratulating Dr. Gary McPherson.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Education Week

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 29 to May 5 is Education Week in Alberta. This is a time we traditionally take to acknowledge the contributions of our teachers, our support staff, and our volunteers to Alberta's world-class learning system. Through collaboration and partnerships Alberta's students, whether public, separate, charter, private, home-schooled, or francophone, are benefiting every day from all that our education system has to offer, including a high-quality curriculum.

On April 22 a publication titled Students First made its way into many Alberta homes. This publication illustrates the collaboration that exists in our education system and the positive impact it is having on our K to 12 students. This year's Education Week theme is Innovative, Inspired: Our Future . . . Our Students! Alberta students benefit from an education system that is progressive and engaging. It embraces new technology as a means to deliver Alberta's world-class curriculum.

All across this province students and teachers are involved in Education Week activities. I would like to direct members of this House to the Alberta Education website, www.education.gov.ab.ca, where they can read for themselves the many school activities occurring in their constituencies this week.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all Albertans to celebrate Education Week from April 29 to May 5 and to recognize the teachers, support staff, volunteers, and stakeholders who are making a tremendous difference in the lives of our students.

Thank you.

The Clerk: Oral Question Period.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, we have a member's statement on this side.

The Deputy Speaker: It's 1:30. We'll get to that after question period.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I work with him as much as I can.

Emergency Health Services

Dr. Taft: Vince Motta's tragic death in 2002 was the subject of a fatality inquiry that resulted in 25 recommendations by Judge Manfred Delong on how to improve emergency services and prevent premature deaths. But four years later, after this government has ignored numerous warnings and missed many opportunities for improvements, 18-year-old Jordan Johanson died after waiting 12 hours for surgery on a ruptured appendix. My questions are to the minister of health. In 2003 Judge Delong warned that the health system is in crisis and requires dramatic change, not incremental change, but four years later Calgarians are experiencing a record number of code burgundies and code reds as well as staff and bed shortages. Can the minister explain why so many problems continue to plague Calgary's health system?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we need to focus on the fact that there's incredible growth happening. Since the Motta inquiry I can say that $1.4 billion has been put into expanding capacity in Calgary, and that expansion is happening. There was a thorough review of the findings of the Delong inquiry, and many of the things that were suggested have been undertaken. With respect to the latest incident it's a tragic incident, and the Calgary health authority is looking very closely at what happened and what can be done to prevent that type of thing happening. But it's not fair to say that nothing has happened or that there hasn't been progress. There has been considerable progress in Calgary, and there will be considerably more progress in Calgary.

Dr. Taft: Well, that progress isn't showing up in the emergency rooms and in the hospital wards. Since 2000 the average wait time in emergency to see a doctor has increased by 45 minutes, and the number of patients who leave the emergency room without seeing a doctor is up by about 10 per cent. Given that so little progress has been made to improve health services in Calgary – and by many measures it has been getting worse, in fact, Mr. Speaker – how does this minister explain this government's failure to act on all of Judge Delong's recommendations?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, much action has been taken. Again, the capacity is being increased. There is expansion happening at virtually every health facility in Calgary. A tower is being built beside the Foothills and a new floor on the Rockyview, so it has expanded capacity. Indeed, the Health Link, where people can phone in and get advice instead of going to emergency, has done a lot to reduce the strain on emergency, but it continues to grow. More work is yet to be done.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the public isn't buying that line.

Judge Delong cautioned that unless the Calgary health region makes dramatic improvements, an independent commission should be appointed to conduct a public inquiry – a full public inquiry – into the financing and delivery of emergency health services. To the minister: is it this minister's position that Calgary's health system truly has dramatically improved over the last four years, and if not, why has this government failed to initiate that inquiry?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, all that hon. member and any other member on that side who doesn't understand this needs to do is to take a look at the dramatic increase in services that have been provided to Albertans not just in Calgary but right across the province: dramatic increase in heart surgeries and dramatic increase in MRIs and dramatic increase in services right through the piece. Now, sure, there are still issues to be addressed, and we continue to address them. Capacity issues are being addressed. But to suggest that there has been no progress is patently false.

The Deputy Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall in addressing concerns of teachers the person who is now the current Premier claimed to have "always bargained in good faith," and he said that he wouldn't "prejudice negotiations" on the teachers' pension unfunded liability "before we've even sat down at the table." Yet this Education minister's fumbling attempt to address the unfunded pension liability undercuts the collective bargaining process and deliberately prejudices negotiations. Teachers across this province are feeling used and abused by this government. To the Minister of Education: why has this minister betrayed the words and promises of his own Premier?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, in the budget announcement of last Thursday the government, on behalf of taxpayers of Alberta, initiated an offer of $25 million that will go to new teachers in Alberta.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Liepert: Twenty-five million dollars. If the hon. member has a problem with that, then say so.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education's recent letter to the Alberta Teachers' Association regarding pensions – the one he mentions there – proves that this government's word actually cannot be trusted. Time and again the Premier promised the teachers' pension issue would not be linked to labour negotiations. For example, I quote the Premier from just four months ago. "I would never use such an emotional matter as a bargaining chip in the heat of a labour dispute." To the Minister of Education: did the Premier give this minister permission to break the Premier's promises to teachers?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there is no heat of labour negotiations. This is a good-faith offer. It starts September 1, 2007, and goes until August 31, 2008. If the hon. member is taking the position of the Alberta Teachers' Association and not of young teachers in this province, then say so.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, what's easy to say on the campaign trail is proving difficult for this Premier to deliver. The Premier promised a fair and lasting resolution to the unfunded liability in the teachers' pension plan, a problem that will cost tens of billions of dollars if it isn't addressed now. The Premier promised to separate the pension issue from salary negotiations. He promised to listen to teachers. He has broken all those promises. This government is playing politics with education over the pension issue. The Premier said that he wouldn't, but he is. To the Minister of Education: will this minister do the right thing, withdraw his misguided offer, and sit down in good faith with the teachers?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as part of that announcement we also said that we would be creating a small task force that was going to meet with interested stakeholders to find a long-term resolution to this issue. So, again, I challenge the hon. member: if he wants to deny new teachers and young teachers in this province $25 million in benefits, then say so.

The Deputy Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the government finally released the report from the all-party Affordable Housing Task Force along with their response to it. Having rejected 38 of the task force's 50 recommendations, the Conservatives are clearly saying: everything is just fine here. Well, everything's not just fine. Among the 38 recommendations they rejected was the one calling for temporary rent regulation to protect Alberta's tenants from rent gouging. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, who can't honestly believe that the market will prevent rent gouging – the state of the market is precisely what enables it – why did he and the Premier reject temporary rent regulations today? Do you want people to lose their homes?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I need to say that in the province of Alberta in 1975 we did have rent controls. This government has learned from history that rent controls do not work. When rent controls were in place, what it did do was suffocate the addition of rental units in the province. We've also looked at different provinces in Canada, and different provinces in Canada have the same feeling that we do: rent controls do not work to adjust or to try to deal with the problems of having more rental units on the market.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not having rent controls doesn't get anything built in this province either. The government did accept the recommendation to limit rent increases to one a year, which is a good idea. But because they did it last Tuesday without also instituting temporary rent regulation, many renters woke up on Wednesday or Thursday or came home from work on Friday to find notices of massive rent hikes. Now, if the government had dotted the i's and crossed the t's – and they sat on the task force report long enough that, Lord knows, they had time – you know, this wouldn't have happened. But, no, they just blurt it out in a news conference, don't announce any retroactivity or even an immediate effective start date, bad landlords exploit the loophole, and now they're backpedaling like crazy. To the President of the Treasury Board and Minister for Service Alberta: did he not realize that this would happen?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, what we did learn on this side is that you learn from the past; you don't live in the past. You have to move forward. There is nothing that you can do in a market that will stabilize rents better than build new housing units. The answer is the balance between renter and landlord. Our legislation that will be introduced will be retroactive to April 24. I'm sure the hon. member would like it to go back to 1952.

Mr. Taylor: Actually, no, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't alive back then. Maybe the member opposite was.

Mr. Speaker, I expect that what will come from the backpedaling is that the Conservatives will try to make the one rent hike per year retroactive and then pretend that they never messed this up. But you wonder whether this is just another example of a rural cabinet that doesn't understand and doesn't really care about what city folk go through. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: will this government admit that their ideology has failed the people of Alberta again and institute temporary rent regulations? Everybody, even renters from the city, needs a home.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I do want to say that when we look at the challenges of growth pressures in Alberta, those challenges are in large centres, those challenges are in Fort McMurray, and they are also in smaller centres throughout Alberta. So when we looked at the Affordable Housing Task Force recommendations, we looked at them in the holistic sense of Alberta trying to address the growth pressures of all of Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: First third party main question. The leader of the NDP.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government promised openness and transparency, then turned around and created a bad housing policy behind closed doors. The rent policy of this government has a loophole so big you could drive a Mack truck right through it. Limiting rent increases to one per year with no limit on the size of that rent increase is an invitation to the gouging of renters in this province. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Since the minister has rejected the recommendations of his own task force for rent guidelines but will allow one increase per year, will he tell renters how big an increase in rent the government is prepared to allow a landlord to levy? Is it $250 a month? $500? $1,000? $2,000? Is there a limit, Mr. Minister?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the recommendation to limit the rent increases to one year is to add some stability to renters to give them some predictability on how often rents could be increased. I need to add, also, that this legislation that is being brought forward will, as the Minister of Service Alberta said, be brought back to the 24th of April, when the announcement was made.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. But that won't help renters. We've seen exactly how the landlords are going to respond to this little bit of bad policy by the particular rent increase for the poor woman, a senior, who got a $400 rent hike. Now, her landlord, unfortunately, gave her a $20 rent increase already this year, so he can't do this once you're done with your legislation. But those landlords that haven't given a rent increase this year can give an increase of $400 or $500 or $600 or $1,000, and there's nothing you're going to do to stop it. Why not?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned previously, rent controls do not work. We have had and seen the history. The hon. member from the third party knows that it doesn't work and also that we need to look to the future to make sure that the workers and the individuals that are being brought into our workforce have some place to live and have some place to rent. We do not need to curtail that growth.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, the minister is fairly new, so I'll give him a bit of break, but I'm going to fill him in a little bit. In the province of Ontario, where they've had rent guidelines for 15 years, the construction of new rental units exceeds Alberta's dramatically. In fact, it's risen dramatically while the construction of new rental units in Alberta, where there are no guidelines, has dropped dramatically. So will the minister go back and confirm my statement and come back in the House tomorrow and take back his statement that rent guidelines don't work and implement them immediately?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, it's indeed a compliment when the hon. member from the third party suggests that I'm new. But I need to say in regard to the availability: there are more units available in Alberta every day. They may take different forms of rental units, supported units, condos, but we are dealing with the issue of having affordable housing in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The first question for the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some problems do take a little while to fix, but some can be done immediately. These are, unfortunately, follow-up questions to two weeks ago, when we needed some urgent action, and none has been taken. The municipal sustainability initiative funding is not working. It's a disaster for municipalities. I asked two weeks ago for the town of Taber. They have tenders out for their water treatment plant. This new funding is not going to address it. My question is to the minister of municipal affairs. Will he sit down and work out something for the town of Taber so that they can go ahead with their water treatment plant? The MSIF is not going to do it.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the municipal sustainability initiative has funding that was supported for municipalities. That funding is $400 million.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Danyluk: Four hundred million dollars that is distributed to municipalities on a pro-rated basis of the amount of funding that their ratepayers supported to the education tax. So this funding is going back. Will it solve all problems and all big projects? Probably not. Will it help? Yes, it will.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't address their problems, and it's not even long term. They don't know whether it's one year, five years, 10 years, and there's nothing sustainable or for sure to plan on. It's not acceptable.

The next problem again goes to the town of Coutts. They had a wall put up in their town two years ago. It only took 28 years for Germany to take down their wall, but this government has failed to address it. They need to take the wall down or put the gate back in to access that town. It's economic disaster for them. They haven't reacted. The hon. Premier said that he would respond and get back to us immediately. It's been two weeks and nothing. So my question would be to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. When is this government going to address the problem in Coutts and open up a gate or take down the wall?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the minister of municipal affairs wants to respond to this one.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say: you know what happens? There's too much mayonnaise, the bologna's too thick, the bread is too dry, and of course the milk is too warm. But the municipal sustainability initiative has a 10-year window in it, and that window will be for the addition of $1.4 billion to municipalities. That's $1.4 billion.

Mr. Hinman: Well, that didn't answer Coutts' problem, and I doubt that the government is going to do anything. What the cities are going to get from year to year is for one year, and it's arbitrary. It's not acceptable.

The third one to the Minister of Environment. The Snake River ranch is being cut off. B.C. is going forward, and they are addressing flood control and putting in rip-rap to control the banks before flooding out. This government needs to act. They've failed to act. Are they going to prevent the washout of the bridge and the road, or are they going to let it go by and then spend millions to try and repair it? Will they act for the Snake River ranch?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with this specific instance. It hasn't been brought to my attention. I'll be more than happy to look into it and provide the member with an appropriate answer.

The Deputy Speaker: First main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Safety of Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A fatal accident that occurred at the Canadian Natural Resources Limited's Horizon oil sands project last week has raised serious questions about the safety of temporary foreign workers in this province. Currently it is not required that employers inform foreign temporary workers about their legal rights, and restrictive visas that tie workers to a single employer make it very difficult for them to speak out or to refuse unsafe work. My question is for the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Will the minister implement policies to ensure the safety of all workers, or will this incident be just one of many international embarrassments?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, may I first say that any time we have an injury or a death on a work site is a sad and tragic day. I feel huge sorrow for the families and have sent a letter expressing to the Chinese government my sincere regrets about the deaths of both workers and the injury of the others.

I think it's unfortunate to make an automatic link relative to their placement on this job site in Alberta. We administer the law, the Employment Standards Code, in Alberta the same way no matter what Albertan, no matter what worker is working on a site. There is an investigation that's taking place. We had four investigators and a manager originally, and they are completely investigating the incident.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Internal documents from CNRL provide detailed safety requirements for the construction of tanks on-site and actually raise concerns that wind in the region could pose an additional risk to worker safety. Albertans need to know if safety requirements were followed. Can the minister tell us when the last on-site inspection of the Horizon project occurred and whether or not basic safety standards were met?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the very reason we're doing an investigation. I can neither provide the history of the safety inspections on that site nor on Horizon's work sites at this time. But at such time as we have a complete investigation, gathering all the facts, then we will release it. There has been misinformation provided. For example, there was a suggestion that fall protection is not mandatory for workers on this type of setting, and fall protection is one of the safety standards. So rather than give any bit of information, we'll wait until the investigation is complete and provide it in a very transparent fashion both to the government itself and also to Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The temporary foreign worker program is supposedly in place to address the labour shortage, yet letters from federal union officials show that qualified Albertan workers were available to work on the Horizon project. Local workers have the necessary safety training, professional credentials, and union representation to ensure that the work is done safely and efficiently, but the company prefers to employ temporary foreign workers, presumably to cut costs. This is just one example of how the program is being abused. To the same minister: will this government stand up and support Alberta's existing workforce or continue to promote the temporary foreign worker program, which has a growing record of safety concerns?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in this Assembly I have spoken before on the temporary foreign worker program. It is a federal government program. It is not administered by our government. However, in the labour market opinions that are done before any foreign workers are allowed into the country, there is an analysis that is completed about whether or not there's an availability of Alberta workers to do the job. We believe Albertans should be employed first. All that means is that every Albertan should have an opportunity to work. If a company is able to demonstrate that it was not able to get sufficient workers for a particular job site to do a particular task, then they are successful in receiving an opportunity to bring in temporary foreign workers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Electronic Health Records

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lots of public money has been spent on the electronic health information system, but my constituents have been frustrated by having to repeat filling in forms and providing the same information for various health service providers. It seems like there is a lack of information sharing, that causes inefficient health care operation. My question today is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the state of our Alberta health information system?

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health and Wellness is currently on target with the health authorities to meet the goal of having every Albertan on an electronic health record by 2008. We currently have 17,000 health professionals from each corner of the province now registered and trained to use Alberta Netcare. Doctors, nurses, and pharmacists using Netcare in their practice say that the technology is making a real difference in terms of the quality of care that they're able to provide to their patients. Through Netcare our health care providers have health information at the point of care, when they're seeing each patient in their office, clinic, or in a hospital. In short, we're hoping that those frustrations that the hon. member refers to will soon be over.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the case of my constituent who has been referred by her family doctor to one hospital and a specialist doctor from that hospital referred her to another specialist in another hospital – it resulted in her having to repeat medical tests and being scheduled for surgery at both hospitals. So this has not only caused worry for my constituent but also brings up the question of how our health care's precious resources were used. My question is to the same minister. When can we see something like the personal health care card so patients will not be subject to this inefficient process?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we should be seeing progress even as we speak. The Calgary health region has just brought up a new electronic front end so that tests can be ordered online. The pharmacy information network is up and running, and as I said, we have the goal of having every Albertan on an electronic health record by 2008. That should cover some 75 per cent of lab tests and diagnostics. So it won't at that stage still have everybody on it, but we'll have the level of information sharing that should resolve the type of frustration that the hon. member refers to. More timely patient information leads to better care decisions and better and safer outcomes and a more effective use of the health system, and the purpose of the electronic health record is exactly to reduce that duplication of testing and that extra use of the health care system's time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's public spending on the health care system has surpassed $12 billion – that's 36 per cent of every public dollar spent – a cost-efficient improvement of nearly 1 per cent means that $120 million can be spent on new and better things. So my question is to the same minister. What are you going to do to drive the process of re-engineering our health care operation to make it economical, effective, and efficient for patients and workers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The electronic health record will be the backbone of the re-engineering of the service delivery process. Much of it is in place. There's more work to be done to make sure that the systems work together. We've got the electronic health record, which, as I said, will be in place by 2008. We've established the physician office system programs, and the new agreement with the AMA will help us further that, so even more physicians' offices, with the ultimate goal of all of them being on the system. We have the new clinical information systems, health technology in the regional health authorities. So innovation of technology and the electronic health record and, particularly, being able to share diagnostic results, being able to share health records among service providers are absolutely critical to re-engineering the system and flattening out the increase in the costs of the health system.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Physician Supply

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government recently, finally, removed the requirement for medical students to pay interest on their student loans while pursuing their residency program. Now, we're glad they did so because we've been advocating such a move for some time. Of course, all this does is defer these payments, and what huge payments they are. This mountain of debt deters potential students and imposes additional stress on an already challenging profession. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Will the minister commit to lowering the cost of medical education in Alberta so that students and later residents do not face such a daunting mountain of debt?

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, as we are entering a huge crunch in the development of our province, we have to manage these growth pressures of this huge number of people coming into play. So it isn't one sector of the health workforce that we're going to concentrate our efforts on. We have a co-ordinated strategy that is being developed through three ministries to work on the total gamut of the health workforce strategy and all health care providers.

As it relates to physicians, obviously we have added a number of spaces to the clinical spaces. First-year physician spaces are up to 257 spaces. That's a double-digit increase. We're going to continue to do those sorts of things that help make our postsecondary education system affordable to all classes and all categories of our students and in a co-ordinated, co-operative fashion with the postsecondary institutions.

Mr. Tougas: Well, Mr. Speaker, with so much at stake we need to ensure that our medical students get the best training possible. We can achieve this goal predominantly by the hiring and retention of the very best medical educators. Without excellent teaching, our residents and our undergraduate medical students will not be able to reach their full potential. To the same minister: what, if anything, is the government doing to ensure that the best educators from around the world are coming to Alberta and staying here?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question. Contrary to, perhaps, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who believes that I'm a rural cabinet minister with a very narrow view, we do have a very international view in our department and in our government. We are looking at bringing in instructors from all over the world. We are looking at ways and means that we might be able to actually grow those instructors here in Canada. We're looking at ways and means to incent instructors and physicians, I might add, who are going to be required in this training process, to create those spots. That's all part of the health workforce strategy that is coming forward and in some cases being implemented in different spots right now through the three ministries in government.

Mr. Tougas: Mr. Speaker, there simply aren't enough doctors in this province to go around. The situation is already serious and destined to get much worse. My final question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. The ministry's business plan calls for 148 extra postgraduate medical seats. Does the minister consider this increase to be sufficient to alleviate this critical shortage?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously we want to work very closely with the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology to make sure that there are spaces available for every Albertan who wants to advance their education. But with respect to the seats that we have, there won't be sufficient seats until we've filled the full capacity that we need. That doesn't just come from expanding places in our universities and making it possible for Albertans to get educated here. It means supporting Albertans who have gone elsewhere to get their education, helping them to come back. It means helping others who want to come here find their places. So it's not a simple, single approach to making sure that we get the doctors and other health care professionals we need but a full health workforce strategy, which the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, and myself are working forward and bringing through the process and which we discussed with stakeholders on April 13 to see whether we are going in the right direction or whether we could take this further.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week is held every year in April to recognize the importance of organ donations to improve quality of life for many Canadians. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister bring the House up to date on the state of organ and tissue transplantation in Alberta today?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a very strong organ transplant program, but there's a lot more to be done. Three hundred organ transplants were performed in our province in 2006. The University of Alberta hospital is one of the top transplant facilities in North America and performed 244 organ transplants and more than 1,300 tissue transplants last year. Statistics show that the number of Albertans who are organ donors has increased from 31 per million in 2003 to 41.6 donors per million in 2004, the highest rate in Canada and above the national average of 27.7 million. Regrettably, there are still cases where appropriate matches cannot be found in time to save lives. In 2006 40 Albertans died while awaiting transplants. There's more to be done.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. While there's been some good work going on, the wait is still very long for many individuals. Can the minister tell this House what is being done to reduce the number of Albertans waiting to receive organ transplants?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct. The shortage of organs and tissues for transplant is a longstanding national issue. Over 400 Albertans are on waiting lists to receive an organ transplant, with more waiting for tissue that can restore sight, restore mobility, or improve quality of life. There are factors leading to the need for transplants that we cannot prevent, such as genetics and viruses. However, there are many factors that can be prevented, such as high blood pressure, type 2 diabetes, burns, injury, alcohol and tobacco use, all of which contribute to the need for transplant. Our department is currently working on a number of health promotion activities and initiatives that focus on healthy eating and active living, which will prevent the need for an organ transplant, and we're working on funding for specialized equipment and expansion of programs so that the need to get tissue from sources outside of Alberta is decreased.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. What can Albertans do to increase their awareness and help reduce waiting lists so that more people who are ill can receive this great gift of life?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's something very simple that every Albertan can do. Eighty-one per cent of Canadians have said that they're willing to donate, but only 65 per cent of them advise their families of their wishes. Albertans need to talk to their families about their wish to donate. They should also take the time to sign the universal donor card on the back of their Alberta health care card, as I have done and, I know, everyone of you in this Assembly will have considered doing if you haven't done it already. We need to take personal responsibility very seriously and do what we can to be healthy and prevent injury. We are going to be distributing these green ribbons that I'm wearing. I'd ask members to wear them this week. We've missed organ donor week, but wear them, and have people ask you what you can do, and then tell them: be prepared to donate an organ.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy tabled this document – it's an extensive review of our royalty structure between 2005 and 2006 – in this House on April 16. After reviewing an uncensored copy of one of the reports within this tabling, it is clear that this government is too embarrassed to share the truth on our royalty rates with Albertans. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why was the chart from the Wood Mackenzie report showing that the Alberta government collects less in royalties than six oil- and gas-producing U.S. states censored from the record of this House?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. First of all, we did table the information so that all Albertans have an opportunity to read the information if they feel like they want to read it. There are pieces of information in any report that may be fundamental bits of information that are required for the government's purposes that are not allowed out in public. I'm not embarrassed about any of the information that we have provided. We'll continue to provide the information they require, and we will continue with the royalty review that's being conducted under the auspices of the Minister of Finance.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That certainly was a valiant attempt at an answer.

Again to the same minister: who in cabinet ordered this proof of the government's failure to collect a fair share of royalties to be censored from the public record? Documents were censored from the public record. Why?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in any of those documents that would indicate to anybody that we have not collected a fair share of royalties for Albertans.

I must also add that that was a grand attempt at a question.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, the reason why the minister and this government should be embarrassed is because through section 24 in this report you censored the fact that the province of Alberta collects significantly less in royalties than six states in the lower 48 oil- and gas-producing states. You should be ashamed of yourself. Why did you do that? Why did you censor this document?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the situation is this, and I've explained this to the gentleman opposite on other occasions, particularly just last week. You can take a snapshot of a royalty from any place in the world and compare apples to oranges. The royalty structure in the province of Alberta has served Albertans very well for many, many years, and it will continue to do so. Under this government we are building a stronger Alberta, and the royalty review will prove that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Climate Change

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. If the federal plan to reduce climate change emissions can be best characterized as a total fraud, then our much more modest Alberta plan is at least a total fraud times three. Under this government's mismanagement we will suffer climate change emissions at least 44 per cent above 1990 levels in the next three years, yet it would take a premium of just a dollar per barrel and perhaps a little backbone to achieve absolute reductions. We are living on borrowed time, and I for one refuse to visit the dreadful consequences of inaction upon our children. When will the Minister of Environment do the right thing and put in place meaningful absolute reductions to carbon emissions?

Mr. Renner: You know, Mr. Speaker, I often wonder why it is that those who have all of the answers to complex questions never have to be accountable for actually implementing them.

The plan that we have in place is a plan that makes sense. It's a plan that will create the environment so that in the medium to longer term we will in fact have absolute reductions. We don't make projections that we don't know we can keep. We make regulations and policy that we know we can implement.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, it's perfectly reasonable to make absolute reductions if you have the political will to do so. I refuse to have you saying that. Part of the new federal clean air plan is to impose absolute reductions on noxious air pollutants such as particulates, nitrous oxide, and sulphur dioxide. Again, this government has let the pollution standards in this province slide to the point where we're facing a crisis with respiratory problems and a burden on our health care system. Are we going to sit back, then, and wait for the federal government to salvage air quality in Alberta, or are we going to let the government get ahead of the game for once and put in place provincial measures to realize absolute reductions in toxic air pollution?

Mr. Renner: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where someone is taking something totally out of context and not understanding what he's talking about. The fact of the matter is that in this province we have been regulating the issue regarding pollutants, NOx, and SOx well in advance of anything that the federal government ever contemplated. This legislation, quite frankly, makes more sense to Ontario than it does to Alberta. Alberta's been there, and we'll be ahead of the pack for a long time to come.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, that's just absolutely, patently not true. The federal air quality plan would allow the trading of pollution credits across this country. This is unacceptable and illogical. Particulate matter, sulphur dioxide, and smog must be dealt with where people are forced to breathe polluted air, like here. Will the Environment minister fight to ensure that we will not allow the trading of dirty air credits so Alberta industry can continue to pollute and affect the health of Albertans while we pay for the clean air in Ontario or Quebec? Are you going to allow the trading, or are we going to deal with it here?

Mr. Renner: Well, I think I answered his third question with my second answer, because I indicated to him that we are ahead of the game. We have already been dealing with NOx and SOx. We talked about how we're going to continue to deal with them, and I've also been quite public in the discussions that I've had regarding the need for us to develop a policy around cumulative impact. Mr. Speaker, that policy around cumulative impact is exactly the issue that this member is referring to.

The Deputy Speaker: It's nice to see so much energy that has evolved since the week in the constituency, but perhaps we could tone it down a bit before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Regional Municipal Planning and Development

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sturgeon county is expecting sudden industrial growth within the county partly because of an onset of upgraders and refineries, and recent reports indicate that the county itself will require some $600 million of infrastructure just to support that growth. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: is it expected that the entire capital region now come up with that $600 million to service that growth, which must be serviced because, otherwise, it'll detract from investment and diminish quality of life, or will this bill be footed by the province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that the emphasis really needs to be on planning. We need to have the municipalities working together in regard to planning. We as municipalities need to communicate and collaborate and co-operate together in what's best for the region. In the municipal sustainability fund, what does take place is that it promotes and provides municipalities with the initiative to work together towards a common goal so we don't have the duplication, so we don't have planning going into silos or individual stovepipes. So I want to say that as far as the support for the funding that is necessary, we need to look at it on a regional basis.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I'm glad to hear that the minister is a supporter of planning. In that case, can we expect some mechanism to be in place to support the growth and the management of growth in the region?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I will say that the growth pressures of Alberta are a major challenge for all municipalities. That is why this government is and has looked at the 10-year sustainability plan that adds some predictability to municipalities so that they know the support that municipalities will get from this government, and right now, Mr. Speaker, it has been said many times: ramped up to $1.4 billion per year for 10 years.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In that case, can the minister assure Edmontonians and the entire capital region that a decade from now we will not be feeling some of the growing pains that are now felt in Wood Buffalo?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, the key, as was mentioned before, is to have planning so that municipalities can work together and look towards the future to see how they can plan together for the growth pressures and the growth that's going to take place, not only in one municipality but all municipalities on how they can work together to address those growth pressures.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Major Community Facilities Program

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is more concerned about photo ops than being accountable with taxpayers' money. Although this government hasn't even figured out how to run its current grant programs, that hasn't stopped it from launching another one, the major community facilities program. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture: given that the guidelines for this new program are not yet complete, will this minister inform this House if top Tories will have easier access to the money than hard-working Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, like all of our other programs that are on the Internet and people are aware as to where the money goes, this new program will be the same. We will try to be as equitable as possible to all regions. Certainly, there are dollars that have been identified for the various cities. There are dollars that have been identified for rural Alberta. We're going to try to spread those dollars around right across the province to meet the growing pressures that have been identified across the province.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: why did this government in an election year give its grant department a 66 per cent increase in funding and its Environment department only a 6 per cent increase in funding? Why?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the members opposite would be the first ones to ask us to respond to increasing pressures. Initially they were asking to spend additional monies in health. They're asking for additional money in education. Now, you know, certainly, they're concerned about the additional monies that we are putting to meet the recreational facilities, the sports facilities, the arts facilities that are desperately needed in the province of Alberta. We're responding to those increased pressures to meet those particular needs.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: why is this minister taking so long to table the names of the 43 grant recipients that broke CIP rules? If they have the proof, if they have the information, why don't you table right now?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I am really pleased that the member opposite is environmentally concerned. He's recycling some of the questions that we had a few weeks ago. I indicated that we've got many thousands of applications to go through to be able to pull out those 40 applications that he's alluding to. We are reviewing those, and we are making sure that no mistakes have been made. As I indicated in the past, we don't believe that any mistakes have been made, but we are looking at them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we did 78 questions and answers today, a little short. I attribute that to the excessive enthusiasm that we showed today.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, as we heard earlier in question period through our hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, we are paying special tribute this week to national organ donor and tissue donation. I'd like to take this opportunity to further address this very important issue as it touches many of us, our families, our friends, and our loved ones here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we do have some of the best transplant technology in the world. We have some of the most highly skilled surgeons and some of the most prestigious transplant hospitals, yet there are never enough organs. Did you know that approximately 15 out of every million Canadians are organ donors, putting us as a country in the bottom half of all the countries in the western world where transplants are performed?

Giving the gift of life is a phrase often heard when speaking about organ donation, but the full consequences of what that really means may not be heard. Organ donation is a sensitive subject for family members to discuss, Mr. Speaker. We are reluctant to acknowledge that sudden, tragic deaths occur and could possibly touch our families. If a sudden tragedy does happen, grief can be overwhelming, and the opportunity to discuss organ donation has passed.

Many donor families have shared that the act of donation helps to ease their grief. Nothing can replace the loss of a loved one, Mr. Speaker, but donation often allows family members to feel that something positive has resulted from their tragedy. Organ donation is the ultimate example of sharing one's gifts that will make the difference between life and death for someone else.

So on behalf of my colleagues I urge all Albertans to discuss organ and tissue donation with their families. But more importantly, as our hon. minister said, please sign the organ donation declaration on the back of your Alberta health care card. Don't leave your families to make that hard decision for you in a time of tragedy. Plan ahead, as your gift can save a life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Provincial Education System

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the first day of Education Week, a time for all of us to reflect on the importance of education in our lives and how we as public servants can improve the quality of education in our province. We are very fortunate in Alberta to enjoy the talents of some of the most talented and committed teachers, administrators, and support staff in the entire world along with students of remarkable gifts and potential. Put Alberta kids into a learning environment, and you guarantee that Alberta's future prosperity and social growth will lead the world for years to come.

However, the education system in Alberta remains far from ideal. Teachers and the public face millions of dollars in debt thanks to the unfunded pension liability. Parents are paying out of pocket for more and more items that were once considered essential, threatening the education prospects of children of poor and middle-class families.

My private member's bill, the School (Restrictions on Fees and Fund-raising) Amendment Act, 2007, will alleviate some of this pressure on Alberta families. Children in Calgary are forced to wait for hours on end because there aren't enough school buses. Schools are literally falling apart because they've been forced to wait for years for maintenance. How can we expect students to learn when they're facing these very difficult obstacles?

Mr. Speaker, we could and should do much more for education in this province. We should start a publicly funded school enrichment program. We should institute a junior kindergarten program to help children learn during those very critical years. But most importantly we should treat education not as an expense to be tolerated but an investment to be celebrated.

The world we live in faces huge challenges. Challenges can only be met by the most creative and well-educated minds. Mr. Speaker, we need to invest in education today. We need to invest wisely, with a long-term vision for the future of education in this province, with stable, sustainable funding and a commitment to the principles of public education. A quality education for all now and forever: that would sure be a legacy to build for tomorrow's Alberta. It's an ambition we should measure when Education Week returns this year and every year thereafter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget betrayal. The Premier and his new/old cabinet appointees' honeymoon ended on budget day, Thursday, April 19, 2007. On that day any hopes that Albertans had that the new government would be demonstrably more transparent, more accountable, or more responsive to the needs of Albertans were dashed. With the exception of Edmonton Mayor Mandel, the budget was roundly condemned by many former Conservative supporters for its lack of vision, for its lack of a savings plan, for its patriarchal, red-taped, strings-attached micromanagement of municipal affairs. This was a short-sighted Conservative grasshopper budget of play now, pay later rather than a provincial Liberal ant budget of planning and setting aside for future needs. It appears that the only plan this government has is to worship the market by buying a ticket on its roller-coaster ride of boom and bust.

The greatest disappointment of all for the increasing number of Albertans living a hand-to-mouth existence one paycheque away from the street was the Premier and his municipal affairs minister's rejection of the Affordable Housing Task Force's recommendations of the need to place at least a temporary inflationary cap on rents and consider slowing down the pace of condo conversions. By refusing to implement any of the main recommendations other than meaningless tinkering which limited unscrupulous landlords to only gouging at whatever rate they wish annually as opposed to every six months, this government proved what many Albertans already knew, that besides having no plan, it is devoid of a social conscience.

Albertans want a government that is inclusive, that listens, that acts on its findings for the benefit of the many, not the profits of the few. Unfortunately, Albertans will have to wait until the next election to select a government with a conscience and a vision.

head: Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give notice of a Standing Order 42. It states:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly refer Housing First, the report of the Alberta Affordable Housing Task Force, and the government's response to that report to the Growth Pressures policy field committee constituted under temporary Standing Order 52.01(1)(c), with specific directions to consider and report back on the advisability of introducing temporary rent stability guidelines.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Bill 33
Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh
Water Authorization Act

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 33, the Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will allow the village of Ferintosh a safe, secure, and long-term water supply by building a regional waterline that would transfer water from the town of Bashaw.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 33 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased today to table five copies of a publication titled Students First. This is filled with positive stories about our kindergarten to grade 12 education system. This publication is being distributed across the province and is a small sampling of the collaboration that exists between our education system and has a positive impact on our K to 12 students.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter signed by 224 Albertans.

The letter warns of a looming housing crisis, notes the rapid increase in rental costs, and calls for rent guidelines and rent stability.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is the entire uncensored document I referred to in question period today. It is titled Fiscal Terms Report for Alberta Energy, prepared by Wood Mackenzie, May 2, 2006. In here you can see for yourself the Texas/Alberta government take, and this was excluded under section 24 from the document that was tabled by the hon. Minister of Energy on April 16. Also, there is a chart in here on the last page of this report which was excluded under section 24 from the report that was tabled in the Assembly. Again, it's a government take, and it clearly shows that Alberta is getting a lot less in royalties than those states down south.

The second tabling I have today is an internal memorandum to the Auditor General, and it's in regard to the Public Accounts Committee authority to call witnesses. It's most interesting to read.

Thank you.

2:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I attended the 2007 Alberta film and TV award night. I'm pleased to table five copies of the program and names of those nominated for the awards. I'm sure we all can be very proud of our Alberta film and TV industry.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of notes from a Canadian Natural Resources Limited meeting from February 2006. The meeting notes include detailed safety requirements for the Horizon oil sands project.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Education, the responses to written questions 31 and 32, asked for by Mr. Chase on behalf of Mr. Flaherty on August 28, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Dr. Morton, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, return to orders of the Assembly MR 27, 28, and 29, asked for by Mr. Chase on behalf of Mr. Bonko on August 28, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Melchin, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, response to Written Question 2, asked for by Mr. Bonko on behalf of Ms Pastoor on April 16, 2007.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, the College of Chiropractors of Alberta radiation health administrative organization annual report for year ended June 30, 2006, and the attached financial statements, College of Chiropractors of Alberta, dated June 30, 2006; Alberta Veterinary Medical Association radiation protection program 2005 annual report with the attached auditor's report on the radiation protection program dated November 11, 2005; the Alberta Dental Association and College 2005 radiation health and safety program annual report, January 1, 2005, to December 31, 2005, with attached financial statements of the Alberta Dental Association and College radiation administration program dated December 31, 2005; the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta radiation health administrative organization annual report for the period of April 1, 2005, to March 31, 2006; the University of Alberta authorized radiation health administrative organization annual report, 2005-2006; the University of Calgary authorized radiation health administration organization annual report for the period April 1, 2005, to March 31, 2006, with attached financial statements for the years ended March 31, 2006, and 2005; pursuant to the Alberta Economic Development Authority Act the Alberta Economic Development Authority 2005-2006 activity report; pursuant to the Northern Alberta Development Council Act the Northern Alberta Development Council annual report 2005-2006; pursuant to the Regulated Accounting Profession Act the Certified General Accountants Association of Alberta 2006 annual report; pursuant to the Veterinary Profession Act the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association annual report, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Dr. Oberg, Minister of Finance, responses to written questions 1 and 4, asked for by Mr. Miller on April 16, 2007.

Motions Under Standing Order 42

The Deputy Speaker: We have before us a motion under Standing Order 42 which we'll deal with now. I'll ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to make his arguments on the issue of urgency at this time.

Referral of Affordable Housing Task Force Report

Mr. Martin:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly refer Housing First, the report of the Alberta Affordable Housing Task Force, and the government's response to that report to the Managing Growth Pressures policy field committee constituted under temporary Standing Order 52.01(1)(c), with specific directions to consider and report back on the advisability of introducing temporary rent stability guidelines.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All members have a copy of this notice, so I won't repeat it. Basically, what the NDP is proposing is that the Assembly refer the report of the housing task force and the government's response to the policy field committee on managing growth pressures.

Mr. Speaker, I would note that the new Standing Order 52.07(1) states that "a Policy Field Committee shall inquire into, consider and report on any matter referred to it by the Assembly." Clearly, this motion is in keeping with the spirit of the House leaders' agreement and the Premier's desire to create all-party committees which will allow vibrant, open debate on important issues of the day.

This is urgent in two senses. The most obvious, of course, is the urgency for renters and for people seeking rental accommodations. Last week it was reported that people received several-hundred-dollar increases to their rent within hours of the housing task force report being made public. It is by sheer luck that the landlord had already imposed a much smaller increase recently, so the larger one has been delayed. However, many other renters will not be in this good position. We have had a flood of phone calls, letters, e-mails from angry and upset constituents. People are being put under significant and unnecessary stress because of the possibility of unreasonable and unaffordable rent increases. This continues to hang over their heads, Mr. Speaker.

However, the House rules require another kind of urgency; namely, that there will be no other opportunity to debate this motion. I would note that the changes being proposed by the government will be done through regulation, which means that the discussion will once again be behind closed doors, away from Hansard, away from opportunities for the public to watch and even participate in the debate. There is no other opportunity to discuss the content of the report. The Committee of Supply does not seem appropriate as this is an issue of regulation and not just expenditure. Also, the new system for Committee of Supply is moving away from all-party participation.

Which brings us back, Mr. Speaker, to the policy field committees. I know that all the caucuses and even the table officers are still trying to get their heads around how these committees will work. I also note that there has not been any indication from the chairs of when these committees will begin to meet. Therefore, a motion under Standing Order 42 seems to be the only way that a private member can at this time get a highly important and urgent issue before one of the committees. There is no other provision for this to happen.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that this is not only a matter of some urgency but also a test of how these committees will work. The government itself has created high expectations for how important policy decisions will be made in this province. When the Standing Orders that created the policy field committees were debated, the Government House Leader went on at great length to explain how these committees would be different from the all-Conservative standing policy committees. To quote briefly from Hansard at page 611, the Government House Leader was speaking about a problem with the old standing policy committee structure, which was that it did not allow the public to see that kind of input, so a government member could have input at a caucus, input at a standing policy committee, if a member of Agenda and Priorities or the Treasury Board could have input there, but none of that was public policy being made in public.

Well, Mr. Speaker, here's the test. When this Assembly created the policy field committees, was it serious about taking important issues there for debate, or did the government members imagine that the committees would be only used for easy apple pie and motherhood issues?

To conclude, then, Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can have unanimous consent to consider this motion. There's no other opportunity for us to thoroughly debate the need for substantial revisions to the government's response to the housing report, and there's no better opportunity for us to test this government's claims to integrity and openness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall call the committee to order.

Bill 203
Service Dogs Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and start the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. I'm appreciative of the support the bill has received so far in the discussion in second reading and support, I might add, from both sides of this Assembly.

I would mention a couple of things before we get into the Committee of the Whole, and these are comments that were made during second reading debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raised concerns about the clear tests for certifying the service dogs. I'd like to point out that there are very good standards that are set out by the Assistance Dogs International group, and the Western Guide and Assistance Dog Society is currently being accredited to train service dogs. This accreditation is a five-year process where trainers must meet standards related to dog handling, dog selection, and compliance with relevant laws. Since the ADI is an internationally recognized service dog training organization, the regulations that come out of this act will reflect those ADI standards.

Now, the member was also concerned about access to employment, accommodation, and also government services and programs. There's a specific clause dealing with occupancy which parallels the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, and section 3 protects individuals from discrimination in the workplace and from service providers.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview also raised some concern about the potential of individuals not having ID but actually using a service dog. Certainly, there is going to be a need to consider grandfathering of service dogs that are currently in use but don't have the specific training or the certification. So that will have to be considered and paid attention to as was done with the Blind Persons' Rights Act. Generally speaking, to preserve the integrity of this legislation and the intent of it, individuals will have to have their ID with them at all times. If they lose their ID, there'll be a temporary ID issued; not unlike if one of us loses our driver's licence, we have to end up getting a temporary driver's licence. So a temporary identification card would be issued in those cases.

Now, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner also raised concerns with respect to allergies, and with respect to guide dogs this has not been a major issue. Accommodations are being made all the time for different situations like this where there may be sensitivity to animals. There could be some additional problems if there was an amendment that did allow public institutions or employers or businesses the right to not serve persons with service dogs or guide dogs with the intent that they say that there are allergies and concerns in that regard.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East brought up the point about the need for public information and public education to promote the role of service dogs should this bill be passed by this Assembly. That's been discussed.

It's certainly something that's very important both with respect to guide dogs that are currently used and in the future if service dogs are also permitted through the passing of this act in the Assembly. So the ministry, the department, is going to have to take on the role of advising the public more and letting people know about the use of service dogs as well as reminding them about the appropriateness of guide dogs.

So, Mr. Chairman, at this point there are two amendments that I would like to move with respect to Bill 203.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we need to have the amendments at the desk and also circulated to other members. Make sure that the original is brought to the desk. Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Strathcona, you may proceed.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, these amendments deal with section 1 of the bill. Section 1(a) would be amended by removing the word "physical" in the definition of a disabled person. Section 1(c) will be amended by removing all the words after "regulations." With the amendment section 1(c) would read: "service dog" means a dog trained as a guide for a disabled person and having the qualifications prescribed by the regulations."

The first amendment reflects concerns heard in the Assembly here and also when talking with persons with disabilities. Generally speaking, the amendment clarifies who can have a service dog. We want to be sure to include all persons who have cognitive disabilities or other functional disabilities as well as people who have physical disabilities, and this will clarify that intent. Many individuals ask about the use of service dogs by persons with autism. Some time ago in talking with one individual whose son has autism and uses a service dog, he described the use and the benefit of the service dog to him. So this would help to clarify and not exclude somebody like this young fellow. He was six or seven years old, and the family appreciated the use of the service dog to protect and keep safe this young boy. This will clarify that somebody like this six- or seven-year-old would be able to have a service dog. So we would not have any restrictions that way.

The amendment also addresses concerns raised by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who commented that 1(a) seemed to be a narrow definition. To those who may be concerned that the definition will be too broad, it's now important to note that the ability to have a service dog is contingent upon the dog being certified through an accredited process, a complicated and difficult and expensive process to go through to get the dog certified. The process of training, of course, is very lengthy, very costly, and it's going to limit the number of individuals who would pursue that route.

The second amendment strengthens the definition of "service dog." It deletes all the words after "regulations." It allows Bill 203 to be consistent with the approach in the Blind Persons Rights' Act. It simplifies the language of the act and ensures that the certificate process will be described in the regulations, and it broadens the range of people with disabilities who have access to the services and narrows the qualification criteria for the dog.

I believe that the amendment improves the intent of the legislation by giving greater clarity to the definitions of "disabled person" and "service dog" within Bill 203, and I ask for your support on these amendments.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A little bit of clarification, if you wouldn't mind. Do we not have to address each of the amendments separately and vote on them as such, or can they be dealt with in package format?

The Deputy Chair: No. As far as the chair is concerned, this is an amendment that is being dealt with as amendment A1, unless it's the desire of the Assembly to split it into two.

Mr. Chase: No, there wasn't a desire. It was strictly for clarification. In that case I'll speak to both amendments.

I very much appreciate the hon. mover of this bill strengthening what was a good bill to begin with by getting rid of any clarification concerns. Sometimes the term "disabled" has a negative connotation to it, but the reality is that the person is not able to carry on as a fully able-bodied individual would be able to do. Recognizing that, people who have disabilities that are not just of a physical nature but more of a mental nature – and I would suggest that autism fits into that category – are covered by increasing the definition. In other words, by adding this amendment, it becomes a more inclusive bill, and that's exactly what we're trying to do: include people with disabilities into our regular society with as few difficulties as possible.

When I spoke earlier of my enthusiasm and support for the bill, I also referred to a young gentleman who I believe was initially prevented from taking his service dog with him to school. If my memory serves me, this young individual was suffering from a degree of autism as well. By clarifying and further defining the notion that disability was not just limited to physical, this is a very forceful and inclusive amendment.

With regard to amendment 2, the definition of a service dog, it removes the statement reading: "or for which an identification card or other certificate has been issued under section 4." Again, when praising the bill formerly, I spoke of the confusion that a disabled student at the University of Calgary went through because of the classification of her service dog, which was basically for carrying the books based on the injuries that she had received.

Now, my belief in the second amendment is that it's broadening the qualifications of a service dog such that specific limitations are no longer applied, that dogs and their various talents are recognized, and the qualifications that are required are more of a general nature. This is the impression I got when formerly speaking to the mover of the amendment, and if that is the case, broadening the qualifications of a dog so that individuals in need are supported, then I very much support the amendment and again congratulate the hon. mover of the bill for his insightful amendments.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief. I would just like to echo the comments of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity and the hon. Member for Strathcona, particularly in reference to part (a) of amendment A1 where we're taking out the word "physical." I don't think members of this Assembly need to be reminded that not all disabilities are necessarily easily observed by the human eye, whether we're talking autism or we're talking – a great example, actually. I had an impromptu visit from a young lady with a service dog in my constituency office on Friday. This lady is hearing impaired, and the dog has been trained to help her in situations. For instance, it will wake her up when the alarm clock rings in the morning. Or if the doorbell rings, he'll respond in a certain way. If the telephone rings, or if somebody else in the household calls her by name, the dog is trained to respond in a number of different ways to inform her as to what is taking place audibly, things that she's not able to hear herself. To meet her on the street and, quite frankly, even to talk to her, Mr. Chairman – she does wear a hearing aid as well – you would not necessarily clue in to the fact that she was suffering any sort of a disability at all. Taking the word "physical" out of here I think does make this bill that much more inclusive, and that has my full support.

I just wanted to add those comments as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you. Very quickly, Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill, and the amendments certainly make it better. I appreciate the fact that it would be grandfathered in because this takes time. A lot of people would not know how to go about getting identification. We know how bureaucracies sometimes work. I guess the question that I would have – I think the member alluded to if it was lost, that it hopefully could quickly be retrieved. But what does "quickly" mean in this day and age? That could be a real handicap if a person did lose it, and it takes a couple of weeks or three weeks. Pretty well, that would be it for him.

I would hope that this means that the fact that they don't necessarily have identification does not abrogate their rights under this act if it goes through. Because if there was the case where a person didn't have it, through loss or whatever, I doubt that they could get it the next day. Knowing how bureaucracies work, it could be a fair length of time if you lost it. So I would take it that it would be the case that while they're getting identification, they would still have the rights under this act. If the member would mention if that's the case. If not, do we need to do some work in that area?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Once again I'd like to thank the Member for Strathcona for bringing this forward. I really do appreciate the amendments. I think that the intention was to prohibit discriminatory practices towards individuals with disabilities or trainers who are accompanied by a service dog. There was the identification process for service dogs involved in the original act. I see that these amendments will do more for the original intention to bring greater autonomy to individuals with disabilities of any kind and facilitate their social integration by prohibiting discriminatory behaviour against anyone using or training a service dog. So I believe that this bill provides for dogs who work with humans to be able to do their job more effectively without hindrance and helps to eliminate discrimination towards people who are depending on those dogs. Our passing it puts us on a road to a more human society and one that we can be proud of. I'm happy to support it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

3:00

Mr. Lougheed: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments by the members who spoke just now to the amendment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity brought up the student in Calgary. It's interesting that about the time we were developing this bill, that issue came forward and really helped to clarify that they can find their rights under the multiculturalism act, and they can find their rights in different ways. But this will help to clarify it and put forward clearly that this young man wouldn't have had to spend I think it was two weeks at home before he got into school.

There were a couple of other comments. One that I would comment on as well is with respect to the ID card. I appreciate that that would be a huge problem if they didn't have the ID card and something had happened. Currently, I believe the bureaucracy is very quick to react to those circumstances. I've heard of no complaints under the Blind Persons' Rights Act about guide dogs' identification not being replaced quickly. So it's something that's a concern. I must say that there aren't a huge number of these dogs around, and the person that is in charge of the program has been able to react quickly to concerns of that nature. I believe that they would continue to be taken care of in a very quick manner.

So with that comment, I would ask that all members support this amendment and ask for the question on the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the bill itself? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the clarifications and responses that the hon. mover of the bill brought to each of us who expressed not necessarily reservations but were looking for confirmation. I appreciated the acknowledgement that there will be a great need for education in order for this bill to truly have its effect. My hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View frequently speaks of the need for light and heat in order for things to change, to evolve. For this Bill 203 to evolve and come into effectual practice, what is needed is light in the form of education and heat in the form of enforcement.

For the stigma associated with a disability and the stigma associated with dogs, for which many people have a natural fear, a tremendous amount of education is going to have to be provided so that the dog, like the individual who is in need, is accepted by the larger general public.

The second part of the analogy, the light and the heat analogy, is the heat. Those individuals who through ignorance of the law or lack of an inclusive nature for whatever reason have a prejudice will have to be dealt with in a firm but fair manner. We can no longer have restrictions placed on individuals entering public places or going on public transit or for that matter taking a taxi as has been the case previously, which is, I'm sure, one of the motivations for the hon. member to bring forward this great piece of legislation.

So, as I say, in order for this to be acceptable, we need to apply the light, the education, and we need to apply the heat – and that's the enforcement – to make sure that the intention of this bill is carried out in the realm of reality of public life.

Again, thank you very much to the mover of the bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise to join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. During second reading of this bill the Member for Strathcona received a tremendous and unprecedented amount of support from all parties. It was recognized that this sort of legislation is very much needed as it would benefit individuals with disabilities.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, thanks to the debate and the sharing of ideas, two amendments to definitions in Bill 203 have been introduced. These are, of course, sections 1(a) and 1(c). These amendments to definitions strengthen the Service Dogs Act by adding clarity to the proposed legislation.

During the second reading debate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre expressed concern regarding the definition of disabled persons under Bill 203. The member thought the definition was narrow. The Service Dogs Act covers individuals defined in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act as having any degree of disability except blindness or visual impairment and who are dependent upon a service dog. Also, the amendment to the definition of disabled persons in section 1(a) further increases the spectrum of individuals who can gain from this legislation because it now clarifies that this bill is intended to include people who have cognitive disabilities and other functional disabilities as well as those who have physical disabilities.

Mr. Chairman, section 3 of the act clearly states that discriminatory practices against individuals who use service dogs are absolutely prohibited. The clarity of the legislation will help eliminate any ambiguity the public faced regarding the rights of those with service dogs.

The amendment to section 1(c) will also help Albertans understand that identification cards may only be issued to persons with qualified service dogs.

Section 3(1) states that it is prohibited to deny any person or to discriminate against any person with respect to the accommodation, services, or facilities available in any place to which the public is customarily admitted "for the reason that the person is a disabled person accompanied by a service dog." With this bill there will no longer be any sort of confusion about not allowing someone with a service dog to enter a restaurant, to rent a hotel room, to go to the dentist, to take a flight or bus, or to go to an athletic facility, for example.

Mr. Chairman, section 3(2) states that it would be absolutely restricted to deny any person or to discriminate against any person with respect to any term or condition of occupancy of any self-contained dwelling unit for the reason that the person is a disabled person accompanied by a service dog. Individuals requiring service dogs would clearly be able to rent any apartment or buy a condo which bans dogs.

With regard to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, as was previously discussed during the bill's second reading, discrimination against individuals with service dogs was prohibited, but the lack of clarity impeded the justice system. Bill 203 provides efficient mechanisms to protect individuals against discrimination committed based on their service dog. If individuals with a disability feel that they have been discriminated against because of their service dogs, they could confidently seek redress through the Service Dogs Act. A clear resolution will be made in a more expedient manner. The decision on the complaint will be made with clear guidelines and standards, and, Mr. Chairman, I believe that is a wonderful thing. As an alternate avenue individuals with grievances could also bring their complaint to the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism commission.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased with the two amendments of definitions which have been brought forth. They solidify Bill 203 because the Service Dogs Act will allow people with disabilities the right to be accompanied by an accredited service dog everywhere the general public is admitted free from discrimination. I support Bill 203, and I urge all hon. members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by West Yellowhead.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. Bill 203 is a step forward in the protection of persons with disabilities in Alberta, and I'm very glad to see the support that this bill appears to have from members from all sides of the Assembly.

I was also very pleased to see the amendments that the hon. Member for Strathcona has brought forward that have already been passed here today. I was already very supportive of Bill 203, but those amendments certainly improve the act, and it's very clear that any ambiguities related to persons with disabilities and identification cards have been removed. The amendments reflect the principle of allowing persons with disabilities unfettered access to public services in a manner that is free of discrimination. This is also embodied within section 3 of the act.

Public transportation is critical for many people to get to work, to go shopping, to go to stores, medical appointments, and social events. Public transportation is oftentimes more important to persons with a disability because that is often the only form of transportation they have access to. Amending section 1(a) will have the effect of broadening the number of persons with disabilities that can access public transportation with their service dogs free of discrimination.

People with disabilities in Alberta can already access many forms of transportation. Seventy-nine per cent of Albertans live in municipalities where specialized transportation is available. Fifty thousand Albertans are registered for specialized transportation. For the most part, Albertans with disabilities have the necessary services available for transportation at present, but without the protection under Bill 203 individuals with service dogs could be refused service on a transit bus, for example.

Now, I understand that both Calgary and Edmonton allow service dogs by policy, but having it in legislation I think takes away all of the issues where you might have a municipality, for example, that would not have that policy. In the case of Edmonton and Calgary service dogs are allowed as a matter of operating policy, but it would be much better to have legal protection provided by provincial laws, and that's what this bill does.

Persons with disabilities also use taxi services, and there is no guarantee that taxi companies currently would permit service dogs in their cabs. Unlike bus drivers taxi drivers refuse service dogs in their cabs because of the ID provisions for the guide dogs in the Blind Persons' Rights Act.

The impact of section 3 and the fines associated with the discrimination of users of service dogs will act as a deterrent for transportation providers who do not wish to give rides to persons with disabilities. This is a positive action as persons with disabilities have felt helpless in dealing with their situations. Fines for offences as proposed under Bill 203 will be a deterrent to the discrimination of persons with disabilities. As a result, Bill 203 will protect persons with disabilities. So with this positive piece of legislation I believe that section 3 will help persons with disabilities access transportation services free from discrimination.

I would certainly urge all members to vote in favour of the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West-Yellowhead, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's great to speak in committee on the Service Dogs Act as amended, extending service dogs protections similar to those that the Blind Persons' Rights Act extends to guide dogs. These are important protections for people with disabilities. While this act offers this protection to the person with the disability, it also protects the interests of the general public. Section 1(c) as amended makes it clear that the service dog is a dog that has been specifically trained as a guide for a disabled person and has the qualifications established by regulations by the responsible minister. The minister will not be starting from scratch in developing these regulations.

One organization that has already developed standards for training and conduct of service dogs is Assistance Dogs International. Part of ADI's mission is to "establish and promote standards of excellence in all areas of Assistance Dog acquisition, training and partnership." Members of ADI meet regularly to share ideas, attend seminars, and conduct business, regarding such things as educating the public about service dogs, legal rights of people with disabilities partnered with service dogs, setting standards and established guidelines, the ethics of training of these dogs, and improving the utilization and bonding of each team.

The standards set by ADI are basic guidelines that members must follow, which they are encouraged to excel in. The training standards are high. Many dogs fail training because they do not have the temperament to be good service dogs. These include stipulations that the service dog responds to basic obedience and skill tasks commanded 90 per cent of the time at the first ask in both public and home environments.

Every once in a while there is a news story about a dog attacking a person. The public need not worry about aggressive service dogs. One ethical standard that members of ADI must adhere to is the public right to expect an assistance dog to be under control at all times and that these dogs exhibit no inherent behaviour in public. Section 3(4) of the bill holds that standard, withholding protection for service dog teams if the dog is not well behaved. Service dogs are taught to remain in their handler's control at all times. Service dogs fail the training process if they bite, snap, growl, or are otherwise aggressive or if they bark inappropriately. The regulations of the service dog qualifications in section 1(c) of the act ensure that Albertans with disabilities will benefit from service dog training to the highest standard and assure all Albertans that they should feel comfortable about service dog behaviours.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to contribute to the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. Through a very positive second reading debate two amendments to the definitions within the legislation have been brought forth to strengthen the bill. The debate was characterized by two common themes among many: members sharing stories of their constituents and friends who stand to benefit from Bill 203 and also members of this Assembly agreeing that the Service Dogs Act should be supported because of the positive impact it will have on people's lives.

One of the main reasons that this act has been so successful in the House is that it seeks to enhance the quality of life of Albertans. When a member presents an opportunity to help other Albertans, we are eager to further that cause by lending support to the member. The first proposed amendment to the definition of disabled person will further enhance the quality of life for more Albertans, and omitting the word "physical" in section 1(a) will clarify that this bill is intended to include people who have cognitive disabilities and other functional disabilities and physical disabilities.

One of many ways Bill 203 will enhance quality of life for more Albertans with a disability is by breaking down as many barriers to these individuals as possible. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, one of these barriers is not so much based on disability but, rather, the public's miseducation about service dogs. Section 3 of the Service Dogs Act will ensure that the rights of Albertans with disabilities who require the assistance of service dogs will be protected. In the objective of increased participation the service dogs play an amazing part in many Albertans' lives. They allow individuals who have limited access to the physical world to be better able to fully participate in the life of the province.

These animals help individuals with reduced mobility to get to places which would have been tremendously difficult for them without assistance. Not only do these people have better access to various locations with service dogs, but specially trained dogs help individuals with disabilities to be more independent. As has been stated before, these types of dogs help individuals with disabilities to get on a bus, to go grocery shopping, to cross a street, and many, many more occasions and activities. So these dogs will reassure Albertans with disabilities about going out and enjoying the province's social life because they know the dogs will be able to assist them when needed.

The area of removing the barriers. I must say that while service dogs help Albertans with disabilities gain access to locations and events which other Albertans attend, they are still faced with barriers once they get there. Many Albertans don't know about service dogs. They don't realize how much these trained canines help individuals in need of assistance. Furthermore, they don't know about the rights attached to the service dogs. So by educating Albertans about service dogs, those who use them will be freer to go about their daily life without interruption. They will have more confidence. This public awareness will remove barriers which confront persons with disabilities.

So, Mr. Chairman, the amendment to the definition of service dogs proposed in section 1(c) strengthens possible public perception about service dogs. The second amendment ensures that identification cards may only be issued to persons with service dogs having the required qualifications, so this helps Albertans to know that they are safe around service dogs. This goes well with Alberta government priorities. This government is committed to improving quality of life for all Albertans, and there is no doubt that the Service Dogs Act will accomplish this goal for a segment of our society. Both amendments of definitions will further enhance all Albertans' quality of life by including more Albertans with disabilities within the scope of the legislation and giving Albertans the assurance that service dogs are highly trained canines, because the Service Dogs Act will help ameliorate the quality of life for those with disabilities.

I wholeheartedly support it by giving support to Bill 203 and urge all members of the Assembly to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The purpose of Bill 203 is to create a new act to ensure that persons with disabilities have the legal right to be accompanied by an accredited service dog in all areas open to the general public free of discrimination. The new Service Dogs Act will complement Alberta's Blind Persons' Rights Act, which in part legally protects the rights of blind persons with guide dogs. Bill 203 will legally recognize other service dogs and extend to persons with disabilities the same protection afforded under the Blind Persons' Rights Act.

It clarifies the definition of service dog. It's a dog that is considered to be used by a person with a disability to avoid hazards or to otherwise compensate for a disability. This includes but is not limited to hearing dogs to assist the deaf or hard of hearing, mobility assistance dogs, and seizure response dogs.

If the Service Dogs Act is passed, this means that all persons with disabilities who require the use of dogs will be protected by the Service Dogs Act and the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. As such, the rights of persons with disabilities will be bolstered as the Service Dogs Act lays out the necessary recourse for individuals with a service dog in the event that they do face discrimination.

The Alberta Liberals oppose discriminatory practices toward any group and fully support increasing accessibility to Albertans with disabilities. We do require strong, effective disability accessibility legislation that would provide a greater level of independence and an enhanced quality of life. I think that today with these amendments we have made a great step in that direction, and I am pleased to support the bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today and join the discussion regarding Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. I'm proud that our government is moving forward with this noteworthy piece of legislation as amended. The amendments to sections 1(a) and 1(c) emphasize our continual efforts to assist those who are disabled and stress that our government appreciates the complexities of living with a disability.

An integral part of Bill 203 is that it establishes the consequences for violating the rights that are being given to a person with a disability and their accompanying service dog. Bill 203 outlines a number of fines that could be charged if sections of the act are contravened.

There have been several court decisions that have ruled in favour of people with disabilities. The courts were able to set a precedent based on the legislated rights afforded to a person with a disability. Mr. Chairman, the courts can protect the integrity of the bill, protect society, and protect persons with disabilities.

Bill 203 will provide the legislative foundation to uphold the legal rights of a person with a disability and their accompanying service dog. The amendments to sections 1(a) and (c) clarify that the act applies to persons with any disabilities and establishes the identification criteria of their service dog. This is essential in determining offences and charging fines.

Mr. Chairman, last year I attended a community function with persons with developmental disabilities, their annual banquet. The guest speaker was a lady who is on the Premier's council, who was coming down and nearly missed the event because she had called for a cab and she was waiting out there for half an hour. A lady came out of her apartment building, and they determined that the cab had actually driven up, took a look, saw the dog, and drove away. So they called another cab, and with her there she managed to make it to the event.

I think section 3 of the Service Dogs Act details the rights of a person with a disability and their accompanying service dog. I think this section of the act defines the following and is why I gave that example, Mr. Chairman. No person shall deny or discriminate against a person with a disability and accompanying service dog who is seeking accommodation, services, or facilities which are available to the public. An individual cannot deny or discriminate against any person with a disability and their accompanying service dog when they're seeking occupancy of any self-contained dwelling unit. A person with a disability has the right to be accompanied by a service dog, and a certified dog trainer has the right to be accompanied by a dog in training. If a person contravenes section 3, they can pay a fine not exceeding $3,000.

As detailed in section 6(2), a person can pay a fine not exceeding $300 if they are guilty of contravening the following: how a person is issued an identification card, that the identification card is evidence that the person and the person's service dog are accredited and therefore afforded certain rights, how the person can amend or cancel the identification card, and if they purport to be a disabled person for the benefits provided by the Service Dog Act.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 203 addresses an important issue for the disabled community, and it covers all the logistics to ensure that the rights established for persons with disabilities and their accompanying dogs are respected and enforced. Bill 203 provides clear, consistent, comprehensive, and enforceable guidelines. This act establishes specific penalties, which will ensure that the rights of persons with disabilities and their accompanying service dogs will be protected.

I applaud the objectives of Bill 203 and am pleased to support the amended act. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by Red Deer-South.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will attempt to be brief. There's been an awful lot of discussion by most of the members who've spoken this afternoon about education, and I certainly agree that education is desperately required in this regard and not only for service providers in terms of dealing with service dogs, whether it be, you know, a restaurant owner or a taxi driver or a bus driver or whatever but certainly for members of the general public as well in terms of understanding the need for a service dog and the role that they play.

But there's an aspect to education that hasn't been mentioned yet. Although I'm not sure that it would have been possible to include it in the legislation, I think it's important to be recognized, so I'm going to do that right now. That is the need for everybody, once again whether it be for the service providers or members of the general public, to recognize that these service dogs are not pets but, rather, that they're working partners of the person with the disability.

There's always a temptation, I think, for many of us to approach a dog, a friendly looking dog, and say hello, give it a pet, give it some welcoming, and that is something that we should not be doing when these dogs are working. They're trained to be on the job. They're trained to be responsive to their handler, whether it be a trainer or the person with the disability, and interference like that – and I'm sure it always is very well intentioned – can throw the service dog off its intended duties.

I would just encourage all members of the public but particularly members of this Legislature, since we're responsible for passing this piece of legislation – and I'm assuming that it will pass – to do our very best in terms of helping to educate everybody, whether it be the service providers or members of the general public, that when these dogs are working, they should be left to do their job. When they're no longer working – and the handler will always inform you of the fact that they're now no longer working – my experience has been that they're very receptive to being approached by people such as ourselves and having interaction with members of the public. But when they're working, they're on the job, and it is not wise and certainly not intended to be a part of their job to be approached and interact with members of the public. So I would just ask that all members of the House bear that in mind when we're discussing this piece of legislation with constituents, and certainly if you find yourself in a situation where a service dog is present, bear that in mind as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise in Committee of the Whole to support Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, which has been put forth by the hon. Member for Strathcona. It brings me a tremendous sense of accomplishment to see this Assembly seek to fortify the rights of individuals with disabilities.

I want to just make a couple of positive comments about the sponsor of this bill, the hon. Member for Strathcona, for bringing this forward because he acts in a very responsible and proactive manner not only on issues that he believes are very important but also because he is chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, and he is to be commended for continuing to promote those issues.

I also want to pay special tribute to a constituent, Marlin Styner, who represented the 332,000-strong group of individuals during the leadership campaign, bringing many of these issues to a highlight on a daily basis and certainly at all of the forums we had to make sure that leadership candidates and all Albertans – it wasn't just for the leadership – recognized the issues that they face and some of the barriers that they have that we need to address in this Assembly, and this is just one small part of it.

So those two individuals, Mr. Chairman, I commend highly and have the utmost respect and regard for.

As per the amendment to section 1(a) I am pleased to see that individuals with a disability of any kind could potentially benefit from the use of an approved and certified service dog. In the bill the definition of a disabled person now means an individual who has any disability. The bill would prohibit discriminatory practices against an individual with any degree of disability requiring a service dog.

Section 3(1)(b) would prohibit discrimination "against any person with respect to the accommodation, services or facilities available in any place to which the public is customarily admitted." Mr. Chairman, this is a progressive measure in ensuring that Albertans with disabilities will have the access to opportunities necessary to excel in their communities. A highly specialized service dog is immensely valuable in aiding persons with disabilities in everything from successfully completing daily tasks to being productive members in our diverse society. We are promoting understanding in situations where the role of a service dog is not fully understood. We proudly champion this opportunity and must continue to look forward to opportunities like this to empower individuals with disabilities.

With the Service Dogs Act we are reaffirming our commitment to the fundamental principle that all Albertans can pursue a role in the success of this great province. I feel that this piece of legislation is proactive in the empowerment of persons with disabilities rather than a measure that is reacting to instances of discrimination. Those with service dogs have always been protected by law, but this bill will serve Alberta's disability community well and raise awareness of the opportunities that can be promoted with the use of a service dog.

I encourage all Albertans to join with me in supporting our friends with disabilities who currently have or are considering the use of a service dog. Please offer the consideration needed by both the individual and their dog. Whether this is simply interacting with the owner of a service dog on a bus or, if you are an employer, considering hiring somebody with a service dog, please show compassion and understanding.

I'm confident that the certification process and necessary regulatory measures will address any concerns associated with this bill. I'm pleased to see a bill of this nature progress through the Assembly, and by supporting Bill 203 and its amendments, the Service Dogs Act, hon. members are supporting this government in improving the quality of life for a very hard-working and deserving portion of our society regardless of their form of disability.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, hon. Member for Strathcona.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased also to rise to join the discussion of Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. The hon. Member for Strathcona has invested a lot of time in tabling this legislation, and I'm encouraged by the amount of recognition and support that it is receiving.

The amended bill clearly defines in section 1(a) and section 1(c) that persons with physical and mental disabilities will be afforded the right to be accompanied by service dogs with proper identification cards.

The purpose of Bill 203 is to provide persons with disabilities who need service dogs unrestricted access to public facilities and accommodations. The rights afforded in Bill 203 could not be achieved without an adequate mechanism for identifying a person with a disability and their accompanying service dog.

Bill 203 will be effective because the act provides specific guidelines for identification. The amendment to section 1(c) reduces ambiguity and clearly states that identification cards will be issued only to those persons with disabilities who meet the qualifications as prescribed by the regulations.

Bill 203 has three clauses under section 4 addressing identification. Section 4(1) states that the minister or a person designated by the minister in writing can issue to a disabled person and the person's service dog an identification card. Section 4(2) states that the identification card "is proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the disabled person and that person's service dog identified in it are qualified for the purposes of this Act." Section 4(3) states that "any person to whom an identification card is issued under subsection (1) shall, on the request of the Minister or the person designated by the Minister, surrender the person's identification card for amendment or cancellation."

The identification card is certified proof that the person with a disability and their accompanying service dog are granted legal access to all public accommodations and facilities. The establishment of a credible identification system is crucial to the success of Bill 203, and the amendment to section 1(c) will strengthen this integral process.

There are numerous benefits to a certified identification card, and they include the verification of the legitimacy of the cardholder and their accredited service dog. It also reduces confusion regarding the rights of a person with a disability and their accompanying service dog, and it serves as a tangible and efficient mechanism for identification.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, service dogs are a necessity for many individuals who rely on them to carry out day-to-day functions. The Service Dogs Act not only establishes the rights of a person with a disability and their accompanying service dog; it provides a practical means to certify that these individuals are afforded specific rights through a proper identification system. I believe that Bill 203 as amended proposes important rights for persons with disabilities and their accompanying service dogs, and that's why I will also be offering my support to this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, did you want to speak?

Dr. Brown: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to recognize the hon. Member for Strathcona for bringing forward this bill. The purpose of the Service Dogs Act is certainly complementary to what we already have in the Blind Persons' Rights Act. As it states in the Service Dogs Act, "Nothing in this Act derogates from any right, privilege or obligation of blind persons arising from the Blind Persons' Rights Act or any other law."

Mr. Chairman, this bill certainly will ensure that the rights of persons with disabilities other than sight disabilities will be protected in public areas. Section 1(a) of the bill has been amended to define disabled person to include people who have cognitive and other functional disabilities as well as people who have physical disabilities, and this certainly broadens and strengthens Bill 203.

With regard to accessibility to public areas, Mr. Chairman, this legislation would enable persons with disabilities to be accompanied by an accredited service dog in the public areas free of discrimination. I think the word "accredited" is important there. The term "service dog" as defined in this bill in section 1(c) has been amended to clarify that an identification card would only be issued if a service dog has met the qualifications prescribed in the regulations. That would be a proof that the dog has received the necessary training to earn the title of service dog. This is, obviously, necessary because we certainly don't want situations where there are spurious claims that a dog is a service dog. This would be detrimental to those people who are genuinely in need of a service dog and have them properly trained.

Persons with disabilities who are accompanied by service dogs should be able to access in the same manner as a person not accompanied by a service dog, to enter and use accommodation and conveyances, restaurants and food services facilities, lodging places, or any other place to which the public is invited or has access. The Service Dogs Act is certainly a step towards providing that better access to the social, economic, and educational institutions available throughout our province.

People with disabilities currently have the right to access public areas free of prejudice due to the Human Rights, Citizenship, and Multiculturalism Act, and Bill 203 will certainly assist and complement that act and make it clear that service dogs are also legally able to accompany their owner into those areas free of any discrimination. Persons with disabilities will be able to be accompanied by their service dogs into public areas and will retain the assistance that they do provide during the course of their outing. They are depended upon in a number of situations, including in supporting mobility, in walking, in some instances seizure alert or response, in hearing, in rapid and repetitive movements, and many other functions. This legislation would protect the rights of owners to be accompanied into public areas by their service dogs, of course, and would also allow more reasonable accessibility.

I would like to relate a success story that was passed along to me regarding a service dog by the name of Noah. Noah is the canine partner of a woman who is disabled and who had a very severe and progressive hearing loss. Although she used powerful hearing aids and was a good lip-reader, she also had experienced some difficulties while driving, not being able to hear certain sounds, and if people came to her house to fix the furnace or whatever, they would not be able to be heard by her because she couldn't hear the doorbell. So it's an invisible type of disability.

In the case of Noah she obtained a dog that was temperament tested and intensively trained for nearly eight months. That dog was a border collie, and he worked alongside her as a certified hearing and service dog. Noah now goes to work with his owner. He goes shopping with her, lies on the floor in restaurants, and even accompanies her to the ladies' room. You never know when emergencies could be found in a home or when the fire alarm could sound, and that dog would provide some measure of security in such an instance. Also, with things like tea kettle whistles or the doorbell chime, as I said, the dog is able to assist.

A dog that works for a person with a disability, whether it is a service or guide dog, certainly has to be obedient in public. It has to be well mannered. It has to be quiet and unobtrusive. It can't be barking, loud, and aggressive. So the necessity of training for those dogs is obviously an important part of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, in closing I would say that I do support the amendments to the bill. Section 1(a) broadens the definition of people who have disabilities to include cognitive disabilities. Under section 1(c), in order to be qualified as a service dog, the dog must meet certain qualifications which will be set out in the regulations before it receives an identification card. As I said, the bill, like the Blind Persons' Rights Act, will ensure access to public areas and enable disabled people to be free from discrimination in those areas.

Mr. Chairman, it's certainly my hope that all of the members of the House would support the hon. Member for Strathcona in supporting Bill 203.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to carefully consider legislation like Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. It goes back to a little family history, where a few of my relatives could have used a bill just like this. It's an important, well-advised act that will have benefits for many Albertans with disabilities.

The amended version of section 1(a) clarifies that this bill is intended to include people who have cognitive and other functional disabilities as well as people who have physical disabilities.

One group who will benefit from the passage of this legislation is Alberta's students. Every Albertan knows about the importance of education, and we do our best to design our schools so that every person can access them. Section 3(1) of this bill is key to ensuring that persons with disabilities who benefit from the use of service dogs have access to whatever school facilities they need to complete their education. This section bans discrimination "against any person with respect to the accommodation, services or facilities available in any place to which the public is customarily admitted . . . for the reason that the person is a disabled person accompanied by a service dog." Well, no citizen should be denied access to a public place because of a disability.

When school started last September, a student in Calgary was told that he could not bring his trained service dog to class with him.

Because of the public outcry this decision was reversed. Section 3(1) means that this simply will not be an issue in the future. The focus in a school should be on learning, not on the use of a dog to assist with basic, everyday tasks. Section 3(1) formally recognizes that a service dog is one way for a person with a disability to be supported. Until now students with disabilities who have dogs assisting them have generally been fortunate that Albertans are willing to collaborate with them to allow them to learn.

Persons with disabilities have the support of current legislation and the goodwill efforts of Albertans. Because of these efforts postsecondary education is a viable choice for a growing number of Canadians with disabilities. A survey back in 1991 showed that 112,000 postsecondary students, which is 7.4 per cent of all students, have some form of disability. With the amendment to section 1(a) all of these students, not just those with physical disabilities, will benefit from protections in this bill.

Alberta's universities have done their best to assist students with disabilities, including those with guide and service dogs. The University of Alberta, for instance, encourages academically qualified persons with disabilities to seek admission to its programs. Through its specialized support and disabilities services office it provides support to students with disabilities, allowing them to successfully complete their programs. Over the years a number of students have used dogs, including a current student who uses a wheelchair with a service dog. The university welcomes dogs working in an official capacity and directly in the service of people or the university, including therapy dogs, seeing eye dogs, hearing ear dogs, and dogs working with the handicapped. There are no limitations on the use of service dogs, and the university has never heard any concerns. I know that my puppy, MacGyver, has asked on a few occasions if he could get a job just like this.

The University of Calgary also recognizes that all students are entitled to an environment of learning, research, and work that accommodates students with disabilities. The University of Calgary supports students with disabilities through its disability resource centre, not to be outdone by the University of Alberta.

Because of section 3(1) of this bill Alberta's schools and universities will be more accessible and friendly to people with disabilities who could benefit from using a trained service dog. This bill is complementary to the excellent efforts of most of our educational institutions. It clarifies the right of all students who have a disability to use a service dog in a classroom. Under Bill 203, if a student needs a trained service dog to complete their studies, it's clear that they are certainly welcome. Because of the amendment to section 1(c), it will be clear that only service dogs with the qualifications prescribed in the regulations will have an identification card.

I want to again commend the hon. member for bringing forward this bill, and I encourage all members to join us in voting for it.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others who wish to speak? Hon. Member for Strathcona, you wanted to speak?

Mr. Lougheed: I'll just make a couple of comments if I may, Mr. Chairman. The importance of education was mentioned by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, and the Member for Red Deer-South also brought it up again. I'd like to comment a little bit on the education aspect because it's two-sided on this. The public needs to know about these service dogs and seeing eye dogs or guide dogs, as they're called, and know that the owners of these dogs, the people depending on them, have the right of access to taxicabs, hotels, and employment just like anybody else.

The other side was mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford quite nicely, about the challenges of distraction for the dogs when they are working. When they are working, they are to be paying attention to curbs and cars and other situations and helping the person using the dog, and it's quite commonplace for them to be distracted by somebody who comes up and pets them. We see more and more often a bib that the dog wears saying: please do not pet me; I am a working dog. It's important that people recognize that they are not to be distracted.

As was well mentioned, as soon as the collar or the handle that's used by the owner is off, those dogs are just like other dogs. They're running around, getting into mischief and whatnot, but that's okay because they're no longer a working dog. They're just like any other dog at that point in time. So we have to be careful and watch out that we do not distract those dogs.

A comment was made about the dogs being obedient and unobtrusive. I once had to go on a trip with a lady using a seeing eye dog. Of course, she boarded first, and the dog curled up underneath the seat. This was a fairly long flight, four or five hours as I recall. When the plane was unloaded, the fellow passengers were surprised to note that a working dog was there in the plane. The dog never made a sound, didn't have to go to the bathroom. You wouldn't have known that the dog was there.

When we got out into the baggage area, this dog was completely under control, and somebody's pet wasn't under control. In fact, it came up behind this dog, bit it. That was the second time that had happened. As I understand, some months earlier a similar thing had happened. The dog tended to lose attention and was distracted because of these things that had happened to it.

They have to be protected. They are expensive animals, thousands and thousands of dollars to train them. They're well trained. It takes months to do so. The owners have to work with the dog for a couple of weeks in many cases to become qualified to use the dog. These certificates are not given away lightly and easily.

It was mentioned by the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill that there should be no spurious claims of need of a service dog. There are strict qualifications that are required to enable someone to use a service dog. They're well-trained animals. The owners also receive extensive training and have to work with the dog to become proficient. So it's something that's important to many people. It's important that we recognize on their behalf what we can do to help them get around the community better and take part in society and enjoy the full rights of citizenship that all the rest of us enjoy as every person with a disability seeks to be in that situation.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the members who spoke in support of this bill, and I know that people with disabilities who rely on service dogs ask, along with myself, for your support of Bill 203.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 203 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 203.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 203. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 205
Environmental Protection and Enhancement
(Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007

[Debate adjourned April 16: Mr. Martin speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have been given the opportunity to join the discussion on the Environmental Protection (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007, introduced by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. I commend for his attention to the land and the environment in his area. I support Bill 205 because it represents an opportunity to further the government of Alberta's commitment to land stewardship throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, as elected officials we have been entrusted with the responsibility of managing the province's public lands and resources carefully and in the best interest of Albertans. This commitment must be kept as we and future generations benefit culturally and economically from the land. We must ensure that all our resources are handled in such a way that benefits as many social, environmental, and economic aspects as possible. Accordingly, as a responsible and responsive government we must do everything within our power to ensure that every opportunity we have to protect our lands is acted on.

Bill 205 is another means of protecting Alberta's rich and diverse land resources. It seeks to ensure that we consider up-to-date environmental and forest management when dealing with well sites that are no longer in use. Mr. Speaker, I happen to have had a long career in the oil and gas industry, so I know about the wells, drilling, and production reclamation. Among other players the forest and energy industries are concerned that there are no clear directions regarding the reclamation process.

Currently, well site reclamation procedures fall under the 1995 reclamation criteria and regulations enacted in 1993. According to the criteria and regulations when reclaiming abandoned well sites, it is important that the sites be returned to roughly the same state that they were in prior to drilling. This ensures that the impact on the land is as minimal as possible. Returning the site to its original state also maximizes the land's efficiency as it will be able to grow to its fullest potential. By doing this, the environment will also be enhanced for future generations, and the land will have the opportunity to be utilized for a variety of purposes.

The long-term goal for the natural recovery of a well site is the re-establishment of diverse native ecosystems that can sustain multiple uses. The short-term goal is the establishment of compatible species that would provide erosion control to protect the soil. At times there are conflicting ideas regarding the best mode to achieve the balance between the long- and short-term goals. Bill 205 would clarify this ambiguity. While the current criteria and regulations outline how the well sites should be reclaimed and managed, these regulations and criteria are not reviewed or updated on a consistent basis. The regulation and reclamation criteria should reflect the movement and the growth of the dynamic forest and energy industries. Much has changed in these industries since 1995. They each are utilizing advanced technology.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 stipulates that the regulations and criteria be reviewed every three years. Furthermore, any review would ensure that current forest management practices are incorporated into the regulations. Consistent revision of these regulations is important to the environment as it would allow for forest practices and contemporary environmental standards to be used, ensuring that our lands receive the best due care possible. The emerging knowledge that we gain every day should be added to the regulations, and it will ensure that our forests are managed in the most efficient manner possible. The reclamation criteria and regulation would be driven by these advances in knowledge and would therefore be continuously evaluated and improved. The provisions of Bill 205 give us the confidence that all actors are applying the best practices and working together toward a common goal.

Mr. Speaker, in correspondence with values of Albertans, the government of Alberta has long been committed to the philosophy of land stewardship and responsibility. Albertans want an environment which they can gain from both culturally and economically. One way to achieve these two goals is to be as environmentally minded as possible when working with the natural resources sectors. This mentality can be witnessed with the untouched beauty of the Rocky Mountains all the way to the harmony that is created between the wheat fields and the oil wells. Bill 205 allows for coexistence between the social and mental well-being all Albertans receive from the forests and economic gains that they receive from the well sites.

Appreciating that land stewardship is an integral part of responsible government, the government of Alberta, in collaboration with multiple stakeholders, is in the process of completing a land-use framework. The government wants to make sure that the province's resources are used and managed in the best possible way to ensure a balance between Albertans' priorities. In fact, land stewardship is held in such a high regard that the government has outlined the framework as one of its techniques to manage growth pressures in Alberta.

Through this time of rapid expansion the government is committed to growing the province's economy in the most responsible fashion possible to ensure sustainability and increased quality of life for all Albertans. The framework sets forth a plan for managing the land, resources, and the natural environment. The land-use framework is so important that it requires input from eight ministries to achieve its goal of responsible land use. Bill 205 complements the importance the government places on land use by calling for updated practices to ensure long-term economic stability and quality of life and the best environmental treatment of our lands.

Bill 205, Mr. Speaker, also represents a way to address the conflicts over competing use of land. The forest and the energy industries would be pleased to know that both of their interests are being served while both are able to work with the land.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides a clear and direct vision for an integrated, sustainable land-use approach that balances economic and environmental concerns for the benefit of all Albertans. Again, Bill 205 is very insightful as it keeps in mind the cycle of land use. It appreciates the original forest before it became occupied by a prosperous oil-generating well. The bill also states that all efforts should be made to bring the forest back to its original state so communities can gain from it socially once again.

Furthermore, regular revision of the reclamation criteria and regulations will make sure all resource values are considered to find the best balance. Carefully managing land use today will protect the health of forests in Alberta and ensure that all sectors gain from responsive governing now and well into the future.

Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of being one of the members of the group . . . [Mr. Cao's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I rise to speak in favour of Bill 205. I want to first outline the object of the bill and why I support it. The object or purpose of the bill is to add a provision under section 137 of the EPEA to deal specifically with the review of all regulations and practices for conservation and reclamation in the green area of the province. The first part defines specified land for the sole purpose of this section as being exclusively in the green area of the province.

The second purpose of the bill is to legislate the creation of a committee of seven people who will be tasked with a review of any regulation made governing the practices and criteria for conservation and reclamation of the specified land, that being the green area. This committee will have several objectives, including ensuring that the regulations incorporate best forest management practices for land reclamation as well as providing reporting timelines and public disclosure requirements. As well, there is the provision that the committee – and this is one of the main reasons I'm supporting it – will report to the Legislative Assembly if it is sitting or, if it is not sitting, within 15 days of the next sitting. This is the type of progressive legislation that we, being opposition or enlightened members of the government, have been calling for, the type of transparency and accountability, the sharing with the public what we as government land stewards are doing with our legacy.

When I define myself, I define myself first as a grandfather; my next accomplishment is the years as a teacher, considering what the future will be for both my grandchildren and my students; and thirdly, and not necessarily of any less importance, as a spokesperson, the elected representative for Calgary-Varsity.

One of the practices that I hope this bill will accomplish is the protection, the stewardship, that the former member referred to, of land that makes up approximately 51 per cent of this province. If we do this right, which has not been the case up until now, then we leave the legacy for not only my grandchildren but for generations of children to come, and that's where we have to be focused. We have to be focused on the future.

Currently the practice that I have experienced first-hand as a former campground manager in Cataract Creek was that in terms of the order of importance, multi-use was just a term that was thrown about. The first users or abusers of the wilderness area were the potentials of the extraction groups: the oil and the gas, the open-pit mining, the various nonrenewable resource extractors. The second group that had a whack at the forest, so to speak, was the lumber companies.

The third group that seemed to have priority over humans, fish, and fowl was the free-range cattle, that seemed to be able to go through at any time unopposed because the conservation part that this bill refers to wasn't looked after. In other words, the Texas gates or the cattle guards weren't cleaned out, so the cattle could roam freely, without any interference. My experience and that of a number of campground operators in the Kananaskis, again referring to conservation, was that there was no conservation of the fences that separated the park areas from the industrial areas. In fact, these fences, what few remained, were frequently interfered with by resource extractors, a variety of lumber companies. So the thought that we would turn around what has been past practice of putting humans and recreational usage of these green areas second-last, only one step above the wildlife, the flora and the fauna of these areas – any improvement on this past practice will be very much received.

The other aspect that I see as a possibility through the conservation and preservation is the idea of reclamation, and that of course comes under the reclamation aspects of the bill, Bill 205, in brackets "Conservation and Reclamation." The provincial government spends a tremendous amount of time on resource extraction but does not spend near the amount of time on the reclamation of the land that is left after the nonrenewable resources are extracted, and those nonrenewable resources have unfortunately been extended to forests.

Because of the unsustainable practices of clear-cutting, trying to get any regrowth has been next to impossible in a number of areas. Around, for example, McLean Creek in the Kananaskis you go out into the area and the devastation is such that any kind of replanting efforts have basically failed. Similarly, across from Cataract Creek you'd be hard-pressed to find any indication of green. Although the forest was clear-cut back in bits of 2002 and 2003, there's very little evidence of regrowth. So what I hope would be accomplished through this bill is the requirement and the enforcement that the forestry companies that logged the area in the first place and were not required to log in a conservation manner, to selectively log, will at least be required within a reasonable amount of time to get back to the forest that they've destroyed and promote the regrowth of the forest.

Because this is such a large land base, 51 per cent of our province, the part of that 51 per cent that is left for, so-called, in brackets, parks and protected areas should have the highest level of protection because parks and protected areas in Alberta under provincial legislation and control make up barely 4 per cent of the total land-use area. If we can't even protect that 4 per cent, such as the Cataract Creek, the McLean Creek, the Rumsey ecological area, the Caribou Mountains wildlife provincial park, and so on, if we can't look after that 4 per cent, then what hope do we have of looking after the 51 per cent?

Last year in this Legislature we debated a bill that sort of went along with the idea of the polluter pays, but what it did was allow the person who screwed up in the resource extraction in the first place to go back in and make amends. So I'm hoping that in terms of the conservation aspects, we would require that the companies, whether they're oil and gas or they're lumber or whether they're cattle ranchers, would be restricted in the development and the usage of the land in a much greater manner than currently is the case.

We have one outfit going in for oil, gas, coal, whatever, building a series of roads, and then on top of those roads we have the forestry companies going in, and by the time we're through, what used to be a forest now looks more like a checkerboard grid of roads. We obviously have to have the fire breaks, but what happens with the resource in terms of the seismic lines and so on, you'd be hard-pressed to find any areas of Alberta that would qualify as old-growth forest. Add to that the very real and present danger of pine beetles and what the government is proposing as almost a pre-emptive strike, and this concerns me because if we go into areas where there is no indication that pine beetles have been or are likely to come in the next number of years and we simply clear-cut, then we've got problems.

I'll look forward to Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to join the discussion on the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007, put forth by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. I support Bill 205 because it gives this Assembly the opportunity to reaffirm its commitment to environmental sustainability and responsible land stewardship.

This piece of legislation supports the promotion of environmental integrity and seeks to ensure that the energy and forest industries are working together towards environmental sustainability. With Bill 205 this Assembly is bringing stakeholders to the table and ensuring that both industries are aware of their responsibilities for their respective resources and, too, the environment. While our government has affirmed its commitment to managing growth pressures, this piece of legislation effectively elaborates on this guiding principle.

By addressing the regulatory schedule of well site reclamation, Bill 205 is supplementing the development of a land-use framework. There are various perspectives to consider when discussing responsible land use. Although it is important that we continue to look out for the economic interests of Albertans with sustainable development of the energy sector, it is equally important that we continue to do a top-quality job in managing the effects that that growth has on our environment.

Bill 205 has the best interests of Alberta's environment at heart. Before thinking of our landscape as simply a supply of resources, we must recognize that our environment is an intrinsically valued asset within the cultural and social framework of this province. We recognize that our lakes, rivers, foothills, and mountains are a special part of the Alberta experience. A diverse and ecologically sound natural environment is a priority for this government and is something that our developmental policies must continuously strive to protect.

We must continue to approach our renewable and nonrenewable resources with a balanced approach. Because of Alberta's fortunate energy resource situation there is no doubt that our economy has and will continue to reap tremendous benefits. Record energy surpluses have meant billions of dollars going into the public purse, dollars that are being managed wisely for the good of all Albertans. Much like our responsibility to manage Alberta's finances as a result of a booming energy sector, our responsibility to effectively manage the environment is equally as important.

Not only does Bill 205 legitimize environmental common sense; it protects the sustainability of Alberta's roughly 38 million hectares of forest. While this government has committed to developing a comprehensive land-use framework, a legislative measure pertaining to the reclamation of well sites will serve as an effective supplementation to this long-term strategy. Currently the regulatory framework for well site reclamation falls under the purview of criteria developed in the mid-1990s. Just as the development of well sites must adhere to strict environmental codes, it is equally important for those sites to undergo a decommissioning process that is as attentive to the state of the surrounding environment. When those well sites are no longer in use, it is important to take note of the process and question whether it is providing forestry and energy firms with appropriate and timely regulations for their closure and the subsequent reclamation of the land.

Environmental policy. Land tenure over timber resources for forestry companies on Crown land is currently established through forestry management agreements, or FMAs. When oil and gas activities are undertaken on those lands, it is up to energy firms to work with their counterparts in the timber industry to ensure that any forestry damage as a result of energy activities is compensated. While the current criteria recognize the importance of returning land to its original state, they tend to lack timely updates in terms of clear-cut specifications that are necessary in the reclamation process. Although the current reclamation process is certainly not risking damage to the environment, we must always be looking for solutions that fulfill our obligation to the well-being of the land.

Managing growth pressures. The current unpredictability of the timing of reclamation criteria review is likely exacerbated in an economic climate of tremendous growth in the natural resource sector. The intent of Bill 205 is not to impede sustainable growth but to add a proactive component in the safeguarding of our forest. To achieve a best-case scenario for all parties, we must look at all perspectives. We want to ensure that forestry operations are afforded due diligence to their timber reserves as specified in their FMA, we must also allow energy firms to have access to appropriate well sites, and above all we are most concerned with achieving a best-case and sustainable scenario for the environment. Of course, while reclamation is not an instantaneous process, we want to ensure that the immediate concerns of soil erosion and the long-term goal of full restoration are being considered by all parties. As this province moves forward with continued responsible and sustainable development of our economy, Bill 205 presents us with an excellent opportunity to tackle the challenge of managing growth pressures from an environmental angle.

We will work in partnership. The current relationship between energy firms and forest organizations fully supports a dialogue in the ongoing development of appropriate reforestation targets. There are subtleties in identifying who is in the best position to undertake land reclamation work. Bill 205 will take an important step in outlining the environmental ins and outs required in the reclamation process and identifying a time frame in which these regulations should be reviewed. It also demonstrates that this Assembly is ensuring that all of our industries are moving forward as a team within this fast-paced economy, an economy that is open to implementing new opportunities that promote appropriate land stewardship. Bill 205 ensures that our ambitions in industry are suitably met with progressive measures in environmental sustainability. Bill 205 bolsters an effective partnership and facilitates the development of our land in conjunction with the values of all Albertans. Albertans recognize the multiple business, social, and environmental values that are attached to the land we all appreciate.

I encourage all members of this Assembly to offer their support to Bill 205. Not only does it take an important step in ensuring responsible land use, but it embraces a level of co-operation between Alberta's resource industries. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to enter into the debate on Bill 205 and express a few of my observations and comments at this stage, second reading of the bill. First of all, I want to applaud the member for introducing this bill. This member perhaps more than any other member – and I say so with the knowledge that some may take offence, but I think it's obvious to anyone who has worked with this member that he takes issues that he deals with in his constituency and gets to the bottom of the issue. Not only does he get to the bottom of the issue and understand what the issue is, but he does what most people don't do. He always takes it that one step further and not only identifies what the problem is but comes forward with solutions to that problem. So not only are we dealing with this private member's bill, but we've dealt with previous bills that have in a similar manner dealt with solutions, not just identified problems.

As others have indicated, the intent of this bill is to ensure that when well sites are being reclaimed, the necessary environmental and forest management practices are taken into consideration. But, more importantly, what the bill does is ensure that those practices are reviewed on a periodic basis to make sure that not only are they taken into account, but the practices that are put into force around that reclamation are the best available practices that meet the standard of the day. So the bill proposes to bring in a periodic review of regulations and guidelines to ensure that they remain current. It also allows us to ensure that regulations and guidelines include the best available forest and environmental management practices into the future.

A timely review of the reclamation standards with stakeholders at the table is important in a normal process for the business development in Alberta Environment and Sustainable Resource Development staff. This is not something that we don't do on an ongoing basis, but I think that the additional safeguards of having the necessary reminders, let's say, in place to ensure that there is ongoing upgrading and perhaps greening of the program is important.

Although I support the intent of the bill, I believe its objectives are best served through other means than amendments to the act. I indicated that this is practice, but perhaps it could be reinforced in a better way than amendments to the act.

There is a multistakeholder committee, and it includes representatives from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, the Alberta Forest Products Association, and the Surface Rights Federation as well as provincial government ministries. Working collaboratively, members of this group have drafted criteria to improve revegetation and reclamation on forested lands in Alberta, and the criteria set out forest management and forest ecosystem practices through either assisted or natural recovery at the time of reclamation. The new requirements for reclamation in forested areas can be supported and enforced under the existing conservation and reclamation regulation that would be managed by Sustainable Resource Development.

The work of the Reclamation Criteria Advisory Group has proceeded in a positive direction with support from stakeholders in the absence of a legislated mandate under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. As such, I would propose that the outcomes of Bill 205, which are very legitimate outcomes and need to be dealt with, are better dealt with by providing an expiry clause in the conservation and reclamation regulation. This expiry clause would ensure that the regulation remains current and is regularly reviewed to include best forest and environment practices without the necessity of an amendment to the act. Alberta Environment also remains committed to ensuring that the stakeholders are engaged in any future review of the reclamation criteria for forested areas, and they have been drafting improvements to the reclamation criteria of forested areas for some time.

So, again, I thank the member for introducing this important topic to the House. I think that the mere fact that we're having this discussion is productive. I support the intent of Bill 205, but I respectfully offer my comments for consideration by all members.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I know that I spoke on this once. I just had another pressing question, though, on this particular bill. With regard to reclamation and those orphaned wells or abandoned wells are we in fact going to still hold the parent company or the company at full cost for reclamation even if it's not really at their well site but, say, if it's two or three miles down where there was, you know, a break in the line or where it's deteriorated and then it starts to leak into the ground? We can detect where it comes into the groundwater or something, but it is part of that original line. We're talking about doing some of the testing at the well sites, but there is a line between the site and the hole. It can be miles in some cases. Is there part of this bill to take into account some of the deteriorating lines that are probably happening out there right now? Currently they wrap the lines with a yellow jacket, and it's all sealed at every particular joint, but if it isn't, is this part of that reclamation that can be accounted for underneath the provisions of this bill?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to join in discussion on the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007, introduced by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. I believe that Bill 205 will, in fact, further the government's commitment to land stewardship. We certainly have an obligation to see that all of our resources are handled in such a way that there are multiple benefits and that the environment is maintained.

Now, Bill 205 is general in nature, Mr. Speaker. It specifies that a committee would review the regulations governing conservation and reclamation in Alberta's green zone on a periodic basis. However, one of the main purposes of the bill would be to ensure that Alberta considers up-to-date environmental and forest management procedures when they are dealing with oil and gas well sites that are no longer in use. Currently well site reclamation procedures fall under the 1995 reclamation criteria and certain regulations which were enacted in 1993.

When reclaiming abandoned well sites, it's important to know that the sites should be returned to a state approximating that which was extant prior to their drilling. The long-term goal for natural recovery of a well site is obviously the re-establishment of a plant and animal community that is consistent with the ecosystem which surrounds the site. The short-term goal is the establishment of compatible plant species that would provide erosion control to protect the soil. Those might be, for example, annual grasses such as cereal crops, but in the longer term the objective would be to introduce grasses, herbs, and woody plants into the area which are native to the area in that they would be found in the larger natural environment and which would support an animal community which would approximate that which was found before the resource was exploited.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that the best practices have changed in the past, and they continue to evolve with respect to these matters of reclamation. For example, in years past we had well sites and pipeline routes and access roads which were seeded with fast growing species of grasses, things like crested wheat and brome grass and herbs such as tame clover. Those grasses and herbs, while they achieved rapid cover and they stopped erosion in the short term, were not native to the area, and those seedings, in fact, could have long-term consequences to the ecosystem in terms of what types of plant succession took place in the area. It was often found that those grasses, particularly species like the ones that I mentioned, brome grass and crested wheat grass, could outcompete the native species in the area, and the result would be invasion of the adjacent areas along the roadways or pipeline routes or well sites. So the resultant plant community would be disturbed, and as I said, the establishment of the intermediate and climax plant communities which were native to that area would be inhibited.

The current criteria in the regulations outlining how well sites should be reclaimed and managed are not reviewed or updated on a consistent basis, and Bill 205 stipulates that the regulations and criteria should be reviewed every five years. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that periodic revision of those regulations would be important to the environment as it would allow for the current forest practices and contemporary reclamation standards to be applied, ensuring that the lands receive the best care possible.

Now, as I mentioned, in the past there have been instances where a lot of nonnative species have been planted to prevent erosion and contain the soil. Nowadays it's possible to harvest seeds from native grasses to a far more efficient extent than it was in the past. That should be the new standard in reclaiming these sites and even in maintaining them in the initial instances when they're disturbed, for example, for a new access road.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of Bill 205 would certainly give us an increased access to best practices and ensure that those best practices are being applied. The government also, I would note, is in collaboration with a lot of stakeholders right now in the process of working on a land-use framework, and we certainly want to make sure that that framework is of an increasing priority as we struggle to manage the growth pressures in the province of Alberta. Particularly in this time of rapid population growth and rapid pressures on our resource industries I think it's important that the government be committed to, in the most responsible fashion possible, ensuring that there is proper reclamation of these sites.

The land-use framework which, as I mentioned, is in the process of being developed right now will set forth a plan for managing the land, the resources, and the natural environment, and I would suggest that this Bill 205 is complementary to that proposed land-use framework because it does, as I said, call for updated conservation and reclamation practices to make sure that there is long-term stability of the ecosystems in the area of these resources being exploited, that it ensures that the land is treated in the best way possible.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, I think that this bill would contribute to a land-use approach that is of benefit to Albertans. The regular revision of the reclamation criteria and regulations will certainly make sure that the resources are considered in a more balanced approach and that they're kept in harmony with the natural environment that surrounds these sites.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all members of the Assembly to join me in supporting Bill 205. As I said, I believe that this is an important step forward in terms of ensuring that the reclamation of resource-exploited sites is done in a much more harmonious way consistent with the land which surrounds it. It's certainly much more compatible with preserving the natural ecosystems, the natural plant and animal communities that we have in the province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to speak to Bill 205, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, because the idea of stewardship, or living within our ecological means, is becoming more and more of a concern for the majority of Albertans. We are beginning to recognize that long-term economic prosperity depends on the wise stewardship of our ecological resources.

We all need to change the way we are doing things. Solutions, though, will only be effective if we carry them through with the energy and concern of all Alberta's citizens. Alberta can and should lead the way in helping to define the appropriate roles for individuals, communities, governments, and corporations in environmental conservation. The stewardship principle needs to be adopted in every department of the provincial government, the activities of citizens, and in business enterprise. I think that the Member for West Yellowhead should be applauded for bringing forth this bill, that aims to strengthen legislation around conservation and reclamation, and especially for putting such a review in the public domain. This is a good step towards transparency and accountability.

Our land belongs to all Albertans and future generations. Thus government policy should ensure at all times that industry that operates on our land base returns the land to the state it was in prior to resource extraction by using best available practices and technology. As well, similar provisions should be incorporated into the act to deal with oil and gas activities in the white areas of the province. This would allow for the committee to ensure that best practices are used across all sectors to reclaim land after resources have been extracted. I believe that the government should have these types of committees in place to review all codes of practice and legislation that deal with reclamation activities by industry to ensure that best available practices are always used. Albertans value our forests, and any step to ensure best available forest management practices to preserve this resource and develop it responsibly is a positive step.

I suggest that the review committee must include public and independent scientists, that we need fundamental change in the pace and scope of development in Alberta based on a plan, based on good science, and based on meaningful public consultation. However, this is an important bill and should be passed to protect current and future generations.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Stewardship of our natural environment is a task that concerns us all. Our current prosperity is due in large part to the extraction of resources from our environment. We must protect our environment so that this prosperity may be sustained for the future. It is imperative that we do all that we can to ensure that our activities have a minimal impact on our environment. I am reminded of the ecological Hippocratic oath: first, we do no harm.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a leader in protecting the environment. We are the only province in Canada with legislation that specifically addresses conservation and reclamation of industrial developments. Land reclamation and soil quality guidelines are some of the most stringent in North America and have strict guidelines for levels of benzene, mercury, lead, and barium in our soil.

Co-operation and collaboration between government, business, and concerned stakeholder groups are very necessary. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's forests are busy places. They're accessed by more people than any other forests in Canada. We have some form of industrial activity in almost 83 per cent of our forests. The government of Alberta works with stakeholders to effectively manage this activity. Many environmentally conscious companies voluntarily collaborate with us and with each other. Alberta does not simply accept voluntary efforts. Unlike some jurisdictions, Alberta requires that reclamation certificates be issued regardless of landowner/industry agreements. Landowners cannot sign off on reclamation liability when a resource company completes their work.

Well site reclamation and forest management must be handled with the involvement of every stakeholder, Mr. Speaker. The interests of each stakeholder do not always perfectly align with the interests of others. Commitment to communication will produce an understanding that works for all concerned. Everyone can agree that it is in the best interests of all to minimize our ecological impact in the short and long terms.

The government of Alberta has a history of collaborating with industry and stakeholder groups to ensure that well sites are properly reclaimed. The Alberta orphan program is now operating as the Orphan Well Association. Since 1992 this industry-funded initiative has financed the reclamation of wells owned by companies that are unable or unwilling to do so. To date, Mr. Speaker, almost $64 million has been spent on orphan well abandonment and reclamation work. Albertans benefit in two ways, Mr. Speaker. They are protected from any future liability for orphan wells and know that their natural environment is being well cared for.

Another successful collaboration between government and industry is the Alberta Joint Energy/Utility and Forest Industry Management Committee. Mr. Speaker, this came into existence in 1995 because of a conflict over timber damages between a forestry company and petroleum producers. Since the resolution of this conflict the committee's focus has included the standardization and simplification of interactions between oil and gas and forestry companies working in the same area.

The existence and success of this joint committee emphasize the importance of clarity and consistency in our regulations, Mr. Speaker. Every stakeholder knows their obligations and fulfills them to the same standard. There has been much frustration in the past about the oil and gas industry being held to different reclamation standards than the forestry industry. Mandating a review of the standards for well site reclamation in forested areas every five years places all stakeholders on an even footing. Both the forestry and the oil and gas industries support the principle behind this bill. The Alberta Chamber of Resources has already started an integrated land management project that is reviewing government policies to identify areas where regulations can be streamlined.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 is a direct measure by the government to improve forestry management but will have the indirect effect of encouraging private companies to work together even when government is not involved. The Al-Pac/Gulf Surmount project brought Gulf Canada Resources . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Property Taxes for Seniors

505. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Amery:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a plan with municipalities to phase out the education portion of property taxes for seniors.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not only pleased to rise on behalf of the hon. member, who unfortunately was called from the Chamber to deal with a family urgency, but also to lend my support to this particular Motion 505. This motion, as members here will know, is designed to encourage our government to work with municipalities in order to phase out the collection of the education portion of property taxes for seniors.

The Alberta seniors community has a strong and proud tradition in our province, as we all know. In fact, as Alberta's founders and as some of our earliest patrons, obviously, seniors today have experienced a great deal of change in Alberta. Under the leadership of a variety of Premiers and through economic ups and downs we have our seniors community to thank for a province that stands so firmly as an economic powerhouse and as a society that is always seeking to better itself.

Alberta's seniors continue to enrich the social fabric and foundation of our great province as our parents, as our grandparents, as our co-workers, our neighbours, and so on. Therefore, it's timely for us to look at ways to ensure that Alberta's seniors are able to make the most of their golden years. In a province that is on such a sound financial footing thanks to some very difficult choices that were made a few years back, we owe it to many of our seniors, to our elders, to look at options that will ease the sometimes difficult financial circumstances that those years can bring.

