The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: To all hon. members, welcome home, and to all those present as guests, welcome to your Alberta Legislative Assembly. Would you join me now in the opening day prayer.

Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieu to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Would you please join us in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, 2006 was a very exciting year for the Alberta Legislative Assembly as we celebrated 100 years of democracy in this province. Over the last century the people and events that shaped this province were deserving of celebration and recognition, and it seems only fitting that as the year came to an end, we saw another historic moment take place, on December 14, 2006, the swearing-in of Alberta's 13th Premier, the Hon. Edward Michael Stelmach.

Premier Stelmach is no stranger to history and the significance it plays in our lives. He and his delightful wife, Marie, raised their four children on the homestead which was first settled by his grandfather, Nicholas Stelmach, in 1898. History and tradition are an important part of our new Premier's life, just as they are valued by this Assembly.

In terms of public service our new Premier also has had an impressive history. In this House he has served as minister of international and intergovernmental relations, minister of transportation, minister of infrastructure, and minister of agriculture, food and rural development. In his community he has served as a county reeve and school trustee and has held numerous other committee positions and memberships on boards and in organizations within his constituency.

From the date that Premier Edward Michael Stelmach was sworn in as our province's newest Premier, his every move and his every word will become part of Alberta's political history. There is no telling what that future history might include, but looking back in his speech from the December 14 swearing-in, his words may foretell that future when he said, "We have the means to build a stronger province and future . . . the future we want for our children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren." Today in this Assembly I hope we can all agree that that is the future we want and that years from now it is the history we want to look back on.

On behalf of all Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta I welcome you, Mr. Premier, and you, Mrs. Stelmach, Alberta's First Lady, as you take your place in this Legislature as Alberta's 13th Premier and Alberta's 13th First Lady. [Standing ovation] head: Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, this past year the Canadian Forces, and Canada's army in particular, have confronted challenges not seen since Korea. The successes in Afghanistan of our highly motivated young people in uniform are deserving of greater recognition. So, too, are their sacrifices. Today in the Speaker's gallery there are three junior, noncommissioned officers from the Edmonton Garrison, who are here representing those members of our armed forces who have been to Afghanistan and may well return to that country. I'd ask each to rise in turn and remain standing as I introduce them.

From the first battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry Master Corporal Peter MacLean, who is married with seven children and who has deployed on four operational tours, including Kosovo, Bosnia, and Afghanistan in 2004 and 2006; Corporal Gordon Whitton, who has served twice in Afghanistan and who was awarded a mention in dispatches. The mother of two teenage boys, Corporal Kimberly Smith-Samms completed her first overseas deployment, which was to Afghanistan, in August 2006.

It is also very appropriate to recognize Master Corporal Paul Franklin, who is seated on the floor of the Chamber. Members may recall that this gallant young soldier lost both legs as a result of a suicide bomb attack in Kandahar.

It's a remarkable testament to their character, their fortitude, and their common beliefs in the values we share as Canadians that each of these soldiers would serve again in that distant land. Let us remain mindful that our Canadian Forces are the essential guarantors of the freedoms and peace we are so fortunate to enjoy. Their hard-won successes contribute to a higher humanity in places that have seen little but strife and conflict. We are very proud of them all. [Standing ovation]

The Royal Canadian Artillery Band will now play a brief musical interlude, the details of which are in your program. The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was founded in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and then Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997, the band is today under the direction of Captain Brian Greenwood, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, and Mrs. Kwong, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

head:

Speech from the Throne

The Future Is Now: A Plan for Alberta

His Honour: Ladies and gentlemen, please be seated.

Fellow Albertans, welcome to the Third Session of the 26th Alberta Legislature. I am honoured once again to deliver the Speech from the Throne.

As we continue our journey into Alberta's second century, Albertans have much to be proud of and much to look forward to. Our current prosperity is the result of foresight by Albertans whose values we honour, values such as fiscal vigilance, community spirit, and self-reliance. It is a result of a strong respect for the environment and an appreciation for lifelong learning. It is because of these shared values and through the hard work of Albertans that this province is looked to as a leader in Canada and across the globe.

Alberta is fortunate, but Albertans have made good use of the resources that nature has bestowed upon our province, and they have made wise choices, including the bold and often difficult decisions made during the past decade. Many of those decisions were made with a thoughtful eye on the future. Fellow Albertans, that future is now.

Now more than ever the government must work with Albertans to ensure that the good fortune we enjoy today is not squandered. We must respect and build on the work and the sacrifices that were made in the past. We must plan ahead to ensure that the prosperity this province enjoys today is secured for our children and grandchildren. This means making the right choices so that Alberta's economic growth remains sustainable and that the world-class quality of life Albertans enjoy includes a clean and healthy environment.

A New Approach to Working for Albertans

With a wealth of new opportunities to be seized and some tough challenges to be addressed, this government is taking a fresh look at how it works on behalf of Albertans and the priorities on which it will focus. Albertans expect their government to reflect the realities they are facing today. They expect a new approach by their government, one that recognizes the unique qualities of Albertans and their province, one that recognizes the opportunities and challenges we face. Your new government has that plan.

In carrying it out, the government will be guided by the values of Albertans. It will ensure respect for the environment and compassion for others. It will be open and accountable, fiscally responsible, and inclusive. At this unique time in our history Albertans expect their government to have a clear plan and to deliver tangible results.

Ladies and gentlemen, your government will deliver on behalf of all Albertans.

Acting on Albertans' Priorities

The government of Alberta will act on Albertans' priorities to ensure a higher standard of living, greater opportunities, and an even better quality of life for all citizens of this province. The government will act thoughtfully and decisively on behalf of Albertans. The government of Alberta will govern with integrity and transparency, manage growth pressures, improve Albertans' quality of life, provide safe and secure communities, and build a stronger Alberta.

Governing with Integrity and Transparency

Governing with integrity and transparency is the first priority of this government for a deeply fundamental reason. Albertans put their highest trust in the women and men elected to represent their best interests. That trust will be honoured and respected.

Your government will introduce legislation to establish a lobbyist registry. Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, will give all Albertans public access to information regarding individuals and organizations seeking to influence government decisions. It will also take measures to improve information provided to the public about who has contracts with government. These measures will increase transparency, openness, and accountability and will enhance public trust in the institution of government.

Your government will also review the way agencies, boards, and commissions are governed to ensure greater accountability. It will look for more efficient and productive ways of conducting the business of government, and it will look for opportunities for all parties represented in the Legislature to work together to better serve Albertans.

Managing Growth Pressures

Alberta's economy is leading the country with a record pace of development. More than half a million people have moved here from other provinces in the past half-dozen years. The government of Alberta has reinforced its determination to effectively manage the pressures that come with rapid economic growth. It will act decisively to minimize the price we are all paying for prosperity and address pressures on housing, labour, infrastructure, and the environment.

Your government recognizes that adequate housing is essential for all Albertans to share in the prosperity of their province. It has created a provincial task force to find ways to make affordable housing more accessible to Albertans. It will focus on solutions for homelessness and the provision of affordable housing.

Despite so many people moving to Alberta each year, our economy is in dire need of people to answer the calls for "help wanted" across the province. To help meet this demand, your government will focus on better co-ordination of economic development, immigration, and labour force planning. It will craft a made-in-Alberta solution to labour needs.

Like the early settlers who helped build our province, immigrants today come here with hopes of creating a better life for themselves and a better future for their children. The government of Alberta will help new Albertans realize their dreams. It will encourage them to put down roots, raise their families here, and contribute to and share in Alberta's prosperity.

Your government will increase support for First Nations and Métis skills training and labour force development so that those Albertans with the deepest roots in this province will also have more opportunities to reap the rewards of Alberta's prosperity.

The current economic growth is placing great pressure on our province's infrastructure. Your government will develop a long-term capital plan that will address infrastructure needs and inflation costs while exploring options to fund new capital projects. It will also place great emphasis on controlled spending to ensure that Albertans get the best possible value for their tax dollars.

The government of Alberta will continue to build on its solid record in environmental management with some of the most progressive legislation and action-based strategies in the country. Working with Albertans, the government will turn current environmental challenges into new opportunities. This will enhance Alberta's standing as a leader in practical, innovative, and sustainable environmental policies.

Your government will encourage all Albertans to take personal responsibility for energy efficiency and reduced consumption because the environment is a shared responsibility between government, industry, and all members of society.

Alberta's legislation for regulating greenhouse gas emissions was the first in Canada specifically addressing climate change, but this government knows more must be done. This spring the government of Alberta will introduce legislation that will complete implementation of Alberta's groundbreaking climate change plan. It will establish greenhouse gas emission intensity targets for industry under the specified gas emitters regulation. These will be the first legislated emission intensity reduction targets for large industrial emitters in Canada.

At the same time, the government will work with Albertans to outline its next steps on this important issue. By fall 2007 Alberta will have a new climate change action plan to move beyond what's been accomplished so far.

To maintain our high quality of life, it is essential that Albertans properly manage our province's water supplies. The government of Alberta's Water for Life strategy is North America's most comprehensive water management plan. Since 2003 it has provided Alberta with an action plan to manage water supplies during this time of unprecedented economic growth. It is essential to ensure that this plan is based on current realities. Later this year the Alberta Water Council will consult with Albertans on updating the Water for Life strategy and provide recommendations to government by year-end.

Your government will introduce strategies and provide new funding to respond to growth pressures related to the development of Alberta's oil sands. As a first big step the government of Alberta has committed almost $400 million in new funding over the next three years to complete new water and waste-water treatment facilities, develop 300 affordable housing units, and address health pressures in the Wood Buffalo region. It will also create an oil sands sustainable development secretariat to better plan and co-ordinate delivery of services as this important resource is developed. In addition, the Oil Sands Multi-Stakeholder Committee will complete its work and recommend strategies and policies, based on Albertans' input, to guide future development.

Your government will also complete its land-use framework, which will guide the way to balancing the economic, environmental, and social needs of Albertans. These initiatives will mark the beginning of a new era in managing the overall environmental effects of development. It will blend Alberta's environment-related policies, including Water for Life, the climate change action plan, and the land-use framework, to ensure that Alberta's environment continues to be protected.

head: Improving Albertans' Quality of Life

Albertans have told their government that economic prosperity must not come at the expense of quality of life, and the government of Alberta is listening. It will ensure that services, programs, and infrastructure are in place to maintain Albertans' high quality of life.

Albertans have always placed a high value on learning, and this government recognizes that education is key to improving quality of life. Your government will continue to look for innovative ways to improve Alberta's outstanding K to 12 education system. It will work with community partners, school boards, and educators to develop effective strategies that support teachers, parents, students, and administrators in continuing to provide a first-rate learning environment.

Your government will also increase access and quality in postsecondary education while strengthening its support for community education and literacy programs. It will work to improve high school completion rates and increase access to postsecondary education with an emphasis on the Campus Alberta approach. The government will ensure that Alberta's postsecondary institutions have defined roles and responsibilities within a comprehensive advanced learning system. Investments in advanced education will be targeted towards a comprehensive framework that will make postsecondary education, trade and occupational training more accessible to adult learners.

The government of Alberta will continue to encourage and support Albertans in taking steps to improve and maintain individual, family, and community health. A sustained focus on wellness, injury reduction, and disease prevention combined with efforts to improve productivity and accountability in health care delivery will provide the framework to ensure a sustainable public health care system.

Building the health workforce of the future will be a top priority. Albertans will see stronger emphasis on primary health care and self-management of chronic diseases through the provision of information, resources, and support.

The government of Alberta will assist people living in the community with serious mental illness, and their families, with improved access to support services and treatment. A new pharmaceutical strategy will capitalize on opportunities to improve the range of drugs available and to reduce or avoid costs. Your government will work to expand long-term care capacity, improve standards, and ensure that facilities and supports are available to seniors as the population ages. Your government will continue to improve the quality of life in First Nations and Métis communities, and it will ensure that government policies better reflect the needs of persons with disabilities.

This province is known as one of the best places to live and raise a family, in large part because of the spirit of community that Albertans cherish. Albertans value compassion, and they take pride in coming together to volunteer time and money to help others in need. Reflecting these values, the government of Alberta will lead the creation of a community spirit program for charitable giving. The program will support increases for private charitable donations through tax credits and establish a community spirit fund to provide matching grants for eligible donations to Alberta-based registered charities. The government will establish an all-party MLA committee to guide the creation of this program.

Providing Safe and Secure Communities

Albertans place a high priority on living in a peaceful society, where laws are respected and consideration for others is practised. They want to be assured that their communities will remain safe and secure as the province undergoes rapid growth and change. The Alberta government will act on this priority. It will work with communities to make neighbourhoods stronger and safer.

To this end, your government will work with community leaders to establish a crime reduction and safe communities task force that will consult with Albertans on how to reduce crime and improve public confidence in the justice system. This initiative will build on the work being done by 13 partnering government ministries to develop and implement an integrated crime reduction strategy. Through this collaboration the province will see a future in which Albertans experience less crime, feel less fearful of crime, and work together to make their communities safer.

Building a Stronger Alberta

Albertans and their government know that the province's economic success must not be taken for granted. The Alberta government will act now to build an even stronger Alberta. It will conduct an open and transparent review of the resource royalty system through an independent committee recently established. At the end of the review Albertans must be confident that the right system is in place, one that is fair to both industry and to Albertans, who own the resources.

Your government will also develop strategies to ensure that Albertans have long-term access to reliable and diverse sources of energy for homes, small businesses, and larger industries, and it will encourage the upgrading and refining of nonrenewable resources in Alberta to obtain maximum value for Albertans and to create new business opportunities and long-term jobs.

The government of Alberta will develop a comprehensive energy strategy, which will ensure the sustainable development of the province's resources in an environmentally responsible manner, making full use of innovations such as near zero emission coal. The strategy will look at all of Alberta's energy resources with a focus on renewable resources, including electricity generated by wind and bioenergy such as ethanol and other biofuels. Development in these areas will provide new opportunities for rural Alberta and the agriculture community. While much of the focus on sustainable development is directed at industry, individual Albertans must play their part as well to promote energy efficiency and reduce consumption.

A strong Alberta requires strong municipalities. This government recognizes that municipalities provide many of the day-to-day services upon which Albertans rely. Your government has therefore renewed efforts to work with municipalities to better serve Albertans. This includes developing a long-term funding arrangement that is sustainable and recognizes the challenges municipalities have in raising revenues to provide essential services on the front lines of Alberta's tremendous growth. This co-operative effort has already yielded results that will benefit all Albertans. The provincial government has committed an additional $1.4 billion in annual funding to municipalities, which will be phased in over the next four years.

Albertans want to be sure that revenues they entrust to their provincial government are used prudently to build a stronger Alberta today and for generations to come. Your government is taking action by developing a surplus management policy that reflects Albertans' long-term priorities. Details of this policy will be announced with the 2007 provincial budget.

Your government will ensure that savings are targeted to the province's future needs. It will strengthen the governance of its investments so that the funds Albertans entrust to it are managed most effectively.

The Alberta government will also establish an institute for agriculture, forestry, and the environment, which will put research and innovation to practical, real-world use to benefit Albertans and the environment. The institute will develop market-based solutions to environmental sustainability challenges surrounding agriculture and renewable resource sectors such as forestry. As all Albertans know, much of Alberta's economic strength is based on natural resources.

To ensure that Alberta remains prosperous for future generations, it is essential to seize the opportunity now to further strengthen and diversify our economy. Your government will build on Alberta's traditional strengths, which include energy, agriculture, forestry, tourism, and the people of this province. It will build on these strengths to develop a robust knowledge-based economy to compete in world markets.

The Alberta government will develop a long-term strategy for technology commercialization and economic diversification. It will continue to focus on research in priority areas of energy, information and communications technology, and life sciences. In addition, it will place an increased emphasis on nanotechnology, the science of small. Research in this field has the potential to impact every sector of our economy and to diversify and sustain Alberta's prosperity for generations. Led by world-class researchers at the National Institute for Nanotechnology in Edmonton, our province is positioned to become an international leader in this field.

Conclusion

Fellow Albertans, the government of Alberta is making a solemn commitment to you. In all that it does, it will reflect your values and act on your priorities. It will conduct itself with the recognition that it is an honour and a privilege to serve as government, not a right, and that it must continuously earn that privilege. Your government will listen to and work with Albertans because together we can do great things.

We are faced with a unique opportunity to build for the future and to secure the long-term prosperity of our great province. Your government has a solid plan to accomplish these goals. It will take full advantage of that opportunity.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and may God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Lobbyists Act

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act.

One of our top five priorities is governing with integrity and transparency, and this act, the Lobbyists Act, is an example of our commitment to this principle. Our commitment to openness in government, openness in business dealings is demonstrated in three ways through the Lobbyists Act: first, by establishing a lobbyist registry; secondly, by requiring lobbyists to declare existing contracts they have to give advice to government; and lastly, by regularly publishing an online, searchable index of who has contracts with the government. One of the key features of the legislation is the prohibition from lobbying and providing advice to government on the same issue at the same time.

The lobbyist registry will be administered by the Ethics Commissioner. It will be fully accessible on the Internet and will identify the subject matter of each lobbying activity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of this Legislative Assembly an individual that is seated in your gallery, Mr. Rick Hansen. Rick is a great Canadian whose efforts have brought not only international recognition and accolades but also meaningful improvements to the quality of life of persons with spinal cord injuries and other disabilities.

Given the number of his achievements, I will highlight only a few here today. He has wheeled around the globe, developed a foundation to assist those with spinal cord injuries, and this evening Rick will be honoured by the CPA with the Christopher Reeve award to recognize his outstanding leadership and contribution to the community of persons with spinal cord injury and other physical disabilities. My wife, Marie, will be presenting him with the award this evening. Later this year he will be inducted into Canada's Walk of Fame.

He is accompanied by a number of guests: Kent Hehr, Marlin Styner, Gary McPherson and his wife, Val, and Dr. Karim Fouad. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they all receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's an honour for me today to introduce to you guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery as well. These guests are family members of our former colleagues who have passed away since we last sat. Former MLA Arthur Soetaert is represented by his son Art Soetaert and two daughters, Lorraine St. Laurent and Claudette Meunier. If they would rise, please.

Mrs. Louise Paproski, widow of Dr. Kenneth Paproski, former MLA, is here with her daughter Marion Johnson, son-in-law Rod Johnson, and grandchildren Shea, Owen, Genevieve, and Roarke Johnson. If they would rise, please.

Mrs. Marguerite Dixon, widow of Mr. Art Dixon, former MLA and Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, is here with several family members: son Donald and Janet Dixon and their daughter Emily, daughter-in-law Mrs. Susie Dixon, granddaughter Melanie Dixon, brother-in-law Burnell and Leona Perrault, nephew Steven and Crystal Perrault, and nephew Dan Galbraith. With the family is former Member of the Legislative Assembly Dennis Anderson, who represented Calgary-Currie, a long-time family friend. As I ask them to rise, I would like to point out to all members that when Mr. Dixon was the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, his family would come from Calgary to live in the Speaker's suite. His son Donald, who is here today, must have been just a little gaffer at that time, so he must have pitter-pattered through the Speaker's suite in times gone by. If the Dixon family would rise now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fellow Official Opposition House Leader. Seated in your gallery is Gary McRobb, who is the MLA for Kluane in Yukon. He was first elected to the Yukon Legislative Assembly in 1996 and re-elected in 2000, 2002, and 2006. He is the Liberal caucus critic for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Highways and Public Works, the Yukon Development Corporation, and the Yukon Energy Corporation. As I said, he is the Official Opposition House Leader. I would ask Mr. McRobb to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Alberta Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Brent Rathgeber, also seated in your gallery. Mr. Rathgeber is well known to all members of this fine Assembly as he served in this Legislature as the Member for Edmonton-Calder from 2001-2004. But that is not the reason he is here today. Mr. Rathgeber has recently been nominated as the candidate for the Edmonton-St. Albert Conservative association, and he will be running in the upcoming federal election and, I imagine, equally competently representing his constituents there. I would like to ask Mr. Rathgeber to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Adam Kozakiewicz, who has served the members of this Assembly for the past seven years as a systems analyst. For those of us that find the world of computers and BlackBerries and blueberries and Palms and Bluetooth gadgets a little bit challenging, as I do, Adam was always there for all of us to make sure that these machines worked well for us and in many cases in spite of us. We will certainly miss his talents and good humour as he is moving on to a new position with the Bank of Montreal in Vegreville as a financial planner. I would like to ask Adam to rise in the members' gallery to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly on behalf of my colleague from Athabasca-Redwater a group from the Thorhill school. There are about 15 students, I believe, and they're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Mike Popowicz. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly the Trinity Christian school group, who is the only group of school kids that has been able to come to the Legislature from my constituency year after year, so I'd like to thank them and their teacher, Cheryl Barnard, for that. As well, they informed me that they are staying overnight, so they have many parent helpers to help them with that: Dan Dooley, Cori Janz, Sheila Muirhead, Wendy Clay, Kent Blanton, Sheryl Anderton, Steve Miller, Joanne Smart, and Paul Wilson. I'd like to have them rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Loughheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a grade 10 class from Strathcona Christian Academy. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Doug Zook. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour also to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from the Rimbey elementary school. They're accompanied by their teacher and five parent helpers. The parent helpers are Ms Bridget Wright, Ms Suzanne Hanley, Ms Janet Burghardt, Ms Starla Boehnert, and Mr. Brent Stutheit. Their teacher is Ms Cathy Coers. This class has been here all week participating in the School at the Legislature, and they've enjoyed themselves immensely. They're seated in one of the galleries, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the gentleman who maintains my constituency office. Jordan takes all of my constituency calls, and he's my right hand and my left hand, particularly when I'm here in Edmonton. I'd like to ask my constituency manager, Jordan Lien, who is seated in the members' gallery, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the Premier already introduced Marlin Styner to us, but he neglected to introduce his spouse. As he well knows, we don't do these jobs without the support of significant others and spouses. I'm very pleased to introduce Diane Gramlich to the Assembly, who travelled with Marlin to all the leadership candidates, raising the issues of the 332,000 Disability Coalition so effectively. I am proud that both of them reside in the Red Deer-South constituency and attend faithfully Red Deer-South constituency board meetings for the PC Association. So welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of Drayton Valley-Calmar, His Worship Darren Aldous. Darren is the mayor of Breton. He's also a VP of the AUMA, chair of the environment and sustainability committee, and chair of the upcoming AUMA energy efficiency conference, which is on April 19 and 20 at the River Cree Marriott. I would ask Mayor Aldous to please rise – he's seated behind me, in the members' gallery – and I'd ask all members to welcome him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a first-year law student at the University of Alberta. She is shadowing me today. She is part of the Women's Law Forum, who is interested in increasing the leadership of women in public life. She is also the mother of three children, ages one, two, and three. I would ask Sheryl Savard to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the 28 members of the Yellowhead Tribal College seated in the public gallery. Under the wise tutelage of Mrs. Linda Anderson they're here to watch the proceedings today along with question period. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you three guests that I have in the members' gallery today. The first is Mr. David Keto, who is leading the support secretariat for the Royalty Review Panel. The second is Mr. Gary Horan, who is a former president of the Alberta Alliance Party and a close friend of mine. The third is Mr. Jordan Cleland, who is the government relations person for the Workers' Compensation Board and a former executive assistant of mine. I would ask all three to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: As a footnote to the Premier's introduction of Mr. Rick Hansen today, it was 10 years ago, in 1997, that Mr. Hansen was invited to speak to the hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. At that time he came to Alberta to give thanks to the people of Alberta on the 10th anniversary of his Man in Motion World Tour. By being given permission from the members to participate on the floor, he became only the third person in the history of Alberta to address the Members of the Legislative Assembly. So now, 10 years later, he returns.

Welcome to Premier Stelmach

The Speaker: Hon. members, I sent a note in the last number of days advising the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the third party and other members that at this point in time, because of the unique situation that occurred December 14, 2006, with the swearing-in of a new Premier in the province of Alberta, probably this would be an opportune day for hon. members, if they wished to convey greetings, congratulations, and best wishes, those thoughts, to the new Premier, this would be a grand opportunity.

A number of members have advised me, and I will recognize whatever member wants to participate today – time management, of course, is word management – recognizing that I will give greater leverage to the leaders of the two parties than I will other members. I'm not suggesting that other members aren't as important; it's just that this is one of those unique occasions. I'll recognize first the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and then the leader of the third party. Then other members who wish to notify me, just send me a little note or catch my eye.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate this opportunity. Welcoming a new Premier to this House is a rare privilege – I might argue too rare – but I will say that I am absolutely delighted to offer the distinguished individual now in that chair the warm greetings of the entire Alberta Liberal caucus.

Mr. Speaker, if someone had told me a year ago that the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville would one day serve as the Premier of this province, I wouldn't have believed it, to be honest. But then it wasn't long before the rumours started to circulate: watch out for Ed. Those rumours have proven to be very true. Sure enough, when the ballots of the PC Party leadership race were counted, a soft-spoken farmer from Lamont was chosen as Alberta's 13th Premier. My congratulations. For his tenacity, his hard work, and his obvious efforts to reach out to thousands of Albertans we commend the new Premier. It was an incredible race, and he certainly earned the victory.

The new Premier inherits a challenging job, and we commend him for taking on such an immense responsibility. As Leader of the Official Opposition and the Alberta Liberal caucus one of my duties is to help the Premier serve the people of this province to the best of his ability. Sometimes, of course, that will mean asking some pretty tough questions because, after all, the people of Alberta have tough questions to ask. For example, Mr. Speaker, when I recently stopped at the Donut Mill in Red Deer's Gasoline Alley – probably everybody knows it – I had lunch and, of course, a donut. A man who was also there – and he was from Wainwright – walked up to me, and he asked some pretty pointed questions about what he perceived as the uncontrolled growth in this province. Just a few days ago at a town hall meeting in Grande Prairie people were almost in tears because of their concerns with finding affordable housing and proper health care. Folks in Drumheller, we know, are genuinely worried about southern Alberta's water supply, and they're concerned that it may not be there in the future.

The people of this province are demanding more from their leaders, Mr. Speaker, and so honesty demands that we let the new Premier know that the Alberta Liberal caucus will be speaking out for disenfranchised and disappointed Albertans with all the strength that we can muster. Albertans are expecting a lot from their elected representatives, most of all from their Premier. They want us to protect the environment. They want us to come up with a plan for long-term fiscal sustainability. They want democratic renewal. The people of Alberta want a more open, accountable, and transparent government, and they want to move Alberta forward to a sustainable future. The Alberta Liberal caucus has solid plans to achieve these goals, and we hope the Premier will work with us to those ends.

So to the Premier: congratulations, good luck, and may you enjoy a productive and rewarding time in this House. We are all of us here for Albertans. Let's make sure that they have a government that they can be proud of.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the opportunity that you've given to us to provide greetings and congratulations to the new Premier. I will save some of my political comments for question period and debate.

The Premier is a man for whom I have a great deal of respect. I believe he has acquitted himself with integrity and honour in this House. He is a friendly person, not a person who places partisanship above the normal human relations that we all enjoy.

He is the first Premier of Ukrainian heritage in the province of Alberta. I have many people of Ukrainian heritage in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and I can tell you that they are very proud of the Premier, but I remind them that he represents the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and not Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Well, they're all pretty good New Democrats, I think.

I think it's also important at this time to have someone who comes from a farming background, someone who understands the difficulties and the struggles that farmers have gone through in the last number of years in this province. As the Premier undertakes this tremendous responsibility, I wish him well. As the last Premier once said to me, I wish you good luck but not too much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise to congratulate the Premier on winning his party's leadership to become the leader and the Premier of our province. Albertans are renewed with hope as they move forward with the desire to be governed with integrity and transparency. May you be blessed with the wisdom and the courage to pass legislation and regulations that ensure equality and equal opportunity for all Albertans, resulting in an improvement in their quality of life.

As you have stated, Albertans work hard and deserve to enjoy the fruits of their labour. They are generous and give back to their communities. We commend you for your recognition of this and your statement yesterday in the media room that charitable organizations know the needs of their communities better than government, and they spend and stretch the dollars better than government. Albertans also know that they serve the people better than political parties. I ask the Premier to ensure that his new tax credit for donating to Alberta charities is better than the current credit for donating to political parties.

Albertans do not wish to be dependent on and grateful for government programs and handouts. They desire to be governed by laws and regulations that protect, not limit, their freedoms and independence. I know that the Premier understands that and has spoken a great deal about the strength and the integrity of Albertans as a whole.

Mr. Premier, you can count on the Alliance for help and support to make Alberta better, to help our families help themselves to be strong and free, Fortis et Liber.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise, proud to raise the issues as we celebrate the 30th anniversary of the status of women . . .

The Speaker: We're in greetings to the Premier section. Okay? We'll come to you later.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can hardly resist just thanking and congratulating our Premier.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to rise and wish our new Premier all the very best. On behalf of the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I, too, would like to welcome our new Premier into the House as Premier. In my case it's also a case of welcoming an old friend and colleague of a time that goes back to municipal days, when we were both councillors.

I can truly say that the calls I get from my constituency office reflect that Albertans from my part of the province are truly and solidly behind our new Premier and wish you all the best as the 13th Premier of our wonderful province. Together, with your leadership I'm confident that we'll even build a better province and future for our children. I wish you many successful years as Premier and winner of many elections to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, as Deputy Chair of Committees and the MLA for Calgary-McCall I extend my sincere congratulations to the Premier for his successful leadership campaign, his victory, and for being sworn in as Alberta's 13th Premier. I wish him the very best in his term as our Premier and the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta.

People who have known our new Premier have bestowed on him numerous titles, such as Steady Eddie, Honest Ed, a man of integrity, a sincere person, et cetera. He is indeed worthy of all of these honours, and I'm convinced that he will serve Albertans well as their Premier for many decades to come.

Mr. Premier, congratulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pride that I stand here today to welcome our new Alberta Premier. Welcome, Mr. Premier. In the words of Chelsea Stanley from my constituency: What d'ya at? Now, that is Newfoundlander: hi, how are you, and welcome. In my constituency of Edmonton-Manning there are many Newfoundlanders who have become Albertans. There are, indeed, many new Albertans from all parts of Canada and from other lands the world over. On behalf of all of them, sir, I wish you welcome. They all wish you well, and I know that you have their best interests in mind.

There are also many long-term Albertans in Edmonton-Manning. Many have moved over the years from Two Hills, from Mundare, from Vilna, and from all over northern Alberta. There is a strong Ukrainian-Canadian and Polish-Canadian heritage in the multicultural milieu of northeast Edmonton neighbourhoods. Folks are proud of that. Part of the area is sometimes called Little Kiev. Many are proud of you, sir, being the first Ukrainian-Canadian Premier of our great province of Alberta. I wrote you a letter when you were elected that my dear mother would be making a pot of her best borscht in heaven to celebrate your election. I'm sure that she is happy today. I wish you well. Congratulations and God bless.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to add congratulations here today from the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency. It's clear from the throne speech of yesterday that we are taking a new and fresh direction in this province, and this is all under your direction and leadership. As the Member for Wetaskiwin-

Camrose I look forward to working with you to realize your agenda and dreams for our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to briefly congratulate and warmly welcome our new Premier, and I rise in two capacities: first of all, as a person of Ukrainian ancestry myself to convey how deeply proud and honoured our constituency of Canadians of Ukrainian heritage is on this occasion to welcome and salute the first-ever person of Ukrainian ancestry to occupy the chair of premiership in Alberta, and secondly, on behalf of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations I just know that this is a very positive move that will help solidify those relationships as well. So congratulations. [Remarks in Ukrainian] May God bless you, guide you, and keep you in good health. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, would you like to respond?

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I first do want to say how much I appreciate your recognizing me yesterday and, of course, the kind words expressed by yourself. Also my thanks to the Leader of the Official Opposition and to the third party for their welcoming remarks and to all other members in the Assembly.

To the Leader of the Opposition, certainly we'll take your offer to help. I always have had respect for the opposition. There is a role to play, of course, in democracy in terms of the debate in this House. As family members observe the proceedings here today, those family members of those elected members of this Assembly that have departed us, my goal – and I'm sure you share the same goal – is that we win back the respect for elected people in this province that our predecessors had.

I am honoured to serve Albertans, Mr. Speaker, as their Premier. I really still struggle for those words to express how humbling it is that the people of this great province gave me this tremendous opportunity, their confidence, their trust, and most importantly their vote to lead this government and really represent the interests of all Albertans.

I'm honoured to lead such a tremendously talented caucus, behind me and across the way, into the Third Session of the 26th Legislature. I'm well served front and back. We do have a large agenda in front of us, and I look forward to working with Albertans both inside and outside this Chamber to achieve the goals that I have given this government.

Just a comment to the leader of the third party, who mentioned my Ukrainian heritage. I just heard the other day that now on a regular basis we'll have perogies and kubasa on the Legislature cafeteria menu.

Mr. Mason: Hold the sour cream.

Mr. Stelmach: Yeah. We'll try and reduce the calories.

I have a tremendous respect for this office and, of course, for the role of elected officials, and I'm just looking forward to the next number of years. I know that the Leader of the Official Opposition may want to have an introduction much earlier than I would like in this House in terms of a new Premier, but really this is what it's all about: working together to serve Albertans.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would close my brief comments and await my first question as the Premier of the province of Alberta.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

International Women's Day

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a privilege to rise today to honour women everywhere as the member who is responsible on the government side for the status of women and to recognize that in this the 30th international anniversary year the theme of the year is Ending Violence against Women.

Since Adam and Eve women in society have been equal partners in life, fostering families and sharing responsibility for improving this planet. Our ancestors, aboriginal women, First Nations and Métis women among the settlers who migrated from other developed countries have built an Alberta with their passion, their hope, and their experience and built on our capacity to become a province rich in heritage and culture and made us an amazing place in a leading nation. Women have broken land, have farmed, have fed their families, have welded, have counselled, have taught, have supported medical circumstances, and have earned their place: active in their careers, in their vocations, missions, as parents, and as community leaders. Today nearly half of the self-employed in Alberta are women. They are entrepreneurs with wisdom, commitment, ingenuity, and energy.

In this Legislature on all sides of the House we are sadly reminded that while so much is right with the women of our province, some things are still terribly wrong. Seven per cent of Canadian women still suffer violence; 24 per cent of aboriginal women have suffered violence by their spousal partner at least once, and 10 per cent of Alberta women throughout the province have suffered as a result of the experience of living with an abusive partner. Our Premier and other champions in this House continue to advocate and place resources to eradicate bullying and violence, but it is up to all of us to do more. As a mother I taught my sons that the greatest gift they could give to their children was to love and cherish their wives. We must cherish and love all others and continue to uphold the culture of respect for one another.

Today as we celebrate all women – our pioneers that have gone before, those present among us today, and all in our society – we resolve to build and nurture all men, all women, and all Albertans in a manner which assures eradication of violence and a stronger, safer place for our children and the children of future generations.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Madam Minister. Those were kind words and heartfelt.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to celebrate International Women's Day, but it's tough to be properly jubilant when women face so many challenges. There are certainly many women to celebrate in Alberta: breast cancer survivors, the volunteers who serve as the hidden backbone of our economy, the barely acknowledged people all around us who teach and sling hash and weld and clean and crunch numbers and drive trucks and take care of our kids. These women show leadership and courage every day. They deserve to be celebrated, perhaps especially so in Alberta, where women have to be so self-reliant.

From 1986 to its premature closure we had an arm's-length Advisory Council on Women's Issues in Alberta, charged to help get women fully involved in the life of the province. We had a Women's Secretariat, a branch full of people working on women's policy issues. Now we have one valiant woman working away in the corner of a different department. From a council and a secretariat to a desk.

Our health workforce, overwhelmingly female, is struggling with recruitment and retention issues, and a significant portion of this workforce is looking at getting out. This possibility has massive consequences for policymakers and citizens alike. Our precious, not-for-profit charitable and volunteer sector, also overwhelmingly staffed by women, has been eroded, downsized, and downloaded upon for years, leaving it in a very fragile state.

Child care: another issue which disproportionately affects women. We need spaces created. According to one source we have 80,000 women who have to or want to work and cannot find child care spaces for their children. As for the child care workers themselves, again overwhelmingly women, they perform a vital job for pitiful wages.

Finally, violence against women. If there's a jurisdiction anywhere in the world with the ability to tackle this issue once and for all, it's Alberta. But we still seem to be stuck in the Dark Ages on this front.

So, yes, I'd like to celebrate International Women's Day in Alberta, but I think that, instead, I'll just celebrate Alberta's women and their determination to valiantly struggle forward in the face of overwhelming obstacles.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Might we have the consent of the Assembly to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to participate on behalf of the third party in the House?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for this opportunity to join with my other colleagues to say a few words on this very important day, International Women's Day. This is a day on which we should celebrate the accomplishments of women while recognizing that our society is still rife with inequalities. Last year I spoke about the persistent wage gap between men and women as well as the unacceptably high number of women who were turned away from women's shelters because they were full. These concerns persist today in Alberta and around the world.

The United Nations Development Fund for Women cautions in its message commemorating International Women's Day that all of the progress we have made can be destroyed through continuing violence against women. Violence against women is deeply rooted in structures of gender inequality. Ending violence against women requires changing our individual attitudes and breaking through barriers of culture and tradition to find nonviolent ways to resolve conflicts in personal and public life.

Violence against women is made more insidious because it so often goes unpunished. Global figures from the United Nations show us that women are disproportionately targeted. One out of every three women has been beaten or otherwise abused in her lifetime. Domestic violence is the largest form of abuse of women world-wide, irrespective of religion, culture, ethnicity, education, and class. Mr. Speaker, this House must commit to taking action to end impunity to violence against women and girls.

Alberta and Canada like to take pride in the progress we have made towards eliminating inequality from our society, but I fear that some of us have become too complacent. Last year in one of the first acts in government the federal Conservatives cut the budget of the office of the Status of Women by 40 per cent and closed 12 of the 16 regional offices. These offices helped women's groups work their way through government funding processes and helped fund research and resource development related to women's issues.

So, Mr. Speaker, I invite all Albertans to join us in celebrating International Women's Day, celebrating past advances, and committing to fighting for justice and equality for all women. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are the members prepared to provide an opportunity to the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner to participate? Any opposed?

The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to stand and to celebrate the 30th anniversary of International Women's Day. Each of us owes our life to the women of our community for our birth and for their nurturing and loving care in our early years. We are truly indebted to the women of our society. They exemplify the best of human traits, those of kindness, generosity, caring, and loving, many of those whom only a mother could love.

Albertans have truly been blessed with stalwart women who have fought the good fight for all Albertans and Canadians as a whole, such special women as the Famous Five and groups such as Mothers Against Drunk Driving and REAL Women, just to mention a few. We are truly blessed with the women of our families, our communities, our province, and our country. We could not go on without them. They are truly capable of doing it all, and we are indebted to them.

We must ensure equality for all of our citizens, male and female, and continue to try and improve their quality of life here in the province of Alberta.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal and Official Opposition.

Royalty Review Panel

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The review of the province's royalty rates may be the single most important issue this government confronts under this Premier. The makeup of the review panel is just as interesting for who is not on it as for who is. It is reasonable for industry to have a voice on the panel, but Albertans are asking me why other groups do not. To the Premier: can the Premier explain to the farmers of Alberta, whose land and livelihoods are so often affected by the activities of the petroleum industry, why they do not deserve a representative on the panel when industry does?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the issue of a royalty review came forward during the leadership campaign in the province of Alberta, and I made a commitment to ensure that all royalties – starting with oil sands, conventional oil and gas, and coal-bed methane – be reviewed in a very open and transparent manner and that information to be then put on the table for all Albertans to see. If our royalty regime is fair, there will be comparisons made to other jurisdictions. We need that information to communicate that to Albertans, and they will have the information to make their own decision.

Dr. Taft: Well, I was hoping for more, Mr. Speaker: an answer. So I will repeat the question to the Premier. Can the Premier explain to the farmers of Alberta, whose land and livelihoods are so often affected by the activities of the petroleum industry, why they do not deserve a representative on the review panel when industry does?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the leader maybe doesn't have all the information here. I was going to say confused but not from the point of view of saying that he doesn't understand. There is legislation in place that protects the landowner in terms of the Surface Rights Act and land compensation for the entry of the oil companies onto a farmer's land or, quite frankly, onto any private land. This is a review of the royalty regime. This is a review of what we receive as Albertans, all equal shareholders in the resource that we own, and how that is calculated in terms of the resource royalty. So those are two separate issues.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that environmental issues concerning the activity of the petroleum industry are of such high concern and that royalties could be for example structured to encourage better environmental activities, can the Premier explain to the people of Alberta why no one with environmental expertise deserves to be on the panel?

2:20

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, this is a review of the royalty regime. All of the other issues, especially with respect to environment, are a separate discussion. In fact, our ministers of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development are mandated to bring forward plans to ensure a very clean environment for the next generation. Quite frankly, it's not only the oil and gas industry that we have to pay attention to but all other industry, including agriculture, to make sure that we do protect the environment for the future generation.

The Speaker: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Leadership in trying times requires good judgment, yet several times the Premier's judgment seems to be lacking. When it comes to the royalty review, the Premier failed to take steps to ensure that the panelists were free from conflicts of interest. Within hours of the panel members being made public, it came to light that one of them owns millions of dollars of stock options in an oil sands company: clearly a blatant conflict of interest. My question is to the Premier. What has the Premier done to address the conflict of interest of the member of the panel who has a multimillion dollar stake in a major oil company?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all members on the royalty review committee have extensive experience in a number of areas. I can't list to you the names of all the individuals or their backgrounds, but I can certainly allow the Minister of Finance to give the background on the review panel.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On the review panel are six individuals that are very classy, intelligent individuals. We have three economists. We have a former president of Alberta-Pacific who has worked with environmental groups and has worked in the lumber industry for the last 30 years. We have a gentleman who was in the information technology business and, unbeknownst to me at the time, has actually done a considerable amount of work on finances with regard to oil companies. Lastly, we're very privileged to have a gentleman by the name of Sam Spanglet, who is the former vice-president of Shell and two years ago was the executive of the year worldwide for Shell International.

Mr. Speaker, that kind of expertise is what we're looking for, but on top of that we have asked each and every one of the members of the committee to swear an official oath that they will not do anything that will benefit them, that they will not talk about what is occurring, that they will not speak about what is occurring in this particular review, which is an incredibly important element of this deliberation.

Dr. Taft: Business as usual, Mr. Speaker.

To the Premier: given that last week, well after they were appointed, all the panelists were asked to disclose their conflicts of interest to the government on the panel, will the Premier do the open and accountable thing and tell the people of Alberta what those conflicts of interest were?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we wouldn't even be debating this issue of the composition of the panel if it wasn't for my insistence to ensure that we have a very thorough public review of the royalty regime in this province, and that's what we're going to get at the end of this.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: can the Premier assure Albertans that none of the royalty review panelists have business interests that will be affected by the decisions of the panel that they're serving on?

Mr. Stelmach: I can assure this House that the review will be done in a very open, transparent manner to ensure that there are no self-interests in terms of the results that end up on the table for all Albertans to observe in terms of whether the royalty regime is fair to all Albertans. Remember, we are all equal shareholders in that resource.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's first few months as leader have been tainted by questions about his commitment to openness and transparency. They're not going to diminish after today. Though he talks the talk, his decision to hold a fundraiser where individuals could purchase time with the Premier and his refusal to disclose a list of donors to his leadership campaign are clear indications that he doesn't necessarily walk the walk. With the announcement of the Royalty Review Panel questions have arisen regarding the relationship between panel members and the government. To the Premier: given that the Premier only released a partial list of his leadership campaign donors, will the Premier tell this Assembly and all Albertans whether or not any of the review panelists provided cash in kind or other contributions to his leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: In fact, in terms of the leadership campaign I don't know what the Liberals have in mind in terms of what kind of disclosure or how much involvement a candidate has in raising funds. There was a committee structured that receives campaign funds. It's actually a company that was enacted to receive campaign funds. It's their responsibility. In absence of any rules by the party in terms of the campaign, we had to make rules ourselves in terms of how funds were accepted. The committee then accepted whatever donations were made.

I just want to say this, Mr. Speaker. There's such a concern about the disclosure. Well, a lot of those that didn't disclose were like $25, $50, you know, donations to the campaign. But here's the thing. We will have a lobbyist registry in place that will identify any person in this province that wants to lobby the government. Also, as soon as we get the information technology in place, we'll be able to track what money goes to any person in this province of Alberta through the blue book. So we've got it now, Mr. Speaker, on both sides of the spectrum. We'll make sure that is very open and transparent, and Albertans will see not only who's lobbying government but who is getting money from the other end.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier tell this Assembly and all Albertans whether or not any of the companies the panelists are connected to contributed to his leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: You know, Mr. Speaker, I don't know because I didn't follow who gave money to the campaign. It's a committee structure. It was a company name, and that's their role. I'm not involved in collecting funds in terms of the campaign nor any other leadership candidates here.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the minister responsible for the Royalty Review Panel hasn't released a list of his leadership donors, will the Premier direct the minister to disclose whether or not any of the review panelists or the companies they work with contributed to this minister's leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: As I said before . . .

Dr. Taft: Open and accountable.

Mr. Stelmach: Yeah, and we've moved more in the last 60 days than you ever will in this Assembly. I can tell you that. We're going to have the lobbyist registry. Every person that receives any kind of money from this government will be in the blue book. That will be on the Internet. Any Albertan can pull it up. This is more transparency and openness than has been seen in this province for years, well ahead of where the opposition is today.

Speaker's Ruling Matters Referred to Ethics Commissioner

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair allowed that last series of questions because the final aspect of the question had to do with a specific contribution from a specific company to somebody's campaign, but I want to draw to the attention of all hon. members the Conflicts of Interest Act section 24(1). It says, "Any person may request, in writing, that the Ethics Commissioner investigate any matter respecting an alleged breach of this Act by a Member." Then 24(3) says, "A Member may request, in writing, that the Ethics Commissioner investigate any matter respecting an alleged breach of this Act by the Member." Then 24(6) says, "Where a matter has been referred to the Ethics Commissioner under subsection (1), (3) . . . neither the Legislative Assembly nor a committee of the Assembly shall inquire into the matter."

Now, one of the due diligence things a Speaker does prior to opening of a session is to contact the Ethics Commissioner and ask the question: does the Ethics Commissioner have a file on any member with respect to anything? The Ethics Commissioner advised me that the Ethics Commissioner had received a letter from the leader of the third party asking the Ethics Commissioner to undertake an investigation into campaign contributions. Following that, the Ethics Commissioner had received a letter from the Leader of the Official Opposition, asking the Ethics Commissioner to do one and the same thing.

So I've been advised by an officer of the Legislative Assembly, in this case the Ethics Commissioner, that two members have asked for a review. The Ethics Commissioner is taking a review, and if I read section 24(6), it says: "Where a matter has been referred to the Ethics Commissioner under subsection (1)." Section 24(3) says, "A Member may request, in writing, that the Ethics Commissioner investigate any matter respecting an alleged breach of this Act by the Member." Then it says in 24(6), "Neither the Legislative Assembly nor a committee of the Assembly shall inquire into the matter."

So we're on the edge with some of these questions, but I think I've clarified the whole thing. We'll wait, perhaps, for the Ethics Commissioner to get back to us all.

The leader of the third party, please.

2:30 Employment Standards

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week we learned that employers in the tar sands are refusing to hire skilled Albertan and Canadian building trades workers because they belong to a union. In fact, the IBEW, a legitimate union, has over 1,000 skilled tradesmen waiting for jobs because this government and the federal government allow employers to bring in cheap foreign labour. This government's labour policies ensure that unionized workers are not only passed over but can be fired because their first language is French, in order to make room for temporary foreign workers, many of whom are supplied by the companies with translators. This question is to the Premier. Will the Premier explain to the thousands of qualified, out-of-work Albertan and Canadian workers why they are being overlooked for jobs in favour of temporary foreign workers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our policy is Albertans first; secondly, other Canadians that can fill these vacant positions in all industry; and thirdly, if we can't find enough people to fill all the positions, then we'll look to other parts of the world. Of course, part of our commitment, when we say Albertans first, is to put more resources so that we can attract and encourage more participation from our Métis and First Nations in many job opportunities in the province of Alberta. Really, that is government policy, and that's what we're working on.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thousands of Albertans waiting for work.

Will the Premier commit to reopen negotiations with the federal government to amend the agreement governing temporary foreign workers in order to require employers to clearly demonstrate that no qualified Albertan or Canadian worker, unionized or not, is available for work before any application for temporary foreign workers is approved?

Mr. Stelmach: All that I know in terms of the negotiations, Mr.

Speaker, is what our minister of employment is doing now in terms of negotiating with the federal government in a number of programs. I had a difficult time hearing your question because there was more chatter from the bench here. You know, I don't make any comments when other members are asking a question. I just ask for the same respect. That's all I ask.

Mr. Mason: M. Speaker, pourquoi est-ce que le gouvernement permet à Suncor de virer un travailleur canadien syndiqué avec 25 années d'expérience dans l'industrie simplement parce que sa langue maternelle est le français? I will provide a translation. Why has the government allowed Suncor to fire a unionized Canadian worker with 25 years' experience because his first language is French?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our minister will respond to the very specific issue raised by the member.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, an issue like this would be dealt with by the Human Rights Commission. My colleague the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture has that portfolio, but I will say this. A situation between a private company and their employee, the particular details of which I am not aware, is not something which I am prepared to address in this House. It is not part of the legislation, but the Employment Standards Code. . .

Mr. Mason: Oh, so discrimination is allowed by your government.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we are neither allowing nor disallowing anything the member opposite is alleging. We're saying simply that the Employment Standards Code covers termination in specific circumstances such as maternity or paternal leave. We also talk about termination pay provisions in our legislation, but the circumstance that the employee has challenged and that has been referenced in the media today is something that I'm sure that my colleague the minister who is in charge of human rights may wish to further comment on.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly it's my pleasure to provide some comments as minister responsible for the Human Rights Commission. This morning we were made aware of the situation with Suncor and the employee, and we are in the process of trying to find out both sides of the story. We're only hearing the one side of the story. Certainly, we will encourage the individual, if he felt totally discriminated against because of a particular language issue, to deal specifically with the Human Rights Commission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Caucus Funding

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, congratulations to the Premier. He is listening to and has shown a desire to govern the people of Alberta with fairness, integrity, and transparency. He has promised to be open, accountable, fiscally responsible, and inclusive. We commend him and his minister of restructuring and government efficiency on reducing cabinet to 18 ministers. This is a great start. In the throne speech he assured the people of Alberta that he would honour and respect the trust that people have in the MLA they have elected to represent their best interests. [interjections] Maybe you could ask your own people to be quiet. A little respect. Does the Premier believe that every voter in Alberta is of equal value and weight?

Mr. Stelmach: Did he say "every voter"?

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, I recognize that there was a bit of chitter-chatter going on. I think the question essentially was: does the Premier recognize every voter in Alberta to be of equal value and weight?

Mr. Stelmach: Every Albertan. A voter is 18 plus, but there are many Albertans that are younger than 18 years, the age of majority. So they're all important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, would the Premier please explain to Albertans how he justifies rewarding some caucuses with funding of over $5.50 per vote while another caucus is funded only 80 cents per vote received?

Speaker's Ruling Decisions of Members' Services Committee

The Speaker: The hon. member knows that that has absolutely nothing to do with a decision of the government or the leader of the government. That is purely a matter of the Members' Services Committee, which is constituted by this Assembly, elected by this Assembly. That is a question that's out of order.

Hon. member, proceed to your third one.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I would respectfully disagree with that.

The Speaker: Sorry. Sit down. Sit down. You can't disagree with the law you passed. Look in the mirror. You made the law. Yeah, you made the law.

Now proceed with your third question, on a subject that deserves the merit and attention of this Assembly.

Mr. Hinman: Will the Premier treat every Alberta voter equally and reduce government spending and improve democratic representation by funding every party recognized by Elections Alberta with an elected MLA with a caucus funding of $1 per vote received?

The Speaker: Well, once again that question is out of order.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is about the quality of education. Nine thousand four hundred students are currently out of school in the Parkland school district as a result of a teachers' strike, and no end is in sight. Parents and students want to know where the government is on this issue. To the Minister of Education: what steps has the minister taken to ensure a fair and swift resolution to this dispute in Parkland?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, the parents were here at the Legislature yesterday expressing their concern about the Parkland strike. My colleague and I met with the parents outside and then a couple of hours later met with parents inside, joined by the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and the Member for Stony Plain. Our commitment to the parents was twofold: number one, that we would do whatever we could to get the two sides back to the table, and this morning I have written both the school board and the ATA local, encouraging them to get back to the bargaining table immediately and put the interests of students' education as the highest priority. Secondly, we did make sure that the parents knew that Alberta Education was providing online services for students, and to that end we are funding a session on Sunday night for any parents. We will have officials of our department in Spruce Grove to ensure that students know how to access online learning.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a trustee, Mr. Minister, of the Parkland school board has recently resigned due to a lack of faith in the board's position, does the minister have confidence that the board is capable of objectively resolving this strike in the situation that's there presently?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the school board, like all school boards in Alberta, is duly elected by the citizens of that county, and until I have evidence of any wrongdoing, I would expect that both the school board and the Teachers' Association would jointly approach these negotiations in the best interest of the students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What planning has the minister done to ensure that students, especially those with upcoming diploma exams, will be able to make up for lost class time once school resumes? In other words, what's happening with those students that are missing out on their education, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, as I say, we are making options available online for students and have the session planned for Sunday evening. We will continue to monitor. Hopefully both sides, as I say, will put students' education first and foremost and will come to a resolution of this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mountain Pine Beetle

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There has been a lot of recent media attention on Alberta's mountain pine beetle infestation. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How serious is the threat facing Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How serious? Very, very serious. It's the most serious threat our forestry industry has ever faced. It's no exaggeration to say that, basically, we're at war with the pine beetle, and unfortunately the front line of this war has moved from British Columbia to Alberta.

The B.C. pine forests are a disaster. The forestry, the industry, and the revenues of that government are in shambles. They've lost 9 million hectares of wood in British Columbia. That's the equivalent of 82 million cubic metres of wood, which would build 11 million new homes in this province. One year ago we estimated only 20,000 to 30,000 pine beetles in Alberta. Six months ago that was estimated up to 200,000 to 300,000. Today it's estimated at 2 million to 3 million. There was an infestation that came over last fall in a wind. The situation is very serious.

Mr. Speaker, doing nothing is not an option, and I can assure you that this government will take strong and decisive action to stop the spread of the pine beetle.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What action is Alberta taking to combat the mountain pine beetle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past fall and winter we've been doing extensive surveys to monitor where the pine beetles are and in what numbers. We basically have a two-level approach. Level 1 is that we identify single trees. We identify them and remove them, and we've had over 500 people in the field this winter doing that type of level 1 approach. We have a level 2 approach. When we discover stands of trees that are either infested or threatened by pine beetle, we remove those as well. In these areas we've asked industry to revise their forestry management plans to resequence their cutting sequence to take these susceptible pine stands. We've also provided grants to various municipalities to deal with the removal of pine beetle infested trees on private lands in these communities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given the seriousness of this threat, who is the minister using as an expert to determine the appropriate response to the mountain pine beetle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. We're receiving ongoing advice from the leading pine beetle experts across the country and also our counterparts in British Columbia. Last spring we had a summit on the pine beetle issue convened in Calgary with experts from around the country. We continue to work with the Canadian Forest Service, Parks Canada, and with Alberta parks and recreation. We also have a pine beetle committee made up of reeves and councillors from across the province.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that doing nothing is not an option for this government, and we'll take all steps that are necessary and appropriate to win this war.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Women's Issues

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is International Women's Day, a day to celebrate the achievements and potential of women around the world. However, here in Alberta the representation of women in cabinet does not inspire confidence that women are truly at the table in this government. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us why he has chosen to disregard gender balance in establishing his new cabinet?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, selecting a cabinet, of course, probably is the most difficult responsibility of any Premier or, quite frankly, a Prime Minister. But I just want to make one thing very clear to those that raise this issue in the House in terms of this Premier not having respect for the women of the province of Alberta. I know very well the contribution of the pioneers of this province, the pioneering women that are really the true heroes of the province of Alberta, with about four or five children in tow when their husband is working hundreds of miles away, whether on the railway or building a road someplace under very difficult conditions, not knowing if their husband is going to be back at the end of that work term, at the conclusion, given the unsafe conditions. There was not any kind of phone that you could pick up or fax or e-mail, certainly. Working in isolation, trying to make ends meet in the pioneering spirit: I know what the value of women is to this province. I don't have to be told in this particular House.

Mrs. Mather: I appreciate the recognition of the value of women in our society, but given that there are only two female voices in cabinet, what plan of action has the Premier developed to ensure that the interests, issues, and concerns of women will be addressed by this government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I am proud of all of the women in our caucus. In fact, we do have many women in our caucus, but one of my personal goals – and I mentioned this very publicly a number of times – is to recruit new candidates to the Progressive Conservative caucus so that they can run for office and encourage them. We've taken a bold step here in this Legislature – and, again, co-operation on both sides of the House – to change the sitting schedule so that life here as an elected member gives some form of family life as well. That's going to bring a number of people interested in running for not only our party but also across the way. That's one of my personal goals, and I'll continue to work in that area.

Mrs. Mather: Given that in the past there was an entire secretariat and advisory council devoted to women, can the Premier explain why the government now has only one staff member working directly on women's issues?

Mr. Stelmach: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, mention was made earlier in the response to the ministerial statement. I don't know where this one staff member is. I'm sorry. I'm being very honest. We'll find out where.

This is more than just having staff in the government. It's working here with all Albertans to try to improve the desire of people of both genders and from all ethnic backgrounds to run for public office. I'm actually quite honoured and I'm humbled by the fact that some pay particular attention to the fact that I'm of Ukrainian ancestry, but, you know, people have to work hard at getting here. We're going to work with every Albertan to give them an equal opportunity. We have a lot of road to gain, obviously. I made that commitment, and I'm going to stick to my word.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:50 Hospital Construction in South Calgary

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent weeks there have been many questions regarding hospital beds in Calgary, in particular regarding the construction of the south Calgary hospital. This has been very unsettling to my constituents as well as to many of the people that live in Calgary. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us if this much-needed hospital in the south of Calgary is going to be built?

Mr. Hancock: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker, this government made a commitment to the south Calgary hospital a number of years ago. A significant amount of money has been set aside in the budget and pledged for that hospital, and we expect that that hospital will be built. The plans are under way. The discussions with the Calgary health authority, in whose jurisdiction it falls, are under way. I understand that we will be getting into some discussions very quickly about the scope and the nature of the project. Yes, it's an important project, and I expect that it will proceed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. As you indicated, the Calgary health region is in plans, and they've indicated that they hope to begin that this year, to complete in the year 2010-2011. Does this minister have any reason to believe that they'll not be able to proceed as planned?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, these projects are large projects, and they have stages that they go through. I understand that the intention by the Calgary health authority is to break ground this year to service the property. In the meantime we're looking at the scope of the project and the needs of the project all in the normal course of building a large project of this nature. So far as I understand, the project is on track in terms of where it is and what we need to know about it.

The reason why it's hit the table now as a concern, I believe, in Calgary is the speculation and the suggestion of cost increases with respect to that project. Well, in a project of this size, Mr. Speaker, when you first conceptualize the project, there's an estimate of costs. There's an estimate of costs at the start. Construction costs, as is well known in this province, have gone up over time, but also as you . . .

Mr. Chase: That's because you've delayed construction.

Mr. Hancock: Nobody has delayed construction on the project. Projects of this nature and size have to be planned carefully and implemented carefully.

Mrs. Ady: This is good news. Thank you.

My final supplemental actually goes to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Although I'm aware that the Minister of Health and Wellness is doing a lot of work about health care workforce, does this minister have any assistance to ensure that when this hospital opens, we'll have doctors, nurses, and technicians to staff it?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have a 10-year strategy, along with the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, on building and educating tomorrow's workforce, a very careful plan with substrategies to help us educate and grow our own in Alberta. We are working collaboratively, the minister of health and myself, with the minister of advanced education on marketing tools that we can get involved with, the use of e-technology, conferencing, an aboriginal workforce strategy. I'm confident that by the time we open the doors for the south Calgary hospital, there will be a robust workforce in place. The activities to date suggest to me that we've laid the groundwork for replacing those that are needed and working with the minister of health on the scope of practice issues which will help to build the capacity in the Calgary health region.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. During the 1990s the government made the worst health policy decision of the decade by closing three hospitals and eliminating 1,500 beds in Calgary. Now the construction of the desperately needed hospital in south Calgary is being held up by skyrocketing construction costs, which are a direct consequence of this government's failure to properly plan for the economic boom. My questions are to the Premier. Is the Premier comfortable sitting back watching the Calgary health region scramble to find money and possibly go into debt to construct this hospital?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary regional health authority is not scrambling, not delaying anything. These are significant cost increases. We need information to process through the various departments to see how we can reduce some of the just huge inflationary cost pressures. It's not only in this particular hospital, but it's in schools and roads that are being built. We see inflation anywhere from 20 to 40 per cent. Maybe there are ways of bringing some of that inflation down. But as we heard today, the hospital is part of our capital plan and will continue to be, and we're going to get there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: how does the Premier justify a $7 billion surplus while the health region is considering going into debt to fund this hospital?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to justify a $7 billion surplus. It just happens that oil and natural gas were at the prices they were in terms of the world market, so we've been very fortunate. We just hope that these prices continue for some time, but we can't depend on the level of natural resources, especially those prices, well into the future. That's why we're very pragmatic and thoughtful in the way we're doing our budget to make sure that three, four years down the road we're not in a deficit position. I made that promise to all Albertans, that this province will never ever again be in an operational deficit, period.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier join with the Alberta Liberals and finally stand up for Calgarians by recommending that they fully fund the new hospital in south Calgary? Do the right thing.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't have to stand up with the Alberta Liberals. Alberta Liberals aren't funding the hospital. The money for the hospital and all other infrastructure comes from the taxpayers of the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are fed up with the lack of action by this government to reduce carbon dioxide emissions. Now federal money is available to reduce emissions, and this government reverts to its old habits with their plan to give the money away to big oil to build more pipelines and to drill more wells. The public demands absolute reductions in carbon dioxide emissions and not this shell game of pipelines and enhanced oil recovery and intensity targets. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. After getting sweet deals on royalty rates and corporate tax breaks for so long, doesn't this government think it's about time that the big energy corporations started to pay their own way, especially for all the carbon dioxide and noxious emissions that they pump into the atmosphere?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess the short answer I might give to the member is that I advise him to stay tuned as I have legislation that I will be tabling immediately following question period that I think will go a long way towards answering his question.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, intensity targets are not absolute reduction targets.

Considering the huge profits that energy corporations are enjoying, why can't they build their own CO₂ pipelines and instead use public money to invest in conservation and in renewables?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the debate on the issue with regard to hard caps versus intensity, and I'm sure we'll have ample opportunity during debate on the bill.

But with respect to the specific question, I'm not aware of any decisions that have been made on how the federal dollars are going to be allocated one way or the other. There has been speculation in the media, and it would appear that the NDP have already decided that the decision has been made.

Mr. Eggen: Well, I would ask then, please, as well: when will the government stop subsidizing half measures like this proposed CO₂ pipeline, which is, in fact, mostly designed to pump more oil out of the ground and therefore will actually release more carbon dioxide into the atmosphere?

Mr. Renner: Again, Mr. Speaker, I actually look forward to the debate on the bill because obviously it's going to be interesting.

On the issue of carbon sequestration, I encourage the member again to look very carefully at the plan that the government has. I will do my very, very best over the coming weeks to explain to him how our plan will eventually lead to the ability for us to maintain an economy in Alberta and at the same time ensure that we have an environment that is around for our children, our grandchildren, and their children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Petro-Canada Refinery Fire

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, just recently there was a very serious fire out at Petro-Canada's refinery in Strathcona county just outside of Edmonton, raising concerns about the price of gasoline and public safety. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister advise the members of the Assembly of the expected impact of the fire on the supply of gasoline in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, there has been a minor fire reported in the Petro-Canada refinery, as the member has noted, but thankfully it was contained very quickly, and there are no reported injuries. Petro-Canada reports that the incident would reduce their capacity by about 15 per cent in the short term. The good news is that it's not expected to affect the supply of gasoline in this region.

It's also important to note that there are two other refineries producing gasoline in the area, and together these facilities have a capacity of close to 400,000 barrels a day. So put in this perspective, Mr. Speaker, it's a small impact to one of the three refineries and should not have any long-term effect on our supply.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again to the same minister. Given his answer, I know that I'll go home this weekend to Whitecourt-St. Anne and they'll say: what's happening to the prices at the pumps? I think we all have noticed recently what's happened. They're going up. Has this fire caused that price increase?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this fire has very, very little to do with the current price of gasoline at the pumps in Whitecourt or any other region in the province of Alberta. The price of gasoline is determined by the market, determined by supply and demand. The good news is, as I said earlier, that the fire is not expected to have a major impact on our supply. Other factors affecting prices would include the price of crude oil, refining costs, retailing, marketing costs, transportation, and distribution. I'm pleased to say that the gasoline prices in Alberta continue to be the lowest on average in the country, and Albertans still pay the lowest provincial tax at 9 cents a litre on gasoline we consume.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents will be much more satisfied after that answer, I'm sure.

To the Minister of Environment: can the minister tell this House what were the environmental impacts of that fire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Energy indicated, this was a small, isolated incident, so we're confident that there are no environmental impacts as a result of this fire. As a matter of fact, measurements were taken, and they show no measurable impact with respect to air quality.

We've asked, consistent with environment legislation, that Petro-Canada provide us with an explanation of what happened and, in addition to that, with any measures that they will be putting in place to prevent it from happening again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Nonrenewable Resource Revenues

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is addicted to nonrenewable resource revenues for annual spending. However, the government's own projections show that these revenues are declining. Yesterday's throne speech made absolutely no mention of a savings plan for nonrenewable resource revenue.

I'm honoured to ask the first question of the new President of the Treasury Board, and out of respect for him, I'm going to make it easy. A one-word answer, a true-or-false question. Mr. Minister, is it true or is it false that this government relies more on resource revenues today for annual spending than it did ten years ago? True or false?

Mr. Snelgrove: To make it really simple for the hon. member, I'll let the Minister of Finance answer.

Dr. Oberg: I, too, shall make it very simple for the hon. member. The answer is: true.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you for the truth.

Mr. Speaker, my second question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given that a few months ago this minister advocated for a 30 per cent resource revenue savings plan and has recently been silent on the issue, I'm wondering: has the minister lost his voice?

The Speaker: Questions in the question period deal with government policies. It strikes the chair that that question had to do with a personal opinion. Now, if the hon. minister wishes to deal with it, fine, but I think we should have to move on to your third question, sir.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, it would appear as if he has, in fact, lost his voice.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: No, that's not a nice thing to say. The chair made it very clear that questions in question period deal with government policy. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was asking a question for personal opinion. The chair interceded as the chair is supposed to do. The chair in a gentle way cautioned the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford got up and made a smarty-pants comment, which caused the chair to stand up again. So would the hon. member move to his third question, please.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't wait until Tuesday.

To the Minister of Finance: a multiple choice question. How does this government expect to fund Alberta's future as resource revenues decline: (a) tax increases, (b) program cuts, (c) go back into debt, or (d) all of the above?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, again, very simply the obvious answer is: (e) none of the above. The hon. member should know that there's been legislation passed in this Assembly that limits the amount of oil and gas revenue to be utilized in our budget at $5.3 billion. The rest of the questions that will be there are obviously questions that will be dealt with in the budget, and I would ask the hon. member to stay tuned for the budget on April 19, 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Foreign Workers

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few months my constituency office has received numerous complaints of tragic cases where foreign workers have been under false pretenses and false promises imported to Alberta by so-called agents. Upon their arrival to Alberta these workers are paid less than what was initially promised, are charged exorbitant fees for the privilege of being employed, are accommodated in substandard dwellings, and often are threatened with deportation. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: what is Alberta doing to protect these workers from unscrupulous employers and labour brokers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a very timely question, a very good question because we have been working very hard on both our temporary foreign worker program as well as our provincial nominee program. Brokers are not entitled to charge both ways, which is, in fact, what has happened in some very unscrupulous situations. When a contractor or an employer decides that they want to have foreign workers come over, they engage frequently some international broker for that privilege. They fund that broker, and they bring those foreign workers to Alberta. Hopefully, they fulfill the obligations in the contract. It is then incumbent upon that employer to make sure that they have the proper housing, the appropriate shelter, and the amenities.

In our department we offer foreign workers the same protection that other employees have working in this province, not only in occupational health and safety but by making sure that deductions are properly taken from their cheques, that employment standard complaints are followed up on in the same fashion. We hold workshops for employers, so they know what our expectations are. We, in fact, school the brokers that might want to do business in Alberta about what our laws and our expectations are. In short, Mr. Speaker, we do our level best to make sure that we try to avoid these types of conflicts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the minister working with the federal government to address this issue?

Ms Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, as we speak, we have officials in Ottawa talking to them about all aspects of the immigration program. It is of urgent need that we get on with finding the right ways of selecting the appropriate employees for the province of Alberta. I might add that in speaking with the immigrant women that I had the privilege of meeting with today at lunchtime, it's important, too, that we work with the federal government to make sure, if people immigrate from another province, that in the transfer of their lives when they move to Alberta, we have resources to engage them appropriately in our community. The federal government seems sympathetic to this issue, and I'm assured that we will be well on our way to having a made-in-Alberta immigration solution.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Can the minister tell us what regulations are in place and, more importantly, being enforced to stop this new industry of foreign worker exploitation?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it doesn't matter if you are looking for jobs for Albertans or for Canadians or others coming into Alberta. If you are doing that job, you have to be licensed by the province of Alberta, and you must be bonded. All directors, partners, and officers of such agencies must undergo a criminal record check, and they are also governed under the Fair Trading Act. Any breaches of this act could be subject to fines up to $100,000. So the government is very aware of this growing industry, and we're keeping an eye on it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, shortly I'll call upon the first of six to participate today, but just to note there were 84 questions and answers today which is very, very effective. If that kind of productivity stays through to July 15, we'll just really ask all the questions there are, and all the answers will be given.

Great Kids Awards

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise today and recognize Alberta's great kids. On Sunday the hon. Premier and the Minister of Children's Services presented awards to 16 outstanding children and youth for their extraordinary achievements at home, at school, and in their communities. These great kids were selected from nearly 200 nominations province-wide. I had the honour of attending the eighth annual Great Kids awards ceremony and saw first-hand the great things that Alberta's children and youth are doing in all corners of the province.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to acknowledge all of Alberta's 2007 great kids. They are: Kyla Meinczinger from Stony Plain, Kendra Nilsson from Lethbridge, Samantha Semrock from Edmonton, Albert Goulet from Calgary, Alicia Baharally from Stettler, Alex Brown from Calgary, Natasha Maloney from Fort McMurray, Braden Morrison from Claresholm, Jeremy Mathews from Fort McMurray, Marie Kennedy from Edmonton, Josie Anton Roberts from St. Paul, Rique Dempsey from Stettler, Kayla Lynn Mossewah from Rocky Mountain House, Chris Mani from Edmonton, Keely Evans from Thorhild, and Fardoussa Omar from Edmonton.

As I heard the hon. Premier say, these great kids all have a promising future, and thanks to them, so does Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Provincial Men's Curling Championship

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize the community of Drayton Valley and Brazeau county for hosting this year's provincial men's curling championships. I am so glad to take this opportunity to recognize both the accomplishments of tournament winners, Kevin Martin and his team, and the beautifully executed event put on by a shining light of rural Alberta.

Being involved in a variety of sports, I have a great appreciation for the time that goes into the success of an event such as the provincial men's curling championships. The time and effort that went into preparing for the Drayton Valley curling tournament, from the event co-chairs to the volunteers and, of course, the fans, are what made it such a tremendous success. The 12 teams that competed for Alberta's Kia Cup included the Ferbey Four and many other well-known Alberta teams.

Mr. Speaker, curling has become tremendously popular in Canada, particularly in the prairies, which are home to 31 per cent of curlers in the country. One of these curlers participating in this year's tournament and leading his team to victory was, as previously mentioned, Kevin Martin. Kevin is an Alberta boy and is hailed as one of the most successful curlers in the world. He got his start in the Canadian junior championships in 1985. He made an appearance at the Winter Olympics in 1992 and again in 2002, and today he is competing in the 2007 Brier in Hamilton, Ontario. This history is what led to the use of the expression in the world of curling known as "to do a Martin," acknowledging Kevin's amazing ability to pull off what appear to be impossible shots in difficult circumstances. We wish him and Team Alberta well.

Mr. Speaker, the people and the community of Drayton Valley and area have greatly contributed to the continued growth of curling in our province. I appreciate the time I've been given to recognize their efforts and contributions, and I ask my colleagues to take a moment to applaud their efforts as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Hospital Construction in South Calgary

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It feels good to be back among my friends and colleagues and even the members opposite. Four weeks ago I had surgery to have my gall bladder out in Calgary and lived to talk about it thanks to the excellent doctors, nurses, staff, and management who work in the Rockyview hospital and in and for the Calgary health region, no thanks to the Conservative government of Alberta. For reasons I won't go into because my medical history is my business, so I'll just park that part of my story behind FOIP, I needed to have my gall bladder removed old school: open abdominal surgery instead of laparoscopically.

Now, doing it old school, Mr. Speaker, meant a two-day stay in the Rockyview hospital, 34 hours of which I spent in recovery on the day surgery ward on a gurney because there were no beds available in the hospital. By the time I was able to get out of my gurney to go for my first walk the afternoon of the surgery, the staff were getting patients changed into their gowns, handing them back their clothing in plastic bags, and telling them to go take a seat in the waiting room for perhaps several hours because things were backed up in the OR again and day surgery was out of beds. The Rockyview was under an almost continuous code burgundy. Well, actually, now they call it status burgundy because the word "code" implies something urgent or acute, and "status," well, is a word that reflects the chronic condition that is the hospital bed shortage in Alberta's biggest city.

Over a million people, Mr. Speaker, live and from time to time get sick or hurt in a city with the acute care capacity for a population of not much more than half a million. There's a big empty field off the Deerfoot in Calgary's deep south that's supposed to have a new hospital under construction on it, and nothing is happening because the Conservatives, with their $7 billion surplus, won't just cut the Calgary health region a cheque to cover today's cost of building the hospital that Calgary needed yesterday. In fact, we needed it three years ago.

Mr. Speaker, Nero fiddled while Rome burned. I don't know what instrument the Calgary Conservative caucus plays, but it's time to put it down and get to work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

International Women's Day

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the 30th anniversary of International Women's Day. This significant day reminds us of the progress we have made to advance women's rights and of the challenges that remain. This year's theme, Ending Violence against Women: Action for Real Results, reflects the urgent need to address violence against women. The Alberta Council of Women's Shelters' fiscal year statistics ending March 2006 note that nearly 13,000 women and children were accommodated in shelters in one year. Sadly, another 13,000 were turned away because they were full. International Women's Day is a time to reflect on our collective responsibility to women and children experiencing violence, and not providing shelter for half of the women in need is truly unacceptable.

Violence against women is also the issue of poverty. The Canadian Panel on Violence against Women drew the connection between poverty and violence when they said, "Working to end poverty is integral to ending systemic inequality and violence against all women." Violence against women knows no boundaries of income, race, or geography. For women experiencing violence, poverty limits their choices and their options.

There are a number of women's organizations working hard to offer hope to women and children experiencing this terrible violence. The Alberta Council of Women's Shelters, the YWCA, and many other women's centres and shelters provide assistance, and I thank them for that. Their work is essential and inspirational.

I would like to congratulate Sylvia Oishi, Laraine Stuart, Jean Greer McCarthy, Pat McMillan, and Sandra Nelson on being the 2007 YWCA Lethbridge women of distinction, and I thank them for their many volunteer hours.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Lifesaving Society

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Lifesaving Society and the admirable service that this organization provides to Albertans. The Lifesaving Society is a charitable organization that works to prevent drowning and water-related injury through its training programs like Water Smart, public education, and safety management services. Each year in Canada the society certifies more than 500,000 people in its swim, lifesaving, lifeguarding, and leadership courses.

I wanted to also acknowledge what a privilege it was for me to attend the Lifesaving Society rescue awards and the Royal Life Saving Society Commonwealth awards earlier today. The awards recognize approximately 130 Albertans who have demonstrated personal acts of bravery or dedicated significant years of service. These individuals exemplify personal courage, and I am humbled that there are so many Albertans who were honoured in the award ceremony. I have the highest appreciation for the important and courageous work done by all the individuals involved with this organization. They provide important services that are engaged in protecting and furthering the health and safety of Albertans. I commend their steadfast leadership in educating people on water safety, lifesaving, and lifeguarding.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all my colleagues I want to acknowledge the commendable initiatives of the Lifesaving Society, and I wish them continued success in providing their valuable services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Growth Pressures in Fort McMurray

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to speak about the urgent need for planned, orderly growth in our province, particularly in the tar sands. The current gold rush style of growth is leaving many Albertans behind. Families are feeling the squeeze. There aren't enough schools. Wait times in hospitals and emergency rooms are increasing. Families are facing high tuition fees for their kids and a shortage of affordable, high-quality long-term care for their parents. Working families face increasing housing costs, homelessness in their communities is increasing, and there is serious environmental damage.

Despite the rhetoric in yesterday's Speech from the Throne it's clear that when it comes to planning, this government just doesn't get it. As it stands, the energy policy of the government of Alberta is designed to meet American interests. What we need is a made-in-Alberta energy policy designed to meet the needs of Albertans and Canadians. A secret meeting in Houston last year in which Alberta's Minister of Energy participated has called for a fivefold increase in tar sands production within a very short time, something which would completely derail Alberta's economy. The result is that Alberta's quality of life is being sold down the pipeline for the sake of record-breaking oil company profits.

Several new projects have recently been announced for the export of raw bitumen to the United States. A proposal has been made to build an entire plant in Asia and ship it to Alberta, and worst of all, qualified Alberta building trades workers are left sitting by the phone while employers bring in thousands of temporary foreign workers.

Alberta needs a made-in-Alberta energy policy. We need a short-term moratorium on approval of new projects in order to develop a clear plan for Alberta's economic future. We must stop the rush to build pipelines to send raw bitumen to the United States for processing.

Finally, we must establish a new, more reasonable royalty regime, including a 50 per cent royalty on exported raw bitumen. These royalties will ensure that we can lay the foundation for sustained prosperity that includes all Albertans. Alberta needs a made-in-Alberta energy policy which is in the interests of Albertans.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, petitions?

Mr. Backs: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with some sadness that I present these petitions because these are petitions that deal with the need for action for Josh Hunt. These are the first of about 45,000 names put together.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please just have a chair. Does the hon. member want to do this under petitions or tablings?

Mr. Backs: Both.

The Speaker: Is the petition in order?

Mr. Backs: I think this one is.

The Speaker: You think? We're having a debate. There's a way that the chair knows because he gets a lot of stares from the table officers, who at this point are shaking their heads.

Mr. Backs: Okay. We'll table those.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give oral notice of a motion to be dealt with possibly Monday night. I beg the indulgence of the House because it's a fairly long motion dealing with temporary amendments to be made to the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly once I table the House leaders' agreement. - (b) in suborder (6) by striking out "evening" and substituting "afternoon".

6 Standing Order 34 is amended by striking out suborder (3) and substituting the following:

(2.2) A substituted member under the suborder (2.1) shall be considered for all purposes to be acting in the place of the original member.

(2.3) A temporary substitution in the membership shall be permitted for a specific time period or for committee consideration of a specific issue.

(2.4) A temporary substitution may be terminated at any time by the original member of the committee.

9 These amendments shall have effect from Tuesday, March 13, 2007, until the conclusion of the 2007 Fall Sitting.

10 As soon as possible after approval of this motion, the Clerk shall publish a calendar which shows the days on which the Assembly shall meet in 2007.

And be it further resolved that the Assembly shall give further consideration on a timely basis to the necessary temporary Standing Orders that will be required to give effect to the balance of the House Leaders' Agreement.