As hon. members likely know, property taxes have been a source of education funding since Alberta became a province back in 1905. Because of their ability to provide a large and stable revenue source for education, these education property taxes have suitably served to ensure that young Albertans are in a great position to lead Alberta in the same way the previous generations have so capably done. While municipalities are currently in control of their property tax structure and their assessments, the province sets its requirements for collecting property tax revenue for education in terms of amounts deposited into what's called the Alberta school foundation fund, ASFF for short. Once the province has these monies, we are then able to redistribute these funds to school boards around the province for purposes of enhancing our K to 12 education system.

Mr. Speaker, what results is that the Alberta government provides 100 per cent of education funding through the ASFF, which draws both from the education property taxes and from the general revenue fund. Interestingly enough, over time the GRF, the general revenue fund, has provided an increasingly larger and larger portion of our

K to 12 education spending needs. Now, over the past 14 years education property tax rates themselves have either been reduced or frozen and today are about 40 per cent lower – 40 per cent lower – than they were in 1993.

Now, although it's been suggested that the education portion of property taxes be abolished altogether, what is being proposed here in this particular motion is a start that has the twofold potential to help phase out this burdensome tax while also alleviating another tax burden from the shoulders of our seniors. Now, I do understand that education is a shared responsibility, that we all have a vested interest in it, that we all benefit from it as a society, that it's critical to have a stable ongoing funding source for our K to 12 education successes to flourish because far too much depends on it. I understand that. However, there also comes a time when we must look at what a burden this is on some of our seniors.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, eliminating this particular tax for seniors, I'm going to suggest, must be accompanied with a second thought, and that is a source that would see those dollars replaced from some other funding pool. We have surpluses in this province, which we're very thankful for. We have a new surplus allocation policy. We have a budget that can be set in advance. In other words, we can predetermine where and how to offset these dollars should this motion succeed and should the government choose to actually enact that decision.

Secondly, by eliminating this tax for seniors, it ought not result in some additional burden for the rest of us, so to speak, who would have to otherwise perhaps shore it up. Let's not fall into that trap or that debate either, Mr. Speaker. Why do I say this? I say this because back in the 1980s Alberta seniors as homeowners automatically had the entire provincial education portion of their property taxes paid for by the provincial government. Moreover, Alberta's senior homeowners over the age of 55, regardless of their need, their income, or their assets, were eligible for a property tax reduction benefit.

Now, as the province met fiscal challenges and underwent changes through the 1990s, Alberta's seniors were one of the groups required to work with the province to tackle the debt. I know from having door-knocked on several seniors' doors that they went along with it because there was a specific target in mind, and the target was to get rid of the structural deficit of the province of Alberta and tackle the debt. We did both. We did both. Those obstacles are now out of the way.

In 1994 the Property Tax Reduction Act was repealed upon proclamation when the Seniors Benefit Act came into force, which no longer ensured an education property tax reduction for seniors. Like the many sacrifices that they once made in growing a strong and prosperous Alberta, seniors once again sacrificed for the betterment of our current financial situation. Today with the provincial debt gone, I think it is time to rethink this levy because it is causing unnecessary financial hardships on our lower income seniors. We did it with the elimination of health care premiums for seniors, and we can do it with the gradual phasing out of this tax burden related to education property taxes for seniors.

Mr. Speaker, as our baby boomers continue to age, Alberta is experiencing a very rapid shift in terms of its senior demographic. Presently seniors make up about 10 per cent of Alberta's total population, and by 2031, some short 24 years from now, 1 in 5 Albertans will be a senior citizen. This accounts for a sector of the population that is growing at a faster rate than others in our province. Unfortunately, this distinguished group of individuals, who have worked so hard to build this province, are amongst a demographic that must not be allowed to find themselves slipping through the cracks.

Almost all seniors do receive some income from government transfer payments. Among them, over 40 per cent of these seniors' total income is composed of government transfers, including old age security, guaranteed income supplements, and other social supports. Additionally, statistics show that seniors spend much more per person on health care while having an income that is approximately $5,000 lower than the average income amongst Alberta's population in general.

Mr. Speaker, there are other statistics that can be added to this debate, and I'm looking forward to the comments from other members. However, before I close, I want to simply say that seniors, as we know – and I realize that it's not all seniors but seniors in the majority – for the most part are on fixed incomes with relatively few opportunities to augment or to supplement their incomes. They're fixed at the level of dollars flowing into their coffers. However, the costs they are facing in terms of housing and rent and food and other amenities and necessities such as heating costs, electricity costs, rentals, and so on are going up rather dramatically, and the burden on our seniors continues to grow.

In conclusion, we should take a look at what other provinces are doing. I note, for example, that in Manitoba education property taxes have been phased out for residential properties for 2006. Perhaps that's a start here as well. Maybe there should be a different approach taken here where, if we can't phase these out, we can start to reduce them. Perhaps eventually we can see them totally eliminated.

My final statement, Mr. Speaker, is simply to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for having brought this issue forward. It is a very significant issue in my riding of Edmonton-Mill Creek. I know that I speak on behalf of thousands of seniors when I say that, please, let's have a long and serious thought about what it is that we can do to help these seniors, but let's not do it at the expense of some other programs. Let's plan for this. Let's work with the municipalities. Let's do a sensible phase-in so that there is no short pot at the end of it for anyone.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to suggest to the hon. member across from me that with his excellent presentation and his dramatic form, it's hard to follow that.

If we can just look at the question of education property tax, which was changed, as he alluded to, in 1994. He suggested, I believe, that it was equitable for all school districts across the province. It's my suggestion that in the urban centres it's certainly not equitable in many ways, and we'll address that in the next few weeks. I think, in my humble opinion, that the manner in which we do the property tax issue right now in this province should be reviewed and studied very carefully to see if it is equitable and it is doing the job. I suggest that it's probably not.

Anyway, I think, generally speaking, our side over here suggests to you that we're happy that there's some way of eliminating the education property tax for seniors, and this proposal tries to address that, especially seniors that are often on a fixed income. As the hon member pointed out, costs are rising, and they can negatively affect a person's financial position. Reducing senior tax could provide some relief, and that's very, very important in St. Albert. The property tax for some seniors with low income is very, very hard for them to cope with.

Let's just take a look at what the province is doing right now. It seems to me that there's a seniors' rebate program. I believe it started in 2005. Seniors can apply for a rebate that offsets the increases to their education property taxes after 2004. The value of this program, as we've got it, is about $5.7 million, possibly spending as much as $7 million as estimated in this budget year. This program addresses one of the key arguments against making seniors pay education property taxes. The tax is calculated according to the property value and the value of the assessment of their property.

I think the question of this amendment exempting all seniors from paying the education portion of the property tax exempts seniors who are below the low-income cut-off. I'd urge the government to create a fund to pay the education portion of the property tax for seniors who cannot afford the cost. I think that's a positive thing that they're doing.

British Columbia I think has a very interesting model. B.C. has a program in place to protect seniors and people with disabilities from increases in property tax to their homes. In B.C. they have what is called the property tax deferral program. The purpose of this program is to assist qualified B.C. homeowners to pay their annual property taxes. It is a low-interest loan program. The loan must be fully repaid before the home can be transferred to a new owner or upon the death of the agreement holder. A person who is eligible for this program in British Columbia may defer their property taxes on their principle residence if they are 60 years of age or older, a surviving spouse, a person with a disability as defined by regulation. So this is an alternate program, and I think it has some merit. I don't know if the proposer of this suggested legislation has looked at this.

I think it's also important to say that seniors who have the financial stability to pay for the education requisition probably feel that they are able to pay that. I think there are certain members of our population that are seniors who have the dollars. They are saying that they are willing to pay for the providing of education funding, and there is no problem with that. To be clear, there are seniors who easily have the financial stability to pay for the education requisition. They should not be treated the same as those seniors or disabled who do not have the same financial means to support themselves or their families.

As an example, should a senior living in a million dollar home in the best part of town with an income annually of six figures be eligible for the same elimination or educational property tax phase-out that a senior living on a $20,000 per year fixed income should pay? I think there has to be something done about this, and I think it's commendable that this has come forth as a way of relieving this.

This motion, while we support it in principle, should be altered to make this distinction clear. The language should be along the lines of establishing a plan with municipalities to phase out the education portion of the property tax for eligible seniors or alternately for seniors on fixed incomes below an established threshold. This would be more accurate to ensure that those who need that financial assistance receive it. As stated earlier, a senior whose bank account has a lot of zeroes behind it probably does not need the same assistance as a senior with a couple of zeroes on their bank balance. Let's make sure that we help those who really need it.

We shouldn't forget people with disabilities on fixed incomes. They should also be eligible for an elimination or reduction of their portion of the education property tax. Let's make sure that they are included for help as well.

Generally speaking, I believe we support this, Mr. Speaker, and we hope that some of the alternatives that we've talked about here will be looked at during the debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon with some interest to speak on this Motion 505 dealing with the education property tax portion of people's overall property taxes. You know, this is an issue that has concerned me greatly since before I was elected because I have a high proportion of seniors in my constituency of Edmonton-Calder. This combined with a number of other initiatives and breaks that seniors had enjoyed previous to 1993 really not just created financial burden and hardship for seniors on fixed incomes but also added to this sort of idea that seniors were not being looked after somehow, that taking away the break on the education property tax part of their taxation in combination with some other benefits being lost just made seniors across the province feel as though they weren't being looked after the way that they should.

Seeing this motion coming forward, I'm sure that it's an acknowledgement of the similar observations that I've made over the last few years, that seniors are demanding – and I believe deserve to demand – that they, in fact, have some of these benefits reinstated to them in their senior years because, of course, as previous speakers have put forward, we are fixing our income somehow more stringently by the time we retire, so any break or any benefit certainly does make a bigger difference when you're not earning the same income that you might have when you were in your working years. You know, lots of seniors living healthy and proper lifestyles were seniors who enjoyed these benefits previous to 1993 and still feel betrayed somehow that this was taken away from them in the interest, as the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek suggested, to do their part to balance the budget. Of course, now here we are 13, 14 years later with these massive surpluses, and this has not been reinstated for seniors.

My suggestion is that, certainly, the spirit of this motion is good. It's a step in the right direction, but I would venture to say that all seniors deserve to have the education property tax portion of their overall property tax credited. In fact, you know, it's as though you have an extension of benefits to seniors. We want to maintain the universality of those benefits and not exclude people on some sort of a sliding scale. You know, Mr. Speaker, I've seen the sliding scale operate in many other parts of our taxation and finances of this province. It tends to get ratcheted up when there's a perception that there's money in short supply, and then nothing happens unless lots of people complain about it later on. So by maintaining the universality of the seniors exemption from property tax, I think that we would be doing everyone the best possible benefit, because nothing annoys or makes people feel embarrassed as to go back and have to reapply for things as their income might be going up or down, especially in one's senior years. So often I see seniors with that, sort of, often forgotten virtue of modesty choosing perhaps to not apply for a benefit – besides this, other benefits that we might be able to give them – because they feel that, you know, "Oh, well, I don't want to be a bother" somehow.

That's part of why we create a system of universality when it comes to pensions and with regard to health care. Universality is very, very important. So to suggest that, "Oh, well, you know, perhaps that person's saved a few more shekels, and they should just pay for it themselves," I think that considering we are talking about seniors and their portion of the education property tax that most of them have been paying for most of their adult years as homeowners, I don't see why this can't be a universal extension to all seniors here in the province of Alberta.

We're looking at quite a significant amount of money here, the sum of $1.4 billion being collected through the education property tax system. This, in fact, accounts for 30 per cent of Education's total revenues. Currently, it seems that we're using $400 million of this education property tax as somehow a strings-attached funding towards housing and other capital infrastructure concerns for municipalities.

You know, municipalities are requiring this money to be used at their discretion. We have to recognize the integrity of the municipal level of government without attaching these strings, and then certainly I think they have the right to collect and distribute the money through their own coffers, in fact. This whole strings-attached mechanism by which some new municipal funding has been made available here is highly problematic, and certainly we don't need it to happen through this education property tax part of the way that we tax people here in general in the province of Alberta.

This is definitely a polarizing issue I'm seeing developing between municipalities that want and require some extended sources of revenue streams. Certainly, we support the handover of the education property tax to municipalities to use as they see fit. However, considering that seniors have borne the brunt of so many growth-related problems here in the province of Alberta, phasing out the education property tax for them is very good and probably will not have a significant impact in the total amount of taxes being collected through this mechanism.

Certainly, I support the spirit of this motion but with the caveat that we believe that the exemption for seniors should be universal and not put onto a sliding scale.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to speak on 505. It reads: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a plan with municipalities to phase out the education portion of property taxes for seniors."

Now, it was already mentioned that seniors in some cases are some of our most vulnerable because they're on fixed incomes, and this would certainly help them out. I couldn't agree more. If we really wanted to help them out, it would be specific that if we gave them a break on their health care premiums, that would probably be the most beneficial one for all of them.

The other one is: what's to prevent someone who has a parent that's a senior from transferring them to the title of their property and, say, opt out for the next 24 years? I could have my mom go onto my property, sign on as a senior, and that would allow me to get out of the property tax for the school portion and save me about $120,000. Then, when I turn 65, it would revert back to me, and I've skipped out on 25 years of payments for property tax for education.

Now, is that being considered as to a sleight of hand or a pocket or a loophole for this particular bill? I can see it being able to happen. Someone just has to think about it, which I already have, and the solution's right there. [interjection] That's right. It's a perfect loophole for thousands of Albertans, so maybe this isn't the one-stripe solution to fit everybody because there are definitely loopholes.

People have to become creative because money is becoming finite, and it's becoming tighter and tighter. You've always got to be one step in a municipality. Edmonton already wants to tax citizens for even selling their houses. This is one of these hare-brained ideas that Mandel has, but that's another one. This is altogether something separate. But that's got to be looked at right there. If we want to give relief, it should be with health care because this other one has got to be a real slippery slope.

Thank you very much.

5:20

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Motion 505, a motion that's directed at eliminating education property taxes for seniors. This is an important issue, and I believe that the issue is greater than this because we need to have a review of our approach to property taxes in this province.

The reason that we have the education property tax, which is a tax paid by property owners that is directed towards the cost of K to 12 education, is that supposedly the revenue from these taxes is directed towards funding the public and separate school systems. The rationale is that all Albertans benefit from high-quality early education through an improved workforce and provincial economy and are therefore expected to contribute directly to its costs.

The province took over responsibility for the education property tax in 1994. The rationale for this shift included providing for greater equalization of educational resources, irrespective of local and economic conditions. However, that move has eroded local autonomy. Local school boards are elected officials who have very little autonomy. I think this is another area where we need to consider what we're doing with property taxes because I feel that that was a backwards move, and it's still in effect.

The elimination of seniors' property tax is an idea that sounds good at first glance. Seniors have paid their dues to society. They've got rising costs to meet, often on fixed and limited incomes. They're not going to be benefiting from the educational system themselves. Or are they? There's a maybe here that doesn't quite ring true. I'm not simply referring to seniors who go back to school, some in their 80s, to complete university degrees. Even for that select few perhaps their education tax should be written off out of deference to their lifetime contributions. But there's more than dollars and cents and cost recovery at issue here. Education is one of the ways we all participate in society and all benefit, whether we attend an educational institution or draw on the services of someone who does. Education is part of a social consensus, a consensus that is becoming more fragile.

There are other areas of our shared life that we could also divvy up according to who uses and who benefits from them. I'm thinking of health care, for instance. By the user-pay dictum the healthy need not contribute to health care costs or pay medicare premiums. By that token, seniors could be charged more since they are more likely to use the system.

How about the highways and other transportation? Why should those who don't drive pay for roads for those who do drive? Why should those who use public transport have their ride subsidized by those who don't? If we start down this slope, we're making our choices on the same kind of self-interest that Martin Niemöller described in his statement, "first they came for the Communists, but I did nothing, for I was not a Communist; then they came for the trade unionists, and I did nothing because I wasn't one of them" and so on.

Reducing our contribution to society on the basis of self-interest isn't a way to a more streamlined society. It's the beginning of the end of the sense of community and of looking out for each other, and that is a decline of civilization. These proposals for streamlining can be very seductive when they're couched in terms of a group that is deserving, such as seniors. But the consequences of this approach can be very deadly for all, including seniors, as we unravel the social fabric that we do share.

If we want to aid seniors, let's increase the benefits to them that more than offset the tax in question. Let's not dismantle what they've helped to build up and continue to support symbolically as long as they're with us. It may look like a good idea, and I appreciate the intent, but I believe that we've got to look at universality and at the seniors who aren't property owners. Shouldn't we be helping them all? I think there are better ways to do that. I support the intent of this motion, but I really believe it doesn't do enough.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to speak to Motion 505. As many others have already remarked, no doubt this is a bill with very good, well-meaning intentions, but as most of the members on this side of the House know, when it comes to public policy, the road to hell is paved with good intentions, so we have to look at the results.

Having said that, I did want to say that this is one of those rare occasions when I do happen to agree with a number of the members on the other side here, including the members for Edmonton-Decore, Edmonton-Mill Woods, and also the Member for St. Albert. The Member for Edmonton-Decore has pointed out how a wily scoundrel could use this as a way to beat the system and shirk his public responsibility. The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has pointed out that public education or education in general is a shared responsibility. Today's seniors had their education paid for when they were youth. I see no reason why they shouldn't continue to contribute to education.

I'm particularly concerned about some of the issues of equity and fairness, both between seniors and also between seniors and young families. The Member for St. Albert pointed out that: why should a senior with a six-figure income that lives in a million dollar home have no tax treatment and a senior in a smaller owned property with a small income get the same treatment?

I'm actually even more concerned with the question of equity or fairness, the intergenerational issue. Many of us have children that are just entering the housing market, and particularly in cities like Edmonton and Calgary, where they're paying not $200,000 but $300,000 or $400,000 for their first home with big mortgages, why should a young family with a big mortgage and two or three children be paying property tax when in the house next door a senior couple is not paying any tax? I think that's an equity issue as well.

I have looked at this issue before, and I agree with the hon. Member for St. Albert that British Columbia has come up with the proper solution to this, which is a property tax deferral approach. That allows a senior or senior couple, if they choose, to stay in their home, not to avoid paying their taxes but to have the taxes paid when and if they eventually sell the property. So that preserves the integrity of the tax base. It addresses the issue of intergenerational equity and also the equity between seniors at different income levels.

So for all of those reasons I would encourage all members not to support this motion. The intentions are good, no doubt, but there's a better way to achieve the same end, and I encourage all members to oppose it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is indeed a remarkable day when the minister of sustainable resources agrees fully with the shadow minister of sustainable resources. This is probably progress.

I agree as well with the intent of the motion, but a bit of a history lesson: the education portion of property tax ceased to fulfill its intent in 1994 after the right to collect the tax was taken away from duly elected school trustees by this patriarchal provincial government. Prior to 1994 those locally elected and responsible for the education in their communities, trustees, used the property tax to have the autonomy, as my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods said, to control 50 per cent of their school budget. They could make the decisions that had the greatest impact at the local level, and unfortunately that right was taken away by the centralized dictates of this province.

5:30

Having said that, I also agree with the Member for Edmonton-Calder. I would rather forgive a wealthy individual if it meant that a less fortunate individual's needs were met, so I do accept the universality of the need for protecting seniors. The education of individuals is what determines our future and our well-being. I'm sure there are a number of seniors who are in that wealthy, fortunate circumstance, and they would continue to fund schools whether or not it was required. They have the wisdom to know that their future is in the hands of the up-and-coming generations, and assuring that they had the highest and best education possible would be in their own best interests.

The motion attempts to give seniors a break. I agree with the idea that after paying taxes for 40 to 45 years for a variety of things, whether it's education or income, et cetera, seniors deserve to be recognized, and those most vulnerable seniors on fixed incomes need the protection. It is in our best interest as a government to protect seniors and keep them in their homes as long as we possibly can as opposed to condemning them to long-term care, which has not been properly supervised or funded by this government and of which a number of seniors are extremely fearful.

This motion directs us to consider removing the education portion of property taxes for seniors. As our sustainable resources minister indicated, while it does have certain flaws, we can fix those flaws by adopting the B.C. model or toughening up the registering of property so that loopholes that would allow a person to change their ownership to that of their parent would not be permitted. I believe scrutiny can occur. I believe we can improve upon this, but the motion directs us in a particular direction, which suggests that seniors get a break.

As I began, I would rather see seniors on fixed incomes receive some support from this government as it finally agreed to with the removal of the health care premiums for those on fixed incomes. This, to me, would be a natural progression. If we properly invest our money today to prepare us for the future, if we show the type of fiscal responsibility as a provincial steward that a number of seniors have demonstrated, then that money will be available. Of course, our Liberal suggestion, our funding for the future, would see us setting aside the types of savings that would guarantee our provincial future and no longer require us to be dependent on nonrenewable energies or on the property tax portion that education represents but doesn't truly receive. The money, unfortunately, just goes into general revenue and gets lost. So if we're going to charge the education portion of taxes, let's give it back to the local officials, the trustees who were elected to carry out their duties, exempt seniors, and let's get on with having a savings plan that reflects the future for the entire province, that takes away this kind of dependency.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak on Motion 505, education property tax elimination for seniors, brought forward on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Motion 505 encourages our government to work with municipalities in phasing out the collection of property taxes from seniors. It's aimed to alleviate this burden on seniors 65 years of age or older by working with municipalities. We all know how exciting that can be, especially the minister responsible. Although the collection of property taxes is under the jurisdiction of municipalities, the province allocates contributions to the Alberta school foundation fund.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to look at some of the pros and cons to Motion 505 and look at a number of stats, which may really excite a number of the members in the House as I see a number of members looking very intently at what I'm about to say, including one senior, who makes up 10 per cent of Alberta's total population. It's anticipated that by 2031 20 per cent of Albertans will be seniors, including a few of us here in the House. That's a demographic that's growing at a faster rate than the rest of Alberta's entire population.

From July 2003 to June 2004 Alberta attracted the second-highest number of senior interprovincial net migrants after British Columbia. That says a lot about how attractive our province is, but it also brings other responsibilities and other problems. Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, more seniors have moved into Alberta from other parts of Canada than have moved out, and according to the 2001 census, 60 per cent of Alberta's seniors lived either in Edmonton or Calgary, a stat that surprised me. I thought we'd have more in rural Alberta. They accounted for 11 per cent of our population in Edmonton and 9 per cent in Calgary. I don't know if that says anything about the Oilers and Flames, Stampeders and the Eskimos or not.

This particular age demographic typically has an average income below the mean and is often reliant on community and financial supports. Those are simply the facts. No editorial comment here. Now, eliminating education property taxes would be measured in eliminating potential hardship for certain seniors who pay property taxes. According to the stats, seniors' average income for the year 2000 was $26,336, which is approximately $5,000 lower than the average income for Alberta's general population.

Just a few more stats before I move on to the next facts: approximately 7 per cent of seniors accessed provincial housing programs in 2004, including almost 15,000 seniors in self-contained, subsidized rental accommodations and 9,400 seniors in lodge and cottage programs. Certainly, Motion 505 would help those seniors dependent on government and community supports and fixed incomes. If they are physically able to do so, the ease of financial strain could allow them to stay in their homes longer, which, of course, is a very good thing and solves a lot of other problems.

Although seniors have raised their children and many are watching their grandchildren grow, many seniors have likely spent a lifetime paying education property taxes and have paid their dues, so to speak. It would help a large number of these people, who have contributed to our province for many, many years.

However, Mr. Speaker, while there are all these benefits to Motion 505, there are implications in the motion that raise certain concerns, some of which have been aired already, and here are a few more. The tax revenue collected from municipalities' property assessments are used to meet the local portion of the province's required funding. The revenues collected for distribution to local school boards may be at a loss as a result of this portion not being represented.

Motion 505 assumes that all seniors are in a lower income bracket, and accordingly there are other demographics that might benefit from the cut in property taxes as well. The decrease in funding for the Alberta school foundation fund would continue to decrease as more and more baby boomers continue to age. Seniors continue to benefit from a well-funded education system that produces doctors, nurses, carpenters, plumbers: a myriad of people in wonderful professions that do provide services not only to them but all Alberta residents. Alternatively, the loss of funding for basic education is estimated to be $140 million. It could also escalate into further problems in order to compensate for the loss of those funds.

So, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Motion 505 should be weighed by its pros and cons, like any other motion, in order to fully understand the complexity of this issue. It's been mentioned that property taxation is a municipal affair, but there is room for the government of Alberta to work with municipalities to address the needs of seniors and school funding. It's an issue that, I believe, requires further discussion than what today's proceedings allow. We need to review in order to arrive at a solution that's beneficial for all parties. I'd like to thank the hon. member for opening discussion on this topic, but since I believe it can't be closed today, I believe that this motion needs to be rejected in favour of something better in, hopefully, a future time that is not too far away.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it does appear to be a historic day because there's an awful lot of agreement on both sides of the House today and on more than one issue. So that's nice to see.

Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed indicated, this is indeed a complex discussion and one, I would argue, whose time has come. [interjections] Glad to see that everybody is now paying attention and hanging on every word.

Certainly, one of the most profound things that I noticed during the last election as I was door-knocking through the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford was the number of residents living in the homes that they built 40 years ago. So clearly, now, these are seniors who, in most cases, have had their families grow up in the community. The families have now left and started families of their own. The seniors, in some instances, may have lost a partner or a spouse, but they're struggling to hang on to their homes. Particularly for those on fixed incomes this is a real challenge.

As the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek mentioned in his introduction of this motion, while some things have been controlled and some relief has been given to seniors from the government, there are so many things that are out of their control, whether it be utilities or the cost of food, transportation, on and on. So some sort of relief in the way of education property tax, I'm sure, would be very much appreciated. We know that they get a little bit right now. I've had several seniors come and show me that the relief they get to this point is often no more than $10 or $15 a year. Obviously, that's not making enough of a difference for seniors in terms of trying to keep them in their homes.

So it's a debate that is very relevant, and anything we can do to help our seniors age in place as opposed to forcing them into some sort of alternative housing arrangements I would support completely. But if we're going to have that discussion and that debate, as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed suggested, it's a much bigger debate and probably requires a full review of the entire taxation system as opposed to just looking at this one particular area of it.

One of the things that springs to mind any time we talk about reducing or eliminating education property tax is the whole notion of autonomy or lack thereof that the school boards are dealing with. As we know, they've already seen a severe limit placed on their ability to raise revenues to operate. In fact, in this Assembly last year we had a motion to completely eliminate the education property tax not just for seniors but for everybody. Again, the question arises: what does that do to the autonomy of those elected officials that have been tasked with running the education system on behalf of the local residents? Certainly, that's a part of this.

The other thing, I suppose, as a shadow minister for Finance, is that any time I look at something like this, even though in principle I support the idea of helping seniors, especially those that are on a fixed income, the question automatically becomes: how much would this cost if we were to extend this particular provision to all seniors who own homes? As the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek indicated, if there is a cost – and obviously there is – then that money has to be made up somewhere. Are we simply going to transfer that extra burden onto the rest of the homeowners? Is the provincial government going to step forward with some sort of a plan to take money from natural resource revenue and direct it to this?

The surplus policy that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek referenced in the budget that was introduced on the 19th is, I would submit, woefully inadequate in terms of saving money. If we're going to count on that surplus policy to fund the provisions that would be encompassed by this motion, Mr. Speaker, then I would submit that that's just not good enough. Although, certainly, the Liberal opposition has been calling for some time for a surplus policy, we've recognized that in this province particularly surpluses are incredibly vulnerable to political manipulation. If that's the way we're going to look at funding, the proposal that's in front of us in this motion, then I wouldn't have any degree of confidence whatsoever that the money would actually be there to fund this. I think we have to look at an entire restructuring of the tax system if we're going to in fact proceed with the ideas that are contemplated in this motion.

Now, I think the Member for St. Albert discussed the model that's used in B.C., and I heard the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development reference it as well. I think that this perhaps is a very reasonable approach to the problem, whereby we would allow seniors to defer their property taxes until such time as they're no longer in that residence. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is maybe a model that we should look at much more carefully because it would seem to me that it accomplishes a number of things. It certainly would provide immediate relief to those seniors that find it difficult to pay their portion of the education property tax, yet at the same time it would see that the province and, in effect, all residents of the province eventually receive that tax money. It may be deferred for a number of years, but it would eventually flow through. So that's a model that certainly attracts my attention and, I would submit, something that we should perhaps look at a little more carefully.

I know as well that my colleague from St. Albert talked at length about not just seniors but others that are on a fixed income and whether or not we should in fact be extending the provisions that this motion contemplates to others that are also unable to cope with rising education property taxes and give them that same relief so that we can keep them in their residences as well.

The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods I thought raised a very valid point when she was talking about if you're going to look at sort of a user-pay model and if we're going to discuss in broad terms the fact that seniors are for the most part no longer using the education system, then why should they pay for it? Then she raised examples. What about those of us who don't use the public transit system? Why should we be paying into that? You get into that whole discussion as to what is good for the society as a whole and how much commitment and responsibility do we as individual taxpayers have to take for that, Mr. Speaker. I think, again, that what it does is illustrate that this discussion that we're having today – although there's very good reason to extend the proposals that we're talking about to seniors, I don't think you can do it without having the larger discussion in the broader context, and that is a complete review of the entire taxation system and a broader discussion as to how and why we collect taxes and where we wish to collect taxes from and so forth. There certainly isn't time during today's debate for that. In fact, I think that probably there are only a few minutes left, and we've only had a handful of speakers with the opportunity to even discuss it today.

So I'm going to take my seat and allow one more speaker to get a few words in before we run out of time today. As I say, although I certainly respect the intent of this motion and applaud the member for bringing it forward, I don't think this is really the time or the place to approve it given the lack of discussion that has taken place today. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to give a few opening comments on Motion 505. I agree with it in principle. If I can just sort of talk basically on the aspect of national parks, and I'll sort of focus in on Jasper national park, the aspect there with homes. The first thing is that you have a set area where you can build, and you're only allowed to build a certain amount of homes, so of course the assessment value is way high, and then you're taxed on the school portion.

The other area that hits a lot of the seniors is the right to reside. You know, when we're looking at seniors in that area, we need them there because they're the knowledge and do a lot of our volunteer work, so it would be kind of nice to be able to give them a bit of a break.

Another reason is that you have co-operative housing in the municipality of Jasper. You've got some low-income people that are there. They buy into a co-operative unit, and of course they're not allowed to sell it for any more than they paid for it other than an inflation value, but what really gets them is the education tax because it's on assessment value.

I mean, we did some portions of this for the aspect of seniors in the year 2004, that the taxes couldn't be any higher and that they could claim for them, but I still believe that we have to look at something because I get a lot of complaints. When we go back to 1994 – and I always don't look backwards. Seniors feel that they've done their part. They don't mind paying for their grandchildren's education, but when they're paying for their great-grandchildren's education, they feel that that's a little too much.

So I just feel that we should develop a balance. I know that we're going to have to review this. I know that we've reviewed it a lot, but the big thing is with the national parks. I think there's something that has to be done there to make sure that the seniors can reside there. I mean, we've worked hard with other municipalities in West Yellowhead now, as I stated earlier today, to move forward and get some other types of housing for them.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-East to close debate on Motion 505.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am well aware that there are many seniors who can afford to pay taxes such as this particular one we are debating, and I know that from personal experience again, door-knocking in my own area. However, I am equally acutely aware that there are many who simply cannot. However, to be fair to them all, I don't see any way of really further categorizing the two groups, those who can afford versus those who cannot. Hence, I'm supporting this particular motion from that standpoint.

Just a couple of closing comments, Mr. Speaker. First of all, thank you to all the members who participated on both sides of the discussion. We should be reminded that according to the 2001 federal census, 60 per cent of Alberta's seniors lived in that year in either Edmonton or Calgary. In fact, 81 per cent of seniors overall are located in our urban areas throughout Alberta, not just in Edmonton and Calgary. According to the trends available as seniors continue to age, the numbers that live in urban areas will also increase. Now, as the seniors population in Alberta continues to climb, so too are our property values climbing. In fact, they are skyrocketing in various places. Property taxes are following suit.

Although seniors are by no means the only group facing financial challenges due to high costs of living and in maintaining their properties and so on, many of them are certainly at risk of financial hardship. We here as legislators and lawmakers are always looking for unique and relevant measures to manage growth pressures and to improve the quality of life for all Albertans, including our seniors. Here today we have an opportunity to do exactly that for a very special group of individuals, individuals who helped build this province and in so doing contributed enormously to the prosperity we enjoy today.

By eliminating this portion of property taxes for seniors through the phasing out approach referenced in the motion, our Legislative Assembly of Alberta will immediately ensure the retention of money in the pockets of seniors so they can be assisted as they address the challenges they face. Having contributed to the building of a strong Alberta and to the assurance of a bright future for our children, it would be very appropriate to say thank you to our seniors by removing the education property tax from their shoulders.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, at the same time it's equally important to first identify a predictable, sure, and stable source of replacement funding for education purposes because we wouldn't want to do anything to the detriment of the outstanding K to 12 education system that we have in this province. This is critical for the sustenance of that system. So please let's not misconstrue each other's comments in that regard, nor should we let them get in the way of supporting this motion.

My final comment, Mr. Speaker, is simply to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for having brought this motion forward to our attention. He would point out to you that individually a senior's average income was $26,336 in the year 2000, and that is approximately $5,000 lower than the average income for Alberta's population in general. This is a group that needs some help. Let's see if we can do that today by supporting this motion.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The House stands adjourned until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 1, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/01

head:

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Let us pray. O source of all wisdom, care, and understanding, bless this province of ours and its people to be the guardians of the trust given unto them. Bring forth from this Assembly guidance to benefit all those who live within its borders and outside. Amen.

Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly a group of 30 visitors from Holy Family school in Grimshaw. They're spending a good part of their week here in the city and, certainly, had to travel over six hours one way to get here. I don't often have school groups here, and I'm very, very proud that we've got representation from Grimshaw. They are accompanied today by teachers Miss Jennifer Anderson and Miss Kim Conquergood, by parent helpers Ms Roxanne Stinn, Mrs. Heather Hockley, Mr. Clayton Cardinal, Mr. Henry Jonk, and Mr. Chester Dodgson. They are seated in the public gallery. I would invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you Lorna Willert, who is one of my constituency assistants in Innisfail. Lorna has worked for me for almost seven years. She is greatly involved in the community as well as a dedicated and loyal individual who has been extremely supportive and a definite asset to my team. Lorna is joining us today in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Canadian Legion's Alberta-Northwest Territories Command takes a keen interest in promoting the values of good citizenship among young people throughout the province. The Legion is in partnership with the Legislative Assembly office in a program that reflects that good work. It's Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. We are very appreciative of both their financial support and their involvement for this annual event, which began last evening and will conclude later this afternoon. In your gallery, Mr. Speaker, are Mr. Don Orr, the Legion's command first vice-president, who is accompanied by his wife, Beryl Orr, and Darrel Jones, the Legion's vice-president, and his companion, Darlene Burnett. Mr. Orr and his Legion team have been instrumental in ensuring that the participants have been so well looked after. We will now invite our guests to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

My next introduction, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and to all members 59 students who are here today as participants in your MLA for a Day program. The participants have spent time with the Royal Canadian Legion, debated a resolution, spent the night at a local hotel, visited in their member's office, had lunch with them, and following question period they will receive a tour and briefing on the constituent elements of this House. The ultimate aim of the day's activities is to further develop the interest and understanding of our parliamentary system among our student guests. The students come from varying backgrounds, but one I would like to note is the granddaughter of a former executive director in the office of the former Premier Peter Lougheed. Our shadow colleagues are seated in both galleries. They are accompanied by their Legion chaperones Joan O'Reilly, Audrey Sluggett, Gordon McDonald, Wayne Donner, and Barb and Reid Morris. I would ask them as well to rise now and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 12 individuals who are concerned about the availability of support and service for children with autism and the many roadblocks to access assistance. First of all, I'd like them to rise when I finish: Gail Wilkinson from Edmonton, Yvette Ludwig from Edmonton, Mary Jo Hague from Edmonton, Christine Barringham and Eric Barringham from Edmonton, Dabby Fong from Calgary, Guy Emond from Calgary, Sherry Miller from Calgary, Kierstin Hatt from Camrose, Brian Hockin from Wetaskiwin, Amy Anderson from Edmonton, and Assad Chaudhry from Edmonton. I'd like them to rise and please accept the warm and traditional welcome from the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to introduce to you and to the Assembly six courageous Alberta landowners who are here to express their profound disappointment in the failure of our regulators to properly monitor and protect groundwater in the province. They are: from Rosebud, Fiona Lauridsen, Debbie Signer, and Jessica Ernst; from Ponoka, Shawn and Ronalgie Campbell; and in absentia Dale Zimmerman, who was here a year ago with complaints of gross contamination of his groundwater. Could they please stand, and we'll give them the usual welcome of the Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to have two introductions. The first person I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly is Brianne Hudson. Now, Brianne is a very good example of citizen advocacy. She and her fellow residents of the Sierra building have done a great deal of media to publicize their situation around lack of rent control, and later I'll be tabling a petition from them. I understand that Brianne is in the members' gallery. I would ask her to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a very active group of seniors. I'm not sure if they're in the Assembly yet, but I'll put this on the record for when they do arrive. This is the Minerva Senior Studies group out of Grant MacEwan Community College in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre. We're expecting about 14 visitors. This is a really lively group. They're getting together to study, for the most part, but I always enjoy my visits with them, and I'm looking forward to our usual tea and cake during Seniors' Week. If that group is in the galleries, would they please rise and accept our welcome.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 33 bright, inquisitive young minds from Sweet Grass school, in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They are visiting the Legislature today to observe their MLA in action and learn a little bit about our democratic process. They're accompanied by teachers Mrs. Fiona Mark and Mr. Dean Hess. I would ask that they please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a former page of this Assembly, Stacy Schell, who is visiting us. Having observed MLA behaviour while she was here, she's appropriately studying psychology and political science at the University of Western Ontario, and she's back to visit with us for the summer. I invite her to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Melanie Kay, Teresa Alenuik, and Richard Konkin. They're all workers on strike, entering the 235th day, at the Palace Casino here in Edmonton. We're very concerned about the state of Alberta labour laws and its impact on the Palace Casino employees. Melanie Kay has been at the Palace Casino for six and a half years and works as a slot cashier. Teresa Alenuik and Richard Konkin are both dealers at the Palace Casino and have been working there for the past seven years. Richard is also a member of the union's bargaining committee. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and honoured to introduce four visitors today that are in the members' gallery, and I would like them to stand as I introduce them. First I'd like to introduce Laure Mwan, the Edmonton-Manning STEP student for this summer. She's originally from the Democratic Republic of the Congo and came to Canada in 2000, didn't know a word of English. She speaks excellent English now. She's working in my constituency office for the summer as she's a student at NAIT in office and records. I look forward to working with her.

I'd also like to introduce the STEP student for my Legislature office, Kirstyn Rau. She's originally from Daysland. Her father served on town council there for several years, implanting an interest in politics. She's in political science at Grant MacEwan and looks to go into law.

I'd also like to introduce Robin Williams, who's a legislative research assistant at my Legislature office. She's finished her first year of business at NAIT and will be returning in the fall. I look forward to working with her.

And last but not least is Catherine Obacz, their chief, my legislative liaison and chief of staff for the office of the independent member.

These women are all very independent, Mr. Speaker, and I ask this Legislature to welcome them all in its traditional warm welcome. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you two guests in the members' gallery. The first is my constituency manager from Little Bow, Lois McLeod, who might just be the longest serving constituency manager in the province now, since 1993. [interjections] I've been corrected already. Almost. The second is our new leg. assistant, that is going to be helping the MLA for Battle River-Wainwright and myself, Mr. Deva Veylan. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Climb and Run for Wilderness

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two Saturdays ago, on April 21, the Alberta Wilderness Association hosted their 16th annual climb and run for wilderness in Calgary. Over 800 intrepid runners and climbers conquered all 802 steps of the Calgary Tower. Over $150,000 was raised in Calgary's premier Earth Day event. That's over $150,000 in support of conservation and education programs that help protect our natural heritage.

Congratulations to individual and team members in each of the numerous categories. There were all sorts of prizes awarded, but that's not what it was about. I do want to make special mention of one truly inspirational participant. Her name, Mr. Speaker, is Phyllis Hart. She was back for her 11th tower climb, 11th year in a row. Phyllis Hart continues to inspire us all. She is 92 years young.

It was a truly festival-like atmosphere, with musicians and face painters and wildlife mascots cheering the athletes on. In addition, 25 individuals and groups showcased their work at the Wild Alberta Expo.

Speaking of wildlife, I'd like to thank the members of our team, the Lougheed Lightning, including Joe Lougheed, Duane Monea, and Kurtis Averill, who certainly kept the fun in fundraising. If you combine our efforts with those of three- and five-year-old Samantha and Kiana Averill, who climbed the tower a total of three times, and add another courtesy of our MLA for Calgary-Hays, we climbed the tower a total of 52 times.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the members of this Assembly will join me in recognizing Christyann Olson and everyone at the Alberta Wilderness Association as they work on their own and with government to ensure that we continue to strive to find the correct balance between environment and economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Alberta Film and Television Awards

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this past weekend I had the pleasure of attending the 33rd annual Alberta film and television awards with numerous other colleagues as presented by the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association, AMPIA. Film and television production in Alberta continues to skyrocket, and this annual awards night allows us an opportunity to congratulate and to thank all of the producers, directors, writers, actors, musicians, and numerous others who work behind the scenes and are at the heart of this incredible industry.

Local productions are generating more and more attention for Alberta as well as more and more opportunities for our talented and creative artists. Given the success of the Oscar-winning blockbuster Brokeback Mountain and the upcoming release of Brad Pitt's The Assassination of Jesse James as well as the full-length feature film Christmas in Wonderland, that is being filmed at West Edmonton Mall as we speak, the landscapes and the spirit of Alberta are attracting major international attention as are the many economic advantages of filming right here in Alberta. We also have some of the most skilled and creative crews, producers, and performers anywhere in the world.

In support of this amazing industry, the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture attended the awards show and announced that funding for the Alberta film development program is being increased to $18.3 million. This will help generate hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of production right here in our province. As I have said on numerous occasions, film and television production will soon become a billion dollar industry in Alberta.

Congratulations to all the nominees and award winners, including my constituent Louis Sedmak, who captured the best original musical score award, along with Van Wilmott, and also to former Premier Ralph Klein, who received the Friend of the Industry award.

Thank you, AMPIA, to your staff and volunteer board members, for another truly outstanding awards show and for continuing to promote Alberta as the place in which to film.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Autism Spectrum Disorder

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the biggest misconceptions we have about those with autistic spectrum disorders is that they are insensitive and inhabit a world of their own. It's my understanding that, on the contrary, some are more aware of our world than we are. Many find living in our world acutely uncomfortable, even excruciating. The repetitive patterns that strike us as puzzling, irritating, and bizarre are coping mechanisms, often the only way these highly sensitive people can block the stimuli that assault their senses. Chanting, reciting, and outright withdrawal can be attempts to take control of their world to limit distractions that surround them.

Imagine someone pounding repeatedly on a hollow container near your head, shouting meaningless monosyllables at you, making a sound like fingernails scraping on a chalkboard, or flashing a strobe light on and off in the corner of your field of vision. These examples may give you a sense of the world, our world, that the autistic inhabit and their need to retreat from it.

Fifty years ago air pollution was not an issue. Fifteen years ago few believed second-hand cigarette smoke could be harmful or food preservatives were a problem for any but a few. How things have changed. These allergies were not peculiarities but an iceberg tip of a challenge we all need to take seriously. Mr. Speaker, I believe that by mid-century a host of other influences will be treated as seriously as hazardous chemicals.

For now I believe that many of the autistic children are canaries in the mine. Let us, therefore, not see them as those to be fixed or normalized or tolerated. Let us provide the supports to meet them as much as possible in their world and a willingness to shape our own world in a way that will be safer and more hospitable for all.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Wheelchair Curling Champions

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March of this year I stood in this House and introduced the 2007 Alberta wheelchair champions. Well, it gets better. In April, from the 5th to the 9th, they attended the national championship in Ottawa, Ontario, and I attended the opening ceremonies on behalf of our Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Speaker, although this team was at the wrong end of a 4-2 game against British Columbia, they went right to the finals. So they came up a little bit short this year. But the team of Anne Hibberd, Bridget Wilson, Jack Smart, spare Bob Johns, skip Bruno Yizek, and coach Ernie Comerford did a tremendous job this year in the first-ever nationals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

May Day

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to stand today and invite all members to join me in celebrating May Day 2007. In 1884 May 1 was chosen by the Federation of Organized Trades and Labour Unions to recognize the hard-won and well-deserved gains made by working people through the trade union movement. In fact, the entire development of progressive social programs, including the Canada pension plan, public health care, and the 40-hour workweek, has resulted from the struggle of Canada's labour movement.

Over a hundred years later the importance of unions for all working people has never been more clear. The labour movement has consistently been on the front lines in the fight to protect our public health care system, minimize environmental impact, and ensure that Alberta has a top-notch public education system.

As May Day falls so closely to the International Day of Mourning, we would be remiss if we didn't also acknowledge the very important role played by the labour movement in promoting workplace safety. The shameful shortage of health and safety inspectors in this province means that the implementation of important safety measures is left to the honour system, a system which too often allows profit to get in the way of safety. In the absence of a strong commitment on the part of the government to monitor and enforce safety regulations, trade unions play a key role in advocating for worker protection.

Alberta unions face particular challenges in their struggles for workplace fairness and dignity. Alberta has the worst labour laws in the country. As a bare minimum the government should commit to passing first contract arbitration legislation and introducing rules banning replacement workers. Such basic labour laws might have prevented, and probably would have, the acrimonious strikes at Tyson Foods, Shaw, and A-Channel. They might also help resolve the current strike at Palace Casino.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Camrose Fire Department Centennial

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago the Camrose Fire Department reached a significant milestone as it celebrated its 100th anniversary. On Saturday, April 21, Camrose celebrated the history of its fire department through a special 100th anniversary firemen's ball. This was a time to recognize the early beginnings of firefighters, which largely relied on local volunteers and horse-drawn pumps.

This year's anniversary has particular meaning for the Camrose Fire Department as they will be moving into a new fire hall this June. This new fire hall is the third fire hall for the city of Camrose, replacing the existing facility, which was built in 1954. The grand opening of the new fire hall is slated to be held in conjunction with Camrose's Founders Days this August. Founders Days, a week to celebrate our heritage, will also highlight Camrose's first fire chief, Frank P. Layton, and will display firefighting memorabilia during the event.

The anniversary of the Camrose Fire Department is an opportune time to recognize the importance of firefighting in our province. Firefighting is a thankless and risk-filled profession. Firefighters understand that their role in the protection of persons and property can result in the ultimate sacrifice. We are very grateful for their dedication to their role in emergency response.

Many firefighters in this province are volunteers and join fire departments in service to their community. Volunteer fire departments rely on the dedication of their members to be prepared for emergencies. The Camrose Fire Department is no different. They are a dedicated and committed force and drive the success of the department. Their accomplishments over the past 100 years are a reflection of their important service to the community.

I want to congratulate fire chief Peter Krich and the Camrose Fire Department on their 100th anniversary. I want to thank them for their outstanding work and dedication, and I wish them the best as they move into a new fire hall.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

Mr. Loughheed: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to present a petition asking the government to introduce legislation to suspend a graduated driver's licence if the holder of the licence is involved in a serious collision resulting in injury or death. This petition is signed by many residents of Sherwood Park and Strathcona constituencies and is the first of many which will follow.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from Unity House in northeast Edmonton saying, "We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to hold rent increases to no more than the rise in the average monthly wage until December 31, 2010."

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, did you have a petition?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, yes, I do. I'd like to table a petition with 11 signatures. The petition notes that Alberta is 1 of 3 provinces that do not provide basic protection for newly organized workers and calls on the Assembly to enact first contract legislation.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege today to table the requisite number of copies of a calendar with respect to the appearances before Committee of Supply. I believe that all three House leaders have agreed to it. If there are any errors, I am sure I will be back tomorrow to correct same. It's been a hard-negotiated process.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table copies of a call to action distributed today by Ben Seutter, president of the Edmonton Apartment Association. The memo notes that MLAs are hearing from tenants concerned about massive rental increases and that the Edmonton Apartment Association needs to "counter that influence." The call to action also asks for a guarantee from the labour union supporters of the Member of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that people who work in the rental industry will limit their wage hikes to once every 365 days.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today. The first is a letter from Roshika Khanna and was sent to every MLA's constituency office in Calgary. Mrs. Khanna is the program co-ordinator with the Calgary Scope Society, helping improve the lives of people with developmental disabilities. She explains that she's been unable to find a two-bedroom rental unit at around $700 because of the lack of affordable units, the shortage of subsidized housing, and landlord attitudes towards disabled people on limited incomes for over two months.

The second is an e-mail from my constituent Trudy Hill, who works as a receptionist for the Alberta Research Council. As a unionized government of Alberta employee she is not able to pay the increasing cost of living, including a recent 45 per cent rent increase.

The third is an e-mail from another constituent, Robin Smith. When she moved to Calgary a year ago, she was only able to find an apartment that was at the top of her budget. She works full-time as a medical lab assistant in a Calgary hospital and some months ago had to take a 30 hour per week job as a customer service specialist. Now working 70 hours per week and with a sick father she can't go to visit. Her rent has been increased to $924 plus power and parking for a 550 square . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, this is just tablings – okay? – not a speech.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Chase: Excuse me. I have two more tablings.

The Acting Speaker: Make them brief, then, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The fourth e-mail is from my constituent Ken Elmquist, who received an increase from $765 to $1,115 per month.

From another constituent, Candace Loken, whose rent is increased by $400, and she's on CPP and disability, and it takes up her maximum of $900.

The truth hurts.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of an e-mail I received from Don Gunderson regarding the Affordable Housing Task Force. He notes that despite the presentations made by people from across the province, most of the recommendations were rejected. He says that rejection of these recommendations brings into question that sincerity of other policy review panels.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: We will get back to tablings later.

head: Oral Question Period

The Acting Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Calgary Municipal Funding

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Herald today released a poll that 7 out of 10 Calgarians support Mayor Bronconnier's efforts to make sure that the Premier keeps to his promise about municipal funding. Clearly, many Calgarians believe that this government is out of touch with their concerns and issues. To the President of the Treasury Board: given the strong support for the mayor's position that no strings be attached to municipal funding, will the minister reconsider the strings attached to this government's budget allocation to the city of Calgary so that local concerns can be met locally?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, obviously, I wasn't in the room with the Premier and the mayor. Obviously, the opposition leader wasn't. They have discussed at length what they feel is right for Alberta. Mayor Bronconnier may have his own agenda, and I would suggest that you should look very closely around you because I think the way he is posturing, it has a lot more to do with politics and a lot less to do with dealing with the citizens of Calgary.

The Acting Speaker: The first supplementary.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought the President of the Treasury Board was in charge of the treasury.

Mr. Speaker, I'm quoting from a speech delivered minutes ago by the mayor of Calgary to the Economic Development Authority there: the promise made by the Premier was not kept in this budget; for example, of the $127 million earmarked for Calgary this year only $42 million will actually be available, unfettered, to address the infrastructure priorities of this city, meaning Calgary. To the same minister: what reply does this government have to the mayor and to the people of Calgary?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. That's new money. The city of Calgary already gets $272 million for infrastructure. The city of Calgary is dealt with on a very fair and equitable basis as are the rest of the cities and towns in Alberta. Is the opposition leader suggesting that we should take money from them to support the mayor's habits in Calgary? This Premier also committed to do what's right for all Albertans, and that's fair and equitable distribution of money.

The Acting Speaker: The second supplementary.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, let's continue with this. This is quoting from the mayor of Calgary earlier today. What does the budget mean for Calgary? Quote: it means that some important long-range investments may need to be delayed or cancelled. Then he goes on to say, quote: I am very disappointed to announce that in light of the province's budget we will be suspending the work on two new LRT lines indefinitely. End quote. Given that we've just confirmed these announcements from the mayor, can I ask again the same minister: why does this government refuse to respond positively to immediate and pressing transportation needs in Calgary?

Mr. Snelgrove: Because we respond to the needs of an entire community and not the political aspirations of one. We spent $2.2 billion on health care in Calgary, $1.3 billion on education, $704 million on postsecondary funding. We as this government are trying to address the issues around homelessness, the issues around affordable housing, the transportation bottlenecks, and we will do it. As Mr. Speaker has seen, the mayor of Edmonton seems quite comfortable in sitting down with the relevant ministers and addressing the issues, not creating them.

The Acting Speaker: Second Official Opposition question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Okay. Let's talk homelessness. He doesn't understand Calgary; maybe he understands affordable housing, though I doubt it. The crisis continues in Alberta today. The mess is getting worse. Albertans are being forced out of their homes. No matter how many denials and excuses we hear from this government, the evidence points to this government's policy failures as the main culprit. To the President of the Treasury Board: when the Treasury Board approved the money for affordable housing, did it ever cross this minister's mind that until these units were built, Albertans were going to face huge rent increases and often be forced out of their homes?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. The housing situation in Alberta did not happen overnight, and it will not be solved overnight with the twinkle of the magic wand. This government has taken the responsible action, which, indeed, is increasing the supply of units to meet demand. All of the other stuff in there is stopgaps, and it might make you feel good politically, but it doesn't work.

The Acting Speaker: First supplementary. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's be clear. In question period yesterday this House was told, "This government has learned from history that rent controls do not work." Well, perhaps the government has not learned because the 1978 CMHC annual report released at the very time rents in this province were controlled noted that over 17,000 rental apartment units were started that year. Over 17,000. Granted, in 1978 governments also offered tax breaks to rental property developers and provided rent control for tenants. So to the same minister: will this government change its stand and do what works, or is his advice to renters to go to Campers Village to shop for their next home?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, this government looks forward to solutions, not backwards. In 1978 the government was entering into huge debt to try and satisfy some of the housing requirements. That ended up with accumulated debts of $22 billion. We're not doing that again. It's short sighted, it's irresponsible, and it doesn't work in the long term.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, if anybody would know about short sighted, it would be this government.

We support the government's commitment to funding to create affordable housing, but solving the affordable housing crisis also takes not only money but leadership and innovation, and it takes land. You've got to have land to build the housing on. Municipalities like Hinton and Fort McMurray need the province to release land to them right now if they're going to start constructing new housing. Will the President of the Treasury Board commit to releasing Crown land for affordable housing, and will he provide this land for affordable housing to municipalities for free or for a dollar, sir?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the government works closely with Fort McMurray. We met with the mayor last Tuesday, and we talked about how important it is to get a plan together so that we're working towards a solution. The mayor of Edmonton came to the government with an opportunity to use some of the existing lands to build affordable housing, and this government was very supportive of initiatives like that that work with us and the departments and the related agencies to get a solution to it. So there are some good ideas in getting land, making land affordable where it's necessary, but the successes have come when the mayors of large cities work with the government.

The Acting Speaker: Third Official Opposition question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Groundwater Stewardship

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Groundwater is our most precious resource, more precious even than the valuable hydrocarbons we extract from over 400,000 sites across the province. Rural landowners, unable now to drink their water, are here today demanding answers to the legitimate questions about dramatic pollution of their drinking water. They have composed a pledge for all Albertans, calling for responsible groundwater stewardship. To the Minister of Environment: why after one and a half years of investigating contaminated groundwater from Wetaskiwin to Ponoka to Rosebud do we still have no answers for these rural folks?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is exactly right. We should be and are committed to the management and stewardship of our groundwater. At the same time, I have to advise the member that there have been no conclusive opportunities for us to identify any direct links between the development of coal-bed methane and groundwater. So the research that's ongoing through monitoring of wells, through a number of initiatives that are under way is trying to arrive at the very answer to the question that this hon. member seeks.

The Acting Speaker: First supplementary.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government may need to hire some scientists to find this out.

These folks with valid health and safety concerns about massive amounts of gas in water and unknown chemicals burning their skin have been repeatedly promised by the former Premier and Environment minister rapid assessment and resolution of their problems. To the minister again: when will these good farm folks have their water restored?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment is doing everything that it possibly can to get to the bottom of this issue. We've drilled a number of monitoring wells. We have a program of ongoing water testing. But I also need to advise this House that in some instances we have been unable to get the co-operation of the landowner to allow us to do ongoing monitoring and testing of the well in question. It's very difficult to get to the bottom of the issue if you don't get to the bottom of the well, let me say.

The Acting Speaker: Second supplementary. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Rosenberg forum and its subsequent report recently criticized soundly the lack of investment and science in managing Alberta's groundwater. Yesterday the Pembina Institute reported again, calling for a systematic and reliable groundwater monitoring system. The public has lost the trust in this government and its regulators in managing and monitoring our groundwater. Final to the minister: with the growing concerns about oil and gas effects on groundwater, will he do the responsible thing and call for an independent review of groundwater impacts from oil and gas activity in this province?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, a snapshot in time does not provide the amount of information that's needed. That's why it's so important that we have ongoing monitoring that gives us accumulated information over time. That doesn't happen overnight. I can't just speed up the clock and get two years' worth of information in six months. That's part of the problem.

The other part of the problem, Mr. Speaker – in fact, it's not a problem; it's the solution – is that much of what the hon. member is referring to was part of the multistakeholder committee that was formed one year ago that the Pembina Institute referred to yesterday, and frankly we're making very, very good progress in implementing those recommendations.

The Acting Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The rent crisis has MLAs' phones ringing off the hook. So much so that the Edmonton Apartment Association has decided to help the government set the record straight. In a memorandum, which I just tabled, from the president of the Edmonton Apartment Association it says, "In a meeting with MLA, Thomas Lukaszuk, he did say that he received about 10 calls [or] letters per day from people complaining about rising rents," and he guesses that "other MLAs are receiving similar calls." He goes on to say, "It is not the private rental industry's Constitutional responsibility to provide affordable housing for Albertans." My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Given the statement, whose responsibility is it?

The Acting Speaker: This chair is going to enforce the 45-second rule.

Any response, President of the Treasury Board?

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The responsibility to look after certain people in our society that need our help is ours, and we take that responsibility very seriously. Whether it be seniors or whether it be the infirm or mentally ill, we look after them. It's not our responsibility to house everyone who comes to Alberta looking for a better life, but there are a lot coming, as you all know. So the people that the Alberta government has responsibility for, we address. There is a temporary imbalance between the affordability and availability of suites and what the marketplace can offer, and that, unfortunately, will take some time to balance out.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, tell that to the people who are ending up on the street.

This memo goes on to say that “when people spend more than 30% of their gross monthly income on housing, then it is deemed unaffordable.” It goes on to say that in Europe and Asia and so on this is more like 50 per cent. “Consequently, our society is having these big discussions on arbitrary numbers.” It’s clear the apartment association thinks that people should pay up to 50 per cent of their income for rent. Will the government take steps to make sure that that does not become the case?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member has gathered from his press release is certainly his opinion, and he can twist it around however he wants. The fact is that there are many thousands of very responsible, respectable, and diligent landlords who have developed a very good and strong relationship with their tenants, and we don’t hear about them. Unfortunately, in any business when the opportunity arises for some to take money, they do. That’s unfortunate, but that’s a fact of the system we live in. It creates enormous wealth, but it comes with its problem. It’s what we call the price of prosperity. The responsibility for setting rental rates is the responsibility of the marketplace.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government couldn’t be more clear.

I’ll go on to condo conversions, and the memo says: “There is this mistruth floating out there that condo conversions are evil. The condo market is responding to the housing needs of Albertans. That is how the free market works.” Sounds like the minister. “If there was no need for condo’s then there wouldn’t be any conversions.” So is it the position of the government that there’s no problem with condo conversions and that regardless as to whether or not people get put out on the street, it’s the right of the people who own the buildings to convert into condominiums?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yeah, I guess I would like to make that perfectly clear. Yes, it is their right as an owner of a property to use it as they do. We are, Mr. Speaker, introducing legislation that will limit the notification time to that to make it fair. Obviously, it’s not just as easy to pack up and move to another spot whether you’re moving from a house, a condo, or an apartment. Converting a condo from a rental to an ownership doesn’t decrease the housing availability. It may move someone into what they consider an affordable housing unit and open up where they were. So it’s a negative sum game. You have ownership or rentership. It still accommodates people.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the next question, I’d like to caution the leader of the third party. You are familiar with the rule of this House that we do not mention members’ names in the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Enmax Electricity Transmission Line

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On the 19th of April Enmax Corporation announced its intention to build a 1,200-megawatt power plant, and they indicated in their press release that this new power plant would generate enough power for about two-thirds of Calgary’s requirements. My constituents in Airdrie-Chestermere have been told for the past two years that a new transmission line that will go across their land is needed to prevent problems with power shortages for Calgary. This power is not to be used for export, yet Enmax is now boasting about being able to export power with the addition of this new proposed plant. In light of the new plant that Enmax wants to build, will the minister revisit the need for the transmission line so that my constituents can stop worrying about what will happen to their homes and land if the transmission line continues?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, what I will say is that we welcome the news from Enmax, a great asset, again, to the province of Alberta. It indicates that the robust system that we put in place with respect to the utility in Alberta is working.

With respect to the line itself, the line is still required. Whether or not Enmax out of Calgary develops 1,200 megawatts, AESO’s requirement on the 10-year plan in southern Alberta – 8,000 megawatts of electricity would be required in Alberta. So the line would still be required.

Ms Haley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I get confused when I hear that, because my constituents have been told that the power needs for Calgary are the reason for this transmission line, yet SNC-Lavalin is now building a tie-in between Great Falls, Montana, and Lethbridge. We have Enmax building a 1,200-megawatt power plant, which apparently now they can utilize for export. Why the need for the transmission line? I don’t understand.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, you know, the suggested use for this power that Enmax is going to put on, whether it’s exported or used internally, the transmission system, the heart of the system to provide reliable and consistent electricity for all Albertans, is the core and the backbone of the system in the province of Alberta. In order to allow the movement of electricity either into or out of the province of Alberta, the transmission system must be fortified. This particular piece of business in front of us with respect to a 500-kV line is necessary.

Ms Haley: Well, given that the minister indicates that it is necessary, I’m going to ask him if he can assure my constituents of two things. First, the way the system was utilized to decide that this transmission was needed: will he do a fairness review of it to ensure that my constituents were treated fairly? Also, will a second look be given at putting this transmission line underground instead of overtop on huge towers?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, technology with respect to the transmission systems globally changes on an ongoing basis. This particular line, that now is in hearings with the EUB, certainly uses technology that is current for the time. We do not have in front of us, that I’m aware of, the technology and capability to move the amount of power that we require to move over the distances that we require with buried cable at this point in time. In the future is that possible? I wouldn’t hazard a guess to say that it is or isn’t. All I can say is that this particular line is in front of the EUB as an application currently, and they will deal with it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Autism Spectrum Disorder

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Autism spectrum disorder is a developmental disorder that affects thousands of Albertans.

High-quality care and intensive intervention can dramatically improve the quality of life of children with autism and their families. The needs of children with autism are assessed by a multi-disciplinary team that offers recommendations and determines eligibility for services. To the Minister of Children's Services: since the expertise of each team member is essential in making these critical decisions, can the minister please tell us how their knowledge and expertise regarding autism are assessed?

1:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children's Services, the MLA for Banff-Cochrane, is away today. [interjections] I'm sorry.

Certainly, I want to indicate that, you know, we as a province take autism very, very seriously, and I will pass on the comments to the minister.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, you are aware of violating that rule as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do have some serious questions, and I will continue. The multidisciplinary teams play the biggest role in deciding the level of services available to children with autism on a case-by-case basis. We've heard concerns that wait times for assessment delay access to necessary services, that team members do not always meet with the children they are supposed to assess, and that the process lacks transparency. To the Minister of Children's Services: what reviews of these multidisciplinary teams have been completed to date to ensure that the best practices are in place?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I will take the questions under advisement and pass them on to the minister.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I could ask for written responses to these questions.

I have another one for the representative of the minister. Many children with autism spectrum disorder are not receiving the care that they need to become safe, healthy, and independent adults. We have heard from stakeholders and constituents that it is common for services for children with autism to receive yearly rollbacks. This leads to a lengthy appeals process and unnecessary stress on families. Again to the representative of the Minister of Children's Services: can the minister tell us when families can expect to receive the stable funding and services they need for their children without roadblocks?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I certainly appreciate the questions, and I will ensure that the minister receives those questions. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering the phenomenal growth in Calgary, complaints have been made that recent funding announcements are proportionately inappropriate. My first question is to the minister of municipal affairs. How close does $400 million come to meeting the actual needs of Calgarians, and does this handcuff the mayor of Calgary?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the minister of municipal affairs. This funding announcement I think is critical when we put it into the context of the overall budget of government. As you know, there was a commitment made by our Premier and by our government that over a three-year period of time $1.4 billion that is currently used by the provincial government and is part of the requisition to municipalities on property taxes for education would be replaced with dollars from general revenue. That's exactly what has taken place . . .

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Finance. The mayor of Calgary has accused the provincial government of shortchanging the city in the budget both in terms of amounts dedicated to certain identified needs and with regard to the total dollar figure. Can the minister please put in context how Calgarians have done in this budget compared to previous years, including two years ago when $1 billion was given to the city for infrastructure with no strings attached?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this budget alone for the city of Calgary there is roughly 5 and a half billion dollars worth of funding. That's 5 and a half billion dollars that is going to the city of Calgary. We're seeing $272 million simply for the $600 million municipal infrastructure program plus a fuel tax. If the hon. member remembers, we gave 5 cents a litre to the cities of Edmonton and Calgary to be utilized for their infrastructure needs.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the cities of Calgary and Edmonton and all of the province are doing extremely well. We have increased funding 600 per cent in the last four years – six times in the last four years – to municipalities.

Mr. Rodney: My final supplementary is indeed to the Minister of Finance as well. Minister of Finance, what can Calgarians look forward to specifically with respect to provincial funding for the city of Calgary in the near future?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Included in this budget is $2.2 billion for the health region. There's $1.3 billion for education. There's $704 million for postsecondary education. We also have to remember that there's a ring road being built. There's a huge ring road that's being built around the city. There's a south Calgary hospital. It goes on and on and on. We're in this province together, and it's time we started looking at a partnership as opposed to a fight.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Continuing Care Standards

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Major cracks in the walls, water stains behind electrical panels, flooding in the basement, mould and mushroom growth in the crawl space, multiple incidents of fire, and two out of three exits that would be virtually useless in the event of an emergency evacuation. No, I'm not talking about the Legislature Annex. These are some of the ongoing problems that put the safety of staff and residents at risk at the Good Samaritan Pembina Village in Evansburg. My questions are to the minister of health. Does the minister think that it's appropriate for vulnerable seniors, many of whom require wheelchairs and walkers, to live in a building with so many hazards and risks to their health and safety?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One would hope that no senior would have to live in inappropriate housing or in any housing that would provide risk to their health or safety. As to the particular circumstances enunciated by the hon. member, I'm not sure that I can agree that those are the circumstances in place, but I'll be more than happy to have an investigation.*

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Minister, but these issues are not new. They were all identified by the Health Facilities Review Committee in 2004. There has been a follow-up report, and three years later local health and safety professionals are distressed that these problems still have not been addressed. What is the point of having a committee that can't monitor and enforce compliance?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very important to have a committee who will review health facilities across the province and make reports. It's also very important to follow up on those reports, and I certainly indicate that I will follow up on the report to determine what, in fact, has happened in that case.

The hon. member will know, as she's been shadowing me for the last four months, that health is a very big portfolio with lots of facilities. It's a big portfolio, so for her to expect me to respond to a particular report on a given day without having any advance notice of it is quite inappropriate. But I'm more than happy to look into it and see what has happened in that particular instance because we're all concerned about the quality of life of seniors in this province and their ability to live in appropriate housing.

The Acting Speaker: Second supplementary. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, the minister has had not one but two reports on this particular facility, and the Auditor General's 2005 report on seniors' care clearly stated that the Health Facilities Review Committee "[does] not inspect facilities for compliance with the Basic Standards and [does] not have enforcement mechanisms to ensure that facilities rectify non-compliance." Will the minister finally eliminate the ineffective Health Facilities Review Committee and put its $881,000 budget toward real monitoring and enforcement?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I can advise the House that we are currently undergoing a review of governance and accountability structures with respect to RHAs and other health authorities and with respect to every aspect of the health department. We'll include the facilities review committee and their role, mandate, and purpose. So I'll be more than happy to take the advice of the member with respect to whether there are some roles and responsibilities that could be added or other issues. I'll be more than happy to have her advice and the advice of any other members of this House as to how we can do a more effective job of ensuring that housing and health care for our seniors and for all Albertans is up to the highest quality.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Barley Research

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently met with representatives from the Alberta Barley Commission regarding Alberta Agriculture and Food's malt barley research program, which takes place at Lacombe. During this meeting I was informed that the research program was being phased out and that fewer researchers are working on barley projects. This is of concern to the many Albertans who rely on malt barley to make a living. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Is barley research at Lacombe being discontinued, and if so, why?

2:00

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Barley research at the Field Crop Development Centre in Lacombe is not being discontinued. Our current research investment is however being redirected to focus on barley and triticale for food and biofuel use. Two other organizations currently in western Canada have malt barley programs like our current research program, so we're investing in new research projects that will set Albertans apart, and we're not going to reinvent the wheel.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister. The barley sector is an important part of Alberta's agricultural industry. What other research initiatives relative to this sector are being conducted or supported by your department?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of exciting research taking place today. We've invested very heavily in genetic research to increase profit for our farmers. This research will focus on things like increasing yield and nutrition, improving water efficiency, and protecting crops from diseases and pests. Our scientists are also working on a new technology that can evaluate the attributes and the quality of a crop. This technology has the incredible potential to result in payment to grain farmers based on the quality of their crops rather than payment on the bushel or by the tonne.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Can the minister tell the House what else is being done to encourage and promote agricultural research in his department, and does it really benefit the producers?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker. Research is vital. For example, the Institute for Food and Agricultural Sciences Alberta, also known as IFASA, brings together scientists from Agriculture and Food, the University of Alberta, the Alberta Research Council, and Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada. They focus on research into a number of priorities: value-added meat products, managing soil nutrients and the environment, feed grain quality and supply, and, of course, our new bioenergy products.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Energy censored hundreds of pages in the royalty review documents that it tabled two weeks ago. One of the censored charts, that is available publicly in the Department of Energy's library, reveals that Alberta takes 5 per cent less than Wyoming, 6 per cent less than Colorado, 8 per cent less than Oklahoma, 10 per cent less than New Mexico, and 12 per cent less than both Louisiana and Texas. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How many of the other censored documents also show that this government does not collect a fair share in royalties for Albertans, the owners of the resource?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the hon. member indicates what has been done by this ministry and by this government. To be open, transparent, and fair, I have tabled in the Legislature certain documents related to a previous royalty review. In those documents that were tabled here, there were some exceptions. Again, department staff working with respect to the FOIP requirements may have severed some pieces of those documents; however, what I did say was that I had the department then put all of the documents on public review in the library. That's where the information came from.

The Acting Speaker: First supplementary. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy can't get his story straight. Two weeks ago he said that Texas is the best oil- and gas-producing state to compare Alberta to when looking at royalties. When the truth was revealed, showing that Texas collects much more in royalties, the minister changed his story, saying that it isn't fair to compare Alberta to other jurisdictions. Again to the Minister of Energy: how many millions of dollars have been lost due to this government's failure to collect a fair share of royalties on behalf of Albertans? How much money have you squandered and lost?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, absolutely none. I can tell you today as I stand here that the development that's happened in the province of Alberta, the development that's happened in the country of Canada, the development that's happened that does provide tremendous asset and tremendous resource for the country, for the province, for North America, and globally would not – would not – have taken place without the foresight of this government in 1996 and 1997 to put a generic oil sands royalty system in place. This hon. member picks a piece out of Texas. If he wants to compare the royalties in Alberta with Texas, ask him to make comparisons with the deep gulf drilling.

Mr. MacDonald: I just may do that because I know what I'll find.

Again to the Minister of Energy: why did this government fail to increase royalty rates when two years ago your own officials in the Department of Energy stated, and I quote: we are not capturing our fair share at high prices. End of quote. Why didn't you increase royalties to a fair rate then?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member opposite will know that two years ago I wasn't standing here. Look ahead. Look to the future. Don't look behind you. We're working with this. We're working with the situation, and this hon. member absolutely refuses to listen. I answered a question last week which very clearly indicated that last year we changed four – count them: one, two, three, four – royalty systems, that took back $300 million for Albertans. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I think you said Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Speaker, it should be clear to everybody, including members opposite, that we still have a housing crisis in this province. Landlords are taking advantage of the economy to actually gouge renters. The government has a responsibility to all Albertans. Of calls into my office, a couple of examples: Beverly McGowan, rent increased $375 past six months, 69 years of age, wondering about how she's going to pay the rent; Pat Reddy; Patrick Quigley, rent increased $250, rent will now take three-quarters of the income. Yesterday we asked just to even have a debate in a policy field committee. Government members turned us down. My question is to the Government House Leader. Would the Government House Leader agree that this is precisely the kind of . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, as I said, I will be enforcing the 45-second rule. I don't know if any minister wants to respond to that comment.

Second question.

Mr. Martin: Well, the minister may not want to answer it because it's a serious problem.

This is precisely what we talked about, having policy field committees dealing with real issues. My question is: why would the government not bring this to a policy field committee?

Mr. Hancock: I think that's an excellent idea, but it's one of many excellent ideas, and it should only be taken into consideration when we discuss how to move forward with additional policy discussion around the question of affordable housing. It's one of the things that a policy field committee could do, but it's one of many options that need to be taken into account by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing and by the government in determining how to move to the next step on this.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's all very well and dandy. People's rents are going up. We can't even have a debate in the policy field committee: that's what we're saying. What I'm saying to this minister as the Government House Leader who believes in the policy field committees is: why wouldn't he use his authority and say: "Look, this is a real issue for real Albertans. Let's have it go back to the policy field committee"? Would he provide that leadership?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, what was inappropriate was the method by which the hon. member attempted to hijack the House yesterday by bringing a Standing Order 42 motion to try and accomplish indirectly what he can't accomplish directly. What can be done is that when policy field committees are set up, there may be an opportunity for a resolution to ask the policy field committee to deal with that as an issue, or it may be something that the committee can deal with by itself, but it's entirely inappropriate for the hon. member to ask for the House's business to be adjourned under Standing Order 42, which is what he was trying to do. That's what he was trying to do: use an inappropriate method to raise an appropriate issue. I'm all alive to the question of how we do policy discussion in this House.

2:10 Freehold Mineral Rights

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Minister of Energy is still all worked up, but I'd like to ask him a few more questions. Recently I received some calls from constituents who are owners of freehold mineral rights. Last month the Energy and Utilities Board upheld the application for 28 well licences for coal-bed methane on split-title lands. This ruling indicates that those parties that held the natural gas rights also held the rights to the coal-bed methane. This issue is of significant interest to freehold mineral rights owners. My questions today are to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister advise this Assembly whether this decision is legally binding?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This particular issue and the EUB's ruling with respect to the 28 is not legally binding. The EUB hearing arose on freehold mineral lands where one party was the holder of the coal rights and another party or other parties had leased the gas rights. Both claimed legal entitlement to the coal-bed methane. They're private disputes. In these particular ones the mineral title owners have legal options available to them if they wish to pursue them, and in this case the EUB has laid out a path forward.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what effect does this ruling by the EUB have on the other split-title lands located throughout our province and the mineral rights associated with them?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is an extremely complex issue because the ownership of coal-bed methane ultimately depends on the wording of some of the original mineral grants, and some of these go back many, many years. For that reason, the EUB decision, while it provides clarity with respect to the issue of entitlement on these particular leases, only deals with those specific situations, and it doesn't apply to other mineral rights.

Mr. Doerksen: Minister, you're going to be receiving petitions from these people that are affected asking the government of Alberta to take immediate steps to introduce directive, retroactive legislation applicable to both Crown and freehold lands stating that CBM is a natural gas. As minister are you prepared to bring this legislation forward?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time we don't have plans to put forward legislation to deal with the issue. Of course, I'm very aware that individuals on both sides of the issue are coming forward with respect to lobbying on behalf of their particular side of the issue. We deal with thousands of mineral grants in the province of Alberta, and it makes it extremely difficult at this point in time to implement encompassing legislation. However, we continue to monitor the situation. We're certainly taking it very seriously, and we understand that there are many Albertans quite concerned and interested in the outcome.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Education was asked an important question about the surprise offer on the teachers' unfunded pension liability. His answers did not satisfy the Official Opposition and certainly not the Alberta teachers. The minister stated that his pension deal has nothing to do with labour negotiations, yet his letter to the ATA states that if teachers strike, the deal could be off. This will clearly bias the bargaining process. To the Minister of Education: why is the minister using the unfunded liability to control and manipulate the Alberta teachers?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that this was not a surprise offer. This was a good-faith initiative by the government which will go ahead. This good-faith initiative by government is all about recruitment and retention of the best young teachers in the business.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In April I presented a motion urging this government to immediately initiate negotiations to find a reasonable term solution to the teachers' unfunded liability situation. At that time the minister said that an agreement would be negotiated with the Alberta Teachers' Association and pledged that he would not politicize the issue. The minister now has taken the exact opposite approach. To the Minister of Education: how can the minister explain his complete flip-flop on the unfunded pension liability question?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, let's put the truth out on the table. What we have done is given a short-term, one-year, good faith initiative to ensure that our young teachers stay in the profession while we negotiate a long-term resolution with the Alberta Teachers' Association, and that will take place over the course of the next year after we have some input from the task force that will look at all of the options to ensure that we get the very best basis to get a long-term resolution.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A letter giving an ultimatum is not negotiation.

The minister previously promised in this House that a deal on the unfunded pension liability will be reached through negotiation with Alberta teachers. This has not occurred. To the Minister of Education: if the minister is confident in his plan or his process of getting this solved, why didn't he discuss this with the Alberta teachers? What are you afraid of, Mr. Minister? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the $25 million good faith offer is not a negotiation. This is a good faith offer on the part of government, so there's nothing to negotiate. What we will negotiate is a long-term resolution. I'm not sure what part of the last answer the hon. member didn't understand, but it's the long-term resolution that we will negotiate with the ATA, and this particular offer in the budget is free money.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Land-use Framework Consultation

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of my constituents expressed interest in providing input to the land-use framework consultation. The first session will be held in West Yellowhead, in Edson, on May 14. My question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How much is the minister planning to encourage Albertans about this very complex topic of land use in Alberta?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to report to this House that from May 14 to 31 there'll be 17 public sessions where Albertans will have the opportunity to share their views on land use with Sustainable Resource Development and the government of Alberta. We're encouraging all Albertans to participate in this process. For those that are listening or watching today, you can find the dates and locations at www.landuse.gov.ab.ca or call toll-free at 310-4455. There'll also be ads in the newspapers advertising these meetings.

Thank you.

2:20

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What format will the sessions take, and how can the public be assured their comments will be used?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we're very anxious to hear from Albertans on this. These meetings will go from approximately 2 in the afternoon until the evening, so it's flexible to meet people's time schedules. There are two very interesting pamphlets that will be available. One is a workbook; the other explains. These can be sent in. We'll be reading these results, and they'll be fed into the final result.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. What should I tell my constituents about the media reports that the Alberta government is considering user fees for rugged trails designed for all-terrain vehicles?

Dr. Morton: Thank you for that question, hon. member. This is an opportunity to clarify earlier remarks. We have been there. Very specifically, I have been in consultation with off-road vehicle users interested in improving the quality of off-road trails and recreation in our forests. They are the ones that brought the issue of fees to improve the trails and bridges and so forth to protect the environment. But I want to clarify: this does not apply to parks. Okay, fellows? It doesn't apply to parks. This is forestry land-use areas. I would like to report that I'll be spending the May long weekend and also June 2 with various off-road vehicle groups in southern Alberta examining this issue.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the time allocated for question period has now elapsed.

Hon. members, before we proceed with Tabling Returns and Reports, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today we have with us in the members' gallery 38 guests from the Trochu Valley high school. This is a school that is very astute in bringing the class up here every year and teaching parliamentary democracy. Unfortunately, only one of the class could come up for the MLA for a Day program, so the class did the next best thing: they all came. We have with the class of 38 their teachers Mrs. Fran Winther and Mr. Bill Cunningham. I'd ask them to all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I looked up in the gallery, I also noticed another former page of the Assembly, Natalie Wilson. Natalie's mother is a teacher in Calmar. Her brother is currently a page. I see him sitting over there. I'm going to ask if Natalie would stand in the public gallery and also receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from my constituent Jim Sexsmith, who is a senior. He is on a fixed income, no savings, dependent on oxygen. He has emphysema, living in an apartment, and can't find another place. The rent has increased this year and another 20 per cent increase coming very soon. No affordable home available for seniors, and he needs some help. I have five copies.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the Minister of Education to the Alberta Teachers' Association regarding the teachers' unfunded pension liability.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is from a constituent, Deb Newman, who is saying: "Is there no way that we can stop this robbery? Has no one in government considered that it is time to bring back 'rent control'?"

The other one is from Velvet Martin about children with special needs. She says:

The most cost-effective way to manage government funding for children with special needs is via support of natural family involvement. Families faced with life-altering changes when a child is born/develops severe disability are as vulnerable as the children themselves. Natural parents must be encouraged and regarded as valued, responsible care-givers.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings with the appropriate number of copies. One is notes for a statement from the independent Member for Edmonton-Manning on April 30, 2007, which was not given unanimous consent in this Assembly. It speaks to the workers' day of mourning.

Another is from Gary Hunt and the citizens' rights group operated by Victims of Violence. It speaks to a meeting this Saturday at Sacred Heart Church from 12 to 4 p.m. to build an organization for victims' and citizens' rights, to implement changes to help them.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I introduced one of my constituents, Brianne Hudson. I'd like to table a letter that she sent to me that's also got a petition attached to it that is signed by all of the tenants of the Sierra building. They write that they support the legislation that is supposed to be introduced – and we were actually expecting it today – which would limit the number of times landlords could raise the rent to once per year. They feel that there is a great need for rent control in the province and also ask that rent not be increased by more than 5 per cent per year. So on behalf of those tenants of the Sierra building – and I congratulate them on their advocacy – I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of their submission to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, on your table there was a ribbon placed today. It's a card and a pin, Give the Gift of Life, from the Minister of Health and Wellness in recognition of National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week.

As well, hon. members, the Government House Leader had tabled the calendar for the Committee of Supply, and I believe there are some changes in it. I'm given to understand that the Government House Leader will be tabling a revised version before the end of the day. Would you like to speak to that matter?

Mr. Hancock: I just wanted to draw the House's attention to the fact that we switched, actually, May 14 and May 15. We got the departments right, but we forgot to switch the designated parties. So May 14 should be the New Democrats with the ministries of Energy and Environment, and May 15 in the evening should be the Liberals with the ministries of Infrastructure and Transportation and Employment, Immigration and Industry. We will correct that for the record.

The Acting Speaker: Very well. The record will reflect that. Thank you.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

17. Dr. Oberg moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 19: Ms Blakeman]

The Acting Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of all Albertans and as Leader of the Official Opposition, this extraordinary caucus of people, it's my duty and my privilege to rise and respond to the budget delivered in this Assembly two weeks ago.

The first budget of the Stelmach government represents, in our view, a colossal failure of vision. We need to start saving now to build a sustainable future for Alberta, but the government has ignored the need to save for the future. Instead, they've given us a fire alarm budget that drowns the political fires of today in a flood of nonrenewable oil sands cash while ignoring the needs of tomorrow.

When I responded to last year's budget, I said that there were a few things to like. The same holds true this year. For example, it's good to see that at long last the government is doing something to address the province's massive infrastructure debt, even if action is coming years too late. There's a little more money for AISH. There's some funding for the Water for Life strategy and a little more support for the arts. But, by and large, this is a panicky, hurry up and spend budget prompted by a growing crisis of confidence among Albertans, confidence lost because the government's abject failure to plan for the boom has led to economic chaos and declining public services.

When people are stuck for hours in emergency rooms – and just yesterday we brought a tragic example to this Assembly – when children can't get to school because there aren't enough buses to go around, when there aren't enough child care spaces or affordable housing units to serve even a fraction of Albertans seeking them out, you know that this government has a serious problem. So out comes the money hose, crank open the valve, hurry up and spend before people really start getting mad. Tragically, even the good aspects of this budget, particularly the long overdue funding for infrastructure, will have their positive impact dramatically lessened by the inflation and labour shortages that are the legacies of this very government's failure to plan. Health care is still the number one concern on Albertan's minds. Where is the planning to make health care accessible again? Construction still hasn't begun on Calgary's desperately needed new hospital. The people of Calgary shouldn't have to wait any longer to know with certainty that they are going to get their hospital.

Along with this flood of cash comes an unprecedented abandonment of responsibility. Instead of tackling issues such as affordable housing or implementing the Water for Life strategy, the provincial government forks over money, then tells our already overloaded municipal governments to go and solve the problems on their own. The government could have saved Albertans untold stress had they simply implemented the Alberta Liberal affordable housing strategy. Instead, they throw money at the problem, throw the problem at our cities, and wash their hands of the affair.

This budget was designed to win back the favour of the hundreds of thousands of disgruntled Albertans who have lost faith in a tired and visionless Tory regime. It's one of the worst examples of short-term, self-serving political manoeuvring I've seen.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta has to do better. It has to start looking past politics because the very future of our province is at stake, nothing less than that. In a time of unparalleled opportunity it's time for budgets that look ahead. Instead, the government has given us a budget designed to cover up the mistakes of the past. One day soon, unless we change the way we budget right away, our government is going to turn on that money hose and experience a shock when only a few pennies trickle out. How will the government put out its self-inflicted political fires when that happens?

Tory governments have taken huge oil and gas revenues for granted. The various oil booms have led the Tories to believe that they can spend their way out of any crisis, and this from a so-called conservative regime. So now we have an oil sands boom and a return to familiar but badly outdated patterns of thinking. When presented with a huge windfall – and oil and gas revenues are exactly that – any sensible Albertan would take some time to come up with a plan for the money. At the very least we should be asking ourselves what we want to achieve. I believe and the Alberta Liberals believe that the answer is clear: we should be building a sustainable legacy for Alberta's future so that when the oil and gas run out, tomorrow's Albertans won't be left holding the bag.

Other oil-blessed governments have developed strategies to handle nonrenewable resource revenues. In Alaska, for example, the people decided to save the oil money and pay themselves personal dividends each year. In Norway they decided to keep taxes high and participate directly in the oil industry through a huge state oil company that, Mr. Speaker, I might note is considering investing in the oil sands because it's such a bargain here. The Norwegians then have put royalties in the bank with an obsession, a total amount exceeding $250 billion. In Dubai they launched a strategy to turn their dusty desert kingdom into a global financial retail and tourist centre for the exact reason that they knew that oil and gas revenues were nonrenewable. In Dubai it has worked, and that little kingdom is now a destination for people from around the world.

None of those strategies is exactly right for Alberta, but at least all of those jurisdictions had a strategy. They stuck with it, and today they have something to show for it. In contrast this Alberta government is spending our wealth as fast as it comes out of the ground. Over the course of the last several years the Tory government has grown more and more dependent upon nonrenewable oil and gas revenues to fund government services.

Last year the Alberta government spent about $8,500 per person while collecting only $6,300 in sustainable revenues. That's a sustainability gap of $2,200 per Albertan. This government makes up the difference by spending our oil and gas revenues, and this budget that we are debating now widens the gap all the more. Now we're looking at a dangerous chasm. If we don't close the gap with sustainable funding – and this government shows no sign that it even recognizes the sustainability gap, Mr. Speaker – we're looking at deficits, cuts in services, tax hikes, or all of the above.

This government knows by now what an Alberta Liberal government would do to solve the problem. We'd take the bold step of actually saving some of Alberta's nonrenewable resource revenues for tomorrow. What a concept. This government had an opportunity to vote for an Alberta Liberal bill that would have saved 30 per cent of all nonrenewable resource revenues, savings that would have closed the sustainability gap and secured financial stability for decades to come. [interjections] I'm getting heckling from government members about doing the math. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we have done the math. We've worked with the economists. We've worked with the business leaders. It's our plan they're endorsing, not this government's.

The legislation we introduced as our flagship bill, had it not been rejected by the government, would have reinvigorated the heritage fund so much so that in 20 years the Alberta government would earn more from heritage fund investments than from oil and gas, freeing us from the boom-and-bust cycles of resource-based economies. Endowments for the arts and postsecondary education would have given Alberta truly world-class universities and colleges and a booming arts scene with stable, sustainable, dependable funding at last.

Am I driven by this issue, Mr. Speaker? Do I bring it up at every opportunity? You bet I do. I'm driven by the idea of saving these once-in-a-lifetime revenues because I know how vital those savings are to our future. Without a plan for saving these precious revenues, this Tory budget is a failure. When it comes right down to it, well-planned, visionary budgets help Albertans.

To those who say that Alberta cannot afford to build the heritage fund and long-term endowments, we say that Alberta cannot afford not to do so. With a clear vision of what we want our oil and gas revenues to achieve, we can create a world-class postsecondary institution, we can fund a school nutrition program so that no child in the province goes hungry, we can provide substantial and sustainable support for the arts, we can help Albertans with disabilities with regular increases for things like autism programs and AISH, and we can make sure that Albertans never again have to put up with a lack of affordable housing, schools, or health care. Where are the long-term, sustainable, regular increases to front-line staff for people with developmental disabilities? Where is the sustainable funding for long-term care beds and staff?

Saving a portion of our nonrenewable resource revenues is one key to a sustainable future. A second is education. You can't go wrong when you invest in education. For example, when students slip behind in math or reading in the elementary grades, we want them to get the boost they need. Educators today can predict with almost perfect accuracy the specific children who will drop out of high school by checking to see if a student in grades 3 or 4 is below their grade level in reading and arithmetic. So let's have a budget that invests in the programs that will help those kids achieve their full potential.

Or imagine a future in which our universities rank alongside Cambridge and Harvard and Berkeley, where NAIT and SAIT rank with MIT, where people come from around the world for the privilege of studying at Alberta's colleges and universities and trade schools. Long after our oil and gas has lost its value, education will carry Alberta forward. [interjections] The Minister of Energy is heckling away. He's suggesting that oil and gas will last a thousand years. Is that right, Mr. Minister? Apparently not.

Our postsecondary endowments and our commitment to primary education will when we form government ensure that a solid education system will always be there to serve Albertans. In the meantime in this budget school boards will have to settle for a paltry 3 per cent increase that doesn't even cover inflation. Mr. Speaker, you can be sure that the Alberta Liberals are not looking forward to the labour unrest that this short-sighted budget is almost guaranteed to foster.

Good budgets are crucial to Albertans who need a little help. We'd like to see support for AISH recipients increased at the same rate as MLA salaries. We'd like to see a provincial school nutrition program funded so that children don't have to go to school hungry. It is shameful, Mr. Speaker, that the only province in this country that doesn't provide school nutrition funding is Alberta. And we'd like to see the elimination of Canada's most unfair tax: the Alberta health care premiums. [interjections] Again I'm getting heckling about doing the math. Mr. Speaker, I'll put my math skills against the minister of agriculture any day of the week.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, when the Minister of Finance tabled his budget, he was given the opportunity and latitude to speak and to finish his comments. Please allow the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to bring his remarks to this Assembly.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'd like to see the elimination of Canada's most unfair tax, the Alberta health care premiums. This is a regressive tax that hurts everyone, its only purpose to serve Conservative ideology. Get rid of it and help thousands of Alberta families get that much closer to making ends meet. These are manageable commitments that have big benefits.

The third key to a bright future is caring for the environment. This year's fire alarm budget missed the biggest fire of all: the threat of climate change and pollution to our land, air, and water. The budget barely acknowledged the need to respond to climate change despite the growing need for a comprehensive plan to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

An Alberta Liberal government would immediately implement a climate change strategy including actions such as substantial funding for carbon capture and sequestration, for clean technology research, and for a building retrofit program to help Albertans pay for energy-efficient upgrades to their homes, yet there's no increase in this budget for Alberta Environment this year at a time when we need real government leadership on climate change. Alberta is the front line in the battle against global warming, but this budget leaves Albertans fighting without ammunition.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is at a crossroads. If we continue as we have in the past, we will stumble into the future one ad hoc budget after another until one day we realize that we've let our astonishing opportunity pass us by. Or we can seize the moment. We can wake up to that opportunity and build a future of unparalleled success with budgets that close the sustainability gap and save for the future.

I'd like to quote Charles Darwin. "It is not the strongest of the species that survive, nor the most intelligent, but the one most responsive to change." Mr. Speaker, this is a government that willfully ignores change, and by doing so, it is jeopardizing Alberta's future. Tomorrow's historians may well look back upon this budget and say: this is when Alberta finally lost its chance to build a sustainable future. This is when the Conservatives failed to take advantage of their last opportunity to adapt to a changing world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a pleasure to rise and speak to the budget for 2007 of the provincial government and the first budget tabled by the cabinet appointed by the new Premier of our province. This budget focuses very much on repairing the damage that has been done over the last 10 or more years by the Conservative government by its failure to invest in Alberta's infrastructure, and that is not only the new infrastructure that is needed for growth but also that which is necessary to repair and maintain the infrastructure which we have.

Mr. Speaker, when the former Premier, Ralph Klein, came to office, he came with a vow to eliminate Alberta's debt, which was at that time $23 billion. Much of what has been done in terms of paying down that debt has been done at the expense of investment in our infrastructure. In fact, when you add up the numbers, you will find that the debt that this province now owes in infrastructure which needs to be repaired or replaced or new infrastructure which is required to meet the growth of this province is very close to that figure. In other words, Mr. Speaker, what the government has done is create a shell game with Albertans. They have taken a financial debt and converted it into a debt on the infrastructure which is of a similar magnitude. So the debt is not gone at all. It has not been paid off by this government as this government has claimed has been done. Rather, it's simply been put into unmet costs for infrastructure. So we have an enormous debt remaining, and that debt is in our roads. It's in our hospitals. It's in our bridges. It's in our schools. But it is still a debt that future generations of this province will have to pay.

To give the government a little bit of credit, Mr. Speaker, they have attempted in this budget to begin to address that, so we've seen a dramatic increase in funding for infrastructure. But they've waited too late because now with the economy booming, with such demand for construction projects in the tar sands and other parts of the economy, the inflation rate has eaten up much of the spending that the government has allocated towards this infrastructure. So instead of buying new bridges or schools or hospitals at a rate that the government could afford, we're now expending perhaps 50 per cent more in order to obtain those things.

The problem as we see it, Mr. Speaker, is that the ordinary people of this province have been forgotten in this budget and in this rush to rectify past mistakes. Working and middle-class families have been ignored. They have been left behind by this government. Albertans with low incomes in particular will see their cost of living increase because of essential program funding in the budget which doesn't even keep pace with Alberta's soaring inflation rate. Rents are increasing and will continue to rise while the government turns its back on rent review and rent increase guidelines. Utility costs are rising as a result of the province's failed experiment with deregulation.

Mr. Speaker, inflation is eating up the gains of Alberta families in this period of economic growth. The last time inflation in Alberta was as high as it is today was in 1991. Alberta's inflation is almost double the next highest in the country. Municipalities like the city of Edmonton have said that they expect inflation on their construction costs to reach 25 or 30 per cent this year.

The government's general budgeting practices have not changed. The Premier and the Minister of Finance have adopted their predecessor's practice of underestimating revenues and lowballing oil and gas prices. In his budget speech the Finance minister trumpeted a new plan for how to allocate surpluses. The NDP opposition expects him to keep this promise and will monitor the government closely. The surplus allocation warrants discussion. It's a clear indication that the Tories are planning for unplanned surpluses to continue, so the risk that government shuffles this money into slush funds also continues.

Mr. Speaker, the budget fails to see the needs of its most vulnerable citizens as a priority. The Edmonton Social Planning Council points out that increases to vulnerable Albertans who depend on income supports are going up by only 5 per cent and in some cases not at all. AISH monthly benefits increased by 5 per cent to $1,050 effective April 1. This year's increase should allow AISH recipients living in subsidized accommodation to just keep pace with inflation, but those not living in subsidized accommodation will fall even further behind.

The modest $18 million increase to Alberta seniors' benefits this year will likely be used to cover the growing number of seniors eligible for the benefit. A 14.7 per cent increase has gone into funding for seniors' lodges, which will allow for the addition of 250 more lodge units.

Mr. Speaker, there's not enough funding for child care in this budget, not nearly enough to cover the gap created by the cancellation of the child care and early childhood learning agreement by the federal Conservative government. So the extra funding will not meet the needs. It will not go very far in helping create more child care spaces, which are desperately needed as waiting lists for spaces grow across the province. Nor is there relief in this budget for parents who have found a place for their child or children but struggle to continue to cover the cost of care. The NDP opposition supports affordable child care supported by public funding, which gives families a real chance to choose the option that is right for them. We can give parents who are forced to stay at home the option of entering the workforce and give their children a head start on learning.

The budget falls short as well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to education. After accounting for inflation, per student funding will actually be lower this year than last. Without proper funding for teachers and classroom supplies children will be held back from their full potential. Across the province school boards have requested 172 new and replacement schools. The government has accepted 81 but has budgeted for fewer than half of them this year. Program funding, on the other hand, only received an increase of 5.5 per cent over last year. That's exactly the rate of inflation, so it really isn't an increase at all.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta School Boards Association points out that other sectors like the health regions were given more substantial increases, in the realm of 10 per cent, and this does not address upcoming teacher negotiations. They have criticized a shift towards prescribed funding and away from general funding, which the school boards can allocate as they see fit.

Of particular concern, Mr. Speaker, is that the government is holding out private partnerships as a panacea for building new schools. This method has failed. When a private company takes on a project to build a new school or a courthouse or a road, they borrow money to build the project. They borrow it at a higher rate than that available to the government, and they expect the government to pay back every penny that they have borrowed to build a project, to cover all of their costs plus a profit. So, fundamentally, it's an unescapable fact that P3s will always cost more than the traditional financing of government to build public projects. Not only that but the chances of shoddy workmanship, shortcuts, and other deficiencies exist as a very real concern.

Mr. Speaker, the government's approach to the rental crisis that we're now facing reminds me of someone whistling past the graveyard. There is tremendous upset in this province, right from one end of the province to the other, with respect to the costs of rent that people are being faced with, the gouging that is taking place. The government by slapping on a one rent increase per year rule has not dealt with the issue at all. It is seriously underestimating the seriousness of some of the rent increases that individuals are faced with. Any landlord that has not yet given a rent increase is eligible to increase the rent for any or all of his or her tenants as much as he wants.

We are seeing and we're hearing every day about rent increases of $400, $500 that people are being asked to pay, yet the government does nothing. It's pretty clear to me that many members opposite are feeling the heat from their constituents, particularly those that come from larger urban centres. You have to ask the question whether or not this new government has enough understanding of urban issues and the issues that face families that live in big cities in order to meet the needs of those people. I don't think that they do.

There are currently 9,000 households on waiting lists for all forms of affordable housing in Alberta. The task force on housing calculated that for 12,000 units to be built over the next five years, a cost of $480 million per year for the next five years would be required. However, the government has said that it will build 11,200 units yet has promised only $96 million in enhanced capital support and $100 million in block funding to municipalities to address housing priorities in their community. Clearly, even though the government has put all of its stock in getting new housing on the market as an alternative to any sort of rent limitations, they have not provided the funding. They have not backed up their promise with real funding. Mr. Speaker, that underlines this government's approach from start to finish: big promises, very small delivery. That has become a real feature of this government.

On health care the program spending is increased by 12.2 per cent, and the authorities are receiving a 9.5 increase in new funding, but these are just band-aid solutions. Mr. Speaker, ambulance funding has remained static. Health regions are desperate for help when it comes to wait times in emergency rooms, and the failure to address the need for more funding for ambulances means the government is only adding to this problem. The municipality of Wood Buffalo is receiving an increase of $140 million, but that is not sufficient to meet the needs of this municipality. Eliminating health care premiums was a promise that the minister made in his campaign for the leadership of the Conservative party. Eliminating this premium would have put money directly in the pockets of working and middle-class Albertan family, but once again the government chose not to do so.

Mr. Speaker, just in closing, I want to say that regular Alberta families are still struggling in this economy to make ends meet. The budget is inflationary. The government's whole economic approach is inflationary. The massive capital spending is a response to years and years of neglect on the part of this province, and they are making lives more difficult for working and middle-class families. Rents are soaring. Entry-level housing has all but vanished. Utility costs continue to rise faster than the national average. Child care spaces are rare and expensive. The average Albertan family is approaching a tipping point where the cost of living negates the many benefits we enjoy in our province.

That's why the NDP has called on the government to reach out and help working families, to deliver a budget that strikes a balance between necessary infrastructure development and support for regular people and their families. Mr. Speaker, the Premier and the Finance minister have chosen to focus on bricks and mortar. Both of them are former infrastructure ministers, so they bear a great deal of responsibility for the mess that we're in today, but in their rush to repair and build the schools, roads, and hospitals that are so badly needed, they have forgotten the needs of ordinary people. This government has forgotten the needs of ordinary people. Working families, middle-class families have not been adequately supported by this government and by this budget.

The government has a blind spot when it comes to the people that they were elected to represent. They are more concerned about helping and assisting the development of oil sands, not for the interests of the people of this province but for the American market and to serve the interests of the United States energy strategy. It's time that they refocus their attention on the people that elected them, the people of this province who built this province. It's time that this government provided meaningful support to working and middle-class families in this province, Mr. Speaker, but this government is running out of time.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I'm just wondering if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood would give us some cost estimate of some of the proposals that he's made in his speech. He talked about, of course, eliminating health care premiums, a billion dollars, and talked about investing several billion dollars in infrastructure. I'm just wondering if he could be a little more specific in those numbers and some of the other programs that he's talked about. If he could just let us know some of the cost that he's talking about and where he proposes to get that money, that would be great.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to respond to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and just indicate that the budget, in our view, places far too much emphasis on getting out of the mess that the government itself has created.

3:00

Let us not forget that the government itself has talked about eliminating health care premiums. To listen to the Conservative leadership hopefuls in their debates, you would think you were having a convention of the Alberta Liberal party. You know, they wanted to spend money on all kinds of different projects and give tax cuts at the same time. But let's be clear, Mr. Speaker, that in fact it was a number of leadership contenders for the Conservative Party that promised the elimination of health care premiums. Not perhaps the individual that the hon. member supported – I understand that he was the lone caucus member supporting the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who I'm sure didn't promise that – but there were so many Conservative leadership contenders . . .

The Acting Speaker: This is supposed to be brief comments and questions. Any others? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's interesting that the hon. member has chosen to dodge the question, one of the very things that he accuses us of during question period. I'm going to ask him once again, please. Could you please tell us the cost of your proposals in your speech?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it's a question of priorities. I know that the hon. member is very concerned about the cost, so he might be interested to know that there has been over $100 million allocated by this government in budgets to the support of the horse-racing industry in the last few years. That's a number that he might be very interested in because, of course, in the NDP we're far more interested in reallocating money like that to actually help people who are, for example, on disability, seniors who are in inadequate or unsafe care.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There are lots of priorities for that money other than the rich horsemen and -women that, of course, support the Conservative Party and receive tremendous subsidization from the taxpayers, the ordinary people that that hon. member represents who pay their hard-earned money in taxes and then it gets spent on rich ranchers, to help them, I guess.

Mr. Speaker, those are the people that the Alberta New Democrats represent. They need to know that when they work hard and that money gets taken off their cheque every week by this provincial government, it's put toward some real priorities that make a difference for working families. There's not enough child care in this province. Rents are going through the roof. Utilities are too high. You know, when is the government going to wake up and start dealing with real priorities instead of taking taxpayers' money to subsidize rich horse breeders and the horse-racing industry? I'm sorry, but a New Democratic Party government would not have those kinds of wrong-headed priorities that seem to be supported by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on Standing Order 29(2)(a)? If not, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege to rise and to address the budget that we received approximately two weeks ago. I rise to speak to that budget, and I must say that many true conservatives are very disappointed in that budget, as I am. This budget is not fiscally good for the family or for the communities that we live in. It has presented a hardship to them.

This budget is a feeble effort or perhaps a desperate attempt to buy back votes that this government has lost. The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that those votes didn't leave to go to the Liberal Party. They didn't go and vote for them. They're trying now to fight and to see who can spend the most money, and that's a blatant problem with democracy where they're trying to buy votes out of the public purse.

Mr. Speaker, the price of poor planning is what this budget is about. I would say that that is the true P3 of this Tory government: the price of poor planning. To make matters worse, they feel that the only way they can retain loyalty is to increase the conditions upon which that money that they're giving out is met. It's been universal with every municipal leader that I've talked to that they say that the new conditions for this municipal funding are unacceptable. To the previous minister of municipal affairs, who travelled around and spoke with the different mayors and reeves, that was the number one message that they sent to him, that we need unconditional funding, and that has not been met.

Just to go over a few of the problems, I guess. We have a Tory government here that is bragging that they're spending six times more than other jurisdictions. This sounds like two princes that are out partying on the town to see who has the most money and the biggest budget to blow. The really sad thing, Mr. Speaker, on this is the fact that the town doesn't have the capacity to absorb that money, and we can use it specifically in the infrastructure position there. There are billions and billions of dollars that are being handed out and said: spend it now, spend it on this area, and do it before this time limit.

It puts us in a position that we can't accomplish it. To give a simple analogy, we could say that perhaps there is the capacity – and I know that this government knows the capacity – of 2,000 kilometres of paving to do a year, yet they hand the money out to these municipal governments and say: here, do 3,000. Then, when they put it up for tender, those people know that they can't all meet those tenders, so inflation goes up, and it's a direct result of the supply/demand shortage. Inflation is going rampant in the problem, and we're not getting good value for our dollar.

The Alberta Alliance has been proposing and will continue to propose that this funding must go to the municipalities and allow them to have a capital savings plan and say: "You use it when it's in your best interest. Perhaps, you're in an emergency situation, and you need to spend it now. You decide. But if you know you have the money in the bank, maybe you can go through some operating improvements, move it out three years for when you need to do that complete retrofit." But because the conditions are such that they have to spend it now and they don't have capital savings accounts, we're putting ourselves in a terrible situation. Inflation continues to go up, and we're getting less for the dollars that were spent. This is not in the interest of the families and the communities they live in, Mr. Speaker.

This government is very much addicted to spending. I want to quote the Finance minister. He says, "We must never return to the shortfall scenarios that plagued Alberta in the past." We all realize and know how critical that is, yet we've raised the stakes. We've raised the spending because they also quote that we live in the most volatile of provinces to gauge what our income is. I always appreciate that they want to lowball the price of oil so that we are on the safe side. That's good fiscal planning. It's prudent. It's what we should do. But when we continue to raise the spending to that income and say, "Well, we still have some breathing room here," it isn't sustainable. We can't go on.

The last three budgets have all been: this is one-time spending. That's what the addict says when they go out. They're addicted to the oil and gas revenue. They're addicted to the gambling revenue. How many times have we listened to this government declare that we live in a volatile revenue province? Yet our budget is the largest ever, and our surplus is the smallest in the last three years. Yes, we have eliminated the balance at the bank, which is a great move. They've talked many times about the importance of not having to spend the interest money. That's to our benefit, yet we run out.

There have been many times that many people have spoken of a minimum 10-year infrastructure plan, Mr. Speaker. What they need to do – and the problem with this new municipal funding is that they say: this is going to be a 10-year program. I've talked to different municipal leaders, and the problem is that there is no formula, there is no way of calculating. Is Calgary going to get $1.4 million for this project for the next 10 years? Is Taber going to get $600,000 for the next years? Is Fort McMurray going to get this much for the next 10 years? The answer is: we don't know, they don't know, and the government won't tell us. You can't plan 10 years . . .

Mr. Elsalhy: Because they don't know.

Mr. Hinman: Well, they don't want to commit. It's very easy to say: well, I'll wait and spend where I want to.

But, Mr. Speaker, if we want value for our money, if we want the road construction crews, if we want the housing crews, if we want all those to be there, we need to have a 10-year plan that says: this is what we're going to do. It can be conservative, it can be fiscally responsible, but we absolutely need to make sure that it's long term. If this plan is 10 years, each year you renew that so it's still 10 years and not run to the end with people wondering: well, now how is it going to be adjusted? We just don't know. It isn't good enough.

We need the long-term planning, and we need the formula so they know what it is that they're going to get and not wonder: well, is Taber going to get this money for the next 10 years, or is it two years and then they're going to change one of the requirements and we fall out of favour and then we can't pay for our waste water treatment plant? They don't know if they can borrow or go ahead, and then we get in the worse situation of things falling apart.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to go back for a minute. I'm very proud to put on the green ribbon today. What disturbs me, though, is that it says on here: "this is an opportunity to acknowledge the shortage of organs and tissues for transplantation." I don't know that there is a shortage. What there is is a lack of knowledge of people to realize the importance of using our resources wisely. I signed the back of my health care card many years ago. I've talked to my family. They all know that. That was looking forward. We can't have the intent and then after we die our family looking at that and wondering: oh, what do we do?

This is the same problem. I don't think that we have a shortage of money. What we have is a shortage of forethought to say: this is what we need to do responsibly. In 2003 the infrastructure money was drastically cut, and those construction companies that were addressing that, they sold their equipment; they left the province because of the huge cut. Now we've got this huge demand, and the cost has gone through the roof. We need a long, steady slope to know that this is what the government is going to spend over the next 10 years. More important, they need those projects mapped out so that they can look, and they will bid accordingly and say, "Well, gosh, we should get this equipment; we should look at that and start to expand," because they know what's there. The further we can see down the future, Mr. Speaker, the better we are.

Mr. Speaker, another area that I want to address is the fact that this government is continuing to grow at an unprecedented rate. The Official Opposition has mentioned it, the third opposition, and the Alliance will mention it again. We need to eliminate the health care premiums. This is an ideal time. It's the proper time for proper tax reform. There will never be a better time, I believe, than the present time to look at and realize that now we can and, I guess, should clarify, reduce, simplify the taxes. One of the great things that we've done is that we've gone to a flat tax here in the province. That's a benefit to the people in the province. It's a great example to the rest of the country. Why, though, do we still have health care premiums? It isn't a good tax. It's government regulation. It's government bureaucracy. What we can do is reduce the size of government plus reduce our taxes: two things, easy to do. We need to accomplish that.

We also need to realize that there's a shortage of labour, Mr. Speaker, out there in our province. True prosperity is often measured by the number of people working in private versus those civil servants. The ratios continue to be skewed and not in our favour for prosperity. We need to be looking at a program of attrition and realizing that as we start to cut down now, to give incentives for people to get out into the private sector and take those jobs would be a benefit for us.

Mr. Speaker, now is the time to reclaim provincial responsibility and jurisdictions. Federal programs have not and will not work for western Canada. They're skewed to the east. We understand why they do that, so why should we continue to sign on to these programs, everything from equalization to immigration to the Canada pension plan? Now is the time to give notice and to give proper understanding to the people of Alberta that we can and will do better by running provincial programs. We don't need to be part of the federal ones.

We definitely need to minimize the size of government. I'll repeat it: our economic strength depends on the number of people engaged in productive work against the number of civil servants.

Mr. Speaker, there are many areas that we can and should be addressing in our budget that we have failed to. I want to speak for a minute on those that are the less privileged in the province. We have set the example. Our basic tax exemption is almost $15,000. But the fact of the matter is that with our heated economy people still can't make ends meet. There's no reason why we don't raise our basic tax exemption to $20,000.

We need to enhance our education system. We're talking about those that are having trouble with academics, and those are the ones that we're losing the most. We need to take the career and technology training back to where it has been in history, and that's to a younger age. Young men and women are very engaged and active in wanting to learn and to try and explore new things. There's no reason why we don't have industrial arts in grade 7 going through grade 12 and letting these kids try things because the neat thing is that the human being has the capacity, Mr. Speaker, to be both – what would I say? – technologically capable as well as academic. Yet we're dividing it and saying, "Well, you can't do those things," when a well-rounded individual and to get into the arts and the music and have all of those career opportunities available in a curriculum in their school would benefit Albertans more than anything else.

We have to reach out, especially to those less privileged, and let them realize that they have other talents. They might not excel with the books, with the studying, but maybe they're a great artist. Maybe they're a great welder. Maybe they, you know, understand electricity. We need to let them have those opportunities and excel and come and be part of the great workforce.

Mr. Speaker, health care is another huge issue that we're definitely struggling with, and we need to have choice here in the province. This is supposed to be the free world. Why would we have someone that I talked to – this is recently – who flew to England, spent $66,000 to get two Birmingham hips, and we lose that money? I think we can bring them into this country.

Our former Premier: one of the great things he was concerned about was the money that was leaving the province to go gambling, so he brought gambling to the province. We have money leaving to go buy health care and the things that they need when we should be allowing that to be set up here. It doesn't attack the public system; it benefits it, and we need to allow that to come in. We need to change our attitude and have the funding following the patients. It would increase the productivity of the different doctors. I've talked to many specialists. They're limited in how much they're allowed to do. Thus, we have the waiting lines.

Perhaps the most innovative thing that we've done in the past was how we tackled the oil sands, Mr. Speaker. How we did that was with tax incentives and concessions that made something economically viable because we removed the burden of government and the taxes that are there. What we need to do is look at that with health care. We need to look at it with education. We really need to look at it with charitable organizations. They've taken a step in the right direction, but what we really need to do is to look at and take charitable donations like we do an RRSP. We've converted to RRSPs because the government can't finance our retirement funding. We can't finance all of the social programs we need, so we need a tax deduction to give to those charitable organizations, whether it's art for teenage recovery or whatever. We need to have those.

Mr. Speaker, there are many areas. I see that I'm running out of time, so in conclusion I just want to say that we need a government that is fiscally responsible, one that has the discipline to save in good times and tough times, to live within our means.

Alberta needs to take leadership with tax reform. We need to put in place strong incentives to save and invest, lead by example, Mr. Speaker. We need to have a major shift or reform in taxes. We need to put our house in order and then go to the federal government and urge them with all of our power and persuasion to have tax reform that will really, truly help our families and our communities. We're overtaxed. We can't make ends meet, and we need to have tax concessions. We need to have that funding going to our communities in unconditional funding so they can and they will meet the needs and not have central government with central planning that has the strings attached. It's not in our best interest.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the time.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, a question and comment period is available under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner could enlighten us a little bit, in view of his views on the necessity for good fiscal planning and discipline in spending, what particular departments he would suggest are exceeding the amount of money that they ought to be receiving.

Also, in regard to his advocacy of a 10-year plan instead of a three-year business plan, as is presently contemplated, I believe it's a great idea in theory, but does he know what the prices of oil and gas are going to be in five or eight or 10 years down the road? Does he know how many people are going to be immigrating into our province five or eight or 10 years down the road? And if the hon. member was going to lowball the figures on the prices of oil and gas, would he advocate that we postpone any of the necessary infrastructure and capital spending that we have to do and perhaps postpone the fire hall that he needs in his riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner or some other capital projects that are direly needed by Alberta in view of the rapid economic growth and the rapid increase in our population, over 100,000 people in the past year? So what would he suggest in response to those issues?

Mr. Hinman: I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for asking those. They're all valid and excellent questions. I guess that my first response would be: if we think that government is the solution to our problems, we're wrong. Government is usually the problem, and we need to find outside solutions.

To start with, there's no reason why you can't put your priorities in order. If you're running any business, you know the lifespan of that equipment. We know the lifespan of the roads. We know the bridges, and with good economic budgeting we'll say: this is how much we need and should go forward on. But the important thing that I guess I would want to stress – and yes, we don't know our oil and gas revenues, and that's why I go back. Human nature is and the universe is that we fill any void.

It's important to realize that just because we have the money doesn't mean that we have to spend it. Especially to put that on, to say: "You know what? You have to spend this today." It might be 11 o'clock at night. So rather than wait for the morning to go buy your groceries at a good store, you've got to go to 7-Eleven. That's the condition that this government has put in. It's too late in the day. It's way too long. It's on the weekend, yet here's the money, and you have to have it before it's over, and it needs to be long term. It hasn't been there. I don't see it changing to be there in the future. So that's a detriment, and we don't get good value for our money.

The construction crews. I've talked to many of them, and their attitude is: we're going to put a bid in to pay for our equipment in this one project because we don't know when the next one's coming down the road. That's very poor planning on our part.

Probably the most important thing, though, let's talk social services: we spend a lot of money, but it's not effective money. If we were to take the same attitude that we do with our RRSPs, realizing, "You know what? We don't have the ability to meet the cost of these people that are retiring, so what we'll do is we'll let them take their money – we won't tax them on it – and save for themselves," that's been a huge incentive, and Canadians have grasped onto that and grabbed it.

Think what would happen if we took that same incentive and said: "You know what? Down in Taber they have a youth centre. They have a women's shelter. They have those things," and if we were to say, "You know what? If you donate directly to a charitable organization or service group in your community, we'll take that off your income. Instead of $55,000, if you donate $5,000 to them, it's only going to be $50,000." We would probably quadruple – some people say tenfold – the bang for our buck if we gave it personally directly to a charitable organization because one of the neat things is that, first, they're very fiscally responsible. The other, more important thing is: most of the people that are running those are true volunteers that are giving of their time. We could address the social issues in a huge way.

If we were to take industry and tell them – and let's take the same thing with the health care. Ten billion dollars a year we spend on health care, and we say that we don't have the money to buy the equipment or the facilities. How are we going to do that? If we were to take the same attitude with health care and say: "You know what, doctors and specialists? If you want to take, let's say, up to 20 per cent of your income and purchase equipment with it, we will not tax you on that. You can buy it first." That money, then, would go directly to that, and it would spur the economy, and it would get things going.

Ask another question. I'd love to finish answering.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon in response to the budget speech that was delivered in this Assembly on the 19th of April. This afternoon the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition delivered a rather eloquent speech in terms of the response. [interjections] I'm glad the members opposite enjoyed the speech from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition leader as much as I did.

Mr. Speaker, I'm here to more or less bat cleanup for the Leader of the Official Opposition. He touched on a number of very important broad points, and I would like to just go back to some of those and talk about some of the specifics that we feel are lacking in the document that was presented to the House by the Finance minister.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview referred to the fact that there is no serious commitment to savings in this budget, and that causes a great deal of concern. Indeed, there's been a fair amount of discussion about that this afternoon. I suppose we have to credit the Finance minister a little bit. There is a surplus savings component to the budget. Although it's four years behind the Official Opposition and our surplus plan, that we rolled out in advance of the 2004 election, it is there, and I suppose it's better than nothing. But it is really only a very small baby step in terms of where we really have to take this province.

One of the reasons why the Official Opposition converted our surplus policy into a resource revenue savings policy is because of the clear indication from this government over a period of years that surpluses are subject to political manoeuvring and machination. So there was a recognition on our side that in order to protect Albertans, who, as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar always says, own the resource, in order to protect us as citizens of this province from political manoeuvring, it's important to amend that surplus policy into a savings policy so that regardless of the whim of the government of the day the commitment to savings will remain strong and will accomplish all of the things that the Leader of the Official Opposition outlined in his speech earlier.

Obviously, we're very, very disappointed in that, and I guess my only hope is in knowing that over the last 12 years this government has underestimated surpluses to the tune of some $30 billion, an average of about $3 billion a year. There is maybe some hope that, you know, their underestimation will be at least as drastic this year and that there may actually be some money surplus to the budget that would go into the heritage savings trust fund, but I suppose we'll have to wait and see.

I'm incredibly distressed over the fact that this Finance minister has yet to put an end to the practice of raping the profits realized by the heritage savings trust fund and dumping those into general revenue. I've been saying for nearly three years now that this is a practice that has to end. In a time of incredible economic boom, when we're realizing profits beyond anybody's wildest dream, the fact that we continue to take net revenue out of the heritage savings trust fund and put it into general revenue is unacceptable. Everywhere I go across this province, people tell me that. This government has to hear that message, so it's being repeated by myself today.

The other thing that causes me a great deal of concern is that despite the fact that they trumpet that the fund has finally been inflation-proofed, their own budget documents reveal that, in fact, the fund is not inflation-proofed. The only commitment to inflation-proofing the heritage savings trust fund is if, in fact, we realize the approximate $2 billion budgeted surplus, but if for some reason something should happen where we don't realize the budgeted surplus, we don't even inflation-proof the heritage savings trust fund. So what is that all about?

Ms Haley: Yes we do.

Mr. R. Miller: No, we do not. Read the documents. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is telling me that we do, but in fact she's wrong. The documents are quite clear that we only inflation-proof the heritage savings trust fund if, in fact, we meet that budget surplus. If I'm wrong, I would ask the hon. member to show me where I'm wrong because I would feel much better if, in fact, I am wrong, but I don't believe I am.

Mr. Speaker, it's been discussed, in fact during question period today, the total failure by this government to address the unfunded teachers' pension liability. Despite a one-line commitment in the budget document there's no firm commitment in money other than the $25 million slap in the face that teachers have received with a very drastic warning as to the fact that they'd better, you know, play nice in the sandbox or else the minister is going to pull that money away from them too. All we've really done here is (a) pit experienced teachers against new teachers. I've heard this from teachers across the province over the last couple of weeks. It's the old divide and conquer tactics that we've seen from this government so many times. It continues today. Even though the chairs have been rearranged on the front bench and we have some different faces, the tactics are the same as they always have been.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, we've managed to put the school boards in the crosshairs between the government and the teachers of this province. I've heard from many school board trustees and administrators over the last couple of weeks who are incredibly concerned about the fact that they've only been given a 3.3 per cent increase in their budget despite the fact that everybody knows that inflation is running at approximately 5 per cent in this province, so automatically they're faced with making cuts before they even sit down to begin their budgeting process. And, as I say, now they're in the unenviable situation of having a whole bunch of teachers very, very angry at the way that they're being treated by this government when it comes to the unfunded liability. They're the ones that are going to have to deal with that when it comes to the negotiations in the fall.

This is an incredible lack of vision in my mind. In fact, I had floated the idea in this Assembly some time ago that with all of the money that we have in short-term savings right now, whether it be in the capital account or in the sustainability account, and with the obvious overheated construction industry, it might be time to take some of that money – I don't know how much – and, if the minister wanted to make a real show of good faith to the teachers, apply that against the unfunded liability right now. That's a good deal for teachers. It would make them all happy, not just some of them.

It would be a good deal for Alberta taxpayers. If we want to talk about fiscal responsibility, let's do something today to address the billions and billions of dollars that this is going to cost Alberta taxpayers over the next 53 years. You know, that's a no-brainer. I'm really, frankly, quite disappointed that this government didn't see their way to make that commitment.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately there's no real commitment in this budget to public transit systems. Today's announcement of the cancellation and indefinite hold on the expansion of the light rail transit system in Calgary is just one example of that. A number of speakers have mentioned the fact that the large urban centres in this province need that money to come to them unfettered so that they can make the decisions as to how best to use it, and that, as we know, did not happen.

There's been no firm commitment, at least not in the budget documents, to a high-speed rail connection between Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary. I applaud the minister responsible for his announcement last week, when we learned that some land has been purchased in downtown Calgary for a possible future station for a high-speed train. The minister knows that this is a project that I'm passionate about, and I think it's time that we at the very least made a firm commitment to acquiring right-of-way not just in the two major centres of Edmonton and Calgary but, certainly, a greenfield right-of-way between Edmonton and Calgary to secure the land for future high-speed transit. As I say, I applaud the minister for making that step, but it doesn't appear as a firm commitment in the budget, and we really need that. We need to know that we're going to take firm, positive action to secure that right-of-way and soon, before it gets chewed up by the incredible growth and expansion that's taking place.

Although Alberta's population may not warrant it today, this is a system such that some day I could envision, you know, maybe 50 years down the road, this train going to Fort McMurray. It could go to Grande Prairie and the Peace region. It could go to Medicine Hat and down to Lethbridge. I mean, this is the way of the future. We're talking incredible benefits in terms of the environment, in terms of the health care system, in terms of infrastructure, and it goes on and on and on. I would strongly encourage all members to have a serious look at the Van Horne Institute report from 2005, if they're not familiar with it, to see just what the benefits of a high-speed train are.

Something else has caused me a great deal of concern out of this budget. Again, a little bit of a nod to the government, and then I'll express my disappointment. For the first time in the years that I've been in this Legislature, there is no move to increase the $5.3 billion restriction on the use of nonrenewable resource revenue in the budget, so it's capped at $5.3 billion. You'll remember, Mr. Speaker, that when I first came into this Assembly, it was at $3.5 billion. So in two and a half years we've nearly doubled the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that the government uses, but at least this year it didn't go up. However, there is a notation in the budget documents that I did not see before, and I'm going to quote directly from page 12 of the fiscal framework, where it says that "an average of over $2 billion a year in non-renewable resource revenue will be allocated to the Capital Account to fund capital projects in each of the next three years." So despite the fact that there is a nice bubble on that page that says there's no change to the $5.3 billion limit on the use of resource revenue, there's this other little notation in small print that talks about, oh, by the way, we are actually allowed to use another $2 billion. So instead of $5.3 billion it is, in fact, $7.3 billion, and I think that's an important note that people should be aware of.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to comment on the fact that there has been no commitment by this government – clearly no commitment by this government – to tie budget increases either for this year or for future years to the rate of growth in population and/or the rate of growth in inflation, and this is something that is represented in the Official Opposition's document, which I think most members would be familiar with now, entitled Funding Alberta's Future. Several advocacy groups, most of the chambers of commerce that I'm aware of, certainly the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, all of whom would be considered to be to the right of the political spectrum in terms of their fiscal policy, at least: all of these groups have agreed with the Official Opposition in terms of calling for the need to tie budget increases to inflation and population growth, and this is something that is in our policy.

Something that I think is important to note is that whenever policy discussion takes place in our caucus, any policy changes that are approved by our caucus must fall within that framework, must fall within that template. So although I hear a lot of members opposite talking about, you know, "you guys are never happy," and "all you want is to spend more money," they should be aware of the fact that we don't approve any policies unless they can fall within those guidelines. That's something that we do as a Liberal opposition, something that this so-called Conservative government does not do, and I think it's an important notation.

We're certainly not the only ones who've noticed that they don't do it. As I say, many business and taxpayers' rights groups as well as average citizens on the street have noticed this. I think the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner pointed out in his comments that year after year we hear the government saying: "This is a one-time thing. Don't expect it next year." Then we get to the next year's budget, and they do it again. Then we get to the next year's budget, and they do it again, even more.

This year we see record spending from the government, and they've managed to upset almost everybody. It's almost inconceivable that you could spend 17 per cent more than you did last year, and everybody is mad at you. It just shows how clearly out of touch they are with what the people of this province are expecting from their government. It shows how clearly out of touch they are when they announce spending like that, and they're not making anybody happy.

Ms Blakeman: There are no new ideas there.

Mr. R. Miller: My colleague from Edmonton-Centre is saying that there are no new ideas there, and I think, really, that is sort of the crux of the matter. We've got a government that has announced record spending, but there is no real vision for the future. As the Official Opposition Leader described it, it's a reactionary budget. They're racing around trying to put out political fires, but there's no grand plan for the future of this province, and that's what people are really looking for. They've heard over the last two years the same as I've heard. That's why they had a leadership race and chose a new leader. Their own membership was telling them: we need a plan.

What we've seen here now is a government that's been in place for six months, prepared their first budget, and once again – and no surprise to this member – there's no plan. There's no real big-picture vision for the future, and that is a shame.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a couple of inquiries for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. He advocated more spending for cities for transportation, more money for acquiring right-of-way for the high-speed rail between Calgary and Edmonton, and he's advocated more money for the unfunded liability for the teachers' pension plan, yet he is espousing a program which purports to tie the increases in spending to the sum of the inflation and population increase, as I understood it.

I wonder if he could enlighten us as to what substantial cuts he would make to the budget as announced? What spending programs as announced in this budget would he cut in order to come within those guidelines yet add the additional spending that he has got, given the fact that we were at approximately a 10 per cent increase in the operating funding in this budget? If you include capital infrastructure, it's somewhat higher, around 17 per cent, I believe.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have an opportunity to address some of those questions. First of all, the real thing with municipalities – and the member has heard it from his own mayor today and over the previous number of days – is a need to give them that money without tying strings to it. Live up to the promises that were made by the Premier during the election campaign. Live up to the promises that were made by the Premier during prebudget consultations with the cities. That's all that we're asking. That's all that the municipalities are asking.

In terms of the unfunded liability I mentioned this large pot of money that's sitting in the sustainability account, which wasn't really dealt with by the government in terms of how they're going to use that. My fear, quite frankly, is that it's sitting there as an election slush fund and that we may see all sorts of announcements coming over the next year as we move closer to an election.

As far as the high-speed transit we've discussed this in this Legislature. Last year there was a motion from the Official Opposition which, I'll point out, was turned down by the government. All we asked in that motion was that the government consider building a high-speed electric transit line between Edmonton and Calgary. There were all sorts of reasons why they wouldn't support it, but the one thing they did support during that debate – and you can go back and check Hansard . . . [interjections] If the hon. members across would just listen to me for one second, the one thing that they did support, that every speaker supported was the idea of securing the right-of-way. In the Van Horne report in 2005 it was only $47 million. Now, I would suggest to the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill that that is less money than we spend on horse racing in a year. It's less money than we'll give to the horse-racing industry.

So, you know, it's a matter of priorities. Quite frankly, that's really what it comes down to. What do you want to do? Do you want to move people, or do you want to build racetracks? You know, it's very simple. The money is there. It's really a question of how you decide to use it.

The last question is really one of sustainability, Mr. Speaker. You know, the hon. Leader of the Opposition talked this afternoon about the sustainability gap. We know that last year nonrenewable resource revenues supported this government to the tune of about $2,300 per man, woman, and child. That cannot continue. This year, with the budget that we've seen from them, we know that that sustainability gap is going to be even bigger. What that means is that the money that we're taking in from sustainable, renewable resources, whether it be gambling or whether it be income taxes or whether it be service fees or transfers from the federal government, is not keeping up to government spending. Every year we're using more and more oil and gas revenues to maintain this government. That's not sustainable. That's what these guys have to wake up to.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, and this is probably the most important thing to note, the reasons why these guys say they can't do it – “We're in danger of going into deficits” or “What if oil goes to $4 a barrel?”, all of the things that the Premier has trotted out – are exactly the reasons why we have to adopt the plan for funding Alberta's future. Those are exactly the reasons. If you don't do that today, you guys are going to be in one heck of a mess a year or two down the road. Everybody can see it coming. It's a train wreck waiting to happen. I just can't believe that you guys turn blind eyes to it.

I mean, you cannot continue to do this. The minister in his own press release says: don't expect this next year; we have to find a way to control this. Well, you're right. You have to find a way to control it, and we gave you the answer. The answer is: start saving today. Don't say: maybe we'll save one-third of it if there's extra money at the end of the year. Say: no, we're going to tighten our belts; we're going to take a third of all of that revenue right now and put it in the bank. That's how you do it.

If you do that every year, year after year, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill would find that – you know what? – by the year 2020 you've actually got more money coming in from your heritage savings trust fund than you do for oil and gas, and the next thing you know, you're not dependent on oil and gas anymore. That's what it's all about.

The Deputy Speaker: The time for Standing Order 29(2)(a) has elapsed.

I recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise today and just speak a little bit in general about the budget. I wanted to make sure that I was living in the same Alberta as the members across the way because after listening for over an hour now, I feel like there's nothing good anywhere in this province, yet I happen to know that that can't possibly be true. I, too, have constituents, almost 60,000 of them, more than the average constituency in the province. People are moving into my constituency. They're moving out from Calgary. They're moving down from Edmonton. They're moving in from other provinces. They're moving in from around the world, and they're really happy to be here. So I have to wonder why there's happiness there when, apparently, there's not much in other parts of the province.

Ms Blakeman: It's all you, Carol.

Ms Haley: It is all me, you know. Thank you very much. I appreciate that.

I wanted to talk a little bit about some of the things that are in the budget. For example, Mr. Speaker, operating spending is increasing by 10 per cent. That is in large part because of the inflation rate and the population growth of 3 per cent, which outstrips every other province in Canada by at least two-thirds. Our inflation is higher here. Problematic. I believe it's a temporary issue, but it is something that we're all going to have to deal with. You would have needed a 7 per cent increase in operating spending just to break even, before the organizations that we fund have to do cutbacks. They were given an additional amount of 3 per cent to try and deal with their own cost pressures.

We all know that everybody is coming up for renegotiation of contracts, whether it's teachers or nurses. The doctors have just completed theirs. The health science workers will be working on new contracts this year as well. We hope that with the increases that we gave people, they would be able to manage not only the wage increase pressures this year but also the inflation that's occurring even today as we speak.

Health and Wellness is something that does concern me. It went up by 10.1 per cent, to $10.8 billion, yet it doesn't seem to be enough. I do believe that it's time to take a very close look at Health and Wellness spending to determine: is the money being allocated in the right way by the regional health authorities? Are we allocating it to them in the proper way? Should more money be going to long-term care or wellness rather than acute care? I think that those are really important questions.

I think the electronic health record, which everybody agrees is an important and necessary step – I also happen to believe that it's slightly problematic in what it costs. I hope that we get a billion dollars' worth of services out of it in short order because that's probably what we've spent to date. It isn't complete yet, Mr. Speaker, and I worry about that. I think everybody should be concerned if that's the appropriate place for us to be allocating money, even though we all know intuitively that it's an important addition to the health care system.

Advanced Education and Technology grew by over 10 per cent, to $2.3 billion this year, also a very large increase but in part because of the capital plan that has been adding spaces to these institutions. If you're going to add spaces to these institutions, you also have to pay the additional costs for more students to be able to go there. So, you know, we can complain about the rise being more than inflation plus population, but we also have to look at the realities of the situation.

Education went up by 5.5 per cent. We are spending more per capita as well as per student than any place in Canada on education.

I would hope that inside all of that spending that the teachers and the pension issue can also be dealt with. We are part signatories to an agreement with the Alberta Teachers' Association that was brought through this Legislature in 1992 which gave two-thirds of the unfunded pension liability responsibility to the province of Alberta, that is taxpayers, not just government – don't forget that government is just the people – and one-third of that responsibility to the teachers. So when that agreement was ratified – ratified – by the teachers, it was also ratified in this House. There is an existing commitment on both sides, so if any changes are going to be done to that, I would sincerely hope that it be done through a negotiated process because as a taxpayer I'm not necessarily willing to take on that extra one-third problem of $2.2 billion that somehow I would have to owe money on. I don't accept that. So I think that that's a bigger issue, Mr. Speaker, and one that needs to be talked about more fully.

The capital plan, which everybody knows is huge – there have been many comments made on it already. We can try and address inside there what the issues are that we're spending that money on. We can start on some of the things that have been done.

We have completed the southwest leg of Edmonton's Anthony Henday road, which was just completed in 2006. I know, judging by the people who are using it, that they appreciate very much the less congestion for the traffic here in Edmonton.

In Calgary we're still working on the northeast leg of the Stoney Trail ring road. Part of that will be just bordering my constituency, Mr. Speaker, around the northeast edge of the city of Calgary, and I know that we're all looking forward to 2009, when that part opens up, because we've been living with a traffic nightmare for the last five or six years. But, then, we've had higher growth rates down south, more consistent than had been occurring in the Edmonton area prior to this last couple of years.

We negotiated Alberta's second public/private partnership on construction for that, and I do have to say that the one that was negotiated for Edmonton worked very well, Mr. Speaker. We were able to book a solid price. The project came in on budget, which is one of the only ones in the capital plan that has done that. Also, before it was actually due, it was completed.

We've also been able to twin several segments of the north-south trade corridor, which are very important to the exports because our province is an exporting province.

We implemented the Alberta municipal infrastructure program, providing $3 billion of financial assistance, and that was before we'd been working on this $1.4 billion, which over the next three years will see an additional $1.4 billion going to municipalities.

I am sorry that the mayor of Calgary feels that somehow there's something wrong in his world, but Calgary has benefited from the original $3 billion plan by a billion dollars. That's a billion dollars that Saskatoon or Regina or any city in Manitoba or Ontario or Quebec hasn't seen anything like, neither has British Columbia. So to have him say that he's had to put projects on hold I find ironic because he's already had the benefit of not only getting the GST back from the federal government, he's also got 5 cents per litre of every litre of gasoline sold in the city of Calgary. He's got a billion dollars over five years from the original program plus additional money from the new program that's just being implemented now. So if he doesn't want to build them, I think that there are probably reasons other than, wow, somebody attached a string to something, but I guess that's his call.

We paved 918 kilometres of provincial highways in 2006 and opened a state-of-the-art level 3 biocontaminant lab, putting Alberta on the cutting edge of animal disease detection and research. We opened the new Alberta Children's hospital. Very few provinces can say anything like that. We completed the National Institute for Nanotechnology at the University of Alberta.

We commenced construction on the University of Alberta Centennial Centre for Interdisciplinary Science, selected a site for the new $308 million Edmonton Remand Centre, funded the University of Calgary's Child Development Centre, ongoing redevelopment of hospitals in Lethbridge, Rimbey, Edson, Barrhead, Viking, and High Prairie, committed to upgrade the greenhouse facilities for a crop diversification centre in Brooks, opened 15 new schools, purchased 130 new steel-framed modular classrooms, and provided $413 million for the acquisition of medical and diagnostic equipment.

You know, it's not all doom and gloom here. Somewhere in all of that there must have been something that made someone happy.

The increase for community facilities included one-time funding of $280 million over two years for the new major community facilities program to provide grants supporting community public-use facilities like skating rinks, swimming pools, curling rinks, things that people in Alberta totally enjoy and use on a massive basis. I know that my communities will be very happy to hear that that program is available.

We have an expansion and a renewal of the Royal Alberta Museum, funding to a maximum of $69 million to help the Canada Olympic Development Association on their renewal project, grants totalling $80 million to the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede, Northlands here in Edmonton, the Pengrowth Saddledome, Rexall Place, MacMahon Stadium, and Commonwealth Stadium. So somebody in Edmonton and Calgary must be kind of happy about that, I'm hoping.

Ongoing funding for maintenance and upgrades to provincial parks, museums, and historical sites, which is something that Albertans truly love and use. So maybe a little bit of happiness there.

I also wanted to mention that here in Alberta there were over 57,000 net migrants into our province from other provinces, so they must see something worth coming for. We created over 86,000 jobs in the province last year. Our housing starts – and this one is interesting because while everybody complains about it, there were over 48,962 housing starts in the province of Alberta last year. That is not just a record for Alberta but a record in Canada. The nearest province to us, Ontario, which has, I believe, three times our population, maybe four, had 52,000 housing starts. That gives you an indication that the construction industry is working here. People are building houses to live in, to rent out. It's not just government building, you know, some houses. This is real. I'm sure half of them are being built in my riding.

Mr. Knight: Do we build unreal houses?

Ms Haley: Well, we could, maybe.

Retail sales in Alberta last year increased by 16.2 per cent. That's more than double the national increase of 6.4 per cent. So that's when it starts to get interesting for me. How can that happen in a province where apparently so many people are so incredibly devastated? I'm not understating the fact that there are people having difficulty with a paradigm shift that's occurring in Alberta on the value of housing and on rental prices. It isn't something that we've gone through for about 25 years, but we went through this in the late '70s and early '80s.

When housing and rent controls were brought in, they weren't just brought into Alberta. Pierre Elliott Trudeau was the Prime Minister of Canada. He ran an election, as I recall, based on no to rent and price controls and then immediately brought them in as soon as he got elected. That was a Liberal government, I think, Mr. Speaker. Anyway, the point is that for several years everything was frozen and absolutely nothing got built during that period of time. In order to finally get more construction going on, even the federal government had to admit that they had to start pulling back on that. So it is problematic. It is a market push.

I feel bad for the people that are caught in it. I, too, have sons. One of them is a renter; the other is just trying to buy a house. They, too, are dealing with these realities. I have an aging mother, who also has her own issues on a financial level. But there is a seniors' benefit package that does help my mom, and I'm her daughter, and if she needs help, I will help her too. So there is a family component to all of this. When a member of our family is having difficulty, maybe it's time for the rest of the family to step up a little bit too, not just government. The family unit is also a part of our mix in this province.

We have the lowest combined provincial and municipal tax burden amongst all the provinces. We are only at 57.5 per cent of the average. That means that we pay 43 per cent less in combined taxes here in Alberta than other provinces. So that, too, must help some of the people in our province that are on our lower level.

There are so many things I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, and I understand that my time is almost up, but I wanted to mention the inflation-proofing of the heritage savings trust fund that the hon. member across the way brought up. Inside the Fiscal Responsibility Act is an indication that when the debt was paid off, we must in fact immediately start inflation-proofing the heritage savings trust fund. That is the law, and we are doing it. We did it the first year when the debt was officially announced as being paid off, even though money was set aside for the continued paydown of that debt. It was officially at that point considered paid off by our government. We have been inflation-proofing, and we will continue to do so.

So, Mr. Speaker, that's my Alberta. I think it's just a marvellous place to live. While we've got some issues, all of us, in dealing with inflation or the cost of construction projects going up, we will deal with it. We're Albertans, you know. That's what we do. I just want to say thank God I live here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anybody? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do thank the hon. member for the enlightening discourse on the budget. I wonder whether she could perhaps elaborate on some of those other good-news statistics that are coming out of Alberta in view of the budget?

Ms Haley: I'd be happy to, Mr. Speaker. I think the most important thing is to note how incredibly productive Albertans are. We have the highest level of participation in the workforce of any province in Canada by a long way, not just a little way. We also have the most productive workforce in Canada. Our gross domestic product participation is about $20,000 higher than the next closest province, which is also, again, phenomenal.

We have the lowest tax rates in Canada, the highest disposable spending, the highest weekly wages anywhere in the country. We also have, in my opinion – and somebody I'm sure will disagree with me – I believe, the best other programs for children's services, for our seniors. We have tried very hard to ensure that our seniors' benefit package goes to those people who truly need it, and that includes things like if your furnace goes out. Some of our more fragile seniors can apply to the government and get at least two-thirds if not a full cost recovery on a furnace or another addition, a piece for their house that helps keep them in their homes. So there is a reason that we have a net migration into our province of seniors from other provinces. It is because we do have good programs here. Our drug program is second to none. I think that you could go on and on, and I appreciate the opportunity to just add a little bit more.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would appear that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere wasn't listening the day that I gave my response to the throne speech because the day that I gave my response to the throne speech I was quite careful to point out that government members seem to have on rose-coloured glasses: everything is just fine, and it's the greatest place in the world to live. And members from the ND tend to find nothing right with the way things are going, and everything is a problem. It's the Liberal opposition that is realistic. We don't have on rose-coloured glasses, but neither do we wear blinders to the reality that our constituents are dealing with day to day.

My question for the hon. member would be this. I have an entire apartment complex, about 80 to 100 units, about 200 individuals that were given eviction notices on Sunday. I'm meeting with them later this week. My challenge to you is: would you come with me and meet with those people and tell them what your government is going to do to help them find a place to live on August 31 when they no longer have a place to live? Are they supposed to move in with their families, all 200 of them? Is that their families' responsibility? I'm telling you that it's time that this government did something today, not talk about what we're going to do over the next two years but today, to help those people that have been told they have to be out of their houses, and there's no place to go in this city. We're talking about .3 per cent vacancy. What are they supposed to do? I want you to come with me and tell them. My question for you is: will you come with me and tell them what your government is going to do to help them find a place to live on August 31? That's my question.

Ms Haley: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's a really interesting problem that he's got. He is the MLA for that area, and I expect him to take the information from municipal affairs and invite somebody from municipal affairs because we've just brought in a package to try and assist people. Can I help with their eviction notices? Probably not. What I can tell you is this. In my constituency we have issues too. One of them is that we're building houses so fast. There are so many people moving in. Perhaps you could understand that on the other side we need more construction, not less of it, and that by bringing in things like a rent control program, you limit the number of houses that people will build. Some of my landlords are upset too. They're wondering why they bother renting out houses at all. Their costs have gone up: their insurance costs, their utility costs, their construction costs. If they need to do renovations, those costs have gone up as well. They see this as a marketplace situation.

While I understand that it is stressful for some families – I really do – I don't think you should minimize my point, hon. member. As a mother and a daughter, when my family is in trouble, I am there for them. That was my point, and I don't think that you should make fun of that by implying that somehow nobody should help their own family. There are 200 families, and I feel badly for them, but I am also confident that they will have assistance in finding places to live. Like I said, Mr. Speaker, over 48,000 . . .

Mr. R. Miller: That's like the Energy minister saying that we should all put on a jacket and turn down the heat.

Ms Haley: Talk to the hand. It's the only thing listening to you.

Over 48,000 housing starts in Alberta last year. I am confident that we will probably exceed that this year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on the debate.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. I'm pleased and honoured to rise in this House of democracy today to speak to the new budget for our great province of Alberta. It is interesting to rise and reply to this budget as one of the first speakers after the leaders of the various opposition parties. Now, the previous opposition speakers today deem it to be in their interest to expend all efforts to criticize every move and every innovation of the government. But sitting here, being an independent changes one's point of view. I like the view for now.

Why oppose for the sake of opposing? Why not give praise where praise is due? Why not work positively for the sake of one's constituents, for the sake of Albertans? Why not just do the right thing? Why not say the truth when one thinks something is good? And good ladies and gentlemen, members of this Assembly, I see this as a good budget.

Now, spending will never be enough for anyone in the area of their interest, and spending will always be too much when they are paying their taxes, and spending will never be fair when someone somewhere gets attention that they think should or could be coming their way. We must be careful about spending. Ten per cent is a lot.

The increases are necessary to deal with growth pressures. God knows I have been among the first to call for spending in certain areas, but we must be prudent in planning for growth, for next year, for what's going to be happening, for all the people that are coming, and for what we have to build.

The oil price – and I've talked to a number of economists on this – the bitumen price, and the natural gas price assumptions may be too high. Next year's surplus may not be so rosy. The level of increases are a good investment for today, but that level of increase cannot be sustained. We remember the '80s. We remember the '90s. You know, the Official Opposition are talking about spending on everything and anything, and from what I've seen in terms of any sort of balancing of the books or anything, they'd spend Alberta into the ground. But revenues should be good this year. We are in a boom in Alberta. There will be surpluses. In this budget significant surplus monies have been prudently targeted at maintenance and replacement requirements. This is a sound investment for government.

I'm very impressed by the tax initiatives, even though many Albertans, I daresay, especially the blue-collar folks and independent businesses, would like more tax breaks. I'll give special note to the charitable donations tax credit. This innovation is one that I've been supporting for some time. Now, it will go a long way to alleviating the increasing stress that many of our good works organizations are feeling. It will provide more coin to the areas where front-line people want resources to go. Remember that these agencies are often the ones that provide the best value and targeting for the helping dollar.

I also must note the fairness of annual indexing of income tax in this budget and how it prevents inflation creep of taxes. This is only fair and shows a commitment to honesty by this government. I do think that the small business tax threshold of $430,000 is still far too low and should go far beyond what was announced in this budget. These smaller businesses have much higher risk yet give tremendously in Alberta and are truly the future of our economy.

Now I will relate a little illustrative story. One day while his son was away at school, a father decided to try an experiment. He went into the boy's room and placed on his desk three objects: a Bible, a $20 bill, and a bottle of rye whisky. Then the old preacher said to himself: "I'll just hide behind the door, and when my son comes home from school this afternoon, I'll see which of these three things he picks up. If he picks up the Bible, he'll be a preacher like me, and what a blessing that would be. If he picks up the $20, he's going to be a businessman, and that would be okay too. But if he picks up the bottle, he's going to be a drunkard, and, Lord, what a shame that would be." The old man was anxious as he heard his son come into the house just a-whistling. The boy threw his books on the bed, turned to leave, and spotted the objects on the table. Curious, he walked over to look at them. After a second he picked up the Bible and placed it under his arm. Dad started to beam. Then he picked up the $20 bill, stuffed it in his pocket, uncorked the bottle, and took a big swig. "Lord, have mercy," the old man whispered. "He's going to be a politician."

It's a good budget, but I guess what I'm trying to say is that nobody in this Assembly should take themselves too seriously in thinking that government and government spending can make all things good and solve all things bad. We're all politicians. Most want to do good, and the budget is just a setting of priorities within a fiscal framework.

Highways are a priority. Please, fix highway 63 quickly. I drove it both ways to Fort McMurray last weekend, and I hope the construction is not too slow. Get the routes to the heartland upgraders ready. If you waste time, you waste everybody's time and stress the economy. It is a proper role of government to move quickly on these projects to save lives, to move goods and services efficiently, and to just save travel time and frustration.

Municipal infrastructure support is key. Don't be afraid to attach a few strings to make sure that it isn't all spent on pet projects. Don't be afraid to ensure that it's spent wisely. Community facilities monies of $819 million will be incredibly welcomed by communities. I've already seen the happy, indeed joyful anticipation of planned better community public-use facilities in northeast Edmonton. What better way to promote wellness, create communities, and cut gang violence than getting people into these wholesome activities. The biker bars will hate you guys across the way here in government. You're just doing too much good with this one. And, yes, the new Edmonton Remand Centre is important; just don't put it in the northeast. Thanks for that one.

Health spending is up substantially. We must reduce the waiting times. Let's continue to innovate delivery methods such as the hip replacement program and other similar efforts now in implementation. These projects work, provide better service, and save money to the system and to the economy in the long run. Train physicians here. Increase rural training. Train nurses here. Look closely at the Saskatchewan success of training rural aboriginal women as practical nurses to alleviate the shortages in hospitals and long-term care.

The increase to Education in the budget, again, exceeds inflation. The education of our children determines our future. It starts with early childhood education, and our government cannot forget those at risk of being lost at an early age. We must refocus how we approach vocational education. There are far fewer kids learning skills on the farm anymore. There are far too many latchkey and condo kids learning no practical skills at all. Many have no idea what to do when they start a job, how to chip in and work as a team. It's no wonder that they drop out, wander the streets, and learn other team skills.

It is time to settle the teachers' pension question. This is a liability that goes back far too long and will stretch into the future. The $157 million towards unfunded liabilities is a beginning, but it is time to ready the next budget to fix this once and for all.

The money spent for school capital projects is key. New areas require new schools. Many schools in my neighbourhood of northeast Edmonton are bursting at the seams. Some had enrollments this year 50 per cent higher than expected in their projections for September. Northeast Edmonton residents need new schools. I understand that there are pressures on school boards in trying to move forward in these difficult construction times.

Advanced education, innovation, and research are key to our future economy. We must commercialize research and find venture capital to do so. We must look for more diverse ways to deliver apprenticeship training. We must better utilize the strengths of the building trades' training of our trades. The real idea of apprenticeship is to have trades training trades. It always has been.

A 37 per cent increase in student assistance is considerable, but I continue to think that we can invest further. I don't think it makes sense to charge apprentice fees at all, and tuition should not be a barrier to learning, to advancing oneself at the same time one is foregoing income. Money spent on students is an investment in the future for all Albertans.

Affordable housing initiatives are crucial in a boom-stressed economy. The waiting list for subsidized housing for those on limited incomes must be reduced. We must never forget the contribution of seniors and understand how so many are stressed because of rising pressures on fixed incomes. The measures in the budget are a beginning. Encouraging home ownership is still a best option. We should expand measures to encourage self-help and group-help organizations for home ownership like Habitat for Humanity.

Public safety and crime remain the most talked about items when I go door to door. I was at the opening of the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force yesterday, and I look forward to the results of their work. Seniors are afraid to go out. Parents will not allow their children to walk to school. If we are looking at emissions control from vehicles, it would do wonders to lessen the lineups of parents picking up their kids in their cars because they fear for their kids' safety.

There must be continued pressure on the federal government and the justice system. I hear time and again: if you do the crime, you should do the time. You can't solve all of society's problems by being nice to people, especially if they are predators. The same holds true for the youth criminal justice system. There must be consequences for those who do not care about the rights of others. The majority of offenders should not go scot-free because it is the nice thing to do or because we feel sorry that their parents didn't do them right. We must make it possible for our streets to be living streets free of fear.

There are many, many more things I would love to raise today, but there are more debates to come. I do appreciate the measures in this budget that look to build our sense of community in Alberta. We need hockey; we need soccer and ballet and kung fu and karate for the kids. We need places where we can gather. We need to be able to walk in the streets without fear.

I am pleased to support this budget, Mr. Speaker. Albertans I talk to like many, many of the measures. I commend the government in its growth initiatives and its sense of balance. Alberta supports this budget. It is in touch with its needs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I guess that I'd just like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for such an excellent speech. It's become obvious now why the Liberals kicked him out of their caucus. Obviously, this member is a straight shooter. He is a thinker. I guess perhaps that the Leader of the Opposition doesn't like free thinkers in his caucus.

I guess that what I will say is simply this. Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) it allows time for comments by members, and my comment is: you've given us some great ideas, and thank you, member, very, very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to respond?

Mr. Backs: I appreciate the words from the member, and I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 31 Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007.

The three key objectives of Bill 31 are, number one, to amend the involuntary admission criteria to allow earlier interventions; number two, implement community treatment orders; and, number three, require physicians to provide treatment recommendations to patients' family physicians when patients are discharged.

Mr. Speaker, the first key amendment will revise the involuntary admission criteria. The current Mental Health Act allows for the apprehension, examination, and involuntary admission of persons who are, one, "suffering from mental disorder"; two, are unwilling to be admitted voluntarily; and, three, are "in a condition presenting or likely to present a danger to [self] or others." The courts in Alberta have interpreted the last criterion to mean imminent physical danger. Family members of individuals with mental illness express concerns about this situation. They are also concerned that their loved ones often do not receive the treatment they need until they reach the point of being a danger to themselves or others.

In response to these concerns the admission criteria have been amended to say "likely to cause harm to the person or others" so that earlier intervention is permitted. The criteria have also been amended to include the concept of "substantial mental or physical deterioration" on the part of the patient, which again permits earlier intervention. Mr. Speaker, this is very, very important. This is something that, certainly, my constituents have been asking for, and in talking to other MLAs, many constituents across Alberta are asking for changes to the Mental Health Act that will allow earlier intervention.

Mr. Speaker, the second set of key amendments will allow community treatment orders, or CTOs. Some individuals with serious mental disorders are caught in what we call the revolving-door syndrome. They are admitted to hospital when they meet the criteria for involuntary admission, but then they're subsequently discharged when they're stabilized and no longer meet those criteria. After discharge they cease treatment in the community and are again readmitted when they meet the criteria again. So that's the revolving door.

Community treatment orders will assist revolving-door patients and provide an additional treatment option that is less restrictive than remaining as an involuntary patient in a facility. Community treatment orders will be issued by two physicians, one of whom must be a psychiatrist, and describe the treatment and care that is to be provided in the patient's community. The orders will identify the practitioners who will provide these services. The community treatment order will also identify the person responsible for the supervision of the order, and community treatment orders will expire after six months unless they are amended, renewed, or cancelled.

Now, although community treatment orders are primarily consent based, it is important to ensure that in situations where public safety is a concern, an individual may be required to be subject to a community treatment order if the individual is to continue to live in the community, thus the name.

In order to ensure the protection of individuals' rights, community treatment orders may be appealed to a mental health review panel as well as further appeal to the courts. So this bill also includes provisions to address situations where individuals are not complying with the treatment and care required under community treatment orders. If anyone has reason to believe that a person may not be complying with a community treatment order, or a CTO, that person may bring information before a court. If appropriate, the court could then issue a warrant for apprehension that would require the person to be re-examined to see if the individual should continue on a CTO, whether the community treatment order should be cancelled, or whether involuntary admission is required. Similarly, if a physician has reason to believe that a person may not be complying with their CTO, the physician may issue an order which permits apprehension and re-examination.

Mr. Speaker, finally, there is one last amendment that will require a mental health facility to provide a patient's discharge summary and further treatment recommendations to the patient's family physician, if known, when the patient is discharged. There's a similar provision that applies when a community treatment order expires.

The availability of adequate community-based mental health services is an important component of the success of CTOs. With a network of over 85 community mental health clinics across the province, a provincial mental health plan and regional mental health plans that promote community options, and investment in enhanced community services through the mental health innovation fund, I believe that Alberta is well positioned to support the implementation of CTOs.

The Mental Health Amendment Act will have resource and cost implications for the ministry and regional health authorities, but government will seek to keep these at a minimum. In fact, it is anticipated that the cost savings resulting from earlier intervention and reduced readmissions will actually mitigate the implementation costs of the amendments.

This bill will be supported by accompanying measures to enhance community-based mental health services that will help Albertans living with mental illness and their families to access early intervention services and to enjoy full and productive lives.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say again that I'm very honoured to be able to bring this bill forward. It was originally going to be a private member's bill put forward by myself in this session. It was going to be Bill 209. I want to thank Parliamentary Counsel Shannon Dean, who did a lot of work on that bill and really brought it to the stage that we're looking at right now. I also want to thank the minister of health and the previous minister of health for agreeing to bring this forward as a government bill and, again, for giving me the honour and opportunity to carry this bill.

In conclusion, I ask support of the House for Bill 31, and I move second reading of Bill 31. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak during the debate on Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007. This I think is probably, at least in my constituency, the most controversial bill that will be up in this 2007 legislative agenda. It has generated a great deal of debate in my constituency and, I know, in many other constituencies. I think that debate is a good thing. I am actually quite encouraged to see the amount of lively interaction that the ideas that are encompassed in this bill have generated. I have to say that the debate has also gone on in the Liberal caucus. There has certainly been strong support for the bill. There has also been strong nonsupport, and these views are all very strongly held. I think it's given us all in the Official Opposition caucus a great opportunity for enhanced communication with our constituents.

So given all of the above I have recommended to our caucus that we have a free vote on this government bill. Usually you would have the whip on in the Official Opposition responding to a government bill, but as the shadow minister I recommended a free vote to allow the MLAs to best represent their own constituents and allow all voices to be heard. My caucus has concurred with that. So I guess that henceforth I'm not speaking as the shadow minister for Health and Wellness but as the MLA for Edmonton-Centre.

I think that the integral base starting point of agreement for me on this bill is, I believe, that we can all agree that if there was enough support offered to individuals and organizations, instruments like CTOs would not be needed, and that is the world that I continue to work for. I have communicated at length and spoken and met with individuals from the Edmonton and Calgary chapters of the provincial organization of the Schizophrenia Society and a number of others, and we have all agreed on that point. We've also all agreed that the process of deinstitutionalization was never completed in this province, and frankly I think it can be argued that it was never completed in a number of places. We took people out of the institutions. We said that we were going to offer them supports in the community, and we never completed that journey or that continuum of support.

So what do I see today in my constituency and others that contact me from outside of my constituency? I see the mentally ill struggling to find safe, appropriate housing. I see them struggling with economic security to be able to feed and clothe and appropriately purchase medicine and other holistic health and wellness articles for themselves. I see them struggle with meaningful activity so they can contribute to society and give their lives dignity. I think that many of these individuals need access to services in their community. They need access to psychiatric services. They need access to mental health workers. They need access to home care, and they need access to health and wellness programs. These things are not there for them, and although they seek and although they try, those things are not there for them. That contributes to the situation that some of them find themselves in, and I'll come back to that.

I see these constituents struggling with the lack of all of these things, and they are often vulnerable as a result of that. They are in many cases not well physically. They may not be well clothed. They may not be able to engage in a great deal of personal hygiene, and I see that they are often bullied, assaulted, robbed, frightened, and threatened on the street. So the stereotype of, you know, the crazy, mentally ill guy who threatens people on the street, that's a complete myth. The person who is most likely to be assaulted, to be robbed, to be threatened is actually someone who has a mental illness because in all likelihood they're not well, and they're a sitting duck for somebody that wants to pick on them.

I find the situation that the families of people with a mental illness are in to be really desperate. The families tell me: "I want to look after my loved one. I want to support them, but I can't bring that person into my household. I have a young child. I live in a studio apartment." There are a number of reasons why family members may not be able to help as they would like to, and they feel abandoned. They feel that the government never supplied the support services that were necessary to assist people with mental illness to live, you know, full and meaningful lives in the community. They've cut resources.

When all the chips are down and the police have been called because somebody is talking to themselves in the mall, the family ends up being called, "Come and do something about this guy," and I underline "do something." They feel helpless. They feel abandoned. They feel desperate. They need help. Now, some of them clearly feel that CTOs will give them that help, but I disagree. I don't think this bill will give them the help that they're looking for. It won't give a person with a mental illness the resources and support that they're looking for.

I believe with every fibre in my body that any suggestion to curb or narrow or curtail someone's human or civil rights should never be done unless there is an absolutely ironclad, proven result. I cannot find that result in the implementation of CTOs, and I have looked. I've looked at outcomes in programs that have been running in the U.S. over long periods of time and short periods of time. I've looked at various other provinces that have had them in place, some of them for as little as a year and some of them for longer than that. I have not been convinced by what I've seen.

Interestingly, where the studies come back and say, "Yes, here's an example of where a CTO was successful," it's always in combination with what they call aggressive or assertive community treatment, and what would that be, Mr. Speaker? Well, goodness, that's exactly what I started out talking about. It's about appropriate and safe housing. It's about economic security. It's about enough food to eat. It's about enough medical attention for them. So, really, we didn't need the CTOs. We needed those supports, and they're not there.

This legislation will not create one more dollar on your AISH benefit. It will not give one more housing unit. It does not give one more support. It does not give one more treatment bed in a psychiatric facility, in a hospital, or in one of our psychiatric institutions. It does not give us any more programming in support of mental illness. It does none of those things.

What I believe it does do is it violates the autonomy of the individual. It takes away their choice. It takes away their ability to define themselves and to make choices about their lives. The argument I hear back is: well, they're not in their right mind; they're incapacitated. Okay, fine. I can understand that at a certain point, if someone's incapacitated, we may need to step in. But I would argue that you need to have something in place that allows that person, when they are in their right mind, to make those decisions about their own care.

We are moving towards a medical model that is about the right to refuse treatment. It is about that ability of people to say: no, I don't want that. So if we really want to implement something like this, we must put in place things like personal directives so that when someone is well and understanding what their circumstances are, they can make a personal directive about what they would wish done to them and with them when they are incapacitated, and that gives them some control and some choice over their own life, which I argue is the base of human dignity. If we will not allow people that kind of autonomy and choice over their lives, then I don't think we're being a very fair or a very just society.

What I find gets put in place with a CTO is a perpetual parole. They're never finished. Even for someone who robs a store and gets convicted and serves their time, once they serve their time, they're done. If they get out early on parole, once they've served their parole, they're done. It's over. This is never done. What's contemplated in this legislation is that it can be reviewed and perpetuated forever. They just keep going back under the provisions of this legislation and getting it renewed again and again and again and again and again and again, ad infinitum. There's never an end to it. It can be renewed forever or until a person dies. So that scimitar hangs over you forever. Once you've had a CTO on you, you never get out from underneath it. They can just keep reinstating it. To me that's wrong. If we treat people in our justice and penal systems with more rights than we treat the mentally ill, there is something very, very wrong with the system, and I object to that. Clearly, I object to it.

I said earlier that CTOs violate a move towards the right to refuse medical treatment. The other directions that we're clearly going that are supported by a number of innovations in health care and in wellness and prevention across the world are things like evidence-based decision-making. Well, we're not getting evidence-based decision-making with this bill and with the suggestion of CTOs. I can find a few suggestions of some studies that have been done in the States where it might have made some difference, but they really couldn't prove it. Well, that is not evidence-based decision-making. I argue that you cannot take away someone's civil rights unless you are absolutely stone cold sure that it's going to have a positive result, and I don't see that happening here.

The other thing is that we're moving towards least invasive procedure, and I would argue that CTOs are the most invasive. There are other, lesser versions of this that have been adopted in some of the other provinces. I'm going to say Saskatchewan and B.C., and I might be wrong, but some of them have, basically, community support orders, which are a less invasive version of community treatment orders than what is anticipated here.

So I want to talk about, specifically, what the legislation is doing here. Specifically, this legislation is changing the definition. It is removing our long-held belief that we leave people alone until they are an immediate danger to themselves or to others, and at that point there's an intervention. I understand the argument from the families that say: we need to be able to cope with a deterioration, which signals a longer period of time. So this legislation is removing the idea of immediacy, and it is drawing it out into a much longer time period, a much more drawn-out situation.

This legislation does not distinguish between types of mental illness, so someone who is clinically depressed, which is likely to happen to many, many people, or someone who is bipolar is treated no differently than someone who is schizophrenic or psychotic. There's no difference whatsoever. There's no definition in here that distinguishes between the kind of mental illness that somebody is dealing with and the duration that they have been under treatment or have been diagnosed with that particular mental illness.

Think carefully, my friends, very, very carefully, about putting this one through. We know from the mental health experts and advocates that we work with in the community that mental illness affects at least 20 per cent of the population, 1 in 5. They're now saying, actually, folks, that it's closer to 1 in 3 people. There are 83 members of this Assembly. We have to acknowledge that mental illness is part of our society. Now, I'm going to go back and remind you all here that this legislation makes no distinction whatsoever about what kind of mental illness would be eligible to be locked up under a CTO. I think you need to think a bit more carefully about that one. Nothing in this bill addresses the root causes of what has brought a person to a point of deterioration where you would need that kind of aggressive intervention.

A couple of other things I'd like to refute the sponsoring member on. He said: well, there are two doctors that are needed, there's a great appeal process in place, and it's all hunky-dory. Actually, read the whole bill. It says: two doctors, one of whom must be a psychiatrist. But if you read a little further along, it actually says that, well, if you don't have a psychiatrist, a regular doc will do as long as it's checked somewhere down the road by a psychiatrist. So don't tell me that this needs a psychiatrist to put this in place. It clearly doesn't. For places like Grande Prairie, which now has no psychiatrist left – and I think Fort McMurray was cruising close to that – you could have two doctors committing people to these CTOs. And, my friends, what if there are no treatment beds available in that location? It can still happen. Read the rest of the bill.

So, one, the orders can be renewed over and over and over again and ad infinitum. There's no end to it. You can have two doctors certifying this as long as it's checked somewhere down the road by a psychiatrist. Well, you've already been locked up, so it's a bit late for that.

I was reassured when I was given a briefing about this that they couldn't put a community treatment order in place if there was no place to actually apprehend and commit the person. Well, I'm not finding that in the bill, actually, so if you want to highlight it and send it over to me, I'd be happy to see it.

I've already talked about that the orders can be reviewed and reinstated to infinity.

So the changing of the test here, I think, from "present a danger" to "likely to cause harm" – and that's the language that we're using here – is very problematic.

One of the things that this bill does not encourage is that it doesn't do anything to improve medication. Why do so many people get in trouble, where they're in that situation where somebody would want to be committing them or where they'd be considered in a deteriorating situation or maybe just imminently a danger to themselves and others? A lot of it is because the meds are terrible. These are meds that make people feel sick. They have huge side effects, and we've had very little improvement in them in many, many decades. People get on the meds, they get straightened out, and the first thing they do is try and get off those meds because they make them feel so sick. The side effects are so enormous. So where is the pressure from us as a government to say to the big pharma: "Get a better medication. This would help us. Work on better medication rather than this medication that people want to get off"? With their very lives at stake, the first thing they want to do is get off the medication. Well, pressure the big pharma to get a better medication happening.

Some of the things that my constituents have brought forward to me that they have suggested would be helpful are enhanced legal services to protect the civil and legal rights of people with mental illness, one point of entry for all psychiatric services, case managers for each consumer or patient who will ensure that their needs are met and thereby help to reduce the deterioration, daily contact with someone such as an outreach worker, more psychiatrists, increased access to home care – there's a thought – funding to hire more mental health workers, provision of affordable, safe housing, housing with graduated supports, a stronger response to stigma and discrimination – for example, the same as is called for in the Kirby report – and the institution of advanced directives.

Again I say that without strong evidence of effectiveness, legislators have a responsibility to avoid making changes that would restrict the basic right of persons to make decisions for themselves.

I'll end with a quote. This is from Cathy, who is a community health nurse and co-ordinator of the Toronto Disaster Relief Committee.

I've been a community health nurse for twenty years – for the last twelve as a street nurse, working with people who are homeless. I know I will never . . . use CTOs. The Mental Health Act functions adequately to protect people who become very ill. Yet it is no substitute for the care and support some people need on an ongoing basis and that includes competent and caring community based mental health care, decent housing, mental and emotional health supports and enough money to live on. These are the building blocks for dignity for people with mental health problems.

And, I would argue, meaningful activities in their lives that give their lives dignity and meaning. I've never met someone who had a mental illness or who was homeless that said: yeah, I just want to sack out all day long. All of them want to do something that contributes to society, and they want to have dignity.

So I argue that this bill should not be supported. I disagree with the principle that is in this bill. I look forward to listening to the debate of others, but I would say for the reasons that I have spelled out in the time that I've had that this is not a bill that ultimately will help those who have mental illness in our society. We need to understand that this is an increasing issue. One out of every 3 people in our society will deal with a mental health issue at some point in their life, and locking them up under a CTO is not the answer.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 31, Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007. It's a very important bill. I've spent a fair bit of time looking through it, and as I was reflecting on what this bill really means, what came to mind was an earlier piece of legislation passed in this Legislature a long time ago, in the 1920s, the Alberta sterilization act.

Mr. Speaker, when we debate these pieces of legislation that have ramifications for the liberties and civil rights of Albertans, albeit they are couched in a language of providing medical services for people in need, we are treading on very, very dangerous territory. We need to be extremely careful in relying exclusively on medical science, scientific advice because experience and history have told us that science, including the medical sciences, is an imperfect tool. They're always in need of change, modification. They do change. Treatments change. Theories of illnesses change. The kind of appropriate treatments that are needed, obviously, change and follow. In the meantime, if we are not aware of the fallibility of these services and the science underlying them, we can create serious harm by passing legislation that doesn't pay attention to other issues that need to be addressed along with the medical basis of the argument that calls for the legislation.

The sterilization act passed in this Legislature, as I said, in the '20s did fundamental harm, very serious harm to lots of Albertans. It violated their fundamental rights, Charter rights. The people who were hurt irreversibly by sterilization decisions and actions that were taken, the people who were the recipients of them, had to go all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada to make two points: first, to have the point established that their fundamental rights had been violated by this piece of legislation, and secondly, to seek restitution for the harm that was done to them by the state.

Mr. Speaker, we also need to make reference to other places in recent history where mental illness has been used as an instrument to repress dissent in those societies. We have to be very careful that as a Legislature, as part of a structure of a state that's democratic, that's respectful of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that Canadians are entitled to, we learn from those instances in history, whether it's a state that has used mental illness as a tool of repression against people who disagree and express dissent with the repressive policies of that state or whether it's simply because the science which was used in order to sort of engage in social engineering, as this Legislature did in 1928, proved to be wrong, inaccurate, unreliable, proven totally deficient by later research and so on and so forth.

When we know that these things have happened, including what happened in this Legislature, things that have therefore done irreparable harm to individuals and citizens living in this province and elsewhere, I think we need to be careful. So this bill, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, needs to be scrutinized in light of those lessons that we must necessarily draw from in our own experience in this province and experiences in other places.

The Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, before us, Bill 31, essentially makes one major change in the existing piece of legislation. It introduces another form of dealing with people who are deemed to be mentally ill.

Mr. Speaker, I must remind the House that medicalization of aberrant behaviour associated with mental illness is a continuing theme. It's certainly in the interest of people who sell medications, who manufacture medications to of course create a greater demand for their products. I was reading a review article in the New York Review of Books just two days ago, where there was an interesting debate. This article, this piece of writing engages in a serious debate on the variety of ways in which illnesses get defined and the medications for them get discovered, prepared, manufactured. Then the marketing campaigns start to legitimize illnesses and the diagnoses of them, and then the demand for the medications needed to deal with that disorder is of course expanded.

There are all kinds of reasons why I think it's important for us to be very careful. The issue of overmedication, the issue of defining what's a mental disorder and what kind of behaviour is considered a mental disorder are contested and contestable questions. There are no black-and-white answers to these questions. Therefore, all the more reason why we should be approaching this piece of legislation with extreme care.

This bill, as I said, makes one major change in the existing piece of legislation. It makes a provision for community treatment orders in addition to the so-called formal patient status that is a part of the existing piece of legislation, which committed people to a mental treatment facility and didn't provide for anything else.

Another bit of background to this: when we came to the realization in the '80s that institutionalization was not the answer, all of a sudden deinstitutionalization began to be debated. In fact, it became a more attractive alternative for all kinds of reasons. Scientific evidence provided some good reasons why people shouldn't be committed to mental institutions: they become sicker as they go into mental institutions and get isolated from mainstream society. Deinstitutionalization was seen as an attractive alternative to the failing set of policies that led to incarceration indefinitely into mental health facilities and hospitals, but deinstitutionalization got hijacked by the stronger desire in the '90s to cut back government services in order to meet the demands of paying down the debt, reducing the deficit.

So a variety of reasons, all very different from each other and not necessarily in agreement on the ultimate goals, interacted with each other to justify very quick and rapid deinstitutionalization. Over the last 10, 15 years we have seen lots of Albertans on the streets of our towns and communities and neighbourhoods who, in fact, were let go from the hospitals without appropriate support being provided in the communities.

Deinstitutionalization, if undertaken properly, implemented appropriately, would have required first putting in place appropriate support systems, treatment systems, community organizations that would help people who have been let go from the mental hospitals to be able to reintegrate back into the mainstream with the appropriate supports available to them. That was not the case, unfortunately, so we had on our hands over the last 10 years a growing mental health crisis.

I remember meeting with mental health advocates about five, six years ago, and one of their primary concerns was that they were the ones who had been in fact advocating deinstitutionalization, yet the form in which deinstitutionalization was introduced and offered to them led to making the problems related to mental health services graver than they were before deinstitutionalization. So CTOs are now a response to, in my view, the wrong-headed way in which deinstitutionalization was implemented.

Community treatment orders: sure, they are issued for only six months at a time as provided for in this piece of legislation, but they can be renewed ad infinitum every six months. On the advice of a psychiatrist or a physician you can have another six months' renewal, so renewal after renewal after renewal. That raises questions about the civil rights and the legal rights of people who suffer from mental illness and are put on these CTOs. Now, CTOs look like it's a voluntary decision; it's a consent-based decision. Mr. Speaker, let's not kid ourselves. CTOs are in fact quite restrictive of the civil rights and the legal rights of these people.

Of course, Bill 31 makes provision for appealing CTOs, community treatment orders, even going to the Court of Appeal to be heard if one who is subject to a CTO is unhappy with the issuance of that order, but there's no provision in this bill as to who is going to pay for this if there's a legal recourse available to people who are mentally ill. Because they are mentally ill, most of them either cannot work or work in jobs that barely provide them a living wage. How are they going to be able to seek this opportunity of the right to appeal? How can they exercise it? It cannot be exercised.

Unless we have a provision in this bill that allows for some sort of legal aid, legal resources made available to people who are subject to CTOs, the provision here for appeal and the right to go to the next level, to the Court of Appeal, I think is an empty promise. It's a promise that cannot be implemented. I think there needs to be a guarantee here in this bill that CTOs, when issued, if they are subject to appeal, that appeal procedures and the costs involved in pursuing that course of action would be made available to these patients based on the knowledge that these people themselves are not in an economic position and situation where they themselves can pay if they exercise the right to appeal.

Mr. Speaker, it's a bill that needs very careful attention by all of us. I think one member speaking before me drew attention to the fact that at least 20 per cent of us seem to be, in some form or another, mentally unwell. I'm not sure about that. I'm skeptical about these numbers, these percentages. These are obviously based on an existing knowledge base, but an existing knowledge base drawn from the science of psychiatry and whatever have you is always something that's to be taken with a grain of salt.

The last point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, to conclude, is that a bill such as this, which will restrict the civil rights and freedoms of Albertans, must also be one which comes for a review after four or five years. Even if this piece of legislation passes the Legislature, I think that there should be a legislative provision that it will have to come back to the Legislature for a thorough review at the end of five years so that we then know how CTOs work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) we have a question/comment period available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Little Bow on the debate.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to put a couple of my own comments on the record and throw them out for discussion. I heard an awful lot about sterilization. I've heard an awful lot about legal rights and freedoms of individuals that might suffer from mental duress. It's my opinion and my understanding of history that this is a moot point, comparing this to sterilization. From the information that I have, sterilization was done, true, and it was discontinued in the early 1970s. It was done at the time as probably one of the very few good ways of addressing an issue. That technology has changed substantially since that time.

5:00

It's also my understanding that in this province people who underwent sterilization were not just put into a room and sterilized. It was after family and parental consent and awareness and acknowledgement were given. I can't say that for certain, but I am fairly intimate for the past 37 years with somebody who worked in that field. That was the impression that I was left with, after many of the nurses trained in Ponoka who were there at the time of the last of the sterilization. So I think it's a red herring to throw this sterilization issue into the debate on this particular bill.

Secondly, legal rights and freedoms. Yes, that's a very real concern, but I think it has to also be balanced against the public good and the safety of the health care provider. I know that many people – the numbers 1 out of 4, 1 out of 3 have been thrown out at the end of the previous speaker's comments – might be affected by some form of mental illness. I guess if we look around, that means that anywhere from 20 to 27 of us in this Assembly either don't know what we're talking about or have some reason to maybe wonder if we're all there. That's just meant as a lighthearted note because if that's the case, we shouldn't even be debating the bill.

On the other hand, you know, the support services. Three of us that are currently in this Assembly did a mental health review back in the middle '90s. At that time – and, again, I'm going off memory – approximately 40 per cent of the mental health facility beds at Ponoka, Oliver, Claresholm, and Raymond had already been changed to such an extent that 40 per cent of the patients at that time had been put out into the community. Now, there were two trains of thought, it seemed to me. There were those who thought that there was no place in society for any mental health facility at all, and everyone in any kind of a mental institution should be put out into the community. There were those who said that some of those people could be moved out into communities, but there were some who, because of the length of time they'd been in, their age, the inability to have any family connection who was willing to help take care of them, needed to be under 24-hour supervision because of the severity of their mental illness.

Now, as I recall, our mental health task force also recommended that should people be put into the community, depending on their illness it would require anywhere from three to five core essential support services, which the second speaker actually talked about. I would say that in the rush to take a lot of people out of mental health facilities and put them into communities, those same people that advocated no institutions were the first not to remember that there was going to be a very great need for some very core 24-hour essential services, which weren't promised by the government, which weren't delivered by the government. But some people wanted everyone out into the communities.

Now, that brings me to the point of the CTOs. Some of those very same people might very well have ended up on AISH. I've seen examples and heard of far more where people that are suffering from a mental illness, who happen to be on AISH, are now out of money by a certain time of the month. They're feeling pretty good because they've been on medication, which one speaker says that they do great harm to you, but there are some medications which make the patients actually feel quite well, to the point that they feel so good they don't think they have to take medication anymore. Then all of a sudden they go about-face. They get either a little bit edgy, violent, or out of money, and they end up doing a circle back through psychiatry again.

Now, to me that's counterproductive. If at the same time there's a volunteer unit available and the people feel that they're good enough that they don't have to be there but some health care provider, whether it's a doctor or a nurse, can see that they have the potential to do harm to themselves, to others, to staff, and want that person to be maintained in a facility to be monitored and to get them back onto a regime of treatment, why isn't that CTO a good tool to have? The police can already be called, but why should they have to be mental health workers on top of all the other things that they have to do out in the public?

I'm just throwing a few comments out on the floor, Mr. Speaker. I'm not speaking as a professional by any stretch, but I have heard a lot of comments over the years. I've been on the psych unit a few times, visiting with a lot of staff. I'd suggest that before we focus all on patient rights and legal rights and civil rights, we also give consideration to the public, to the health care providers that are trying to help these folks, and to look at the good, positive parts of another tool that would enable, yes, just a doctor. Don't forget that in some of the volunteer units psychiatrists are not available at beck and call. They have to be called in, and sometimes it's of such urgency that the staff and a medical doctor need to make the determination of what treatment is provided.

With that, I'll sit down and take my place. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order (29)(2)(a) is available. Hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on Standing Order (29)(2)(a)?

Mr. Elsalhy: No. On the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: On the debate.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and contribute to this discussion on Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, as introduced and moved by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. I will try not to repeat some of the arguments from both sides of the House with respect to the support of or the rejection of this idea of community treatment orders.

As indicated by my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Centre, the Official Opposition House Leader, we have agreed in the Alberta Liberal caucus to treat this as a free vote because it is quite an important issue that should not be approached, you know, from a partisan standpoint. This is an issue that basically talks about people.

Many different people in the community have approached members from both sides of the House with respect to this issue, and they're split. They're divided. Some people are adamant in the protection of individual rights, patient rights. Some people are equally passionate about the need for better psychiatric supports for individuals who have mental illness. Both sides of the issue are equally vocal, and they both present a very solid case. They're both strong believers in what they stand for, and they are lobbying members of this Assembly to side with them, to basically accept their approach and their side of the story because they feel that they're right and they want us to support them in their quest for or against.

So, yes, we have to approach this, you know, as individuals, and we should really think about individuals who feel either way. It's an issue of balance, and like everything we do here, Mr. Speaker, we are attempting to arrive at a balance. Be it financial decisions, be it societal decisions, be it health care decisions, we are trying to achieve a balance that is sometimes elusive or difficult to achieve. You can't be a hundred per cent right. You're bound to please some, but you're also bound to displease some. As such, this is a difficult decision for myself, and I bet that it's a difficult decision for you, for every member of this House. How do we vote with respect to this bill? Do we support it, do we support it with amendments, or do we reject it outright?

We definitely need to look at this balance that we're trying to arrive at. Patients have rights. Individuals have rights, of course, to refuse treatment. This is granted to them in the Charter, for example. But there is also the expectation that society at large looks after the interests of those who might at times not be able to make those decisions for themselves.

Now, stakeholders in the community and people from the medical profession are also split on this issue, Mr. Speaker. Jurisdictions in Canada and elsewhere are split. Some people accept this idea and embrace it. Some people denounce it. They say: no, it's not the right way. And there are jurisdictions and professionals who are everywhere in between. So we have from the one extreme to the other, and then we have people at different stages in that window.

If we look for advice from, you know, people who are on the ground, front line, hands on, we get some hesitancy or skepticism on the part of the Alberta Mental Health Board, for example, and also some hesitancy or skepticism from the Canadian Mental Health Association.

If I remember correctly, a physician in the capital region here, Dr. P.J. White, of the Canadian Mental Health Association – he's also the Capital health regional clinical program director – sounded or registered some hesitancy because he feels that supports within the community, supports that basically are allocated towards comprehensive systems of community-based initiatives are definitely the preferred way. They're a positive alternative to community treatment orders. His approach was that we may not need community treatment orders if adequate supports are available on the ground in the community, but they're not. So this is the one side of the debate.

On the other side of the debate you get an organization like the Schizophrenia Society, which advocates the establishment or the enactment of some type of community treatment order. Now, is any one organization more credible or should it be listened to more attentively than the other? No. They're both equally credible, and we should really consider very seriously where we stand with respect to this. Professionals are split, governments elsewhere are split, and we should not rush to any conclusion in this House, Mr. Speaker.

Now, as a layman I think that until the individual turns 18, he or she is looked at as a minor, and his or her legal guardian can make decisions of this magnitude for him or her. Once a person reaches 18 and exceeds that age, then the question becomes more complex, as we all know.

When a person is over 18, Mr. Speaker, cases should be evaluated individually. We should not have a one-size-fits-all approach to community treatment orders. They should be evaluated individually, especially when a treatment order involves in most cases the person being locked up or incarcerated. It's not like we're forcing them to take their medication, but they're sleeping in their own bed every night. They're likely going to be separated from their family and from the surroundings that they're accustomed to and comfortable in, and they're taken someplace where they are actually forced to take their medication and monitored, and they're probably subjected to lab tests to make sure that, you know, adequate levels of that medication are in their system and so on. As such, I have some questions, very briefly.

This bill is attempting to expand the category of people that are captured under this definition, who are eligible for community treatment orders, from the current definition, which is a person who presents "a danger to . . . others," to what is proposed, which is a person who is "likely to cause harm . . . or to suffer substantial mental or physical deterioration or serious physical impairment."

Now, I would be more comfortable – and there is not going to be any debate in this House – if it's a person who is posing a threat to others, somebody who is creating a danger for others, for society, for his own family, for people or property. Fine, they need to be dealt with, and this is provided for in the current act. Expanding this: I need to hear from the hon. sponsor of the bill or from other members who are in favour. Why are we expanding it, and why are we trying to cast a bigger net to catch more people under this definition? As a matter of fact, anybody who is likely to cause harm or who is likely to suffer substantial mental or physical deterioration should be a candidate for a program that is currently existing, should be a candidate for the government to say: "You know what? We have a treatment bed for you in the west end of Edmonton. We have another one in Leduc. We have another one in Drayton Valley." That should be available right now. The stricter definition of somebody who is posing a threat to others should be, you know, the extreme. It shouldn't be the norm. We should look at community treatment orders as a last measure, not as a catch-all approach, Mr. Speaker. So that was my first question.

My second question is: do we have any statistics or do we have any studies that tell us how prevalent, you know, these situations are? How badly do we need community treatment orders? Why aren't the current systems adequate? Why aren't they functioning? If they're missing or if they're not adequate, why are they not fully funded, for example? Or what can we do to enhance the mental care landscape in this province, Mr. Speaker? I need statistics. I need studies that actually indicate why this is such a wonderful move and why now, also studies with respect to the effectiveness of community treatment orders.

Again, I mentioned that people are divided and even members of the medical community are divided as to how effective community treatment orders are. So I need to be convinced. If they are effective, how effective? What can we do to use the CTOs as part of a bigger picture approach? You know, medicating an individual, Mr. Speaker, is only one part of that therapy continuum, of that big picture.

I should know a thing or two about drug therapy because I'm a pharmacist by profession. However, from the first day in the first year of pharmacy school they teach you that medications are not the one solution. They're not the only solution. It's part of a bigger picture, and it's a picture, Mr. Speaker, that, quite honestly, involves the patient himself. The patient is part of that triangle of care or square of care. A triangle has three sides. There is the patient, there is the physician – in this case it would be a psychiatrist – and there's also the pharmacist. With a square you can add a nurse practitioner, now that we are relying on more nurses and more nurse practitioners in our system, partly because we don't have enough psychiatrists and enough physicians in the system. Community care could be interpreted as one of those fourth arms. Anyway, I just wanted to put it on the record that drug therapy is not the only solution. It's part of a bigger picture approach.

I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre talked about better drugs. To briefly contradict my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona, it's not the people who provide the drugs – pharmacists are not to blame here. Some drug companies are better in doing R and D, in doing research to come up with better medications or better drug therapies. Some are not as progressive and are not as forward thinking as others. But pharmacists for the most part work with the medications that are available to them. So more times than none we tell people that drug therapy should be the last resort. When people come into my drugstore, I tell them: let's look for ways where we can actually make you avoid taking the medication if we can. Medications are chemicals that are used in special circumstances. They shouldn't be given out willy-nilly, if you will.

Mr. Speaker, I know that when this bill was introduced for first reading, the hon. minister of health was interviewed. He was approached by the media, asking him what he thinks of this bill and where he stands on it. I know that he actually said – and I'm not quoting, but I know that he referenced his preference – that treatment in the community should really translate into a better quality of life for Albertans. Albertans with mental health issues are still citizens, and they still have rights, and they still have expectations that should be met. So the minister indicated that it really should reflect in a better quality of life.

It's my interpretation as a layman, again, that community treatment orders should not be a punishment. They should not be a restraint for people just because, you know, at one point there was a chemical imbalance in their brain and they misbehaved. We can argue about the definition of misbehaviour. Mental illness is no different from diabetes, Mr. Speaker. Diabetes is a chemical illness where the body is unable to burn off sugar, for example. Mental illness is also a chemical instability in the brain, and these patients are not aggressive by nature. They don't enjoy being aggressive. They actually have the same feelings as everyone else. It's just unfortunate that their chemical imbalance happened in their brain, that it didn't happen in their liver or kidneys or their appendix or, you know, their pancreas.

I was enlightened by the comment that quality of life should be a big thing that is central to this discussion. The minister also indicated that while community treatment orders are an important tool that will, you know, likely encourage compliance with medication and prescribed treatment, they should also be a measure of last resort. I am really happy that the minister shares this philosophy, that it shouldn't be the norm; it should be an exception. He indicated that one of his priorities now that he's the minister of health would be to ensure the availability of the support services that are required for mental health patients in the communities to lead full, independent, and productive lives.

I genuinely hope, Mr. Speaker, that this will translate into action, that words would now be reflected in government policy. And it's government policy that I'm hoping would create more treatment beds in the community, government policy that would help recruit and retrain more qualified psychiatrists and psychiatric nurses in the community. It might be government policy that would work with drug companies, for example, to encourage better medications, medications of the future, that have fewer side effects and that are not as detrimental to somebody.

With your permission I will carry on at a later time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) a five-minute comment and question period is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007. This bill highlights removing the requirement for a physician to prove that an individual is dangerous in order to be hospitalized, creates community treatment orders that require patients to stay on medication and follow medical advice in order to prevent hospitalization. If patients don't comply, police officers are able to apprehend them and bring them back to the hospital for up to 30 days. These community treatment orders, CTOs, refer to a legal process whereby certain people designated as mentally ill may be forced to comply with the physician's ordered treatment plans while living outside hospital. Those who do not comply may be returned to hospital for psychiatric assessment and possible admission.

Mr. Speaker, I'm still not sure. This is a very difficult decision for me to make because this bill is, you know, so controversial. It's very hard for me to make a decision at this moment. I will listen to some other speakers, but at this moment I just want to comment on a few more things.

Adequate supports, like I said, must be established within communities for both the mentally ill and their families. A system that offers voluntary preventative services within the community and puts the individual at the centre of the decision-making process is the most effective way of dealing with mental illness.

While improvements to the current system are needed, there are cases both for and against the proposed community treatment orders. This is a complex issue and has its supporters and opponents. While CTOs are intended to provide a more structured approach to treatment, there is a legal and ethical dilemma of potentially violating a patient's rights as well as the inconsistency with today's medical philosophy around the right to refuse treatment, evidence-based decision-making, and the use of the least invasive alternative. This issue, Mr. Speaker, has been the subject of healthy debate within our caucus, and the health critic has recommended a free vote, where each member will vote based on their own opinions and the wishes of their constituents.

The Schizophrenia Society of Alberta has been advocating for Alberta to adopt community treatment orders and has recently launched a campaign targeting MLAs. The health minister fully supports CTOs and believes that they are an important tool for families dealing with mental illness. Other jurisdictions, including Ontario, B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, 41 American states, New Zealand, and Australia, have some form of legislated compulsory community treatment. Some jurisdictions, like New Brunswick, have considered and rejected legislating CTOs, choosing to concentrate on developing community services and supports instead.

I have a few questions, Mr. Speaker. The first one I'll start with: why was the decision made to expand the category of people who are eligible for community treatment orders from a person who presents a danger to others to a person who is "likely to cause harm . . . or to suffer substantial mental or physical deterioration or serious physical impairment"? Why not limit it to schizophrenia or psychiatric illness? Who made the decision to include serious physical impairment? Is Alberta using the same criteria as other provinces?

What studies were used to determine the effectiveness of CTOs over other forms of treatment? What additional community supports and services are going to be put in place to ensure that CTOs have a chance at being effective? What is the government doing to make better drugs with fewer side effects available so people with mental illness aren't so inclined to resist them? How does this government imagine CTOs working in rural communities where there are shortages of mental health staff, including psychiatrists? In other jurisdictions physicians are required to demonstrate that the treatment plan proposed is the least restrictive alternative. Why was that excluded from the legislation?

CTOs are a useful tool to help families of individuals with mental illness access early intervention and, hopefully, prevent deterioration. Some mental health professionals compare severe mental illness with Alzheimer's disease, which also affects the ability to reason. They feel that they have the responsibility to care for patients who may not understand the importance of treatment or are unable to care for themselves. Involuntary hospitalization is the last option, not the first. It's only used when a community treatment order is not complied with.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, you know, I'm still not sure whether I'm going to support this bill or not. I would move that we adjourn the debate. [interjections] You want to speak? Okay. Sorry.

I'm still not sure. I would like to listen to some other speakers for some valuable points.

Thank you.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: You're not adjourning debate, so Standing

Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone that wants to rise for a five-minute period of questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've listened with great interest to the debate this afternoon on Bill 31. I heard from members from all over the province in regard to the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007. Certainly, it has been one of the more interesting discussions in this session that I have had the opportunity to listen to from all hon. members. I appreciate the opinions that were expressed.

Now, I have heard from constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar on this matter going back to January of 2007. I've had e-mails. I've had personal visits to the constituency. I've had letters from families who are directly affected by a mental illness. Mr. Speaker, when we talk about the whole issue of mental illness, the effect that it has on the family or on the community is significant. This legislation, although not perfect, I think merits support.

Certainly, we have people from the Schizophrenia Society of Alberta who have been advocating for Alberta to adopt the community treatment orders, and I know that they have had discussions with several members of this House. When you look at how some of these individuals who are unfortunately stricken with schizophrenia or any other mental illness have to deal with their illness, it's sad. It's deplorable. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is absolutely right when she talks about the need to look after and to support and to guide members of our community who have a mental illness.

But this, in my view, is a measure of last resort. When I talk to constituents from Edmonton-Gold Bar and their families, they are anxious to see this legislation proceed because, not in all cases but certainly in some cases, it will help the families. It will help those who are affected by the illness and those who are very worried about their personal safety. So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly encourage all members of this House to reflect on this bill. Although it may not be perfect, it certainly is worthy of support. I don't think it will jeopardize anyone's rights.

The hon. member earlier talked about rights. Well, property owners, individuals in the community, they, too, have rights, and he's absolutely correct. There is an unfortunate occurrence in many communities in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar where one individual with Tourette's at early hours of the morning and the late hours of the evening is going up and down the street and in the back alleys. It's through no fault of their own, but they have uncontrollable verbal outbursts, and this individual certainly needs help. Whether this community treatment order system will help that individual remains to be seen, but the hon. member is absolutely right that other people also are directly affected by those actions, and hopefully this will help.

In conclusion, again, the visitors from the constituency to our office have indicated that they would prefer this bill to become law. We have to listen to the constituents, and in this case I will certainly be supporting Bill 31 because constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar have requested that they would like to see this bill become law.

Thank you.

I would also like to adjourn debate, please, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 32 Animal Health Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and move second reading of Bill 32, the Animal Health Act.

I want to thank the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for introducing this bill on my behalf. The Animal Health Act is enabling legislation, Mr. Speaker, that would replace the existing Livestock Diseases Act and regulations, which were created in 1946 to reduce the impact of disease on Alberta's livestock.

Mr. Speaker, I don't have to tell anyone in this House how much things have changed in the last 61 years. New technology, new farming practices, new food products have given a new face to the world of agriculture, and new animal diseases have come right along with the changes as well.

Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons Alberta has been able to achieve such economic success is our ability to adjust and adapt to the world around us. This new act keeps this tradition by allowing us to better accommodate progressive new initiatives with respect to animal health. These include our responses to BSE and avian influenza and our agreement with the federal government on foreign animal disease emergency supports.

The current Livestock Disease Act and regulation does not allow us to react to today's animal health emergencies, Mr. Speaker, or to meet today's animal production and marketing needs. This proposed act will allow Alberta to better prepare for an outbreak of a highly contagious livestock disease and respond to emergency situations quicker and more effectively to protect both animal and human health.

According to the World Health Organization, about 75 per cent of the new diseases that have affected humans over the past 10 years have been caused by pathogens that come from an animal or products of animal origin. Many of these diseases have the potential to spread many ways over long distances and to become global problems. That's why now more than ever we need to be prepared for any outbreak of animal disease in Alberta.

This legislation allows us to react quicker and more effectively to a highly contagious disease. Mr. Speaker, this gives us the ability to minimize economic impacts, maintain global market access, and reduce costs to industry and government, and it will minimize the impact on animal and human health.

Animal diseases cost money, Mr. Speaker. Everyone in the province knows just how devastating the outbreak of BSE was to our cattle industry. Billions of dollars in sales were lost, and the government committed over a billion more for industry recovery. What many people don't realize is that BSE is actually a very slow-moving disease. A faster moving disease, such as foot-and-mouth or bird flu, would be far more devastating to our industry here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we have to be prepared. Bill 32, the Animal Health Act, helps us to do just that. Under the new act the chief provincial veterinarian would have greater authority to take action and quarantine facilities in order to limit the spread and outbreak of a reportable disease. A reportable disease is a disease listed under the regulations that farmers must report. When an outbreak occurs, our chief provincial vet can act immediately to control the spread of disease while pinpointing the exact origin of the outbreak.

In the case of a severe outbreak this act allows for the Minister of Agriculture and Food to establish a broad disease control zone, which will provide for more actions to be taken to control the outbreak. Previously this was done through a cabinet order, which could delay the reaction time needed to properly control a disease outbreak. Any delays in the first few days or even hours of a disease outbreak can have a damaging long-term effect on our livestock industry. Mr. Speaker, we have seen enough devastation to our industry from livestock disease. It is the intention of this act to help prevent us going through any more.

Mr. Speaker, another major goal of this new legislation is to expand the definition of disease to include those that aren't caused by organisms or viruses or bacteria. Under the current legislation if there was cannibalism in pigs, for instance, or when cows have eaten toxic substances such as lead, we did not have the authority to keep these animals out of the animal or human food system. We did manage to keep them out, but we didn't have the legal authority to do so. This act will give us this authority and allow us to work with industry to remove infected animals earlier in the disease process. This will help us to avoid situations where animal or human health is compromised.

The new Animal Health Act also addresses issues related to compensation following the outbreak of an animal disease. Mr. Speaker, we want Alberta's ranchers to be doing everything they can to increase animal health and food safety on their farms. While we agree that fair compensation should be given in the event of a disease outbreak, the public should not be subsidizing producers for poor safety and animal health practices. This act allows the minister to authorize compensation for animals destroyed or for the cost of destruction, disposal, cleaning, and disinfecting. To be eligible, conditions would include compliance with the act and effective biosecurity measures. The manner and amount of payment will be set out later in the regulations.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most important lessons we learned from BSE is to be prepared so we can properly respond to an outbreak. Having the right information in the hands of the right people at the right time can mean the difference between keeping trade borders open and having trade grind to a halt.

This act helps us to get information in the hands of the right people. It allows us to gain better access to records of the numbers and locations of animals through an enhanced traceability system. This will allow us to ensure that we can complement the federal system in a way that makes sense for Alberta. We want to do our part to contribute to a truly national traceability system with industry, federal, and provincial elements. This new legislation will allow us to do just that. In order to play our role in this partnership, we will need further consultation with industry to make a system that works for everyone involved. One of the key steps in doing this is initiating a premises identification system. This is one of the three pillars of the national food traceability system and will allow us to better prepare for and respond to emergency outbreaks.

The other two pillars are animal or product identification and animal or product movement. Enhancing our all-around traceability system will be key in maintaining our current trade markets, opening new markets, and ensuring the quality and safety of our food products. Our ability to trace our food products from the dinner plate to the barn or corral is no longer a luxury, Mr. Speaker. It is a necessity in order to maintain our current market access and to expand on it.

This act will define what farm animal records are to be created, maintained, and made available to the provincial vet in the event of a reportable disease. Mr. Speaker, farmers may have concerns about the access to this information, and I would like to assure them that Alberta Agriculture and Food respects the intent of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. But we have taken added measures to ensure that this information is protected appropriately and used only when necessary to protect public and animal health.

We now know how important it is to have timely, accurate, and full information. If we can't quickly pinpoint where an outbreak started, it can cost the industry and the government millions if indeed not billions of dollars through the lost access to markets and expensive compensation programs.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Groeneveld: Yes, billions of dollars.

This act helps to safeguard us against this occurring again.

This act also outlines the different levels of authority for enforcement, including giving inspectors the authority to examine records to trace movement of affected and potentially affected animals and animal products as part of disease control measures, giving the minister the authority to seize and destroy livestock that are a threat to public and animal health, allowing the chief provincial veterinarian to order the destruction of animals with a reportable disease, allowing the chief provincial veterinarian to order the destruction of a vehicle, material, or equipment that cannot be cleaned or disinfected adequately, providing authority to the minister to compensate owners for animals or property ordered destroyed, authorizing the chief provincial veterinarian to search vehicles transporting animals without a warrant to see if a reportable disease is present, and authorizing the minister to prohibit the possession of imported animals that may carry or have been exposed to a specific reportable disease.

This is a major piece of legislation, and we know that it is going to have a substantial effect on the ranchers and farmers in our province. Therefore, we made sure we did substantial consultation with industry before bringing this bill forward. In fact, Mr. Speaker, a review of the current act has been under way for several years in preparation for this bill in the Legislature, and during this time we've worked closely with key provincial commodity groups, animal health stakeholders, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, Sustainable Resource Development, and Alberta Health and Wellness. This legislation reflects the range of input we received during these consultations, and since this is enabling legislation, we will continue to work with stakeholders during the regulation process to address the other concerns. We have developed a process to consult with industry stakeholders during the development of regulations, including a planned multistakeholder meeting in mid-June of 2007.

Mr. Speaker, life on the farm is changing, now maybe more than ever before. Farms are businesses and need to be run as such, and we need to reflect this change in our legislation. We need to meet ever-increasing demands for food safety and to continue to stay competitive in a global market. Both of these goals rely on our ability to protect and ensure animal and human health and our ability to demonstrate that we have proper traceability systems in place working effectively.

Many of our provincial counterparts have already updated their animal health legislation. The federal government has also passed a detailed legislation on this matter. Mr. Speaker, I feel that this legislation will put Alberta at the forefront again with regard to our legislation, and that is why I am certainly encouraging all members of this House to give their full support to Bill 32.

Thank you.

5:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 32, the Animal Health Act, certainly repeals and replaces the Livestock Diseases Act, updates the definition of reportable diseases, and as the hon. minister indicated, empowers the chief provincial veterinarian to issue quarantine orders, establish surveillance zones and control zones to contain a reportable disease.

The hon. minister also mentioned the new restrictions around the sale and the possession of animals with specific reportable diseases. He gave a brief history of the proposed Animal Health Act and the repeal and the replacement of the Livestock Diseases Act that was created after the Second World War, and the department has provided us on this side of the House with a brief outlining the key provisions of the Animal Health Act. We appreciate that and would like to be on the record of expressing our gratitude to the hon. minister for that.

This legislation is, in my view, a major piece of legislation, and it warrants a detailed examination in the House at this time. I have some questions that hopefully we can get answered through the course of debate. My first question for the minister in regard to Bill 32 would be – and I just heard him give a brief outline of the stakeholders that have been consulted – what does the Privacy Commissioner think of the provision in this legislation? For example, the Animal Health Act will have paramountcy over section 17(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which deals with the release of information related to public health and safety, and section 17(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act deals with the disclosure harmful to personal privacy. Has the commissioner been consulted in regard to this? If he has, what did he say in regard to this particular provision? I don't know if that is necessary, and that is one of the reasons why I certainly at this time would be cautious of this legislation.

Now, the hon. minister talked about the avian flu, and I believe he's absolutely right. Alberta is located on a major flyway for migratory birds in the spring and again in the fall, and I would like to know if that 10-kilometre zone is considered adequate at this time. I want to get my questions on the record here if you don't mind, Mr. Speaker.

Now, in the definitions in this act under section 1(b) we're including a lot of animals there and "any other animal prescribed in the regulations." Are bees going to be prescribed in the regulations? Now, hopefully, it's not something that's going to be a big issue here in this province, but there has been a significant decline in the number of colonies of bees in the lower 48 states and in some parts of British Columbia and in some parts of Ontario. As I understand it, there has been a significant winterkill. There are still discussions and debates as to how this occurred, but the bees are responsible for the harvest and the size of the harvest. There's a direct relationship there. Since I don't see any definition here under "animal" – I've had a look – is it proposed that they be in the regulations? This is, I think, significant.

Hopefully, we're not going to have the problems in Alberta. Some newspapers are reporting that we do, but hopefully we're not. How does the beekeeping industry fit into this legislation under the Animal Health Act, and have they been consulted about this? Unfortunately, we have a habit of overlooking the importance of bees to the agricultural sector.

Now, we can go through this legislation, Mr. Speaker, but overall I think the government is working hard to improve this specific piece of legislation. But I'm very cautious about the override here for the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. As the Minister of Energy knows full well, I have every reason to be cautious because the minister, you know, is dealing with barrels over there, but in his case he's dealing with barrels of whiteout, not oil, because he's whiting out so much of the information that should be provided in routine disclosures. So not only is he the Minister of Energy; he's the minister of whiteout, and he uses a lot of it. I just want to make sure that this provision to override section 17(2)(b) is justified. I cannot see the need for this in this legislation. Perhaps there's a valid reason that the minister can explain.

Mr. Speaker, getting back to other provisions of this bill, the main impact, as the hon. minister has stated, is to provide a more detailed, updated statute to deal with animal health issues as they arise in Alberta. I believe that the bill will facilitate a more effective and efficient process for dealing with animal health emergencies. At this time I would support it with caution, but certainly I'm going to have a look at the answers as they're provided. Again, it is noted that this bill does not appear to be controversial or contentious, but we have to be very, very careful about giving this act an override on the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I still don't understand why we need this.

Now, the minister talked earlier about animal health issues and how they have gained national and international attention over the last several years. Most notably for Alberta farmers has been the unfortunate discovery of BSE in their cattle herds. The discovery of BSE in Canadian cattle has led to severe trade restrictions that have had an enormous detrimental economic impact on the beef industry. It is recovering, but it is quite slow. You know, the packing industry has been concentrated in the hands of two outfits, and I don't think that that's in our long-term best interests.

Other animal health issues that continue to garner national and international attention include anthrax and chronic wasting disease. I think we can add to that the whole issue of the winterkill of the bees south of the border.

The Deputy Speaker: The Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 2, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/02

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of our people. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a very special guest seated in your gallery, someone that is well known to many Albertans and has dropped by for a visit to do some business at the Legislature, meeting with various individuals: of course, none other than Mr. Mark Norris. I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a special privilege for me today as the Minister of Energy to welcome to Alberta my Yemeni counterpart, the Minister of Oil and Minerals, as well as Yemen's ambassador to Canada and several senior Yemeni oil officials seated in your gallery. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly His Excellency Khalid Mahfoudh Abdullah Bahah, Minister of Oil and Minerals, Republic of Yemen; His Excellency Dr. Abdulla Nasher, ambassador of Yemen to Canada; and Mr. Nader Ahmed Al-Saidi, honorary consul of the Republic of Yemen. Joining our guests today are members of the Yemeni government as well as senior officials from Nexen Inc. The ties between Alberta and Yemen are important to us, and we thank the Yemeni delegation for coming to our province to further build on our relationship. I would ask them to rise, as they have done, and I would ask all members to join me and give them a warm welcome to our Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I have such a wonderful opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature two very special guests from Lamont, Alberta, of course constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Seated in the members' gallery are Colleen Lopushinsky, who's had the pleasure of serving as a 4-H leader. Colleen was in the Andrew 4-H. Accompanying her today is her daughter Brittney, who's taken a very active interest in politics, both local and provincial, and spent some time with me today in the office. I would ask both of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 18 grade 6 students from beautiful downtown Blackie, Alberta. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Margaret Speelman and Ms Lindsay Smith. Also, the parents that are with them today are Mrs. Shannon Wells, Mr. Larry Usselman, Ms Karri Eggli, Mrs. Michaeleen Smith, Mrs. Tracey Matthews, and Mr. Curtis Hall. Also along is a person special to me, my daughter-in-law Pam Groeneveld, who happens to have my grandson Harley in this class. I'd ask them to please stand and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you friends of mine who are formerly from Edmonton and now live in Manhattan Beach, California, and are here visiting their respective mothers in the fine city of Edmonton. I'd ask Dick and Jean McClure to stand and be recognized by the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two guests. The first is Kei Inamura. Kei is a Rotary exchange student from Japan being hosted by my Rotary Club out in Stony Plain. These student exchanges promote cultural awareness and present numerous learning opportunities for the participants. Kei has been a joy to have in our community. She is here today to observe our Legislature in action. Kei is accompanied by Bill Forbes, a fellow Rotarian. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of mine from a long time back, Mr. Jim Visser from Horse Hill, which is in northeast Edmonton. A retired potato farmer and an artist, he's a member of the Legacy Lands Conservation Society, which is active in forming a land trust in the greater Edmonton area. The city of Edmonton is a partner in this along with the Edmonton Community Foundation and a number of other environmentally focused groups. This trust will be officially launched later this year. He's seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly for the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright 25 young kids that are here today from the Blessed Sacrament school in his riding. They've been on a tour with teachers and parent helpers looking at the Legislative Assembly and an opportunity to see us in action this afternoon. I'd like to introduce teachers Mrs. Michelle Folk and Mrs. Tracey Campbell and parent helpers Mrs. Mardy Charlebois, Mrs. Laverne Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. Dean Martineau, Mrs. Lisa Marchand, Mr. Harold Malcolm, and Mr. Konrad Heier. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am really honoured today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special organization from Edmonton-Centre. Seated in the public gallery today we have 25 members of the Edmonton Vietnamese and Chinese Seniors Mutual Assistance Society. This is an extremely valuable organization in my community. They do great work, and I've been very honoured to be a guest at a number of their functions. With them today are Ms Lan Kwok and their president, Thuy Quoc Du. I would ask them all to please rise, and would you all join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly a group visiting from high school Austin O'Brien in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. It is one of two excellent high schools that we have in our constituency, and we're very proud of the work that this group does. This delegation is led by Maria Lucas and Bruna Kriegel. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. They're in the public gallery.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two brand new parents. The first one is Craig Miller, my brother-in-law, and his lovely wife, Keltie. They're here today with their first born, Baden Thor Miller, who was born April 18, 2007. Baden's an early riser as he came into this world at 6:29. I would like them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Richard MacKay, executive director, and Tara Erickson, team leader of Mira Facilitation Center, a community-based agency providing services to individuals with developmental disabilities. Mira, which is the name of the first pulsating star discovered in 1662, meaning the wonderful or the amazing one, uses five major components – educational, vocational, recreational, socialization, and independence – to assist clients and promote independence and involvement within the community.

Richard and Tara are joined today by Sean Mapstone, Patricia Levesques, Jose and Ines Silva, Pauline Boni, Donna Goryniuk, Cathy MacKay, Tracy Stanfield, Sara Levee, Sarah Lamb, Lana Cote, Blair Cote, Kelly Grant, Perry Stebner, Brandon Stadd, Amber Koehler, Janine Donovan, parents Jan Stanfield and Whitney Laycock, and staff members Marsha Taphorn, Cassie Kepke, Alina Matthews, Hayley Halvorson, Tina Froese, and Krista Mitton. I commend them all, and I invite them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two guests seated in the public gallery. They are Hazel Jorgensen and Sylvia Craig. Both Hazel and Sylvia are Palace Casino workers who are on day 236 of their strike due in part to this government's unwillingness to protect basic worker rights by improving their weak labour legislation. Hazel Jorgensen has been working at the Palace Casino for two and a half years as a slot attendant. Hazel originally hails from Newfoundland and came to Alberta to be with her sons in June of 2004. Sylvia joined the Palace Casino as a slot attendant a few months before the workers went on strike. She lived in Chilliwack, B.C., for 30 years but moved to Edmonton to be closer to her daughter and son-in-law and her two lovely grandchildren. They are joined today by UFCW 401 representative Don Crisall. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Gerry Brin. Gerry is a constituent of mine in Edmonton-Calder and has been an active and diligent member of our community for the past two decades. Gerry has been representing the residents of Dunvegan and Wellington since 1989. He was instrumental in saving taxpayer dollars in 1991 when CN attempted to load off toxic liabilities onto the city of Edmonton. He's also a member of the Cyclists Advisory Committee, representing north Edmonton for the past decade. I would now ask him to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My guests have not yet arrived, but I'll introduce them to you and through you to this Assembly. It's a great honour to have the students from Magrath high school travel here. They've travelled a long ways, and the early start, I guess, wasn't recalculated in time. I know their one teacher, Brad Sabey. I'm not sure who else is here with them because they haven't arrived yet. I would ask the Assembly to please give them the traditional warm welcome when they do get here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a couple visiting Edmonton to attend the Premier's prayer breakfast. They are members of the Claresholm chamber of commerce, but much more important they are my constituents from Valley Ridge. In the members' gallery if Rod and Joan Dyrholm would please rise, I'd ask the Assembly to welcome them.

The Speaker: Are there others? Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to our esteemed colleagues Rory Koopmans, who is here for the 28th time. He must be a bit of a beggar for punishment. His postscript: always a gentleman.

Secondly, I'd like to introduce Wade Izzard, who is a very active Liberal both provincially and federally. He sits on the Edmonton-Riverview Liberal Constituency Association. So thank you, gentlemen, for coming.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Catholic Immigration Society

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had the great pleasure of attending the world tour in a day at the Calgary Catholic Immigration Society office in Calgary. Twenty-five years ago the CCIS was incorporated as a nonprofit charitable organization. The CCIS history, however, stretches back to the 1960s when a group of dedicated volunteers helped refugees and newcomers settle in Calgary. CCIS believes in settlement and integration as a process that involves newcomers and the entire community and offers a wide variety of specialized services and programs that are designed to aid and enhance the integration process of newcomers to our society.

With the help and support of the community the CCIS has become the largest immigrant-serving organization in southern Alberta. With 150 full- and part-time staff speaking over 50 languages, supported by 800 volunteers, the CCIS offers more than 60 diverse programs serving more than 8,000 immigrants annually.

Mr. Speaker, the amazing part is the help from volunteers. Last year 793 volunteers contributed over 40,000 volunteer hours. That's equivalent to over $700,000. The federal government contribution to the budget of CCIS is 31 per cent, the province's is 37 per cent, the city's is 6 per cent, and 25 per cent is from donor and private sources.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize the CCIS, a great service to Alberta, to Calgary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Caregivers for the Developmentally Disabled

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My guests today in the gallery are listening. These are the people who care for the less fortunate, our fellow Albertans. They care for persons with developmental disabilities. Creating close bonds with those that they are responsible for is imperative for good care and trust. It is established by consistently having the same team of workers, but there is a 50 to 60 per cent turnover in front-line staff. These clients are all over 18 and require help to stay independent or 24-hour care just to stay alive. It is labour intensive. It is hard work mentally and physically. These caregivers deserve salaries that at least match fast-food joints and keep up with inflation.

Price of prosperity: what does that mean? Does it mean that there's no such thing as a free lunch? This province is prosperous, but we have lost our moral compass, our ethical behaviour, and the ability to do what is right. Is it right that it's the vulnerable, not just persons with developmental disabilities but those on AISH, those on fixed incomes, those that can't afford their rent, those who go to school hungry, those who sit in crumbling schools, and those who die before their time and those who are homeless that are paying the price of prosperity?

Business has become the new religion for Alberta. We adore at the altar of money, but the question is: does business have a conscience? Does it have a moral compass, ethics, and integrity? Dig deep for this answer, and you be the judge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

St. George's Day

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in recognition of St. George's Day, which occurred on April 23. St. George is the patron saint of England. His emblem is a red cross on a white background, and it is portrayed as the flag of England and also as part of the British flag and is prominently displayed on our own provincial crest and our provincial flag.

Beyond the legend of St. George upon his horse slaying a dragon to save a princess is the real St. George. He's believed to have been born to Christian parents in Cappadocia in present-day Turkey in the third century. He became a Roman soldier who served in England. He was imprisoned and tortured for protesting the emperor's persecution of Christians. He stayed true to his beliefs and was beheaded at Lydda in Palestine on April 23, 303 AD. The story of his life and death spread rapidly, and he became a symbol of bravery in defence of the defenceless.

In 1222 the Council of Oxford declared April 23 to be St. George's Day. In 1415 St. George was acknowledged by becoming the official patron saint of England. St. George is also the patron saint of soldiers and of farmers and fieldworkers.

St. George embodies the very essence of bravery in servitude to others, and I would like to acknowledge St. George's Day for our friends in England, for all Albertans of English ancestry, and for all of those who represent the spirit of St. George himself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

1:20 Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today as chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission to highlight some of the addiction issues and trends in Alberta. AADAC has a long history of providing addiction services across Alberta either directly or through funding programs and services offered by other agencies. Services are located in 51 communities throughout the province. There is also a toll-free helpline providing access to information and referrals.

Our efforts in the Alberta drug strategy are bearing fruit, with expanded services for youth and many examples of successful collaboration among stakeholders to address addiction issues at the community level. Albertans have improved access to addiction services, including assessment and outpatient counselling, day treatment, detoxification, short- and long-term residential treatment, and overnight shelter. We are making progress, Mr. Speaker, but continually face new challenges.

As Alberta's population grows so does the need for addiction programs and services. It is estimated that about 1 per cent of Albertans over age 15 are drug dependent, and about 3.5 per cent are alcohol dependent. Last year AADAC provided treatment to more than 35,000 Albertans, an increase of nearly 11 per cent over the previous year, and served an additional 150,000 Albertans through its information and prevention services.

Alberta has one of the youngest populations in Canada, and the use of alcohol and other drugs tends to be the highest among youth and young adults. Alcohol is a growing concern, especially the increasing rate of drinking among junior high and high school youth and the rate of heavy, frequent drinking among young adults.

Much of Alberta's recent growth is due to immigration from other parts of Canada and the world. Isolation from family, friends, and other community supports can increase the risk for a variety of health and addiction issues. Language and other cultural barriers can make it difficult to access information or connect with appropriate services. It's important that newcomers be aware of available services like AADAC.