3:30

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, the last draft that the chair was provided with was dated at 12:19 p.m. today. The motion that the hon. Government House Leader has read into the record varies from this one, so for all intents and purposes I would ask that the House leader provide a copy of the motion the House leader just read into the record to all members. Hansard will not be published before members return on Monday. I think it would be unfair for members to have to wait until Monday to see this written text. They should have it this afternoon in the House. Would you kindly stamp on that 3:30 p.m. and ensure that all other previous drafts are shredded so that when we arrive here to have a debate on this motion, everybody will be talking from the same proposed rule paper, please.

Now, would you proceed, sir, with the next item.

Mr. Hancock: I'd be pleased to do that, and just for the reference of members I would indicate that the pieces that I did not read in related to the House sitting in the evenings. The motion as it was worded that I was provided with provided for specific sitting times, which were not part of the House leaders' agreement. That can be brought back in when we deal with sections 5 and 6 of the House leaders' agreement and dealt with at that time. That's the difference between them as I read it, but I will make sure that the appropriate version is on the tables of every member.

The Speaker: This afternoon, please.

Mr. Hancock: This afternoon.

The Speaker: Now, are we going to deal with the Government House Leader on the next item? Do you want to give notice about written questions and motions for returns?

Mr. Hancock: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. I would move that written questions and motions for returns stand and retain their places.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Bill 3 Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, this groundbreaking legislation establishes Canada's first legislated greenhouse gas emission reduction targets for large industrial emitters. Bill 3 and the accompanying regulations require industry to reduce emissions intensity by 12 per cent by 2008 either through upgrading facilities, purchasing Alberta offsets, or investing in a technology fund to develop Alberta-based technology to reduce emissions.

Mr. Speaker, because this is primarily enabling legislation, I will also be tabling draft copies of the proposed specified gas emitters regulation at the appropriate time so that the details of our approach are more open for debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Child Care Licensing Act

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act.

This bill is designed to give government the framework needed to create better access to innovative, quality child care programs while ensuring that enforcement mechanisms are in place to protect children and keep them safe.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise to introduce at first reading Bill 5, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

Minor amendments to health legislation will make it easier for the government to review and verify health care claims and will ease administrative procedures for Albertans who wish to opt out of the health insurance plan. Other housekeeping amendments will ensure that the act is more inclusive and will legislate the rolling adoption of guidelines and schedules.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 5 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed on behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce and move Bill 6, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007.

These amendments clarify processes to align legislation with current practices, including the approval processes of degree programs for public and private institutions. Other amendments enhance flexibility for public postsecondary institutions, including the opportunity for board members appointed to a college or technical institute board as chair in their second term to serve an additional term.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 6 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce and move Bill 7, the Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill deals with amendments to the Private Vocational Schools Act, which is the legislation governing the licensing of vocational training offered by private institutions in Alberta. Changes to the Private Vocational Schools Act that are included in this bill are designed to enhance consumer protection and update the act so that it is more reflective of the current environment surrounding the licensing of vocational training.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 7 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Vital Statistics Act

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Vital Statistics Act.

This proposed bill consolidates the Vital Statistics Act and the Change of Name Act. It will modernize the legislation to reflect cultural changes as the legislation has not been substantially amended since 1950. It makes provisions consistent with federal and other provincial acts and improves clarity and efficiency of the legislation and, as well, updates languages and processes.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 8 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would ask the House for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 39(1)(d) in order to introduce bills 201 and 202.

The Speaker: Normally the chair would not intervene with respect to one side or the other side of a request, but this is a good request that allows business to get done on Monday. Anybody opposed?

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 201
Funding Alberta's Future Act

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce private member's Bill 201, the flagship bill of the Alberta Liberal caucus, entitled Funding Alberta's Future Act.

The purpose of Bill 201 is to do for Alberta what every financial planner tells their clients to do: pay yourself first. This act will require the establishment of a clear, legislated plan for investing 30 per cent of Alberta's resource revenue in the heritage fund as well as other funds for critical infrastructure investments, postsecondary education, the arts, and future opportunities identified by Albertans. Over time the renewable revenue from these investments will replace the boom-and-bust budgeting of recent years and put Alberta's finances on a truly sustainable foundation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Consumer Advocate Act

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce and move first reading of my first-ever private member's bill, Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act.

The purpose of Bill 202 is to establish an independent officer of the Legislature, a market watchdog whose mandate will be to present and protect the rights and interests of Alberta consumers. Consumers need a voice. They need someone to advocate on their behalf, and they need someone who has the power to investigate and make recommendations to address unfair market practices.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the House the requisite number of copies of a document entitled All Party* Agreement. There's an asterisk beside Party to indicate that party is defined as per the Legislative Assembly Act to be recognized parties, just so it's clear that it doesn't leave anybody out by that definition, but using that to describe the document that was acknowledged by the Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, and the House leader of the third party with respect to democratic reform initiatives relative to the procedures of the House.

We hope to bring forward, as I mentioned in Notices of Motions, discussion with respect to time frames as set out in the House leaders' agreement, which will make the House more friendly to participation by members and people who aspire to be members. Other parts of the agreement deal with how we might establish policy field committees, how we might deal with Committee of Supply, and other matters. That agreement will be the subject of various motions before the House in due course.

The Speaker: To the page that's going to take the document to have it filed with the Clerk, I want you to make a copy for all Members of the Legislative Assembly and have it placed on their desk forthwith. Just to file them in the library – not all the members have access if they're going away for the weekend. If this thing comes back, because this will deal with changes in the House, all hon. members must be up to date, front and centre, having studied the document so that there'll be no privilege questions raised on Monday, please.

Government House Leader, I'm sorry. You were going to proceed with another one?

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Environment I'm pleased to table draft copies of a proposed specified gas emitters regulation, which was earlier referred to by the minister. These would be regulations which he would propose to be promulgated after the adoption of Bill 3, and he wanted them to be available to the House as they look at the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to rise with the requisite number of copies to table a petition, the first 250 names of about 45,000 to come, put together by Gary Hunt on public safety matters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today being International Women's Day and the theme this year being Ending Impunity for Violence against Women and Girls, I rise to table a document which is a compilation of figures from the United Nations study on violence against women. One of the key findings of this study is that violence against women is the most common but least punished crime in the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table the requisite number of copies of a web page posted by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. It was a web page during his campaign for the leadership of the PC Party in which he espouses the idea of saving 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I have a number of tablings that I have to do today as well. I did previously provide to all members a copy of these orders.

Pursuant to section 46(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act, chapter C-23, the Revised Statutes of Alberta, I'm tabling with the Assembly the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner. This report covers the period April 1, 2005, to March 31, 2006.

I'm also tabling with the Assembly today the report of the Ethics Commissioner into allegations involving the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, Harvey Cenaiko, dated January 30, 2007. I distributed this report to hon. members as well on January 30, 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, March 12, at 9 p.m. consistent with the current Standing Orders we would move to government business, and I would anticipate that at that time we would discuss the motion that I gave notice of motion of with respect to the Standing Orders, specifically relative to the sitting times and dates. Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province of Alberta for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, when a second or subsequent set of estimates is to be tabled, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that an amended fiscal plan also be tabled. Accordingly, I wish to table the 2006-2007 quarterly budget report for the third quarter, which serves as the amended fiscal plan. This quarterly report was provided to all MLAs on February 26. I also made the report public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

Also being tabled, Mr. Speaker, is the third-quarter update for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the quarterly report tabled by the Minister of Finance provides the fiscal framework for the additional spending authority for five departments of the government.

I now wish to table the 2006-07 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. These will provide the additional spending authority for the five departments of the government. When passed, the estimates will authorize increases of about $394 million in voted expense and equipment/inventory purchases. Mr. Speaker, these estimates will also authorize a $530,000 transfer of previously voted capital investment from the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation to the Department of Service Alberta.

The Speaker: And this motion is nondebatable, so I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

The Speaker: I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The hon. member advised the chair that he would be providing some words in French as part of his speech, and he also advised the chair that as a courtesy to all hon. members he'd be providing the translation for it. The chair appreciates the hon. member calling the chair, but the hon. member did not have to call the chair.

Under the Languages Act of Alberta French or English may be spoken in this Assembly at any time, and it's not a requirement that any member provide a translation. So it was a great courtesy that the chair would like to acknowledge and would like to say thank you to the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. In the future hon. members will know that that's the way it goes. There's not a requirement to provide a translation, but it would be a courtesy to provide a translation.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

head: Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Ducharme moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member for the vibrant constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake it is a great honour to move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne, given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I would like to thank the Lieutenant Governor for reading the Speech from the Throne to open the Third Session of the 26th Legislature. Once again you have delivered it with such grace. Thank you for setting the tone for the Assembly as one of respect and cordiality.

As you have heard from His Honour's speech, there are many exciting initiatives in the works for Alberta. These will build on the prosperity of Alberta and ensure that the well-being of our province and citizens is fully considered and acted on.

The new year brought in a lot of change for our province. Alberta headed in a new direction when the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville was sworn into office December 14, 2006, as Alberta's 13th Premier.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Premier for allowing me to move the acceptance of the Speech from the Throne. As this is the first of many speeches from the throne under his leadership, I am truly honoured and humbled to have the opportunity to deliver this speech during such a memorable time.

I would like to offer my support to the new Premier. I am fully confident in his ability to lead Alberta to a robust and prosperous tomorrow. Furthermore, I am an ardent advocate of his vision and priorities for Alberta. Mr. Speaker, he will join the ranks of the long list of Premiers who have worked so diligently to place Alberta where it is today.

On that note, on behalf of Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituents I would like to thank the past Premier, the hon. Ralph Klein, for his 14 years of leadership. It was a great privilege to be part of his team, and we wish him the best of luck in all of his future endeavours.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of hard work and sacrifice from all Albertans to attain the standing we are in now. This new government will ensure that Alberta remains a world leader in economic terms and as a model of quality of life.

Je veux remercier tous les Albertains pour leur soutien continu, qui nous a amené au point où nous sommes aujourd'hui.

It takes a lot of work to be a world leader. We must continue working hard and driving ourselves to exceed all expectations. As the Honourable Lieutenant Governor stated yesterday, we must build on the work and sacrifices that we made in the past to make our prosperity continue to flourish.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to warmly welcome the new ministers in this government. I am confident they will prove to be a strong Executive Council, which will meet the Premier's vision for Alberta. Ministers, rest assured that your private member government colleagues will assist and support you along the way.

Now that Alberta has been established as a model in terms of economic growth, the Premier will lead Alberta to steadfast sustainability, opportunity, and elevated well-being. While our new Premier has only been in power for a few months, he has been tirelessly consulting with Albertans. I commend him for all the efforts he has put forth to allow Alberta to continue being a province of the people.

As was highlighted by His Honour, the Premier has set a direction by which he will govern. Everything this government does will be conducted in a responsible and prudent way to ensure that the right thing is being done for Alberta. A large part of the new government's focus is on being mindful of future generations. Alberta will be left not only in the best economic condition possible; it will be passed down in a secure state for our children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. This means safer communities, the best education system, a sound environment, and responsibly managed resources among others.

Mr. Speaker, it says a lot about this government that its first priority is to govern with integrity and transparency. The Premier has stated that this is his mission because Albertans want to be involved in the process of building on Alberta's prosperity. I would like to commend Albertans for that. Our new government realizes that Alberta cannot be properly guided unless it is done by all Albertans. Albertans know what they want, and we in the Legislature are here to make it happen on their behalf. We will work as a team to achieve the goals that we as a province have set for ourselves. That means that the new government will be seeking to achieve Alberta's goals through co-operation with all stakeholders. That is the only way we will achieve true prosperity and well-being.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Premier has already put forth a plan to get closer to achieving a truly transparent and open government. His very first bill presented in the House was the Lobbyists Act. With this act Albertans will clearly know who is seeking to influence the direction of Alberta and who is working for Albertans.

Furthermore, this new government recently made a commitment to make flight logs and expenses of ministers and their staff public. These are unprecedented steps, which provide accountability and transparency within government. After only a few months in power Alberta's Premier has already provided Albertans with tangible proof of his commitment to increase transparency and accountability. Nous désirons que les Albertains soient informés par rapport aux événements qui se passe dans leur nouveau gouvernement.

Albertans and Canadians alike have been benefiting tremendously from Alberta's economic expansion. As a result of this growth we are seeing more opportunity and an improved quality of life for all Albertans. When rapid growth occurs, adjustments need to be made. Issues must be addressed in order for expansion to be executed in an acceptable manner. This government realizes that issues surrounding growth affect all Albertans. This government's priority on growth management will ensure that expansion is conducted in a manner which is directed by foresight.

Mr. Speaker, housing pressures are an issue being felt in every corner of the province. In my constituency the Cold Lake Affordable Housing Society is working diligently to address this need. I would like to thank them for their work. They are a prime example of community members coming together to create a stronger Alberta. Addressing access to affordable housing is an important part of improving Albertans' quality of life.

Through his travels throughout the province the Premier has come across the need for housing in an overwhelming fashion. Decisive action is being taken to address the situation. This government wants all Albertans to have access to Albertans' quality of life and prosperity. I would like to commend the Premier for mandating the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to create a housing task force. The task force will find innovative ways of addressing this situation. I look forward to hearing the results of this report. I am sure I will have great things to report back to my constituents.

The Premier has also put one of the most dedicated and driven MLAs to task on the labour situation in Alberta. The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry has already been extremely busy working on ways to attract immigrants to Alberta. She has been mandated to enhance the co-ordination of economic development, immigration, and labour-force planning in Alberta. She and her department will create a made-in-Alberta strategy to quell the labour shortage. As the new chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council I would like to assure her that the council will assist her in every possible way to achieve her goals.

Of course, increasing Alberta's labour pool will require other Canadians and immigrants to come to Alberta. The new government has committed itself to welcoming new Canadians into Alberta through support in communities. Je suis fier de dire que l'Alberta est une province multiculturelle croissante. Notre province accueille des gens de diverses origines, tel que française, ukrainienne, polonaise, chinoise, pakistanaise, indienne, vietnamienne, et beaucoup d'autres. Je suis certain que les communautés à travers la province de l'Alberta accueilleront ces gens à bras ouverts.

Mr. Speaker, I for one can say that my constituency will welcome immigrants from all across the world to our communities. As Alberta's economy continues to grow, these new Albertans will add their expertise and manpower to further enhance our prosperity and quality of life. Members of my constituency and I do not want to see growth stilted by a lack of labour. On behalf of the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency I would like to encourage this government and the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry to do everything in their power to address labour shortages by working to promote Alberta as a world-class destination for immigrants.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also especially pleased to see a renewed commitment to increase support for First Nations and Métis skills training and labour force. There are many aboriginal communities in my constituency which will be pleased to hear that this government is committed to working with them to help increase their quality of life.

As I have said many times before in this House, the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake is one of the most beautiful areas in Alberta. The environment is a matter which my constituents take to heart. We are all so very pleased that under the leadership of the Minister of Environment the environment will be addressed in a real and tangible manner. I was happy to hear from the Honourable Lieutenant Governor that our new government will work with Albertans to turn environmental challenges into opportunities. That is what we do in Alberta. We are an innovative people.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to thank the residents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake for all of their efforts to conserve the environment. Each attempt we make to help the environment will benefit all Albertans now and into the future. My constituents and I look forward to the implementation of the climate change plan. I am proud to be part of a government that is establishing the first emission intensity reduction targets for industrial emitters in Canada. This government will work toward ensuring that our environment remains sound for tomorrow.

As a resident and a representative of the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency I am reassured that our new government is going to manage Alberta's water supply. Living near beautiful bodies of water, I know that water is a precious commodity that cannot be squandered. The Water for Life strategy has led us well in the past and will continue to do so.

Mr. Speaker, as the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake continues to grow, there is an increasing demand for land. Distributing land across various sectors is a challenging task. The government's new land-use strategy will help my constituents and other Albertans find a balance to coexist. Agricultural, industrial, and housing needs can all be met with a strong plan. Je suis fière de vous dire que la qualité de vie est extraordinaire dans notre province. Nous avons de bonnes écoles pour nos jeunes, beaucoup d'occasion pour trouver de l'ouvrage, et de nombreux services sociaux pour nos aînées. Il n'y a simplement pas de comparaison au Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there is more to being an Albertan than accessing economic prosperity. Being part of this province also means living well, safely and comfortably. This is why so many people are moving to Alberta and are staying here to raise their families. The new government is working on Alberta's education system because we know that an elevated quality of life is directly linked to working and attaining one's potential. We want to give Albertans access to all resources possible to achieve this.

Another component of enhancing Albertan's quality of life is ensuring that this province has a health care system which meets the needs of Albertans. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and his department will be working hard to find innovative ways of providing health care to all Albertans. As Alberta is growing, it is imperative that we take steps to grow our health care force in order to match the need. To that end achieving a health workforce for the future will be an aspect that the hon. minister will work diligently to achieve. This government will be committed to achieving community-based approaches to provide support to those in need. As Alberta's population is aging, this government will be working hard to expand the province's long-term care capacity. Mr. Speaker, these efforts will in turn increase their quality of life.

During my travels across Alberta I have been overwhelmed by the ways Albertans are more than happy to lend a helping hand to those in need. I am pleased that the Premier is working to create the community spirit program for charitable giving. Through the community spirit fund the government will support and enhance charitable donations in Alberta.

In order to achieve safer communities in Alberta, the Premier has mandated the hon. Minister of Justice to lead a crime reduction and safe communities task force. Safer communities will prove to elevate all Albertans' quality of life and strengthen Alberta. As our province grows larger, it will also grow safer. This government will strive to create an environment where children, senior citizens, and the vulnerable will not have to worry about their safety in Alberta's neighbourhoods. We are committed to enhancing all of Albertans' feelings of security as that is part of a high quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Premier's final priority is to build a stronger Alberta. This priority affects many aspects of Alberta; however, a distinct list has been formulated to outline what exactly the Premier aims to work on. As the Honourable Lieutenant Governor indicated yesterday, the government will conduct a review of the resources royalty system so that Albertans can know that they are getting the right amount of revenue from their resources. Furthermore, in the months to come this new government will develop strategies to diversify sources of energy and will encourage upgrading of nonrenewable resources. This government is committed to securing energy sources for today and far into the future.

In order to create stronger municipalities, the government recently announced that it is giving $1.4 billion to help manage infrastructure needs. This funding will be met with a long-term funding arrangement to address the tremendous growth pressures communities are facing. I am certain that the municipal governments in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency will be happy with this funding increase. Funding will help them meet the infrastructure needs of our region.

Because revenues have been spent wisely in Alberta over the last decade and the province has economic prosperity today, the value of fiscal prudence will continue with this government. One example of this value put into action is the surplus management policy that will be released in the 2007 budget. Mr. Speaker, in order to sustain and enhance our current level of prosperity, we must focus on widening our sources of expertise and revenue. This province's innovation and drive towards the energy sector has led Alberta to be an economic powerhouse. We need to continue driving forward and look at other ways to sustain our wealth. That is why this government is taking a serious look at diversifying our economy. We will be a stronger province if we have a broader base of industries. Investing in Alberta's knowledge base is an exciting way to make our province more attractive to the smartest minds in the world. It will also place Alberta on the path to a successful future.

With a focus on knowledge such as nanotechnology Alberta will be ready for tomorrow's competitive global markets, and we will continue to be a leader. Nous pouvons et nous allons le faire. I look forward to the Third Session of the 26th Legislature under the lead of Alberta's 13th Premier as we work to further all Albertans' quality of life.

In closing, I would like to once again thank the constituents from Bonnyville-Cold Lake for granting me the opportunity to represent them in the Legislature during these exciting times. Merci. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am privileged to have the opportunity to second the Speech from the Throne. I would like to commend our hon. Lieutenant Governor for delivering the speech yesterday and providing us with an inspirational vision for this legislative session. The government's plan addresses key priorities that focus on some of the most important issues facing Albertans today. The priorities are centred on rededicating our Legislature to ensure that our government fulfills our potential and achieves our objectives.

When I arrived in Alberta as a young soldier in 1970, the province was different in many aspects. The price of a barrel of oil was around $12 U.S. Our population was around 1.5 million, and hit songs included Diana Ross's Ain't No Mountain High Enough. Perhaps the hon. member from Lougheed can relate to that. Number 2 was The Beatles' Let It Be. So that says it all.

Alberta was developing, and over the course of time we have experienced many changes, exciting changes that have demonstrated the resolve and the passion of Albertans to further themselves and their communities. I do not believe that any of us could have predicted the successes that we would experience and the accomplishments that we would achieve.

Although our province has changed over the course of time, our unique values such as fiscal responsibility, entrepreneurial spirit, and self-dependence still resonate among Albertans today. The people of my constituency of Calgary-Hays believe in this province, and their positive attitude is reflected throughout Alberta. Albertans have a determined attitude, and their positive work ethic contributes to making this province a pre-eminent leader in Canada and throughout the world. Alberta continues to lead in many economic areas, and our province maintains the highest employment rate in the country.

I am enthusiastic about the ambitious agenda that has been set forth for this Legislature, and I am encouraged to work with all of my colleagues to meet the needs and priorities of Albertans. As the hon. Lieutenant Governor stated yesterday, we want to "govern with integrity and transparency." I believe this is a foundation for all government that is open, honest, and recognizes that we are here to do the respectable job that our fellow citizens entrusted us with. We are their representatives, and it is essential that we continue to satisfy their concerns with the urgency and efficiency that they expect.

Mr. Speaker, the throne speech outlined a strategy for dealing with the enormous growth pressures that our province is currently experiencing. I believe that we are addressing these issues throughout Alberta, specifically in Calgary-Hays where we will soon benefit from the service of the new south Calgary hospital. Albertans are experiencing the impact of a continually expanding economy, and I believe that our government has a great opportunity to facilitate the construction of needed schools, roads, and hospitals. I am confident that we will develop a comprehensive plan to analyze the priority areas and provide the funding necessary to build and meet the infrastructure needs of all constituencies.

It is also encouraging that our government has collaborated with the private sector to expedite the construction of the new section of the Calgary ring road, and I hope that the construction will continue to progress in the southeast section of the city in order to alleviate heavy traffic. The extension of the Calgary ring road serves multiple purposes such as reducing commute times, improving safety conditions, and decreasing the depreciation of our roads.

I am convinced that our province's agreement with municipalities, providing them with $1.5 billion in annual funding, is an important decision. I can assure this Assembly that the funding is needed and will be beneficial in assisting communities to meet their growing infrastructure demands.

I am encouraged by our government's commitment to improving Albertans' health and wellness. I believe that we need to continue this great strategy by providing and maintaining adequate sporting and recreational facilities. We need to motivate Albertans to be active. The benefits of an active lifestyle are numerous. We want to encourage a health-conscious society so Albertans comprehend the added incentives to taking care of their bodies and participating in athletic events and pursuits.

Albertans value their economic prosperity; however, it should not impede their quality of life. My constituents recognize that they do not want well sites in close proximity to their community. They, as do most Albertans, believe in furthering economic development, but they recommend that it be done in a responsible and conscientious manner that furthers environmental stewardship and respects the boundaries of neighbourhoods. We want to develop a sustainable economy that has a diversified energy sector in order to extend the longevity of Alberta's prosperity.

We should continue to provide funding to initiatives that represent new opportunities for Albertans. I am inspired by the capabilities of our province, and I believe that creating stronger postsecondary programs will be important to securing Alberta's economic prominence in the coming years. I have members of my family who are currently enrolled in universities, and I understand the issues that students throughout the province are coping with. This government plans to address those issues. We have recently seen funding to increase the number of available spots for students in the health care field, and money has been allocated to support advanced technological research.

I also want to echo the objectives of the throne speech that focus on building a stronger Alberta. We are in an enviable position and have an opportunity to build on our successes by developing alternative energies and focusing on environmental sustainability. We cannot predict the future, but we can prepare with sound fiscal planning and innovative economic development. This type of preparedness will contribute to ensuring that we are investing in tomorrow's future by funding research and encouraging the talents of Albertans.

We will continue to diversify our economy and strive to reach our full potential. There is great opportunity in renewable energy sources such as bioenergy, wind, solar, and hydroelectric, all of which are examples of alternatives that represent a stronger, more diverse energy sector. As our province grows, our consumption increases, and it is important that we urge modernization and responsible use of our resources. We want to extend the benefits we currently enjoy to future generations.

Mr. Speaker, the priorities outlined by the Lieutenant Governor reflect a desire of Albertans. I believe that our priorities represent the many special individuals throughout Alberta. Some of these individuals, including those who have chosen to join the Canadian armed forces, these men and women are choosing to make the ultimate commitment as a citizen. I believe we have an obligation to support these dedicated Albertans, and I want to acknowledge their selfless sacrifice in assisting those in distress, despair, and fear. Having served, myself, for 11 years with the Canadian armed forces, I personally understand the diligence and loyalty to our country that our military personnel in Afghanistan are demonstrating both as full-time and reservist soldiers. These individuals recognize a need to volunteer their service for the betterment of our province and our country. The dedicated men and women of our armed forces face dangerous challenges abroad. I commend their efforts.

I also want to acknowledge the competent individuals in our police services who are engaged in the effort to address the safety and security concerns in our communities here in Alberta. These brave individuals are sworn to protect and ensure the safety of Albertans throughout this province. Their jobs can often be thankless, stressful, and demanding, but they carry out their duties because they have made a commitment to the people of Alberta.

Providing safe and secure communities is a priority that I believe in strongly. As a 25-year veteran of the Calgary Police Service I've always believed that we need to make a concerted, concentrated effort toward crime prevention and reduction of crime. We need to continue to protect our communities from illegal and unsafe activities, ensuring that our cities and towns are filled with an atmosphere of co-operation and safety. Reducing hostility and violence in our neighbourhood is an objective of utmost importance. We should strive to continue to provide sufficient support for our police services and their efforts to secure our communities.

The hon. Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne highlighted priorities that reflect what Albertans feel are the most important issues to them. The speech provided a thoughtful, comprehensive account of our ambitions for this Legislature, and I am sure that this government will continually strive to fulfill these priorities. Mr. Speaker, individuals are coming to this province, just as I did many years ago, with aspirations of finding a successful career, creating a family, and being an active citizen. I am proud of the many men and women who are dedicating themselves to bettering their communities, their province, and their country. I am honoured to have the opportunity to diligently work every day to ensure that Albertans can continue to realize the benefits and experiences that this province affords us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my constituents in Edmonton-Riverview, of all Albertans, and as Leader of the Official Opposition it's my duty and my privilege to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered in this Assembly yesterday. I'm entitled to spend 90 minutes doing this. I'll try to keep my comments to no more than 85.

According to the Premier, the first priority of this administration is to govern with integrity, and we will help him to do that. As one columnist from the Calgary Herald wrote earlier this week: there is integrity, and then there is integrity. In other words, there's a vast difference between actions that give the appearance of integrity and those that reveal true integrity.

The throne speech delivered yesterday paid lip service to government transparency and accountability, promising a few timid steps forward toward a more open and accountable government, steps that have been taken in other provinces decades ago. Of course, we applaud the adoption of a few of the Alberta Liberal ideas that we've been advocating for so long, such as the long-overdue lobbyist registry, and making credit card expenses public is a nice gesture and an important one, though the lack of detail and context makes it nearly impossible to judge whether or not public funds were used in the public interest: timid steps at a time when Albertans are demanding a bold leap forward. Alberta needs a fully accountable, transparent government and a renewed robust democracy to meet the challenges ahead. Half measures won't cut it anymore. It's time to think big and to take action.

Alberta Liberal MLAs have spent months meeting with Albertans across the province, and the message we received is loud and clear. Albertans want open, accountable government, and they want their government to lead the way forward to a sustainable future. That's what an Alberta Liberal government would deliver because Alberta Liberals know that government honesty, accountability, and transparency aren't just abstract ideals. These qualities protect Albertans and ensure that their tax dollars are being used honestly and effectively. Alberta Liberals know that creating a sustainable economy is not simply a dream for down the road but an absolute necessity that we must pursue aggressively to protect our environment and our way of life.

So how would an Alberta Liberal government achieve these goals? Well, first we'll get democracy and Alberta back on track. Democracy is so much more than election day, so much more than a means of hiring a few MLAs every few years. It's a living, breathing tool. It's meant to serve and protect real people, real Albertans. It's the most precious instrument of government accountability, and in Alberta it's long overdue for a tune-up.

A strong robust democracy could have protected seniors from neglect and abuse in Alberta's long-term care facilities. It could have prevented energy deregulation, which has cost Albertans billions of dollars in skyrocketing power bills, and the need to subsidize those bills to keep them under control. It could have saved untrained, unprotected workers from exposure to deadly asbestos at Calgary's Holy Cross hospital. It could have forced this government to develop a solid plan for managing Alberta's growth while protecting our environment. It's time to fix the tools Albertans need to hold the government accountable, and it's time for the governments we elect to make openness and accountability not merely a sound bite but an everyday reality.

In contrast to this government's timid steps forward toward accountability and openness I offer what an Alberta Liberal government will do to renew democracy in Alberta. Albertans value freedom, fairness, trust, honesty, and accountability. If Alberta is to meet the challenge and opportunity the future presents, government must nurture those values and provide a structure in which they can flourish.

Here's how an Alberta Liberal government will get Alberta's democracy back on track. First, fixed election dates. Election schedules should be free from political manipulation. They should occur at predictable intervals rather than at the whim of the party in power. Voters already enjoy fixed election dates in British Columbia and in Ontario. Albertans deserve this same respect from their provincial government.

Next, electoral reform. The more people who vote, the more legitimate and accountable the government. In the last election less than 45 per cent of Albertans bothered to come to the polls. That is unacceptable. Many would be more likely to vote if our electoral system reflected voter intent more accurately and if people who voted for the losing party weren't consistently disenfranchised the moment the results are in. An Alberta Liberal government would organize a citizens' assembly on electoral reform to determine if other voting systems, including proportional representation, which Alberta once had, could improve participation in our democracy. Citizens should be able to choose not merely which party takes power but how their governments are elected.

Campaign financing also needs to be changed. No one should be able to buy the loyalty of our elected officials. An Alberta Liberal government would limit corporate and union donations to $5,000, and that $5,000 could not be used to buy exclusive access to the Premier or his ministers. Furthermore, party leadership campaigns would be subject to legislative rules to ensure that the process of leadership selection is transparent and accountable.

Renewing the democratic process is the first step in getting democracy back on track. It's equally important to bring accountability back to government. A government that can be easily held to account for its actions is far more likely to govern in the best interests of Albertans. We are ready to bring some accountability back to government right now. This session my colleague the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie will sponsor a bill to reverse one of the most appalling laws passed by this government, last year's legislation that hides the results of internal audits for 15 years after completion. What is this government afraid of? Albertans will find out if the MLAs in this House have the courage to vote for our bill.

The next thing we need to do to bring integrity back to government is to eliminate conflicts of interest. Whenever someone in a position of power can exploit the system for personal gain, democracy has a serious problem. Alberta's conflict of interest rules and oversights are incredibly weak compared to other provinces and the federal government. To protect Albertans from conflicts of interest, an Alberta Liberal government would make sure that ex-politicians and senior political officials wait one year before taking jobs where they could influence government, and we would restructure the Legislative Offices Committee so that the selection of the Ethics Commissioner and other Legislature officers is less dominated by the party in power.

In a political system bogged down by years of Tory inertia, complacency, and entitlement, it takes courage for Albertans to stand up and reveal government incompetence or corruption. They've often done so at the cost of their own jobs. We believe Albertans have the right to speak out against wrongdoing, so we'll protect whistle-blowers with legislation. In a real democracy people don't have to be afraid to speak out.

And what about this very building, this physical embodiment of democracy? This government has a habit of spending as little time as possible engaged in debate, making snide references to "dome disease." Mr. Speaker, democracy is not a disease, so we shouldn't be treating this institution as if spending a little more time here will kill us. For example, when we last debated the Health and Wellness section of the budget, we were doing so at a rate of a million dollars a minute. How can we possibly hold the government accountable at such a pace?

When the Alberta Liberals form government, we'll invite the opposition to spend some time with us here under the dome to revisit the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. The act is intended, it is claimed, to give Albertans access to important government documents. In the best case this information can be used to help ordinary Albertans hold their government accountable, but as it stands, requests through FOIP can take months to process and cost thousands of dollars. Often requests are delayed, refused, or made unaffordable for purely political ends. We would amend the freedom of information legislation to ensure that Albertans get timely, affordable access to government publications, and we would end political interference in processing FOIP requests, including penalties for such interference. That, Mr. Speaker, is just a sample of what an Alberta Liberal government would do to get democracy back on track.

What about the priority that's taken the world by storm: creating a sustainable future? Well, as Mark Twain said, "Twenty years from now you will be more disappointed by the things you didn't do than by the ones you did." So let's not disappoint ourselves. Let's make sure that Albertans of the future will look back 20 years and say: "Aha. That's when the government finally woke up and took action on climate change and sustainability."

Is that what they'll really be saying? I don't know. A lot can happen in 20 years. It's hard to look that far into the future. None of us has a crystal ball to gaze into. It's human nature to imagine a future where everything is pretty much the same. We might allow for a few small changes. In 20 years we'll all look 10 years older, but that's about it. We lose track of time.

Scrambling to live in the now, we miss how much has changed, but if we don't register where we are today, imagine thinking back 20 years. Imagine all the way back to 1987 or even earlier. Things that we thought would last forever back then have disappeared today. Things that we now take for granted as always part of our lives, many didn't even exist in 1987.

Just 20 years ago there was no Internet, no World Wide Web. Personal computers were both pretty exotic and pretty slow. We listened to records or cassettes. There were certainly no DVDs. We shopped at places like Eaton's and Woodward's, and we thought we would forever. There were no Wal-Marts in Canada, and Starbucks was little more than one coffee bean shop in Seattle. The Berlin wall loomed over western Europe, the Iron Curtain hung heavy, and the notion of China and India as world industrial powers was almost absurd. In 1987 the last boom in Alberta had gone bust. Twenty years ago you could buy a repossessed house for a buck, and you couldn't give away office space in Calgary.

As we try to plan for a world 20 years from today, what do we see? Well, of course, nobody knows for sure, but there are experts, and there are predictions. We'd better listen pretty hard because in 1987 you could read about digital video recording coming. You could hear rumblings about the problems with Eaton's. You could see reports about potential growth in China. Of course, not every prediction is right on the money, but by the time the world reaches consensus, from a planning perspective it's often a little too late.

The world abounds with examples. How well did Kodak and Fuji plan for digital cameras? Did you know that in 1950, Mr. Speaker, there were well over 50 coal mines in the Drumheller Valley. By 1960 there were fewer than 20. In 1970 there was one. The coal is still there, but the market had changed. The railways had switched to diesel, and homes had switched to natural gas. Remember the words of Charles Darwin: "It is not the strongest of the species that survive, nor the most intelligent, but the one most responsive to change."

As leader of the Alberta Liberal caucus I've often said publicly that in the medium to long term, the next 15 to 20 years and beyond, the issue that will overtake all others will be climate change. We aren't jumping on the bandwagon. Like scientists, we've been on the record on climate change for years, and we've duked that issue out in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker.

Holdout by holdout the ranks of the climate change deniers have grown smaller and smaller day by day. Scientists got there first, but we expect scientists to be on the cutting edge. Many people, many people in Alberta, felt that until consensus is wider spread, the message can and should be doubted.

Then just a few weeks ago, after the world-wide science community said that the time for discussion was over and after Prime Minister Stephen Harper said that it's no longer in doubt and years after the Alberta Liberals demanded action to deal with the problem, came the words of Jeff Rubin, chief economist for CIBC World Markets. Just several weeks ago Jeff Rubin, an economist whose job it is to recognize world economic trends before they take hold, had this to say: "Governments are waging a war on carbon." Not "will be," "are." He didn't mean the government in Ottawa or this government here in Edmonton. He meant governments around the world: in Washington and Tokyo, in London and Berlin, in Stockholm and Seoul.

We as legislators must wake up to the fact that Albertans are in a race against time to secure this province's future because our financial security, the treasure that sets this government and this province apart, is hydrocarbons. Our economy is booming, and we have unparalleled opportunity because we sit on one of the biggest, most accessible, secure, and productive deposits of carbon in the world. The threat? Well, carbon, when it's used as a fuel with today's technologies, releases carbon dioxide, the leading contributor to climate change. Addressing climate change has become a national mission for a rapidly increasing number of countries and a corporate mission for a growing list of businesses. As a result billions of dollars a year are being spent across Europe, Japan, and the United States to find alternatives to carbon-based fuels. Sooner or later those efforts will succeed. They are already succeeding.

Of course, there is another threat to Alberta from climate change. Alberta's landscape isn't immune to the effects of climate change. Far from it. In fact, Alberta faces a double jeopardy as both the financial value of our energy resources and the health of our land and water are threatened.

When the Alberta Liberals ask hard questions in this House about water planning, about the mountain pine beetle, or about climate change, too often we're refused constructive and honest answers. But the fact is, Mr. Speaker, our glaciers are receding faster than ever in recorded history, the glaciers that feed our rivers that help supply our drinking water. The sky isn't falling, but the wind now carries the mountain pine beetle. Our winters used to be cold enough to make Alberta immune. Now our forests are infested.

The world hasn't arrived at a carbon neutral economy yet, but eventually it will. When it does, where will Alberta be? Will we be like Kodak or Fuji, left on the sidelines? Will Alberta be like the coal mines of Drumheller, or is Alberta ready to adapt? Are Albertans ready to stare the future in the face and make it blink?

We can be ready under a different kind of government. I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that it has to be an Alberta Liberal government. Unlike the current government, which is locked in the past, looking for excuses not to adapt, frightened of change, an Alberta Liberal government accepts the science and embraces the need for change and the opportunities that come with it. An Alberta Liberal government would understand that this is going to take the efforts of us all. We understand that we cannot meet this challenge by pitting one sector against another, by speaking only of the costs and the problems and the reasons not to get on with the job. If Alberta is to win this race, it is going to take the concerted effort of individuals, corporations and labour and government, of oil and gas companies and electric companies and farmers and universities and homeowners. The time of divide and conquer must come to an end. We have to work together.

How long do we have? How long will it be before the world's war on carbon is won? Of course, no one knows, but we need a target. The prudent answer is 20 years, and if 20 years seems far in the distance, remember that the starting line is right here, right now. Twenty years to secure our fiscal future. Twenty years to ensure that we are not casualties of the world's war on carbon and that we are not casualties of climate change itself. But we must start now. To a politician 20 years is a long time, but to the rest of us it's on the horizon, and to those of us with kids, it's like tomorrow.

Alberta needs direction that unites people across all sectors of society with a singular purpose to a destination that unites issues into a singular agenda so that actions can build strength upon strength. We have the time frame and the reason for the journey. We need a map and the leadership to get us there. Under an Alberta Liberal government Alberta's destination would be clear and unwavering: to be a world leader in addressing climate change in real and absolute terms. Today Canada is last among developed nations in addressing climate change. Despite the claims of this government, Alberta is last among provinces. In 20 years we must be first and a leader not just in Canada but in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to directly address for a moment Alberta's petroleum sector, which understandably watches these debates with great anxiety. I don't just mean the executive in downtown Calgary. I mean the young woman on the survey crew outside of Medicine Hat or the aboriginal entrepreneur hiring members from his band up at Fort MacKay. Alberta's petroleum sector is nothing less than an astonishing success story. We're global, we're competitive, we're comprehensive, and we're fully integrated. Because of Alberta, I would argue, Canada is to the world's petroleum industry what Germany is to the world's automotive industry. We are that important, that successful, that big.

From the shop in Edmonton where Jeanette's and my youngest son cut steel for equipment made in Alberta and shipped around the world, to the executives who lead projects off the coast of Asia and Africa, to the financiers who put the capital together, our industry is a global leader headquartered, led, driven, engineered, staffed, designed, and constructed right here in Alberta. For productivity, for expertise, for leadership the world's petroleum industry turns to Alberta. There is no other sector in Canada – none – that has the same global product reach, the technological edge, the complete integration from research and development right through to product delivery and every single step in between. The fundamental end product is carbon, but our real export is know-how.

So to the petroleum industry I say: work with us. We will seize this opportunity to collaborate. The carbon assets that you rely on are the carbon assets that make the people of Alberta prosperous. Let's harness the ingenuity, the creativity, the leadership that brought us to this point to get us to the next, to drive us to the world-wide goal of a carbon-neutral economy with all the energy we can muster. With the astonishing skills and expertise this province possesses, we will succeed. We must. We have no other choice. Industry leaders have told me they are ready, willing, and able. It is the current government that is holding things back.

The University of Calgary recently reported that oil and gas accounts for 50 per cent of Alberta's economy – 50 per cent – half the jobs, half of this government's revenue, half our personal wealth from the petroleum sector. So taking a hands-off approach, as this government is inclined to do, to a world at war with carbon is not an option. Too much is at stake. We have to work together. We have to respond to change – petroleum producers, labour unions, universities, and interest groups – because the threat doesn't come from action, Mr. Speaker, but from inaction and because we are all of us, everyone of us, Albertans, and we are in this together.

Mr. Speaker, here are some specifics of our plan to deal with climate change. Let me deal first with the most tortured and unpleasant subject: relations between Alberta and Ottawa. Fellow members, it is time to get past the sabre-rattling. Of course, Alberta's natural resources belong to the people of Alberta, and any threat to that will be fought intensely by an Alberta Liberal government, no matter which federal party is in power. That's why we need leadership now. The climate change issue is not being driven by Ottawa but by Europe and Japan, by Washington and California. It's not Ottawa that will leave Alberta behind; it is the world. The world will leave Alberta and Canada behind if we do not adapt, face the threat together, and together meet the challenges and embrace the opportunities. Let us break bread as citizens of one great country.

With an ever-tightening 20-year deadline to address climate change, there is no time to waste. An Alberta Liberal government will move immediately on several fronts. First, we'll aggressively implement a strategy to capture carbon dioxide emissions from major sources and sequester them deep underground. It's now technically feasible, and a financial framework can be worked out.

If that is in fact being announced today at Government House, we will support that initiative. Five years from now, the Alberta Liberals believe, we can have a system up and running. Five years and we can begin making an absolute reduction in CO₂ emissions.

Second, we'll implement an aggressive greening of the electricity sector. Within 10 years enough power will be generated from wind and other zero emission sources to power the equivalent of every home and farm in this province.

Third, an Alberta Liberal government will transform the natural gas rebate program to a self-sustaining building retrofit program. This will help Albertans pay for that new energy-efficient furnace or those new energy-efficient windows. Albertans will win with lower energy bills, and we all win by decreasing emissions. Why subsidize waste when we can reduce the use?

Fourth, we'll immediately establish a Premier's strategic council on carbon emissions and climate change with representatives from all sectors to engineer Alberta's drive to become a world leader in reducing carbon emissions.

And, fifth, we'll develop a long-term province-wide transportation strategy with a focus on rail and on public transit, including a route for a high-speed rail connection between Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary. It is time our airports, light rail transit railways, and roads worked together. Efficiency saves energy. The rest of the world is heading there. Why not Alberta?

These are the first steps to a sustainable environment under an Alberta Liberal government. But, Mr. Speaker, there is more to sustainability. An Alberta Liberal government will also secure a sustainable financial future. Our province has been flourishing with a government running huge surpluses funded by nonrenewable resource revenues. The key word there is nonrenewable. The current government has no strategy, no plan for managing those surpluses. It's a fiscal policy of stumble and drift. In the last 25 years the current government has spent over 93 per cent of all the petroleum royalties it has received – not invested, spent. That's on top of taxes, and it is not sustainable.

An Alberta Liberal government would be committed to converting Alberta's nonrenewable wealth into a permanent source of prosperity. During this session, the Alberta Liberal caucus will bring forward our flagship bill, the Funding Alberta's Future Act. Based on extensive research and reflecting policy we released last fall to widespread acclaim, our bill would direct the government to set aside 30 per cent of all nonrenewable resource revenues each year.

The largest portion would go to the heritage trust fund. In 20 years the Alberta government would earn more from the heritage fund than from energy's royalties. Mr. Speaker, if this House votes that down, Albertans will remember because with that bill for the first time in our history the Alberta government could have sustainable finances. No more roller-coaster rides, no more boom and bust, just quality public services and permanently competitive taxes.

This same act would secure the future of our most valuable resource: our people. How? Through education. This legislation will propose unprecedented endowment funds for postsecondary institutions, to pave the way for Alberta's postsecondary institutions to take their place among the best on the planet. Arts and culture: a real endowment to guarantee that our artists stay here where they belong.

We're not done there. As part of the same plan for fiscal sustainability the Alberta Liberal caucus would address the province's infrastructure debt head-on. Highway 63 to Fort McMurray, schools in Edmonton, hospitals in Calgary and Grande Prairie: it is all achievable; we've done the math.

Because it is so important to address the here and now, to touch people in their lives today, the Alberta Liberal caucus will bring in a series of bills to improve everyday life for Albertans immediately. Because regional municipal planning and development are in such disarray, our shadow minister for municipal affairs and housing will introduce our sustainable communities act. Because we need to ensure an ongoing supply of water, this spring our shadow minister for the environment will introduce legislation to strengthen management of Alberta's water resources. Because Albertans are tired of being held hostage to groups like utility marketers and need help with things like landlord and tenant conflicts, our shadow minister for justice will introduce the Consumer Advocate Act to bring in real help.

Because so many Alberta families are caught in a province ranked near the bottom for child care in the entire country, our shadow minister for children's services will introduce the child care accountability and accessibility act to establish targets for the creation of new child care spaces. Because parents in Alberta are sick of soaring school fees for everything from books to computers, our shadow minister for education will introduce the restriction on school fees and fundraising act, ensuring that public education is properly funded from public sources.

Because the gaming industry in Alberta is multiplying into so many corners of our lives, our shadow minister for advanced education, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, will sponsor a bill to establish an all-party committee to review every aspect of gaming in Alberta from the role of volunteers to social problems to best management practices.

Because the best way to sustain our health care system is to protect the health of Albertans, our shadow minister for health and wellness will introduce a bill requiring health impact assessments of major government initiatives, much as we already do for environmental and social impact assessments, and as already mentioned, the Alberta Liberal caucus will bring forward a bill to reverse the government's decision to hide internal audits from Albertans.

We've come up with an ambitious agenda because Alberta is an ambitious province.

Our agenda lays the foundation for a sustainable, prosperous, and compassionate province because Albertans are demanding a sustainable, prosperous, and compassionate future. In contrast, Mr. Speaker, we've been warned to expect a, quote, light legislative agenda from the government this spring, a government with few ideas, little energy to enact them, and no particular focus.

I expect most of our bills will be voted down by our Conservative opposition. That's a shame because our agenda puts the public first, ahead of any consideration of party or politics. But Albertans will remember how their MLAs voted, and when it's time to choose the next government of Alberta, their memories will guide them.

The way things are now is not good enough, not good enough for Alberta, not good enough for the Alberta Liberals. The days of the rudderless autopilot, tax and spend, drift and stumble Conservatives have to end. They must. Coasting on our natural wealth might have been fine at one time, but in today's world it is not. If we are to choose between the status quo and the way things could be, I choose ambition. The future of our province is in all of our hands, like the financial planner answering the question, "Can I afford to invest?" with "Can you afford not to?"

Can we afford to plan 20 years out? Mr. Speaker, can we afford not to? Did Ireland go from a thousand years as the poor cousin of Europe to the wealthiest nation per capita on Earth by coasting? Has Singapore risen from a colonial backwater to a global centre by shying away from challenges? Has South Korea gone from an economy on a par with Afghanistan in 1960 – get that: South Korea on a par with Afghanistan in 1960 – to one of the world’s industrial giants today without a clear sense of direction? Has Dubai gone from a dusty, desert fiefdom to the hottest financial and tourist centre in Asia by waiting for others to take the lead? Did Alberta get where it is today by resting on its laurels? If we do not move forward, we will be left in the dust.

Mr. Speaker, Jeanette and I were recently stuck in the San Francisco airport for a nine-hour layover. So we got off the plane, and in minutes we were on a rapid-rail transit to downtown. Thirty minutes and three bucks later we stepped off in Union Square in the heart of San Francisco. In that 30-minute trip I studied a tourist map of the bay area. There were two of the world’s great universities: Berkeley and Stanford. There was Silicon Valley. North were Sonoma and Napa Valley, east the Oakland coliseum, three major airports all interconnected, the downtown, the parks, the bridges, the public transit. These folks had taken all the pieces of a great city, a great region, and put them all together. No crystal balls, just some determined farsightedness had transformed all the separate pieces into one of the greatest North American planning triumphs. It’s not perfect, but it is impressive.

Alberta has many of the same pieces, but we have yet to put them together. We have the makings of some of the world’s great educational institutions: the U of A, the U of C, NAIT, SAIT, and others, but we’re not there yet. We don’t have Napa and Sonoma, but we do have Banff and Jasper. We don’t have Silicon Valley, but remember that little more than a generation ago neither did they. If the world is changing and we are prepared to adapt, maybe we can be home to some future Silicon Valley equivalent. I’m talking here, Mr. Speaker, about creativity and foresight in every facet of inspired planning.

If we don’t figure out where the world is headed in 20 years, we can forget about San Francisco. We’re going to look more like Detroit. Remember that the world we’re building today, in 20 years we hand it fully over to our kids. What will that world look like? What will Alberta look like? What will be the legacy we leave our children: our kids, mine, yours? Is right now, Mr. Speaker, really the best we can do? Is it really? We have to find a way to sustain our way of life, and to do that, we have to dream, we have to plan, we have to act, we have to manage, we have to be wise, and we have to pay ourselves first. We have to be innovative and determined.

Just a couple of weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, our office in the Legislature Annex received 20 unsolicited letters from a grade 5 class at Keheewin school in Edmonton. Each student wrote of their own concerns about climate change and global warming. One wrote: even though I’m just a kid, please take my letter seriously. Another wrote: “What can I do about this? Well, not much. But if we band together, we can do a lot more than you or me or anyone else ever imagined.”

I was struck by the emotion and conviction these kids conveyed and also by the truth of a very simple message. Together we can do amazing things. Together we can make a difference, just like Kyla and Connor and Devon and their entire class are telling us. They are why we have to act and act immediately and act decisively. Our children are asking us to save their future so that they can enjoy our beautiful lands and drink clean water and breathe the fresh air when they grow up. What better reason do we have?

The Alberta Liberals believe that this is our mission, our most important mission. We have the vision and the will to make it happen, to bring a new kind of government to this province. So to the grade 5 class at Keheewin school and to all Albertans we say to you: message received loud and clear.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 29(2)(a) there’s provision for five minutes for brief questions or comments.

Seeing none, I recognize the hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I express my appreciation to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for – I don’t know if it was by design – tailoring his speech at least to allow me my time before we have to adjourn. I appreciate that. I know that I’m always on his mind.

I would like to begin by saying that I always enjoy hearing from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, and I would like to congratulate the Premier on his first Speech from the Throne. On behalf of Alberta’s NDP opposition I have the pleasure of sharing our speech from the throne for working families with you today. As Alberta’s Legislative Assembly commences its new session, we have a clear message for the government and for Albertans. Alberta is currently experiencing unprecedented economic growth. Unfortunately, the Tory government’s lack of planning has left many Albertans behind. The Alberta NDP has a plan that will protect and enhance the services that working and middle-class families count on. We will be their champion for their concerns.

Alberta’s NDP will stand up for working and middle-class families. Alberta is currently experiencing unprecedented economic growth. A recent study by the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives found that with the exception of the very wealthy most Albertans are working harder than they were a generation ago, yet they are not getting the benefits of increased real incomes. On the contrary, Albertans are feeling the pressures of increased housing and utility costs. Many find themselves paying more for services if they can get the services at all. The businesses that are hardest hit by our current labour pressures are the small businesses, that are the cornerstone of our economy.

Alberta families need someone to be their champion. They need a government that knows what they’re up against and that will take action to make their lives easier. Alberta’s NDP caucus has a plan that puts working and middle-class families first. This is our speech from the throne, written with them and their families in mind. An NDP government will stand up for Alberta families by ensuring that they can access the high-quality services that they depend on.

The NDP opposition helped lead the fight against the Tory government’s third-way health care privatization plan. We will continue to champion public health care so that it’s there when Albertans need it. An NDP government will implement reforms that strengthen our public health care system. For example, our proposed legislation to bulk-buy drugs would save $50 million per year by providing cheaper pharmaceuticals for Alberta families. An NDP government will continue to bring reforms to reduce wait times. We will step up efforts to train and attract more health professionals, including more family physicians.

The Conservative government has failed to ensure that class sizes are appropriate for the best possible learning. An NDP government will give schools and teachers the tools they need to provide the best learning environment for Alberta’s children. With tuition fees and rents on the rise many families are struggling to pay for postsecondary education. An NDP government will make tuition and associated education costs affordable for all Albertans.

Many Alberta families are struggling to find the care their aging parents need. There aren’t enough spaces in long-term care facilities, and often these facilities do not meet basic standards. The Tory government has failed to implement the Auditor General’s recommendations for improving the standards for long-term care in Alberta. An NDP government will ensure that seniors who helped build this province have safe and comfortable accommodation. We will treat our seniors with the dignity and respect they deserve.

An NDP government will give tangible support to municipalities to provide safe streets. Community policing and crime reduction strategies are effective ways to make our communities safer. Alberta needs a provincial crime reduction strategy, which includes funding for 500 new community police officers across Alberta. We will support programs for young people dealing with addictions and to help at-risk youth get off the street. An NDP government would give municipalities the tools they need to foster their communities, particularly stable and predictable long-term funding. Housing, policing, and transit will be urban priorities for an NDP government.

A severe shortage of housing has led to soaring rents, large hikes in the cost of houses, and an increase in homelessness. The Tory government's failure to plan is hurting Albertans. While the government has established a task force on housing, it is too early to tell what its recommendations will be or whether they will be accepted. An NDP government will establish a ministry of housing, which will co-ordinate initiatives such as affordable housing programs, rent review legislation, and land banking for Alberta municipalities. Homelessness in a province as wealthy as Alberta is unacceptable. An NDP government will not rest until it is eliminated.

An NDP government will renegotiate an agreement with the federal government to ensure that employers must first demonstrate that there are no qualified Albertan or Canadian workers available before receiving approval to bring in temporary foreign workers. Employers will be expected to work constructively with legitimate trade unions and the Alberta government to ensure that the labour needs of industry are met and that Albertan and Canadian workers are given priority for employment. The NDP caucus supports initiatives to support skills training and labour force development for aboriginal and Métis Albertans. We will strengthen the role of legitimate building trades unions in the training and indenturing of apprentices.

Alberta is experiencing a severe infrastructure crisis. In order to pay off the provincial debt, the Tory government has systematically underfunded provincial infrastructure. The result is that we now have a massive infrastructure debt of between $10 billion and $20 billion. The first step for an NDP government in addressing our infrastructure debt will be to develop a complete and honest accounting of the current infrastructure debt facing the government, school boards, hospitals, postsecondary institutions, and municipalities. We will then develop a multi-billion-dollar capital plan to systematically update Alberta's infrastructure over the next 10 years.

Projects will be funded on a pay-as-you-go basis, supplemented by low-interest financing. This honest and transparent approach is in direct contrast to the Tory government's plans to utilize P3s to build needed infrastructure projects. Under the government's plan private business would build and own many of our hospitals, roads, and schools. They would borrow money to do it and at a higher interest rate than the government. All costs plus a profit would be recovered from the taxpayers, yet the financial debt would appear on corporate, not government, books. P3s are simply a way of hiding public debt while increasing it at the same time. P3s have a long history of cost overruns, substandard quality, and unwieldy long-term contracts. An NDP government will reject this approach.

Global climate change threatens human civilization itself. The Conservative government seems unable to come to grips with its own responsibility in this matter. Uncontrolled and unplanned expansion of tar sands development not only disrupts the economy; it will soon become the source of the largest increase in CO₂ emissions in the world. The Tory government's use of emissions intensity targets is deliberately misleading. It allows total emissions of CO₂ to continue to rise dramatically while their so-called intensity drops. We will oppose government legislation to further entrench emission intensity as the basis for Alberta's climate change strategy. An NDP government will work with industry to develop guidelines for real and meaningful limits on CO₂ emissions.

We will implement a temporary moratorium on the approval of new tar sands projects while a long-term economic and environmental strategy for the development of the tar sands is developed. This will include a plan for impacts on water and natural gas supplies, the labour market, and the environment. An NDP government will pursue a balanced approach to reducing emissions. We have already introduced legislation designed to help individual Albertans do their share. These include our 2006 bill to allow net metering of electricity and our 2005 bill to create a revolving fund to promote energy efficiency retrofits.

Alberta faces a looming water crisis. The Tory government has failed to fully fund the Water for Life strategy. Meanwhile, water licences are overallocated, population growth is outstripping our supplies of water, and the ever-growing thirst of the petroleum industry jeopardizes the long-term availability of clean water. An NDP government will make water supply and water quality a top priority.

Albertans are not getting their fair share as the owners of our precious nonrenewable resources. The energy corporations exploiting these resources are reaping the benefits of the unprecedented price of oil and the Conservative government's cut-rate royalties. Most tar sands projects still pay only 1 per cent royalty on the oil they produce. An NDP government will develop a royalty regime that is fair to Albertans, encourages the sustainable development of oil and gas resources, and ensures that bitumen will be processed here in Alberta. While recent surpluses seem large, they are small in comparison to the real value of our nonrenewable resources. We need to invest significantly more to create a renewable energy economy to ensure that our children and grandchildren inherit a green and prosperous future. An NDP government will create a green energy fund to invest in energy conservation, research and development of renewable energy, and green energy projects.

Alberta's NDP is committed to a balanced budget. An NDP government would cancel the massive corporate tax cuts supported by the Conservatives and the Liberals. When corporations like EnCana are earning $6 billion in profits in one year, they do not need tax cuts. If corporations pay their fair share, working- and middle-class families have a chance to get ahead.

Sound land-use planning becomes critically important during periods of rapid growth. The government has a responsibility in ensuring that clear and distinct roles are set out for urban and rural municipalities. An NDP government will move to limit urban sprawl by restoring meaningful regional planning. Preservation of agricultural land and rural lifestyles will be important goals.

The government's flagship legislation is a bill to create a lobbyist registry. Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland and Labrador all have such registries already, and the NDP opposition has been advocating this for a number of years. The Tory government has failed to include cooling-off periods in their legislation for former government officials entering the private sector. The Conservative government has repeatedly used Alberta's freedom of information legislation to justify hiding public information. In the last session of the Legislative Assembly the Tory government pushed through legislation that would restrict access to ministers' briefing notes and lock up internal audits for 15 years. An NDP government will conduct an open and comprehensive review of Alberta's information laws.

The NDP opposition has proposed legislation that would create a commission on electoral reform, introduced private members' motions that would end the use of the Public Affairs Bureau as a Conservative government propaganda machine, and brought forward emergency motions to require disclosure of leadership campaign donations. True democratic reform should begin with legislation to get big money out of politics. An NDP government will eliminate corporate and union political donations and ensure that leadership contests for political parties are subject to the same limits and disclosure requirements as other political fundraising.

Alberta is at a crossroads. We can continue down the same path of uncontrolled growth, polluted air, and crumbling schools, or we can take another path. As a province we have an unprecedented opportunity to create a green and prosperous future. We can ensure healthy families living in healthy communities, and by working together, we can build an open and inclusive democracy. We hope that Albertans will join us.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, March 12.

[Motion carried; at 5:21 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in this sitting of the Legislature, we ask for the insight we need to do our work to the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Now, hon. members, we'll proceed to the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Would all participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the high commissioner for the Republic of Kenya, Her Excellency Judith Mbula Bahemuka. With the high commissioner is Mr. Kennedy Barasa, second counsellor of the high commission in Ottawa. This is the high commissioner's first visit to Alberta, and we feel honoured that she chose to come to our province less than a year into her appointment.

We had lunch today with Her Excellency, and we had some great discussions about potential partnerships in not only postsecondary but in the other areas of forestry and agriculture. As well, the high commissioner spoke very passionately about her belief in education and postsecondary.

They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two people sitting in your gallery today who are members of the Edmonton branch of the Royal Commonwealth Society. The society is a cosponsor and assists with the promotion of the annual Alberta Commonwealth Parliamentary Association student essay competition. I'd ask that Dr. John Slade, treasurer, and Mr. Joe Zasada, director at large, rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a rare privilege for me to be able to introduce to you a brand new Albertan, my brand new granddaughter. She'll be three days old at 1:58 today. Her name is Alexa Grace Kathleen Haley. She is accompanied by her dad and mom, Jeff and Layna Haley. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this province.

The Speaker: Well, I must say that I am stunned. The hon. member is way too young to be a grandmother.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege again to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a group of grade 6 students from the Rimbey elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Howey, and parent helpers Lennie McFadyen, Mary Palm, Laura Baker, Mike Weatherald, Joanne McNaught, and Ann-Marie Trautman. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is Annemarie Larsen. Annemarie is participating in a job shadowing program, so she job shadowed me this morning. Annemarie is a law student at the University of Alberta and already has a BA in psychology and philosophy under her belt, so no wonder she is going into law. She is very interested in increasing the role of women in the Legislature and is especially interested in representation of women and women's issues. I'd ask Annemarie to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the House.

My second introduction today, Mr. Speaker, is the new outreach co-ordinator for the Edmonton-Centre constituency office. It's taken us a long time to find him, so we are very pleased to welcome Richard Engelhardt. Richard's past positions have been as office manager for the PRIDE centre, and he also worked for some time for Martin Equipment. He is currently working toward a bachelor of fine arts, with a major in sociology and a minor in psychology, at Grant MacEwan College. I would ask Richard to please rise and accept our warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, as well, have two introductions. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent who has been in the news over the development of her three boys. They have each been diagnosed with the rare disease known as Hunter syndrome, and unless the boys are treated with Elaprase, the boys face an early, certain death. I've asked Nicole to come forward today to remind the minister that she is still waiting for a meeting. I'd like Nicole Miranda as well as her mother, Sandra Hartling, to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The second introduction, Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to all members of the Assembly is the grade 6 class from Lago Lindo elementary school in my constituency. There are 52 of them. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Peters and Mrs. Goodall, as well as parent helpers Mrs. Heemeryck, Mrs. Lesyk, Mr. Rowley, Mrs. Mah, Mr. Odenbach, and Mrs. LaBrie. I would like them all to please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly two dedicated workers in the province of Alberta, part of the Farmworkers Union of Alberta. They are here for the third year in a row, calling for dignity and basic human rights for farm workers. If you'd stand, we will give you the welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Deron Bilous. Deron was born and raised here in Edmonton and received his bachelor of education from the University of Alberta in 2001. He currently teaches English and physical education at Inner City high. Deron has worked with Canada World Youth, supervising international youth exchange programs across Canada and in China, Brazil, and Poland. We are proud to have Deron join the NDP team as our candidate in Edmonton-Centre in the next election. He is seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am very delighted to introduce to you and through you to this House Christina Gray. Christina teaches computer programming at DevStudios. She was born in Edmonton and has lived in the Woodvale community in Mill Woods for the last four years. She is the chair of the Edmonton Transit System Advisory Board and volunteers on the Support Network's 24-hour crisis line. Christina is also active in our community working on both the Woodvale Community League and the Mill Woods Crime Prevention Council. We are pleased to have Christina as part of the NDP team as a candidate in Edmonton-Mill Woods for the next election. I will now ask Christina to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly some staff from my department and the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation, who just spent the past two weeks braving frigid temperatures up north in Whitehorse. These individuals were there as part of Team Alberta, which was competing at the 2007 Canada Winter Games. The games bring together the best young athletes in 21 different sport disciplines once every four years, and once again Alberta proved to the rest of the country that we are a force to reckon with. We brought home 79 medals, good for a third-place finish behind Quebec and Ontario. This is the fourth time Alberta has finished a Canada Winter Games in third place, which was the goal set by the team before the games began.

Here today from Team Alberta mission staff are Cam Berwald, the team's chef de mission. Cam did an incredible job keeping 260 athletes in check and ready to compete. She was helped by Scott Fraser, the assistant chef de mission, and others who provided valuable support to Team Alberta, including Korrine Krokosh, Jerry George, Roger Kramers, Steve Pritchard, and Lloyd Bentz. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Holy Cross Care Centre

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forty-two seniors in Calgary are currently being relocated from the Holy Cross centre long-term care facility due to inadequate care and fire code violations. This incident indicates that the facilities that care for our most vulnerable citizens do not appear to have improved since the Auditor General's scathing report into long-term care nearly two years ago. The province also refuses to implement legislated, province-wide standards for continuing care. My questions are to the Premier. Given that long-term care residents in the Holy Cross centre will be moved out over the next 30 days, how can the Premier reassure Albertans that the health and safety of the assisted living residents who will remain in the building are not also at risk?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have very good policies and procedures in place to protect those in care. With respect to assisted living it's an administrative matter, and I'll leave it to the minister of health to answer.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, do you wish to supplement?

If not, the hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: has the Premier been able to determine how long the residents were at risk before the decision was made to move them?

Mr. Stelmach: There was a fair amount of work done by the minister of health, and he'll be able to answer that question.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been some ongoing monitoring of the situation at the long-term care centre at the Holy Cross in Calgary. There was an inspection, I'm advised, by the city of Calgary on the fire and safety codes issues, and a report was issued on that in December. I was made aware of the situation early in February, I believe. The Calgary regional health authority has been monitoring the situation relative to the long-term care beds in that particular facility and working with the fire and safety codes people to make sure that safety is not compromised for the residents. There has been a fire watch put in place, as I understand it, and the Calgary regional health authority has put in place their own personnel to make sure that both the safety issues and the care issues of the long-term care residents in that facility are taken care of.

With respect to the assisted living, that is a private facility, but they still operate under the fire codes and safety codes, so the owners of the facility will have to answer to the city of Calgary's fire and safety with respect to making sure that safety is monitored on that side as well.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the Auditor General's report on the quality of long-term care across the province indicated that clear standards of care were needed – and that was two years ago – why is this government continuing to delay on creating legislated province-wide standards of care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta has invested a considerable amount of money in the care of our seniors and will continue to do that. I know that there were additional dollars that went into the ministry's budget to move us forward towards the recommendations that came forward from the long-term care committee. We're doing the best we can. Just by memory, I think there was at least $70 million injected into it. But if further details are required, I can have the minister respond.

Royalty Review Panel

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is failing its claims to openness and accountability when it comes to the issue of appointments to the Royalty Review Panel. Instead of a truly independent, balanced panel, we have a flawed process, blatant conflicts of interest, and serious questions about panelists' qualifications and their independence from this government. Albertans have questions they want this Premier to answer. To the Premier: given the Minister of Finance's embarrassing admission last week that unbeknownst to him one panel member – and I quote Hansard – “has actually done a considerable amount of work on finances with regard to oil companies,” will the Premier tell this Assembly what personal financial interests this individual may have in energy-related businesses?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans want to know at the completion of this royalty review is whether the royalty regime that's in place today is fair: fair to those that make hundreds of billions of dollars' worth of investment in the oil and gas industry and also to all of us as Albertans, as equal shareholders in the natural resources. That is the purpose of this royalty review.

Dr. Taft: Again, he's failing to be open and accountable, so I will ask him another question. To the Premier: given that the Minister of Finance admits that he was unaware of the panelist's history of working with oil companies prior to his appointment, can the Premier tell this Assembly what qualified this person as panelist in the first place other than that he is a friend of the Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, making allegations in the House like that – he doesn't know who my friends are, who my enemies are, so maybe do a little bit more research on that.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, all members of the panel are professionals. They're economists. They're people with professional designations. I expect them to live up to their commitments as professionals in those key areas, to do a very thorough review of the royalties, put all that information on the table, and Albertans will make that determination of whether the royalty regime is fair or not.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier, and I will continue until he answers: is the Premier finally prepared to answer the question of whether any panelists or their companies financially supported his or the Minister of Finance's PC leadership campaigns?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, following the question from the hon. leader last week, I made a commitment that I'd check to make sure if there was anything coming from any member of the five members on the committee. There are none at all in terms of any contributions to me, you know, to my campaign. They checked whatever company names or individual names, and there are none on the record.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I would just add to that that none of the people on the royalty review commission made any contribution to my leadership campaign.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier. Given the old Holy Cross hospital site's ongoing list of problems and controversies since it was sold to private owners 10 years ago – toxic mould, asbestos abatement issues, fire code violations, and now the Calgary health region's conclusion that the long-term care facility fails to meet provincial standards of care – it's time to make sure that private providers of care are held accountable, and it's time to restore public confidence. Will the Premier commit to launching a public inquiry into the operations of the Holy Cross site?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, no. I have great confidence in the Calgary regional health authority, that has a contract with the owners. First and foremost, it's safety and, of course, care of our seniors in that institution. If there is any further work to be done by the Calgary regional health authority or further help that they require from this government, we'll be there to help.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the potential province-wide implications here, the ongoing problems at the Holy Cross site, the inherent vulnerability of the residents in care, and the province's duty of care to the residents, why won't the Premier do the right thing and investigate the situation?

Mr. Stelmach: The authority is responsible to the minister of health, and if the minister of health feels that either the Calgary regional health authority or someone in the process isn't doing their job, I'm sure that the minister will step in and ensure the safety of our seniors in that facility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the health minister's admission just a moment ago that he knew of fire code violations in the Holy Cross building in early February and given that the residents of the assisted living facility there have recently been notified that their rents are increasing by about 40 per cent, what is the Premier doing to rectify one or the other matter?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the kinds of long-term care services that Alberta provides are outstanding. In fact, we spend a considerable amount of money in terms of the care, the amount of insured drugs, the kind of health services. Is there more to do, generally speaking, across the province for an aging population? Certainly. Those are going to be the kind of cost pressures that are going to be coming forward in the budget that will be presented in this House. We're trying to find people to fill all of the positions – dietary and housekeeping, not only nursing and physicians – to take care of our seniors. But I'm proud of the progress that has been accomplished and proud of the fact that we're going to move ahead in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Alberta Clipper Pipeline Proposal

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During his PC leadership campaign the Premier said that exporting raw bitumen to the U.S. for processing is like scraping off the topsoil, selling it, and thinking we have a rich farm because we have cash in the bank. If we insist on selling raw product out of this province, our province will lose not only the taxes and royalties on the value-added products but also high-quality and long-term jobs. If approved, the Alberta Clipper pipeline would do just that: send jobs and taxes elsewhere for someone else's profit. My question is to the Premier. Given your promises to Albertans during the PC leadership race, will you now reject the Alberta Clipper pipeline proposal?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, well, at least someone was listening to what I was saying during the leadership campaign. Thank you very much for quoting it almost verbatim.

Part of our ongoing discussion with Albertans is how we can increase our tax base by adding more value not only to oil and gas and the petrochemical industry but also to agriculture and forestry. The discussions that are occurring with respect to how we can add value to bitumen are important to us. We are of course going through the review at the moment, and then the next step is: how can we work with industry and Albertans to ensure that the future generations have more in terms of a secure fiscal regime other than just selling off natural resources?

Mr. Mason: Words don't make jobs, Mr. Speaker.

The question to the Premier is this. Will the government reject the Alberta Clipper project, which is now under consideration and which will do exactly what the Premier said that he wouldn't do?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. leader of the third party is well aware of the position that I and this government and my caucus have taken. We're going to look at every opportunity to add value to raw products, oil and gas or agriculture or forestry.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, one more time to the Premier: will he ensure that he closes the barn door before the horse is gone and stand in this House and tell us the government's position on the approval of the Alberta Clipper project to export unprocessed bitumen to the United States?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there have been agreements put in place prior to my arrival in this particular position. All I'm saying very clearly to all industry is that part of a very important goal of this government is to add value to products, and we're going to move in that direction. We're going to discuss with various industries to put those policies in place. What has been done in the past I can't undo.

The other issue here too . . . [interjections] Just hold it. Hold it. Hold it. Don't get too excited. The other part here is that there also has to be a need to place value on bitumen. Okay? And here's the other question: some of it will have to be exported to get the value of bitumen in the world market to see how we can find the balance in terms of what that bitumen is actually worth. So it's a little more complex than what the hon. member makes it out to be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Agricultural Assistance

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the federal government announced $1 billion in funding to the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, also known as CAIS. I know that Alberta farmers have been watching this program closely, especially with the challenges facing the agricultural sector in recent years. Six hundred million dollars would go to start a producer savings account somewhat like the previous NISA program, and $400 million would go towards production costs. Farmers have been battling drought, BSE, low commodity prices, and now high input costs. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. How does this assistance purport to tackle these issues?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, this is indeed good news. While the federal money depends on budget approval, it does point in the right direction for Alberta. However, at this particular time not all of the details are in. Most of this money would go to kick-starting the savings accounts that Alberta has in fact pressed for for the last number of years. This will let the producer direct his or her own funds, with a matching grant from the government. We are also pleased that there is recognition of the cost of production in it because we all know that the costs of production are certainly on the rise all the time.

But as I said, Mr. Speaker, I still have to see the details and how they help Alberta's industry. CAIS is far from perfect, in my mind, and I hope that this is an indication that we will see some good common sense and changes coming. They are indeed long overdue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how does this announcement get to the recent challenges with eroding reference margins, and where does this put Alberta after all of the extra work that we've done with the existing CAIS program?

Mr. Groeneveld: That raises a good point, Mr. Speaker. Back-to-back disasters have put our operators in a tight position. However, no one could have seen this coming. Alberta responded a few years ago with a pilot project to provide more realistic support that reflected the real-life situation on our farms today. This is a key issue that we're hammering at with the federal government and continue to work on, but Alberta is indeed committed to some interim support, as we always have been, over and above the regular call.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister be getting some of these issues resolved at the national table?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Alberta still has a lot of work to do on the whole CAIS issue, but we've had some excellent opportunities to make changes this year. While the national policy framework that my predecessor has been working on is pretty much complete now, we met in Leduc this last week with 60 stakeholders to move this forward and try to improve the opportunities for our Alberta farmers. I am looking forward in the next months here – I think it's on April 12 and one time in June – to meeting with the federal minister and provincial ministers to discuss this further.

Integrated Land-use Management Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to fail the people of Alberta in protecting our environment and special places. The Rumsey natural area, 149 square kilometres, has been subject to increasing oil and gas development for years pending its designation as a heritage rangeland. Recent surveys of the area have revealed many examples of failed protection, weed infestation, and failed reclamation from previous resource companies. Agreement with various stakeholder groups was reached for no new roads and no new well pads many years ago. Still, new CBM wells have been recently approved. To the Premier: since public polls are also saying that they don't want to support new development on these lands, and a 2001 agreement was to phase out new development in these areas, why is this area not off limits to oil and gas development?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my information is that there were previous agreements that had to be honoured before land was of course assigned to the special places. But I don't know all of the details, and I'll leave it to the minister responsible.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite is asking a very, very important question. I need to say that the Rumsey block itself that he's talking about includes two protected areas. In the one, certainly, there is absolutely no oil or gas activity that is allowed in the Rumsey ecological reserve. But in the Rumsey natural areas energy commitments are subject to the conditions that were established in 1993, Mr. Speaker, as part of the multistakeholder plan, and that particular plan states that surface access is subject to various specific restrictions. My staff worked and is continuing to work with Alberta Sustainable Resource Development to determine what conditions to attach to minimize the impact of the existing activity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that Albertans have waited 14 years for an integrated land-use framework that protects sensitive areas such as the Rumsey, when will we see a completed land-use strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our new Premier's commitment, of course, is to secure the quality of life and also manage growth pressures for all Albertans, and in that vein, he has given our ministry, Sustainable Resource Development, our number one mandate: coming up with, developing a land-use framework. The integrated land management process, something that is already in place, will be developed, will be folded into that. I can assure you that Albertans are going to be very happy with this process. Public consultations are going forth starting this spring and more stakeholder consultation starting in May or June. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: given that evidence exists that coal-bed methane activity is already affecting groundwater, what are you doing with the results, and where are the results of the past five years of coal-bed methane experimentation in the Horseshoe Canyon formation?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue related to the analysis of the water and coal-bed methane is an ongoing, continuous event. As the member well knows, we've had discussions. There are test wells that have been and are currently being drilled. The results from those wells are something that is taken over time, so the analysis will take some time. I'm sure that once we've got some kind of sufficient amount of data to make some kind of meaningful determination, we'll be pleased to share those results with the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Federal Equalization Payments

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There seems to be some confusion over Alberta's position on the equalization formula that would potentially include natural resource revenues. My question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, can you please advise this Assembly what Alberta's position is on the proposed inclusion of natural resources in the equalization formula?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have a letter. When I say we, the Council of the Federation, this is all of the 10 Premiers. This letter was of course written to the then chair, the former Premier Ralph Klein, and again reiterated the position that the federal government will not include natural resource revenue in the calculation of the equalization formula. All we're doing is that we're going to hold the Prime Minister to that commitment.

Mr. Lukaszuk: My first supplemental is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Have you had an opportunity to advise your federal counterparts, in particular the Prime Minister's office, of Alberta's position as just stated by the Premier on the potential inclusion of natural resources in any potential equalization formulas?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, our Premier has submitted exactly the point regarding that we do not support nonrenewable resources being part of the equalization formula. I will table this letter that our Premier has submitted to the Prime Minister and also a copy of the letter from the Prime Minister to the government of Alberta and to our Premier, indicating that he has no intention of including nonrenewable resources in the formula. We expect him to live up to that commitment he made as a Prime Minister that comes from Alberta.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental is to the Minister of Finance. Have you had an opportunity to communicate Alberta's position as stated by this Premier on the inclusion of natural resources in any equalization formula to your federal counterpart prior to his dropping of the federal budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to reiterate to people that the federal equalization program is based on federal taxation dollars. So it is federal taxation dollars that are coming from Alberta, going to Ottawa, and then are equalized.

The second point is that if the resource dollars are included in the equalization formula, according to the O'Brien report they're potentially looking at an increase of $900 million. If we were to receive dollars back from that – and I must emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that that's a big if – we would be receiving about $90 million. But the most important thing for Albertans is the per capita payments. Currently in Alberta there are eight provinces who receive over $925 per capita. In Alberta we receive $755. If we were to go to the level of $925 per capita, which seven of 10 provinces are at, it would mean another $571 million for the province of Alberta, which is a huge sum.

Mr. Speaker, in direct response to the hon. member's question: yes, I have communicated this position to the Minister of Finance, and we are talking prior to the budget being released.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Funding for Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People with disabilities and their caregivers are not being given the attention or the respect that they deserve. The turnover rate for caregivers of people with disabilities ranges from an astounding 40 to 90 per cent. The community is very vocal about the need for increased funding for front-line staff in order to provide safe and adequate services. My question would be to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What plan does the minister have to ensure that people with developmental disabilities will not have to reduce the amount of care they receive because of inadequate funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This province has one of the best records across the country in supplying services to those with disabilities. It is going to continue to be an emphasis of this government. I'd say that over the last seven years our funding has increased over 80 per cent, a very substantial increase when the caseload is nowhere near those kinds of numbers. We do acknowledge that this is a group of people that are in need of assistance. These are some of the most vulnerable people in our society, and we take it very seriously to ensure that they have the levels of support that they require.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another question to the same minister: what plan does the minister have to respond to the needs of the community by improving wages for front-line care workers to maintain the ones that we have?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I met recently with the association of service providers and will continue to meet with all those providing the services to those persons with developmental disabilities. We have also just recently reallocated from our budget funds another $11.3 million directly to developmental disability boards. That'll go to the service providers in acknowledgement of the wages and ensure that we can meet those needs to ensure that those people can retain the staff that they require.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. That is welcome news. I'm hoping that it will be enough. What concrete action will the minister take to prove to the people with disabilities that they really are a priority with this government and it'll show in the next budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess we'll stay tuned to the next budget so that we can answer more fully that question.