As our population continues to grow, Mr. Speaker, the demand for addiction programs and services increases. It's now more important than ever to reaffirm Alberta's investment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Caregivers for the Developmentally Disabled

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Persons with developmental disabilities need care workers in order to preserve the dignity they deserve as members of the human race. These caregivers are represented here today. They represent staff from all over this province who cannot live on the salaries they receive.

There is a huge discrepancy between government unionized salaries and those paid by contractors, whether they're for-profit, not-for-profit, or faith based. They are asking for equality within the system. This equality will go a long way, Mr. Speaker, to ensuring that there are people willing to stay in the field, continuing to educate themselves, and to recruiting more staff for the ever-increasing number of cases they handle.

The need is there despite the government's attempts to raise the criteria for admission for care in order to keep the case numbers down. There can be a very difficult transition period from the caseworker for the person under 18, when the education system picks up some of the care, and when they turn 18 and change to PDD for full care.

There are 9,200 adult PDD clients and a budget of $509 million, Mr. Speaker. For that amount of money what are the outcomes? Is this is not time for a review? What is the percentage of these dollars for front-line staff, the ones who are the advocates for their clients?

This situation cannot be stressed enough. Last year a 40 per cent staff turnover rate was reported by the Alberta Council of Disability Services. With an average wage of $13.76 per hour the lack of resources available to retain qualified staff is having enormous repercussions throughout the industry. Low wages are resulting in an inability to maintain staff and services, with some providers being forced to close on weekends, leaving those they assist with nowhere to go.

Those workers and staff need to be consulted and asked how things could be improved or what true changes need to be made. They have the knowledge of their clients and their needs, and they're the ones on the ground making things happen.

This government talks about the price of prosperity. This is a price members on this side of the House are not prepared and not willing to ask individuals with disabilities or those who support them to pay. It's not fair, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Groundwater Storage

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Where there is water, there is the life. It is the first resource we look for when we are moving to or settling in a new place. I live in what is called the Palliser Triangle, a region designated by John Palliser as uninhabitable. Innovation and hard work have proved him wrong.

As a long-time Scouter I do believe it is our duty to use our resources wisely. Our climate is changing, and where we received snow before, now it often comes as rain. If we fail to adapt to this change, our future choices and opportunities will be limited. I listened to a wise First Nation elder from my area say: we must look at everything from a view of and for seven generations. Now, that is long-term planning. I am only a fifth-generation Albertan.

Mr. Speaker, security is critical to quality of life. Water is part of our economic security, our environmental security, and certainly our food security. We must protect and store and use our water wisely. We have recently placed moratoriums on the Bow River basin, a wake-up call.

In order to secure our future, we must store our water. We need reservoirs and dams to help mitigate high flows and enhance low-flow periods. We have the water resources. The question is: how will we develop and use them? Failure to build the infrastructure now to save our runoff could end up costing us more than failing to save our surplus dollars in the heritage trust fund. To help avoid future crises, we need to learn from the past, which will enable us to live better in the future. To paraphrase Dave Hill from the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association, if we are going to build the west we want, then we need to include water in the choices we make now. Proper planning and storing of our water will give us choices for building the west we want, which will end up a lot better than the west we get if we do nothing. We all want to build a better Alberta. Capturing and storing our water is critical for a secure future.

An old proverb is that the best time to plant a tree is 20 years ago; the next best time is today. The best time to build a reservoir was 20 years ago; the next best time is today.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise again to table some more petitions, this time 1,814 signatures from concerned Albertans throughout the province urging the government to:

1. Ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across the sector, regardless of whether [they're] employed by government or by community-based or private providers;
2. Ensure these employees are fairly compensated and that their wages remain competitive with other sectors . . . [for] the valuable and crucial service they [deliver];
3. Improve employees' access to professional development opportunities . . .
4. Introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise to give a petition of some Albertans. They're calling on the government to "hold rent increases to no more than the rise in the average monthly wage until December 31, 2010."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am going to reread exactly what's been read by my colleague because I think it's very important that everyone hear these words. I'm presenting a petition signed by 144 people to:

1. Ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across the sector, regardless of whether these workers are employed by government or by community-based or private providers;
2. Ensure these employees are fairly compensated and that their wages remain competitive with other sectors . . .
3. Improve employees' access to professional development opportunities (training and upgrading); and
4. Introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that we will be accepting written questions 10 and 11, and I give notice that on Monday, May 7, 2007, Written Question 9 will be dealt with. The balance of written questions appearing on the Order Paper will stand and retain their places. Motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper will stand and retain their places.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Nuclear Power

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to nuclear power in Alberta, this government has in past years opposed the idea. However, since some well-connected Tory supporters signed an exclusive agreement with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to commercialize CANDU reactors in the oil industry, this government appears to suddenly have a glow for the nuclear industry. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier tell us if he or any of his cabinet ministers have met with supporters of nuclear power in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: No, I haven't. I don't know about my ministers. I was in Toronto for two days at the Premier meetings, but certainly I haven't met with anybody.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whether the Premier is aware or not, officials from his government have met with investors who want to develop nuclear power in Alberta, investors, I might add, who would make a lot of money from these plants but who wouldn't live anywhere near them. Even more, this government is supporting and funding groups that seem to be pushing the nuclear option for this province. Again to the Premier: why hasn't this government consulted with the people who will actually live near these potential power plants in places like Whitecourt, Cold Lake, Fort McMurray, and Peace River to see what they think?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday this question was raised to me by the media while I was in Toronto, and I said that when it comes to the whole question of whether we will pursue nuclear power in this province, we will have a full dialogue with Albertans, looking at establishing the process. We'll dialogue with them and look at some of the issues obviously tied to this particular proposal that may be coming forward. But, you know, I just came back from Toronto, and one of the Liberal Premiers is just motoring full speed ahead, building a nuclear power plant in his province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The EUB has never held a hearing on a nuclear energy plant in Alberta. It makes one wonder what regulatory expertise this government or any of its agencies actually has to assess nuclear power plants, and it makes one wonder how much it's going to cost the taxpayers of Alberta for this government to develop that expertise. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the EUB would be responsible for assessing and approving a nuclear power plant application, how many nuclear power plant experts does the EUB have on staff, if any?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, as the hon. member opposite very well knows, there has never been an application, and there is no application in the province of Alberta at this particular point in time. I might add that the application that will come forward at some point in time, if one does come forward, I would presume will firstly be directed to the federal level. It would be their responsibility in the first place. There is some shared responsibility with respect to the regulatory authority around nuclear. We are investigating that and will continue to work with that, and as I've said many times, I would not close my eyes to any form of alternate energy in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As just about everybody in here knows, Alberta is on the brink of a water crisis. A billion dollar project at Balzac has nearly ground to a halt because of water shortages, and there are many indicators that water shortages are a real threat in northern Alberta too. Nuclear power plants use vast amounts of water. Individual CANDU plants in Ontario use many times the entire water consumption of the city of Toronto. To the Minister of Environment: where does the development of nuclear power plants fit into the province's Water for Life strategy?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question with respect to nuclear power and the Water for Life strategy is speculative at best. I can tell the member that at this point in time nuclear power is not part of the Water for Life strategy. It was not contemplated. If circumstances are to change, if applications are to come forward, then perhaps we'll have to consider that exact question: where does nuclear power fit into the Water for Life strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are serious, serious concerns about security around the transportation, use, storage, and disposal of nuclear materials. There is now concern around the world that nuclear plants are targets for terrorist groups. Alberta is already on various watch lists as a potential target for terror activities. I don't want to become a bigger target. To the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security: given that his department is responsible for the security of Albertans, has his department done anything to assess the security issues related to nuclear power plants in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a little tough to answer a question based on speculation, but this ministry is looking at all issues of public security that could affect Albertans today and in the future. It is in good hands and will continue to be so.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the greatest concerns with nuclear power is the storage of radioactive waste.

Atomic Energy of Canada has yet to obtain an environmentally and publicly accepted location for a permanent reactor waste vault anywhere in this country. To the Minister of Energy: given that his department would need to approve any nuclear power plants in Alberta, what sites, if any, are suited to either temporary or permanent storage of radioactive waste in Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that in the nuclear industry in Canada Atomic Energy Canada Limited and the federal government of Canada have the authority to deal with the spent fuel issue. However, I must point out again that the Liberals across the way are living in the past. If you just happen to take an opportunity to cast your eye around and take a look at what's happening with the nuclear industry around the world, nuclear energy experts are already saying that within a decade spent fuel storage depots of today will become fuel sources of tomorrow.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Affordable Housing

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the Affordable Housing Task Force I heard story after story of despair and hopelessness. There is a housing crisis in Alberta, and the way to respond to a crisis is with immediate action. Instead, we have confusion. The reality is that the market is more volatile than it was before. Renters are scared to come home in case they get eviction notices or massive rent hikes. Landlords are unclear as to what the rules are. Even real estate agents are not sure what's going on. My first question is to the Premier. The government had enough time to come up with a clear plan. Can the Premier provide an explanation as to why this file was so badly handled?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the government has identified this issue with respect to housing. As I said many times in this House before, it's on three different levels: those dealing with homelessness, which many municipalities are facing; of course, low-income rental units; and families wanting to buy individual family units for themselves. We have addressed a lot of the issues in the budget. We're working with municipalities to ensure that we find a solution to this particular issue. But, again, we continue to have tens of thousands of people from outside Alberta coming to Alberta because, really, this is where they can fulfill their dreams. It's the only job opportunity they have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Affordable Housing Task Force recommended a $7 million fund to prevent Albertans from entering into the stream of near homeless or homeless, but the government has twisted the task force's recommendation, applying it to workers moving to Alberta who require assistance in finding a home. My question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Our intention was to provide money for Albertans for damage deposits, first month's rent, and emergency rent shortfalls. Why did your government distort our recommendations?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this government has not distorted the recommendations. Au contraire. In the last several months we have provided additional supports for people who do face eviction. We have helped people on low income if they needed extra shelter allowance, and there have been a considerable number of dollars spent there. It's my understanding that we will continue to do that.

This $7 million will help us with even further opportunities to help the people on low incomes. It would be wrong to make people that are facing crises today feel that we don't provide supports. We do and will continue to do so.

Dr. B. Miller: We need a homeless and eviction prevention fund to help Albertans in a crisis situation right now. People living on social assistance and low-income families are falling further behind. The Edmonton Social Planning Council in a recent report stated that income support allowances are now worth less than half of the amount received in 1980, and the budget offers only a 3 and a half per cent increase. To the same minister. There is money for new workers coming to Alberta, but our own people fall deeper and deeper into poverty. Is this the price of prosperity?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have provided income support increases this year and previously. I think that if the hon. member looks further, he'll see that it isn't 3 and a half but, rather, a 5 per cent increase. There was a 5 per cent increase last year. We also have additional supplementary benefits. Our supplementary benefits in this province for people who are on low-income supports are bigger than they are in any other of the provinces.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

1:40 Ministerial Appearances before Committees

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this Premier's commitment to democratic renewal in this province is all talk and no action. In our democracy elected officials are supposed to be responsible to the public, and ministers are supposed to be accountable to the Assembly for their expenditure of taxpayers' hard-earned money. One of the ways that ministers are held accountable to the public for the funds that their ministries spend is through the Public Accounts Committee, yet at the Public Accounts meeting this morning the Minister of Education skipped out and sent his unelected deputy instead. My question is to the Premier. Why did you allow the Minister of Education to take a pass on his responsibilities?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, by my interpretation of the rules – and I stand to be corrected because I don't follow all the rules of every committee and am not knowledgeable of all the rules of a committee – I believe that Public Accounts has the option of sending in senior officials to reply to the questions. Remember that Public Accounts covers all those expenditures from a year before, and this minister was just appointed this time around and sent his officials to take all of the questions on the prior year's spending.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's answer indicates that he does not understand the principle of elected ministers being accountable, elected people being accountable. That is the very essence of our system of responsible governance. I guess that my question is to the Premier. Is the Premier saying that it's the committee that said that the minister couldn't be there? My understanding is that he just sent a fax saying that he wasn't going to show up, and he was going to send his deputy.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I find it rather, well, unfair for the hon. member to say that I don't understand the responsibility of serving in public office. I've had the opportunity to serve both as a municipal official and as a member elected for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to the Legislative Assembly for many years, served in different ministerial capacities, and now as Premier. I can assure you that I do accept responsibility for decisions made. I don't need to have someone sitting in opposition tell me what my responsibility is.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the Premier needs to hear some of this stuff whether he thinks so or not.

He talks a lot about accountability, but this Conservative government is the same Conservative government of yesteryear. Can the Premier tell the House why, when the New Democrats designated a day for budget estimates, we were told that the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology wasn't going to be there because he was going to be in China?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, these are really weird questions. Ministers do have responsibilities, those responsibilities within their ministries to pursue markets, in this particular case in advanced education. They can travel to those jurisdictions that seem necessary to build further relationships and ensure that in this province we look at broadening our tax base, looking towards new revenue streams so we're not always dependent on oil and gas. That's part of the overall vision of this government. It's not just today, but it's 10, 20, 30 years down the road. That member can never see that far. I can tell you that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Fishery Management at Pigeon Lake

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. As the minister knows, on April 24 a large public meeting was held in my constituency regarding fish populations in Pigeon Lake. It was particularly about concerns about a lack of whitefish. A large majority of the 300 to 400 attendees felt that the management of the lake was out of balance. What can the minister tell us about decisions regarding fisheries management for this lake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd first like to begin by thanking the 350 or 400 Albertans who came to the Sustainable Resource Development open house to discuss the fishery in Pigeon Lake in Thorsby on April 24. Our officials were there to listen. We heard the message loud and clear. Are there as many whitefish in Pigeon Lake today as there were 10 or 15 years ago? No, and the whitefishing is not as good. But why is that? The walleye population went extinct in Pigeon Lake in the 1960s, so in 30 years there was no competition. We reintroduced walleye in the 1990s. Our goal is to establish a balanced fishery.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents disagree, but if the minister is saying that walleye populations are still too low, then why are we allowing a walleye harvest on Pigeon Lake this season?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question and with a good-news answer. Our restocking of the walleye has succeeded to the point where we can introduce a limited walleye catch, so Pigeon Lake has been chosen along with several other lakes, Wolf Lake and Lake Newell, where Albertans can fish for walleye. I encourage all Albertans: starting on May 4 you can call up and get a special walleye tag to go out and catch a few walleye and take them home to eat.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Okay. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: with all of this focus on walleye, what is being done by your department to meet the needs of those who want to fish for whitefish at Pigeon Lake?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I want the hon. member to know that my staff is working day and night to keep the peace between the friends of the walleye and the friends of the whitefish, and the key to this, of course, as I said before, is balance. I want the friends of the whitefish to know that we've heard their message. We'll keep that balance. I particularly want to thank the Pigeon Lake anglers' association for bringing the whitefish into our office in February. I had the occasion to eat some of that smoked whitefish last week. It's the best smoked whitefish in Canada, and I want to make sure it's there in years to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Support for the Developmentally Disabled

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Life is becoming more difficult for people with disabilities. Government funding for programs like PDD and AISH isn't sufficient to meet basic needs or to keep up with the cost of living. People with disabilities are struggling to cover the increasing costs of shelter, food, clothing, and the costs associated with living with a disability. In fact, they experience twice the level of poverty as those without disabilities. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: why does the price of prosperity for this government include leaving Alberta's most vulnerable groups behind?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there is a tremendous amount of concern for those with disabilities and a lot of support that continues to be provided on an ongoing basis to see that those with disabilities can be provided the services they need. This government in response to some of the issues has seen about a 90 per cent increase in its funding since 1999 just in this, to acknowledge that this is an area where there is a tremendous amount of need, where those with those vulnerabilities and disabilities do require the help. It's in that regard that the budget has followed to support this group.

Ms Pastoor: To the same minister. The rate of inflation now in Alberta is 5.5 per cent, and MLAs got a raise of 4.9. But PDD only receives a 3.5 per cent increase. How does the minister expect service providers to maintain existing services, keep up with increasing caseloads, and pay staff fair wages on what amounts to a budget cut?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's correct that in this year's budget there's a 3.5 per cent increase to persons with developmental disabilities boards, but on top of that last March, two months ago, we also reallocated within the department an equivalent amount that would go to the boards. So that would be a one-time payment to them of another 3 and a half per cent really to address the staff kind of labour issues.

Ms Pastoor: And it was very appreciated, but it wasn't sustainable.

An increase in funding that fails to cover inflation and the increasing number of PDD clients is in effect a funding cut. Is this funding cut part of a long-term plan by this government to scale back supports for Albertans with disabilities?

1:50

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary. We have taken a lot of measures by this government to ensure that the funding has well surpassed any inflationary measure and growth of the PDD caseload. Like I said, since 1999 there's been a 90 per cent increase to this department, a very substantial – higher than really any of the other forms of investments in any other departments. It is an acknowledgement that these people are in great need, and we are working hard with service providers so that we can see that the services are there for when they're needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Climate Change Public Consultation

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 18 in Edmonton I was pleased to attend and speak at the Minister of Environment's public consultation on climate change called Meeting the Challenge. It was very well attended, and many interesting comments and ideas were expressed surrounding what all of us want: clean air, clean water, clean land, and so on. But in order to ensure that these critical needs are met, leadership on environmental issues is needed at all levels of government. My questions are for the Minister of Environment. What are you doing to toughen up our environmental standards, and will you be creating stronger regulations and stiffer penalties for violations in order to protect our environment?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the meeting to which the member refers was one of 10 such meetings held throughout the province. The purpose of those meetings was really to engage in discussion with Albertans on a go-forward plan with respect to climate change and the environment. If I can say in a short summary, what we heard at those meetings is that Albertans take the environment and take the issue of climate change very seriously, and they expect their government to do the same. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker and the hon. member, that that is just the case.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you for that.

I wonder what this minister is prepared to do within his own ministry to ensure that more environmental education occurs in our province – and I mean for all age groups – and to ensure that more attention is paid to the prevention side of this issue.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that was one of the issues that we discussed at those meetings. It was, again, solid feedback from Albertans that this is an area where they're desperately seeking more information, more education, more knowledge on matters of the environment: how can I, as an individual Albertan, contribute my piece to this environmental plan? So we are looking at intensifying the way we deliver education now, primarily through schools, but we will be over the coming months and years intensifying that opportunity to educate Albertans on these very important issues.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, my constituents and others will be very interested to pursue that further because we know that Alberta has never been afraid to be innovative. We were first to develop an action plan for climate change, first to pass climate change specific legislation, and first to pass legislation that requires industry to cut their emissions. Will Alberta be first again to step up our commitment for additional research in this important area and to provide true scientific-based leadership in areas such as absolute versus intensity-based caps?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of intensity versus absolute caps is pivotal to this whole discussion on climate change. In our view, intensity is a means to the end. You need to start somewhere. Absolute is the end target. If anyone thinks that they can get to the end without going through the means to get to the end, they're kidding themselves. That's exactly what this government is attempting to do. By investing in the necessary technology and research, we will develop the means through intensity reductions to achieve in the long term real absolute reductions in CO₂ emissions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Support for Child Care

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The number one priority for Children's Services is supposedly child care, yet in the past year this government failed to spend $30 million of the funding allocated for this crucial service. This is the second year in a row that the budget has been underspent by a wide margin, despite the critical shortage of spaces in this province that forces working parents to scramble to make daily care arrangements, accept underemployment, or drop out of the workforce altogether. This failure is shocking. To the Minister of Children's Services: how can you explain to struggling Albertan parents the department's failure to allocate all of its resources for child care in the budget last year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, this is my number one priority. My number one priority in this year's budget is to ensure that parents have access to quality and affordable child care. If I could just quickly kind of explain a little bit about the budget process. It was in the middle of '05-06 that we implemented and agreed to the five-point plan. For the budget year of '06-07 we again approved the five-point plan. We did what we always do during budgeting: we estimated what we thought the cost of the five-point plan would be. What we can't tell is how people will access the five-point plan and how many people will access the five-point plan. There is very . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday a Children's Services spokesperson suggested that because of lower than expected costs in some programs the department sat on the $30 million, because they needed to consult with child care advocates before spending the entire amount budgeted, while the department completed a comprehensive consultation involving parents, staff, and child care advocates eight months ago and also engaged in consultation with child care advocates leading up to the new Child Care Licensing Act. To the Minister of Children's Services: can the minister please tell us how much more consultation is required before this department will finally use all of its available resources for child care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I could just continue. I was saying that we don't know how many people will access the plan and how they're going to access the plan. We have various levels of government support, depending on whether people choose daycare or family homes or kin care or whether they stay at home and they want to access nursery schools. The good thing about the five-point plan is that we support choice and flexibility. What I can tell you is that last year we made an estimate. Going into the end of the year, we knew exactly how much the five-point plan was. Going into this next budgeting process, I took what it cost us, and I asked for more money so that not only could we approve the five-point plan again but move forward on enhancing the five-point plan. So, in fact, we are spending more money this year than what we spent last year.

Mrs. Mather: Since the department cannot seem to find a way to make use of the entire child care budget, will the minister consider adopting initiatives like improving access to out-of-school care, providing funding for municipalities to create spaces, or increasing funding for operating costs, all of which are in the Alberta Liberal child care plan but have not been a priority for this government?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, if I could, we had an added complication last year as well. I think what the hon. member is suggesting is that last year at some point during the fiscal year we should have maybe made some kind of adjustment to the budget. I think that that would not have been a prudent move. At the same time we also had the federal government pull out of their funding. So I think it was responsible what we did: get to the end of the year, find out what the plan is costing us, and then move forward on enhancements. That's what we've done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian agricultural income stabilization program is a program that is administered independently in Alberta by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation of Alberta. Yesterday the federal Auditor General in her report stated that CAIS is overly complex, lacks transparency, and she found that the federal administration has conflicts of interest among employees and focuses too much on overpayments. These are issues that have been brought forward by my constituents in Livingstone-Macleod. My question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food: are the issues in regard to the federal CAIS program also true in Alberta, and if so, what have you done to rectify the situation here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta certainly agrees that the program is complex and lacks transparency, as I've said in the past in this Legislature. In fact, we have been pressing our federal and provincial counterparts for changes. As the member says, I want it to be clear that Alberta has a separate administration to CAIS. We take a different and transparent approach unique to Alberta: a system on the web that lets producers track their claims as they move through the system, field analysts across the province who can meet with producers in person, complete package on individual claim results including information on all changes, and advance phone calls on significant changes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what assurance can you give to Albertans that a clear conflict of interest policy that protects both producers and stakeholders exists in the program in Alberta?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AFSC takes this issue very seriously. They've always had a clear conflict-of-interest policy. Before Alberta handed out a single application, we ensured that the rules were very clear. For example, CAIS staff are not allowed to complete the forms for producers. They need to discuss up front if relatives or close friends are using the program.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first federal audit. Indeed, our Auditor General has looked at our administration every year since the program was started. We continue to refine it. The AFSC is very proactive in doing it right in the first place.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, last spring many in my farm and ranch community had occasion to get letters from the CAIS program about overpayments, and there was a concern that the people operating the program were neglecting the underpayments to farmers as well. So my question to the minister is: do you ensure that Alberta's program will in the main focus on overpayments while neglecting underpayments? That is a criticism that the federal program has. What are you doing to rectify that situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, the AFSC is committed to ensuring that the right payments go to the right people. We follow a very clear verification strategy. Staff make adjustments, both positive and negative, to ensure that the strategy is followed. All claims, including those that don't initially look eligible, are reviewed and tested to ensure that there are no material errors. Alberta takes pride in the transparency and integrity of all of its programming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Calgary Municipal Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgaryans are tired of being taken for granted by the Conservative government of Alberta, and if the Member for Calgary-Lougheed thought he was winning any friends in Calgary with those softball questions he lobbed to the Finance minister yesterday, he's sadly mistaken. In 2006 Calgary accounted for 60 per cent of the jobs created in this province. That is unprecedented growth, and it is straining both infrastructure and services. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: given the growth projections of Calgary and the importance of rapid transit to the quality of life and the quality of the environment, is he prepared to accept the cancellation of construction on Calgary's west LRT line?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all I need to say that the planning and decision-making for the municipality of the city of Calgary is done by the city of Calgary. The Alberta government supports municipalities such as Calgary with their ventures with the Alberta municipal infrastructure program of $600 million per year. It also supports municipalities with the municipal sustainability initiative, of which the city of Calgary got $127 million.

Mr. Taylor: Ah, Mr. Speaker, piffle. This government refuses to take responsibility for its actions or inactions. If the budget numbers didn't add up or if the government couldn't figure out what to prioritize, they should admit it. The simple fact is that the government didn't deliver, and now cities around the province are changing or even shelving plans. Money they were told would have no strings has strings attached. In my world actions have consequences. Apparently in their world they like to think that they don't. Will the minister step up to the plate, apologize, and admit that municipal infrastructure plans were cancelled because he didn't deliver on his municipal sustainability initiative promise?

Mr. Danyluk: First of all, Mr. Speaker, this is all new money that is given to municipalities. I'd ask the Minister of Finance to supplement.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, it's really time that the Liberal opposition – in their plan that was put out on September 11, 2006, they had a 2 per cent increase in funding, which would not even fund the south Calgary hospital. It would not fund the cost escalation to run every budget around Alberta. That's what the Liberal opposition brought out.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance, then: will the minister admit that as neglected as health, education, and postsecondary education in Calgary were on his watch in infrastructure, the $4.2 billion he referenced yesterday that will be spent on those things in Calgary this year has, in fact, nothing to do with Calgary's municipal infrastructure?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I am so glad that the opposition party has finally asked me a question about this. On September 11, 2006, these gentlemen, this party, put out that they would spend $590 million more this year than was budgeted last year. This government put out an extra 3 and a half billion dollars on top of that. All question period they've been talking about the cost of inflation. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East said: 5 and a half per cent; anything less than 5 and a half per cent is a cut. Their plan came out and said: 2 per cent spending. That is one-third of the cost of inflation, one-third of the costs of the people that are coming out here. It's time they came clean.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday in this House the minister said: "There is nothing that you can do in a market that will stabilize rents better than to build new housing units." In the short term there isn't the capacity to build the affordable housing that is needed. In fact, a report to Edmonton city council dated April 24 says, "The home building industry is working at full capacity" and "it is clear that the need for affordable housing is increasing while the capacity to address affordable housing needs is diminishing." My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Why does the minister not see that in the short run, temporarily, we need rent stability while you build the affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Rent controls would only slow down any sort of building to increase the capacity of rental units. We also talk in our budget about rent supplements. We talk about secondary suites, that we need to have on the market to address the immediate concerns. So we look at a balanced approach, and I suggest again to the member of the third party that we need to look at a balanced approach for affordable housing and the homeless.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the balanced approach that you're giving is money for the gougers, and let the renters take the hind leg. That's what's happening. My question – you said that it would temporarily stop. In Ontario, where they've had rent guidelines for 15 years, they've had an 88 per cent increase in apartment units. In Alberta we had a 53 per cent decline. How does the minister justify those figures?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, mentioning Ontario, in Ontario since 1991 there have been rent controls, but any buildings that have been built since 1991 do not have rent controls because rent controls don't work. You need to have a balance. We have given the municipalities the authority to look at their affordable housing needs and for them to make the decision on what is better for their municipality.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's precisely the balance that Ontario has made. Of course the new units don't have rent guidelines on them. That's what we're asking for now. So why don't you do exactly the same thing? We'll build the units and also protect renters at the same time.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we have very many people that are coming from Ontario here. We need to look at a balanced approach for affordable housing for individuals that come from other provinces to Alberta to address the growth pressures. We need to invest in the individuals that are coming here and the Albertans that are here. What I want to say is that when we look at it in that balance segment, affordable housing affects all individuals that need housing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Arts Funding

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a lot of support for the arts in my constituency, and constituents often ask me about the grant programs available to fund the arts. Many local groups do fundraising, and the arts community generates much of its own funds to support its activities. Other groups and individuals expect government to bear more or most of the cost. My first question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. What is the portion of government support for the arts in relation to total revenues generated?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to say that the arts are extremely important to all Albertans, and they form a very, very important and integral part of our day-to-day living. Last year our government provided more than $20 million in grants to over 1,300 artists and arts organizations through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. This year the Alberta arts community will benefit from an additional 4 and a half million dollars, a 20 per cent increase over last year's budget, raising the foundation's budget to more than $27 million. In 2004 this generated about $153 million in economic activity in the area.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the first supplementary is to the same minister. Certain jurisdictions or provinces require arts groups to match funding prior to the approval of a government arts grant. What is your department's expectation of the arts community to match government grants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, again, thank you. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts generally requires that the organizations should have financial support from their communities. The grant amounts are based on the level of revenue generated by these organizations within the community they serve. When we talk about individual artists, we do not expect them to provide any matching funds, but the organizations themselves must.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister. Research reports quoted in the media recently indicated that individual Albertans support the arts at the rate of $971 per capita for events such as live theatre and concerts. This shows that Albertans highly value cultural opportunities. How do you expect that the Community Spirit Program MLA Committee might address personal contributions to cultural activities?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the member is right that Albertans do value and participate in various cultural activities, and Albertans support a variety of causes and organizations, including faith, sport, recreation, arts, and cultural activities. The MLA committee that we announced recently is looking at ways to use tax credits to encourage an increase in private donations. Cultural contributions are one of the areas the committee will be looking into. Already, through our budget here in 2007 Alberta's tax credits, for instance, for total charitable donations above $200 have been increased by more than 60 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for West-Yellowhead.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is May 2, 2007, weeks after the Affordable Housing Task Force turned in their report, weeks even since the government caucus gutted it because it didn't fit their ideology. Despite the Premier's many statements about the importance of an affordable housing strategy tenants in my Calgary-Varsity constituency are now counting the days until they are evicted. Seniors and disabled people continue to suffer the stress of having their basic human need for food and shelter threatened. My first question is to the Premier, who I requested to remain in the House. What words of advice does he have for my constituents?

The Speaker: Well, I'm going to call on the minister to respond, but that was a no-no.

Mr. Chase: Well, he turned down my request.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to the Absence of a Member

The Speaker: No. No. You know, hon. member, sometimes people have reasons not to be here. It's one of the long-standing rules. Well, I can look at the chair and say: where is the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark? Where is the member for somewhere else? That's not correct, and that's not appropriate, and that's why we don't deal with that.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will forward the question and have a written response to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry replied to my previous questions on this matter stating that the new eviction and homeless prevention fund was in place to solve these problems, but the picture on this fund is completely confusing. One ministerial spokesman says that it's up and running. Another says that we're just going to have to wait for a few months. Time to set the record straight. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: what specifically are the eligibility requirements for the $7 million eviction and homeless prevention fund? Please tell me about the benefits and where Albertans can find this information.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a previous response this afternoon I indicated that since November last year we have given emergency shelter funding to the amount of $9 million for people who need income support. This government currently, a base from last year, gives $100 million in support of shelter allowances to low-income Albertans, over and above that $9 million last year for emergencies, over and above that again, with the recent budget approval, $7 million. We will, working with our partners in Municipal Affairs and Housing, determine how there are cracks, if any, in the funding arrangement so that we can assure that Albertans in need do not go unheard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The lack of transparency and accountability is completely unacceptable to Albertans. People in my constituency and in many others across this province are desperate. They need answers, and they need action right now. Websites are of no use to people who can't afford basic food, clothing, and housing. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: when will clear and consistent eligibility requirements or benefit levels be made available to the public, and how will you transfer that information to people who can't afford a paper, can't afford a computer? How are you going to get that information to people on the streets or who are about to be on the streets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we in the House all know, two weeks ago we announced our budget. Last week we also rolled out the new housing responses to the housing task force, trying to address the needs and the recommendations that were made by that housing task force. We are now dealing with how we are going to make sure that we most effectively – most effectively – address the needs of those individuals and how that access can happen in the most efficient way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a recent announcement about declaring a forest health emergency due to the mountain pine beetle, a very high number of trees are likely going to be killed. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How much capacity does the Alberta forest product industry have to manage the timber killed by mountain pine beetle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My department is working with the forestry industry to assess this capacity. Last year our forestry industry processed approximately 25 million cubic metres of wood for all commercial purposes. We're estimating that that capacity could be up to as high as 30 to 35 million cubic metres of wood per year, so we do have some room to absorb the additional wood that is anticipated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What plans does Alberta have to maximize the value received from harvesting beetle-killed trees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The pine beetle invasion puts at risk $23 billion – $23 billion – of wood in this province, so we're doing everything we can to manage that risk. Of course, the most effective way to manage that risk is through an aggressive policy of meeting the pine beetle and stopping it from coming into the province, and I'm happy to note that the week that we were away, Canada's leading pine beetle expert, Dr. Allan Carroll, with the Canadian Forest Service, centred in Victoria, visited this city and told Albertans that this aggressive response is the most appropriate way to stop the pine beetle spread into the province.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. How will Alberta deal with more wood mass generated from harvesting more trees from salvaging operations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do anticipate there will be more low-quality wood as a result of the beetle if it does spread, so we're working with British Columbia to see what they've done. They're doing some new and innovative things. Also, SRD is working with Alberta Energy and Advanced Education to look at opportunities for biofuels and biomass, but in fact our forestry industry already has products that can use this. I'm referring to these types of pellet samples that are produced by some of our forestry companies now. These wood pellets are exported to Europe, where they're mixed with coal to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and get greenhouse gas credits, so there's opportunity there already for our forestry industry.

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday during the question period there was an exchange between the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Today the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness would like to supplement an answer, which will provide for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to ask an additional question.

The hon. minister.

Good Samaritan Pembina Village

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Member for Edmonton-Centre raised questions with respect to the safety of staff and residents at risk at the Good Samaritan Pembina Village in Evansburg. I wanted to supplement my answer to make sure, first of all, that I had indicated that I would inquire – and I did – and secondly, to indicate that there is not a problem with the safety of staff or residents. The public should be aware of that because, with all due respect, the way the question was framed yesterday left some allegations in place which would cause a great deal of concern.

The Pembina Village is operated by the Good Samaritan Society. The facility provides 40 long-term care beds and 30 units as supportive living under the department's lodge program, which is the responsibility of the Evergreen Foundation. First of all, the facility was built in 2003, so it's a relatively new facility. The Health Facilities Review Committee, as was mentioned yesterday, completed the first routine visit in 2004. There was a list of deficiencies, mainly around construction type matters that needed to be carried out, and the Good Samaritan Society immediately created a work plan and set to work in consultation with Capital health to address those concerns. The Health Facilities Review Committee carried out a return visit in 2006, as was mentioned yesterday.*

The Speaker: I think, hon. minister, that even though this is supplementary, we probably should still abide by the 45-second rule. Otherwise, it's getting in the back door instead of going in the front door.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for the response from the minister. I'm pleased to see that he feels that most of the concerns that were raised in the 2004 Health Facilities Review Committee have been addressed.

Could I ask a double-ended question? Is he aware if the custodian hours have been increased to the point where it's an appropriate amount of time to actually clear the walkways and evacuation routes? As well, what exactly caused the fires that took place there?

An Hon. Member: They weren't fires.

Ms Blakeman: If you can expand on that, then, because I understood that they were electrical, and then I saw a report that they weren't, but it didn't tell what it was. So, please, expand on that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As may happen in any circumstance, there was a problem in a light fixture, and there was a problem with a clothes dryer. Both of those have been dealt with. There was no significant damage in either case. But I want it to be perfectly clear: there were some water problems; the Good Samaritan Society has dealt with those issues and is monitoring to make sure that they don't happen again. There's no risk of health and safety apparent from those issues. I didn't want to leave the impression, that was left yesterday, that this was an unsafe facility for the residents or for the people working there. The issue with respect to the fire door was a matter of snow clearing. That's been taken care of, and they're aware of the issue.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta.

Bill 34

Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will help to stabilize our province's rental market, thereby contributing to the management of pressures we are experiencing due to growth.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere I would like to table documents that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford asked for yesterday when he stated that the inflation-proofing of the heritage savings trust fund only occurs if that budget surplus is met. I have the requisite number of copies.

The Speaker: Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre first, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today, both from constituents: the first from Darleen Ferguson, who writes that she experienced a $260 increase in rent. She's on a fixed income, and she feels very threatened that she would have to leave her apartment.

The second is a long history of a sequence of events from Nadine Smith-Breton. But, essentially, they feel tricked by their landlord, who would only allow a six-month lease but neglected to tell them that condo conversions were happening. So they're out with no recourse.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from Sherri Humphrys, a teacher in Edmonton, expressing two concerns. "The first is the level of allocation for education in this province. To have a budget come out where the allocation is less than the current rate of inflation is very telling about the current government's value of education." Her second concern is "the government's lack of accountability for the unfunded liability issue. To say that a resolution will be achieved and then send a threatening letter to the union with absolutely unacceptable suggestions is insulting."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had the pleasure last evening of attending the excellence in teaching awards program celebrating the district finalists for the Edmonton public schools, at which 37 Edmonton public teachers were celebrated. I have the pleasure now to table the requisite number of copies of the program from that event.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from a constituent who lives with eight other people at the Easter Seals McQueen Residence. This is a home for physically disabled adults. They're very worried because they've lost staff, and they have trouble finding replacement staff. They're very worried that their home will be closed down, and that would be a great tragedy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings on behalf of 297 residents of Calgary-Varsity who are going to be without lodging. The first is a letter that I sent to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry asking questions such as: "can you please advise what assistance is available, what the qualification criteria are and how they apply" and so on?

I'm pleased to report as my second tabling that the minister responded to me promptly as requested. Unfortunately, the information she provided has been compromised of late by conflicting statements.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I have five tablings today. The first is a letter from Alina Matthews, who was here earlier today and got introduced. She's a 20-year-old rehabilitation practitioner. She has her diploma from Grant MacEwan, and she's working on a university degree from Calgary in community rehabilitation. She highlights the crisis in her field, and she is asking for some serious change to make it an appealing field for people to work in.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is also from a person who was here today, Marsha Taphorn. Her biggest concern is staff turnover. She's commenting on working "long and stressful days for a wage that is not reflective of the work that is performed."

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from two parents, Joe and Ines Silva. Again, they got mentioned this afternoon. They're talking about the excellent work provided by the staff at the centre that they have their son at, but workers readily leave because of better paying jobs elsewhere.

The fourth tabling is from Leah Priest. She's been involved in the disability service for over 13 years. But she comments on the low wages being the reason for many qualified and competent employees leaving the sector and not returning.

The fifth one is from Sonia Richardson, which also highlights the crisis in the health care service industry and comments on the fact that it's mostly the wages and gives an example where clients become withdrawn and experience negative behaviour because of the staff turnover in their field.

Thank you.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling appropriate copies of a letter that I received from Glenn Cook, a constituent in Edmonton-Calder. Within hours of the government rejecting the rent stability guidelines, his rent and everyone's in his building went up by $500 per month. I also have a letter signed by seven senior citizens, and their rent all went up by $115 at the same time.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the correct number of copies of a letter from Christina Sanders. Christina has written about a problem that has arisen a number of times and my constituency has dealt with, and that's the problem of servicemen's sons and daughters born at bases overseas where they cannot get their citizenship. Because of the number of servicemen and their families that live in the north end, we tend to get a lot of these cases.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is in my capacity as chairperson of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I would like to table today the agenda from the meeting that occurred this morning, Wednesday, May 2, 2007. This agenda was circulated to all hon. members of the committee on Monday, and included in this, under item 4 on the agenda, it stated clearly that we were meeting with Mr. Keray Henke, Deputy Minister of Education. When this agenda was approved, there were no questions. It was approved unanimously by all members present, and I think that in light of the question that was asked earlier today by the hon. leader of the third party, this is very important. This document was circulated, and everyone had an opportunity to have a look at it. No one raised any questions.

Now, my second tabling is a comparison of selected oil resource taxation regimes, and it's prepared by Petroleum Economics Limited of both Calgary and London. It is dated February 2000, and it is a comparison of royalty regimes, comparing Alberta to Venezuela, Alberta to Norway, and Alberta to Alaska north slope oil.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Boutilier, Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, pursuant to the Metis Settlements Act the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal 2005 and 2006 annual reports.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, yesterday and today several members alluded to certain days or months. Today being the second day of May, I thought that I would just make sure everybody is aware of all the special days and weeks in the month of May so that my office is not inundated with letters and phone calls saying: why are some recognized and others not recognized?

May is Cystic Fibrosis Awareness Month, Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month, MedicAlert Awareness Month, Foot Health Awareness Month, Huntington Disease Awareness Month, Speech and Hearing Awareness Month, Hepatitis Awareness Month, Museum Month, National Leave a Legacy Month, Motorcycle and Bicycle Safety Awareness Month, Asian Heritage Month, Red Shield Appeal Month, Child Find's Green Ribbon of Hope Campaign month, Light the Way Home campaign.

From April 1 to May 31 we have been in Girl Guides Sandwich Cookie Weeks. April 22 to May 24 is National Physiotherapy Month. April 29 to May 5 is Education Week.

May 1 was World Asthma Day. This week, May 1 to May 7, is National Summer Safety Week as it is Spinal Health Week as it is Allergy Awareness Week, and May 1 to May 8 is Naturopathic Medicine Week.

May 3 is World Press Freedom Day. That's tomorrow. May 5 is International Day of the Midwife. May 5 is also Alberta Search and Rescue Day. May 6 is the International No Diet Day as is May 6 the Annual Hike for Hospice Palliative Care day.

May 6 to May 12 is National Emergency Preparedness Week as it is International Compost Awareness Week as it is North American Occupational Safety and Health Week.

May 7 to May 13 is Mental Health Week as it is Respect for Law Week as it is National Hospice Palliative Care Week as it is National Nursing Week as it is Drinking Water Week.

May 8 is World Red Cross Day. May 10 is World Health Organization Move for Health Day as it is World Lupus Day. May 11 to 13 are Multiple Sclerosis Carnation Campaign days. May 12 is Canada Health Day as it is International Nurses Day as it is Fibromyalgia Awareness Day as it is Raise the Flag Day.

May 13, of course, is Mother's Day as it is also the Optimist Day of Non-Violence. May 13 to May 19 is National Police Week. May 13 to May 20 is Alberta Crime Prevention Week. May 14 to 20 is National Mining Week. May 15 is International Day of Families. May 15 and 16 are Provincial Skills Competition: Trades days in Alberta. May 17 is World Information Society Day. May 18 is International Museums Day.

May 19 to 25 is Safe Boating Week. May 20 to 26 is Inter-generational Week. May 21 is Victoria Day. May 21 is also the World Day for Cultural Diversity for Dialogue and Development. May 21 to 27 is Emergency Medical Services Awareness Week. May 22 is International Day for Biological Diversity. May 22 to 25 is part of Aboriginal Awareness Week. May 25 is National Missing Children's Day.

May 25 to 31 is Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories. May 27 is World Partnership Walk. May 28 to June 3 is National Sun Awareness Week. May 29 is International Day of United Nations Peacekeepers, and May 31 is World No-Tobacco Day.

Orders of the Day

head:

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Before I recognize the hon. minister, I would just like to take a brief moment to review some of the new Standing Orders that we're operating on as of today for the benefit of all the members here and for the benefit at home of the viewing public over the Internet.

The first one. "A Member may speak more than once," and "no Member may speak for more than 10 minutes." However, a member and a minister may combine their speaking times for a total of 20 minutes, providing they notify the chair first, and I just ask you to do that each time.

Quorum does not apply today – that's something new – until the estimates are voted upon.

Officials "may be admitted to the floor of the Assembly to advise the Minister whose estimates are under consideration." I would ask the minister to introduce those members of his staff before he starts.

On the first day of consideration of the estimates the first member of the Executive Council to speak shall move the main estimates in their entirety.

During the consideration of the main estimates, the Committee of Supply shall meet for a minimum of 3 hours at one time unless there are no Members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the 3 hours . . .

If the Committee of Supply meets for more than 3 hours at one time, the time in excess of 3 hours shall be available to any Member who wishes to speak and is recognized by the Chair . . .

During each 15-hour cycle, where the members of a caucus are allotted a particular block of time and those Members no longer wish to speak, then consideration for the entire block of time . . . is deemed to have occurred and any Member may be recognized by the Chair until the Committee rises and reports.

Standing Order 5 regarding the quorum "does not apply to a report to the Assembly from the Committee of Supply," and "when an amendment to a department's estimates is moved in Committee of Supply, the vote on the amendment stands deferred until the date scheduled for the vote on the main estimates."

So, with that, I would invite the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to move the estimates in their entirety and introduce his staff.

Main Estimates 2007-08

Health and Wellness

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed a privilege to be the first up with respect to our new Committee of Supply structure and hopefully plow the first ground, so to speak, with this, I think, exciting opportunity to really delve into the estimates and to be held accountable for the spending that we hope to be able to engage in on behalf of Albertans.

So as the first order of business, of course, according to the Standing Orders it's my privilege to move the 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, as well as the 2007-2008 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates for the same period.

Mr. Chairman, it is a new procedure with us. Public Accounts previously had met in the Chamber with officials on the floor, but it's been some time since we've had the opportunity to engage in public accounts in this way. Joining me today are my deputy minister, Paddy Meade; assistant deputy minister of corporate operations, Ray Gilmour; executive director and senior financial officer, Peter Hegholz; my executive assistant, Fred Horne; and communications director, Michael Shields. We are also joined by other staff in the members' gallery: Annette Trimbee, the assistant deputy minister for strategic directions; Richard Butler, assistant deputy minister of health workforce; Janet Skinner, assistant deputy minister of program service; Linda Miller, assistant deputy minister in information and strategic services; Neil MacDonald, executive director of population health strategies; Jason Cobb, acting director of ministry relations in the deputy minister's office; and Martin Chamberlain, who is our corporate legal counsel.

So suffice to say, Mr. Chairman, I hope that I have all the talent and ability necessary to be able to answer any of the questions that may be raised in Committee of Supply today. But, of course, cognizant of the rules and because I would do it anyway, we would be happy to provide written responses to any questions that aren't dealt with verbally on the record within the two-week time frame that is provided for in the new rules.

I want to start, first of all, by saying a public thank you on the record to the department officials who are here today with us and whom I've just introduced. I've had a very short period of time to work in this department, but I can say that my experience in the Department of Health and Wellness, as my experience in various other departments that I've served, is that we are truly blessed with the quality of senior civil servant that we have and, I would say, the quality of the civil service that we have serving Albertans. The Department of Health and Wellness is certainly blessed to have a wealth of talent and ability, and I'm privileged to be able to work with these people. Having said that, I'm sure that they'll make sure now that I get good answers very quickly to all the questions.

The 2007 to 2010 business plan for the Ministry of Health and Wellness identifies three core business and six corresponding goals. The core businesses are to advocate and educate for healthy living, to provide quality health and wellness services, and to lead and participate in continuous improvement in the health system. Our overarching business plan goals are that Albertans make choices for healthier lifestyles, that Albertans' health is protected, that access to health services are improved, to have a contemporary health workforce, that health service outcomes are improved, and to ensure health service efficiency, effectiveness, innovation, and productivity. Our vision is for Albertans to be healthy and to live, work, and play in a healthy environment. Our mission is to "provide leadership and work collaboratively with partners to help Albertans be healthy." The government of Alberta has identified five priorities, and the Ministry of Health and Wellness directly supports the achievement of the provincial priority to improve Albertans' quality of life.

The Health and Wellness ministry is also making a significant contribution to the government priority of managing growth pressures by providing funding to respond to the recommendations from the Oil Sands Ministerial Strategy Committee on impacts of development in the oil sand communities and, of course, the stellar work that's happening on the workforce strategy.

Our business plan identifies opportunities and challenges over the next three years. These include health system sustainability, addressing workforce shortages, controlling the rising costs of prescription drugs, promoting disease and injury prevention, improving access to health services, improving governance and accountability, and taking advantage of innovation, research, and technical opportunities to increase Alberta's productivity and global competitiveness.

After reviewing these challenges, the ministry has identified four priorities in addition to the important ongoing core activities that the Health and Wellness ministry undertakes. These are implementing health care productivity reforms and sustainability initiatives; implementing a new pharmaceutical strategy to improve management of drug expenditures and ensure access to sustainable government drug coverage; strengthening public health services that promote wellness, prevent injury and disease, and provide preparedness for public health emergencies; and implementing a comprehensive workforce strategy to secure and retain health professionals. The 2007-08 budget for Alberta Health and Wellness will help us to address these challenges and achieve our goals and priorities.

Mr. Chairman, our ministry's budget this year reflects a $1.3 billion, or 12.2 per cent, increase over the previous year. The ministry's budget is now $12 billion. In two years the Health and Wellness ministry budget is expected to exceed $12.8 billion, an increase of almost 20 per cent from the 2006-2007 forecast. Operating grants for health authorities will increase by $574 million, or an average of 9.5 per cent, to $6.6 billion. No regional health authorities will receive less than a 6 per cent increase in the 2007-2008 year.

It's important for Members of the Legislative Assembly to know how funds are being allocated to the health regions. The funding allocation model is based primarily on population and ensures that funding follows the person. No matter where a person is receiving service, the region providing the service receives the funding necessary to deliver that service. This is very important in a dynamic province such as Alberta. Health regions also have different costs for delivering service as a result of a variety of factors, such as the remote population in rural regions. The funding allocation model recognizes these differential costs in determining an equitable allocation to each region. Quite simply, the funding model calculates a per capita funding amount which varies by region to reflect the variances in age, gender, socioeconomic status, health characteristics, delivery costs, and other factors.

There is $291 million being allocated to regional health authorities through their base funding for mental health services in 2007-08. This is an increase of $23 million, or 8.5 per cent.

The Northern Lights health region will receive the highest operating increase this year, at 81.5 per cent. This increase includes the special provision of $58 million for the operation of new community clinics in Fort McMurray and to provide the same allowances for health staff that are currently provided to provincial employees in that region. The money will assist Northern Lights health region in providing health services to a transient population in a high-growth area.

Capital health is receiving almost $2.3 billion in operating funding this year, which is a 9 per cent, or $190 million, increase. In addition, the capital plan includes approximately $780 million over the next three years to continue with previously approved capital projects in the capital region.

The Calgary health region is receiving almost $2.2 billion in operating funding this year, which is a 9.3 per cent, or $187, million increase. The operating increase reflects the pressures the health region is facing from population growth. The capital plan also includes $835 million over the next three years to continue with previously approved capital projects in the Calgary health region.

Funding totalling $8 million will go to Peace Country health to assist with the extraordinary costs of staff recruitment and retention.

This year's budget for the Cancer Board is $277 million, an increase of $21.5 million, or 8.5 per cent. Funding to the Alberta Mental Health Board is $58 million this year, an increase of $4.6 million, or 8.6 per cent.

The budget for physicians' services in 2007-08 rises to $2.4 billion. The increase includes the cost of the trilateral master agreement between the Alberta Medical Association, regional health authorities, and the Ministry of Health and Wellness for physician services. As part of the agreement $38 million has been set aside for a clinical stabilization initiative this year. The initiative will be used as a recruitment and retention initiative to support communities facing unique health delivery needs and to address extraordinary increases in physician practice costs, such as rising office rents.

There will be $47 million from the master agreement for a new retention benefit, which will recognize physicians for the number of years that they have practised. The physician office system program has been allocated $34 million this year to assist physicians in converting their offices to electronic environments. The increase for physician services also includes an additional $25 million to address growth in the existing academic alternate relationship plans and new academic ARPs. These are compensation models that address the multiple roles of academic physicians in teaching, research, and clinical services.

Mr. Chairman, to turn briefly to capital expenditures, over the next three years Alberta Health and Wellness is spending more than $2.6 billion in health facilities infrastructure and project cost escalation. This includes funding for more than 30 previously approved health projects and $221 million for increased cost escalation on previously approved projects.

You're looking at me like I'm running out of time. I am. Okay.

The new capital projects this year are in Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray, $250 million being allocated over three years to build a new acute-care facility in Grande Prairie. Northern Lights will receive $26.4 million for housing units for health care providers, a helipad at Northern Lights regional health centre, and new community clinics, all responding to the rapid growth and the oil sands development report.

Mr. Chairman, I'll leave it there, and I'm sure that I'll have an opportunity to give more of the good news in the course of the afternoon.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will notify you at this time, and I did in writing as well, that I will take this opportunity in the first exchange between the minister and I to have a 20-minute total back-and-forth exchange with smaller rotations of time between the two of us. So thank you for that.

Thank you very much to the minister for his opening remarks. Welcome to the staff that join us on the floor. I gather that there is an entire fan team up in the gallery of another 15 people, so welcome to all of you as well.

I thank the minister for his commitment to the two-week response for written questions. That is a new innovation in the new Standing Orders, which I have fondly called the McClellan innovation because the previous minister of health and Member for Drumheller-Stettler was very good about giving written responses within two weeks.

I'll also note that the minister and I meet again during one of the new cross-ministry exchanges later this month on health impacts and development, so I will not be raising any of those issues during the exchange today.

Just to let everybody know, the topics I'm looking to go over today include health workforce, rural physician action plan, international medical graduates, mental health, ambulances, regionalization, pharmaceuticals, health care premiums, midwifery, tobacco reduction, social determinants of health, PARA, which is the medical residents, and electronic health records. Of course, I'm also joined here today – and they will be spelling me off – by my colleague from Lethbridge-East, who will be questioning the minister on long-term care, and also by my colleague from Calgary-Currie, who will be bringing forward specific issues around Calgary.

First is health workforce. I note on page 25 of the ministry business plans that it reveals a "comprehensive workforce strategy to secure and retain health professionals," but just above that on page 25 it notes, "Strategies that will be the focus for the government over the next 12 months are highlighted with a checkmark." Then that very first section under Managing Growth Pressures, which is about a comprehensive workforce strategy to secure and retain health professionals, is not checked. So it is not identified as a focus for the government over the next 12 months. Of course, the obvious question is: why is that?

We've certainly seen the number of code reds and code burgundies increase. Intensive care and other units at hospitals throughout Alberta have been closed because of staff shortages. The shortage of health workers in all sectors – the allied health professionals, doctors, and nurses – has been a major obstacle contributing to lengthy wait times. From my side, addressing this shortage and developing a comprehensive health workforce plan is the first step in the Alberta Liberal wait time strategy, so I am really baffled as to why this was not identified as a focus for the government.

I notice that the next thing on the page is under Improve Albertans' Quality of Life. "Implement health care productivity reforms and sustainability" is check-marked, but, you know, we were promised a health workforce strategy by the previous minister. The first time I asked about it was April of '06. I was promised it in May of '06 and then in September, and then it all sort of dribbled away.

Mr. Hancock: Just so I can get the right references, you referenced page 25, but my business plan isn't that long, so I'm trying to find the page you're referring to.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. Business plans, page 25.

Mr. Hancock: Oh, you're in the government business plan, perhaps?

Ms Blakeman: Oh, yes. Sorry. The government stuff is earlier, and the health stuff is later.

Mr. Hancock: Okay.

Ms Blakeman: I'm just going to lay something else on the table while you're checking that. I note that the Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry is receiving $30 million to implement health workforce plan strategies to help address these pressures by "supporting recruitment, retention and repatriation." That's out of a government press release on April 19, 2007. I'm assuming that this is part of a health workforce plan, but we have never seen the health workforce plan. Much promised; never delivered. So when are we going to see the plan, and can the minister tell us why it's been on hold for so long?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, thank you for allowing me to reference myself to your comments. You were looking at the government business plan, and the question is a very good one. The comprehensive workforce strategy doesn't have a check mark, and the second line of the paragraph above indicates that "strategies that will be the focus for the government over the next 12 months are highlighted with a checkmark."

Clearly, a comprehensive workforce strategy should have a check mark on it because one of the four mandates that the Premier gave this minister when he was appointed is to develop a comprehensive workforce strategy. I can't explain the lack of a check mark, but I can assure you that my marching orders and my report card will be based on achieving a portion of that mandate on a timely basis. What interests the boss fascinates me.

It's extremely important for us as we move forward to deal with the workforce issues. I mean, we could dump out workforce strategies. That's not to say that nothing has happened on developing and recruiting a new workforce, but what we are trying to accomplish is a comprehensive workforce strategy that deals with retention, deals with recruitment, deals with repatriation. The concept of the workforce strategy that it is in development. It's not that it's on hold; it's in development. On April 13 we had a summit with a number of stakeholder groups to test run some of the concepts that had been put forward in a workforce strategy and got some excellent feedback from them. We're waiting for the report – I should have had it yesterday, I think, or today – from that summit to say: "Are we on the right track? Did we get it right, or are there some adjustments we need to make?" We need to put a policy framework around it.

Clearly, there are a number of things – and the hon. member questioned me about a number of those things in the House the other day – with respect to valuing our existing workforce, making sure that we look at the issues around health status and workplace safety so that we don't have 593 person-years of nursing lost to back strain, so that we reduce the stress level so that we have more productivity but also so that we expand the scopes of practice and the functional practice of health care professionals and technologists so that they can truly use all of their capabilities and expertise in their job, hopefully making their jobs a lot more interesting, making it a lot more exciting to come to work and actually being more productive. So there are a number of issues around workforce strategy.

It's not just as simple as saying that we need more. Of course we need more, and we'll also be recruiting. So we're recruiting internal to Alberta in terms of building capacity in the advanced education system to train more health care professionals as well as recruiting internationally to those places who have extra. Obviously, we don't want to be going out stealing other people's health care professionals when they need them as well, but there are places in the world where we can get extra people. That in itself is a very critical element because the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry needs to work with the federal government to achieve the ability to actually bring them in more quickly than we've had the capability of doing in the past in getting the applications processed and that sort of thing. So there are a number of intricate strategies involved in the workforce strategy.

The hon. member will see it, I trust, very, very soon because we're at sort of the final stages of bringing it through development. We'll take it through our policy process very quickly, and I hope to have it available for public consumption and comment quickly after that.

The $30 million that the hon. member mentioned is in EII's budget as seed money for this strategy. It was put in EII's budget because we have three ministries doing co-ordinated work on the workforce strategy: Advanced Education and Technology, Health and Wellness, and Employment, Immigration and Industry. Employment, Immigration and Industry has overall responsibility for workforce strategy, so it was felt appropriate to put the money there, but the three ministries will work on where the money should be applied with respect to the strategies that are coming forward.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, the minister can understand my caution – may I say skepticism – because I faced a similar minister a year ago and was told to expect the health workforce strategy imminently. Actually, there was a date made.

So I hear that the work has gone on. I fear that time was lost, as we saw in many departments, because everything sort of came to a halt when the leadership race was on because nobody knew quite what to do. But I'm still not getting an exact date from the minister. "Soon," I hear him say. "Soon" isn't the time I was looking for, but maybe I can coax something a bit more definite out of him.

He's touched on some of the issues that I'm going to ask specific questions on. I'm looking for a bit more detail on how the ministry of health is collaborating with the Ministry of Employment, Immigration and Industry and Advanced Education to recruit and train health professionals. Everybody says that that's going to happen, that it is happening. But exactly what are the details on how that's being laid out? For example, what targets have been set for recruiting new health professionals? What targets have been set for training health professionals within Alberta? How were these targets set or arrived at? Has this minister of health provided the minister of advanced education with a detailed list of how many health professionals we need to educate, train, and certify in different areas? Again, we're dealing with physicians, and even inside that there are different kinds of physicians, obviously, registered nurses, allied health professionals, LPNs, et cetera. All of those questions are applicable for both new professionals and for international medical graduates.

So those are some of the specifics that I'm looking for about that collaboration. I'll let the minister answer that.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, the questions are important ones because they help frame a very important piece of this discussion. While the hon. member may be skeptical when I say this, it's not about the numbers. If you start with the numbers, you end up having arguments over what numbers there are.

What we really need to do is to start looking at the workforce of the future in health. If we're going to focus on wellness, if we're going to focus on health status, if we're going to change the methodology of delivery to better team approaches and primary care networks and other ways of using teams of medical professionals to assist Albertans to be responsible for their own health, then setting specific targets for a specific health care professional specialty or subspecialty becomes counterproductive. We can argue about whether we need 1,100 new doctors or 1,200 new doctors or 1,500 new doctors or 400 new doctors. We agree that we need new doctors. What I really would like to see is for doctors to work more productively by working with other health care professionals and shift in the atmosphere from being acute care specialists to being people who assist with wellness.

So part and parcel of the whole strategy concept is that we have to change the way we think as health care professionals. I don't want to pick on doctors; there may be other areas in the system. But we need to change the way we think. So if it was just a workforce plan that was built around specific numbers, then we would spend more time, as has been spent in the past, arguing about how many. We know that we need more doctors and particularly family practitioners, so we need to work on strategies relative to increasing the number of physicians that go into the family practice area and general practice area. We know that we need more nurses, but we also know that we need more personal care attendants. So we need more in every area, and we're going to go out and recruit.

That work hasn't stopped because we're developing a strategy. There have been co-ordinated missions, for example, to Britain. Health authorities have gone together, and the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry has recently been. So that work is ongoing. We didn't sort of park everything while we were writing a strategy. There are certain things that needed to be done, and they're obvious. They're ongoing, and they're going to be done.

We are working very collaboratively on developing the workforce strategy so that we're working with, for example, Advanced Education and Technology not just in terms of how many more spaces in nursing programs and where but in terms of what can Advanced Education and Technology do with respect to bridging programs so that medical professionals from other areas who might need some supplementary courses can get those and not, as they've experienced in the past, go back to the very beginning and start again, which we know isn't really possible. So looking at other ways that Advanced Education can work with the colleges and universities to do the credentialing that's necessary in terms of getting foreign-trained professionals licensed for the job by helping to evaluate what their talents are and what the gaps, if any, are that need to be filled in. So working with Employment, Immigration and Industry on the co-ordination of recruitments so that we can have common recruiting missions to, perhaps, Britain where there currently is an excess of health care professionals or to other areas of the world where there are identified populations which may want to be here.

That's important, but another piece of the work with Employment, Immigration and Industry, of course, is to work with the federal government to make sure that we can bring in those that we need both in terms of identifying their appropriate credentials but also using the provincial nominee program or other methodologies to be able to get them in because one of the big problems right now is that there are lots of people who want to come, but there's lag time in terms of getting them in.

We're also working to use part 5 designations, for example, to allow health care professionals to come in and practise, but there need to be ways for them to then expand beyond their part 5 designation into a full scope of practice. So there are a number of different ways in which the three departments can work very well together on not only developing the strategy but implementing the pieces of the strategy sometimes each within our own department and sometimes on a collaborative basis.

Ms Blakeman: I agree, and I agree with the policy direction that the minister is outlining because I think that is where we need to go. It isn't necessarily about more people. It's about how we use the time. I mean, doctors are trained to do very, very specific things. Again, to choose doctors, not to pick on them but as an example, they're trained to do very specific things, but we now have them filling out forms and doling out advice and all kinds of other things that may not be part of their job exactly, but they're doing it. If we can have them work more as part of a team with other health professionals, basically if you can save 20 per cent of their time when it doesn't require a doctor to be doing it, you've in essence created 20 per cent more doctors right there. So it isn't necessarily about the people.

I spent 10 years on Public Accounts, and that's all about measurement and accountability. So if you are not looking at setting specific targets of numbers with this sort of longer term policy that you've got happening, how are you going to measure success? Or how do you measure incremental movement if you're not using hard numbers on things? So I'll leave that with you.

I just want to get in the piece as well about world recruitment and retention of health workers, which you've sort of touched on. I'm curious. I note that on page 202 of the estimates book, under 2.0.7, the rural physician action plan has had no increase in funding, yet that's one of the areas that we're seeing really in need of particular attention. I'm wondering why that choice was made: to not increase the budget for that rural physician action plan.

The second question I have there is with the clinical stabilization initiative. Is that part of the negotiation that happened with the AMA? Is that the fund that's covering the office rent and things? It's 2.0.5 on page 202, clinical stabilization initiative. I think that's about the AMA negotiation, but I just wanted to clarify that.

I'm also wondering if the minister has had discussions with the minister of advanced education about allocating specific spots for medical students with a rural background because one of the things we do know is that if somebody coming from a rural background trains in medicine, they are far more likely to go back to the rural area to practise. Has the minister looked at designating spaces or setting them aside or allocating them in some way for students that are coming out of rural areas in the hope that they will go back to those areas when they graduate?

The final piece of that is: what incentives are being put in place to encourage medical students to choose family medicine as a speciality, which is the other place where we really need people to be choosing it, the rural family physicians and the whole sector of family physicians. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Well, there we go. That's our first exchange.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I understand, hon. member, that you wish to exercise the 20-minute option?

Ms Pastoor: Yes, I do.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the minister and his staff for attending and being here. I thank the minister for the answers that I've heard so far because I appreciate getting a lot of the background that goes with it. Having said that, I sort of feel a little bit naked as I stand here because I don't have any staff, so I'll wing it on my own.

One thing before I get started. I will be going on to long-term care, but I would like to just follow up on something that has just been raised in terms of family physicians and what I feel to be the really important recognition of how important family physicians are because we really need someone to help connect the dots between the specialists. I'll use an example. You can go to a dentist. He may do some work on, say, your upper teeth, and it could well affect your sinuses and your eyes, but that's not going to come up until later. So you need that person that you can go to that connects the dots between all the specialists because the specialists do this and this, but they don't connect the dots in between.

So having said that little piece, I'd like to go on to the long-term care, and I'll start off with my mantra that I've used for the last two and a half years. I really believe that we need provincial definitions and standards that are enforceable for anyone in care regardless of where they live or who delivers the care. On page 6 of the government's strategic business plan it explains that an updated plan to expand long-term care and improve standards of care will be brought forward by Alberta Seniors and Community Supports. Now, I realize that that is not this ministry, but there really is a crossover. Since they have deregulated long-term care, there is a crossover that often becomes confusing.

On page 186 of the Alberta health business plan strategy 3.1 involves the development of a comprehensive continuing care services model in collaboration with the minister of seniors. What I need, which fits into my mantra, is: do we have a provincial definition of what is long-term care versus continuing care? I believe that you probably mean the same thing, but it's very, very confusing when not everyone is speaking off the same page. Long-term care in the old days almost included anyone because there wasn't other housing available. Now there is any number of housing that actually is defined in different regions, so it does become confusing.

I would like to perhaps stop there because I really need to know that we are talking about the same thing. What is long-term care, and what is continuing care?

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to quickly deal with the questions that were left from the Member for Edmonton-Centre. With respect to the rural physician action plan program she's right: there wasn't an increase in the budget. We're still working on the take-up with respect to that plan, but also in the workforce strategy there'll be a more definitive approach to recruitment. Absolutely correct that we need to try and recruit rural students into all the health care professions so that they will be comfortable going back into their own communities, and I certainly agree with the sentiments that were set out there.

The clinical stabilization fund is part of the master agreement between the three, and it is intended as a fund which will allow us to work in the high-need areas and the high-risk areas. For example, a family practitioner has costs going up faster than another practitioner's because of the costs of their clinics, which other specialists might not have. Or a region might have a higher cost, have a difficulty attracting a doctor. So the clinical stabilization program – and we're working out with the AMA the rules around it – is intended to be able to be applied to address those sorts of issues.

Allocation of particular spots with respect to medical schools is something that I believe was implemented already. I'll have to go back and just double-check on that piece, but I think there was the set-aside of some certain spots. Again, now it's a question of take-up time frame.

With respect to the family doctors I couldn't agree more that the concept working forward in terms of helping Albertans with their personal health status and helping Albertans be responsible for their health requires access to a medical team, and the family physician is going to be core to that team. Not necessarily everything a person needs to do will have to go to the family physician, but with the benefit of the electronic health record the family physician should be able to have access to any information with respect to any tests that have been done, any diagnostics, all the critical information in addition to what they have of the person's personal health record in that doctor's office. But it's not moving away from the family doctor. In fact, if we do this right and if we get a complete buy-in on the need to do it, the family doctor actually should be able to do exactly what the hon. member expressed rather than having to touch absolutely everyone and not be able to do the job.

I've had a family doctor that I've talked with a number of times who has expressed to me a frustration with actually being a cruise specialist, booking cruises on specialists as opposed to actually that co-ordinating role that you describe. So I wanted to emphasize that.

Going on to the long-term care issue, we're working with the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. It's in the department of seniors mandate to go forward in that area. But from my perspective, whether you talk about long-term care or continuing care, we need to be talking about that continuum of assistance that is needed, again, to help Albertans be healthy in the community. The choice of housing, whether a person is someone who needs assistance staying in their own home or choosing some other living accommodation right up to what used to be called extended care centres is a continuum of housing choice to which we need to then apply the health assistance that's necessary to allow and encourage that person to stay in that housing choice.

That's obviously something that our department is going to have to work collaboratively with the seniors department on to make sure that we can work in that kind of environment. Whether it's housing with a health supplement or health with a housing supplement, we need to have the concept that this is a continuing care process. It's about the quality of life of the individual that's involved and where they can most appropriately be supported so that they can make choices with respect to their lifestyle and they can be independent as long as possible because that's good for health status.

So for long-term care there's been the funding increase there. We'll increase staff hours of care. A lot of work has been done on modern standards, and we're working with both the public and the not-for-profit and the private industry with respect to implementation of those standards, making sure that the qualifications are brought up but being reasonable about the implementation of that and also expanding home care and community care.

You're right: we need to get common language. But in my view it should be common language which doesn't distinguish between what's continuing care and long-term care, language which understands that we're talking about individual human beings with a quality of life. We should be supporting them in a manner so that they can be as independent as possible as long as possible because that's going to improve their health status. So it's not about long-term care, lodge care, assisted living, designated assisted living; it's about the individual and what support they need to be able to have the quality of life that they should have.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you to the minister for that. I do agree, but I think I would like to see that for anybody that is in care, we use the term "continuing care," and then long-term care would be a part of that that would fall underneath it. Really, anyone in long-term care truly needs the medical side of things first whereas in continuing care it's often the housing that's considered first and then the supplemental care that would go along with that.

One of the other things you did touch on is the standards. One of my concerns right from the very start has been that real enforcement is something that doesn't really exist in Alberta at the moment. It's a deficiency that was identified by the Auditor General and the MLA task force, and certainly it's had widespread support of the public, particularly the public that has had no recourse when they're upset. I understand that they are trying to set up what they call residents' councils, but they're still not strong enough. When would the minister introduce legislation as recommended by the Auditor General and the MLA task force that outlines standards monitoring and enforcement and very clear lines of accountability in continuing care? Again, when I say continuing care, I mean that whole spectrum regardless of what it is or where you live.

I believe that it's very, very important that we have a provincial standard that can then be enforced at the provincial level. I, of course, would have preferred, because I brought the bill forward, that it would have been someone that didn't necessarily respond to the minister but would have responded to the House, which would have given it that little extra arm's length. Many people – and I heard it on the task force – are truly afraid to come forward because they fear the repercussions that will happen either to their institution, or they won't get funding, or it will happen to their loved one that they're trying to protect. So could we be looking forward to some kind of legislation and enforcement with teeth?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, it would be very unfortunate if people were in fear of things which were pretty basic with respect to getting their care. I'm a very strong believer in appropriate residents' committees, if you will, which involve patients and their families being involved, being able to deal with some of the issues. Obviously, as an MLA I've had a lot of opportunity to deal with people who have concerns, and what they need is a resident-based committee which has the ability to raise and deal with concerns at the first instance because a lot of them can be dealt with there. Most operators that I've had occasion to come into contact with, whether they're public, private, or not for profit, do care about the quality of care that they're giving, and they want to resolve the concerns. So first and foremost is to make sure that those types of committees are up and operating.

We're working with the Auditor General with respect to the enforcement standards in terms of rolling out the implementation of that, and of course enforcement has got to be part of it, but it has to be done right. I've had a number of meetings now with seniors' advocacy groups, including yesterday with the Alberta Council on Aging, to talk about a number of issues that they have going forward, and I'm committed to working with the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports to make sure that we get the right framework in place both to encourage more places for people who need places but also to make sure that we have the right kind of standards and the right ability to enforce those standards.

You know, setting up more legislative officers to report directly to the House is not necessarily the answer, but there does need to be a place where people can go without apprehension. In each of the regional health authorities, of course, they have ombudsmen now for that purpose, and we need to see if that's working because that process might be a better process than a legislative officer, that is a bit more remote. But the concept of making sure that there's a place where people can have their concern heard without fear of any repercussion is an important one and, certainly, one that I'll keep at the forefront.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I'm glad to hear that that's at least starting. I'd like to be able to see in six months because we do know that there are examples out there that have to be looked at. I'd like to see how they're handled through the Ombudsman's office, which you suggested; however, I'm not sure that he got extra money to handle these sorts of complaints.

Certainly, the Health Facilities Review Committee has done some good work. I'm very aware of the people on the committee, and in fact when I was practising my profession, I had an incident where I had to actually work with them. They do good work, but they really are toothless. They can only make recommendations, with no backup.

So I have a question here. I'm going to ask it, but it's a little bit iffy. Would you finally eliminate the Health Facilities Review Committee? If you do, the only reason that I would want it eliminated is because it has no authority. If you did eliminate it, what would you replace it with? I think it has to be replaced with something of the same magnitude because the people that go in, at least from my experience, have a very fair chance of going through exactly the incidents that happen.

Certainly, there were a couple of unfortunate incidents just within our society that have happened in the last little while, the death in the PDD home and the unfortunate murder in the Alzheimer's unit. This is where it almost becomes a very, very intimate inquiry. It would be like a public inquiry. You go step-by-step. However, they just don't have any teeth. So I would like, I think, a comment on that. If you think that you might eliminate it, what would you replace it with? If you don't eliminate it, can you give it some authority?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've got to look quickly to make sure the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek isn't in the House before I comment on potentially eliminating the committee that he chairs.

I did answer some questions yesterday, I guess, with respect to the Health Facilities Review Committee and its role with respect to the Pembina Village situation, and I think that situation can outline where it is effective. That committee did a report in 2004 on Pembina Village. The health authority and the operator responded to that and had an action plan, and then a review report was done following that. To say that it's toothless – maybe it doesn't have a hammer; it can't shoot anybody. But the fact that it does a report and that those reports can be public is a very strong incentive. The Capital health authority, for example in this case, now has an audit every year on those facilities, follows up on those reports, and those reports are a useful tool for them in terms of looking at the provision of care. That's very important.

3:30

Now, having said that, we are talking with all health authorities about governance and accountability. I am talking with health authorities about the provincial framework in which they operate as part of the health team in the province. Part of that is the accountabilities that they have directly to the ministry and a whole role of assurance that the provincial government has with respect to quality of care. That's not just with respect to acute care; that's with respect to long-term care, the full continuum of care. We're talking to the health authorities about that role.

As part of the review I would anticipate that we will look at the role and mandate of the Health Facilities Review Committee and make sure that it has the right mandate to do the proper audits and the right skills to do the proper audits of health facilities and then fits into a follow-up role, whether it has teeth and whether those reports are public reports, whether the responses of those reports are required to be public so that there is an accountability mechanism that's there. That's clearly what we're talking about right now in terms of the governance roles. It hasn't got the Health Facilities Review Committee, so if they read Hansard, they'll be a little bit surprised, probably. But that's clearly where we're going with respect to all of the health authorities with respect to the role of assurance that they need to measure up to, that they need to be accountable for in public. There are some interesting discussions that might come out of that with respect to what types of things ought to be reported and be posted, whether on a website or otherwise, and then how we can measure against those.

I say the word "measure." I did miss the measurement question that was asked earlier, so I'll just quickly tack it on to say that one of my banes in the whole process of accountability and business plans has been this proclivity to measure ourselves by what we counted yesterday. I'm a big believer that you have to have measurables that are not just the countables, but you need quantitative as well as qualitative measurements. So as we go forward, it would be my hope that we could bring that into the process.

The Chair: Hon. member, the time has elapsed.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm pleased to start my second round of 20 minutes with the Minister of Health and Wellness.

The Chair: Do you wish to go 20 minutes more?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please.

I think what I'll do is just start out by repeating the questions that I ended with. Oh, you've answered them. All right. I'll check the Hansard.

The next piece I wanted to talk about – and this is kind of, I think, the second- last piece of health workforce planning – is around international medical graduates. This is a source of real frustration for me because I represent a really ethnically diverse community, and I have a number of people fitting that stereotype of not only, you know, doctors trained in other countries who are driving cabs but also nurses who've been trained in other countries who are cleaning toilets. It's just so frustrating, and I'm sure it is to the minister as well.

One of the things that I have been told is that we may have a system that has unnecessary red tape in trying to get people through. I think we are all trying to achieve a level of safety in credentials, but I'm wondering: have we gone back on this system? Are we really requiring just what we need, or have we managed to add a bunch of flourishes and frills and extra buttons and bows to this that are just making it difficult for people to qualify or to get them into that stream that we need to get them into to get whatever upgrading they need and then get them on the floors?

We the Alberta Liberals believe that international medical graduates are an immediate solution to physician shortages. I am really uncomfortable with the idea of stealing doctors from other countries or even from other provinces, but there is an existing pool of international medical graduates already in Alberta, and they would like to contribute.

So is it possible to increase the number of residencies available for international graduates? I know that the number has increased substantially from when I was with the Medical Council of Canada, which was 10, 12 years ago. Based on what I was told, I think during a meeting with the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the number is certainly higher, but I'm thinking it could be higher still.

I think this is one of the policies that the minister was talking about last fall during the leadership race. He's now in the position of Minister of Health and Wellness. Has he followed through and put some more – I don't want to say fast-tracking because that sounds like we're skipping a step, but I think we do want to make sure that we're only requiring what we need to require. Could he comment on that?

The Alberta Liberals also support the establishment of an international medical graduate co-ordinator. This is an individual, usually, or sometimes a small office. It exists in Saskatchewan if you're looking for a model to compare with. They offer free courses and advice to international medical graduates to help them prepare for medical licensing exams. I would like to see the minister commit to this initiative as a one-year pilot project. It essentially seeks out those international medical graduates and helps them to understand what courses would be required and where they could get them from.

My last point on this is: we've got to understand that these people are working. They've come here. They've got their families here. They're not sitting around waiting for this to happen. They've all got jobs, and they're working, so to expect them to give up whatever income they have and go back to university for four years or two years is an impossibility.

Why can we not offer some of these upgrading courses either online or some combination of online and in person to correspond with shift work? Offer them at nights. Offer them on the weekends. But why do we have this just incredibly narrow idea that it's Monday to Friday, 9 to 5? We need these people. We could get them online faster. Why are we not working with them in a more creative way than simply saying: "No, here's how you have to fit these requirements. You've got to go Monday to Friday, 9 to 5"? You know, it doesn't work.

So I'll let you respond to me about the IMGs, and then we can keep going.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is a very important area for Alberta, not only because we've got a strong group of Albertans who could make a stronger contribution and want to, to the benefit of their community and growth of their community, but because we need their talent. They have more to offer, and they want to offer it. Significant progress has been made. There are now, I believe, 48 positions for international medical graduates, so that's up very significantly from the zero that would have been in place when the hon. member was on the medical council she referred to. This is significant improvement.

We could benefit from more residency positions and, in fact, bring more people in in a number of different ways or use the talents that are here in a number of different ways if we can resolve some of the issues with respect to the placements that they need for residencies, the prefectures and the mentors that they need to assist to do the residency programs. So we're working on that side of the strategy as well.

One of the things that I started to do when I was the minister of advanced education – and we're continuing to work on that now – is what I call the pathway. Not every medical graduate or health care professional graduate from wherever they might have graduated wherever in the world comes with the same credentials, so you need to be able to do a prior learning assessment and credential assessment and then be able to create the pathway. Those individuals have to be able to see how they get to their destination from where they are. Then we have to make sure, as I referred to earlier with my work with advanced education, that they have the bridging programs that are necessary to allow them to move down that pathway to the destination.

So the first critical issue is: can they actually achieve the destination? If they can't, they should be told that, and we should have the opportunity for alternate destinations. So if you've trained someone in the medical profession but you're not going to be a doctor here, could you apply your training and your expertise in some other medical field; as a physician's assistant, for example?

So that's one of the pieces. But it's clear that we need to do a better job of the prior learning assessment and then the pathway and the bridging programs to make it possible to achieve those goals. I can tell the hon. member that I've met with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and other colleges, and I'm going to be meeting again very quickly as soon as we set it up with them. I've also met with the deans of medical schools on this specific issue of how we make sure that there's an objective process to credential, that we know what the issues are – you know, identify deficiencies if there are deficiencies – and then have programs in place to overcome those deficiencies on a reasonable basis. That's critical to IMGs.

We can be quick to say that we have unnecessary barriers to success, but one example – and I don't know this for certain, so it's considered an anecdotal concept – is that family physicians in England may not have the obstetrics and gynecology piece, so to come here as an international medical graduate in a family practice in a rural setting, for example, there might be a course that's needed. But you're absolutely right. That course could be done, perhaps, online. The methodology of delivery has to be adapted so that we have the value of the person practising while they're upgrading whatever the deficiencies might be. We can do that under some of the designations we have. Under the part 5 designation, for example, we could have somebody come in and practise, and then we could do the upgrade piece while they're practising.

So those are part and parcel of what we're talking about in the workforce strategy. But, again, we're not waiting for the strategy to come out before we start on it. I started meetings in that area already.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Before I forget, Mr. Minister, I know that the issue of electronic health records is going to come up with the next speaker. I think Linda Miller, who handles that section for you, is upstairs, so if there was an opportunity to bring her to the floor for this. I just want to give you a bit of warning that that one is coming in 10 minutes, so she can take her time getting down here, but just so that she is handy for the questions that are coming.

International medical graduates. I agree that there are a number of parts to this. One is the credentialing. But, you know, we've had a foreign qualifications branch here in Alberta for a long time. I was working with it in '89, '90, '91. We have to either resource this appropriately or get better at it. It seems to take us forever to figure out what the qualifications mean from any given university. Somehow there are much more improvements in the systems that we could be doing there. How many times do you have to go back and examine somebody graduating from the university of – let me make it up – Timbuktu? We've just got to get faster at this. Whatever is necessary.

So it's the credentialing, it's the training, it's the testing, and then it's the residencies. That's another piece of this where we need co-operation. My understanding is also that we're short of some of the senior doctors who would usually take that mentorship position and train those residents as they move through that system. I know that generally what's happened in the past is that there are X number of residency positions, which is one or two more than the number of graduates you're expecting to get out of the given teaching institution. I know that we've been trying to increase beyond that to account for international medical graduates who could be around in the pool, but I'm still told that the residency spots are limited as well, and we need to look to that.

That was the last piece on that. But thank you for the information. I'm glad to hear it's working ahead. It's just frustrating.

The next piece I want to talk about is working conditions and retention. I think that this is especially apparent to us in rural areas, and we've really seen that, for example, with special cases like Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie, where the ability to actually retain the health care professional once you get them into a particular institution is increasingly challenging. I think that's around, you know, stable, predictable funding and long-term planning, but it's also around working conditions and lack of professional leadership, flexible scheduling, recognition for expertise and experience, and if I may add, child care spaces. We have a lot of health care professionals who are women who have primary care duties for children who are extremely frustrated because they would like to work and cannot get child care. I cannot see why we are not putting child care spaces into every health facility that we have and, certainly, any new ones that we're building. We've got to be able to get ahead of this one.

So the Alberta Liberals have talked about a health employer innovation fund to support employers to develop and implement creative retention programs. We would suggest that the money would be available to either employees or health provider groups or unions to develop and implement ideas on improving the work environment or workplace practices or community involvement or quality of care. Of course, I would love for the minister to commit to that idea and establish that fund, but can he talk a bit more about working conditions?

I'll just briefly refer back to the stats that I was using and the questions that I did ask the minister previously, which really frighten me. Those were the ones where we had the number of – and this is a report actually tabled from the ministry itself – days of sick leave taken by registered nurses in regional health authorities between 2001 and 2006. When we look at the '05-06 year for Capital health, for example, 47,152 days of sick leave; Chinook, 7,183 days of sick leave; Peace Country, 5,592 days of sick leave. Again, it's the same example as with the doctors. If we could just get the nurses healthy and staying on the job, we wouldn't need to find so many nurses. So can the minister talk about what he's doing specifically to address workplace conditions and whether he would be willing to look at a health employer innovation fund?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. With respect to working conditions, obviously working conditions are a very important part of the retention strategy. They have to be. The best place to get a worker is the worker you already have and make sure that they have the opportunity to have not only an interesting job when they go to work so that they can be excited about going to work but that the workplace is safe and productive. So that's got to be a critical piece of what we do: to take a look and encourage our RHAs to take a look at why they have the work time loss that they have and what we can do about it.

Now, obviously, the industry is a very labour-intensive industry, so people are going to be sick. Those that are in hospitals operate in an environment that has a lot of viruses and diseases, so it's not surprising if somebody might catch a few. I mean, it's like teachers that go back to school in September. They catch colds. You know, that's the nature of it.

But that's not to make light of the fact that we do need to make sure that it's part of the workforce strategy and it's part of what we do going forward. We take a look at what people are doing, whether their skills are being maximized, and therefore they have the excitement about going to work, as well as the safety of the workplace, so they're not straining their backs lifting patients, that they have the right supports and technologies so that they're not being ineffective in terms of the worker doing things that they shouldn't be doing or that someone else could be doing.

When I was first being admitted to the bar, Mr. Justice Côté, as he is now but who then was an instructor, used to say that you should put a sign on your desk saying: does it take an LL.B. to do this? Well, that's the approach we need to be looking at the workforce. Are we operating at our maximum level of effectiveness and making sure that if it doesn't require your skills to do a job, then somebody else should be able to do it, and you should use your skills to do the next job.

That's a little bit off your question, but I think it's a very important part of it because being healthy and going to work every day is not just about sickness; it's about wanting to get up and go in to work every day, being motivated to do it, and that comes from having an interesting work site, where your skills are valued and where the work you do is valued. That's the start of it.

The next piece is to make sure that it's healthy and that we're using the technology, we're using what we need to assist people so that they don't strain their backs. Then looking at the issues around, probably – I'm guessing, but I would think stress is probably the next indicator of job loss. Part of that is about making sure we have enough people, so that's going out and doing recruiting so we have more people because a lot of the issues around health are about people who feel overworked and overburdened and the stress from that. It's a very real stress, but it's also a wearing out that puts people in a position where they're vulnerable to illness. So there are a lot of factors that go into that, but you're absolutely right: those are important ones to address.

The team approach going forward, I think, is going to be very important to that, to make sure that we have workforce teams to help reduce the workplace stress.

The child care is an important one. I am surprised that employers would even need an innovation fund to assist them in understanding that if you want people to come to work, you have to identify the barriers to success and deal with them. I think that that is happening.

But that's, certainly, again, part of the overall strategies that we have to look at to make sure that we can get – particularly in rural areas, if we want to use the talent that's available in a lot of rural communities to its fullest extent, you have to make sure that the educational opportunities are there so that somebody who could be a nurse can get the course from Grant MacEwan College but in their own community online or from Northern Lakes College or whatever. So making sure that the educational opportunities are there and making sure that the other barriers are dealt with.

Child care is obviously one of those. Two of our RHAs, I'm advised, are looking at options with respect to child care initiatives in their facilities. But that's something that is part and parcel of the discussion and has to be looked at broadly. That's not something that I would suggest should be institutionalized; it's something that any good employer ought to be looking at and saying: if I need to maximize the value of the people I have, what are the barriers to success in my particular area? They're educational. They're child care. They're technology. There may be other barriers that should be looked at.

Ms Blakeman: I appreciate all of that, but it's not happening, and that's why I'm suggesting an employer/employee health innovation fund, because what I was seeing was them going: yeah, yeah, we could use, you know, a child care facility here.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. I understand that you want to exercise the 20 minute option as well?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, please. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to join in the debate on the Health and Wellness department budget today. My focus is going to be specifically on Calgary and the Calgary health region and some questions around that. We have, of course, a huge issue in Calgary in that we had a health care system that was, I think, before this current spurt of high growth in Calgary broke out, if not inadequate at that time, certainly we could see that it was becoming inadequate to serving the size of the population in Calgary at that point.

The population served by the CHR has grown by over 300,000 in the last 15 years. There's a projection that another 300,000 people will move into the Calgary health region in the next 10 years. The population, of course, is continuing to age on the one end, but we also have this unique to Calgary condition of a baby boom on the other end because so many of the people that Calgary attracts are of child-bearing age because it is a great place to move to, build a career, raise a family, that sort of thing. But it means an awful lot of people. It means an awful lot of babies. Birth rates are on the rise:

20 per cent more babies born in Calgary in 2005-2006 than there were in 1995-96.

So we have impact at both ends of the age scale, and it's producing a major increase in demand for health services. In short, we have too few beds, we have too few doctors, we have too few nurses, we have too few of most other health care workers in the system, and the growth demands on that are going to be just incredible over the next little while. So I would like to talk about some of these things specifically, and I would like to start just with the notion of the bed shortage.

Now, in Calgary, if you go down there, you see an incredible amount of hospital construction. The Rockyview is being expanded. The Peter Lougheed is being expanded, I think nearly doubled in size. There's a significant rebuild going on at the Foothills. There's the new Sheldon Chumir downtown urgent care centre. There is also, of course, the new south health campus, which is scheduled to start building one of these days. I think the plan, as far as the CHR is hoping, is that they'll start site excavation this summer, and they want to have the pilings in in fall, provided that they get all the money that they need to build sort of phase 1 of the south health campus.

I wonder if the minister can tell me a little bit, first of all, about the construction plans, about the funding for that construction. In the case of the expansions to the Rockyview, the Lougheed, the rebuild at the Foothills we're seeing a pretty major impact from inflation cost escalation in the construction business. The construction costs are going up, and they're going up at a rate greater than the funding for escalation that the province estimated back in 2005 and added to the project funding. So what is being done about that, first of all?

Secondly, in terms of the south health campus, is all the funding in place to build that hospital? If not, what part is, and what part still needs to go into place? Is the minister aware that the Calgary health region is looking at this project, the south health campus, as quite a long-term project now, where they'll actually start out with phase 1 at sort of 60 per cent capacity, they're hoping, in a complete shell and then add about 100 beds a year for a number of years after that?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it's important to recognize, first of all, that every place in Alberta is growing – Calgary is certainly growing – and that's creating pressures. Part and parcel of where we need to go is how we are doing things differently in the future. It's not a matter of just doing more of the same because that's not only not going to be sustainable, but it's not the best health practices, in my view. We need to be empowering more of the primary care networks to work proactively in terms of health status in the community, all of which is to say that if we do this right, we don't need to continue to build the acute care capacity at the pace that would have been required on the old model. That's not to say that we don't need to continue to build acute care capacity.

I've had recent meetings with the Calgary health authority, and they're on track for their target. I believe it was 1.9 or 1.92 beds per 1,000. They're not there right now, but they're on track to reach that goal early and to be able to sustain that goal with the south Calgary hospital coming on.

Right now, for example, the Calgary Rockyview general hospital redevelopment will add 104 beds. The Peter Lougheed will add 110. The Foothills will add 104. There is considerable additional capacity coming on, and that's going to help them reach that target, particularly with the first phase of the south Calgary hospital coming on.

The south Calgary health campus was always going to be a phased project. It's important that part of their planning is to overbuild the first phase to make it easier to add the extra pieces without the construction that you see in some of the other phases as well. The project was approved in April 2005. The land is in place. You know all the details because you probably followed the public presentations that were made to the board. The reality is that there was $500 million, more or less, at the concept stage committed to the project. As we know, with projects there's a change between the concept and when you start to get the hard numbers. There's been about $105 million in escalation added, so the project is at about $657 million. Again, as you know, the public projections that the board has been talking about are in the $1.1 billion to $1.2 billion range already, and that will probably change.

The government is committed to the south Calgary health campus. That's a necessary part of not only the acute care build but the change in service delivery model because it's going to have a huge increase in the capacity for ambulatory care and those sorts of areas. So that's a project that's on track. They're moving ahead with it. We will have to work with them and continue to work with them with respect to how we implement that project and how it gets financed over the period of time, but nobody is backing away from building the south Calgary campus and building it on a timely basis.

There are a lot of other capital projects in Calgary, about $1.5 billion of projects in terms of medical centres and other centres not only in Calgary proper but in the Calgary health region to help with the really important project of changing the delivery model so that we can actually do health status as opposed to continuing always with the acute care. Not to say that we don't need the acute-care beds. We do need the acute-care beds, and that's on track.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, Mr. Minister. You're absolutely right. I mean, on one hand, if we were to continue to build out like the plans call for right now, you know, indefinitely into the future, that's not sustainable. On the other hand, a lot of this building needs to take place now in order to change the model of health care delivery in the Calgary health region so that it is sustainable going forward. Of course, a couple of other things that are needed are people to staff all these new facilities – and I'll come back to that in a second – and some new systems.

With that, I'd like to go to the electronic health records for a second, if I can. I truly don't understand this. The amount of money that's required to bring on the Calgary health region's electronic health records is really an astounding figure. It's almost $400 million over the next four years, I guess. You know, I'm not much of a computer geek either. I'm kind of a Luddite when it comes to all those IT things. So it's a sweet mystery of life to me. I don't know how close to Bill Gates the minister is, but maybe he knows more about it than I do.

I'm interested in this because it's pretty obvious that within the Calgary health region this is to be a comprehensive system where there is, you know, one patient, one record sort of thing. No matter where you interact with the system, once it's up and running, they can access your health records, that sort of thing. That's a good thing.

Of course, at some point Calgarians will get sick when they're visiting Edmonton and Edmontonians will get sick when they're visiting Lethbridge and people from Lethbridge will get sick when they're in Fort McMurray, that kind of thing. So I'm interested in the province-wide system if I can just move away from an exclusive Calgary focus for a second. My understanding is that the Calgary health region is sort of doing a piece of the Alberta-wide health records, Capital health is doing another piece, and then I think there's a third piece. The question basically is: what piece of the Alberta-wide project on electronic health records is Calgary health region doing, and how are they doing at it internally?

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. First of all, on the cost side, building an electronic health record is not a low-cost operation. It involves not only the cost of developing the technology but the cost of ever-greening it, the cost of encouraging people to adapt to it and to adopt it. So there are a number of pieces in different pockets. Again, in the trilateral agreement we have the physician office system program, which is to encourage physicians' offices to hook up because, as you mentioned, the electronic health record, to be complete, needs to have all the data that's necessary to be consistently shared on one accessible mechanism. So adding on the physicians is an important front piece.

There are three developments in the province. The Calgary regional health authority has been developing their health records, the Capital region has been developing their health records, and one called RSHIP is doing the other seven regions together, all of them working, hopefully, with respect to consistent standards so that the data collected is collected in a consistent way. The Capital health authority is currently tasked with building the portal so that you'll have access to all the health records wherever you are. The concept is that the data will be available whether you're in Edmonton, Calgary, Fort McMurray, Lethbridge.

You'll have access to pharmacy information. PIN was, I think, the first one up. It went up quite a while ago. It's not quite real time yet, but hopefully it will be real time soon. Right now it's batched and uploaded. So the pharmacy piece, the diagnostic imaging and other imaging pieces, the lab tests: all of that will be part of an electronic health record accessible anywhere in the province through the hub-and-portal approach. They built on existing systems because of the cost of starting afresh and doing a common system right across the province, which was one of the first questions I asked when I got into the portfolio. I gather it was easier, better, more efficient, and better for change management and encouraging people to adopt if you started from where they were and built out.

Calgary has got some front-end pieces. It's very interesting. I was down doing a tour not that long ago, and they were demonstrating some of the bedside order mechanisms and charting mechanisms that they have that are Calgary-specific but which probably wouldn't be used in some of the RHAs that are part of the RSHIP model, at least not at the front end of it, but they would be used in a quaternary care, high-technology centre in Calgary or in Edmonton.

So it is a costly process. We're making sure that the money is effectively invested. We're making sure that there's a quality standard being maintained so that while they're developing three records, they will talk to each other, that they'll be integrated and integratable. We have a provincial governance structure to ensure that.

The Acting Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. We'll move on to the staffing area if we can. I'm looking at the projections – and these are the Calgary health region's own projections – of the number of bodies they're going to need for workforce renewal over the next 10 years. It is truly staggering. In the next 10 years, inclusive of all contract providers and continuing care, Calgary Lab Services, and Carewest, the region will need approximately 37,000 staff and 3,300 physicians to meet growth and replacement needs. They're short 1,000 nurses today. They estimate that they will need 10,000 RNs and LPNs over the next 10 years; 7,800 health care assistants, personal care assistants, and nursing attendants; 9,500 support staff; 500 physios; 750 medical laboratory technologists. They'll need 1,300 primary care physicians and 2,200 specialists.

You know, the postsecondary education system just is not up to the task of turning out those kinds of numbers in any way, really. In fact, the estimate here, I think, is that the University of Calgary has approximately 100 fewer health care training programs and training positions compared to the University of Alberta. The gap between Calgary and Edmonton is met by expenditure from the CHR's operating budgets to employ bedside physicians and hospitalists rather than expenditure from the government grant for these trainees. So that's coming out of the CHR's budget directly, and that's an additional stress that Capital health, perhaps, doesn't face. There's no pharmacy program, no rehab or MR technology programs, so that increases their recruitment costs and all the rest of that. There needs to be a major commitment by the province of Alberta to support the Calgary health care education alliance so that they can gear up to meet these kinds of goals.

Now, I don't expect that over the space of 10 years, with the kinds of numbers of staff we're talking about here, we can ramp up, you know, the system to an extent that we can provide absolutely everybody Calgary needs, but we've got to make some movement in that area. I think it's safe to say that if Calgary has these kinds of needs, Capital health can't be too far behind, and while Calgary and Capital health are obviously more sophisticated, more technologically driven, more specialized health care regions than what you find in the other seven, the other seven are going to have some pretty significant staffing challenges, I think, going forward as well.

I wonder if the minister could talk specifically about the gap between the number of people needed in Calgary and the number of people that postsecondary medical and health education facilities in the Calgary area are capable of churning out, what can be done about that, and what the government is prepared to commit to.

Mr. Hancock: Well, I think what the hon. member is getting into, Madam Chair, is the numbers game that I was saying I'm reluctant to engage in. We know we need more health care professionals, and we're certainly ramping up on all fronts in terms of the educational processes. I mean, with the medical schools, I think Calgary was at 80 and the U of A was at 105 or 110 or something when I first got involved in this. They're now both up at 135. So a lot of those things have been addressed in terms of building capacity. A lot more has to be addressed. It's not just adding more seats. It's making sure you have the educators in place. So there's a lot to that strategy in terms of making sure that our advanced education system can make sure that there are opportunities for every Albertan who wants to get an education in the right place, and of course now my particular concern has shifted from the overall goal to the health goal in that area.

It's not just, with all due respect, about Calgary. You know, just as we had on the medical school match with the interns that were being talked about before, the idea that the number of graduates versus the number of residencies was matched right across the country, a graduate from a medical school in Calgary doesn't necessarily stay in Calgary. They go to wherever they get the specialty match or the residency match that they want and that wants them. So while we need to build the educational capacity – and we're adding spaces; we're doing all sorts of wonderful things in that area – it's a broader issue. It's not just a Calgary issue.

We're working with the health authorities and with the ministry of employment and immigration, for example, in terms of how we can recruit globally on a collaborative basis rather than on a competitive basis so that they don't use resources competing with each other. It doesn't make any sense for somebody to pay a hiring bonus in one health authority only to take somebody from another health authority and then have them ramp up and play that kind of ratcheting game. We've got to bring this together on a collaborative approach. Calgary has got to be part of that team. We'll work together to both educate Albertans for the jobs that we need and ramp up the educational opportunities, making sure we have the new educators in place that are needed to do that, making sure that the spaces are in place, and then looking at other qualified talent in the province and how we can upgrade that.

I mean, one of the biggest pressures is not going to be the nursing and the doctors in the future. It's the personal care aides. It's the people at the entry level of the system who are the care attendants who are going to be difficult to get because we want them to have certain skills, but their pay level doesn't recognize the fact that they can cross the street and work for a fast-food outlet at a higher pay level. So those are the areas where the real issues are going to be in terms of being able to recruit people. Quite frankly, where we're going to be able to bring in, I think, others without worrying about whether we're depleting the health resources of another country or another jurisdiction is to bring in some of the entry-level people.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm sure the Member for Calgary-Currie is looking forward to his next at bat. In the meantime if I can just pick up where I was leaving off, and if we can hang on to Ms Miller. Thank you.

We were talking about working conditions. If I can just argue a little bit with the minister, who didn't necessarily see why we'd need an innovation fund, that surely employers would just see what needed to be done and do it. But, in fact, that's not happening.

At one of the places I was in in Grande Prairie, they indicated that they were sort of double- and triple-shifting their nurses, and then they said: you know, there are nurses that are here that would love to come in and work that shift, but they can't because they can't get anybody to deliver child care especially on shift. To me it would only make sense, as the minister says, to offer the child care spaces in the hospital that could cope with the shift work, but it's not happening.

So I still want the minister to consider the idea of this innovation fund because I think often hospital administrators go: I can't possibly consider, you know, putting however many dollars, $50,000, into redoing a space to meet the requirements for child care space when I have so many other draws on what we need to spend money on in this particular facility. An innovation fund might be able to help them consider that.

I'm going to move on a little bit. We know that high school is where a lot of young people make up their minds about what they're going to do, what their career choice might be. Again, we have a Liberal policy about developing a provincial strategy aimed at increasing awareness of health care as a viable career amongst those high school kids. I mean, sometimes you see these trade fairs – and some schools are very organized about it – and they recruit and bring all kinds of people in. But I think that this is another piece of that workforce puzzle, to direct some energy towards presenting health care as a viable and interesting choice for high school students, so I'd be interested in the minister's feedback on that.

Now, I also note that on page 181 of the Health and Wellness business plan, right at the top of the page there, it's talking about workforce, and it says, "The challenge of workforce shortages is compounded by the fact that the average age of health care providers is increasing and many are nearing retirement age." So I'm wondering if the ministry has any particular plans, specific plans, that are in place or that are going to be put in place within the next period of time that would be addressing attrition rates?

Do you want to answer those, and then I'll move on to electronic health records? Okay.

Mr. Hancock: Madam Chairman, the whole issue of doing things in the workplace – really, you need to be flexible. I don't disagree that it would probably be helpful if there was a fund in place that people could draw on, but the fact of the matter is that it doesn't take a brilliant executive to look at the overtime budget and find $50,000 to put in place a child care space. So what we need to be doing is working with health authorities and other employers to think about how they deal with their issues.

It's not all a question of more money. I mean, yes, there's a role for incentivizing that, but we need to look at the overtime, for example, being paid and say: are there other resources and, if so, you know, how do we do it? I'm going to say something that might get me in trouble here, but not all of this can be dealt with at the bargaining table. With health care workers we've got to be talking about workplace in a broader context so that we can make sure that a health care professional can use the full scope of their practice and deal with that. That would enable, I think, if we looked at it in a broader context, some of these workplaces to really look at the things that will enable that to happen. Then we can talk about how we resource if there needs to be some resources to do it.

I would argue, without knowing anything about it, that the cost of putting together a child care space in a health care facility is not the barrier to success. Surely, another $50,000, or whatever it would cost to put that in, is not the thing that's keeping somebody from doing it. So that's part and parcel of the discussion we need to be having and saying to people: you've got to be thinking about your workforce and the people who are around you now that could be employed in your workforce. What are their barriers to coming in? What's going to bring your workforce in on a daily basis? What's going to make it possible for you to recruit the talent that's in your neighbourhood? Because that's the best source of people. That shouldn't require us to provide a lot of incentives, but I'm happy to work on the incentive side if that is what's needed. I would argue that that's not a huge cost. That's just thinking about who you're working with and what the barriers are.

We do work on the high school side. We work with Careers: The Next Generation. So we're working at making sure that health information and health care professions are part of the package that people have. I can tell you from the advanced education side that the student ambassadors that went in with the tools that they had are working on that.

You know, the easy answer always is: well, let's put more information into the high schools. I'd be happy to work with Education in terms of how we can make sure that more information is available, but it's not really about information because most of the high school students that I'm aware of have access to much more information than anybody ever had. I mean, I know that my own daughter, who has just finished her first year of university, coming out of high school, could access the information, had the access to it. What's really needed is how you use all this information to define what a pathway might be. So those might be questions you may want to ask the Minister of Education with respect to how we use the information, not how we get them more.

Keeping older workers, a retention of the workforce as people are aging, and attrition: part of that, again, is about how we keep the job exciting, about making it challenging for people so that they'll want to continue on. I think that in a number of workforces where they see people with early retirement, that's part of the problem, part of the issue.

The other one is, again, equipment. I mean, we've got aging workforce and an older and heavier patient population. That's leading to the back strain issue. Again, I keep going back to that, but it seems to me to be almost a no-brainer that when you have those sorts of mixes, you can really make it easier for people to go to work if you provide them with the right tools, those sorts of issues. So retention is about making people want to come to work, about making sure that they're compensated fairly.

For most people it's not the money package. It's about the excitement and the challenge of the job, that as health care professionals and technologists they can actually do the work that they want to do and see the results that they want to see and be part of the health care field and be successful. But we need to provide them with the tools to do that. So I think for the retention strategy it's not just about a big pay packet; it's about making it exciting, making sure that they can use their full scope, making sure that they interact with the health care teams so that they can actually achieve outcomes that they can see and feel and touch and go home at night saying: I did something useful.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I agree that that's a good long-term goal. I'm a little concerned about how we get from where we are to there, especially given the problems that we're having with attrition and workforce retention and recruitment. I mean, we need sort of six-month goals, one-year goals, three-year goals, five-year goals. What I'm hearing you say – and I agree with the principle of it – you know, good three- to five-year goals, but how do we get there from here?

I want to talk about electronic health records briefly. You gave a bit of an explanation to my colleague, but I'm looking for an update of where we are. This is one of the key pieces in the government platform. I'm happy to hear from the individual staff person or through the minister, whichever he wants. But this is touted as a key piece of how we're going to address some of those health care pressures. So where are we with this?

When I was involved with the Health Information Act review – and, you know, I think that's got to be three years ago – there were a couple of major pieces that were left undecided because there was supposed to be an additional or a second Health Information Act review committee, which was never called. So some of those very large issues are still floating around out there. Are we looking at a follow-up committee here, and if so, when? What is the actual status of where we are? Because at the time it seemed like we were really leading, that we were at the forefront of that whole pan-Canadian strategy. I don't know what happened, if we stumbled or just got quiet, but it all seemed to kind of drop off the radar screen for a while. So I started to think, uh-oh, problems. I'd like to know where we are with that.

I'd also like to know if we're still looking at electronic health records that are essentially hospital based. It's the results of what happens to you in the hospital: admission, the various tests that you've had, what the diagnosis was, lab results, et cetera. Is it going to include family practice medical records? Different from electronic health records, but now we're talking medical records. When would that come online? Will lab tests or tests ordered by a family physician or a family clinic also be part of that electronic health record or electronic medical record? Finally, what about specialists' records? Do they get pulled into the mix too? I think people have got it in their heads that it's everything, and my understanding of it was that it's actually segmented and that we shouldn't be expecting that everything is in fact online.

So if I could get an update on that, and then we should have time for one more exchange. That would be great.

Mr. Hancock: Well, on the segmented records, clearly, there was a concern about the question of medical records versus health records. I think that's been overcome. We'll have an electronic health record. Obviously, doctors will have more information on their file in their office about their patients than will need to go on a common health record, actually, because a specialist doesn't need to know all the personal information that a person might share with their doctor. That would be one of the concerns that doctors had with respect to the medical health records. But AMA is on the governance committee, and I think we've overcome that issue and have a common sense of what information needs to be available on a common electronic record.

By 2008 we're fairly confident that 100 per cent of lab will be on, that 75 per cent of diagnostic imaging will be on, that 100 per cent of drugs dispensed will be on, and that 25,000 providers will be on. We hope to move doctors – what are we at? – 67 per cent of doctors' offices are on now. With the new targets we should be able to get up to about 80 per cent this year. So we're on a good track to be able to say that all Albertans will have a viable electronic health record by 2008, that that health record will have virtually all of the data that is needed for any of their health care providers to be able to deal with them on a consistent basis regardless of where they access the system. It won't have all their personal data that they might want to share with their own doctor with respect to some things that should not be on the broad electronic health record.

The Health Information Act will be reviewed. We're aiming at the spring of 2008 for the review of that.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm so looking forward to it.

I think what I'm going to do is follow up with some specific written questions on this issue. I know that there have been some concerns expressed recently about: are we going to achieve that in a safe way? I think there continue to be issues around the security of people's personal information, but what I'll do is follow up with written questions on that.

What I would like to do at this point is start on some issues around mental health. I thank Ms Miller very much for coming down to give us some up-to-date information on that. On mental health the minister has introduced legislation on community treatment orders, which is creating a situation where individuals with mental illness would end up with basically a court order to follow a treatment plan or face involuntary hospitalization. I argue that even supporters of CTOs agree that they will only be successful if there are increased community supports available. What available supports within the community are going to be added? What additional support can we expect? In addition to that, what steps are involved in integrating these mental health services into the overall health care system in the province? That's partly to do with that we've had mental health segregated; we've had it added into this; we've put it under regional health authorities. It has kind of bounced around the province. So where is the integration of that?