It has been a priority. The funding levels have been increasing each year, and it will continue to be that. We are going to ensure that it's not just a matter of dollars; we're going to work very closely on how we get best use for those dollars in our organization. How do we ensure that we get the best creative approaches to providing those services amongst those delivering that service? We're going to work closely with those providing the services. We're going to ensure that it's supported by the funding necessary and ensure that these people are very much important to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Gravel Pit Reclamation

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the municipalities in my constituency, Camrose county, contacted me regarding the code of practice for gravel pits. They're concerned about the follow-up on the reclamation of abandoned gravel pits. If these pits are not reclaimed, they become a haven for noxious weeds and illegal dumping, which then becomes an issue for the municipality. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What can be done to address the noxious weeds and illegal dumping in the abandoned gravel pits?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to understand that as long as a gravel pit exists, it is the responsibility of the approval holder to ensure that there are no adverse effects on the environment. So to specifically answer the member's question, if the county, or any other Albertan for that matter, feels that there are environmental concerns associated with a gravel pit, I would encourage them to call Alberta Environment. We have a 24-hour complaint line: 1-800-222-6514.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. To the same minister: does Alberta Environment have a process for following up on reclamation, including a timeline for reclamation?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, once an approval holder decides to reclaim a gravel pit, there are a couple of things that happen. First of all, they are required to reclaim it to standard. It's in their best interest to ensure that they do so because associated with the approval is a security deposit that is held, and that security deposit would be held until Alberta Environment is satisfied that the gravel pit or any other kind of environmental issue is dealt with adequately through a reclamation certificate.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: so, Mr. Minister, if these pits are abandoned and not reclaimed, then what is the process by which a municipality can have the pit reclaimed?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned in answer to the previous question the matter of a security deposit. That security deposit is established at a sufficient value that if the gravel pit has not been reclaimed, the security deposit is held, and the proceeds will be used by Alberta Environment to ensure that the reclamation is conducted appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Trade, Investment, and Labour Mobility

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In just 20 days the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, or TILMA, between this province and British Columbia comes into effect. There has been to date no discussion in this Chamber on the substance or timing of the agreement. It was negotiated behind closed doors, away from the inconvenient prying eyes of Albertans. My first question is to the Premier. How can the Premier justify such an undemocratic, nontransparent process?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the agreement that the hon. member is talking about is actually a groundbreaking agreement that other provinces, including the province of Ontario – and Saskatchewan has already inquired to see if they can be a partner. I had a very good meeting with Premier Fentie from the Yukon, who wants to see if he can participate as well. We do have a scheduled period of implementation. There'll be more discussion with respect to this particular agreement.

An Hon. Member: Behind closed doors.

Mr. Stelmach: Behind closed doors. They always come up with "behind closed doors." Mr. Speaker, do you see the door open here or open there? No, but it's the most public facility right here in the province of Alberta, so I don't know where they're coming up with this "behind closed doors."

Mr. Bonko: To the Premier again: what additional funding are municipalities, school boards, health regions, academic institutions going to receive to enable them to be fully compliant with TILMA's many provisions?

Mr. Stelmach: This agreement, Mr. Speaker, is to break down the barriers of trade, labour mobility, procurement between the province of British Columbia and Alberta. Now, before the two cabinets met over a period of a number of years, we had rules that would actually not permit a licensed welder – a red seal welder can weld pipeline on the Alberta side right up to this imaginary line, the Alberta/B.C. border, but could not weld the same pipeline on the other side. Well, if we're going to compete around the world in terms of our exports, we're going to have to co-operate locally. That is very, very important because without that co-operation we'll not be able to maintain our global competitiveness.

Mr. Bonko: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe I'll try it again. Same question: what additional funding are the municipalities, school boards, health authorities, academic institutions going to receive to enable them to be fully compliant with TILMA's many provisions?

Mr. Stelmach: One of the first questions I hear is: how much additional funding? This is to save money to ensure that we become more efficient and more effective, and where this issue of more money coming forward – I'm not quite sure. There's about $14 billion of economic barriers today in the country of Canada as a result of these regulations that were put in there years and years ago for no reason at all, but today they're costing all of us a considerable amount of money, and that is one of the reasons why we entered into this agreement. As I said, we have an implementation period. We'll meet with municipalities and all of the MUSH sector to make sure that everybody has the information necessary to move ahead.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Alberta/Montana Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have serious concerns about the construction of a 500 kV power line through central Alberta. The EUB has failed to appropriately consult the people affected by this line in a timely manner. While Albertans demand decisive action on climate change, the government seeks to approve massive new coal plants and inefficient long-distance overhead power lines for this new project. My questions are to the Premier. Considering that this 500 kV power line is designed in part as a merchant line to export electricity, why are Alberta ratepayers expected to pay the full price for this new power line?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hearings, I believe, have begun today in Red Deer in terms of the transmission line, so I'm not going to make any comments about that because it's before the board.

With respect to the other issue in terms of greenhouse gas emissions, I believe that last week our Minister of Environment tabled legislation, the only piece of legislation to be tabled in all of Canada with respect to setting some targets for greenhouse gas emissions and putting in place a process to reduce greenhouse gas emissions over a period of time, so we're taking a leadership role in this area.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, the intensity and absolute reductions are two completely different things. The Premier is referring to the former. So I would very much like to ask the Premier how he could justify a scheme to burn coal in Alberta to produce electricity to export out of the province while Albertans are left holding the bag with all the carbon dioxide and other toxic emissions.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the first question from the party was about adding value to bitumen. Well, if you do put in an upgrader plant, which I believe they support, guess what? There'll be more CO₂ emitted. Now, all of a sudden, they're saying they're moving toward absolute. I say: you want absolute, like right now? Park your car. That'll give you absolute emissions right now.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to, absolutely. I would consider parking my car the day that all the SUVs from the other side get parked. I would be happy to do so: same day, same service, no problem.

Mr. Speaker, considering how confused the approval process has been so far, why won't the Premier at least delay the hearings until a full and public disclosure can be made and the affected farmers in the region can be done with their calving season?

Mr. Stelmach: There are two parts to that question. With respect to parking, that's the same old thing: always somebody expecting somebody else to take the first step. Not me, you know. If I want a 20-minute shower, it's up to me. Everybody else has to have a five-minute shower.

Anyway, with respect to the farmers those issues we've heard very clearly. Our MLAs are getting the kind of letters and questions with respect to compensation. All of those issues, I'm very confident, will be dealt with by the authority that's in place, and that's the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: Okay. I heard it. I'll get the light bulbs changed as soon as I can. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Oil and Gas Activity in Rumsey Natural Area

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a Texas-based company was granted approval to drill for coal-bed methane in Rumsey natural area. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Why is drilling allowed in an area that is designated as protected?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, the Rumsey block includes two protected areas, and one of them allows certain activities to happen whereas the other one doesn't.

It's important to recognize that Alberta's special places program ran from 1995 until 2001 and put over 2 million hectares of land under protection in 81 new and 13 expanded areas. As I indicated, there were four areas established under special places. We agreed to honour the existing oil and gas commitments as a matter of fairness. Ten areas, including Rumsey natural area, were under consideration for protection before special places. Their designation, therefore, allowed and followed a different process, resulting in different levels of industrial activities there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. Is there an opportunity to limit the amount of oil and gas activity in the Rumsey natural area?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, over 27,000 square kilometres of Alberta's great outdoors are presently preserved. I need to say that we've got over 500 parks and protected areas, covering an area about the size of Belgium, Mr. Speaker. I need to add that our continued prosperity is very much dependent on striking a balance between our economic growth and our environmental protection.

Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to both managing growth pressure and improving Alberta's quality of life, and to further that, my staff will keep on discussing those particular concerns with the Minister of Energy and his staff.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Family Violence

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Council of Women's Shelters has just released its statistics for the past fiscal year, and the numbers are sobering. Alberta has the highest rate of domestic violence of any province, and the council's report suggests that many women and children are not getting the services they need.

To the Minister of Children's Services: given that in the past year

13,000 women and children were turned away from women's shelters because they were full, what backup plan does the minister have to ensure that these endangered women and children receive the help that they need?

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you very much. First of all, I appreciate the question. I think this is a very important area. Also, I want to say that the people that work in women's shelters have my upmost respect because I think they do incredible work rebuilding the lives of families.

One thing I would say: several weeks ago I did meet with some representation from the Council of Women's Shelters, and that was one of the reasons why I wanted to make sure that we made the announcement last week that we did, the 3 per cent retroactive to last year, April 1, 2006, because I do know that one of their top issues was staffing.

The other thing I can say is that we're very close to finalizing the women's shelter review, and that will be very telling for us. It's been a very thorough review. It took a look at where we came from when we look at the history of women's shelters, what's working really well, and how we can move forward. So I do look forward to working with stakeholders once that review is released.

Mrs. Mather: To the Solicitor General: given the essential role of police services in protecting women and children from domestic violence, what resources are dedicated to this issue to ensure that police are able to respond to cases effectively?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to reiterate that this government is committed to providing safe and secure communities for all Albertans. Specifically, in regard to domestic violence we are committed to reducing family violence, a very high priority for our government. For example, we have allocated $1.7 million toward the Alberta relationship threat assessment and management initiative, or TAMI. It's a first in Canada. It links police, prosecutors, and community agencies to help reduce and prevent domestic violence and stalking.

Mrs. Mather: To the minister of municipal affairs: given that a reported 75 per cent of women who returned to abusive partners after receiving services cited lack of affordable housing as the main reason, a 50 per cent increase from 2005, how will the minister ensure that housing options are available for women experiencing domestic violence?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that affordable housing is a priority of this government. The establishment of the housing task force, that has been throughout Alberta, consulting with Albertans to hear some of the challenges that Albertans have, is going to report to my ministry on March 19. At that time we will go through the process, and we'll definitely have a report for this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Outbreak of Infectious Syphilis

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend

Albertans were warned about the risk of sexually transmitted infections due to a significant rise in the number of syphilis cases. Nine babies have been born with this infection in the past two years, and the infection has spread beyond the traditional high-risk groups. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. At this time can you update this Assembly on the infectious syphilis outbreak and why it exists?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, on Friday we did put out a news release in the province, indicating that we were very concerned about the outbreak of syphilis in the province, a serious increase. When you talk about 200 cases, it may not seem like a lot, but the exponential increase year over year is very significant and important enough that we want to make sure that Albertans are aware of it and taking appropriate precautions. The outbreak is widespread. It's not isolated to any particular area or any particular identifiable group. An Albertan as young as 15 and an Albertan as old as 81 have been affected.

As the hon. member has indicated, we've had nine cases of congenital syphilis diagnosed, babies born with the infection. That hasn't happened in Alberta for a significant period of time, so we're very concerned about it. We want to make sure that Albertans are aware of it and that they're taking the appropriate precautions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: what is the province doing to reduce the number of cases?

Mr. Hancock: Well, as I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, we did put out a notice on Friday to Albertans, which was picked up by the news media. In addition, we will be engaging in a public educational awareness campaign. We're putting out notice to doctors across the province to be aware of the problem and the risk and to talk, where appropriate, to their patients with respect to it and encourage those who are engaged in unprotected sex, particularly in risky unprotected sex, to be cognizant of the issue and to be tested where appropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My last question is to the Minister of Education. Given that youth believe that these infections can be cured with antibiotics and there won't be any significant lasting effects, can the minister tell us how schools are impressing the dangers of sexually transmitted diseases onto their students?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there would be two areas that I would talk about. One would be the health and life skills that take place in grades 4 to 9, but probably more important is what's known as CALM in high schools, which is career and life management. These programs teach our children about the importance of healthy, caring, and, I guess above all, safe relationships. But I do need to state that these kinds of discussions also need to happen outside the classroom as parents have a responsibility to make sure that they have open and honest discussions with their children about those safe and healthy relationships.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As referenced by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs earlier today, this government is sending mixed messages to their federal Tory cousins on equalization payments. A month ago both the Premier and the Finance minister opposed the inclusion of resource revenues in the formula that is used to calculate federal transfers, yet according to quotes attributed to the Finance minister in today's media, the minister appears to have flip-flopped on the issue. My question is for the Minister of Finance. Given that the Finance minister's response earlier today in question period only served to muddy the waters, will he please clarify once and for all: is it his position to go along with 50 per cent of resource revenues to be included in the calculations or not?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier and the minister of international and intergovernmental relations made it perfectly clear, as did I, as to what our stand was on it. It's very important to tell the Legislative Assembly that these are the federal tax dollars. These are tax dollars that the federal government receives, albeit, I will say, too much, too high. But it is their tax dollars that they are distributing back according to a formula, the equalization formula, that was first enacted in the 1950s, so it is their right to do it. From our point of view, if the pie is there, we don't receive anything from the pie at all. We don't receive any dollars back.

So the issue that I'm concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is one thing, and that's the per capita pool and the CST and the CHT. The reason is that the federal government is double-equalizing. They're equalizing on the equalization formula, and then they're equalizing on the per capita pool. That's not right, and that's not fair to Albertans. Five hundred and seventy-one million dollars are at stake here simply because we are Alberta. I think it's extremely important to ensure that our per capita payments are the same regardless of where you live in Canada. Let the equalization pool be over here, per capita. That's very important to us.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought it was a yes or no question.

To the Minister of Finance. Given that the minister is quoted today as saying, "We also recognize that there's certainly a high chance" that 50 per cent of resource revenues will be included in the formula, "is going to come in whether we say anything or not," my question is for the minister. Has this minister given up when it comes to protecting Alberta's interests against Ottawa?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I do anything but give up when it comes to Alberta's interests. Alberta's interests are served on two fronts, on the equalization as well as on the per capita. Whether or not the O'Brien report comes in, whether or not 50 per cent of natural resources comes in is up to the federal government. Ultimately it's their dollars. But – and I will illustrate again – what is extremely important to us are the per capita dollars, which could mean a difference of $571 million to the citizens of Alberta, and quite frankly because we live in Alberta should not be the reason why we only receive a portion of the per capita payments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given that your department's annual report shows that it received $5.2 million in federal transfers last year, is your department concerned about the mixed messages that are being sent to your federal Tory cousins in Ottawa?

Dr. Morton: As Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I've received a briefing on our finances, but I am not aware of that specific line item. So, Mr. Speaker, with your permission I'll get the answer to that question and get it back to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance to supplement?

Dr. Oberg: To supplement, Mr. Speaker. I will reiterate that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development does not receive one cent from the equalization formula. It is from the per capita spending that he receives.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I get to recognize an hon. member, let me first of all acknowledge and draw to the attention of members certain activities.

All hon. members have on their desks today a copy of the Queen's Commonwealth Day 2007 message from Buckingham Palace of today's date. I just want to quote one paragraph from the Queen's message.

In today's difficult and sometimes divided world, I believe that it is more important than ever to keep trying to respect and understand each other better. Each and every one of us has hopes, needs, and priorities. Each of us is an individual, with ties of emotion and bonds of obligation – to culture, religion, community, country and beyond. In short, each of us is special.

Now, by way of recognizing special people in this Assembly, happy birthday today to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Six years ago on this date, March 12, 2001, 14 members were elected to this Assembly for the first time. So let's congratulate the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, the hon. Minister of Service Alberta, the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, the hon. Minister of Energy, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, the hon. members for Calgary-Shaw, for Calgary-Buffalo, for Calgary-Bow, for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, for Edmonton-Castle Downs, for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Six years today.

Fifteen years ago yesterday, on March 11 – sorry. Ten years ago yesterday, March 11, 1997. We do have a 15-year member, and we'll deal with him on Wednesday. But to the following members, congratulations on your 10th anniversary. I'm having the pages deliver to each and every one of you a 10-year Mace pin. To the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, the hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, the hon. Minister of Children's Services, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, the hon. Member for Strathcona, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and the hon. Member for West Yellowhead: good work. Ten years in this place.

Now, one last point before I sit down. This is the third day of this session, and on Thursday I indicated that there were 84 questions and answers. Today there were 88 questions and answers. So if we sit here for 54 days and we have an average of 86 questions, you will have exhausted 4,644 questions and answers at this current pace.

In a few seconds from now I'll call on the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Leonard Bolger

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize a very special individual. On February 27, 2007, a great Albertan and Canadian, Mr. Leonard Bolger, passed away. Leonard Bolger was a man who was driven to advance Alberta's position as a leader in technology and innovation.

Before beginning his career, Mr. Bolger graduated from the Royal Military College in Kingston, Ontario, and later achieved his bachelor of science from the University of Toronto in 1954. He then joined the air force, where he flew CF-100s and was a test pilot on the Arrow program. After leaving the armed forces, Mr. Bolger worked with Shell Canada as a senior executive. He later retired as the vice-president of research and technology. Mr. Bolger served on the board of the Alberta Research Council and co-chaired the board of the Alberta Energy Research Institute since 2000.

Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of serving as the MLA co-chair for four years with Mr. Bolger, and I can attest that his hard work was focused on improving Albertans' and Canadians' quality of life. He was a leader in expanding the science and technology capability of Canada, specifically in Alberta. He was instrumental in the launch of EnergyINet, a technology network sponsored by a number of governments and companies across Canada. He also served as director emeritus of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research and on the board of the Back Door, a Calgary-based organization which helps youth get off the streets. He was also a recipient of the Alberta centennial medal.

Mr. Bolger will be sorely missed by his friends and associates, who benefited enormously from his advice and counsel over many years. Thank you, Len, for your dedication to Alberta and to Canada. On behalf of all my colleagues at the Alberta Legislature I send my warmest regards and condolences to his family: Jean, Karen, David, Lesley, and Neil.

Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Live Organ Harvesting

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to raise a very disturbing issue in this House in an effort to see if we can bring some light to this situation. On January 25 a public forum was held at the U of A on illicit organ snatching and transplant tourism in China. David Matas, an international human rights lawyer, and David Kilgour, former secretary of state for Canada, spoke at that forum. They are the authors of a shocking report on live organ harvesting in China. On February 2 these two gentlemen called on all states to ban transplant tourism in China. The call was made in a report which examined an allegation that organs may be being harvested from Falun Gong practitioners, who are killed by the harvesting process.

Canadians are going to China for transplants from Calgary, Toronto, Vancouver, and some other cities, and the numbers are increasing. Canadians have been involved in this matter. Mr. Matas points out that the organ market in China is determined by supply and demand. The supply is local to China, but the demand is in large part foreign. Matas says, "We must do everything we can to end this demand," and I agree. I want to know why the Chinese government would seem to be grossly persecuting them and what we can do as politicians and human beings to address this matter. At the very least, I would suggest that we set aside an information session to discuss the matter with knowledgeable experts.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

2007 Canada Winter Games

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Saturday the 2007 Canada Winter Games wrapped up in the Yukon. More than 250 young Albertans made the trek north for our country's premier multisport event for developing athletes. These young Albertans battled minus 30 weather and some intense competition to reach their goal, a third-place finish right behind traditional powers Quebec and Ontario. Our athletes stood on the podium 79 times, and this includes 24 gold medals. They dominated in traditional strengths like Nordic and alpine skiing and long-track speed skating, but they also surprised by winning many medals in archery and fencing.

Team Alberta's performance shows yet again just how strong the sport development network is in our province. As the MLA appointee to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation I'm pleased to report that annual funding to the ASRPW is helping to achieve these excellent results. With this funding Alberta's sport development network continues to build athletes that are ready to take the next step to the international stage. You'll be hearing from Team Alberta 2007 athletes again in the near future as many of them will soon move to World Cup circuits competing for Team Canada. Some will even be in Vancouver in 2010 as Canada's Olympians.

Behind each athlete is a great team, that helps them be their best. The coaches, officials, and mission staff, who are also part of Team Alberta, deserve to be recognized for their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, with pride I ask the members of this House to join me in one final congratulations to Team Alberta 2007. Thank you.

2007 Winter Special Olympics

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate the 435 athletes, their parents, coaches, and volunteers who participated in the 2007 Winter Special Olympics. I was privileged to attend the opening ceremony of the games along with the Honourable Lieutenant Governor, the Premier, representatives from the federal government, and also my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. I also want to commend the many individuals from Calgary-East who assisted in hosting the games at the Max Bell arena. It would not have been possible without your commitment and hard work.

Through Special Olympics athletes develop sport skills, social skills, and self esteem, which assist them in becoming actively involved in recreational, educational, and employment opportunities in their communities. Special Olympics are focused on promoting a more active lifestyle and better quality of life for persons with disabilities through their participation in sport.

Special Olympics Alberta offers programs in 114 communities around the province through 32 affiliates, each with its own volunteer management committee and volunteer coaches. There are over 1,200 volunteers working with over 3,000 athletes in 15 official sports in year-round programs.

Special Olympics continues to be a success because of the tremendous attitude and commitment of athletes and exceptional dedication of the volunteers. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Bell Canada Partnership with Olds College

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this opportunity to acknowledge a great collaboration between a private-sector company and Olds College. On Friday, March 9, Bell Canada and Olds College announced a partnership to create a state-of-the-art distributed learning facility at the Olds College campus. I want to commend the gracious support of Bell Canada. This company contributed $3.1 million to facilitate the construction of a new community learning campus.

As the MLA for the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I'm excited to have the chance to express my constituents' enthusiasm for this great development. The Bell e-learning centre is a great way to connect Albertans to the SuperNet. The linking advances education, research, and training. I'm encouraged that Albertans will soon benefit from this partnership, and I hopefully anticipate that we will see further initiatives such as this in the innovation and technology field.

The new Bell e-learning centre will create many educational opportunities for rural Albertans. They will now be connected to an ever-changing international community and can take advantage of their access to information. The advantages of this project will be recognized for years to come.

I want to applaud Bell's commitment to Alberta and to their partnership with the Alberta government in building the SuperNet.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Greenhouse Gas Intensity Targets

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to try to confuse Albertans by talking about greenhouse gas intensity targets while European nations and American states and even other provinces are forging ahead with actual reductions. It's time for this government to be transparent and accountable on the issue of greenhouse gas intensity targets. Canada has the seventh highest per capita greenhouse gas emissions in the world. In 2004 Alberta released over 100 million tonnes of greenhouse gases into the air, and six of the top 10 industrial emitters in Canada come from this province. The government should admit to Albertans that intensity targets will do nothing to change this situation.

The Premier is talking about emissions intensity when we should be taking action cleaning up our coal-fired generators and instituting a moratorium on new tar sands project approvals. British Columbia has just announced plans to cut total emissions to 10 per cent below 1990 levels by 2020. France has committed to 80 per cent reductions by 2050, and Germany plans to reduce total emissions by 40 per cent. They're building their green economies while we're stalling with intensity targets.

Worst of all, the government is trying to pull the wool over the eyes of Albertans. Government press releases on March 7 and 8 claim that Alberta is the "first province to legislate greenhouse gas reductions" when, in fact, we are legislating only intensity. At the end of the day this means more greenhouse gases into the atmosphere.

It's time for the government to be transparent and to admit that greenhouse gases will continue to increase under their plan and get on with the business of reducing greenhouse gas emissions in absolute terms.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 30 I wish to give notice that at the appropriate time I intend to move that the ordinary business of the Assembly be adjourned in order that we may hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the imminent risk to the health and safety of residents resulting from the failure of the privately owned Holy Cross centre in Calgary to meet provincial standards of care, including the number of qualified staff required to meet basic requirements.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 9, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce and move first reading of Bill 10, the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act.

This bill will repeal the Horned Cattle Purchases Act, which levied a penalty on each head of horned cattle purchased in Alberta or shipped out of Alberta. The penalty was designed to prevent damage to cattle during transport. Current commercial practices and market expectations promote dehorning, making the Horned Cattle Purchases Act no longer relevant to the cattle industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that Bill 10 be moved on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill on behalf of the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move first reading of the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 12 be moved on the Order Paper to appear under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce and move Bill 13, the Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill deals with minor amendments to the Access to the Future Act, which is designed to support initiatives to enhance access, affordability, and quality for the postsecondary system. It also establishes and governs the access to the future fund. As our government continues to operationalize the access to the future fund, a number of minor amendments are required for clarity, flexibility, and to allow for the implementation of the fund.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 13 be moved to Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 14, the Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

The proposed amendments will strengthen and clarify the legislative framework in place to support pandemic and emergency preparedness in Alberta. These amendments will ensure that government is able to respond effectively to a public health emergency. I move first reading of Bill 14.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 14 be moved on the Order Paper to appear under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Bill 15
Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution
Amendment Act, 2007

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 15, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill is designated as a direct result of what we heard from children who have survived sexual exploitation as well as from their families, front-line workers, and the police. The bill is designated to enhance services to victims of child sexual exploitation. It also provides continued support for those who need it to deal with the complex issues facing sexually exploited children and youth.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 15 be moved on the Order Paper to appear under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

3:00

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table five copies of the manager's report of Livestock Identification Services Ltd. for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2006. This report incorporates the Brand Act, the Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act, the Livestock and Livestock Products Act, and the Stray Animals Act, all required tablings by statute.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling five copies of the response to Written Question 35, which was accepted in this Assembly on August 28, 2006.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations I would like to table a letter from the Prime Minister of Canada to our Premier outlining his commitment to not include nonrenewable resources in the equalization formula.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table five copies of a letter written by Ron White of the Calgary community of Arbour Lake to his MLA, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, which he copied me, drawing our attention to the plight of seniors in Calgary and across the province and urging an emergency debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is from my constituent Ian Greenwald. He had a highway motor vehicle accident back in April 2005, a very serious accident, and he has two major issues. The compensation for general damages in his case is approximately $4,000 under the current legislation, and he's urging this government to change this legislation and compensate his family as soon as possible.

The second one is again from a constituent, Matt Gosse. He has expressed support for 100 per cent smoke-free legislation in Alberta. It is the responsibility of the government to take a leadership role on this issue and serve the best end, which is the health of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a copy of a press release provided to me by Joe Anglin, who is working with a citizens' group in central Alberta that is formally calling upon former Premier Ralph Klein to testify under oath about his former government's involvement in the orchestrated planning of two new 500 kV transmission lines.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table today the appropriate number of copies of a brochure that we have produced. The title of the brochure is Page Biographies, Third Session, spring sitting, 26th Legislature. I sincerely hope that you'll have an opportunity to take a look at these remarkable young people who serve as pages for us and look at a bit of their backgrounds. I mean, we're talking about grade 10 students, grade 11 students, grade 12 students, some of whom are already rather seasoned, and it's quite amazing to see what kind of professions and vocations and futures they want to have. I really won't make too much of a comment other than to say that no member of this Assembly will be allowed to take out to any golf course without my permission the page who has a 1.4 handicap.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and Official Opposition House Leader, you are going to act on behalf of your leader with respect to the Standing Order 30 application?

Holy Cross Long-term Care Centre

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to proceed on behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition. Notice of the Standing Order 30 has been circulated to members of the Assembly, and my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition did give appropriate oral notice earlier in Routine. As well, I note that we did file, as required, copies in advance of the time limits that are set out with the Speaker's office.

A brief outline of the situation. Forty-two long-term care residents of the Holy Cross centre located in Calgary, which provides both assisted living and long-term care services, are being transferred to other facilities because the facility does not meet fire safety codes or provincial standards of care. The Holy Cross centre does not currently have a director of care, so there are concerns about the skill level of the facility staff.

I note that as always with requests for a Standing Order 30 permission to hold an emergency debate, the test is the urgency of why we are requesting that for today. I think that the underlying issue of great importance here – that is, the forced evacuation of seniors for glaring violations of care and safety standards and, I note, fire codes – certainly meets that standard of urgency. Marleau and Montpetit 584 and Beauchesne 389 both reference the importance of the matter themselves. I think that when we have a situation where vulnerable people who are not in a position to protect themselves are placed at risk, that becomes a very urgent issue for this Assembly. I think the issue takes on even greater significance because the Assembly was promised by the government that these problems would be fixed in the wake of the Auditor General's report that was presented in May of 2005 and that the government answered in the fall of 2005.

Now, Standing Order 30(7) requires this to be a “genuine emergency” that requires “immediate and urgent consideration,” and I think that risk to the lives and health and safety of seniors is a genuine emergency. Not all of the seniors will be moved out for a number of weeks because they are trying to find accommodation for them, so the danger and the risk remain.

There are two additional urgencies that are created here, Mr. Speaker. There is a domino effect. In trying to move those seniors into other accommodation, they are now shifting the existing lists of seniors who are looking for urgent and immediate placement in long-term care. We've now added 42 of those people onto the list, competing with everyone else, and that creates some pretty dire circumstances for those looking for urgent placement.

In addition, other residents are being left in place at the Holy Cross centre; therefore, I would argue that their risk is increased. These are the people in supported living, or assisted living, situations, which may not fall directly under the purview of the Minister of Health and Wellness. Mr. Speaker, these are not spry people. We have now got people left in place where there is a concern about adherence to a fire code, and they may not be able to leap up in the middle of the night and get themselves out of that facility, especially when we're looking at a lack of facility staff in there. So I argue that this is of such an urgent nature that we need to take this argument up today.

Although I have described the issue as being ongoing, I would argue that it is not chronic. In this situation it is specific to this one facility, and it is a failure to meet specific criteria. In this case it is the fire code violations, which have been brought to light by the Calgary fire department. They notified the Calgary health region of the issues, and the Calgary health region took additional steps because of the lack of staff.

Now, Beauchesne 387 requires that the issue be “within the administrative competence of the Government,” and that is certainly so. We have legislation in place in Alberta governing the operation of these facilities, and we've also had an extensive Auditor General's report on it. This is not a general “maladministration of a department,” which is spoken of in Beauchesne 394. It is a specific failure to monitor and enforce a particular situation. The staff shortage issue and the director of care issue are not currently before the courts.

The issue of long-term care was mentioned so generally in the throne speech as to be not meaningful in this particular reference. It's talking about making supports “available to seniors as the population ages,” so it is so general as to not be applicable to this particular circumstance. There is no government bill on the Order Paper covering this. The government media release of the 2nd of March outlining the session agenda does not cover anything specific to long-term care or seniors' housing. There is no private member's public bill or private bill that would cover this, as far as we are aware, that has been presented to the House.

We have a release date that is known for the budget, April 19, but that, I would argue, is not meeting an urgency test to allow us time for meaningful debate. We have no idea when the actual ministries covered by this would be up for debate, so we might well be weeks and weeks away. A supplementary supply budget, which might address this issue – there is nothing available in that which does. There are no government motions on the Order Paper, and under Motions other than Government Motions, again, none that we can find. We did ask two questions in Oral Question Period, but you yourself, Mr. Speaker, have been very clear with us that question period is not the time for debate, and indeed there are admonitions not to engage or provoke debate through question period.

We would argue that we have met the tests of urgency for the Standing Order 30 motion that is brought before you today, allowing us to hold a special debate on the health and safety of these residents at the Holy Cross centre.

Thank you for the opportunity to raise these issues with you, and I hope we will meet the tests that are set out.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under section 30, the Standing Order which allows for the adjournment of the normal business of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, clearly, there are a few things that have to be addressed in terms of the question of what makes it urgent. The fact that the issue at hand, the issue of concern, is of utmost importance and concern does not necessarily meet the urgency test. I think we can all agree in the House that whenever you have a situation such as currently is the situation at the Holy Cross in Calgary and the actions that are being taken by the Calgary health authority with respect to that particular facility and the people there, that is a very important occurrence. Those are very important steps that are being taken.

I might go further to say that they actually show that the system works, that it is not a matter of urgent necessity but, rather, a demonstration of appropriate action. There was an inspection made by the fire and safety codes people, and there were some deficiencies noted and brought to the attention of the owners of the facility. Since that time the fire and safety people as well as the Calgary regional health authority, I am informed, have been working with the owner to make sure that the facility is safe. If there was a concern that it was unsafe for the residents on an immediate and dangerous basis, I'm sure there would have been a request for either immediate action or immediate evacuation.

In fact, that's not the case. In fact, they've put in place appropriate measures to ensure the safety of the residents. The Calgary health authority has now moved to say that they would like to have more things done and more things taken care of, and in order to accommodate that, they have indicated that they want to move out 42 residents from the long-term care facility.

That is very important. Absolutely. But is it a matter of urgent and pressing necessity for which the House should be adjourned on a day when we will be discussing private members' business in order to have a debate in the House? I would argue that it doesn't meet the urgency test.

The hon. Opposition House Leader went through the litany of what's on the Order Paper and what opportunities there will be for debate of important broad issues. In fact, there are opportunities. We just heard the Speech from the Throne, and the response to the Speech from the Throne is a perfectly valid time to raise issues of concern on any area that was either included or not included in the Speech from the Throne that the opposition or any other member of the House feels should be included. So debate in response to the Speech from the Throne is a perfectly appropriate time to raise issues of concern.

Supplementary supply. Health and Wellness has a supply issue in supplementary supply. We'll be in Committee of Supply tomorrow, and it's open to any member of the House to argue that rather than using the supply that's being asked for for the purposes being requested, it could be used for other purposes. So there is an opportunity for debate tomorrow in Committee of Supply. There will be opportunity for debate because as hon. members know because of the projected government business last week, interim supply will be introduced tomorrow and available in committee on Wednesday and Thursday. So there will be two days in which we're in interim supply, again, which could be used to address issues of whether resources need to be available or whether a policy change needs to be made.

I think it's fair to point out that there are in the next few days many opportunities, whether it's in reply to the throne speech, whether it's Committee of Supply on interim estimates, whether it's Committee of Supply on supplementary estimates or, in fact, the appropriation bills which will follow those, in which issues can be raised before the House. It's certainly always the subject matter of debates as to whether or not, first of all, the resources of Albertans are being used in the most appropriate manner or whether there's a more urgent place for those resources to be used and, of course, the corollary discussion of whether the policies are appropriate or whether some steps should be taken.

I want to be clear that the concern with respect to Holy Cross and the actions that are being taken with respect to the 42 long-term care residents are very important concerns. They're being dealt with by the Calgary regional health authority, who has the contract with the owners of that facility and who is charged with monitoring that and, in fact, has been monitoring it, has been working with it, has been dealing with it, and is dealing with it. The steps that need to be taken are being taken.

I would suggest that there's no urgency to pre-empt the ordinary business of the House to debate something which is already being done and done appropriately rather than dealing with the regular issues of the House. The urgency has not been demonstrated. The importance is clear. The urgency is what is required to meet the Standing Order 30 test, and the urgency is clearly not there, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 30(2) says that "the Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he or she considers relevant to the question of urgency" and then shall rule.

We have recognized the Government House Leader in response to the petition from the Official Opposition House Leader. Are there additional members who would like to participate? Well, we'll recognize, first of all, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and then the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the motion before the House pursuant to Standing Order 30, which calls on the House to adjourn the ordinary business of the House to discuss matters of urgent public importance.

I'm going to speak in support of this motion, but first please allow me for a moment to thank you for your congratulations on the anniversary of those members who were elected 10 years ago. This member, for Edmonton-Strathcona, was one of them, and I'm wearing the lapel. Thank you very much for that very thoughtful gesture on your part. Also, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the constituents of Edmonton-Strathcona, who have supported this member over the last three elections to enjoy this privilege and honour to represent them here.

Mr. Speaker, I celebrated this 10th anniversary yesterday by participating in a public meeting in a park in the heart of the beautiful city of Lethbridge, where citizens gathered to call on this government to implement at least the Kyoto-related greenhouse gas reduction targets.

Now, turning to the motion, there are two requirements that have to be met: the procedural requirements and the criterion of urgency. On the procedural side, Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm to the House that the New Democratic Party opposition received the notice of this motion in a timely fashion. Beauchesne at 387 says that a debate under this Standing Order must deal with a specific question that requires urgent consideration, and it must be "within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate."

Mr. Speaker, this motion certainly meets these criteria. As all members of this House know, it is the government's responsibility to establish and enforce standards of care in long-term facilities. I know that the government is acutely aware of this responsibility because they have suffered tremendous political pressure since information about the appalling lack of standards and support in our long-term care facilities became public. This motion also deals with a very specific concern; namely, the lack of properly enforced standards at the privately owned Holy Cross centre in Calgary.

I would note that in accordance with Beauchesne 390, Mr. Speaker, there is no other opportunity on the Order Paper for us to deal with this matter in an urgent and careful manner, and per Beauchesne 391 this issue with the Holy Cross centre is not under adjudication by a court of law. Marleau and Montpetit make a similar observation. I won't go into detail on that one.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few very brief comments on the matter of urgency. Obviously, the most pressing reason for urgency is that extremely vulnerable people at Holy Cross are being affected by the lack of standards. We also know that while the Calgary health region is moving long-term care residents out of the facility, residents in the assisted living areas of the facility are staying put because the Calgary health region has no authority over residential services. I am sure that over the weekend many members of the House read the heartbreaking media accounts of elderly couples being separated because of the moves. The fact that residents have had to pay an increase for such poor services adds insult to injury.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the recommendations of the Auditor General in his report on long-term care have not been implemented, and this House has a responsibility to get to the bottom of why this failure has occurred. I can't help but think that many of these problems are a direct result of this government's push towards the privatization of health services and assisted living facilities rather than long-term care centres.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I just want to remind the House that in a similar situation in May of 2005 this House agreed to have a debate about long-term care standards after a motion pursuant to the same order was introduced by the leader of the NDP opposition.

I think that in light of that precedent which the House set less than two years ago as well as the arguments made under the procedures criteria and the urgency requirement, the House needs to support this motion, and I urge all members to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I, too, would say that these issues are always of significant importance, especially to those individuals impacted by this at the Holy Cross, this is not a matter of urgency specifically as it pertains to Standing Order 30, that would require dismissal of the business of the day.

To speak first, if you're talking about standards, the things that we set in place – legislation, regulations, standards, procedures, mechanisms, monitoring, all of those which come under the purview of this Legislative Assembly – this same topic has been under tremendous debate for years and continues to be under that kind of debate and has had this profile in this Legislative Assembly for some time.

There was a task force, Achieving Excellence in Continuing Care, co-chaired by the members for Lacombe-Ponoka, Calgary-Foothills, and Lethbridge-East. The opposition party worked very closely on the standards for continuing care, and tremendous work was accomplished by that committee. This was clearly in response to the Auditor General's comments on various concerns raised about this issue in years gone by. A committee was formed last year, in May, in response to that task force. There was a response by the government for updating those standards. Also, additional monies were put in place to continue to provide for some of the urgent demands in this sector. So when you talk about the standards, having worked with the Long Term Care Association and with all the various bodies associated with this, new standards are going to be fully implemented by April of this year.

The Auditor General's report and update as well on this exact topic talk about 11 recommendations: three on satisfactory progress, eight on some others that he's going to monitor yet through this year. What it does say is that there's been progress made on all of these standards for specific application of monitoring so that we do have good structures in place.

In specific relation to this issue with the Holy Cross, as one facility it is a very important matter, but the appropriate methodologies have been followed. Like the Minister of Health and Wellness talked about, there is a clinical director on-site to oversee patient care in response to the health authority ensuring that the standards are being met. So there is compliance, and there has been evidence that the monitoring is working.

In response to the facility itself, the fire safety issues, there is no imminent risk to those in that facility today. Their lives are not in peril. There is additional personnel to monitor any fire safety issues to ensure that every person's life is pre-eminent as to what is being followed. The public can rest assured that that has been worked on today with regard to the specific issue that their lives are safe, that the appropriate authorities have investigated and ensured through this transition that there would be no safety issues or peril for those individuals there.

The Speaker: I take it that's the extent of our participants with respect to this motion, so I'll now deal with this question. I am prepared to rule on this. This is the first such motion of its type in this session, so I'm just going to remind members that an application under Standing Order 30 is "to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance."

First of all, the chair confirms that the Leader of the Official Opposition gave proper notice of his intention to bring a motion under Standing Order 30. Notice was received by my office this morning at 10:40, and the subject matter was provided at that time.

Therefore, the requirements under Standing Order 30(1) have been met. I would like to remind members that Standing Order 30(1) requires notice to be provided "at least 2 hours prior to the sitting of the Assembly." If the changes to the Standing Orders are approved this evening, then starting tomorrow, notice of these types of applications will have to be provided to my office by 11 a.m.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed to be put to the Assembly, the chair must determine whether the motion meets the requirement of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that the matter proposed for discussion is related to "a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

The Leader of the Official Opposition's proposed motion is to hold an emergency debate on "the health and safety of residents resulting from the failure of the privately owned Holy Cross Centre in Calgary to meet provincial standards of care." The relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic of emergency debates are Beauchesne, paragraphs 387 to 398, and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589. Several participants referred to some of these.

The chair has listened attentively to the submissions of all members participating in the debate. Two factors here were that the chair was interested in learning how this alleged situation met the criteria for genuine emergency and, second, that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was essentially inviting the Assembly to defer consideration of Bill 201 standing in his name to debate the purported emergency.

After hearing the arguments put forward and the review that the chair has undertaken since receiving this submission several hours ago, the chair does not believe that this request meets the requirements under the standing order for an emergency debate to proceed. Some of the arguments given have already been presented. The chair does not doubt the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition's sincerity, but it's difficult to conclude that there is something so extraordinary as to constitute a genuine emergency as required under Standing Order 30(7).

To reiterate, while the member raises a serious matter, the chair does not consider it to be of such urgency to warrant postponing the business of the Assembly this afternoon. Therefore, the request for leave is not in order.

Funding Alberta's Future Act

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to rise today to debate in second reading the flagship bill of the Official Opposition, the Alberta Liberal caucus. In our view, this is the kind of bill that restructures everything in this province in some way or another. It restructures how government will finance itself, it restructures how we as a society in Alberta treat our nonrenewable resources, and most importantly it restructures the future to put it on a basis of stability and prosperity, on a basis of permanently competitive taxes and outstanding public services forever.

Right now Albertans have an incredible opportunity to build a legacy for the future. The Alberta Liberals' vision for the future is the finest public services, the lowest taxes in Canada, the best postsecondary education, an outstanding life for all, and with the right strategy we can start building that future right now, Mr. Speaker. The right strategy is to pass Bill 201, the Funding Alberta's Future Act, which sets aside 30 per cent of annual nonrenewable resource revenues to rebuild the heritage fund, erase the infrastructure debt, and create a series of endowments to provide sustainable, significant additional funding – and I emphasize: additional funding – for postsecondary education and the arts, humanities, and social sciences.

Mr. Speaker, we are not alone in believing that the Alberta Liberal plan to fund Alberta's future is the right thing to do, and I hope all members take note of some of its support. For example, in an editorial last September, just a few months ago, none other than Mr. Paul Stanway, now the Premier's director of communications, wrote, and I quote: the Grits are proposing boosting the heritage trust fund to $120 billion over the next 15 years, so when the oil and gas money runs out, the province can use interest from the fund to replace nonrenewable energy revenues; it's simple, it's achievable, and it's likely the prescription for the future most Albertans want. End quote.

During his bid for the leadership of the PC Party the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who's waving at me right now, advocated saving 30 per cent of resource revenues, just as this bill proposes. Last year none other than former Premier Peter Lougheed wrote, and I quote: in my view, the best course of action by the provincial government would be to rebuild the Alberta heritage savings trust fund by once again allocating by an act of the Legislature 30 per cent of all oil and gas revenues, including our share of oil sands net profits, to the fund. End quote.

One Mr. Jim Dinning, whose leadership bid was endorsed by about 40 Tory MLAs sitting in the Assembly, said that he would save 30 per cent of resource revenues during normal times and 50 per cent during boom times.

So, Mr. Speaker, support for the Alberta Liberal plan to save these precious nonrenewable revenues is widespread even within the Tory caucus and staff. This alone should, I expect, lead to quick passage of this landmark bill. But if this evidence of support isn't enough to convince you of the bill's merit, consider what this bill can do for Albertans. The 30 per cent of resource revenues we plan to save will be allocated to bring the most benefits to the most Albertans.

First, the act will enable the government to retire its huge infrastructure debt within just a few years by using a portion of the savings to build or refurbish new schools, hospitals, roads, and on and on and on. Retiring the infrastructure debt is more than a matter of balancing books. Retiring that debt means safer and more efficient roads, better and more accessible health care, well-maintained schools and, I might add, more of them, and safe, reliable water and sewer systems, services, and facilities that Albertans once took for granted that the Conservative government has allowed to crumble. Paying off our infrastructure debt is the right thing to do because Albertans deserve better from their government, and they deserve infrastructure that works.

We will use 35 per cent of resource revenue savings to build a phenomenal postsecondary endowment fund. This fund will reach $15 billion by 2020-21, generating in today's value $790 million a year, assuming a net return of 5 per cent per year. To put that in perspective, $790 million in new annual funding would represent a huge boost in funding to postsecondary education. For example, $790 million is 49 per cent of the total grants given to all institutions in the 2006-07 budget. It is more, Mr. Speaker, than all the tuition paid by Alberta students in 2006.

By 2021 earnings from the postsecondary endowment fund will significantly increase by 36 per cent, in fact: in real terms, Alberta's total investment in postsecondary education. This will enable us to enhance and maintain world-class institutions, putting Albertans at the forefront of innovation. It will also enable us to strengthen our network of postsecondary institutions, making excellent postsecondary education available to all Albertans regardless of education and career goals. The postsecondary endowment fund will help fuel Alberta's continuing transition to a knowledge-based economy and will help fulfill our goal of truly outstanding education.

The $500 million humanities, social sciences, and arts endowment fund will generate $28 million per year toward supporting and sustaining an exceptional quality of life in Alberta. This fund will reinvigorate and sustain these important contributors to community, to quality of life, to knowledge, and to the economy. Alberta, frankly, under this government has neglected support for these areas. This fund will redress that erosion of support and go far beyond, providing sustainable, reliable funding to programs, research and scholarship, teaching, and to community service.

Once the humanities, social sciences, and arts endowment fund reaches its cap of $500 million, this slice of the pie will then be funnelled into an opportunity fund for Albertans. Within 15 years this opportunity fund will be worth $1.7 billion in today's terms, generating annual returns to be paid out of about $84 million. We will work with Albertans to decide what this fund should be used for, whether that's rural development, renewable energy, citizens' dividends. The possibilities are limited only by Albertans' imaginations.

Mr. Speaker, the centrepiece, the most vital aspect of this legislation is its ability to reinvigorate the heritage fund. Of the 30 per cent of resource revenues diverted away from general revenues, 35 per cent will go to the heritage fund. When investments resulting from this act have retired the infrastructure debt, that contribution will then be channelled also to the heritage fund. The total will rise to 60 per cent. This will transform the heritage fund from a much-loved but little understood fund that has been losing real value for decades into a vital contributor to revenue stability for Alberta.

If passed, the Funding Alberta's Future Act will build the heritage fund from its current $13.4 billion to $120 billion by 2021. Assuming a 5 per cent real return, this will generate a $6 billion annual contribution to base revenues and offset declining resource revenues.

A bolstered heritage fund can play an integral role in Alberta's fiscal stability. As resource revenues fall, as this government itself is predicting, income from the heritage fund will rise. This income will stream into general revenues. Through this approach core government spending and programs can be sustained without raising taxes. That means better health care, no further erosion of community and economic infrastructure, stronger municipalities and communities, stronger public education and support for seniors, leveraging our prosperity, protecting and sustaining our natural environment. It means no more tax increases.

At the same time, we will work with Albertans to address their hopes and concerns for the future with the extraordinary resources provided by our other planned endowments. These benefits alone make passing Bill 201 worth while.

But the most important reason to make this bill law is because it would put Alberta back on a solid fiscal foundation. Right now, Mr. Speaker – and every MLA of every party should be concerned about this – the government uses the revenue from nonrenewable resources to keep the province from sliding into deficit and debt. If resource revenues fall, taxes will have to go up, spending will have to be cut, and the province will return to deficit spending, perhaps all of the above.

During the last few years the government has used precious nonrenewable resource revenues to cover its irresponsible budgeting process. In 2003-04 the government spent 3 and a half billion dollars of Alberta's legacy. By this budget year the government's dependence has grown to a $5.3 billion dependency on oil and gas revenues.

At this moment the government spends $8,500 per person to provide public services for Albertans, but if you exclude nonrenewable resource revenue, the government collects only $6,360 in sustainable revenues. Without our oil and gas revenues, Mr. Speaker, the province would be running huge deficits, and every increase in spending and every tax cut would widen that sustainability gap. We need to replace nonrenewable resource revenues with another source of funding before oil and gas revenues decline too far. The Funding Alberta's Future Act, if passed, sustains core government revenues without raising taxes even while resource revenues fall, and it does what every financial planner tells her clients: pay yourself first.

Norway, starting long after Alberta, has set aside a public endowment of more than $230 billion, and it grows dramatically now every month, Mr. Speaker, generating incredible advantages for their small population. Even Alaska is way ahead of Alberta, with a balance of $33 billion U.S.

Since 1978 this government has collected $123 billion in resource revenues, not adjusting for inflation. Just over 91 per cent of that money was used to repay the debt and for annual spending. A mere 8.9 per cent was saved, Mr. Speaker. It's time for Alberta to get responsible again with public money. The future is incredibly bright but only if we plan for it.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, if passed, the Funding Alberta's Future Act enables Albertans to pay themselves first and to make smart provisions for the future. It will provide stable base revenues despite falling resource revenues without raising taxes and provide the capacity for stable base spending without abandoning the responsibilities of government. Bill 201 gives government and citizens a clear direction for the future, a goal we can work toward together. It sets benchmarks for achievement, it creates financial stability and sustainability, it gives the heritage fund a clear purpose and a vital role to play in our daily life, and it reduces our dependence on nonrenewable resources. It's a bill that will at long last bring some purpose and direction to governance and financial planning in Alberta. But perhaps most importantly it's something that Albertans can reach for together, uniting us in a noble, achievable purpose.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we're building a legacy – at least, we want to build a legacy – that will benefit everyone in Alberta. That legacy will only be built if all members of the Assembly support Bill 201. Therefore, I urge all of us in this Assembly to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's opportunity now for hon. members to participate. I have an indication of a number of members, and I'm quite prepared at this point in time to go through a list of seven or eight or nine or 10 to give you some idea as to when you might be up this afternoon if I had some idea of the members who would like to participate. I already have a note from the Opposition House Leader, so that helps me with that one, but who would like to participate? The hon. leader. Okay.

Well, then we'll go with the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. leader of the third party, and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Did I see some other hands up? The hon. Government House Leader, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre if I can remember that.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Bill 201, Funding Alberta's Future Act, brought forth by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Among many things, if this bill is passed, it seeks to have the Minister of Finance introduce a bill to establish a funding Alberta's future account of the general revenue fund and put 30 per cent of all nonrenewable resource revenues into this account.

Revenues put into this account would be allocated to the following areas: 35 per cent to the heritage savings trust fund; 35 per cent to the postsecondary endowment fund, which would replace the access to the future fund; 25 per cent to the capital account; and 5 per cent directed to a humanities, social sciences, and arts endowment fund. If the fund were to reach $500 million, revenue would be directed to an opportunity fund, which has a yet-to-be-determined purpose.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has already decided exactly where Albertans' savings should go without referring to any sort of consultation to date. Now, in the hon. member's speech he referred to the possibility of dividends. I don't know. We might call those Riverview bucks. I guess that's encouraging, that there might be some future consultation with Albertans.

I'm concerned with section 4 of the Funding Alberta's Future Act, and it reads as follows:

In the Bill introduced under section 2, the Access to the Future Fund established under the Access to the Future Act shall be replaced by the Post-secondary Education Endowment Fund.

Now, I'm having a hard time figuring out why the access to the future fund needs to be replaced.

The postsecondary education fund, Mr. Speaker. I believe its objectives are as follows:

- (a) support the excellence of the post-secondary system . . . including the areas of pure and applied research, teaching and community service,
- (b) increase the accessibility of the post-secondary system . . .
- (c) [render] post-secondary education more affordable for students, and
- (d) support the continued development of apprenticeship and training programs.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to discuss what the access to the future fund, as we now know it, aims to accomplish. It is intended to provide an investment in innovations within the postsecondary system; support of improved learner outcomes; faculty, staff, and graduate student development, attraction, and retention; support of knowledge and technology transfer; and, very importantly, affordability.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the funds have almost identical goals. The access to the future fund provides matching grants to stimulate private, industry, corporate, and other contributions from the public. The fund engages other sectors to invest in education.

Such partnerships are very valuable to a successful postsecondary education system. The fund was just created, less than two years ago, and in that short time frame the government of Alberta has committed to support the China Institute at the University of Alberta, matching a donation of some $37.3 million; the province-wide Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library initiative, with start-up costs of $30 million; and the Schulich School of Engineering at the University of Calgary, matching a donation of $25 million.

Mr. Speaker, when comparing the access to the future fund and the proposed postsecondary endowment fund, it is clear that they both have the very same purpose: to further education in Alberta. I think the hon. member should be commended for his support of good government initiatives. Since the current fund, which Bill 201 proposes to eliminate, has virtually the same goal as the proposed new replacement fund, it is unclear as to why it would be necessary to eliminate the current fund in the first place. Perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview would simply prefer to see a name change of the access to the future fund. As long as we achieve real results for Alberta students, it should not matter what the fund is called. I fail to see the need to duplicate our current fund.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the access to the future fund is likely superior to the proposed fund because it encourages individuals and the private sector to participate in investing in Alberta's education system and future. This means that the contributions from the fund are actually worth more because of the matching grants that accompany the government of Alberta's funding. Students stand to benefit more with the help of the access to the future fund because they are supported by both the government and the broader community.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a complete waste of time to replace the access to the future fund, considering its objectives and great potential for Alberta's future leaders. I urge the members of this Assembly to strongly consider the differences between the two funds before voting on Bill 201. I think it will be clear after prudent study that the current fund meets the current and future needs of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm now going to recognize the hon. leader of the third party. But before that, he would be followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, the hon. Government House Leader, the hon. Official Opposition House Leader. Was there another government member who would like to participate here? Well, after the Official Opposition House Leader, then it will be the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed then by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 201, Funding Alberta's Future Act, introduced by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. I think it's a great thing that the Leader of the Official Opposition is thinking about the future. I think we all ought to be thinking about the future in this House. I have said repeatedly that I feel that Alberta is now at a crossroads, and we need really to begin thinking about where we want to go as a province.

A couple of years ago people might have thought that we were at a crossroads as a province because we had paid off all of our debt, but I don't believe that that is true, Mr. Speaker, and I also believe that we're at a crossroads because of a number of other factors. It's not true, because the province has simply transferred our financial debt into a debt of infrastructure, which we estimate at anywhere between $10 billion and $20 billion, which now must be paid off and which the government is proposing to pay off through the means of the shell game of P3s, in which private companies will incur the debt on their books and it will be hidden from the people of Alberta and, more importantly, the grassroots of the Conservative Party. I think we're at a crossroads, Mr. Speaker, because of the situation with respect to world oil prices, the world shortage of oil supplies, because of profound climate change that is now taking place and which needs to be addressed.

Now, this particular bill does not mention budget surpluses, but it is structured in a manner to build upon Conservative budgetary practices, that have resulted in the current range of budgetary surpluses. Bill 201 is a variation of the Conservative plan from the 1970s to create the Alberta heritage trust fund. Like Bill 201 the original Conservative plan entailed putting aside 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource income into the Alberta heritage trust fund every year to serve as a sustainable account for capital expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative plan disintegrated completely in the 1980s with the collapse of global oil prices. The provincial government slid into debt, unable to balance its budget, and that heritage trust fund atrophied because of declining resource revenues. The 1980s illustrate three weaknesses of this approach: first, the unreliability of the nonrenewable resource sector for long-term fiscal stability; second, Alberta's budgetary overreliance on nonrenewable resource income; and third, the inability of a fund-like approach to work once nonrenewable income has dried up.

Mr. Speaker, we are not against an approach like this in general except that the Liberal plan doesn't deal with the fundamentals of Alberta's budgetary and financial situation. While the Liberals talk about a sustainability gap, this bill does nothing to address that and, in fact, will continue the reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue to pay for ongoing expenditures. This is compounded by the support of the Liberal party for the government's reductions in corporate income tax. We are becoming more and more dependent on nonrenewable resource revenue for ongoing expenditures for the programs that the people of Alberta depend upon.

Now, there are two basic flaws in the approach that is taken here. First of all, it doesn't see the nonrenewable resources for what they are, that is to say nonrenewable and finite. Notwithstanding the tremendous reserves that exist in the tar sands in Alberta, these are finite resources. We must as a province invest in a renewable energy future for this province, and the fund as proposed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition doesn't do that. We need a more profound, more basic approach to investment. To do that, we need to ensure that we have the full value of these resources, which are owned by Albertans, coming to Albertans, and that means fundamentally a change in the royalty structure that exists in this province.

It's unacceptable to have 1 per cent royalties charged on oil from the majority of the production from Alberta's tar sands. It's unacceptable to export raw and unprocessed bitumen. We must think big, Mr. Speaker. We need to look at the value of the resources that are slipping through our fingers as we speak and capture that value for the people of Alberta, not just for this generation but for future generations. We need to be thinking about our children and our grandchildren and even our great-grandchildren. There will come a day when we can no longer burn oil and coal for fuel. That decision will not be made in Alberta. That decision will be made for us in the world. We are already lagging behind not just European jurisdictions, not just jurisdictions in Asia, but jurisdictions in the United States.

We need to capture the value of our resources – and that's a fundamental thing – and then the purpose to which that value is turned needs to be to prepare the economy of this province for the day when oil and coal are no longer usable or no longer have the value that they currently do. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we need to build a green and prosperous future for future generations of this province. We need to build an energy economy in this province that is based on renewable energy, and to that end the Alberta New Democrats are proposing a significantly larger fund, up to perhaps a value of $20 billion, that would be used to invest in renewable energy and in transforming the Alberta economy into one in which renewable energy is the key engine, something that would guarantee prosperity, not to mention a clean environment for future generations.

There is nothing in this bill that deals with the use of nonrenewable resource revenue to clean up the environmental mess created by oil and gas production, particularly production in the tar sands in northern Alberta. I am surprised. Of course, the goals of the bill are admirable: to eliminate infrastructure debt, something Alberta New Democrats also support; a postsecondary education endowment fund, a wonderful idea; a humanities, social sciences, and arts endowment fund, also a wonderful idea. But the AEUB estimates that the unfunded liability to clean up the environmental damage even from conventional oil and gas exploration and development in this province is around $2 billion. There is nothing in the Liberal bill that speaks to this question.

Mr. Speaker, I think there are some wonderful ideas in this, but it's not big thinking. It doesn't look too far to the future. It looks a little bit to the future, but it doesn't look to the horizon. It doesn't think big. The Alberta New Democrats' plan thinks big, looks to the horizon, and thinks about how we want to position Alberta in the next generation so that we can ensure both a clean environment and a prosperous future for our children and grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just indicate that while there are some great ideas in this Bill 201, it does not meet the test, in our view, of the vision that's necessary for this province. It doesn't really grapple with the very nature of nonrenewable and finite resources. It assumes that those resources will continue to exist and continue to fund government expenditures. Because of that, because of the position of the government and the Liberal opposition with respect to corporate tax cuts at a time when corporations are earning record profits, we don't think that this bill offers the answer that we need in this province and, as a result, will not support it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have eight speakers on my list. The next three will be the following: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak in strong support of Bill 201, the Funding Alberta's Future Act.

I'm going to lead off my comments by responding to the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, in particular my concern with his comment that this plan does nothing to address the need to replace nonrenewable resource revenue with a sustainable source of revenue. I'm not sure that he read the bill because that's exactly what this plan does. That is exactly the intent. It's exactly the way in which it was received by economists and respected businesspeople and any number of organizations across this province when the Official Opposition first released that policy back in September of last year. So while this member may not see how far this bill goes towards replacing nonrenewable resource revenue, many, many people did, and in fact, as I said, that is exactly what it's intended to do.

Now, I will agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on one point, and that is that the debt in this province is in fact not paid yet. There are many people in this province who are surprised to learn of the amount of debt that we still carry. The current Finance minister when he was the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation said publicly that the infrastructure debt was sitting at somewhere between $8 billion and $10 billion and would be $14 billion soon if we didn't address it. We know for a fact that the unfunded portion of the teachers' pension liability is sitting at $7 billion more or less and grows every day at great cost to taxpayers and will cost taxpayers somewhere in the order of $45 billion by the time that agreement is finally paid out in approximately 55 years. So for this government or any friends of this government to argue that they've paid off the debt, it's simply not the case.

I'd like to address the concerns raised by the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon when he drew some legitimate comparisons to the postsecondary endowment fund that is included in Bill 201 and the access to the future fund, which this government passed some time ago. The biggest single difference for the hon. member is very, very simple, and it's very significant, and that is this: the government's legislation capped the access to the future fund at $3 billion. They put a ceiling on it. The first thing they did. I spoke loud and vociferously in this House against the idea of putting an artificial ceiling on that fund. So to the hon. member: our fund in this business year alone would have put $1.427 billion into that fund and another $1.348 billion next year and similar amounts all the way down the line. By the year 2021 you're looking at almost $16 billion in that fund as opposed to the paltry $3 billion that the government has committed to the fund now, and we don't know when we're going to reach that. So that is definitely the biggest single difference.

The fact that you could change the name or that the goals lauded in the bill are similar: of course. The difference is: put your money where your mouth is. That's what this bill does. Remember that this is in addition to the dollars that are already spent on postsecondary. This fund would put $71 million into the postsecondary endowment fund this year alone. That's the first year of the program. It jumps to $139 million in the second year and to $202 million in the third year, and that's in addition to the money that the government is spending on postsecondary right now. So the effects are absolutely dramatic when you relieve the fund from that cap and start putting the money in there. As I say, put your money where your mouth is and really invest in postsecondary education.

I think everybody in this House agrees that a knowledge-based economy is the future of this province. Again to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood: that is exactly what this does. By funding postsecondary to the extent that this bill would and by ensuring a knowledge-based economy down the road, we relieve ourselves from the dependence on oil and natural gas.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've been an MLA for about two and a half years now, and I've travelled the province extensively, met with stakeholder groups, whether it be chambers of commerce or Rotary clubs or any number of organizations that we meet with when we're doing caucus outreach trips, met with a number of individuals over that period of time as well, and without any question the number one comment we heard – and I know that the government members heard this too; it was reflected in their leadership review vote back on April 1 of last year – is that people want a plan. People want something, some sort of a vision, not a three-year plan or a five-year plan, for what this province is going to look like down the road. People want a long-term vision as to how we're going to not only secure a future without oil and gas revenues but make sure that there's something there for our children and our grandchildren as well.

I find it a little ironic, quite frankly, that the Conservative Party then, after having heard this same message that members of the opposition heard and after talking amongst themselves throughout the leadership campaign about the need for a plan, went and elected a new leader, a man who became the Premier, who by his own admission has no plan for savings. In fact, it was in his very first comments as Premier, his first media interview as Premier, where he said literally that he has no plan for the heritage savings trust fund. I must admit to having been incredibly disheartened when I heard the new Premier say that because the need is obvious. Most of the leadership candidates in that race other than the Premier spoke out in favour of some sort of a savings plan, some sort of level in terms of the amount of resource revenues that should be saved.

I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, the Leader of the Official Opposition, referenced some of them earlier. He talked about the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, whose plan would have saved 30 per cent of resource revenues, and I tabled a document indicating that in the House last Thursday. He spoke about former Premier Peter Lougheed advocating for 30 per cent of resource revenues being saved and the failed leadership candidate and presumptive Premier Jim Dinning, who talked about saving 30 per cent during regular times and 50 per cent during boom times.

He didn't have time during his remarks to mention a few of the other leadership candidates, and I'd just like to point these out as well. Mark Norris, who was and is to this day, I guess, a former economic development minister in this Legislature, said in his campaign material that a percentage of budget surpluses will be earmarked for the heritage savings trust fund.

We have the health minister, actually, and this is quite interesting. I'm hoping that the health minister will partake in the debate in a few minutes because I'd like to hear his thoughts on this. I'd like to hear him expand on his thoughts where he said that his priority is that nonrenewable resource revenue should be saved for the future in a manner which can expand our economy, expand our society, and pay dividends long-term into the future. I'm going to assume that the minister of health will be speaking in favour of Bill 201.

Several organizations, as I referenced earlier, have spoken out publicly in favour of the idea of saving some percentage of nonrenewable resource revenues. Just to mention a few, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation: not a group that would necessarily always be thinking or seem to be thinking along the same lines as the Alberta Liberal Party, but they certainly endorse this.

The Canada-West Foundation has done an awful lot of work, and some of that work actually comes from a man by the name of Allan Warrack, who is a former minister with this government, advocating for a savings plan of nonrenewable resource revenue.

The Alberta Chambers of Commerce are strongly supportive in their Vision 2020 document of savings of nonrenewable resource revenue.

The Calgary Chamber of Commerce president, Heather Douglas, said that she strongly recommends saving 30 to 40 per cent of resource revenues. She went on to say, "We believe it will enhance Alberta's competitive advantage." This is coming from the chamber of commerce in what is arguably the second most important financial centre in the country, and they're strongly recommending that this be done.

Mr. Speaker, in this Legislature last Thursday I asked a question of the Treasury Board minister, but the Finance minister was kind enough to respond. The question was simply: is it true or false that this government relies more on nonrenewable resource revenues to fund its budgeting programs today than it did 10 years ago? To his credit the Finance minister gave the answer that I already knew.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You've heard a lot of the numbers, already. You've heard a lot of the projections as to the amount of money that could be saved, the amount that would be available for reinvestment, the ways in which it could be invested, so I won't go through all of that again because there is much to talk about on this bill. I'll start off very briefly by addressing the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon and then the hon. leader of the third party with some of the concerns that they had.

To the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, first of all, who seemed to have a problem with what we proposed to do with the access to the future fund: if that problem is something that is keeping him up at night, I would simply suggest that at the appropriate time he move an amendment in committee, and I'm sure that we can work together and collaboratively to move this ahead.

To the hon. leader of the third party. Despite what the leader of the third party says, this plan very much does evolve us out of dependency, out of a culture of addiction to nonrenewable resource revenues as a way to pay our daily bills, and though he seems to have a problem with the lack of vision surrounding this bill, I would suggest to you that this bill is full of vision. It just may not be quite as sexy as, on the one hand, getting rich quick or, on the other hand, hanging the rich. I suggest that the hon. leader of the third party leans towards the hanging the rich vision. The government? We don't know. It remains to be seen how things change over the life of this session, but certainly going back to the previous session, the previous order of things, this was a government that ideologically very much shared a vision of getting rich quick.

You know, this vision in Bill 201, Funding Alberta's Future Act, won't get you rich, won't get us rich quick – it's not about how many SUVs you can park in the driveway or how many spots you have in your garage for such vehicles – nor will it hang the rich. Alberta Liberals recognize that in order to prosper over the long term, you need to be able to create wealth and sustain wealth. This is about sustaining wealth.

I was watching television last night – I think it was last night, maybe the night before – Outdoor Life Network. They were doing a nature documentary on Alaska, actually, and they took a moment to focus on the gold rush in the late 1890s in the Klondike. Two hundred and fifty thousand people trekked up that mountainside. You can see it represented on the Alaska licence plate. Two hundred and fifty thousand people desiring to strike it rich, to find gold, trekked up that mountainside. Countless numbers of them died trying to reach the goal. Of those 250,000 would-be prospectors, would-be gold diggers, only 800 ever struck it rich.

This is about broader, deeper, more sustainable wealth. This is about getting us to a position as a province where we have sufficient wealth in our heritage savings trust fund, in our postsecondary education endowment fund, and in our other funds to generate wealth, to generate, as far as the income that the heritage savings trust fund is concerned, sustainable wealth to run the province's year-over-year, month-over-month, day-to-day operations so that we don't have to take money – $2,000, roughly, per capita per taxpayer per year – above and beyond what we raise from normal revenue streams, the revenue streams that all other jurisdictions have. We don't have to take from nonrenewable resource revenues and top it up because that's kind of like going to your line of credit every month to supplement your income until one day you wake up and you discover that your line of credit is maxed out and the bank won't give you any more.

I don't spend much time worrying about the prospect of this province running out of oil and gas. I suppose it could happen in my lifetime. I suppose there's a greater chance that it could happen in my children's lifetime. There's probably a very good chance that it could happen in my grandchildren's lifetime if we continued consuming fossil fuels on this planet at the current rate. But you know, Mr. Speaker, that's not going to happen. That's not going to happen.

You may have seen on the weekend that the European Union has decided to make a concerted effort over the next 15 years to generate I think it was 30 per cent of their energy needs from renewable sources. In this province especially we should take that as a warning to adjust our priorities because the way in which we will run out of nonrenewable resource revenues is not because there's no more oil in the ground in Alberta but because the rest of the world isn't interested in buying our oil. So it stays in the ground where it's worth nothing if we can't find somebody to sell it to or something to make out of it that's value-added to put down the pipeline, quote, unquote, to sell to markets elsewhere.

I would come back to the leader of the third party again and suggest that, you know, if he has a problem that we don't have an endowment fund in this particular act, in this particular bill, for renewable energy in some form or other, he could move an amendment there. I don't know how it'll fare in the House, but he could certainly try. I for one would certainly listen to his ideas on that.

Regardless of what you do in the normal course of daily business to promote the development of exportable renewable energy technology and sources that will ultimately replace the nonrenewable energy that we sell around the world, it is vital that we move off our dependence on nonrenewable resource revenues to fund the day-to-day business of living in this great province. This bill, Bill 201, does that and so much more, Mr. Speaker.

This bill will create, I think, if given half a chance, the world-leading postsecondary education culture. This bill will create an arts, social sciences, and humanities fund, which is the piece of the puzzle in this province that's missing. We endow science. We endow engineering. We endow medicine. We don't endow the social sciences and humanities yet, and we need to do that. As my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition described so eloquently a few minutes ago, this bill presents an orderly, if completely nonsexy, blueprint for taking care of our infrastructure deficit. But this bill allows this province – and I would invite members of all parties to try to get past their respective ideologies and see the vision – to prosper in perpetuity.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge members of all parties to move amendments to specific clauses in the bill that they may think are not perfect or perhaps aren't perfect. We're human on this side of the House too; we don't get it perfect every time. But I would urge all members to vote in favour of this bill in second reading. We'll take it on to committee. We'll see where it goes from there. We'll work collaboratively, and I think that together we can produce a piece of legislation that will make for a magnificent 21st century for the province of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader, followed by the Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and enter into debate on Bill 201. I was a little miffed that the hon. Leader of the Opposition in introducing his remarks refused to refer to my leadership campaign platform and the good things that I was suggesting we do, but I'll assume that that was just an oversight and not an intentional slight on his part.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that as part of this debate it's important to reference the good work that's happened. Last year I think was the 25th year of the establishment of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. It's a good model. It's a great model. It shows what can happen with foresight, and we are now reaping the benefits in Alberta of that fund having been set up and having grown.

A few years ago the Alberta ingenuity fund, as it's called colloquially, was set up, the engineering and science research fund, and funded to the tune of, I think, $500 million. Then only a couple of years ago the commitment was made to top up the science and engineering fund, recognizing the value and the power of that fund to Alberta and Albertans, to add to the ingenuity fund, and to establish a fund that I'm very, very proud of: the access to the future fund, and establish it with a clear commitment to having it reach $3 billion so that on an ongoing basis, when it's fully funded, $145 million would be available for a number of very significant purposes to advance education in our province.

In setting up that fund and having the debate around Bill 1 at that time that set up that fund, there was clear discussion about whether there should be a cap on the fund and the purposes of the fund. But the reality is that establishing the fund and putting the approximately $1 billion that's in the fund now has clearly created an appetite in this province for people to make a commitment to advanced education, recognizing that most of the advanced education institutions that are respected around the world as being at the pre-eminence of their field have significant endowment funds behind them.

So I for one am a big proponent of the access to the future fund, and I would freely say that, in my humble opinion, the $3 billion is a start not a finish. It's a start. It's a place that we should be aiming at and saying that we want to get there. My hope is that we will build such pressure from private donors in the province and from people who value education, who want to see this succeed, that people will be stepping forward and insisting that that fund go above $3 billion. But it's important to have a target. It's important to have a target in there.

So I wanted to rise and just reference the fact that we have a good start in this province. The heritage savings trust fund is a good start. Now with the debt paid off, the commitment to inflation-proof the heritage savings trust fund, and in the last two years additional tranches of $1 billion each transferred into that heritage savings trust fund: a good start. The Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, an absolutely stellar model. The ingenuity fund, which is growing into its own as we speak and will be providing in the same manner as the heritage medical research fund did, will be providing real opportunities for the future of Albertans, moving Alberta into a knowledge-based economy, making it possible for us to grow that economy and that society beyond the carbon base that we have now and into a knowledge base in so many fields.

I would agree – in fact, I’ve said it publicly; I said it during the campaign last fall, and I’ll say it again at every opportunity that I have – that we need a third piece to that stool: that humanities, social sciences, and the arts endowment fund. We should have that, in my opinion. That’s not government policy at the moment. But that’s a piece that’s needed because just as we need to advance our knowledge in engineering and science, just as we need to advance our knowledge in medicine, we need to be looking at issues in the social sciences area. We need to be able to do more research than the centre for family research can do with its modest funding now in the area of family violence, in the area of how we help children develop, as well as certainly the other side of that, in supporting the arts and making sure that we understand that the arts are important.

So those are important things that we could move forward to do. I certainly have supported those in the past and will support those in the future. I have supported in the past the idea of an energy and environment endowment, which could be a part of the ingenuity fund or perhaps a rural development endowment, using the money that we obtain today, not income but selling our assets, the oil and gas assets that belong to not just current Albertans but also future Albertans. The money that we get for those assets is a replacement asset and should be treated as such and should be husbanded and should be used as a resource to help build the future of the province.

So in saying all that, I would look at Bill 201 and say that there are some things in here that really bring forward, as the Leader of the Official Opposition in his opening remarks indicated, ideas that have been championed and championed well by members of this government as we talk about the future of the province.

Now, there was some suggestion in remarks earlier that there was a lack of a plan. Mr. Speaker, that offends me because this province has a 20-year strategic plan. That 20-year strategic plan does talk about the future of this province, and it talks about how we need to develop that knowledge-based economy: “Unleashing Innovation; Leading in Learning; Competing in a Global Marketplace; and Making Alberta the Best Place to Live, Work and Visit.” There are so many elements of that 20-year strategic plan that are important, but making use of the resources that we have today and translating it into a knowledge economy for tomorrow and a society tomorrow which engenders respect, which looks into the issues that we need to deal with. Whether it’s medical research or science and engineering research or family violence and social sciences research, whether it’s championing the arts to make this the kind of place where we want to live, those are all very important.

So why then, Mr. Speaker, having said all that, will I not be supporting Bill 201? Well, I will not be supporting Bill 201 because one shouldn’t do indirectly what one can’t do directly. This is in effect a money bill. This is a bill which is suggesting how resources which come into the province of Alberta, into the government of Alberta coffers, should be allocated, and that would be a money bill. This is a bill to direct a bill. This bill doesn’t set up any of the funds. It suggests that a bill should be brought forward in the next session.

So the Leader of the Official Opposition actually steps outside the purpose of private members’ bills to say that this is a bill from our caucus. Well, it’s not a bill from caucus. It’s a private member’s bill, and it’s a bill being brought forward by a private member although the Leader of the Official Opposition, but it’s in essence a bill to create a bill. It’s a bill which would purport to tie the hands of the Legislature by directing it to bring in a bill and setting out some of the elements that should be in the bill. So I’m not sure what would happen if the bill that came in didn’t match the bill that was directing it to come in. It’s a very convoluted way to achieve public policy. It is a good way – and I commend the Leader of the Official Opposition for finding this convoluted methodology – to raise some important public policy issues, which I hope we will be discussing in great detail after the tabling of the budget on April 19, very, very important issues about how we use the resources of Albertans that we obtain from the sale of our natural resources and how we use them to help build the future of this province. That’s a very, very important discussion and one which merits a broader discussion than what is provided for in the confines of a private member’s bill and particularly a private member’s bill with this limited a scope.

So with those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I’d say that I absolutely love the access to the future fund, wouldn’t want to necessarily change its name, but that would just be a private concern. It’s going to have a huge impact on the future of this province. I think we should be building it, and I hope we build it past the $3 billion to a much larger fund.

The humanities, social sciences, and the arts concept. Not a new concept. I’ve discussed that with the new president of the University of Alberta, Indra Samarasekera. In fact, she mentioned it in her induction speech when she was sworn in as president of the University of Alberta. So that’s not an idea that’s new to the Official Opposition. It’s an idea which has been discussed and which, in my view, is a great idea.

The apportioning of funds. I think there should be a policy. I’ve heard the Minister of Finance indicate that we will be bringing forward a policy with respect to apportioning of funds, so that’s not a new idea.

The question of the humanities, social sciences, and the arts fund. Why you’d limit it to that amount I’m not sure. The fact of the matter is that this government has provided leadership over its time. It provided leadership in setting up the heritage medical research fund, which has proved to be extremely valuable. It has provided leadership in setting up the ingenuity fund, the cancer fund, the access to the future fund, and there’s so much more.

The Acting Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m really pleased to be able to get up in this Assembly and speak in support of Bill 201. I had a part in developing the policy which became this bill, and I am really delighted to see it come into this Legislative Assembly. I hope that we will get the support of government because as a number of them have mentioned, they really like what’s in this bill. I’m sure we can get them to support it because it’s such a good idea.

Mr. Speaker, as an Albertan I want to see the oil and gas, the nonrenewable natural resource revenue, in this province be an opportunity and continue to be an opportunity for all Albertans into eternity. I want to see that prosperity be perpetual. Whether we are talking about oil and gas revenues reducing because the resource itself is depleting or because there’s no demand for it, even in the government’s own figures they are anticipating and planning for that reduction in revenue. As it stands right now, that oil and gas is coming right out of the ground, and we’re spending it as fast as it comes. There is no savings plan in place.

That’s why I am so keen on the ideas that are embedded in this Bill 201. It does allow us to address that sustainability gap between how much other revenue we are raising and how much we are spending for every person in Alberta. That sustainability gap is the difference that we are basically subsidizing with nonrenewable resource revenue, and we need to stop doing that. We need to be able to find a way to replace that money and make it perpetual as an opportunity for us.

I want to see that money go into an endowment fund for the infrastructure to address, and that's to address a lot of the problems that have been identified by the opposition for choices that the government has made. It certainly paid off a cash debt, but in doing so, it created an infrastructure debt, a human services debt, a long-term care debt, a homelessness debt. There have been a number of other ways that that cash debt was paid, and we're now seeing that come up in a number of these other debts and deficits.

Included in this Bill 201 is the idea of an infrastructure fund to pay back and to get our infrastructure up to speed, which is perfectly appropriate. We're a very wealthy province. We should have the best, and I want to see us have the best. Why wouldn't we have good roads and excellent bridges in good repair and long-term care centres that are bright and lively and offer dignity to those that live there? That's exactly the kind of thing that we should be doing.

I'm delighted to see the postsecondary education fund that is anticipated in our policy and in this bill. The Minister of Health and Wellness referred to the president of the University of Alberta's inaugural address, where she was talking about the possibilities for that university and how she'd like to see it placed in the top 20 universities in North America. You know, with a fund like this, that could happen, and that makes that possibility much more real to me, and I would really like to see that go ahead.

There's been quite a bit of talk on the other side about the access to the future fund. The problem with that is that it never got the funding that it was supposed to get, and it seems to be sort of languishing there. It's just not an active, viable, forward-moving fund. This one is. It continues to have money put into it, and it's uncapped, so we really could have all centres of excellence in our postsecondary institutions. We're not limiting that to our universities but also to our colleges, to our institutes of technology, even to apprenticeship programs, which are also a form of postsecondary learning opportunity. So very exciting in what we could do to educate our population, and that in itself becomes a non resource-based opportunity for the future.

When we talk about exploring other sources of revenue and other things that we could be doing in this province that aren't so directly reliant on oil and gas revenue, here's a way of creating that and of pouring into that knowledge-based economy that everyone says is now and is the future, so that's an excellent part of this.

The heritage fund, of course, is very important to all of us. It's an integral part of who we think of as ourselves, as Albertans, and I approve absolutely of the money going into that fund and the opportunities it creates for us. But, Mr. Speaker, it will be no surprise to you to learn that my favourite part of this proposal is the humanities, social sciences, and arts endowment fund. I was very proud of my colleagues for working on this idea and recognizing that there are certainly existing endowment funds and endowments of chairs at our various universities for maths and sciences and various other kinds of research and even, as the Minister of Health and Wellness indicated, the Alberta heritage fund for medical research, but we do not support specific endowments for social sciences, the humanities, and the arts.

It's very hard to get people to step up to the plate and underwrite or encourage philosophy or romance languages or social services and the various studies that go into that and, of course, the arts, the fine crafts and fine arts. They are an excellent opportunity for us in Alberta both to create a better quality of life for us but also as a very active participant in the economy. Money into the arts stays in Alberta. It doesn't leave and go home in the pockets of oil companies that go back to the States. Money into the arts stays in Alberta, and all kinds of opportunities could be created through that fund.

For example, we have talked in the Alberta Liberals about our commitment to doubling the funding to the arts, and we're actually looking at the possibility and feasibility of tripling the funding to the arts. You look at the additional money that would be generated out of this fund every year, and we're looking at an additional $28 million a year. So now you can really set your imagination on fire for the possibilities of things, like more public art.

I was in Saskatoon a year ago, and I was really interested to see that on almost every street corner in their downtown area they have public art. I look around Edmonton, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray. I've been in all those cities in the last year. Almost none. I can't remember any public art with the exception of the Famous Five sculpture outside the special arts centre in Calgary and the EPCOR Centre for the Performing Arts in Calgary and a few here on the grounds of the Legislature.

Imagine if we had a sculpture park here at the Legislature. That kind of thing becomes possible when we look at an endowment fund that would include the arts. Although we have put a cap on it for now, I remain hopeful that we will be able to lift that cap at some point. In the meantime I think artists could also tap into the money that's available out of the opportunity fund, which of course is available for anybody with great ideas about how to make our province even better.

So I am very much in support of this. This has been a grassroots process that has come together from my caucus members being out in the public and looking at what people wanted. They wanted a plan. They wanted to know that there was going to be perpetual opportunity and, hopefully, prosperity that was coming from our nonrenewable resource revenues, and they wanted to see savings that would continue to pay off for us. I think we've satisfied all of that, and obviously we listened very carefully to the desire for support for postsecondary education, for infrastructure, for the heritage fund, for the arts and humanities, and that special fund, the opportunity fund, just to fire our imaginations.

It's interesting to me the way the government members have responded to this because none of them have been able to really find anything to criticize out of it, but they're very quick to try and take credit for what's in here or to try and pretend that it is modelled after one of their funds.

I look forward to everyone's support. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to contribute to second reading debate on Bill 201, the Funding Alberta's Future Act, sponsored by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. The intent of this legislation is commendable. Saving for Alberta's future is an integral part of ensuring that our province remains vibrant for many generations to come. Fortunately, we've always taken saving for the future seriously in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, we have the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the access to the future fund, the sustainability fund, the Alberta heritage medical research fund, the Alberta cancer legacy fund, and numerous other endowments and funds. The value of these funds is tens of billions of dollars, dollars which can be used to improve the future of all Albertans.

Bill 201 seeks to build upon the government of Alberta's track record of saving prudently for our future. I support the intent of his bill. We have another proud tradition in Alberta, a practice of consulting the public on issues of importance. Gathering the thoughts and perspectives of Albertans is important in order to formulate policy that is representative of their needs. This government believes that we must continue to engage Albertans. For example, the government has launched the Affordable Housing Task Force. This government is also committed to a safe communities and policing task force. These task forces will seek the opinions of all Albertans on issues of great importance to the future of the province before implementing solutions to these challenges.

In addition to this, the government of Alberta is carrying forward with the land-use framework. This initiative will be an opportunity for the government to consult with Albertans and develop strategies to manage Alberta's land base. While Bill 201 is consistent with this government's intent to plan for the future, I have reservations because I believe that it is not consistent with our practice of consulting with Albertans. The ingenuity of our people is our greatest resource. In order to maximize the potential of this resource, we must consult with Albertans regularly on issues of importance. Bill 201 contains no mechanisms for consulting with Albertans. Rather, it recommends that changes be implemented carte blanche.

This government is also committed to openness and transparency. That means inviting Albertans to participate in the democratic process. I believe that it is most productive to implement these changes publicly rather than through the closed processes called for by this bill. I don't believe that we can implement such sweeping legislation without first engaging in a full and thorough consultation process with Albertans, a process that is open and transparent. Therefore, I urge my hon. colleagues to defer support until such time as this process can be completed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to speak in favour of Bill 201, the bill sponsored by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, Funding Alberta's Future Act.

Let me start by saying that this is not a surplus policy, Mr. Speaker. It is a revenue policy. The government side in the debate has highlighted the fact that they're now working on a surplus policy, and they're urging members of the opposition and members of the public to stay tuned because this policy is coming down and it should be great. What I'm saying is that we've already had our surplus policy more than 18 months ago, and now we have graduated and grown towards our own revenue policy to have a plan for this province, something that did not exist for at least the last 10 years. We are working on having a plan that incorporates surpluses, and it also incorporates revenues. So we're doing both things at the same time versus the government, who is now playing catch-up. They are now coming down with a surplus policy, and maybe two and a half years or three years from now they would have a revenue policy in place.

The second point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, which was mentioned before, is that 40 of the hon. members in the government caucus backed Mr. Jim Dinning when he was seeking the Tory throne. Now, I am confident that they didn't all support him because he was just the front-runner in that race or he was the person with the most money or because he had the most volunteers on the ground. I'm hoping that the majority of them supported him because of his policies and because of where he stands on the issues, not simply because some of them were promised cabinet posts or committee chairmanships. I hope some of them took the time to check his policies and see, for example, that he advocated putting 30 per cent of the nonrenewable resource revenue into a savings account for the future in regular years and 50 per cent in boom years.

Also, Mr. Peter Lougheed, who basically established the Tory dynasty, was on the record advocating and supporting something similar to what we're proposing here, basically putting 30 per cent of all oil and gas revenues, including our share of oil sands net profits, into the fund, into a savings account.

Again, these are two supposedly respected individuals, one who slayed the deficit, who was Treasurer when the on-paper debt was eliminated, and then the other person, who established the Tory dynasty, both of them speaking in favour of our idea: 30 per cent of nonrenewable resources going into a savings account for the future. So my challenge to those 40 people across is: if you believed in Jim's fiscal policies and if you like where he stood on that particular issue, then I urge you to speak.

It is really surprising that so far, Mr. Speaker, only three of the government MLAs signalled their desire to participate in this debate. Isn't securing Alberta's future a priority for all of us? Are those members not concerned about the future and what legacy we leave to our kids and their kids? Are most of them only concerned about their re-election chances? Is talk about resource policies and talk about savings for the future only sexy and attractive during election campaigns, when we need to engage and stimulate and impress citizens of this province, but once they're here under the dome, then it's no longer sexy or attractive? Should the province continue on its course to certain destruction? Should we as legislators allow this government to continue with its addiction to nonrenewable energy resources? Should we allow this government to keep throwing money at problems, to use band-aids and analgesics, to run our affairs like there's no tomorrow? Should we let them do that? Where is the plan? Where is the long-term, sustainable vision?

The hon. Government House Leader and minister of health started his debate by complaining about how the Leader of the Opposition ignored mentioning this minister's Tory leadership campaign and the promises it contained. My question, after having listened to his remarks, is simply this. Are these topics only of interest and of importance because certain members of the government caucus were seeking the leadership, were hoping to become Premier? Where does he stand on the issue now versus three months ago? Does he not think that we need to invest in Alberta's future?

The other thing is that Bill 201 is not convoluted, as the hon. minister indicated, and even if it were, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that he has enough staff in his department and enough staff in the Minister of Finance's department to explain it line by line to him and show him the merit and show him the great potential that we are throwing away here. We can also give him a briefing on this. If he was sincere and if the Premier was sincere in signalling that the Premier and his cabinet are open to listening to the opposition and working with the opposition for the benefit of all Albertans, here is their chance. We can actually tell him why we think this bill is useful and why we think this is something that is overdue, but it's not done yet. We can actually salvage some of this prosperity and put it to good use for our kids and their kids.

Now, I'm also reminded that the hon. government whip is switched off during private members' business. The hon. House leader was talking about the definition of private member's bill, and he was challenging the Leader of the Opposition, you know, as to why all members of his caucus are supportive of his idea. The answer is: we are supportive because it makes sense. In making this remark, I am also comparing ourselves to members of the government caucus. I said that only three of them participated in the debate, and I am really not sure if more of them will be participating later.

Members of the caucus opposite have indicated to me on several occasions that during private members' business their whip is switched off, that they treat private members' business as a free vote. So when I basically questioned why they always seem to vote the same way and they always seem to vote against private members' business originating from the opposition, one jokingly told me that they all think alike. Another time the hon. Minister of Justice jokingly mentioned that they do it to protect us from ourselves, and that's basically the attitude that we have to put an end to, Mr. Speaker. This is the attitude that nothing good could come from the opposition side and that the government knows it all and the puck stops there. They basically know it all, and there's no use for the opposition.

My challenge to them is: if certainly the whip is not on, then maybe more of them should be speaking. The whip is on to prevent them from speaking or to make sure that they speak in a certain way, that they all agree. So I think that they should really not allow ideology to stand in the way of good debate, and I think that if they're true to their promise that they're going to listen to the opposition and work with the opposition, as signalled by the Premier, then I think they should allow this bill to move on to the next stage of debate, which is the Committee of the Whole, to now be able to give it the attention that it deserves and to go through it line by line and see where things could be improved, where things could be made better. I think that is the role of private members' business, and we should really emphasize it.

There's also a saying, Mr. Speaker, that tomorrow, today will be yesterday. I don't want as an individual and as a legislator, as a member of this esteemed House, to leave tomorrow to be too late, to be yesterday, a distant yesterday, where our children are going to question us and say: why did you fritter it away, and where is the money?

Everyone in this House should really vote for Bill 201 in second reading, and then if the government side remains silent for the most part, like I mentioned, or if they speak to just blindly oppose it, then I'd be reminded of another saying which I ran across the other day, and it says: a zebra cannot change its stripes. If the Premier was sincere in his pledge to listen to us and work with us, then I urge hon. members of his caucus to do the same.

If we have time, I would maybe go through some of the math that's incorporated into this just to prove to the hon. Government House Leader that it is not convoluted or hard to understand. In 1992-93 and comparing it to 2005-2006, this interval here, the population has risen slightly, by more than 25 per cent, from 2.66 million to 3.33 million. Per capita revenues and per capita spending for that same period, '92-93 to '05-06, were basically $4,542 and $6,611. That was at the beginning of this interval, and that's the year the hon. former Premier took over. In 2005-2006 the per capita revenues and spending went up to $6,361 and $8,500.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 201, Funding Alberta's Future Act. I know that I've had my name in to speak for a little while, and I think there may be one or two government members who are yet to come. I salute the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. I have a lot of respect for him, but perhaps being patient would reveal that there are others on both sides of this House who are very anxious to speak to this bill.

That indeed is part of the theme of my remarks here today. The act does propose to create a funding Alberta's future account of the general revenue fund, and 30 per cent of the nonrenewable resource revenues will be directed into the account. Funds from the account would be distributed as follows: 35 per cent to Alberta heritage trust fund, 35 per cent to a new postsecondary endowment fund to replace the access to the future fund, 25 per cent directed to the capital account, and 5 per cent to a humanities, social sciences, and arts endowment. Once the fund reaches half a billion dollars, funds will be allocated to an opportunity fund, and its purpose will be developed in consultation with Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this indeed is very laudable as Bill 201 does lay out one manner of managing Alberta's prosperity. While building up endowments can sustain spending over the long term, it's worth noting that Bill 201 is not the way I think our prosperity should be managed.

Governing is about setting priorities and getting results. The hon. Premier has set priorities, and we're working on delivering results; for example, governing with integrity and transparency, which includes finding more efficient ways of delivering government services to Albertans; number two, managing growth pressures, which includes controlling spending and getting the best value for tax dollars, setting out a long-term capital plan, investing $400 million to address the issues related to the growth in Fort McMurray region; number three, improving quality of life, including making postsecondary education more accessible and a community spirit fund, which will match charitable donations; number four, providing safe and secure communities; and number five, building a stronger Alberta, which includes long-term funding commitment to municipalities of $1.4 billion, upgrading our resources to sustain economic growth, supporting nanotechnology, which has the potential to transform the world as we know it.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's clear. The government's plan is a clear plan, and it will benefit every Albertan. It will preserve our current prosperity, and it will allow for greater prosperity for our children and our grandchildren generations beyond. Perhaps the hon. member is just a little impatient. This is only the third day of the legislative session, and a budget will be tabled on April 19, laying out the fiscal plan for 2007-2008. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has presented his plan, and I've spoken about the government's plan.

It's very clear. The government plan addresses the issues that Albertans would like to see addressed. The Minister of Finance was mandated to consult with Albertans on Budget 2007 and table it. He was also mandated to lead a financial investment and planning commission, and I'm confident that these objectives will indeed be met. We have a strong starting point to move forward from. The government has a strong fiscal position, and Bill 201 is simply not required because the Alberta government will have close to $45 billion in net assets as of March 31, 2007, and in all sincerity this is a position that no other jurisdiction is currently in. Our capital plan commits over $13 billion over the next three years to build roads, schools, and hospitals.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Rodney: That's $13 billion. Thanks for asking.

The access to the future fund is transforming our postsecondary system and is encouraging innovation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that everyone in the House and everyone in this province would agree that we have a great situation, and I think many beyond our borders are very glad for us or envious, depending on what part of the spectrum they're on. I think it's very clear that it's the opposite of government complacency. It's a government that is acting with a plan. Government has been prudent with its resource revenue, endowments have been established, and infrastructure has been built.

For these reasons I cannot support Bill 201. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to be able to speak to Bill 201, Funding Alberta's Future Act. The Alberta Liberals are thinking about the future, something we were accused of last session by the Member for Athabasca-Redwater, something which Albertans have been waiting for for a long time, and I quote: only the Liberals would think about something that might happen in the future. In 2004 the Alberta Liberals campaigned on a surplus policy where all surpluses would be allocated, 35 per cent into the heritage fund, a fund which was envisioned by a great Albertan at one point, great visionaries who looked to the future of Alberta, something that Alberta has been lacking for some time until now.

Getting back to where the surplus would be directed: 35 per cent to a postsecondary endowment fund to ensure that we hope to have and should have a well-educated population today and tomorrow. With the increase in the amount it costs a student today, it's no wonder this government is trying to give newborns a head start with their $500 for every baby born. We recognize that because we've been meeting with postsecondary students for the last little while. When they're coming out after graduation with bills in excess of $160,000, where are they going to be able to start? Where is their future when they're paying off . . . [interjection] Yeah. Exactly. Where is the advantage?

They're going to need a big, bold plan from this government. Thus the 35 per cent will be welcomed to offset the climbing costs for students in the future.

The Alberta Liberals will save 25 per cent into capital investment, eliminating Alberta's infrastructure, which continues to grow beyond most municipalities' capabilities. It's evident when you drive down the roads; they're getting poorer and poorer. I'm not just referring to Fort McMurray, which recently received $400 million, a save-the-MLA fund, but it was needed infrastructure. In Edmonton and Calgary we need that money just as well. The NDs will have to take our word for it because they're just going to be able to park their cars soon.

The last of the 5 per cent will go to the Alberta arts endowment fund, which would support the humanities, social sciences, and arts, which would cap at $500 million. Instead of the artists going cap in hand, they'd be able to make a living. I would mention that the 5 per cent does not include horse racing. Some consider this to be an art in motion. I would disagree. This would be for real artists here in Alberta. All Albertans would benefit from this bill, something we could brag about, something we haven't been able to brag about for a long time.

We talk about advantage, and we talk about consultation. Let's talk about the cheques. There was no consultation there. It was at a whim. Albertans got $1.2 million and absolutely nothing to show for it. There was no consultation there. There was no consultation in the trade, investment, and labour agreement known as TILMA. No consultation there either. So when we talk about consultation, let's remember what we did in the past here.

Bill 201 is offering that in 13 years we could be giving Albertans an advantage, something they're lacking today. That must be why we no longer hear the catchphrase, the Alberta advantage. It isn't there. It doesn't exist anymore. You just have to go out and look for it; it isn't there. Homelessness continues to grow. Affordable housing is lacking; people can't pay the rent. That's the advantage. It's hard to say that when it isn't the case.

This bill would be welcomed by Albertans because it's a real plan for real issues that matter. Mr. Speaker, we the Alberta Liberals have been doing a lot of consultation around the province, and people have said that at the end of the day there needs to be a plan. There needs to be long-term sustainability in funding as well as where we're spending our monies. This plan does address this.

So I'm going to sit down, and I'm going to hear the rest of the input that other members may have. I know the time is getting near, and I do want to hear some obvious support from the other side because this is a plan that benefits all Albertans. It doesn't matter what side it came from. This is the issue. It came from a nonpartisan person here. We want to make sure that we respect and promote all views from all Albertans, and this would certainly capture that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any others who want to participate in the debate?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to close debate.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I do appreciate those who spoke today and participated in the debate: the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, as well as so many members of the Alberta Liberal caucus. I guess the leader of the New Democrat caucus spoke as well.

The importance of this bill I don't think can be overstated, and there were variations on a theme in some of the comments that came up, even from the government side, including those of the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. A number of concerns were raised. Certainly, if this bill passes through second reading into Committee of the Whole, we would be prepared to entertain and discuss amendments. We're always open to that. As we made clear, we don't have a monopoly on good ideas here, so we're prepared to discuss amendments. Perhaps there needs to be consultation. I might point out, however, that consultation isn't always the way of this government either, and the approach to TILMA is one recent example of that.

The process of a private member's bill, for those on the government side who aren't aware of it, precludes us from doing anything more direct than we do in this piece of legislation. So the comments from the Government House Leader on why this is a convoluted process are uninformed on that particular account. We had to do what we had to do to get the bill to the floor, and our hands are tied. Nonetheless, it's clear to everybody who reads the bill what the intention of the bill is and what the achievements of the bill would be.

So I urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill. It's the kind of bill that will free Alberta's public services from the roller-coaster ride of a resource-based economy. It will put us on a sustainable fiscal foundation for the future. It will establish a postsecondary endowment fund that will allow Alberta's technical schools and colleges and universities to reach heights unachieved in the history of this province and, indeed, in the history of this country. It will allow us systematically to deal with the infrastructure debt. It will allow an endowment fund for the humanities, social sciences, and arts to take its place alongside engineering and medicine and the sciences.

So, Mr. Speaker, I commend this – I commend this – to the people of this Assembly. It represents hard work. It represents a great deal of research. It represents support and analysis from acclaimed economists as well as acclaimed business leaders, who think the work that's done in this is solid, farsighted, and visionary. So I turn to each and every one of you in this Assembly, some of you who support these notions in principle and, indeed, have supported them in detail, and I ask you, when the time comes, to stand in favour of this legislation.

Thank you.

Internship Positions for Immigrants

501. Mr. Cao moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to create additional short-term internship positions within the government of Alberta to assist qualified immigrants who seek work experience for the first time in Canada.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to present Motion 501. The motive for this is very simple. This motion's aim is to help new Canadians establish themselves in Canada by creating opportunities for their first Canadian work experience with the introduction of additional short-term internship positions within the government of Alberta.

It is initially challenging to find work in Canada for any new Canadian. Employers always ask for Canadian work experience, and employers prefer to hire people with previous Canadian work experience. So many of my constituents and many Albertans whom I have encountered over the years have the dilemma that in order to secure employment, they need previous work experience in Canada. It's a catch-22. How can one meet the requirement of previous Canadian work experience if it is the first time they are applying for a job in Canada?

Yes, we can help and have helped many new Canadians by providing training in language, speaking, writing, in job search techniques, in writing resumés, and job applications. Yes, we can and have helped new Canadians in qualification assessment and skills certification. But the bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that the most critical component is the real work experience in Canada that employers require. Employers always ask for Canadian experience, as I said before, and I have experience in seeing that employers prefer to hire people with previous Canadian work experience.

Mr. Speaker, to help new, qualified immigrants to gain appropriate, meaningful Canadian work experience for which they are qualified is very important, and it is the essence of Motion 501. It encourages other levels of governments and the private sector to do the same by setting an example with the government of Alberta. Helping immigrants use their skills to reach their full potential, to their highest productivity level is the purpose of Motion 501.

We also see that we need to help to develop Alberta in terms of human resources, help to meet the labour market needs of the future. As we all know, we have experienced unprecedented growth in Alberta. Addressing the labour force challenges requires interprovincial migration and immigration from outside Canada for appropriate skilled workers.

Now, I have seen so many programs and so many immigrant services in Alberta, in different cities in our province. They have done a great job. So this motion is just to reinforce that assurance that we help to introduce new Canadians into the Alberta workforce as quickly as possible so that we have the productivity out of our new citizens, and this also helps alleviate the provincial labour shortage.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans should have the opportunity to develop their knowledge, skills, talents to apply themselves to our demanding labour market. To sustain our growth in Alberta, we require an adequate supply of workers with the right knowledge and skills. Currently, the demographic challenges are affecting the province's ability to meet the labour force demands for a prosperous economy.

We know that our population is aging. We have a low birth rate, and we have urbanization, and potential economic growth may be constrained by our supply of labour. Albertans' standard of living and the future opportunity for economic success should not be jeopardized by the lack of skilled workers. So getting more immigrants into the workforce would help alleviate staffing pressure faced by employers.

In managing the growth, the government has the priority. Mr. Speaker, immigrants must continue to play a role in countering the projected slowdown of the Alberta labour force growth, and to do that, the government is working to attract immigrants to Alberta and retain them here. I know that government actively campaigns to attract out-of-country workers and emphasizes the Alberta advantage, including high quality of life.

Motion 501 could be used as another recruiting tool to attract immigrants to Alberta. Mr. Speaker, a changing and increasingly competitive global landscape means that Alberta has to work diligently to attract and retain knowledgeable, skilful workers. As you know, many jurisdictions share the urgent need for more skilled workers, and Alberta will have to clearly differentiate itself if it is to be seen as a destination of choice.

The Alberta government also has the priority to improve Albertans' quality of life. Now, we make sure that the qualified immigrants find employment which they are rightfully trained for, suited to their ability, and that would help to increase the quality of life in Alberta. Our government also has the priority of building a stronger Alberta, and I see that Bill 501 could increase the cultural awareness in the workforce and would be transcended into personal lives and communities thereafter.

So increasing immigrants in the workforce will also help to build social cohesion, and providing first-time work experience in Canada for new Canadians will largely emphasize this point.

I look forward to hearing the debate on this mutually beneficial proposal. I urge all members of the House to support Motion 501, and I am looking forward to addressing any comments at the end of this debate.

I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I stand to respond to Motion 501. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort for bringing forward this motion. For me it's a simple issue of human rights, and I think that we are all sensitive to issues of human rights and especially situations in which disadvantaged groups are often the victims of discrimination in our country.

Of course, Canada has been a model for the rest of the world in its commitment to the basic human right that every human being has intrinsic worth. In fact, it was a great Canadian, John Humphrey, who had a hand in writing the UN declaration, the universal declaration of human rights in 1948, recognizing the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family as the foundation of freedom and justice and peace in the world. So immigrants coming to Canada to live and work are entitled to freedom, fair treatment, and respect.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite easy to say these words, and there are lots of conventions that have been signed by Canada to affirm these words, but moving them off the page into everyday reality is quite another matter. In fact, Justice Beverly McLachlin made this remark: "Formal declarations of equality are not enough to remove discrimination and exclusion." We need more than just rights talk. We need concrete actions. So I recognize that the hon. member is bringing this motion as a concrete action to put into practice what we believe about human rights in Canada.

Of course, it can be argued that the Canada in 1867 was born out of the necessity of recognizing two peoples and two different languages, so the spirit of tolerance and respect is actually built into our laws and institutions. Nevertheless, when you look at Canadian history, you see the old exclusionary thinking coming back again and again, that sees in the other a threat or someone who is different, so there's the whole process of exclusion and discrimination. We only need to think about the way our aboriginal Canadians have been treated down through the years, marginalized to the side into special groups considered separate and not so equal as they live in enclaves in this country.

Chinese Canadians came to build our railroads and were subjected to a head tax. Black Canadians came via the underground railroad to the Maritimes and were cheated of land and forced to work on public projects like slaves. Ukrainian Canadians were interned in World War I. Japanese Canadians were sent to camps during World War II. Anti-Semitism has led to discriminating practices against Jewish Canadians throughout our history. So formal declaration of equality does not translate automatically into inclusion in the workplace, and that's what this motion is addressed to, to include people who might be disadvantaged in our workplace. We have to again and again create programs to enable disadvantaged groups to participate in the workplace.

So what we're talking about here with this Motion 501 is actually an affirmative action program. We only need to look south of the border to see many, many years of affirmative action programs to make sure that all people are included in the workplace. Now, at first I thought that such a program might not be permitted by section 15 of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the famous section on equality. It's one of my favourite sections in the Charter, and this upholds the equality of everyone.

- (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

So an employer like the provincial government has to be very careful that it doesn't put into practice hiring practices that are in any way discriminative. But then we go on to subsection (2), which says:

- Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin . . .

And so on. So, Mr. Speaker, actually the Charter adds a section that interprets this equality statement and affirms that affirmative action programs are extremely important.

I think the hon. member has already mentioned some references to the plight of immigrants when they come to Canada. I think the statistics speak for themselves. I mean, the key word in the Charter is "disadvantaged." It seems to me that when you look at the statistics about immigration – for example, research published by the Canadian Council on Social Development indicates that 20 per cent of those who arrived before 1986 lived in poverty for a number of years after they came here; after 1991, more than 50 per cent.

Actually, recent statistics issued by Statistics Canada state that the economic situation of new immigrants to Canada at the turn of the millennium showed no improvement despite the higher levels of education and higher levels of skill among immigrants coming into Canada. A recent Statistics Canada report also showed that the probability of immigrants entering a period of low income was very high in their first year in Canada. Mr. Speaker, I just wonder in terms of the development of immigration programs in our country and in Alberta: what are we saying to immigrants, inviting them to come to our great province, yet they often enter into a time of dire poverty when they can't even find decent housing? So I applaud this step. This is an important step.

I received an e-mail from a local organization here in Edmonton, Changing Together: A Centre for Immigrant Women, which states that many of our women are professionals as medical doctors, nurses, accountants, lawyers, and teachers from their country of origin, yet they are the most economically marginalized immigrants when they come to Edmonton because they cannot find a job in their specialized field due to the lack of Canadian experience, just what the hon. member has mentioned: the lack of Canadian experience. So they can't get to first base in terms of entering into the workforce. In terms of opening up the internship program to immigrants, giving them the Canadian experience that I think they really need and enabling them to have their skills recognized is, I think, a step in the right direction. We need this kind of affirmative action program, and I thank the hon. member for suggesting it.

My only question is that in implementing this program, I hope that we're not just throwing people into the midst of government bureaucracy, which is difficult to fathom at the best of times, without some supportive system, some mentorship, without people there. Obviously, people who have come from another country have sometimes language problems. There's a culture shock, so there need to be mentors in place to help them along the way; otherwise, the whole idea is going to fail.

We want them to succeed. We want new people coming to Canada and succeeding, anything we can do to make that happen, and seeing this as a stepping stone to greater service in the public sector. So if they get a taste of what it's like to work in the public sector, they might consider a whole career in the public sector, and that's all to the good. That's what it's all about, I think. It's about jobs, about participating in the great wealth of Canada. The public service should be open to all Albertans regardless of their country of origin, and we must take the right steps to ensure that that happens.

So I support this motion, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have been given the opportunity to participate in the discussion regarding Motion 501, which recommends the implementation of internship positions within the government of Alberta, specifically for recent immigrants to the province. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort for introducing this motion as an opportunity to discuss possible methods of ensuring the success of newcomers.

One of the five major priorities set out by the government of Alberta is to manage growth by addressing Alberta's labour shortage and developing a made-in-Alberta immigration strategy, and we've got some of our most capable ministers working on that as we speak. The passing of this motion would be a step forward to a made-in-Alberta immigration strategy, and it would contribute to addressing the labour shortage within the public sector. However, I don't think that the labour crunch that's being experienced in Alberta is a phenomenon unique to the provincial government. This phenomenon spans the entire private sector.

I'd like to note that what this motion would not necessarily achieve is provide immigrants with opportunities to work in the areas in which they have been trained because government typically does not offer all of those kinds of jobs that immigrants come here for. I would prefer that all immigrants be offered an internship in the area of their training and experience. To restrict this proposal to internship spaces within the government is to limit the chances of its success. While this is a start to both easing integration into and addressing the labour shortage, I believe that much more needs to be done.

Why not go one step further and spread this requirement across all areas? This is an initiative that all professions and occupations would or should participate in. In Alberta we allow our professions and occupations to self-regulate. I don't think it would be a big step to actually ask the professions and occupations to provide each new immigrant a mentor and an internship in the area that they come here trained for. Imagine an Alberta where every single immigrant coming to this province would be brought together with a mentor and as an intern in the area that they have a passion for, in the area that they've studied for years overseas. I would much prefer to see a system like that. I'm told that there are over 500,000 immigrants in Canada that currently do not work in the area that they've been trained for. So not only would this kind of strategy attract immigrants from overseas, but it could attract 500,000 of them from other parts of the country who today cannot practise what they have studied for all these years in the province where they live. So imagine the potential that that might have.

I think that this is a very good start. I certainly don't want to sound like I'm being critical of the hon. member. I think it's a great start, but let's go beyond that. Let's become a province where, in fact, we do practise what we preach and we provide mentors and we provide internships for every single immigrant that comes here so that they can be gainfully employed from day one. Sure, maybe they need some upgrading. We'll let them work while they upgrade. Maybe they need some language skills. Let them work while they learn. Don't just set them aside driving cabs, as some of the examples would suggest.

Anyway, with respect to the motion I think, hon. member, that it's a good start. I just don't think it goes far enough. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually going to agree with the Member for Calgary-Egmont to a large degree. I want to say that we on this side will certainly support the motion because this is a serious problem if you talk to people. We bring immigrants over, and this is a much better solution than trying to bring temporary foreign workers over.

We're talking about people that want to have a life here and become Canadian and part of the mainstream, if I can put it that way. But when we bring them over, often we don't provide the proper backup, whether it be language skills or whatever, and many of them are struggling. If you talk to Jim Gurnett, who works with immigrants at the Mennonite association, this is a serious problem. We bring them here, and then there's not the proper backup. So I think that this is at least a serious attempt to deal with that sort of situation. I would think that if we're having internship programs within government, that would include language skills and other things that need to be there to make people function because, you know, it is a serious problem.

There are a couple of studies, we know, and I think the Member for Edmonton-Glenora talked about this. There is considerable empirical evidence that new immigrants, despite being Canadian in all legal aspects, are disadvantaged within the Canadian economic climate. I think there's some deep-rooted distrust over their abilities, skills, and qualifications. The studies show very clearly when you look at them – and I'll mention a couple of them – that new immigrants are more likely to live in poverty and receive less compensation for their level of work experience and education compared to birth Canadians with equitable skills, education, and experience. So something is wrong there. A part of the problem – and I think this is what the Member for Calgary-Egmont was talking about – lies in the systemic distrust of foreign credentials and experience.

I wanted to say that there are a couple of studies that I think come to the nub of this matter. There's a study done by Omidvar and Richmond in 2003. I won't quote the whole study, but they found that the things that the member is talking about – internship, bringing people in and making them feel welcome, providing the backup skills, valued recognition by conferring respect and recognition to this group, the human development that is involved, and involvement and engagement through citizenship – all lead to a better result for our new immigrants, and it begins to deal with the problems. It makes them a part of the culture more, but also we begin to get them into the proper jobs that they are trained for.

The other important one was Immigrant Skill Utilization in the Canadian Labour Market, by Reitz. I think this says it all, three sentences here. Finding 1 shouldn't surprise us: "Immigrants receive lower earnings premiums for education." We know that. Finding 2: "Immigrants receive lower earnings premiums for work experience." Again, part of the problem. Finding 3: "Immigrants from some origins groups earn less than immigrants from other origins." In other words, we know that if you come from a European background, you probably have a better chance of success and making more money.

I think it comes back, if I may, to the point that the Member for Calgary-Egmont was talking about. Certainly we can do this within government, but the problem is much broader than that. We are going to have to, I think, through government pressure, whatever it takes – and I see that the minister is here – move with these professional organizations and work with the unions and others to start to do the things that we're saying we need to do. We see qualified doctors driving taxis; I run into this occurring all over. I see doctors and engineers, you know, working at jobs for which they are well overqualified. Not only is this unfair to them, but when we have a shortage of all these people that we say we need, we are missing a golden opportunity here. I think that's the point that the Member for Calgary-Egmont was talking about.

So, yes, this is a good first step, and we certainly will support it, and I commend the member for bringing it forward for this discussion, but we also have to do something and work with the professional organizations, the unions, and others to begin to bring the people that we need and that are qualified into the mainstream because we need doctors, we need engineers, and we need skilled tradesmen. Some of these people already have the training. We're missing a bet here.

Mr. Speaker, I'll give other people time to get in on this debate. Again, I certainly thank the member for bringing this forward because it's an important discussion for all. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and speak to Motion 501. First of all, I want to thank the MLA for Calgary-Fort for introducing Motion 501. The government's plan to increase the number of immigrants entering Alberta will not be effective if recent immigrants are not given an opportunity to work and be part of the community.

Internships would be a great first step for recent immigrants who are just getting settled and adjusting to life in Canada. It would be even better if we expanded the range of internship opportunity to include government agencies and public service. Increased immigration will require greater availability of opportunity, so there is no reason to limit the number of internships that are available. The Ontario internship program for recent immigrants opens up opportunities in the public service for individuals from a range of fields, including finance, chemistry, communication, environment, and sciences. Expanding the scope of this program would reach more people.

Change the text to "paid internships." Many recent immigrants need to find paid work quickly to get established, find housing, and support families because it's one of the major problems when they enter the country. Because of economic reasons they need some money immediately to settle themselves. It is unreasonable to expect recent immigrants, given the rapidly increasing cost of living in Alberta, to be able to afford to work without being paid.

Paid internships would also ensure that recent immigrants don't immediately enter a cycle of poverty. As I said before, economics is a great factor when somebody settles in a new place, a strange place, especially if somebody doesn't know anybody in the new country.

Immigration, Mr. Speaker, always plays a very important role in any society, and Alberta's current labour shortages make it even more essential. Many recent immigrants have difficulty finding a job upon entering the province, leading to poverty and sometimes causing immigrants to leave the province. Many recent immigrants have noted that jobs and opportunities are not well known or well advertised. By providing clear and accessible government internships, Alberta may be able to provide a good first step for many, many new Albertans.

Interacting in a work environment can increase English language skills and pave the way to future employment, improve access to services, and encourage interactions in the community. Immigrants come to Alberta expecting an incredible opportunity to live comfortably, work, and raise families. Sadly, they are met by unexpected challenges, difficulties having their skills recognized, and even poverty in this land of plenty. Any chance that we have to increase the number of opportunities available to recent immigrants receives my full support. The Alberta advantage is not reaching all Albertans equally, as has been discovered by recent immigrants to our province. Increasing access to opportunities will help to ensure a long and happy future for newcomers in Alberta.

Internships for recent immigrants would provide much-needed opportunities but would not be enough. We want accessible language training, educational opportunities, reduced bureaucracy, and greater community support to ensure that recent immigrants can adjust and flourish in our province.

Mr. Speaker, nearly half of Canada's citizens, 47 per cent, are neither British nor French nor born in Canada. Despite Alberta's booming economy recent immigrants often have problems finding employment that recognizes or makes use of their skill sets and education. There are many, many barriers that limit recent immigrants' ability to be successful and adapt to life in Canada. Poverty is certainly one of the biggest barriers. The Canada 2001 census showed that 20 per cent of immigrants living in Canada's cities are considered low-income families compared to only 12 per cent of nonimmigrants living in the same areas. A recent Statistics Canada report also showed that the probability of immigrants entering a period of low income was very high in their first year in Canada, from 34 per cent to 46 per cent. However, if immigrants did not enter a low-income period in the year following entrance into Canada, the rate of poverty in subsequent years fell to 10 per cent or even less. Level of education didn't significantly alter this statistic.

Mr. Speaker, other barriers to employment include lack of Canadian experience. As some other speaker already mentioned, many employers who refuse to higher recent immigrants cite their lack of Canadian experience as the reason, lack of Canadian training. Even highly trained immigrants often have trouble finding jobs appropriate to their training and abilities.

Government bureaucracy. Many recent immigrants would like to work but have trouble navigating government bureaucracy. There are often strict timelines on finding work, difficulties obtaining work permits, and high fees to obtain work permits and apply for citizenship. Navigating bureaucracy is doubly challenging if recent immigrants do not have strong family/community ties or do not speak English or for some other social reasons or maybe culture shock when they arrive in a new place, new country, new way of life.

Language barrier. As I said before, lack of English language ability may lead to unemployment sometimes, unemployment and social isolation. English language training may not be available and/or affordable.

Mr. Speaker, you know, currently we have a career bridge program, a national program in which private employers can seek qualified international applicants. The program is not for profit and has managed 6,500 paid internships since 1996. In the Ontario public service internship programs for internationally trained individuals newcomers with a minimum of three years' international work experience will be eligible for a placement of up to six months with the Ontario public service. The program is working to place up to 70 interns and has partnered with career bridge.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 501 urges the government to create internship positions within the government service for qualified immigrants seeking full-time work experience in Canada. As you know, Alberta is currently undergoing a period of unprecedented growth. The government of Alberta is actively developing ways to accommodate labour demands in the province, having recognized the need to attract immigrants to Alberta and, more importantly, the retainment. There's a need for more people with the right knowledge and the right skill sets. Alberta is very fortunate to welcome many former petroleum industry workers from Venezuela, workers who are experienced, skilled, and hard working.

We must do everything we can to encourage immigrants like these to come to Alberta and to have the ability to experience their full potential in their fields, Mr. Speaker. We have to develop high-performance environments that maximize the development and application of new technologies in Alberta. Alberta employers are frustrated that more workers cannot be brought into the province faster. The program advocated by this motion is unlikely to disadvantage Albertans, who are already overwhelmed by the opportunity and the size of the growth in our economy.

Alberta's employers are able to benefit from immigration since it is one more way to address the skills shortages. Spending billions of dollars to educate and train Albertans for the workforce of the future and having hundreds of skilled and unskilled workers arriving each day from other parts of the country: this influx is not enough, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans' standard of living and future opportunities for economic success should not be jeopardized and will not be jeopardized by a lack of skilled workers. This motion is something that the Alberta government can do right now to help immigrants, Mr. Speaker. We already have exemplary programs encouraging the private sector to hire new immigrants like offering the publication Welcome to Alberta: Information for Immigrants and funding employment services for new immigrants. To set an example for the private sector and other levels of government, this program would go a long way. The importance of increased cultural awareness in the workforce, given the influx of immigrants from diverse backgrounds, would be another benefit.

The Alberta government employs knowledge workers and tradespeople, the exact kind of people we need to attract to Alberta to continue building a strong, diversified, and value-added economy. As is the case for all employers in a strong economy, it will be hard for the Alberta government to recruit and retain highly skilled workers. This, Mr. Speaker, would be a very good way to help fill the staffing needs of the government of Alberta while encouraging immigrants to come to this province and, more importantly, to remain here and continue to be contributing members of our society.

Recent immigrants have an unemployment rate that is only marginally higher than the provincial average. Inclusiveness requires removing barriers to immigrants' full participation as equal citizens in all aspects of life, Mr. Speaker. Everyone should share in Alberta's opportunity and prosperity.

The 2005 supporting immigrants and immigration in Alberta strategy aims to increase skill and knowledge levels, the mobility of labour, and the number of immigrants to this province. The goal is to increase Alberta's immigrant retention rate to 85 per cent. We not only want these people to come here, Mr. Speaker; we want them to feel welcome, to feel that they are contributing members of our society and that they will want to stay here and raise their children here. Alberta's approximate retention rate is currently between 70 and 75 per cent while in Ontario and British Columbia it is as high as 90 per cent.

Since industries are growing, there is need for an increasing labour force, but Alberta's labour force growth is actually slowing. Baby boomer retirees are knowledgeable, skilled workers with many years of experience, and they're not easily replaced. Over 400,000 new jobs will be created in Alberta between 2004 and 2014 at the current pace of growth in our economy, Mr. Speaker. Over 300,000 new workers are anticipated in the labour market, leaving a 100,000 worker shortfall over that time period.

Mr. Speaker, this motion proposes something whose time has come. I would suggest that its time is long overdue, and I would encourage all hon. members to support this motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I support the notion of this motion, but I have a number of questions and concerns. If this government believes in helping new immigrants get established, why does it undermine their chances of success by bringing in competition from temporary foreign workers, who don't have the rights of citizenship to protect them?

I would like to know what the member's definition of qualified is. Why doesn't this government facilitate the speedier recognition of foreign credentials, whether blue or white collar? We have all had immigrants come to our constituency offices with stories of the hardships they have faced. Recently I had a lady in her mid-30s who had a degree in science from a Romanian university as well as a law degree. While her degree in science was recognized, her law degree wasn't, and even with that so-called recognition the paperwork meant nothing when she applied for jobs. There has to be some kind of a test or qualification.

In high school, for example, if an immigrant has come from a country where a particular language is spoken and that language is offered at the high school level, that individual has the right to challenge the language exam and prove their capabilities. To my knowledge there does not seem to be any equivalent challenge for an immigrant to prove their qualifications and get some kind of paperwork from the government that indicates that, yes, we recognize that whether you came from Zimbabwe or Poland or Romania in the particular case with my constituent, you're qualified.

My school experience and the experiences that I've seen of a number of immigrants is that both Canada and Alberta sort of hold their arms out wide to immigrants. We encourage immigrants to come to our country, and then very quickly we abandon them. In some cases we require them to pay the new equivalent of a head tax if they're seeking economic immigration, yet when their children come to our schools, we do not provide sufficient English as a Second Language support to ensure that they're successful. Now, this is a betrayal of our invitation. I'm suggesting that if we're going to invite people, we don't abandon them. Currently 70 to 75 per cent of high school ESL students drop out before completing their matric. I don't want a similar circumstance happening to adult immigrants; in other words, we raise their hopes, but we don't provide them with the supports necessary to ensure their success.

With regard to ESL students, this past weekend in papers across Alberta the results of standardized testing were released. I can't think of anything that has a heavier negative impact on students, especially ESL students, than the publishing of their scores. This is the way this government currently treats ESL students. They offer very few exemptions to ESL students who have had very little language training and expect them to basically jump into the deep end of the pool and survive. This has been the school experience. There has been a lack of support from this government in terms of extending the number of years of support for ESL students, and until we extend that support for the students, we're not going to see an improvement in the achievement results.

The First Nations school boards in this province refuse to have their standardized test results published because they recognize the embarrassment. They have that option of keeping their scores to themselves. I wish that same option were extended to ESL students.

We have homeless refugees on the streets of Calgary. When my colleagues from Calgary participated with me this past spring in the homeless count, a number of the individuals we came across were individuals whose language was poor, most likely within their first language as opposed to their second language. There was no support for these individuals, so as a result of their language they were out on the streets. A number of them were young adults. Alberta does not have a very sterling record of having supported these individuals.

Now, before I can support this motion, which has wonderful intent, I would like to hear the practical steps that this member has to achieve his intended goals. For example, how many positions would he like to see made available? What types of public service jobs would he suggest might be filled by qualified immigrants? What tests has the member in mind that will determine that an immigrant is qualified? How long would the internship last? What wage ranges is the member suggesting? Would this program operate similarly to a STEP program whereby the government would fund a certain amount of it and would seek some private philanthropy or industrial support to bring the wage to a living wage?

What types of support systems would there be for the immigrant on the job? What supports is the government willing to provide to maintain stability for the immigrant while they are employed in their internship? Does the support include affordable housing, educational upgrading, child care support, health care? To what extent is the government willing to go to make the immigrant motion dream a reality? What is the plan for the immigrants once they have completed the internship? Is there a program for helping a successful intern to enter the job market other than a certificate of completion? What benefits – health, dental, et cetera – would be available for both the employed immigrant and their families?

Without the specific detail and a plan this motion is doomed to fail, which would be another in a series of blows faced by the immigrant, raising their hopes only to be dashed.

Currently over 40 per cent of Albertans are considered to be operating below a functional literacy level. Recently the federal government cut half a billion dollars in the literacy support programs. Is the province willing to make up for the lost funds, which are having an adverse effect on both Canadian citizens as well as assisting immigrants?

Unless the government has answers to these questions and a detailed plan in mind to ensure a significant positive impact on immigrants beyond this philosophical concepts discussion, then nothing tangible will come from this motion. Please provide me with the detail that would allow me to support the wonderful intent of this motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure indeed to rise on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Fort, who provides a motion and an opportunity for debate on something that is exceedingly important. In this past few months and few weeks I have had the pleasure of meeting with many of the nonprofit societies in Alberta that provide supports for our immigrant population, and I can assure you that their level of frustration is both complex and important for us to both define and work towards achieving our common goals.

For one thing, Mr. Speaker, this evening many people have spoken about workers that come and immigrate to Canada through the temporary foreign worker program, and I want to correct an erroneous impression, that this is a program that this government has in fact been a part of. We have counselled with the officials from the federal government about the concerns that we've had about the temporary foreign worker program, one of which was recently addressed by their extension of the program to at least two years to give foreign workers an opportunity to be both fully participatory and enjoy some of the benefits of exploring new opportunities in our country.

This particular program is a program that enables businesses, companies who have not been able to secure proper employees to fulfill the obligations that they see fit to offer. It gives them an opportunity to engage temporary foreign workers through a contractual arrangement, with the employer providing the housing, amenities such as a telephone, opportunity for adequate and affordable housing as well as other supports, including a round-trip ticket which permits the temporary foreign worker candidate to go home any time. These candidates are secured through contractors, many of whom do both assessments and coaching and training of the temporary foreign worker candidate off site in the country of origin and then provide them an opportunity to link with an employer in Canada.

It is a very complex program in that there's a variety of contractors that secure immigrants for such a program, and as such frequently we receive complaints that these groups have not given them an adequate picture of what really takes place when they arrive. Perhaps the immigrant worker that is least satisfied is the worker that enters Canada through the security of a contract or an arrangement, either economic or refugee status or family arrangement, in another province and then after a few short weeks travels to Alberta. Let me tell you what's available for that worker: absolutely nothing from supports that are provided originally originating from our federal government and provided to the province in which they gained entry.

We have a situation where people from Quebec, people from Ontario, people from Manitoba, people from British Columbia are coming in with the dollars supporting their immigrant status already secured in the province in which they landed, and they come to Alberta without these supports. Currently we have some 25,000 to 30,000 North Africans in the northeast part of this very city who are here hoping to find new lives and supports without any of that federal support that was originally gifted to the province in which they arrived. They are here because they believe that there will be job opportunities. They believe that the streets are paved with gold and that there will be something that secures for them a better opportunity economically than what they had in the province in which they landed.

Mr. Speaker, this is posing a very real challenge not only for our government and for this city but for the nonprofit agencies who provide supports for these workers. These individuals and these nonprofit groups have approached me to find out how we can best take care of these individuals and give them some hope and opportunity. One of the things that we're doing through ALIS, which is a website, is providing people in other countries an expectation of what they can expect when they arrive in Alberta both in certification as well as in the circumstances that they find themselves in in their new home.

Speaking today to the consul from the Philippines, she said that sometimes people come, and they think that if they come to Edmonton and it's 20 below, it might feel like it does in their freezer, when they open the freezer door, and it's 18 below. They don't realize that if they go to Fort McMurray, she tells me, if they find 40 below or 30 below, it is not just twice as cold, it is very cold, and it's quite a different cold than they experience in their home country. So we are challenged to make sure that people know, whether they're here on the temporary foreign worker program or through the provincial nominee program, exactly what the circumstances can be like when they get here and try to provide additional supports.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that the immigrant societies tell me is just something I've heard on all sides of the House, and that is that the integration of individuals that come as immigrants is something we should give primary emphasis to. I am very pleased that Calgary – particularly Calgary, which gathers more immigrants by far, about one and a half times the immigrants that land and stay in Edmonton – as well as Edmonton, Lethbridge, Lloydminster, and Vegreville all have integrated settlement programs for immigrants in their communities. These communities have gone the extra mile to make sure that there are welcoming opportunities not only to work with the nonprofit sector but work through family and community support groups, work through the other kinds of agencies to really make the immigrant population feel welcome.

They deal with issues that emerge, like the foreign credential program, which moved from the human resource ministry to immigration just recently with the movement of federal minister Diane Finley, who has taken that responsibility very seriously. We're aware that the foreign credential program needs work, needs improvement, and we are working on a national level with the people that are part of the various associations and professional organizations that can help this happen.

I'm pleased to report that the chartered accountants, that engineering associations, that geophysicists, and other groups that are professional groups that have looked at these issues are willing and able to provide us supports so that on our foreign credentialing program we can make it simpler for people to have an interpretation of statistics and certificates that they bring from their achievements in their own country for a better review. Recently, speaking with Colin Hansen, the Minister of Economic Development and trade in British Columbia, we have determined that on the heels of the TILMA agreement, the trade and labour mobility agreement that Alberta has with B.C., we can look together at the foreign credentialing and see if we can accelerate our capacity here.

So it's been a pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, but under Standing Orders 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to close debate on Motion 501.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, for your information and input. I want to thank the members for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Edmonton-Glenora, Calgary-Egmont, Edmonton-Ellerslie, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, and Calgary-Varsity for your input.

I just want to make it really simple. Just imagine if you are a new Canadian landed here already, and you go and apply for a job, and they ask: do you have Canadian experience? This is your first time applying for a job, and you say: well, I don't. The one who has Canadian experience has a preference or advantage. So I want to have a level playing field. It's nothing to do with any other motives or other requirements and so on. The Member for Calgary-Varsity asked all these details. This is a private member's motion. It's not a government program. It's suggesting the government, and the government will take it and develop all those details as they see fit. So that's the number one answer to your question.

Number two, I thank the members from Egmont and Beverly-Clareview on your expanded view on that. I agree with that, but this is the first step. If we don't take the first step, we cannot have the other steps. The expansion of that is encouraging the federal government, the private sector to create this internship program for first Canadian experience.

I want very, very much to see that something like this has also something to do with integration and a feeling for our province, for our country. Just imagine that a new Canadian settles here, and then the government helps them. The loyalty goes to where? To Canada. To Alberta. So it's not just work but a mental attitude. So that's another part that I want to emphasize. I know that if we create an example by the government of Alberta, we can ask the private sectors and federal government to walk with us.

Now, I just want to keep on this, that we have about 20,000-25,000 employees in the Alberta public service. Just imagine a small percentage of that is internship for this opportunity. It would be beautiful. So I just want to conclude there, and I ask all members of the Assembly to support this motion. It is a first step in a bigger march.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried]

And be it further resolved that the Assembly shall give further consideration on a timely basis to the necessary temporary Standing Orders that will be required to give effect to the balance of the House leaders’ agreement.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise tonight to move Government Motion 12 as it exists on the Order Paper. Government Motion 12 has the intention and the impact of implementing a portion of the House leaders’ agreement which was tabled in the House on Thursday, and I just want to speak briefly to the purpose and intent.

The House leaders’ agreement came together because, I believe, all members of the House would like to see the House, and private members particularly, more engaged in discussion, an opportunity to really make the Legislature the pinnacle of the governance and legislative process in this province. To that effect, we wanted to look at issues of the hours and the time that the House sits so that it was a place which had good work/life balance where members could actually engage enthusiastically in debate and in governance processes but could also go home and see their families from time to time. We could attract candidates, attract people to aspire to be members of this place but understand that they have to have a life, and they have to have health.

As Minister of Health and Wellness I particularly would like to emphasize that: that our practices in the past of sitting long hours, for which we got no credit either from members of the House or from members of the public for the hours that we sat in this place, in fact, having developed a reputation of having a short sitting time when in fact we were putting in as many minutes or hours as most legislators across the country, was not good for our health and, quite frankly, was not good public policy.

So the House leaders’ agreement is an attempt to address the hours of sitting by having us sit from 1 to 6 p.m. each day, Monday through Thursday, with the opportunity for an earlier closing on Thursday if business permits it so that members can get back to their constituencies on a timely basis. Not every member will be able to do that, obviously. Members from the far south of the province and the far north of the province may not, but most members could be able to get back to their constituencies on a timely basis so they can participate in constituency events on the Thursday evening. They can have a constituency day Friday. They can participate on the weekend if necessary, but they can also have the opportunity to see their families. So the first change is to suggest that we should sit from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m.

There is some value in having a certainty to the timing of question period, so the House leaders' agreement suggests that question period, notwithstanding that we start at 1 o'clock, should start precisely at 1:30 every day if possible. That doesn't preclude it starting earlier if the rest of routine has been done but to start at 1:30 each day so that we know that question period runs from 1:30 to 2:20 each day.

The concept of being able to plan lives and plan events is also important. So the concept under the House leaders' agreement would be that in a normal sitting year, realizing that we've already started this year, the House would start in the first week in February, and it would normally be scheduled to end on the first Thursday of June. I say normally scheduled to end because it may end earlier if there's no business. It may go later on motion to be debated. But that would be the normal sitting schedule that members could then plan their lives around with a provision that every fourth week be a constituency week. Some people have gotten into the vernacular of talking about a week off, but it's not a week off, Mr. Speaker. It's a week to be back in the constituency every fourth week, to be back in the constituency and to touch base with your constituents and, again, for those who travel for distances to be here to be connected with their families, which is very, very important.

So the motion that's before the House tonight implements those reforms, the reforms with respect to the House sitting time, the reform with respect to having a constituency week, setting in place a fall sitting to commence on the first Monday in November and normally to conclude on the first Thursday in December. Now, the way the motion is written, it says to sit "from the first Monday . . . to the first Thursday," but the House leaders' agreement said normally scheduled or something to that effect, so we may have to fine-tune the language later on. But it's important to get these pieces of the House leaders' agreement implemented early with the temporary Standing Orders so that we can use these time frames for the rest of the session.

The motion that's before the House tonight allows for private members' business to happen on Monday afternoon, as it does now, but the private members' motions, such as we just concluded the first one of, would commence at 4:55 on Monday afternoon and go until completion, and the House would adjourn after it was completed. The provision of the motion that's before the House tonight allows that in the event that private members' business is not afforded a full three hours on a Monday afternoon, if there was some other matter—a question of privilege, a debate on whether we should have emergency debate, or some other provision—which took us through and ate up some of the private members' time, time would be afforded on Thursday afternoon to allow that time to be made up.

I won't go through in detail the balance of the provisions here. I think there are two that bear mentioning. One is the amendment to Standing Order 53, which provides that public accounts and all reports of the Auditor General stand permanently referred to the Public Accounts Committee as they become available, and the amendment to Standing Order 56, which allows for substitutions on committees, so that a member of the House who is named to a special or select standing committee of the House who wishes to allow another member to sit in their place, for reasons of conflict of calendar or for reasons of allowing another member to bring an issue to the table, could substitute that member into their place.

The pieces on the House leaders' agreement which are not part of this motion tonight have to deal with the establishment of all-party committees of the House and how we deal with Committee of Supply. I'm looking forward to both of those items coming forward at an appropriate time soon because I think those as well are significant changes which will make the operation of the House more open to the public, will allow us to bring the public into the process in a more eloquent way, and I think will really allow private members of the House to have a more robust opportunity to hold the government accountable for the money which Albertans give us and to examine legislation and policy and bring forward new policy ideas. But I'll save the rest of my comments with respect to that for when that is actually before the House.

The motion before the House tonight implements the front end of the House leaders' agreement, which specifically references the time of sitting, the date of sitting, the provision for a constituency week every fourth week, the time for the fall sitting, the specific time for question period, and the amendments relative to public accounts and substitutions on committees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Opposition House Leader in just a second, but first of all I'd just point out to all members that there is an errata with respect to this. The motion that's printed in the Order Paper is incorrect. That's why today you had received an erratum, the bigger document. That's the one we should be talking to and from, not the Order Paper.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This was a very interesting process to participate in as the Opposition House Leader. Interestingly, the Government House Leader and I had started talking about some of these changes in 2004, previous to the last election, because I think, as many parliamentarians were sensing, the rules under which we'd been operating were increasingly onerous. I had been responsible for recruiting candidates to run for the Liberal Party for the 2004 election and found it almost impossible to get women to agree to even consider running.

I know I wasn't alone. There's been quite a bit of discussion amongst many different parties provincially and federally about the difficulty of this, and what on earth, you know, have we done that people, and particularly women, would not even consider running for political office? A lot of times, you know, the point was often raised about the tone of the House and the adversarial nature of it—speaking from experience, that's true—but something we could do something about was what was seen as really unfriendly to families and in many cases unfriendly to women: the sitting hours and that kind of locked-in feeling that we got.

As many of you know, I came from the theatre, and when you got a film job, you basically sent a note to your family and friends and said: "I'm on a film shoot. You won't hear from me for whatever period of time, eight weeks, 12 weeks. Don't call. Don't expect a message. I'm gone." You got up and went to work on the site every day, and you got home at some stupid hour, and you went to bed and got up six hours later and did it all over again. To me, that's what sitting in this House felt like sometimes. You really wondered very late at night whether you were in fact being very productive, trying to negotiate legislation in the small hours of the night. So that was something that I had been interested in prior to the 2004 election, and as I said, the Government House Leader and I had talked about some of the things that could be done. I think we were both alive to it and had started to look for opportunities to improve what we were seeing.

So the night sittings are gone. The day sittings are extended by an hour. We'll see how that works. It's a longer go at a stretch. Members are certainly free to move about and to enter and leave the Chamber. I'm hoping that this is going to work, and I did agree to it in the House leaders' agreement. We're hoping that that longer day sitting will help us.

Part of what I was looking for was to spread out the hours over more time but less intense every day and in particular to try to not have to do that “Well, good-bye; I won’t see you for eight weeks or 12 weeks” because I felt that this was impacting our ability to be good constituency representatives when it was just such a mad dash to get back into your constituency. Let’s face it, this is my constituency. I didn’t have very far to go. I’m aware that most of my colleagues in this House had a very long way to go to get back to their constituency, to serve well on the Friday constituency day and through the weekend.

To me the idea that I originally started at, that we could spend two weeks in the House and one week in the constituency, seemed to make sense to me. I’m quite encouraged that this is going to help us be better balanced between being legislators and policy-makers here in this House and doing our constituency representation work, serving our constituents back in the constituency offices. I wanted the sitting to be more humane – and that was my key word – and to be more attractive to women, more family friendly.

I also wanted to see substantive issue-based all-party committees. We’ve come a fair long way towards that. I think we can still improve on it, but we’ve come a fair long way. That’s not under discussion today.

I also wanted to improve and enhance the time spent on private members’ business. We have captured that in that we will have more Mondays to spend on private members’ day. I actually was at one point pushing for Monday night sittings for private members’ business as well, but given people’s attitude to the night sittings, I think I’m not going to be successful on that one. So more private members’ business.

Of course, I have raised motions three times in the last 10 years to try and improve the Public Accounts Committee, as has my colleague the current chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. So we’re very pleased to see the improvements that have been made to the Public Accounts Committee.

I think there was a very interesting innovation that flowed from negotiations on the Public Accounts Committee where we had been allowing – well, it’s always allowed – that other MLAs could come into committee meetings and could in fact have a voice but no vote. I think the innovation of allowing people to designate an alternate to take their place on the committee with a voice and a vote is a good innovation, and I’m looking forward to that. For example, my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, who is currently on the housing task force, should he have been sitting on an all-party committee, could designate an alternate for the period of time that he was away working on the task force and have someone who is equally interested in whatever that committee’s work is come in and do it and participate fully. I think that’s an enhancement that we will all be very happy with.

I’m pleased to see that we have some solid idea of when we’re going to start. We spent a lot of time in negotiation about how we were going to end. I’m also pleased to see the guaranteed fall sitting. There is some flexibility around that, so if there’s a larger legislative agenda, then we have more time: we could add on in the fall and have a longer fall sitting. But it’s very nice to have certainty around when we would be coming into session and more or less when we would be coming out of session. I think that is very helpful.

What we have in front of us is the motion. We did six parts, I think. Essentially, what you have in front of you if you are reading the House leaders’ agreement would be captured in parts 1 to 4 approximately, which is around the actual sitting hours in the day, the constituency week, and the certainty of the start time for question period. That does allow us, by the way, to do all the business of the Routine. Nothing has been excluded there, and there are no additional time limits put on anything and no ability to sort of squish something off the Routine paper. We do start question period at a specified time, but following question period we continue with the Routine, picking up where we left off and completing it fully, which I am pleased to see.

We’ve maintained the integrity of the private members’ day with written questions and motions for returns, followed by a debate on private members’ public bills and, of course, the motions at a designated time period at the end of the day. We were trying to retain the one motion per week and to make sure that it would be able to be voted through, so I think we’ve been successful in doing that as well.

As I said, I’m happy with the Public Accounts work that’s been done here and with the innovations that we have around being able to put in place alternates with a voice and a vote.

Another change that is in here that I’ll just highlight is written questions and motions for returns, which have been a point of contention in this House in the past, I’ll admit. There was an agreement that those written questions and motions for returns that have been agreed to fully by the government, not with amendments but fully agreed to, would no longer come up for debate in the House but would be read into the record by the Clerk: the full sponsor’s name, the text, and the number. So there is a recording in Hansard of what was agreed to, but it doesn’t come onto the floor anymore.

I think oftentimes we found that that was a bit of a routine of sort of nodding on to take the vote and standing up and down moving things when we all knew that we were going to agree on it. So that may well offer us some more time to spend on private members’ bills and private members’ business. That will be indicated on the Wednesday previous to the Monday and will be laid out by the Government House Leader, who will tell us which ones are going to be accepted, which ones will be put forward with an amendment, and which ones will not be accepted by the government, so we have some idea in advance about that, which I think is helpful.

It’s certainly been a long process. I remember my first request for a House leaders’ meeting was immediately following the leadership race vote in December, I think, by a couple of days. We did come together for the first time on the 4th of January, by my notes, and we met pretty much every week. By the last while we met every day.

I think we’ve done good work here. I am mindful that the last significant and meaningful positive changes we saw in the Standing Orders were negotiated some time ago by the member who is now the Speaker of the House. I am hoping that the work the Government House Leader and myself and the House leader for the third party have done will stand for a similar amount of time as something that will be seen as being helpful to the House and in its own way being as innovative as what was done by the Speaker previously.

I look forward to subsequent government motions on the final two parts of the work that we’ve done in the House leaders’ agreement. Thank you for the opportunity to outline that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I obviously support the motion because my name is on it. I won’t go on long. We know what’s in it. It’s fairly straightforward.

I think that it’s a step in the right direction in terms of making the Legislature as relevant as we can and, as the others have said, as humane as possible. When we go back in the past to where we sat all night at some sessions, I'm not sure that the level of debate was that good later on at night. I think as a general rule we'll do better work, you know, if we're not sitting here until all hours of the night.

I think what's just as important, though, for me is the idea of the three weeks on and one week back, and I especially think it would be important for people that don't live in the city to get back to their constituency for a week. Having the session go longer: I think, as was mentioned by the Government House Leader, there was a perception, I know, and, Mr. Speaker, you've said this yourself, about the minutes that we spend in here. You know, the comparison was how many days we sat, but it didn't look at the number of hours. I remember you bringing this forward to the Legislature. Now we'll be going longer in days. Eventually, it will be fixed days, and I think we'll even be above the norm. There will not be a criticism, I don't think, of anybody. I think it's an important step forward.

It was sort of interesting having to be on the housing task force. I did a lot of my work by BlackBerry. I never thought that would ever happen to me, where I had to rely on a BlackBerry, but there was a lot of back and forth during that time because we were also very busy in that committee.

The last thing I'd like to say – because I'm not going to go through it all; you people can read – is that there's often a perception because people follow question period that all politicians do is come and argue and fight. Unfortunately, that is the perception out there. But I think, in fact, that when parties get together – and it happened with the hon. member from Calgary when I was on the ethics committee – we can do good work in committees even if we have different values. I think the fact that the three House leaders could meet over a period of time and come together with this document shows the Legislature working at its best, frankly, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's a good step forward.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to have a few moments of democracy and discuss this.

An Hon. Member: It's always a democracy.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, and it's always decorum, I believe, hon. Opposition House Leader, that is the real problem, why the gentler side of our society doesn't want to be in here, not the hours that we work. I find that they work just as long if not longer.

There are several areas that I'd like to address. I guess I'd start off with a few things that I agree with, and that is that the fourth week, constituency week, is an excellent proposal. I would go with the hon. Opposition House Leader that with perhaps every two weeks on and one week off we would be more in tune with our constituents and be able to serve and to recognize their needs in this House. The 1:30 QP time: I believe a set time will be of benefit to the members of the House in knowing when people want to be here to listen and participate.

Mr. Speaker, I have a lot of concerns that I guess I'd like to address. The first one is on the original document they sent out that says, "All Party* Agreement". There's an asterisk. Then down at the bottom it says, "Party defined per Legislative Assembly Act: to be recognized as a party in the House if the group of MLA's seeking that status is at least 4 Members." [interjection] Yes, your respect for democracy I suppose you're cheering for.

In the province here we state that we recognize MLAs, and the throne speech talked about that respect for those duly elected. Yet there seems to be very little respect unless this Assembly decides how to recognize MLAs and their party status. I must say that it has been very arbitrary and very disappointing when you look back in history to where they are now. My question would be for the one Opposition House Leader that squeaked by and got the four members: how would he feel at this point if he was excluded? Last time, in 2001, with two members they seemed to be recognized and have privileges, but the arbitration line that they've drawn in the sand is disappointing. I think that it would serve all Albertans and democracy better if they recognized elected MLAs as Elections Alberta has set it out instead of the rules in here.

To address the first concern, no more evening sittings. I can appreciate the thought process and those things that have gone into that. I think that it would have benefited to have had other elected MLAs in the discussion because those that made this agreement all live here in Edmonton, and they don't understand or recognize what it means to sneak home at night, if you want to call it that, to a function in their riding. That's great for those here, but I remember that last year in the Standing Orders we made a correction, if you want to call it that, for those members that live too far away to be able to get home. We reduced the mileage from over 100 kilometres down to 60 because they weren't able to get home. From my way of figuring, there are 60 MLAs that will not be able to get home in the evenings to enhance their quality of life and to be with their families or, for sure, to be in their constituencies. So I don't think that even on a majority rule, if you want to go with that poor system, this serves the interests of Albertans or the MLAs that have been elected here.

They talk about the importance of having the evenings off and the late-night discussion that goes on. I haven't been in this House as long as most of the members in here, so perhaps I'm not as tired of the late nights, but I find that the quality late in the evening sometimes becomes more succinct and to the point instead of going on to try and fill time. Like I say, I haven't recognized the change. It seems that more often than not we recognize the time spent talking and not the words that are said, so I feel that it isn't in the best interest to say that we'll have the nights off.

I compare this to a convention. If we were to have one and assemble people from the province at a convention here and we want to serve the people, by sitting an extra 20 or 40 days and not combining that to days and evenings, what's the cost to the Alberta taxpayers to have to sit and to pay for all of that extra time when we could be more productive and in here, if you want to say, crash coursing it? It seems like a positive move to me. I think it's an education when people say to me that we don't sit very long. I sometimes think that we sit too long and that we don't have enough time in our constituency, so I do look forward to the constituency weeks, when we can get back to talk to and relate to them.

The number of times the document comes up with "inclusive" just doesn't ring true to me. Why would they use such a term when they won't look at members that have less than four sitting MLAs and say that this is a unanimous agreement when it is anything but that?

I'm very concerned with the other path that we're going to be coming up with, that isn't in discussion tonight, but the House leader referred to it a little bit. The hours and the exclusivity that they've got in the agreement are very disturbing. Once again, I don't think it's in the best interest of those that have been duly elected to represent all Albertans, and this is very much wanting to go to just a status quo system rather than allowing an open and equal opportunity for people to get in and to speak and have their time in the House.

It's interesting with my predecessor from Cardston-Taber-Warner.

His grandchildren live close to me, and I've had the opportunity of speaking with them many times. It was sad to see when talking to them. They talk about their grandfather: "Oh, is that the one that's never here? He isn't able to come to functions." By sitting longer here in the House and extending it one or two months, that will continue to make matters worse for families, to be able to be home for family functions or activities going on. I think that by trying to shorten the session and the time each day that we're here in Edmonton will be an economic benefit and also a family benefit for being able to get back to our constituencies.

I'll just refer for a minute to the all-party committees and Public Accounts. They say that they want to be able to have some alternative appointments. Again, I feel that the committees should look at and recognize all of those members that have been elected. I have asked in the past to be on the Public Accounts Committee. The House leader has said no. It feels once again that this is not an inclusive House but an exclusive one, and they will determine who can and who cannot be part of the committees and participate and have a vote in those committees. I don't see that the alternative appointment is going to be duly decided by those governing parties. There will not be a space made open to an MLA that has been elected here.

I think the Public Accounts Committee, as I said before, is perhaps the most important. Perhaps we just need to do it on a percentage of the vote that is cast throughout the province. If a person's party has received 9 per cent of votes, then maybe they should be able to have 1 in 10 on the committee and certainly overall, when you look at all the committees, the five committees, 1 in 83. I think that there should be room, and that room should be on Public Accounts.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, I'm very disappointed in many of those aspects that they've brought forward and the exclusivity of this agreement. It will continue to get worse as we go forward into the other areas of discussion later on this week. I would very much disagree with this House agreement and hope that those members who live outside the Edmonton corridor would recognize that this will not enhance the debate, it will not enhance constituency representation, it will not enhance family life, and it will not enhance the women of Alberta wanting to participate in this Assembly. So I am not in favour of this House agreement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the motion remains before us. Are there additional members that would like to participate?

That being the case, then I'll call on the hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

[Government Motion 12 carried]

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Ducharme moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 8]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, did you rise?

Mr. Hinman: Yes.

The Speaker: Well, we'll recognize you first, sir, and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Please remember, ladies and gentlemen, that when we leave here tonight, we're back here tomorrow at 1 o'clock.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll put away a few papers and try and get out the next ones.

It's a privilege to be able to rise and address the throne speech. To me that's always the first and exciting day, much like spring. As we sit here in this Assembly, we look forward to: what is our potential, and what are we going to do to make Alberta better? We have an opportunity. Our potential is really unlimited, yet the vision seems very limited. Perhaps we're looking through foggy eyes.

I'd like to speak a little bit on what the Alberta Alliance sees as the vision for Alberta and what we could accomplish. The first one I'd like to talk about is the good governance that we can and should have here in the province. The importance, I feel, of elected people is to truly be accountable to those that you're representing. I looked up Webster's dictionary to read two different definitions. One is: what is a democracy, and what is a commonwealth? It says that a democracy is the doctrine that the numerical majority of an organization or organized group can make decisions binding on the whole group. A commonwealth is a political system in which the supreme power lies in a body of citizens who can elect people to represent them. We are part of a commonwealth.

The first thing that I see as a vision to make Alberta a better and more productive province is to have those elected accountable to the people. That would be to bring forth an introduction of recall for elected officials throughout the province to thereby be held accountable when they're doing things that the people are not pleased with. An example is that I very much get the feeling that this province is going to give away 50 per cent of our natural resources, and there's nothing that the people of Alberta really can do about it until the next election, and then it will be too late. The barn door will be open, the horse will be out, and it'll be flattened on the road and of little value, maybe horse glue.

The next thing would be to have set election dates. That would let the people realize when it's coming up, and the political games would stop. It's very easy for the government to sit there and to always say, "Maybe we're going to start," not allowing the people of Alberta to be engaged and Albertans to get very offish on trying to decide when the next election is going to be.

What I really feel would be important and critical in the House here – and I know that we'll have a disagreement on this – is the importance of an open and honest debate. The current government goes into caucus; it goes into cabinet. We're told that that is where the great debate occurs, yet there is no Hansard. There is no information on what that debate is, and every member can go back to his constituency and say "Oh, I brought that up in caucus" or "Oh, we went over that" or "Cabinet spoke on that," but there is no Hansard. There is no record. If anywhere, we have that debate behind closed doors. So it would be much better if we had the debate here in the Legislature and had Albertans able to look and realize what went on where.

I'd like to move on to the economy a little bit. What potential we have here in the province. It is so exciting that we've had a huge surplus the last three years, and we look at it and wonder what we are doing with it. It seems like it's slipping through our fingers. It's sad to see that most individuals, when they have a sudden windfall that they weren't expecting, don't know how to handle it. Within a year or two they're back to the same situation. I very much feel that that's the way this current government is. This windfall has come in. They don't know how to handle it. It's a matter of: "Where can we spend it fast enough and quick enough? If we don't, someone else might get it. We can do a lot and buy popularity by doing that."

It's been mentioned, and there are different levels, but we need to look at our budget surplus. We need to look at the royalties coming in, and we need to be putting that into the heritage trust fund. We should be putting, I feel, at least 50 per cent into the heritage trust fund during these boom times and setting up and having a goal of where we want it to be. I would say that we need to build that to at least $60 billion. The reason I'd do that is because I have a farm background, and I very much understand the importance of having two years of seed in my bin. I understand as a cattle producer the importance of having enough hay for two years because a drought can come and you're caught.

Our current fiscal spending is out of control. If we even had a bit of a down year, we'd be immediately stepping into a position where we're running a deficit, and our programs that we have running would be beyond support by the taxpayers of this province. So we need to start putting that money into the heritage trust fund, and we should be refunding it to the taxpayers via provincial income tax or the property tax, to those people that are paying it. But the vision and the opportunity are immense: where we can go and what we should do.

I'd like to spend a few minutes on the Alberta advantage. To me, an advantage is when you have the energy, when you have the knowledge, when you have the opportunity to take that, to grasp it, and to run with it. We have an immense amount of carbon energy here in the province, but we must ask and address: how are we getting it out, and is that good for our environment? As new technology is being discovered and worked on, we realize that we're not using our resources wisely. I must say that I very much agree with those who say that we need to put a moratorium on the old technology that wants to be implemented on any new infrastructure. We need to limit that and to put the moratorium on now and say that we're only going to go forward with new environmentally friendly projects. We have an opportunity. Will we seize it and do it now? It's exciting.

I went out to Ottawa to the nuclear conference. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat was there as well. It's exciting to see the opportunity, what we could do here in the province with nuclear power, and I think that that should be a debate here in the House and with Albertans to bring them up to speed on how nuclear energy has transformed in the last 40 years. We seem to be caught up in history, to say that the Bennett buggy doesn't work very good or the CANDU 1 reactor is a high risk. We can and we should be looking at that and having a debate here in the province because that is the only energy that we can produce that does eliminate CO₂ production.

It's very synergistic with the oil sands. First, it would eliminate the need of burning up an immense amount of natural gas and the amount of water that we're currently using. What's also interesting is the fact that with the electricity that you can produce through electrolysis, the hydrogen that we need to upgrade the bitumen and not have to take it from natural gas. We can actually take it through the electricity and the water to upgrade that. But we have a great opportunity here in the province to address those things.

I'd also like to address a little bit on what is the future of Alberta. We seem to be getting more and more tied up with our federal counterparts with their programs and the things that they're offering us. The most disappointing thing is that these programs continue to be less than efficient for what we need here in the province. Because I wasn't able to get in on the debate on immigration, I'll speak a little bit on that. We need to look at the federal programs and realize that they're not serving the interest of Alberta and what we can and should start to do in an orderly fashion to get ourselves out of those programs.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The first and most important one would be the failing Canada pension plan, the equalization payments that we currently are sending out to Ottawa. It's funny that Quebec, with their personal pension plan, has a vast amount of money that they can and will reward their workers in Quebec. However, when we look at Alberta and the number that the past Finance minister says, we have a $60 billion unfunded liability to the Canada pension plan, and that is over and above the unfunded liability to the teachers' pension plan that we always hear about. We need to look at and address and realize that we need an Alberta pension plan. If we took those expenses and what it would cost to put in there, it would truly benefit Alberta and reduce our equalization payments.

The immigration program does not work for Alberta. We just debated that in this House. I agree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort that we need to do something about it. But what I feel we need to do is to have an Alberta immigration program, and the Alberta Alliance would very much promote getting one. What we don't need is more government interference and more problems. What we need is an immigration program that would truly bring in immigrants that can and will stay and create a family life and have that quality and the Alberta advantage.

I speak to many employers that have got foreign workers in here. Their time is up after a year, and we're shipping them out. What we need to do is have a sponsorship program for Alberta industry that can sponsor and bring in a foreign worker and then keep them here and do away with a federal one that just isn't working. We bring in these foreign workers, and then we ship them back, and we start over with someone else. It's just as hard on their life. It's hard on their family back there. We dash their hopes by bringing them here and then shipping them out, almost like a common criminal: you've done your time here in the province, and now you're going home. We have an opportunity to do that. We need to grasp it and to set up our own.

We have a major problem with the employment insurance program. It's not set up equitably across the country. It's another one that we need to address.

The education that we have here in the province. We need to be more innovative in allowing our own students here in the province to get into our university programs. I'm amazed at how many people that I continue to talk to that say: "I wasn't able to make it into a local university here in the province. I've had to go to Saskatoon. I've gone down to the States." Whether it's for pharmacy, veterinarian, engineering, we need to readdress that and realize the importance of being able to put Alberta students first and not look at foreign students because we capture a bigger dollar and try to make universities balance that off.

Alberta Alliance would see to it that the spaces are available for Alberta students, but more important, if a student was to leave, we would still recognize them and allow them access to student loans and those things when they go out. That's literally an even better opportunity for us because we're not paying the full price, just as they come here and don't always pay the full price.

We have other problems in the Justice area. Albertans aren't able to get into and to have what I guess I would call small claims court. It's not cost effective. It's not timely. People are discouraged; they don't do it.

We need to change our funding program for small communities and not just have a cap at 5,000. It needs to be graduated and to pay for the first 5,000, the police force, and then to start reducing it after that. Once again, it's not on an equal basis and very disappointing for many communities and not cost effective.

The health care system: we have such an opportunity here with foreign doctors who want to come and not only just study but to actually practise. It's very disappointing to hear that some of the regional hospitals aren't able to bring in foreign workers because they can't get them accredited here in the province. We need to address that. We need to recognize those foreign doctors. I've lost one from my good town of Milk River that returned to South Africa because he wasn't allowed to use his full scope of practice. We've got to allow regional health boards to decide what they feel are essential services for their areas and not to wait for the province. We need to allow that competition between regional areas and to let them be innovative in the doctors they bring in to practise in their area.

Mr. Speaker, to finish off, perhaps what I'd like to do is to say that it's important that we recognize that we need to stand up for Albertans. We need to strengthen our province, and the way we strengthen our province, our communities is by strengthening our families.

We are as Canadians overtaxed. We send a huge amount of money out of the province. It's damaging to our province, to our infrastructure, to our communities, and we need to stand up and set the example here in the province on how we could do that. If our province was to start by returning 10 per cent of the taxes collected by municipal governments and income tax and corporate tax and return that to those municipal governments, they would be revitalized. Our communities would start to grow, and they'd have the money to make the decisions locally on what they want to do instead of having to look for provincial and federal programs.

We need to stand up for our families. In the coming federal budget they say that they're not going to go to income splitting. They can't afford it because they'd lose $5 billion or $6 billion, Mr. Speaker. What we can't afford is to continue to take that money from families and redistribute in government programs destroying our families.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one wanting to take advantage of that, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to reply to the Speech from the Throne. I have talked to many Albertans in the past number of days since this Speech from the Throne was presented in the Legislature. Almost to a person the perception that has been related to me is that Albertans are pleased with this new road map, are happy with the structure and the direction that the new Premier and his government are taking.