If you look at the estimates on page 203, line 5.0.12, mental health innovation fund, I'm wondering what best practices, what reports, what standards the RHAs are using to develop local initiatives with the funding from this mental health innovation fund. I'm assuming that you already have some idea of how they're going to use that, so what's being contemplated there?

How will the success of these initiatives be measured to ensure that they actually are improving services for the mentally ill? I'll tell you that my greatest fear is that that legislation passes and we don't get anything more, that we don't get another treatment bed, no new beds in the psych wards, no new beds in community treatment and support, no new enhancement for the not-for-profit agencies that offer community supports, that they don't get anymore money. I just think that that would be the worst of all possible worlds.

Beyond the three years of this $25 million mental health innovation fund what other plans are in place for long-term funding of mental health? Is there funding for preventative mental health services such as counselling and for the development of community networks? What additional supports is the minister allocating for these not-for-profit groups who provide services and supports directly to Albertans with a mental illness?

I'll let you answer those, and then I'll shift gears slightly.

Mr. Hancock: I think those are very important questions, Mr. Chairman, relative to the CTOs because, obviously, CTOs are a very important tool to be able to assist people who have mental health issues and make sure that they're dealt with on a timely basis as opposed to waiting for them to crash, not only hurting their quality of life and impacting their families but using a lot of the acute care budget in health authorities with respect to then getting them back into commission. So part of the resourcing, obviously, is already in place if this can be used appropriately, because by interceding earlier, you'll be able to save those resources that are being eaten up now. Aside from that, there's an additional $290,679,546 going into the mental health funding allocated to the health authorities for mental health purposes – and that's being allocated across the regional health authorities – and an 8.6 per cent increase, I believe it is, to the Mental Health Board.

Mental health is an area that needs more focus. Obviously, that started in the past with the Mental Health Board's policy plan and then last fall with the announcement of the children's mental health strategy. The $75 million innovation fund, which was there over three years – I will resist the temptation to comment on being asked what an innovation fund is going to be used for because the purpose of an innovation fund is to encourage innovation, which means new ideas. Clearly, we need to engage the community in the whole area. I mean, we need assertive treatment availability in the communities, and some of the resources that are going out will have to be used for that to support the process.

I've already started the process of engaging the mental health alliance, the Canadian Mental Health Association Alberta branch, and others to help monitor and comment on the implementation and provide advice as we go along as to how we're doing with respect to achieving availability of resources in the community. So we're going to set up a process as we go through this not only to bring in the community treatment orders but to make sure that the health authorities know that they need to have a delivery model in place to back it up and that we will be not only using our own assessment but talking to the community advocacy groups to make sure that we have a good understanding of how we're impacting the individuals in the community.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I don't think I'm very happy with what I'm hearing because I'm not hearing that the supports and resourcing that I was hoping would go – I mean, there's a certain amount of money that's extra here, but how is it specifically being allocated to those not-for-profits?

The Chair: Your time has elapsed.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a number of questions, and I think that rather than do a whole bunch of preamble, I'm just going to throw out some comments and some questions. Some of them relate to things that I've already heard, and some are my own.

Back to the health records. I have a concern that the company that would be in charge – and I am totally computer and IT illiterate – the company that will be doing the service, or server, could well be the same company that is also an insurance company. I would be concerned about my personal health records being shared with an insurance company. I realize that they all say that everything is private, but, you know, I'm from Missouri. You've got to show me because there are just too many little accidents that happen. Then in relation to that, too, what would the minister's feeling be about the personal choice of people to opt out of that plan, opting out of mental health records, not having your records in the big pot?

Ms Blakeman: The electronic health record?

Ms Pastoor: The electronic health record.

As for the new emphasis on the dollars for mental illness, it's certainly more than welcome, probably way behind the time. Where I have a concern is: what is mental illness? I think that we have a true DMS for what a mental illness is, but then my question would be: what about drug-induced mental damage, which is often not reversible? Is that a mental illness? How many mental illness dollars that would actually be used for someone with a true, diagnosed mental illness – how would those dollars go around that? Would that person perhaps be put under the health care?

Another concern that I have, back to assisted living and designated assisted living, et cetera, is that often these places do not have highly trained staff. They have what we call now health care workers, who kind of do everything. My concern is that when someone falls, they might hit their head. Maybe not everybody does, but if you hit your head and cut your head, you really bleed abnormal amounts. It looks usually a lot worse than it is, but there aren't people trained to do either a medical diagnosis or to actually be able to do that work on their own, and ultimately they end up calling 911. It's a huge, huge use or misuse of what I feel to be an ambulance service, whereas if there was somebody on-site at all times that actually had that extra medical training – and of course I'm referring to an RN, LPNs perhaps, but I don't think they have enough experience yet – who could actually handle that sort of stuff.

If that person had fallen and broken their hip, that could be diagnosed by someone who is a medically trained person, an RN, but they would be able to phone the doc and say: "Okay. I've got a broken hip here. I need an order for morphine or whatever just to keep them comfortable." Then the ambulance could come as a transfer, not as an ambulance service. You get six guys walking in. They've got their cardiac machines. They've got two or three guys that want to practise. So they come in and just do the whole assessment of this poor little person that only has a broken hip when we know exactly what they need. So I think in terms of the dollars that, in my mind, are being wasted because we do not have the legislation that would say, or however you would do it, that a medically trained person has to be on-site 24 hours a day. I think that it would save us a lot of money on the ambulance side of things.

He's making notes. I'll just throw a whole pile out.

The other one is the appropriate assessments. Again I'm going back to my mantra about wanting it straight across the province in terms of definitions and in terms of assessments. I'll just use a quick story. I had a constituent who wanted to bring his parents from Calgary to Lethbridge. The mother was extreme Alzheimer's and, basically, was bedridden. The father was in a wheelchair. They both had been assessed as long-term care, but when they came to Lethbridge, Lethbridge refused to assess them as long-term care because their definitions were different. They were going to end up in assisted living, at which point he really believed that they were not going to get the assistance that they required, and he had to leave them there. He was an only child, so it really was very difficult as a result of the assessment process. I believe those assessments should be equal across the province. I think it's imperative that families be involved in the assessments and that they're not being done by third parties.

There we go. That was five.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

4:40

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not medically trained or an RN, so I'm not even going to begin to attempt to address the question of whether mental illness is a true diagnosis or a drug-induced mental condition. That I'm going to leave to the professionals. The bottom line is that we need to have the quality of care and the quality of treatment available regardless of what the issue is.

Also, it points to one of the things that we really need to address; that is, to prevent damage. So when you talk about drug induced, I would rather get to the front end and try and reduce the number of people who are impacted by drugs. Well, I mean, you have to do both. Obviously, part of the problem – and your colleague from Edmonton-Centre sort of raised this – is that it's great to have long-term goals, but what are we doing now? The problem in the system is that we tend to do more of the what are we doing now and not enough of the long-term goals. If we don't know where we're going, we certainly are not going to get there with the immediacy issue. So I think it's important to start with the long-term goals, and then, yes, we need to know what we're doing to get along the line.

All I would say about the question of true mental illness or drug-induced mental illness: there's not a lot of difference to me. You know, we need to be able to provide the services that are necessary to make sure that they have the quality of life that they can have and that they get the medical interventions that they need to have so that they're not a danger to anyone else and they're not a danger to themselves.

With respect to assessment for long-term care that's a very important issue. We have a long-term assessment tool which is supposed to be utilized across the province, and we're rolling out definitions across the province. Hopefully, that type of situation will be a thing of the past. We should be able to do these assessments on a consistent basis across the province. Families would be involved in that assessment in terms of developing the care plan for the individual patient, but it should be able to be done on a consistent basis and used consistently not only across the province but even within the same region.

The question of whether you have a health care professional on-site as opposed to calling 911. I would hope that when we get into the whole governance issues and the issues of quality of care and assurance and those sorts of issues, one of those things that we would be asking health care boards and service providers is to use appropriate determinations with respect to the best use of resources. Clearly, it's a question of what makes the most sense.

In some cases, depending on the number of people you have and the number of potential for incidents, it would obviously make sense to have a level of health care professional, whether it's an emergency medical responder or an RN or a doctor, depending on the acuity level of the people in care at that particular place. That's not a decision, again, that you can or should make, in my view, on a rule-based process but, rather, empowering people to make the right kinds of decisions for the acuity levels of the people that they're serving and to make those decisions based on the most effective model.

Now, the problem is that sometimes those decisions get skewed by who pays. So that's the piece that we have to really deal with: to get people making the right decisions for the people they are serving regardless of who pays. I mean, obviously, if you call an ambulance, it's somebody else who's taking care of the cost, and that's what skews the decision-making sometimes.

On the IT side it's my understanding – and this has got to be critical – that security of information is extremely important. People have to have the assurance that their personal information is being cared for. But the fact of the matter is that there is a lot of personal information on servers and in the IT area now. So the standards are important. The contracts have to be strong. There has to be clearly defined criteria with respect to security. All of the security contracts, as I understand, are reviewed by the Privacy Commissioner to make sure that we adhere to that and the strict confidentiality rules. I mean, these are not small contracts. They're not going to leak the information across a boundary for a short-term economic interest with the penalties and the recourse that we have. In my view, we've got to get past this fear we have of putting out our information because it's so much more important to be able to have access to the information when it's needed.

A person cannot opt out of the electronic health record, but they can ask that their data be masked so that only certain people have access to it. Now, I'll be corrected if I'm wrong here, but what that means is that if I want to, I could say: well, you can put my data there, but if I show up in emergency and you call up my record, it may have a flag that says that you have to actually call my doctor to get access. Now, whether you want to do that or not I guess would be your own personal decision, but what we need to do is to make sure that people have a sense of the value of sharing the information so that they can have access.

We have situations, and I have personal situations, where you have an episode and you present in one place, and they do tests and they do all sorts of things. They determine things are fine and they stabilize you and then you get out, but you're supposed to go see your doctor another day and the information never arrives. You duplicate all the stuff and you go to emergency for another 11 hours. You go through all that, and when you're 90 years old, that's not a really good thing. So let's get over the fear of who's going to look at our information, and let's get the information we need on the system so we can actually provide the quality of care on a timely basis to the people that need it.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Just a couple of more things. I would really suggest that you look up the number of times that ambulances actually do attend at either assisted living or designated assisted living or whatever. I think they may be enlightening for you.

Just a final thing. Again it's because of this deregulation of long-term care. Is the minister of health thinking of handing over the responsibility of long-term care – and again it would have to be that whole continuing care package – to the minister of seniors? That then becomes this whole big kettle of worms. A lot of the people in continuing care are seniors, but some of them are 42-year-old people with MS. It really is so unclear.

I'll just use one quick example. We've got grandma sitting in the room. She may have had a stroke, so with a little bit of help from the people in her assisted living, they get her up. They get her dressed, they get her down to the dining room, and they put the food in front of her. At this point she's under Housing. She's had a right-sided stroke. She's a right-handed person, and she can't feed herself. Who's going to feed her? That now becomes care. So it's a very, very, very fine line and it gets all blurred and then it tends to go: "Well, that's not my job. That's not my job. That's not my job." Then they end up not being fed. So I'm wondering if there isn't some way of amalgamating that all under the minister of seniors.

Mr. Hancock: Well, that happens to be one of my favourite topics. I have over the years been consistently frustrated by this whole question of: is it housing or is it health? I think, really, we have to actually focus on: is it people? Take a look at the individuals involved and the continuum of care that's needed, right from living independently to being able to live independently in your own home with some type of modest assistance that you might need, or maybe not so modest assistance you might need if you can still live independently in your own home, to the old extended care model where you need such health assistance that you're virtually in hospital. But it's not acute care; it's long-term care. We really need to look at that. Now, I don't care whether that happens in Health or in Seniors. Personally, I think that we should look at the housing component and then add the health component, but that's just a personal belief.

As soon as I trotted that out there, I had a lot of people come back and say: no, it should be the other way around. I don't really care. What we need to do between the minister of seniors and myself and our staffs is sit down and take a look at how we do the continuum of care to make sure that the home care, the lodge care, the seniors' care – I mean, it really doesn't make any sense that people have to move to the care level as opposed to having the care level move to them except in specific circumstances. That's when you get to the really long-term support where you're not really leaving your bed or where the acuity level is so high that the health stuff is really more important to your living than the other issues of quality of life. That's what we need to get to.

You know, the question of whether it's in a health silo or a senior silo is not the important issue. The important issue is: how do we get to the place where we can deliver the right level of service to the right person and give them as much independence and quality of life as they possibly can have, consistent with the ability of the public system to support them?

4:50

The Chair: The hon. member?

Ms Pastoor: Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I was talking about mental illness, and I listened carefully to what the minister said in response to my colleague. I guess what I'm seeing is that there is quite a bit of money that's gone in here, but I cannot determine from what the minister is telling me as to what the money is being used for.

There's money in this innovation fund. There's money that went last year to this children's mental health fund which carries on. There's extra money to the regional health authorities. There's extra money to the Mental Health Board. What's it being used for specifically? You know, we need the specifics of how this is being used, but I also want to know: what is it? Who monitors it, and how do they monitor it? Who enforces what is supposed to be happening, whatever these outcomes are, and how is that enforced?

There's a lot of money here, and there is an accountability factor that needs to be in play. I understand what the minister is saying about long-term goals and short-term implementation. Still, there's a lot of money in this budget, and, specific to mental health, exactly where is it expected to go? What are the details of the program? You might want to give this to me in writing, and that's fine. Where's the money expected to go? You don't just come up with figures off the top of your head. You must have some idea of what this money was going to get spent on, so what was it going to get spent on? How is the monitoring of those programs going to take place, and how is any enforcement or review and adjustment process going to play out?

I also want to go back and pick up on something that you said in response to my colleague from Lethbridge-East around electronic health records. I have to disagree with you. I don't think it's just about: everybody has got to get over this fear. Those fears are real, and there are still problems in the system that have not particularly been addressed, particularly around the accuracy of information. I think that in some cases, what I've seen from studies, the inaccuracy rate can be as high as 40 per cent. Well, that's serious. Yeah, it's high, but that can fall into play, and this is not an easy system to get through when you try and find out what your personal health information is and try and adjust it. Frankly, you usually only try and get at that stuff if there's a problem.

You know, I have no reason to go and check my electronic health records at this point or to ask for any kind of health record. Nothing wrong. I don't see the problem. Why would I ask? Now, you know, if my mom falls, I'm going to want to know what went on there, and that's when I start to try and get the information, and there's a certain amount of reluctance that goes along with that. I understand why, but usually you're only trying to access that information when there's a problem.

Now, I will say that the Health Information Act has a better balance between capturing that information and using it and allowing it to be used and the individual's right to get at it and correct it and also to be notified and to be asked consent. But there are also huge issues about, for example, blanket consent and implied consent that come along with this, and the more we see the interaction between big pharma and marketing, the whole idea that your personal health information would be used for marketing, the more problems it presents for us.

So, you know, I'd like to be able to say: yeah, that's great; I can dismiss these concerns. But I can't dismiss these concerns. I think there still are issues there that we need to be addressing, and again I'm looking for more specifics.

The last thing I want to pick up on from my colleague's comments is around Capital long-term care projects. Now, in my constituency we do have the Polish – I'm sorry; I don't know the name, but it's being done in conjunction with Caritas on a piece of land that's by the Prince of Wales armoury, in between that and the Polish Hall on about 106th Street and probably 107th or 108th Avenue.

I'm wondering if I can get an update on three facilities. One is: what's happening with the Polish long-term care aging in place facility? How much money is committed? Over what period of time? When are we expecting it to open? What kind of commitment has the government got into it?

Also, the General hospital. I'm being told there are plans afoot there over the next period of time – and, again, what period of time? – to redo that and turn more of it into a long-term care facility. We have some specialized units in that facility. We have the Ming Ai, for example, which is Chinese, and all of the staff there speak either Cantonese or Mandarin. It's decorated in that way. The food that's served is culturally appropriate, et cetera. I'm wondering if any more of those special wings are planned for that facility.

Finally, I've been working with one of the Jewish communities, the local synagogue, about a piece of land they have behind the synagogue on Jasper and 120th or so. They're looking to – I think they've actually purchased an apartment building – renovate it for an aging in place facility for seniors. Is there capital money that we could be accessing for that facility as well? Now, that one at this point is still a twinkle in somebody's eye, but we certainly want to move in that direction, so how can they be accessing funds to assist them with doing this?

I'll let you answer those, that series. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to the last issue we'll get back to you in writing with respect to some of the specifics on the specific facilities. Some of it actually will fall into Seniors. For example, that last project would probably be a seniors' project as opposed to a long-term care facility. Those are some of the issues we were talking about before in terms of how those projects are funded, but I think it's probably better to deal with that in writing.

The Edmonton General continuing care centre. There's a project in place there to replace 94 beds and to provide an additional 26 beds, but I can get more detail to you on that.

With respect to the electronic health record we should be under no illusion that our paper records are better than our electronic records. In fact, the accuracy of the paper records is sometimes worse than the electronic records and not as available.

Ms Blakeman: It's one version. An electronic version is infinite.

Mr. Hancock: No, there's only one version. Any place that you happen to access the system will have a version. It won't necessarily all be compatible. It won't be available. The complete array of information that a health care provider might need to provide proper health care when you arrive in an ambulance will not be there. I don't want to sound cavalier, but an improvement of the quality of data is an important project, but there are five sort of criteria, five factors that need to be matched before our data can be entered into an electronic health record. I don't know if you've read any health records or not, but the electronic version is a lot more legible, so even interpreting it is a lot easier and better in lots of circumstances.

Being able to monitor some of that information so a health care provider being able to look at the information – there are a whole lot of advantages to the electronic health record that far outweigh the potential fear that a person might have about either the accuracy of their data or the loss of their data. That's the piece that we really have to come to terms with. A lot of work is being done. Obviously, security of data is important, but we continue to raise the fear that we're going to lose the data to somebody, that somebody is going to use it to market the product, that sort of thing. That's not the purpose of collecting the data, and that's not the use it's going to be used for. That's not to say that we shouldn't extract nonidentifiable data to do appropriate research and to help us improve our health outcomes. Again, that's one of the reasons why it is important to have a good electronic health record, so that we can get the right kind of data so we can do improvements. All you have to do is look at what Capital health is doing with respect to diabetes to see the benefit of that.

Mental health funding, the mental health funding that goes to the RHAs; for example, the $291 million that I was talking about. They use that for their forensic, for acute care beds, for treatment moves to community, outpatient, links with the schools. There are a lot of different areas. That will be set out in their health service plans, and we will be able to monitor it through their health service plans, and obviously we will be able to work with them in terms of their priorities.

I certainly think – well, I know – that as we go forward with the community treatment orders, we're going to be working with the RHAs with respect to their assertive community treatment programs and other programs that are necessary to enhance the service delivery in the community. So we will be auditing back on those service plans to make sure that they're doing it but also having input into what they're doing with the resources in the community.

We know what money is being allocated to each authority with respect to mental health, and we have the expectation and, in fact, the requirement that it be used in those areas. But we have regional health authorities because each community has some difference in terms of the types of service and the level of service in those areas.

Ms Blakeman: On page 186 of the business plan under strategy 3.2 it talks about:

Support the community-based implementation of the Provincial Mental Health Plan and new patient activity reporting requirements in partnership with the Alberta Mental Health Board, regional health authorities and other stakeholders.

\New patient activity reporting requirements and the community-based implementation of this health plan: could you give us some details on exactly what you're expecting that is, please? Then I'd like to go on to regionalization. I'll let you answer that.

Mr. Hancock: Why don't you go on to regionalization? When I get an answer to that, I'll either add it or I'll give it to you.

Ms Blakeman: On page 190 of the business plan, 6.9, it indicates that the minister is going to assess the efficiency of regional health authority operations. I would welcome that because part of my question is that we've never gone back and said: "Okay. We did these regional health authorities. Do they work? Was this actually a great idea? Did it save us any money? Did it deliver health care services better to more people, more efficiently? Did it result in better health care for people?" We've never gone back and checked that, and that's now in place for a good 10 years. I'm hoping that it is what I think it is: that the regional health authorities will be reviewed to see whether they have been more efficient and effective in improving health care delivery than what we had before. When can we expect a report out of that? What's the timeline that's involved with this? What are the resources that are being allocated to this?

Mr. Hancock: That is a work in progress, Mr. Chairman. First of all, my mandate letter specifies that we need to make effective and efficient use of the health care resources. Obviously, when you've got a $12 billion budget and growing, people are concerned about at what point it becomes unsustainable, if it hasn't already. As I said to the health board chairs at an early meeting, if we expect to be able to go back to the public to request more resources – and we will because we have growing populations; we have aging populations; we've got new technologies; we've got new drugs – to have the moral authority to ask for more, we have to go back and say that we are using the resources we have in the most effective and efficient manner.

We're engaged in a process right from the very top. First of all, board governance. Do we have the right skills and abilities on our boards? Do we have the talents? And this meets some of the objectives that the Auditor General has been raising relative to boards. As you know, there's a review of governance of boards, agencies, and commissions. Well, we're doing our own parallel one. We'll obviously dovetail with what they're doing, but I started right in January talking to boards about the need for us to do board assessments, the need for us to evaluate our skills and abilities and know whether we have the right mix of talent necessary to run operations of that magnitude.

So we're looking at board governance, but we're also looking at the accountability frameworks around it. As you know, there's a roll-up of health authority financial statements into the provincial financial statement. Well, in order to do that, you have to make sure that you're accounting on a consistent basis. You need to be auditable on a consistent basis. The expectation that the Auditor General will be the auditor for health authorities is there, and of course most – I think seven of the nine – have the Auditor General as their auditor.

You know, looking at best practices, that is a process. I've met with them a couple of times. For example, the minister will be meeting with the board chairs on a consistent basis, quarterly, to provide a governance structure for the system to make sure that the RHAs operate within a system. Competition is a wonderful thing, but collaboration, particularly where resources can be shared, is also a wonderful thing. So where we're doing health status issues or chronic care management or those areas, we need to be working more collaboratively.

This is an ongoing process but a very, very, high priority in terms of how we do. There have been some efficiency assessments that have been done in the health regions, and we're in the middle of that process. We're working with the health authorities as part of that governance model to talk about how they do best practices with respect to procurement and building a common procurement model. Of course, even the pharmaceutical strategy will come into that with respect to how we make best use of the resources on that side.

Again, I hate to keep saying it, but it's not so simple as saying, "We're going to do it, and then we're going to report on it, and it'll be done" because there are so many aspects to it. But the bottom line is that the overarching governance structure, both provincially and with respect to health authorities, is being examined and reinvented in consultation with the Auditor General and what his expectations are with respect to how we ought to be able to report and be accountable and what skill mixes we need for our boards, making sure that we're doing that, making sure that we have succession plans and renewal processes in place, and then making sure we have processes in place in terms of how we can work together to make the most effective use of the resources in terms of procurement, in terms of drugs particularly. That's sort of the overarching structure.

I'd be happy to give you periodic updates as we go along with it, but I don't have an answer for you to specifically say: here's the specific task that's being done, and here's the report you'll get, and it'll be done by June. Life doesn't work that way for me.

The Mental Health Board has a budget of $58 million now. They're, of course, the policy framework, so best practices, research, forensic program, those sorts of areas. Each of the health authorities, as I mentioned earlier, have specific budgets which they deal with in their service plans, and we can certainly give you more detailed information on that if you request it.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please. I'll officially request that.

One of my other issues – and this has been in the media quite a bit; it's around regionalization – is the fact that so much got devolved off to those regions, and we end up with what I've called a checkerboarding. The minister himself has referred to, you know, different capacities and different regional health authorities.

I think the sterilization unit issue that was in St. Joseph's hospital in Vegreville really for me brought to the fore the issue of a lack of monitoring and enforcement that comes centrally. It comes out of the Department of Health and Wellness. We did have that inspection branch in place, and it was dismantled. I don't see that it really appears in full force in the regional health authority. Is the minister planning a review of that particular episode? Would the minister commit to an independent review? Will he consider reinstating a centralized monitoring and enforcement module or branch or section out of the central ministry? I think that continues to be a huge issue. There will be more episodes that come up for the minister in the future, and they're going to relate directly to a lack of an effective monitoring and enforcement mechanism province-wide. It has got to come centrally. You can't do this piecemeal. It just doesn't work.

Comments?

Mr. Hancock: Well, form follows function, whether it's a piece in the provincial health department or how you actually do it is something that you develop after you determine what needs to be done. I think we'll have some learning from the St. Joe's situation. We've asked each of the health authorities to do a review of their infectious disease control, but I've made it very clear that I consider assurance to be one of the most important roles of government. That's a provincial government role, and we've got to work with our health authorities to make sure that they operate within a provincial framework and provincial standards.

5:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We will continue on with a few more questions. Let's talk about function because one of the problems in Calgary, of course, is the difficulty with which the system functions given that it's under an almost constant – well, they used to call them code burgundies, but they changed the name to status burgundies. There's a bit of, I think, irony in that because it implies that we've gone from an acute problem to a chronic problem now. We've changed it from a code designation to a status designation.

The minister may or may not know that I had the opportunity, for lack of a better word, to go into the Rockyview hospital in February and have my gall bladder out. For reasons that really are nobody's business but my own, they had to do it the old-fashioned way. Laparoscopic wouldn't work, as it doesn't in about, I think, 5 per cent of cases, that sort of thing, when you're having your gall bladder out. So that means that if you see me going like this, my scar is itching. It meant a stay in the hospital of about just a little under 48 hours, I think. In the entire time that I was there – it actually was a little more than 48 hours because it was over a three-day period – the status burgundy at the Rockyview started, you know, at 7 or 7:30 in the morning, and it typically went until 5 or 5:30 in the afternoon. So it has become the status quo, really.

Ms Blakeman: It's normal.

Mr. Taylor: Yeah, it's normal, and it shouldn't be normal. You know, the abnormal has become normal.

The system is looking at a 97 per cent or higher bed occupancy rate, and it's often above 100 per cent. Not to get back into the numbers game because I know the minister doesn't really like to go there and get that specific, but certainly there's a huge capacity and functioning issue which the Calgary health region is aggressively trying to address, some of it through capital construction, but some of it through some fairly innovative, imaginative programming. I wonder if the minister can tell us a little bit about projects that are ongoing to try and reduce the backup and the wait times in emergency facilities. Again, I'm asking specifically about the Calgary health region, but I think there's some application province-wide wherever you have, you know, long wait times and the lineups getting into emerg. So if the minister would, please.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. One of the urban myths of health, of course, is this tyranny: the anecdote. Everybody is an expert in health care because they've all been there or a friend has been there or somebody else has been there. Health care and education seem to be the two places that everybody is an expert at, and everybody has got an easy fix. The reality is, of course, that nobody has got that expertise and there is no easy fix. There's usually an explanation about any given incident, but you have to actually know the real details of the incident.

No, I don't want to know more about that. I'm glad you're fixed. I'm glad you're back. But the procedure you just talked about is a good example of the change because, you know, it wasn't ten years ago that you would have had to stay for probably five days in hospital for that kind of procedure, and now you're 48 hours.

We're doing a lot more things. I used to serve on the University of Alberta hospital board, and the difference between then and now in terms of the quantity of services that are being provided is exponential. People don't really appreciate how good a system we have. They didn't used to do hip surgery on anybody 70 years of age or older, and now they're doing hip surgery on 90-year-olds. We're doing some phenomenal things. We've got to keep that in sight when we talk about all the pressures on the system. There's a lot more happening, but that doesn't mean we don't need to deal with the system problems as well.

Emergencies have been identified as one of the problem areas. People don't like to wait in emergency for a long time. We need to be doing a number of things. Calgary has actually been innovative in some of those areas. Some of the people who present at emergency, for example, who might not need the full services of the emergency department can be seen separately now and streamed off. I've been promoting a concept that the emergency doctors themselves asked for, that Dr. Raj Sherman, who is the head of the emergency doctors, was talking to us last year about. Finally, I think it took a meeting of myself with each of the health authorities, in Calgary and in Capital, to say: you've got to talk to this guy and see if we can't implement some of that. The full-capacity protocol shouldn't be brought in as a long-term solution but certainly can help move people through emergency.

One of the problems is that you get people coming into emergency, and then they're determined that they need to be admitted to the hospital, but they haven't got a place to go. The focus of emergency is on the front door; it's not on the hallway, where the people are waiting. So the ability to move them into the hospital and into the care areas and free up emergency so that the doctors there can actually see the patients who are waiting: those are the sorts of initiatives that need to be taken.

The longer term, obviously, has to do with building more bed capacity, and that's in construction, as you acknowledge, at each of the facilities in Calgary now with more facilities coming on stream and the south Calgary hospital moving past the planning stage and into the development stage. So work is being done on the long-term capacity issues, some of it more immediate than others, work is being done on clinics out in the community so that the people who don't need to be in emergency aren't there, and work is being done in terms of the people who present in emergency moving through that and into the things. Calgary, as I understand it, is moving very quickly and will be announcing some changes to the ER strategy imminently to deal with their ER capacity.

Lots is being done. There are more people presenting. There are more services being provided. There's good care happening. There's more work to be done.

Mr. Taylor: I want to thank the minister for that answer because that does get to one of the issues that I did want to get on the table as far as our discussion and debate here was concerned, that health regions are in fact being very innovative and very imaginative and very creative around dealing with the capacity issues that they have. They need ongoing support, and certainly at $12 billion we're seeing a significant amount of support across the system. They need ongoing support from the provincial Department of Health and Wellness, and they need a commitment from the province to get them beyond this constant, you know, running to stay in place situation that they're in.

I want to ask the minister whether the department has a cancer plan for Calgary. When can Calgarians expect an announcement about expanding cancer facilities, cancer services? You know, the Capital health region benefits by having in-patient cancer care. I know that the minister is sensitive to my bringing up comparisons between Calgary and Edmonton. I suspect that he's probably a dyed-in-the-wool Oilers fan, but I'll forgive him for that.

This is necessary to do because Capital health does have in-patient cancer care provided and funded by the Cancer Board at the Cross Cancer Institute. There is not a similar facility or by any means an identical facility in Calgary. There's a lack of appropriate infrastructure within the CHR, which results in Calgarians not being adequately served.

Cancer is cancer whether you get it in Edmonton or Calgary or anywhere else in the province, although you may very well be referred to Edmonton or Calgary for treatment for that. I think that there needs to be an equitable, egalitarian approach to treatment. I would hate to think that my prognosis was worse if I came down with cancer simply because I'm a Calgarian than it would have been if I came down with cancer in the greater Edmonton area.

Mr. Hancock: Let me be very clear off the top. There's no evidence that I'm aware of that the care in Calgary is less effective than the care in Edmonton or any other part of the province. If the hon. member has any evidence of that, I'd like to see it because, you know, people do get good care and equitable care in this province.

Now, with respect to the cancer plan itself I met recently with the Cancer Board and the Calgary health authority together, representatives of those two, to talk specifically about the need for a service delivery plan in Calgary and to look specifically at what type of infrastructure is needed around it. Obviously, the Cancer Board has been advocating for a facility located on the west campus of the University of Calgary so that they can be collocated with the university for the purposes of good research and research outcomes. As the member will know, there's been an announcement of some colorectal screening programs at the University of Calgary which could be part of that, and of course the Calgary health authority is interested in their part of the cancer service delivery program.

What I've asked them to do is to spend the next 60 days to work together to talk about what the best delivery model is and challenge the Cancer Board to look at how future delivery should be modulated. You know, what are we going to be doing out closer to home for people so that they don't have to come to Edmonton and Calgary for treatment?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I'm having a hard time hearing the minister with the background conversation that's going on.

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has the floor, and it's difficult to listen with the background noise. Could we keep the conversations down?

Hon. minister, please proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. So there's radiation delivery, there is chemotherapy delivery, there's surgery: all component parts in the delivery mechanism. One thing that everybody agrees on is that the Tom Baker centre is not sufficient. The question is: what's the next best model, and should it be at the west campus or should it be part of the south Calgary health facility? That I've asked the two to come together on and talk in terms of some future delivery plan. Obviously, the capital request for a large facility in Calgary that would collocate both the research and service delivery for the Cancer Board is very high on the priority list. But before we move it up to the funding position, we need to have that understanding that they've got their heads together, and they've got the service delivery plan which will be the best service delivery plan going forward for Calgarians and others in the Calgary region and, for that matter, southern Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Is there any similar plan for mental health services in Calgary? Because, again, the same sort of discrepancy exists with facilities here in Edmonton that don't exist in Calgary.

Mr. Hancock: The new funding model that was put in place with respect to mental health has put more resources into Calgary with respect to mental health than previously were there. Obviously, there's a skewing of the system a little bit by the historical fact that Alberta Hospital Edmonton is in the Capital region and the facility in Ponoka is in, I believe, the David Thompson region. There was a move a couple of years ago to add a forensic facility in Calgary at the old Bow River Correctional Centre.

Mental health funding is now being distributed on a population base. Of course, that's slightly different than the Cancer Board situation because the Mental Health Board is now just into the policy framework and research, and the whole service delivery is in the health region. Calgary health region is getting a good share of the mental health package that was there because they do have more to build in terms of the secure forensic facility and mental health beds.

Mr. Taylor: Really only one other area that I want to explore, and I'll even apologize for doing this because again I'm going to make a comparison between Calgary and the Capital region.

An Hon. Member: Don't apologize.

Mr. Taylor: Well, I'm apologizing, hon. member, because I know that the minister doesn't like it when I go there. I mean, there's a fundamental rivalry at work here and all that, but there's a funding inequity. You know, when you boil it down on a per capita basis, Calgary health's funding is about $380 less per capita than Capital health's funding. Over time, over the total population that can make a difference. I know that there has been a classic argument that the population that Capital health serves is older and sicker and socioeconomically not as well off. Those factors certainly do make a difference, but the population of the city of Calgary and the Calgary health region is growing at a rapid rate, as you know.

When you break down key operating statistics from '05-06, Calgary health region is required to provide more home care hours of service, provide more MRIs, and provide more CT scans. It does a little less than Capital health on hospital admissions and discharges. On emergency department visits there's quite a significant difference there in that Capital health sees quite a few more emergent patients than Calgary health does. In-patient beds, including mental health, again, there was a 400-bed advantage in '05-06, if you will – and we're obviously in the process of addressing this in Calgary – in terms of available beds in the Capital health region, although Capital health is just about as capable of filling up all its beds as Calgary health is.

There is an inequity there. I think it does need to be addressed. I think that on a population basis an individual Calgarian should be funded to the same level for their health care as an individual Edmontonian is. I would just like to hear the minister talk to us about what he's going to do about that, defend the status quo if he can, you know, explain to us how we're going to get to where we need to go in the city and health region of Calgary.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, that's just about like saying that Calgary and Edmonton had equal opportunities last year and this year to get into the playoffs, and the Oilers, of course, made the most of that and went all the way and only lost in the last game, and the Flames just bowed out early. That's about as relevant a comparison as the comparison you just did on the funding side.

Calgarians per capita are funded on the same basis as Edmontonians per capita. There's a whole book and lots of people – lots of people – that calculate the numbers. There are 136 demographic groups, and they do it based on actuals. They take the numbers of the costs that are involved. If you're a child of a certain age, a male or a female, aged population: all of those are important to building the funding model. A child in Calgary gets funded at the same level as a child in Edmonton. An old person in Calgary gets funded at the same level as an old person in Edmonton. A person on social assistance in Calgary gets funded at the same level as a person on social assistance in Edmonton. So if you take the per capita funding model, they're funded equally per capita. They just have different demographics, and that's just a reality of life.

Now, that's not the whole story, of course. If you take a look at the model, Calgary gets $1.76 million on the population funding model and Capital gets $1.65 million on the per capita model, on the population formula. But then take a look at the import/export. Calgary has $56,373,400 of import and Capital region has $192,215,175 of import because the Capital health region serves the whole north, and the Calgary health region doesn't have that same obligation.

You know, there are a whole lot of things that go into these formulas in terms of the population funding model. I can assure you that the population is funded on the same basis regardless of where you are. There are adjustment factors, of course, the adjustment of the targeted funding, the mental health funding. In fact, Calgary gets $9.2 million in targeted funding, whereas the Capital region only gets $7.9 million in targeted funding. That's the stuff that you're talking about in terms of the province-wide service deliveries and those sorts of issues.

You can go and count a couple of things and say that it's not happening. The fact of the matter is that funding formulas right across the continent are complex, and they require a high level of staff to figure them out, but there is a global funding model. There is a mechanism for doing it on a fair and equitable basis so that Albertans have access to the same quality care on a timely basis without regard to ability to pay, that we hold so dear. Calgary is not being left out, shortchanged, or in any way diminished because somebody has a preference for Edmonton versus Calgary. It's not about parochialism. It's about how we take the dollars that we have, make sure they're allocated on a fair basis to the people of the province and to the RHAs which provide the service delivery model.

If you want to, have a look at the funding model and then come back. I've offered to share it with some of my colleagues who've raised these questions, and I'd be happy to have you, you know, go crazy, have a look at it. It's done fairly.

5:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In the last 10 minutes I'm just going to barrel through. I have a number of issues that we didn't get to, so I'm going to put them on the record and ask the minister to respond in writing.

I'm going to start with ambulance services. Now, a little historical vignette that I'm sure that the minister is familiar with, but in March 2005, one month before the Alberta municipalities were to hand over responsibility for ambulance service to the health regions, the ministry reversed its decision and put the plans to transfer services on hold indefinitely. So confusion, frustration, uncertainty, instability for the municipalities, and many municipalities had to consider plans to either increase taxes or cut services to adjust to this. The ministry is re-evaluating whether to proceed with the transfer when the pilot projects are complete in Palliser and Peace Country health regions. My questions to the minister are: when will the decision be made? When will the municipalities be informed so they know when they can move forward with a regional planning tool? When will the rest of us know?

As well on ambulances, I note that on page 202 of the estimates line 3.0.5 shows that the funding for municipal ambulance services remains exactly the same as it has for the previous three years. Can the minister explain why the decision was made not to increase funding to ambulances in any way, shape, or form? I would argue that this has not been a satisfactory circumstance, and I expected to see some adjustment in funding. So why no adjustment in funding at all? Does that mean nothing is going to happen? What's the deal here?

I would also like to know what the status is of the pilot projects in Palliser and Peace Country. What stakeholders have been consulted? Are the municipalities that are involved here involved in the decision-making process? You know, have you received feedback, positive or negative, from the municipalities about the management of the pilot projects? And, of course, the obvious question of: when will we hear?

I note that the Health Sciences Association of Alberta is expressing a great deal of frustration that the municipal ambulance program has been frozen at $55 million. I think this is going to result in recruitment and retention problems for us in that area as well.

I'm going to move on to pharmaceuticals. Page 26 of the government of Alberta strategic business plan and also page 181 of the Health and Wellness business plan show that implementing a new pharmaceutical strategy is a priority over the next three years. My question is: is the government co-ordinating with the federal government? Is the government co-ordinating with other provinces? Is the government co-ordinating with the medical profession to test and evaluate new drugs? Please give me the details on how this is working. I mean, clearly you're anticipating something. What is it you're anticipating?

The Alberta Liberals have long talked about a national purchasing program for pharmaceuticals. Is the ministry co-operating with the federal government and other provinces to establish a national purchasing program for bulk buying of drugs and more consistent coverage across the provinces?

I'd also like information about whether there was, in fact, a deal that will be implemented or has been implemented between all the provinces that nobody would implement payment of a new drug until everybody agreed to do it so that they could quit being played off against one another, which happens fairly frequently. I know that there was a deal that was being talked about there. Did that deal happen? If so, when is it being implemented?

A couple of specific questions about drugs. Where is the province on the HPV vaccine? A controversial subject. I certainly have some strong views on this, but I don't have time to express them. I'm wondering what kind of a program the government is anticipating. Are you going to go there or not? I'll get that from you in writing as well.

Avastin is another drug that was ineligible for coverage, and we've heard from a number of people that this was a real financial burden. Is that going to receive coverage?

Just moving on to another topic: neuropathic pain. I've had some correspondence with people who suffer from this, and they're wondering what can be done to help people like them. They certainly believe that it impacts their quality of life, and they can't get coverage for treatments of that particular issue, painful symptoms, et cetera. What's being done around that?

Health care premiums. The Alberta Liberals have been on the record for many, many years saying that eliminating health care premiums would be a tax benefit that benefits every single person in Alberta. It certainly benefits the working poor. It benefits small businesses because they wouldn't have to cover that additional cost of paying a share of the health care premium. I think it would benefit large-sector public employers, colleges, universities, provincial agencies that are also paying a portion of the health care premium. It did not disappear in this budget. I'm hoping to see some kind of announcement from the minister, or let's hear what his policy decision is on this. Is he in favour of the health care premiums, is he going to keep them in place, or is he looking for a way to move away from that?

I would argue that, you know, this is not a dedicated source of funding for health care. It goes straight into general revenue, so let's not pretend that this is directly connected to provision of health care services in the province. It's not. The money goes into general revenue. It's really a tax by any name. I think that if we cut those premiums, you could save all the money that it costs for you to administer the program and chase it down.

I just don't think Albertans should be paying premiums. Frankly, if the governments in Saskatchewan and Manitoba and Quebec and the Northwest Territories and other places can do without health care premiums, I think Alberta can too. It's time to go there. Time to go there, I encourage the minister.

As always I will raise the issue of midwifery. Numerous studies support the cost-effectiveness of midwifery services. It relieves pressure on hospital staff and facilities. I've been trying to get the province to cover midwifery services under health care since 1989 or '90 now. I'm not giving up. I'm going to raise it every year, and I'm going to stay elected until I get it. So, you know, there's an incentive for you, a big incentive for you. Come on, you can do it.

A full course of midwifery care costs between $2,500 and $3,000, and a normal delivery in a hospital is tagging in at about $4,100 now. It makes sense. It fits into the idea of full scope of practice. It's the right thing to do. It's a team approach. Let's get on it.

There have been all kinds of squeamish little hesitations in the past, and I'm just losing my patience for this. There should be a funding model in which consumer costs for midwifery care are covered under the Alberta health care insurance plan. I'd like to know what the reasons are for not covering it if you're going to insist on going there. It's been recommended by the Health Disciplines Board. It was recommended by the Advisory Council on Women's Issues when I was the executive director there. We are losing our midwives to other provinces for training and to practise. They really need to work with the department of advanced ed for a bachelor of midwifery program at the University of Alberta. When will the ministry look at doing that? How does midwifery fit in, or would it be included in the health workforce strategy that the minister has talked about?

I want to talk again about tobacco reduction. I would like to ask the minister and get him on the record: when will he introduce legislation to ban power walls? That's particularly important to younger Albertans. They've really gotten onto that. They understand it. It's their issue. It's a way to connect with them, and certainly it's been a way that I've connected with some of the students in my constituency. I've had them here doing rallies. We've had them introduced in the House. We've talked about their work on the BLAST teams during the cancer legacy act debates.

We need to do this. We need a province-wide ban on smoking in public places, and we need to ban power walls. The minister has just got to take leadership and go there. I suspect that the minister is already there, and for whatever reason some of his colleagues are not coming along. You guys have got to get on this one. You just look bad. You look really bad, and there's no good reason for you not to be doing this. All the facts are in favour of this. So ban power walls. Ban smoking in all public places, a province-wide smoking ban in public places.

Thank you very much.

5:40

The Chair: Does the hon. minister wish to respond?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I'd be happy to respond on some of those. I can tell the hon. member that I, in fact, have a tobacco-reduction strategy which is working its way through the process. We'll see what we see as a result of the process. I certainly have made no bones about the fact that I think that a minister whose job it is to advocate wellness has got to deal with the elephant in the room, so I'm certainly working on that process.

I hadn't anticipated an awful lot of time because the member had indicated that these were going to be quick-fire, and we'd write them down, so give me a topic.

Ms Blakeman: Midwifery.

Mr. Hancock: Midwifery. Midwifery is part of the workforce strategy. We need to deal with midwifery in the process, but as the hon. member will know and understand, it's not simply about a matter of public funding. It's about where they fit into the system and how they're accepted by the other members of the health care team, how we make it part of the continuum and deal with the issues that people have with respect to when it's a normal birth and when it requires something extra. That's part of the whole change in the workforce strategy, but midwifery is clearly a part of that workforce change as we go forward. It's got to be, just as physicians' assistants and nurse respirologists and all of those who can be helpful and use their talent in an appropriate way within the system.

Do we have more time? Give me another topic.

Ms Blakeman: Neuropathic pain.

Mr. Hancock: Neuropathic pain. Come on. An easier one than that.

Ms Blakeman: Avastin.

Mr. Hancock: Avastin is a very interesting question. One of the things we need to deal with with respect to drugs is the difference between faint hope or no hope and real hope. I moved very quickly to ask the Cancer Board to work with me on getting Oxaliplatin, for example, covered. We've done that because Oxaliplatin actually adds value in the cancer treatment process. But Avastin is a drug which, I'm given to understand, doesn't add very much value to the system. In fact, there are better treatments and there are better processes.

We've got to really come to grips with this and be honest with patients about what is real hope and what is false hope and be prepared to stand up on those. It's not a matter of funding every drug that comes along; it's a matter of looking at what the drug protocols are that actually make a real difference to somebody and funding those appropriately so the people have access to the drugs that they need that provide real hope.

I would love to get into that discussion about Avastin because we're getting cards and letters from all sorts of people. But when you talk to the people at the Cancer Board, they can give you a very clear and quick synopsis about what the difference is between what we did with Oxaliplatin and what we're not doing with Avastin.

Ms Blakeman: My colleague wants to know about Gardasil.

Mr. Hancock: About which?

Ms Blakeman: HPV.

Mr. Hancock: The federal government came out with an HPV strategy. I think they put $300 million into it over three years, so our share, presumably, would be about $30 million over three years. That probably won't pay for all of the vaccine, but we're clearly in a process of defining what the appropriate vaccination model should be, what cohort of people should be vaccinated, so we're working on that strategy now.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, but pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(a) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress. I would ask the minister to have his staff vacate the Assembly.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the Department of Health and Wellness relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 2
Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 2, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007. As I indicated when the bill was introduced, the Conflicts of Interest Act governs all of the members of the Legislative Assembly. It sets out rules that MLAs must follow to avoid conflicts of interest between their private affairs and the performance of their public duties. There are rules about taking part in Assembly debates, accepting gifts, contracting with the government, and taking outside employment. There are also rules that set out what an MLA must disclose and report to the office of the Ethics Commissioner.

An all-party committee reviewed the Conflicts of Interest Act after seeking and receiving public input, and it came up with a number of recommendations to make the legislation better. Bill 2 reflects the committee's recommendations and is another example of the Premier's commitment to govern with integrity and transparency.

Mr. Speaker, there are several key amendments that I would like to address in more detail. First, the amendments relating to former ministers. The Conflicts of Interest Act right now limits what a minister can do once he or she leaves office. Currently the limits last for six months from the day the minister leaves office, and the amendments proposed in this bill lengthen that cooling-off period to one year. A cooling-off period helps to avoid the perception that a minister has used his or her final days in office to obtain the favour of future or would-be employers. Postemployment restrictions, including noncompetition clauses or confidentiality clauses, are common for senior management in the private sector. Now, the appropriate length of a cooling-off period for former ministers is a question of judgment.

Rev. Abbott: Did you move it for second reading?

Dr. Brown: Can I do that at the end?

Mr. Stevens: Yes, you may, as long as you do it.

Dr. Brown: I will.

The right of a former minister to obtain gainful employment after leaving elected office and the desirability of encouraging interchange between the public and the private sector and the need to encourage qualified and successful men and women to public service: all of these mitigate for shorter cooling-off periods. On the other hand, the reality or perception that former ministers or policy officials may use inside information or close contacts to improperly benefit themselves or their employers or clients mitigates for longer postemployment restrictions. Extending the cooling-off period to one year strikes an appropriate balance. It corresponds to a full budgetary cycle, so there is a decline in the usefulness of information after that period. It will help make sure that former ministers aren't seen as having an unfair advantage over others in influencing government decision-making.

It's worth noting that one of the all-party committee's key recommendations, the establishment of the Lobbyists Act, is already proceeding through the House as a bill. The Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act also addresses this issue of lobbying as it relates to the activities of former ministers. The government recognizes that the influence held by a former minister may extend beyond the scope of his or her former department. To address this, Bill 2 prohibits a former minister from lobbying any government department or agency on behalf of a third party in relation to a government contract. Former ministers will not be able to make representations for another person with respect to a contract or benefit from any part of the government or public agency. The bill makes this restriction on lobbying for third parties broadly applicable. It does not justify or apply to those departments or agencies that the former minister was directly involved with.

The bill also calls for maximum penalties for breaches of the cooling-off rules to be raised from $20,000 to $50,000. In addition to expanding the restrictions for former ministers, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act introduces cooling-off periods for former political staff as well. Bill 2 proposes a six-month cooling-off period for the Premier's chief of staff, deputy chief of staff, and the head of the Premier's southern Alberta office as well as all executive assistants to ministers. Cooling-off rules for these officials will be similar to those governing former ministers.

Further, the bill amends the Public Service Act to include a six-month cooling-off period for deputy ministers. Specific restrictions for former deputy ministers will be set out in regulations under the Public Service Act. It's very important to know that the bill leaves the door open for government to impose cooling-off periods on other public officials if it is appropriate to do so. Of all of the changes proposed in this act, these new cooling-off provisions were the most difficult and sensitive to deal with. I think that all members can appreciate, as the committee did, that a fine balance is certainly required here. Certain senior public officials gain considerable knowledge and make important contacts during their tenure with the government. Imposing a cooling-off period on those individuals will help ensure that they do not have and are not perceived to have special access to provincial decision-makers. While it is important to have cooling-off periods for certain public officials, we didn't want to make the time period so onerous that it would have a negative effect on the government's ability to attract quality people to the public service. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 2 strikes that balance.

The bill also tightens up the rules regarding what an MLA may and may not do. It prohibits an MLA from using confidential government information for the purpose of improperly furthering the private interest of any other person. It also ensures that no MLA can use his or her position to improperly further the interests of any person, whether that person is the MLA's husband, wife, brother, child, best friend, or neighbour. I want to be clear on this point. These changes will not prevent MLAs from conducting their normal duties, which are to help their constituents and those beyond their constituency boundaries and to promote the public interest. The new rules simply prevent the MLA from using the powers of his office to benefit someone else inappropriately.

The Conflicts of Interest Act strictly limits what gifts an MLA may accept. The general rule is that an MLA cannot accept gifts that are connected with the performance of his or her public duty. The exception to this rule is that an MLA may accept gifts associated with social protocol; for example, accepting a token of appreciation for speaking at an event or a conference or a symposium. The limit for these kinds of gifts will be raised to $400 to reflect modern realities and to bring it in line with the limits in place in other Canadian jurisdictions. It's worth noting that the limit hasn't been raised in more than 15 years.

The bill also clarifies that an MLA may accept nonmonetary items such as a ticket to a charitable or political function. This change recognizes that it is part of each MLA's public duty to attend local political and charitable events.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this bill clarifies that MLAs are prohibited from accepting flights on private aircraft unless they're performing their duties as MLAs. There may be times when such flights are necessary. For example, if there's an emergency situation, there may be an urgent need to return to the province, or there may be a need to conduct an air tour of a disaster area. MLAs must inform the Ethics Commissioner within a week of taking such a flight and the reason they did so. The Ethics Commissioner will also include information about these flights in his public disclosure statement.

Mr. Speaker, in that vein there are some updates in the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007, regarding public disclosure statements to the Ethics Commissioner. It requires MLAs to disclose if they're involved in personal litigation or if they are subject to maintenance enforcement orders. Disclosure of this information will help ensure that the Ethics Commissioner is fully informed of liabilities and potential liabilities of the MLA which might create a conflict of interest.

The act will be updated to allow someone who suffers a financial loss as a direct result of an MLA's breach of the act to seek compensation from the MLA personally. Any time the Ethics Commissioner concludes that there has been a violation of the act, the report outlining the breach must be debated in the Legislative Assembly. We want to ensure that the report is actually dealt with by the House and that there is free and open discussion of the report and the facts that led up to it. This ensures that the government is transparent in its decision-making processes.

Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude by saying that these amendments will improve the conflicts of interest legislation. They will ensure that Alberta's elected representatives and other senior staff continue to demonstrate openness and accountability in their dealings.

At this time I would move second reading of Bill 2, and I would make a motion to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 5:57 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 3, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/03

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to welcome a group of Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation fellows who are sitting in your gallery. They are participants in a nine-month international fellowship program based in Ottawa and are visiting us today as part of a tour of western Canada. Sponsored by the Canadian International Development Agency, the fellowship program is a collaboration between the office of the Auditor General of Canada, the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation, and the Auditor General of Quebec. The program is designed to expand knowledge and understanding of public sector accounting and auditing as practised in Canada.

They are – and I'd ask them to rise as I introduce them – Mrs. Laurentine Ngwu, of Cameroon; Mr. Sikoro Keita, of Mali; Mr. George Haule, of Tanzania – [Remarks in Swahili] That's Swahili: "welcome in Alberta" – Ms Sirikanchana Karikanchana, of Thailand. They are accompanied today by their hosts, Ms Caroline Jorgensen, manager for international business at the CCAF in Ottawa, and Ms Lori Trudgeon, communications co-ordinator with the office of the Auditor General of Alberta. They're all standing now, and I'd request the hon. members of this Assembly to accord them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all of the hon. members in this Assembly the most important person in my life, my supporter and partner for nearly 24 years. I'm sure that the nicest thing that can be said about me is that I'm married to her. I'd ask my wife, Debbie, to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, today I have two schools, students and teachers and parent helpers, to introduce to you. The first one, of course, is from Gift Lake, Alberta. It's a small community about 350 kilometres north of here. We've got 22 students, and they're all sitting in the public gallery. Their teacher, Mrs. Audrey Anderson, is with them but also Ms Joyce Laderoute, Mrs. Doreen Laderoute, and Mr. Howard Shaw. These are grade 5 students. I'd ask that they stand to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

I'm not exactly sure whether or not my other group is in here, but I'd like to introduce them and maybe do the honour again if they're not in here. They're grade 4 students from Peerless Lake school, and that's a long way away from here. They were fantastic students when I met with them earlier. They've been here a few days, and they're trying to make sure that they know how this system works. It is very rare that Peerless Lake students come, Mr. Speaker, from that far away, and I'd like to ask the members of this Legislature to please welcome them with opening arms and a very warm welcome. Please stand.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed 30 students of the grade 9 band class at the Glenmore Christian Academy in southwest Calgary. I must say that I visited the school and a fine one it is. These grade 9 band students are made up of a group of kids who've played instruments for some four years now, and a number of them play in the worship band, which is a group of musicians who sing and perform at school chapels. They are accompanied today by their band director, Dan Bartholomew-Poyser, and also Erin Emro and parent Lindsay Forbes. I would ask them to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I seek your indulgence and permission to make my introduction in a foreign language today, the Arabic language.

The Speaker: That will be afforded to the hon. member. The hon. member consulted with my office, and all members should have on their desk a copy of the translation of the introduction, so please proceed.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, I have provided a translation to all hon. members of the Legislature. [Remarks in Arabic]

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two guests from Lebanon, Mr. Joseph Alhachen, a poet and an author – he has spent 60 years of his life promoting poetry and culture – and Mr. Adel Khadaj, who has spent more than 35 years in the same business. Accompanying them, Mr. Ziad Abultaif from Edmonton. They are all seated in the public gallery, and I ask them to rise and receive the truly warm welcome of the Assembly. [As submitted]

Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the public gallery. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Edric Bogosoff and Maryann Nery. Edric and Maryann are Palace Casino workers entering the 237th day on the picket line. It's unacceptable that these dedicated workers have been forced on strike, due in part to this government's failure to protect Alberta workers with fair and decent labour legislation. Edric has been at the Palace Casino since late 2002 and works as a dealer. Maryann has worked at the Palace Casino for the past four years in many different positions. They're joined today by UFCW local 401 representative Don Crisall. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise and to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a fine group of students and their teachers that are here from Glenwood, Alberta, over 500 kilometres away. They rose early to arrive here. I'd like to introduce Mr. Kelly Thomas, the principal of the school, his wife, Kathy, and teacher Ken Selk. They very much want their students to be part and to see what goes on this House, so I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, you have an introduction?

Mr. Backs: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and honoured to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly 18 members that have come here from the Unity Centre in northeast Edmonton. The Unity Centre is a great resource for many individuals in northeast Edmonton and provides all sorts of things, from clothes, transport, furniture in a used sense, and all the rest of it. I'd ask them to all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Liberation of Holland

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Saturday, May 5, is the 62nd anniversary of National Liberation Day in Holland. That is the day that hostilities finally ended after nearly five years of occupation by enemy forces during World War II. Southern Holland was liberated in the fall of 1944, but the thrust by the Allied troops stalled in September in Arnhem.

Throughout the winter battles were fought in unbelievable conditions in southern Holland. Canadian troops helped to clear Dutch approaches to the Belgian port of Antwerp in late 1944. By mid-March of 1945 more Canadian troops arrived from Italy and pushed through the eastern part of Holland, liberating Groningen, the home city of my father-in-law. That was on April 13. By April 15 they had fought their way to Leeuwarden, the home city of my mother-in-law. It took a few more weeks, until May 4, to work their way around the IJsselmeer and totally free the western part of Holland, including Rotterdam and Amsterdam, which was near to where my mother lived at the time.

The Dutch people welcomed the Canadians enthusiastically after a long and harsh winter. It was after the end of the war, when troops were still around and people were free again and getting their lives back in order, that the Canadian soldiers and the Dutch people forged long-lasting bonds of friendship that last to this day. It was also during this time that my father, who came from Canada as a soldier with the Dutch army, met my mother and took her as a war bride. They celebrated their 60th anniversary this past Monday. So, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all the Dutch people I will again say thank you to the brave Canadian soldiers who volunteered and fought so courageously many years ago to liberate Holland.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Geothermal Power

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oil sands production and upgrading use energy to produce oil products. Natural gas cogen plants have been preferred but have come under criticism because gas is clean, expensive energy that should be used elsewhere. Some like nuclear; many are skeptical. What will happen when these nuclear plants are tired and rundown in 50 years? Where will the hazardous spent fuel be stored?

Remember Chernobyl. The Alberta Ukrainian community stepped to the forefront to help the victims of the Chernobyl meltdown. There was a moving and graphic remembrance at City Hall in Edmonton last year. I don't think anyone who left the candlelight procession supporting nuclear power will support it for anywhere in Alberta.

Sustainable renewable energy sources must be our focus. It is time to revisit hydroelectric generation. The potential for oil sands use of hydro from in-line generators in the Slave River rapids is tremendous, and it is close by. Hydro is clean power. It is simple gravity flow: no carbon emissions, no sulphur emissions, no burning. What about hydrodams? These can be a source of clean power if properly prepared: no carbon emissions, no sulphur emissions, no burning, good for recreation, good for tourism, and good for water retention and management.

What about geothermal? The earth we stand on is just a crust over a superheated molten mass. What a source of untapped energy. Even the use of near-surface geothermal sources can do the job. We must pursue this source. Godspeed to the geopower consortium in testing the granite layer 500 feet below the oil sands.

What about looking for chemistry for new processes? What about the hydrogen fuel injection process? What about new engineering processes? These alternatives just touch on a few. We do have alternatives to nuclear. We do have clean alternatives. Let's go hydro. Let's go geothermal. Let us find other ways. We must think of future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Multiple Sclerosis Carnation Campaign

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about finding a cure and enhancing quality of life for those living with multiple sclerosis in Alberta. Alberta Health and Wellness, in partnership with the MS Society, would like to remind Albertans that May is Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. Multiple sclerosis is a disease that randomly attacks the central nervous system, affecting the control people have over all parts of their bodies. We do not know yet what causes MS, but we do know that it is a disease that is affecting an estimated 55,000 to 75,000 Canadians. The MS Society estimates, based on current prevalence rates, that approximately a thousand new cases of MS are diagnosed each year, which means three more people are diagnosed with MS every day in Canada. These numbers are startling, and that's why it's so important to support MS Awareness Month.

Here in Alberta we have one of the highest rates of MS per population in the world, with approximately 10,000 diagnosed cases. Women are diagnosed with the disease three times more frequently than men. These are two startling facts that serve as motivation to those who work to find a cure for the disease.

Besides funding MS research, the MS Society provides services for people who have MS, family members, caregivers, and health care professionals. These services are delivered through the network of divisions and chapters across Canada. Throughout the month of May there are several opportunities for Albertans to support the cause. Volunteers from around the province are taking part in a variety of fundraising events, like the MS Carnation Campaign, Super Cities Walk for MS, and Rona's Keys to a Cure fundraiser, which most Alberta communities host.

I encourage you to get involved and help find a cure today. For information on the MS Society of Canada and their activities visit www.mssociety.ca.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Minister of Education announced his unilateral decision to tie $25 million of funding for the Alberta teachers' pension liability to a demand for labour peace in the province. This is a provocative scheme which is divisive and an insult to educators across the province.

The province has long neglected the unfunded liability and should act immediately to solve the problem. However, in a meeting yesterday with the president of the ATA the minister rejected the teachers' request for immediate negotiations, choosing instead to stumble down the path to another task force. Given that the government accepted a mere seven of the Affordable Housing Task Force recommendations, there is little reason for teachers to see a task force as anything more than a stall tactic and no substitute for immediate negotiations.

To put this issue into context as well, I note that school boards received a 3.6 per cent increase to their budget. Such a small amount will stretch school boards' ability to hire new staff and abide by provincial class size regulations. This will also put them in a very difficult position when it comes to teacher negotiations.

The minister's proposal is a clear attempt to pit teachers with lengthy years of service against more junior colleagues. Playing politics with teachers' salaries and teachers' pensions is a recipe for a division and ill will, and it's hardly a reasonable way to run the education system. During the bid for the Conservative leadership the Premier promised that the issue of pension liability would be resolved separately from negotiations over salaries or working conditions.

On behalf of the NDP opposition I join with the Alberta Teachers' Association in calling for the minister to do the right thing: rescind the provocative demand that teachers give up the right to strike in exchange for another task force. All teachers deserve to be treated fairly and with respect.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Archbishop Richard Smith

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to the installation of Edmonton's eighth bishop at St. Joseph's Basilica on May 1, 2007. Led by the papal nuncio, Archbishop Luigi Ventura, the two-millennia-old ceremony formally inducted Archbishop Richard Smith, who will replace Archbishop Thomas Collins. Archbishop Smith is known as a multilingual person who has a unique brand of American Sign Language playfully known as RSL, or Richard's Sign Language. He is one of the two youngest Catholic bishops in Canada along with another archbishop, David Motiuk.

Archbishop Smith's journey has led him from his home in Halifax, Nova Scotia, to Pembroke, Ontario, and now Edmonton, where he serves as archbishop. He has come to meet the new challenges of being archbishop to Edmonton's Catholic community, a community invaluable to many Albertans. With its 330,000 members and dozens of churches the Edmonton Catholic community is steeped with a sacred tradition that gives hope and inspiration to its members during times of happiness and struggle. He has been an active member of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops as well as being the national spiritual adviser to the Catholic Women's League of Canada. Also, Archbishop Smith has been a member of the English Sector Commission for Christian Education since 2003.

The important role he has played within the Catholic community has not been overlooked. I am grateful to be able to speak about such an important man. I would ask everyone to join me in honouring Archbishop Richard Smith.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Political Party Trust Accounts

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1977 changes were made to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, requiring a distinct reporting of trusts and funds maintained by each registered political party. Since 1977 an annual letter from any registered political party maintaining such a trust was to be submitted to Elections Alberta, detailing any transfers of funds to or from such trusts and the party. While most political parties closed or dissolved their funds early on, the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta chose to maintain theirs.

This fund, which has often been referred to as the foundation fund or the legislative trust account, has recently become a sort of controversy. From 1978 to 1986 the individual acting as the budget director for the PC Association consistently reported annually, as the law requires, all transactions involving the foundation fund, both deposits and withdrawals. However, beginning in 1987, this practice of providing a distinct account of these transactions inexplicably came to an end. Large sums of money may have been deposited into or taken out of this fund; however, nobody in the PC Association has the ability or willingness to provide the required documentation. How much money was in the foundation fund when it started? How much money is in the fund today? And in nonelection years what are the monies from the fund used for?

Since we're now talking about openness and transparency in this House, will the PC Association be required to resume reporting how much money goes into or out of this foundation fund? Don't tell me it's still being reported because the Tories are basically pooling the funds together with transfers from registered parties, constituency associations, and candidates in one catch-all category. The details remain hidden. Here is one place the Conservatives can start to demonstrate openness and transparency. Those who have nothing to hide, hide nothing.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and to present a petition. Really this is just an add-on to the petition that I presented a couple of weeks ago urging the government to "immediately introduce a bill to create a buffer zone of at least one mile distance from any major water body, such as a river, lake or creek," et cetera. So I would like to table this at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll table that petition in our next sitting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and honoured to rise to present a petition. It's from members of the Unity Centre, the volunteers there. It says, "We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to hold rent increases to no more than the rise in the average monthly wage until December 31, 2010."

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Bill 210
Gaming Planning Act

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce private member's Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act.

The purpose of Bill 210 is to initiate a comprehensive review of the multibillion dollar gaming industry in Alberta. Bill 210 would establish an all-party committee that would examine all aspects of the gaming industry in Alberta from the distribution of revenue and the role of volunteers to the social impact of gambling on the citizens of Alberta and its impact on the economy.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of a letter from one of my constituents, Alexis Sokol. Alexis is a single-income earner who is now facing a $200 per month rental increase. Alexis notes that this will have undue stress and hardship on her daily life.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table this afternoon on behalf of Nicole Régis, a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, a letter that I received from her on February 23, 2007. This is in regard to the current state of the teachers' unfunded liability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from my constituent Derinda Wood, who is concerned about rent increases. Her rent increased three times in eight months already, totalling $400. There is no cap on rent increases. People are afraid of being homeless. She said that "homeless shelters are overflowing with families that work but can not afford housing." She is urging this government to help.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a letter in response to Alan Shopland, the general manager of Access Roads, the P3 company responsible for the Anthony Henday, whose letter to me was previously tabled by the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, claiming that Alberta taxpayers aren't responsible for a $34.7 million cost overrun.

My second tabling is page 103 from Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation's annual report 2005-2006, which clearly shows that the P3 cost overrun debt is to be borne by Alberta taxpayers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today, and I beg your indulgence. The first is in relation to an absolutely spectacular event that myself and several members of this Legislature attended last night: the celebration of the arts put on by students from Catholic schools, over 600 students and 120 parents and staff and teachers involved. It was just an amazing evening. I'm pleased to table for the permanent records of the province the program from that evening.

As well, almost as spectacular was the annual general meeting of Edmonton Airports this morning, where they showed a multimillion-dollar profit for the past year and a tremendous, in fact phenomenal increase in terms of the number of aircraft movements and growth at the airport.

Then, Mr. Speaker, in response to a comment, actually, from the Finance minister yesterday in which he referenced the Official Opposition's Funding Alberta's Future document but failed to follow parliamentary procedure and table the said document that he was referencing, I'm happy to share with all Albertans the document Funding Alberta's Future and note that the growth in expenditures in this document is tied to not only the population increase but also the growth in inflation.

Mr. Speaker, then I'm also going to also table background documents which the Finance minister also had in his hands yesterday: the spreadsheets showing the described growth, the PowerPoint presentation that is used to make that presentation, as well as a Calgary Herald newspaper article from April 20, wherein Scott Hennig, the Alberta representative for the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, outlined an approximate 7 per cent increase in spending under the Alberta Liberal opposition Funding Alberta's Future plan.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a series of just four tablings with the requisite copies. One is a letter from Craig Dunn, president of WellDunn Consulting, who is involved in the geothermal research and the consortium involving Shell Canada. It speaks to the importance of geothermal in the oil sands.

Another is an article by Esme Friesen published in New Technology in 2002 about the importance of geothermal technology and potential for the oil sands.

Another is an article by Tyler Hamilton of the Toronto Star dated February 10. It's about geothermal in the oil sands.

Another is by Ron Chalmers, from the Edmonton Journal. It's an article about geothermal in the oil sands.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would request that the Government House Leader share with us the projected government business for the week commencing the 7th of May.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next week, of course, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday under government business we'll be in Committee of Supply all three afternoons.

On Tuesday we anticipate the Committee of Supply will have Municipal Affairs and Housing and Health and Wellness. If time remains thereafter, we will deal with bills 2, 31, 32, 33, and 34.

On Wednesday afternoon in Committee of Supply Treasury Board, Finance, Health and Wellness, Municipal Affairs and Housing, Solicitor General and Public Security would be before the committee, and the same bills would be available for discussion if there was time remaining after the Committee of Supply had completed its business.

On Thursday, May 10, there would be a cross-ministry opportunity in Committee of Supply with Children's Services, Seniors and Community Supports, and Education, and again the same bills available for discussion if there was time remaining after Committee of Supply.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Affordable Housing

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The situation with affordable housing in Alberta is getting worse every day. The government's strategy is not working. For example, today in Edmonton-Rutherford constituency the residents of Yellowbird House received notice of a $500 rent increase. One of the residents of Yellowbird House is an 80-year-old woman who is clearly in distress because of this, and I'm sure we can all understand why. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. What does this minister, who is, after all, responsible for housing, have to say to this elderly woman and the other residents of Yellowbird House?

1:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is not an easy solution when you're looking at affordable housing. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, we did have a task force in place, that engaged the Official Opposition and also engaged the third party, to discuss that exact focus. When we talk about affordable housing, we need to make sure that there are affordable houses on the market, that affordable units are on the market.

Thank you very much.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe the residents of Yellowbird House should all move to the country and then run for office because out-of-town MLAs, including virtually almost every minister of this government, receive $1,750 a month in temporary residence allowance. That allowance has increased $450 a month in two years. How can this minister sit there and tell the residents of Yellowbird House and renters across Alberta that there is nothing this government can do when he himself receives a rapidly rising accommodation allowance?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the housing allowance that MLAs receive is not a housing allowance of this government; it is an allowance of this House. Secondly, our government has added $285 million of new funding – $285 million – to try to address the affordable housing and the homeless challenges that we have in Alberta due to the growth pressures.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's plan to deal with the issue of affordable housing in Alberta is clearly flawed, partly because they ignored their own task force. The Alberta Liberal housing plan calls for affordable housing allowances that stay with low-income renters, not with the unit. Portable rent supplements give renters flexibility in a tight market. If it's okay for MLAs to have affordable housing allowances, then it should be okay for other Albertans. To the same minister: will this minister help Albertans and follow the lead of the Alberta Liberals and implement affordable housing allowances and rent supplements that stay with the renter?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, specifically, I referred to $285 million in new money: $100 million from the municipal sustainability housing program, $96 million in enhanced capital to increase affordable housing units, a $13 million increase in homeless support, a $3 million increase for provincial homeless initiatives, $14.3 million increase from the rental supplement and special purpose housing, $45 million allocated to Wood Buffalo, $7 million to the new homeless and eviction fund, $2.5 million to the Alberta transitional housing.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's housing market is completely distorted, and as a result people are losing their homes. While many landlords do act responsibly, others are using the government's decision not to implement a temporary rent cap to issue rent increases sometimes of hundreds of dollars a month. Thousands of people are getting hurt, sometimes drastically hurt. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: what is this minister going to do to help the tenants of Yellowbird House and other renters in the same position before they are booted out of their homes?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I defer to the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, if the people have not received a rent increase in the last year at that apartment, they may be subject to this rent increase. If they have previous to April 24, then under the legislation that we've introduced, the rent increase will not be allowed.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. This issue, Mr. Speaker, goes beyond political ideology. It goes beyond right- or left-wing views of market intervention. The heart of this issue is that Albertans need help right now because they are losing their homes, and everybody needs a home. The government's decision to ignore the recommendations of its task force and refuse rent caps shows how divided this government caucus is on this issue. To the minister of housing: will the minister urge his Premier to put the issue of temporary rent caps to a free vote of this Legislature?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this government is not ignoring the focus of the task force. We need a balanced approach to providing housing. What happened is that we did not look at one specific item but at a balanced approach to providing housing, which is secondary suites, which is supporting rent supplement, which is supporting new initiatives for building housing; $285 million of new money to do exactly that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The same minister in this government has made the claim repeatedly that rent caps discourage construction of new apartment units, but the evidence is that that isn't necessarily so. Can this minister explain how it is that putting reasonable rent increase caps for one year on existing properties discourages the construction of new rental properties? How is that? Explain it.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, one thing that we do know is that the opposition is extremely generous with other people's money. They like to talk about a housing report and why we wouldn't accept all the recommendations in the housing report. One of the recommendations was to build houses out of straw; one of them was to convert container units into houses. If we were to accept all of the recommendations, I can assure you that the people coming to Alberta would probably have questions about the mentality of that entire report. We've approached this on a very balanced and responsible position.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, 211 is an emergency referral service operated in Edmonton by the Support Network. It identifies trends in service delivery gaps by tracking the number and nature of calls for which the hotline was unable to provide an adequate referral. Overwhelmingly, these unmet needs were affordable housing. My question is to the minister of municipal affairs. Desperate Albertans cannot wait two months, two weeks, or even two days for shelter. Can the minister please tell us what options are available for people who desperately need housing today?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this government has identified the challenges that Albertans have in affordable housing and homelessness. There has been a budget that has addressed those concerns, but we implemented the task force, that was asked to report in 45 days. We responded to those recommendations in 35 days, addressing the concerns and the challenges, and $285 million does address those concerns to the best ability that we can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The 211 report also identified two specific areas where service shortfalls can be devastating. It has noted an increased number of calls from people who are seeking transitional housing as they move from detox to addictions treatment and also from women and children moving from emergency to second-stage shelters. Without affordable housing options these individuals may be unable to escape these dangerous and unhealthy situations. Again to the minister of municipal affairs: why are these groups who are struggling to find transitional housing not a priority for this government?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, could I please respond to the hon. member's question? Last year employment and immigration provided $100 million for housing and shelter benefits for eligible Albertans with low incomes. This includes over $10 million for emergency benefits for short-term accommodation, utility arrears, damage deposits, additional housing support for families. If there are people today, if Albertans today are faced with dire circumstances, we are the ones that manage emergency funding for those individuals. We manage second-stage housing, supports for people coming from shelters . . .

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The minister should read the 211 reports.

Mr. Speaker, sadly, these problems extend to all corners of this province. We've also heard from a single mother of three in Lethbridge who has sought refuge in a women's shelter and now requires transitional housing. She has the money for rent, a damage deposit, and moving costs and is still unable to find permanent housing. Is the minister of municipal affairs prepared to tell this mother who is fighting for a fresh start that she must pay the price of prosperity?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, when we look at the minister's sustainability and we look at the initiative, we have directed I believe it's – let me add the two – $196 million to municipalities for municipalities to address those concerns. Also, what happened is that we have taken funding and we have delivered the funding to different municipalities for them to make the choice of what they believe is important in their areas.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's not my intent to engage in a one-upmanship game with the Leader of the Official Opposition, but I have a couple of rent increases for people in my constituency of $1,000, that they've just received – $1,000. Doreen Fiddler is a 74-year-old widow who's lived in the same apartment for 20 years without any problems. She's received a rent increase. Her rent is going from $595 a month to $1,595 a month. There's another one in the same building and some others that have received some smaller increases. My question to the minister. I don't want to hear about all the money you're spending to build housing two years from now because right now she needs some help. Are you going to do something to make sure that people like this woman, this senior, don't have to pay increases of that magnitude? I'm asking the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we established a homeless and eviction fund to look after just such a person. Any one of those 59 centres that are in place in Alberta can help provide to people who face dire straits this kind of support. The hon. members opposite would try to portray this government as an uncaring government. We are the government that has a program, that has been administering a program over the last several years to support people in dire circumstances.

I would invite the hon. member opposite to provide me the names or the phone numbers. We will certainly check and see whether the 211 group has some addresses, and we will follow up to make sure they get connected.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, that program such as it is, even if it's as advertised, doesn't kick in for two months. We tried to reach Mrs. Fiddler this afternoon. She's out looking for a new apartment, so we couldn't reach her. This new rent, Mr. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, exceeds her entire pension cheque. Now, if she's lucky, they've already tried to raise her rent once in the last 12 months, and we're researching that. But if not, then she's going to have to pay it or move, and next year she'll be faced with this. If you stop it this year, she'll be faced with it next year. You need to do something, Mr. Minister. Please, stand up and tell people what you're going to do. It's not just an emergency fund. There are thousands . . .

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, if an individual receives a rent increase, that rent increase cannot be brought into effect for three months. Also, when we looked at the challenges of individuals as brought forward by the hon. members from across, if they qualify for a rent supplement, if that is the situation, that is why we're here as well, to help support. If there are individual situations of need, those are also things that we will look at. Please bring us those names, and we will look at the individual cases.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the government's program such as it is simply isn't working for thousands and thousands of Albertans. I'll just read from this rent notice.

We feel it's necessary to adjust rents to this new level in order to provide you the best service possible.

The rental adjustment is also due to the general rising of operating expenses such as maintenance, repairs, utilities and property taxes [and new carpets and linoleum].

All for triple the rent. To the minister: is it not the case that the people who are paying the price of prosperity are precisely the people who are not prosperous in this province?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for anyone, regardless of what party or what affiliation, to magically make this problem go away. It simply can't happen. But when we take into the marketplace and we become very generous with other people's investment dollars, it leads us down a road that you cannot come back from. If we want to follow the policies of failed governments where spending increases and interest increases follow, our housing situation will be far more disastrous than being fair to the landlord and the tenant. It is unreasonable for you to suggest that all landlords in Alberta are irresponsible, that all landlords are out to gouge. There may be isolated cases . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: To all the schoolchildren in the Assembly: this is not normal. This is Thursday before a long weekend. I apologize on behalf of all my colleagues in the Assembly.

Now, hon. leader of the third party, you will have copies made of your document, and I'll ask you to table them at the conclusion of the question period.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Hydroelectric Power

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Extracting bitumen from oil sands requires large amounts of energy. Many argue that firing electrical cogens with clean-burning expensive natural gas is not sensible, nor is it sustainable. All of the Mackenzie gas pipeline production could be used up for oil sands needs. Other sources of energy may make more sense. Hydroelectric power could be the cleanest of all: no emissions, no sulphur gases, no heavy metals, no mess. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What is the potential for energy generation, and what measures are our Alberta government taking to develop clean hydro from the Slave River rapids?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly the potential of Slave River has been known for a number of years. Initially – I believe it would have been back in perhaps the mid-70s or early '80s – the Slave River was first looked at by government in Alberta and certainly by industry in Alberta. With respect to the potential it appears that there are about 1,800 megawatts of power that could be available on the Slave River in northeastern Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplemental to the same minister. Use of geothermal energy systems may provide alternatives for energy needs in further production of bitumen. How is the government encouraging research in the use of alternatives such as geothermal to provide energy needs for oil sands production?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, what we're doing to encourage alternatives – there's a very broad slate of research and development projects through Alberta Energy Research Institute and others. We have a number of programs, some with respect to gasification, clean coal technologies, the production of hydrogen and syngas from coal, and opportunities like that abound in the province of Alberta. Our mandate to provide a strategy that will include all of the above energy sources is ongoing in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplemental to the same minister. Many Albertans in the pipeline industry are concerned that the construction of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline is not going to happen. What can the minister tell Albertans in the pipeline construction industry about what Alberta is doing to move this project along or if they will see some work in this project in the near future?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, with respect to the Mackenzie Valley pipeline the member opposite is obviously aware that that particular project is not in the province of Alberta, so we as a government or the province of Alberta as a province have no jurisdiction with respect to the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. However, we're very aware that the proponent continues, and as recently as yesterday one of the major proponents has indicated that they will continue to work to find ways to bring that project to fruition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

1:50 Peace Officer Roles and Responsibilities

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December 2005 this government released recommendations following a review of the special constable program to clarify the roles and responsibilities of peace officers. Peace officers are a valuable part of Alberta's law enforcement network. These recommendations resulted in the Peace Officer Act, which came into effect May 1. Unfortunately, there still seems to be some confusion as to what peace officers, in particular traffic sheriffs, can and cannot do to support the excellent work of the RCMP when it comes to improving safety on Alberta's roads and highways. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can he explain why traffic sheriffs are not permitted to exceed the speed limit with their lights and sirens on while responding to emergency situations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Traffic sheriffs under their mandate can only perform limited functions at an emergency scene. Sheriffs' vehicles rushing down the highway with their lights and sirens on pose a risk to the public, and therefore they do not have that authority under the new Peace Officer Act. It's important that emergency situations be attended by the appropriate authorities with the appropriate equipment and training.

Mr. Johnston: To the same minister: was this issue put on the table during consultations that occurred prior to the new act being put in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, this issue was discussed at length during the review process. The Peace Officer Act was developed through extensive consultations with stakeholders and research from across Canada and around the world. As you know, we consulted with Albertans, municipalities, law enforcement agencies, and many others to ensure that the act enhanced the delivery of enforcement opportunities in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Johnston: My last question to the same minister: will he agree to future discussions on the act to ensure that peace officers are fully able to support the ongoing work of police in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, as with any legislation we always have the ability to make changes if upon review they feel it is needed. The peace officers are and will continue to be a valued part of Alberta's law enforcement network, which is among the strongest in Canada. The enforcement duties that peace officers perform go a long way to help reduce the pressure on police while delivering high-quality service to the public, and I am confident that the Peace Officer Act provides the legislative framework for them to contribute fully to ensuring that Albertans live in safe and secure communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent budget proved that this government is not committed to adequately funding Alberta's education system. At a time when inflation is over 5 per cent, the government allocated a mere 3 per cent increase in operational grants to school boards and only a 3.2 per cent increase for operations and maintenance. Alberta's school system is already stretched thin, and this small increase will have a negative effect on education in Alberta. To the Minister of Education: in a time of rapid inflation how can the minister defend a budget that sets Alberta's education system back instead of moving it forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Well, it's typical, Mr. Speaker. The opposition is always looking on the negative side of things. This government spends almost $6 billion now on education in Alberta, the highest per capita of anywhere in Canada. I'd hardly call that moving backwards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, I think he should get out and talk to the trustees.

The education business plan states that Alberta's goal is to have the best K to 12 education system in the world, but with this budget the government has shown total disregard for the goal. Without adequate funding school boards will be forced to increase school fees, cut programs, and reduce supports for students. This is very unacceptable to trustees and students and parents. To the Minister of Education: how long will this government force school boards to do more with less?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gets worked up over not very much. As I said earlier in my remarks, we spend more on education in Alberta than any other province in Canada. I'd be happy to debate the line-by-line expenditures with the hon. member when my estimates come up. We don't quite have the best education system in the world. We're striving. We're almost there, and we're going to get there.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, Mr. Minister, that's very noble.

Currently 30 school districts are in a deficit position in this province. Get out and find out about that. This summer 80 per cent of the school districts will be in contract negotiations, yet this budget gives school boards no room to negotiate reasonable contracts with teachers. This is a short-sighted budget that will have a negative effect on teachers and school boards and students, and we'll be back here in August dealing with it. To the minister: is the minister prepared to take responsibility for any strikes that occur as a result of the government's failure to provide reasonable funding for education in this province? What are you doing about it, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the hon. member to table in this House documents that show me that 30 school boards are in a deficit position. It's not true. [interjections]

The Speaker: No, no, no.

An Hon. Member: It's Thursday.

The Speaker: To the hon. member who reminded me that it is Thursday: it's more than that; it's also a full moon.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Secondary Suites

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Secondary suites provide a way for families to care for extended family members while still preserving their personal, individual living spaces. Secondary suites provide a way for young people to buy their first home made more affordable by rental income. But, most important, secondary suites provide affordable housing. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: are there provisions or requirements for secondary suites in the recent affordable housing funding announced for municipalities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I need to say that the housing response very much deals with municipalities having the choice of doing what's best in their areas. Secondary suites are an immediate measure. They are an economical way to deal and to have more units that are presentable. I very much want to encourage communities to get involved and to look at secondary suites as an answer because it is an immediate answer, and as we heard today from the members opposite, it is an immediate and important issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. To encourage secondary suites provincially, the Alberta government has pared back regulations for secondary suites to only those affecting the safety. What are Alberta municipalities doing to accommodate secondary suites in their communities?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very encouraged by the municipalities that are taking the lead and that are changing their zoning bylaws to incorporate secondary suites into their municipalities. It is essential, I believe, to have secondary suites, especially when we're in a high-growth area. Zoning is a critical component to having safe and affordable housing. Municipal Affairs has a template that municipalities can use in order to have that accomplished.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If municipalities choose to allow secondary suites, how many suites could become available immediately for affordable housing?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that very much depends on, first of all, the municipalities and their acceptance of the zoning. It also depends on communities and their embracement to have secondary suites in their areas. I can say that we have 2,300 people that are on the waiting list for affordable housing in Edmonton. We have 2,600 in Calgary. There are 9,000 in Alberta presently. I want to say that municipalities are now planning for the future to have secondary suites.

To answer your question: how many? It's endless. We need co-operation between municipalities, between communities, and I think with the provincial government, who has helped in the financial aspect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. [interjections] Lethbridge-East, do you want to get in first? Did you want to get in first, hon. member?

Ms Pastoor: No.

The Speaker: There seemed to be a lot of movement there. I wanted to . . . [interjections] Well, it's your time in the question period. It's okay. It's going by.

You're sure, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, that you're ready to go?

Mr. Agnihotri: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. Proceed.

2:00 Community Initiatives Program

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Applewood broke the rules, CIP broke the rules, CFEP broke the rules, and the other initiative programs do not even have the rules. Shame. Now the government has launched another program, the major community facilities program. My question to the President of the Treasury Board: why should Alberta taxpayers now trust this government with the new $280 million grant program?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's not just the CIP and the CFEP grants. The government takes very seriously its responsibility to be accountable to the taxpayers of Alberta. The CIP and the CIP grant process have done tremendous good across Alberta, and the opportunity for us to give more money back to Albertans through the major grant to help with major facilities is one that we feel very honoured to be able to do on behalf of the people of Alberta. I can assure you that the Auditor General and our department will be watching very carefully that the money is spent appropriately and accounted for.

Mr. Agnihotri: I'm talking about the breaking of the rules. I'm talking about accountability, transparency. I'm talking about the trust which this government has lost. My question to the same minister. This government is more concerned about its friends than hard-working Albertans. Does health get a 66 per cent increase in funding? No. Education? No. Environment? No. So why did this department in an election year increase its budget 66 per cent? Why?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, I don't know for sure.

Mr. Speaker, this party just went through a very exciting if not difficult leadership process. You know what Albertans said to us? We've got a gentleman that's now our leader that has a history of honesty and integrity. This government that's under our new Premier will govern with integrity and transparency and openness, and you'll see it.

Mr. Agnihotri: Well, if that's actually true, why don't you answer my question properly every time?

Anyway, my question to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. This minister has had a full month . . .

Mr. Bonko: How long?

Mr. Agnihotri: A full month.

. . . to find the names of 43 recipients of grants that broke CIP rules. Alberta taxpayers are starting to smell a cover-up. Minister, for God's sake, please stop making excuses and be accountable. What are you trying to hide? Why don't you disclose those names? Taxpayers want you to disclose the names now.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Deity

The Speaker: There are some members who will take strong exception to the phrase "for God's sake." [interjections] No, no, no. I want to make that comment. There may be some histrionics that go on from time to time; there are also some phrases that we use with some degree of respect in this House.

Community Initiatives Program (continued)

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly, on the 40 applications that the hon. member is talking about, our staff, as I indicated before, are trying to extract all of those 40 applications. Our initial, preliminary observation is that there were absolutely no rules that were broken. You know, we're going through the over 2,000 applications to try to locate those 40, and that material should be available fairly soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

But before I recognize them, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, remember that this is question period, not answer period.

Support for Exhibitions and Fairs

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do hope I get an answer to my question today.

Growth of the central Alberta corridor and the Red Deer area is putting pressure on services and facilities in this region. One of the facilities facing these growth pressures is Westerner Park. Westerner Park is the third-largest agricultural society and trade exhibition facility in our province. The two larger facilities, Northlands Park and the Calgary Stampede, are receiving significant funding through the new budget to address their growth pressures. However, Westerner Park and other regional fairs and exhibitions did not receive additional funding this year. Mr. Speaker, my first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. What is the formula used to calculate operating grants for fairs and exhibitions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank goodness for the calming influence of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, each agriculture society receives a yearly base grant. The 286 small societies funded by Agriculture and Food get $17,500 each. Based on their operations, they may get a second grant. The total available to these societies is $8.7 million. The seven regions, which include the Westerner, each receive $280,000. Edmonton and Calgary, who host the internationally recognized Capital EX and Stampede, get $10 million. The regionals, the two major . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. We'll probably have an opportunity in the supplementary.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, to the minister. The city of Red Deer is growing faster than other major urban centres in Alberta and serves a trading population in excess of 250,000. The Westerner's operating grant, in a rough calculation, amounts to just over $3 per capita, compared to Northlands and the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede of more than $10 per capita. My first supplemental question to the same minister: what plan does he have to make these operating grants more equitable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the two major cities are funded through Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. All these societies play an important role in building our local and international ag profile, especially in our rural communities. So we certainly are currently working with the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies to wrap up a review of the funding formula for the 286 smaller societies. There are a number of issues that must be resolved, including budget considerations and timing of any potential funding issues. I can reassure the people here that my priority is going to be to see that the 286 smaller ag societies are dealt with first, before we get to the rest.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Are exhibitions and fairs eligible for the major community facilities grants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The major community facilities program will make funding available to support municipalities, not-for-profit organizations, aboriginal communities with eligible projects that are identified as a priority by their community. The $140 million program, to be allocated each year for two years, was created to address the requirements of larger capital projects, such as major community sports or recreational facilities, the cultural centres, or family and community wellness facilities. This would also include the agricultural facilities that the hon. member is talking about and facilities that are operated by major exhibitions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordability of Postsecondary Education

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, less than half of all Alberta families believe postsecondary education is within their means. In just three months over 30,000 students who thought a postsecondary education was within their means will get a nasty surprise when they see apartment rents going up by anywhere between $250 a month to $1,000 a month. Since they will be new tenants, there is no limit on landlords' ability to raise rental rates. Why has the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing failed to recognize that without temporary rent guidelines thousands of students will not be able to afford a place to live this fall?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want say that I have met with CAUS, and they have brought forward, you know, recommendations that this department is looking at. This is definitely an area where secondary suites can help out the challenge. I'm going to refer to the minister to supplement.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. CAUS made some recommendations to us prior to the budgetary process this year, which included things like raising the living allowance under the student finance situation, which we did. In fact, we raised it double digit, which is the first ever double-digit cost-of-living increase in the province's history.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The double-digit increase that the minister references for student living allowances won't make up for the astronomical rent that students will have to start paying as they start their new school year in September. This increase that he references will only mean increased student debt and increased financial distress for them. Why will the minister of advanced education not recognize that the government's failure to introduce temporary rent controls will drive postsecondary students into deeper debt and poverty? What happened to the affordability promise that this government made to students?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the CAUS recommendations to us included a number of different things under the affordability framework. One was to create new spaces at the universities, and that was their number one priority. Another one was to lower student debt and tuition. But underneath the affordability framework it isn't all debt. Probably half of the assistance that we give to students over a four-year period is actually bursaries and other grants for their postsecondary education. It's not all student debt that this government provides. In fact, under our remission program most of the Alberta portion of the debt is remitted back to the student if they're students in need.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we're improving the rules. We got rid of the archaic car rule, if you will, among a number of other things that we're working with . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister seems to be oblivious to the scale of the housing problem for students. The University of Alberta and the University of Calgary can only house 12 per cent of their student population, which leaves over 30,000 students to find housing in a market that's failing renters. Calgary's 2000 vacancy rate was .5 per cent, and Edmonton's was 1.2 per cent, and the situation is getting worse. What does the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology propose for those students who won't be able to find affordable accommodation: a room at Super 8, a tent pitched in the quad?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are working to manage the growth pressures in this province, and that includes the student residences. We have a diverse range of learners. It's not factual, quite frankly, to suggest that every student that's going to university is requiring accommodation of some sort. Many students are in the 29-year-old range, are working or attending part time. Some may be living at home. Secondary suites are certainly an immediate option that we're encouraging municipalities to work with. [interjections] The hon. members might be interested in the answer, given the question period.

In Alberta there are additional residency capacities at private university colleges, the Augustana facility of the University of Alberta. Grant MacEwan is opening up, and we are working with the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Regional Municipal Planning

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives were asleep at the switch when it came to preparing for growth, and that mistake is costing Albertans billions. They also eliminated the major mechanism for regional planning, a move which has made managing growth much more difficult. One of the remaining tools for regional co-operation is regional service commissions. Greater collaboration on the delivery of services is essential if we want to maintain a high quality of life and keep taxes low. To the minister of municipal affairs. Additional layers of governance require additional accountability measures. Is the minister considering any amendments to the Municipal Government Act to strengthen accountability and transparency requirements for regional service commissions, or is he satisfied they're adequate?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the budget that this government released has very much focused, especially in municipal sustainability, on the aspect of planning, of collaboration, of working together, of looking at municipalities, addressing their needs of autonomy, looking at the minister's sustainability report that came out, trying to address some of those needs that they have asked for and the recommendations that they have asked for and this government is trying to address and will bring responses for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a wonderful answer. Unfortunately, it had nothing to do with what I'm asking about: regional service commissions. Not only are regional service commissions established by this cabinet, but many commissions also receive substantial provincial grants, sometimes as much as a million dollars in a single year, to support their efforts in regional service delivery. Yet the act allows commissions to operate without bylaws on the administration of the commission. What systems or checks and balances does the minister have in place to ensure that commission funds, which are ultimately taxpayer funds, are used strictly for legitimate commission business?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I need to say that we have worked with municipalities. We have worked with mayors and councils in trying to address the concerns that they have. We need to work together. Municipalities need that autonomy. I believe that we are going in the right direction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Municipal Government Act provides regional service commissions with natural person powers, which give them wide latitude to act unless specifically prohibited from doing so. Yet commissions are established by provincial orders in council by this government with very specific mandates and for specific functions. To the same minister: can the minister assure the Assembly that he could and would intervene to ensure that misused funds are returned so that the interests of the municipal shareholders are protected?

Mr. Danyluk: First of all, I want to try to answer the first part of the question. In the first part of the question I'm not sure if the hon. member opposite is asking the government to restrain or constrain the authority that municipalities or that mayors or that reeves have. I mean, we don't work that way. I guess that we're trying to provide support as best we can to municipalities, as has been depicted in the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Bee Colony Collapse Disorder

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The processed and nonprocessed honey industry in Alberta is dealing with difficulty with healthy bees this year. Alberta Agriculture and Food has traditionally assisted this important industry, providing apiculturists and technologists to deal with bee colonies. With the threat of colony collapse disorder in Alberta it could destroy an industry that provides 40 per cent of Alberta's honey. My first question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food: will the minister commit to more technical help and expert advice to help beekeepers remain in production this summer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We certainly are concerned about this issue, no doubt. My department is now hiring two additional inspectors to assist our provincial apiculturist and his staff. They will examine and collect samples from bee colonies which have had a higher than normal overwintering kill this spring. These losses are not showing the same symptoms that link to the colony collapse disorder, better known as CCD. Symptoms of CCD have not yet been detected in Alberta, but they certainly are seen in the U.S. Our provincial expert recently met with a U.S. working group on this issue and has the knowledge and the skills needed to identify CCD.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the minister for that response. But in order to maintain and to grow this important industry in Alberta and in my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod, will the minister commit to preparing preliminary work for prevention purposes to control pests that may affect the industry in the future?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, we already have a pest monitoring system designed for early detection of pests of economic importance. Staff in my department are also developing a comprehensive surveillance network specific for crop pests in Alberta. Our information is available to farmers and industry on a timely basis. In many cases this allows them to make a quick decision to control these pests long before losses occur. Our provincial apiculturist and inspectors are working with the beekeeping industry, and appropriate steps certainly will be taken.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, then can the minister advise if colony collapse disorder will have any potential health risks related to processed honey when consumers find it on the store shelves?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the U.S. experience hasn't shown any link to the health issues to date. Again, I want to stress that CCD has not been found in Alberta at this time. We are and we will continue monitoring closely for any signs or symptoms related to this disorder. If CCD is found in our province and poses a health threat to Albertans, appropriate steps will be taken.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 78 questions and answers today.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona or Edmonton-Calder, have you a document that your leader was to leave with you to table at the conclusion of question period?

Mr. Eggen: I will endeavour to find that document. Yes.

The Speaker: Okay.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize. My guests actually found it too much to take for their cardiac health. They actually left the House. I will introduce them when they return, if they return.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday I went and I brought hon. members up to date with a number of events that are occurring in the month of May. There were several that I neglected to mention. One is very significant today. The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, you are in the Chamber, and that's very commendable. This is the day of his 32nd wedding anniversary. He has a very young bride, he says.

Members might also be interested in knowing that on Tuesday, May 22, 2007, there will be a provincial election in Manitoba. On Monday, May 28, 2007, there will be a provincial election in Prince Edward Island.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

Energy

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chair, do we have five minutes to set up? I understood that we were going to have a few minutes to set up.

The Chair: Okay. We will allow for some time for the minister and his staff to come in while I'm going over some of the rules. Is that acceptable?

Mr. Knight: Thank you, sir.

The Chair: I went over this yesterday, but this is a different department today, so I'll go over some of the new Standing Orders that we're operating under as this is the first week for these new Standing Orders. No member can speak for more than 10 minutes. "A minister and a private Member may combine their respective speaking times for a total of 20 minutes," provided they notify the chair in advance. I would also ask the minister if that would be acceptable to the minister at the time. Quorum does not apply until the estimates are voted on. Officials “may be admitted to the floor of the Assembly to advise the Minister whose estimates are under consideration.” I would ask the minister to introduce those officials at the time.

On the first day of consideration of the main estimates the first member of the Executive Council to speak shall move the main estimates in their entirety. That was done yesterday.

During the consideration of the main estimates, the Committee of Supply shall meet for a minimum of 3 hours at one time unless there are no [other] Members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the 3 hours.

If the Committee of Supply meets for more than 3 hours . . . the time in excess of 3 hours shall be available to any Member who wishes to speak and is recognized by the Chair . . .

During each 15-hour cycle, where the members of a caucus are allotted a particular block of time and those Members no longer wish to speak, then consideration for the entire block of time . . . is deemed to have occurred and any Member may be recognized by the Chair until the Committee rises and reports . . .

When an amendment to a department’s estimates is moved in Committee of Supply, the vote on the amendment stands deferred until the date scheduled for the vote on the main estimates.

I’d like to also remind all ministers that as they are getting prepared to bring their officials in – and this is for the record and for all future days in Committee of Supply . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order, Mr. Chairman, please.

The Chair: So noted. I’ll just finish my comments.

. . . that as soon as the Mace is taken off the table, the minister shall have his staff ready to come into the room and set up.

You had a point of order, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. It’s more of a point of information than a point of order. I’m asking for your guidance and clarification. In this schedule that was presented and circulated in the House the other day and is also printed in the Order Paper, when do the Alberta Alliance and the independent member get an opportunity to participate in the budget estimates? I can’t find it here, and if you could guide me, I’d be grateful.

Thanks.

The Chair: As I pointed out earlier, when the member was busy in the House, occupied with something else, any time more than the three hours, once the three hours have been taken up, any member can speak. Also, there are days on the schedule, if you would look at the cross-ministry days on the schedule – and I hope all members have had some of the schedules – that other members can speak.

So if you have a question specifically, any member can deal with it afterwards with me, and I’ll go over it with them.

Now, is the hon. Minister of Energy ready to start with your introductory remarks?

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It’s a bit early for us, I guess. We haven’t had an opportunity to have the staff in yet. What I’d like to do, if it’s all right, is begin my remarks. I believe I have 10 minutes for remarks, so I’d like to begin my remarks at this point. So, Mr. Chairman, I will begin.

Certainly, Albertans do enjoy prosperity and a high quality of life. I believe that that is thanks in large part to our energy resources. These resources belong to all Albertans, and I’m pleased to be here today to discuss the Ministry of Energy’s plan and the budget to further build on these abundant energy resources.

2:30

Energy revenue accounts for over one-third of the government’s total revenue and is roughly equal to the amount received from all tax sources. These revenues will continue to help fund priority programs that benefit all Albertans such as health care, education, and social programs.

In order to build a stronger Alberta, it is vital that we invest in the Ministry of Energy in order to build on our strengths. Given the high level of activity that’s taking place, we also need to invest in people, systems, and infrastructure to sustain responsible development and collect revenue from our energy industry.

You will see that our strategic priorities now reflect the three priorities the Premier gave me to address: to develop a comprehensive energy strategy that will guide future development of both renewable and nonrenewable resources and the conservation of energy, to develop a value-added strategy linked with the energy strategy, and to ensure the continuing effective operation of our electricity system to meet the needs of Albertans.

The Ministry of Energy’s business plan has also been expanded to include responsibilities for renewable energy development and for energy conservation and efficiency. We are also now responsible for biofuels development in Alberta. Mr. Chairman, that’s an area that was previously under the jurisdiction, of course, of Alberta Agriculture and Food. Our plan also includes work to support cross-ministry initiatives, including the land-use framework and the royalty review. These changes have been incorporated in our new business plan and are also reflected in our budget.

Operating spending for the Ministry of Energy for 2007-08 is $300 million, a $73 million, or 32.2 per cent, increase over the 2006-07 forecast. Of this approximately $300 million, two-thirds is allocated to the Department of Energy, and the other one-third goes to the Energy and Utilities Board. The increase in funding for the ministry is due to our expanded responsibilities and the priorities outlined in my mandate letter. Spending for the Department of Energy for ’07-08 is more than $200 million, an increase of $68 million from the forecasted spending of $132 million for ’06-07.

Funding increases in ’07-08 include the following. Biofuel initiatives received an increase in spending to $41 million, up from $5 million in the ’06-07 forecast. This funding will be invested in bioenergy development projects and initiatives, including biofuel commercialization and marketing, infrastructure development, and producer credits. A credit will be introduced for ethanol, biodiesel, or other biofuels in Alberta. This program is estimated to cost $128 million over the next three years and will replace the fuel tax exemption.

Another focus of the Ministry of Energy is energy and environmental research. The energy innovation fund initiatives will receive $18 million in new funding to be invested in research, advanced technology, and other projects focused on energy supply and protection of the environment. This fund will provide a total of $142 million in ’07-08 and ’08-09, allocated across several departments, for activities such as clean-coal technology pilot projects, groundwater mapping, reclamation research, biofuel development, and biodiversity monitoring.

Mr. Chairman, $3.5 million has been allocated for the development of an integrated energy strategy, and an additional $500,000 is being spent to develop a value-added strategy to ensure the continuing effective operation of our electricity system. We’re also working to develop a comprehensive energy strategy to guide the use and responsible development of both renewable and nonrenewable energy sources. This will include enhancing value-added opportunities, energy conservation, and development of the oil sands.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

All of the increased activity in Alberta's energy industry creates more pressures on the Energy and Utilities Board. Spending for the Energy and Utilities Board has increased from the amount forecast in '06-07, from $149 million to $159 million. Of this $159 million 57 per cent of the funding comes from industry and 43 per cent from the ministry. This increase is funded partially by a $5 million increase in the industry levy. It will be used to promote regulatory compliance and address pressures related to the development of new and unconventional energy resources, including the oil sands. An increase in ministry funding to the EUB of nearly $5 million to deal with these pressures has been added to the forecast expenses for this coming year.

The EUB has experienced a dramatic increase in applications and in the complexity of those applications, especially those relating to oil sands projects. To give a couple of examples, there have been more well applications, licences, and oil sands projects to review and approve, more agreements to issue and maintain, and more wells and facilities to inspect. I will introduce legislation later this spring, Mr. Chairman, to restructure the EUB. I can discuss this more in detail following my remarks if there are questions.

External factors beyond Alberta's control have a major effect on revenue. Global events, changes in economic conditions, and even weather can significantly affect Alberta's forecasted resource revenue. Resource revenue budget sensitivities change from year to year as they are based on price, production, and a number of other factors. Sensitivities taken into account for Budget '07 are that a dollar change in the price of oil spread over one fiscal year equates to about $139 million, 10 cents difference in the price of natural gas equals $98 million, and a 1 cent variance in the exchange rate is equal to about a $123 million change in revenue.

The Department of Energy benchmarks its oil forecasts with those of a number of private-sector analysts, and the rapid rise in energy prices in recent years was, Mr. Chairman, unexpected. Energy analysts surveyed have indicated that oil and natural gas prices will decline in the following two years. Budget 2007 assumes that natural gas prices '06-07 would average $6.75 per gigajoule, and oil prices would average $58 U.S. a barrel for west Texas intermediate.

Budget '07 also estimates that nonrenewable resource revenue would decline over the next three years. Revenue is forecast to decline from $11.7 billion in '06-07 to $7.8 billion in '09-10. This decline reflects more than just energy pricing. It reflects expected lower production levels, lower land licence and lease sales, increased production and processing costs, and an increased share of oil royalties paid on bitumen rather than on conventional or synthetic crude.

Alberta's royalty regime is a competitive, comprehensive collection of programs that apply to a wide range of oil, gas, and minerals. Together with Alberta's tax policies our overall royalty regime has been successful in attracting unprecedented investment, ensuring good jobs for Albertans, and bringing record resource revenues of more than $14 billion to the provincial treasury in '05-06. Amendments were made to four royalty programs last year, and we eliminated the royalty tax credit program on January 1.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the time allocation has now elapsed. Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, can you just advise the chair as to how you would like us to proceed with regard to timing? Would you like us to deal with a 20-minute chunk, going back and forth, or 10 minutes for you and then 10 minutes response time?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. minister indicated 10 minutes. If we could have 10 minutes.

That's what you would prefer, sir?

Mr. Knight: That's fine.

The Deputy Chair: Ten and 10?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure.

The Deputy Chair: We'll proceed with that. Go ahead.

2:40

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It certainly is with interest that I participate in the budget estimates this afternoon on the Department of Energy. It was with interest that I listened to the opening remarks from the hon. minister. I for one and, I'm certain, the minister don't forget and overlook the importance of this ministry to the balance sheet of the entire province. Sometimes people don't realize that it's this department that collects the royalties that the hon. President of the Treasury Board just loves to count, but it's true. And it is surprising to me: I'm delighted to see this royalty review finally take place, but in reality I think it belongs in the Department of Energy, not in the Department of Finance.

Certainly, when I look at this volume that the minister tabled in the Assembly on April 16 regarding the royalty review that was conducted in the period of time between 2005 and 2006, it is an interesting read. I certainly don't mean to have the only copy that was in the library, but the library saw that there was a great deal of interest in this royalty review, and I understand they have photocopied this document.

The partial disclosure. We talked earlier, Mr. Chairman, about a barrel of oil in this department, but all of us know that when we look at the exemptions that have been whited out in this tabling, the department must be using whiteout by the barrel there because there are a lot of sections that are exempted from public view that I'm certain would be of interest.

When we talk about the reduction in royalties, the hon. minister is correct. The Auditor General for a number of years had suggested that the Alberta royalty tax credit should be eliminated. There didn't seem to be a valid purpose for this tax credit anymore. It's been staged out over time, and it is correct that there has been a small reduction in the royalty holiday programs or incentives or whatever we want to call them. But when you look at the Auditor General's current report, we will see that the amount of revenue that we have exempted from royalties has actually doubled from two years ago to the year ending March 31, 2006. In other words, two years ago there was a $500 million pool of cash that was not collected. It was a royalty holiday. That has almost doubled, and I think that in the Auditor General's report, if we were to look, we would see that that is in the range of $950 million. So we're giving away more royalty holidays, not less.

We've also started the ethane program, and that is interesting in itself. We're giving a significant royalty reduction in ethane. I think it's in the range of – and I could stand corrected – about $154 million annually. Over a five-year period that would be a lot of money. All this is going on at the same time our former Minister of Energy is involved in a political posting in Washington and is indicating to those elected U.S. officials that this government is out of the business of subsidies and they're not involved in it. I would have the direct quote here, but I have misplaced that document. I meant to table it this afternoon.

When we say that we have eliminated royalty holiday programs, the hon. minister is correct, but there is the rest of the story. We have implemented a program for ethane for petrochemical users, and when you look at the total amount that we're giving in royalty holidays to the energy industry, it has increased in the last two fiscal years from half a billion dollars to almost a billion dollars. I would advise the hon. minister of that information, and I'm certain that he would be aware of this.