I suspect the recent approval ratings, which had the Premier sitting at close to 50 per cent and the opposition leader languishing at an historical low of 14 per cent, will only get better for the Premier. I expect that one of the reasons for these numbers is the commitment to govern with integrity and transparency. The Lobbyists Act and access to the blue book are very important measures in moving ahead on that commitment. The promise to review the way agencies, boards, and commissions are governed to ensure greater accountability by them is a crucial measure in gaining the trust of Albertans. People want these organizations such as health boards, the Workers' Compensation Board, the Labour Relations Board to be fair and to live up to their mandate in a way that serves the best interests of all Albertans.

The second priority of managing growth pressures is crucial to maintaining the quality of life of both new and long-time Albertans. We all expect the greatest effort to maintain clean air and clean water. The challenge of climate change must be looked at in a way that will realistically attack the question, not through the ideological, rose-coloured perspectives which so often cloud the view on this subject. Why not support the search for economical ways to remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere? Just fix it. There must be a way. Why not look at hydro from the Slave River for the purpose of not using natural gas for oil sands production?

One of the greatest pressures in managing growth and spending costs is the lack of skilled, experienced people. This has brought about the need for much longer hours of work to complete jobs, more rework and mistakes, and less productivity. Training, training, training: learning and new experience must be the answer. Outrageously long hours of work, often out of town, are not the answer and often hurt families as well as community-oriented volunteer time. Why don't we just bring back Sunday, having Sunday off not just as a religious holiday but a family day? Just think about the number of hours that would be saved and therefore the number of people not needed to fill the jobs in those times.

Soon much work and workers will shift to the Edmonton region. The Heartland upgraders and other development will soon strain our transportation infrastructure in the northeast capital region. Anthony Henday and other roads must be upgraded quickly through whatever funding structure is necessary to get them operational in decent time. Co-ordination in many areas is crucial, and a comprehensive and fully supported system to do so must be devised quickly. We have enough congestion on northeast roads already, for example.

Let us be careful with our oil sands resource. Development may be at too high a level to be sustained with any efficiency, safety, or proper resource management, but we must develop the bitumen here in Alberta.

The priority of improving quality of life through learning is also a key and important aspect of this Speech from the Throne. We must be innovative. We must involve the trades in trades training. We must look at how we indenture apprentices. We must ensure that no Albertan is left behind because education is too costly.

The quality of life of children and seniors must be enhanced. I just look at the joy that the programs of the Northgate Lions seniors' centre in Edmonton-Manning have brought to many hundreds if not thousands of families, and the value of such facilities and programs cannot be underestimated.

Safety and security are vital. Providing safe and secure communities, safe and caring communities, will only enhance the lives of all Albertans. It was just a few days ago that I stood together on the steps of our Alberta Legislature with Gary Hunt, his family, and many other families that have suffered tragic and unnecessary losses due to predatory violence. The good need not die young. I very much support the crime reduction and safe communities task force that was mentioned in this throne speech and wish it Godspeed in its work as well as the work undertaken by the 13 partnering ministries.

Research and diversification are also key. There are many areas such as the important National Institute for Nanotechnology in Edmonton mentioned in the throne speech. There are others. Earlier today I spoke at the Canadian Institute for Health Information meeting presently being held here in Edmonton. It was specifically the Institute for Human Development, Child and Youth Health, and representatives are here from across the country. Research in this area and respect for our universities and research centres will only grow, but these do need ongoing and continued support. Not only the children of Alberta and Canada but also those of countries around the world, indeed all the world, will benefit. The children are our future.

Proper stewardship of our finances and our potential surpluses are also key, and I look forward to the government's initiatives in this area. We must never, however, forget the necessity to run government so that it is efficient and run without waste and unnecessary cost. Albertans expect no less. They like to make things happen to get things done. They don't like excessive rules and useless red tape.

I support the government in its goal of increased efficiency, but I will be introducing a private member's bill on red tape reduction later in the session. Red tape is not only a concern for small and large businesses; it is also a burden on community leagues, charities, other volunteer organizations, and, indeed, individuals in many areas of life in our Alberta. In our computerized age we must find ways to get the job done without excessive delay and reams of rules and paper.

In closing, I must say that the reaction to this throne speech that I have received from Albertans is very good. There is a very real sense that a new government is taking hold of the reins. We do await the substance, the meat on the bones, so to speak, but the reaction has been favourable. Congratulations, and I say that independently and with the unanimous support of my caucus.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions, comments.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on this matter tonight.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that given the hour we now adjourn.

[Motion carried; at 10:02 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon to introduce some special guests that we have from the Energy department. They're seated in the members' gallery. As I read their names, I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly: Hilda Royer, Tami Peacock, Mary Bahry, Linda Humeniuk, Mary Burrows, and Donna McBee.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three Albertans from my constituency of Stony Plain. With us today are Des King, Sheila King, and Lorne King. I believe they are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a school group from my constituency. They actually made it through the heavy snowfall from Airdrie to Didsbury, and the rest of the road was good, thank God. There are 22 people in their group. There are 20 students from the Airdrie Koinonia Christian school, one of my truly favourite schools. They always have a wonderful, positive attitude, with great teachers, a school just filled with enthusiasm. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Dean Hughes, and a parent, Mr. John Fleck. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of our House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have some guests in the gallery. One of them is Graham Wetter, who's with Credit Union Central Alberta in Calgary. The other gentleman is Mr. Darcy Peelar. Darcy's wife, Judy, is our very able constituency manager in Vermilion. I'd ask these two gentlemen to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce two groups through you to the members of the Assembly. The Neil Ross community school and Mr. Jamie Robertson and Mr. Bruce Brown, both teachers, and Mrs. Julie Richelhoff. They are sitting in the gallery. Would you please welcome them.

Mr. Speaker, thank you again. Through you and to you to members of the Assembly I have a group of students and parents from the school district of Parkland, and I'll go through the list. It's about 11 people: Jo-Anne Robotka, parent, Curtis Robotka, grade 9, and Helena Robotka, grade 7, from Stony Plain Central; Lorraine Dressler and David Graham, also parents of a grade 11 student from Spruce Grove composite; Margo Kienlen, parent; Carolyn Howatt, parent, Courtney Howatt, grade 8, Ailsa Howatt, grade 3, Jared Howatt, grade 2, from Graminia, I guess it is. Please welcome them.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 40 brilliant grades 5 and 6 students from Holy Family Catholic school in my riding accompanied by their teachers Mr. Oberst, Mrs. Romeril, Miss Wecker, and a parent, Mrs. Kruszewski. They are all seated in the private gallery, and I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My guests have been previously introduced.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Reverend Adelina Pecchia. Reverend Pecchia is an ordained minister who has been working for the United Church for the past six years. She has worked as far away as Tanzania, in Vancouver's downtown east side, and has spent a number of years presiding over the United Church congregation in St. Paul, Alberta. Her extensive antipoverty and social justice work has helped many people in our community. Reverend Pecchia is seated in the public gallery. I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly John Ashton. John is a new Albertan, having been born and raised in Ontario and B.C. In his youth he was very active with the Presbyterian Young People's Society in southwestern Ontario. He graduated with a bachelor of arts from the University of Windsor in 2003 and went on to serve as an administrative assistant for NDP Member of Parliament Brian Masse. We are very delighted that John has agreed to join the NDP caucus as part of our caucus administrative staff. I would now ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Nameer Rahman. While there he also served as the vice-president for university affairs for the students' association. Following graduation, he was the national canvass director for ACORN, a tenant advocacy group based in Toronto. Nameer has joined us as sessional researcher for the spring session and has already impressed us with his work ethic and excellent research skills. He is seated in the public gallery, and I will now request him to please rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll soon be calling on the first of six, but yesterday in the House I recognized those members who were elected six years ago yesterday on the sixth anniversary of their first election to the House and those members who were elected 10 years ago two days ago for their 10th anniversary in the House.

Today I'd like to recognize a member who has been in this Assembly for 15 years. To the hon. Member for Little Bow, congratulations and well done. It's a special day.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Black History Month

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to recognize Black History Month. This is my first opportunity to speak to this event, which occurred last month, before the House was in session.

Black History Month is an annual opportunity to celebrate the contributions made by members of the black community in Canada, which predate Samuel de Champlain's first voyage down the St. Lawrence. The Canadian Parliament officially recognized February as Black History Month in 1995 following a motion by the first black Canadian woman elected to Parliament, the Hon. Jean Augustine, MP for Etobicoke-Lakeshore.

Locally I would like to thank the National Black Coalition of Canada, Edmonton chapter, and all of the volunteers who put on various events profiling black history. In particular, I would like to commend Movements: the Afro-Caribbean Dance Ensemble, which staged a spectacular event at the Citadel Theatre that attracted over 500 people, Mr. Speaker.

The local celebrations culminated in the awards of distinction banquet on March 3, where a number of members of this region's black community were recognized for their contributions. I'm proud to say, Mr. Speaker, that one of those people was from my constituency, and that is Dr. Gwen Hooks, originally from Breton. Dr.

Hooks is a retired teacher and has written extensively about black history and black pioneers in Alberta. Another honouree is a man well known for his presence on the football field as a former member of the Edmonton Eskimos but who is also a dedicated staff member of our own Children's Services ministry, Mr. Rick Walters of Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, Black History Month is a great opportunity for members of the black community to both celebrate their history with pride and educate the wider community about their many contributions to Canadian society. I'm very proud to stand here as a member of this community.

Thank you very much.

Red Deer College Kings Volleyball Team

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I stand in this Legislative Assembly today to honour one of the great teams in Alberta and Canadian history. Over the past 13 years the Red Deer College Kings men's volleyball team has won 10 Canadian college championships, including the last eight in a row. The Kings' postseason winning record is now 50-0.

This is a dynasty, Mr. Speaker. This is an Alberta Sports Hall of Fame team like none other. The Kings hold the Canadian record for the most championships and for the most consecutive championships. What makes this most remarkable is that seldom does the team field the same lineup from year to year. During this amazing run there is only one consistent factor: their coach, Keith Hansen. We are so proud of you, Keith.

This year's version of the Kings includes tournament MVP Gavin Schmitt, first all-star team power hitter Andrew Tallas, first all-star team setter Tanner Nault, and first all-star team libero Jason Waddell. Other members of the team are Pierre Rocque, Gilles Plouffe, Andrew Reed, Peter Shaw, Barrett Wenkowski, Jody teBulte, Kris Inglis, Spencer Leiske, James Sangster, and Colin Tajcna. Mr. Hansen is supported by assistant coaches Bob Rutz, Trevor Pikkert, Jeff Anderson, Adam Sillery, athletic therapist Heather Fletcher, and student trainer Cole Dziatkewich.

On behalf of myself, my colleague from Red Deer-North, Mary Anne Jablonski, and all Albertans we thank you for representing our province so well and for so long.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

P3 or Not P3

P3, or not P3: that is the question:

Whether 'tis nobler in the bind to suffer

The slings and arrows of outrageous private fortune,

Or pay now to avoid a sea of future troubles,

And by planning end them? To prolong: to repose;

No more; and by our accountable action we end

The backlog of a thousand public project debts

That Albertans are heir to. To hose, to haze;

To evade: perchance to scheme: ay, there's the rob;

For in that creep of debt what schemes may come

When we have shuffled off this political coil,

Accountability gives us pause: there's the public expectation

That makes political calamity of so long life;

For who would bear their party's whips and scorns of time,

The opposition's right, the proud government's wrong,

The lack of government conscience bullies us all;

And enterprises of great pith and moment

With this regard their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action. – Soft you now!
The Speaker tolls! Referee of these environs
Be all their sins remember'd.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Climate Change

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A hard act to follow.

Climate change and real progress. For over a decade the Alberta government has not done its job in addressing climate change. What is its job? Simply the job of governance: one, to outline the specific goals and justifications for its policy; two, to investigate objectively, without bias, what is known about the science of climate change; three, to scope out options and consult with experts on prudent action; four, to implement measures that first and foremost protect the health and well-being of people, the environment, and the economy into the future.

This government has repeatedly failed to do this. It has placed narrow, short-term economic interest above all other values, confused money and jobs with real progress. Genuine progress has to do with healthy, caring communities, clean rivers, bountiful environments, and a diverse, creative economy that supports people and the environment. Genuine progress does not result from blind faith in markets determining all outcomes.

Rather than consider the obvious and growing health and environmental impacts from burning 1,000 barrels of fuel per second on the planet, impacts that the public are bearing through our tax dollars, this government continues to subsidize fossil fuels and marginalize alternative clean energy. Successive environmental ministers sworn to protect the environment have spent millions of taxpayer dollars to attack the science of climate change and convince Albertans that reducing our emissions would destroy our economy.

To the contrary, Albertans are increasingly aware of the tremendous business opportunities in conservation as well as the value of carbon in enhancing agriculture, capturing methane, solar, wind, and geothermal power for our world. It's time to give these options, along with distributed electrical generation, the same incentives fossil fuels have received for decades. The rest of the world is leaving us behind, and it's time for government to do its job, including participating in global carbon markets and capping carbon emissions.

If this government is not prepared to face and reject its mindless addiction to fossil fuel, do the hard work of governance, and invest in genuine progress, it's time for people whose vision extends beyond the short term.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Wheelchair Curling Champions

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to rise and recognize all the wheelchair curlers in Alberta. On March 2 through 4 at the Garrison Curling Club in Calgary four teams competed against each other for the second Alberta wheelchair championships. These teams were composed of individuals from northern and southern Alberta. It was a weekend filled with high spirits and lots of fun.

Wheelchair curling as a competitive sport is relatively new in Canada and around the world but is growing in popularity. Team 2 from Calgary was composed of Robert Johns, Dale Keith, Martin Purvis, and Andrea Wojcik and was coached by Bonnie Simons and Brian Rivers. I am pleased to announce that team 1 from Calgary won the provincial championship. That team, Mr. Speaker, was Bruno Yizek, Bridget Wilson, Anne Hibberd, and Jack Smart and was coached by Ernie Comerford. They have won the honour of competing in the national championship over the Easter weekend in Ottawa, Ontario. I would wish all members of Calgary team 1 the best of luck next month.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that three of the curlers and their coach, Ernie Comerford, reside in Calgary-Hays. These three individuals and all curlers involved are models for Albertans. They work hard, have an active lifestyle, and they have fun while they're doing it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Warner Girls Hockey School

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise to tell you about a small community where they truly love hockey, a community where hockey rules and where everything they do is hockey. A unique feature in this community that sets it apart from other communities on the prairies is that girls hockey rules, and everything they do is girls hockey.

This community of no more than 350 people has accomplished an amazing feat by being one of the five finalists from all across Canada for Kraft Hockeyville 2007. In fact, they're the only community from the prairies to be in the final five. Their dedication to hockey is what allowed them to beat out so many other great hockey communities to become one of the last five standing.

The Warner hockey school is doing great things, Mr. Speaker, for youth in southern Alberta, raising more than $2 million in scholarships and financial aid since its inception. They've also been able to place every girl in the program in a college or university program, all with scholarships. In fact, one girl from last year and one from this year are nearly assured berths playing for Canada in the next Olympics.

Mr. Speaker, it's with great pleasure that I congratulate the community of Warner, Alberta, on being a finalist in this year's Kraft Hockeyville challenge. Their love of the sport is what has made their bid such a successful one, and it's my hope that all members of this Legislature and all Albertans will join with me in taking the time to vote as many times as possible to get the village of Warner crowned this year's winner. Please visit the website hockeyville.cbc.ca from now until March 16 to vote for Warner. The winning community will receive the title of Hockeyville 2007 and the trophy as well as an opportunity to host a special NHL event and $50,000 of upgrades for the arena. The winning community will also be featured on CBC in the fall.

Please vote and vote often for Warner. This little community has worked hard and is representing this province's proud tradition of community spirit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a report called Alberta Needs Students. The report was produced by the University of Alberta Students' Union and makes a compelling argument for why tuition fees need to be significantly reduced in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table 12 letters that I have received urging the minister of health to fund Gardasil vaccinations for any woman aged 9 to 26 who wishes to have it. The vaccination is highly effective in preventing HPV infections, which can lead to cervical cancer. If Texas can do it, surely Alberta can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is the Alberta Environment and Fisheries and Oceans Canada Water Management Framework: Instream Flow Needs and Water Management System for the Lower Athabasca River. Hopefully, this report will be read and it will be an important document in further approvals of oil sands projects in Fort McMurray.

The second document I have is a letter dated September 13, 2006, that I wrote to the former Minister of Finance, the hon. Shirley McClellan. It is in regard to the public accounts and excessive government grants to golf courses throughout Alberta totalling $1.4 million.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from Ms Fay Becic. She is a single parent raising two daughters, 13 and 15, and also a guardian of a 12-year-old. She's not receiving child or spousal support. She's concerned about the legal aid system. Her legal costs are greater than her legal aid.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of petitions being tabled because of the wording, with the requisite number of copies, supporting Gary Hunt in his efforts for his son, Josh.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Statement by the Speaker

Amendments to the Standing Orders

The Speaker: Well, we have an interesting situation that's already developed. Under the Standing Orders that were passed and approved last night, it says that the Oral Question Period should begin at 1:30, so we're ahead of schedule. So let me make some comments on these Standing Orders.

First of all, hon. members, you have on your desks green sheets of paper, and these green sheets of paper incorporate the orders that were changed and approved last night along with the existing ones. The ones that are new are the italicized parts, so that it gives you an idea of following through on them. As all members will know, we started today at 1 o'clock, and we'll rise tonight at 6 o'clock according to the rules we have.

The order of business, of course, is that the daily Routine will remain exactly the same – we went through the daily Routine today – save the Oral Question Period, which the Standing Orders that were passed last night said will commence at 1:30 p.m. There will be some discretion, obviously, that will have to be dealt with with respect to this matter, and if we arrive at this point in the agenda in the ensuing days, then we will begin the Oral Question Period ahead of schedule. There also may be a situation where in the Routine we will arrive at situations where hon. members may be in one of the points in Routine, particularly Members' Statements, where the chair would not want to interrupt an hon. member if he or she has not concluded their ministerial statement, and we might just begin a few seconds or more after the fact.

This is going to cause some confusion for all of those thousands and thousands of people who tune into the Oral Question Period daily at 1:30 in the afternoon because they'll find that the whole proceedings are disrupted. If the television coverage does not begin until 1:30 p.m., they will not know what I'm saying right now. At 1:30 p.m. we will be into something, and the phones in my office will light up very profusely this afternoon, so we will have to convey to those thousands and thousands and thousands of people out there that there was a modification in the rules yesterday.

Tomorrow I'll make mention of the written questions and motions for returns change that was made last night as we approach that item of business tomorrow. Essentially what will happen is that if members of Executive Council have accepted a written question or a motion for a return, they will advise, the clerk will notify, and there'll be no further discussion of that particular written question or motion for a return. It will simply be dealt with by a member of Executive Council in the ensuing days and ensuing weeks. If, however, a written question or motion for a return demands an amendment or a rejection, then that will of course be dealt with on the subsequent Monday in the afternoon.

Now, this afternoon when we get into Orders of the Day, we will be getting in committee, so committee will not rise at 5:30; it will rise at 6 o'clock. Of course, in our provisions it says that the vote must be taken by 5:15. Well, effective today, the vote will be taken at 5:45. Because the Government House Leader has provided no advance notice and hasn't gone through the process yet of dealing with the House sitting tonight, it's impossible for the House to sit tonight unless unanimous consent of the hon. members is requested and given some time this afternoon to do that.

This is the start of the changes that are occurring in the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, and there was a good discussion on it last night. Not all members agreed with the direction being taken by the majority of members. The Hansard deals with that. Applying these rules may require some flexibility, but most of all it will require the goodwill and the cooperation of all members, particularly in these early days. The chair would look forward to that, and he looks forward to working with all members as we apply these rules in a courteous, respectful, and professional manner.

At this point in time, Mr. Clerk, despite the fact that the television will not come on for another 30 seconds or so, I'll ask you to stand and make your announcement to the Routine item.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Royalty Review Panel

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the principle of ensuring that private interests don't interfere with public duties is a sound one, one which Albertans expect to be upheld. With the government taking in over $80 billion worth of nonrenewable resource revenues in the last 10 years alone, surely the stakes are high enough to defend this principle when it comes to the Royalty Review Panel. My question is to the Premier. Why is the Premier allowing panel members with clear conflicts of interest to be involved in the biggest policy issue facing this government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I thought I was clear in my response to the question raised with respect to the individuals that have been selected for this panel. They are professionals. They all have professional ethics when they do a review of this sort. I said that their job is to lay out all of the information for all Albertans to look at to decide for themselves whether the royalty regime that we have in place today is fair both to all Albertans in terms of owners and also to industry, that is investing billions of dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A letter from the Minister of Energy just last month restated that the goal of the royalty regime is to, quote, encourage development, apparently without regard to whether this development is hurting Albertans' quality of life. So much for managing growth. My question is to the Premier. Given that the royalty regime is designed to ensure profitability of investments for oil companies, will the Premier admit that the outcome of this review could have a substantial impact on the future value of the stock options and other investments held by panel members?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there was some comment made with respect to managing growth. Part of the growth pressures, of course, in the province of Alberta are related to the critical human resource shortage, some to infrastructure, obviously, and to housing. Those are three clear priorities that this government is moving very quickly on, and we will report to the House on the progress on those particular areas.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A complete and utter dodge. I'll repeat so that he can hear and think. Will the Premier admit that the outcome of this review could have a substantial impact on the future value of the stock options and other investments held by royalty panel members?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, the purpose of this review is to gather information, assess the information that comes from Albertans in terms of the royalty regime, and lay it out on the table so all Albertans can have a look at it. But if the hon. member is concerned that there may be changes in the investment climate, it may be because of the lack of clarity in terms of rules with respect to greenhouse gas emissions, and that in itself may drive away substantial investment. That's why last week our Minister of Environment tabled a bill with very clear emission targets, and at least that in itself is stabilizing the investment climate in the province of Alberta.

Red Deer River Water Transfer

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Environment is currently reviewing an application for a water licence from the Red Deer River to service a massive project in the MD of Rocky View, just on the north edge of Calgary. This development will require large-scale water servicing, and the source of the water is the Red Deer River. This development is already proceeding at full tilt despite the fact the developers don't have a water licence. My question is to the Premier. On the leadership campaign the Premier called this project ridiculous and promised the people of Drumheller that nothing would happen until he fully investigated the situation. So has the Premier investigated this, and what message does he have for the residents of Drumheller, who were never consulted and oppose the development?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall any comments made with respect to an application before the Minister of Environment or the quasi-judicial authority that's looking at it. With respect to this particular application I'll have the Minister of Environment answer because it is very specific to Balzac.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this particular application, but actually with respect to any application, there's a very specific process. The application is considered by a director within the department. That director considers all of the relevant factors related to stream flow, related to the amount of water that's being requested, related to the possible impact on directly affected persons and makes a decision. That decision has not yet been made on this particular application. When it is, it is appealable to the Environmental Appeal Board, and the appeal board then makes a recommendation to the minister, who will be responsible for making a final decision. For that reason, I cannot become embroiled at this stage. At the end of the day I may have to make the final decision.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The developers, the United Horsemen of Alberta and Ivanhoe Cambridge, started work on the project last summer and are moving ahead on construction fast, probably spending well over a million dollars a week. But there is, of course, one glaring problem: they have no water licence. To the Premier: will the Premier, who repeatedly makes claims of being open and accountable, tell the people of Drumheller, of Red Deer, of Stettler, of the whole Red Deer River basin who in his government has promised the developers that they will get their water?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. Leader of the Opposition just heard a very good explanation in terms of the process. There is a process followed. I guess the best way for me to explain it is that if there's a quasi-judicial authority and, as well, appeal, elected members, especially the minister, cannot make comments with respect to the question before the quasi-judicial authority. It would be similar if you were sitting as a judge in the courtroom, and you saw somebody come in and give the verdict without even hearing the evidence. There's a process to follow.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In September 2006 the MD of Rocky View approved a memorandum of understanding with Ivanhoe Cambridge and the United Horsemen to confirm in writing the MD's intent to deliver water, but it is actually the province, not the MD, under the Water Act who is responsible for all the water in Alberta. A municipality cannot make commitments to deliver water they do not already have through an existing licence. A second key piece of evidence pointing to a secret deal: members of our own caucus were told flat out that a water guarantee had been made by the province to the MD. My question is to the Premier. The evidence is clear, so it's time to be open and accountable with Albertans. Will he make public the province's secret deal to provide water to this development?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, how could it be secret? All of a sudden he's quoting some internal documents. Let it be clear that with respect to the issue of the MD of Rocky View, whatever business they've conducted with a developer is their responsibility. That's their bailiwick. That has nothing to do with the province. The province has a completely different process. Again, if the opposition has not heard clearly, then the Minister of Environment can reiterate the whole process.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the third Official Opposition member for a question, I think that there needs to be some clarification in here. The rules that dictate the question period remain Standing Order 13(1). There's no provision for preambles in second questions or third questions, and on three occasions in those last two preambles were provided. There's no change. Question period operates the same way it did yesterday and the day before, and until the Standing Orders are changed, nothing – nothing – changes that.

Third Official Opposition main question.

Ms Blakeman: A point of order under 13(2).

The Speaker: Sure. We'll deal with it at the end of the time.

Hon. Member for St. Albert, you were to be recognized as the third Official Opposition main question. Just remember what I've just been saying.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The backdrop of every strike is the fact that school boards are continually asked to do more with less. As we head into the summer, when as many as 80 per cent of the school boards will be in contract negotiations, we need to know now whether the school boards will be empowered by the government to make the best possible choices for students and staff, who are crippled by the perpetual lack of funding. To the Minister of Education. School boards have a lot of responsibilities and not enough funding. How important a role does the minister think overall education funding plays in whether or not a strike happens and how long it takes to resolve it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure I understood the last part of the question, but I will say that the budget will be coming out on the 19th of April. At that time we will know exactly what the funding is for the coming year. But let's make one thing clear: currently education is funded in this province to the tune of around $5 billion, 97 per cent of which goes to the school boards. So the comments made by the hon. member, frankly, are not correct.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, I failed that achievement test.

Let me try another one. Will the minister consider lobbying for funding adequacy in the upcoming budget, a strategy that would make sure that all necessary costs, including instruction, are funded properly so that school boards are not left battling with teachers over inadequate resources? Will you help us, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me try the Premier. Maybe I can get a little more insight from the Premier. I'm going to switch my focus. Mr. Premier, the people in the Parkland school division have been hearing one thing from the Minister of Education, who favours mediation, and something else from another minister, who is pushing for the disputes inquiry board. Can the Premier share with us the province's position and how this government plans to proceed as we nearly hit one month into the strike – can you help us? – and what direction the government is going to take?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe it's not one month. It's day 17, if I hear correctly. We are paying attention very carefully to the issue in Parkland. I do, though, believe strongly in, of course, the role of school boards. They're elected for a purpose, and that is to ensure that our students are educated. They also have a role to play in terms of administering the dollars that are available to them. We're watching the situation very carefully, obviously, but the ministers are in close contact, and so are the two MLAs that answer to the Parkland school board as well. So we'll just watch this as it unveils over the next few days.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Holy Cross Care Centre

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health and Wellness admits that for several weeks he ignored safety code violations, including the failure to conduct an annual fire inspection, which placed 42 seniors at risk in the Holy Cross Care Centre in Calgary. The Holy Cross situation is an example of the Tory government's failed experiment in private health care. One of the private shareholders of that institution is John Huang, who is also running for vice-president of the PC Party. To the minister: why did the minister fail to take immediate action to ensure the safety of 42 vulnerable seniors by ordering their evacuation as soon as he received the report?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary regional health authority has taken all appropriate steps in this circumstance. When they were made aware of the fire and safety code inspection, they followed up with the owner of the building, and appropriate steps were taken, as I understand it, as I've been informed, to ensure that fire and safety concerns did not endanger the residents. Some of the steps that have been taken, to my understanding, would be as is normal in a case like this: to post a fire watch, to have people there 24 hours a day to be able to have that fire watch in place. As I understand it, that is what is required by the fire and safety code if the sprinkler and fire alarm systems are in question.

So they followed up. They've done what any business would do, what any prudent public institution would do. They made sure that while the owner was being requested to make corrections to deal with the violations that had been identified, the safety of the residents was not in question. When it got to a point where they felt that they needed to take the residents out of the situation – again, it's not an emergency that they need to do an immediate evacuation. But they felt that the violations were not being dealt with on a timely basis, so they took the next logical step, which was to consult with the residents and let them know that over a course in a prudent period of time they would be moving them out of the residence. It's not something that anybody is in peril. There are procedures in place, but as I understand it, they believed that the owner was not moving fast enough to deal with the issues, so they took the next step available to them, which was to talk to the residents about moving them to other locations.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the minister is very blasé about a fire hazard affecting vulnerable seniors. Will the minister admit that this government puts the interest of wealthy and well-connected Tories such as Mr. Huang ahead of vulnerable seniors, patients, and their families?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. That is an absolutely fallacious statement and quite inappropriate. The Calgary regional health authority has been on top of the situation, has been monitoring the situation, and has been taking every step that they felt was appropriate and necessary to ensure the health, safety, and well-being of the residents in that facility. It has nothing to do with the politics of any individual. It has everything to do with the health and safety of the residents. This hon. member should not be drawing that inference.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's their health and safety that this minister has ignored.

When will this minister admit that the government's experiments with private health care have failed and bring the Holy Cross back into the public system?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of circumstances around this province where private operators, where nongovernmental organizations, where not-for-profit organizations provide long-term care to citizens of this province and do it extremely well. Lots of situations. There is a mix of service delivery, and long-term care for Albertans is delivered in many different models across the province.

This situation has nothing to do with profit and nothing to do with delivery. It has everything to do with making sure that that facility has the appropriate sprinkler system, the appropriate fire alarm system, and the appropriate attendants there to care for the individuals involved. If there was any question that any of those individuals was in imminent danger, they would be moved immediately.

Mr. Speaker, the health authority has taken the appropriate steps, and they've taken the appropriate steps in the interests of their patients, not in the question of profit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Physician Supply

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that a tentative two-year amending agreement has been reached between the Alberta government, the Alberta Medical Association . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, sorry. I'll let you repeat your whole question once we can have some calm return to this Assembly. It is only day 4.

Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, begin right at the start, please.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that a tentative two-year amending agreement has been reached between the Alberta government, the Alberta Medical Association, and the regional health authorities. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will this agreement cure the shortage of physicians in the province, and specifically how will rural physicians benefit from the agreement?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, no agreement is a cure-all for the challenges that we face in terms of physician supply or, for that matter, the supply of all health care professionals, but I really believe that this agreement will take us a long way in the right direction. Every province is experiencing a shortage of physicians. This agreement will help us build on our past success in retaining the physicians we have, making it appropriate to attract and retain physicians at a much higher rate than we have.

Mr. Speaker, we have over 6,000 practising physicians under the trilateral master agreement, and we attracted about 250 new physicians this year. There's a retention component in this agreement which will encourage physicians to stay in practice and to stay in Alberta. There are provisions on the clinical stabilization which will help us deal with specific, targeted areas. So this agreement will allow trilateral partners to respond more quickly to areas that are under pressure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will the new clinical stabilization initiative that you just mentioned in this agreement address the extraordinary increases in physician practice costs across Alberta, and how will it help communities with very serious health system pressures, such as Drayton Valley has?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the clinical stabilization initiative is a very, very important part of this agreement. It's new, and in agreement with the doctors, the health authorities, and Alberta Health and Wellness, the government of Alberta, it will allow us to target specific areas where there's a need. If there are barriers to success because the local climate will not support a full physician/clinic process or where there needs to be some support to help pull together a primary care network or if costs have gone through the roof, there's an ability to direct resources in that area.

It's not just about rural areas. It's also in areas where community clinics or physicians in the community are meeting an exceedingly high rate of growth in their costs. Let's remember that they're all paid out of the public purse, and they have not the ability to raise their own rates, so we need to be able to have the flexibility to go back in the system with those extra costs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: how will this agreement advance the attraction and retention of young doctors in Alberta, again, especially in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of pieces to the agreement. One is the provision which will help physicians join the electronics health records process, to set up their office and put in place the necessary computerized equipment so that they can be part of a comprehensive electronic health record. Secondly, it will help locate physicians in rural areas. If there are costs of establishing, costs of attracting or building the practice, it will help us to target resources in those areas. The details of the program still have to be worked out. We have an agreement with the AMA to do that and hopefully to do that prior to the beginning of June, but it will be targeted to retention and attraction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the stated goals of the new Premier is to govern with honesty and transparency, consulting with Albertans and listening to the wishes of Albertans. Here's the problem. This government has tried to push through the Balzac water transfer without consulting anyone in the Red Deer basin, and that's undeniable. Just ask Red Deer, Drumheller, and Stettler, none of whom were consulted and have publicly stated so. However, I quote from Hansard the Minister of Environment in this House on August 31: "The people of Drumheller know very well what's going on." To the Minister of Environment: since the town council has stated in Drumheller that they had no clue as to what was happening at the time of his statement, where is the honesty and accountability in this process?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'm more than happy to deal with questions that arise from a statement of fact that's within Hansard. I do have to advise the member that the context of the answer was when this individual was minister of municipal affairs, not Minister of Environment. As such it was my understanding and it still is my understanding – and I stand by my words – that the town of Drumheller had been contacted and was aware of the issue.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With climate change and the real fear of water shortage, including groundwater, in this province Albertans want to know that your department is not simply relying on staff reviews. What experts are being consulted in the Red Deer River watershed around groundwater impacts, climate change impacts, and cumulative impacts along that course presently and in the future to protect future generations?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the member refers to is precisely what the government is moving forward on with our Water for Life strategy. There are a number of different factors that come into dealing with allocation of water on a long-term basis within Alberta. In this specific application the process that is being used is the same process that is used with any other application. The director whose responsibility it is within Environment makes his decision based upon a myriad of different factors, many of which the member has referred to, and then makes a decision based upon whether or not the issuance of an additional licence would impact on either the ecosystem – the aquatics, nature of the stream – or directly affected persons.

As I explained earlier, that decision has not yet been made. Those factors are being taken under consideration as I speak.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is again to the Environment minister. What experts are being consulted in climate change and groundwater impacts and cumulative impact assessment beyond your staff to assess the true impacts of this into the future?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer in short is none of the above, the reason being that this is being dealt with in the context of one application. We don't go into that degree of research in dealing with individual decisions. That's why the Water for Life strategy is so important, and that's why we have just recently announced that the in-stream flow targets for the Athabasca River have now had that degree of consideration, and we have made the necessary decision for that. In time we will make the same kind of in-stream flow analysis needed for the Red Deer River.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the users of the Red Deer River are, in fact, very concerned about the water licence application, that is going to be used to support the development at the MD of Rocky View. What's particularly disturbing is the fact that there is a waterline that goes 500 metres from the city of Calgary right by this development, and there's sufficient capacity in their water licence to service this development. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Does the minister have the authority under the Water Act to intervene in this licence application and insist that a solution be found from the existing Bow River water licence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated earlier, there is a very specific process involved in the granting of water licences, so the short answer to the question is no.

The longer answer and the explanation, as I explained earlier, is that it would be inappropriate for me to step into this situation and try to influence either the director or the Environmental Appeal Board when at the end of the day I as minister am responsible for making the final decision. So how could I be seen to be influencing those who are responsible for making this decision if I'm going to be making some kind of an impartial decision at the end of the day?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, also to the Minister of Environment: in the unfortunate event that a water licence were to be granted for this, what appeal mechanisms are in place under the act for users of the Red Deer River to appeal a decision?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly the appeal mechanism has been outlined in my answer to previous questions. Any decision whether to issue the licence or not to issue the licence, as the case may be, can be appealed to the Environmental Appeal Board, and that will then result in a recommendation that would come forward to the minister.

I want to point out to the hon. member, though, that I recognize that there are unique circumstances in this application because this is the first application that has come forward for water out of the Red Deer River since the allocation has been closed down for further licences out of the Oldman and South Saskatchewan and Bow River basin. It's for that reason that I have asked the Water Council to have a look at the existing policies to determine whether or not those existing policies should remain in place given the new circumstances that we're dealing with.

Mr. Doerksen: My final question is to the minister of municipal affairs. Can he tell me what authority he has to intervene in the impasse between the MD of Rocky View and the city of Calgary to find a solution to this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The intermunicipal dispute resolution initiative was introduced in 1999. This is a voluntary service which includes mediation, financial support, and mediators that are made available in a dispute resolution type of situation. To access the program, one of the municipalities must send a request to the ministry requesting such a service. I want to suggest to you that that has not happened, but if there was such a situation where the request was made, our mediators would come in. They would assist the feasibility of the situation and deal with the issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This may sound like an echo, but it is not. The problems at the Holy Cross Manor illustrated the consequences of this government's decision to deregulate long-term care. As the health minister pointed out yesterday, the assisted living residents are not technically under the jurisdiction of the Calgary health region. To the health minister: will the minister explain why these assisted living residents aren't receiving the same safety protection by the government as the long-term care residents living in the same building?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the whole area of assisted living is outside the scope of the health department, so the minister of seniors and community programs may want to supplement.

In essence, the relationship between people in assisted living is a relationship where people have, as I understand it, contracted with the owner of a building like they might in any apartment building, but they've contracted for a living accommodation with some supplemental services. That is a private relationship between the people that have moved into that assisted living facility, renting space to live with supplementary services, which is quite different than long-term care, which falls into a health and accommodation facility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Then in light of that, is this the position of this government: that residents housed on the floors that receive public funding should receive different levels of care than residents housed on the floors that are privately funded?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, when one builds a building, one may have a multitude of uses for the building. You might have a building where you could have normal apartments that anybody might rent, and then you might have another level. In fact, one of the key innovations in housing for seniors and others in this province and elsewhere is the whole idea of integrated aging in place so that you can move through the types of accommodation that you need and the support services you need. There are many seniors and others in this province who rent apartments or own their own homes and might need some assistance in terms of care coming in, and others live in facilities that have intensive care. There's absolutely no reason why that full continuum can't exist in the same building.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the answer has clearly indicated how complex this question is after deregulation.

Will the minister commit to legislating clear standards for anyone in care to apply equally across this province?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have standards of care, but it should be clear that just because a person is living in what might be called an assisted living facility doesn't mean they're in care.

An Hon. Member: You don't care.

Mr. Hancock: I care very deeply about Albertans, and one of the things that we want to do to make sure that Albertans have the opportunity to stay healthy is to respect their individual desires and wishes and their ability to care for themselves. There's a full continuum of housing, and it's not for the government or anyone else to take away people's independence when they can have it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Provincial Park User Fees

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fish Creek park is the only provincial park in the country that is located in an urban centre. Thousands of Calgarians enjoy this park 12 months of the year for its beautiful walking and biking trails and Sikome Lake. Recently there has been some musing about establishing a user fee to access this park and other provincial parks in this province. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. On behalf of my constituents and the many Calgarians that enjoy Fish Creek park, are you, Mr. Minister, looking at establishing user fees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek indicated, you know, she has a right to be concerned. I, too, have been receiving a number of calls on the musings that were spread that we might charge user fees for day use of our provincial parks. I need to say that we are certainly not contemplating day-use fees to use trails in our provincial parks, including Fish Creek provincial park. We do charge some fees for camping, including some additional fees for some services, including electricity, water, and sewer services, sometimes horse corral utilization. I need to say that those fees are very comparable to other public parks across the province, but it's certainly not our intent at this stage to charge day-use fees.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Mr. Minister, do you have plans to undertake a review to introduce fees in provincial parks?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to improving Alberta's quality of life. We want people to get out in nature, and we want people to enjoy the beautiful spots that this great province of Alberta has to offer. As part of ensuring that outdoor recreational opportunities are available, I will be developing a plan for provincial parks to accommodate population growth and the increased recreational needs of our people. There will be a review of fees but certainly not to indicate that we will be charging day-use fees. As well, we're incorporating and going through the land-use framework, and certainly that will no doubt be part of the discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is also to the same minister. Given that Albertans take pride in their parks and they think of them as tourist destinations, what priority is this government placing on our parks?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, since 2004 the Alberta government has invested a considerable amount of money in our provincial parks. We have spent some money to help repair and replace park facilities and some of the infrastructure within the parks. I need to say that this year marks the 75th anniversary of provincial parks in Alberta. In addition to hosting a number of special celebrations, including Robert Bateman prints commemorating Alberta parks' 75th anniversary – these prints will go on sale fairly quickly – we will be having a lot of activities in support of those parks.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Oil and Gas Activity in Rumsey Natural Area

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to protecting Alberta parks, this Tory government preaches about improving quality of life and respecting the environment, but then a foreign company is granted approval to drill for coal-bed methane in the Rumsey natural area, which is protected parkland. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Why is this minister allowing the interests of a foreign company to be put ahead of the environment and Albertans' enjoyment of their land?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think I did cover that yesterday. Again, I need to reiterate that the Rumsey block that the hon. member is talking about includes two protected areas. Certainly, no oil or gas activity is allowed in the ecological reserve of the Rumsey park, but in the natural area of Rumsey energy commitments are subject to the conditions that were established in 1993, and we will honour those conditions.

Mr. Agnihotri: How does this plan fulfill the minister's mandate from the Premier to develop a plan for parks and improve the quality of life?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, if we go back, from 1995 to 2001 you will notice that we put over 2 million hectares of land under protection and 81 new and 13 expanded areas. Certainly, I need to re-emphasize that for the areas that were established under special places, we also agreed to honour the existing oil and gas commitments as a matter of fairness. We are continuing to add to our parks area. We are interested in expanding our parks and camping facilities in the province, and we'll continue to do that particular work.

Mr. Agnihotri: Well, if this area is not protected from drilling wells, what exactly is it protected from? What's the point of designating land as protected if American companies are given permission to plunder it? Is that the plan to protect Albertans?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly, we need to, as I had also indicated yesterday, strike a balance between protection of our parks and the economic activity that needs to go there. Part of it is to honour the existing commitments that we had before we started preserving additional acreages, and the honouring of those commitments is extremely important to Albertans as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Postsecondary Education Costs

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last May, following an extensive review of the postsecondary education system, the government released a report called A Learning Alberta, the final report of the steering committee, which was followed a few months later by a much-trumpeted affordability framework for postsecondary education. As the months have passed, however, we have seen only the most minimum possible steps toward implementing elements of that framework. Meanwhile, students are going further into debt, accessibility eludes most postsecondary institutions and many students across the province, and a tight labour market continues to bleed students from pursuing advanced education.

My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. I suspect this might be the first question the minister is going to be addressing. Given that the affordability framework promised last November to reduce interest rates on student loans, will the minister commit to reducing interest rates on student loans to prime without further delay? Yes or no.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member. This is my first question of this session, so I'm pleased to respond.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to the A Learning Alberta framework and the affordability framework, which we've been working on since November. We've brought in a few elements of that framework, including what was a key element, being the tuition policy, and something that was brought forward by medical residents in the province, being the deferment of interest while they were in residency, as well as for maternity periods of time for students studying, the interest being waived. I might add that we recently announced a tripling of the bursary amounts for disabled students under the affordability policy.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the items which the hon. member is asking for are really budget items. They're items where we don't want to be doing a whole bunch of in-year spending and a whole bunch of in-year announcements. We want these things to be budgeted out for the whole year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll wait for the budget and hold our breath.

Given that the cost-of-living allowance for a typical student living away from home doesn't even cover the cost of residence at either the University of Alberta or the University of Calgary, what steps is the minister taking to eliminate the gap between actual living costs and student finance assistance living allowances as promised in the framework?

Mr. Horner: Again, Mr. Speaker, these are items that are ongoing, long-term type commitments that the government would have to make as they relate to our fiscal position, i.e. the budget. It's tough for me to talk about what might or might not be in the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think students have waited long enough for these steps to be taken.

Given that this government's tuition fee policy leaves mandatory fees in postsecondary institutions totally unregulated, will the minister assure close to 200,000 students in the system that he will not allow rampant increases in their mandatory fees?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're in the process of reviewing all of the recommendations from the affordability framework as well as other items that the student councils and student bodies have brought forward to us. I might say that the council of presidents of student unions told me that the cost-of-living allowance that's involved in the affordability framework was probably the number one priority for them. We are going to work with the institutions to try to keep our costs down as much as we possibly can. We are going to work with the institutions from a Campus Alberta approach, you know, as it relates to a plan to manage growth pressures, so that we can increase the quality of life for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Enhanced Feed Ban for Cattle

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent years Canada's beef industry has faced many challenges. Last year the federal government announced that they would be implementing an enhanced feed ban effective July 12 of this year that would ensure that no more potential BSE materials or SRM, specified risk materials, could be used in any animal feeds, pet foods, or fertilizers. This left the industry scrambling for a desperate solution. Yesterday there was a joint federal and provincial announcement committing about $40 million to Alberta to help our beef industry to comply and adapt to the federal government's enhanced feed ban. So my question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Can the minister tell us what the long-term benefits of this funding will be?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very quickly, I'd like to kick off with three short-term benefits. The first one is helping industry comply; the second, reducing costs; and the third one is adding value to what might otherwise be just waste material. That in itself extrapolates out to a long-term benefit.

But this is also about increasing market access for Canadian beef. The bottom line is that we want to speed up the elimination of BSE in Canada. This comes on the heels of some pretty good news, which are steps to fully restore the U.S. beef trade and towards controlled risk status under the OIE, which gives us the same control status as the U.S. Perhaps more importantly, though, the cost of compliance will not be piggybacked on the primary producers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. With the federal feed ban starting on July 12, which is not very far away, does this program come in time to help the industry to get ready for this event?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, the enhanced feed ban is a federal initiative, and they have set the deadline for us. We didn't wait for a signed agreement. We worked with the industry for months to get their input and build a program that makes sense to the industry. We will however have to grandfather in some investments that these people have already made. We're moving first on the most immediate piece: infrastructure for the main facilities for the SRM.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the same minister. I would like to know if the government of Alberta is going to enhance or supplement this federal initiative.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, Alberta is recognized as a leader in this area. It shouldn't surprise anyone that we're going above and beyond the usual commitments. This is a 60-40 cost-share program with the federal government. Alberta's commitment to that is $13 million, but we are investing an additional $7 million. We know that the industry also has operational costs that aren't covered under the federal program, and funding research for a new value-added solution is always a cost. But the primary producers need that relief, and Alberta is here to assist.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Health Workforce Strategy

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the health minister guaranteed in conjunction with the advanced education minister that an aggressive health workforce strategy was being produced that would be released in spring 2006. But in June 2006 the health minister told Grande Prairie doctors that releasing a workforce strategy by the fall was the number one priority. These promises were made almost a year ago, and shortly before the Tory leadership race led to a six-month hiatus in health policy decision-making. My question is to the Deputy Premier. Can the Deputy Premier explain to Albertans why this government let Tory party business interfere with making essential improvements to the health system?

The Speaker: Hon. member, unfortunately, in the order of precedence provided to me, there's no individual identified as the Deputy Premier. Perhaps the member would direct it to a particular member.

Ms Blakeman: How interesting: there's no Deputy Premier.

Well, then I will direct a question to the minister of health. Knowing that the work . . .

The Speaker: Okay. You've directed the question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. We've heard the question.

Ms Blakeman: Okay.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the hon. member will know that on my appointment as Minister of Health and Wellness and upon being sworn in, I was delivered a mandate letter by the Premier, and one of the mandates had to deal with the implementation of a workforce strategy. It is one of the four mandates that I have to report on within six months and within 12 months report progress on. So there's a structure in place to make sure that we accomplish that.

I can assure the hon. member that a considerable amount of work has been done on health workforce strategies with the RHAs and other service providers across the province but also in collaboration and co-operation with the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry and the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. We are working together to ensure that a workforce strategy is implemented, and in fact projects have been undertaken already in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Maybe he should have been the Premier.

To the minister of health. Can the minister then tell us: now that we've had all of these delays, and we've had repeated announcements of when we're going to get a health workforce strategy, when do we get a health workforce strategy? Give us a date.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are number of elements to the workforce strategy. One, of course, is a budgetary element. Another is with respect to placements, which the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology will be making announcements on in due course over the spring. Some of the issues in the workforce strategy are being worked on as we speak. But I can assure the hon. member that I with my two colleagues am taking the workforce strategy through a policy process in government as we speak, and it will be tabled in the House once it's gone through the review of cabinet policy committee, caucus, and government in the same careful and prudent way that we deal with all policy issues in this government.

Ms Blakeman: Careful, prudent, and much delayed.

All right. Again to the same minister, standing in for the Deputy Premier, standing in for the Premier: can the minister guarantee that all of the plans for expanding spaces for health workers in postsecondary institutions will include the necessary infrastructure, equipment, and faculty to get the job done?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not, in fact, standing in for the Premier or a Deputy Premier or anyone else. I was answering questions in my capacity as Minister of Health and Wellness because they were questions which were appropriate for the Minister of Health and Wellness, and I'm certain the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology may wish to answer questions with respect to his department.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, I'd love to. As the hon. minister of health has stated, the three departments are working collaboratively on developing the plan of what is the demand, what is the current capacity, what is the gap that we have to fill. Indeed, we've been talking to the regional health authorities. We've been talking to the occupational community. We've been talking to industry as a whole to figure out and to make sure that what we're designing as our plan is going to be long-term sustainable and, more importantly, is going to fill the need. That's something that the three of us have to work together on, and in due course, as my colleague the minister of health has mentioned, we'll be making some announcements on the progress.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today that was 78 questions and answers. We had 84 on Thursday, 88 yesterday, and 78 today. So the chair apologizes that he could not work in more members because that's certainly the intent.

Now, the Official Opposition House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the House leaders' agreement should be in effect as of today. It was tabled last Thursday, and the motion that was debated and accepted last night does specifically refer to the House leaders' agreement. I'll quote from page 22 of Alberta Hansard from March 8, which was when that motion was put on the floor: "the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, in order to give effect to the March 7, 2007, House Leaders' Agreement." So I would argue that that is the totality of the agreement, and the Standing Orders changes were only needed to bring them into line with what was proposed in the House leaders' agreement. That should not cancel the remaining clauses of the agreement itself. I know that the Speaker had concerns, but under 13(2) could he explain his reasoning for not implementing the full House leaders' agreement today?

The Speaker: Hon. members, this parliament makes its decision on the basis of motions that are presented to it, motions that are provided to the knowledge of all members, motions that are there for all members to see, study, and review, motions that are debatable in the Assembly. Once those motions are approved, in essence that becomes the rule of the Assembly.

There was nothing in the motion last night which refers to a House leaders' agreement. In the House leaders' agreement, which was signed by three individuals, there is no motion that has been presented to the House that this chairman is aware of that would suggest that the totality of the House leaders' agreement must be put into play. There is a section in the conclusion of the House leaders' agreement that there may be several motions that may be required to deal with any particular matter. Until those other motions come forward which may deal with certain things, the current provisions will apply.

Very clearly, even if the House leaders' agreement was to be intended, there is absolutely nothing in the House leaders' agreement which provides for preambles in secondary or supplementary questions. There is one section, 3(a)(ii), I do believe, which basically says that we should try and apply a 45-second rule. That's what we've been doing in this House. On March 3, 2005, I believe, and on March 8, 2005, the chair made long statements, which are recorded, that basically say that we try and abide by a 45-second rule. Nowhere in any of this does it suggest that there should be preambles in the second or subsequent questions. That has never been the case.

In fact, most rules and most provisions you'll find are very clear that there are no preambles on secondary questions. That was certainly reiterated by the chair in the memo that he sent to all members just a few days ago. Certainly, if one wanted to highlight and review Marleau and Montpetit, it very, very clearly says that preambles are not to apply to supplementary questions.

So how that could have been extrapolated today, from yesterday to today, that is beyond this chair. The chair did point out in a memo to three House leaders that he would welcome an opportunity to raise a number of questions with them for clarification, but at the moment the only thing that has changed in the operation of this House is the motion that was approved by all members after debate in this Assembly. If members choose to will themselves to three individuals and then have a motion to that effect, then that will become the rule of the House and that will be applied in the rule of the House.

But in this particular situation there are 82 members in this House who are viewed by the chair to be equal – equal – no one more important than the other, no one less important than the other, all with rights, all with privileges, and each and every member must understand that their rights and privileges will be protected by this chair all of the time. There will never be an opportunity, as long as this chair is the chair, to allow individuals to become secondary citizens in this particular Assembly. The MLA is supreme in this Assembly.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the 2007-08 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government from April 1, 2007, to July 1, 2007, inclusive. During that period it is anticipated that the spending authorization will have been provided for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2008. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $9.1 billion in expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $401 million for capital investment, $45 million for nonbudgetary disbursements, and $463 million for lottery fund payments.

Interim supply amounts are based on departments' needs to fund government programs and services until July 1. While many payments are monthly, other payments are due at the beginning of each quarter and at the beginning of the fiscal year. Some payments are seasonal.

head: Government Motions

10. Mr. Snelgrove moved:

Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2007-08 interim supply estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion. Shall we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

11. Mr. Snelgrove moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2007-08 interim supply estimates shall be two days.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this motion under Standing Orders is not debatable, so I will call the question on the motion put forward by the hon. President of the Treasury Board.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head Supplementary Supply Estimates 2006-07, No. 2
General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: As agreed, at 5:45 or before that if there's no one wanting to speak further, a vote will be held.

I'll now call upon the Government House Leader to move the estimates.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move the estimates as set out in the supplementary supply 2006-2007 estimates, No. 2, and in particular move the estimates of the Department of Advanced Education and Technology in the amount of $107,100,000, Agriculture and Food in the amount of $50 million, Finance in the amount of $46,570,000, Health and Wellness in the amount of $147 million, Municipal Affairs and Housing in the amount of $42,846,000, and the transfer under section 2 of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007 from Infrastructure and Transportation to Service Alberta in the amount of $530,000.

The amount of expense and equipment/inventory purchases to be voted under section 1 of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007, $393,516,000, and the amount of capital investment to be transferred under section 2 of the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007, $530,000.

Members of Executive Council are here to respond to any inquiries by members or questions by members of the House or to receive any comments with respect to the estimates of each of those departments. Of course, I'd be more than pleased to deal with the estimates as set out for the Department of Health and Wellness.

In brief, with respect to that particular set of estimates I can indicate that the $147 million that's requested as supplementary estimates for Health and Wellness applies entirely to a provision for the trilateral agreement, and I'm very pleased to say that we have a tentative agreement in place, subject to ratification by doctors. The agreement was approved by the AMA's representative forum on Saturday for sending out to its members.

We participated in a joint press conference today with the chair of the health authorities board, the president of the AMA, and myself announcing some of the highlights of the agreement. The $147 million that we're talking about here applies to the increases and changes which would be in place if that agreement is approved for the period covering the 2006-2007 fiscal year. Of course, the remainder of it will have to be in subsequent estimates.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the chair does not have any priority identified as to which department goes first, so it's open. At this stage I guess we'll recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks for the promotion, but probably just the House leader.

The Deputy Chair: Sorry. The House leader.

Ms Blakeman: There we go.

My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Now, I'm curious because you have just confirmed that essentially the money that you were talking about at the media conference this morning with the trilateral agreement is reflected here in the $147 million. As set out on page 22 of the supplementary supply, it actually says, "This Supplementary Amount of $147,000,000 is requested to fund the higher-than-budgeted cost of physician services," which is a pretty sweeping statement, so I'm going to try and nail you down to a bit more detail there.

Now, I noticed in the media release that on the second page it notes that in fact this agreement has not been accepted. The Alberta Medical Association's board is recommending that the membership vote for the financial agreement, and I'm quoting directly: "The ratification process is expected to take seven to eight weeks because of the time it takes to mail the tentative agreement and a ballot to each physician, and then have the ballot returned."

Now, if I look at the calendar and I go forward by seven to eight weeks, I'm looking at the very end of April. This is a supplementary supply budget, so if this trilateral agreement is not ratified by one of the parties, how is it in effect and expending $147 million inside of the fiscal year 2006-07?

I noted the monies that were talked about this morning: $47 million for the retention benefit, which essentially is $8,000 bonuses for full-time or part-time physicians to get them to stay working; and another allocation of $56.5 million for the clinical stabilization initiatives, although I'm wondering how that's included in this $147 million because, in fact, this morning they said that there were no details on that program. They didn't seem to be sure about how it would actually work. The final portion of what was announced: I think the money this morning was $103.5 million. Then there was the physician office system program to provide for the continuing computerization of the physicians' offices and the support for the 19 primary care.

So there's a bit of a timeline problem for me here, and I'd like the minister to outline how that works and on which side of the 31st of March this money is falling. What exactly is covered by the $147 million? I would argue that much of what's in that trilateral agreement does not apply to that $147 million, but I'm sure that the minister will tell me.

The second part of this is: where was the money – perhaps it's in the $147 million – for the special initiative in Fort McMurray in which doctors were being paid I think it was $1,200 a day to go up there for a period of time to stand in as the doctor for the day at the local hospital? Now, that was $1,200 a day plus the travel plus their board and accommodation. That program, as far as I know, has been running, I think, since the 15th or 16th of February, although I'd be interested in hearing from the minister how many doctors actually have been organized to take that doctor-for-a-day shift, if you will, through this program.

I was up there just a few days before this program started. I know that at that time they didn't have anyone lined up that was coming to be able to start on that – I think it was Saturday the 16th – so I'm interested in how many have taken advantage of the program between then and now, how many are projected until the end of the month, which would tell us the money that was spent on that particular project.

The final question in that cluster of questions about Fort McMurray is: if that money is not included in this $147 million, then the minister anticipated this as part of his budget and it was included in the budget amount that came forward as part of the '06-07 budget amount? I'm interested that he was able to see that far into the future that he would require that money for Fort McMurray then.

I look forward to his responses to that set of three questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. No, I'm not that omnipotent that I could see that far in advance, particularly as I wasn't Minister of Health and Wellness at the time.

I think I could explain what the hon. member is interested in in this way. Under the trilateral agreement there are funds set aside on a fee-for-service basis and for some other program spending; the physician office systems program, for example. Under that agreement we were able to get an agreement that there needed to be some funds that provided for the provision of doctors to Fort McMurray in the circumstances that they were in. That was done while we were contemplating because negotiations, as the hon. member might know, had been going on for a considerable period of time, and there had been agreement to the concept that there would be a critical stabilization initiative. We had agreement to utilize the resources that were in the fee-for-service payment pool to assist in the payment of doctors in that manner.

The $147 million is being requested in anticipation of the obligation that will be incurred under the agreement. As I understand it, under appropriate accounting practices we will have an obligation going back to a 4 and a half per cent fee increase. I'll have to check as to when that actually would come into effect. There's a 4 and a half per cent increase to the fee schedule for 2006-2007. The exact date is not at hand, but suffice to say that as soon as that agreement is met, we will owe for past services rendered. So in calculating the amount of funds that are needed to deal with the retroactive adjustment, that's where the $147 million comes from.

I believe the total amount is $579 million for the whole package that was talked about under that agreement, but $147 million of that primarily related to the fee-for-service package. Increase in fees and increase in utilization, I think, covers that piece.

Chair's Ruling Speaking Order

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just for clarification. As I had indicated, we do not have a precedence of which ministry goes up first, so this is more like a free-for-all, and people are asking for clarification. The chair is not necessarily going to recognize a particular minister to make a statement then followed by questions. Really, at this stage if anybody wants to raise a question, let the chair know, the chair will recognize you, and you can direct your questions to any minister that you want to direct yourself to. So the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The chair does not have clarity on which ministry goes first. That has not been clarified; therefore, until that issue is sorted out, if it is an issue, we will recognize the person that identifies himself or herself as wanting to raise a question.

Debate Continued

Mr. Tougas: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If I could, I'd like to address a few of the items in advanced education, so I'm just sending a little alert to the minister over there. You know, Mr. Chairman, I remember being quite shocked and appalled when I was a rookie MLA, back in 2005, when we were presented with supplementary estimates for the first time. I was amazed that we were going to debate and approve millions of dollars in a few minutes with little or no information to go on. Well, nothing shocks me anymore, but I reserve my right to be appalled, and I have to shake my head as we approve such a huge sum of money without adequate information about where the money is going. That's my requisite political statement. Now I'd just like to ask the minister a few questions while he gets his papers in order.

First of all, I would like to thank the advanced education minister. We had a meeting before the session began, and he did promise that he would provide information if we just made a phone call. He did come through, and I'd just like to thank him for his professionalism in that regard. He may live to regret it yet, but I'm going to give it a try.

Mr. Chairman, supplementary spending has been the norm for the advanced education department over the last few years, and these numbers have skyrocketed. We've seen supplementary requests in my time in the Legislature for $19 million, $49 million, $99 million, and now, continuing with that trend, over a hundred million dollars in advanced education alone. [interjection] That's not really worthy of applause. Before we get into specifics about where this money is being spent, I wonder if the minister in his response would spend a couple of minutes explaining why supplementary spending is increasing at such a rate in Alberta.

Now, I understand that there are extraordinary pressures on advanced education in Alberta. I've heard it in my visits across the province that everybody wants money, and they want it now. I'd like to hear from the minister if this increasing need for off-budget spending is a result of poor planning in the postsecondary institutions or a lag time from his department in making decisions, particularly since we're on our third minister in two years, or perhaps chronic underfunding of advanced education in the budget itself.

Now, for instance, we have a $15 million expense in additional apprenticeship technical training spaces. There's no doubt that these are desperately needed spaces, and $15 million probably doesn't even put a dent in how much we really need, but surely the government should have seen this shortage coming for sometime and budgeted it properly in the first place.

There is also $15.7 million for nursing degree programs at Mount Royal College and Grant MacEwan. Again, this is welcome news, and we're fully supportive of it, but I wonder why Mount Royal had to wait until the last possible minute to find out that they were going to get funding for this program.

On a smaller budget item there's $2.8 million for the WorldSkills Calgary 2009 competition. It's my understanding that we've known about this event for about three years, so why is it a supplementary spending cost instead of being in the budget?

Perhaps most importantly, I'd like the minister to explain the $34.5 million in grants to match private donations. Now, the bulk of this is of course made up of $24 million as the initial payment of a $37 million donation of rare Chinese artifacts by the Mactaggart family at the University of Alberta. My question is: is this not what the access to the future fund was supposed to be for?

Now, if I can go back to the Speech from the Throne from 2005, the access to the future fund will "support innovation and excellence in postsecondary education." For example, it will provide matching contributions to help create a new centre for Chinese studies at the University of Alberta. In April of 2005 the then minister of advanced education said:

The collection will provide the basis for the university's new centre for Chinese studies, which will house the world renowned expertise on Chinese culture and history.

Members will recall that in the Speech from the Throne the new access to the future fund is intended to support innovation and excellence in postsecondary education, and the creation of this new centre for Chinese studies at the University of Alberta was specifically referenced in anticipation of this gift.

So what we have here, it appears, is money coming out of the budget that is supposed to have been from the access to the future fund. My questions regarding that are: what has happened to the access to the future fund? Why is the money not going out? Why are we using budgeted sums for this?

I threw quite a few questions at you, and I'll sit down.

Ms Blakeman: Keep going. Once you sit down, you won't get back on.

Mr. Tougas: That's okay. I want to hear his answers anyways.

The Deputy Chair: The minister wishes to respond?

Mr. Horner: Sure, and I'd be more than happy to take some more questions later if you think about them.

First of all, as it relates to supplementary estimates, obviously, if we had a crystal ball – I know that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition in his alternate throne speech claims that he doesn't have a crystal ball either – to project what might be coming down in the future, we probably could have had capacity and space for everything that we need because it would be there based on our crystal ball. But we don't have that any more than the Official Opposition leader has one or anyone else.

Part of the problem that we have in terms of spaces that are coming online is that it isn't as simple as just saying: "Here's the money. Now you've got the spaces." I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark knows this. You need the facility. You need the classroom. You need the faculty. You need the equipment. You need all of those things, especially in health care. On the health care side is where we have the health workforce plan, and the intricacies of that are that you need medical practitioners to actually be teachers as well as to deliver medical aid and care to Albertans. These things take some time to plan.

We're working with the postsecondary institutions as we plan the rollout of their capacity increases. I think the hon. member mentioned: "Well, you've got $15 million. Is it enough?" No, it's not enough, but it's the capacity that we can build quickly. We want to plan the capacity that we can build over a longer period of time. There will be more dollars to move with that, and we'll wait to see how the budget rolls out on that one. So, I mean, it's difficult. It's easy to say: couldn't you have seen the shortage coming? It's another thing to say: well, you tell me how many spaces we'll need five years from now. It's very difficult to do, very difficult for any vocation or in any of the other postsecondaries. In fact, we had a meeting on February 26 with all of the postsecondaries in the room, and we asked that very question. We said: you guys tell us what we need. That was the most difficult question for them to answer.

We had a really good discussion, Mr. Chairman, about roles, responsibilities, and mandates at that time. Part of what we're doing here today is catching up on some of those things that the postsecondaries see as being very, very important, that the industries, whether that be health care, whether that be education, whether that be our trades training, see as very important. So that's part of expanding the access to trades training.

As it relates to the access to the future fund, obviously, if we again had that crystal ball that none of us have, we would have anticipated the amount and the totality of the generosity of Albertans over the last year and a half. Unfortunately, we weren't able to predict that. We have a huge amount of very generous Albertans who are wanting to match their dollars with universities, postsecondaries, and technical institutes to see good things happen in our facilities. So we're trying to keep up with that. However, as we plan out what we're going to be doing with the access to the future fund, we can start to add more dollars to that fund to generate more dollars every year. As the hon. member well knows, it currently is generating about $45 to $50 million per year. We then by formula put it out to all institutions, not just one or two, and then they work on their matching arrangements with whoever is going to provide them with dollars.

There were a few that came in very, very quickly in very, very large amounts that didn't fit the formula that we had established through the committee and the council after the fact. So we felt that it would be prudent that we try to match those donations as quickly as we possibly could so that the council and the access to the future fund could deal with the dollars that are coming in on a regular basis and work with the institutions on the philanthropy that's going to come towards them and is coming in a very big way from all Albertans. So are we catching up? Yes. Do we hope that we're at one point down the road going to be basically matching, you know, the amount that we earn out of the access to the future fund to the amount that Albertans are willing to give? That's the plan. That's where we're headed.

Just like everyone else, Mr. Chairman, I have probably 20 minutes of opening comments here that I could give, but I think that in the interests of where we're going with all of this stuff, I'll just try to keep my answers to the questions that are coming from members opposite and members behind me.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to have this opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon. Certainly, as we review another supplementary supply estimate, it is with interest that I note where some of this money is going, where it was, and now where it's going. There are many hon. members that want to participate in the debate, so I will start with my questions in regard to the CAIS program.

Now, we realize that the Department of Agriculture and Food is requesting a total of $50 million, and the purpose of these funds, as I understand it, is to fund Canadian agriculture income stabilization, CAIS, the Alberta reference margin initiative. We know that there are going to be changes to the CAIS program. Certainly, there has been an ongoing issue with CAIS. I was left with the impression last fall, Mr. Chairman, that the government here was quite satisfied with the CAIS program. I was surprised to learn by observing question period in the federal House of Commons that your Conservative cousins are not only contemplating changes to CAIS; they are changing the CAIS program.

I wonder how this will affect the overpayments that have been made, specifically for the 2004 CAIS year. There have been many farmers contacting us confused and frustrated. [interjection] Yes. The hon. Minister of Service Alberta says dazed.

Certainly, I find it a complex calculation to determine a payment.

Now, the producers that have been contacting us are complaining about the fact that they have to pay back money. I know that there have been some adjustments made to that. This side of the House made some suggestions last summer to the department. The whole program is confusing. How confusing is it, Mr. Chairman? Well, in fact, I think the hon. minister of municipal affairs should give a course or give advice to farmers across this fine province about the CAIS program, and I'm just referring to the selected payments to Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Other payments listed here under the hon. minister's name include hay and post-harvest assessment payments, moisture deficiency assessment payments, crops spring price endorsement assessments, waterfowl assessment payments, crop revenue insurance coverage payments, and of course the Canadian agriculture income stabilization payment made by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. All these payments listed are the total of $118,000; $93,000 of it comes from the CAIS program. That adds up on that page to $332,000. Then other family members also have made application successfully to the CAIS program in the year ended March 31, 2006, of $51,000. I would certainly think it would be advantageous for all farmers to get some advice from the hon. minister as to exactly how this program works.

We're looking at an additional $50 million for CAIS funding here, and I would ask the minister: what details can the minister and the department provide to the House in regard to this money and how it is going to be used? I would be very grateful for that, Mr. Chairman. Can the minister also tell this Assembly the details of the additional funding, specifically how the federal grains and oilseeds program, the payment program, relates if at all to this funding.

Again, getting back to the federal Conservatives, last week the Prime Minister announced $1 billion in funding for Canadian farmers. Can the hon. minister please tell this Assembly how the federal government's plan to replace the CAIS program will impact Alberta farmers, specifically again in relation to these funds. We need to know how this $50 million will be distributed. We know the program has been cumbersome. It has been frustrating. How is it going to work now? This is a lot of money we're asking for, but at least it's less than what the overpayments initially had been. With the CAIS program, again, I would just say that I think all hon. members should seek advice from the minister on just how this program works and how to effectively fill out the application form because the producers that are contacting our office, they're not getting payments like that. Thank you.

Now, I have another issue. I'm not going to talk about the aircraft and the $530,000 payment. I just expect that the hon. minister in charge of Service Alberta will explain to the House how this oversight was made. There was a currency fluctuation, and that necessitates the increased expenditure. It's a transfer. It's a transfer of funding. Also, if I could get answers in regard to the transfer of funding that's on page 29.

Now, people accuse this government, Mr. Chairman, of being slow, but in this case they're really fast because it's not three weeks since the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, thought that we should take money that we're using now for energy rebate programs and turn it into a fund that encourages conservation and encourages the construction of public transit. All of these are good ideas.

I notice with a great deal of interest that some money that was left over from the energy rebate program is now being used. Ninety-one million dollars, in fact, has been provided to support the public transit programs. Hopefully, the city of Edmonton, the city of Calgary, and our other expanding municipalities will all get a share of this money. I would like to get a breakdown of that, please, because I think our municipal officials will be using that money wisely, and it would be a follow-up as to what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was talking about. I'm surprised at how quickly that was adopted – I shall use the word “adopted” – by the members across the way because usually it takes them a little longer.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I'll use the public accounts as an example. In the fall I requested that the public accounts be put online on the government's home page, on the website. I thought it was a good idea. If we were going to be open and transparent, well, this was a good place to start. I was so disappointed in the hon. Minister of Service Alberta when I got a letter indicating that, no, that wouldn't be done, but quietly the government went ahead. They never wrote me another letter – I was so disappointed – to inform me that this was going to be completed, but it's a good idea. You can feel free to take any ideas from this side of the House if they'll make this province a better place.

I'll be interested to know in the future from the hon. minister if they are monitoring that website to see how many hits they get on it. I know that they get quite a few on the Alberta heritage savings trust fund website, so it would be interesting, I'm sure, to find out how many Albertans are keen to look up and see where the money has either been spent in supplies and services or just given away in grants. In fact, with the grants I think there should be just a separate section there on golf courses. I can't understand why we're granting so much money to golf courses that restrict access by requiring members to buy a membership.

But getting back to the supplementary estimates now, Mr. Chairman, I notice that in mid-October 2005 the province of Alberta decided that they would assist northern Alberta, the Wood Buffalo district, with $136 million in bridge financing to help cope with growth pressures, and we all know the pressures the municipal government is under in the municipal district of Wood Buffalo. This was a loan that was made to ease the financial costs of a water treatment plant, a new waterline to Anzac, and a new solid waste treatment facility, which the municipality had previously identified as critical infrastructure to accommodate the expanding economic and population growth not only in Fort McMurray but in surrounding areas.

I see on page 29, the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation, where part of the money that wasn't utilized in the energy rebates, $11 million to be precise, is being provided for regional water systems projects. “The funding is required to enable municipalities to begin preliminary engineering work to develop regional water and wastewater systems.” Now, is this $11 million just being granted, and if it is being granted, why is there a double standard here? Why are you granting some municipalities money? “Here, spend it on a very worthwhile engineering project.” Yet you are forcing the Wood Buffalo district to borrow money. Why make one municipal district borrow money and just give it away to the others?

Now, my last question in regard to this matter would be: does it depend on in which area of the province the project is occurring? Now, certainly, one of the current Premier's first trips after he was sworn in was to southern Alberta, where the support for his campaign was the most modest. Some would say the weakest. I will say the most modest. Off he goes. The first place he goes is to southern Alberta to shore up his political support, right? You can't fault the guy for that, you know. You can't fault him at all. But this money, the $11 million: where is it going and why?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Would the minister wish to respond? The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps, seeing that this is a free-for-all, maybe I could just read my Committee of Supply speech. I think it would answer. If we'd have done that first, I don't think he'd have had to ask the question. Is that permissible?

Chair's Ruling Speaking Order

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, in the past a preference list or a priority list was provided to the chair, and the chair would then recognize the minister. The minister would make remarks up to 20 minutes, and then there would be questions that would follow.

Under the new rules there's no priority list that has been provided to the chair, and therefore the chair recognized the Government House Leader to move. Thereafter it is open to any member to rise and ask the question, and any minister who wishes to speak can also speak. So there's not a restriction of a priority list, but there is an open process, and anyone can participate. So at this time, hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food, if you want to speak, you're welcome to.

Mr. Groeneveld: I'm going to read my speech, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: You have 20 minutes.

Mr. Groeneveld: And a good one it'll be.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to present you with the supplementary estimates for the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. It's common for the agriculture sector to have to deal with changes. There have always been many factors that impact how well a farmer does from year to year, but in the past few years the field of agriculture has been hit hard and hit harder and seen a lot of change. The impact of drought, BSE, high input costs, and an expanding global market are just a few of the examples.

Farmers work in a climate of change. This demands that the industry and government work much harder, and we need to work together. We want programs to sustain agriculture in this province, and we have done a great deal of work to make sure that the programs we bring forward are effective business risk management programs. Rural communities in Alberta depend on agriculture, and even people who live in urban areas are impacted by what happens on the farm.

It's important to note that our agriculture sector does have a strong foundation. We couldn't weather the storms if we didn't. To borrow from an old saying, in today's climate we must be strong enough to bend. We need to be more innovative, more adept, and I'm proud to report that our growers and producers are becoming more expert business managers despite these changes. Even with the best planning and financial management there is a need for support following some unpredictable disasters. Many farmers look to the Canadian agriculture income stabilization program, or CAIS, for that support. Unfortunately, many producers have expressed concern that the funding is not responsive enough or that the formula for determining who qualifies for the funding is too narrow.

In support of the new Alberta agenda, building a stronger Alberta, our ministry plans to address these concerns with two changes related to the CAIS program. To accomplish this, we are requesting an additional $50 million, and the changes would be as follows. This year CAIS payments are expected to be another $20 million below forecast, which will allow us to redirect funds. Our payments will be lower due to a federal government payout last fall to our grain and oilseed producers. In late December Alberta decided to treat these payouts as income under the CAIS program. That will reduce CAIS contributions by $20 million and reduce the federal contribution by $30 million.

We will extend the Alberta reference margin initiative. A reference margin is an average used to determine profitability. Through CAIS an agriculture business can get funding if they are below the average, which means they are facing financial risk that year. The problem is that the national CAIS program uses a five-year average after dropping both the highest and lowest years, and with unprecedented back-to-back disasters profits have been steadily eroding. This initiative allows producers to use the five-year average or to look at their last three years, whichever is better for the producer.

Our plan is to extend the Alberta reference margin initiative one year, at about $70 million. We recognize that this is a short-term measure to help supplement the CAIS program, but it is a necessary measure. Through this initiative Alberta producers will not fall between the gaps, and I want to assure all hon. members that the prosperity and sustainability of our agriculture industry is a priority of this government. End of my speech.

Now, to touch on some of the questions that came before I got here. As I think probably the hon. member is fully aware, CAIS is only a part of the insurance program that we along with the federal government provide to our farmers. He talked a little about the overpayment possibility that's out there right now. I think probably we're not going to have a whole lot of changes to that because I think that to be fiscally responsible, we have to collect that money. Now, having said that, when the people filled out these applications and even when the cheques were sent to them, they were warned that they could be in an overpayment position because, at best, there were only estimates out there. I'll admit that the system is far from perfect, but we have to keep putting what we can out there for the farmers. So I think that that portion of it isn't going to change.

Now, if the hon. member was in question period yesterday, we talked extensively about the new program that was out, which of course is giving over $1 billion through the CAIS program. That's all federal money. That's not a 60-40 component. That is all federal money. However, it is contingent on the federal budget passing, which throws a little different light on it, of course. Out of that $1 billion, $600 million is going to an investment-type program which goes onto the top end of CAIS and which is very much like the old NISA program, where farmers can invest money and the government will match that money. The farmers have certainly been asking for that for quite some time.

The $400 million, I understand, is for the increasing cost of production and if passed will start to pay out to the farmers immediately. The hundred million that is left on a year-by-year basis is available in the fund so that when cost of production is not met, there's an available fund of money, so we don't have to go through the usual channels of going to Treasury Board and the time that it takes to implement such a plan. How many farmers is this going to affect? I think the devil is still in the details on how that's going to work. It will certainly make it a more attractive program. Will it make it an easier program to understand? I doubt it very much. That's something we have to work on.

But I think that just to get past that, if the hon. member looks in the books – and he did allude to the fact that we're talking $50 million this year. It's because of the nature of the beast that the ag department works in with these programs. Last year was an exceptionally good year, and we actually lapsed just about $291 million back to the government, but to get this year's program going again, we have to come up with $70 million, of which we already have $20 million. So it leaves us a shortfall of $50 million, which, of course, we have to understand is only to tide us over until the budget is passed. This is not new money that we're asking for over and above anything. In fact, it's less money than we have been asking for in the last couple of years.

I hope that answers the hon. member's questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be able to get up and participate in this debate on the 2006-07 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. I have a few different questions that I would throw out. I guess I'd like to start with just an overall view that once again we're into supplemental supply, and it's pleasing to see that the list of the number of ministers that have come forward is so short.

An Hon. Member: It's the second one this year.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, number two, but thank heavens it's only four or five and not 18. That is pleasing.

I guess perhaps I'll start with my first comments towards the hon. minister of agriculture, seeing as how he was the last one up. I would like to know exactly the breakdown of the $50 million and how many farmers in the province he feels that that's going towards.

The number one thing, Mr. Chairman, that I get farmers asking me is: why is this so complicated? What's the percentage of the people in the CAIS program that they're reassessing and going through and coming back? Is this $50 million because they've acknowledged that they misjudged how they assessed these farmers, or are they changing it? There are still a lot of farmers that are up in the air not knowing where they're going and where CAIS is coming from. The absolute necessity is to have this become a more simplistic form that even the accountants might be able to read. Anyways, if he could just update us on where this $50 million is going and how many they think that it's going to.

I might mention that at the top of page 15 it starts – and each of them do – details of supplementary supply estimates. Yet this is so vague. I don't know how we can use the word "detail" to debate and to question where this money is going. So I hope that he can answer that.

I would like to go on briefly, in order that more members can get up and ask their questions, to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. We have a breakdown here on the enrolment planning envelope, $31 million, and other program support, $34 million. If we could get some details on those numbers. How many more openings are we getting for that $31 million? Is it a thousand? Is it 500? What are the details that they've come up with these numbers that we're to be voting on?

Other program support: what exactly are those? We see here that there's $15 million for additional apprenticeship technical training spaces. What are the details on that? Is it a hundred? Is it a thousand? I'd be very interested to hear where this money is going.

We have $15 million for nursing degree programs at Mount Royal College and Grant MacEwan College. Again, I ask the question. It would be so much more helpful, when they bring these supplemental supplies, to have a spreadsheet to show us what the details are so that we could be informed and know rather than just have a big question. Fifteen million for the nursing degree program: I'd like an expansion on what that is.

We have $900,000 for the development of social work, the Cree language and aboriginal artist programs at Blue Quills college. What is the estimated number of students that are going to enrol in that? Do we know the size of the faculty that's going to be involved? Is there additional infrastructure that's going to be needed for that program? Obviously, the minister has the details – that's why they've put them down here – and I would appreciate the details on that.

The $34,500,000 to match private donations to the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. I probably should be able to remember what those are for, but are those specific areas that we're matching and know exactly what they're going to, or is that kind of an open, unconditional match that the universities can use in their own discretion?

Anyways, we can continue to go on. The $1.5 million for enhancing science literary awareness programs. Again, what's being enhanced? Is it the number of students that can get in there? Is it equipment? Is it a new facility that they're adding on?

The $500,000 for enhancing awards and promoting the annual gala event at the ASTech Foundation. Again, what are some details on that?

The $3 million for the genome centre. Is that completely just for the pine beetle infestation? Do they have some breakthrough technology that's exciting that this Assembly and the people of Alberta would love to hear? We do most agreeably understand the devastation of the pine beetles and where that is going to.

Turning over again – the minister has somewhat answered this, but I wasn't clear on it – to the $147 million. That's just to the physicians? It says here: "is requested to fund the higher-than-budgeted cost of physician services." I'm not right up to speed on the agreement that they're trying to sign, that trilateral agreement, but how many physicians are we talking? What are some more details on that actual transaction and if that's going to fit in there?

If I could skip over to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. On line 6.3.3 we have $15 million for affordable housing programs. Again, if we could have the numbers there. It says that this spending would be offset by a transfer from the federal government. What exactly are the details on that? Above it on page 26 it says that we have a $2 million fund for up to 600 additional units under the rent supplement program. What are the numbers that we're going to get of affordable housing programs? Some details there. I'm sure Albertans would love to know the breakdown.

Again, for the 16-plus million dollars for off-reserve aboriginal housing, what kind of numbers are we talking? Is that throughout the province, or is it in one specific area? Then we have 9 million plus dollars to assist homeless and near-homeless people through outreach teams administered by seven major community-based organizations, a total cost of $16 million. Do we have a number on how many people are in those homeless and near-homeless situations? What's the breakdown? Are we doing a good job spending that $16 million? Once again, a spreadsheet showing the details and where that's being split would be very helpful to the members of this Assembly in going over the details of those.

Perhaps my final question would be to the Minister of Finance: that we have a breakdown here of the $47 million. We've got $7 million going to reimburse the public-sector pension plan. I see that he's gone, so I don't know if he'll be answering this, but perhaps he can write it and give a written one back. Will this update it, and will it become fully funded then and we've met all of our obligations? What are the details on that one?

The $40 million lump sum for the government's share of the management employees' pension plan unfunded pension liability. Does this now fully fund that? The question is: why are we addressing the unfunded liability on one part of the sector? I'd love to know why we're not addressing the unfunded teachers' liability fund at this time with a supply estimate and trying to get on and repair the conditions between the government and the ATA, but I'll wait to hear that.

An Hon. Member: That'll never happen.

Mr. Hinman: With that attitude, you're correct. It'll never happen with this current government.

The Deputy Chair: Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, do you want to respond?

Mr. Horner: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to touch on a few of the questions there. There were a number of them rattled off in fairly quick succession. I'm still trying to get a little bit used to our new format as we roll from one department to another.

I can provide the hon. member with some of the detail that he was talking about. I would also point out specifically as an example the apprenticeship spaces. When we announced the $15 million, it was put out in a fairly broad and lengthy press release that we were providing 3,600 new apprenticeship spaces across the province, that these apprenticeship spots were located in a wide range of areas of the province: north, south, east, and west. I would encourage the hon. member to perhaps check his press releases for the detail on that one as well as some of the other donation items that we've done. I would encourage the hon. member to read Hansard tomorrow as to my answer on the matching donations because we've done that one already as well.

The genome component of what we're doing is indeed for what is, as my colleague the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has classified it, a war against the pine beetle. That $3 million request is for research and development at Genome Alberta related to the pine beetle infestations. The project is going to contribute to defensive solutions and progressive management practices to the mountain pine beetle based on the in-depth understanding of the relationship between the pine tree, the beetle, and the blue stain fungus.

Alberta's response to the mountain pine beetle has to date been operational, so a research response prepares Alberta to best deal with the existing problem. Again, Mr. Chairman, we're talking about timing here. The pine beetle's critical months are going to be coming up in the next three or four months. It's going to be very critical for us to actually have a plan in place. Therefore, these dollars were put out there fairly quickly.

He mentioned the enrolment planning envelope, and I'll refer back to my response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who had some very good questions at the start of this session about the enrolment planning envelope and why we are planning the spaces the way we planned the spaces. It's because you've got to have the capacity. You've got to have the teachers. You've got to have the faculty and the facilities and the labs and all of these things in play as you roll out the new spaces. That's working in conjunction with the postsecondary institutions to ensure that, you know, when the student shows up, there's actually something there for them to be a part of and to participate in.

I think, Mr. Chair, that answered most of those questions.

3:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Agriculture and Food minister also wanted to respond to the questions raised?

Mr. Groeneveld: Yes. I'll be very quick, Mr. Chairman. Unfortunately, like my colleague down the way there, “A” comes too soon in the alphabet, and I guess we get shot first. So with any luck, if I answer a question again, the rest of them won’t have to. I think that maybe the question was here, and I guess that reading my little story didn’t help because that told you exactly what the $50 million was going towards. It was to extend the Alberta reference margin initiative, and of course doing that keeps the reference margin up. Consequently, more people will be able to qualify if they have a disaster year.

The other part of the question, of course: I can’t tell you how many people it’s going to affect or are going to benefit from this because it depends on the disaster. It depends how the year goes. But the program is a little more palatable that way; it will cover more people. I would be the first to admit that it’s a complicated program. We are working on that, and we certainly will do our best to bring that around.

I think that, basically, that covers the questions that the hon. member was asking, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: I had the Minister of Health and Wellness as well as the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing both indicate to me. Did you both want to respond to questions raised by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner? Is that correct? Okay.

The Minister of Health and Wellness, followed by Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Hancock: I’ll be very quick. The question was raised again about the $147 million. I thought I’d answered it previously, but I’ll do it very quickly again. There are over 6,000 practising physicians in Alberta under the trilateral master agreement. We’ve attracted about 250 more over the past year. The $147 million that we’re requesting is additional money to the trilateral agreement line in the budget, which provides payments for fee for service. Obviously, a good chunk of that, in fact about $128.5 million, will go to fee for service, for rate increases, for volume increases, and for some of the existing programs, like the physician office system program and the primary care initiative. But most of that $128 million is really for the 4 and a half per cent retroactive fee increase that we’re anticipating, so that’s accruing for that.

The balance of $18.5 million will go for the clinical stabilization initiative, some things that we can do and will do even prior to the end of this month and have done in terms of working towards making sure that the physicians are available and supported in areas where there’s a high need or critical issue that has to be overcome. Obviously, the Fort McMurray issue is one of those.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member made mention of some of the programs or some of the funding that was in place. First I want to say that the affordable housing program, which you referred to, a funding of $15,173,000, is required to increase the availability of affordable housing units in the province. The surplus neutral funding was received from the federal government. This program provides one-time grants for eligible capital costs to municipalities, local community housing providers, nonprofit organizations, and private-sector groups to address the community housing needs. Those are looked at on a priority basis and, therefore, selected on a priority basis to address those needs.

The same holds true for aboriginal housing, the $16 million, which is a federal program as well, and the homeless support. After reallocating $6.5 million internally to this program, I still need about $9.5 million to fund a $16 million pilot project to assist the homeless through outreach teams administered by the seven major community-based organizations. This program provides funding for a pilot project with municipalities and community groups to provide outreach services for the homeless.

The last one that I believe you made mention of is the funding of $2 million, which was required for 600 additional units under the rent supplement program. The rent supplement program provides assistance to low-income families, seniors, individuals, and families with special needs who cannot afford the sustainable rent accommodation.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This deals with money, and it’s on page 36, Reconciliation of Adjusted Gross Amounts. Maybe the President of the Treasury Board or someone over there dealing with dollars could help me with this. Anyway, I think it’s very appropriate when you have a number of dollars – I believe that it’s approximately $38 million – returned to Treasury. It’s dealing with education, and sometimes that suggests to me that there’s a transfer of vote problem or maybe also a lack of insight into some of the needs.

Because school systems across the province are desperately in need of such things as support services in terms of guidance counsellors, reading clinicians, specialists in helping with special education students is one area that certainly is in great need. Another area is the whole question of operation and maintenance for schools. Across the province, specifically looking at Calgary, for example, we know the tremendous infrastructure problem there in terms of shifting populations, in dealing with older schools that are having problems.

The whole question of the elementary schools. They are certainly in need of more dollars in terms of the PUF grants, that cover children that are in early childhood or kindergarten, but many of these children now, a large percentage, are going into grade 1, and there’s no way that they can be assessed. There’s no money for that. So schools are many times extra resourced to provide that service. One of the government’s noble goals was: stay in school, complete high school. The completion of school, in fact, I believe was one of the Minister of Education’s goals.

The other thing that I had noticed: a question of busing in Calgary, the whole question now of a very serious problem all across the city of Calgary, the question not only of busing, because many times there is not a community school, but of acquiring bus drivers. Hopefully, there could be some use of that dollar, if it was available, to look at ways of recruiting and training bus drivers.

So, Mr. Chair, I’m trying to seek out information. My question is: that $38 million, could it have been used for services across the province, for schools that need money for different kinds of things? I’m sure that there are many more than I’ve identified. Could I maybe get someone to try and take a kick at that one?

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, a lot of the accounting methods have to do with satisfying the Auditor General. But the process today is supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, that don’t deal with anything directly in the Department of Education. So you make a very good point, you know. If we can track this money to keep the Auditor satisfied, that’s fine, but I can’t help you with that broader picture on this particular day.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to be able to rise today and engage in debate around the 2006-07 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. By way of comment, first of all, it's been a bit of a disorganized debate thus far relative to the traditional approach to supplementary supply, I guess, and I don't know if it's going to be possible to engage in an actual exchange with the minister or ministers or whether, if the answers that I seek don't satisfy me this time, I'm going to have to go to the back of the line and get back in the queue to ask another question. I'm not quite sure why this is other than I have the sense that it has something to do with a decision made on the government side not to provide a list of priority ministries or a list that in some way provides an order in which we're going to discuss these. In any event, we'll try and bring some order to chaos here.

My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. First of all, I want to commend him on spending extra money on homelessness and affordable housing. For many years in this province we have lacked collectively, I think, the political will to move affordable housing to the top of the political agenda, and there has been much movement in recent months. I like to think that I and my office were a good part of the momentum, a good part of the drivers behind this movement because, certainly, as we went through late spring, summer, and early fall, in my constituency office in Calgary-Currie I got more calls, more questions, more pleas for help around the issue of affordable housing than any other single issue, right down to the point that we've actually helped quite a number of people find new places to live because they were losing the places that they were in either because it was an apartment that was being converted to a condominium or the rent was in some cases doubling or tripling. That sort of thing. It is, beyond question, a crisis in Calgary. In fact, it's been described by at least one person with very intimate knowledge of the situation in Calgary as beyond a crisis. He says that it's a catastrophe. But it is an issue in cities all over this province and in a surprising number of towns as well.

So I commend the minister for what he has done thus far. I hope that it's just a start. I look at the throne speech and see a commitment to continue with the Affordable Housing Task Force and a commitment to continue examining the problem. I think that's good as well, but I think that simultaneously we can consult and talk and learn about the problem and also start swinging some hammers and digging some basements and making some real on-the-ground progress on this file.

So with that in mind I'm going to ask a couple of specific questions about the numbers in here, and the minister is not going to get any opposition or push back from me on the overall concept of spending this money. I am very much in support of that, but I'm curious as to what he intends to do with some of this money and how he's thought it through and whether he can provide some specific answers. For instance, on the $2 million – sure, I'll just take this in order as it appears in the book. The Government House Leader earlier indicated that the only priority I need is right here in the book if I just take it in order, so I will, although we haven't yet. Someone has to start, and I'd be pleased to.

The $2 million to fund up to 600 additional units under the rent supplement program. My question to the minister would be whether he has any kind of estimate as to how many more units might be needed to be covered under the rent supplement program as we go forward in this province. Of the $15,173,000 for the affordable housing program and the $16,142,000 for the off-reserve aboriginal housing program, in both cases I note the sentence, "This spending would be offset by a transfer from the federal government," and I just want to make sure that I'm clear on this. Because it's federal/provincial matching funds, are we talking about an initial outlay of $15 million and change for the affordable housing program and $16 million and change for the off-reserve aboriginal housing program, of which 50 per cent then would be rebated by Ottawa, or is this Alberta's half of the program? In other words, is there another $15,173,000 coming from Ottawa for affordable housing under this program and another $16,142,000 in matching dollars for the off-reserve aboriginal housing program?

It clearly makes a difference, Mr. Chairman, because – and this will lead into my next question – as the minister well knows, the definition of affordable housing is a bit of a moving target, and the cost of building a unit of affordable housing, for those of us who've been around a few years, is really quite astounding. It's been estimated, depending on the jurisdiction that you're talking about, that the cost of building one unit of affordable housing can be in the $130,000 to $150,000 range. That's per unit. I'll be very interested in the minister's comments on that, by the way. But, of course, at $130,000 a unit, $15,173,000 would only give you 116 and a half units of affordable housing across the entire province, and as the minister knows, we have to do much, much better than that. That's building from scratch, of course.

I guess the question that follows from that is whether the minister and his staff have done an estimate yet of how many housing units in each of these two programs they would expect to produce and also where those units will go, if there was a breakdown municipality by municipality. I may be getting way ahead of myself here. I don't know. I'm just curious to see how far along the program is, at least in the conceptual stage.

If I can just go back very quickly to the rent supplement program. There is a program going on in the city of Edmonton, which, I gather, is not exactly a pilot project but might turn out to be applicable in other jurisdictions, involving a sizable property management company, the city of Edmonton, and I believe there's provincial involvement as well, which involves a portable rent supplement of a sort. I'm just wondering if any of this $2 million actually includes some of those units or whether that's a separate program altogether.

One more thing, Mr. Chairman, and then I look forward to hearing the minister's responses. There's $9,531,000 to assist homeless and near-homeless people through outreach teams administered by seven major community-based organizations. The total cost of the pilot project is $16 million, and the balance of the funding has been reallocated internally in Municipal Affairs and Housing. I just want to comment on the excellence of the idea but remind the minister, of course, that these sorts of outreach programs involving outreach teams of support workers are only half of the equation. They're a very necessary half. The research indicates that they're a very necessary half of the equation to provide supported housing for individuals who need that kind of support, and they can be wildly effective.

A team or an individual who works with someone who is a hard to house individual, once he's in a unit of affordable housing, can quite literally do such things as check in with that individual a couple of times a week on the phone, make sure that they've got food in the house, that they're taking their medication if that's an issue, that they've paid the phone bill, et cetera, et cetera. That kind of arrangement, we've seen in a number of jurisdictions, can work very successfully, and this addresses the support side of supported housing. Of course, it's only successful if there's affordable housing at the end of the program.

This is one of the things we've found in Calgary, of course. The Calgary Homeless Foundation has done a wonderful job of sort of pulling together various agencies in providing all kinds of support – programs, services, individuals, outreach – for people as they climb the staircase, if you will, from being utterly homeless and helpless and without hope to dealing with everything from addiction issues, mental and physical health issues, literacy issues, job skills issues, job training, et cetera, et cetera, get them through the transitional housing phases, and we get them to the top of the staircase, Mr. Chairman. In Calgary, because there is virtually no available affordable housing, we kind of say: “Good work. You've completed the program, and now we're going to push you off the back of the staircase. You're going to fall back down into a cardboard box in the river valley because we have no affordable housing for you.”

So this part only constitutes 50 per cent of the program, and I would merely remind the minister of something that I'm sure he already knows: that we need to work very diligently, very actively on creating affordable housing in the province of Alberta so that we can meet the other 50 per cent of the need.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for his questions and observations. First of all, I need to talk about observations because your observations in Calgary are absolutely right. You know, there is a great need, but that need is also throughout Alberta in high-growth areas, in high-need areas. I also would say that those challenges are for municipalities, they are for communities, they are for agencies, but they are for all of us as well. So the solutions not only need to come from one side of the House but from all sides of the House.

The task force that we implemented with very much a narrow time frame – and I say a narrow time frame of consultation, of solutions – was done for a couple of reasons, the one reason being that the individuals we have on that committee have expertise in some of the challenges. I want to say one other thing, that a lot of the members on that committee are very much visionary and looking at positive, proactive directions that need to be taken in order for ourselves to look toward a solution to try to address the success of low-cost housing and the homeless.

Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member probably knows, we hope to have the report from that task force by March 19, give or take a day, on the recommendations that came from people all throughout Alberta. I don't have the figures in front of me, but we went to nine communities and, I would say, got a very excellent response and very good suggestions and solutions to issues and to some of the hardships that are felt in the high-growth communities.

I want to also say in trying to be a little bit more specific on your questions about the funding – and I'm going to talk about the funding of the affordable housing program on one hand and also the off-reserve aboriginal housing program – that it is federal funding that was brought into the budget and that we are utilizing. You have to wait for the new budget to look at how that will become matching.

I also want to say that I agree with you because I do believe that, on top of the other programs that are there for the homeless, the $16 million is an excellent program for seven municipalities to gather, to assess what some of the major challenges are, and also how to deal with it. I think that is the essence of that program. The first one is having the communication. The second one, of course, is the collaboration of the seven communities and the co-operation on how to deal with some of the issues. I would say that that is on top of programs that are already there.

Specifically on the comment that you made that it is a two-sided challenge: it is exactly that, a two-sided challenge. You cannot provide housing without providing some sort of a vehicle for an individual that is homeless to get from the homeless entity to maybe affordable housing to independence. I think we very much need to look at that in the solution direction.

Mr. Chairman, on the comments on how the funding allocations or the decisions are made, we do have a criteria framework for communities, agencies applying for the affordable housing program and also the off-reserve aboriginal housing program. We try to fit everybody into that criteria, and we choose the people from the highest down. Is it enough? No, it's not enough. I'm very much looking forward to the report that's coming from the housing task force to look at some of the presentations that have been made and their report on how the solutions should be implemented.

Also, I could speak about the $2 million required for the 600 additional units, and that's 600 additional units. If you look at it, you say: that sounds like a lot. It's not very many at all. The rent supplement program definitely has a lot of needs, but I stress to you also that the solutions to affordable housing, the solutions to homelessness need to be a co-operative effort with government, with municipalities, with agencies, with communities. I think that that's the only way that we'll be able to have a successful direction.

So I hope that I answered most of your questions. What I will do, if you would like, is send you more details. I don't have that report, but I can send you a more detailed accountability of how that funding will be spent, if you would so desire.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise to join the debate that has been under way for the last almost 90 minutes now on the 2006-07 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. I believe that we dealt with No. 1 in the very short sitting at the end of August last year. This is the first opportunity since that time, since the long absence from this Chamber by hon. members, that we have now before us these supplementary supply estimates second time around.

Mr. Chairman, some general comments. Over the last three years we have missed the full fall session twice, I think, in 2004 because an election was called and then last year because of a change in the leadership of the party in power and the leadership contest. Some of these estimates, some of these numbers, some of these requests may be attributable to the absence from their work of ministers in charge of their portfolios because they were busy campaigning for one candidate or another.

Now that we have these supplementary estimates before us, it becomes a little more difficult to address them also because the ministries that were there until December of 2006 have been either reorganized, merged with each other, or disappeared from the roster. So this reorganization and restructuring of the cabinet has also resulted in leaving their imprint on the estimates as we see them: some transfers from previous departments to new ones, and whatever have you. The reconciliation of numbers at the end of this booklet therefore does show how those funds may have been transferred.

That being said, I have a couple of questions for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, who now is responsible, in addition to what used to be the department of advanced education, for innovation and science. When I look at the supplementary estimates, it's obvious that some of the numbers relate to the work that used to be the responsibility of the department that was merged into this one. If the minister would take a minute to say exactly what those numbers are that are coming from that merger in the estimates.

I should note that the minister was very courteous and helpful in inviting me as well to the first meeting, and we went over some general issues. The minister told us what his agenda was going to be for the session in general and extended the invitation to this member and others to get in touch with him if we need more information. So thank you, Mr. Minister, for that initiative.

Now, to a specific question that I have here. It relates to some numbers on page 12, the department summary, expense and equipment/inventory purchases vote. Under expenses, item 5, support to postsecondary learners, I notice that there's an underexpenditure of $31 million with respect to that item that's being reported here, $31 million that was not spent. Normally I would applaud if various ministries and departments underspend their estimates and the money goes back into the general revenue at the end of the year. This particular item, however, causes me some concern. There are some questions which I want to put to the minister, and I hope he will address those.

Support to postsecondary learners, I trust, includes financial assistance to postsecondary students, which includes loans and others. I've been hearing from student representatives as well as from individual postsecondary students who may have stopped into my constituency office to complain about the difficult and almost impossible to meet qualifying requirements that are in place in order for many postsecondary students to access loans and financial assistance in the province. Those conditions are so onerous, so demanding. The bar is set in such a way that many people simply find themselves disqualified.

I wonder if some of this underexpenditure under support to postsecondary learners is a result of those unacceptably stringent and high qualifying conditions for accessing financial assistance and this support. If that is so, then I want the minister, of course, also to perhaps comment as to whether he is willing to review those conditions to make those conditions less demanding, if there is, in fact, some need to revisit and review those student loan arrangements, thereby increasing access of students in financial need, knowing as we do the need for us to do everything that we can to attract more Albertans to our postsecondary system, to attract more high school graduates to choose to come to postsecondary institutions before they join the labour force if they can, knowing that our participation rate is fourth or fifth in the country, and we want to be number one.

Secondly, I also hear, of course, from students, many of whom are in pressing need of assistance. If there's a growing need, as I suspect there is, given that the costs of going to school have been escalating over the years, and if it is true that we have targets set for us as a province to have our enrollments increase and participation rates increase, and if it's also true that we want to make our postsecondary system more responsive to the labour market needs, which we are now trying to meet by inviting people from outside the province and outside the country to come here and join our labour force, then I think the answer is clear that we must make more support available to postsecondary students to attract them to our schools and to keep them there until they complete their programs. So I hope the minister will address that question.

The other item on the same page is 8, innovation implementation. I think this comes from the other ministry that's been merged with the ministry of advanced education. Again, there is an underexpenditure in implementation – I suppose of increasing innovation capacity? I don't know exactly what innovation implementation means. So I think that probably will require only a very brief comment by the minister.

Some other questions. There is $34.5 million for a grant to match private donations to the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. If I heard the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and the number that he quoted, that $24 million of this will be going to the University of Alberta to the China Institute, then my question to the minister is the following. The donation from the Mactaggart family to the University of Alberta was $37.5 million. I was present at the opening of the institute in the Telus centre on the university campus. Mrs. Mactaggart was one of the speakers, and I recall vividly her expressing both frustration and disappointment over the fact that the government of Alberta had not delivered in matching their generous donation to the University of Alberta with respect to the China Institute.

Now, $24 million certainly goes some ways towards meeting it. The question to the minister is: has some money on top of this $24 million already gone to the University of Alberta towards matching the Mactaggart donation, or is this the first allocation towards matching that? If it's the first one, then there is a balance of some $11 million to $13 million, depending upon what the total value of the donation from the Mactaggarts is, and my question to the minister then is: if there is sort of a gap of $11 million, $12 million, $13 million, when is he hoping to eliminate that gap? When are you going to address that concern that Mrs. Mactaggart expressed rather passionately at that opening meeting of the institute?

Genome Alberta: is this a group of researchers located across Alberta or at one institution or at one research institute? I must confess my ignorance on Genome Alberta's location or how it operates. Is this the first allocation to this particular research entity to do research on the mountain pine beetle? The mountain pine beetle has been around across our borders now for some two or three years, and it has already wreaked havoc in the neighbourhood of $60 billion in B.C. alone. So the threat to the economy of Alberta, that part of it which relates directly to forestry and the industries associated with it, is serious and large, a very, very serious threat. I wonder if this is the first allocation, and if so, why we have been remiss in not proactively engaging our research community to find the answers to the problem to the extent that they are scientifically available.

One last question. The minister answered this question about the supplementary allocations of $15.7 million for nursing degree programs at the Mount Royal College and the Grant MacEwan College. Now, my understanding is that these programs start either in September, when the fall session starts, or in January, when the second semester starts. The minister had an answer that confused me, that you make funds available only when these programs roll out.

Now, is it because we missed the fall session – we didn't sit then – that these funds are being requested now, when in fact they should have been requested at least in November-December so that they would become available to these two institutions at the beginning of the term in January, the second semester term? Or am I not able to see through the complexities that the minister is privy to, and if so, will he share his ideas about how this thing really works? Why is it now that his department realized that this additional money is needed if in fact those programs started either in September or in January?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I think I'll be fairly brief. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had some very good questions. I know, given his history, that he has a very strong passion for postsecondary and has spent a lot of time there, probably more than I did. He was obviously more successful at the academic side than I was.

The innovation and science component of what used to be innovation and science, which is now the technology part of our department: I actually don't look at them as two different sides of the department. We are trying to blend the two of them together because they make a very good fit. There is a tremendous amount of research that is done at our postsecondaries right from the technical side all the way through to the university research that is being done in, you know, globally recognized institutions in this province, so a lot of money that goes to our postsecondary is part and parcel of some of our innovation and science package, if you will, because of the research that we do. Things like the WorldSkills competition, where we've got 850 competitors from 47 countries coming around the world to showcase Alberta's talent in the apprenticeship and trade sector: that's part and parcel of where we had the applied research as well, in some of our trade and technology institutes.

The life sciences component is also part of our innovation or technology portfolio. The genome research: they are not the first dollars that have gone to genome research for mountain pine beetle. It is a top-up. As I know the hon. member is very aware, you get to a certain point in your research, and you need to take that next step in order to try to get the benefit of the stage that you're at. So what we see is that this is taking that next step because coming up this spring, we could have a very, very serious problem. We want to be as prepared as we possibly can.

The Science Alberta Foundation. Again, I know the hon. member is aware of this foundation. It's a great foundation to get science into the classroom and helps adult learners understand what science is really all about. More importantly, it gets young people interested in pursuing a career in the sciences, so obviously helping us to fulfill the ranks of our postsecondary in our sciences curriculums. We just view that as a great way to tie the innovation or the technology side of our portfolio and the research and development that's going on and show kids why it's important that they should actually be looking at the sciences, so that they can achieve and be part of that new generation.

The Alberta science and technology awards. It's a very important step, I think, and I believe the hon. member would agree with me here too, that we have to reward excellence. We have to reward achievement. We have to reward good science. As part of that program we help leverage dollars, and these are really leverage dollars. It's not the total cost. We help leverage dollars with industry to recognize excellence in research and excellence in technology development, and that's what that's all about.

Not a lot in the package of supplementary estimate for the technology side because we're doing some very good work there. A lot of it is endowment-based, so a lot of it has already been funded and flowed through. It's my hope that, you know, when we see the next budget, we'll see some other things there.

In terms of line 5, that the hon. member referenced in the department summary, the $31 million, he is very correct. That has everything to do with student finance. At the beginning of the year the student finance system estimates what the potential loan volume is going to be. It sets a number. That's the number that's in the budget. If by the end of the year we have not reached that amount – really, it's a net cost. This is really a cost of what we have reimbursed to students or given out in bursaries or grants or those sorts of things, so it's the cost to the government. It's not the total borrowing; it's the cost to the government. This is an amount that represents what students did not borrow.

So what happens is that we lapse it into our department. We requested that these dollars be utilized in this supplementary estimate, so the dollars are utilized back into the things that we're putting forward today in our supplementary estimates. The hon. member asked the question: "Well, why? Why would we not have more students taking part in the student finance system?" There are a number of reasons, I found out. I initially thought, as a businessperson and a parent of postsecondary students, that it was because of the complexity or the cost. Having gone on to the web-based system that we have and made the application and gone through the system, it really isn't all that complicated.

Based on this needs-based system, we have some issues, and it was brought forward in the learning report last fall. We have some issues where we need to bring up some of the things under the cost-of-living basis. The student cars, these sorts of things, I think we probably need to address down the road, and we're going to look at that. We are working on that.

One of the things that came to me from a number of different sources was that part of the problem – these complexities are nationwide. We're not the only ones that have this type of student finance system. In fact, many places in Canada would tell you that ours is actually less complicated than some of the other provinces, which is almost hard to believe but true. What they are telling us and what some of the numbers would indicate: in a very robust economy where part-time employment is very easily had, with very good incomes from part-time employment, you will see students not wanting to borrow as much but perhaps doing more part-time work. That lowers our portion of the borrowing.

The other thing that you'll see is that because they have other income, they may actually borrow from somebody else. Not a wise move in many cases because we have a lot of remission and bursaries and grants that are included in our package, and students should take a very, very, very close look at what is best for them financially. But it is something that we've seen in the numbers, that in a good economy there's less drive for student finance. Now, we need to make our student finance more applicable to the current economy, and we are working on that, Mr. Chairman.

The access to the future fund. The original Mactaggart family donation was $37.3 million in value, so that means that we have, by rough calculation, $10 million to $12 million yet to go. There was and is some discussion between the family and the university about how they were going to match. The hon. member may remember that we did announce $12,500,000 as a match last fall. We haven't actually announced the other $12 million, but I guess we just did. We will be chatting with the Mactaggart family – it's amazing how this works – about changing and actually speeding up the matching that they had done with the U of A, with their program. So we expect that we will actually speed this process of matching that and hope to have it done within the next year or two. That's my hope. That's the goal that we have.

The reason – again I go back to the response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark – is that this was announced at the same time that the access to the future fund was announced but not when we had the guidelines and the formula that we were going to actually use with all of the postsecondaries on the revenue that was going to be generated from the fund. Even when the fund is fully funded, none of the institutions would be getting enough in one year to match this type of donation in one year. The intent is that they would then match it over a period of two or three years.

So this one was an upfront one that kind of was very much off-the-mark as well as a couple of others. We are endeavouring at every opportunity we can to ensure that the families are okay with how we're matching and ensure that the postsecondary institutions understand where we are financially in the access to the future fund as well as working with the council to say: you know, how can we make this thing work, and how can we fix the issue and move forward as well as plan for the access to the future fund going forward? That will be announced in the next little while.

Now, the nursing spots. Obviously, Grant MacEwan College is currently doing a four-year degree program. Mount Royal College actually is currently providing a four-year program as well. The degree comes from Athabasca University, I believe. We have been working with both institutions. This is partly a dollar value that is attributed to the health workforce plan because the nurses are a part of the health workforce plan that we have working with Health, working with immigration, EII, whatever. It is part of that plan, and as part of that plan – and I'm sure the hon. member would recognize that – it's not only the institution, the labs that have to be in play, the faculty and the teaching, but then you also have to have the spots in the health care facilities with mentoring and teaching personnel there for their – I forget the word now. When they go to work in the workplace.

Dr. Pannu: Practicums.

Mr. Horner: Practicums. Yes. Thank you. For their practicums. So we have to make sure that we have those spots available for the nurses as they're coming off the stream. Indeed, we're also currently talking to both institutions about how we might be able to expand the number of graduates that we get out of those institutions, and we hope to get some good news out of that fairly soon.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I've covered most of the spots.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to supplementary estimates 2006-07. Let me say that I acknowledge the extraordinary growth in the province and the challenging times that the government has in budgeting, and I recognize that supplementary estimates are a necessary but unfortunate consequence of that. However, extra funds are obviously not the whole answer.

I wanted to say a few words about where I think we're not spending supplementary estimates that we really should be. That, for me, is very clearly in the area of the environment. Environment is sorely lacking in resources to do the job that we've asked it to do, especially at this time of extraordinary growth and demand, clearly unable to fully fund one of the most critical areas, which is Water for Life, and have adequate inventory of our water resources so that we can manage them sustainably and groundwater mapping to assure that we know the impacts of water withdrawals on the surface as they relate to the groundwater.

I would have loved to see supplementary estimates addressing the sustainable resources and environmental management department that's been burrowing away for almost a year now to try to get some semblance of planning into the provincial land use and balance the needs of agriculture and energy, forestry and municipal growth. I would love to have seen some injection into full funding for a green plan for this province addressing some of the energy conservation opportunities, the real business opportunities, I would add, including the business opportunities related to renewable energy, which is starting to tick along but needs at least equal incentives to what the fossil fuel industry has been receiving for decades.

I would love to have seen a little supplemental support for taking a full inventory of our contaminated sites and an adequate approach to ensuring upfront funding capital to ensure that the corporations actually pay for the damages that naturally do occur. Clearly, we need a comprehensive monitoring and enforcement system in the province that empowers our staff in Alberta Environment to do the challenging, everyday work of assessing whether our environment is in fact improving, whether it's staying the same, or in many cases clearly getting worse in terms of its quality.

So with those comments, I just needed to remind us that giving Alberta Environment .5 per cent of the provincial budget does not reflect the priority in most Albertans' minds that it should, and I would hope that this government in its upcoming budget will seriously look at doubling the funding for Alberta Environment so that it can truly reflect the high priority that Albertans, indeed all Canadians, place on protecting and enhancing the environment for future generations. That's doubly a concern with climate change and the tremendous and somewhat unpredictable devastation that's coming as a result of the climate changing: extreme weather events, new infectious diseases, droughts. Clearly, we have to show significant vision and leadership in this area.

I want to turn now, Mr. Chairman, to some of the health issues just because I'm particularly connected there and have interest in it. I'm pleased that the government has been able to settle with the physicians. That's going to go a long way to ensuring that we retain and even attract new physicians to the province, and we are direly in need of that.

Clearly, money is not going to solve all the issues, and there are a number of issues that I'm hoping the new health minister will address, including the full scope of professional practice, that have not been adequately addressed: the unhealthy work environments that staff are coping with and in some cases poorly coping with; the inadequate investment in prevention, in early intervention; the inadequate investment in home care, which could reduce the struggle with code burgundies in hospitals and move people more quickly into home-care situations, which are much more efficient and effective and satisfactory for individuals; strengthening the mental health services and their connections to the health authorities and their front-line support to address the increasing stresses and strains and concerns of people in this rapidly expanding economy with new Canadians and new residents of the province; and an area that I haven't heard discussed at all, which is the need for new experts in health impact assessment, relating to some of the massive developments that are going on in the province.

When I have consulted with health officers in the province about new developments in their area, asking them what health impact assessment is being done before some of these great developments like upgrader alley, there is a bit of discomfort, and what I often get is the health impact assessment done by a consultant for the company. We don't have the expertise, it seems, or at least our health authorities are not requesting resources to get health impact assessments independently done, to try to anticipate and mitigate the significant health impacts that many people are certainly concerned about. Some of it may be imaginary, but some of it may indeed be very real, such as those people in the upgrader alley concerned about the very high levels of fluoride being emitted from one of the plants and now an advisory against eating vegetables in their area because of the high fluoride levels.

Without adequate expertise in the health regions, it's very difficult for people to have confidence that the government is approving projects with the full knowledge of the health impacts. We need experts, new people in the province to help us to do some of those impact assessments.

On more usual issues I wanted to raise the question of whether there is any appetite in the health minister's office to examine whether we're getting value for money in our health care system and, to that extent, whether we need some supplemental investment. Looking at exactly what has happened since regionalization occurred over 10 years ago, it's not clear to many of us that we have actually increased or improved . . .

Point of Order Relevance

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, are you rising on a point of order?

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Lethbridge-West. Yes. There are no doubt many, many people on the speakers' list today, and I am one of them. I believe that under Orders of the Day we are here to discuss specifically the supplementary supply estimates. This is not a forum to draft and deliver a speech on general government policy. I would ask the chairman's direction to the speaker if I am right or to me if I am wrong.

The Deputy Chair: Clearly, you are seeking clarification and not necessarily raising a point of order. At the estimates level we have a wide latitude for debate, and members are able to raise other concerns. We have never constrained them in expressing those concerns. I also believe the hon. member is raising issues with regard to health and wellness, which is part of the estimates that we are dealing with currently.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, you may proceed.

Debate Continued

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have one more question, and it relates to this new funding and the extent to which this may be helping to relieve some of the health pressures in Fort McMurray.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To deal with the question that was specific to the estimates: as I indicated earlier, of the $147 million about $28.5 million is intended to be allocated towards implementation of a form of the clinical stabilization initiative that I mentioned earlier and that was discussed earlier today as part of the new agreement.

The resources for the program that we put in place with respect to taking doctors up to Fort McMurray came out of the fee-for-service process, but this supplemental estimate will help to provide some of those funds. In any event, whether the agreement is approved or not, we still need to deal with some of the issues, and that one was one that we were able to negotiate with the regional health authority and the AMA. So in response to the earlier question from the Member for Edmonton-Centre, about 50 physicians applied to assist with the issues in Fort McMurray. Approximately a dozen have been hired, so to speak, to engage in that. All shifts have been filled until the end of April. We've had good take-up, good support for the region through that program, and freed up the pressure on the local physicians through that process, so that proved to be a good interim measure.

Some of the other things that you mentioned I think are worthy of discussion, but I am conscious of the fact that others want to talk about the estimates that are before us. A full scope of practice, obviously, is something that I've been championing for a long time, not just as Minister of Health and Wellness. The concept and, I think, the government policy that a health care professional should be able to practice to the full extent of their capability, expertise, and training is something that we don't have yet and that we need to work hard on implementing. Simply put, we want to make sure that health service is provided by the most appropriately trained, least-cost provider so that we can lever the value of all of the health care professionals we have in the system.

That's really one of the concepts behind the primary care networks, for example. Yes, you have doctors offering primary care, but they're also able to work with other health care professionals to truly provide a full range of services and lever the health resource that we have, the people resource that we have, to make the best use of it.

A healthy work environment is absolutely a very important issue. In fact, I just spoke at the health boards of Alberta conference at noon today and noticed on their agenda that a healthy work environment was one of the topics for the conference. Healthy workplaces are very, very important. As we come through with the workforce strategy that your colleague was asking about earlier, one of the pieces of workforce strategy has got to be about healthy workplaces. How do we make sure that the people that we have are well treated, working in healthy environments, and are in fact able to fully participate because they are healthy? So that's important.

Investment in prevention. I wish you'd heard the text of my speech today and so many other times since I've been appointed. I absolutely, fundamentally believe that the way to make sure that we have an affordable, sustainable acute-care system that's there when our parents need it and when our children need it is to ensure that Albertans have the opportunity to be and stay healthy. That means living in healthy communities, having healthy activities, and being supported with the advice and assistance they need to promote their own health. That doesn't mean that we won't need an acute-care system, but if we want an acute-care system that's there when we need it, we have to promote health.

Strengthening mental health is absolutely a part of that. I think my predecessor made a very good start last September when she announced the children's mental health strategy. I'm going to do everything I can within the resources that I have available to support that initiative and to make sure that mental health support services are there. We'll be talking more about that even over the course of the spring as we bring in amendments to the Mental Health Act that allow for community treatment orders. Of course, community treatment orders are only one piece of the process. You really need to have the assertive community treatment available for people in the community. Again, I'm going to be working to make sure that we can resource that as well as possible.

Increased stress and strains. I think that's part of the workforce issue, but it's broader than that. We can reduce the stress on our acute-care system if we reduce the stress on us as individuals. The environmental impact on us in terms of what that does to our health needs to be part of the equation, and it needs to be part of the discussion.

New experts in health impact assessments. I'm very pleased to be working with Dr. Roger Palmer, the new dean of the public health faculty at the University of Alberta. Actually, last week he was good enough to bring together a group of public health professionals, both public health officers and people who've been doing research and support in areas of public health. I think that's an area that we really need to encourage and support: how we do health assessments, how we look at the environmental impact, the environmental load, how it impacts our community and personal health. So I'm going to be interested in pursuing that. That's obviously an embryonic area for us because, as you well know, most of the pressure on the health system is to continue to fund the acute-care side. It's very difficult to move resources and focus to the wellness side, but that's one of my formal mandate statements, and I'm certainly going to try and fulfill that mandate.

Value for dollars is obviously very, very important. When you have, you know, in excess of 36 per cent of the provincial budget and a budget of the size that this province has, if we want to have more resources to do more things, we've certainly got to be able to say to Albertans that we're using the resources we have effectively and efficiently and we're using them well. So I have met with the stakeholders from the health system, with board chairs and CEOs and others that are in the system. In January I met with them. I followed up with individual meetings in certain areas, and we're meeting with board chairs again next week. Certainly, that is one of the primary concern areas that I want to bring forward, that we need to be open and accountable. The public needs to be able to have confidence that the dollars that are going into the health regions and into health care delivery in the acute-care side are being used in the most effective manner.

We need to make sure that although we have nine health regions doing delivery as well as the Cancer Board and the Mental Health Board, they are working as part of a province-wide system, we're borrowing best practices from each other rather than competing with each other, we're not duplicating in areas of chronic disease management or other areas where we can do things together, and we're making an effective use of the resources that we have.

Your questions, actually, really fed into the full scope of where I hope to go, so I appreciate that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to begin by congratulating the government on bringing forward the estimates. Not only are they aligning, of course, with the Premier's five priorities of govern with integrity and transparency, manage growth pressures, improve Alberta's quality of life, build a stronger Alberta, and provide safe and secure communities, but at the same time they're also addressing the 20-year strategic plan that this government brought forward to the people of Alberta a year or so ago.

Now, I don't want to drill too deeply into any of the five departments that are involved but just indicate that Advanced Education and Technology, of course, is important to every member here in the House and, of course, to government members particularly because of the pillar in the strategic plan, wherein we talk about leading and learning.

Agriculture and Food. I don't have any specific questions for the minister but just remind him that agriculture is not our past; it's our future. My BlackBerry just went off, and it caught a touchy spot there. [interjection] Actually, I thought it was the BlackBerry; apparently, it was the minister of Agriculture. He gave me a nice little pat for my comments. You folks might be wondering about relevance at this point, but I'll bring that into context.

The finances here: I don't want to spend any particular time on that.

Health and Wellness: we have heard from others today about some of the issues there.

Then, of course, the housing concerns in municipal affairs.

I want to spend my time, though, in Advanced Education and Technology. I appreciate the numbers that have been put forward in this particular area, but they have raised some concerns. Specifically, in terms of additional apprenticeship technical training spaces $15,100,000 is a significant amount. What worries me is that the money may be directed to the seats themselves, forgetting entirely about the kinds of equipment, the kinds of curriculum that in the modern Alberta need to go along with those particular seats. I would like the minister, when he has an opportunity, to perhaps indicate what amount of that particular total will be for basically, then, the enrolment of Albertans but, also, what amount of that money is required to build capacity within our postsecondary system in order to accommodate the learning. Now, I can recall in previous days in advanced education that a great deal of money was required on the part of the taxpayers of this province in order to keep the colleges current with the kinds of equipment that they would then use within the particular programs. I'd hope that the amount of money that is being spent would also go toward streamlining the delivery of apprenticeship programs.

One of the things that I'm experiencing from an anecdotal situation is people calling the office indicating that their son or daughter or husband or wife has been unable to move forward in their apprenticeship program because the fact is that the employer is not in a position to let them go do their institutional training on a timely basis, that the employer is so stretched for the skilled labour that he or she is looking for that they're simply unable to allow the person to go for the other portion of their program. Now, this would be working against, then, the stated goals of this government, of course, in providing that education. So we need to be looking at the kinds of things that we can do to provide flexibility in how the program is delivered. I think that this would pay side benefits to the fact that maybe with more flexibility, if we could do it at work sites, then we're actually using equipment of real employers and real contractors rather than being required to equip a postsecondary institution.

Mr. Chairman, $15,700,000 is there for nursing degree programs. I don't know of anybody in this Assembly that would argue with that. I've tried to listen as closely as I can to other members that have spoken, and I believe – at least what I've heard – that many, if not all, of them have been supporting the minister in this particular request. I would, though, again because of some experience in this field – it's not all-encompassing; I, like everyone else, have lots to learn. What we're finding, I believe, in many of these programs and, I think, nursing specifically is that we have to be cautious of something that is labelled credential creep.

We have to be very cognizant, I think, that the kind of training that is going on is actually meeting the demands that we have – and in this particular case, we're talking about nurses – that it actually meets the demands of the type of care that we need within that system. I mean, it's fine for a two-year nursing program to become now a bachelor's degree. I am pro-education, but I'm wondering if we're spending $15 million in order to bring nurses with two-year programs up into four-year programs, or just what is happening. I am encouraged by the advent of the Health Professions Act where people are able to work in areas where they have the technical expertise, so I congratulate doctors as they recognize nurse practitioners. I congratulate those doctors that are involved in pilot projects. They recognize now that nurses have some understanding of the kinds of services that someone just coming in off the street to the clinic might require, and I want to congratulate the learning system, then, providing nurses with that kind of expertise with which they can do it.

If we are ever going to get to a position of controlling costs in our health care system, we have to have a payment methodology that is not based solely on the doctor being required to touch you in order to get paid. You might have a situation that you don't need to see the doctor at all. Of course, fees for services will have to be paid and usually directed through the physician, but we need to have flexibility throughout this area.

I wanted to raise an objection somewhat tongue-in-cheek. I sit beside a Cree. I'm wondering where the Blackfoot stuff is. Where else was I going with this? Is this a video Hansard or just the written Hansard so that any of my wise remarks will go unknown because black words on white paper will hardly pick up the witty repartee in which I'm involved.

Ms Blakeman: It's audio streamed, so they get to hear every word.

Mr. Dunford: Oh, they do? There'll be thousands and thousands and thousands of people that will be listening to me right now. Hi, Alberta. You're doing good.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any minister wish to respond?

The Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Just very, very briefly, Mr. Chairman. I have to agree with much of what my colleague from Lethbridge-West had to say, certainly, on the importance of postsecondary and how critical it is to our success and what these supplementary estimates are doing to help us along that path.

I just want to talk a little bit about the apprenticeship side of things. Of the allocation that we have, $3.3 million has been allotted to equipment to help us make it more worker friendly, if you will, to help the employers find better spots for their employees to take the apprenticeship training when they can and when they need to. We're also looking at a number of more mobile training spaces because I agree with the hon. member that it's better to take it to where they work so that they can either utilize the equipment of the employer or the equipment that we can provide through a mobile space.

The credential creep issue. It's not just in the nursing component. It's also in other components of the health professions or in some of the other professions. It is critically important, and it's a critical component of our health workforce plan that the scope of practice has to be reviewed and has to be looked at so that if you have – and the health minister has said this on a number of occasions too – a nurse with a four-year degree or a five-year degree, that nurse is doing the things that she was trained to do with that four-year degree or five-year degree and not doing things that, well, she's overtrained to do, let's say. I think it's very, very important that we get our scope of practice and those types of rules right.

Other than that, Mr. Chairman, I'll answer any other questions in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. It only took me an hour and a half to get back to complete my short round of questions with the minister of health, just to complete that series. Mr. Minister, thank you for the information about the number of doctors that were recruited in Fort McMurray, the 50 doctors, of which 12 were put into the program. I'm wondering if we had a smooth transition between each of those 12 doctors as they came and went on their doctor-for-a-day shifts.

The way it was described to me was that, essentially, a doctor for the day admits to the hospital patients that don't have a family physician, so they become, then, the doctor on record for those admitted patients. Now, at a certain point that doctor for the day is going to leave town; whatever it is, three days later, four days later. Well, doctors have a code, and they're not allowed to just walk away from or abandon patients. They're responsible for making sure that the patient has been transferred to somebody else.

The issue that arises is that if you don't have the next doctor for the day that's come up from somewhere, what are you going to do with those patients? So this doctor may well have admitted, let's say, 15 people to the hospital over the course of four days. Now he's got to hand these 15 patients over, but you are already oversubscribed with the local physicians. That's why you were brought in as doctor for the day. The next doctor for the day is not there. Now what are you going to do with these people? You can't leave until you get them handed over to somebody. So if you can't hand them off, which you can't, then you're going to have to medevac them to Edmonton. Well, Edmonton won't take the medevacs unless they've got room. That makes sense too.

So they could end up sitting up there in Fort McMurray, and I don't know if they'd still be on the $1,200-a-day deal if their time allocation was over, but they're now trying to transfer their patients through to Edmonton. So I'm just wondering: one, have we had direct linkages from each doctor to the next with no time lapses in between, and two, if we didn't, then what accommodation was made? You know, how many medevacs into Edmonton have we had as a result of those doctors having to transfer the responsibility of those patients to other doctors? If they weren't able to in Fort McMurray, then how many had to be medevacked out to Edmonton?

The other issue I'd be interested in hearing from the minister about – and I take it that they're not specifically addressed in the $147 million that appears in the supplementary estimates for Health and Wellness – is the situation with the doctors in Grande Prairie, which I'm sure the minister is aware is very similar to the situation doctors in Fort McMurray are facing. Now, I've been up there a couple of times and talked to a number of them repeatedly, and they were quite at the end of their tether. I think we all became alive to this back in the summer when they had to start closing the ICU. This was at one point sort of, "Well, this is the usual summer holidays," but in fact they had departments closed for extended periods of time over the summer.

As was pointed out to me, if you don't have an operational ICU, that restricts a number of other things that you can do in your hospital. For example, you know, you can't necessarily take people into emergency because if you had to perform surgery on them and they then required an ICU to care for them following that – well, if you don't have an ICU, you can't take them into surgery because you can't put them in that position where they'd require it and you can't provide it. So I'm wondering if the minister contemplated inside this money any additional assistance for Grande Prairie. I'm aware that the most intense part of their situation is around recruitment, which isn't really addressed in the tripartite agreement. That's essentially directed towards retention. But I'm wondering if anything was anticipated here, and I feel obliged to ask on behalf of the doctors in Grande Prairie.

One of the other issues that's involved in this, and it moves outside the scope of this minister's riding, but this is one of the occasions that I find often happens where you need a cross-ministry initiative. You've heard me talk about the need for child care spaces in Alberta. One of the places that this was brought into a very sharp relief for me was by some nurses in Grande Prairie who said: "We've got nurses here that want to work. They want to take the shift. They can't get child care, so they can't come in." So other nurses were having to double shift or to work repeated double shifts throughout the week, yet there were nurses there that were trained that wanted to work, but they couldn't get the child care relief to come in. So has the minister looked at any cross-ministry initiatives?

You know, the innovation fund – sorry; let me just find that media release. There was a section that sort of might be able to be classified as an innovation fund, the "clinical stabilization initiative," on which there weren't really any details, but it says that the "communities will be dealt with on a case-by-case basis" and finalized by June 2007. So it's outside of the parameters of the supply estimates, but maybe some work was done on it inside of this year that would allow you to do that kind of innovation cross-ministry to be able to make more of this work.

I think that also stacks up with things like advanced education and distance learning to train people in their home communities. One of the things that we know works is that if you take people out of rural areas, train them as health professionals, they're very likely to return to those rural communities to practise their particular health profession. Increasingly I think there's some innovation happening to actually deliver the health worker training out into the rural areas in the hopes that they would just keep people out there and retrain them as they continue to live in the community, and then they can serve the community as a trained health worker.

That was my series of questions to the minister of health.

Minister of advanced education, I know a number of people have questioned you, and I did try and make note of the questions. I'll maybe go back to one of the questions I asked earlier today, which was around the support, and again this becomes cross-ministry. What work has the advanced education minister done to ensure that the infrastructure, equipment, and faculty needs to support the new space creation are there for the universities?

We know that Grant MacEwan, for example, has a whole new facility that they're building in the Robbins centre for the new health diplomas and certificates and degrees that they're offering there. I'm less worried about their space needs and equipment needs and faculty needs, but I have heard from three of the universities – Alberta, Calgary, and Lethbridge – that that's a concern for them.

You know, I'm pushing the government hard to create more spaces in postsecondary institutions that will train health workers – and I'm talking doctors, nurses, and allied health professionals – but obviously it's more than just sticking a bunch of people in a room. You've got to have the faculty to teach them, you've got to have a room to put them in, and for the purposes of health you've got to have the equipment that they will need to use or that they should be trained on.

I'm looking to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology for what support is anticipated. Is there anything anticipated in the supplementary supply for those universities specifically? Is there additional money in here for Mount Royal and Grant MacEwan colleges for the rest of their medical programs aside from the nursing degree program?

That's good. I'll look forward to getting a response from those two ministers. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to respond to some of the questions, and I'll have to look to see whether I can get additional information. The whole question of the operation of the program in the detail that you're asking for isn't something that I have at my fingertips, so I'll check.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

I think I can say this with some degree of certainty: if there was a problem with the program, I would have heard about it. I haven't, so I'm assuming that it's working well, that doctors are going in to cover the shifts pursuant to the program that we put in place and that they're not having problems transferring patients.

I'm very conscious of the fact that what's happening in Fort McMurray can be a model for what can happen in other parts of the province as well, and that is that we are learning better how to use the full range of health care professionals, being able to deal with a patient and use the skills of the nursing staff and the other health care professionals as well as the doctors. I think we'll find this as a good incubator of a stronger model of that.

I can't answer, specifically, your question as to whether there's a problem with doctors handing off patients. I'm sure that if we were using resources medevacking patients to Edmonton or elsewhere just because of a hand-off issue, I would have heard of that. I'm going to suggest that it's not a problem, and if it is a problem, I'll get back to you and let you know.

Similar problems in Grande Prairie? Yes, there are similar problems. We have a shortage of doctors, and we have a shortage of specialists in various areas, and that's manifesting itself right across the province and, as you may have heard earlier in the day, right across the country and perhaps across North America and the world. There is a shortage, and we're feeling the impact of that shortage because our economy is strong and our province is growing.

Fort McMurray was a special case and needed immediate assistance because of its high rate of growth over an extended period of time and its relative isolation. In Grande Prairie or Edmonton or Calgary you have at least the possibility of picking up some of the issues relating to growth through infrastructure that's there, and you can absorb the impact more appropriately. Now, certainly in Grande Prairie there are issues and, as I say, right across the province. I signed a lot of part five letters in the last month. There's a lot of recruitment happening, and we're certainly working to help health authorities and regions recruit doctors and other health care professionals for their areas and working in terms of how we make sure that accreditation is not a significant problem in doing so.

There's no easy answer to it. We will be doing more to help with recruitment. There's not a lot built into the trilateral agreement related to recruitment, but part of recruitment, of course, is people having the expectation that they'll be paid fairly or that they'll be able to draw on resources in a fair way and that we'll be able to compete with other jurisdictions which pay northern bonuses or rural allowances and those sorts of things. Using the clinical stabilization initiative, we'll be able to deal specifically with issues in various communities.

As you rightly point out, the issues are not just a direct issue of saying: we need more nurses, doctors, health care professionals. It's a question of how we make the best use of the people we have and how we help them be as productive as they want to be. So whether it's child care or whether it's additional educational opportunities or whether it's allowing people to practise to the full scope of their training and expertise, whether it's promoting primary care networks so that they can work as teams, as the bone and joint project showed us so well, getting a much greater degree of efficiency and better effectiveness for patients by working in a team approach, all of those are very important.

It can be as simple, quite frankly, as making sure that the right equipment is in place so that nursing personnel and other personnel in the hospital don't have as much back strain as we're seeing. We have an aging workforce, and we have patients that are getting heavier. It can be as simple as trying to provide resources so that we have the appropriate lifts in place and the appropriate personnel in place so that we don't lose as many people to simple things like back strain. So working on all of those areas: very important.

That's the first one I've heard about child care in Grande Prairie as being an issue, but it's indicative of a number of the things that we have to look at in the workforce strategy and why a workforce strategy is not as simple as saying: "We need more; we're going to go and get them from somebody else who also needs them" or "We need more; we're going to raise the wages in a certain area" and then have the problem that they're attracting people from another area so that we have to raise the wages there, and then eventually we're going to buy them from somebody else who needs them. It is a multifaceted approach of growing our own, making sure that we have the advanced education positions necessary so that our own Alberta students can get the education they need here at home, making sure that they come back if they've gone elsewhere for their education, offering the opportunity to repatriate Albertans who've gone elsewhere for either education or job opportunities, opening the doors for those that want to come without actually going and taking people from other people that need them but opening the door for the people that want to come, to make sure that they can practise here.

But as with any program it's got to start at home in terms of keeping the good people you've got, making sure that they're valued, making sure that impediments to them practising at full scope, if they wish to, are removed, making sure that they can give full value into the system.

I hope that covers all the issues that you've raised in terms of the health side.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Horner: I was going to respond.

The Acting Chair: Excuse me; I'll have the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology reply first.

5:10

Mr. Eggen: Sure. Absolutely.

Mr. Horner: I'll be brief, Mr. Chairman, because really the question centred around having the infrastructure faculty. I know the hon. member actually listed off all of the things that we do have to have in place before you can actually start putting bums in the seats and having the students learn and be a part of whatever program they're at.

As the hon. health minister mentioned, we are working on the health workforce strategy. It isn't just doctors. It isn't just nurses. It's LPNs. It's health care aides. It's the whole gamut of the health care workforce. We're making sure that we find the spaces that are all scattered throughout this province, actually, for those courses.

Infrastructure is critical to it. We have right now an approved capital list within our postsecondary system that is well over $1.3 billion that is either in construction, in planning, or is moving forward. Those are approved projects that are on the books right now. There's a lot of construction going on in postsecondary. Is that enough? No. There's a fairly substantial ask out there. The need/ask is something we have to determine.

As I mentioned when I responded to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark earlier this afternoon, we recently brought all of the postsecondary institutions to Government House for a round-table discussion not only about roles, responsibilities, and mandates but also about: what is the current capacity of our system, and where are the gaps? So the health workforce side of that was brought into the discussion but also all of those other things, all of those other gaps that the institutions are telling us we have a gap and a need in.

Then we took that and looked at it as opposed to the capacity that we have and then started to look at the asks that we have from the institutions. Does this fit with what Campus Alberta is really all about? That's really where we're going. We're talking about a Campus Alberta approach, that takes the needs that we have as a government and takes the needs of industry and the postsecondaries into consideration.

So the creation of more spaces? Yes. The creation of more infrastructure? Yes. But we want to make sure that we plan it in the right places, in the right institutions, in collaboration with the institutions. That's really where we are right now.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in regard to these supplementary supply estimates for March 2007. I've sort of divided the comments between myself and my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona. However, I just wanted to say a couple of things in regard to Health and Wellness.

We're always putting significant supplementary funding into the health budgets here in this province, and I think it's indicative of a systemic problem with the way that we choose to fund health care in the province of Alberta: not recognizing both the true costs of not dealing head-on with the root causes of people's health problems and then, secondly, I believe, looking to always go on the cheap in regard to treatment and preventative health and community health and long-term care and the like. So while certainly this is the single biggest appropriation here this afternoon, again it's symptomatic of, I think, a problem in the way we deal with both acute community health and preventative health measures here in the province of Alberta.

You know, we somehow have come to this conclusion that reducing or moving people out of hospitals is in the best interests of running a public health care system, and I beg to differ just on both the economic and the health sides. We see in our large hospitals both in Calgary and Edmonton this single-minded push to get people through the acute-care beds and out of the acute-care beds as fast as possible, but so often secondary health concerns result in that mad rush to empty beds and create turnover. What we're seeing in large hospitals now, say at the Royal Alex, is that you're having so many people returning, so many people requiring acute care and the amount of beds being reduced over time that they've had to go into an emergency mode of storing and of keeping patients in the Alex and other hospitals in Edmonton as well, putting four where there were two and three where there was one. It's not a tenable situation for delivering acute health care in the best of situations. It creates this permanent state of triage where we're having to evaluate and re-evaluate patients not on the health care that they need but how their problem relates to the person who is next to them. Right? Looking at comparative problems – who's the sickest, so to speak – is not necessarily the best way to deliver health care.

When I look at the numbers there, again it's a very significant amount of money in terms of building bricks and mortar and equipment and purchases of that nature, but, you know, I think we need to supplement that with all of the other elements that go into creating a strong, healthy public health care system in this province.

My main comments here this afternoon will focus on the money that is being devoted to Municipal Affairs and Housing. Of course, the minister has created this task force, which I think he should be applauded for. It's interesting to see where the money is going, as perhaps a determinant of what we should do with both the results of the task force, which will be imminent, and this upcoming budget and shaping a housing strategy for the next two or more years.

We can just look to see where some of this money is going specifically. Two million more to fund 600 rent supplement program units. While this is a 12 per cent increase, I can say with personal anecdotal experience as well as from looking across the province in a more systematic way that this is not even a drop in the bucket in regard to the requirements of people who have found their rents being increased very significantly over the last six or more months to the point where many Albertans are being forced out of their rental accommodations because they simply can't afford it.

The increases that we've seen in my own constituency of Edmonton-Caldwell have been, I think, unacceptable. Many people are viewing this as an opportunity to really cash in. You know, when you're making investments, certainly you expect a certain gain and return, but you have to temper what you expect to get from an investment with what commodity you're dealing with. When you're talking about real estate and rental accommodation on real estate, you're not just dealing with bricks and mortar, but in fact you're dealing with people's lives. It is the responsibility of not just the landlord but, I think, of this Legislature as well to ensure that rental increases do not exceed the capacity of individuals to pay.

I hope that we can consider that in a more global and systematic way here in these coming weeks and months. I think that the vast majority of Albertans would certainly praise that sort of honest effort. Certainly, we don't begrudge the desire and the need for a landlord to make a buck, but we have to temper that with the people who rely on affordable rental accommodation to hang their hat and to make their homes.

There are several line items here. Fifteen million dollars more for an affordable housing program that's in partnership with the federal money; again, this is a very welcome sign. We all know and face in each of our constituencies the shortage of affordable housing, not just in the major cities but spreading right across the province in smaller centres as well. I think, again, this has to just be something that guides us to a more fundamental project for building affordable housing over a longer period of time. We must use our intelligence with this, and we must use our imagination because, of course, building a volume of affordable housing projects across the province has the potential to really be problematic. Like I say, we need to think about putting affordable housing projects in different places that we might not have thought of before. We need to build a variety of affordable housing projects as well so that we are aiming to satisfy the diversity of the population, that is growing so quickly here in Alberta.

Sixteen million dollars more for off-reserve aboriginal housing. This is in partnership with the federal government. Again, a very, very crucial, I think, direction that we need to consider. This is a good start. There is a vast movement of people from the north in this province to the major urban centres. This population must have assurances that there is safe and affordable housing available to them when they move to Edmonton.

Affordable housing is not just the roof over your head and keeping warm at night. It is a way to stabilize a person's life in the very broadest possible way. You know, when a person is affected by addiction problems or if you're affected by unemployment problems or any number of health problems, all of those things can be alleviated by putting an affordable and reliable roof over somebody's head. It really does go a long way to stabilizing a broad, broad spectrum of social problems that we face today here in the province. So it's just like investing a penny in to pay a huge return. If someone has a stable place to stay, they can start to deal with all of the other issues that might affect the quality of their lives.

Nine point five million dollars for homeless outreach programs. Of course, just by looking at this number, it's an acknowledgement of a crisis that we are facing here in the province of Alberta. Again, you don't have to go further than outside the doors of this fine institution to see that our homeless population has simply exploded in this province like never before. It's creating a sort of tension in our society, again, that we have not seen before.

One of the reasons that I chose to enter into politics was to bridge those divisions that do exist in our society and to seek answers to assist people in all socioeconomic groups. You know, as the homeless population of each of Edmonton and Calgary and other centres grows exponentially, I can see that we are in fact losing ground on that front because people that become homeless become disenfranchised in the broadest possible way to the majority of society. It creates this real gap which becomes a chasm, and that chasm has serious implications in regard to security and safety and in regard to health concerns and all of these other things that we have to spend and plan for here in this provincial Legislature.

Once again, $9.5 million for homeless: that's a 61 per cent increase. It is an indication, Mr. Chairman, that we've got something desperately, terribly wrong in regard to our homeless strategy outreach programs here in the provincial Legislature. I just would like to ask this question specifically: how is it that we missed the boat? In what specific area of our homeless strategy program did we miss the target so significantly that we had to put in this 61 per cent, which is only sticking our thumb in the dike of a very much larger problem, I would say? The problem is far outstripping even this significant increase. I would like to ask the minister: how are we going to redirect our homeless strategy, and what can we do to help?

The government is spending $15 million on capital grants to build new, affordable housing units. I would be curious to ask if these units will have a fixed price, or will they be based on a market system to determine their rental or purchase prices? I would be curious to know that. Certainly, both possibilities have some merits, but I would just like to seek clarification on that.

Again, in regard to this housing/homelessness crisis, we had an estimate by the Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness that suggested that 2,600 or more people are currently living without a home in the city of Edmonton. However, I think that a more telling number is that more than 6,000 people have serious difficulties being able to make their rents every month. You also have, not in those statistics, a large group of the population that is semihomeless. They live in various places at various times along the way, again a destabilizing sort of way to live.

So those are my main questions in regard to housing. I'm glad to see that we are putting forward more monies into this area.

The other area that I wanted to comment on very briefly is just in regard to agriculture. The budget is calling here for an increase of $50 million towards the agricultural insurance and lending assistance program. This is a managed way by which we can forward assistance to agricultural producers, which certainly I always do encourage. However, I just want to put in there that, you know, the more we can do to supplement and to assist family farms, probably the better off we are in regard to the security of our food supply, the integrity and diversity of our rural population, and a way of continuing that direct link between the past, the present, and the future here in this province, in which agriculture has played such a significant role.

You know, as we spend significant money to ensure the stability of our agriculture industry, with which I have no quarrel at all, I'm struck by the counterproductive tendencies that we engage in here in this province in regard to not supporting family farms and, in fact, encouraging large industrial farming operations. The list goes on in regard to those counterproductive measures. Perhaps we could actually save money if we were more specific in targeting family farms and looking for their individual specific needs rather than flying off willy-nilly to default to the protection and subsidization of larger, factory/industrial food operations.

Again, the issue that's just coming out right now is with the Wheat Board. You know, we can spend all this money to help out family farmers and independent operators, but then if we actively seek to undermine a basic means by which these operators have been able to pool their resources and, in fact, have a stable market for grain for so many years and take a direct attack against that, then I think that we are in fact paddling in different directions. I think that it's not the place or the jurisdiction of this provincial Legislature to be encouraging the destruction of the Wheat Board. I would ask very much for all members to stop in that endeavour.

Anyways, thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any minister wish to respond? Are there any others who wish to participate in the debate?

head: Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Ducharme moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Renner]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to have been given the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne as a proud member of the constituency of Calgary-Fort.

I thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for reading the Speech from the Throne. He is an exceptional representative of the Queen, and I commend him for that role.

Under the leadership of Alberta's 13th Premier this province is heading in a new, upward direction. The Speech from the Throne was a good indicator of what Albertans can expect within the coming months. I'm looking forward to it.

I would like to take this opportunity to praise the new Premier on setting out the government's priorities. As the Member for Calgary-Fort I can tell you with confidence, Mr. Speaker, that my constituents will greatly benefit from the new direction of their government. My constituents are vibrant, diverse, and industrious. Calgary-Fort is endowed with young families, and I have senior citizens alike and citizens having cultural roots from all over the world. These citizens stand to gain tremendously from the enhanced education, resources, and health care services.

I'm happy that I can return to my constituents to share with them that their government is not only looking out for the economic prosperity of the province but that it is also concerned with the safety, quality of life, and integration of its citizens. Their government not only plans on what to do but on how to do it.

As it was outlined in the throne speech, the new Premier and cabinet will be focusing on building a stronger province. To begin this process, the Premier has addressed a need to govern in an inclusive way. The government is going to open the door to invite all Albertans to join in the process. By governing with this kind of transparency, Albertans will be truly satisfied with the direction that the province is taking and that they will have a strong role in the process of governance. This government knows that Alberta belongs to the people and that we in the Assembly are only here as representatives of Albertans. We are here to serve and to represent them with their ideas and solutions.

As a resident of the Calgary-Fort constituency I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the level and the speed of growth we are witnessing is like none other. Every day it seems like there is a new building being opened for business and a new family moving in. It's just amazing. As we have witnessed, measures need to be taken to ensure that this growth happens in a co-ordinated manner, and that is why I'm pleased that the government is focused on governing responsibly for the future of Alberta as well. We call this managing growth pressure.

Mr. Speaker, I'm extremely proud to be part of the government which has committed itself to enhancing its citizens' quality of life, and I believe that this commitment is an investment in the province. Just as investing in the infrastructure which gets us home safely from work, enhancing Albertans' quality of life will lead us to a more prosperous Alberta.

In this time of labour pressures Alberta is seeking to increase its workforce. I can tell you for certain, Mr. Speaker, that investing in education, health, and wellness will provide people with an added incentive to come to Alberta. Furthermore, the quality of these services will make them want to stay in Alberta, participate in our communities, and raise families here. That is what I want for Alberta. I want Albertans to love being Albertan. I think that the hon. Premier's priority will bring us closer to that goal.

This government is also very mindful of supporting those who have supported us for so long. With the emphasis on providing health care services to senior citizens, they can trust that they will have the care they need. They will also be pleased that this government is working to expand long-term care capacities and improve standards of care for Alberta's senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, as a representative from a multicultural constituency, I would like to commend the hon. Premier for creating the Ministry of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. We are so pleased that our government has placed emphasis on promoting culture and recreation in Alberta. As Albertans drive themselves to perform economically, I feel that it is more important than ever to take time to enjoy Alberta's diverse culture. We must take advantage of our beautiful landscape by visiting the parks that we have. It is healthy to enjoy culture and recreation, and I would like to lend my support to the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Achieving a balance between hard work and enjoyment is crucial, and there are many opportunities to enjoy Alberta's culture, be it visiting one of Alberta's many libraries or going to diverse restaurants and concerts. I urge all Albertans to take time to enjoy life. They've worked so hard to achieve their goals.

The new government has also dedicated itself to providing safer and secure communities for Albertans. As I see it, this priority is linked to enhancing Albertans' quality of life. Alberta's senior citizens should not have to be fearful of walking about in their communities. As the government works to provide an enhanced sense of security, Albertans' quality of life will also be enhanced as they will also be free to sleep with comfort, knowing that they themselves and their family are safe. That feeling is invaluable.

The commitment to education is a commitment to the future, and this government's drive to enhance Alberta's education system will benefit Alberta's children for years to come. I want to congratulate the Minister of Education on his effort. With the availability of resources they need, there is no limit to what they can reach and how they can contribute to our province's well-being.

The new Premier's priorities are truly all-encompassing. They move past the basics, and for that reason they will be successful. I also want to add a point here about the area that I represent – and it's probably an example of how much growth there is in the whole province but particularly Calgary – the growing population.

I learned from the city estimate that there are currently 90 people arriving, taking up residence in Calgary each day. So if I'm here for a day, I come back, and I have 90 more neighbours or friends. That's also talking about the need of those 90 people each day and also talking about the increase in the number of vehicles travelling on the streets of Calgary.

So the pressure of growth is tremendous in Calgary, and I want to emphasize that point and represent it in the area. I see businesses booming. New construction is growing. Many cranes – I could say this – are private business cranes. The construction of offices and private residences is growing fast and in a large number in Calgary.

Sometime I would like to ask members who live outside of Calgary to visit Calgary, make a tour. I am ready to be a tour guide, take them up to the Calgary Tower. Probably they could not see much because all the tall buildings have covered the sky there.

I look forward to the Third Session of the 26th Legislature under the leadership of our 13th Premier as we work to further Albertans' quality of life. In closing I would like to thank the constituents of Calgary-Fort for allowing me to have the honour of representing them in the House here, and I have the honour to be among my distinguished colleagues in this House.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to slide in under the deadline of our new 6 o'clock end of sitting day and have the opportunity to address some of the issues that were raised and not raised in the throne speech. Of course, as you're aware, Mr. Speaker, the response to the throne speech is an opportunity to bring up some of the issues and the way our constituents have reacted to the priorities that are outlined in the throne speech.

I, of course, have a fabulous constituency, which I am so delighted also includes the Legislative Assembly building. In fact, I don't need to welcome many of you because I know that your home away from home is in Edmonton-Centre, and I'm delighted to be host to you when you are travelling away from your homes. So many of you will know, but for the benefit of others I'll just go through a quick reminder of who my constituents are.

I have a high percentage of seniors. I know the highest rate in Alberta is generally thought to be 15 per cent, and we do find that in some southern Alberta communities and in a few other special places in Alberta. Camrose, I think, is one of them. But about 15 per cent of my constituents are seniors, most of them independently living. I only have one long-term care facility, and that's in the old General hospital, although we have some very interesting special wings in that building. One of them is the Ming Ai wing, which is a special one for Chinese-speaking seniors in long-term care. They have the food that they choose to have. All of the attendants and nurses that work there speak either Cantonese or Mandarin. It's decorated to suit that particular cultural taste. It's a really innovative and very cool place to visit.

I also have developing in the constituency and promoted a great deal of fundraising done by the Polish community, who's building an aging-in-place facility. Now I'm hearing from the Jewish community that they're looking at converting a small apartment building to seniors' residences and further from that into a long-term care facility for them. So seniors' issues are really important to me.

I also have a lot of students who take advantage of the rental housing stock that's available in Edmonton-Centre. My students are attending, obviously, just across the river the University of Alberta. The Grant MacEwan downtown campus is in the riding. It's not that far to NAIT. Alberta College is in the riding. NorQuest College. So we're quite blessed with access to postsecondary institutions here, and with that we get a lot of students.

There are a number of people living in my constituency who deal every day with mental health challenges. Many of them successfully deal with those challenges. Some of them are on AISH, but we also have a number of other people that are on AISH for other reasons.

You've heard me speak often and lovingly of my fabulous arts community in Edmonton-Centre and also a very active GLBT community.

In the centre of the community is where the refugees and new immigrants and new Canadians tend to come when they first reach Edmonton. Once they've settled and sort of found their feet, they tend to move into the outlying communities, but they start with us, and we welcome them.

We have a wide range of faith communities, ranging from St. Joseph's Catholic Basilica, the All Saints Anglican Cathedral, several synagogues, the Robertson-Wesley United, and of course a very high number of social service agencies because they cluster in the downtown area. This tends to be where their head offices are, and as a result people needing those services also tend to cluster downtown.

Interestingly, I now have less than 500 single-family homes in the constituency.

Mr. MacDonald: Say that again.

Ms Blakeman: Less than 500 single-family homes in the constituency.

Everybody else lives in – what do they call them? – a high-density multifamily unit, which is either a condominium or rental apartment of some kind. I'm pushing the 40,000 mark, so that gives you some idea of how many multifamily dwellings we have in Edmonton-Centre. I often joke that it's 20 blocks by 20 blocks by 20 storeys high, and I'm not far off the mark there.

I, of course, listen carefully and spend a great deal of time talking to my constituents and attending community events, so they feel comfortable talking to me. Here are some of the issues that have been raised over the last six months that I would like to raise in this House in relation to what's been put in front of us with the ideas in the throne speech.

For the students: student tuition. They continue to feel truly burdened with the high level of student debt that they are graduating with and really do look to us here in this House for assistance with that. It doesn't help to just make more loans available. That just makes them come out of universities with much higher debt loads. And there are consequences to that. Right now we're experiencing that consequence in the health field, for example, where we can't get students to choose to go into family practice, even though they may want to do that, because they need to choose a speciality in which they can make more money and pay off their student loan faster or they're going to be, you know, paying off these huge student loans for a much longer period of time. So there are consequences to doing this, and I think we need to be alive to that and try to make policies that are more accommodating to students. It's a knowledge economy. We need more people graduating from postsecondary education institutions. We also, frankly, need more people graduating from high school.

So the students continue to be concerned with the debt burden, and they also have raised with me the issues around rent and utility costs. We don't see anything in the throne speech that is addressing any kind of assistance for rent other than, I guess indirectly, the programs that municipalities have come up with where they're subsidizing certain people up to, you know, a couple of hundred dollars on their rent every month. So, again, that's something that I think we need to do.

Speaking of rent, I would recommend to the government the Liberal policy which my colleague from Calgary-Currie shepherded through quite a good consultation process over a number of months with a feedback loop in it going back to stakeholders. I'll let you read the full text of that on our website. But certainly, as it involves rent, two of the things we were recommending that, really, people are asking for several times a day in my office are to hold the rent increase to once a year and to hold it to 10 per cent. I continue to advocate for that. I think a 10 per cent profit margin, or markup margin, is well above any kind of inflation rate or cost-of-living rate and should satisfy most entrepreneurs that they're making money off of their investment there.

We're experiencing people that are ending up with several hundred dollars' worth of increases several times a year. It's creating huge trauma, and that has consequences because then we end up with problems with people in unsafe housing and the stress of having to do that, and there are health problems. Then they end up in the health system. You know, these things are all linked together.

Affordable housing. I think the government has now come to understand that there needs to be government involvement in that. Expecting the private sector to volunteer, to not make money and build houses, just wasn't going to make it. We do need to have the government involvement in that if we're going to have affordable housing schemes or make it accessible to people, so I encourage them to continue to look at that.

The government has tried to do a number of things on the homeless front. I continue to encourage them to look at the transition factor here, where we're trying to transition, for example, battered women, victims of domestic violence, out of the short-term emergency shelters and into transitional housing and then beyond that into third-stage housing even and then out of the system. But if we keep insisting that they only get three weeks in a shelter and then they're dumped back out again, guess what? If they don't have economic security and they don't have anywhere else to go – please refer to my previous two topics about rent costs and affordable housing – they go back to their abuser. What other choice do they have? There are consequences to the decisions that we make in this House and that the government makes. These transitional accommodations are particularly important to women coming out of battering situations, to people trying to recover in drug and alcohol rehab treatment. All very important, and all with very high relapse factors if we can't get them stabilized. So, very important.

Utilities. Electricity has just been a complete and total chaotic mess from start to finish, and it really needs to be addressed. It's a rip-off, and it's causing huge misfortune for people. I'm going to let my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar expand on that, which I'm sure he will in the future.

Downtown revitalization is an issue. We've being very successful. We're struggling a bit right now because we were successful. I think the municipality needs to work in partnership with the province to make sure that that continues to be a successful thing.

Arts support is the next thing on my list, and I continue to recommend to this government: you cannot go wrong with supporting the arts. You will not regret investing in the arts. Double that arts budget. Triple that arts budget. You will be paid back in so many ways in quality of life, in employment, in the ancillary factor that puts money into the communities, in the vitality that it creates in all of your communities. You cannot go wrong investing in the arts.

The environment is raised many, many times by my constituents. It's consistently the third most talked about issue there, but I'll let my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View expand on that issue.

Some very specific things now. A request to please bring forth service dog or service animal legislation. We did redo the guide dog act, but we didn't keep that open and actually make substantive changes to allow service dogs. So we still have people who, for instance, have seizure alert animals with them being barred from taxis, being barred from malls, being barred from community league halls, and that sort of ridiculousness. We really should be able to deal with that in 2007.

We have a huge issue around wages for caregivers. A number of people have raised that in the House now. It's really affecting my seniors. It's really affecting people that are on AISH. We've got to get out in front of this one. We also need to look at respite for volunteer and unpaid caregivers. I don't know how many of you are aware but certainly with older patients 80 per cent of their caregivers are their spouse. So we tend to have 80-year-old women looking after their 85-year-old husbands, and they are the only and primary caregiver. That's an awful lot of work for somebody that age. They need some help. We need more home-care services there because that affects everybody.

Interestingly, I had a phone call from Bonita Davidson, who's a constituent and was a home-care worker, so-called self-employed. No. She was working for one person actually but didn't have WCB coverage, so when she got injured on the job, that was it. She couldn't do the work, which really put the individual that hired her in a bad position. She had to use all of her savings and sell her car because she wasn't working so she didn't get paid, and there was no WCB. That's a gap that we should be addressing.

There is a huge issue with the fragility of the not-for-profit/charitable/volunteer sector right now, which is affecting everybody in my community and, I would argue, in every community in Alberta. You're going to hear me talk about this an awful lot through this spring and fall sitting here in this House. This is dramatically affecting our whole quality of life, our delivery of social service, recreation, arts and culture, children's services, seniors' services, right across the board.