We could go through the fiscal plan, and we could see the importance of this ministry to our bottom line. I talked about this before, and the hon. minister is absolutely correct. When we look at what the future holds, where we're going, and we see the decline in conventional crude oil production, and we see the decline in natural gas production – hopefully, that may be reversed with CO₂ sequestration – in the short term we have to be very cautious about our spending because we're not increasing the royalty take on synthetic crude oil.

The hon. minister is absolutely right when he talks about Syncrude and Suncor having the legislated option, the one-time-only option to go from a synthetic crude oil royalty rate to a rate on bitumen, which is significantly less. They've got the one-time right to do that in orders in council that were passed in 1996. I was hoping to get to that in question period at some point, but now may be a good time to discuss why we need that. Those orders in council were passed in '96, and I think the 10 years is coming up – maybe it was '98. I know that the former Premier signed the orders in council. Anyway, Suncor and Syncrude have this option.

Suncor also gets a considerable amount on an annual basis, which they can use to subtract from their royalty amounts, as I recall. I would like to know why at this time this is even necessary. Those were signed deals, and I understand that we have to stick to them, but why they would need to go back to a bitumen royalty is a question that I would be very anxious for the minister to answer in light of the fact that one-third of all our revenues in this province are coming from his department.

The royalty regime up there in the tar sands. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I was looking at the tabling that was presented, and I saw so many other reports that were referenced, including this one I tabled yesterday, Comparison of Selected Oil Resource Taxation Regimes. In here it states – and this was printed in 2000 – that perhaps it would be advantageous if the department had a look, five years into the oil sands regime, at how this program was working and whether it should be continued, improved, or changed or whatever. To my knowledge that has not been done, and I'd like to know why it hasn't been done. It's clear that postpayout with so many of these oil sands projects – and the one that I'm going to be specific with is the Syncrude joint venture – the royalty rate is not near 25 per cent. In fact, I can back that statement up with a report from Mr. Mansell and his colleague, that were part of a think tank or an economic research group associated with the University of Calgary. Our energy researcher Sean Kochan's numbers indicate that with the Syncrude joint venture partners that disclosed their royalty payments, that's the ballpark: between 10 and 16 per cent.

So I think that we have to have another look at this and ensure that we're collecting an adequate amount on synthetic crude oil production in royalty to meet our fiscal requirements. When we consider that over the last 10 years the budget for this government has gone from roughly $14 billion to now, as we discuss this budget, Mr. Chairman, $33 billion, we need a lot of sources of revenue if this sort of government spending is to continue in this manner. Hopefully, it's not, but certainly when we look at what was prepared by Petroleum Economics Limited, it's of interest . . .

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the allocated time has run out.

Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, it's going to be a pleasure for me to respond. I think that the open debate that we'll have here with respect to our estimates should turn out very productive on both sides of the floor.

Before we go any further, if I may, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to introduce to you the members of the staff that are here with me. I have the deputy minister with me, Dan McFadyen. Douglas Borland, John Giesbrecht, Barry Rodgers, and Mike Ekelund from the department join us today to assist. There isn't, of course, an answer lodged in my head for every question that people will have with respect to our budget, so there'll be an opportunity here for us, I think, to get the questions answered that members will bring up and want responses to.

With respect to royalty review, again, Mr. Chairman, the royalty review itself that's being conducted now wasn't what the member opposite was alluding to. It talked more about the documents that we've tabled and, certainly, documents that the member has tabled with respect to royalty review. It is crucial to the ongoing budgets and revenues of the province totally and, most certainly, very crucial to us in the Department of Energy.

The ARTC was certainly one royalty review that we have done. We had another one with respect to re-entries. That was perceived to have run its useful life. There were others around tight gas and different programs, of course, and there are a number of programs that continue to be reviewed within the department.

There was mention that the Auditor General has interest in what we're doing there, and again that is as it should be. As you know, the energy industry in the province of Alberta is responsible for about a hundred billion dollars worth of the GDP. The GDP in the province is, you know, give or take, $200 billion, about a hundred billion of that related to the energy industry directly. So it's crucial that the Auditor General should be interested, and most certainly we work with him, and we will continue to do that.

There was mention made, and I can answer, I hope, the question that the member raised with respect to ethane extraction. The ethane extraction project is one that we've worked on with industry and, certainly, the department since about June 2005. We're coming down to the implementation, I think, shortly. Probably within another maybe 90 days or that kind of a time frame we would have a program in place.

The ethane extraction project is part and parcel of the integrated energy strategy that we have and our value maximization. Again, I think it's important for the members to understand that we're moving a bit forward here with respect to value-added. We really feel that the best fit for Albertans with respect to this resource that belongs to Albertans, of course, is value maximization. Value-adding is a little bit nebulous because it doesn't really tell you what you're going to do or what the range or what the scope is, but value maximization is part and parcel of the ethane extraction project, Mr. Chairman.

What will happen there is that we will be able to assist industries that take an opportunity to add incremental ethane to the petrochemical business in the province of Alberta. So it must – and I will express this again – it must be utilized in the province of Alberta to increase the outcomes from the petrochemical industry and then that program be tied back to the royalty structure so that producers have an opportunity to be involved in this major business for the province of Alberta. As you know, the petrochemical industry in Alberta is the largest in Canada, and we look very much forward to opportunities to continue supporting the industry and having it grow and be a major part of Alberta's future with respect to energy.

Some mention of the Washington office. Most certainly, Mr. Chairman, I won't get into that. Not particularly relative to my budget discussions. However, I do have to say that we've had very, very good communications from that office into our markets in the United States, our investment community south of the border. I think that up to this point in time most people would agree that that has been a very positive and productive choice of office, and certainly the individual that's there now is, we think, doing a very good job for the people of Alberta.

There was mention a number of times, Mr. Chairman, about holidays. Holidays in the energy business. Holidays and holidays. Royalty holidays. I have to tell you that in the energy industry there are no holidays. We work everyday, 24/7, for the people of Alberta. We don't take holidays. There are no holidays in the energy business, and we will continue to do that.

There were also suggestions made that there is a bit of a play going on here between conventional oil and conventional gas and the fact that it's on a decline. I can remember the first time I was in that business, probably about the mid-1970s sometime, and it was deemed to be on a very, very serious decline at that point in time. I have to say that there was a bit of decline in conventional gas, I think, in the '06-07 era. With the drilling programs that we've had in place recently, we have pretty much kept pace.

Certainly, over time we know that these are finite resources. So will we see declines on the conventional, if you call the old gas and that conventional? Yes, indeed, we'll see that. Serious considerations with respect to making up those revenue dollars? Absolutely. We do have a plan in place to do that, Mr. Chairman. We have replacements with deep tight gas. We have replacements, of course, on the gas side in CBM. I think that, you know, when we look ahead in Alberta, on the oil sand part there's going to be a tremendous opportunity for increased production, more involvement by Albertans, Canadians, and certainly investors from around the world.

The other thing that I should point out is that we are standing on another Alberta. Our conventional resources are something less than 40 per cent produced. We have left in place conventional pools somewhere in the magnitude of 65 to 70 per cent of the resource that was there. Mr. Chairman, as I've indicated in my opening remarks, the technology that we're working with in the province of Alberta will continue to let us have an opportunity to bring those numbers from 70 per cent left behind to 65 to 60, down and down and down, and over the years we would hope that those resources – we know where they are, we know the quality, we know how to handle them, and we certainly think that there's a tremendous opportunity to retrieve a lot more of that resource.

There was mention made of the Crown agreements with respect to two of the major oil sands operators currently. The bitumen royalty option most certainly is in place. The member opposite has asked me: why was it done? I would suggest to you that in 1996 the whole climate, both globally and in North America, was certainly different than it is today. In 1997 there were some adjustments made with respect to the regime and the initial agreements. There were contracts put in place that would allow for a bitumen royalty option for these two players. Why was it done? I believe, actually, that if you looked at it in the context of 1996 or 1997 and you looked forward at what they would have thought would have been the prices that oil would be delivered for in the future, in a 10-year span, and gave them an opportunity, perhaps, out from that to make adjustments, in those days, in those terms it was very likely a valid consideration.

3:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. When we're talking about those orders in council from 1996 that gave these one-time options for this change from the synthetic crude oil to the bitumen royalty rate, I think it was $158 million that Suncor could subtract annually, if my memory is serving me correctly. I don't have the order in council with me. I think that was the amount on an annual basis that they could use. If you could clarify as to why that was necessary, I would be grateful.

I would also like to remind at this time the hon. minister that the royalties paid on synthetic crude oil are so much higher than that on bitumen. I know that you and your department officials have worked very hard on that HUTF report. I would like to see every effort made to increase the amount of bitumen upgrading in this province.

The minister is absolutely right whenever he's talking about the potential for further development. In fact, maybe we could put an upgrader out in Vermilion or somewhere like that, where a lot of that heavy oil is, at some point in the future because there is certainly a considerable amount of energy stored in those bitumen deposits that are located under or partially under the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster. We could keep the President of the Treasury Board very busy there until his fingers are sore counting the royalty money.

Now, this is a very interesting subject, and we're going to probably run out of time before we get an opportunity to discuss all of the issues in this department and the entire budget, but I would like to get some comments from the minister on some questions in regard to electricity deregulation. Every year now I look in the sort of brag book at the back of the fiscal plan on the economic outlook and everything, and I used to see in here, when I was first elected, a comparative cost on electricity, electricity prices in various places in the country. I don't see that now, and I know what the reason is. It's that this department is embarrassed that the cost of electricity has gotten so high with deregulation that they no longer put the chart in here comparing our low-cost electricity to other jurisdictions. Sometimes you can find a lot in this budget by what you don't see and what you don't read, and that is an example of that.

One of the most controversial government policies developed in the last generation in this province certainly would have been electricity deregulation. I know that the hon. minister was in charge on behalf of the government of the latest version of the Electric Utilities Act whenever it was discussed and debated in this Assembly. We have a look at everything that has occurred. We have high prices. We have less service, certainly. We have more add-ons on the bill. Has the minister considered reversing the decision by the former Minister of Energy, who made this decision and overruled the EUB? The EUB wanted to have a roughly 50-50 share of the costs for expanded or upgraded transmission lines shared between the consumers of the electricity and the generators. The Minister of Energy overruled this decision by the EUB and dumped all the costs onto the bills of already frustrated consumers.

Will the government, will this department consider now overruling the ambassador, or whatever you want to call him, in Washington? You don't even have to tell him. Just do it. Don't phone him. Don't ask him for advice. Just overrule that decision that was articulated in Banff overruling the EUB and make the generators pay half the cost. We've seen these costs escalate.

Now, we've got that 500 kV line between Genesee and Langdon, and it's certainly a controversial project, to say the least. But when we look at that line and when we look at the first needs assessment that was done, the costs for that were roughly $277 million, and there was a plus or minus in there, I think, of 30 per cent for cost overruns. The AESO website, I believe, is where I saw that. Now costs have almost in two years doubled that. You know, we're going to get the usual excuses of materials and labour and costs of that nature increasing dramatically and that's the reason for the doubling of the prices. But wages haven't doubled. Galvanized steel for those big towers, I don't think that has doubled. So I would be very anxious to see some sort of accounting of this because consumers are going to be handed the bill. AltaLink, of course, is going to be guaranteed a return on their money. They're not the losers in this.

There was a question in the Assembly in regard to Enmax and their proposed – I think eventually it's going to be a 1,200 megawatt modern, natural gas fired generating station right at the edge of the Calgary load. I think that's a good idea: to bring the energy to the generating station and then turn that energy, whether it's natural gas or coal, into electricity at the edge of the load. The demand for the electrical load in Calgary is significant. In fact, it was so significant that I see that the AESO last year put Calgary's internal load right on the current supply and demand page of their website. They've since removed it. I don't know why. I was often going to phone them and say: what about Edmonton? But I thought: well, I wouldn't. It's not there anymore.

When we look at the electricity system and we look at how we need to expand and modernize our transmission lines, I'm curious. As we allow the AESO to have more power, and I'm saying the regulatory ability – we're giving them more power – we're taking power away from the EUB. This order in council from April 11, 2007, would be the document that I would reference because, in my opinion and in the opinion of others that I've consulted, there is a transfer of regulatory authority or power from the EUB to the ISO here. There has been some concern in the past about legal ramifications when we give the EUB 180 days, I believe it is, to make a regulatory decision. There was concern that this would lead to a number of lawsuits.

Now, with the landowners and with all the folks that are going before the EUB in one form or another in Red Deer, is the minister and is the department concerned that the passing of this regulation, this regulation to change the transmission system, this Order in Council 173/2007, recommended by the Minister of Energy under the Electric Utilities Act, section 142 – the date I have on this is April 11, 2007 – will jeopardize the whole regulatory process for that entire kV line? Essentially, the rules have changed halfway through the game. The landowners were certainly looking at issues, and the rules have changed with this transmission regulation.

Thanks.

3:10

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your allocated time has now elapsed.

Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

Mr. Knight: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I certainly do. I've got to go back a little bit. You know, the member is asking a number of questions, of course, that require, I think, a bit of an expanded answer, so I want to go back.

There was some suggestion on comparisons of royalty and that kind of thing. I think it might be useful for us just to indicate that when you make an economic rent comparison with Alberta and these other jurisdictions that a number of people keep bringing up – Norway being one of them, Alaska, perhaps Venezuela, and others – if you look at the total share that this resource returns to the people of the province of Alberta compared to Norway, you need to take into account our tax structure, royalty system, bid bonus system, and so on. Well, on the tax side Alberta receives more in the economic rent than do the folks in Norway or Alaska or Venezuela if you consider all of the things involved in the economic rent.

To go back and talk a bit about the bitumen royalty option, and we will get a number for the member, in 1996 what was the expected differential if you moved from SCO to bitumen? I don't have that number with me. Somebody here very well may, but if we don't have it for you here immediately, we'll get it to the member opposite in due course.

Bitumen upgrading capacity: very interesting and certainly very timely. As you know, we've been mandated by the Premier to provide value-added opportunities for Albertans. Of course, when we look at bitumen, most people immediately think that the number one thing you can do with respect to value add is to upgrade. That's not necessarily the only thing to do with bitumen, but it is one of the options and a very important one. So I'll just let the member know that I can give you some numbers that are going to be relatively close. They're not pinpointed, but they're close.

Currently in 2006 we've got about a 680,000-barrel capacity to upgrade bitumen in the province now. Under construction, as we speak, an additional 323,000 barrels a day. That would bring us to, rounds numbers, pretty much a million barrels a day. That's under construction. Announced bitumen upgraders in the province of Alberta: an additional 806,000 barrels a day, and those are the ones that are tied to corporations that are producing bitumen, transporting bitumen, and upgrading bitumen, all considering doing these things inside the province of Alberta. So we do those numbers roughly, and of course we know that some of these things, you know, economics being what they are, may not all proceed. If they did, we're at about 1.8 million barrels just with those. Then, besides that, there are two merchant upgraders, one under construction and one that's been announced, that add an additional hundred thousand barrels a day. So, Mr. Chairman, we're up to about 1.9 million barrels a day of bitumen that can be upgraded in the province of Alberta, given that the information that we have today would come to fruition.

So if we look ahead, between now and I'm going to say 2020 – we're talking about 15 years, so that's probably not out too far – the total capacity to produce bitumen, you know, probably industry experts would indicate that we may be someplace in the neighbourhood of 3 and a half million barrels. We may. If we can upgrade 2 million or 2 and a half million barrels of that and then have a blend of that project, some synbit, some bitumen with diluent, a variety of products that we can put into the export market for consumers in North America and, perhaps, even places around the world, I would suggest that that might be, indeed, value maximization for Albertans.

We have comparison charts, and indeed I would suggest that if we've left it out of the documents that the member opposite is looking at, we can certainly provide some comparisons for him. We certainly do have charts that will compare the cost of electricity in the province of Alberta with other places across the country. Certainly, other than places that are very heavily weighted towards rather low cost and, I might say, to some degree a bit aging and perhaps a little underrated now these days, it appears in certain circumstances, hydro in other parts of Canada, if you compare us with anything other than that, Mr. Chairman, we do very, very well.

In fact, in Regina, I mean, the recent things that we have here, you know, about 83 cents a meg; New Brunswick, 83. If we go to Calgary, it's 85 cents, but if you go to Edmonton, it's only 80 cents. You know, not bad, if you look at us relative to anywhere else in the country. Charlottetown, P.E.I. – and you and I both know a little bit about Charlottetown, P.E.I. – guess what they're doing over there?

Mr. Chairman, 94 and a half cents. We should be arguing for those folks a little bit; they're suffering. Alberta is in middle of the pack.

Transmission costs shared with generators and consumers. Mr. Chairman, let's be very clear on this particular issue. The member opposite knows this well. It's a point that he can make, leading people to misunderstand what happens. With respect to the cost of generating electricity, transmitting electricity, distributing electricity, and retailing electricity, it's borne by whom? The consumers of electricity. Now, isn't that odd. So if we take the cost of transmission, put 50 per cent of it in the hands of the generator, and then in the old system we allowed that generator to take that cost and put it into the mix that they had before they were actually bidding their power on the open marketplace, then the regulator would allow them to take that cost, mark up their cost of managing it, and put it into the cost of generation. Lo and behold, who pays? The same person.

What we did in this province, again: opened up the system, made it transparent, let people see what it is that they're actually paying for. When you pay for your electricity, on your bill it says that you're paying for electricity, Mr. Chairman. You're not paying for the transportation of it. You're not paying to distribute it. You're not paying to retail it. You're paying to generate the electricity and purchase that power.

The cost with respect to transmission: how are these costs managed? Of course, again, the member knows very well that the transmission system in the province of Alberta is completely regulated, absolutely and totally regulated, as it was before any of this started. The restructuring did not change the regulation areas with respect to transmission. Transmission, basically, is monopolistic by its nature, so it requires fairly stringent regulation, and of course we've continued to do that.

Enmax's 1,200-megawatt generator – good news for Alberta; good news for Albertans, generally speaking – however, has nothing at all to do with the transmission system and the fact that the transmission system in the province of Alberta is going to require over periods of time upgrading. It's certainly a robust system that has for the most part served Albertans very well. We're sure that it will continue to do so. Enmax's 1,200 megawatts, Mr. Chairman, will fit very nicely into the 8,000 megawatts that we're going to require over the next 10 or so years.

So is it a piece of the answer to the situation that we're faced with in Alberta? Absolutely. Does it have anything to do with our transmission system in the province? I would suggest not. There are certainly advantages when somebody like Enmax or any other entity that would want to get into the generating business puts something like 1,200 megawatts into the system in the province. It will certainly help to balance the grid. It helps to decrease line losses not only in the region that it's in but most certainly throughout the transmission system across the province.

So we're looking at that very positively but not in the light that people want to . . .

3:20

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the allocated time has now lapsed.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. minister did a very eloquent job of trying to defend electricity deregulation, but consumers certainly know that their power bills have more than doubled since this scheme was forced on them late in the year 2000. If our electricity distribution system is so robust, as he maintains, why is it always breaking down? There are lights flickering on and off all the time now, and it's not nearly as robust.

To the hon. minister: with all due respect, there has been no long-term planning of our electricity system. No one would risk their money because they didn't know what the rules would be, and as a result of this we are now trying to force on unwilling landowners a 500 kV line because we need the power. We need the transmission system to be upgraded before we can construct the baseload generation station at Keephills. The landowners are riled up.

This gets back to my further questions on this order in council. This change in the transmission regulation that has recently occurred: how is this going to be enforced, and how is this not going to invite legal action by landowners? As the regulatory process proceeded, the government changed the transmission regulation. Again, significant powers have been given to the ISO. They have been taken away from the EUB. The EUB is a docile servant of the ISO. Talking about administrative costs, in the last couple of annual reports that I looked at, I saw a significant increase in the administrative costs of the ISO. There doesn't seem to be anybody – maybe the hon. minister is going to keep his eye on them. There was concern in the legal community about having this quick turnaround time at the EUB in regard to these matters. Now the EUB in this document is obligated, as I understand it, if they're going to be longer than 180 days, to give an explanation. In the controversy that is surrounding that 500 kV line, we have a lot of upset landowners and ratepayers here. Is changing this regulation in the middle of the process not going to lead to a flood of legal action?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I said this before. Every day we hear from Albertans who are just sick and tired of the high electricity costs that this government has allowed to happen due to the deregulation experiment. This is the same government that forced a deregulated system on Alberta consumers, and they have seen absolutely no benefit to it at all. Now, can the minister tell us why he still supports deregulation when Alberta consumers want it unplugged? I do notice that in this regulation that we passed, for some of the recovery of must-run costs we're on essentially the same system that we unplugged because the compensation for these outfits "must be no greater than an amount that would result in the recovery of fixed, operating and maintenance costs, including a reasonable rate of return." Now, I'll be darned. That wasn't good enough with the old system, but now we have it for must-run costs.

You know, this government again indicates that, oh, they don't pick winners and losers. This is a question that has never been answered. I have never received an answer from the department. I brought this up in previous budget debates, and I have never received an answer to this. This question would be: why are you going to charge a tax on coal-fired units on a per megawatt basis? The generating unit owner's contribution is section 29 of this new transmission regulation. In 29(2) we're talking about upgrading the transmission facilities and a charge of $10,000 per megawatt. This is nothing more than a tax on further development out here. Now, other people would disagree with me, but it's nothing more than a tax on baseload coal-fired generation, in my mind. If I could have an answer for that from this hon. minister, I would be very grateful because I didn't get it from the previous minister. They promised at that point that they would.

I've got to go back here for a minute and correct the comparison between Alberta and Norway. This is a document – and I would urge all hon. members to have a look at this, Mr. Chairman. This is prepared by Petroleum Economics Limited. A well-known, well-recognized expert – and I got this information from the Internet – has prepared this with his consulting firm. He lists on the website Alberta Energy as one of his clients. His comparison of oil resource taxation regimes – he's got four of them in here. Alberta versus Norway: he's including a lot of things like bonuses, operating costs, taxation, you name it. Here's what he has to say, and this is for Alberta light. Alberta light is crude oil quality. The taxation percentage is 42 per cent. In Norway it is 48 per cent. And the producer's percentage is the reverse of that, of course: in Alberta it's 58 per cent, and in Norway it's 52 per cent.

He also does the same thing for a comparison between Alberta and Alaska, Alberta heavy and Alaska north slope oil. The taxation percentage in Alaska is 55 per cent; in Alberta it is 47 per cent. Of course, the Alberta producer's percentage is 53 per cent, and for Alaska north slope oil it is 45 per cent. He does the same thing with Venezuela. The taxation rate between Alberta and Venezuela: Alberta is 41 per cent; the Venezuelans are 56 per cent. The reverse would be the producer's take in that. So, you know, we have to be careful whenever we compare Alberta to Norway or Alberta to Alaska. We have to be very careful about that. This is a document that was prepared, and it was referenced in this tabling in a comparable study of Alberta to Norway. In fact, one of your department officials probably wrote the e-mail that I had the privilege of reading. I just had to get that on the record because there are two different views of who pays more, Norway or this province.

Now, getting back to electricity deregulation, why does the government continue along this path of electricity deregulation when it's clear that it's not working? To the minister – again, I offered this to the previous minister – take our plan. You took our stabilization fund plan. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, you took her child care plan, and you ran with that. Feel free to take our electricity deregulation plan as well. I don't understand why you continue to spend money trying to make deregulation work. I would suggest that you should just pull the plug, admit that it was a mistake, and return to a regulated system.

3:30

Now, a constituent of mine brought an issue to my office that I think also warrants further explanation from this government. He pointed out that each month he receives his natural gas bill from Direct Energy regulated services, which includes an enclosure that is promoting Direct Energy essential services. This constituent of mine – oh, we're going to get to this later.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. Again, I would suggest to the member opposite that it's going along reasonably well. We seem to be able to get some exchange going back and forth. However, I did notice that you found my reference note a bit humorous. So we might be able to at some point in time get back to the budget, and that's – you know, the discussion is fine.

So the AESO. Two or three times now there have been suggestions made that in the T-reg or in other adjustments that we've made with respect to restructuring, we've taken away power from the EUB. Nothing – nothing – that we've done in any of those regulations takes any authority away from the EUB.

What you will see there, Mr. Chairman, is that for the EUB there's a deference in the regulation to the AESO's technical and engineering expertise with respect to these issues about needs. So what they're saying, basically, is that we have hired at AESO some of the best technical and engineering expertise that's available. So why would the EUB question them with respect to that unless there's something that appears to be very, very offside, either with respect to the issue around the technical or engineering aspects or perhaps the public interest? So those are the only areas where we're talking about a deference that EUB should give to AESO.

Again, discussions abound. I agree with the member opposite about this business of restructuring the electrical industry in the province of Alberta. Mr. Chairman, I'll repeat this to the member opposite however many times I need to. In the province of Alberta previous to the time we started this, today, or in the future, there will be nothing in this system that is deregulated. It's all regulated.

The only thing we've done differently is we've taken one piece as a vertically integrated system of generating, transmission, distribution, retail: all stacked up there in a nice little stack. No one could figure out who charged who for what because it was all buried inside. We've taken that thing and taken the blocks and laid them out nice and neat. Here they are: regulation here, regulation here, regulation here, regulation over here. However, we've said to the generators: you're doing a piece of business in the open market; you bid into the pool. That's all we've done: restructured the system, not deregulated anything.

There was a suggestion that somehow or another we've added a tax to coal-fired generation. There has always been an access fee. This is nothing more than the access fee. If you're going to generate electricity and you're on a huge scale – a huge scale – 400 megawatts, 500, 800. We don't know. Somebody will come up, I'm sure, with a proposal at some point in time for 1,100 megawatts or 1,200; Enmax maybe. They want to put it in the grid? What's going to happen to the grid? Who should pay? Here's the grid sitting there. It's happy enough doing what it does, and all of a sudden somebody comes along and says: I want to put this thousand megawatts right here. So somebody is responsible to pay for the costs that are going to be incurred for that connection and adjustments that need to be made in that grid that's affecting every other Albertan.

So you have to have a consistent message here. On the one hand you're telling me that generators – right? – should pay for transmission. When we say that there is a piece of transmission that we do believe they should pay for, you say: take that away; they shouldn't pay for that. So all I'm saying to you, hon. member, is that what we've done here isn't anything different than we've done for an awful long time, and that is that the generators would be required to pay a fee because it does affect the rest of the system and the transmission system, generally speaking, serving all Albertans. I think that it's only fair in those cases that generators that are going to tie in with major pieces of load are required to support that system.

Comparisons with Norway. You know, I think that we'll be comparing Norway probably forever. Interestingly enough, we'll get a lot closer to comparisons with Norway because they're here now. They're interested. They realize that what they were doing in certain parts of the world aren't the only places they can do business, and most certainly they're interested in doing business here.

I mean, there are reports and reports and reports. Here's one. This is the one you quoted from prior there, Comparison of Selected Oil Resource Taxation Regimes. There's lots and lots of this stuff. What they're talking about: comparisons made in selected tax regimes. This is what you're talking about; there's a difference here: Alberta's gap narrows significantly when taxation is compared to field price less supply cost. In fact, Alberta and Norway are quite comparable given the accuracy of this assessment.

We can pick pieces – and we've had this discussion. You can take a little snippet from Texas and a piece from here and there and say: we don't do well because these guys over here on this point here are doing better. Yes. And in some circumstances they're doing worse. So, you know, I think that on balance these folks are telling us that Alberta and Norway are quite comparable.

There were questions with respect to transmission regulation. Again, we can't have this thing both ways. We stand accused – not guilty, accused – of deregulating. Well, could be some truth in some of that in places. We've moved regulations, changed them. We may have. But, you know, we set a system in place, brought in a new Electric Utilities Act, worked on that in 2001-02, and brought it in in 2003. I think it cleared through the Legislature in 2003. Most certainly, when we talked about it when the bill was discussed and so on, I would suggest that there had been some reference to the regulation with respect to that legislation.

We know that when you do something like that and bring in a piece of legislation that's relatively encompassing with respect to something as important as electric utility in the province of Alberta, there would at some point in time be adjustments required. So, Mr. Chairman, what I'd suggest to you is that the regulations that we tabled and moved forward – you know, in the province of Alberta it's a normal course of business and very good business, by the way.

With respect to any of the hearings or projects that are in the process or coming forward, the relative parts of the new transmission regulation will have, I would suggest, very little, minimal, or no cost attached. However, an important piece that I think that we should point out in those new regulations – there's a lovely little piece in there, and it's a very short little piece in there, and it has to do with landowners, and it has to do with their compensation. Again, you've suggested that we've taken away the EUB powers. Well, we're not taking away EUB powers. [Mr. Knight's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you will get your opportunity again.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I must say at this time that the hon. minister's officials in the Department of Energy are much quieter than his colleagues in the House during question period. I don't know if anyone has told them or not, but we can have coffee and other refreshments in here if they find it a little dull.

Certainly, one comparison that I would urge the minister and his officials to look at – and it's been overlooked in the debate over CO₂ sequestration – is the fact that in Norway since 1996 offshore there has been a significant amount of experimentation and development of CO₂ sequestration. That information has to be made available to Albertans, that this project has been going on there for the best part of 11 years, and it seems to be working. There seems to be a great deal of skepticism here over CO₂ sequestration. If we're going to make another comparison about Norway, let's also get that in there.

Before I get to the role of this department in Direct Energy, I'm sorry, but with all due respect, I can't agree with you in regard to the interpretation that the EUB is somehow not affected, and there's not any more regulatory power going to the ISO because if you look at section 5(1) of this regulation and what the board has to do here, all the board rules under section 129(1) of the act must be consistent with the standards and rules under section 5 that the ISO makes under this regulation. I don't know how the hon. minister can say that the EUB is not the loser in this.

We're continuing to facilitate exports, we're continuing to talk about exports of electricity, and we're continuing to expect consumers to foot the cost of these transmission lines. None of this makes sense, and if we look further in this regulation, we will see where the board must not require the ISO to make any statement with respect to the prudence of a transmission facility organization or an electrical distribution system in incurring a cost under another section of this regulation.

So my question would be: if what the hon. minister had stated is true, why is the ISO not responsible for their actions when further on in this regulation the board has to explain its actions in regard to a hearing conducted within a 180-day period or after that 180-day period? In my opinion, again, this makes the board a docile servant of the ISO, and I think it should be the other way around.

Now, getting to my constituent. I understand that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is involved in some sort of regulatory process to streamline the entire process. My constituent – and this is in regard to an enclosure that is promoting Direct Energy essential services – points out that the cost of the postage is paid by the consumer, yet Direct Energy essential services is allowed to market itself to consumers for free since the consumer is paying for the postage. So the question that arises is: why are consumers who are paying for a regulated gas service forced to pay the postage for a deregulated company to promote its services? Why has Direct Energy essential services been allowed to have Alberta consumers pay for its marketing campaign?

Now, I do have some questions at this time on the business plan. On page 132 under the heading Challenges: Electricity Generation and Transmission Capacity it states, "Installed generating capacity will need to increase in order to keep pace with Alberta's growing demand for electricity." Again, why does this government continually boast about the increased generation capacity that deregulation has brought to Albertans when clearly that is not the case? If deregulation is so great, as the minister claims, why has it failed to produce sufficient generation or lower our electricity prices? How can this government continue to defend deregulation after all these years when there have been zero benefits for Alberta consumers? Can the minister tell us why deregulation has failed to provide adequate generation capacity as was proven time and again over the past years – we talked about it earlier – whenever Albertans were forced to deal with blackouts.

On page 132 of the business plan also under the heading Challenges: Electricity Generation and Transmission Capacity it states, "Timely regulatory approval will be critical to ensuring adequate future transmission capacity." The 500 kV line hearings are a good example of how the department has failed miserably in regulating this process to date. Landowners in this province deserve better than what this government is providing in terms of a regulatory process. Landowners have no confidence whatsoever in this system.

Now, here it is my view that the department is stating that it is critical that we have timely approval for these projects. If the budget of the EUB is only increased modestly and the workload of the EUB is that they have to work like Trojans over there, all this while the retired EUB chairman has stated that the EUB is suffering from exhaustion, how is this going to work? What is the government's logic here with this budget? Are you just going to run these approvals and rubber stamp them despite the concerns of the landowners? I think the EUB needs help because we're giving them more and more work, more and more files, if I can use that term. I know that people are recruiting their staff, and that's a problem for them. I think we have really failed the landowners of central Alberta and what is affectionately called the western corridor in this whole regulatory process. I don't think that we should be in any way speeding up this regulatory process.

There's also the issue with Mr. Kellan Fluckiger, a contractor that was hired. The last time that I looked on the website of the department, that individual was still employed by the department. He comes from Gray Davis's office in California. The whole issue of conflict of interest and how all this works with the department and the fact that it has been brought to our attention and I believe it's also been brought to the attention of the EUB hearing that this individual's spouse works for AltaLink – how does all this work? Is it because I'm a contractor to the department that conflict-of-interest rules don't apply? I think that if we had clear standards on all of this, there wouldn't be the lack of confidence that has been expressed by so many landowners in this hearing process to date regarding this 500 kV line.

Now, on page 139 of the business plan, performance measure 5.a, Power Generation, margin between supply and peak demand for the last actual year, 2005, was 17 per cent. Can the minister explain how we have a 17 per cent margin, yet we continue to experience energy emergency alerts from the Alberta Electric System Operator indicating that we are approaching another blackout? Why can't we keep the lights on in Alberta if we have all this surplus generation? Will the minister finally admit that the reason is because it is not profitable for the industry to keep a healthy surplus available and running in the case of a lightning strike or some other circumstance? Therefore, when such things happen, Albertans lose their power.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the chair is able to recognize you again if you'd like to speak.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I appreciate that.

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Once again this is an example that deregulation only benefits the pocketbooks of power producers and not Alberta consumers. The minister can talk about his vertical tower all he wants, but the pile of cash at the top of that belongs to the producers, and it's coming from the pockets of the consumers. I still can't understand, Mr. Chairman, when this government will finally recognize that it should be serving the interests of Albertans, the power consumers, and not the rascals like Enron.

I did have the opportunity the other evening to watch The Smartest Guys in the Room. I was urged to do that by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. It was on PBS, commercial-free, and it was certainly an interesting movie to watch. It was well past 1 o'clock before it was over. It was quite odd because so many of the people that were involved in that movie were also involved with promoting electricity deregulation in this province.

Now, regarding page 138 of the business plan goal 5 states, "Maintain a competitive market framework that provides Albertans with competitively priced and reliable electricity and natural gas." Can the minister tell us how much the price of electricity has risen since deregulation was forced on Albertans compared to the increase or decrease in other jurisdictions? He did a comparison earlier, but I'm sorry; I also did a comparison on electricity farm prices. When you compare the four western Canadian provinces, understanding that they all have different systems of generating electricity, regardless of input costs our costs here in this province are significantly higher than the costs in Manitoba, in Saskatchewan, or in British Columbia. And it's deregulation. Electricity deregulation has caused that.

Why is it the goal of the government to provide competitively priced electricity and natural gas and not the cheapest, most reliable electricity and natural gas? Can the minister please tell us why the new transmission regulation, again, removes accountability from the ISO? I don't agree with the ISO being allowed to determine and approve costs. I don't think this is accountable, and I don't understand why this is going on. It's quite different.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Auditor General's report. We had a look at that briefly. Hopefully we're going to get to that again, but I want to go back, if you don't mind, please, to royalties and the royalty structure. It's great to see the experts from the department here with the minister today. I think this is a real step forward in the democratic process. I'm glad they're not here during question period, but I'm glad they're here now.

We hear from Albertans frequently, and a lot of the hon. members of this House who were in the race for the Conservative Party leadership also heard people say that they feel as though we're not getting the right amount in royalty. If the Royalty Review Panel recommends changes to the royalty regime, how much of the budget resources that we're discussing this afternoon are set aside for administering these changes?

Albertans feel as though their government has not been open with them. They're suspicious. Even the royalty review documents that were tabled in this House – and we talked about that earlier – are censored significantly. Will any of this year's budgeted money be utilized for reaching out and sharing the information with the resource owners, Albertans. We fight for documents and get quoted ridiculously high prices when this information should all be public to begin with.

Again to the minister: how are you going to improve on your department's openness in terms of royalty information? I would really like the entire contents of this royalty review, you know, instead of just selected pieces of it. Will the minister dedicate any funds to increasing the government's openness in relation to how royalties are collected and how they're calculated, how the whole process is audited?

Now, getting to the process of auditing, the Auditor General again makes recommendations in his 2005-06 report, page 76, recommendation 27. The Auditor General again recommended that the department "complete its risk assessment and evaluate the assurance obtained from the Petroleum Registry System and the Department's controls over well and production data." Have you addressed this recommendation since it is repeated by the Auditor General? How many dollars or how much money have you dedicated to meeting this particular recommendation? Can the minister please tell us if we have lost royalty revenues due to the department's failure to be quicker in addressing this concern?

With that, I don't know if I'm going to have time when I get to the royalty review. You know, we get 10 minutes over there, and I don't think that's enough. The minister lifts his eyes. Yeah, 10 minutes is not very long. The research I've been doing indicates that all the lower 48 states, the ones that are mentioned in here, use the Henry hub price to calculate their royalties. We're very vague about how we collect our royalties here, whether it's the Alberta gas reference price or the reference price, whatever it is. There are some very quiet, if I can use that term, Mr. Chairman, references in the annual report and in the budget about how our royalties are collected. But I really think we should be going to the Henry hub, the spot price.

The American jurisdictions that are discussed in this report are on the Henry hub price, and if we look at the government take in this uncensored version of this Wood Mackenzie report, we will see that there's a significant difference between the government take. Texas is at the top of the list, followed by Louisiana. Alberta is at the bottom of the list. If we were to charge our royalties for natural gas – and I should have been clear, Mr. Chairman – on the Henry hub spot price, I think there would be a significant difference in the amount of royalty we collect in natural gas.

Now, I have had the privilege of having some research provided to me. This research is quite interesting because between the year 1990 and the year 2004 – and this is using EUB production figures – again, we got a good idea of the amount of natural gas that was produced. We know from natural gas the Henry hub price. We know that that's a different price that's used for the calculations than what we're currently using. We know the total value of their production, which is $266 billion, and we know that the royalties that have been collected from the hon. minister's own department over the years, starting in 1990 through to 2004, amount to $41 billion. But if you look at industry revenues and if you look at royalties received, we have received about 15.7 per cent in royalties from our natural gas. If we were to do that in a pie chart, it would be significantly less than what the department is indicating in its annual reports. In fact, what the department is indicating in its annual reports is significantly less again than what is in the documents that had been tabled in the House on the 16th of April. I would like an explanation of that.

4:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It may have been noticed by some people and most surely noticed by my hon. colleague opposite that I had to go for coffee somewhere around the Enron part, I think it was. There's just no point, you know. But, yeah, the coffee is good. To get down to answer some of the questions that are relative to what we're talking about, I am prepared to certainly engage in that, and I think that that part can be constructive.

Mr. Chairman, questions around CO₂ sequestration. Most certainly, you know, there are areas globally, Norway being one of them, I understand, but also places in the Middle East and would you believe as close as Red Deer – yeah, we're doing it. We're doing it as close as Red Deer. You know what? Just to show you that this province and this government are extremely interested in and attuned to our situation with respect to greenhouse gas emissions and where we need to go, we have joined with the federal government on a carbon capture and storage task force, and we will explore in depth. We have a blue-ribbon panel of people that are currently looking at that situation and will continue to do that and come up with a report.

I think that if you see what the United Nations climate change panel has published – and I believe, actually, that there's some more documentation that they're releasing, maybe even this week or early next week, with respect to this issue. But carbon capture and sequestration is one of the three things that they suggest that we should do. So we're there, and we'll continue to work with that.

Suggestions made about the royalty structure and the royalty review support and, you know, what are we doing with respect to that, and getting back to our budget where dollars are involved. Mr. Chairman, $750,000 in this budget is going to support the royalty review. We have $500,000 looking at the royalty volume reviews, and they're shared between our department and EUB. So, most certainly, you know, we're stepping up to the plate here. We're taking this thing seriously. We're very confident that this review at the end of the day will support a much stronger Alberta as we move ahead.

As far as the business of collecting royalties and the suggestions that somehow or another some jurisdictions have a better way to base a price on which they would collect the royalties, I suggest that with the gas royalties in the United States, it's a net-back to the well. The net-backs to the wells, same thing we do in Alberta. So, Mr. Chairman, I think the answer to that is relatively straightforward. There is not in the overarching part of that business really much of a difference. We use actual sales prices, and I believe that most U.S. states would do the same.

I'm kind of going from the more recent to the more historic questions here, but back to AESO again. You know, the member has alluded a few times to the fact that the EUB is getting the short end of the stick, that AESO is getting stronger and the EUB has got less responsibility or at least we've taken some of their mandate away. I don't think that I could at all agree with that. Certainly, in the regulations that are being discussed here, there are a number of issues that very clearly will affect both of those bodies. But AESO has been directed, Mr. Chairman, to establish an open, transparent process with respect to its budgeting and its guidelines and that sort of thing.

In the system that we had set up originally, they had to have their budget cleared by EUB, but it won't be too long down the road, Mr. Chairman, that we'll be moving ahead. We'll bring legislation to the floor of the Legislature with respect to separating the EUB, and I think that these regulations and other things that we're going to do with respect to that legislation on this issue will be much stronger when we come out of it. But, most certainly, AESO under the auspices of what we see as the new Alberta utilities commission will play an important role, continue to, but I think the utilities commission, nevertheless, will be mandated and have the task of being the regulator for the province of Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to that, I would suggest to the hon. member that we're not taking anything away from them, and you can see in our budget numbers, as I'd alluded to in my opening comments, that we're very much interested in additional support for all of the regulators in the province of Alberta. The hon. member has indicated that, you know, the applications coming forward to EUB presently have increased and dramatically. I agree with that, and our support for the EUB I think has also increased. I would suggest that it might not be as dramatic as some of us may have liked, but it's dramatic. On a percentage scale, you know, we're moving ahead. We realize that it's going to take some additional people to continue to handle the volumes of business that Alberta is going to generate now and in the future, so we're certainly supporting that, and that shows in the budget.

From the notes that I've written here, I think I've addressed most of the hon. member's questions with the exception of the one that had to do with a number around that 1996-97 time that had to do with the bitumen royalty option, and we will attempt to isolate that number and provide it for the member on a go-forward basis, most certainly.

I think that attached to that piece of business as well, it would certainly be interesting for all members of the Legislature and most certainly for Albertans, generally speaking, to pay particular attention to these issues that are going to come forward in the royalty review, an absolutely open and public information delivery and gathering system and opportunities for education for Albertans with respect to that issue.

The bitumen royalty option is one part, and most certainly we're going to work very diligently with respect to that. Also, attached to that there are other issues around bitumen valuation and what this product is actually worth, and we'll continue to work with that. As the member has stated, in certain jurisdictions, certain circumstances they may pick a price here or there. It could be that it's more advantageous to one party or it disadvantages another party. But, you know, we'll continue to work diligently along with the Minister of Finance with respect to that review that's ongoing.

The challenges that are in our business plan, page 132, some questions that the member had relative to the challenges. I don't know that there were specific questions as such with respect to that. However, I think that most of those comments . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the time allocated has now lapsed.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, just to advise you that there are about seven minutes left in the two hours that we have. If you'd like to use the full seven minutes, that's your choice, or if you wanted the minister to comment – I'm just advising you that there are seven minutes left before we move to Children's Services, and then we'll come back, and the minister could be questioned thereafter again by any other member.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Well, I would appreciate a clarification because my records indicate that we got officially started here at 2:30. There were a number of station stops involved, leading up to 2:30 before we actually got . . .

The Deputy Chair: The committee was called to order at 2:20. Yes, there was a delay in the set-up process.

Mr. MacDonald: So why is that?

The Deputy Chair: Well, the committee was called to order, and that's the time the clock starts ticking. What should have happened and will happen from here on in subsequent events is that members of the opposition will be called right away if the minister is not ready to speak.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. We will do our best.

Now, certainly the minister is giving some information in regard to royalty rates in other jurisdictions and stuff. At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that – and this is in information that was tabled again on the 16th of April. This is an e-mail from department officials, and it's regarding U.S. royalties and bonuses. I'm surprised and delighted to see that the hon. minister, before he became Energy minister – you know, I realize from reading press releases that he was always going about representing the department at various functions in different places. I'm pleased to learn that the hon. minister participated in some of the meetings around Ken Edwards and that company in Dallas, Texas, in regard to the oil and gas royalty regulations that were studied by the department. So I'm pleased to see that you were involved in all of that, and I certainly hope that you realize that Texas is a good comparison with Alberta, as you suggested in the media.

I was going to bring this up in question period, and I thought I'd just do it this afternoon. According to this information that's been provided to the House, you were involved in the studies, and I'm really glad to see that. In this budget year are there any discussions to change how landowners are compensated for surface rights? I would be delighted to hear from the minister in regard to that.

I'd also be very anxious to hear about the royalty recommendations that have been made in the Auditor General's report, because he certainly makes more than one. On page 78 the Auditor General notes that the department "developed a new oil sands project approval process to incorporate risk into the assessment of project applications." The AG states that "the Department plans to start using this new process before March 31, 2007." Can the hon. minister confirm that this process is, in fact, now being used, and has the absence of this process in the past had any effect on Crown royalties? I know that when we're not collecting Texas rates on our royalties, in the last six years we're out over $16 billion.

Now, in the time I have, Mr. Chairman, I would really like to talk a little bit about biofuels because of the budget increase, the line item increase in biofuels. I think we should have a good debate on biofuels in this Assembly. The Minister of Agriculture and Food made some interesting comments regarding biofuels recently. Perhaps the Minister of Energy could address the concerns of his colleague here.

The minister of agriculture told the Camrose bureau, and I quote: if there's a dollar to be made, it doesn't take long for the big boys to come in and make it pretty tough for the primary producers. End of quote. I guess the minister is concerned that the biofuel industry in Alberta will not benefit primary producers but, instead, the larger corporations. Does the Minister of Energy agree with his colleague in light of the increase in this budget year for biofuels? Is the government targeting smaller primary producers with the biofuels initiatives, and if so, how will the government prevent the minister of agriculture's belief from coming true?

The minister of agriculture also states that the big boys, the Cargills and the Tysons of the world, are meeting with the government and looking to set up shop in Alberta. Is this the government's biofuel push? Is this coming from these big corporations? The minister of agriculture appears to be suggesting that the big boys are leaning on this government to push the biofuels initiatives. If that's the case, I wonder how the small primary producers will benefit from this initiative. Can the minister tell the Assembly if he's been approached by, quote, these big boys, end quote, as his colleague has suggested? The biofuels industry has a future, but we have to be very careful how it develops. I think the Minister of Agriculture and Food may be onto something. I think those comments that were made publicly are very, very interesting indeed.

You know, significant subsidies are going to go into this industry. Regardless of what you read, whether it's in the New York Times or the Edmonton Journal or even the Calgary Herald, there is lots of interest in this. Some of the farmers that I talk to see this as a way of increasing their farm-gate income. How is all of this going to work? It's not two years ago that the second-last Minister of Energy – and I said this earlier in debate – was talking about how in Alberta we're never subsidizing anyone, that we're out of the business of being in business. This was before some U.S. government committee. So how is all of this going to work?

Now, Mr. Chairman, the department is requesting $41 million for the biofuels initiatives. That's a 720 per cent increase from the 2006-07 forecasts. I think these are very important questions, and I'm very disappointed that the time has run out. I would like to thank the minister.

4:20

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just to remind you once again that for the next hour we'll be dealing with the estimates for the Department of Children's Services, following which any member who wishes to participate will be able to do so. Minister, if you need to respond, at 5:20 we will be back where we may be able to deal with your department as well as Children's Services at the same time, and that would go on until 5:45 if need be.

Hon. Minister of Children's Services, you may now proceed. Please introduce your staff to the Assembly.

Children's Services

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to introduce the ministry staff here with me today. Sitting in the House, we have the deputy minister, Maria David-Evans; assistant deputy minister of community strategies and support, Niki Wosnack; and senior financial officer, Shehnaz Hutchinson. Sitting in the members' gallery are the assistant deputy minister of ministry support services, Gord Johnston; assistant deputy minister of program quality and standards, Mark Hattori; director of the prevention of family violence and bullying, Sheryl Fricke; director of family support for children with disabilities, Karen Ferguson; senior manager of budget and analysis, Darren Baptista; acting CEO for the central Alberta child and family services authority, Norman Welch; and my executive assistant, Neris Havelock.

These are just a few of the thousands of dedicated staff who work in our ministry, regional authorities, and contracted agencies across the province. Over the last couple of months I've had the opportunity to meet with many of these individuals, and I am impressed with their incredible commitment to improving the lives of children, youth, and families across this province. It truly is their passion and tremendous hard work each and every day that makes our ministry the success that it is.

In 2007-08 we're investing a total of $972 million towards children, youth, and families in Alberta. It's a budget that will allow us to address the priorities Premier Stelmach set out for our ministry: ensuring parents have access to quality, affordable child care options, continuing to implement the prevention of family violence and bullying initiative, and focusing on improving outcomes for children in care or in need of specialized services, including aboriginal children and children with disabilities.

Today I'd like to highlight some of this year's budget with you. We're investing $134 million in child care, $36 million towards the prevention of family violence and bullying, $4 million to begin implementing a 10-year cross-ministry strategic plan to reduce the impact of fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, $357 million for child intervention services, $144 million for foster care, and $102 million to support children with disabilities and their families.

Since becoming minister, I've made it a priority to try to get a really good understanding of the issues. I've met with parents, child care operators, and other stakeholders in the industry. We've heard interesting ideas on how to enhance the five-point plan. In this year's budget we invest an additional $16 million to recruit and retain staff, create more spaces, and make child care more affordable. We now have $7 million for wage top-ups in March to help address challenges with staff recruitment and retention in the child care sector. We'll be providing a 5.6 per cent increase in child care subsidy for eligible low- and middle-income Alberta families. We will also invest $2 million to cover the start-up costs of creating more child care spaces across the province.

Alberta's child care budget has more than doubled since 2005-06, with our total funding this year being $134 million, and our investments are making a difference. We have more families accessing subsidies. Wage top-ups and professional development grants are helping operators recruit and retain qualified staff, and more child care programs are demonstrating excellence by achieving accreditation.

Family violence and bullying have devastating consequences. Alberta leads the country in taking action through the prevention of family violence and bullying initiative. I've had an opportunity to visit women's shelters, where I have seen first-hand the tremendous difference that the front-line staff make in the lives of those affected by family violence and bullying. With a budget of $36.2 million this year, an increase of $2.6 million, we'll build on awareness and education campaigns, improve services available to people affected by family violence, and enhance community initiatives. Across the nine partnering ministries of this initiative, funding is increasing by nearly $5 million, meaning the total joint spending will exceed $46 million.

Alberta will continue to lead the way, providing services to families before they reach a crisis, decreasing the likelihood of child protection services being needed in the future. In 2007-08 funding for child intervention services will increase by $21 million, for a total of $357 million. The increase will ease the pressure of a growing population and support the implementation of a new service delivery model that builds on best practices already in place and improves the way we work with families by connecting them with community resources and focusing more on assessment. The new model is currently being used in 13 pilot sites and will be implemented across the province.

The family support for children with disabilities program provides information and services to help families care for their children with disabilities, services like respite care and aide support as well as assisting with some of the extraordinary costs of raising a child with a disability. Funding for this well-respected program will increase by $7 million this year, for a total of $102 million, to meet the growing demand for services and enhanced services in rural areas.

Funding for the fetal alcohol spectrum disorder initiatives will increase this year by $4 million, for a total of $10 million. We'll use the funding boost to begin implementing a 10-year cross-ministry strategic plan to reduce the impact of FASD, a leading cause of birth defects resulting in lifelong disabilities. This initiative, led by Children's Services, is a collaboration with nine other government ministries. The new funding will result in better co-ordination of services in three areas – prevention, diagnosis, and assessment and supports for Albertans living with FASD – through virtual service centres throughout the province.

Family and community support services is a very successful partnership between the province, municipalities, and Métis settlements. This year funding to FCSS will increase by $2.9 million to help these programs respond to population and economic growth and continue to provide services to children and families based on local needs and priorities. This brings total funding for FCSS to $71.2 million.

With an increase of $7 million in 2007-08, funding for foster care totals $144 million. The increase will be used to enhance foster parent training and support for Albertans who open their homes to children in care. We will also work closely with the Alberta Foster Parent Association to recruit more foster parents. The more we have, the better we are able to match children with foster families who best meet their needs. We will take action to find permanent homes for children in care sooner by streamlining adoption processes.

Child and family service authorities will receive $706 million in 2007-08, 73 per cent of our total budget. With this money they'll continue delivering programs and services to children and families in 10 regions throughout the province.

I appreciate the opportunity to tell you what we're doing at Children's Services. I believe and have witnessed first-hand that the staff at our ministry are doing incredible work, serving children and youth, and are helping build strong families and communities. Making a difference starts with investing in children and families, who we believe are the building blocks of this province.

At this point I'd like to ask the MLA for Calgary-Hays, chair of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, to provide a quick update, followed by the MLA for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, chair of the Youth Secretariat, to also provide an update. Afterwards I'll be happy to answer any questions you may have related to the Children's Services budget.

Thank you for your time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, just for clarification for the chair, would you like to take the 10 minutes as you speak and then have the minister respond, or do you want to take a 20-minute chunk and go back and forth?

Mrs. Mather: I think we're going to go with the 10-minute block.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Fair enough.

Mrs. Mather: But I would like to hear from the other two that were going to assist the minister first. Is that all right?

The Deputy Chair: No. It's Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Okay. Thank you.

Thank you for the opening remarks. I want to welcome the staff that are here to help us as we review the budget, a very important budget, that's before us. I'd like to ask now that if there are any unanswered questions, we could have a response, perhaps, within the two weeks. Thank you.

There's nothing more important, in my mind, than Children's Services. I would like to address a number of topics today, and if there's more time, I've got some miscellaneous questions later. The topics I'm going to look at are child care, foster care, child intervention services, family violence, family and community support services, child and youth sexual exploitation, youth addiction, services for children with disabilities, and the Child and Youth Advocate. As I say, hopefully there will be time for some other miscellaneous questions.

First of all, I appreciate the intent of this budget and the fact that a number of the areas that are of grave concern have been addressed. Sixteen million has been added to child care, for a total budget of $134 million, and that's a 6.1 per cent increase. I understand that this is the department's first priority, linked to improving Albertans' quality of life, and that spending is dedicated to increasing access to affordable, quality child care. This is something that I feel passionate about.

Now, had the federal child care plan continued, the federal funding alone would have been about $152 million this year. Given that that revenue is lost from the termination of the federal deal, does the government feel confident that it can still accomplish its goal to increase the number of spaces in Alberta? If so, what strategies are going to be used to make that happen?

We've received numerous letters from Albertans who are unable to find the child care that they need. This is all over the province. How many spaces does the government hope to create, given the current spending, and in what time period?

I do believe that child care is at a crisis in the province, and we need to address the needs there for many reasons. If we have adequate quality child care, affordable child care, we're going to have families who have greater peace of mind, which is only going to contribute to our work productivity as they go to work and have peace of mind about where their children are. Happier families are going to make happier communities.

The Children's Services business plan notes that many families are moving to rural communities to escape the high housing costs, but they lose access to key services. Certainly, one of those key services, one of the basic essentials, is becoming child care. What funding is going to be available to increase the accessibility of services like child care in rural communities? As I visited numerous places over the province, I have to admit that I was rather naive about the need in rural communities, but it is very great. We have more and more people in the rural areas who need to work and who are requiring some good care for their children while they're at work.

We've also heard from numerous stakeholders that recruiting and retaining child care staff is one of the biggest barriers to space creation in Alberta. We know that if we create spaces, which we desperately need, they're of no value if we do not have the trained staff to work in those spaces. How much of the budget will be dedicated to addressing the child care workforce issue?

I was really pleased to see that the money was announced for a child care bursary program to help with the costs of postsecondary education, a measure that was included in the Alberta Liberal child care policy, because I think it's a wise and prudent move. Again, I'd like to see a breakdown of how that's going to work. I think the figure is $400,000, is it? Could you just give me some clarity on that?

The business plan shows that the government hopes to more than double the number of child care centres and day homes that are accredited by next year. Doubling these facilities is a wonderful idea. It's an essential idea. But what is this government going to do to help with sustaining those facilities? What kind of funding is going to be there to help them maintain their existence? I'm wondering, for example, about operating allowances, something that used to be there in the early '90s. Have you considered that, and if you haven't, why not?

Another question. We recently talked about the Child Care Licensing Act. How much of the funding that you're talking about in this budget will actually go towards implementing that act? How does that break down?

Now, we have a number of letters. I get them daily from individuals all over this province who are very concerned, upset about the lack of out-of-school care before school and after school. I'm wondering: what plans does the government have regarding funding out-of-school care and for school-age children? I have a number of questions on that, but I'll just ask you this one: have you looked at the out-of-school care funding, especially now that the provincial government has taken over inspections through licensing that was previously done by the city of Edmonton and other municipalities? What is the implication going to be for out-of-school care and for the funding that you've set aside?

I'll go to foster care now because that's also a huge issue. It's just as crucial as the child care I've just been talking about. The funding has increased by $7 million, for a total of $144 million. That's a 5 per cent increase. I see that additional funding is earmarked for enhanced training, support for foster parents, and recruitment of foster parents. This is very positive, but we've heard from social services staff that there just aren't enough families to accommodate the number of children in need of safe care. We know about hotel rooms being used, and I know that that's always a very last resort and that you do the best you can to make sure that those children are safe.

Strategy 2.5 suggests that the government will work to improve recruitment, training, and supports for foster families. I salute that statement. It's very positive. It's desperately needed. But when will the strategy be implemented? How many new foster families need to be recruited to meet the demands that we have right now?

We've heard from Alberta foster families that the government does not offer enough support to foster families who are struggling to assist children who often have extensive needs. Now, I'm not talking about financial support here; I'm talking about support workers so that when they've got a child that's out of control and they're at their wit's end, they could call and could actually get a response and some help immediately, not a week or 10 days later.

Strategy 2.5 suggests that the government will work to improve recruitment, training, and supports for foster families as is in your business plan. What new training and supports will be available to foster parents?

The 2001-2004 Children's Services business plan noted that the shortage of foster families has overburdened foster parents and challenges quality placements. If this knowledge was available six years ago, I'm wondering: why didn't the government act decisively to alleviate the shortage?

Following the death of a foster child in January it was revealed that the practice of overloading, placing more children with a family than should be eligible to care for, is increasing. How common is this practice, and what supports are in place to ensure that foster parents do not become overloaded?

We have heard that foster children are sometimes being housed in hotels to wait until a foster family is available. I know that this is true in Edmonton and in Calgary. Will this additional funding be adequate to address this reality?

In talking about recruitment of foster parents, I'm wondering what you're doing to make that happen. I haven't seen anything that would suggest an advertising program or any kind of information coming out that would maybe alert people that there is a need and that there is assistance in becoming foster families. Of course, when I say foster families, I want to emphasize that it's not just the parents; it's the biological children that are involved in those decisions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. First of all, I want to say to the hon. member that I admire your passion. I think we both have the same passion, and your interest and help in child care is applaudable.

You asked some questions about whether or not we think that we can meet our goals with this amount of money. What I can tell you – and I know that I've said it in the past – is that in the last several months I've spent a fair amount of time with our stakeholder groups. They have identified a number of good ideas. Our number one issue is space creation, and the best way to create the space is by finding, attracting, and retaining staff. I think that the announcements over the last couple of weeks will be exceptionally helpful. The one announcement that we had, attracting skilled child care workers back into the field, has the potential of creating 1,500 new spaces. Most of our announcements over the last couple of weeks really are focusing on attracting or retaining, and when you think of the fact that every time you can attract one person back to the child care industry, that represents space for six children.

When you asked about what this means for rural communities, I think a few things. I think that when we look at the new Child Care Licensing Act, one thing that it will have the capability of doing is looking at different ways of delivering programs, innovative ways. I know that we had talked about combinations of family day homes, and we know from our experience going into the five-point plan that family day homes have been very popular in the rural areas, so that reason alone.

The other thing that I've found out just talking to stakeholders is that the difference between rural and urban is that in the rural areas quite often they have facilities. It's not so much a facility shortage that they have when they have a shortage of child care; it's staffing. So the bulk of our announcements have been targeted to attracting and retaining staff. I see that as a real benefit to rural Alberta.

The other thing that we've talked about lots in the past year and part of the five-point plan is kin care, hugely popular in Alberta. And, of course, our plans are to carry on with that program.

The out-of-school. I know that I have talked to you before about this. We do know that the province licenses both zero to six and six to 12. We have the policy mandate to provide zero-to-six services. Historically, we have funded family and community support services. If they deem that out-of-school programming is a local need, then they can go ahead and provide that service.

Having said all of that, you know that we're towards the end of wrapping up an FCSS review which clearly has indicated that FCSS programs are identifying gaps in this particular area across the province. We don't have all FCSSs delivering the programs. Not all of them are offering subsidies. I've also mentioned before in the House that we are close to releasing that report. I have made a commitment that I plan on taking a leadership role in working with all of the stakeholders to find some workable solutions there because I do know that they are experiencing the very same pressures that we've seen in the zero to six, mostly with respect to attracting staff and retaining staff.

As far as foster care, we are always looking for foster care. We know that the more foster families we have, the better able we'll be to match children and to meet their needs. I can tell you that this year we'll be spending $350,000 on a campaign to increase foster parents. As well as that, we always recruit through the CFSA association.

I think I'll go back to you for more questions. If I've missed anything, I'll either get it after the next round or, for sure, make sure I follow up.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. One of the things I'd like to ask is: when will we be able to see that FCSS review? Is that available to us? We need that information.

Going on to child intervention services, the funding has been increased by $21 million, for a total of $357 million, which is a 6.1 per cent increase. I know that the new service delivery model is being piloted in 13 champion sites, I think they're called, and then implemented across the province.

The business plan shows that there is a far higher rate of hospitalization as a result of injury or death for aboriginal children in care than nonaboriginal children in care, and I'm wondering: will there be any initiatives in the coming year to address this imbalance and improve safety for aboriginal children? That's one of the things that I noticed when I was doing the comparisons here.

Strategy 3.1 is directed at the casework practice model, that it requires more time to administrate. Is the minister confident that it can be implemented given the current staff shortages we face in the social services? I am very concerned that we're going to be asking social workers to do more work. We're putting more demands on them. We're not taking anything away. That is a critical issue.

We've heard from union reps that unreasonable workloads are causing experienced staff members to leave, and not enough new people are entering the field. This is making it nearly impossible for remaining staff to keep up. How will the government attract the necessary staff to this profession to ensure that Alberta's families receive the services that they need?

A recent report by the Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families shows that the number one reason given for leaving a position is inadequate salary and compensation. The second reason is that there is no belief that the government will work to rectify the current situation. How will the government take action to restore the faith of these public servants?

In the same report 67 per cent of respondents stated that they were concerned about their ability to deliver contracted services. Does this budget include enough support to ensure that agencies will be able to recruit and retain the staff they need to operate effectively?

Going on to family violence. Funding for prevention of family violence and bullying increased by $2.55 million. I want to say that I'm very proud of this initiative and the results that I've seen across this province. Alberta has some of the highest rates of family violence in Canada, and it is critical that we address this issue. The business plan shows that while there was a reasonable increase to funding for prevention of family violence and bullying this year, there will be very small increases in the three years that follow. Does the minister believe that these increases are enough to turn around Alberta's dismal rate of family violence?

Statistics from the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters show that nearly 20 per cent of shelter bed capacity is unfunded by the provincial government. Why won't the government fund that one-fifth of the provincial shelter beds? Why are we not funding them all? Thirteen thousand women were turned away from women's shelters last year due to a lack of space. Does the current budget offer enough funding to fill that gap?

There is a critical shortage of second-stage shelter beds across the province. We've talked about this in the House before. Research suggests that for every crisis bed available, two to three second-stage transitional beds are needed, and Alberta is nowhere near meeting this suggested ratio. How much of the funding in this budget will be dedicated to addressing the shortage of second-stage housing?

The business plan shows that over one-fifth, 23.8 per cent, of children who experience child maltreatment will experience another incident within 12 months. What is the government doing to reduce that number? Is it possible that the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act has partially contributed to the increase in repeat offences against children? Have you given any thought to that?

How much funding is the department directing toward preventative services, such as counselling for those convicted of spousal abuse? Again, then, I would talk about the workload for social workers. I don't believe that they can deal with preventative educational roles the way they would like to because they are just dealing with the emergent things and trying to keep on top of them. We need to look at the complex roles that they have and how we can better support them, and that's through more social workers, more support workers.

Looking at family and community support services, FCSS is receiving an additional $3 million, for a total of $71.2 million, a 4.3 per cent increase. I really am disappointed to see that FCSS is not receiving a more substantial increase this year. FCSS is a crucial organization that helps to improve Alberta's social infrastructure. A more significant financial commitment from this government would help to improve the already incredible preventive social service network that FCSS supports and contributes to in this province.

Strategy 1.6 involves implementing the recommendations of the FCSS program review. As I said, we haven't seen that review. It's not released. Why has it not been made available? Was the information in that review taken into consideration when this budget was created? We have heard that FCSS is increasingly taking on additional tasks to address shortages of critical social services, especially in rural communities. Does the government have any concrete plans to either improve access to government-operated public services or, at least, provide enough funding to FCSS to manage these additional programs?

Child and youth sexual exploitation. Funding for protection of children from sexual exploitation has increased to a total of $6.2 million. That's a .05 per cent increase. I'm wondering how many children and youth are apprehended or receive services through PCHIP annually. How many children and youth who are apprehended through PCHIP voluntarily agree to receive services following their apprehension? It's been reported that PCHIP may have in some cases driven prostitution underground, making it difficult for individuals providing services to sexually exploited youth to provide the help that is needed. Has the department heard about these concerns, and has anything been done to address them? Research shows that most children who are involved in prostitution have experienced previous sexual abuse. What steps is the department taking to address sexual abuse experienced by children who are not involved in prostitution?

Youth addiction. The crystal meth task force recommended that 300 additional beds be made available for addictions, detox, and treatment. Will this budget do anything to increase the number of beds that are available to youth for these purposes? Representatives from the group called PEP, parents empowering parents, have expressed concerns that families are not involved enough in the process when children are apprehended through PCHAD. What are we doing about that? They've also told us that there are problems for those living in remote communities who would like to access services. There is seemingly no transportation option dedicated to transporting children apprehended through PCHAD. This can put a strain on the other community resources not designed for this purpose. Does the department have any plans or strategies in mind to deal with this issue? Then we know that prevention is a critical part of the equation when it comes to youth addiction. What strategies will the government implement this year to prevent youth addiction?

Services for children with disabilities. We know that they've received a $6.7 million increase. We have heard that there is a critical shortage of professionals to deal with, for example, autism in this province. Is this the case? How severe are those shortages? What are we going to do about them? I'm concerned about the multidisciplinary teams. Not all members have the experience needed to diagnose and prescribe the necessary support for autistic children. What reviews has the minister done regarding these multidisciplinary teams to ensure that they are making the best decisions in the cases that they review? I'm also concerned about the potential of conflict of interest with some of those panels on the multidisciplinary teams.

The Child and Youth Advocate is receiving a $1 million budget increase. I'm pleased to see that because of the workload that we're changing now with PCHIP regarding the apprehension of youth being directed to legal representation from the Child and Youth Advocate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Okay. I'll take that last comment as a compliment and work backwards. That's great. Those are an awful lot of good questions, so I'll see how many I can get to here. As far as the FCSS report, best guess is that within a couple of weeks you'll have a copy. Why it took long is that it had to go through a government approval process, plus there are recommendations attached for discussion. But I expect in a couple of weeks.

The casework practice model: I just wanted to make a comment about that. You're right. We've got 13 champion test sites going on right now. They were additionally resourced as we were testing out that model. I think I wrote you recently that we're hoping we'll learn from that model and, hopefully, implement it across the province over the next 18 months, and it will be resourced properly as we implement it. The other thing, too, is that this budget does include, if I'm not mistaken – and we'll get that information to you – about 80 new front-line workers. We can get that breakdown. So the budget does come with some staffing complements there.

You made some comments about the agency staffing. Without a doubt, I know that they're facing some staffing issues. It's one of the reasons why, in the last couple of weeks, we had added a couple million dollars to make it a total of $20 million over the last two years to help them deal with some attraction and retaining staff costs.

Another thing I wanted to let you know. I think you were referring to a survey that a provincial organization had put out, and I have called the Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families to meet with that organization and go through some of the stats that you had referred to and just learn more about their issues. That meeting is taking place in the next couple of weeks.

The bullying initiative. I agree with you. I think that that's just a fabulous initiative. I think we're sitting fairly well here. When you look at a lot of the awareness, the strategy, a lot of it is technology. The websites are set up. The part that I'm really excited about is how popular they are. I guess the first thing I'd say is that preventing bullying is still a commitment of this government, and certainly I see it continuing to be. When we take a look at our team heroes website, the bully-free website, the bully-free helpline, we are now into millions of hits. Hugely successful. So I appreciate those comments, and we'll monitor that one, but I think that we've given some fairly significant increases there.

I appreciate your comments on the women's shelters, and I appreciate your interest. I, too, have a real soft spot for the incredible work that they do rebuilding Albertans' lives. Similar to how I approached child care, I went through the same exercise with women's shelters. I met with the provincial organizations, tried as quickly as possible to grasp what their top issues are. I have had little think tanks with them. You know, just a couple of weeks ago we gave them $700,000 to help address child care needs, $250,000 for five rural shelters, so that was a real help to the complement of women's shelters, money to help support the front-line workers, and then an increase retroactive to last year.

We have finished with the women's shelters review. We sat down with the advisory committee that worked on it and went through each of the recommendations one by one, got confirmation of which ones should be the priorities moving forward. You're right about the second stage. That was highlighted as one that we want to take a more serious look at. The only other thing I can say is that in the next week I will be rolling out a little bit more of what we're doing in this particular area. That information isn't here but will be out in the next week. So I just appreciate your comments. I think this is a very important area for us. The other thing, too, for the women's shelters is the bursary. I know that they really appreciated that. We put in place a $400,000 bursary for their staff.

I liked your comments about FCSS. I mean, personally, I think it's probably the best example of a successful partnership that exists in this province, bar none. You also got back to the report there. The report will be, like I mentioned, coming out in two weeks.

I just wanted to go back. You had mentioned a comment – and this one always gets a little bit troubling – about people coming in and out of the system. This is always kind of difficult when you're dealing with, you know, the public that sees certain stories in the paper and sees that some families seem to re-emerge and just wonders: what does that mean about someone's judgment? What does it mean about anything?

What I would say about that is, first of all, to reiterate that our number one mandate is to protect children. I take that absolutely dead seriously, and I know that the individuals in Children's Services do. We also take the privacy of children seriously, and I think we have to. You know, these kids are coming out of some pretty horrible situations, and we don't want to make anything worse for them.

Then I think the next important statement to say is that every single report of abuse or neglect is investigated, always investigated. If a family is willing to make changes, we work with them. We put plans in place, we put on conditions, we put in compliance measures, all of that stuff, because we know that the best place for kids, if the family will make positive changes, is going to be with their families. So you go through that whole process. What you never have with this job are any guarantees. Somebody could have complied with all of the changes, made positive changes for their families, but there are no guarantees a couple of years down the road. You know, something else happens.

What I have seen just in my short period of time here is that I think what we have are dedicated staff every step of the way. They are the front-line workers. They are making decisions on a daily basis in the best interests of children, based on the best information that they have at the time. I'll just say that when you look at this whole area, I've got nothing but utmost respect for what they do. I would just say, you know, that in terms of the budget, we'll make sure that we do what we can to support that whole area.

PCHIP is one I wanted to mention. I know that we've seen some media coverage that PCHIP has driven it underground. I would say that there are a number of factors. It's not going to be PCHIP. There are a number of factors that have driven child exploitation underground. It's the use of technology. We know that this isn't just something here. It's something right across North America. On the other hand, we know that the act is working because the number of children that we have helped is over 770. We'll get you the more detailed answers that you had asked for, but we've helped 770, and the feedback has been very positive. We've also had an increased number of youth that are receiving the voluntary services. I know that you were supportive of the amendments to the act and understand the reasons for changing the name there. It's important to note that PCHIP applies to all instances of sexual exploitation through prostitution regardless of where it's happening.

So I think the issue that we have to deal with is not so much about the effectiveness of the legislation. We have to focus on the education and the training so that our staff, our stakeholders, and even our parents understand that sexual exploitation is changing. We need the public's help. This is what we are intending to do in our business plan. We need the public's help in identifying kids at risk. We need to get information out there and signs to watch for. We're making that information available on our website. Lastly, we're continuing to train our staff and stakeholders in recognizing and intervening with sexually exploited youth.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. I wanted to just talk about the training for PCHIP. I believe that that is crucial, and I'm glad to see that you're looking at more training of social workers, I'd assume, for PCHIP. My understanding is that in some of the rural areas they do not have that training. You know, that's something that's obviously very important.

When I read the business plan, the goals, the vision statement, I realize that the fruition of this plan requires a healthy organization in order to meet peak efficiency. You know, there's lots of data and research these days on change fatigue, and it is evident to me that Children's Services has been suffering to some extent from this phenomenon. It's well documented that change fatigue occurs when there are too many changes. I hear it from everybody I talk to in Children's Services, that they just want to do their job, that they would like this issue addressed. I'm wondering what plans are in place to limit the effect of change fatigue in Children's Services as a whole. Many staff are wondering, "What's coming next?" as opposed to, "Can I just do my job and care about this child or this client?" So I want to bring that to your attention.

Governments should always be endeavouring to improve services to constituents and the people that they serve. Since 1994 Children's Services has been in continual change with untold dollars being expended on many of these changes. I'm wondering: do you have any evidence to show that these changes have actually resulted in improvements? Have the expenditures of huge amounts of money to make the changes resulted in improvements? What has been the cost, and what has been the benefit, and does the community reflect that? How do you know?

I think that new legislation comes each time with great promise to front-line workers, but the end result has been that there hasn't been an adequate budget to fully implement the improvements. The front line has always been expected to do more with less. I'm glad to hear the minister say that you are looking at the hiring of I believe it was 80 new social workers. You know, it's really difficult because it's such a complex job. Social issues are complicated, and there's no clear-cut book or manual telling us how to fix problems.

So I want to question how the budget over the last number of years has been expended and what actually goes directly to the children and families who need the help. How much is going to organizing and reorganizing and to administration, and what was the evaluative criteria used to make the decisions that have been made? You know, given the levels of family violence, the increased drug use by youth, and the dysfunctional state of many families, we need more front-line workers and support workers and appropriate resources if we are to meet the safety standards that will protect children and families. You are absolutely right. Protection of our children and families is the number one priority along with privacy, as you mentioned.

I'd like to mention the concern about the high turnover of staff due to stress and workload issues. I know that the Children's Services mandate is very complex, and it's very difficult to inventory the tasks expected of a front-line worker, but this has huge implications on how the front-line workers do their job, what kinds of resources they access, which is often dependent on the experience of the worker or the supervisor involved. This also means, I'm learning, that you can have a family with the same issue be treated vastly different depending on where they live in Alberta and what, I guess I'd say, the financial picture is of the particular region that they're in, where they're living. This means that the same family might get counselling in one region but not in another.

I've already mentioned youth being placed in hotels, and I know that that's a priority concern for you too.

The other thing that I've learned in my discussions is the instability with contracted services and the impact that has on outcomes for children and families, because these contracted services have often been retendered or cancelled or reassessed as a means to save money. I think regions that maybe have been coming under deficit might play around with these contracts to save money, which, obviously, has an impact on the outcomes. We don't have information disclosure on the nature of these contracts, and I'm wondering: what is the criteria for tendering and then reassessing, et cetera? I think that's an issue that needs to be looked at.

I believe that there's no true understanding or commitment to provide the resources required to implement the new casework model. I'm hopeful that we're going to learn a lot from these champion sites and that what will happen is what you said, that you will judge from that experience what the needs are and provide the adequate resources so that the other areas will benefit from that experience of the champion sites.

The other concern I have is the hesitation by regions sometimes to fill vacancies until after a fiscal year as a way to balance the books. I'm hearing about this. That has an obvious impact on children and families.

Here's another one. I don't see a discernable difference on the front line related to cross-ministry initiatives aimed at improving outcomes for children and families, particularly services to children with mental health issues. I believe that we need to do a lot more work there with cross-ministry training and sharing of resources than we do now. I think sometimes the problem is: who's going to pay for this service? But for the family that's in distress, that has the need, being shunted from pillar to post is not helpful. I think it probably just escalates the problems.

Because of the workload I think that we're losing out in terms of the community development or prevention work that many social workers would like to do. Again, I'm glad to hear that you're looking at more front-line workers.

The FSCD program I believe has been overworked and is operating in crisis mode. It seems to me that often they're in the position to provide the funds for families with children with disabilities, but there are no services for them to purchase with the financial support provided. Again this goes to the issue of setting targets and that targets not be the driver of how decisions get made concerning how and what kinds of services are delivered to children and families.

An area that, again, I want to bring attention to within the response system with children and families is the co-ordination of services. I think the current enhancement provisions encourage improved co-ordination of services, but I think huge efficiencies and improvements to response can be made simply by ensuring that all the agencies funded by the provincial government are working together, are monitored regarding these goals, are evaluated, and then appropriate adjustments made. We have many government-funded agencies, programs, and nonprofits whose reason for being is to support children and families, and wouldn't it be wonderful if we could be sure that they're all working co-operatively together, that there's good liaison and understanding of the roles and how they can work together? I'm hearing that before 1994 front-line staff and managers felt encouraged to bring forward systems issues for ongoing review and improvements.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Great. Thanks. I just wanted to make a couple of comments. I'll take note of your comments about PCHIP training and take a look at that in rural Alberta.

Some of your questions regarding historical organizational change I don't have much information on. I can say that in my own observation, not just in this period as minister but previously, watching past ministers, this is a department that always represents change but I think for a very good reason. When you make the comment, you know, "Tell us: how does change benefit us?" I think there are lots. The ones that come to mind right away to me are things like the Alberta response model, the case practice model, the enhance act, that whole focus to offer supports to families before they reach crisis. We're seeing such great outcomes from that. I know that with the case practice model on the 13 sites I've heard great feedback from staff, and I'm hoping in the next couple of months, actually, to have an opportunity – they'll have been in place a couple of months more – to get some concrete examples. But it's pretty positive out there.

All of our strategic plans. When you take a look at the FASD initiative or family violence and bullying, they're recognized across the country as some of the best. So I'm actually quite proud of many of these cross-ministry initiatives that we have. Now being in this position for a couple of months, I've had the opportunity to talk to other ministers. They use Alberta as an example all the time clear across this country. It's a great way to get a perspective from somewhere else, but it's been very enlightening and, actually, kind of rewarding to have all of these other provinces coming here to learn from our programs. So I would just make that comment on this ever-changing environment that we have.

The other comments that you made about staffing agencies: again, I'll be meeting with that organization, and I can use that as valuable information.

I just want to talk about FSCD for a minute. I took from your comments that our programs are based on targets. I would like to say that they're actually based on assessment and not on targets, and anything that I've heard or been part of, that's exactly how it does operate. I want for the record just to make a couple of comments about the program. We are looking at a 7 per cent increase. We think that should accommodate the rate of growth that we'll see in this program. But one of the value statements I want to say: we all know that raising a child with a disability can be very challenging, and I'm so proud to be in a province where we believe that these families need and deserve our support.

Again, it's one of those areas that I hear right across the country, that people use this program as an example. They talk about it being one that has a wide range of services, multidisciplinary approach, as well as we're the only jurisdiction to recognize the needs of children within legislation. But the thing that I hear most often is that our program is not based on labelling but based on assessment. It's based on needs, family strengths, family engagement.

So if you want to continue.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: How much time?

The Chair: There are still two minutes, so you have another 10 minutes if you wish right now.

Mrs. Mather: Okay. Yes. Boy, you've answered some of my questions really well, and I appreciate that. I've sort of got stuff all over the place here right now. One of the things I'd like to talk about is the housing issue, just to bring it to attention that I'm certainly aware that there are families with children that are unable to find affordable housing right now. Along with the transitional housing and second-stage issue, I'm very concerned about that. I'm wondering if the department has any statistics on this. Is there any way that this department can help with that issue? It's a very great one.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Another thing that I hope I can just mention briefly is worker safety. I talked about this at one time during question period. It seems to me that sometimes social workers are expected to go into homes alone, with limited access to information, perhaps, that sometimes turns out to be that the parents have assaulted police before or, worse, that there might be firearms present. Police don't go into homes unless there is more than one of them. I am concerned about that. Where is the responsibility in terms of, you know, worker safety and protection? I think the workers who work for contracted agencies across this province may be even more at risk, as they often provide more direct service and act in a bigger vacuum of information. So that's one of the other things that I'd like to bring to your attention.

I know that the Alberta response model has been touted as having many positive aspects and that it's actually, apparently, helped in reducing caseloads. That's a positive outcome, perhaps, for saving budget, but I'm wondering: what is the measure for safety, for well-being, for permanence of our children, youth, and families? Of course, those should be the measures that we would be most concerned about, not the reduction of caseloads. Children's Services manuals speak to the importance of safety and well-being, but I'm wondering: are we enabling the staff to actually pursue this in many cases? I think that in order to meet deadlines, sometimes front-line workers are feeling pressured to return children to environments that may not be as safe as they would like.

So, again, I think this all has to do with the front-line complexity of tasks and the need for more resources to support them so that we don't have superficial involvement. I believe, like you've said, that every individual that chooses this career, it's a calling for them. They want to do their best for the children, and sometimes I believe there is distress because they go home at night thinking: "I didn't do enough. I couldn't. I didn't have enough time. I didn't get to that file that I should have." So I can't emphasize enough that I am hearing over and over again of the need to provide adequate resources and supports for our front-line workers.

I feel committed to trying to improve our response to all of these vulnerable children and their families. I don't believe that it's necessary to dump huge amounts of money, perhaps. It's more a matter of maintaining the focus on the needs of our vulnerable children and families and being clear about what outcomes are important and evaluating all of the programs that deliver services to meet those outcomes. Then we make adjustments to these programs and monitor whether they deliver and make the regular adjustments as necessary.

There are many positives within Children's Services. I think we do have a lot to be proud of. The thing is that when you're better, you're expected to keep being better. I want to see that happen. I'm delighted to hear that you're looking carefully at the champion sites and that that will be a learning experience that will result in the basis for decisions in providing adequate resources for continued good success.

I'll leave it at that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. Just a couple of comments. Talking about the kind of indicators that we would need to show that the work or the enhancement is going in the right direction, I think two important results are that 22 per cent of our kids do not need protection services – that's dropped dramatically – and 82 per cent that receive intervention services do not need protection services within a year. So the numbers are quite dramatic, and one of the reasons why the federal government was so interested in coming in and duplicating both the Alberta response model and activating for fully implementing or complying with the enhancement act on our reserves was because of these kinds of figures. Pretty dramatic.

The comment about affordable housing: we don't, outside of offering emergent housing when someone is in a risky situation or their safety is at risk, particularly with children. Outside of that, we don't.

In some ways I think that we are heavily involved from a whole different angle. When I think about this department, one of the things I'm most pleased about is that it's a pretty significant department in terms of budget. You've got close to a billion dollars. The part that's really exciting: half of it is going into protection services and the other half you had mentioned at the start, all of that really exciting prevention. I'm glad that we as a province value making sure that we have the supports for those that need it but, equally as important, place value on preventing those kinds of circumstances.

The affordable housing issue ties into a much broader issue, which is the booming economy. An added concern, and one that we can pay attention to, is the growth in this province and all of these newcomers. What are they bringing with them? You know, we hear quite often what they're not bringing with them in terms of hospitals, schools, and all of that stuff. What I pay attention to is what are they not bringing? They're not bringing family members, and they're not bringing a social system.

I see that one of the best things we can do on the preventative side of this portfolio is really trying to connect these new Albertans as quickly as possible with their new communities. I see that we are doing that in a number of ways. It starts with the FCSS funding. It starts with parent link centres so they can connect with other parents, get information. I'm very proud of all of our websites, the helplines that we have. There's just no end to the things, and to me they are equally as important as anything else that we do. A little unrelated to affordable housing; however, if you connect them to the communities, you can connect them to the supports, you connect them to the information. It all leads to helping in the other area.

I think that was the last question. Like I said, if we've missed anything, we will get more information to you.

Energy Children's Services

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and to ask a few questions of the Minister of Finance. I imagine it will just be written down and responded to in writing.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, today we are dealing with Energy and Children's Services.

Mr. Hinman: Energy. Thank you. I'm looking at the finances, but it is on Energy. So thank you. To start off, though, Mr. Chairman, this income that Albertans enjoy because of our energy here is astounding, and we need to probably be the most careful with where our biggest focus is. I've always had the lesson that if you were to drop a whole bunch of money – and we used to have thousand dollar bills here in the country – you'd go after the big ones first; you wouldn't worry about the dollar bills. With that thought in mind, I'm trying to look at the big picture, realizing you only have a few minutes and limited in the questions that we can ask.

I want to start and address the problem with the surface rights versus the mineral rights that's going on in the province and to ask the minister: with the EUB the previous Minister of Energy discussed and felt that it was a viable concern to have surface rights people that were actually part of the EUB, that would have a fairer reflection on some of the decisions that are made there. What happens, Mr. Chairman, is that too often because only one side of the industry is there, there isn't the co-operation that could and should be there.

I'll give an example. You might have three different mineral rights owners in a given area in a plot that's been up. They've each got their own wells, and they've been successful. Rather than having the EUB saying, "Look, come up with a scheme or a plan that's going to be beneficial to this area," they say, "Well, you have a right to export."

A person with the surface rights often has to contend with two or three pipelines crossing his land. It's something that I feel like we need to move ahead in this century and realize that we should do a better job of managing how we collect or develop new areas as we go in there, rather than just going with the old status quo, that while you're first in, you build your pipeline, someone else builds one, and we don't get the big picture. We really need to address that.

Everyone seems to think that we don't have enough money for anything. I'm definitely short on staff for doing the research, so I'll ask a few questions that might have simple answers. But Albertans ask me these questions, so it'd be great to have the answers.

Quite often when it comes to natural gas, we see them putting up compressors and sucking the natural gas out when it's from a common pool. The question that I have is: if they're running those compressors and sucking out the gas, that there's a royalty for Albertans, are they being charged for running those compressors, or do they get to run that at Albertans' expense for their profit? I think we really need to address that.

It goes with the same question that I'm not clear yet with Fort McMurray and the amount of gas that's being used there to extract the bitumen. Do we get our royalty on all of that gas that's being burned, or is there some sort of incentive or privilege that they get in order to burn that gas to extract the bitumen? So very concerned on that aspect and how it works.

We get a lot of wells that are drilled down in the south, but they're not viable for putting in a pipeline to extract that gas because of the cost of a pipeline. There are a few things that people have asked me about: could we not put in compressor stations, use that gas to compress it, be able to utilize it in the farming or agricultural industry or other areas, and have it reasonably priced? We're not using the cost of the gas to compress it, which is prohibitive on the current market.

Another question is: could it be used locally and change our situation? For example, if it's in a remote area that isn't viable to tie in with a pipeline, could we look at doing such things as setting up greenhouses and trying to, I guess, be more self-sufficient here in the province and grow more vegetables and other things that we could in a greenhouse environment if, in fact, we have these large, vast amounts of gas reserves, yet they're not economically viable enough to put in pipelines? Could we not look at ways of being able to allow utilizing the full product and value-add to it in the way of, whether it's greenhouses or perhaps, like I say, compressing it and allowing it to be used on farm equipment or whatever else is in those areas?

Another question that is often brought up by the surface rights people is if there shouldn't be some sort of situation where when mineral rights are coming up, the surface rights people should be contacted and let them know that this bid is coming up. Quite often they want to protect their home quarter or maybe their home section, and if they actually knew that that was coming up, they might put that bid in and not have to go through all of the fight and the struggle to protect their home land, which they feel is important. When the royalties often go very cheap and speculative, they could afford that, but they often don't know, and they don't have the time to be watching for when that happens.

To go a step further on these mineral rights and the auctions that we have on them, this government continues to talk about value-added and saying that it's an important aspect of the development in here. There was a report that came out – I believe it was by the Pembina Institute – that questioned the vast amount of land that's being put up when we don't have the capacity to develop it. The next question is: should we maybe be holding some of this back in reserve to develop it when we have better technology or put it up for bid on the fact that there's a moratorium on the old technology? But if you can be innovative – whether that's biological, maybe it's nuclear that's going to be the answer, or some other new technique for extracting the bitumen – at that point then we'd allow it to go forward.

It's interesting to me that the government talks about putting this land up and that it needs to be available. Yet in the Fort McMurray area they won't put the land up, which they own, for people to buy to build houses on and have created a shortage there in the boom, but they put all of this other land out for oil sands to an already overheated economy. We don't have enough workers to build and develop, yet they put it out there. So many people ask me that and question: do we have our priorities right in doing that?

Another question is that often in sustainable resources when they put up forestry for auction, there's a condition that it must be developed locally. So I'd ask the question: should this be a condition on further oil sands, that it has to be developed locally? I'd like to know the where we're at with the line 4 extension that's going to connect Fort McMurray all the way down to Texas, if that's a go-ahead or, because they say that they're going to value-add, if maybe the brakes are putting on there.

Like I say, most importantly, if in fact they're going to put up, how many acres are going up in the future that have not been leased out yet or that are going to be renewed? If we can't put a contract on there or a condition on those contracts that they need to develop it locally – it seems like an excellent idea. I don't think that we need to try and sell it all in the next 10 or 15 years. If we could extend this development out to the benefit of Albertans and to, I believe, the corporations as well as, to do it maybe at a steady and constant rate instead of just the mad rush that we're currently involved in.

Going over to electricity, some other areas that I often have people ask me questions on are net metering. People want to be innovative, want to use green technology, perhaps put up a windmill, yet it's prohibitive. It just seems like if we really want to move forward, we should be looking at that a great deal. One of the areas that perhaps we have the greatest potential – and it's been brought up several times today – is hydroelectricity. Should we be looking at building those dams to be able to store our water but then be able to let it go through and develop the electricity that we need throughout the province? It's something that, I guess, I'd like to know what the minister's long-term goal is on that and if they're really seriously looking at hydroelectricity and the value that it would add to the province.

The question with windmills: there's the debate on whether there's a cap or not. I think if he could clarify the conditions: you know, are windmills allowed to come on stream, or do they have to have the offset to be able to power up the grid when the wind stops? It seems to be a concern. There's one area, truly conservative values, when it comes to wind power, and I think we could be a little bit more liberal perhaps on that.

The Deputy Chair: Would any other members like to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do have some questions that I wasn't able to finish during the allotted time. A few are related to the children's advocate. In other provinces the children's advocate role has been expanded, and it includes monitoring and offering constructive suggestions regarding how the system can be more accommodating to children and youth. I'm wondering if our Children's Services minister has any thoughts about a similar expanded role that I believe could improve the child welfare system in Alberta. Are there any plans to expand the role of Alberta's advocate?

The 2005-2006 Child and Youth Advocate annual report has not yet been released, and I would like to know what has caused that delay and when the report will be issued.

Finally, just a couple of miscellaneous questions. The minister's office is receiving a budget increase of $85 million. That's a 28 per cent increase from last year's budget. I'm wondering: what is the cause of this increase, and how will the increase improve services to children?

The deputy minister's office has received a big budget increase this year. Funding was increased by $190 million, a 49 per cent increase. What is the cause of this increase, and how will this increase improve services to children, which is the mandate, which is the most important consideration for this department?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, we have about four or five minutes, I guess, if you would like to participate still.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I didn't think I was going to get a chance, so I've got to get my thoughts back in here now, where I left off. We were talking a little bit about electricity and the need for net metering. I'm wondering if the Minister of Energy or this government has been looking at having a policy. They realized, you know, 15, 20 years ago that in order to develop the oil sands, there was a necessity to put in some good incentives.

Many Albertans that I talked to would really love to see incentives – they'd have to be of a different nature because there isn't royalty on them – for such things as windmill or geothermal, solar or the different types of biogas. It just seems like it would be a huge benefit if Albertans could actually in some way raise the capital in a way much like they do for the mineral exploration, with flow-through shares or something like that, where people could write off that capital to be put into green programs and not be taxed. I'm wondering if the minister has addressed or looked at any of those options in trying to kick-start, perhaps, more green energy here in the province. It would be of great value if we were to change our current way of thinking, that's just solely around oil and gas, and look at the good incentives that are there, look to see what ways we can enhance it for other areas of energy, whatever they might be, that we find are environmentally friendly.

As I was speaking earlier, the government continues to talk about value maximization. The biggest concern that Albertans are sharing with me is how fast we are developing these things. So once again I would ask: could we perhaps slow it down or put conditions on these different developments, that they're to be done in an environmental way or an innovative way so that we're going to get better value out of it? The big concern is how much we are shipping out of the province versus developing it here. It would be a huge benefit if we were to do that.

There's quite a bit of interest in the biogas industry. I know that we had one company come in here looking at cellulose. I'm wondering if they're looking at putting in some better incentives again so that they could fully upgrade or looking at capital expenses to get these plants up, that would be to the benefit of all Albertans.

The other thing, too, is that with the electricity there's a lot of talk about being able to bury the lines and the expense of doing that. Are those areas where perhaps we could have some innovation and tax incentives that would allow corporations to bury them? It's a huge problem with the corridors.

Are they going to do something and be proactive finally, after all of the fighting that's going on with these different power lines, to get up some power corridors that people know are there? They're planned out 20 years in the future, and you're not buying a nice little piece of property or have been there a long time only to find out that there's going to be a hearing because some corporation wants to put a line through your property. The people that I talked to in rural Alberta really, really want to have some long-range planning and know what the plans are to meet the needs of these power lines that they say need to go in. Like I say, is it something that we could look at putting in some tax incentives to bring the technology to bury these power lines? I've seen some very interesting numbers on DC power and the ability that we have to transmit it over long distances now.

I'll let the minister answer those. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, but pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(a) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Energy and Children's Services relating to the 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Hon. members, before I recognize the President of the Treasury Board, may we briefly revert to Tabling Returns and Reports?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports
(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: Apparently, there was a matter earlier in the day when the Speaker asked the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to table some material, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods would like to table on his behalf. Is that agreeable?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a letter from Doreen Fiddler, who is a resident of Emily Manor in Edmonton, Alberta. She is being told that the rent for her suite in Emily Manor is to increase by $1,000.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 34

Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

Bill 34 is an omnibus bill that amends the Residential Tenancies Act and the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act in order to respond to the recommendations of the Affordable Housing Task Force. Both acts are being amended to provide regulation-making authority to modify the notice period set out in part 1 of the acts, allow a provision in the act to be stipulated as an offence, allow a regulation to come into force retroactively, allow regulation of any other matter considered necessary to carry out the intent of the acts.

The Residential Tenancies Act is being amended to expand the regulation-making authority to regulate the frequency of rent increases for fixed-term tenancies, allow the regulation to clarify that the amount of time referred to is from the start of the tenancy or the last rent increase, whichever is later, make it an offence for landlords who do not comply with the notice period for condominium conversions, with a fine of up to $5,000 per unit.

The Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act is being amended to provide regulation-making authority to modify the frequency of rent increases for periodic tenancies set out in the act and regulate the frequency of rent increases for fixed-term tenancies and make it an offence not to comply with the notice period for condominium conversions or conversions for other land uses, with a fine up to $5,000 per unit.

The above amendments will modify the offence provisions of both acts and enable the government to deal with the rent stabilization and condominium conversions as set out by the Affordable Housing Task Force.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 33

Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh
Water Authorization Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address a serious situation in rural Alberta. I'll be moving the second reading of Bill 33.

For many years the village of Ferintosh has been suffering with water quality issues and from severe water supply shortages in the summer months. Currently their water is obtained entirely from aquifers in the Middle Horseshoe Canyon, a formation which is in the Ferintosh area of predominantly coal and sandstone beds. However, these wells haven't been able to supply the village's needs. As a temporary measure they have been forced to truck treated water in from the town of Bashaw. Obviously, trucking water is not a feasible or long-term solution. That's why Ferintosh has applied for an interbasin transfer of this treated water.

Mr. Speaker, by allowing this interbasin transfer from Bashaw, that currently provides Ferintosh with treated, trucked-in water, the water needs of both communities will still be adequately met. Because both communities are drawing water from the same geological formation and the transferred water will be treated water, there's little risk of significant environmental impacts. In fact, the only reason this transfer requires a special act is because these two municipalities are in two different river basins, even though in reality this transfer is taking groundwater from the same geological formation, the Middle Horseshoe Canyon formation. Given the stringent nature of our Water Act, interbasin transfers, even if the water is coming from the same geological formation, require special approval from the Legislature.

Interbasin transfers also require thorough scientific studies and public consultation prior to being brought to this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, Ferintosh has done all of that. Their best solution is what we see before us in Bill 33. Without this transfer Ferintosh will run out of water and potentially slowly dry up. I urge all members to support Bill 33.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 33, the Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member when he introduced this bill this afternoon, and certainly it's not the first time in the recent memory of this House that we've had a similar piece of legislation. In fact, I think we've had two pieces of legislation previous to this where we were requesting an interbasin transfer of water.

Certainly, it is interesting whenever we talk about the Horseshoe Canyon and the aquifer and the fact that there doesn't appear to be sufficient water anymore, the fact that one of these areas had water trucked in. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it's not going to be the last time that we're going to have to deal with a matter such as this. We've gone through this in the past with the whole argument of an interbasin transfer. Whenever we look at the development of coal-bed methane and we're proceeding along with the development – I think if it was well managed, it would be one thing, but we seem to be proceeding along at what some would say is a reckless pace of development. Hopefully, in the course of the debate on Bill 33 we will determine if the drilling into the Horseshoe Canyon of any coal-bed methane wells has had an effect on the water supply not only for the village of Ferintosh but also the town of Bashaw.

There are significant water transfers already happening in central Alberta. I know there are others that are planned. There is a grand plan for an area to the east of Bashaw. I don't know how that will work. Water and water transfers is a contentious issue. How contentious is it, Mr. Speaker? Well, we look at the Balzac situation, and certainly we have the promoters of the Balzac development. They're looking at Drumheller as a source of water, or they were. Originally it was from Calgary. They were within a half a kilometre, I think, of a line of potable water going from Calgary north to Airdrie, or half a kilometre away.

They could not get that water. I don't know what happened. That's an issue between the government and the city of Calgary. One of the solutions was to go east to Drumheller and pump and pipe the water back to the racetrack in Balzac, and it's at considerable expense. This government has already spent close to $8 million supporting that project. It's been discussed at great length in question period, and I think it will be discussed at even greater length. I understand the project is in freeze-frame mode right now. It's not going ahead until the whole issue is resolved.

That is one example of how contentious water or the source of water can be. Certainly, the former Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, as I recall, sponsored a similar bill, and it was for potable water for different municipal districts. Now, will any of this water be used for purposes other than what is stated in the bill?

Again, to the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill, am I safe in assuming that none of the water that will be involved in this transfer will be used for enhanced oil recovery, that none of it will be used for agricultural purposes such as racetracks? I did not know that these thoroughbred racehorses were that thirsty, but certainly it's in the hundreds of thousands of cubic metres annually that will be needed to satisfy the needs of the shopping centre and the racetrack and the horses that are going to run on the track. Specifically to this bill, can we be guaranteed that this water is for the routine purposes of the village and the town and that none of it will be used for intensive livestock operations or enhanced oil recovery? If I could have those questions answered in due course of the debate, I would be very, very grateful.

Now, also, when we look at this and we look at the amount of water that's to be transferred between the South Saskatchewan River basin and the North Saskatchewan River basin, an amount not to exceed 55.8 cubic decametres annually, how much currently is being used? What's the rate of consumption in both Bashaw and Ferintosh right now? What's the water consumption now in decametres on an annual basis? Is this adequate, or is this more than double their needs?

We talked a little earlier about the number of cubic metres that are needed in Balzac. I don't know whether I'll see it or not, but sometimes I think I'm going to be able to go to that racetrack in Balzac. There'll be an interchange off highway 2. I can guarantee that. I'll be able to cruise down there south on highway 2 and just make a turn and go on an overpass and I'll be in Balzac. Highway 2, or the Queen Elizabeth highway, will be crowded, Mr. Speaker, with Albertans who are going to enjoy the latest race. It'll be called the Balzac boogie, and there'll be thoroughbreds from all over the world coming for the big purse at the Balzac boogie, and win or lose those thoroughbreds will be guaranteed a bucket of water. I don't think a glass would satisfy them. After they go around that track once or twice, it's going to be a bucket or two of water to satisfy them, and people will note with interest the history of that water and its source.

Now, it's possible that it could come at some point from the Bow River. I don't know. It possibly could come from the Red Deer River. It's hard to say. But when we think of that and we think of the issues around the water . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the clock is striking 6, and before I call for adjournment, I just want to remind everyone that this weekend there's going to be a model parliament being held in this Assembly. So, please, everyone, remove your laptops and any paperwork on top of your desk.

Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until 1 p.m. on Monday.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 7, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/07

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of the Legislature. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I'd now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. I invite all of you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly and to all Albertans a group of people who have been involved and remain involved in the Pacific Northwest Economic Region. They are visiting our Legislature and visiting Alberta to find out more about this great province, the things that we do in it, and how we can fit into a regional system from Alaska right down to Oregon and over into Idaho and Montana, which is really important.

To encourage that kind of dialogue, we have with the delegation today the Hon. John van Dongen, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations for the province of British Columbia and a PNWER vice-president. Next is George Eskridge, a Representative from Idaho state and also a vice-president of PNWER. Next is Jeff Morris, a Washington state Representative and a PNWER past president. We also have Glenn Anderson, a Representative from Washington state and also a PNWER past president. We have with us Peter Lloyd, consul general, Canadian consulate general of Seattle. Because it's a private/public partnership, Mr. Speaker, we have Neil Windsor of APEGGA, the PNWER private-sector chair for Alberta and no stranger to this House. We have Matt Morrison, the executive director of PNWER. Joining Matt today from his office is Brandon Hardenbrook, deputy director of PNWER. And we have our own director of U.S. relations from the Alberta government, Mr. David Kettles.

Now that they have all risen, I would ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and indeed your gallery is full today. It's my pleasure to introduce a delegation in your gallery from the Ukraine. Leading the delegation is Dr. Vasyl Kremen. Dr. Kremen is the president of the Academy of Pedagogical Sciences of Ukraine and is the former Minister of Education and Science. Joining him is Dr. Vitaly Bondar, the director of the Institute of Special Pedagogy, and Dr. Viktor Andrushchenko, the rector of Dragomanov National Pedagogical University. With the delegation also is Dr. Roman Petryshyn, the director of the Ukrainian Resource and Development Centre at Grant MacEwan College here in Alberta. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly. [Remarks in Ukrainian]

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, what a thrill it is to rise and introduce members from my school, the school that I see when I look out on the backyard in the morning and cast my eyes over to Glen Allan. Today we have 20 students, as I say, members of Glen Allan school. They're accompanied by Scott Miller; Krystle O'Dell, education assistant; and two parent helpers, Rien Visscher and John Sirovyak. I'd ask that they please stand and that we give them the warm welcome they so richly deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This week is National Nursing Week, and we'll have a member's statement a little later to recognize that. But I want to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three representatives of the Alberta nursing community, seated today in the members' gallery and here to recognize National Nursing Week and to salute the vital role that nurses play in our health care system. First is Margaret Hadley, president-elect of the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta; Ruth Wold, president of the College of Licensed Practical Nurses of Alberta; and Barbara Lowe, executive director of the College of Registered Psychiatric Nurses of Alberta. Together these three individuals represent the largest professional sector of our health care workforce.

National Nursing Week is a special time to recognize the indispensable knowledge and compassionate care we trust and depend on from members of our nursing profession. I'd like all members of the House, first of all, to thank a nurse this week and, secondly, to give a warm welcome to our guests in recognition of National Nursing Week.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 11 students from the Kikino elementary school, dedicated students who are committed to education. The Kikino settlement is located just south of Lac La Biche. With them as teachers/group leaders are Miss Laurie Thompson, Mr. Wade Coutney, and Mr. Karl Merritt. If I could ask those students and teachers to stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from Meadowlark school in my constituency. They're accompanied by their teachers, Ms Cindy Awid and Ms Lu Zhang. I hope they'll find today's question period if not educational, at least entertaining. It's always a pleasure to see young people in the Assembly, so I'd like to thank these students for joining us today. There are quite a number of parent helpers with them, including Mrs. Lori Jeske, Mrs. Mary-Anne Anderson, Mrs. Julia Wong, Mrs. Jael Chum, Mr. Stephen Tsang, Mrs. Tanya Jiang, and Mrs. Fiona Chung. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm reception of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

1:10

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Karly Kayll and Catherine Darker. Both Karly and Catherine are Palace Casino workers, on their 241st day of strike due in part to this government's failure to protect Alberta workers by creating fair and inclusive labour legislation. Karly has been at the Palace Casino since 1998 and has worked with the slots department the entire time. She was a member of the former Palace Casino staff association's executive board, which preceded the UFCW. She's a member of the bargaining committee of the union. Catherine has worked for the Palace Casino for seven years as a dealer. Catherine was active within the former staff association and also served as a shop steward. They are joined today by Don Crisall, UFCW local 401 representative. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

National Nursing Week

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health and wellness services are supports that Albertans cannot live without. Within Alberta's large health care system each individual fulfills an important function. Thanks to everyone's collaboration, our province is blessed with a superior health and wellness system. Within that system nurses play an incredible and crucial role. They work everywhere: in hospitals, clinics, and communities. Nurses give us wise advice, take care of us when we are unwell, and most of all save countless lives.

This week Canada and the global community are celebrating Nursing Week. During this time we reflect on the importance nurses play in our lives. As in most health and wellness systems, nurses in Alberta comprise the largest professional group in the workforce. There are approximately 38,000 dedicated nurses within our province.

The slogan of this year's Nursing Week is Think You Know Nursing? Take a Closer Look. This statement calls on all Canadians to really think about the role nurses play in our lives. It's probably safe to say: they do it all. The fact is that registered nurses play a critical role in providing and improving clinical care, leading advocacy, and advancing technological innovation.

The work of Alberta's nurses is very important to this province. That is why the government of Alberta is committed to implementing a comprehensive health workforce strategy to secure and retain health professionals, including nurses.

The future of our province depends on our health and well-being as individuals, families, and communities. Our health determines the quality of life we enjoy. Nurses play a vital role in enhancing the wellness of Albertans and helping Albertans realize a healthy future. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all the members of this Assembly I wish to thank them for the work that they do in our health system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Building Safety Week

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize that May 6 to 12, 2007, is Building Safety Week and to talk about the vital role that well-built homes and buildings play in providing safe and secure communities. In Alberta this week is supported by the partnership of Municipal Affairs and Housing and the Alberta Building Officials Association. The theme of Building Safety Week 2007, Building Smarter . . . for Disasters and Everyday Life, reflects the importance of inspectors and building officials in creating safe places for people to live, work, and play.

Mr. Speaker, the regulation of building construction can be traced back more than 4,000 years. Codes and practices are always evolving, keeping pace with new technologies, materials, and practices. Whether in our homes, offices, schools, or factories we trust in the safety of our buildings. This trust is built on the expert development and administration of safety regulations essential to protecting the public from fire, structural collapse, and other unsafe conditions.

In Alberta, Mr. Speaker, provincially certified safety code officers interpret safety regulations and promote safe building in their communities. The Alberta Building Officials Association is a not-for-profit organization that promotes the importance of safety in the building environment. I commend Alberta's building professionals for their efforts to promote safety in our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Alberta Liberal Affordable Housing Policy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across the province thousands of Albertans face homelessness thanks to skyrocketing rents. Landlords are confused, tenants are afraid, and this government's ham-handed policies are quickly transforming a crisis into a catastrophe.

There is a better way. Last year, before this crisis became front-page news, the Alberta Liberal caucus made a promise to Albertans. We promised to come up with workable solutions to meet the affordable housing shortage head-on. We kept that promise and presented a policy that will create 10,000 units of affordable housing in Alberta within five years, protecting tenants from unmanageable rent increases while respecting the rights and needs of landlords. Like the government we would limit rent increases to once per year, but to protect renters from the huge increases this policy has encouraged, an Alberta Liberal government would also institute a temporary, one-year rent cap measure limiting increases within that year to 10 per cent.

To put that in perspective, the $500 monthly increase many Albertans face today would become a much more manageable $50 increase. This will lower the risk of Albertans losing their homes while giving builders time to create additional affordable housing units.

When vacancy rates fall below a certain threshold, we would implement a two-year moratorium on condominium conversions, unless of course the developer wanting the conversion agrees to replace any rental units lost with new affordable rental properties.

Rather than just creating subsidized housing, we would connect supplements to the renter rather than the unit. This gives low-income Albertans seeking a home far greater freedom and flexibility.