A couple of last things. Privacy issues continue to be raised, having Telus and other companies contracted as the human resource and cheque payer for a number of different groups and concerns about privacy of personal information there. And if I can put in a final plug for serious consideration of a high-speed rail link between downtown Edmonton and downtown Calgary. I think if we're going to grow up and be a big province and join the rest of the countries in Europe, for example, we need to get some rapid transit that goes across the province and is public transit based.

So, with those issues I'm happy. I will go back and report to my constituents that I've raised them in the House. I look forward to seeing what the government can do to try and address the issues that I've raised. Thank you.

I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I see that the clock is striking 6, so the House stands adjourned until 1 o'clock tomorrow.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 14, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/03/14

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is again a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all of my colleagues in the House 13 special guests from the Department of Energy that have joined us today in the members' gallery. We have Sylvia Presiznuik, Gail Marusyn, Deborah Boelstler, Yolanda Hutchings, Yasmin Suleman, Donna McLachlan, Beth Holmes, Danielle Haverstock, Olena Urban, Julia Hai, Brent Fuhr, Ryan Borador, Raelyn Huseby. I would ask them all to stand, please, to receive the warm welcome of my colleagues.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 12 members of the Finance department. We talk very much about our public service and the great jobs they do, but quite simply if it wasn't for people in the tax and revenue administration, the investment management division, the strategic and business services, we wouldn't be able to carry on our work. So I'd ask Anne Bethell, Bonnie Toh, Dustin Gumpinger, Elaine Siu, Ivy Wong, James Ackroyd, Jeff Urbanowski, Jerry Brige, Jim Daye, Jonathan Herman, Trevor Bilan, and Wilfred Chan to all stand and receive the very warm welcome and appreciation of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour again to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students and their adult leaders from the Clive school. They're grade 6 students. There are 16 of them. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Marla Kolybaba and Miss Kelly Janisse. Parent helpers are Mr. Garth Rowley, Mr. Howard Hopkins, Naomi Bennett, and Mrs. Deniese Lyons. Now, this group has always been accompanied by a teacher by the name of Bob MacKinnon. He was not able to be here this year – he's been here 17 years in a row – due to some health issues in his family. So he hopes to be back next year. I would ask my students and parents to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 74 students from Leo Nickerson school in St. Albert and teachers Ms Desjardins, Mme Scharf, Mr. Paul Annicchiarico, Mrs. Wawrychuk, Mrs.

Hussey, and Mrs. Morgan and parent Mrs. Van Hoeve. I wish them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a fine gentleman from Mexico. Mr. Armando Garcia is visiting the Legislative Assembly this afternoon. He is married with two small children. He is a graduate of the University of Guadalajara, specializing in veterinary medicine. He tells me that he had an excellent academic record there, and he has the documents to prove it. He is in Canada as a temporary foreign worker; his visa expires in November of 2007. He was limited and restricted in his work, but he was working on a corporate farm out east of Provost. He was on the farm that is named on the visa, and it is named C.G. Paulgaard Farms Ltd. I would now ask Mr. Garcia to please rise. I don't know which gallery he's in, but if he would rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce the driving forces behind one of the most exciting community projects occurring in Alberta. Christy Cholak-Morin is the executive director of Arts on the Avenue as well as a director, producer, drama coach, and artist in residence with Edmonton public schools. Michelle Hayduk is a resident commercial design expert who spends much of her time volunteering with the local community grassroots organization known as Arts on the Avenue. Scott Peters is best known as a founding member of the local Celtic band Captain Tractor and has also worked in the theatre arts community with nearly every professional theatre group in the city over the past 20 years. With him is his four-year-old son, Thorin Freeman-Peters.

These three individuals are together working towards restoring and redeveloping the Alberta Avenue area. They brought about many fantastic things: the Arts Alive! fall festival, assistance for community theatre, and with the help of my constituency office the upcoming Workers Art Show as part of the May Week celebrations. They are seated in the public gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Vesna Kovacic. Vesna is currently a social work student at Grant MacEwan College and is completing her practicum in my constituency office from September of 2006. Vesna's family has been in Alberta since moving from Saskatchewan in 1979. Vesna herself moved back to Alberta to be closer to her family and to pursue a lifelong passion of becoming a social worker. Vesna has been a very valuable part of our team in the constituency of Edmonton-Calder, and we are grateful for all of her hard work. I would ask her now, please, to rise and to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this House Denise Ogonoski. Denise is a lifetime Edmontonian who started this past January as a constituency assistant in our Edmonton-Strathcona constituency office. Currently Denise is completing her political science degree at the University of Alberta. She was a media delegate at the World Social Forum in Venezuela last year and volunteered for the People's Pedal bicycle co-op.

Mr. Speaker, you and other members of the House are invited to come and visit my constituency and McIntyre park, where this co-op usually has a stall of bicycles which are available for us to use, and that would mean that we control the emissions that go into the atmosphere and create problems for us.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents I would like to thank Denise for the service she is already providing to the constituents of Edmonton-Strathcona. We all look forward to seeing her continue her excellent work. Denise is seated in public gallery, and now I'll ask her to please stand to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a long history of strong ethnic and cultural ties with the Ukraine. Nearly 10 per cent of Albertans have Ukrainian ancestry. Just to name a few in this Assembly we have Danyluk, and we have Zwozdesky and Cenaiko, and we also have Premier Stelmach. Joining us today in your gallery is the ambassador of the Ukraine, His Excellency Mr. Ostash, and his lovely wife, Mrs. Hrymych, and their young son Danylo. The ambassador met with the Premier and other ministers and had a state dinner today at Government House. I'd like to ask them all to rise at this point. [Remarks in Ukrainian]

The Speaker: His Excellency is also a 12-year veteran of the Ukrainian Parliament.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour to have the opportunity today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Danielle Smith. Danielle is the director of provincial affairs for the Canadian Federation of Independent Business here in Alberta, an organization which many of you will know represents 9,200 businesses in Alberta. She was here today, Mr. Speaker, lobbying members of the Official Opposition and presenting the CFIB's prebudget presentation to the Official Opposition caucus. In the spirit of openness and accountability and in an effort to pre-empt Bill 1, Danielle has asked if the Canadian Federation of Independent Business might be the first organization to register as a lobbyist. They would be proud to do so. I would ask Danielle to please rise – she's in the public gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've been on TV since 1 o'clock contrary to what the chair said yesterday.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Canadian Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to remind all Albertans, especially our farming community, which includes the grade 6 class from the Clive school, that starting today and running until March 20 is Canadian Agricultural Safety Week. Farm safety is a crucial part of agriculture in this province and an important part of keeping all rural Albertans safe. This year's theme, Protect Your Moving Parts, focuses on the importance of using caution when working around farm machinery. It also encourages farmers to use proper guarding and shielding to prevent accidents from occurring.

Mr. Speaker, according to the Canadian agricultural injury surveillance program, farm machinery accidents, which include being entangled, pinned, or struck by machinery, were the leading cause of hospitalized injuries on Canadian farms from 1990-2000. In Alberta there are an average of 18 farm-related deaths per year. Seventy per cent of the incidents involved farm machinery, and sadly, like most fatalities on farms, these deaths were preventable.

Education and information are the most powerful ways to impact behaviour, and I would like to applaud the organizers and sponsors of this year's Alberta Farm Safety Week for their hard work and dedication to keeping Alberta farms safe places to work and grow.

I am pleased that our government is a partner in the launch of a new ad campaign aimed at youth and new farm workers. Youth make up a significant portion of new farm workers, and farm safety education and awareness for this group is a particular focus of this government. I'm proud to be a part of a government that cares about helping our young people and new farm workers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to recognize Canadian Agricultural Safety Week from March 14 to March 20.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Per Capita Federal Funding

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada Statistics just released a census document titled Portrait of the Canadian Population in 2006. A subtitle is Alberta: The Engine of Population Growth. The Canada census has just proven what we have witnessed for years. Between 2001 and '06 Canada's population growth was the highest in the G-8 countries. Three-quarters of Canadian population growth is thanks to the joining of people from many parts of the world. Canada's population growth between 2001 and '06 was higher than the previous intercensal period.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend our Premier in setting management of growth as one of the government's five top priorities. There is tremendous growth pressure experienced in Alberta in general and in our constituencies in Calgary in particular. Alberta's population has now reached 3.3 million. Its population growth of 10.6 per cent is the highest in the country, twice the national average. If the province continues to grow at least 10 per cent every five years, then our population would double between 2006 and mid-2030. So Alberta now has topped 10 per cent of our national population for the first time.

Myself and the majority of my constituents believe that sharing the federal financial allocation should be based on per capita. If every Canadian taxpayer follows the same national rule, every Canadian should be treated equitably. It doesn't matter where he or she lives. Alberta should receive federal funding on a fair per capita principle. Realizing that growth pressure and needs are everywhere, I would suggest that our provincial government persuade our federal government to apply the fair per capita funding principle to Alberta and that within Alberta the per capita funding principles should be considered as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Canada Safeway Charitable Donations

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For a number of years now Canada Safeway has supported local area charities through their Because We Care campaign. Each year individual Safeway stores adopt a charity and conduct a number of fundraising events in their store to raise funds for their local community groups.

The Mill Woods Town Centre Safeway store has partnered with Edmonton Meals on Wheels, that is a not-for-profit organization that relies on volunteers to provide a nutritious meal program which promotes health and wellness and independence for their clients. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, March 10, I joined a number of Meals on Wheels volunteers and Safeway staff in helping promote this event. Since selecting Meals on Wheels as their charity in 2005, the Mill Woods Safeway has raised more than $25,000 for this worthwhile cause.

Since 1998 customers and employees of Canada Safeway have raised more than $9.7 million to help over 1,400 charities in Canada. I ask my fellow Members of the Alberta Legislative Assembly to join me in saluting this outstanding commitment to our local communities.

Thank you.

Vauxhall Academy of Baseball

Mr. McFarland: I attended the Vauxhall baseball academy as it held its first banquet and fundraiser this past Saturday, Mr. Speaker. This is an exciting concept: the first high school baseball academy in Canada, that is putting small-town, rural Alberta on the national map.

In its first school year the Vauxhall baseball academy has attracted 21 student players from Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. Young men in grades 10, 11, and 12 have joined the Vauxhall Jets team from Calgary, Chinook, Hays, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Strathmore, Rocky Mountain House, Round Hill, Taber, and Vauxhall in Alberta as well as from Imperial in Saskatchewan, Kentville in Nova Scotia, Sussex Corner in New Brunswick, and Winnipeg, Manitoba.

This year's award recipients included one player who maintains a 95 per cent average. The goals that these players have targeted include a career in dentistry, two in pre-med, three in engineering, and one has been accepted into the aerospace program in Alabama.

The Jets' stadium, their home diamond, is one of the finest outdoor facilities in rural Canada and one of only eight lighted stadiums in all of Alberta. Vauxhall high school is a smaller 2A high school that faced the prospect of not having a basketball team this year. In a great show of support nine of the baseball Jets players stepped forward to help fill the basketball team roster for their school. On Saturday, hours before their awards banquet, the Vauxhall basketball team, competing up at the 3A level, won the zone finals. They outscored their opposition in the final game by 50 points, earning a berth this weekend in the provincial 3A basketball finals in Rocky Mountain House, Alberta.

Their principal, Todd Ojala, commended the boys on their accomplishment not only for their three hour per day basketball workout but also for all their accomplishments. They are billeted with families in the community. I want to compliment the coaches, Les McTavish and assistant coach Jim Kotkas, and all the teaching staff of Vauxhall for a very supportive program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Warner Girls Hockey School

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some things are so good and so important and so exciting that they're worth repeating, and I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for alerting this Assembly to the hockey jewel of the province, the Warner Hockey School for Girls.

What an outstanding opportunity for young women to develop and pursue their dream of hockey. This is a classic Alberta heritage story of blazing a new path, a story of not just surviving but thriving and rising to the top where skeptics said that it couldn't be done. It all started with a question – how do we keep our high school open? – and then a dream that evolved into a hockey school for girls, followed by an unbelievable amount of hard work, sacrifice, dedication of the volunteers in both hours and donations. This is truly hockey at its best.

They have attracted young women from across Canada, the U.S., and Sweden. In just four short years the graduates from this school have received over $3 million in scholarships and bursaries from recruiting institutions. They play in the Alberta Major Midget Female Hockey League and have won the league the last three years. They just got back from a trip to the Maritimes, where they played against the St. Thomas University team, winning a decisive 10-2 victory. The next day they played Dalhousie University, winning 3-2. They then went on to play Team Nova Scotia, where they allowed two of their top players to play for their home team. They won 7-5. A day's rest and then they played Team P.E.I. and won 3-0 and the next night 4-1.

They have now won the hearts of many Canadians on CBC's Kraft Hockeyville competition. Go to the cbc.ca/hockeyville website, watch the three-minute video, and then vote for Warner. Watch the other videos, and then vote for Warner again. Vote often, and support Alberta's hockey school. Warner has a population of 379; Cornwall, 55,000; North Bay, 53,000. Warner not only deserves our support; they need it. Let's make Hockeyville Albertaville.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

U of A Pandas Volleyball Team

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I'm sure everybody here knows, my constituency is the proud home of the University of Alberta, and it's a great honour and privilege today to recognize the U of A Pandas volleyball team.

The number one ranked Pandas captured their seventh CIS crown with a 3-1 defeat of the defending national champions, the Laval Rouge et Or. Led by CIS player of the year and tournament MVP Tiffany Dodds, the Pandas produced a great team effort. Dodds finished the game with 17 kills, putting away the game point. Rookie Samantha Wojtkiw and Alexa Berton recorded a combined 10 blocks while Jocelyn Blair had 12 kills. Wojtkiw finished with 12 kills, three aces, and an 87 per cent hitting percentage. Jocelyn Blair and Daryl Roper were named tournament all-stars.

Special recognition should also go to their head coach, Laurie Eisler, a three-time CIS coach of the year, a Panda coach since 1991. These hard-working and dedicated young women deserve tremendous respect and admiration for their accomplishments and for bringing yet another CIS banner home to the U of A. Congratulations to the Pandas.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I present a petition from a number of signatories in Alberta, undersigned residents petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to consider providing additional funds for the Calgary health region to “proceed immediately and as originally planned with the construction of a hospital in south Calgary.”

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am presenting quite a number of tablings with the right number of copies for a petition supporting Gary Hunt in his efforts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to table a letter and a petition from 193 Albertans from the Buffalo Lake Métis settlement and the surrounding area asking the government to introduce legislation to enforce mandatory use of helmets when operating a quad, trike, or any ATV, enforce an age limit for the operation of ATVs, and for smaller ATVs to have manufacturers put governing mechanisms on because children are operating them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m presenting a petition signed by 64 citizens in Edmonton urging the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to complete as soon as possible the overpasses and interchanges at the locations where Anthony Henday Drive, the Edmonton ring road, intersects Lessard Road, Callingwood Road, and Cameron Heights Road.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Renner: I beg, maybe, some advice from the Speaker on the new process. The government wishes to advise the House that written questions and motions for returns stand and retain their places. Do I give notice of that motion now, or do I simply make that statement?

The Speaker: Notice.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Bill 16 Police Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007.

These amendments to the Police Act will allow the establishment of a provincial body to investigate police when someone has been seriously injured or dies as a result of the direct actions of a police officer. This team would also investigate highly sensitive or serious matters involving police. The proposed amendments will also give the province the option of taking over lock-up facilities from municipal police agencies. Alberta corrections officers or Alberta sheriffs could be used for these operations.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 17, the Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 17 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Judicature Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Judicature Amendment Act, 2007.

This act amends the Judicature Act to empower Alberta’s courts to deal more effectively with vexatious litigants. The Judicature Act deals with the jurisdiction powers of the Court of Queen’s Bench and the Court of Appeal. It also deals with the administration of justice in the province, including some matters of the provincial court. The proposed amendments to this act will remove the requirement to obtain the Attorney General’s consent to make an application to have a person declared a vexatious litigant. Amendments to this act will give all three courts the jurisdiction to hear vexatious litigant applications.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, we’ll come back to introductions. But before we commence Oral Question Period today, in what is the second day of the operation of the “rules,” the chair would like to make a comment. As the chair indicated yesterday, there was nothing in the Standing Orders revisions adopted last Monday night concerning the operation of Oral Question Period. Section 3(a)(ii) of the House leaders’ agreement states that questions and answers shall be 45 seconds, which is the general rule that the chair has been applying since the start of the 26th Legislature in March of 2005. There was no mention in the House leaders’ agreement about preambles to questions or deviating from the accepted practice of limiting preambles to supplementary questions.

However, the chair has had an opportunity now to meet with all three House leaders this morning. This is the first time that we have met during the process leading to the House leaders’ agreement. This was a very positive step in communicating about the intention and expectations of the House leaders about the March 7 agreement. If you’ve ever seen the movie Lost in Translation, about the guy who goes to Tokyo, just think of that as I go through the rest of this.

After that meeting the chair will be vigorously enforcing the 45-second rule from the time the member is recognized until the end of the 45 seconds. This will apply to questions, and this will apply to answers. It may involve stopwatches. This is how it will work in practice. When the chair rises and says, "The Leader of the Official Opposition," when that "n" is heard by one of the table officers, a click will go on in a watch. The chair will administer the House as normal, and within five seconds the chair will notice that there are five seconds left, and then bang; you know, like they do in football, baseball, and everything else. It won't be this. It'll be that. Okay?

Second thing. During the 45-second period – and this will apply to questions rather than answers – preambles will be allowed, whether main or supplementary questions. It seems to be the overwhelming desire of the members. So you've got 45 seconds for the question. In the past it was a pretty vigorous interpretation: no preambles in the second or third question. Now permitted.

The chair also wants to make it very clear that when that clock starts counting on the "n," if the hon. members stand up and cheer the hon. member for 30 seconds, the clock has been running. That means there are only 15 seconds left for the remainder of the question. Now, I know my hon. colleagues – I've been here for a number of years – so I know what the potential is of happening. Okay?

The chair wants to make one thing very clear. He has no difficulty whatsoever enforcing this provision. The chair would point out that Standing Order 13(1), which has not changed, requires the Speaker to preserve order and decorum. In the chair's experience what often causes question period to become unruly are inflammatory preambles that have little to do with the question that is to be asked. So while the chair will allow the greatest latitude to members in their questions and answers, the chair will not let question period deteriorate into a situation that would serve to bring this institution into disrepute and in the process reflect poorly on all members, especially other members who are not involved in the shenanigans.

If there are concerns about the operation of question period, the chair would encourage members to bring those concerns to his or her House leader. This interpretation was arrived at about 11:30 this morning, so some members may not be aware of it, but the deal was that the House leaders are to bring this updated version of the rule to all of his or her members.

Remember as well that we have another opportunity for members to convey their thoughts, and that is to the chair of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, as this committee is to have a role in reviewing the operation of the rule changes.

Please do not send notes to the chair, as happened yesterday. The chair wants to be very clear that he is committed to ensuring that the operation of the Assembly represents the expectation of members. It is your Assembly, and the chair has been elected to enforce your rules.

To the two independent members in the House, I'd invite them to come and visit me at 4:30 this afternoon because in addition to this clarification, the chair also provided to the three House leaders a list of questions and comments with respect to the proposed changes to the rules of the Assembly and also provided to the three House leaders, as best as one can determine, an anticipated budget to implement all of these changes and these rules. The three House leaders will provide that information to their caucus members. I will provide that to the two members in the Assembly who were not present at the meeting this morning and, if required, will table those documents in the House at a subsequent date, but I do not anticipate that this will be required.

So, Micheline, are we ready?

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Red Deer River Water Transfer

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As is often said in this Assembly, whiskey is for drinking, and water is for fighting over. The people of the Red Deer River Valley are ready to fight over the transfer of water from their river to a shopping mall on the edge of Calgary. To the Premier: how can the Premier claim that this government is supporting a fair process on the Balzac water transfer licence application when various ministers have publicly supported and applauded this project and the government itself voted $4.8 million to help pay for it?

Mr. Stelmach: The process in terms of reviewing water licences has been in place for many years in this province, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, it might have been implemented way back when you were a Minister of Environment, so it's got a lot of history to it. It's proven that it's fair to both sides, and we will follow the process that has been established.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is another issue on which this government is so divided. Not long after various ministers applauded the project and approved the money, this Premier hit the campaign trail and called the project ridiculous. I'll table a document demonstrating that. Why did this Premier call the project ridiculous when his own government was supporting it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll wait to review the so-called documents that the Leader of the Opposition has, but I have to reiterate: there is a process in place. There's a quasi-judicial authority that's put in place to evaluate the information coming on both sides for this water application or any other water application that there is in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier called the project ridiculous and said that he would investigate it, can the Premier explain now why he has flip-flopped on this project?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader has to be very careful in the kind of words he uses. I am now the Premier of the province of Alberta, and I would not be one to break the rules that have been established through law in this Assembly. If that's the kind of leadership he expects to see from this Premier, he is dead wrong.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I think the Premier was expected to keep his word from the campaign trail, Mr. Speaker.

As the Balzac water transfer makes so clear, there is a process for well-connected people and a process for the rest of us. Given that yesterday the Premier said, and I quote, if there have been promises made by individuals that might have been in government or are no longer in government, then I would like to know about them, end quote, has the Premier bothered to try to find out about those secret promises?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, he's the one that says that there's a secret deal. He was in the scrum yesterday. I asked him right in front of all the TV cameras: you're calling it a secret deal? You're saying to this House, I believe, that there's some sort of a secret deal. You've got the documents. Present them right now, right in front of the cameras.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the fix is in on this project. This government has placed a $4.8 million bet that this project will be approved when last August it voted that much money, and I'll quote the government's own budget documents: to support a horse-racing track and equine centre at Balzac. Given that this government destroyed due process last year when it voted the money for this project and various ministers applauded it, will the Premier just save the people of the Red Deer River basin the trouble and cost of fighting the licence and just put an end to this water transfer right now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the leader mentioned before that I wasn't keeping my promise to those individuals during the campaign trail. Well, we have moved very quickly on the housing strategy. We are negotiating an immigration agreement with the federal government. We've already addressed the issues in Fort McMurray. We've opened this House to more transparency, obviously, with the new agreement we have allowing for greater consideration of business and committee work. I think we've come a long way in the last – what? – 90 days.

Dr. Taft: Tell the people of Red Deer.

It's time for this government to stop playing games with Alberta's water. There should be no secret deals for that water. This makes a mockery of due process and the whole issue of consulting with Albertans. To the Premier: why should anybody trust or engage in public consultations with this government when they so clearly ignore the wishes of Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, Mr. Speaker, very clearly because they can trust us to do the right thing. Quite frankly, if the hon. leader is not aware, again, of the process that's in place, the hon. Minister of Environment can certainly articulate it again in the House.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Armando Garcia, who was introduced earlier, is a temporary foreign worker from Guadalajara, Mexico. He came to Alberta to work on a large farm expecting to receive health benefits, overtime pay, and a reimbursement of travel costs, but instead he faced a broken contract and a restrictive work visa that limits him from finding other employment. This is one case, but I fear it's the tip of the iceberg. As the number of temporary foreign workers entering Alberta increases, many workers are facing similar problems due to this government's failure to ensure that the rights of these workers are adequately protected. My questions are to the Premier. Given that an increase in the number of foreign . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to of course welcome to this Assembly Armando Garcia from Guadalajara, and I also want to state to this Assembly that I had a very pleasant visit when I was minister of international and intergovernmental relations with the then President, Vicente Fox, who asked this province of Alberta to continue the good working relationship we have with Mexico to allow people from their country to come to our province, work here, earn some money. I was astonished at the amount of GDP, Mexican GDP, that comes from Mexicans that leave their country and send money back to sustain their families back home.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will table the employment contract of Mr. Garcia later, and it appears that all kinds of things were broken. Health insurance was promised. Workplace safety insurance was promised. Lots of money was deducted from his paycheque to pay for plane fares. My question, then, is to the Premier. This man has tremendous courage coming here to speak out against his employer. What guarantees are in place to ensure that other employees who are bound to employers through their work visa will be able to speak out without any repercussions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the details, would our minister responsible, at least today, for this issue please give us the details.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that temporary workers receive the same protections as any other workers in Alberta, and I also want to say that the Ministry of Employment, Immigration and Industry will look into this case. In Alberta this is not common. I mean, we take violations of a code very seriously and investigate every complaint that is brought forward, and we need to look at this information and the individual circumstances before we can determine what, if any, potential . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we've just had another little test of our rule interpretation. That 45-second response time does not include an additional 45 seconds for supplementals.

The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I fear that this is the Chinese head tax all over again. People from China came here to help build the railroad, and then they were sent back. A hundred years later the Prime Minister of Canada has to apologize to them. So my question is to the Premier. I mean, are you going to have to be in a position to apologize to these workers for all the poor conditions they've been working under as they are sent back after a year? What kind of experience is this for Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, when a member of the opposition brings up the Chinese head tax, that was an embarrassment to this country at a very critical stage of development. This is very early in history, but it happened to be the same time that my ancestors came to this country. I fully understand the kind of discrimination that there was at this time, so I don't need any prompting from any opposition member to relate to me some of the issues that early immigrants had to face in this country.

Climate Change

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment held a news conference in which he announced that Alberta was taking climate change seriously. He brought documents, he brought questionnaires, and he brought logos. That was five years ago. Today this Minister of Environment went through the same whole dog-and-pony show again. Even the logo is the same. To the Premier: how many times do we have to go through this phony consultation exercise on climate change before the government takes real action to fix the problem?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, given what the minister presented this morning in terms of climate change, I'd allow the minister to answer the question.

Mr. Renner: Well, I just very quickly, Mr. Speaker, remind the member that the world that we live in has changed significantly in the past five years, and I look forward to elaborating on further questions.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, they ignored it five years ago. How do we know they won't ignore it today? Here it was five years ago. The same thing, same logo today. The news release from 2002 said, "Results from the consultation process will be used to finalize Alberta's action plan." Which action plan, and when will it really be finalized?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I have spent the last three months since I was appointed Minister of Environment travelling around the province talking to all of the employees of Environment. The key message that I delivered everywhere I went was: in politics timing is everything. Guess what? The timing is absolutely right, and we are going to be able to do things that previous ministers could only dream of doing. Industry is onside, the public is onside, and the public demands that we take action.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister could tell us why the government has failed to take action in the past five years? This minister has been a member of that government. This Premier was a member of that government. That caucus hasn't changed, but in five years nothing has been done. What assurances do we have that you're going to do something this time?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to remind the hon. member that much has happened over the past five years, beginning with the introduction of Canada's first climate change legislation, the loop on which just closed with the introduction of Bill 3. This consultation takes us positively into the future instead of worrying about the past constantly as the NDP are wont to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Industrial Projects in Alberta's Heartland Area

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta industrial heartland bitumen upgraders present a tremendous opportunity for Edmonton and our capital region. Jobs, investment, and growth will all flow. It's like Fort McMurray five years ago and a bit better planned, but are we fully prepared? Regional governance has broken down. Is everyone who should be involved, and are they to the best degree? My constituents at Edmonton-Manning who will work there are very concerned. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Will we soon see some effective regional governance mechanism in place to ensure that everyone in Edmonton's million metro region is represented in dealing with massive growth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of my ministry's mandates is to deal with the regional planning issues and the intermunicipal disputes. On March 5 I received recommendations from the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability that address these issues. We are currently reviewing this information, and we expect to release our response later this spring. I can assure you that we are taking action to support stronger intermunicipal co-operation in Alberta.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the same minister: with transportation of workers and materials a key concern for many area residents, what steps has the minister taken to ensure that the various local governments, investors, and our provincial government are co-operating in this area?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this is a critical issue. The province is working with our partners in municipal governments through the minister's council to come up with innovative solutions to those challenges.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, Mr. Speaker: will the minister ensure that the work proceeds quickly to widen highway 28A and take out bottlenecks to ensure the safety of the residents, the schoolchildren, and the thousands of workers that will be travelling that highway to and from work? Will it be safe, and will it be ready?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government is working with all the municipalities in the industrial heartland area to determine all the overall transportation needs in the area. As part of this we're working on a long-range plan for roads, bridges, and other critical infrastructure throughout the area. The plan will identify the urgent, short-term, and long-term projects, and from there we can prioritize the projects from within the department's construction program.

As always, Mr. Speaker, safety is a very high priority of this government. It's a primary concern. When we look at road projects, we will certainly take all the safety of the drivers, the school buses, and you know what, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Climate Change Public Consultation

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the environment minister introduced the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, that put in place emissions intensity reductions of 12 per cent for large industrial emitters of greenhouse gases. Today the same minister announced that there will be a consultation with Albertans on a new climate change plan for the future. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Will the minister explain the rationale for this consultation?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I previously indicated, Bill 3 really is the culmination of delivering on the climate change policy that was initiated in 2002. This government does take climate change very seriously, so the announcement that I made this morning is to allow us to engage in consultations that will lead us to the next step. We've dealt with the industrial side, the industrial emitters side. We need to very seriously engage in conversation with Albertans on where we go from here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what topics are Albertans going to be consulted on?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated this morning at the news conference, there are some critical issues that I as minister am interested in, not the least of which is: what is the role of government? Should the government be the leader? Should the government be the legislator? Should the government be directing, or should the government be simply educating? Up until now we've had largely a voluntary system in place. There are a lot of things that Albertans have been suggesting could and should happen. I'm looking forward to engaging in that conversation over the next few weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental, also to the Minister of Environment: how can people in my area get involved in the consultation?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there will be 10 public meetings throughout the province, and I encourage all Albertans who are able to participate in those public meetings to do so. In addition to that, the fact book and workbook that was introduced this morning is available online, is available on request, and will be available at all MLA offices. I encourage Albertans again to pick up those books and fill out the workbook and submit it.

In addition, I will be meeting with aboriginal groups and other stakeholders to get their feedback, all of which will be incorporated into a revised climate change plan that we will introduce this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 2001 the population of this province has gone up over 10 per cent, and housing costs have as much as doubled. The need for affordable housing is a critical issue for Albertans, and as the Minister for Municipal Affairs and Housing well knows, to solve the crisis takes innovation, expertise, money, and the political will to keep the issue at the top of the provincial agenda. The minister's all-party Affordable Housing Task Force report is due to go to the minister next Monday. What will the minister do with the report once he gets it, and when will he release it to the people of Alberta?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has mentioned, yes, the housing task force will report, and hopefully it will report on March 19. We will take that recommendation, and then I will present it to our government for further direction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: rents are skyrocketing in this province. Will the minister push for a temporary rent regulation capping rent hikes at 10 per cent and change the law to allow only one rent increase per year?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report, and I cannot prejudice or pre-empt what is in that report. That report will be presented to me on March 19, and at that time I will look at it.

Mr. Taylor: Understood, Mr. Speaker, but I would have thought the minister would have been getting the same sorts of calls from his constituents that the rest of us are getting from ours.

Given the seriousness of the affordable housing crisis, which dictates that while we're talking about it, we also need to get building, will the minister provide this House today some targets and timelines for some big-time creation of affordable housing sufficient to make a real difference?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, again, we established a housing task force to look at the challenges in housing in Alberta and the opportunity for that task force to provide us with recommendations that would help with some of the guidance on where this government needs to go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Municipal Growth Pressures in the Capital Region

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Statistics Canada in its recent report indicates that 50 per cent of the Canadian population now resides in six municipalities, which includes the city of Edmonton. This sudden population growth and urbanization has led to ever-increasing financial strains on the city of Edmonton, which now provides social care, cultural facilities, infrastructure, and other expensive services to the entire capital region. All of these services are funded by Edmontonians through their property taxes. To the minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: is the minister aware of the revenue and expenditure inequity in the capital region, particularly with reference to the Sturgeon and Strathcona counties, which estimates that the city of Edmonton now provides some $80 million worth of services to the surrounding region?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, in managing growth pressures, the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability has brought forward a number of recommendations to address the short- and long-term sustainable funding for all municipalities. On that committee there is representation from the AAMD and C, which represents Sturgeon. There is also representation from the city of Edmonton. A number of the recommendations for the province's consideration address opportunities for strengthening co-ordination and intermunicipal co-operation.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reports are great, but how will the minister actually address that inequity?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the municipalities face significant challenges in delivering services and infrastructure to support a growing population and economy. The Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability has developed a draft report which contains 12 recommendations in three key areas: intermunicipal relationships, roles and responsibilities, and municipal revenue sources.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental to the same minister: how will the minister assure Edmontonians that the onset of development in what's known as the industrial heartland will adequately compensate the city of Edmonton for the anticipated influx of services required?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I need to say that Edmonton needs to be involved in the planning with the surrounding communities. This needs to be done, first of all, through communication, collaboration, and co-operation.

2:00 Trade, Investment, and Labour Mobility

Mr. Bonko: Despite his pledge to govern with openness and transparency, the Premier's comments Monday show that he is not committed to this with respect to the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement as it was negotiated and written and signed behind closed doors. This Chamber is only now having its say, Mr. Speaker. At best free trade agreements can benefit all involved. We have to be careful, however, that we do not restrict our ability to govern. My questions are to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What labour groups did the government consult with when it was drafting TILMA to make sure that Alberta workers would not be disadvantaged by this agreement?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, this agreement is a North American type of priority that is setting an example. As the Premier said the other day, the Premier of Ontario, the Premier of Saskatchewan, and other Premiers are interested. In fact, we are so open and so transparent that you can see it all on the website any time you wish. I'll give you the website call centre so you can view it for yourself because we are so open and transparent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Article 13 of TILMA states that the training standards recognized in one province will be recognized in the other. Since this agreement prohibits discrimination based on provincial standards, will Alberta workers with higher levels of training and certification be disadvantaged by this agreement?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, no, they will not.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, maybe referencing article 13 wasn't specific enough for the minister because I didn't hear him mention it once. Let me help him. Article 13(1) states that "any worker certified for an occupation by a regulatory authority of a Party shall be recognized as qualified to practice that occupation by the other Party." Again, will this mean that Albertans with greater levels of qualifications will be disadvantaged by this agreement?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. But let me give you a perfect example. In other words, what the member is saying is that he doesn't want to see others be able to come from British Columbia to Alberta. For instance, an example under the old way it used to be done under the Liberals, that they support, is that a teacher wouldn't be able to come and teach in Alberta. Well, guess what? We want teachers in Alberta because our economy is growing. The Liberals may not, but we do, and that's why TILMA is supported.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

C5 Forestry Management Plan

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent weeks I've heard a great deal of criticism from constituents and environmental groups who are very concerned with timber harvesting in the C5 area of southwestern Alberta, a part of the province enjoyed by many, many Albertans. Many are genuinely unclear regarding the government's proposed forest management plan for the area. Could the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development clarify exactly what this plan actually entails?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd like this Assembly to know that the proposed C5 forestry management plan is one of the most progressive developed to date in the history of this province. Because there are no other forestry management agreements in this area, our ministry had a free hand to use the highest industry standards and also do extensive public consultation in developing this plan. The result is a forestry management plan that recognizes that the key is that a healthy forest is the foundation for all other uses – for all other uses – not just forestry but watershed, habitat, biodiversity, tourism, and recreation. C5 does that, and I want to thank publicly today the public consultation committee and my officials for devising such a good plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Could the minister please be clear on whether the plan allows clear-cutting in the region or if it ignores watershed issues in C5, as some individuals and groups have suggested?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans should know that less than 1 per cent of the area identified in this plan will be harvested in any one given year, and when harvesting takes place, reforestation will follow immediately. The plan does not call for any massive swaths of clear-cutting. Instead, there will be contour cutting, that protects watersheds and trails and provides protection for other critical areas, and no harvesting will occur in the upper reaches of any watersheds.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question, again to the same minister: if the proposed plan is as appropriate and balanced as we are to believe, why is it that media accounts report the minister as saying that he is delaying his approval?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is very simple. This is a good plan, but it could be made better. That's what we're going to do. The additional time, by deferring approval at this time, will allow me to receive the report of the Oldman River watershed basin committee. I expect that later this summer. I've also spoken with my department officials and asked them to take a second look at the plan, asked them if we couldn't slightly change the orientation and focus of this plan so that it dovetails with the land-use framework, the mandate that our Premier has given me to protect our public forests and areas. I'm asking them to come up with a plan where forestry isn't just the end of the plan but the means by which we achieve other values, and that includes healthy forests, healthy watersheds, habitat for recreation and biodiversity, tourism and recreation, and a healthy and profitable and sustainable forestry industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Health Workforce Strategy

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to stumble along from one crisis to another. In health care we have severe shortages of nurses and other health workers. We have burnout, we have emergency room crunches, we have bed shortages, and we have other serious problems. The problem is going to get worse before it gets better with this overheated economy. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How long has the 2006 workplace plan been on the minister's desk, and why has he not made that public?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I haven't made the workforce strategy public because it hasn't gone through the policy approval process that we have, where we undertake a careful review before our CPCs, caucus, and cabinet before we adopt a policy and before we implement the policy. I inherited a lot of work that was done by my predecessor and the good folks in the ministry. I am now in the process of collaborating with the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry and the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology and working on the budget and resourcing figures that we can apply to it. But in the process of doing that, of course, there is work being done on workforce strategy. The world doesn't stop as we develop a new plan, and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: You're going to have trouble with that, Dave. [interjections]

Mr. Martin: You're cutting off my time here.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is that we have a severe crisis now. This was supposed to have been done back in the spring of 2006. Is the minister saying that this report is so damaging to the government that he has to go through another process? This was supposed to be done in the spring of 2006. Why don't we have it now?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. Work is happening now. Nurses are being educated in our institutions. Doctors are being educated in our institutions. Personal care aides and LPNs are being educated in our institutions. People are out recruiting internationally for new workers to come. In many different ways we're enhancing. We just signed a deal with the doctors and hope for ratification shortly on that, which will help retain and improve. Lots of things are happening.

The strategy that's being developed, the workforce strategy, which is part of my mandate – and I work collaboratively with the other two ministers I mentioned – is in process. There are lots of good strategies in it in addition to what's already being done.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, Rome burns while Nero fiddles.

The minister is saying that all these things are happening. Is he not recognizing that there is a crisis? All he has to do is go into the hospitals in both major cities, in Grande Prairie and others. Things are happening right now, and we still don't have a plan. He says that some things are going. This was supposed to be done in 2006. I'm asking the minister: why are we still struggling along without a plan?

Mr. Hancock: There appears to be a severe shortage of audiologists as well, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member didn't hear my answer. Work is progressing. The plan will be coming out shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Student Transportation

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgaryans do not have enough local schools to meet their needs, and now their children can't even make it to the schools they have. A shortage of bus drivers has left hundreds of Calgary students out in the cold every day, and the situation is reportedly getting worse. To the Minister of Education: what direct actions has the minister taken to address the issue and get Calgary students to their classrooms safely and on time?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, no one is being left out in the cold, so let's get that clear. The issue with school bus drivers, whether it's rural or in Calgary or any other region of the province, is no different than the other workforce issues that we're facing today. It's a question of qualified people, enough people to drive buses. The other issue that we have to deal with when it comes to school bus drivers is that a lot of these positions are part-time, and as you well know, it's harder to get part-time folks than full-time.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that both the Catholic and public school boards in Calgary have requested that the minister conduct a review of how the province administers transportation grants, will the minister take up that challenge and do something about it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, currently we have a committee that is looking at all of the funding framework for education. It involves the school boards, including the Catholic and public school boards. I look forward to what recommendations they come forward with to put in place a funding framework that is probably more acceptable to those who receive the funds.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister admit that the current busing problem is made worse by the government's failure to build local schools in Calgary's new and growing communities?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've made no secret of the fact, since inheriting this portfolio, that one of my priorities is going to be to get schools built where children live. We're working on doing that because, quite honestly, children riding the bus for an hour is not enhancing their education. So we're going to work hard to get schools where children live, and it's going to include some alternative ways of financing those schools.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Barley Marketing

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was the last day for Alberta farmers to mail in their votes for the federal barley plebiscite. Through this plebiscite the federal government indicated that they were consulting western Canadian farmers on their views of how they want to market their barley in the future. I learned from my constituents that the Alberta government had placed advertisements in major rural newspapers, and then I heard these same ads on the radio. Considering that this was a consultation and not a binding vote, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Why is the Alberta government spending Alberta taxpayer dollars on advertising to support the market choice option when other provinces either are silent or gave both sides of the issue?

Mr. Groeneveld: Alberta's marketing choice support is not new, Mr. Speaker. This has been a long-standing position based on previous votes by farmers. We trust our farmers. Alberta farmers are entrepreneurs who want to compete in the world market. In the past 70 per cent of them have told us that they want choice. If even just 1 per cent wanted choice, they should not be denied that right solely based on the province that they happen to live in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: as some of my constituents have so claimed, did Alberta's ads promote the elimination of the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Groeneveld: No, Mr. Speaker, they do not. In fact, every single ad encourages people to vote a competitive wheat board. Under marketing choice the Canadian Wheat Board will truly be able to show its capabilities. We feel it is very important that barley producers can and should be able to continue to support marketing through the Wheat Board if they wish. This is where marketing choice is different than the two other boxes. It's about having the freedom to choose.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: of the nearly $1 million spent on marketing choice over the last four years, can the Minister of Agriculture and Food tell me in this House if all these dollars were spent on advertising?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, as the member said, this money was spent over four years, and less than half of that money went into advertising, newsletters, and website development. Most of it was invested in research and studies of open-market systems like there are in other parts of the world. We're doing our homework, and our studies are publicly available on the website.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While an Alberta Liberal government would use the $7 billion third-quarter surplus revenues to both save for the future and pay off desperate infrastructure needs, this Tory government chooses to go back into debt through P3 alternative financing arrangements for our schools, roads, and hospitals. These same Tories created the current infrastructure crisis through their aversion to debt. The current Premier when minister of infrastructure presided over that policy. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Could he explain to Albertans why we now need to go back into debt to build schools, hospitals, and roads even though we have a surplus of $7 billion, $6 billion in . . .

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, for people that don't know, we're not going back into debt. We've found a way to do some alternative financing, and I'll tell you that it is a way to save taxpayers money, get the job done sooner, and allow jobs to all Albertans. That's what we're doing: better government for Albertans.

Mr. Chase: Yeah, and the minister has 30 years to hide out in retirement.

My second question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Does last week's government commitment to cover publicly the cost of overruns at Calgary's much-delayed, much-needed southeast replacement hospital indicate that it has seen the Alberta Liberal light and will reject 30-year P3 debt financing for other projects?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm not so sure what the Alberta Liberal light means. I'm not sure there's a light on over there.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, we do plan on and it's been announced that we are funding the south Calgary hospital, and it will be built as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Obviously, the minister is dealing with a 25-watt bulb.

My last question is to the Minister of Education. Why is the minister suggesting that we saddle Alberta taxpayers with a 30-year debt to not only build P3 schools but maintain and operate them privately when we have the money to build them publicly and transparently now? Debt or no debt, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, as we discussed earlier, we need schools where kids live. Despite what this hon. member says, we do not have $7 billion laying around to spend on schools. There have been a number of P3 and alternative financing projects around the world that have been successful, and there have been a few that have been unsuccessful. The research I did was that every time a P3 was unsuccessful, it was commenced by a Liberal or a socialist government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dodds-Round Hill Coal Gasification Project

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Residents of my constituency have great concern about the environmental impacts of a large coal mine and coal gasification project being proposed by Sherritt south of Tofield and Ryley and to the northeast of Camrose. To the minister: how can residents be assured that the province will hear and address their environmental concerns before a decision on this project is made?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. member as well as the residents that he refers to that the review application process that Alberta Environment has includes ample opportunity for the public to voice their concerns. Even before this project can be considered for approval, the company must conduct an environmental impact assessment and submit that to Alberta Environment. This impact will outline all of the potential environmental impacts from the project, and then Alberta Environment will consider the EIA, environmental impact assessment, as well as any statements of concerns from the public before making a decision on this project.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: what processes can Alberta Environment commit to to ensure that there is a clear understanding of the water quality and quantity impacts of the proposed project?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, all activities involving water require either a licence or approval from Alberta Environment. We only issue water licences and approvals when we are confident that the quantity and quality of water will not be impacted by the development. We also consider the impacts of the development on other licensed water users. So all potential water impacts will be outlined in the project's environmental impact assessment and will be reviewed by Alberta Environment employees.

Mr. Johnson: My last question is to the Minister of Energy. What role does Alberta's Energy and Utilities Board play in reviewing and approving this project?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly this government in place in Alberta today has a plan, and we're on track to build a stronger Alberta. The gasification of coal may just be one step ahead in our plan. The EUB will play a role with respect to permitting. This particular project is in the very early stages at this present time, and an application has yet to be filed. When it is filed, the EUB will take into consideration all of the assessments and the EIA that has been mentioned already by my colleague, and certainly a determination will be made at that point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Temporary foreign workers here in Alberta are victims of very weak labour laws that are not enforced by this government. This government has no interest in enforcing the laws for temporary foreign workers.

An Hon. Member: That's not true.

Mr. MacDonald: Of course it's true.

Earlier in question period today the minister of municipal affairs indicated that temporary foreign workers have the same rights as other workers in the province. My first question is to the hon. minister. Why, then, is Armando Garcia working on a corporate farm in eastern Alberta and getting no overtime pay after he puts in his 40 hours a week? This man has worked 189 hours overtime in three months and has not received one extra penny for his efforts. Why is that happening?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, as I said previously, this is an individual case, and I will forward that information to the minister in charge, and we will look into it.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why is this gentleman from Guadalajara, Mr. Armando Garcia, not being covered by WCB when he's working on that big corporate farm?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, it is no different than any other farm worker in Alberta. We will take it under advisement.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this time to the minister of agriculture. This government has a hotline called the Alberta foreign worker hotline. It's a toll-free number within Alberta, which really could read 1-877-LETS-EXPLOIT. This web page is not providing information to farm workers who are on temporary work visas or any other worker on a temporary work visa on what rights they have in this province if they're not satisfied with the job conditions. Will this website start showing workers' rights and where they can go to have those rights enforced?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the foreign worker program and temporary foreign workers are federal issues that we work under with the other, so I'm sure that the answer to the question would come through them. However, we are very concerned, and we are very appreciative that we do have the temporary foreign worker program for agriculture. It's something that is greatly needed by agriculture, as it is in most of the rest of the country. We're more than happy to work through the federal program and also with the Employment, Immigration and Industry minister on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Deerfoot Trail Maintenance

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province has helped out the city of Calgary a great deal by taking over the maintenance of the Deerfoot Trail. Given the tremendous growth in Calgary, the Deerfoot Trail carries millions of vehicles a year. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What maintenance has been done on the Deerfoot Trail lately?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, again, I'd like to reiterate that this government takes safety – and maintenance is part of that – very seriously. The Alberta government has invested over $200 million to improve Deerfoot Trail since the government took it over in 2000. This year the government will invest a further $17 million for various Deerfoot Trail projects. As for routine maintenance, our maintenance contractor does a very good job of removing snow, filling cracks, when you consider how much traffic is actually on that road at all times.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reflecting questions from my constituents about the lighting outage for about a month on the Deerfoot Trail section now known as the Calf Robe Bridge overpass, my only supplemental question to the same minister: when will the lighting be fixed for Calgarians so that we can drive safely at night to that section of the Deerfoot Trail?

Mr. Ouellette: Again, Mr. Speaker, safety is a high priority for this government. The Alberta government has a separate maintenance contract with Enmax for overhead lighting on the Deerfoot Trail. In January Enmax started a maintenance blitz and has been out on the road working when weather and traffic have permitted them to be there. So far, Enmax has replaced or repaired approximately 300 lights, and the contractor is committed to continuing the blitz for as long as it takes. We're also working on better co-ordination, to put all of our contracts together in one to make sure that everyone can be there when needed.

The Speaker: Before we move to the next part of the Routine, just so hon. members will be brought up to date, on day 2 of the session we had 84 questions and answers, on day 3 we had 88, yesterday we had 78, and today we had 100. That's not a record, by the way.

head: Introduction of Bills
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Bill 19
Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 19, the Appeal Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

The legislation is intended to modify the current appeal process of the Court of Appeal in hearing appeals from boards or tribunals, and the bill includes minor amendments to eight provincial statutes overall. The amendments are designed to reduce delays and make better use of the court's time.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 19 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table on behalf of the leader of the NDP opposition two documents. The first is the result of a corporate registries search that shows the voting shareholders of the Holy Cross Manor.

The second is a list of candidates for the PCAA executive committee elections from the PC Party's website.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today, as promised earlier, to table media reports from the Drumheller Mail indicating that the number one story in '06 was the Red Deer River water diversion and quoting this: "During his election campaign, Ed Stelmach was quoted as saying the plan was 'ridiculous'."

Thank you.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter that I wrote to the now hon. Premier. This letter is dated October 19, 2006. I am asking how the government would plan to get us out of the economic mess caused by electricity deregulation, and I haven't received a response to this letter yet.

My second tabling is in regard to my questions earlier in question period, and it is a document from Public Accounts, year end of March 31, 2005, indicating that for Cliff Paulgaard, who is a principal owner of the corporate farm C.G. Paulgaard Farms Ltd., there was a grant in that year of $63,400. That was the year 2005.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the employment contract of Armando Garcia, and there's a bill that the hospital wanted him to pay – go to a bank and buy a money order and pay it – and also the pay stubs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. I would call the President of the Treasury Board to move the estimates.

head: Interim Supply Estimates 2007-08
Offices of the Legislative Assembly and Government

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move the interim supply estimates, and I would like to add to their introduction that these amounts have been derived from the estimates made by their departments and their spending requirements for this period. The amounts reflect the pattern of government spending being higher in the early months than in some of the later months of the year. This pattern occurs because some payments are due April 1 and July 1 for the first and second quarters, and many annual payments fall due April 1.

These payments result from the quarterly and annual spending commitments in all areas of government, responsibilities such as health, education, children's services, and support for seniors. In addition, some payments are related to the seasonal nature of certain types of activities such as construction and agriculture. Spending in many of these areas of government responsibility is subject to a broad range of cost pressures.

These interim supply estimates provide funding authorization only until the main government estimates are approved. Approval of interim supply estimates pending the release and approval of the budget is not unusual for government. This authorization is needed so that hospitals, schools, universities, and so on can continue to function as usual. Consequently, these interim supply estimates cannot reveal the government's spending plans until all the budget documents are tabled. Those budget documents will include comprehensive budget information in the form of the government's fiscal and business plans, the ministry business plans, and the government estimates. These estimates will be fully debated when the budget documents are tabled.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the first speaker, having received no clarification on which order goes first, we will follow the same format as outlined by the Deputy Chair of Committees yesterday.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford first.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise in response to the request for interim supply from the President of the Treasury Board. My first thought upon hearing the president's comments was that I've heard that speech before, and indeed I have. I'm going to suspect it's probably a script that the government uses every year when they find themselves in a situation where we don't have a budget come the end of the current fiscal year. So you'll have to excuse me if my comments sound familiar as well because even though I don't have a script in front of me as the President of the Treasury Board did, I'm going to guess that I'm going to reiterate similar comments that I've made in the past whenever the government has come looking for interim supply.

It's probably the most frustrating exercise for a member of the opposition: to discuss interim supply. If I can draw a parallel, it would be like my 15-year-old daughter coming to me and saying: "Dad, I need a thousand dollars. Oh, and I'll tell you next week what I'm going to do with it." [interjection] The President of the Treasury Board just told me that his daughter does that. I've had that experience, and I'm going to guess several members have. Certainly many taxpayers in Alberta have had that experience. I'm going to suggest that for most of us, probably the vast, vast majority of us when that happens, the answer is either (a) "No way" or (b) "Not until you tell me exactly what you're going to do with it." So we've got a situation here where the government is now asking for nearly $10 billion, and they're saying: "Don't worry about it. Trust us. We'll tell you in a month and a few days what we're going to do with it."

I know it's a fait accompli. I know it has to happen. I understand that there are certain requirements at the beginning of the year that make it mandatory to have a little more money than might be expected if you were to ration it out over the year. I understand all of those things. As I say, we've been here before. But I hope that the President of the Treasury Board and government members in general understand how frustrating an exercise it is for those of us on this side of the House when we're expected to approve nearly $10 billion without anything more than a single line item in the document that they've presented and absolutely no explanation as to where that money might be used or what it might not be used for. So I just hope that everybody in this House will recognize the difficult position that this puts members of the opposition in when we are asked to have this debate today and tomorrow.

Now, the President of the Treasury Board did reference the fact that there are certain obligations that are seasonal and certain obligations that are front-end loaded, as it were. But I just note that three years ago we were in a similar situation, and Bill 24, which was at that time the interim supply act, asked for $5.5 billion, and three years later we are asking for nearly double the amount. Although, as I say, I recognize some of these peculiarities that exist in terms of front-end loading and seasonal expenditures, I don't believe that we've had a hundred per cent inflation in the last three years. So that would be a question. I'm wondering: if three years ago $5.5 billion was sufficient for the government to get through until the time that a budget was passed, why is it that here in 2007 we're looking at nearly double the amount being requested by the government?

I'd also like to opine, I suppose, about the need for a long-term savings plan. I know that the President of the Treasury Board and the Finance minister have both talked about having a surplus plan or some sort of a surplus allocation plan in the budget that we're going to see on the 19th of April. That, as you will know, Mr. Chairman, isn't good enough for the Official Opposition.

We have argued and presented a bill in this House, which, unfortunately, not even one single Conservative member voted in favour of, that would have established a nonrenewable resource savings plan which would have seen 30 per cent of all revenues from nonrenewable resources put into savings. That, unfortunately, was not successful even in passing second reading in this House, which is really too bad because it would have been great to at least have had the debate. However, we have no idea from this whether or not that might actually be part of it, and in fact we don't even know if there's a surplus plan involved with this because, as the minister outlined, they're not able to give us anything more than a single line item on each of these points.

The new government has talked an awful lot about openness and transparency. This is not an idea that springs from the new Premier. In fact, this is an idea that the Official Opposition has been calling for for a long time: more openness and transparency in government. Mr. Chairman, I would submit to you that it's just one more in a long stream of great ideas that have been generated by the Official Opposition caucus that this government has chosen to adopt. And you know what? More power to them. If that is our role for the time being as we serve in opposition, to supply great policy initiatives to the government and have them adopt them, that's not necessarily a bad thing.

The sustainability fund, which the government is mandated to keep 2 and a half billion in and currently sits at somewhere in excess of $6 billion, was actually the initiative of a former Leader of the Official Opposition, Dr. Ken Nicol from Lethbridge. Of course, once the government adopted it, it changed names from a stability fund to a sustainability fund. Nevertheless, it was an idea of the Official Opposition that the government saw merit in and chose to adopt. So, as I say, if openness and transparency is sort of one of the new buzzwords or one of the five planks of the new government, we're certainly going to hold their feet to the fire because it was something that we've been talking about for a long, long time.

Mr. Chairman, as I say, I've expressed a great deal of frustration with the fact that we don't have dollars tied to actual programs here. One of the things that concerns me – and I know my colleague from Lethbridge-East will speak to this later on, when she has the opportunity to come up – is whether or not there will be funding in this $10 billion that we're debating today for the long-term care committee's recommendations. As we know, the government has put some money towards those recommendations: far, far short of the $250 million that that panel called for. In the meantime the situation has become absolutely desperate in terms of long-term care and their needs, particularly as it revolves around the labour shortages and the difficulties that care facilities are having attracting workers but many, many other issues, many of which have been spoken about and, as I say, a number of which I know the Member for Lethbridge-East will reference later today.

Mr. Chairman, there was an awful lot of concern expressed in my constituency recently about the need for an overpass to be built at 23rd Avenue and Calgary Trail. I'm hopeful that there may actually be some money in this $10 billion that would go to the city of Edmonton to help them get that done. We'll find out, I suppose, in five weeks or so whether or not that's the case.

This is a huge issue for not just the constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford but, frankly, for anybody who comes into Edmonton on the Queen Elizabeth highway or anybody who's hoping to leave Edmonton or, for that matter, anybody who's even doing business or commuting, visiting family members, whatever the case may be in south Edmonton. The problems created right now, particularly at 23rd Avenue with the South Edmonton Common development and now the Century Place development that's taking place, are huge. I would hope that there may be some relief here for the city of Edmonton so that they could proceed with that very worthwhile and very much needed development.

Another issue that is of particular concern to the residents of Edmonton-Rutherford, Mr. Chairman, would be the extension of the LRT project to the Century Place development: again, the sooner the better. I know that right now there is funding to move that project forward, and I know that it is actually going to happen. But as an example, we had a situation here just recently where the parents, teachers, and students at both Harry Ainlay high school and Louis St. Laurent high school were hoping to have at the minimum an underpass or an overpass over 111th Street, if not an actual station put in at that location, to prevent serious accidents and injuries taking place, and that is not going to happen due to budgetary concerns.

Again, I would hope that there may be some money in here that would address that situation and perhaps allow for an extra station or a safe crossing for students and users of those schools at 111th Street, but I'm not sure. Whether or not I get an answer from the minister on that, I don't know, but again certainly that is something that the constituents of south Edmonton are hopeful of and would dearly love to see.

Now, there are a number of departments, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to point out in particular. I suppose that we'll start with the Legislative Assembly and an interim supply of $19.8 million being asked for to carry on the operations of this Assembly. I'm going to guess that some of that might actually be to make sure that myself and my colleagues in the room today get paid after April 1, so that would be a good thing. I know that, like most Albertans, the members of this Assembly depend on their paycheques, so I'm not so sure that I would disagree with the idea that we support the Legislative Assembly. Whether or not $20 million is required to get us through to mid-June or so, when the full budget will be passed, I don't know. Once again, other than to say expenses and equipment, there's no explanation as to what exactly that money might be used for.

I'm going to point out in particular the departments that I am the shadow minister for, and I'll allow my colleagues to then do the same for theirs: $33 million for the Department of Finance, Mr. Chairman, again for expense and equipment/inventory purchases, with no explanation as to what that might be, and another $15 million for nonbudgetary disbursements, an awful lot of money again being asked for without any real explanation as to why or how it might be used.

Probably even more important, I would think, are the requests for funding for Service Alberta and the Treasury Board. Service Alberta is looking for $98 million for expense and equipment/inventory purchases, and Treasury Board $6.4 million. The reason I say more important, Mr. Chairman, is because as the President of the Treasury Board would acknowledge, these are new departments. Given that they're new departments, I think it would be fair to say that there's still some shakedown taking place in terms of what exactly each department is responsible for, the shuffling that has taken place back and forth in terms of who's responsible for what. We're asked to give in excess of a hundred million dollars to these two new departments, without any explanation at all as to how that money is being used.

We don't even know, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, how many full-time employees might be employed by each of those departments. We don't know exactly what programs and services they're funding out of this hundred million dollars that they're asking for in interim supply. As I say, because it's a brand new department, there's no history that we can look at. We can't look at that department and say: well, last year they spent – you know, I'll just pick a number – $500 million, so it would be fair to give them $100 million in interim supply. We can't do that because it's a brand new department.

So in particular I would look to the President of the Treasury Board for a little more explanation in terms of why Service Alberta needs $98 million and exactly how that money might be spent over the next couple of months while we're waiting for a budget to be passed and, likewise, exactly how $6.4 million is going to be used to fund the operations of the Treasury Board over the next couple of months. Again, Mr. Chairman, because we do not have any historical data to go by. We don't know how many employees are there, and we don't know what their plans might be in terms of running programs. I think that requires a little more detail than just the single line item that we're given here.

With those comments, I'm going to take my seat and allow others to ask some questions. I would hope that the President of the Treasury Board might be able to answer some of those for me today, and if not, I would hope that we can hear some sort of a response prior to being asked to vote on interim supply amounts tomorrow afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. I don't think that it will come as a surprise to the hon. member that I think this process of interim supply needs to end, and I have to give a lot of credit to the House leaders and to our new Premier, who said: let's start setting a date for a budget to be brought in. So from that point of view, I absolutely agree. I think we use a lot of time in here – I agree – but I think the hon. member would understand why it has to be done in this way to preserve the integrity of the budget. You know, history sometimes gives us rules we live by that are necessary. The idea that this is bigger than normal: while I give the House leaders credit for our new change, I also have to point out that we could still be here in July if we want to debate that budget long enough. That's right. July, Dave. [interjections] I could have just been saying some other name. I didn't mean him.

Yes, the process needs to change. Bringing in a budget on February 22, having the full debate before this time will be absolutely light years ahead for all: for you, for us, for our departments. It means maybe moving up our work in the fall as we develop it, and that's fine. That's what we're paid to do. But pass that. To try and speculate what might be in the budget or what might not be wouldn't really be fair. As you can probably appreciate, there are very separate issues here with the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board. The budget projection is solely the purview of the Minister of Finance, and we would not want to prejudice or even to speculate what might be in there from the department.

So I take the hon. member's comments, and we will have a broad discussion when the budget is brought down. I think his points around the process are right on.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I also thank the Treasury Board minister for his indication that things will improve. I look forward to those improvements. We saw an improvement today in the House. Through a more transparent, accountable procedure we were able to get through a hundred questions, so we're moving in the right direction. I appreciate the President of the Treasury Board indicating that things will get better.

We have to deal with what we currently have, though, and that's what I'll discuss. We all remember that we had barely a week in terms of a fall Legislature. It basically went into the tail end of August and, I believe, a little bit into September. Had we had a fall sitting, possibly there would have been greater preparation potential of transfer. We would all have been in the House, and this work could have been done.

As it was, with the retirement of our former Premier a leadership race was called. That leadership race took up a certain amount of time, and we're basically trying to catch up for that lost time. Normally the House would have sat around the 21st of February, or usually just after Family Day. We find ourselves continually playing catch-up. We won't hear what the actual budget figures are until April 19, and obviously we can't have the legislative process and Albertans come to a grinding halt because there is no money to cover their programs.

In terms of improvements that I would like to see made, I frequently get the idea that there are almost two blue books: one for the opposition members that is a very thin version and then another book of a different colour that the government has that actually provides the details behind the millions and billions of dollars that are being called for in interim supply. Again, I want to echo what the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford pointed out. We have one-line items, and we have no idea what constitutes billions of dollars of justification for a one-line item, and to debate or discuss or approve with any understanding or basis of knowledge is absolutely impossible.

Possibly at some point in the future – trust us – will be something through the joint policy committees, et cetera, that we're moving toward which will be easier, but we're still, unfortunately, stuck in that old circumstance where information is power, and without information you're, to a great degree, powerless.

To go through the budget, we have support to the Legislative Assembly, expense and equipment/inventory purchases of $19,800,000. If I understand this correctly, this is to get us toward the middle of April, and then I gather that some of that money will be spent later on, and we'll get a little bit more qualification for it. Again, I'm not sure, and I'd look forward to the minister explaining to me where $19 million goes between now and April 19 in support to the Legislative Assembly. For example, is that part of our constituency budget? All these questions I would appreciate having answered.

Office of the Auditor General: $6,200,000 for expense and equipment/inventory purchases. Again, I very much value the office of the Auditor General, and I also feel very privileged to be on the Public Accounts Committee, to which the Auditor General reports on a weekly basis when the Legislature is sitting. Now, thanks to the wonderful arrangements of our House leaders, we will be able to meet outside of the Legislature. Again thanks to our House leaders we will have a budget for research, and we will not just be restricted to having the ministers and their aides come before us, but we can look beyond, to a variety of health regions and school boards. We have almost unlimited possibilities as to who we can call before us to account. So I think that helping out the Auditor General is a great expense.

In Public Accounts this morning the Auditor General asked us to consider prior to next week if we would benefit from a double reporting. In other words, instead of the great large reporting process that we receive at the end of the year, he's indicating his willingness to provide us with two reports. I think that this is absolutely wonderful in terms of the accountability and that the Auditor General obviously needs that extra financial support, particularly if he's going to put out two annual reports instead of the current voluminous, large one, that is very inclusive and conclusive.

Now, we have the office of the Ombudsman receiving $800,000. Again, the Ombudsman is a very busy person in this province. There are a number of complaints that are brought to the Ombudsman because of concerns over how they were treated, whether they received their AISH payments, whether the AISH payments were sufficient, whether a person on long-term disability was suddenly cut off and forced to go prematurely onto the Canada pension plan, whether a person has been mistreated; for example, if they were promised that their 15 or 14 and a half years of service for the federal government in the military would be guaranteed as part of their pensionable service and for their participation within the provincial government's auspices. That Ombudsman is a very, very busy individual, and this money, this $800,000, is probably well spent.

The office of the Chief Electoral Officer is asking for an increase or a temporary holdover of $2,100,000. Now, among the expense and equipment/inventory that the Chief Electoral Officer is purchasing, I would like to think that possibly it's cameras so that we could have photo identification for all voters who come up on voting day. Although they may be of a homeless nature, they can say: "Well, I'm at the Calgary Drop-In Centre," or "I'm at the Mustard Seed. This is who I am." Possibly they don't have the money to afford a vehicle, and therefore they're not likely to have a driver's licence. Potentially the office of the Chief Electoral Officer could use some of this $2 million to ensure that every single Albertan has the opportunity, should they wish, to have secure photo identification, that will allow them to then participate fully without a doubt as to their identity during the election process.

This is something for the health minister – I'm very pleased to see his attendance today – to consider because the health card could be a secure card in terms of identification with a picture, and that would eliminate the production of numerous copies of health cards, which have been in circulation far beyond our population yet are used as a piece of identity. So this could very well be a direction that the Chief Electoral Officer might consider. We know in Calgary, for example, the problems we had with ward 10. One of our members opposite knows very much the difficulties. I won't name that individual out of respect.

The office of the Ethics Commissioner. Now, again, the Ethics Commissioner is a very busy man. I know that both the NDP opposition and the Liberal opposition keep him hopping in asking him to inquire as to the appointments of individuals onto numerous patronage-style committees, so the Ethics Commissioner is indeed a busy man. Whether it's the royalties task force, whether it's a health board appointment, there are a lot of individuals whose ethical background and research and potential conflicts of interest need to be considered. If $200,000 is sufficient for the Ethics Commissioner to carry out a full review of conflict of interest, then I don't have a whole lot of difficulty with that amount.

The office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Now, here's an area that I worry about. If the Information and Privacy Commissioner is being granted $1,600,000, then why do we opposition Liberals, opposition NDP, our independent, and our member of the Alliance have to pay prohibitive amounts in FOIP requests to get information that is readily available to government members?

When we're talking open and transparent, let's look at FOIP costs, that are similar to those of the federal government. FOIP has become a burial instrument. It doesn't protect the rights of individuals. It looks like potentially the government spent $1,600,000 for a big shovel to bury information rather than making it available, so I question that particular expenditure, but again I would like to hear more detail.

So to this point the total expenditures that I have just related to you on six departments is up to $30,700,000. Now we come to Advanced Education and Technology with the former minister here present. I know how hard he worked as the former minister of advanced education, and I very much appreciate the work that he did.

I might also indicate that without purchasing a Conservative membership, I supported and indicated to others my support for him as the potential new Conservative Premier. It didn't work out that way, but I am pleased to see that he arrived safe and sound back in a front-bench position because I do see him as a man of integrity. As I have mentioned before, I credit him along with our House leader and the hon. NDP House leader for coming up with a progressive change in Standing Orders and regulations.

However, within the advanced education $728 million I would love to know how that breaks down. For example, what portion would Bow Valley College get? What portion would Mount Royal College get? How about the Alberta College of Art and Design, the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology, and, of course, the area that I represent proudly, and that is the University of Calgary?

Now, Harvey Weingarten, the president of the University of Calgary, felt the need to borrow 1 and a half billion dollars to expand the University of Calgary's campus and programs so that we could be a world-class institution. The expansion is proceeding at a rather slow pace, I must admit. I'm up at the university on a regular basis, and I've yet to see footings, for example, for the digital library, which is going to benefit all Alberta. But if the president of the University of Calgary had received some of this money that he has been requesting for some time, he possibly wouldn't have had to put the University of Calgary at the financial risk of borrowing 1 and a half billion dollars.

I'm sure that there are members – and I don't want to get into Lethbridge. I'll leave that to my confident and competent colleague from Lethbridge-East. I'm sure she'll have questions. But I cannot think of too many better investments of money than postsecondary, whether it's for trade training, whether it's for academic pursuits, whether it's just the general improvement and understanding, arts and humanities, culture. This money could potentially be extremely well spent, but I have no idea from this line item, that indicates that $728,800,000 has been expended on equipment and inventory purchases and an additional $27,900,000 has been spent on nonbudgetary disbursements. I consider myself an educated man, but I have no idea what nonbudgetary disbursement items might include.

Under Agriculture and Food, expense and equipment: $205 million. Well, that's probably in line as an expense. Alberta's third most important industry in terms of the money that it returns to the province or that it brings in would be agriculture. In fact, I guess, agriculture and forestry are similar in importance. We know that their sort of economic produce pales in comparison to oil and gas, but their practices are considerably less impactful on our environment.

Now, hopefully in Agriculture and Food there is no more expenditure. There is no more money that is going to suggest that the Canadian Wheat Board should get out of the business. I know previously somewhere from the government expenditures that almost a million and a half dollars went to discourage our current system, a system that seems to be extremely well supported in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. If a free-vote opportunity was provided without having to have an identifying number at the end of your ballot, I think more Albertans would feel that the status quo is the way to go. And those few entrepreneurial types who want to make money at the other operators' expense: we would see them for what they were. The time they spent in jail: well, that's an indication. This government seems to want to do away with co-operatives, and that's what the Wheat Board in fact is.

Children's Services: $311 million, expense and equipment. I can't think of a better area to expend money on than Children's Services. We have a new minister, and I appreciate the fact that she is quickly getting onto that job. I guess that maybe if I look at the $11 million of the $311 million, that's approximately how much, I believe, was given to child care service providers to increase accreditation, subsidize spaces. Again, because the minister is here, she can probably provide a little bit more detail on the money that was expended on Children's Services.

However, this province is the only province that doesn't provide funding for child care past age six. In other words, this government assumes that once a child is in the school system, if they're capable of being in the school system, automatically all of their care concerns are over. Well, as a schoolteacher of 34 years I want to point out that schools are more than babysitting services. While we do care for children within the facility, we also educate them. We also help them to develop concerns of citizenship. We work on their cultural and artistic abilities. We do more than care for them.

What is not happening in this province and what is necessary is that child care provisions, both private and public, are increased. I had a very interesting conversation with a lady by the name of Bev Smith. Bev Smith is an extremely strong advocate for stay-at-home parents.

I look forward to a second opportunity if such provides.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and I appreciate an opportunity to speak on the interim supply estimates. I would like to focus my comments in regard to education specifically, and I do have a number of questions if the hon. minister would be so kind as to enlighten myself and whoever else might be interested.

These interim supply estimates in regard to education seem to represent somewhere between 20 and 25 per cent of the total operating budget for the ministry. I wanted to make particular note that the estimates have been allocated for what is said to be expenses and equipment/inventory purchases, and it seems to be quite a significant increase over last year's numbers.

Of course, these mostly represent one-off sorts of purchases for the ministry for things like furnishings, display cabinets, and equipment such as lab equipment and whatnot. But, you know, my concern for this long-term expenditure and the whole issue of obsolescence and wear and tear on equipment is that I'm wondering if these are expenses rolled into the core operating budget of the ministry.

Again, I would ask if we could expect sustained and guaranteed funding in the long term for such expenses because what we've seen happen in the last 10 to 15 years in public education is that, especially with school-based funding, schools have had to make decisions about letting those things go for a longer period of time since they have to focus on making sure that there's a teacher in front of the class and some books; you know, very immediate basics to look after. Those other items such as furniture and whatnot, that have a longer obsolescence period, have been neglected, so what we're seeing now is lots and lots of schools with some long-term equipment requiring some financial assistance for replacement. Thus, I believe and I think schools would believe that that belongs in part of the regular budget. Put it back, basically, something that's been in short supply over this last long period of time, since at least 1993.

It is, in fact, a strategic priority of the Education ministry to address schools' infrastructure needs, so I would like to ask a number of questions in that regard as well. For one, how in fact can this government continue its commitment to address infrastructure when, for example, our own public school system here in Edmonton states a need for 13 new schools and the ministry is committed to eight? I see a basic discrepancy there that certainly cuts short Edmonton public's capacity to replace older schools and to build into new areas. Again, sort of a way by which shortages are being planned here, and it just creates more stress on other parts of the budget.

You know, given that the 2004-2005 budget identified approximately 530 schools nearing the end of their life cycle in this province, requiring an additional expenditure for renewal or for replacements, how much of this money will be needed to ensure that even minimum standards are maintained in schools throughout the province? I think we have still a real discrepancy between what the reality is for long-term infrastructure investment and what our budgetary allocations are here, and I would like to see that addressed in this coming budget, as would thousands of students and teachers and parents across the province.

I am starting to hear more substantively that the answer the minister is looking towards in this government is using public/private partnerships to meet this shortfall, and I guess, obviously, we have a number of serious concerns in regard to using the P3 model for schools and for public infrastructure construction in general. I think the issue was in fact brought up here today – and it's a very valid one – that we are simply deferring the cost and taking it off an annual budget when we use P3s, but we are really applying that cost over a much longer period of time, whatever the contract is for, and for at least a 10 to 30 per cent increase from what the public construction of any given structure would be, not to mention other subsidiary bills that come from a private/public partnership. You know, this is a basic financial problem, but I believe that, particularly when applied to public schools, it has specific education issues and problems as well that need to be addressed or considered very clearly when we're talking about using P3s to build schools.

For example, back in 1999 Calgary's the Hamptons elementary school was built using the P3 model. Six months after it was built, the school developed cracks in its tiles and drywall, roof leaks, faulty heating and mechanical systems, and $120,000 was needed to bring the school up to an acceptable standard. So I ask whether or not that is, in fact, value for our money, number one, and number two, is that a reasonable expectation for the safety and comfort and health of students and teachers working in a school like that built through the P3 model?

Since this risk management model is such a big issue within P3 projects, I ask: who is going to manage the risk to safety of our children and of workers in these P3 schools and take responsibility before we end up with a substandard school being built, as we saw with the Hamptons elementary school project P3 experiment? You know, once you commit to the bricks and mortar of however you happen to build something, a school in particular, and you find it coming up deficient, it causes a tremendous amount of instability in regard to the educational needs of students and a loss of public monies from school boards. I would venture to say that the risks outweigh the benefits by a long shot in regard to using the P3 model to build public schools in the province of Alberta.

Also in regard to the Education budget, then, I just wanted to address briefly the staff, specifically librarian, shortfall in the province of Alberta. The ministry has a business plan that states that it supports the healthy development of Alberta children and youth. Those are their priorities 6 through 9 in the business plan, yet once again I see that, in fact, the number of full-time equivalents, FTEs, for librarians has dropped from 81.7 FTEs to 12.1 FTEs in the last decade while high school counsellor FTEs have dropped from 99.1 FTEs to 43.8. I would beg to ask this question: how can we ensure, as it's sometimes put in this House and as I certainly would aspire to, the best education system in the world when critical components to our children's education and intellectual development are not just lagging but, in fact, dropping precipitously? I would ask what the minister would like to do to rectify this decade-long free fall in regard to staffing levels in the key areas of librarians and counsellors. I think that this is particularly noteworthy.

You know, in relation to this as well, although the government and the ministry specifically commissioned the Learning Commission to gather up a very interesting and worthwhile report, the key recommendation of the Learning Commission was to reduce the class size average across the province. In so many school divisions we're not seeing a drop in class sizes and student-teacher ratios, but in fact we're seeing increases, especially in the higher grades. There's a certain point where students' education quality drops significantly with the size of the class. I know from personal experience that certainly anything that exceeds 30 students per class has a genuine and immediate impact in lowering the capacity for the students to achieve, and this is a very common number that is used as a standard throughout high schools around the province.

You know, I think we have to take a hard look at these things. If we do in fact want to not just build but maintain a high-quality public education system over the long term, it really does live or die in the quality that we provide to the classroom on the ground level. While we do have lots to be proud of in terms of our public education system, there are several places where we must change and focus the way that we do things. The number one statistic, Mr. Chairman, that comes to my mind is in regard to high school completion rates.

We have an embarrassingly low high school completion rate in the province of Alberta. This doesn't bode well just for now but for our long-term future as well because, you know, that really limits the capacity for our students to become gainfully employed and independent, not just now but throughout their lives. These completion rates must increase. They must be brought up to at least the Canadian average level immediately to determine that we will stay competitive and looking after the full needs of our public here in the province over the near and long-term future.

Finally, before I finish off, I just wanted to speak about the First Nation and Métis education programs here in the province of Alberta. Again, this is a focus area that I believe requires and deserves adequate support. You know, I would like to ask the question, if the minister can tell me, of how they are looking at comparing the high school completion rates against the rest of the population. Are we keeping accurate figures as to tracking where those numbers are, specifically, for First Nation and Métis students throughout the province of Alberta? I would like to ask as well: to what extent has the government implemented and acted upon the recommendations in the native education policy review by the Métis Nation of Alberta Association, given that that report was in fact requested by the Education ministry of Alberta in the first place? Finally, what does the minister intend to do in taking steps to ensure that aboriginal students are being better served in this province?

Those are my comments, Mr. Chairperson, in regard to the interim supply estimates specific to Education. I look forward to working with the minister to ensure that, in fact, we continue to build a strong public education system here in the province.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make a couple of comments. Unfortunately, I can't be in the House tomorrow, so I'd like to respond to some of the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

One of the difficulties with interim supply is that you are talking about budget expenditures that are going to be coming in a budget that you can't talk about, so it does present some difficulties. However, as was mentioned by my colleague the President of the Treasury Board, the government has a responsibility to keep the trains running on time, and we could be somewhere into the month of late May or June before the budget is actually approved, so these funds are obviously required on an interim basis.

I guess there were some general comments at the outset relative to what kinds of expenditures are being asked for. Keep in mind that 97 per cent of the dollars in the Department of Education's budget flow through two school boards, so in reality there's nothing here that isn't along the lines of normal funding of school boards and other school facilities throughout the province.

The member talked a fair bit about infrastructure and about P3s. I guess it really comes down to a philosophical difference of opinion as to whether government should build, own, and operate every building in the province or whether this should be a joint effort between the private sector, the communities, and government.

It's amazing that every time members of the opposition talk about failed P3s, they bring up the situation of the Hamptons school in Calgary. If the hon. member would care to check with the Calgary public school board, the Hamptons school was not a P3 school that was constructed in conjunction with the Calgary public school board. I would suggest that if the hon. member wants to talk about P3s and wants to talk about Calgary and wants to talk about the Calgary public school board, why don't we talk about the Radisson school, which is a P3 model that has been incredibly successful?

All I can say relative to infrastructure funding going forward on alternative financing models is that the costs will be weighed at the outset, and we will be getting the best value for dollars for the taxpayer. In addition to that, there will be no schools constructed in this province through any kind of alternative financing arrangements that don't meet the infrastructure standards that exist today for government-funded schools.

Just a couple of other quick comments. There are a couple of questions that the hon. member asked that I will take away and get more detailed answers for, but I think it's really important to touch on the comments made relative to the Learning Commission. The member was critical of the fact that we haven't met the class size initiative as recommended by the Learning Commission, and that simply is not the case. In fact, we have implemented the Learning Commission's recommendations on class sizes in a three-year period when it was recommended in five years. Now, there are some tweaks that need to take place. There are certain circumstances where due to the kinds of classes that particular schools are offering – there are some school boards that offer a higher percentage of classes in career and technology studies, as an example, that end up having smaller classes and thereby tend to impact the academic classes. But on average with very few exceptions we have met the class-size initiative as outlined by the Learning Commission.

3:30

The member also mentioned completion rates, and as he will know, that is one of the objectives that the Premier has outlined in my particular mandate letter. I agree: it's not acceptable. While the curve chart is moving in the right direction, it's not moving at a fast enough pace.

There were a couple of other questions that I would like to get some more detailed answers for, and I will supply them to the member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm always amazed, as some of my other colleagues have pointed out in amazement, with a budgeting process that manages to have a fairy godmother that can come along and snap her fingers and give you approximately $10 billion to be bailed out because you didn't do the budgeting process correctly in the first place. That is amazing. I really wish I had someone to help me with my books when I'm trying to balance my bank accounts.

One of the things that I'd like to make note of is the $800,000 for the office of the Ombudsman. It's one of the least amounts that is being asked for. Now, because they need such a small amount, does that mean that they are better than any other department at doing their budgeting? To me this is one of the most important offices that we have. I know that through my office I have many, many constituents that by the time they come to me are at the end of their tether. They're really at the end of the road. They have tried everything possible to be able to have some problem or issue that they have with the government solved. My office has a very good rapport with the Ombudsman's office, and there have been many, many cases that have been settled satisfactorily. I believe that this is a very important office for the frustrated citizens of Alberta. So if they can do such a good job in their budgeting, I can't imagine why the rest of them can't.

Under the expenses part of Education I guess my question would be: how much of those expenses actually go for salaries? I'm really concerned about extra dollars that we're going to need to complete our west Lethbridge high school. Certainly, phases 1 and 2 are going to be okay, but by the time that building is built, it basically will be obsolete by the number of children that we need to put in it, and I think it's very important that that be noted.

The other question, just sort of a basic question for all of the different departments, is: where are the interim dollars being spent?

Are these catch-up dollars, or are these dollars that are actually being used to perhaps meet new programs? Or even better, are they actually being used to meet recommendations that would have come down from the Auditor General's report, in my case certainly within Seniors and Community Supports?

Seniors and Community Supports: $567 million is not to be sneezed at. It's sort of a cache of cash that I'm hoping would be partly to increase staffing and, certainly, under the PDD to retain the staff that we already have. Staffing in the social services in this province is one of the main issues that exists in terms of not being able to deliver really good care and to be actually allowing other people to be able to come into the system that need it. I'm referring to persons with developmental disabilities, those going into long-term care, those requiring home care, the private delivery of care to those who live in lodges, enhanced lodges, supportive living, assisted living, and designated assisted living, all of which appear to have different designations and different sorts of definitions on how they apply with each different region.

There seems to also have been perhaps a misunderstanding about what it really means to be in care. Now, my definition is: anybody who is receiving any kind of care that is delivered. I don't really care who delivers it, as long as it's being paid out of the public purse. Often it's more medical care. It would be people who require home care: bandage changes, checking on people who have left hospital early. That is medical care that's being delivered. As I said, I don't really care who delivers it, but I would like to think that some of these dollars are going to go to increase the staffing in all of these various delivery systems that are working in our social systems in this province, not just in health care but, as I've mentioned, home care and certainly in child care.

The other thing that I would like to see is that some of these dollars would be used in terms of the staffing and that they actually are creating more full-time jobs so that people are not bouncing between two jobs. Actually, some people are working 16 hours and seven days a week. That's very, very unacceptable in terms of their safety and certainly the stress that they're under within their own lives. How can we expect them to look after others when they can't look after themselves? It had been mentioned that $250 million will be required to meet the recommendations of the Auditor General. I know that we're just talking about interim right now, but I'm hoping that some of these dollars would at least be a part of that $250 million. I think I've mentioned that I would look at raises for our present workers.

There were a couple of recommendations for regional health authorities, and one of them was talking about capital and operating funding decisions. One of the recommendations was that the funding decisions for regional health authorities be co-ordinated. I think that's a very good idea. We appear to have some kind of competition between our different regional health authorities, which I don't think is healthy. I think it creates division in the province. To follow up on the co-ordination of the funding, I'd also like to of course see standards that were provincially defined and, again, that they would also be co-ordinated through the regions in the province.

The other recommendation from the Auditor General under health is that the Department of Health and Wellness would retain the documentation and support for its global funding methodology decisions. I'm hoping that some of these dollars might go towards that. I think it's very, very important that the people of Alberta understand how some of these decisions are being made. Decisions are being made with the same dollars, and some are going towards acute care and long-term care, but some of it is going towards health and wellness.

I would really like to see exactly how they make the decisions on health and wellness as opposed to looking after the seniors that are in long-term care or those that are in assisted living, anyone in continuing care, which isn't just seniors, of course. It could well be the 42-year-old with muscular dystrophy. It could be young men with brain injuries. It can be anybody that's in care. It isn't just seniors.

So with those comments, I will sit down and wait to hear from the minister of, I guess, either seniors or health, who may want to address what I've just brought up.

3:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've been really interested in the changes that we've been making to make this House a more meaningful House of discourse and debate. So I'd like a little bit of clarification, if I possibly could, possibly from our House leader, on exactly what it is that we're doing right here.

Now, my understanding is that what we're discussing here is interim supply and that these are numbers that are being approved to be spent until the budget is approved. That's my understanding. So in other words, when we look at these numbers, we should be looking at these numbers to see: is this more than should be spent, essentially, to the end of the year? Is it more than what should be spent? All of the budget, the actual numbers, how all these dollars are going to be spent actually gets approved through the budget process.

You know, the points have been very well made about how we ought to be bringing the budget in on time. I don't think there's anybody in this House who would disagree with that, and I'm really glad that we have now put ourselves in a position where we have to come out with the budget in time. Essentially, I believe that we should be looking at these numbers to see if any of them are out of line. In other words, should we not be spending less? I mean, are any of these numbers more than should be spent before the end of the year? They are all going to have to be vetted through the budget process that is coming.

I look at all these numbers, and, hey, there isn't anything in here which is out of line, you know, so the only questions that I actually have are about the nonbudgetary disbursements. I believe that those things should be outlined by the ministers, so I'd like to find out from the Advanced Education and Technology minister about the nonbudgetary disbursement of $27,900,000, and on page 7 the nonbudgetary disbursement to Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture of $2,500,000.

Now, for the rest of the numbers, it seems to me that the question that we're trying to answer here is: are any of them out of line? If there is one of them that's out of line . . .

An Hon. Member: How do you know?

Ms DeLong: Okay. What should be spent in a year? If you look at what the current budget was for last year, you should be able to get a pretty good idea of what should be spent in each of these departments.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, please direct your comments through the chair.

Ms DeLong: Thank you.

So in terms of clarification from the House leader, I'd very much appreciate it if you could clarify whether or not all of these expenditures will still have to be vetted through the budgeting process.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the discussion and respond to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow. Of course, she's absolutely right: what we really are talking about is interim supply. We've had over the course of the years that I've been in this House a lot of discussion, a lot of rhetoric about whether or not budgets should be in on a timely basis and not require interim supply, but the other side of the equation is that our budget is probably the most important thing that we do. We ask Albertans for resources, and then we allocate those resources in a manner which is, hopefully, the most effective and efficient use of those resources to provide common good, and that bears scrutiny.

Of course, we have a scrutiny process that follows the budget, a Committee of Supply process that follows the budget that allows us to go into detail in each of the areas and do that scrutiny before voting supply. In fact, we've had some good discussions this year, which hopefully will come to some fruition now that we've tabled the House leaders' agreement, to be able to even expand that process and make it a very comprehensive ability, up to 75 hours as provided for in the agreement, not this year but in contemplation of future years' process, to actually have this Legislature hold the government to account for the money that it's asking from Albertans and how it's going to actually spend that money. That process takes time, shouldn't be rushed, should be done thoroughly.

Now, we did put in the House leaders' agreement that the budget would come down on a fixed date, basically the second week of the House. Traditionally our Legislature has met starting in February. I think it may have started in January some years. But to bring the budget in as early as possible in the session so that you can deal with budget prior to the beginning of the fiscal year is a prudent thing to do. With the House leaders' agreement this year, in terms of putting that together, one of the objectives that I had as House leader was to deal with that. Actually, that's one of the recommendations of the Parliamentary Association, that budgets should be in prior to the beginning of the fiscal year so that they can have a good analysis prior to the end of the fiscal year. That's something we all aim for, but that's not always doable, so the process of interim supply has been available for a long time to provide for supply so that bills can be paid, so that the staff of government working for the people of Alberta can be paid, so that the operation of government goes on.

We know that there is going to be some supply. The question is: are we using the supply in the right place? So the process of interim supply really, in my humble opinion, should be a very straightforward and almost cursory process. You know, we could go through the numbers and ask whether the Legislative Assembly needs $19.8 million before the end of June or whether Health and Wellness needs $3.7 billion before the end of June, but there's no real worthwhile analysis that goes into those numbers until the budget is actually tabled and you can actually go through the program spending and say: are we doing the things that we ought to be doing? Are we achieving the outcomes that we ought to be achieving? Is the money being placed in the right place? So as the Member for Lethbridge-East was suggesting, it's not sort of a fairy godmother or your wildest dreams come true, that somebody will write you a cheque before you've justified the value for it, not at all.

We all know – at least I assume we all know – that the hospitals remain open, that the schools remain open, that the people who work for the Department of Environment will continue to work for the Department of Environment, that those in Sustainable Resource Development will continue to be in Sustainable Resource Development. Most of them will be there, and that process will continue. This ship of state, this governance process continues, and it's necessary to continue to make the payments and to continue to pay the people. That's what interim supply is.

As the Member for Lethbridge-East is talking about her dreams, in my wildest dreams this would be a fairly perfunctory process. We accord it two days in Committee of Supply because it's $10 billion, but really it would be great to have an understanding among all parties – and we may have it; I don't remember whether we actually got it in the agreement or not; I'll have to go back and check – that if in fact the budget is tabled in the second week of February and the process of examining the budget for 75 hours takes us past March 31, we should just adjourn Committee of Supply for one day and pass the interim appropriation bill in one day so that we can continue to pay the bills and then get on with the intense scrutiny of the budget that should happen in Committee of Supply. So in my wildest dreams everybody would sit down right now and we'd vote this and get on with continuing to debate the Speech from the Throne, get on with some of the 20 bills that are now on the table with the House, some of the other government business that can happen. That would be the prudent way to deal with this.

I hope that's answered your questions comprehensively.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for somewhat of an explanation there. Taxpayers – and I consider myself a taxpayer as well as a parliamentarian as I'm here – are supposed to be able to ask those particular questions. We're talking about just being able to get us to the next projected budget. We've got Education, just looking at an example here: $1.2 billion. That's huge money. We realize the day-to-day operations of the government have to continue to function. We can't run out of money, so we're just going to go on the interim. But the questions in particular instances are one line for expense and equipment/inventory purchases.

Well, again, this is what you were talking about: dreams or fairy tales – if there were a little more specifics there. I know that's going to come when the budget comes out, but in the meantime trust us on blind faith that we're putting the money in the appropriate areas, saying that it's going to be spent properly, and we'll have our ability and our chance to debate that when the time comes in the next 30 days. That's fair and fine, but go to your home life and ask that. Someone comes to you – a neighbour, your spouse, or even your kids – and says: "You know what? I need $3,000. Trust me, I'll tell you what it's about in about a month." Are you going to be so willing to hand over $3,000? We're talking $10 billion here.

An Hon. Member: Take it out of their allowance.

Mr. Bonko: Take it out of their next allowance. That's right, yes. But in this case that's a large allowance. We're talking $10 billion. Like I said, most people can't fathom that amount. We're talking about getting us through the next month. The overall budget I believe is about $30 billion, so we're already asking for one-third of it here at this point in time to get us through the next bit. Are we borrowing in advance of it, or is the money already spent and we're going to pay it back later? I don't know. But these are some of the questions that people could ask us.

I'm hoping that some of the monies that are to be allocated or directed would address some of the specifics that were mentioned. I mean, home care. I have a number of seniors in my particular area, and home care is, in fact, a top priority as well as housing. But for home care, just to be able to find space, to be able to find qualified people to be there, not just month-to-month but almost to guarantee it for a year because the quality does slip when you have a different person trying to learn the ropes.

We're talking about people in care, and I don't care how you describe "in care." When you're in there and someone else is looking after you, you're in care. Let's not mince words about it. We already know and can exactly describe what home care and in care mean. These are our most vulnerable people. Whether they be seniors or assisted living or completely dependent upon the aides to be able to bring them their meals and their pills, to be able to do everything for them: that's in care.

That area in itself is slumping because the industry, the occupation doesn't pay enough. It's very appreciated work. I know from when my grandparents were in there, that people were taking care of them, but there are not enough people that do take that and don't take the pay over it. They have to be compensated paywise because goodwill doesn't put food on the table and pay the rent. It's the pay. Some people do it because they enjoy working with seniors. They enjoy being in there, and they're very compassionate people. My hat is off to those types of people that do it day in and day out. In some cases it is a depressing place to be working.

Seniors' homes are another one. There are not a lot of younger people going in. It's sometimes described as a nowhere job because that's as good as it gets: serving and waiting and watching. We need to be able to pay people properly for that and at least, you know, bring the homes up to standard because when you walk into some of them, they look bloody awful. They really, really do. They look terrible. It's depressing in there: the lighting, the basements, even just the care. Even last year we were talking about people only being bathed once a week. That's disgraceful.

Let's go on to schooling, which seems to be a big topic. We're not even going to talk about the strike which is going on; I think it's day 18 or day 19. We talk about P3s to meet the inventory that's growing out there. I know that school boards would jump at the chance in some cases to take a P3 over no school at all. I know they'd be forced to take a P3 because their constituents would go absolutely ballistic if they had an opportunity to put a school in an area where kids are normally being bussed an hour and a half to two hours. Instead of being bussed, they could in fact walk to school. After 20 years of bussing you're left with absolutely nothing. We talk about the environment: it's pollution in the environment. But if we take the amount of money that we pay for bussing, put it into the school, we can maybe justify it. Could we justify it through a P3? I don't think so. But, again, as an elected board, how do you have that opportunity to discuss that? It's a real tough balancing act, especially when you're elected on that particular piece and are coming up to elections right away.

Schools and municipalities. It all sounds great. They all want the same thing. They want the infrastructure, but they don't want to pay for years and years, 30 years, in fact, to pay it off. They'd like to be able to manage it. I mean, we talk about us being the richest province, the hub, the engine, the oil that drives the economy not only in Alberta but in all of Canada, and we're talking about P3s, borrowing so that we can pay off other things later. You've got to kind of wonder about that. I think that if anyone had a clear conscience on that, they'd want to pay it off as we go along. It would be nice if we could do that and then continue to go along knowing that we don't owe a bill at the end of the day for that particular piece.

Like I said, schooling is going to continue to be a tough one. We've got negotiations coming up. There are going to be more and more pressures on school boards to be able to meet the class size initiative and some of that. We talked about the Learning Commission. We've got a huge piece that we're going to be faced with.

Environment is another one. I mean, we've got $40,600,000. Environment, in fact, looks like almost one of the smaller pieces. We've got huge, huge requests on environment. I don't know how we're going to be able to meet all the demand, the public backlash that we've got when we don't, as it looks here, put nearly enough money into it. The environment is, you know, probably one of the more precious things that we're going to be talking about – the land and the water and the air – over the next four to five years till we get our act together, finally, on it.

These are just a couple of specifics that I wanted to talk about. We've got, like I said, $10 billion, and I'm hoping that in fact the budget does reflect what the ministers as well as the MLAs as well as the Premier have heard over the course of the last year from the time that the last budget was tabled. In my day-to-day discussions and my travels out in the rural areas and the towns and the municipalities we certainly hear a lot – and I'm sure you hear a lot – but quite often I don't hear a number of the government members speaking up on some of the specifics that they hear. They may do it inside their own caucus, but right here at the table I don't hear it nearly enough. That's what I think constituents want to hear: people standing up regardless of what side of the House you're on, to know that you're talking for Albertans. When Albertans see a request for money in a one-line item, they become suspicious.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I very much appreciate the Committee of Supply and the opportunities to ask questions for which, hopefully, answers can be provided, questions such as: how much debt – P3, private, for-profit debt – is the Minister of Education willing to load onto the backs of Alberta taxpayers, or how deep does the minister of infrastructure believe Albertans' pockets are, who will be forced to pay for the 30-year P3 mortgage debt that he's proposing? These are extremely important questions, and taxpayers are going to be asking them. Possibly we should be having the opportunities at the next election for this question to be asked of the taxpayers directly: do you or do you not favour going back into debt?

When it comes to education, my esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Decore has a professional background as a former trustee. He knows that of which he speaks. Having myself been a teacher for 34 years, 21 in the Calgary-Varsity constituency that I represent, I believe my concerns are validated based on my past experience.

I notice that $1,200,000,000 has been set aside for education. I don't know for what period that money is allocated. I do know that in Calgary, with regard to the bussing that's been brought up lately, children of the Calgary separate and Calgary public boards spend 100,000 kilometres per day on school buses. This is not healthy for the children. It's not healthy for the environment. Yet with the model that we currently have in terms of the floor utilization space, this government forces school boards to close community schools, which does not permit the neighbourhoods to rejuvenate and, in fact, through school closures forces more kids onto the buses.

So not only are inner-city schools being closed, such as my experience at my first school, Jerry Potts, but the children from Jerry Potts and the Calgary Varsity Acres school now have to be transported across Shaganappi Trail, a very dangerous road, to go to Marion Carson. Instead of eliminating the busing problem, we're compounding it. I'm hoping that at some point this government will realize that instead of spending money on gasoline and buses, building schools is important.

With regard to Environment, $40,600,000. I welcome an increased expenditure on the Ministry of Environment because right now it's expected to do a yeoman's job, which it's incapable of doing because its budget is barely a half a per cent of general revenue. Hopefully some of this $40 million that's being spent in the next little while will go to mapping aquifers. Unless you know what you've got, how can you protect it?

With regard to Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture barely 4 per cent of Alberta's land is set aside for parks and protected areas, and that "protected areas" needs to come with quotation marks. Look at the intrusion into the Rumsey natural area. Look at what's happening in Medicine Hat on the army base in terms of the failure to reclaim the land after so much drilling. There are so many concerns.

Municipal Affairs and Housing. My esteemed colleague from Calgary-Currie this afternoon asked in question period whether there was any interim process or help for renters, quite a number of them being fixed-income seniors, whose rents are doubling, tripling, whether it's a 41 per cent increase at the Holy Cross Manor, whether it's a 400 per cent increase in the case of people living in apartments in Calgary that recently got that announcement. If $234 million is going toward assisting those people with some form of rent subsidy, especially, as I say, the fixed-income seniors or those on AISH, who are not supposed to be spending more than 30 per cent of their income on shelter – the reality is, of course, that they're spending considerably more – if any of this money is going to develop programs that are going to help them to pay their rent and not find themselves out on the street and adding to our ever-growing number of homeless individuals, then I would suggest that that money could probably be very well spent.

With regard to parks and protected areas, any investment in parks and protected areas that deals with the crumbling infrastructure that parks are currently experiencing, any expenditure on parks that takes it past the 4 per cent level – for example, the idea of using that money to establish the Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp wilderness park of approximately 1,400 square kilometres – would be a wonderful expenditure that I and many recreational enthusiasts would very much support.

Again, we've got this one line item we do not know anything about under Sustainable Resource Development, $172,600,000. For what? Hopefully, as with the parks and protected areas, that's going to be the hiring of more resource people to monitor what is happening in sustainable resources. Maybe they'll finally have somebody sitting in a truck by Cataract Creek park monitoring the logging trucks that are not supposed to be travelling down the road at the same time as campers are trying to access that same road. That would be a terrific expenditure; likewise, having conservation officers who didn't have to patrol an area of close to 200 square kilometres by themselves at all hours of the day and night so that they could actually get into the campgrounds and educate the campers on the natural beauty of the area. That would be money well spent.

Realizing that there a number of individuals who wish to work on their Alberta throne speeches and have an opportunity to present, I would call for the question at this point.

The Chair: Are there any others that wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to just add a little bit to my comments from earlier this afternoon in terms of the debate on interim supply and, in particular, two points that I would like to make. I was just having a really friendly conversation with the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation about my dream of promoting a high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary.

Members of the House might remember that last year there was a motion from an opposition member which would have seen the Assembly urging the government to investigate and develop a full electric, high-speed rail link between Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary. Unfortunately, that motion was voted down by this Assembly, but in reviewing the Hansard from the debate that evening, Mr. Chairman, there was tremendous support from all members of the House to the idea of at least securing a greenfield right-of-way for future development of that train. I know, based on the conversation that we had earlier this afternoon with the President of the Treasury Board – and others have commented as well – that we're not going to see details of the dollars that are being asked for today until a budget is announced on the 19th of April.

I would implore the members opposite, the government and particularly cabinet, to look very seriously at allocating money for the securing of a greenfield right-of-way for that high-speed train between Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary as an initial step toward the eventual development of that train.

The other thing that I did want to touch on, Mr. Chairman, was the unfunded teachers' pension liability. I was reviewing Hansard and the debate that took place yesterday on supplementary supply estimates, and I noted that the government has put $40 million toward paying the government's portion of the unfunded liability for the management employees' pension plan. Of course, I am supportive of any effort to pay down those unfunded liabilities on all of the plans for which there are unfunded liabilities because I do believe that it will ultimately result in a better deal for the taxpayers if we have money to pay down those unfunded liabilities.

Today we should be doing that rather than paying them out over a number of years, but of course, Mr. Chairman – I'm sure you can guess where this is going – the teachers' unfunded pension liability, in particular, is sitting at nearly $7 billion as we speak today and, as has been referenced in this House many times, will cost Alberta taxpayers somewhere in the order of $45 billion over the lifespan of the agreement to pay it down. It is, quite frankly, just not acceptable, given the current economic reality, that we would expose Alberta taxpayers to those sorts of payments over 50-some years.

It's so bad, in fact, Mr. Chairman, that a young person born today who becomes a schoolteacher in 22 years will pay for that agreement for their entire working career as a teacher. That's how bad an agreement that is. I understand that when it was crafted in 1992, given the economic reality at that time, it was considered to be a fair agreement for government, teachers, and taxpayers, but everybody in this House will recognize that things have changed a lot since 1992.

We're certainly in a much different economic reality today than we were in in 1992. As a result I think it's time that we looked very seriously from a fiscal responsibility point of view at paying down a portion of that unfunded liability for the teachers' pension plan. So my plea, as well, would be to the cabinet members and, particularly, the Finance minister as he's drafting his budget and to the Education minister to make sure that there is some redress for that pension plan in the upcoming budget and whether or not a portion of the money that's being requested today for the Education department is going to cover that or not. We don't know. It's looking like $1.2 billion is in the interim supply. Whether or not any of that is going to go towards the unfunded teachers' pension liability, we don't know, but it is my hope that, as I said, from a fiscal responsibility point of view there will be some effort made to address that situation, as there was yesterday for the management employees' pension plan.

Mr. Chairman, with those comments I'd be happy to hear a response from either the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation in regard to securing the right-of-way for a high-speed train between Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary or from the Education or Finance ministers in terms of perhaps having some relief for the unfunded portion of the teachers' pension liability.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there others?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, the interim supply bill will have the same debate probably later dealing with the budget. But I want to say – we can't tell a lot about the budget from the interim supply – that if this is not a bold budget, as I said earlier on in question period, things are in many areas going to get worse before they are going to get better.

As people are aware – and I'm thankful to the government – there's an all-party task force on housing. Obviously I can't predict where that's going to go because we'll be working on it again tomorrow. But the stories that we heard out there – and it doesn't matter. What surprised me is that I knew of the problems, you know, dealing with rising rents and the homeless in Edmonton and Calgary, and you heard about it in Fort McMurray and you heard about it in Grande Prairie. What I found is that it's pretty well true throughout the whole province that there are virtually no vacancy rates anywhere in this particular province.

Now, it's one thing to sort of brag about growth – I call it economy on steroids – but if you're going to push the development as fast as we have in terms of the budgeting with the interim supplies here, if you're going to keep pushing this development as fast as we are, then you can't do it on the cheap. There has to be the backup, Mr. Chairman, for the needed social and physical infrastructure, and we can't keep up. I mean, when we do something here, as the minister of health did with the doctors yesterday, then the problem is going to be more severe even when you put that amount of money in at that particular time.

It doesn't matter what we're talking about: infrastructure, roads, health care, housing, education, you name it. One of the stories that we heard very dramatically from this task force, Mr. Chairman, and the public hearings was the people that are on fixed incomes, the desperation that they're facing. You know, their rents are going up, and certainly when you're on AISH or Alberta Works or the rest of it, it's not going up.

We have a whole new group of homeless out there: people that actually have jobs and families. Not that we shouldn't have been concerned about the permanent homeless out there before – we have to do something about them – but we have a whole new group out there. We estimate there are 10,000 people in this province that are homeless, and we're saying that we're not going to put the brakes to any future development. Well, the Alberta advantage is becoming a major disadvantage for most Albertans. Unless you're in the oil industry or have some high paying job, it's becoming very difficult.

The interim supply, Mr. Chairman, will get us through to the budget, which I think is on the 19th of April, if I'm correct about that. But I will be really looking at this budget to see if it matches the difficulties that Albertans are facing right now. The interim supply bill obviously gives us some direction but not really a real idea about the serious problems that are facing Albertans. I suggest to you that if we don't begin in this budget year, starting with this interim supply, to deal with the very, very serious issues that are occurring, then we will have failed many Albertans.

I know what we were told with the housing task force, Mr. Chairman. We were told that there are great expectations of us to present a bold report. We'll see where that goes. Obviously we don't know at this point. I would also say that there are bold expectations on this government to do something in a very serious manner to deal with these problems. They'll say: okay, the interim supply will get us through till after the 19th, and we'll debate that particular bill. But if that budget doesn't recognize the very serious situation that we're facing in this province, I'd suggest that there are going to be a lot of angry people out there, and we better recognize that that's the case. So I thought that while we had a few minutes, I could begin to set the stage for the needed debate that has to be held in this Assembly. We'll get through the interim supply, and we'll look for the real budget and the real debate after that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I would call on the Government House Leader to move that the committee now rise and report progress.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the Committee of Supply rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2007-2008 interim supply estimates, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Ducharme moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 13: Ms Blakeman]

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured and privileged to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne. It was, as always, wonderful to have our Lieutenant Governor in this Assembly last Wednesday to read the throne speech. I always admire the dignity and humour that he brings to every event.

Before I address the throne speech, I would like to first congratulate our new Premier and sincerely thank him for all the hard work he is doing on behalf of all Albertans. I know that the residents of Drayton Valley-Calmar are very pleased with our new Premier, and we are blessed to have a man of his character and vision, a decent, honest, humble, and wise man, leading our province in these prosperous but challenging times.

Alberta's new Premier's character and vision are reflected in the Speech from the Throne. It comes as no surprise that a man of vision has offered a visionary throne speech. Mr. Speaker, there is too much at stake at present and in the future for us to rest on our laurels now, enjoying our prosperity. That is why vision is essential. Only by seeing where we can go will we be able to enact the plan that will take us there.

We are fortunate to enjoy so much prosperity in Alberta that it is easy to be blinded by it. Sometimes we forget just how fortunate we are, but we need only ask one of the immigrants who arrive in our province every day why they have come to Alberta. "Because it's prosperous," they will say. "I want the opportunity to make my dreams come true, and I want my children to make their even bigger dreams come true too."

The vision, then, is clear: for Alberta to continue to prosper, offering a higher standard of living and greater opportunities for all of us. We must maximize our prosperity by offering a clean environment, a safe place to live in a vibrant community, good health care that is there when we need it, and world-class schools for our children. These are just a few of the ways our government can turn our current prosperity into further opportunity and even further prosperity.

I am pleased to say that the five priorities set out by our new Premier and this government are exactly the plan that Alberta needs to make this happen. Many school teachers have imparted to their students the wisdom that if you fail to plan, you plan to fail. Mr. Speaker, this government is not going to fail. With this Speech from the Throne our Premier has laid out exactly what we want to achieve and how we are going to achieve it.

This Speech from the Throne is about good government at the most fundamental level. Good government is what Albertans demand because it is exactly what Albertans need. The many services that Albertans enjoy will operate efficiently and productively only if the government that oversees them operates efficiently and productively.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell you how pleased I was to hear the Speech from the Throne emphasize transparency, openness, and accountability not just as a priority but as the number one priority. Albertans work very hard to make an honest living, and now their government is renewing its commitment to do the same. By doing all that we can to ensure that taxpayers' money is well spent and that the government operates with the highest levels of integrity, we in turn ensure that the best possible decisions are made. Maximizing our prosperity requires, first and foremost, a government that citizens respect and trust.

I'm also pleased that in the midst of our current prosperity the government is taking a hard-nosed, pragmatic look at the difficulties which that prosperity can cause. Rapid economic growth has done wonders for our province, Mr. Speaker, but we must take decisive action to manage the pressures of this growth. In fact, I think that's our number one priority. I know that transparency and openness and honesty is what we are focusing on, but probably the largest portion would be managing the growth.

Well before the Speech from the Throne this new government established the Alberta Affordable Housing Task Force to study ways that homelessness and unaffordable housing can be eradicated. It's only a matter of days before this task force makes its eagerly awaited report. We will address this issue in the same way that we are addressing every issue: with initiative, with resolve, with innovative ideas, and especially with a drive to do what is right for all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, Drayton Valley alone has a list of over 80 families looking for affordable housing solutions. I believe that this new Premier and this government will help to accomplish this goal.

The Speech from the Throne has also committed this new government to improving how our province's labour needs are met. Whether you're an entrepreneur in need of good employees, a factory owner in need of skilled people, or a software maker looking for the talent to produce the next big thing, our government will do everything it can to make sure you have the people you need to grow your business.

Now, obviously this is welcome news to the constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar, where you'll see help wanted signs everywhere, Mr. Speaker. But having the workers we need is only one part of our strategy to manage growth pressures. We must ensure that those workers can get to their jobs on efficient, safe, well-maintained roads, that their children can learn in clean, welcoming, and modern schools and universities, and that every Albertan has access to the best health care possible in world-class hospitals. Doing this while our province undergoes such growth is a task not to be taken lightly. This government is clearly up to the task of addressing our infrastructure needs while getting the most value possible from each and every tax dollar.

The residents of Drayton Valley-Calmar look forward to someday receiving the good news that a new highway 22 bridge over the North Saskatchewan River will be built. I hope that the minister of infrastructure is listening; I'm sure he is. Likewise, the families of Thorsby and area anticipate the funding for their new elementary school. These along with the need for top-up funding for H.W. Pickup and Holy Trinity Academy in Drayton Valley are just a few of the growth pressures that we hope to meet during this mandate.

Mr. Speaker, there is one issue that has received a remarkable amount of public attention recently. That issue is, of course, climate change. Well, I'm proud to have been part of a government, this government, that led the way in addressing this issue. Back in 2004, before any other government in Canada had acted, this government passed legislation with a greenhouse gas emissions action plan. That action plan is an excellent start, one that we will continue to implement and which we will build on this fall with a new plan. The Speech from the Throne commits the government to continuing our record of leadership on this issue. I look forward to a productive and lively discussion between citizens, business, and government on how we can do more to reduce the intensity of our greenhouse gas emissions.

In a similar way, since 2003 we've had North America's most comprehensive water management plan; that is, the Water for Life strategy. Now, like our climate change action plan, it has served Albertans well, preserving our natural spaces while enabling unprecedented economic growth. As the Lieutenant Governor noted in his speech last Wednesday, this government will consult Albertans on how we can improve this strategy and prepare recommendations for the end of the year. By being proactive, by anticipating demands, and by ensuring that our plans measure up to Albertans' expectations, our natural spaces and our economy will continue to prosper.

Much of the know-how that makes our Water for Life strategy and our climate change action plan possible comes from our postsecondary education system. By ensuring that our universities, colleges, and technical institutes all have the resources they need to deliver world-class instruction, we can build on our record of environmental leadership. The development of the oil sands that is a big part of our current prosperity would not have been possible had the government of Alberta not had the foresight to invest in Alberta's scientists and engineers. Today further investment will help us develop more efficient processes that result in more energy at cheaper prices and with fewer environmental effects, truly a win-win for everyone.

We can also build on our record of leadership in many other kinds of innovation. From medical research that has positively affected millions of lives world-wide to the development of state of the art nanotechnology that has the potential to help millions more, our innovations are helping to build the value-added, diversified, export-driven economy that the future demands. Through the Campus Alberta approach we ensure that every Albertan has the opportunity to pursue their education no matter where they are or what they wish to study. Making education available to everyone is just another one of the ways that the government of Alberta is improving Albertans' quality of life.

Underlying our postsecondary system is our K to 12 education system, which is preparing our children to be tomorrow's citizens. Countless tests and surveys have shown what Albertans have known for a long time: a person would have to travel far and wide to find a school system as good as ours. Our students boast some of the best scores in the world in reading, science, and problem solving. As a former school trustee, Mr. Speaker, I support the government's approach of working with every stakeholder – teachers, parents, students, and administrators – to make our schools even better.

While our schools are essential parts of our communities, there is much more that can be done to build our province. Albertans are famous for their hard work, and we like to work hard even when we're not at work. What am I talking about? Well, volunteers. Volunteers contribute thousands of hours and thousands of dollars every year to help their fellow citizens. In my time as senior pastor of the Faith Evangelical Covenant Church in Breton, Alberta, I witnessed hundreds of simple acts of kindness that made all the difference in someone's life.

Thus, I was ecstatic that the Speech from the Throne promises the creation of a community spirit program for charitable giving. This program will support increases for private charitable donations through tax credits and offer matching grants to eligible donations to Alberta charities. This is an excellent way to turn the prosperity of individual Albertans into more opportunities for everyone. By offering these incentives for charitable donations, not only can we encourage more donations in the first place, but we can multiply the beneficial effects these donations will have.

A prosperous society, Mr. Speaker, must be a peaceful society. To have opportunity means nothing when the fruits of that opportunity might disappear unjustly. By setting as a priority the provision of safe and secure communities, the government of Alberta has reaffirmed that every person be able to live a life of dignity and respect, free from fear and crime. My constituency, like many others in rural Alberta, needs more RCMP. We need more special constables to patrol our communities and to catch the bad guys. We must implement the recommendations of the crystal meth task force to curb the negative effects of this awful drug.

Mr. Speaker, the final priority that the Premier has set out for this government is to build a stronger Alberta. This requires us to ask ourselves what we don't do so well and what we need to improve on, a process that this government has already started with this Speech from the Throne. It also requires us to take a hard look at what we do well and ask ourselves how we can do that better.

We have so much energy in Alberta that we need a comprehensive energy strategy to ensure that all of those resources are developed in a sustainable, environmentally responsible way. Renewable energy will be included in this strategy, and this Speech from the Throne makes it clear that this government is committed to environmentally sound development. The fruits of developing all this energy are coming into our hands today. Few states in history have enjoyed as much wealth as Alberta presently has. By effectively managing the resources that we are blessed to have today, we will ensure that all of Alberta's future needs are met.

Mr. Speaker, when I reflect on this Speech from the Throne, I ask myself this question: if some of the first pioneers who settled in my constituency, Drayton Valley-Calmar, were to reappear today, what would they say? I think they would say: "You have done well in providing your children with an education that is among the best in the world. You have done well in nurturing a bountiful economy that gives everyone the opportunity to make something of themselves." We've done well. There's no doubt about that. Now we must develop that prosperity and opportunity into renewed prosperity and opportunity.

This Speech from the Throne marks the turning over of a new leaf to new ideas, new plans, and a new style of government. I'm proud to serve the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar in this government under our new Premier, and, Mr. Speaker, I encourage all fellow parliamentarians to serve with me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to stand to represent my Calgary-Varsity constituents through my response to the Speech from the Throne.

As a result of my past experience as a public school teacher for 34 years with the Calgary board of education, I view the Speech from the Throne as a government homework project or assignment. Regardless of whether I was teaching a grade 1 or a grade 12 class, I would work collaboratively with my students to set both short-term and long-term objectives. Together we would arrive at realistic timelines for the completion of various portions of the assignment. We would discuss how the assignment would be evaluated based on mutually conceived and agreed-upon criteria. We would brainstorm the types of resources needed to successfully complete the assignment. Through mutual support and feedback we achieved the objectives we had set out.

Wednesday, March 7th's Speech from the Throne contained none of the essential elements of a successful assignment. It was vague and evasive, without clearly defined objectives, timelines, or evaluative processes. If you don't know where you're headed, how will you know when you've arrived?

In evaluating and analyzing the Speech from the Throne, I'm going to use a similar format to that employed by the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the researching and writing of his latest highly acclaimed book, Democracy Derailed. In Democracy Derailed the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview first highlights the Conservative government's failure, followed by a proposed Alberta Liberal government solution. In the opening paragraphs of the throne speech we are informed that "our current prosperity is a result of foresight by Albertans whose values we honour, values such as fiscal vigilance, community spirit, and self-reliance." Obviously there is a demonstrably great divide between what the government claims to honour and what it actually practises.

Although the government's front-row seating plan has changed, there is no evidence either suggested in this throne speech or in recent government practice that fiscal vigilance will become its priority in the near future. Rather, there is mounting evidence that would indicate the opposite. These are the same people who for years running were unable to predict to the nearest $3 billion the surplus. Nor were they able to manage their nonrenewable, resource-fuelled, gambling-subsidized surpluses. Year after year quarterly budgets meant nothing as these members dipped into and spent 92 per cent of successive multibillion dollar surpluses rather than saving for the future.

The government's dependency on and addiction to nonrenewable resource revenue has increased despite its diversification lip service. Rather than being fiscally prudent, building up the heritage savings trust fund and creating an infrastructure fund, as our Liberal caucus nonrenewable resource fiscal plan has suggested, the government has instead trumpeted P3 – private, for-profit, at public expense – plans as the solution to the infrastructure deficit in the province.

The new Alberta government doublespeak suggests that there is good debt and bad debt. As a provincial Liberal who believes in a pay-as-you-go approach while saving for the future, I fail to see the Tory logic of going back into debt. With a $7 billion third-quarter surplus and $6 billion and change in each of the sustainability and capital funds for a combined total approaching $20 billion, prudent fiscal management must be exercised to provide sustainability for future generations.

Community spirit and self-reliance in and of themselves are admirable qualities. I would suggest, however, that Albertans have been stretched to their limits, volunteering more hours and more money than ever before. This is evidenced by studies showing families having ever less time to spend together and being more stressed than ever. Nonprofit agencies and in-home family caregivers, whether for children, seniors, the ill, or the disabled, need to know that their government will be there to help them when they need help.

Circumstances beyond an individual's control, such as a lack of affordable housing, the shortage of good child care, difficulties finding care for aged parents or disabled dependants, inadequate public transportation, and so on, that threaten ultimate safety and health, lead to fear, stress, and a loss of productivity, to say nothing of quality of life. As an Alberta Liberal I recognize that supporting Albertans through difficult times leads to long-term gains in many, many ways. It is also far less expensive in the long term, particularly in terms of physical and mental health costs.

The misuse of language is prevalent throughout the Speech from the Throne. They "made wise choices, including the bold and often difficult decisions made during the past decade." This is an attempt by the Premier's public affairs propaganda bureau to rewrite history. There was nothing bold or difficult in the decision that our past Premier made and which was supported without question by our new Premier and most of his current cabinet and backbenchers.

The speed at which this Conservative government paid off its accumulated $23 billion debt on the backs of Alberta taxpayers couldn't be described as either bold or difficult. Rather, it was personally driven and traumatic. The government copied the deplorable actions of New Zealand's Finance Minister Sir Roger Douglas of: don't blink, cut quick, cut deep, and damn the consequences. The disastrous repercussions of that solitary focus, such as the loss of half of Calgary's hospitals and the failure to maintain or replace much-needed schools, roads, and water treatment plants to name just a few, continue to be felt on a daily basis through Alberta with no apparent end or government plan in sight, certainly not in this throne speech.

The throne speech, without actually providing a plan or a road map, at least acknowledges that we must plan ahead to ensure that the prosperity this province is enjoying today is secured for our children and grandchildren. As a proud grandfather of two grandsons, Kiran and Rohan Warrier, I have great concerns about the Alberta legacy that they will inherit unless a dramatic political change takes place. An Alberta Liberal government won't sell out future generations in favour of ad hoc immediate economic gratification.

An Alberta Liberal government will save and invest our current nonrenewable resource revenue to eliminate future dependence. Using today's figures, our increased investment in the heritage trust fund, which has remained stagnant over the past 15 years of Tory mismanagement, would rise to at least $120 billion by 2020, producing the interest-generated equivalent of the total revenue received from the royalties of gas and oil production.

The drone from the throne offered questionable assurances to Albertans when it was stated that your new government will be open and accountable, fiscally responsible, and inclusive. Accountability has to start at the top. An Alberta Liberal government will give Albertans a real voice in deciding the future of a healthy democracy in Alberta.

As to the promise that the government will be inclusive, the private, behind-closed-doors attitude continues. The Affordable Housing Task Force met frequently behind closed doors. This travelling task force was in large part prompted by the previously released Liberal affordable housing plan, drafted after considerable input from open-to-the-public forums held across the province by our deputy leader and shadow minister for municipal affairs, the MLA for Calgary-Currie. In our plan immediate legislated relief would be provided for tenants being gouged by unscrupulous landlords taking advantage of the Alberta government's refusal to intervene in a highly inflated economy. The Premier's refusal to put on the brakes has seen a steadily increasing number of vulnerable Albertans get run over.

The much-touted flagship Bill 1, whereby the Alberta government finally acknowledges the need for a lobbyist registry, something which has been in place for a considerable length of time in other provinces and within the federal government, is a superficial facade. If the government initiates contact with a lobbyist, as was the case with Kelley Charlebois, the $400,000 Nothing Written man, or the infamous Rod Love, no details of the business undertaken need to be recorded. As long as each of the contracts these men of no notes receives is under $100,000, no bid is required. In other words, if the government comes courting, there's no reporting.

For those who do sign up to lobby the government, no details of their behind-closed-doors meetings will be publicly available, only their names and which minister they met with. This is a far cry from the transparency that opposition Liberals have been calling for. A transparency and accountability measure that a Liberal government will enact is whistle-blower protection legislation so that people who report government misdeeds will not risk losing their jobs, as was the case with the Alberta Securities Commission and the inadequate government investigation of same.

Another democratic integrity initiative favoured by a provincial Liberal government but absent from the Premier's throne speech will be the establishment of a citizens' assembly to review the currently flawed first past the post election system, which rewarded the Conservatives with 63 seats although they had received the support of less than 25 per cent of eligible Alberta voters. Of those few engaged Albertans, less than 50 per cent, who took the time to cast their votes, the majority voted against the government. Engaging Albertans in the democratic process is one of the key planks in the Alberta Liberal platform. For that reason, during the spring session I will be introducing a motion to reduce the eligible voting age from 18 to 16 years old.

Under the heading Managing Growth Pressures, the government claims that it will craft a made-in-Alberta solution to labour needs. This statement flies in the face of today's Alberta workplace reality, which prevents thousands of unionized Alberta tradesmen from receiving jobs/wages that recognize their qualifications. This government, which cut the number of seats of postsecondary institutions, both academic and technical, has yet to devise a plan which will pay for the infrastructure or the instructors/professors necessary to train Albertans. Among the many Albertans who have been sidelined by the boom are the rapidly growing numbers of First Nations youth, who yearn to be a part of the solution.

Instead of fostering the talent that exists within this province and across Canada, this government has sought to circumvent Canadian citizenship rights by encouraging the exploitation of temporary foreign and frequently indentured workers. Refusing to implement first contract legislation while legitimizing division 8 contracting of highly questionable quasi-unions hiding behind the cover of the Christian Labour Association of Canada demonstrates the government's attempt to manipulate rather than facilitate the job market. How the Premier's Public Affairs Bureau, the 1984 equivalent of the ministry of truth, who authored this throne speech, has the audacity to claim that "the government of Alberta will continue to build on its solid record in environmental management with some of the most progressive legislation and action-based strategies in the country" is absolutely incredible.

This government and its rubber-stamping accomplice, the Energy and Utilities Board, which is 60 per cent funded by industry and 40 per cent by the government, have an atrocious record, whether one looks at land, water, or air. The EUB approves 98 per cent of the exploration/drilling applications it receives regardless of the sensitivity of the rapidly vanishing wilderness or encroaching urban sprawl encompassing existing well sites. On the southeastern slopes in the Whaleback along the Livingstone range, the special areas that the Nature Conservancy of Canada refer to as the last five miles, ranchers, environmentalists, recreational enthusiasts, and townspeople are fighting an uphill battle to preserve the water and land against a government-endorsed, nonrenewable resource extraction onslaught.

Environmental protection in this province is a travesty. The Ministry of Environment receives less than 1 per cent of revenue in a province whose government values immediate economic gratification over long-term sustainable growth. "Water for life" and "blue gold" have nice rhetorical rings when uttered, but if you don't back up the words with science, funded conservation, and protection, they become omissions, empty vessels of a government running on empty. It wasn't until my Calgary-Mountain View colleague, our Liberal shadow minister for environment, forced their hand that this government finally agreed to do minimal baseline water testing prior to drilling. The steadily growing tailing ponds surrounding the oil sands north of Fort McMurray, the government-permitted drilling without reclamation damage to the Suffield range, the recently approved intrusions into the supposedly protected wilderness areas, including the Rumsey, and park areas for resource extraction, as well as clear-cutting and watersheds are an ongoing testament to the fact that in Alberta the one-trick pony of resource extraction trumps environmental concerns.

An Alberta Liberal government, without bringing our currently resource-based economy to a grinding halt, will set aside no go zones to conserve and protect habitat, wildlife, and water. It will work with industry to dramatically reduce both its ecological consumptive footprint and emissions output. Only in the most extreme circumstances, in which fighting the spread of mountain pine beetles does not qualify, would clear-cutting be permitted. A Liberal government will work with industry and regions to develop a land-use strategy drawing from the report that we released last year to prompt discussion.

I personally would like to see the same expectation placed on industry that is required on a golf course; i.e., you must replace the divot. Reclamation should be required to proceed at the same rate as extraction. Emissions wouldn't just be reduced in intensity, such as the proposal to reduce intensity by 12 per cent or face the paltry penance of $15 a tonne for polluting. An Alberta Liberal government will begin immediately to work with industry to build the infrastructure to sequester emissions. Rather than rebates, we would offer retrofit subsidies to encourage better use of our nonrenewable resources.

From affordable housing to economic diversification balanced with environmental conservation and protection, Alberta Liberals have a vision and a plan. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, my first response is: balderdash.

An Hon. Member: Well, that's clever.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, it is very good, and let me expand on that so that it's comprehended by the hon. member across the way as well.

Number one, in the province of Alberta, when it comes to Water for Life, we have more than rhetoric; we have action. Specifically, this province was the only government that came forth with our South Saskatchewan River basin study, that said that we will no longer allow withdrawals from the South Saskatchewan River basin. That seems to be forgotten by the Liberals and the New Democrats, and the reason is that they don't like promoting the good things that the government is doing. I accept that they're in opposition, but sometimes they may do themselves better by recognizing the good work because it reflects the values that Albertans have.

Consequently, we can listen to political rhetoric, but at the end of the day when we talk about Alberta leading, we talk about sequestration. We talk about a CO₂ pipeline, where we're going to be able to take the emission that is going into the air, and we're going to put it into the ground. We're going to pipe it into a pipeline that can be used for enhanced oil recovery. Ultimately, unlike perhaps what the opposition wants to do, we are not going to use water; we are going to use CO₂. So my question to the hon. member is simply this: are you suggesting that you would prefer that we continue to use water and not use emissions that are going into the air? Presently, as you know, we are using water, and we are moving to CO₂ for enhanced oil recovery. Don't you agree that using CO₂ that's going into the air is a far better use of energy than water? Yes or no?

Mr. Chase: I agree that using CO₂ sequestered rather than water is an obviously good idea, that this government has yet to implement, and I am looking forward to an Alberta Liberal government moving beyond the 12 per cent emissions intensity and capping emissions totally, working with industry to achieve real reduction inputs.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Mr. Speaker, actually, one of the very important initiatives of this government – in fact, two years ago at the United Nations in Buenos Aires the Alberta government talked about renewables, they talked about alternative energies, and they talked about science and technology, that not only can Alberta be the energy capital of Canada, but we can become the environmental capital of North America because of the good work of Alberta industry and Alberta scientists working in partnership with our government. I have to ask the hon. member: don't you agree with that type of plan that this government is exercising?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I have spoken to a number of professors at the University of Calgary who are connected with the ISEEE organization. They are working to achieve a cleaner environment, and I appreciate the work that they are doing. The problem is that we have to get past the talk. We know that we have research to sequester CO₂ emissions. North Dakota is sending its CO₂ to fields in Saskatchewan. We know through the research that scientists have done in Alberta that we have a tremendous amount of space left by the extraction of gas and oil to sequester these emissions.

What we need is action, which should have started some time ago, considering the science is now old, to get these pipelines built. We need to work with industry to see what responsibility both government and industry and, of course, the taxpayers who fund government initiatives have with regard to sequestering the emissions. We can talk about it today, but unless we start building those pipelines, whether it's to inject in place of water in order to get at the oil and the gas, which makes tremendous sense because we win twice – we get to receive more oil and gas, and we lose the CO₂. It's a win-win circumstance. The science exists, but we need to get on with the building of that infrastructure. That's what a Liberal government would do. With research, with industry we'd get it done. We'd get it going. We'd get it going as soon as we're elected to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: The time has elapsed under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

I'd recognize the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I want to thank him for delivering what I think is the right road map for Alberta's future.

I rise today, firstly, on behalf of the constituents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who will benefit from numerous aspects of the speech. I also rise as the chair of the Alberta Research Council and the vice-chair of the Alberta Science and Research Authority. We are very fortunate to live in exciting times. Amongst the provinces Alberta is in a leadership position when we consider our economic and fiscal position. Albertans have a range of opportunities when it comes to education, research and technology development, employment, business, and recreation. My constituents share in these opportunities. Wetaskiwin-Camrose is very fortunate to be the home of the Augustana campus of the University of Alberta, a renowned research university. The cities of Wetaskiwin and Camrose are business service centres for the highway 2 corridor and east-central Alberta. Between the arenas, ballparks, and trails, my constituents are active throughout the constituency and on the go.

My constituents and all Albertans recognize how fortunate they are, but I think they are very interested in preserving the opportunities they enjoy today for future generations. Maintaining this prosperity is not without challenges. It goes without saying that Alberta has a significant resource bounty, whether it's oil and gas, agriculture, or forests. That said, our conventional oil and gas reserves are in decline, and developing new sources, such as the oil sands and nonconventional gas, comes with significant challenges. Traditional agriculture, as previous generations understood it, is transforming rapidly, and our forest industry was faced with punitive tariffs and now must contend with the scourge of pine beetles.

Beyond those challenges Alberta is facing competition from rapidly growing economies, such as China and India. Our water supply must contend with the potential doubling of our population over the next 35 to 40 years along with the continued industrial growth. World energy demands may see the doubling or tripling of oil sands production.

Mr. Speaker, these may appear to be daunting challenges. The easy answer would be to have government halt development or control growth. However, I do not think that we should despair or recoil in the face of these challenges. Our government very clearly has decided against taking the easy way out and has outlined its plan to address Alberta's growth challenges in the Speech from the Throne by outlining five priorities for action: one, govern with integrity and transparency; two, manage growth pressures; three, improve Alberta's quality of life; four, build a stronger Alberta; and five, provide safe and secure communities.

Today I want to talk about issues surrounding three of those priorities: managing growth pressures, building a stronger Alberta, and improving Alberta's quality of life. These three issues deal most closely with the priorities outlined in the Speech from the Throne dealing with research and development as well as technology commercialization. Research and development are critical to advancing our knowledge about the world around us to advance beyond our current technologies and methods and techniques.

But it's more than developing new technologies. We have to foster commercialization of technology in order to generate further economic growth and create jobs to sustain our prosperity. As chair of the Alberta Research Council I feel that Alberta's research institutions are well placed to respond to the vision laid out in the Speech from the Throne by addressing the challenges of growth in a long-term and sustained manner. Specifically, ARC is supporting Alberta's growth and development by increasing and protecting the value Alberta derives from its resources, by helping large, medium, and small companies grow their business, and by building Alberta's global reputation as a place of excellence in research and innovation by leverage.

Now, to move these goals forward, ARC works closely with Alberta's research institutes, including the Alberta Energy Research Institute, the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, the Alberta Life Sciences Institute, and the Alberta ICT Institute, the Information and Communications Technology Institute. These institutes support the throne speech intention to focus on priority areas of research in energy and information and communication technology.

In addition, ARC participates in EnergyINet to provide Alberta-

based technology development in the energy sector. It also works with iCORE, Alberta ingenuity fund, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, Alberta's postsecondary institutions, and the National Institute for Nanotechnology to develop Alberta's innovative capacity. Research is labour intensive, and ARC is working to recruit and retain key scientists to bolster Alberta's ability in meeting these strategic challenges. I believe we are well supported by our postsecondary institutions in this regard. As well, part of attracting people into research and development is investing in state of the art applied research infrastructure. ARC is making this investment to ensure that Alberta's research agenda can be advanced.

With the right minds, ARC is able to leverage the investment it receives from the government of Alberta and deliver results in three areas of strategic importance to the province: number one, the bioeconomy; number two, greenhouse gas management and reduction; and number three, water utilization.

In terms of the bioeconomy, ARC is supporting the vision Albertans have to diversify their economy and build strong communities through the development of new value-added products. The main example is the development of the integrated manure utilization system, or IMUS, and most of you know that the pilot plant is out near Vegreville. IMUS currently converts animal by-products into biogas, which is converted into electricity or heat. The solid by-products are turned into natural biobased fertilizer, and water is reclaimed for irrigation. There are many untapped applications of IMUS, and I believe it can be used quite effectively by not only feedlots or large agricultural producers but by food processors and municipalities to handle waste products.

To support the thrust of a bioindustry in Alberta, it is noteworthy in the Speech from the Throne that an institute of agriculture, forestry, and environment will be established. I think there are many common areas for ARC and this institute to work together to find ways to support our agriculture and forestry industries for long-term economic sustainability.

A very popular topic right now is managing greenhouse gas emissions. Albertans understand the need to balance the economy and the environment. Our government recently tabled Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. This amendment puts Alberta at the front of the pack, putting in place Canada's first legislative greenhouse gas emissions intensity reduction targets for large industrial emitters. Reaching this target will require innovative solutions for carbon capture, conversion, and storage – sometimes known as CCS – to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. ARC's Dr. Bill Gunter is an internationally recognized leader in carbon dioxide management and is working to find new technological solutions that can be put in place in Canada and become adopted around the world.

If we can manage CO₂ in a responsible way, Alberta will be able to get closer to the goal of developing zero-emission coal, as outlined in the Speech from the Throne. Effective management of carbon dioxide emissions will also justify the continued development of the oil sands and will greatly assist in enhancing recovery of oil and gas. I think it's important to illustrate the potential that exists in using carbon dioxide to enhance oil and gas recovery. Based on EUB data of discovered oil in place, at today's oil prices a 1 per cent increase in recovery would translate into revenues of $35 billion over 15 to 20 years and would create new economic opportunities. Using natural gas as an example, if recovery could be improved by 15 per cent, it would result in over $280 billion in additional revenues over a 15- to 20-year span. This could result in substantial benefit to Alberta and underlines the importance of innovation.

Recently ARC joined its counterparts in Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan to form I-CAN, Innoventures Canada. I-CAN integrated publicly supported research infrastructure and expertise from a number of provinces in a seamless system. This will help improve productivity and the performance of Canadian industry. One of I-CAN's first initiatives is working toward reducing Canada's carbon dioxide emissions by 100 million tonnes per annum by 2012. This is a positive action for Alberta, and I'm very pleased that ARC is engaged in this national initiative.

ARC is also taking water utilization very seriously because Albertans just expect a sustainable supply of good quality water today and in the future. One of ARC's responses to the challenges of growth is implementing ways to reduce industry's reliance on water by over 30 per cent of current requirements by 2030. This could be achieved through recycling of waste water, solvent use for in situ recovery, new carbon dioxide and water flooding techniques, and enhanced gas and oil recovery processes.

Of interest to the Westaskiwin-Camrose constituency is the long-term sustainability of the Battle River. To respond to not only the concerns of my constituents but of all Albertans, ARC will deliver a water quality assurance program to ensure a supply of safe drinking water in all areas of the province.

In all three areas – that is, the bioeconomy, carbon dioxide emissions, and water management – ARC is demonstrating leadership and ingenuity to find real solutions to supporting Alberta's future growth. Through research and innovation we can find the answers to developing our resources in an effective manner, and we can deal effectively with environmental concerns and climate change. We can preserve our water, and we can create new industries to ensure that Albertans can enjoy a prosperous future for generations to come. Our government's Speech from the Throne lays out this same intention, and I believe that ARC and all Albertans will work very hard to make the ambitious objectives in the Speech from the Throne a reality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) again is available.

Seeing none, I recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to respond to the Speech from the Throne, and I rise today not only for my constituents of Lethbridge-East but for all of those constituents that require care in the province, those that may just need that short-term help but also those that will be in care for the rest of their lives. They deserve to be treated with dignity and respect.

The throne speech I thought had some certainly good intentions. I believe that it was a little bit vague. There was a vision, but again I think it was vague in perhaps not going in as much depth as I would like to have seen, but perhaps that's part of not quite getting this part of being totally transparent. There is a sentence that said, "Albertans have told their government that economic prosperity must not come at the expense of quality of life, and the government of Alberta is listening." It also goes on to say, "It will ensure that services, programs, and infrastructure are in place to maintain Albertans' high quality of life."

I totally agree that there are many, many people in this province with a very, very high quality of life; however, I believe that there are probably more with either no quality of life or certainly a quality of life that is disappearing. I think that we all will speak differently when we speak about quality of life. We will define it differently. Does that mean time for the family? I think my colleague already mentioned that there are 200 hours less that parents are spending with their children. I'm not sure that this is really healthy for our society. They either do not eat dinner together or very seldom, or they actually eat fast food in front of a television, which I realize is a family choice, but often it's because they're in a hurry and they haven't had time to cook.

The other thing that is affecting those with the lower quality of life is what really can be defined as a living wage. Is it our responsibility? I think that that's a point for debate. Is it our responsibility to ensure that people can make a living wage, particularly those that work in the care industries? Should they have a house to live in? I believe that on this side of the House we do believe that everyone should have a roof over their head and certainly food on the table. I don't believe that we should be having to depend on food banks or soup kitchens in this province.

I really do believe that the real story from the Speech from the Throne is truly the budget because it's wonderful to have wonderful words and a great document that looks good, but unless you've got the budget and the dollars that are going to back up those words, then really all they are are empty promises.

One of the things that I have noticed that has happened – and I want to make sure that it's addressed – is, of course, my constant speaking of the fact that long-term care was deregulated in this province. Really, part of the reason behind that was to decrease the dollars that would come out of the health ministry to put towards long-term care. In fairness, certainly some people were placed in long-term care, where it was most inappropriate for them to be, when in fact the object is to help people maintain their independence for as long as possible.

It says, "Building the health workforce of the future will be a top priority." I would say that we are in a crisis now. I don't think we can wait for the future. I think we have to move. The information is there. The MLA task force draft for the standards and certainly my adjunct report is more than clear. The crisis is now. We have a crisis in staffing for human services, for PDD, for continuing care, for child care services not just in terms of child development but also the child care services where we have to take children under the provincial wing, in fact, to protect them. Just within the last short period of time children in Lethbridge have been taken into protection because their parents were busted in a grow operation.

The staffing to look after the homeless. Now, the staff that we require for the homeless are actually those that would give the support to help people move from homelessness to transition to actually becoming productive members of our society. Many of these people truly don't even know how to shop properly, how to spend their dollars and make them go as far as they can in terms of good, nutritious food. These are the support people that I'm talking about.

Staffing at food banks has now become an issue. One of the other places that we have a goodly portion of this particular segment that is supported by volunteers is faith-based service delivery. I really believe that this government has got to take a look, a very hard look, at supporting the faith-based service delivery people because they really work more for the cause than they do for the actual profit. They have many, many, many years of experience delivering these services, so I would like this government to take a look at these organizations before they would look at the ones that do it for profit.

We need well-paid and well-trained people, but more importantly we must respect and create a system that doesn't destroy the souls of the people that work in the care industry. They do the impossible job every day of delivering care for ever-increasing people in need with fewer and fewer people. People who work in the care industry know what they have to deliver to the people that they're responsible for and to. When they leave at the end of the day and can't say,

"I've done the job that I need to do, and Mrs. So-and-so or Mr. So-and-so or little Tommy was truly looked after to the best of my ability," then they go home and their souls are slowly but surely destroyed. They get burnout, and they leave the industry. We cannot afford that in this province.

When long-term care was deregulated, it was deregulated into two segments. One was housing, and one was care. So we have two ministries, probably with 19 different departments in between, actually looking after the same person.

The housing, of course, has now been divided into any number of categories. What I've always been asking for are clear definitions of what those categories are and how they actually can be applied directly across the province. We have what they call supportive living, that's divided into assisted living and designated assisted living. We've got lodges, enhanced lodges. We have home care. And all of these pertain to the housing side of it.

One of the other things that was mentioned was that the government will work to expand long-term care capacity. I think we have to be very clear that we're all speaking about the same thing. What is long-term care? What I always refer to is continuing care, which, of course, then includes the long-term care portion. Long-term care as we know it today usually includes people that have high medical needs, not just Aids to Daily Living care.

Most regions are trying to decrease the number of long-term care beds in their areas. In the end it's going to prove not to be a wise move because some people are being assessed improperly and put into the wrong living accommodations.

Families also must be directly involved with the assessment of where people are going to live. Some of the things that are happening in the province are that there is an assessment tool. People are assessed. They come down to the bottom and say: this is the kind of care you require; therefore, this is where you're going to live. I believe that that is very wrong. I am really looking for the words "continuing care," and let's work within that definition. The reason I'm looking for that is because that's what the Liberals would do.

I'd like to tell a little story trying to explain the deregulation of long-term care. We have grandma sitting in a room in housing. Housing supplies board and room. Grandma may need a little bit of help because she's had a stroke; she's right-handed and is paralyzed on the right side. So with a little bit of help from people, not necessarily medically trained or with the higher skills of a PCA, they can help her get dressed, go to the washroom, and take her down to the dining room. We now have her sitting at the dining room table ready to eat breakfast. The food is put in front of her, but who is going to feed her? We have now moved from housing into care. This is where it gets very confusing because it's the same person that is to be looked after, and we've got two different ministries responsible.

Another thing that I would like to address, that I didn't necessarily see in this, is that I believe it's very important to index AISH. The other thing that I would like to see is one-third of AISH income go towards their housing. We have people out there paying anywhere from 60 to 70 per cent of their very meagre income, and they truly do live in hovels.

I also agree that the Water for Life strategy is certainly a priority. I do know that our University of Lethbridge has some of the leading scientists working on this. It will become the oil of tomorrow, but I believe that tomorrow is here. In fact, I think it was yesterday. We really have to make the protection of our water a priority that we move on instantly. Yes, I realize that money is going forward, but I don't believe that it's going fast enough, and I don't think that the EUB is coming out with decisions that are timely or that truly have been looked at with a scientist's eye.

I hope that I see a change of heart, that economic policies that are imperative for our province and, certainly, for our tax base will be matched with a social policy overlay, and that the government will work with this side in a very co-operative manner, which has been certainly expressed by this Premier. I believe that it was President Franklin D. Roosevelt who said at one point in time – and I paraphrase – that the time for competition is over and the time for co-operation is now. I believe in that saying. I think that it's very important for good governance that everyone co-operate. Ladies and gentlemen, that's what we were elected to do.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wish to participate under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't necessarily planning this, but I'm sure the hon. House leader really wants me to speak at this particular time and the Minister of Education and all the rest of them. [interjections] I thought you were begging me to speak. Anyhow, I've got a few things to say. I think I can put together some things to say.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just review where we're at, and I think that I will come to the point we talked about. I remember when we made the serious cuts back in the mid-90s. Now, clearly, at the time we had a deficit problem. I would argue that we didn't have a debt problem. But we hacked everything, especially needed social services, such as education and health care and help for the poor. So we were facing that particular problem.

Then when the economy started to get better, we still had what I call the social deficit. We were preoccupied with the economic deficit to the detriment of worrying about the rest of the social deficit. I would argue that we're still playing catch-up from the severe cuts of the mid-90s. Whether it be in education, whether it be in health care, whether it be in help for the poor, and the rest of it, we haven't caught up.

Along with this, we've developed a strategy for the oil and gas industry and the tar sands and the rest of it. Our economic strategy is to get in there, get the oil and gas out, develop the tar sands at the fastest possible rate that we can, all to get into the American market, Mr. Speaker. I know there's pressure from the Americans. I know there's pressure from the federal government to do this. They want this source that they say is secure, but that's not necessarily what's good for Alberta.

So now you tie the two things together: the cuts that we're trying to deal with to catch up and come back from – and I think even the government recognized that they had to catch up there – and you tie that on with this, as I said before, economy on steroids. We're trying to now deal with all those problems with the cuts from before and in Calgary with a hundred thousand people coming in.

We were told by the economic development department and at hearings in Medicine Hat the task force was told by people that presented there that we should expect a population in Alberta of 6 million people in the next 10 to 15 years. That's double the population now after we've had the population explosion that we know about. How do you begin to deal with the serious social and infrastructure problems with that sort of population increase? It's impossible to do, Mr. Speaker. What's the point of having 6 million people if the majority of people aren't benefiting in the so-called Alberta advantage? You know, what's generally good for the CEOs in downtown Calgary is not necessarily good for the rest of Albertans.

Let me just talk about the task force. I can't talk about what's coming out of it, obviously, but we can talk about the public hearings. The calls that we heard right across the province – and I mentioned this earlier. It's severe. You know, we knew about Fort McMurray. We knew about Grande Prairie. We knew about Edmonton and Calgary. But I found out that everywhere in Alberta we're facing some of the same problems of low vacancy rates and homelessness in places that I didn't expect, like Hinton. That was the biggest surprise.

So where is the Alberta advantage for a lot of people in this province? How do you keep up, you know, with a 10.6 per cent increase in population coming in every year, Mr. Speaker? Admittedly people, as somebody said, come in for better jobs and dreams, but they find when they get here that they can't even find a place to live. In Grande Prairie they said: don't bother coming up even if you have a job because we have no place to put you. Now, does that make any sense at all? The reality is – the previous Premier finally admitted it – we were saying in that legislative session in the summer, the short one that we had, that the government didn't have a plan. The members opposite were all standing up and saying: yes, we have a plan; it's a wonderful plan. Finally Premier Klein uttered the truth: we don't have a plan. I would argue that we still don't have one. We talk about one, but we still don't have one.

I want to again talk just to put a human face on this, Mr. Speaker. These are calls – I've been allowed to say their names publicly – that I've had from people just the last week talking about their problems in housing and rents. Here's one: rent has gone up $350 in the past six months. Another woman, 71 years old, is now looking for a job because she can't afford to pay her rent. She's got to go back to work. Another one: rent is going up 30 per cent. Another one works full time and still cannot afford rent. Another one calls regarding rent costs. Another one: rent has gone up $375 in five months. Now, how do we expect people on fixed incomes and working in service jobs, even if you're well employed, to keep up with this sort of thing? How is that an Alberta advantage? I ask you that. How is that an Alberta advantage?

You know, I admit that we're having the task force, and I give the minister and the Premier credit for that. They've put opposition people on, and we've certainly got an earful. I hope that they'll listen. We'll see what the report says, and we'll see what the government does after that.

Mr. Speaker, it's not just housing – that's a big one – but we're talking about health care. The minister is here. Yesterday he crisis managed, as we do, and I don't blame the minister. It certainly was crisis management dealing with the Fort McMurray situation. All last year we talked about the problems in Fort McMurray in this Legislature. Finally they did something about it, but that will not solve the problems.

The announcement yesterday that the minister is involved with: yeah, fine. We need to do something. But, you know, when I look at the money – an $8,000 bonus to stay for part-time doctors – that's going to be some interesting negotiation when the minister has to go deal with the nurses and other health professionals with that sort of situation. Then we look at what they're looking at, and if this isn't crisis management, tell me what is. It says, "The unique circumstances of communities under pressure," and that's every community in the province if what I'm hearing from the task force is right. [interjection] Yeah, well, you want to clap about that when people are homeless and they can't find a place to rent and the rents are going up and they can't find a doctor? You thump for that, hon. member? Go ahead and thump because Albertans aren't thumping, I assure you about that.

What it says is that the communities under pressure . . . That's the minister's term.

. . . and under-served areas will be addressed through the new clinical stabilization initiative. These communities will be dealt with on a case-by-case basis. A provincial framework for under-serviced areas is to be finalized.

Apparently that's about $56 million. The $8,000 bonuses for part-time doctors is $47 million, and then we say that other, special funding – we're not sure where – “has been designated to address extraordinary increases in practice costs.” Well, this is crisis management.

Admittedly, something had to be done, and I'm not critical of the fact that this has come forward, but it shows the problem with the lack of planning. In health care even more severe shortages – and we talked about that today, Mr. Speaker – are there with the nurses and other health professionals. What do we do about that when that comes forward? How do we get those people in again when you have a 10.6 per cent growth rate because of, sort of, this overstimulation? We're afraid to put on a moratorium for a little while with the new projects, even though Fort McMurray and others are asking for it, just to slow it down and see what we can do. The government refuses to do that. They won't put the brake on the pedal, but they want to do it on the cheap. You can't do this.

If you want to keep this pace of development up, you're going to have to spend a lot more money – and that's why I'll be interested in the budget – on the social and physical infrastructure. You can't do it on the cheap, have this pace of development and not do that. As I said, we are facing the problems from the severe cuts in the past. We hadn't caught up there.

So for a lot of Albertans this so-called advantage for the people that live here has become a big disadvantage. It has become a big, big disadvantage for many people, and if the members wanted to come around and listen to the task force, they would have heard that. We heard that very loud and clear, Mr. Speaker, from the people that took the time to come out to the task force.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing I just want to allude to briefly is part of the crisis management. Now we're going to hear P3s, the big answer.

An Hon. Member: Alternative financing.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, alternative financing. It hardly has even worked anywhere.

To think that this isn't creating a debt, this is when I get amazed by this government. They're so worried that people see that they have a debt that they say: well, we'll have a P3; that's not really a debt. But when you're paying as we do on Henday and the ring road and these others, is it not a debt if you have to pay $21 million for 30 years? Is that not a debt? You know the old saying: if it looks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it's a duck, Mr. Speaker.

The reality is that they say: well, gee, this solves our problems because they'll be responsible for all the problems. Well, they've created more problems. It worked in many cases in Nova Scotia where, admittedly, it was the Liberal government that brought it in and a Conservative government that got rid of it. There were all the problems there with the schools and the shoddy workmanship. We'll have this debate in the Legislature a little more, you know, about some of the problems. But just to think that it's not a debt, only the Conservatives' economic philosophy could say: you're responsible for $21 million for 30 years, but that's not a debt. Conservative economics, Mr. Speaker. Amazing. Absolutely amazing that they try to tell people that that's not a debt.

You know, to think that these companies . . . [interjection] Oh, I'm getting a reaction. I love that. Mr. Minister, we'll have lots of time to debate this.

Mr. Speaker, do we think that these P3 companies – and we'd be interested to see how many of them donate to the Conservative Party – that come in are not shrewd enough to think that they're going to make a good profit over that period of time? They're not in business not to make a profit. As I think the Member for Calgary-Varsity said: if you've got the money, why do you want to pay a mortgage over that period of time? We wouldn't tell individuals to do that – would we? – so that they could pay a lot of extra money over 30 years. Well, maybe Conservatives would. I'm not sure about that.

Even if you had to borrow on P3s, with our rate we can get that better and cheaper than private companies can. If we had to borrow, why would we not do it that way, Mr. Speaker? You know why we want to do it this way? Well, partly ideology. You know, this government operates from the right, with a triumph of ideology over common sense quite often. The reality is that if we had to pay for it the old-fashioned way, it would still be cheaper, but beyond ideology they want to say that we don't have a debt on the books because they've become pre-occupied with that.

As I say, even if we have to pay it over 30 years, somehow they've determined in their economics that this is not a debt. Albertans are smarter than that, Mr. Speaker. They know that. This will be an interesting debate that we can hold in the Legislature this year, on what I call crisis management.

I just want to talk a little bit about transparency, and I'm going to give the government some credit. [interjections] Yeah, I know that this is going to be hard on you. I think we've made some steps in this Legislature that are a step in the right direction. There are still some problems with Bill 1, and hopefully the government will listen, but at least we have a lobbyists registry coming forward. I don't think it's adequate enough, but at least it's an acknowledgement that we need to do that. This government refused to do that for many years, so that's at least a step in the right direction.

Some of the changes that we're making in the Legislature I think are more democratic and I think that they are a big step in the right direction. I said this on the bill yesterday, and I give the government and the Premier and the House leader credit for that.

We'll leave it when I was being positive. How's that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River under Standing Order 29(2)(a), I presume.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to ask a question of the hon. member. I'm concerned about the stance regarding P3s, to the point where it almost seems as if this member would rather have us throw money off a bridge than see any company make a nickle in profit, and I'm really concerned. I would ask him what his response would be to the Auditor General, who said in Public Accounts last year – he can check Hansard – that if any minister that's undertaking a large public works project in his department didn't examine a P3 as a funding option, he would simply not be doing his job. With apologies, I paraphrase the quote, obviously. I would also ask the hon. member: if things are so awful here in Alberta, why does he think a hundred thousand people a year are moving here?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, it happens in all boom economies. People hear that the streets are paved with gold. They hear about the big jobs in Fort McMurray and the rest of them. I don't blame them for coming. They're looking, as somebody said opposite, for their dreams and for good jobs. It's always going to happen in a boom economy. Alberta is no exception in that regard.

All I'm saying is that the boom could be tempered somewhat by the pace of development. That's a reality. When it's too extreme, when ordinary people here in Alberta can't afford to live and there's more homeless, then we have a problem, and this government better recognize it.

The second question. As the Auditor General also said, they're not necessarily good or bad, admittedly. What he said, though, is that there better be a public-sector guarantor, that we know what we're doing with them. We found out with Henday that what the government said about the public-sector guarantor was not what happened, because it was leaked to us what actually happened, and what the government had talked about was very different from what the public-sector guarantor had said about that particular program. Take a look, hon. member, and see if I'm not right about that. So we have to be very careful if we're going to have some of these things. There has to be a public-sector comparator, Mr. Speaker. So far we haven't seen that with this government.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that my questions and my comments are, number one: is this guy for real? I mean, he's talking like we're living in an NDP government in Saskatchewan or something. Does he really believe even half of what he's saying? I mean, come on. Wake up and look around. Things are good here, man. Admit it. We're in a boom economy right now, and that's because we have a good government.

Mr. Speaker, I know that Saskatchewan and B.C., which are both under NDP governments, are sitting on just as much resources.

Ms DeLong: B.C. is not NDP.

Rev. Abbott: Sorry. B.C. is Liberal. It's the same thing.

They're sitting on just as much resources as we have here in Alberta, and they can't make it work. So, Mr. Speaker, my question is: does he not realize that? If he doesn't, why doesn't he go there where he can be part of the gang?

5:40

Mr. Martin: That's pretty feeble, frankly. I've lived in Alberta a lot longer than you, hon. member. We don't all have to think the same way to be Albertans. Mr. Speaker, the point is: are you really saying that there are the same resources in Saskatchewan as there are in Alberta? If you are saying that, I'll say it back to you: are you for real? Are you for real? I mean, are you saying that it was this good government that came down, and there it was, that this Conservative government said, "Let there be oil and gas," and lo and behold there was oil and gas, and therefore they're the government, and they're doing such a wonderful job? As I said to the member, if he wants to say it, I'd say the same thing back in the most positive way: get real.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the member opposite has been a great contributor to the housing task force. I do thank you for the work that you've done on that with the all-party committee. Today we heard the Liberal opposition talk about rent controls, that we need to institute rent controls because of the supply issue out there and the people can't afford to stay in their homes. I want to know from you: do you think that rent controls would bring new buildings to Alberta, would bring new construction to Alberta, would increase the supply to Albertans? You've heard from Albertans directly.

The Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, the time for discussion and questions is over on this issue.

Are there any other participants under the throne speech?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I'd like the answer to that. All the colleagues here in this Assembly would. We've given you the power to expand.

The Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, hon. member, the Standing Orders are made up by the Assembly. I'm here to administer them, and we don't change them on the go.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on response to the throne speech.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just because the place is getting far too lively, I would move that we adjourn until tomorrow at 1 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 5:42 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 15, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/03/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you a special guest that we have today in your gallery. Victor Buffalo is the chief of the Samson Cree nation and was recently inducted into the Aboriginal Business Hall of Fame as a 2006 laureate honoured for his lifetime contribution to aboriginal businesses in Canada. This is a significant acknowledgement of his accomplishments for the Samson Cree nation. I will be speaking more about Mr. Buffalo's accomplishments later in a member's statement. However, in the meantime I'd like to ask Chief Buffalo to rise and receive the warm wishes of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly individuals who have helped keep Alberta's public library service strong, accessible, and part of our community fabric. First, we have several representatives of the Legislature Library here today. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to stand when their names are called: Sandra Perry, Valerie Footz, Eileen Cardy, Heather Close, Nancy DeJager, Vivianne Fagnan, Christina Liggins, Philip Massolin, Warren Maynes, and Sharna Polard.

Mr. Speaker, I also have representatives of the Alberta public library system here today. They are also seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I'll also ask them to stand: Muriel Abdurahman, chair of Strathcona county library; Ernie Jurkat, board member, Strathcona; Heather Belle Dowling, previous director of Strathcona; Peter Moloney, St. Albert library board; Dr. Sheila Bertram, Edmonton public board; Patricia Jobb, associate director, Edmonton; Maureen Wilcox, chair of Yellowhead; Clive Maishment, director of Yellowhead; Lucy Strobl, the chair of Onoway library; Yvonne Slemko, board member, Onoway; Karen Lester, the chair of Didsbury; Inez Kosinski, library manager, Didsbury; and also two last representatives from my department, Patricia McNamee and Kerry Anderson.

Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen.

The Speaker: Hon. members might wonder why there was such a long introduction permitted. Today is the 100th anniversary of the first Libraries Act in the history of the province of Alberta. These individuals are here today to commemorate that. An hon. member will provide additional information in a moment or two.

One of the people in the Speaker's gallery today, though, I'd like to point out, is a former Member of this Legislative Assembly. I'd like Mrs. Abdurahman to stand again, please.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some bright, shining stars, 46 grade 6 students joining us. Accompanying them are their teachers, Mr. Larry Neville, Mrs. Amanda Hetchler, Ms Niki Fulton, and Mr. John Ferguson, as well as parent volunteers Kelly Campbell, Geri Shier, Peter and Shelley Lawrence, Terry Davidson, Helen and Paul Overwater, Colleen Hovey, Penny Johnson, and Laura Biggs. I'm pleased that they could make their way up to Edmonton. I've visited Delburne school many times as both of my sons went from K to 12 there, and they had some very good teachers. They're joining us today in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a former employee of Health and Wellness Alberta and a famous non-Métis harvester, Mr. Mark Kastner, now an employee of the Calgary health region, and next to him his boss, a constituent of mine in Foothills-Rocky View but better known to most of you as the director and CEO of the Calgary health region, Mr. Jack Davis. Welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: My guests are not quite here yet, but they'll come in during question period, so what I'll do is introduce them for the record now.

I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a group of 62 visitors from Lacombe upper elementary school, about 50 students and, I believe, about 11 or 12 parents here. First of all, the teachers are Mrs. Heather MacKay-Hawkins and Mr. Derek Rankin. The parent helpers are Mrs. Carrie Scott, Mr. Stacey Scott, Brent Brookes, Cheryl Court, Brad Johnstone, Kim Johnstone, Shona Karas, Debbie Sissons, and Mrs. Lavina Stewart. I'm not going to ask them to stand, because they're not here, but we will welcome them as they come in.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Christine McMeckan and Don Crisall. Christine and Don are United Food & Commercial Workers representatives who are currently on the picket line with workers at Palace Casino at the West Edmonton Mall. These workers went out in September, and the members are still fighting for decent working conditions and a livable wage. Christine has been a full-time union representative with UFCW local 401 since 1998, was a vice-president with the Alberta Federation of Labour for 10 years, and also chaired the Health and Safety Committee for the AFL. She has volunteered for many years to help raise funds with the UFCW for leukemia research. Don Crisall is a union organizer with UFCW local 401 in