In other words, the Alberta Liberals would resolve this crisis and create a sustainable affordable housing market. Everyone needs a home, Mr. Speaker. Let's protect Albertans from losing theirs.

Augustana Campus Library Groundbreaking

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Monday a historic event occurred at the University of Alberta Augustana campus in my constituency. A groundbreaking ceremony took place on the campus for its new library and campus forum. This groundbreaking was a result of years of hard work and dedication of the Augustana community.

Driven by a desire to seek a strong and vibrant future for Augustana University College, the University of Alberta, the government of Alberta, and Augustana University College engaged in negotiations over three years ago. These negotiations resulted in the historic merger of two truly outstanding postsecondary institutions with long histories in our province.

A groundbreaking of a library has sentimental meaning for Augustana. There have been numerous attempts to raise the funds to construct a new library. These attempts were unsuccessful. With Augustana's entry into the University of Alberta family the hopes and dreams of a new library are now a reality.

The groundbreaking ceremony was also an opportunity for the Augustana campus, University of Alberta to showcase its success over the past year. Hundreds of students, faculty, staff, and community members were in attendance. I was pleased to participate in the groundbreaking ceremonies with a number of dignitaries, including the U of A president, Indira Samarasekera; the dean of the Augustana campus, Roger Epp; the U of A board chairman, Brian Heidecker; Camrose mayor, Clarence Mastel; and county of Camrose reeve, Jack Lyle.

President Samarasekera remarked that Augustana is a valuable addition to the University of Alberta and that they are engaged in a wholehearted partnership. Dean Epp stated that the groundbreaking demonstrates in a tangible manner Augustana's growth.

Camrose has moved from being a college town to a university city thanks to the presence of the University of Alberta campus. With the construction of the new library Augustana will grow and educate thousands of new students in a rural setting in the years to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to ask each and every Albertan a simple but important question: are you prepared? Are you prepared for a real emergency? If flooding forces you from your home, if wildfires are raging nearby, or if a severe winter storm shuts down roads, schools, and businesses, are you prepared?

Mr. Speaker, this week, May 6 to 12, is Emergency Preparedness Week. If a disaster or emergency affected your family, could you look after your basic needs for 72 hours? Emergencies and disasters can happen anywhere at any time.

The first step to protect you and your family is to know the risks. The second step is to make a plan. Having a plan helps you and your family know what to do in case of an emergency. The final step is to assemble a 72-hour kit to cover your basic needs in case of an emergency or disaster. Your kit should include basic equipment like food, water, a small flashlight and batteries, a crank- or battery-operated radio, and a can opener.

During Emergency Preparedness Week, Mr. Speaker, all Albertans, particularly those living or working near industrial areas, should also be aware of the shelter-in-place protocols. Shelter in place is a process of staying indoors in an attempt to lessen the effects of an emergency such as the release of a hazardous material into the air. Some of the steps involved in shelter in place include going indoors, closing doors and windows, turning off air circulation sources, picking a room to shelter in away from windows and doors, if possible, and staying in place until it's safe to leave.

Mr. Speaker, being prepared for disasters and emergencies is important, and I would ask all Albertans to take the time during Emergency Preparedness Week to make sure that they are ready. For more information on how you can be ready, visit the Municipal Affairs and Housing website.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Midwifery Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Saturday, May 5, was the annual celebration of midwifery day. A family event was planned for the steps of the Legislature, and a number of hardy souls came out once again to encourage the government to cover midwifery services under health care. After almost 18 years of lobbying this government, I'm growing a bit weary watching this opportunity slip by us. Numerous studies have shown that midwifery services are the most cost-effective. They reduce pressure on hospitals, staff, and infrastructure.

In 1990 the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, whom I was privileged to serve as executive director, recommended to the government that midwifery services be covered under health care. A number of other agencies, including government ones, followed suit over the years. Midwives fit perfectly with the primary care model and with the prevention and wellness strategy: everything the government says it supports, but year after year the only thing that changes is the government's excuse. "There are safety concerns": well, that was long ago disproved. "You need a pilot project": we've now had several different ones. "You need doctors to show leadership": no, we need the government to show leadership. "The issue needs more study": sorry, boys, the facts are in on this one. I thought perhaps it was because all the health ministers I'd lobbied had been men and maybe they didn't get it, but then we had a female minister and still no coverage.

So here we are: another minister, another May 5, another attempt by this member to encourage the government to do the right thing. For healthier babes, healthier moms, healthier family birth experiences, and a cost savings, please, cover midwifery services under Alberta health care.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have a petition signed by 80 Albertans from Red Deer, Sylvan Lake, Lacombe, St. Albert, Edmonton, Beaumont, Millet, Sherwood Park, Nisku, and other communities that states:

We, the undersigned . . . [ask] the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to introduce legislation that will ensure the following:

1. where a person who holds a graduated driver's licence is operating a motor vehicle that is involved in a collision resulting in serious injury or death, that person's licence shall be suspended immediately and notification shall be provided to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board; and
2. the Board shall immediately conduct a review of the incident to determine whether the person's licence should be reinstated, and if so, under what conditions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm rising to table 32 signatures on a petition urging the government of Alberta to complete, as soon as possible, the overpasses and interchanges at the locations where the Anthony Henday Drive (Edmonton Ring Road) intersects Lessard Road, Callingwood Road . . . and Cameron Heights Drive.

I urge the minister to pay attention to this one.
Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to table five copies of the summary of school jurisdictions' statement of operations and changes in financial position.

The Speaker: I think, hon. member, we are not at that point in the Routine yet. I'll call you later. We're in petitions right now.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of a motion to be brought forward tomorrow pursuant to Standing Order 4(2):

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly convene at 8 p.m. for night sittings on Tuesday, May 8, and Wednesday, May 9, 2007.

Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, has some urgency to it, and we may need to find a time to deal with that in the House.

I can assure you and the members of the House, though, that I have committed to working with the House leader of the Official Opposition and the House leader of the third party to find a way to deal with this in an appropriate manner, but I had to bring oral notice forward today to preserve the opportunity to deal with it tomorrow. I've been made aware that, for example, the Liberal Party has a leader's dinner tomorrow night, so tomorrow night may not be the most appropriate time, but we will work together and bring a solution back to the House for tomorrow, in the meantime preserving the opportunity by bringing this notice of motion forward.

Thanks.

The Speaker: And this motion will be debatable.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Bill 35

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce two bills today, the first being Bill 35, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of this bill is to reflect the changes in the budget and to harmonize with some changes in the federal budget.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 35 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Bill 36

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 36, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

This is again reflecting proposals in the budget and some harmonization with the federal budget.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 36 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Bill 37

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance I request leave to introduce Bill 37, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2007.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Bill 38

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Government Organization Amendment Act, 2007.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 38 be moved to Government Bills and Orders on the Order Paper.

[Motion carried]

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Affordable Housing

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberal caucus believes that everyone needs a home. The Premier and his party don't. Albertans believe in fairness, compassion, and in a government that protects their interest, protects the public interest. The Premier and his party apparently do not. The Premier says rent increases of $1,000 a month are un-Albertan, but his action or, rather, his inaction tells a different story. To the Premier: if rent gouging of this magnitude is un-Albertan, why is the Premier refusing to stop it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government is compassionate, it is caring, and that is why in this budget alone: $285 million for housing initiatives, millions more to support families, seniors, anyone that requires some assistance in housing. Those are all in the budget that's before debate in this House. I feel that we've come a long way. That $285 million is to increase the number of housing spaces available in this province given the number of people that continually come to this province to seek their fortune.

Dr. Taft: Again I ask the Premier: if rent gouging of the magnitude of $1,000 a month is un-Albertan, why is this Premier refusing to stop it?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think I answered in the first question what we are doing to curtail this situation in the province of Alberta. We need more spaces, and what we're bringing forward is a very good plan in terms of increasing the number of spaces. We don't want to diminish the number of spaces available for people in this province; we want to increase the number of spaces.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This issue is not just about policy; it's about people, real people. One group of people who are struggling with this issue are the families of the brave men and women fighting for peace and justice in Afghanistan. I was at the base this weekend, and I heard their concerns about the cost of housing. These are families who worry every day about losing their loved ones. They should not have to worry also about losing their homes. To the Premier: how can the Premier claim that he is looking after the interests of Albertans when military families in Edmonton are in danger of losing their homes? He has a choice, and he's letting it happen.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said, this government is a government for all Albertans, all families, all members. As I said before, we're increasing the number of units in the province of Alberta. In this particular case, to the men and women that serve overseas, you know, our thoughts are with them, especially during this period of time. But to isolate and start picking one group over another is in itself un-Albertan.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Financial Support for Renters

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government likes to pick out all kinds of particular groups. Government support, for example, for farmers demonstrates that the free market alone is incapable of protecting people from unacceptable hardships. Just ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, who received $93,000 in support payments from this government last year to help with the struggles he faced as a farmer. But when it comes to renters, the Premier and this minister say that people facing huge increases should not be protected. To the Premier: how can this Premier refuse to protect renters when they are facing such unacceptable hardships?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the Leader of the Opposition shows how little he knows about agriculture in this province and the programs available. There is something called Alberta crop insurance, where farmers have to pay premiums to the program.

Obviously, they either haven't heard about it or haven't spent enough time in rural Alberta to really study the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. I think the Premier probably knows that we're talking about the CAIS program. When farmers face a tough time because of bad markets, they get support from this government through the CAIS program, and that's fair enough. The Premier himself got $8,100 from this program last year. But renters need protection, too, when markets are bad in housing. To the Premier: why does the Premier refuse to accept that renters need temporary rent caps to protect them from rent gouging because of the bad market in housing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, question period isn't where we try and give the hon. leader all of the education when it comes to the CAIS program. It's closely tied to crop insurance, and I hope he understands that it's just not simply having a cheque received from both the federal and provincial levels. It's tied to a series of criteria to support agriculture in, of course, difficult times.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Listen, the Alberta Liberals support the principles behind the CAIS program as does this government. As we've seen, both the Premier and his minister enjoy protection from market forces through CAIS, but the same Premier and minister flatly refuse to offer protection to renters in crisis, saying that they don't need temporary rent caps. Again to the Premier: can the Premier explain why Alberta renters are left to fend for themselves when he is not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the information is incorrect, and the minister responsible will identify to the House where we support renters.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have a homeless and eviction prevention fund which will help us deal with all of those issues when people come forward and identify that they've had a cost imposed on them. There are 59 centres in Alberta where people can go and explain their situation, identify what their needs are, and then we can make individual responses to them. They can call the support centre at 1-866-644-5135 if they want more information on getting that support.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Support for Low-income Albertans

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday, as we heard, the Premier suggested that he thought 100 per cent increases in rents might be un-Albertan. The Premier is right about that but wrong about the size of the problem. Uncontrolled growth of housing costs in Alberta affects everyone and has led to the creation of an expanding class of working poor. In fact, 1 in 5 Edmonton households are unable to afford basic necessities, and many are one paycheque away from being homeless. To the Premier: do you think that it is Albertan for families that are working harder and harder and are falling further and further behind?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans are working very hard.

In fact, we've seen tremendous economic growth in this province. It's a province leading the nation not only in all statistics but in employment as well. We have the lowest unemployment, I believe, in history, if not close to history, and the average working income of Albertans is higher than anyplace else in Canada. There are people, of course, that do need help occasionally, and that's why we're there as a government to assist them in those programs.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, lone parent families are among the hardest hit by skyrocketing housing costs. Children and lone parent families are actually worse off than they were a decade ago. It is inconceivable that in Alberta, one of the richest provinces in Canada, 1 in 8 children still lives in poverty and that this rate really is higher than the national average. To the Premier: do you think it is Albertan that these children not receive the same opportunities, not get a good head start in their life as children in other provinces?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our social programs in this province lead the nation in support for all Albertans. We'll continue to do that. That's why there's been such a huge investment in the social fabric of this province in this budget. Given the kinds of comments across the way, I'm sure that the opposition will be supporting this government in the increases we see in our budget supporting families.

Dr. B. Miller: The lack of affordable housing in Alberta reflects the inability of this government to plan for the boom. Now they're refusing to take meaningful remedial action. If temporary rent regulation is an anathema to this government, the only thing left is to help working people on the income side. To the Premier: will this government at least commit here today to make work pay by increasing the minimum wage? How about increasing it to $10 an hour?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a good question, and it's something that we may as an Assembly want to give careful consideration to, and we may even have an opportunity to do that soon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This weekend's Tory convention confirmed what many Albertans already knew, that Tories and the Tory government don't give a darn about renters. It's now clear that this government considers rent guidelines dead despite the fact that vulnerable Alberta renters are facing economic eviction and are ending up on the street. My question is to the Premier. Why has this government turned its back on renters? Why doesn't this Premier care about people who are losing their homes?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this weekend, as the member has mentioned, there were well over 1,400 people attending our annual general meeting. It was a meeting that discussed so many different issues. These are delegates that care about their province. They care about their fellow Albertans, and that's one reason why they turned out in such great numbers to share their thoughts, their ideas with our government caucus members and to bring those ideas forward for further policy evaluation and discussion. I feel proud of the participation that we have.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Fourteen hundred people, all of whom have homes.

The power of wealthy landlords and developers was very apparent this weekend at that Tory convention, which firmly rejected rent protection for renters. While the Premier temporarily lost his nerve on the issue, the Tory delegates were very clear: no rent guidelines. My question to the Premier: will the Premier admit what most Albertans already know, that his government cares about landlords and not about renters who are losing their homes?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my advice to the leader of the third party is to be careful when you challenge me in terms of whether I have nerve or not.

We listen very closely to all Albertans, and we're going to incorporate what Albertans tell us in terms of policy for what's best for the future of this province. What's best for the future of this province is to increase the number of housing units. In fact, I am proud of the direction we've taken. For 3.3 million people in the province of Alberta we've created over 51,800 starts. In Ontario with 12 million they only saw 56,000 starts. Look at other provinces: Quebec, 8 million people, only 48,000 housing starts. So we are getting the job done.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, vulnerable Albertans are not being helped by this government. It's fine to have 1,400 well-heeled Tories make decisions that will benefit landlords, but there are people who are losing their homes because they're being gouged by landlords. This government has refused to take action. Their only answer is: wait until we get some more basement suites; wait a few years until we build some more apartments and some public housing, and everything will be okay. Does the Premier really expect people to wait on the street for two years while his housing gets built?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, coupled with the $285 million in housing, encouraging more housing starts – and, again, there will be further participation by the federal government and by municipal governments as well – we, of course, have a program in place to support renters, people that may be evicted as a result of rental increases. Again, the minister did give that information to the House, but if you so wish, she can give it again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past three weeks I've been trying to deal with three specific constituency problems that have been ongoing for over three years, and there seems to be very little movement. The conditional funding that has come out to the municipalities is not helping. It's crippling them, and it's affecting the families in those communities as well. My question and the dilemma is that this government always is upset when the federal government puts conditions on the spending but doesn't seem to follow the same on their own. Will this government stop being hypocrites and crippling our municipalities and eliminate the conditions on the additional funding that they're to receive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before the budget was released, there was extensive consultation with municipalities, also the minister's council, in a discussion to have co-operation, to have regional planning, which is very necessary. If we look at when the hon. member talks about conditions, the conditions are to plan together. A core part of the budget is to plan, a community plan for the initiative.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they're out of touch, and the previous housing minister knows it. They went around that they are supposed to have unconditional funding. Because Edmonton might need a parka doesn't mean that Calgary or southern Alberta needs one. It's not working.

At the AUMA regional meeting the ag minister responded to the mayors down there saying that he wasn't aware of it. I wonder if he took that to the Premier. To the Premier: will you make a commitment to send the appropriate ministers to Taber to enable them to address their waste-water treatment plant? The funding is not addressing it.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is a difficult one. There is no jurisdiction in Canada that has put as much money on the table as this government to assist municipalities: currently $600 million a year for infrastructure for municipalities, add another $400 million this year. That's a billion dollars to support municipalities in this province. There is no other jurisdiction in Canada that's doing that much, so certainly we would be able to work out any issues in terms of getting that money out to municipalities and getting the best value for it. So if it's in water, if it's in infrastructure, or if it's in social housing, tell us. We'll be there, we'll listen to you, and we'll make those programs work.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, over 50 per cent of the money going to the MD of Taber and the town of Taber will not be able to be used because of the conditions attached to it. They're short millions. It's not going to account for what they need.

There are other problems that they continue to pass off in different jurisdictions. We have a provincial bridge and we have a road that's going to get washed out, and we have a fence at Coutts that they have continued to fail to address. Will the Premier address these issues? They are simple and can be addressed, unlike some of the bigger issues that take time. It's been three years, and they haven't been addressed. Will the Premier commit to addressing these two specific problems?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, we addressed a big problem in Taber the other day. We announced support for 105 new assisted-living spaces in Taber. That's going to go a long way in supporting our seniors in that community. Over and above the billion dollars that's in both infrastructure and municipal affairs, there are millions of dollars in other programs, especially for water and sewer rehab. So there's a whole bunch more money available other than just what was indicated by the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lack of leadership by this government has many of my constituents in Edmonton-Ellerslie feeling that they will lose their home. Seniors, artists, immigrants, single families, and people on fixed income are struggling to pay increasing rents. One of my constituents has received three rent increases in eight months totalling $400. She's afraid of becoming part of the growing number of the working homeless in the province. To the Premier: what advice does the Premier have for this particular woman, who is one paycheque away from being homeless?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, as the minister responsible indicated, there are a number of dollars available to support people in difficult circumstances. Again, I'll repeat: $285 million available for affordable housing. We're looking at other strategies in terms of increasing the number of units. If again we have to repeat how to get in contact with the right ministry to support people under difficult conditions, we'll do that.

Mr. Agnihotri: Mr. Premier, the taxpayers want to see you decisive. They want to see action. My question is to the Premier again. Another constituent in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie is being hit with a 54 per cent increase in rent. He wants answers from this government. How are hard-working Albertans supposed to maintain a home with rent escalation like this?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as well, I believe that the House leader introduced a special motion to accelerate, of course, discussion and debate on a bill that we have before the House. This in part is in keeping with the strategy of keeping these rent increases down.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again. It is un-Albertan for this government to disregard the basic needs of Albertans. When will the Premier do what's right and implement the one-time, temporary rent increase protection for tenants to reduce the risk of people losing their home?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we don't want anybody to lose their home. That's why we're moving quickly on providing more dollars for growing the number of affordable housing units in the province of Alberta. As well, we are supporting families in need, seniors, and young families. We have the programs in place, and we'll continue to watch how the number of units increases in this province of Alberta. Really, the only way of dealing with the critical housing shortage is getting more units started and built so that families can move in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

1:50 Disclosure of Leadership Campaign Contributions

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few months some of my constituents in Red Deer-North have asked me about disclosure of leadership financing, that is legislated in other provinces. Over this past weekend some direction was offered about how all parties should conduct themselves when selecting a new leader. I have one question, and it's to the Premier. How quickly will the government bring forward legislation governing financial contribution and disclosure rules for party leadership elections?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that what came forward was legislation to cover all parties. If there are some parties across the way that see an immediate urgency to deal with this situation because they anticipate some leadership changes, then we'll listen to them very carefully, and we'll put it on the agenda as quickly as possible for consideration in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, sadly, the term GDP in Alberta has taken on a whole new meaning. It appears it now stands for government's disposable people. I'd like to raise the cases of several of my constituents struggling with their housing. Trudy Hill is a resident renter in my constituency. She works for the Alberta Research Council, a government employee working hard to improve this province, yet because of the Tories' blind faith in a completely distorted free market, she's facing a 45 per cent rent increase. To the Premier: does Mrs. Hill have to just hold on, to keep on paying the price of prosperity?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the responsibility of the opposition and the third party is to identify concerns that come to them as MLAs, yet the member opposite has not come to my office with those individual cases. He stands up and grandstands in this House in order to try and get the media. But does he care about his constituents? No. He has not come to our office. There is responsibility in this House for leadership, and his responsibility . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Your room is going to get awfully full with the thousands of constituents that are being ripped off by your government.

My constituents accept that the growth pressures in Alberta and in Calgary mean that life will get a little tougher, that prices will rise, and that money will get tighter, but what they are actually experiencing is well beyond that reasonable assumption. What Candace Loken, another constituent, is actually experiencing is a $400 a month rent increase while on $700 a month disability. She's going to have to move even while suffering chronic back pain. How does this fit with the Premier's pledge to improve Albertans' quality of life? How has Mrs. Loken's life improved?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, if the hon. member opposite instead of putting those letters under his desk would forward them to us, we could deal with them because we do have the programs. We are compassionate for the situations that individuals are in, and if they were passed on to us, we could deal with them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A third constituent, Diane Shelley, is seeing her rent go up $425, nearly 60 per cent. She is a senior on a fixed income. She's going to have $200 a month to live on. She certainly isn't happy with the Alberta advantage. There's the evidence. These certainly aren't isolated incidents. Across my constituency, across the province excessive rent increases are punishing Albertans. Will the Premier finally accept that we already are facing a failed marketplace and follow the lead of the Alberta Liberals and his own Affordable Housing Task Force and institute temporary rent controls?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, allow me one more time, please, to address the issue the hon. member is raising. Any day of the week when people are faced with low income, when they are faced with eviction, when they are faced with homelessness, when they are faced with tragic circumstances like a rent increase they can't afford, the Alberta government delivers. Since November we helped them with $9 million worth of emergencies, just in the past few months. We spent a hundred million dollars over the last year in the budget helping low-income Albertans with shelter and other supports, whether they were going to school, were receiving training and needed supports, whether they had difficulties because of the marketplace, whether they had difficulties because of a lack of job opportunities. Mr. Speaker, we have programs in place, and further programs . . .

The Speaker: I think we have to move on now.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Pacific Northwest Labour Mobility

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The participating jurisdictions of the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, like Alberta, have all been dealing with a shortage of workers. While we in Alberta work diligently to solve our workforce problems, our PNWER partners and the federal government have strategies to tackle this common problem. My questions today are to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Your policy is to have a strong workforce in Alberta. What can you do to collaborate with the northwest economic region and the federal government to participate in breaking down barriers to labour mobility between our jurisdictions?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think it's well known that the hon. member who presented the question had a key role in helping us with the TILMA agreement in supporting trade and labour mobility. But beyond that, PNWER delegates here today are hoping that we will support their steering committee on the issues of workforce shortage in the western regions, and we will. We will have representation, as will the minister of labour in British Columbia. Colin Hansen has already indicated support. We will examine the roles of various private stakeholders, organizations like APEGGA, who can help us with labour mobility by looking at certification and following through . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Discussions at the annual PNWER summits for years have raised the awareness of these issues, and this particular problem goes beyond many borders. Those barriers need to be reviewed on a regular basis, and they have been reviewed on a regular basis as well. Can the minister advise this House and Albertans of any successes that have been happening in the past that would lead to future successes?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the engineers and the engineering technologists are two groups where there have been some successes. We have been working with many other groups where we are seeing the removal of barriers in place, in fact the absence of barriers. We've been working with associations to make sure that they are continuing.

Further, Mr. Speaker, together with British Columbia we plan to look at an office to look at foreign credentialing in a different way so that we are confident that the people that do want to come into the country can work more collaboratively with either province in securing employment. PNWER also with other jurisdictions is helping us become more aware of labour shortages and labour possibilities throughout the region.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the last question to the minister is: what strategies can she suggest for the future in terms of taking the workforce and what might work in one jurisdiction and having the workforce remain in that jurisdiction to help with manufacturing of component parts that could be of benefit to Alberta and to our industries here?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one excellent example which fits very well with our new and burgeoning aerospace industry in Medicine Hat is the example of Boeing in Seattle, Washington, who have decentralized the building of component parts so that, in fact, in Everett, Washington, there are other parts being built. We can do that as well. Our manufacturing and exporter forum, which saw many groups come out of Ontario, was another example of our finding opportunities for our oil sands industry to receive building from other places and then incorporate it within industry locally. So I think that for this Pacific Northwest we can look at other jurisdictions to help us fill the gaps.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Off-reserve Housing

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans know all too well how the government dropped the Affordable Housing Task Force suggestion on temporary rent controls, but the task force also recommended affordable off-reserve housing for aboriginals. With the federal government putting in cash, the task force said that the provincial government should match it, but the government said no. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the federal government the only one willing to put in and step up to help the people with this important issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Quite contrary to the comment, this government has acted very responsibly in dealing with First Nation people, Métis people relative to this. We're continuing to work with them, and the important partnership in terms of finding housing is something that is continuing on. I might add that the recommendations in the task force are very positive in terms of the work that has been done and is being done in helping Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the budget release on affordable housing spending the front page shows $16 million this year for spending for off-reserve housing. Only when you look through the report do you realize that the release flat out rejected the recommendations the task force suggested. The $16 million is all coming from the federal government, the federal government only. So why does this government still try and pass this money off as their own? Why aren't they doing anything for aboriginals on off-reserve housing?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I won't have to remind the hon.

member regarding the federal responsibility as well as provincial responsibility, but what I can remind members of this House and the hon. member is this: that the relationship we have with aboriginal peoples and Métis people in this province is second to none. In fact, it has been commented that we have a gold standard that other provinces could follow relative to the leadership in dealing with aboriginal people in this province.

Mr. Bonko: Another vulnerable group in society ignored by this government, another group whose housing challenges don't fit with the Tory ideology, and another group that must pay for the price of prosperity, it looks like. What does the minister say to aboriginals who need this off-reserve housing funding: just wait for the federal money because we don't care about it?

Mr. Boutilier: Quite to the contrary, not at all. In fact, rather than the Liberal ideology, we're out there being proactive, thinking ahead rather than looking behind saying: what's all wrong in the last hundred years? We have a positive approach. I might add also that the minister of housing, heading up the task force, even had some very clear examples of how we're working forward in a positive way.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the $285 million, not like the member opposite would like to have it, has no boundaries or distinctions. The $285 million is for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier seemed surprised Friday when he was told that Edmonton isn't the only place where there's rent gouging. Obviously, he's not reading the Calgary papers. Calgary renter Norman Burke received a notice of a $1,000 rent increase last August. Margaret Bain, a widow in Calgary, saw her $700 per month rent go up to $1,445 last November. The gouging has been going on a long time in Calgary, and it's getting worse in Edmonton. My question is to the minister of municipal affairs. How could the Premier and this government not know about the rent gouging that's been going on in Calgary for almost a year?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we have 100,000 people who have moved into Alberta in the last year. We need to have more units on the market. We cannot chase away landlords into other provinces. That is not the solution. If individuals have concerns or challenges, I would ask also the member from the third party to please send us those concerns, and we will look at them and deal with them.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, where are these poor little landlords going to flee to? They have rent controls almost everywhere except Alberta, and they're building affordable housing.

My question. Is the minister saying that this is the government policy, that the minister is going to sit down and talk one-on-one with all the landlords and say: please don't raise the rents? Is this the new government philosophy? Is this their strategy, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this minister has said that he needs to understand the situation from the side of the landlords that are gouging, that have had extreme rentals, and that is why I need to sit down with those individuals and see their reasoning. We need to see the holistic side.

Mr. Martin: The holistic side? You've got to be kidding. The nature of the beast is this: that landlords are out there to make a profit, Mr. Speaker, and they're going to make as big a profit as they can. They're not philanthropic social organizations. My question to the minister is simply this: when is the minister going to get off this rigid ideology brought forward by well-heeled Tories and bring in some sort of rent stability so that people aren't being gouged?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we're moving towards bringing in a form of rent stability a little later this week when we talk about the renewal of the landlord and tenancies acts. I can assure you that the MLAs that represent Calgary not only represent the housing issues. They also represent the infrastructure issues and the other cultural issues that come with the tremendous growth that we've been faced with. So there is not a void of information in this caucus from Calgary, but there may be a slight void in the third party.

Nuclear Power

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, even in a southern rural riding like Little Bow nuclear power is often questioned and talked about as an alternate energy source that might generate steam and produce electricity for the province's oil sands. For some other Albertans it also raises issues about public safety. My questions today are to the Minister of Energy. I understand that much of the regulatory system is controlled by the federal government, but with that being said, I would like the minister to assure me and some of the constituents that any potential approval might take into account some of the concerns that some Albertans have around nuclear power.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, Canada is recognized around the world as an area that has a regulatory system that's renowned for nuclear energy. Certainly, Canadian equipment is used globally, and the Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission addresses the health, safety, environmental, and national security issues associated with nuclear projects in Canada. There are specific approvals required in licensing phases all the way through the process . . .

The Speaker: Perhaps we'll get to that in the supplementary.
The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: does the federal government have clear direction over many of these controls, or does Alberta have an opportunity for input in some of the decisions that are being made?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, as I was about to say, the government will provide leadership on this issue, and most certainly the province of Alberta or any other provincial jurisdiction has a role to play. What's been stated by our leader and hon. Premier of the province of Alberta: we will go out and hear from Albertans with respect to the issue before any nuclear projects would be constructed in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How has the minister actually addressed the concerns about the environment, the safety, the public safety, when it comes to input from Albertans?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, they're all important issues. The issues that the member brings up are very important issues to Albertans and most certainly to this government. What will have to happen is that once there is a proposal that comes forward to the government, we will certainly address all of those issues. Under the auspices, again, of the Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission, we'll have a role to play with respect to the licensing and permitting, and we'll be sure that Albertans are included in those discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Affordable Housing in Calgary

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Blind faith in the market continues to blind this government to the profound human suffering associated with the boom in this province, particularly in Calgary. One thing is clear: the government's members are not in touch with the desperate plight of average and low-income Albertans, or it does not believe their stories. The Premier last week was quoted as saying that he was not aware of anyone getting a $1,000 increase. Such reports and worse have been in the press for over a year. To the Member for Calgary-West: what have you Calgary MLAs been doing to inform the Premier about these problems?

2:10

The Speaker: Well, we're going to deal with a question to a minister of the Crown. This is question period, and the member will respond as a minister of the Crown.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I was going to inform the hon. member about completing Education Week last week and what I was doing as Minister of Education, but if that's not appropriate, then I'll wait for the next question.

The Speaker: That would have been appropriate, but we'll go to the next question.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents, Lynn Moran, from the Renfrew community saw a 100 per cent increase in her rent last week, from $425 to $850 a month plus utilities. Now she's spending half of her income on rent. Laura Snowball, another resident of my constituency, saw her rent go from $1,300 to $2,000 this month. To the minister of municipal affairs: why is this government ignoring Calgarians?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we are not ignoring Calgarians. We are not ignoring Albertans. We have put forward $285 million of new money to support affordable housing and the homeless. We are trying to encourage developers. We are trying to encourage municipalities to change zoning bylaws so that we can have more units available for Albertans. Again, I would very much encourage the member opposite to bring forward those concerns to ourselves, also through a toll-free number to Service Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the current plan is not going to relieve this problem for months or years if at all. When will this government put citizens' basic human rights ahead of ideology?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we're already putting the issues of Albertans in front on the agenda. Repeatedly I have given answers to questions about the capacity of this government to follow through with the programs we are currently administering and ones that under this homeless and eviction fund we'll continue to administer. We will have monies. The description of the case where a woman has spent half of her money on housing is exactly the kind of case that this ministry deals with and that this ministry will follow through with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Trade, Investment, and Labour Mobility Agreement

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta/B.C. trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, otherwise known as TILMA, is Canada's most comprehensive internal trade agreement. However, despite overwhelming positive response to this agreement its no-obstacles clause has recently come under fire from some critics. My first question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Will the no-obstacles clause prevent governments from regulating in the public interest; for example, by not allowing zoning bylaws or building height restrictions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One thing is for certain: TILMA, which every other province and territory in Canada is watching, is a model for the rest of Canada to follow. Not only is it a model for the rest of Canada to follow; it's true that maybe even the Liberals and the New Democrats might be able to follow it. Furthermore, I might add that this will not only strengthen but enhance the excellent job that municipalities are doing in serving the same taxpayers, that elect both us and them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the fact that during his recent visit to Edmonton the ambassador of the European Union to Canada was praising TILMA and saying that this is probably one of the best interjurisdictional agreements in the world, can the minister respond to those who contend that under TILMA governments will have to remove any rule or regulation that businesses think restricts their ability to do business?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, this is clearly about barrier busting, about bureaucratic busting, about eliminating red tape, about eliminating the duplication among governments. We're taking down the barrier, and do you know why we're doing it? To help the people of Alberta and British Columbia, 7.7 million Albertans and British Columbians. And how can anyone or any political party argue with something that will help voters?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you for that answer, Mr. Speaker.

What does the same minister say to those who claim that under TILMA business will be able to sue government repeatedly for regulations that they feel interfere with their ability to do whatever they want?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, if someone wants to sue anyone, get in line. I mean, that's fine, and it keeps a particular profession very happy.

That being the case, I might add simply this. Let me use a quote, and I will table this. "We look forward to continuing to work with our counterparts in [British Columbia] to facilitate labour mobility between the two provinces," says Mary-Anne Robinson, the executive director of the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta. Need I say more in terms of the labour mobility that is helping Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister will be given an opportunity very momentarily to table such a source.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many seniors on a fixed income who are still willing and able to live in their own community, but their options are limited because of skyrocketing rental prices. There are seniors throughout the province who are forced to use their entire pension cheque to pay their rent. Jim Sexsmith, for example, is a senior from Edmonton on a fixed pension and cannot afford the 20 per cent rent increase in his building, which is the second increase in one year. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: what advice does the minister have for seniors whose income or government supports are not keeping up with the cost of living?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I think we've said many times before that if there are individuals, I would very much ask the members opposite to please pass that information on to us. If there are concerns of tenants and landlords who have questions about the rights that they have, they should call Service Alberta on a toll-free number, 1-877-427-4088. Also, my colleague the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry has reiterated numerous times that if there are such individuals, we will look after it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really not making up these stories.

This government has two categories for Albertans: those who benefit from the Alberta advantage and those whose circumstances are simply considered the price of prosperity. Why is the minister letting ideology get in the way of protecting seniors from double- or triple-digit percentage increases in their rent?

Mr. Danyluk: I'll let the minister of seniors respond, please.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta seniors' benefit has been designed specifically to be targeted towards the lowest income seniors. In fact, we have one of the most aggressive policies in exempting health care premiums. We also have caps so that there is no increase at all in their education property taxes. The Alberta seniors' benefit does provide a substantial benefit to the lowest. We really are trying to organize so that the programs for seniors are targeted to those with the greatest of needs, and we will continue to see that our programs match just that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. My question will go to the minister of seniors this time. Seniors at the Holy Cross Manor in Calgary, an assisted-living facility, have faced rent increases of up to 40 per cent. Housing options for these seniors are limited given that many have limited mobility and require specially designed apartments. Does the minister still believe that these vulnerable Albertans don't deserve any special protections over and above what I have just heard over the last three-quarters of an hour?

2:20

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we have acted and will continue to act in conjunction with many of the initiatives that will be going forward. Seniors are also those that can apply for the affordability assistance under the rental supplements that are there, and so be it in this case for any individual. Many times they have not even applied for the programs that do exist. So we, too, would be anxious and willing to work with those specific individuals and seniors as their needs come forward.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 86 questions and answers today.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table in reference to question period this afternoon quotes on the excellent labour mobility deal between Alberta and British Columbia.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two celebratory tablings today. The first is the requisite number of copies of last Friday's program from Masala Journey, which kicked off the month-long series of ImaginAsian cultural celebration events, which include Alberta's First Nations artists and performers. One of the first celebratory events was the annual Sikh parade and celebrations that took place this past Saturday in both Calgary and Edmonton.

My second tabling is the Volunteer Quick Reference Guide for the 40th annual pathway and river cleanup that took place on Sunday. Constituents from Calgary-Mountain View, Calgary-Currie, and Calgary-Varsity were among the hundreds of volunteers. I'm proud to note that included in the 20-plus Calgary-Varsity volunteers were four generations of the Chase family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table a document for the leader of the NDP today. It's a copy of a letter from Margaret Stone, who at 75 years old has been informed that the owner of her apartment building is planning a condo conversion. She notes that at her age and on a fixed income she would not likely qualify for a loan.

The Speaker: Did the hon. member have a tabling of his own?

Mr. Martin: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter sent to the Premier by 69-year-old Beverley McGowan, who is one of my constituents. In the past year Beverley's rent has increased by over $400, and she'll have to find a new place to live by the end of the month.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and proud today to rise in this great democratic Assembly of Alberta as an independent and conservative member to present two sets of tablings. One is the program of the Northgate Choralaires' premiere performance of their taste of Broadway. Under the talented leadership and musical genius of director Sandi Ollenberger this premier seniors' choir performed to a sold-out audience of well over 500 souls. It was held at the incomparable Northgate Lions seniors' centre, and the performance received a long standing ovation at the finale. Thank you, Choralaires.

The second tabling is a program from the Yellow Ribbon Gala Benefit Dinner and Silent Auction held at the officers' mess at the base in support of the Edmonton Garrison family resource centre. This is an important charity that I urge all Albertans to support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and it is a submission made by the government of Alberta to the U.S. House Subcommittee on Energy and Air Quality. This submission is titled Alberta's Dramatic Crude Oil Growth in an Environment of Conventional Crude Oil Decline, and it is dated December 7, 2005. This submission was made by our patronage appointee in Washington, a former member of this House, Murray D. Smith.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and table five copies of the Summary of School Jurisdictions Statement of Operations and Changes in Financial Position from the 2005-06 Alberta Education report. On Thursday the Minister of Education challenged me to produce the document showing that 30 of Alberta's school boards are in a deficit position. This document from the current annual report of his own ministry clearly demonstrates this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from my constituent Deane Purves, who is concerned about the temporary rent relief and the life of all renting citizens. He's surprised at the greed of landlords, and he's stunned to hear lots of stories about vulnerable people in Alberta. He's urging this government to recognize the rent situation in Edmonton, Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much Mr. Speaker. Over the noon hour I had the pleasure of attending the 2007 Celebrate Mental Health Awards sponsored by the Canadian Mental Health Association. I was glad to see several of my colleagues from the Alberta Legislature there, and I am pleased to table the program from that event today. As executive director Bill Hofmeyer noted, isn't it wonderful that we refer to these as the mental health awards and not the mental illness awards?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a set of seven letters addressed to the Premier and his government. These letters were composed on the steps of this very Legislature on April 18 of this year when we had the vigil ceremony remembering and celebrating the life of Stephanie Butler, whose murder was not only tragic but preventable. They're asking for certain changes to police procedures and to look at ways to improve safety and security in our neighbourhoods and communities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling a letter with the requisite five copies on behalf of Kim Laing, who's a certified firefighter and EMT and chair of the Southern Alberta Vehicle Restraint Coalition, who feels that the present legislation restricts the sheriffs' activities that could be invaluable in helping with roadside accidents by controlling traffic and securing the scene, freeing first responders' time to do their job of saving lives.

head:

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, pursuant to the Architects Act the Alberta Association of Architects annual report 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Physical Therapy Profession Act the College of Physical Therapists of Alberta 2004-2005 and 2005-2006 annual reports; pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Combined Laboratory and X-Ray Technologists 2006 annual report and the Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic & Therapeutic Technologists 2006 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call Orders of the Day, these comments are essentially addressed to the three House leaders. Last week there was very, very minor discussion with me with respect to the possibility of opposition officials being on the floor during the estimates. I've heard nothing further since that time. If this matter is to be dealt with, we have to find a process dealing with this prior to going into committee tomorrow. So I would encourage the three of you somehow to provide either written advice, written request, or something because there will have to be guidelines associated with this as well.

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Supportive Housing

Q10. Dr. Pannu:
How many supportive living facilities, including assisted living facilities, lodges, enhanced lodges, seniors' complexes, and group homes, and related number of beds were operating in Alberta for each of the fiscal years 2001-02 to 2005-06 and for April 1, 2006, to March 19, 2007, broken down by regional health authority and by whether the facility is owned/operated publicly, privately, or on a voluntary basis?

Canadian Wheat Board Barley Plebiscite

Q11. Mr. Eggen:

What is the total number of barley producers whose information was sent to the accounting firm KPMG for the purpose of assembling the list of eligible voters for the 2007 barley plebiscite of the Canadian Wheat Board?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to notice given last week I move that the remaining written questions on the Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 9.

[Motion carried]

Long-term Care Facilities

Q9. Mr. Eggen asked on behalf of Dr. Pannu that the following question be accepted.

How many long-term care facilities and beds were operating in Alberta on December 31 for the years 2001 to 2006 inclusive broken down by regional health authority and whether the facility is owned/operated publicly, privately, or on a voluntary basis, an example of which appears on page 19 of the report of the Auditor General on Seniors Care and Programs 2005?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased on behalf of government to accept this motion if we could have the consent of the House to an amendment. The amendment is really technical to make sure that the information we give aligns appropriately. So I would move that Written Question 9 be amended as follows: (a) by striking out "December 31" and substituting "March 31" so as to align with the fiscal year reporting year; (b) by adding "and service providers" after "whether the facility"; (c) by striking out "is" after "facility" and substituting "are"; and (d) by striking out "an example of which appears on page 19 of the Report of the Auditor General on Seniors Care and Programs 2005." The written question would then read as follows if amended:

How many long-term care facilities and beds were operating in Alberta on March 31 for the years 2001 to 2006 inclusive broken down by regional health authority and whether the facility and service providers are owned/operated publicly, privately, or on a voluntary basis?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason for the amendment, as I indicated, is simply so that we can provide the information in the manner in which we have it, i.e. by year-end, and to clearly indicate that the information isn't broken down with respect to whether a facility is owned publicly and operated privately. So the information would be provided based on whether the service provider is public, private, or not for profit. I understand that that is the type of information that the hon. member requesting this wants to have. So just to make sure that we're not agreeing to something that we can't actually provide, we bring forward the amendment to put it in place.

The reason for removing the reference to the Auditor General's report is that the Auditor General's report actually does report on the same information but on a different basis. So that there's no confusion as to the form in which the information would be provided, that piece would be removed. If the member bringing forward the motion is agreeable, we'd be happy to provide the information in the format that we can easily do.

The Speaker: We're on the amendment now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We certainly appreciate the attention to detail that this amendment suggests, and we thereby also certainly support the amendment as written.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to close debate.

Mr. Eggen: Just very, very briefly. This is very pertinent and useful information, that all members would be certainly welcome to use. We appreciate the amendment that actually clarifies and strengthens the original written question.

[Written Question 9 as amended carried]

Bill 203 Service Dogs Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona. We have a 60-minute time rule.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and move third reading for the debate of Bill 203, Service Dogs Act.

I appreciate the support of members on both sides of this Assembly thus far, and I hope that we will be able to see this bill pass at the conclusion of third reading today. The co-operation of all members demonstrates their commitment to quality of life for persons with disabilities. This is an issue which deals with the fundamental issue of ensuring that every Albertan can fully participate in the life of this province.

Throughout the debate we've heard many stories about potential benefit of service dogs, and those stories echo what I have heard from persons with disabilities while this bill was being debated. A number of people contacted me over the past couple of months to express their support, and there are a number of Albertans who believe that a service dog will help them or a loved one to improve their abilities, independence, and also personal safety.

People expressed their frustrations with the complaint process under the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, and I hope that Bill 203 remedies this concern that they've expressed. I believe that many individuals will be happy about the implementation of the bill. In the future there may even be questions about uses of other service animals, but this issue will need to be considered at that time if it's found that other animals could serve appropriate and useful roles. However, that's not the issue here at hand today.

Amendments were made in Committee of the Whole, and I appreciate those who brought forward comments with respect to those amendments and who encouraged those amendments to go forward. Following those amendments, I believe that Bill 203 will serve to broaden the participation of Albertans with disabilities into the life of this province. It's an important priority for the government. It's by developing policies that reflect the varied needs of persons with disabilities that we will improve the quality of life for Albertans.

Bill 203 will also lay out the ground rules for those Albertans who currently have service dogs and wish to seek identification for their dog. This act makes it clear that only certified dogs will receive identification. If at the present time there are service dogs that are fully trained, once this act comes into force, persons with disabilities will be able to receive an identification card for their dog.

Changes to the definition of disabled person which was in the act recognized that different forms of disability could be supported through the use of service dogs. One hon. member correctly noted that there are invisible disabilities that may not be noticeable but nonetheless require support. This change will also guarantee individuals with autism, for example, the opportunity to have a service dog. This may prevent those individuals from doing such things as bolting, running away from their supervisor or their parent and running in front of cars, for example, and perhaps help to control repetitive types of behaviour.

The amendment will also support those who need memory aid dogs. These dogs are trained to assist individuals with cognitive impairments, perhaps like brain injury or Alzheimer's. The dogs will memorize the often-travelled routes such as off to work or to home, and they can also detect unsafe situations such as a stove burner left on.

There was concern expressed by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview regarding what would occur if an individual were to lose their identification card. I want to assure the hon. member that we'll take those concerns into consideration when the regulations are developed. Currently there is a process. It's about a two-day turnaround if a guide dog's identification tags are lost. We will attempt to even improve on that rapid turnaround, but the department is to be commended for that quick turnaround in cases where certification and identification tags are lost.

On the topic of developing regulations, I want to briefly mention that the proclamation date on the bill is January 1, 2009. This should be a sufficient period to bring regulations into place that will balance the needs of service dog owners and the need to maintain public confidence in that certification process. It provides about 18 months from now for the stakeholders to communicate to Albertans the uses of service dogs and the treatment for service dogs and the rights available to the owners of those service dogs. I expect that the government will take an important role in this communication process and will seek help from the community to move that forward.

The importance of educating the public about service dogs was very clear at second reading and also the committee debates. The need to educate the general public and increase awareness is crucial. If that does not happen, there will be difficulties in gaining public acceptance of service dogs. There'll also be challenges with public understanding around the access and legal rights of an individual to be accompanied by that service dog. Individuals with service dogs have stated that there's a general lack of understanding about service dogs, and that further underlines the need for more education. That said, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Albertans are understanding of the varied needs of persons with disabilities, but by being informed, they will be able to understand better the role of service dogs and will be accepting of the rights accorded to those individuals who use service dogs.

Mr. Speaker, I'm optimistic that the provisions of Bill 203 can be implemented in a manner that will benefit the users of service dogs and also the general public. There's a very good model in place through the Blind Persons' Rights Act with regard to identification cards used by blind persons for their guide dogs, and I think this model can be adopted by the Service Dogs Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I close, I would like to recognize the staff support that I have received from the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. Certainly, the full support of the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports has been important. In addition, Reagan McCullough, the assistant deputy minister, disability supports division; Susan Bieganeck, Barbara Adamson, and Joann Blais through legislative services; Laurel Wierstra, the program development person for the people with disability initiative; Mark Nicoll, through the office of disability issues; and also Diane Bergeron, who works with the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

I'm very pleased to have sponsored this bill, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. This is a good piece of legislation which will enable Albertans with disabilities to participate fully in the social, economic, and cultural life of this province, making this province a more inclusive place to live, something that each and every member of this Assembly feels is important and wishes to support, I believe.

I thank all members for their support. I would ask that you continue in your support and see this bill through to the end of third reading and into legislation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 203, Service Dogs Act. This bill prohibits discriminatory practices towards individuals with disabilities and trainers who are accompanied by a service dog, establishes an identification process for service dogs, and creates fines for offenders of the act. I commend the Member for Strathcona for introducing this bill. I'm definitely supporting this bill.

Some shops, restaurants, and other businesses sometimes object to assistance dogs being brought onto the premises. This bill, particularly, is intended to bring greater autonomy to individuals with physical disabilities and to facilitate their social integration by prohibiting discriminatory behaviour against anyone using or training a service dog. Service dogs are trained to assist people who have a wide variety of mobility impairment and other hidden disabilities such as seizures, psychiatric disorders, life-threatening medical problems, or chronic pain. These dogs provide services to disabled individuals, helping them function with a greater self-sufficiency, prevent injuries, and summon help in a crisis.

A 2001 Stats Canada survey, the most recent available, Mr. Speaker, indicated that over half of Canadians with disabilities require service devices to help manage their disabilities and make their life easier. Service dogs can be one of those critical aids. Over half of adults with disabilities who require aids are working-age adults, while seniors make up a large proportion of individuals requiring service aids.

Alberta Liberals oppose discriminatory practices towards any group and fully support increasing accessibility to Albertans with disabilities. Every Albertan should have the ability to work, learn, and play to their fullest potential in our province. The Alberta Liberals fully support strong, effective disability accessibility legislation that would provide a greater level of independence, of enhanced quality of life.

The penalties for violating the act seem quite low. Section 1 in this bill, Mr. Speaker, provides definitions required to interpret the act. This act applies to individuals with physical disabilities excluding blindness or visual impairment who would require a service dog, which is good. Service dogs are required to have an identification card, and section 2 of this act does not have authority over the Blind Persons' Rights Act.

Section 3 defines the types of behaviour considered discriminatory and subject to the fines. Anyone who provides services, goods, facilities, or accommodations to the public cannot refuse to provide their services to a disabled person simply because the person is accompanied by a service dog. It clarifies that the act does not entitle a disabled person or a certified dog trainer to any right beyond being accommodated by a service dog. This act, Mr. Speaker, only applies if the disabled person and the dog trainer control the behaviour of the service dog.

Section 4, Mr. Speaker, outlines the requirement for a disabled person to obtain an identification card for the service dog as proof that the service dog qualifies under this act.

This bill allows the minister to make regulations outlining the qualifications for service dogs, establishes a fine of up to $3,000 for individuals who exhibit discriminatory behaviour, establishes a fine of up to $300 for individuals who pretend to be disabled in order to benefit from the act, and also amends the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to include service dogs. This bill also, in section 8, repeals chapter 7, the Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act. This bill comes into force on January 1, 2009, as the hon. Member for Strathcona just said, which is quite sufficient time.

I urge all the members of this House to support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege to have in the public gallery three individuals with whom I've spoken from time to time, some of them more often than others, and several times during the development of this bill they've had input. I believe they'll also be available to help in the development of the regulations as we move forward over the next 18 months. They're up in the gallery, as I've said, and I'd like the members present to acknowledge these three folks: first of all, Larry Pempeit, who is the director of community development for CPA – and he's seated in the middle of the three gentlemen on the end there – and also Tom Craig and Edgar Jackson. I appreciate their input and their support and their help.

They're active members of the community, and I thank you for your contributions to the community. I'd ask all members to please acknowledge them with a warm welcome.

Bill 203
Service Dogs Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise in full support of this excellent piece of legislation brought forward by my colleague the hon. Member for Strathcona. Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, prohibits discrimination towards a person with a disability who is accompanied by a qualified service dog that has an identification card issued by the minister.

This act offers new protections to service dog teams in addition to those afforded under the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. This act reflects the values of Albertans. It says that it is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and as a matter of public policy that all persons are equal in: dignity, rights and responsibilities without regard to race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income or family status. These values guide the laws and policies of this province. Albertans can file complaints with the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission if they feel they've been discriminated against.

The Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act currently protects individuals with a disability who rely on a guide dog for assistance in addition to the protection of the Blind Persons' Rights Act. Bill 203 adds reliance on a service dog to the definition of a physical disability in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, offering additional protection to a person with a service dog. In Alberta employers, landlords, tenants, and service providers are expected to make reasonable efforts to accommodate individuals with disabilities unless it would cause undue hardship. Well-trained service dogs are discreet and can be easily accommodated. They do not cause hardship.

The HRCMA employs the preferred method of restorative justice rather than punitive justice. It's important that punitive antidiscrimination legislation does not lead to the weakening of human rights legislation. However, punitive measures are appropriate sometimes when there is discrimination against a person with a disability using a service dog. Bill 203 defines two offences: treating a person with a service dog any differently than any other member of the public and failing to return a service dog identification card issued by the minister or claiming to be a disabled person to obtain benefits that this act offers. Enacting these offences serves the purpose of articulating a shared social value that is essential to the social order: that there should not be discrimination against a person with a disability.

This bill enshrines in law what is already accepted by society as basic etiquette and morally proper. Protecting the basic human rights of people with disabilities is simply the right thing to do. This value is of sufficient importance that it justifies the involvement of the police, Crown prosecutors, and other resources required to enforce this act. The use of punitive measures to punish persons who discriminate against persons with disabilities is not new. The offences and fines defined in the Service Dogs Act parallel those set out for the use of guide dogs in the Blind Persons' Rights Act.

The Service Dogs Act is complementary to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act and the Blind Persons' Rights Act. This bill is an excellent piece of legislation. I'd be happy to join my colleagues to vote in favour of this act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take great pleasure in having the opportunity to speak to Bill 203 here this afternoon. I didn't actually have a chance thus far to have my two cents' worth in regard to Bill 203, and certainly I was looking forward to the opportunity.

I noted that the hon. Member for Strathcona mentioned quite a number of interested parties who assisted him with the drafting of this bill, one of them being a person that I, in fact, consulted with as well, Diane Bergeron, who is a resident of Edmonton-Calder. Her main concerns that were expressed and brought forward to me seem to be well addressed in Bill 203 to the extent that satisfied both of us.

Her main concern was that persons with visual disabilities fought long and hard to have their service dogs welcome and legally protected to serve them in all parts of our society, so by moving to extend that franchise to other persons, her first and main concern, which reflected persons with visual impairment across this province, was that, you know, the standard of training and obedience by the dogs would in fact be maintained. Of course, even now we don't see an entirely full acceptance of service dogs in our society. Perhaps we can protect persons legally, but I only have to think back as far as the problems associated with taxis still. Diane and others could attest to this, that there's this ongoing problem with getting service dogs accepted by the taxi industry, at least by individuals.

So my point is, Mr. Speaker, that while the persons with visual impairment fought long and hard for this and they're welcoming to extend that franchise to people with other requirements for service dogs, they just want to make sure that the integrity of the system, especially in regard to dog obedience and training, is maintained. I think that that's something that we will watch for, Ms Bergeron and myself and hundreds of others out there undoubtedly, to ensure that this is enshrined in the regulations. I'm glad to see and to hear that this bill is due to be proclaimed in 2009, so that gives us lots of opportunity to ensure that these concerns are in fact met.

So, again, working with the blind persons' amendment act, it is important that this Bill 203 synchronizes with those provisions, and I seem to think that it does to the best of my analysis. The whole notion of Bill 203 that I like the most is that it's extending the capacity of using service dogs to assist persons with disabilities in the broadest possible way, still hopefully maintaining a certain standard of training. You know, this is always important. Any time that we have some measure of equality being entered into our society through legislation, this is something to celebrate, and once we acknowledge the extent to which people can benefit through the acquisition and use of service dogs to our society, I think it's just one small step closer to a sense of social justice and equality to which we all should aspire.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to join in on third reading of the Service Dogs Act, Bill 203, as brought forward by my hon. colleague from Strathcona. I have read through the bill, and I'm pleased to add my support to it. I do that because I know from having worked in this area for a number of years how critically important this issue is and how much anticipation there is that we will resolve some significant issues with the introduction, passage, and ultimately assent to this particular bill. Bill 203, as we've heard, will in fact create a new act to help ensure that persons with disabilities have the legal right to be accompanied by an accredited service dog in all areas that are normally open to the general public and that they will be able to do so free of discrimination.

This particular bill contains some important provisions that relate to the certification process of a service dog and to the use of ID cards, identification cards, to prove that the particular person with a disability has, in fact, the legal right to be accompanied by a particular service dog into a particular public place. That having been said, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 was amended under section 1(c) to now read: "service dog' means a dog trained as a guide for a disabled person and having the qualifications prescribed by the regulations."

So what does this amendment do, and what does this all mean? Well, first of all, this particular amendment clarifies the regulations. Secondly, it also clarifies the certification process regarding service dogs. Thirdly, it clarifies the identification that is to be used and issued to a person with a disability who is dependent upon his or her service dog.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment also strengthens the definition of a service dog. Succinctly put, Bill 203 will be consistent with the approach that we took a few years ago with the Blind Persons' Rights Act. I recall, having the authority as minister responsible for that act at the time, being deeply involved in discussions with the CNIB. Bill McKeown, Ellie Shuster, of course Diane Bergeron, and a number of others who were very passionate about this brought forward very important points that we could then crystallize into a properly constructed bill, and I think the hon. Member for Strathcona has done precisely the same thing here. That similar process of public input has been observed, and I congratulate him for it.

The net result will be an act that has simplified language, that helps to ensure that the certification process will be described in the regulations in a way that's understandable by all and ensure that it broadens the range of people with disabilities who will be able to access public places while at the same time narrowing the qualification criteria for the particular dogs.

A few comments about service dog training are warranted because I know that during the committee stage of debate on this bill some concerns were raised regarding the tests and the testing procedures for certification of these service dogs. One concern, for example, was the ability to have a service dog, that particular point being contingent upon the dog being certified through a formally accredited process, a complicated and difficult process, I should stress, that would have to be gone through. On the matter of the training process it's also one that is contemplated to be rather lengthy and will be going to limit the number of individuals who would pursue this route. I would only say that there's always a danger of making things a little too complicated and too onerous, but the intention is that it be thorough. That's what is being strived for here.

Another concern that was raised was with respect to having good standards, and I want to just emphasize that good standards will be those set out by the Assistance Dogs International, or ADI, group. The Western Guide and Assistance Dog Society is currently being accredited to train service dogs. It's a five-year process, as we know, where trainers must meet certain standards related to dog handling, to dog selection, and to compliance with relevant laws. Now, since the ADI is an internationally recognized service for training dogs, as an organization I mean, the regulations that come out of this act will reflect those that are similar to the ADI standards.

Another important concern that was raised was with respect to the potential of individuals not having ID but actually using a service dog, and of course there will be a need to consider how to grandfather in service dogs that are currently in use but don't have the specific training or the certification. I know that's a significant concern, and that will be ironed out.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there's the issue of penalties. Yes, there will be penalties in place for those who pass off an untrained or uncertified dog as a service dog or, at least, attempt to do so.

I want to come back quickly to the issue of ID cards. This is at the heart of the success for this particular bill, in my view. The ID that persons with disabilities will be issued will provide service dog owners with a card that specifically recognizes their dog as having completed the necessary training to be the service dog we're talking about here. Service dogs will be trained. They will be tested on how to handle the responsibility of accompanying their handlers into various situations and various environments, and they will only earn the title of service dog, certified service dog, if certain standards are met.

Now, once all of that has been done and accomplished, the ID card will provide proof that service dogs have been carefully trained to accompany their owners onto buses, into stores, into washrooms, and into other public areas such as those. Having this card will prove that a service dog is required, and it will allow the owner to produce the ID when questioned about his or her service dog. That ID process will protect Albertans from being disrupted by uncertified dogs. We should also note that dog owners who do not have certified dogs will not be subject to the same accessibility as persons with disabilities who do possess the government-issued ID card.

So in wrapping up my comments here, Mr. Speaker, under the Blind Persons' Rights Act blind persons are able to apply to the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports for a specific identification that displays their picture and the government of Alberta official symbol. A similar process will be allowed here. The ID card for persons with disabilities who are accompanied by a service dog will also be issued by the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports, and it will likely include some of the same elements, in this particular case a picture of the service dog, a picture of the owner, and of course some accredited official government of Alberta symbol.

In conclusion, I will just say that providing access to all public places to persons with disabilities along with their accredited and trained service dogs will allow the owners to continue to receive the necessary supports provided by their service dog throughout their daily lives, whether it is in their own home or in a public place. It's good, it's fair, and it's the right thing to do. The owners will be able to produce their identification cards in instances where their access perhaps might be questioned, which will provide confidence to others and particularly to the person with disabilities that their service dog cannot be denied the right to accompany them into those public places. Providing proof that a service dog has been appropriately trained will also give peace of mind to the individual requesting the proof of an ID card.

So I applaud the direction of Bill 203. I again congratulate the hon. Member for Strathcona and the community that requires this specific service through these accredited service dogs for working together and bringing this issue into our Legislature.

With that, I am pleased to add my support, and I thank you for the gesture of time, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've previously indicated both in second reading and in Committee of the Whole my support for Bill 203 and my support for the Member for Strathcona. A question has arisen in my mind today, and it's probably the discussions that we've had with regard to inflation and affordable housing. Within the context of Bill 203 is there any provision for government subsidies to support owners of service dogs? The Member for Strathcona has noted how expensive the training and receiving the qualifications for the dogs is, and then of course there's the daily maintenance, the feeding of the dogs, the shots, and the vet bills that are all part of being a responsible pet owner.

The onset of a disability can be both very traumatic and very expensive. I detailed the circumstances of the young lady at the University of Calgary who I worked with who had the doubly disastrous circumstance of first being rear-ended by a truck and then suffering an industrial accident, which damaged both her spine, initially, and then her hand and required the use of a dog. She's had great difficulties getting subsidies for rent, subsidies to recognize her disability. It's thanks to the compassion of her landlord that rents her the basement suite – she also does limited maintenance responsibilities and obviously keeps an eye out on the house – that she's able to live in the community and able to access the University of Calgary.

I spoke in second reading again of my support. I recognized in Committee of the Whole my appreciation for the Member for Strathcona's amendments, thus strengthening his bill. If there is any time remaining, I would appreciate the member's response, clarification, or push towards providing government subsidies for the individuals who need the support of their service dogs, to make sure those service dogs are in place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by West Yellowhead.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise for third reading in support of Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, put forth by the hon. Member for Strathcona. I'm pleased that he has seen his way to guide this legislation through the House in a most expeditious manner. This is truly a progressive piece of legislation that aims to improve the quality of life for Albertans with disabilities, particularly those who choose to utilize the talents of highly specialized and certified service dogs.

During the course of discussion on Bill 203 this Assembly has heard a number of touching stories describing individuals with disabilities who have enjoyed an enhanced quality of life as a result of using service dogs. Service dogs have helped their owners to be valuable contributors to the workforce and to society as a whole and, I might add, perhaps equally importantly, to enhance their confidence, their safety, and their enjoyment of life. Albertans with disabilities are certainly a resilient community, Mr. Speaker, and have proven that when coping with serious problems like epilepsy or paralysis or dealing with visual, hearing, or speech challenges, there are solutions that can aid them in becoming all that they can be in the workforce, in their communities, and certainly in their personal lives.

Mr. Speaker, employers sometimes are reluctant to employ anyone with a disability because of concerns that they may be an increased health or safety hazard either to themselves or to their fellow workers on the job. I would suggest that this bill bolsters members of the Alberta disabled community who already have a service dog and also have viable skills that they can offer to the workforce. By empowering these individuals with a service dog, we are certainly assisting them to maximize their potential and, hopefully, to improve their quality of life.

The employment rate of people with disabilities in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, I know has risen from 49.4 per cent in 1999 to 54.4 per cent in 2004. This is certainly progress, but there is still much work to be done. It is to be hoped that this bill will help us to improve on those numbers for the mutual benefit of our disabled community and our workforce.

Of course, there will be the necessity of making accommodation to those with disabilities when it's necessary. In reality, we already have accommodations that are required when hiring individuals with various detriments, and service dogs or disabilities should be no different. They are not great accommodations that are required. They should be seen as a small part of encouraging inclusion in the workforce. Job accommodations are, as I said, not usually intrusive. They can be as simple as rearrangement of equipment or flexible scheduling, and it's apparent that supporting any individual with a service dog is just as manageable as other accommodations.

What is very positive about this bill and its amendments is that it will allow and help the empowerment of people with disabilities by assisting them to more fully utilize their skills and their abilities.

I'm pleased to offer my support to the hon. Member for Strathcona. He has facilitated action on a very important bill for a special segment of our society, and I encourage the support of all members of the House for this bill on third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to rise today and join in the discussion on Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, in third reading. Bill 203 will legally recognize other service dogs and extend to persons with disabilities the same protection afforded under the Blind Persons' Rights Act.

There has been significant discussion about service dogs. These animals are very important and mean a great deal to those whom they assist. A dog is considered a service dog if the animal is used by a person with a disability to avoid hazards or otherwise compensate for disabilities. The dog must be well behaved and under control. Business owners and other representatives of public accommodations have the right to exclude any dog that displays aggressive behaviour or is out of control. They may also exclude any dog whose behaviour disrupts the provision of goods and services such as a barking dog in a movie theatre.

These service dogs are not pets. They are to act as well-trained assistants to those who need their special abilities. They gain this special status through extensive training. The training for guide dogs is defined in the Blind Persons' Rights Act. For a dog to become a guide dog, a definition in the Blind Persons' Rights Act, they have to be trained by a registered member of Assistance Dogs International.

In response to a formal public review process, the Alberta government introduced Bill 4, the Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act, 2004, on February 18, 2004. According to section 6 of the act an identification card is "proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the blind person and that person's guide dog identified in it are qualified for the purposes of this Act." The well-trained dogs are guaranteed the right to be able to assist their owners by accompanying them to various locations.

The Blind Persons' Rights Act is only relative to guide dogs that assist people with vision impairment. Guide dogs for vision impairment are well known and quite commonly accepted within our society, providing such assistance as obstacle avoidance, signal changes in elevators, and locating objects on command. The Blind Persons' Rights Act excludes mentioning the service dog, and that assists individuals with other disabilities, such as people who are suffering from limited mobility.

There is much more that service dogs can provide to those suffering from disabilities other than from vision impairment. The role that service dogs play for those in need of assistance varies from the role of guide dogs. It is important to understand these variances in order to see just how helpful service dogs are to people with disabilities. People suffering from hearing disabilities are able to use service dogs to alert those in need of a sound inside the home, such as a doorbell or a knock on the front door, or away from the home, such as a vehicle honking.

Service dogs are able to help those with mobility issues as well in accomplishing a number of different tasks. Some of these tasks include basic tasks that accomplish such actions as fetching a wheelchair or bringing in groceries, pawing or nose-nudging, basic tasks such as closing or opening drawers and removing shoes and socks, bracing based tasks such as steadying their partner while getting out of a bathtub.

While there are many tasks available for service dogs to assist those who suffer from mobility issues, there are dogs trained to handle other cases of impairment. A service dog can learn a number of different tasks to help medical crises. They include bringing medication to ailing persons, bringing the phone to reach the proper assistance, calling 911 or the crisis line on the K-9 rescue phone, and carrying pertinent medical information for their partner.

Treatments related to psychiatric assistance for sufferers with aspects of psychiatric disabilities are numerous. For example, the service dog could provide assistance for people to cope with medical side effects, such as balancing them. Also, they can help those suffering sudden waves of terror, chest pains, respiratory distress caused by severe pain attacks by fetching antidote medication to alleviate the symptoms.

Service dogs play an integral role for many people who might otherwise be hindered in their day-to-day living. Bill 203 will ensure that people with disabilities will be allowed unrestricted access to public places in the use of a service dog. The bill will allow all Albertans who rely on service dogs to have the opportunity to participate fully in the social, economic, and cultural life of our province. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for introducing the Service Dogs Act, and I would like to give my support to Bill 203.

Thank you.

3:20

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, you have 10 minutes.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to stand up and address Bill 203 in third reading as I did speak to it in second reading. I was hoping there would be more amendments to come forward. For that reason, I am standing up to speak against this bill in its current state, and I'll explain a few reasons why. The idea is an excellent idea. The necessity is there to protect those people with service dogs, but the importance of human rights has been mentioned and read in a long list by the hon.

Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, that listed off those rights that we need to engage and protect the good citizens of the province here, which I agree with. But the problem under law is that whenever you start to make a list, it's never inclusive. It's exclusive. That's who I want to address this afternoon: a couple of groups that have become excluded.

The purpose of good legislation, which I don't feel this is – people got up and said: it's excellent legislation; it's good legislation; the necessity is there. But good legislation is where we actually protect our freedoms, not take them away, and we protect those who can't protect themselves. There are two areas that we fail to protect: a smaller minority group than those, and perhaps it's a larger group. I don't know the statistics on it. But there is this fear of dogs, cynophobia. If someone – perhaps their child has even been killed by a dog attack or they've lost one or they've had one personally themselves – has a severe fear, cynophobia, there's no protection here for those types of individuals who may be running a business, who may be a friend of a person who runs a business. They might have a sign up there for no dogs for very good reasons.

The other thing that's not on the list is equality for those people with allergies. We have section 4 that talks, "This section does not apply if the disabled person does not control the behaviour of the service dog," which is an excellent point that makes this better legislation. But there's no exception for those groups of individuals that have a fear of dogs or have allergies to dogs. Somehow I feel that that needs to be balanced and taken into view on this. I would encourage the good Member for Strathcona – I spoke to it, and I was hoping that he would bring that forward in an amendment. I guess I should've spoken to him a little more on the side.

But because of those two items that are being missed on this, I really feel that we need to reconsider and look at this. A more excellent way or a more tolerable society is one that is educated and one that is knowledgeable and understands the situation. That's one area where we definitely want to go. We want Albertans to be more educated and understand the value of service dogs, the huge improvement in quality of life that an individual can achieve because of the use of a service dog, that we still want to protect those who can't protect themselves. This legislation missed that important aspect.

So, for that reason, I can't support it in its current state, but I hope that some amendments come forward, if not at this time then at a time in the future, that will protect those people who need protecting from the use of service dogs in whatever circumstance that may be. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any others? Hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, did you want to speak?

Mr. Rogers: Sure.

The Acting Speaker: You're recognized.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to contribute to third reading debate of Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. I'm happy to see this private member's bill receive so much support and that it's reached this point. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for his hard work on this bill. Because of his arduous efforts, tenacity, many individuals across Alberta will have an enhanced quality of life brought about by a clarification and solidification of their rights.

Mr. Speaker, the Service Dogs Act aims to solidify the rights of individuals with disabilities to be accompanied by a certified service dog in all areas open to the public without facing any discrimination.

This is a clear and noble goal which I fully support. The current situation, of course, is that the rights of individuals with service dogs are not as clear as they should be. Because of the lack of clarity regarding their rights, disabled individuals with service dogs have been wrongfully denied service or access to areas where they should've been allowed to go. Bill 203 will go a long ways to rectifying this situation.

Mr. Speaker, with any sort of new legislation it is of utmost importance to properly inform citizens and stakeholders of changes that may affect them. They must know and be comfortable with the new laws in order to abide by them. In order for the Service Dogs Act to have a smooth transition phase and a positive reaction by the public, all individuals affected by the act will have to be educated on this new legislation. It will be up to the department, nonprofit organizations, and support groups to get the word out and clearly inform the public about the rights of individuals who utilize service dogs.

Mr. Speaker, while this is a very straightforward act, its successful implementation will depend on strong communications with stakeholders and the public. I would like to briefly go through a few of the issues which still need to be thoroughly communicated.

It is important to know what a service dog is. People must be informed that service dogs, like guide dogs, are not regular pets, and therefore they cannot be treated as common dogs. They shouldn't be petted. Service dogs have specific functions and, depending on who they're assisting, will have specific qualifications, which they will have worked very hard to master during their training. Because of the wide range of persons with disabilities included within the scope of this act, these dogs will be trained to meet all kinds of special needs. Some will assist individuals with mobility, seizure detection, access, autism, and so on.

Service dogs have a job, Mr. Speaker. That job is to assist individuals with disabilities. As with individuals who are on the job, they do not have time to socialize and play. There is a time for play but not when a service dog is assisting a person with disability.

Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and the department to inform individuals about appropriate behaviour around service dogs. A lot of hard work and money goes into the proper training of a service dog. Therefore, it will be imperative to treat a service dog as it is meant to be treated.

Mr. Speaker, if Albertans can appreciate exactly what service dogs are used for, they will be understanding and more than willing to accommodate individuals with service dogs. At the current time most people are not aware of the myriad of things service dogs can be used for and how they positively impact the lives of individuals with disabilities.

It's also important for Albertans to know who is legally able to have a service dog and how to identify them. An identification card for a service dog and the individual using it will demonstrate to the public who is legally allowed to use the dog, but first they must be able to recognize this identification. Once identification is made, Mr. Speaker, rights cannot and will not be challenged.

Third, we want the quality of life of all Albertans to be enhanced with Bill 203. This being the case, it is important that everyone be educated as to the kind of thorough training service dogs have before they can be certified. For those who are perhaps a little uncomfortable with dogs, it would be extremely reassuring to know that in order for a service dog to become certified, it would have gone through an intensive training process to meet very high standards set by the Assistance Dogs International group. Mr. Speaker, Albertans will know that when they see the proper identification on a service dog, they can be assured that dog is fully trained according to regulation and is not – I repeat not – a threat to their security.

Also, Mr. Speaker, there is currently some level of confusion about where individuals with service dogs are legally able to go. Stakeholders will have to be aware that persons with disabilities accompanied by service dogs are able and fully entitled to go wherever all Albertans go, no questions asked. As soon as this is widely known, a large barrier will be removed for people with disabilities who use service dogs. I think that this is what we are all trying to achieve.

Finally, but not . . .

3:30

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allocated for debate has now run out.

The hon. Member for Strathcona to close debate.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been good to hear of the support forthcoming from members. A couple of questions were raised, and I think during previous debate and when we talked in committee, a few of these things came up and were commented on.

Mr. Speaker, in general and in conclusion, the intent of Bill 203 to provide protection for persons who use service dogs parallels the Blind Persons' Rights Act. Under that act some of these challenges have been apparent, and they have been dealt with in community and through the work of the department. The department is to be commended for doing things like helping out in situations where the person that has a dog had some extraordinary costs associated – and the odd time that does happen – and they were supported in those circumstances.

On accommodation for other persons who have problems with dogs, I found the owners of seeing eye dogs, guide dogs, to be very good at working with people they come across. If there are legitimate issues, they're always very accommodating as well because these people know what it's like not to be accommodated. Unfortunately, they have suffered many acts of discrimination as simple, from the rest of our perspective, as maybe not even having access to a cab when they want it. For us that's not a problem; there's another one that we can hail in a moment or two. But for persons with disabilities that's a real challenge.

So, Mr. Speaker, I thank those members who have spoken in support of the bill, and on behalf of the three gentlemen I introduced earlier – Larry and Tom and Edgar – and other members of the community whom they're here today representing, I would ask all members to support Bill 203, Service Dogs Act.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a third time]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 205
Environmental Protection and Enhancement
(Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007

[Debate adjourned April 30: Mr. Rogers speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to pick up where we left off at the end of the last debate. I was referring at that time to the Al-Pac/Gulf Surmont project, which brought Gulf Canada Resources and Alberta-Pacific Forest Industries together in developing natural resources.

These companies, Mr. Speaker, agreed to share access roads, salvage the timber cut for the petroleum operation, and time their reclamation efforts to have maximum effect so as to have minimum impact on the land. This co-operation reduced both costs and ecological impacts. A 47 per cent savings in roads and $3 million in total integrated services were saved by the combined actions of these two companies.

Mr. Speaker, the need to preserve our forests is greater when most scientists agree that man-made carbon dioxide is contributing to global warming. Our forests are natural sponges for reducing carbon dioxide. Oil and gas companies are working to develop technologies that reduce the amount and duration of their carbon dioxide output.

Our forests have a deep spiritual significance to the aboriginal peoples. Any effort to preserve forests should draw on the traditional culture and vast knowledge of our aboriginal communities. Bill 205 could go a long way in helping the aboriginal voice be heard when reclamation regulations are made.

Mr. Speaker, many Albertans enjoy activities in our forests: walking, biking, hunting, and camping, just to name a few. Having commercial activity in our forests helps to make them more accessible to all Albertans. I would encourage all members to vote in favour of this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm also very pleased to contribute to the debate on Bill 205, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Act, 2007, sponsored by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. This government has committed in many ways to strengthening Alberta's communities. We hope to make our communities more prosperous, more safe, and more vibrant. We want to ensure that our communities are the best place in the world to live.

I want to discuss the impact that Bill 205 would have on Alberta's communities. First of all, a strong community requires a sound environment, a prosperous economy, and co-operation between businesses, families, and all levels of government. I support Bill 205 because I believe that it will strengthen Alberta's communities by helping to ensure an appropriate environmental and economic policy. I'm encouraged to see the co-operation between various stakeholders and government that has gone into this bill.

It is not possible to sustain a high quality of life without a healthy environment. We must implement prudent policy today so that the environment in Alberta will remain pristine for many generations to come. The government is developing an enhanced strategy for air and water, a land-use framework, and a comprehensive strategy for Alberta's energy and forestry resources.

Section 2(2) in Bill 205 will ensure that the committee appointed by the minister will review the regulations pertaining to the practices and criteria for conservation and reclamation of these lands as specified in the act. This way we will be enabled to continually pursue the use of best practices to protect and enhance lands that have been used and are being reclaimed. As our energy industry matures, there are more and more wells that dry up or are shut down and need to be reclaimed and from time to time a well is drilled that has no commercial value or viability or is dry, so this is a fairly common occurrence.

Taken together, these initiatives will ensure the responsible stewardship of our province's environment. Mandating that well site reclamation standards are reviewed at regular intervals will ensure that the latest technologies and standards are taken into consideration. We are making tremendous strides in technology which allows us to manage resources more prudently and minimize the impact that resource extraction has on the environment. Timely implementation of these advances will be invaluable in the efforts to maintain and enhance our environment. By protecting the environment, we can ensure that our communities remain healthy and vibrant places to live.

The energy and forestry industries employ tens of thousands of Albertans and contribute billions of dollars annually in taxes and royalties to the provincial treasury and support countless community projects. Creating a climate in which these important industries can succeed will ensure that our communities remain strong. Bill 205 will help to foster a climate of success by providing a forum where the energy and forestry industries can work together with government.

A reclamation review committee which meets consistently will provide both of these sectors with the opportunity to work together and to plan strategies in an integrated manner. Our communities thrive because of our co-operative spirit. Bill 205 continues with this great tradition of co-operation. The regular reviews will allow industry stakeholders to come together with government and the public to make decisions for the benefit of all Albertans. Each sector and individual brings their own unique perspective to this process. The review process will balance these perspectives.

So I want to strongly encourage my colleagues to consider supporting Bill 205. I believe that legislating regular reviews of well site reclamation will have a positive impact on our communities and, indeed, our province as a whole.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you want to participate in the debate?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, sir.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I welcome the opportunity to speak briefly on Bill 205. I find it interesting in several ways. Certainly, just because the scope of this bill is reasonably limited, I have no trouble supporting the bill, but on some of the details regarding this conservation and reclamation bill, potentially an act, I just perhaps require some clarification. You know, under the current Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and through conservation and reclamation regulations as they stand, any lands that have been excavated and mined have to be reclaimed and returned to their original environmental conditions anyway. So the regulations' main mandate: reclamation on a wide range of mining activities and forestry and ensuring that environmental contaminants are also removed.

This bill, in my mind – and perhaps I require some clarification here – seems to mandate that land reclamations done in areas specially designated as green areas in Alberta have to be overseen by a committee, I guess, that will review these special reclamations every five years. Reclamations under the act are conducted through what's considered to be best forestry practices, recommending changes to the regulations for the implementation of best practices, that the committee reports in a timely manner, and so forth. Certainly, you know, with that specific provision, these designated green areas getting some more timely attention in regard to land reclamation, I can't not support that, but I'm looking to see what limits these green areas and how we determine which areas are actually requiring or getting this special attention. That's kind of some further explanation I wouldn't mind from the hon. member who has brought this forward.

You know, this is providing an additional level of oversight, which is good, for land reclamations. My only concern and, perhaps, suggestion would be that this committee should be as much as possible staffed with independent expertise that can objectively assess the progress being made in regard to land reclamation here in the province. So this is part of, I guess, potentially a larger land-use strategy, that we need so desperately in this province.

We have to look no further than the enormous excavations and tailing ponds that exist in northeast Alberta in regard to the tar sands to just see how important it is that we move forward with a land-use strategy that looks at all parts of the province and not just certain designated green areas because, of course, who's to say that one part of the province is less deserving of a proper regulation oversight to land reclamation than another. If we in fact do determine winners and losers – some areas get special attention, and others are left to the whims of industry – then certainly we can know exactly what would happen to a place that is not receiving equal protection. We're left with a legacy of, undoubtedly, one of the world's largest excavation sites in northeast Alberta with the world's largest tailings ponds that haven't been reclaimed to any degree whatsoever.

So I just would hope that the attention that is being afforded by Bill 205, which I support wholeheartedly, might also extend to other industrial areas in our province that are sadly requiring reclamation in a timely and more thorough manner.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak in favour of Bill 205 the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007. I've got to commend the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing this forward. It's a thoughtful piece of legislation, something that makes us look at our obligations and responsibilities as members not only of society but also of this House.

Bill 205 will amend section 137 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to ensure that when well sites are being reclaimed, proper environmental and forest management procedures are considered. Effective management of Alberta's forests is vital to ensuring that our province's natural areas continue to prosper for future generations, and that's an important component that we must keep in mind as we go forward with this bill.

When a well site is no longer active, it is essential to properly address surface reclamation issues and any subsurface contamination that may arise. This is not a small concern given that there are more than 33,000 well sites in Alberta that are no longer in production and awaiting reclamation certificates, 162,000 active well sites that will ultimately require reclamation certificates at some point in the future, and there are approximately 15,000 new wells drilled every year.

Proper reclamation procedures will improve the health of Alberta's ecosystem and have a profound environmental impact on Albertans' lives. A young, actively growing forest functions as a carbon sink, removing more carbon dioxide from the atmosphere than it releases through respiration and decay. Maintaining the health of Alberta's 38 million hectares of forest is therefore beneficial from a climate change perspective.

Forests are also an essential component of the water cycle. Forests ensure that Alberta has clean water in sufficient quantities for aquatic habitat, safe drinking water for its people, and recreational opportunities for families. The vegetation in forests can absorb up to one-quarter of the total rainfall, which is then returned to the atmosphere through evaporation. The remainder of this water will filter into the soil to recharge the underground aquifers, rivers, streams, wetlands, and lakes during dry periods. In Alberta clean, abundant water flows from the forests of the Rocky Mountains to agricultural, municipal, industrial, residential, and recreational users.

Healthy forests offer a major economic benefit as well. With 21 million hectares of productive forest lands, forestry in Alberta is the third-largest industry. Over $616 million in forest products is produced here every single year, about 5 per cent of the annual value of manufacturing shipments. Many Albertans, especially those in rural communities, rely on the forests for their livelihoods, and other Albertans also benefit from tourism to our forests. In my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod the forests of the Crowsnest Pass region draw people seeking one of the best wildlife watching and fishing areas in Canada. Enjoying the fresh mountain air at a campsite or on a hiking trail is an experience not soon forgotten by individuals, by couples, or by families. That is why it is essential that we keep our forests in pristine condition.

Alberta's forests are a renewable resource that will keep growing as long as sustainable stewardship practices are followed. Allowing Albertans to continue to enjoy the environment and the economic benefits that our forests offer will require an adequate forest management plan that includes the very best well site reclamation procedures.

Bill 205 will ensure that our stewardship practices are reviewed and renewed on a regular basis. There must be an effective exit strategy for well sites that are no longer in production. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to support Bill 205.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007. I also wish to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing forward this opportunity to highlight the issue of well site reclamation.

Oil and gas activity is a driving force in our economy in terms of jobs, revenue, and great opportunity. However, petroleum is not our only natural resource. In addition to the wealth underneath Alberta, the surface of our province is covered by vast tracts of timber, lush grasslands, and fertile cropland. These are vital resources to our continued prosperity, and their responsible management is essential to our future economic and social well-being.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of Bill 205 is proposing to ensure the consideration of proper environmental and forest management procedures in the reclamation of well sites. Bill 205 attempts to improve environmental stewardship and resource management practices. Any measure designed to improve the interaction between human activity and nature and further protect the natural beauty of Alberta while encouraging responsible resource development is a good step to take.

Despite the fact that the proposals Bill 205 sets forth are desirable, I am concerned with the timing of its introduction. The Alberta government has always been committed to environmental stewardship and the responsible development of our resources. A major part of this commitment is the consideration of measures which will inspire better conservation practices and facilitate a positive relationship between the oil and gas industry and our province's natural environment. Such measures must be implemented after careful consideration of their expected impact.

Likewise, they must also be carefully reviewed after implementation to ensure that they have achieved their objectives. The rules that govern energy companies when reclaiming a well site were established between 1993 and 1995. Since then, a great deal has changed. Oil and gas activity has increased, even in areas of pristine wilderness. Reclamation of these well sites is a grave responsibility, not to be taken lightly. A complete restoration of the land to its former state is essential to preserving the environment and protecting other natural resources. The passage of more than a decade necessitates a change to the way this reclamation is regulated and carried out. There have been issues and concerns expressed from all sides regarding acceptable reclamation practices, and there is confusion as to what constitutes acceptable reclamation.

On the surface Bill 205 could facilitate necessary change. This is if we consider its proposals independently of what is already being undertaken. The departments of Energy and Environment are currently developing regulations concerning the implementation of improved well site reclamation processes.

Pros of the bill: positive environmental effects and positive economic effects. Cons of the bill: negatively impacts the development of the new regulations because the provisions of the bill are necessarily at cross-purposes with the new regulations. Developing new regulations takes a great deal of time, careful study, and consideration. One of the concerns is that this bill would legislate a review of regulations and reclamation every five years. It raises these questions: is this enough time to evaluate the effects that changes to existing practices may have? Might it hinder current redevelopment of regulations?

Alberta Sustainable Resource Development is in the process of developing a new industry directive to bring about revised reclamation standards for reforestation. This is excellent news as the issue of reforestation is one that is currently the subject of much discussion and even confusion at times amongst those in the oil and forest industries. I believe there is room to move forward in this area and a need to strengthen our existing regulatory framework to better facilitate the process of development and reclamation. The reviews mentioned will be concluded soon. No doubt the strengthened regulations and guidelines will be in place when necessary in the near future.

The impending changes have been conducted by prolonged and careful stakeholder consultation. Representatives from industry have worked with the government to reach realistic best practices acceptable to all parties concerned. Mr. Speaker, this has been a lengthy process and is nearing conclusion. We will soon see positive change in the way reclamation is conducted in Alberta. Careful evaluation of the effects of a new regulatory framework will result in a positive evolution of policies re natural resource development. As mentioned, the Department of Environment is currently moving forward with several initiatives that will address the objectives of Bill 205.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 205, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following: “Bill 205, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this is a hoist amendment. If members wish to participate, it's debatable.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm opposing this amendment. We have a new sort of institution in place, and that's an all-party policy committee. Rather than just simply pulling this and bringing it back six months from now, I supported the government member in proclaiming this particular Bill 205, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007. By putting it to committee instead of pulling it, the discussions could go on, the refinements could be made, and the shortcomings could be addressed.

I would much rather see this discussion taking place now because the necessity of reclamation is absolutely paramount, and putting it off another six months delays what has basically been put off by this government for years on end. The number of unclaimed wells – sorry; orphaned wells is the term I should be using – continues to grow while at the opposite end approvals for new drilling and exploration exponentially grow. There is no balance. What this Bill 205 attempted to do was provide some of that balance that is currently missing. Therefore, I would strongly speak against the hoisting of this bill and say: let's give the newly formed committees a chance to do their work, and let democracy take place.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also want to add my voice. I supported the bill in the first place and feel very strongly that it's a positive step in calling for review, and indeed it would be a very good first opportunity for our all-party committee to examine the issues and go forward.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to close debate with these following comments on Bill 205, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007. First of all, I'd like to thank the hon. Minister of Environment for taking a look at this act and saying that he's going to move forward right away in his department to bring it forward. I'd also like to thank the members from the AFPA and also from CAPP for sitting down with us and working this out as we started. I'd also like to thank all members that spoke on this bill to move it this far.

At this time I'd call for the question. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, as I indicated, this is a hoist amendment, and for those who are interested in reading more about it, I'd refer you to Beauchesne 668 and Marleau and Montpetit, pages 636 and 637. There's interesting reading therein.

Bill 207Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a combined sense of urgency, challenge, anticipation, and foreboding that I introduce Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, for second reading.

“Urgency” because the need for accountability is great, and the need for accessibility is acute, “challenge” because a year’s consultation across the province has convinced me there is consensus among Albertans to proceed, “anticipation” because I believe the objectives set out in this initiative are achievable, and “foreboding” as I remain to be convinced that the current government is committed to making child care a priority in the midst of other needs and pressures of growth.

I have spent time with my colleagues opposite in the House, the past and current ministers of Children’s Services. I appreciate them as fellow members and have no doubt of their personal compassion, nor of their intent to better the lot of children in this province. Yet I wonder if a government that hitches its wagon so tightly to the star of economic growth can imagine the cost of these blinkers to the youngest, most promising, and vulnerable among us.

I have said in this Assembly on more than one occasion that I believe children’s well-being is too important to become a football across the floor or a turf war between levels of government. I said in my Calgary town hall meeting a few weeks ago that I would rather be discussing these issues in a circle than across the imaginary two-sword length of bygone political battles. Our children are a sacred responsibility that links us all as human beings.

Two years ago I worked with my colleagues on all sides of the House on a bill to deal with a major threat to Alberta children and youth: crystal meth addiction. The results of that collaboration were gratifying. Bill 202 was passed unanimously into law.

Now it is my opportunity to initiate another private member’s bill for Alberta’s children. This is more ambitious than Bill 202, for this one involves targets and increased government transparency and accountability. Because no concrete government action has been undertaken in this vital area, I have chosen to take an initiative myself. I ask my colleagues on the government side to look at this not as a partisan strategy but as a statement in support of a very real need by Alberta’s children. Bill 207 has two distinct goals: to increase the number of high-quality child care spaces available across Alberta and to increase the level of government transparency and accountability regarding child care in Alberta.

Child care in Alberta, I would say, can be divided into three separate periods as follows. The 1970s to the early 1990s. During this period the Alberta government began to fund child care at rates beyond any other province in Canada, leading to rapid space creation, 200 per cent growth between 1977 and ’87. While some of this funding went towards nonprofit and municipally run child care, much of it went to for-profit child care as well as institutions such as day homes.

In the 1980s and early 1990s Alberta was the only province in Canada that had a vacancy rate in its formal care system, and care was generally affordable. Despite these successes provincial policy was criticized strongly due to inadequate monitoring, inconsistent approaches to service delivery, poor quality, and the perception that the provincial government valued profit-making more than the health and safety of children.

From the mid-1990s to 2004 is another period. By the mid-1990s the government’s approach to social programs had shifted towards neoconservatism, which emphasized retreat of the government from social issues and greater responsibility placed on individuals. During this period funding of spaces was cut, with more focus placed on subsidies. As a result, the number of spaces available declined rapidly, drastically, particularly those in nonprofit and municipal centres. While this shift has been justified through neoconservative rhetoric of empowerment and reducing dependence on government, in reality the drop in spaces has had a definite impact on child care in Alberta. Alberta is now the only province in which spaces have actually declined since the early 1990s. Many rural communities are without any formal child care and wait lists for care are growing all over this province.

The year 2005 until now is another period to look at. Recently child care in Alberta has shifted due to negotiations with the government of Canada relating to federal funding for child care. The province reached an agreement in principle with the federals on July 7, 2005, that would have seen the transfer of between $93 million and $153 million annually for child care provision. While the provincial government retained the right to support private care and stay-at-home parents, they did agree to follow QUAD principles, a departure from the previous lack of cohesive vision. The 2007-2008 budget has provided some increases to child care, but they are not as significant as what would have been there had the federal plan stayed in place.

Bill 207 has as its purpose the increase in accessibility and the accountability for “universal, affordable and high quality child care.”

The definitions. This section lays out the terms used in the act. The minister is defined under the Government Organization Act, and child care spaces are defined as “spaces available in licensed day care centres, approved family day homes and licensed out-of-school care centres.”

Ten-year action plan. This section instructs the minister to develop a 10-year action plan that should reasonably result in enough available child care spaces for not less than 30 per cent of children 12 years of age or younger. The bill does not specify what should be included in the plan but does require that it must be completed and made available to the public within 90 days of the coming into force of this act. This time period will allow a reasonable amount of time for government consultation and strategizing.

Ministerial review. At the end of the 10-year period the minister must conduct a review of the level of access to child care spaces that has been achieved in relation to the legislated target of 30 per cent access. At this time the minister will decide whether or not further government initiative is required. This review must be completed and made public no later than March 31, 2018.

This act will also require annual reporting of progress towards the target of 30 per cent access in the department's annual report. The act also requires that the government provide information on how many spaces are available based on age and type of setting as well as indicators of the affordability, quality, and accessibility of spaces. The bill also requires that the amount expended by the government on child care be reported. This information must be broken down by the child and family services regions so that the information about equality of access across the province is available.

Six, the public documents. This section clarifies what actions the minister can take to make documents public. If the Assembly is sitting, a document must be tabled, and if not, the document must be distributed to all members of the House and made available to the general public.

Before I go on, I would like to thank all of the stakeholders that we have consulted. Many individuals and associations throughout the province have contributed, and their feedback has been useful and helpful, and their co-operation and time has been generous for us.

The current situation in this province is that Alberta has regulated child care spaces for about 10 per cent of our children. Only Newfoundland and Saskatchewan have fewer. Quebec and Yukon can accommodate about 30 per cent of their children. Alberta is the only province where the number of daycare spaces dropped significantly between 1992 and 2004. During that same period the number of spaces country-wide more than doubled. In 2004 Alberta had Canada's lowest percentage of women with preschool children in the workforce. Many Alberta mothers simply can't return to work due to lack of child care options. If our participation had kept pace with Alberta, Alberta's economy would have 17,000 much-needed additional workers. If even half of these people decided to work, it would be hugely beneficial.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate on Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, 2007. The intent of this bill is to increase the accessibility of child care by establishing a 10-year target for the creation of new child care spaces in Alberta and requiring that there be enough child care spaces for at least 30 per cent of Albertans who are 12 years old or younger at the end of that prescribed time period.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 would also require the Minister of Children's Services to report in the department's annual report on the growing progress made on meeting the placement target over the course of that 10-year time frame and calls on the same minister to conduct a final review of the level of access to child care spaces in the province after this 10-year span.

I'd just like to refer the House to Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act, and what Bill 4 was intended to do. This act seeks to provide the framework needed to increase access to innovative quality child care programs and also ensures that the enforcement mechanisms are in place to protect children and give them the best start in life. Mr. Speaker, this shifts the licensing focus from the facility to the program and makes better use of spaces to increase the access to child care and promotes programs which respond to a child's specific needs. The bill also gives government the ability to create new licensing categories to promote innovation in child care and parental choice in the matter. Bill 4 is based on two years of consultation with parents, child care operators, and other interested Albertans. Bill 4 builds on our government's commitment to continue to support and create quality child care programs that meet the needs of today's families.

Mr. Speaker, I believe there are a number of overlaps between Bill 207 and Bill 4. Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act of 2007 thoroughly covers what Bill 207 proposes. Bill 4 proposes to increase child care accessibility by allowing the creation of new licensing categories. Operators will soon be able to make better use of existing spaces. Parents will be able to choose programs which suit their needs and lifestyles. The government must ensure that child care programs are safe and of the highest quality. Bill 4 provides for more effective monitoring to ensure that operators comply with the act.

Bill 207 calls for various reports on the progress of meeting the proposed child care space availability targets. The bill's focus on annual reporting is redundant since the government reports on the progress of child care through the annual reporting and business planning processes. Mr. Speaker, increased monitoring provides a more accurate picture of the level of care that is being offered within the increased spaces rather than simply reporting on the progress of increasing the availability.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for her continued advocacy for superior child care in Alberta. However, I assure her that this government is taking the appropriate steps to ensure that our children are receiving the best care by allowing parents flexibility while choosing which child care system works best for them and by ensuring that the highest standards of care are always upheld. Ensuring that parents have access to quality, affordable child care options is part of the Premier's plan to improve the quality of life for all Albertans. Due to the similar goals and provisions in Bill 4 and Bill 207, I cannot lend my support to the latter bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the continued debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To begin with, I just want to say that this is not a case of either/or, Bill 207 or Bill 4. This is a complementary situation in which the well-being of children is being addressed. We don't want to get into a circumstance of he said/she said when it comes to providing care for children.

I'm coming from the point of view, first off, of labelling myself in my most significant role as that of a grandfather. I am the proud grandfather of Kiran, who is three years old, and Rohan, who will be soon five months old. We are fortunate in that my daughter and her husband live in Calgary, and that gives us the opportunity to be a part of the children's growth and growing up.

In fact, so that my daughter could work in the second year of my first grandson's life, my wife provided the opportunity of daily care for my grandson, Kiran. That took stress off my daughter so that she could concentrate on her job, and it gave great delight and enjoyment for my wife to watch Kiran go through the various developmental stages. Of course, I'm prejudiced, but I think that he's a brilliant young man and that my wife and my daughter contributed, with my son-in-law and my son-in-law's parents and the extended family, to that brilliance.

But what I'm pointing out is that we were in that fortunate situation whereby we had the funding in place and where my daughter had opportunities for care other than that which she could provide at home. Again, my daughter and her husband's circumstance is such that if they wanted at this point to go after various daycare options, they have the money so that they could look into those programs. I know, for example, that my grandson Kiran will be participating in a preschool program in September. The family is looking forward to the socialization that that program will offer, but of course, you know, as grandparents and parents we always have reservations about the out-of-sight care. However, it's because we have that fortunate circumstance.

Now, with my second grandson, Rohan, being at a tender young age, the attachment to my daughter is out of love and out of necessity. Therefore, the possibility of daycare is not something that we would consider at this time. Again, it's not an economic decision because we have the financial support to provide a series of options. My daughter, Christina, when she was growing up and in high school and also through years of university, supported her tuition and her own individual pursuits by working in a series of daycare programs caring for children from age, you know, basically, weeks to older children, and that, no doubt, helped her in her preparations for motherhood. But, again, the point I'm making is that our family had the economic well-being to be able to make a series of choices.

My understanding and the reason for my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods putting forth Bill 207, Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, is to recognize the fact that for the majority of parents who desire or require the necessity of working outside of the home based on our booming economy, this would provide them with an increased number of spaces to take on that pursuit that they either absolutely need for financial reasons or for personal achievement reasons. Again, I want to stress that it's not an either/or circumstance, that both of these bills, 207 and 4, can work hand in hand to achieve the best for our children.

My understanding is that Alberta provides, basically, or there is a provision for about 10 per cent of the daycare spaces that are being sought. When we have an economy that is literally out of control and needs individuals, rather than working on bringing more temporary individuals into this province and increasing the pressures on affordable housing and government support, we need to recognize the qualifications of a number thoroughly trained, dedicated, and empower these individuals who are from Alberta to be able to make the choices they need in order to find daycare that not only provides a service of guarding the child but also looks at their developmental stages and takes into account the need to provide education.

Now, the government, to its credit, and the new children's minister have recognized that there is a desperate need for retaining staff. I appreciate very much that she put forward the idea of a one-time $5,000 incentive to attract daycare workers to remain at their position, basically to come back to the position that they had to abandon because of poor wages but to stay at that position for two years. This is a very good recommendation, but it addresses an ad hoc circumstance. It is a great idea, but it's a one-time great idea. What Bill 207 does is reach into the future for 10 years and sets out a plan, a vision, that would achieve a 30 per cent increase in the number of daycare facilities.

I had the good fortune, along with members of my Calgary caucus from Calgary-Currie and from Calgary-Mountain View, of attending two years ago one of the first public forums that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods held in my Calgary-Varsity constituency at the Banff Trail community centre. At that particular meeting there were over 45 individuals in attendance, and they came from varied child care backgrounds. Some were single dads. Some were single moms. Some were representatives of stay-at-home parents for the rights of stay-at-home parents. We had individuals from preschool, after school. We had private. We had public. But the underlying sentiment that was expressed by all, the one that stopped the divide and conquer, that stopped the debate, was the fact that we need to place children first, and that's what Bill 207 attempts to do: put children first.

Rather than saying, "Well, I like Bill 4; it's more comprehensive in my opinion," somebody from the government side might say, "than Bill 207," well, let's consider the possibility of working with both Bill 207 and Bill 4, and if there are difficulties amongst the government members, or if they see something that needs tinkering or changing, literally, let's not throw out the child with the bill. Come forward in discussions through amending processes to deal, to strengthen whatever shortcomings that you may perceive in this bill.

I also had the opportunity quite recently to again have a public forum on child care at which the hon. shadow minister for child care from Edmonton-Mill Woods had another very good turnout and discussion with parents. This was the follow-up to the meeting the year before.

Thank you. I look forward to further discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 207 proposes to establish targets for the creation of child care spaces. Specifically, the bill wants sufficient spaces for not less than 30 per cent of children who are 12 years of age or younger by the end of a 10-year period. The intent of this bill is honourable, and I appreciate the desire of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to ensure that children are properly cared for. The difference between the hon. member and myself is in how we believe child care should be delivered.

Mr. Speaker, child care can take many forms. Some of those forms are institutionalized care, parental care, care provided by a relative or neighbour, and regulated day homes. Every option has its positives and negatives. Parents can choose what is the most appropriate option for their situation. That is why I'm not supportive of a bill that proposes to mandate the creation of sufficient child care spaces. By mandating the number of child care spaces, we risk building another social program that would incur great cost to the public purse with dubious results. The only province that offers child care spaces to 30 per cent of its children is Quebec, which has an expensive publicly financed daycare program.

This bill reflects the typical Liberal way of handling the provisions of government services. The mindset has the government providing all the services all the time with no regard to the impact on the public purse and no regard to the outcomes. Liberals seem to doubt the ability of parents and their communities to find ground-level solutions and methods to providing child care. Liberals reject the potential for both private and not-for-profit companies to provide child care.

The government's role is to tread gently in the parenting of children. Government must protect children and assist parents in the nurturing of their children. There's no question that this government has a clear track record in the protection of children. The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act seeks to protect the safety and well-being of children, increases involvement of parents and children in family decision-making, and increases collaboration within the community to support the growth of children. This act allows for intervention when it is clear that a parent cannot adequately protect a child or if the well-being of a child is at risk.

Another support is family and community support services, FCSS. FCSS is a joint partnership between the province and municipalities. FCSS programs are preventative in nature and enhance well-being among individuals, families, and communities. FCSS programs reflect local needs and challenges.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to protecting children, the government has provided resources to parents to support their child care options. These resources allow parents to make choices about the type of care they want for their children. It also supports the type of care they choose. Every choice has financial implications. The support provided by the government may be the difference in having one parent stay at home while the other works.

Alberta's five-point child care investment plan reflects the wants and needs of parents. It supports low- and middle-income families and stay-at-home parents. It allows families with children with disabilities to access specialized care. It provides parents with information, resources, and early intervention opportunities.

The kin child care program allows low-income families to pay relatives to care for their children. The program provides $300 per month. It provides alternatives to low-income families with limited options for child care, such as those in rural areas or with nontraditional work hours.

Further support is provided to parents by the federal government. Families with children under six years of age receive $100 a month per child through a universal child care benefit. Parents can use the benefit to choose the child care options that suit them best.

Mr. Speaker, I prefer that the government support the choices of parents rather than force parents to accept the choices of government. Building up a child care system could lead to the creation of a new bureaucracy to set and monitor targets. Building up child care spaces through a government program can lead to great cost to taxpayers without justification of the need or demand. Allowing different options to take shape respects the ability of parents. It also allows communities and the private sector to develop alternatives in a cost-efficient manner.

Parents have a primary role in the provision of child care. Government's role is to support parental choice. Bill 207 does not respect that balance, and I cannot support that bill as a result.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 207. I want to indicate that I'll be supporting this bill, and I want to respond, in particular, in just a few minutes to the comments of some of the government members about the creation of bureaucracies and the state dictating to parents what they can and cannot do. In fact, what this government has allowed to occur through its daycare policy over many years in this province is a significant drop in the number of spaces in child care in this province, which will not be addressed, in my view, by Bill 4.

I have to ask the question, Mr. Speaker, why it is that in a booming economy, as we have in this province, where there is a serious labour shortage, the participation of women with young children in the economy is very, very low. It is not from their choice. The hon. member suggests that this is a choice of families and that the government is allowing the choice. It is quite the opposite. The government is taking away choice from women and families about their participation because there are insufficient child care spaces for women who wish to participate in the workforce. This may fit with the traditional family views of many members opposite, but it is not necessarily a universal view of the role of women in today's economy, and I would submit that a modern, progressive, and significant group of people and families in this province disagrees with that view.

So, Mr. Speaker, quite clearly, the government's approach forces women to stay out of the workforce because they can't find child care. And why is it that in the conditions we find ourselves in, with a booming economy and a demand for labour, we are bringing in thousands of temporary foreign workers to fill jobs that Albertans could be providing? It all comes down to the question of who is served by the economic policy of this government, and it is not the people of this province. If they really wanted to address the labour shortage in this province, if they really wanted Albertans who want to work to be able to work, they would make sure that there were sufficient child care spaces in place in order to do that.

Mr. Speaker, before I sit down, I just want to indicate that the difference between Bill 4 and this private member's bill is the whole question of accountability and reporting. The minister would be required in this bill to report back to the Assembly on the number of child care spaces and progress that was made, and that is something, I think, that the government is afraid of. The government does not want to be accountable, not to the House and certainly not to the people of this province. Their economic policies are disadvantaging many, many thousands of Alberta families. This is just one instance of the kind of negative policies that the government is pursuing.

I would urge all hon. members to support Bill 207. I think it is a step forward and, certainly, considerably more progressive in its approach than the approach that the government has taken so far and will in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, then Red Deer-North, then Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 207, Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, in support of this complement, I would say, to Bill 4 that the government has put forward. There isn't an exclusiveness about either bill, and they both could add significantly to quality and access to child care in this province. Many organizations have advocated for child care targets and greater accountability on this issue. It's been on and off the front burner for a decade and a half, and it's clear that it's a priority for Albertans. If it's a priority, we need to measure it, and if it's a priority, we need to show accountability on an annual if not a biannual basis to show that we are moving seriously toward making child care affordable and accessible and quality for Albertans.

Targets have been developed in many jurisdictions, including the European Commission Childcare Network, and while they don't guarantee the creation of more spaces, they do offer guidelines and timelines, which obviously gives us all more security about where we're moving in this province on these priorities. Clearly, in the boom time this has become an urgent priority. It's not only affecting the quality of child care in the early years, under 12 years of age, which has been deficient, it's also affecting the attraction of individuals into the field and their retention. It's affecting their ability to sustain themselves as workers and as young families. This is almost as urgent, Mr. Speaker, as getting clear targets and timelines in place for affordable housing itself.

This bill would increase by 30 per cent access for children under the age of 12, which is a significant increase in children between six and 12, a 30 per cent increase in access over a 10-year period, with an annual review. The bill would increase transparency by requiring this reporting and looking specifically at the type of supports, the costs, and the locations, whether those are more accessible or not as a result of where we're building and the age group that's being covered. It would encourage creation, again, in following the four principles of quality, universality, accessibility, and a developmental focus.

As most Albertans in need of child care know, our spaces have actually declined in the last 15 years. There's a serious need to move forward on this priority. I and most of my colleagues on this side of the House will be supporting it strongly and hope that the other side will see this as a complement to their good bill, also, to move forward on this issue.

The bill does not dictate how the government will achieve the targeted spaces. It will give the government some flexibility as well as some accountability, which, again, Albertans are asking for in these difficult times. We need to also increase the workforce learning opportunities and strengthen our communities at a time when the stresses and strains on communities are significantly increased. We can do better through a more accountable and targeted approach.

I think those summarize my major points. I'll take my seat and appreciate the rest of the debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to join the discussion on Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act. I also wish to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for her dedication to children and families and for furthering discussion on this topic as I feel this is a subject worthy of attention. Our children are Alberta's most precious resource, and it remains a priority of this government to maximize the well-being of our young people with quality child care when needed and early intervention programs if needed so that they may realize their full potential.

Part of this obligation means ensuring that families have appropriate access to high-quality and affordable child care services. The government also understands that no two Alberta families are exactly alike. Each has its own circumstances and needs, and parents must be able to choose the child care that is best for them. Devising a formula for appropriate child care is not something that will be achieved with one simple policy measure.

Mr. Speaker, expanding the availability of child care spaces is an admirable goal, but I'm concerned about a 10-year deadline for creating a specified number of new child care spaces. As hon. members of the Assembly know, Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act, was recently tabled in this House. It addresses the desire for additional child care spaces found in Bill 207, and Bill 4 provides the ways and means for this to happen.

We all know that it takes a whole village to raise a child. Both the provincial and federal governments are engaged in a variety of measures to ensure that Alberta's parents have access to the child care options that suit them best. The government of Alberta has invested approximately $13.5 million annually to address the issue of recruiting and retaining qualified staff to work in daycare centres and family day homes. From the federal government, for families that choose other methods of child care, some stay-at-home parents qualify for a subsidy of up to $100 per month for each preschool-aged child who is participating in an early education program.

Mr. Speaker, since the Member for Calgary-Varsity took the time to very proudly talk about his two grandchildren, I'd also like to talk about my grandchildren. My oldest granddaughter lives with her single mom, who also attends university. Although it would be our greatest wish to be able to stay home and help look after our granddaughter, it wasn't possible, so we had to have daycare. We used the day home system. We found it to be an excellent system. My daughter was subsidized for the care of her daughter, and we actually felt that she couldn't have gotten any better care in anyone else's hands. We developed new friends, and it was a wonderful experience.

My other two grandchildren are fortunate to be able to have mom stay home most of the time, but she does have to work part-time and was not able to get any subsidy to help her with her child care, which is $50 an hour for two children. For four hours of care she's paying $200 a week, which is very expensive, so to have the subsidy that comes from the federal government, which is $100 a month for each preschool child, is very helpful for her as well. So my grandchildren have been able to use both of the subsidies, from the provincial and federal governments, for very good child care that they receive from qualified daycare homes and from a caregiver who is not part of the system.

In previous years Albertans told us of their priorities for child care, and this government has responded. Albertans have indicated to us that they want assistance for low- and middle-income families in accessing affordable child care, support for stay-at-home parents, such as my other two grandchildren, assistance for families with children with disabilities, improved quality of child care through support of enhanced training for child care professionals, and more information resources and early intervention opportunities available to parents.

While increasing spaces and improving access are key initiatives being undertaken by the government, we are always seeking to not only improve . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business is now concluded.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Made-in-Alberta Energy Policy

506. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to adopt a made-in-Alberta energy policy to be developed through public consultation and debate in the Legislative Assembly and founded on the economic and energy interests of Alberta and Canada rather than those of the United States.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If I may speak to this motion, I would just like to indicate, in the first instance, that I would think the value of this motion would be self-evident to all members of the Assembly. Of course, the question arises: why, then, would the motion be necessary? The motion is necessary because this is precisely what the Alberta government is not doing. They are developing an energy policy not through public consultation and not through debate in the Legislative Assembly and not founded on the economic and energy interests of Alberta and Canada but, rather, on those of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this government is conducting the development of the energy policy of this province in large part through private consultations and discussions behind closed doors with representatives of the federal government and the Energy department of the United States and with large American and other foreign oil companies. The public debate of our energy policy has been moved out of the Legislature and into the boardrooms of Houston, Washington, and other American cities.

The new royalty regime was introduced in 1997 to encourage tar sands development in Fort McMurray, and the goal was to maximize resource extraction. Alberta went from collecting $2.20 on every barrel of oil in 1996 to collecting 8 cents per barrel in 2001. By 2004 that royalty regime had turned Canada into the largest exporter of oil to the United States. Alberta collected $9.8 billion in resource revenues, but most of the value went to the bottom lines of the big oil companies. Still the government felt the need to encourage more development. In 2005 they aggressively began lobbying business and political decision-makers in Texas, Washington, and even Beijing. The question of the development and the vision that the government has for our energy policy is not something that is well understood by most Albertans, and I believe that that is a deliberate decision of the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker, we have done a number of things: eliminating most environmental regulations in the Fort McMurray area, bringing in a labour policy that discourages the use of unionized Alberta workers and supports temporary foreign workers, a policy that collects for most tar sands extractions 1 cent on the dollar of the value, a policy that encourages, in fact, the export of unprocessed bitumen, creating construction and other processing jobs in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, in Houston there was an oil sands expert group workshop, and I have some documents here with respect to that meeting. It's quite clear to me that despite the claims made by our current Premier and other Conservative leadership contenders during the Conservative leadership race, they did not favour the export of unprocessed bitumen to the United States. In fact, the Premier went so far as to call it scraping off the topsoil. It is pretty clear that this was a decision that had previously been made and had been made while the Premier was, as far as I can tell from the dates, the minister of intergovernmental affairs for this province, and he must very likely have been aware of this as, certainly, the government was. This particular document talks about the need for expanding pipelines and building new pipelines not only for processed crude but also for unprocessed bitumen.

Mr. Speaker, the government, through the security and prosperity partnership of North America agreement, which was signed by President Bush, Prime Minister Martin at the time, President Fox of Mexico, in which Alberta participated, certainly indicates that the strategy of expanding tar sands production for export to the United States, including a dramatic increase in the export of unprocessed bitumen, has been a done deal for well over a year.

This question has not been discussed in the Legislative Assembly. I think that the whole question of where we're going as a province has not been settled openly and through democratic discussion by the people of Alberta and their elected representatives but, rather, behind closed doors in Washington, in Houston, and in other places. This government has participated in that, and the consequences are something that the people of this province have to pick up.

The housing shortage is a direct outcome of this government's policies. It's clear that they worked very hard to set in place a framework that reduces labour costs, reduces environmental costs, and encourages the rapid exploitation of our natural resources, without doing any planning for the consequences. The shortages of schools that we face, the lineups for emergency rooms and for ambulances, and the weaknesses in our provincial infrastructure are all things that are consequences which the government prefers to call the price of prosperity. Mr. Speaker, it's pretty clear that the government's use of that term contains considerable irony, and I want to indicate that it is, in fact, the people of Alberta, particularly middle-class families and working families, that are paying the price of prosperity. It is not the prosperous who are paying the price of prosperity in this province.

Recently the mayor of Red Deer talked about the disappearance of the middle class. This is certainly something that is a part of the government's economic development policy. Mr. Speaker, to put it in a nutshell, the provincial government has entered into agreements that affect profoundly the very future of this province, that set targets for growth industrially and eventually for population and for the export of our raw materials, yet they have not put in place plans to help the people of this province cope with that growth. It's wrong. It's wrong that this government should decide the future of this province without including the people of Alberta, who have to live here, in those discussions, yet that's exactly what they've done.

Just another example, Mr. Speaker, is the whole question of TILMA and the discussion that's taken place around that with British Columbia. Whereas the British Columbia government introduced legislation that would deal with the whole question of TILMA and allowed some democratic debate around that, this provincial government has chosen not to do so. There was a bill introduced earlier today in the House that talks about allowing penalties to be levied, I guess, for the violation of TILMA. I'm sure that the real impact of that will be felt soon.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for your time, for your patience. I urge all members to support the motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to speak to Motion 506 as proposed by the hon. member. I'm probably going to surprise a few people here by suggesting that I actually agree with parts of this motion; namely, the first part, that says, "urge the government to adopt a made-in-Alberta energy policy to be developed through public consultation." I think that's fantastic. I think that's great. In fact, the first part of the motion is exactly what we're doing with the royalty review in the province of Alberta: public consultations. That's the entire point.

I think it's critical for this province to do public consultations to ensure that something that is a key revenue generator for the province of Alberta and that supplies so many services to Albertans in general be reviewed regularly to ensure that Albertans get value for their dollar, Mr. Speaker. In fact, they do produce significant benefits. Last fiscal year the province received $11 billion in revenue from the energy industry. That's one-third of the total revenues collected by this province. This year it'll be $10.3 billion, a slight decline but still a significant factor in providing Albertans with benefits in general.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

One-quarter of Alberta's GDP, Mr. Speaker, is provided by the energy industry. That amounts to $81.3 billion in exports. It's very important to note that that's exports. It's not something just generated here in Alberta. The reason why we have so many benefits is because so much of the energy industry's products are exported around the world. One out of every six jobs in this province is directly tied to the energy industry. It's critical and, obviously, one of the foundations that this province was built on.

Mr. Speaker, that's not the only benefit. This province has the potential to sustain incredible economic growth because of its reserves. Over 175 billion barrels in proven reserve in the oil sands and 1.6 billion barrels of conventional oil still exist in the ground. Over 41 trillion – that's trillion – cubic feet of remaining established marketable gas reserves still exist in this province in the ground. Coal reserves are estimated at approximately 34 billion tonnes. Now, that's incredible reserves in this province. But they're all in the ground, and those reserves have absolutely zero value when they're still in the ground.

Mr. Speaker, there's an incredibly important principle that I think this motion fails to consider, and that's the principle of macroeconomics. Jurisdictions recognize that they cannot produce all the goods they require. If the resource or goods are in abundance, the jurisdiction will sustain their supply and market excess production on the market for profit. As a result, because in Alberta we don't produce everything we need, Alberta imports a number of products and services. Such transactions by our province benefit our other economies and allow Albertans to specialize in areas of strategic importance; for instance, the energy industry.

In 2005 alone, Mr. Speaker, Alberta imported $53 billion worth of international products and services. These included things like cars and trucks. In fact, $6.8 billion worth of vehicles were imported into this province in 2003, $6.6 billion worth of machinery and equipment were imported into this province in 2003, and electronics and communication equipment amounted to $5.2 billion. Very critical.

Now, I regret the second half of this motion – and I'm not even going to repeat it – mostly because it suggests that the energy interests of the U.S. are what we base our energy policies on. Mr. Speaker, that's a very regrettable assumption. If the member across the way who suggests this motion had any experience or understanding in the business community, he would know that a business does not exist without clients. You have to take care of your clients. But if you don't take care of the business, you have nothing left to market. That's the relationship, especially when Alberta is so dependent on exporting goods and services, particularly related to energy and gas.

We have to export those products. It helps our economy. We also have to import a lot of products. I would love to see what this hon. member across the way would do if he just raised the taxes incredibly, the royalty structure, thereby driving away the investment in the oil and gas industry. I wonder what we would have left in our economy to import those products, Mr. Speaker. Business means looking after your business and your clients. Trade secures Alberta's prosperity.

Motion 506 suggests that Alberta engage in a confrontational trade relationship with the U.S., a reliable, stable customer of our energy products. Mr. Speaker, the changing trade relationship on energy can impact other industries, such as agriculture and forestry. In fact, many people, I recall, during the BSE crisis suggested that we just turn off the taps for oil and gas in order to make the United States pay attention to us. We import so many goods. The U.S. is such a critical trading partner. By turning off the oil and gas to get the U.S.'s attention, Alberta would fair far worse than the U.S. by the reduction in oil and gas.

An Hon. Member: It's like cutting off your nose to spite your face.

Mr. Griffiths: Yeah. It's kind of like cutting off your nose to spite your face. That's correct.

Mr. Speaker, it's not simple factors like turning off the oil and gas or raising the royalty structure without considering the factor about where the market is. Quite frankly, I hear it compared all the time that Finland and Norway and Sweden and countries all over the world collect more in royalty revenue than Alberta does. Those countries have immediate access to a huge economy in Europe. Our immediate access is to the huge economy in the U.S. They also have larger reserves that have bigger pools while we have smaller conventional pools that require much more work and much more drilling. One size does not fit all. The same policy that works in one country does not necessarily work in another country.

Mr. Speaker, the second half of this motion, suggesting that Alberta is basing its energy policy on what the U.S. wants, is just not true. It has to be based on what's good for Albertans, but it also has to factor in what the United States needs, just as I mentioned before. Without considering that, the U.S. might go somewhere else, and then who are we left to sell our products to? We'd be a broke business. The second half of this motion is just typical of a New Democrat attitude that suggests that you tax it when it's profitable; if it's still profitable, tax it some more; if it suddenly becomes unprofitable, then subsidize it. I'm afraid that that circumstance is what we would wind up with.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members, though the intent of the first half of this motion is noble, to realize that we are moving with the royalty review, which will make sure that Albertans get the full benefit they can out of the reserve without chasing away all of the business and investment and killing the entire industry. I encourage them as vehemently as possible to oppose this motion, that's narrow and myopic in its view.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Minister of Energy.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to rise and participate in the discussion on Motion 506 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Certainly, when we look at the energy industry and the energy policy, it's not that we never had a made-in-Alberta energy policy in the past. Previous Progressive Conservative governments fought to ensure that we had a made-in-Alberta energy policy, and it worked out quite well for us economically. I don't understand why people would become so anxious to so quickly criticize or ridicule the hon. member for proposing a made-in-Alberta energy policy to be developed through public consultation and debate in the Legislative Assembly. It's about time that we look after the interests of Albertans first. In my view, we haven't been doing that in the recent regime of the Tory dynasty, the Progressive Conservative party's 37-year-old dynasty.

Now, if we look at the royalty review and we look at the current royalty structure, the hon. Minister of Energy knows very well, because he was involved in the discussions in the comparison with Texas, that we are not getting enough in royalties, whether it's on coal-bed methane, whether it's on conventional oil and gas, whether it's on oil sands production. It's simply a royalty regime that was made when prices were much lower, and they're a lot higher now.

I would also remind hon. members of this Assembly that the state of Montana, our neighbours to the south, introduced legislation to increase the royalty on oil and gas on school lands by close to 20 per cent, and the oil and gas industry did not abandon that state. In fact, the number of leases that are being developed since that royalty increase was implemented has increased significantly.

I would also like at this time to remind hon. members of a quote from the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, who stated that, you know, there's "zero value" in the ground. That's not true because if we develop our carbon resources in stages, the value of that will increase dramatically. Crude oil is worth 70-some dollars Canadian a barrel right now. Eight years ago it was probably worth $27 a barrel. It increases in value. We don't have to pump it all out of the ground at one time because hopefully it's going to increase in value, and there's still going to be a demand for that oil.

So to have this attitude that it has zero value in the ground – I would beg to differ. On the contrary, the longer we leave some of it in the ground, the more valuable it will become. Hopefully, after we negotiate a competitive royalty rate, even if we collect only the amount that the government targets themselves to collect, that would be appropriate, but we're not doing that. This government is failing, failing dismally, the owners of the resources, Albertans themselves.

There are other things in this whole energy debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood talked about the whole issue around the temporary foreign workers and how that benefits this province. Well, I don't know how it does. Certainly, those temporary foreign workers in many cases are being exploited. They are being cheated in their wages. They're driving down the wage rates in this province, and they are eroding working conditions for all Albertans because there's no enforcement.

Unfortunately, many of these temporary foreign workers – and there are now over 24,700 of them in the province – are being exploited in some cases. I have three files here that I just got over the weekend, and it's really disappointing. These people were recruited from jobs elsewhere. They got here. I am very sad to say and I'm ashamed as a Canadian that when these individuals came here, the work that they were supposed to do for the person who was recruiting them, the employer on the visa – there was no work for them. They paid megabucks to some unscrupulous middle person or recruiter, and they got here. They paid their own way here.

An Hon. Member: They must belong to the Liberal Party.

Mr. MacDonald: No. The hon. minister may make light of this and say that they were members of the Liberal Party and that they were refused work, but that is so far from the truth. They had faith in this system. The system didn't work, and now they can't find any work, and they're intimidated. They think that they're going to be picked up and deported out of this country. It's not a laughing matter, Mr. Speaker. It's not a laughing matter at all.

This government and the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry have a lot of answering to do because this program is simply not working. If the made-in-Alberta energy policy is to drive down wages, then we have to make sure through the temporary foreign worker program that we pay heed to the hon. minister's motion.

Now, temporary foreign workers: how far is this going to go? Well, I learned that we are now going to set up – and this is going to jeopardize the entire steel fabrication industry in this province – one of the largest steel fabrication plants in Canada in Tofield. There's a plan afoot to start a plant that will have 286,000 covered square feet of shop space. Where is the workforce for this outfit going to come from? It's not going to come from Ryley. It's not going to come from Tofield. It's not going to come from Fort Saskatchewan. It's not going to come from Camrose. It's going to come from Malaysia, Indonesia, China, the United Arab Emirates, Italy, Australia: in fact, the total manpower requirements of this place, 2,600 and some odd workers. If this outfit gets a labour market opinion, it will mobilize its world-wide manpower resources to accommodate the shortages in Alberta, the shortages that are real or perceived. That's where the workforce is going to come from. It's not going to come from Camrose. It's not going to come from Fort Saskatchewan. It's not going to come from Edmonton. It's not going to come from Quebec, Ontario. It's going to come from these foreign countries.

Now, how does that benefit Alberta? In the past whenever we talked about Syncrude and Suncor, when we had a Better Buy Alberta program, which this Conservative government promoted at one time, parts of the work that was generated with the development of Syncrude and Suncor had to be done locally here but not anymore. We've moved away from that, and the local steel fabrication industry, whether it's in Airdrie or whether it's in the south of Edmonton, cannot compete when you've got smaller parts being fitted in yards in Malaysia and in China and being sent over here, and then they're assembled here for shipment to the oil sands projects.

Workers there are getting a dollar, maybe if they're lucky $2 a day. There are no occupational health and safety rules for them to follow. They're running around with sandals on – with sandals on – in steel fabrication shops. They don't even have steel-toed workboots. And we're allowing that? We're allowing these sorts of laws to undermine our steel fabrication industry, which has been so vital.

If we look at the last budget and we look at the exports from this province, we will see that there was a significant amount of money coming from steel fabrication and steel-fabricated products. How is this industry to maintain itself whenever it has this unfair competition to deal with? The Chinese people openly talk about our high cost of labour . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for bringing this motion forward but only – only – because I'm always pleased whenever I get an opportunity to discuss energy and its vital importance to the province of Alberta.

The motion itself has something to do with a made-in-Alberta energy policy. Most certainly, I would suggest that we've exported oil from the province of Alberta since 1947. For 60 years the province of Alberta has had a made-in-Alberta energy policy. It has served Albertans very well, and as we continue, it will continue to serve Albertans very well.

Mr. Speaker, this also provides me with an opportunity to educate members and particularly the members opposite, although most of them aren't really that interested in being educated about energy anyway because they don't really see it as being all that important to them or to their constituents or, I suppose, to Albertans or Canadians. But I've got to say that the education piece of this is absolutely required by our members and the general public.

Energy is the future of this province, and we need to do a better job, I need to do a better job, and my colleagues here with me on this side of the bench will do a better job of educating Albertans and particularly the members across the way with respect to this. It's one part of a multifaceted approach, Mr. Speaker, that I see as part of the mandate given to me by the Premier. We have a number of strategies that fit Alberta and the made-in-Alberta energy policy, and these strategies, that have been put in place by previous governments, will be better knit together by this government as we move ahead. There has been a lot of work done on the Alberta energy strategy. We'll continue to do that.

Our integrated energy strategy, Mr. Speaker, includes the areas that we've had some discussion about. The member opposite talked about situations where there's so much work going on, the need to import steel products, and things like that. I don't know what it's necessarily focusing on in this particular motion, but certainly that part of Alberta's future will form the base. Hydrocarbons will certainly form the base of our energy future. However, the integrated energy strategy, the made-in-Alberta strategy, will include a much broader use of and acceptance of things like renewables, alternative energy forms, biofuels, bioenergy generation. We have, certainly, an awful lot of very, very good opportunities for many Albertans and, I would suggest, for a number of people from this province, from other provinces in Canada, and perhaps from other places globally with respect to being involved in this.

Mr. Speaker, it troubles me just a little bit – just a little bit, not a lot – that the hon. member across the way would go out of his way, particularly out of his way, in his motion to malign one of Canada's and one of Alberta's very good partners and friends that we have been able to openly do business with for many, many years. I know that this member has never been a decision-maker in government and never been an administrator, but I can tell him without hesitation . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, the member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Mason: Yes. He's using language that is calculated to incite disorder and so on. Mr. Speaker, in actual fact, I have been a decision-maker in government. I served on Edmonton city council for 11 and a half years, and I made decisions with respect to telephone companies, airports, power companies, transit, all kinds of decisions, long before this person was ever invited into cabinet and made any government decision in his life.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, in order for the chair to consider anything as a point of order, at least we need a citation. Since there was no citation, I hope that this is just a point of clarification.

Hon. minister, you may proceed.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and certainly I'll just continue. I can say to the member without hesitation that each and every time I make a decision, I try to do it with honour, with integrity, and with the interest of Albertans at heart. I don't claim for a moment that I or perhaps other people inside government get it right a hundred per cent of the time, but please don't doubt that what we do here in this Assembly and in my responsibilities as a minister of the Crown of Alberta, I do for Alberta and not for any foreign entity.

Perhaps the hon. member could realize that it's in the interests of Alberta to form a strong working relationship with the United States so that we can form continental approaches to continental problems we face. Perhaps the hon. member would realize that it just might make sense for Alberta to sell energy products to the world's largest economy. Perhaps the hon. member could recognize that his anti-American bias is blinding him to one of the many opportunities presenting itself for Alberta, and as a result his actions could hurt this province.

Mr. Speaker, I'll cite a CERI report. There is a CERI report on the Internet, and in that report the indications are very, very clear that the energy policies of the province of Alberta, particularly with respect to oil sands, have been tremendously successful and benefited Albertans, Canadians, people in North America, and other folks globally.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it's time for the member across the way to get into the 21st century and realize that it's in the interest of Alberta to open itself to the world, and that includes the United States. We have so much to offer. As the world looks for energy, Alberta will be ready with our products, our innovation, and our talent. We will be in Asia. We will be in Europe. We will be in any other continent across the globe, but our policies will not and cannot exclude one particular country. It's time the hon. member dropped his bias against the United States and realized that we have nothing to fear when Alberta competes with the rest of the world. Nothing to fear.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The hon. Minister of Energy basically stood up and tried to wrap himself in as many flags as possible and tried to condemn the efforts of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who was not talking anti-American biases; he was talking pro-Albertan. That's the nature of Motion 506: to get the best for Albertans, now and into the future, that we can have.

I thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for bringing forward Motion 506 because what he has done is he has brought the discussion into this Legislature, into an open and accountable circumstance where a record is being kept which can then be shared with Albertans across the province. The last discussion on royalties by the former Ministry of Energy didn't get very far. In fact, there was no written evidence that such a royalty investigation ever took place. It was a little bit along the lines of the Kelley Charlebois reports: high pay and no results.

Now, our latest royalty review was highly compromised to begin with because of former oil company executives being placed on it rather than having representation from average Albertans, who don't tend to benefit from the participation in the forum and don't bias the royalty review in the first place. This royalty review that is currently going on reminds me of the last insurance review, in which there weren't any average Albertans. There weren't any members of the public whatsoever. It was a behind-closed-doors circumstance, full of insurance salesmen and brokers and no other Alberta stakeholders, so the end result was rather guaranteed before the commission took place. I appreciate the fact that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood provided us an opportunity to discuss Motion 506, to air it out and to consider the possibilities.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar indicated how much of our oil and gas support industry jobs and economy are being lost to foreign countries. Now, I'd like to have good trade relations with a variety of countries, including the United States, our nearest and dearest neighbour, but I have visions of what's going to happen when this upgrader comes down the Athabasca River. Let me give you sort of a vision, a circumstance of what it could very much end up. It could be a repeat on a grand scale of what happened in Pine Creek coulee in Stavely. In Pine Creek coulee in Stavely the government refused to provide the money initially to provide a liner for the reservoir in Pine Creek coulee. So what happened was that the leeching from the Pine Creek coulee, because it wasn't constructed properly in the first place, ended up ruining the wells of all the surrounding farms.

Now, there was an absolute monument to stupidity in the Pine Creek coulee at Stavely. Somebody had the bright idea to put playground equipment in the Pine Creek coulee. What you saw was a submerged teeter-totter, only partially submerged. What you saw was three-quarters of the swing set that was supposed to be totally underground. What you saw was a slide that looked like it would be kind of fun if you could get to it, but the water there sort of came up halfway. The reason that happened is that by the end of the summer you could probably walk across what little water was left and participate in this playground, which was intended to be totally submerged and for divers' benefit and amusement.

Well, can you imagine what monument to stupidity will occur if we have this enormous steel upgrader stuck on a barge in the middle of the Athabasca River because of the planning process of getting several kilotonnes of equipment down the Athabasca River, which is continuously being drawn upon by the various bitumen plants that are happening up in the Fort McMurray area? I hope that in large neon lights and letters we will have, "This is the result of government planning" attached to that large piece of built upgrader instead of having it built here and parceled in pieces and adding to our economy. So that large visual stuck in my mind.

But what I would like to talk about, too, is what Motion 506 causes us to discuss. What it says is that we aren't getting the benefit from our resources. We're not getting the benefit of the offshoot of our resources. We are gung-ho to send a whole lot of our raw bitumen down the pipeline to Chicago, to Houston, where it will no doubt benefit our neighbours. You know, I want our neighbours to prosper as well but not at our expense.

I'm extremely concerned. You know, in one case this government says: "TILMA, TILMA. Wow, wow, wow. Let's go for TILMA. Let's have an agreement with B.C. Let's get rid of our trade barriers" and so on. Well, here's a thought. I'm just going to add another thing that we ship down to Chicago. We ship down our gas in a primarily raw state, and when it gets down there, they separate it. They take out the butane. They take out the methane. They take out the propane. And guess what? All these byproducts of the raw gas that we ship down to Chicago are worth considerably more than the raw product. So not only are we giving them our raw product, but we're giving them all the benefits of streaming off these other gases. It's a great concern for me that we're losing these values.

What we have failed to discuss in this House is the notion of balance. How can you balance the need to process the raw bitumen here in Alberta? How many upgraders is the right amount? What environmental precautions will we take so that if an upgrader such as the 10 that are being proposed – how can we, for the residents of the surrounding areas, be sure that the noise levels, the emissions levels, the draw on the water resources are not going to be overwhelming? I believe that through technology we could achieve a degree of balance, and through regional planning we could probably come to some kind of amicable resolution.

Here's the western Canada concept. Why are we so all fired up about building pipelines to take our raw products, bitumen or gas, down to the States? Why don't we have lateral pipelines? Why not let Saskatchewan and Manitoba be a part of our success? Saskatchewan has already got a couple of bitumen processors there. Why do we have to always send it south? Let's have a provincial western Canada consideration. Why not keep our products in Canada and support Saskatchewan and support Manitoba but in a balanced process? We determine how much goes down the pipeline. All the provinces stand to potentially benefit from our sharing of our resources.

An Hon. Member: Do you want to send our cows there too, Harry?

Mr. Chase: By all means. Horned or otherwise.

You know, when the young and talented member – I'll take nothing away from the young and talented member – talked about the idea of exporting our values and so on, suggesting that this was a war on the United States, and what would they do if international companies pulled out? [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate on Motion 506, presented by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. The hon. Premier has responded to the concerns of Albertans regarding the royalty regime by establishing an expert panel that will determine if Albertans are getting their fair share from resource revenues. Under the direction of the hon. Minister of Finance a royalty review committee was established in February. The review will focus on all aspects of the royalty system, including royalties from oil sands, conventional oil and gas, and coal-bed methane. This independent panel consists of individuals who are experts in academia, economics, accounting, energy research, and the resource industry.

Just to remind members, the objectives of the committee are to ensure that Albertans are receiving an appropriate and fair share from energy development through royalties, taxes, and fees. The committee will examine the royalties and formulate conclusions that will suggest an appropriate and, again, fair balance for investment and contributions. Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta has gained significant – and I stress "significant" – economic benefits from energy development. The government of Alberta received over $11 billion in nonrenewable resource revenues in the last fiscal year alone.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this government is taking a proactive stance by initiating a comprehensive review that will assess the royalty system. The complexities of the royalty system are immense, and the committee will offer Albertans an objective analysis of their findings. I think we should wait for their review and see how that turns out to the benefit of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and participate in Motion 506, the made-in-Alberta energy policy. I'm supporting this motion in principle only. This motion, I think, assumes only three things: one, the current energy policies of this province are not in the public interest; two, the public energy policies of this province are not developed through public consultation; and third, the current energy policies of this province are focused on serving the needs of the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, we are not talking here about anti-America. We are talking about how we can serve the best interests of Alberta. Electricity deregulation has not benefited Alberta consumers in any identifiable way. Alberta families and business owners have paid a high price for this government's electricity deregulation experiment. On several occasions the actual posted pool price on the Electric System Operator's website has reached its peak of $999 per megawatt.

While electricity providers are making enormous profits, Alberta consumers are paying a huge price for a flawed policy. Since 2000 Alberta farm electricity costs have increased by an unbelievable 38 per cent due to deregulation, while in other jurisdictions such as Manitoba, Saskatchewan, B.C., the increase has been in single digits. In the past 12 months the Alberta Electric System Operator has issued several emergency energy alerts due to a lack of available power. This has resulted in blackouts. Despite the government's claim that deregulation has increased our capacity, the Department of Energy's annual report shows that our electricity generation capacity has actually decreased since the year 2003.

The royalty regime in Alberta has failed to collect a fair share of revenue for the resource owners. Over the past few years, Mr. Speaker, the royalty regime has created record-breaking profit for oil and gas companies. Meanwhile, the Crown revenue share, the percentage of royalty collected on behalf of the resource owners, has failed to meet the government's own modest target of 20 to 25 per cent.

The government has until very recently refused to conduct an open public royalty review. The validity of the 2007 royalty review is questionable given the review panel's close ties to oil and gas companies and its general lack of balance. The government's own document shows that Albertans have not received a fair share over the past few years. The government of Alberta is encouraging oil sands project owners to upgrade bitumen in other jurisdictions, in the U.S., costing Albertans value-added opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, this government's electricity policy does not serve Albertans. Nobody chooses to buy electricity. It's a necessity. The Alberta Liberal caucus has a low-cost power for Alberta plan that would serve the hard-working citizens of this province very well. This government's electricity deregulation experiment has cost Alberta consumers billions of dollars. With the Alberta Liberal's low-cost power for Alberta plan electricity rates would be based on the actual cost of production.

The government's royalty regime has cost Albertans billions of dollars in lost revenue. The government has failed to collect a fair share for the citizens of this province. The government aims to collect up to 25 per cent in Crown revenue shares. Over the past two years, Mr. Speaker, the government has failed miserably in meeting this goal, costing us billions in lost revenue. Texas collects 25 per cent for their resources, and so, too, should Alberta. This government has failed to implement an effective royalty regime.

By encouraging oil sands project owners to export bitumen for upgrading in the U.S., the government is exporting well-paying jobs, jobs that should go to the citizens of this province. The jobs that are created through value-added operations are the kind that people can count on for 20 to 25 years. Mr. Speaker, this government has failed to secure these jobs for the citizens of this province.

Once again I just want to add that this government should admit that electricity deregulation is a total failure.

Thank you.

5:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to join the debate on Motion 506 regarding Alberta's energy policy. The hon. member's motion calls for a made-in-Alberta energy policy. I can assure him that this government has a made-in-Alberta energy policy to build a stronger Alberta.

Part of a successful energy policy entails finding a balance between economic development and the environment. The hon. Minister of Environment has been mandated by the hon. Premier to update Alberta's climate change plan. This plan is truly made in Alberta because the government is seeking Albertans' input on this issue. Albertans will have a voice on climate change through a series of community workshops, which are currently being held throughout the province, and questionnaires for those who are unable to take part in the workshops. Mr. Speaker, seeking input from Albertans is important because it's their environment, their resources, and their quality of life.

Alberta was the first province to introduce climate change legislation in 2002 and the first to require large industrial facilities to report their greenhouse gas emissions. With Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, that's currently before the Assembly, Alberta was the first province in the country to introduce legislation to reduce greenhouse gas emissions intensity from large industry.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 3 is a tangible product of the hon. Premier's priority to manage growth pressures in our province. This government's action on climate change demonstrates to the rest of the world that as a global community we can achieve economic growth while being good stewards of the environment. In order to encourage companies to reduce their emissions intensity, the government has provided options such as making operating improvements, buying an Alberta-based offset to apply against their emission total, and contributing to a new government fund that will invest in technology to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in the province.

The Alberta government's action to ensure the sustained health of our environment is one step towards achieving a truly made-in-Alberta energy plan. I urge all hon. members to consider the steps that are currently being taken to construct a suitable energy plan for our province before they vote on Motion 506. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to close debate.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to close debate on this motion. I want to begin by responding to some of the comments that have been made by a couple of the members, the Member for Battle River-Wainwright and also the Minister of Energy, who have attempted to portray this motion as anti-American simply by virtue of the fact that it asks for a made-in-Alberta energy policy. At the same time, speaking from the other side of their mouths, they do claim that we already have a made-in-Alberta energy policy, Mr. Speaker. But it is not anti-American. There's nothing anti-American about asking for a made-in-Alberta policy or a fair share of the value of our natural resources, and in fact previous Conservative Premiers of this province have done exactly that.

I disagreed with Premier Lougheed on some things, but I'll say one thing: he stood up for this province, and he stood up at times against the oil industry, something that this government has never had the guts to do. The minister talks about a continental solution to continental problems and thereby has exposed himself for what he is, which is a continentalist. Mr. Speaker, Canada does not have a shortage of energy. The United States does. That's an American problem, not a continental one.

There were also some attempts to suggest that criticizing the present policy means driving away the energy business from this province and, effectively, killing the golden goose. Mr. Speaker, nothing could be farther from the truth. The current royalty regime in this province was made at a time when oil was running at about $10 a barrel. Now it's well past $50, and we know in the long run that it's going nowhere but up. The United States and other consumers of energy are not going to shut down the oil and gas industry in this province if we ask for a fair share, and the government is simply engaging in fearmongering in suggesting that rather than deal with the real issues.

Mr. Speaker, the records from the oil sands expert workshop in Houston in January of 2006 show that Alberta participated in the organization of that conference in which considerable discussion about increasing the export of unprocessed bitumen to the United States took place. The government knew that. Presumably, the minister of intergovernmental affairs at the time, the current Premier, knew about that when he was promising Albertans that he would do away with the export of unprocessed bitumen. Examples of the kind of policy of not extracting full value from our resources and massively exporting them to the American market can be seen in the Celanese plant, which is currently undergoing closure just outside the city of Edmonton. That's an example of the loss of good jobs that comes about.

Our royalties are far less than the value of our resources, Mr. Speaker, and the royalty review that the government has set up is nothing but a sham. There were comments made about all the experts on there. No comments were made about the conflicts of interest that were well established in that particular body and the lack of public consultation and any meaningful input by the province. In fact, I'm surprised that the hon. members would raise that because it's a clear example of what I'm talking about; that is, Albertans being frozen out of the fundamental decisions that affect the future of their lives and their province.

Mr. Speaker, this government is selling out Alberta on its natural resources. Whether it's bitumen or natural gas or crude, this government is selling out not only the people of this province but future generations of this province, and the kind of quality of life that our children and grandchildren are going to enjoy will be significantly reduced as a result of this government selling out the interests of the people and giving away our resources for far less than they're actually worth. This government will go down in history as the government that sold out the province of Alberta.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 lost]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, from my vantage point the clock is just about to strike 6, so I would say that we stand adjourned until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 8, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/08

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members two officers of the Lord Strathcona's Horse. In 2006 Colonel John Roderick's exceptional service was recognized with his honorary appointment as Colonel of the Regiment, Lord Strathcona's Horse. Colonel Roderick, who resides in Kingston, Ontario, is joined today by Captain Chris Hunt, the regimental captain. Our visitors, Mr. Speaker, are in your gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly but also to accept on behalf of all of the Lord Strathcona's Horse the thanks of all the members of this House for their loyal and faithful service to the province and our nation.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 38 special visitors from the Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert constituency. The visitors today are from the Sturgeon Heights school, a group of very bright young people who are the future of our province. They are seated in the members' gallery and are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Lorna MacKay and Mr. Darryl Propp as well as parent helpers Mr. Paches and Mrs. Sarafinchan. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you three guests. First of all, a friend of mine who worked in this building a number of years ago and is back observing question period today, Charlene Adam. I'd also like to introduce my constituency office person who absolutely solves all of the problems of my constituents, Jaime Sorenson, and a young fellow who many of us know, Patrick Rea, who has been involved in youth politics since I think shortly after birth. I would ask them all to stand and receive a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of students and the co-ordinator representing an organization called caring for our Battle River watershed. All reps are from Camrose, which relies, of course, on the Battle River for its water supply. Seated in the members' gallery today are the project co-ordinator, Maurice Samm, and three award winners: Mark Wrubleski, Liz Solverson, and Jason Bratrud. A little later I will speak more about their activities in a member's statement; however, at this time I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two of my constituents. The first one is Anita Bocking. She is here with concerns about affordable rent. More than half of her income is going towards rent. The other one is Peter Tyleman. Peter is looking for more support from the government to stabilize those rental increases. I'd like them both to please now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly a group visiting from the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. This group is the Capilano seniors active group. They are led today by Mrs. Nettie Holmstrom. This group is a keen observer of provincial government affairs. They have a noted interest in the budget, and I look forward on occasion to meeting with them and discussing important provincial issues. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several constituents of Edmonton-Centre who've come today to express their concerns about the lack of a temporary cap on rent increases and other measures needed to improve housing. Some of these constituents are on AISH. Some are on fixed incomes. Some work. All of them but one have had significant rent increases, and each one of them is hoping that the government will take some positive action. I would ask Brianne Hudson, Rita Wegner Home, Joy Mukarage and Winie, Alyssa Hudson, Nicole Pfiefer, and Vanja Krslak, who I think are all in the members' gallery, to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my guest hasn't arrived yet. He's working his way through, but he won't be able to stay long.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Dr. Taft: Well, it's a very special moment for him, and I'd like him to be here when I introduce him. So perhaps in a couple of minutes. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it is my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you a constituent of Edmonton-Rutherford. Her name is Marilyn Sjulstad, and she's here this afternoon to hear her question asked of the Premier regarding the rental increase crisis. I would ask her to please give us a wave – she's in the members' gallery – and ask all members to give her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three of my constituents in Edmonton-McClung who are all here to voice concerns about the current housing crisis in Alberta and to hopefully see some of their questions answered by the Premier and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Even though they're here to pressure this government into taking some action to assist and protect tenants, I still encourage all members from both sides of the House to grant them the traditional warm welcome that is known to this House. I ask Deloris Austin, James Arnott, and Marilyn Caskey to please rise and receive the welcome I mentioned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my constituent Mr. James Sexsmith. James is a veteran of World War II, and he's active in federal and provincial politics. He advocates for underprivileged and low-income people. He's extremely reliable to his friends. I want to thank him for coming to the Leg. He's here to voice his concern on rent relief. He's seated in the members' gallery. I request him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly board members and staff of the council. The council met earlier this morning with the northern MLAs, followed by a board meeting. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they stand as I introduce them: newly elected vice-chair Carmen Ewing from Girouxville, Michael Ouellette from Grande Prairie, Harvey Yoder from Lac La Biche, Williard Strebchuk from Whitecourt, and newly appointed members Iris Callioux from Peace River, Dave Kirschner from Fort McMurray, and Joe Layton from Bonnyville. Also present is retiring member Mike Mihaly of High Level, who has served for the past four years. Thank you, Mike, for all the great work in support of northern Alberta. Also with them are staff members Jennifer Bisley, business officer from the Peace River office; Jan Mazurik, executive assistant; and Dan Dibbelt, executive director. I'd like all members to please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome.

1:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two constituents of mine from Edmonton-Meadowlark, Jenny Donohue and Iris Grover, both of whom are renters who are extremely concerned about the rapid and often unwarranted escalation of rents in Edmonton. They are seated in the members' gallery, I believe, and I ask that they please stand or wave and accept the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Doreen Fiddler. Doreen is one of the many Albertans who has received notice of a dramatic increase in rent, in her case from $595 per month to $1,595 per month, an incredible $1,000 increase in one notice. She is currently searching for a new home. Doreen was born in Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan, and came to Alberta in 1970 to be closer to her family. She's a single mother who raised six boys and one girl all on her own. She is now the proud grandmother of 15 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. She is accompanied by Robert Ross, an antipoverty activist in our community. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly three guests seated in the public gallery. They are Menar Ibrahim, Jeremy O'Haver, and Richard Konkin. Menar, Jeremy, and Richard are Palace Casino workers entering their 242nd day on strike as they fight for better working conditions. It is unfortunate that this government has abdicated its responsibility in protecting Alberta workers when they face an unfair employer like the Palace Casino. Jeremy has worked at the Palace Casino for 13 years as a dealer and a pit boss. Menar started working at the Palace Casino in 2004 as a head cashier. Richard Konkin has been a dealer at the Palace Casino for the past eight years. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a very active member in my constituency. His name is Giancarlo Grande, and he is here with his building manager. Giancarlo suffers from a debilitating disease called ankylosing spondylitis, and as a result he is on AISH. His current housing situation is very precarious as he relies on the kindness of his building manager, who has to date been able to shield him from rent increases imposed on other tenants in his building, but I can tell you Giancarlo Grande is very concerned about his future. He is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask him to wave and receive the warm welcome of all members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know and all members of the Assembly know, every year we're visited by a group of outstanding young Albertans as part of an ongoing program called the Forum for Young Albertans. A number of MLAs and staff have been involved in interacting with these young people. Every one of them is destined – I'm sure you'll agree with me – to become a leader of tomorrow. It's my pleasure on behalf of the Premier to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly a number of these outstanding young people who have joined us in our galleries this afternoon. There is a group that was here at 1 o'clock. There'll be another group that comes in after they leave at 1:30. There simply are not enough seats in the galleries to accommodate all of them. Nevertheless, I would ask those that are with us in both the public and the members' galleries at this time to stand and be recognized by all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Lucy Alfaro. Lucy is a graduate of medical school from her home country of El Salvador. She is now practising homeopathic medicine here in Edmonton. Lucy is a very strong human rights and environmental activist. She's seated in the public gallery, and I would ask her now please to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Caring for the Battle River Watershed

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 14 I had the pleasure to attend the caring for our watersheds Battle River awards presentation. This program encourages students and the community to think about global environmental issues at the local level. It is modelled on the Caring for the Kenai project that is currently operating in Alaska.

This awards presentation recognized students who submitted proposals to answer the question: what can I do, create, invent, or improve to better care for the Battle River watershed? Some 60 students developed 22 proposals in response to the question. After an initial round of judging, three finalists at the university level and 12 finalists at the grade 8 to 12 level were invited to make public presentations.

This project was made possible by the support of Agrium Inc., the Battle River Community Foundation, the Battle River Watershed Alliance, the University of Alberta Augustana campus, the Battle River school boards, Caring for the Kenai, and the city of Camrose. Successful proposals were awarded with significant cash prizes. A total of $6,000 was awarded to individuals, and $10,000 was awarded to winning schools. These awards will support students and schools in pursuing concrete environmental actions, as laid out in their proposals.

I want to congratulate Mark Wrubleski from the Charlie Killam school for winning in the high school category. His winning project proposed using a solar, wind, or electric power pump to aerate bodies of water to maintain the health and vibrancy of our watershed. I also want to congratulate Chantel Bromley and James Phillips from the University of Alberta Augustana campus for receiving first place in the university category. This project proposed the creation of a wetland on the creek that flows through the Augustana campus. This contest would not have been possible without the help of project co-ordinator Maurice Samm, who is here in the members' gallery with three of the project winners. His work in preserving watersheds is commendable, and the success of this initial contest will undoubtedly encourage other communities to host similar contests.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Television Production in Hardisty

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, Alberta filmmakers and their industry partners abroad have long been familiar with the spectacular locations, cost advantages, and top-notch crews and services associated with choosing Alberta as a film production destination. It's my pleasure to be able to rise today and recognize a powerful and thought-provoking Alberta Film endeavour that will be taking place in the town of Hardisty in my constituency of Battle River-Wainwright.

In continuing with Alberta's rich history in film production, Paperny Films, a Vancouver-based television production company, has received support from the CBC to film a documentary called The Week the Women Left. On the heels of a similar and immensely popular program in the U.K. this highly informative and touching documentary will highlight and follow families and a community that have been left without women for a period of one week, from June 2 to 9.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also proud to announce that since I live in the community of Hardisty with my wife and son, I will be participating in this endeavour as well. I know that without my wife, even if it's just for a week, I will be lost. I have always said that I may win the bread in our family with my job, but she has three full-time jobs in looking after me, my son, and the house and is the hardest working person, like so many other women I know.

In preparation for the upcoming creation of the documentary, the town of Hardisty has worked very hard to be chosen out of so many communities across the west and are now busy working, setting the stage to ensure that all conditions are right to tell this powerful story. Town Mayor Anita Miller and all of the council, town administrator Tony Kulbisky, and hundreds of citizens at large, like Shawn and Ashley Gaetzman, deserve a lot of credit.

This event will bring the men in the community together as they work on a project for the community while the women are away. The event will bring the women together as they holiday at some beautiful resort here in Alberta. The project will do the community good and, I believe, lay the foundation of strong bonds that will drive Hardisty's assured success in the years to come. But mostly it will be a chance for both men and women in the community to appreciate what each other does not just in the home but in business. Good luck to them all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent days many of us have read of seniors facing increases of up to 50 per cent from landlords eager to hike rents before the crisis forces the government to intervene. They are encouraged by a party that's had a long and comfortable relationship with landlords and a Premier who states that he sees no need to put a brake on the market. With our economy under strain on many fronts Albertans find it hard to understand, as I do, how a handful of owners interested only in private profit have chosen to exact the maximum from fellow citizens irrespective of social cost and callous to human need.

1:20

If this situation is not addressed, the consequences will be far reaching. It will signal that gouging is acceptable and that there is no economic law beyond the law of the jungle. It will send a message that the good life in Alberta is limited to those who have it made already. It will confirm to those already living on the edge that the only limits are what they can get away with and that crime has two levels: those who work the streets, and those who work the system.

This is not an example we want to set or an advantage Albertans are proud of. A government that permits this conduct is neither progressive nor conservative. It lacks the foresight to oversee an expanding future or the social values that guided us in the past.

Henry Ford and Conrad Black both saw the need for measures to curb excesses of the market not out of sentimentality but realism. They recognized that a society in which some cannot participate costs producers as well as consumers and is not a stable society.

The word "repentance" did not originally have to do with religion. Metanoia meant to see the big picture and to change accordingly. That is the kind of vision and adjustment we need in Alberta before the greed of some consumes us all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mental Health Week

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. May 7 to 13 has been proclaimed national Mental Health Week in Canada. Mental health is a crucial component of our overall health and is an essential resource for living. It influences how we feel, how we perceive, how we think, communicate, and understand. Without good mental health people are not able to reach their full potential or play an active role in society.

Mental health issues are wide ranging, from enhancing our emotional well-being and treating and preventing severe mental illness to the prevention of suicide. The government of Alberta has played a role and will continue to play a role in ensuring the delivery of mental health services in this province. Strengthening treatment of mental illness in the community supports Premier Stelmach's plan to improve Albertans' quality of life.

Mental illness has a profound impact on our society. It affects individuals of all ages, all cultures, and all educational and income levels. Mr. Speaker, in Canada mental illness affects 1 in 5 people and strikes early in life, with the highest prevalence in youth ages 15 to 24. A million Canadians live with a severe or persistent mental illness. In addition, approximately 8 per cent of adults will experience major depression at some point in their lives. Almost one-half of those who feel they have suffered from depression or anxiety have never gone to see a doctor about this problem. Stigma or discrimination attached to mental illness presents a serious barrier in today's society.

But the good news, Mr. Speaker, is that mental illness can be treated. The Alberta government is committed to advancing mental health in the province. It's part of the focus on overall wellness, to promote and improve individual and community health.

The Alberta Mental Health Board advances mental health in Alberta through a number of initiatives, including advocacy, policy advice, working with the regional health authorities and stakeholders. In raising awareness of Mental Health Week, the Alberta Mental Health Board in co-operation with several partners published an online book at amhb.ab.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every day, as this government scrambles to justify an uncaring and uncompassionate response to Alberta's housing crisis, it becomes increasingly clear that this government just doesn't care about working Albertans.

The government claims that it is taking a balanced, holistic approach to the problem. Yesterday the minister said that he needs to understand the situation from the side of the landlords that are gouging. If this government wants to understand the impact that the failure of our rental market is having, the minister doesn't need to turn to the landlords for insight. He needs to ask people like Doreen Fiddler, a senior in my riding who received a rental notice for $1,000 and is now looking for a new place to live. He needs to stop taking direction from megalandlords like Boardwalk and start listening to the thousands of Albertans from across the province who have told him very clearly that they want temporary rent increase protection.

The Premier had an opportunity to show leadership on this issue. The Affordable Housing Task Force did some excellent work and made some very good recommendations. But the Premier dropped the ball. His failure to protect tenants was confirmed when a meeting of 1,400 well-heeled Conservative Party members voted against compassion by voting against temporary rent controls.

The housing crisis is a mess, there's no question. I hope the Premier is up to the job of fixing it, but so far we haven't been given much reason for optimism.

There is no excuse for this government to be caught off guard by this crisis. Calgarians have been getting hit with $1,000 and even $2,000 rent increases for the better part of a year. Last summer the NDP was already telling the government that it needed to act quickly to implement temporary rent guidelines and create a ministry of housing to deal with this complex issue. The government's failure to act has seriously hurt families across the province.

The Speaker: I'm afraid I must now proceed to the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Nuclear Power

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Times have changed. Nuclear energy is a non greenhouse gas emitting power source that can effectively replace fossil fuels and satisfy Canada's growing demand for energy. Nuclear power plants are a practical option for producing clean, cost-effective, reliable, and safe baseload power in the Alberta oil sands.

Nuclear energy is affordable. According to the Canadian Energy Research Institute nuclear is one of the most cost-effective energy sources available. At less than 5 cents per kilowatt hour nuclear energy is competitive with coal and natural gas yet has the benefit of not emitting greenhouse gases.

Given that seven CANDU reactors built in South Korea, China, and Romania over the past 15 years have been completed on time and on budget, as was the most recent Pickering unit refurbishment, it's clear that nuclear power plants are highly reliable and cost-effective.

Nuclear energy is safe. In 1979 a partial reactor core meltdown at Three Mile Island frightened people. At the time no one noticed that Three Mile Island was a success story. The concrete containment structure prevented radiation from escaping into the environment. There was no injury or death among the public or nuclear workers. This was the only serious accident in the history of nuclear energy in the west, Mr. Speaker.

Spent nuclear fuel is not waste. Recycling spent fuel, which contains 95 per cent of its original energy, will greatly reduce the need for treatment and disposal.

Nuclear power plants are not vulnerable to terrorist attack. The 1.5-metre thick reinforced concrete containment vessel protects contents from the outside as well as from the inside. Even if a jumbo jet did crash into a reactor and breach the containment, the reactor would not explode, Mr. Speaker.

Nuclear weapons are no longer inextricably linked to the nuclear power plants. Centrifuge technology now allows nations to produce weapons-grade plutonium without first . . .

The Speaker: I'd like to thank the hon. member.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee advises that its consideration of the following private bill will be deferred to June 5, 2007: Bill Pr. 1, CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act.

The committee recommends that the following private bill not proceed: Bill Pr. 2, Crest Leadership Centre Act.

Mr. Speaker, I request the concurrence of the Assembly in this recommendation.

The Speaker: All hon. members in favour of the report, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Speaker: It's carried.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The record of this government is just filled with double standards. Yesterday we saw that intervening to help those hurt by failed agricultural markets is good; intervening to help renters keep their homes is bad. This government appears ready, even eager to intervene in markets just before elections or to paper over their own mistakes, but they will not stand up for renters. It's a double standard. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why his government has spent billions of public dollars over the years on the natural gas rebate program to protect people from a failed energy market but refuses to provide real protection for renters in a failed housing market?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I informed the House that we have put in place $285 million over three years for affordable housing. We're following up with any renter, any person that would be displaced by either rent increases or any other issue. We don't want to see families on the street, and that's why our Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry has considerable dollars, millions of dollars, in her budget to take care of those individuals. As per the natural gas market it's the North American market, and we've been living with it for the last – I don't know – probably 15 years at least.

Dr. Taft: Well, we could live with a little better rent protection as well, Mr. Premier.

There are certain services that Albertans simply need, and government has a role to play to ensure that those services are available, but with this government there's a double standard. Can the Premier explain why this government requires automobile insurance companies to get provincial approval before raising auto insurance premiums but refuses to put in place temporary protection against rent gouging by landlords? Why the double standard?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, car insurance is something that's mandatory. You can't drive a car unless you have car insurance.

With respect to housing there are many different areas of housing that this plan of ours covers. There's homelessness, those that perhaps because of medical conditions or whatever are living in tents or whatever. We want to make sure that we have money in place to give to municipalities to support them. Then there are the working poor. We're doing whatever we can through the various programs we have to look after them. Also with respect to those looking to buy single dwellings, we want to put more land up for sale.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, where is the moral leadership? Where is the moral leadership?

This government's claim that they won't impose a temporary rent regulation because the market forces will fix everything rings hollow. There is yet another double standard. To the Premier: can the Premier explain why regulated utility providers are required to apply to the EUB for rate increases, to quote the government website, "to ensure that customers receive safe and reliable service at just and reasonable rates," but this government refuses to provide renters with even temporary protection so they can keep their homes?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if the leader doesn't support transmission operators going to the AEUB, tell us that. If he wants us to change the law, then tell us because I'm not quite sure what you're trying to get at here. You're mixing apples with oranges and with grapes, quite frankly.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister responsible for housing asked the opposition to forward to him any concerns from Albertans who are at risk of losing their homes due to unaffordable rent increases. Today we have 23 people sitting in the public gallery who would very much like to make their concerns known to this minister. For each of these people there are hundreds of others, perhaps thousands of others, who are living in fear of the next rent increase due to this government's refusal to develop a real solution to this problem. To the minister of housing: will the minister follow up on his words to hear the concerns of Albertans who are experiencing unaffordable rent increases, and will he meet with these 23 people?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, yes.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry read out a phone number in this House for Albertans to call if “they’ve had a cost imposed on them” and need support. Well, what callers encounter when they dial this number is nothing less than a runaround, nothing that will help them today. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: can the minister confirm that the number she read out in the Legislature yesterday and invited people in distress to call offers no, none, immediate support for tenants facing unaffordable rent increases?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if the number has given people that impression, that is something that we have to correct. We have in fact offered that people can contact any number of the 59 Alberta Works offices to speak with somebody, to talk to them about their issues. We’re looking at those renters that are in danger of or at risk of eviction, and we would hope to hear from them. I will be doing a check almost immediately, I am sure, with that question. We’ll find out just exactly why they are receiving that kind of information if, in fact, that’s the case. We want to get this right, and we will be working until it is right.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Surely the minister knows her own programs are not set up in the way that she described.

To the Premier. This government continues to imply that stories of Albertans who are placed at risk of losing their homes are isolated. Well, they are far from isolated. The constituencies of the Official Opposition and, no doubt, many of the government MLAs have been flooded with calls from concerned residents every day. Will the Premier admit that this government’s refusal to help out the countless tenants at risk of losing their homes is un-Albertan and implement a temporary rent regulation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we’ve debated this considerably. There’s a bill coming before the House over the next couple of days, I believe. So there’ll be ample time to debate and take positions in terms of the opposition position on it and, of course, the government position, and one of the privileges is to be able to get together in this Legislative Assembly and debate the merits of the bill that’s coming forward.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everybody needs a home, and Alberta Liberals know that the affordable housing crisis is too important to get bogged down in ideology. Real-world problems affecting real people need practical solutions. Ideological responses make real-world, real people problems worse. To the Premier: given the massive, punishing rent hikes my constituents have faced and continue to face and since we’ve already established that temporary rent regulations could not make a rental vacancy situation this bad any worse, would the Premier share with this House what possible reason he could have other than enslavement to Conservative ideology for refusing to bring in temporary rent regulations?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, Mr. Speaker, no matter how they try to twist the words and try and get everybody upset here, we’ve made a good decision in terms of increasing the number of housing units. In fact, for 3.3 million people in this province we by far have the largest increase, no matter how you measure it, per capita, however you want to do it, close to 52,000. So that means that every time a person moves from a rental unit into a single dwelling, they free up more space in the rental units. This is one area that we’re going to continually pursue with municipalities and, as well, with the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, one of the most disturbing elements of the affordable housing crisis is the Conservatives’ repeated allegation that they’re listening to Albertans. Clearly, they’re not listening to Calgarians, and Calgarians are getting that message loud and clear. But whether it’s Calgary or Edmonton or Grande Prairie or Hinton or any one of a dozen other cities and towns, how can the Premier justify taking temporary rent regulations out of the solution mix when renters so desperately need short-term protection to bridge the gap until we can create a supply of affordable housing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again wrong information. As a candidate for the leadership I recognized the issue of the critical shortage of housing. As tens of thousands of people move into this province, they need a place to live. That’s why we’ve focused on this priority of increasing the number of units in the province and also working with the municipalities to co-operate with each other to free up more developed land for more housing and looking at other creative solutions within the municipalities that will increase the number of living spaces in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Taylor: And in the meantime, Mr. Speaker, constituents like this one, one of my constituents, Candace Loken, a well-educated 59-year-old injured worker, continue to suffer. She gets by on disability payments of $700 a month, which she supplements by using her savings and dipping into her RSPs. Her rent is about to increase by 30 per cent. How can the Premier say that his government has even begun to deal with the affordable housing crisis when Ms Loken has to choose between paying the rent and getting therapy for her pain? How many units of affordable housing has his plan brought on stream since April 24 if it’s so good? Where’s the Alberta advantage for Ms Loken?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, for the situation that the member just introduced, those are the kind of people that we’re reaching out to to ensure that we can support them during this period of the housing shortage. I know that our minister will check with the hon. member to get the name and check into that particular situation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Megalandlord Boardwalk corporation’s 2006 annual report is quite revealing. It indicates a target rent of $1,604 a month before investing in new rental units. Boardwalk sees an opportunity, as the report observes, that “demand for rental accommodation also remains high as affordability for home purchase continues to decline and prospective first time home-owners are increasingly priced out of the market.” In other words, they have a captive market, and they’re going to jack up rents to take advantage of it. My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier support what Boardwalk is doing, and if not, what is he going to do to stop it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the company that the hon. leader of the third party is bringing forward is a housing and apartment complex holding company. Take it up with the company. If you want to check in terms of what their audited financial statements are, you can talk to them. There are many people in the province of Alberta, many builders, many landlords, that are providing housing. There are so many not-for-profit organizations that we're supporting in this province. He brings up one company there. I don't know what he's trying to attempt to do here in the House. Is he saying that they're doing something improper? I haven't heard him say that.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I can't believe that answer from the Premier, what little of it I actually understood. I heard him say that I should take it up with the company if they're planning to jack up rents because of this government's failed policy. Mr. Premier, what is that if not an absolute abdication of your responsibility as Premier of this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Again it's an absolute twist on words. You didn't mention that they're going to be jacking up rents right across all the units they own by $1,600 a month. You know, it's one thing to ask a question, but it's another thing to start twisting these things to try and embarrass a company or any other developer in this province. They constantly do that here, and they're wondering why people back off building more units? It's because of people like that.

Mr. Mason: There are some of us in this House that are at least trying to do our job.

Now, this report goes on to say, "In 2007, we expect our Alberta assets to continue to shine, remaining the main engine of our Trust's growth." In other words, they're expecting rents to continue to climb in this province, and they're going to make a big, fat profit from it. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Premier why he didn't see this coming. I'll quote from the report again. "Our market fundamentals are based on simple supply and demand forces which are fairly easily predicted." Why didn't the government predict this?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the success of government policies in the early '90s in terms of paying off the debt and putting in place a very predictable, sustainable investment climate in this province has attracted tens of thousands of new Albertans to this province, over 500,000, if not closer to 600,000, coming to the province of Alberta. They're coming from other provinces. They're coming from other parts of the country. And do you know why? Because they can find a job here. They can actually raise their family and lead to retirement. There's something that was said to me the other day. Alberta is the only province where a grandfather and parents and their children can stay in the same province. Children don't have to leave to seek their fortune someplace else. They stay right here.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party will table the appropriate copies of the appropriate document at tablings.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Deerfoot Trail Improvements

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that Calgary is a major contributor to Alberta's strength. Given that it has had a big population increase, many large construction projects everywhere, and heavy traffic congestion every day, some of my constituents have asked me what our government does for Calgary. For example, they experience traffic problems on Deerfoot Trail, and they want to know if our government is spending enough to solve the problem of the Deerfoot Trail. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Can you, hon. minister, tell my constituents what your department is doing to deal with the Deerfoot Trail situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're constantly reviewing the situation on the Deerfoot and always working to make improvements on the Deerfoot. Since taking over the road in 2000, we've spent over $200 million on improvements to the Deerfoot. We've extended the road to the south, built new interchanges, and removed stop lights to improve traffic flow. To address the high volume of traffic on Deerfoot, we're investing hundreds of millions of dollars in the northeast and northwest sections of the ring road, and both of these projects are under construction as we speak.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very good that the province embarked on construction of the costly ring road around Calgary and took over the costly maintenance of Deerfoot Trail, and 5 cents of the 9 cents per litre fuel tax in Calgary is for Calgary. Certainly, it lightens the tax burden for Calgarians. But given that traffic safety is a vital issue, my supplemental question is to the same minister. What are you doing to improve the safety of the Deerfoot Trail?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we have a number of projects to increase efficiency and safety on the Deerfoot Trail. We're improving the Peigan Trail interchange to make getting on and off Deerfoot a lot safer. We're adding extra lanes and doing improvements in the Beddington Trail area and to the interchange to make this part safer. We're looking at major changes to the intersection with Glenmore Trail in conjunction with city projects to make this part of the Deerfoot function much safer. Finally, we've installed a new post and cable barrier system to the north end of Deerfoot Trail to prevent vehicles from crossing the meridian.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that our government spent lots of taxpayers' dollars on the cable barrier along the centre of the Deerfoot Trail. My question is to the same minister. What evidence is there that this safety device is working?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the new barriers got their first test last week. While I'm not overly encouraged to hear that this first test happened so quickly, I'm very pleased that the new barrier system performed as expected. It prevented a vehicle from crossing the median and crashing into oncoming traffic. Injuries to all those involved and damage to vehicles was minimal compared to what usually happens in head-on collisions and at highway speeds like they travel on the Deerfoot. So this new system has performed well, and I'm confident that we may be using it in a lot more areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's version of managing growth is to add locomotives to the runaway train of the economy. Rents have been increasing in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre for over a year now, but not one new rental unit has been built to capitalize on this situation. What we have is a complete failure of the rental marketplace. My questions are to the minister of housing. The minister plans to meet with landlords who are gouging their tenants, but I'd like to know what definition the government is using to decide how much of an increase constitutes gouging. Twenty per cent? Fifty per cent? Two hundred per cent? What is it?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that in Alberta in the postsecondary education segment alone Alberta is responding with over a thousand student units.

The members opposite talk about ideologies, and I just want to talk about facts. The key is to create a greater supply of units available that will reduce the market pressure that we are facing. Putting regulations and controls that will reduce this incentive to build new supply will hurt exactly the people that the members opposite are trying to help. [interjections]

The Speaker: I recognize one hon. member to ask a question. I recognize somebody to respond. Then all I hear are catcalls. If I recognize you to ask a question, let's have the courtesy of hearing the answer.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I still want a definition of gouging.

To the same minister. Joy is a new mom living with her five-month-old baby in Edmonton-Centre, but even with a subsidy 70 per cent of her income is used to pay the rent. Joy recently became a Canadian citizen but is struggling to make ends meet. How does the minister expect to draw people from other provinces and countries to live and work in Alberta when they may face the same situation as Joy?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what rent supplements are about. Rent supplements are about trying to provide affordable housing for individuals that are in need, for individuals that need support. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, if the opposition does not want to hear the answer, then that's okay.

The Speaker: Go on, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister. This once-a-year limit on increases without the rest of the incentives to create housing and provide supports is penalizing the few good landlords I have who were raising rents by reasonable amounts over time. Why did the government cherry-pick through the package of recommendations from the task force rather than implementing a comprehensive plan that would actually work?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, on one hand the member of the opposition wants to provide incentives. On the other hand, the member of the opposition wants to present controls. You cannot have both. If you want to have an increase of rentals, you cannot have regulations that will suffocate growth.

We as a government are dealing with the issues of individuals that have challenges in paying for rent. Mr. Speaker, $285 million of new money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

School Board Deficits

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Education. It is a fact that in Alberta we spend more on education per capita than any other province in Canada, yet I'm concerned when I read that almost half our school boards may be in a deficit position. Now, the minister has said that there were no deficits. The opposition says that over 30 boards show deficits. Who's right? If there are deficits, can the minister explain to this House why school boards are running a deficit when our allocation is the highest in the country?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question because while some 30 school boards, as has been mentioned in this House, are currently running an annual deficit, with the exception of two boards we have accumulated surpluses with those school boards that total about $220 million. The only way that you can access that accumulated surplus is if you run an annual deficit. So to say that the school boards are in a debt position is sort of like you, Mr. Speaker, being a hundred dollars overdrawn in your chequing account and having a thousand dollars in your savings account and saying that you're in debt.

Rev. Abbott: Well, that clears things up a little bit, Mr. Speaker. But to the same minister. Several school boards in my constituency have expressed concern to me that the 3 per cent grant in this year's budget will not meet the demands in their district. Can the minister help me in explaining to my school boards how they can get by on 3 per cent?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we did increase operating grants by 3 per cent over last year. What hasn't been mentioned is the substantial increases that have gone into English as a Second Language programs, early childhood services for mild and moderate disabilities, career and technology funding that has increased substantially, not to mention the $25 million good-faith initiative for recruitment of teachers. So overall our increase, including the in-year funding of last year, is over 5 per cent, and if you take the budget documents that were tabled in this House last year and the exact same budget documents tabled this year, the increase in education spending is almost 10 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very eye-opening. My final supplementary to the same minister. More than 50 school districts in the province are facing salary negotiations with the teachers' union this fall, and again several school districts have expressed concern to me that we may be facing a number of strikes as students head back to school in September. Can the minister tell this House what he plans to do about the situation?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the reason some of the school boards are expressing concerns to the member is because of some of the irresponsible comments that are being made out there by those who are predicting doom and gloom in the labour negotiations before they even start. So I'm confident. I don't believe the majority of teachers in this province want to go on strike, so I would suggest: let's allow the local school boards and the local ATAs to negotiate. Unlike some of the opposition members I'm confident that we're going to have a situation where . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Rental Increases

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week my constituency office received 300 copies – 300 copies – of a land-use framework publication from Sustainable Resource Development. This is a worthwhile exercise which the Official Opposition has been calling for for some time. However, housing affordability is by far the number one issue in Edmonton-Rutherford right now. Landlords are confused about their responsibilities, tenants are panicking, yet when my staff asked for only 50 copies of the task force report on housing, we were informed by Municipal Affairs that we could only have five because of printing costs. That's simply not enough to meet the demand. My question is for the Premier. What immediate steps are you taking to alleviate the confusion and chaos that your government has created by mishandling its response to the task force recommendations? Can we get some more copies of the report?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no question that there is confusion being sown by some people in this House. There's absolutely no question. The intention of this government has been very clear from the start. We will help the people that we are obligated to help, the people that need our help. We have responded in a very responsible manner to the report, and I can assure the hon. member that we will personally send over as many copies as he would like to his office should he bring it the attention of our office.

Mr. R. Miller: We already asked, and they said no. I will table the document later, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, Marilyn Sjulstad is in the public gallery today. She is on AISH, a widow on a fixed income. Her survivor income is deducted from her AISH funds dollar for dollar. Her apartment rent has increased $230 in the last nine months, and she fully expects that there will be another substantial increase soon. She's asked for and received the subsidized housing application forms from Capital Housing; however, she's worried because friends have told her that she has too much money in the bank, and her car is too new to receive the subsidy. Marilyn has written a question for the Premier, and it is this: what is your government going to do about the outrageous rent increases that people are dealing with?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we are bringing forward legislation – I'm sure we're going to debate it this week – about putting stability into the number of rent increases that anyone is subject to. If the lady has already received a rent increase this year, then she won't be worried about another increase for at least a year, which does give her an opportunity and every Albertan a chance to plan their response to the particular situation they're in.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, Janis Stewart writes the following: living on a fixed income in a modest Edmonton apartment building in the vicinity of her terminally ill parent, having chronic illness, and confronting negligible accommodation options, she has been penalized with two rent increases in the past six months that make a total of more than 20 per cent. Her question for the Premier: will the hon. Premier reconsider his decision, which directly contributes to expanding the divide between the advantaged and disadvantaged Albertans, and impose a ceiling to allowable rent increases?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's kind of strange that we're being accused of living in our political ideology that doesn't allow us to see their political ideology. The biggest difference is that ours works, and their's doesn't. We have history on our side.

We've got the simple facts that this government isn't ready to say to people: we're going to take what's yours without compensation. We're going to try and deal with those, and we'll be happy to. Like the hon. minister said yesterday, don't just bring it up here and grandstand and thump the desk. Bring the name forward, and let the different ministers responsible help the people when they need help instead of keeping the information on their desk until they can stand here and try and show Albertans that they really care when, in fact, obviously, the way they treat the people and grandstand is irresponsible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Crown Prosecutors

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent media story suggested a concern about the high workload and low level of experience of Alberta's Crown prosecutors. My questions are all for the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell me if there is cause for concern?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the outset let me say that, in fact, our Crown prosecutors are under significant pressure. We would like our average level of experience to be greater than it is, but let's put it in context. Alberta Justice is the largest law firm in the province. We have about 400 lawyers, 250 of whom are Crown prosecutors, and like all businesses in the province, we are fighting with the market to attract and retain good candidates. At this point in time, however, all of our Crown prosecutors are professionals, and the average experience level is 11 years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you tell us why the workload of Crown prosecutors in Alberta is so high?

Mr. Stevens: In 2004, when I became the Minister of Justice, the Crown prosecutors had the second highest level of workload in the country. The number of files has increased since that point in time. The complexity of the files has increased as a result of organized crime, as a result of Internet crime, as a result of economic crime, and also as a result of increased Charter defences. But what we are doing is addressing that. Over the last two years we've increased the number of prosecutors by 25, and we also have in this year's budget an additional 10. I can tell you also, Mr. Speaker, that we are in the process of taking a look at our pay schedule and benefits with respect to the Crown.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: can the minister tell us if this issue is placing the administration of justice in Alberta at risk?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I'm aware of absolutely no significant cases which have been impacted as a result of this particular matter. In fact, the Crown continues to have a very good success rate with respect to the prosecution, and there have been a number of significant cases in recent history where we have been successful, which have been on the front pages of our newspapers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government continues to defend what most Albertans see as a failure to address the affordable housing crisis. Simply throwing lots of money at a problem will not fix it. There needs to be a plan, and integral to that plan are solutions to short-term rent gouging that our constituents are faced with. Delores Austin has seen her rent increase by over $200 a year. Renate Van Dorsser is looking at a $300 increase. The list goes on and on, from seniors to students to families just trying to get by. They want answers, and they're watching. To the Premier: why is the government not helping decent, hard-working Albertans keep their homes in this out-of-control market by implementing temporary rent guidelines limiting the percentage that rents can go up by? Why? And what exactly is this $285 million that the government keeps talking about? How is going to be split up, and what exactly is it going to pay for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

An Hon. Member: Great question.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and it is a good question. The $285 million is new money: $100 million for the new municipal sustainability housing program – this is all increases, by the way – $96 million in enhanced capital to increase affordable housing units, a $13 million increase for homeless support, a $3 million increase for provincial homeless initiative, a $14.3 million increase for rent supplement programs, a $4.3 million increase for housing providers and special-purpose housing, $45 million allocated to Wood Buffalo in response to the Radke report, $7 million to the new homeless and eviction fund, $2.5 million for the new Alberta transition housing initiative, and . . .

The Speaker: And we'll go on.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 15, 2006, this Premier issued a so-called mandate letter to his new Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing outlining priorities and setting out the Premier's expectations of his new housing minister and his conduct. In terms of the housing crisis the letter included only one directive: to establish a housing task force to develop a plan to increase the availability of affordable housing. That was it. Obviously, the Premier feels that this has been accomplished, even if most Albertans feel differently and even though the minister came up with a plan that ignored over half of the recommendations of his own task force. To the Premier: are you satisfied with your housing minister's performance on this issue? Are you comfortable defending his and your entire government's way of handling this file in general and this housing crisis in particular? Are you comfortable with his performance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I need to say that, yes, in the mandate letter one of the mandates was to establish a housing task force. The mandate letter does not suggest that we should establish a housing task force and do nothing about it. The focus of the government with the $285 million did exactly that. We took the housing task force and looked at the primary recommendations, and we have addressed them. So if the member opposite would look at the housing task force, look at what the primary recommendations were . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thirty-eight of the 52 recommendations, Mr. Speaker, were ignored. Thirty-eight.

No matter what we hear on the government side, there is no denying that thousands of Albertans feel that this government has failed them, people like Pat and James Arnott and Marilyn Caskey from Edmonton-McClung, who are in the gallery today. One sentence in the housing minister's mandate letter reads: "We need to be out from behind our desks, listening to what is truly important to Albertans." Well, we all know that the Premier listened to the Tory party faithful at the convention on the weekend when they rejected calls to protect renters. Given the massive Public Affairs Bureau, which answers to the Premier, will the Premier now try to listen to Albertans at large, who may not necessarily share the views of his party or caucus, and instruct the Public Affairs Bureau to immediately seek Albertans' public opinion on this issue, ask if temporary rent guidelines should be brought in, and ask whether the public approves of how you guys handled this situation?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we just had a large gathering of our party members. They overwhelmingly said: "We respect what happened. We know that short-term solutions aren't the answer to this, that increasing capacity of all kinds of housing is really the only financially and morally responsible solution to what we face."

You know, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre said what a terrible thing it was that rents were going up in downtown Edmonton. Compared to the cities around the world, to have a vibrant and active and expanding downtown centre is a good thing. Most of them have been abandoned. Alberta has created an opportunity for many cities to expand and to have their downtowns vibrant. I, unfortunately, live in her riding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Homeless and Eviction Fund

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we heard the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry tell the House that the homeless and eviction fund will help people facing eviction because of huge rent increases. Well, we took the minister's advice and called 1-866-644-5135 about this fund, and we were told – I actually would like to play the recording, but I know I wouldn't get away with it. The minister would like to know. Let me quote. This is the answer given with that phone number: currently there is no way to access anything yet; they're working on it, and that's about all I can tell you. We asked when the fund would be ready and were told: unfortunately, they don't give us a time frame. Now, my question to the minister is simply this: why would the minister mislead thousands of renters facing eviction by promising funds that weren't there?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, clearly, I also indicated that if people had difficulty, they could go to any of 59 offices or call any of 59 offices in Alberta and speak to them. We've been working on the guidelines with our ministry of municipal affairs and also our own ministry. We're on the threshold of announcing exactly how they would apply.

Let's take a look at the other fund we have in place. Mr. Speaker, for those that are low-income, when I spoke in this House about a hundred million dollars that is available to provide housing assistance, there is already a program in place. The fund that is going to be established is for those that are . . .

The Speaker: I have to call on the hon. member now. Hon. member, please.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the government's own phone number that this minister quoted. There are thousands of Albertans facing a crisis. When they make a call and something like this happens, how can the government have any credibility? How can this minister have any credibility when she stands up in this House and says to phone this number and that's the type of message that they get?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, a previous questioner highlighted the same issue, and I have been asking our staff to immediately look into why that answer was given. What I can say to Albertans is that we hope that by at least Friday everybody will have an understanding of what the criteria are and know how it will be administered. The one point that I want to make quite clearly is that for those that are actually low-income, there is a fund that is well understood. This new fund on homeless and eviction is a fund that we have to be very clear is not intended to trespass onto the other particular fund. We will make it very clear how that fund will be expended this week.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that she didn't know. So this government is totally incompetent. They can't even plan their own eviction fund. When they stand up in the House and tell people to call, that's the type of message that they give. This eviction fund is something that came from the task force, but it was part of having rent guidelines in place. All this eviction fund is going to be is a supplement for landlords. Would the minister acknowledge that?

Ms Evans: No, I will not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Highway 13

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday, April 20, about 80 people showed up for a meeting in the little town of Rosalind. Those concerned citizens were there to find out about the timelines for fixing the atrocious conditions of highway 13 from Killam to Legacy Junction outside of Camrose. That major provincial artery is hardly passable in the rain because of the ruts worn in the road, and most ambulances avoid the road altogether when possible because it's rough enough to endanger the health of sensitive patients being transported to Camrose. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: when will this road be fixed to the standards of a major provincial artery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for his question because this is a very, very serious issue. My department is very aware of the problems with highway 13. We are in the process of purchasing the right-of-way right now to do the eventual widening and reconstruction of the road. While this project is not in our current year's plan right now, we are taking the initial steps towards improving the program right away.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it was brought to my attention by a staff member of the department that the minister confirmed to the county of Camrose that there could be done a rut fill and thin lift overlay as a temporary solution to make the road tolerable and passable until such time as the necessary re-engineering and development of the road could be completed. My constituents would like to know: when can this important rut fill and thin lift overlay be completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, our plan is to try to get the rut fill done for sure this year and the thin overlay if possible. If not, it will be on our priority list for next year. In the meantime, as soon as the weather permits, our maintenance contractor is going to be out there doing whatever he can to get the ruts out of the road now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure me and my constituents that performing the temporary measure of a rut fill and thin lift overlay will not delay the major construction work of widening the road and rebuilding the base, that is so desperately needed to bring the road up to its proper status as a major provincial transportation artery?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the rut fill is actually the first phase of the construction. It will not delay the eventual widening and reconstruction. The fill and overlay are meant to give motorists a better road surface until we can get the major project done, and it will have no effect on the timing of getting the major project done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Jim Sexsmith is an 80-year-old veteran seated in the members' gallery who is still very active in my constituency. He's always advocating for the underdog. If he feels that there's an injustice, he always complains about it. He writes letters, e-mails, makes phone calls to try to sort things out. Now that his rent has increased 20 per cent, he's advocating for this government to do something. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: what does the minister have to say to Jim, who is afraid that he will have nowhere to live?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has responded to the housing task force and the recommendations that were made by that housing task force. [interjections] I hear some comments from members opposite. There were, of course, some recommendations that weren't accepted. Those recommendations were not accepted because they were already being done. I want to say that we do have in place the support for those individuals.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister. Jim has lived in the same apartment for 19 years, but he cannot afford to pay an extra $125 per month and cannot find an affordable housing option with an elevator to accommodate his disability. How does the government's policy help Jim today?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know Jim's individual situation, but as I have said in this House before, we do have a program of rent supplement to try to address those concerns. So I ask that Jim contact either my office or 422-0122, which is the rent supplement program, and we would very much try to deal with his concerns.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister again: can the minister tell Jim how this government's policies will relieve the stress, uncertainty, and burden of moving for seniors and people with disabilities?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would love to be able to help him to the best of my ability. If he will contact our office, I would be very happy to try to deal with his challenges.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Drug Treatment Courts

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Illegal drugs and alcohol addiction not only affect public safety, but they place a significant economic burden on all segments of society. Drug-related crime cannot be reduced without first addressing underlying addictions. By emphasizing treatment rather than incarceration, drug treatment courts can significantly reduce the tremendous burden of substance abuse and its related health/socioeconomic costs on society. A pilot drug treatment court was launched in Edmonton in March 2005, and the pilot was a success and resulted in cost savings. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. How does this minister propose that judges in this province will actually decide who needs access to drug treatment as a provision of incarceration, and will a professional needs assessment take place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, solutions to substance abuse are very complex, and one of the promising areas that we're working on are these pilot drug courts, particularly the one in Edmonton. The situation is that those who get into the program basically have an alternative to incarceration. If the treatment is completed, those who complete the program end up with a criminal record but do not serve jail time. The people who are selected for this particular program are carefully screened. First of all, they must apply. The files are reviewed by federal and provincial prosecutors to see if the offenders do in fact qualify. The eligibility criteria for participation include that the crime committed was not violent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Drug treatment courts have the potential to facilitate timely treatment responses to individuals with substance abuse problems. Research tells us that drug courts have experienced varied success in terms of long-term outcomes for participants and that there is also limited information available on the cost-effectiveness of this intervention. Again to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: from this minister's experience what have the major issues across the country been with respect to drug treatment courts, and are these issues being addressed adequately in Alberta?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, basically the question is whether or not they're effective. I think that the important information I need to get before you and the members of the House is the eligibility with respect to the matter. First of all, those who get into the program are ones where the crime committed was not violent, did not involve children, and the offender is not associated with a gang. In addition, an addiction assessment must be completed before the application is approved, and the assessment determines that if the crime was motivated by addiction, it could be prevented in the future if that addiction is not present.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Solutions to substance abuse are complex and need to include promising alternatives such as drug treatment courts. However, experience in the field of drug treatment is a primary focus here. Historically AADAC has provided treatment to individuals referred through the regular court system and now provides specialized addictions treatment to those identified through the Edmonton drug treatment court. Could the Minister of Justice and Attorney General please expand on the role an agency such as AADAC or other organizations would have in the preliminary development of a drug treatment court and in implementation?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we have the benefit of AADAC, which has experience in excess of 50 years. In other jurisdictions the communities, in fact, establish a specific program for these courts. Here in Alberta we get to use AADAC and the services that they have. That obviously enhances the effective nature of this. There's no doubt that the use of existing community facilities in courts like drug courts or other specialty courts is absolutely essential in those courts being effective.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 84 questions and answers today.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am actually continuing to table some signatures from all over the province – today it's 419 – calling on the government to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Thank you.

head:

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. leader of the third party, you have a tabling?

Mr. Mason: I do, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I would like to table excerpts from the 2006 annual report of Boardwalk Real Estate Investment Trust. The report trumpets the opportunity for rental increases because of Alberta's distorted housing market.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from Giancarlo Grande of Edmonton. He is writing because he's concerned about rental increases. "For myself the rising rents are causing me great amounts of stress because I live off of AISH."

The second letter is from Linton Delainey. He's sending two letters, one to the Premier and one to Edmonton Mayor Mandel, indicating the urgent need for a province-wide regional governance plan as outlined in the report from the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of the proposal to build a huge 2,800 square foot fab shop in Tofield – this is going to employ over 2,000 temporary foreign workers – and its project profile. I would urge all hon. members to have a look at this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence between the constituency office of Edmonton-Rutherford and the office of the manager of the secretariat of the Affordable Housing Task Force, Municipal Affairs and Housing, where Edmonton-Rutherford asked for 50 copies of the housing task force report, and we were told that we could only have five. I look forward to the reversal of that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a single tabling today, which is a letter to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing responding to the defamatory comments he made to me in this House yesterday. In the letter I reference the attachment of Sessional Paper 331/2007, a letter I wrote to both the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry and to him on April 24, '07, on behalf of my Calgary-Varsity constituents, seeking financial information.

Mr. Speaker, I will continue to forcefully advocate for my constituents . . .

The Speaker: Okay. That's fine.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually have several tablings. The first one is the Canadian Housing Observer report on average rents for two-bedroom apartments for the period '92 to 2005, detailing the Canadian average province by province and for the major metropolitan areas.

The second one is two pages from Rental Market Report: Alberta Highlights, released in December 2006 by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The first one talks about the vacancy rates by apartment type or bedroom type in Alberta's major centres in 2005 and 2006. Then the second one shows the average rental cost, again in the major centres and again by bedroom type, in '05 and '06.

The third one is a letter from Edmonton-McClung constituent Delores Austin, who is here today, talking about rental costs being out of reach for most of the working public and certainly for low-income families on assistance.

My fourth one is another letter from another constituent, Marilyn Caskey, who is here again today, addressed to the minister of municipal affairs and asking: what are people supposed to do in the meantime while waiting for new affordable housing units to be built?

The fifth tabling is a letter from another constituent, Roberta Baert, calling for help from the Premier for people on fixed incomes such as seniors – and she is one herself – indicating that without a percentage cap on allowable rent increases . . .

The Speaker: Let's just table and move on, okay?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Elsalhy: I have two more.

The Speaker: Well, fine. I'm recognizing now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. I'll come back to you later if you've got some more.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table two sets of documents. One is a project description of the South Meager geothermal project from Western GeoPower Corp., which could in the near future provide power to 80,000 households in western Canada.

The second is Technologies & Applications in geothermal from Natural Resources Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table five copies today of a document which outlines the accumulated operating surplus of Alberta school boards as of August 31, 2006.

I also want to table five copies of a letter to Mr. Frank Bruseker, the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the response to Written Question 11.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you indeed, Mr. Speaker. I have my two last ones. A handwritten letter from constituent James Arnott blames the government for creating this overheated housing market and refusing to do anything to assist renters. He questions why the Tories are so reluctant to impose rent controls.

The last one is another handwritten letter, from Pat Arnott, questioning: how many people does the term "Alberta boom" apply to? She calls it "a gold rush to poverty." She actually highlights how her rent has increased and the limited income that she is on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister challenged the opposition to share these letters and stories. Mr. Minister, consider yourself served.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

The Speaker: I'm going to remind hon. members again that when it comes to tablings, this is one of the few jurisdictions anywhere that uses the British parliamentary model that allows tablings of documents other than officially, statutorily required documents. We have to be very careful with this privilege that we have in here. It's meant to table and not to editorialize or give a statement with respect to it. The members have an opportunity in the Routine called Members' Statements. If they want to refer to letters that they've tabled in Members' Statements, that's perfectly fine under that two-minute thing, but here it deals with tablings, and brevity would be very much appreciated.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, pursuant to the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta annual report 2006.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Motions

The Clerk: Government Motion 19, the hon. Mr. Hancock.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe we have agreement in the House that the motion that ought to be put today was slightly different than the one I gave notice of motion on. So with the pleasure of the Speaker, I'd like to test that theory by suggesting that the motion should read:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Legislative Assembly convene at 7 p.m. for hours 10 to 12 of Committee of Supply on Tuesday, May 8, and that the ministries called for consideration will now be Treasury Board, Health and Wellness, and Municipal Affairs and Housing; and at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, May 9, 2007, for government business; and that hours 13 to 15 of Committee of Supply, scheduled for the afternoon of Thursday, May 10, 2007, be rescheduled to the afternoon of May 16, 2007; and that a revised Committee of Supply schedule be tabled forthwith.

With the unanimous consent of the House to deal with that, it has the effect of accomplishing what we've discussed, which is to have Committee of Supply this evening be what was intended for tomorrow afternoon, which leaves free tomorrow afternoon and tomorrow evening to debate Bill 34 in second reading and committee and Thursday in the afternoon to hopefully complete committee and perhaps third reading of Bill 34. The Committee of Supply which was previously scheduled for Thursday afternoon would then be held on Wednesday, May 16. There's an afternoon there which will need to be scheduled, and that would be the subject of refile the schedule for Committee of Supply.

With the consent of the House we'll proceed on that motion. Failing that, I will move the government motion in the order that we gave notice and move an amendment.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair has to assume that there has been some discussion among the House leaders with respect to this matter. So the question that the hon. Government House Leader has: oral notice was given yesterday, and then the Order Paper today has a motion. Now the hon. Government House Leader is amending that motion with the request that we have unanimous consent so that we can go forward, but we also have a debatable motion that hon. members might have an option to debate. On the assumption – on the assumption – that there's agreement in the government caucus, agreement in the opposition caucus, agreement in the third party caucus, and agreement from the other two members, the chair could ask for unanimous consent now, but if it isn't given . . .

Mr. Hancock: Then, Mr. Speaker, I'd propose to move forward with the motion at hand.

The Speaker: Well, this is a risky business, if the chair is to call the question for unanimous consent. This matter, by the way, has not been circulated to all members. I assume that all members have seen this. Have all members seen this? Okay. On the assumption that all members have seen this motion of the hon. Government House Leader, is there unanimous consent to move to approve Government Motion 19 as amended?

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Then, Government House Leader.

Evening Sitings on May 8 and 9

19. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Legislative Assembly convene at 8 p.m. for night sittings on Tuesday, May 8, and Wednesday, May 9, 2007.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion. Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, do you want to participate?

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to propose an amendment to the motion, and I have a written copies of the amendment if I could ask one of the pages to circulate them if necessary.

The Speaker: Yes. We'll need that. You can read it into the record as it's being circulated to all members.

Mr. Renner: I move that Government Motion 19 be amended as follows:

- (a) by striking out "8 p.m. for night sittings on Tuesday, May 8," and substituting "7 p.m. for hours 10 to 12 of Committee of Supply on Tuesday, May 8, and that the ministries called for consideration will now be Treasury Board, Health and Wellness, and Municipal Affairs and Housing";
- (b) by striking out "and Wednesday, May 9, 2007," and substituting "convene at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, May 9, 2007, for government business";
- (c) by adding the following after "government business":
"; that hours 13 to 15 of Committee of Supply, scheduled for the afternoon of Thursday, May 10, 2007, be rescheduled to the afternoon of May 16, 2007; and that a revised Committee of Supply schedule be tabled forthwith."

The Speaker: We will await the circulation of this amendment before proceeding so that all members will know exactly what it is.

Well, hon. members, we have an amendment to a motion, and it's a debatable amendment. Is there anyone who would like to participate in the debate on the amendment?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it was interesting, I thought, that the agreement that had been reached between the three official parties in the House was not agreed to by the House, which requires unanimous consent. I think it's important to say that all members of this House are important and need to be consulted when arrangements are made.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I do want to indicate just a concern at how quickly we have reverted to the old ways of doing things and having debates into the evening. I know that we had agreed as an interim measure to have evening sittings to help deal with the question of the estimates, and we agreed to that and certainly would honour that.

I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that the question of Bill 34 is something that needs a little bit of comment. This is a very, very important bill. It's very critical at this point. It's a very hot public issue now, and I certainly think that it's a matter of considerable urgency for many Albertans who are caught in a very difficult time. It is my view that that bill ought to be debated thoroughly and with full opportunity from all members of the House to participate and for amendments to come forward and receive due consideration. I think it's less than desirable to be having a debate on that bill late into the evenings, when the people who are affected by it are asleep in their beds, presuming that they have beds.

I will not oppose the motion, but I do want to indicate that I think it's very important that we recognize that this bill needs full debate in the light of day and under the scrutiny of the public, and I object to any suggestion that it should be dealt with in very late sittings.

We apparently had got past that and had made decisions that it would not be needed. If the government had been on top of this issue and was well organized, I don't think that it would have been necessary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair has before himself an amendment. There's nothing in here about any bill, so relevancy in this discussion is also important. We're dealing with the amendment.

Would anybody else like to participate in this amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now, should we call the question on the motion as amended?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: No one wishes to participate, then? Okay.

[Government Motion 19 as amended carried unanimously]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Before I call on the hon. minister of municipal affairs to start, I just want to clarify for all the members: I'm circulating Committee of Supply rules for the opposition parties for members on the floor. I'll read it into the record, and you'll be getting a copy.

It's my understanding that the House leaders have reached an agreement, or at least there's no opposition by members of the government, to have opposition caucus staff members on the floor of the Chamber during consideration of departmental estimates. As a result, I'd like to outline the rules which will govern the admission of caucus staff to the floor of the Assembly during Committee of Supply.

Only ongoing staff employed on behalf of a caucus by the Legislative Assembly Office will be provided with this privilege. I sincerely hope that we will not be asked to interpret the understanding of this last statement. Opposition staff may advise and sit next to or behind the opposition critics; however, they may not speak on the member's behalf or participate in the debate nor respond in any way to the words being spoken in debate.

Officials must meet the accepted dress standard for access to the Chamber. Use of cellular phones is prohibited, but officials may use laptop computers or PDAs in support of their members. Access to the Internet or Legislative Assembly intranet will not be provided. Any official occupying the chair of a member who wishes to address the committee must yield the seat immediately to that member. Each caucus must provide on one day's notice in writing the names and job titles of the officials to be admitted to the Assembly floor to the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly, with a copy to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

This matter is being dealt with as an administrative interpretation by the Speaker as there is no provision in the Standing Orders to allow participation by opposition officials in the employ of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on the floor of the Assembly. Standing Order 59.01(3) provides admission to the floor solely for officials of the government. Should a member raise a point of order or a point of privilege with respect to this interpretation, it is probable that the ruling would be in favour of the point raised, and Official Opposition officials would be unable to be on the floor. Needless to say, this procedural matter would be best accommodated by an additional clause in the Standing Orders which would permit such.

So that's basically it. If there are any questions on that, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Chair. Are you suggesting, then, that we can't bring our staff in today, that we have to have 24 hours' notice, so we can't start this until tomorrow?

The Chair: If you have a list of the staff that would be brought on, that would be fine.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thanks. So I can, in fact, have a list for today, give it to you, and then away we go.

The Chair: Right.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Mr. Chairman, just one small nit-picking detail, but there actually isn't a House leaders' agreement. I just simply indicated that if the opposition wishes to request, I wouldn't object.

The Chair: Yes, I did point that out. I said that at least there was no opposition from the Government House Leader that I was aware of.

Mr. Hancock: Also, I might indicate, Mr. Chairman, that as a result of this afternoon's question period, at which time there were a number of people in the galleries and members of the opposition asking questions and asking if the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing would meet with them and he'd said that he would, apparently 30 of them have shown up in his office. So I've indicated to the members opposite that we'll have to reverse the order of appearance today. The Minister of Health and Wellness will go first, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing will go second.

The Chair: All right. Then if that's all right, I will recognize the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

Health and Wellness

Mr. Hancock: I made opening remarks on the record the other day, and I'm sure that the hon. members have had an opportunity to peruse them, so rather than take more time, I'll just avail myself of any questions that they might have to ask.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I start the discussion today with Health, I would say to the House leader that, you know, we planned for one thing and we got another. The minister should have known that he has a responsibility here. So, I mean, it just seems like disorganization. Now we have to scramble in our times. I hope that the message is very clear to the government that this is not the way to do business.

Mr. Chairman, to switch gears and go to health, I want to talk about . . .

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you rising on a point of order?

Point of Order

Order of Business

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Chairman, if the opposition wants to insist on the order – I mean, they're the ones who asked the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to meet with the 30 people. If the member wants to insist on proceeding in the previous order, I'll have someone go down to the minister's office and indicate that the opposition would rather that he not meet with the people he sent down there and that he should get up here as early as possible. I'm entirely at his disposal.

Mr. Martin: It was not us that asked for the meeting, Mr. Chairman. It was the other opposition party.

The Chair: Please, hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Okay. We're here. We're ready to go. So let's move on. The point's been made.

The Chair: Could you direct your comments through the chair, please.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. Sorry. Are we ready, Mr. Chair, to go now?

The Chair: Are you ready to proceed on Health and Wellness?

Mr. Martin: Yes, I am.

The Chair: Okay. Then proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Martin: Okay. Mr. Chairman, I'd like to move into sort of staffing, to begin with. There's a myriad of issues, obviously, that we're facing in an overheated economy. We talk about housing, health care, education, but certainly the overheated economy is creating pressures, to put it bluntly, in terms of health care. There's no doubt about that. We were supposed to have had a framework for the health workforce plan that's been promised to us for a long time, Mr. Chairman, and I'm now told that it's off somewhere down the line.

The reason I bring this up is because it ties into the questions that the minister – and thanks for getting back on these written questions. When we asked about the sick leave taken by registered nurses and LPNs, there were some very startling figures there, as the minister is well aware, especially, I noticed, in Calgary: almost double. I would suggest that the problem that we're facing in the health field is that it's sort of overstressed, overworked, and can't keep up. In Calgary we're dealing with code burgundies. It's the same situation in Edmonton, and we know what's happening in other places.

I'm not sure that there's an easy answer to this particular dilemma, but the task force, the health workforce plan, was to give us some suggestions about that. I think that, probably, it doesn't look very good. Now, I know that the minister will say: it's not just here in Alberta; I was just at a conference, and we have a problem with the health workers right across the country, perhaps in the world. Well, I don't know how we're going to deal with this. We had the cuts in the mid-90s. We were catching up there, and now we've got the influx of population that we've talked about. It's a very dangerous situation.

You know, we had the example today. The Cross Cancer Institute responded and I think in a meaningful way to the problems that they faced. Whether that was overwork or not, I guess that one could speculate on the human error there. But the short question that I have is: when can we expect the health workforce plan to come forward? It's been vague in question period before.

The other thing that I would like to ask flowing from that has to do with the announcement of the nursing spaces. A lot of the hype that went on with the two ministers was on how many more nursing spaces were being created in postsecondary education, and I know that it involved both the minister of advanced ed and this minister, but when we looked at it and had some people check into it, the announcement really created only 76 new spaces in the next little while. Now, I'm glad that there are 76 more spaces, but when we talk about the problems that we're facing, that is not going to do it. Now, I'm not sure that there's an easy answer to this question. There probably isn't, but it's a serious one in our health care system.

Now, the minister has dealt with the doctors. I was at the news conference. There were $8,000 bonuses to stay and that sort of thing. It seems that that's what they felt was needed to deal with doctors. Even then they say that there probably won't be enough. As he knows, they're having trouble getting people into family practice, and that's a very dangerous situation too.

So there are a myriad of problems dealing with staffing, Mr. Chairman. I would like to come back to the workforce and see where that is so we can take a look at it and see how serious the problem is and ask the minister: when is that report due, and more importantly, what are we going to do about a very serious situation with the health workers right across the area? There are a number of other things that we'll go into, but I think that the workforce – here's the quote I wanted, Mr. Chairman. When the minister of advanced education and the health minister talked about 467 spaces, that will actually lead to only 77 new graduates in four years because a lot of it was degree granting and the rest of it. So it seems to me that, again, it's good that we're going to have 77 new spaces, but it's not going to be nearly enough to deal with the job. So maybe we can start there, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hancock: In fact, Mr. Chairman, that is a very good place to start because it is one of the essential issues with respect to Health and Wellness as we move forward, particularly recognizing that it's not just about acute care, although acute care is extremely important. It's about making sure that we have the health care professionals available in the community to assist Albertans who have taken responsibility for their health and their health status. So working towards making better use is the first piece of the workforce strategy.

The member will be pleased to know that I'm meeting with my colleagues the Minister of Employment, Industry and Immigration and the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology tomorrow morning on the finalization of the workforce strategy which we're bringing forward. So it is imminent that the workforce strategy will be forwarded. We published a version of it on the 13th of April when we met with stakeholders and discussed that, and we've taken the opportunity to revise it, to put more context around it as was asked for. We're meeting again, as I say, tomorrow to see if it's in a final form to take forward through a government process and then bring out as the actual workforce strategy and action plan. But it's a very good place to start.

Again, I want to emphasize primary care. Making best use of the health care professionals we have is the best place to start. The hon. member mentioned overstress and overwork and not being able to keep up. Those are very important elements. Some of it is about supply, about having more people, no question about that, and I'll get to that, but part of it is about working smarter, about having the right tools and the right technologies available so people can be as productive as possible and the right teams together so that they can use the talents that they have most productively. One of the key elements in that is the primary care networks where teams of not just doctors but doctors, nurses, dieticians, physiotherapists, pharmacists, and other health care professionals can work together and work in a team effort to deal with some of those issues that come from stress. But there's no question that in certain areas – emergencies would be a classic example – there undoubtedly is stress because of the workload that's there.

So it's not just the rebalancing of effort, although that's a very important part. It's not just addressing the workplace needs to make sure that there's a safe workplace so that we can get the best value for the people that are there and make it possible for them to be excited about getting up and going to work every day rather than feeling stressed about it. That's very important. The retention piece is important. Actually, across the workforce, for example, the retention rate of physicians in rural communities is currently 94 per cent over three years and 91 per cent over five years. So something is working in that respect. Some of the things that we're doing are being very successful.

We have I believe the number was an increase of 245 physicians last year. Other jurisdictions are very envious of the fact that we were able to attract new physicians to the province. Now, is it enough? Not yet, so we're still working at that. The retention bonuses that we talked about with respect to doctors are a very important part of keeping older doctors, people who have been serving for a longer period of time, in the workforce until we can bring in the supplementary resources, the new people.

Since 2000 Alberta Advanced Education has increased health program spaces by more than 4,500 spaces. The hon. member references a number of 76 with respect to nursing. I think that maybe he's overlooking the value of some of the newer type of programs. For example, the University of Alberta – and he may wish to ask the minister of advanced education about this – with the spaces awarded to them, will be offering an after-degree program where actually you can bring nurses on more quickly if you start with somebody who already has a degree. Then it's basically a two-year program to get the after-degree program, which will allow them to get into nursing more quickly. So it expands the spaces there.

We're moving towards recruitment. You know, I'm always concerned about the idea that you're recruiting somebody else's health care professionals because they need them too, but to the extent that Alberta is an attractive place for people, and they want to come here, we should make it easier for them to move through the credentialing process and get them into practising their profession as quickly as they can. So we're working as part of the workforce strategy to deal with the question of credentialing, of professional credentials, to make sure that that's handled more effectively than it is now. For example, on physicians we're using, at least it seems to me, more part 5 exemptions so that you attract somebody in so they can begin to practise and then get the balance of their credentials in place.

So the workforce strategy is about retaining our existing workforce, making sure that they are as productive as possible, using the full extent of their training and expertise. We're adding different modalities of health delivery like Telehealth, for example, so we can use older nurses who might have otherwise retired. Nursing used to be a young person's profession. Now older people are in the profession, but we can use some of those people in a better way, on telehealth for example, so that they can provide advice in that manner. That's proved a very effective way of dealing with certain elements of health service delivery. The Capital Health Link, for example, has proved very effective at reducing some of the increased demand on emergencies.

So you can take some of the talents that we have that otherwise would have been lost to us and keep them in the process in a productive way. They feel valued, they are valued in the process, and they're adding service to Albertans by changing the way we practise, by using technology better, by addressing those workforce issues, the very workforce issues you're talking about, which are the stress and strain issues, which lose us valuable people because of sickness or strain or stress. It's the retention of our existing workforce. It's making it possible for our existing workforce health care professionals and technologists to practise to the full extent of their capability and expertise.

So I don't argue about how many doctors we need, for example. Some people would say that we need 1,500; some people say that we need 1,100. I know that we need more doctors, but we don't need as many as some people think because there are other ways of using health care professionals better.

That means we also have to be conscious of the people who help, and one of the areas that the hon. member didn't mention is personal care aides. That's an area, quite frankly, where we really need to do some work about recruiting people who can come and fill in in the caring and on the line working with people with personal care. That's a critical element.

So that comes to the third piece, recruiting; the first being retention, growing our own the second. We have to go abroad and recruit people to come to Alberta to fill some of those jobs that are not going to be filled in any other way. We have to be careful and do it in a moral and effective way. We're not stealing other people's professionals that they need. But in areas where there is a surplus – for example, in Britain, apparently, there are 10 applications for every physician position – well, we should go and let them know, and we have gone to let them know, that there are opportunities here. In other parts of the world where there are people who are surplus to their needs, we should be letting them know the opportunity that's here. That's what we are doing, and that's what we plan to continue to do.

We do need to recruit people who are not at the professional level yet. Hopefully, with the new agreements with the federal government with respect to immigration we'll be able to make opportunities available for people who want to come and provide the care needs in our primary care centres, in our long-term care centres, or even personal attendants. One of the concerns in an economy like we have: as the wage levels go up, we have to deal with the question of paying a fair wage, obviously, but we also have to make sure that we can recruit people into those areas and make sure that they have the proper competencies.

So the workforce strategy is a multirange of strategies relative to promoting the opportunity for health care professionals to have a good opportunity to use their skills to their maximum, to feel valued in the workplace, and to support them with the proper technologies and support that they need so that they do want to get up and come to work every day, about providing spaces so that our Alberta students can get the credentials they need to participate fully in that workforce, and about bringing more people to the workforce in Alberta where appropriate.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, I have had a request by the ND opposition to have a staff member, a research assistant, allowed on the floor of the Assembly. It requires one day's notice according to the Speaker's ruling that I had just passed out, but because it was just passed out, there was no opportunity for one day's notice. So I'm going to ask for unanimous consent to allow it for today. If there are any in opposition, say so now.

Seeing none, I would allow your researcher to be on the floor.

I would just also point out Standing Order 59.01(1)(b): every member has a chance to speak for no more than 10 minutes. However, I sensed some eagerness on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to want to get involved in the discussion before the minister's time was up. You may combine your times for back-and-forth discussion, provided you both agree to combine your times for 20 minutes, but you have to notify the chair to do so.

So I would recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you. We'll see where it goes, Mr. Chairman.

I just want to follow up on the staffing because I think it is a serious problem. When I look at the figures – and I take it they're right because they came from your department in a written question – we show that Calgary nurses took over 55,000 sick days; Edmonton nurses, over 47,000; and LPNs, over 12,000. When I look at the Calgary situation, where it's almost double, I think we have a problem.

The minister talks about – and I agree. I'm not disagreeing with almost everything that the minister said about moving towards primary care. The community clinics were experimented with by Saskatchewan in Prince Albert and places like that many years ago, and they've had a lot of experience. I think it's the way to go, absolutely the right way to go.

I was at a conference on Thursday and Friday in Regina, and there were people talking about phase 2 of medicare, obviously people like Roy Romanow and Stephen Lewis, Allen Blakeney, Shirley Douglas, people that have a vested interest about it. [interjection] Yeah, well, they'd know a lot more about it than you sitting back there. That's for sure.

Mr. Dunford: I don't think so. I was born in it. I've been in it all my life.

Mr. Martin: Were you? I thought you were hatched over there.

Mr. Dunford: Swift Current health region.

Mr. Martin: Well, I'll talk to the minister. He gets a little excited, that guy back there.

They had the nurses' federation and people working in the health care field there. The point that they were making – it's not just an Alberta phenomenon, obviously – is that even talking about moving to primary care and community clinics would probably require more people rather than less, outside of the doctors, you know, so it's not going to be a quick fix. I agree with the approach. It absolutely makes the most sense, the most possible sense, but I just say that it's still going to be very difficult to get the number of people to provide it. If there are doctors and they have extra people in Breton, fine, or wherever we can get them, but all provinces are going to be faced with each other.

I know that it's becoming a bit of a disadvantage here when we talk about housing for nurses and people like nurses and teachers and other health professionals. When they can't afford to buy a house here, that's not exactly going to be something that sells. I know that in Saskatchewan they've had some success at bringing people in because of the housing prices. So it's a difficulty that we have to deal with that has to do with the pace of development, Mr. Chairman.

I want to also look at another part of the workforce that, I take it, we're going to be talking about, and it's the other part of the questions. Again, I thank the minister for giving us this information.

Mental health – and that was also brought up at this conference – is a growing problem. The minister has alluded to it. He knows it. When I look at the amount of work we want to do – and we have a bill. I'll get the number of the bill: Bill 31. It's one thing to get people into treatment, but we have to have the people there to treat them. When I look at the 17 regional health authorities in Alberta, which amalgamated into eight larger regions, the important thing here is the number of psychiatrists: 318 for the province. Peace River has one psychiatrist available. Now, I know there are other people that can deal with some of these things, but we do need the psychiatrists overseeing it. So I guess I'm asking a little more about the framework, what the minister sees happening in the mental health area, Mr. Chairman.

I want to come back and suggest with the primary care, that the minister talked about – and I'd take it even further than what we were thinking about with primary care. I think that the minister has alluded to community clinics, health care professionals working together, other health care professionals, whether they're psychiatrists or whether they're social workers or whatever, that they work together in community clinics. Does the minister actually believe that that would take less staff or more? Is that part of the framework? Are we looking at community clinics dealing with that situation?

The last thing I would like to get from the minister – and I know I couldn't quite understand. It's gone to the policy committee. I don't know what that means. I mean, we're not behind the framework because then I think that we can sit down, take a look at it, know exactly what the department is saying is going to happen. I take it that they're trying to be futuristic looking at it, where they're going to get these people, all the discussions that we're having here. The minister can appreciate that we've been a little impatient because we've been expecting this report for a fair length of time, and now it's going through some process. Can he at least allude to some of the things that we might be looking at and try to give us – I'm not holding him to an exact day – some idea so we might deal with this? I think this is the most crucial thing: our health workers.

Mr. Chairman, the other thing we were told at this conference: that they're also facing a huge problem. The LPNs said this: we can't do it all. The people that work in the cafeterias and clean the places and the rest of it provide a crucial role, and they're having trouble recruiting them too because, again, they can make more money; you know, the Tim Hortons syndrome. So the whole approach of dealing with our staff has to include those people too. They're very important partners in dealing with the whole health care approach.

I want to get some more specifics because, Mr. Chairman, it's a serious situation. The minister knows it. I recognize, as he said, that not everything has to do with acute care, but that's where people's lives right now are at risk. We've got to move to prevention. We've got to move to, you know, nutritionists. We've got to do all those things. But what people see right now is the emergency wards, where it's a life and death situation. It is serious, and I think that's part of what we're seeing in Calgary and Edmonton, with health professionals facing stress, pressure, till the body just gives out.

I think that we have to have some idea, a little more than what the minister said, about all these situations, so I'd like him to comment on those areas. Then I'll probably turn it over to somebody else.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, some very good comments there. Obviously, in terms of providing the acute-care services that are needed: a doctor can't operate if the operating room hasn't been cleaned. You know, you can't operate a health care facility, a hospital for example, if there aren't people who do the cleaning, who keep up the cafeteria, who provide the food service and that sort of thing. So it's not just the health care professionals, as the hon. member points out. It's the full team of people that are necessary to deliver the service appropriately, and that's true right across the board. We're conscious of that, that we need to make sure.

I mean, one of the concerns you have in an economy like this where employment is high, unemployment is low, the participation rate is as high as anywhere, higher than anywhere: the source of people to do the jobs that are needed to be done becomes difficult. There's no easy answer, so the answer has to be a combination of paying appropriate wages, attracting people who will come to take entry-level jobs, in essence, with the hope of doing better.

We have that history. We have history in times that I can remember, several cycles through our history where we've had people from other countries who came with their hopes and dreams and wanted to earn some money, send some money back to their family in the country that they came from with the hope of eventually bringing their family, and they did. Some are very good citizens of our community now, and they've helped to build our community. We're going to have to engage a number of different ways to make sure not just that we get the health care professionals but right across the board the people that we need to support this economy and this
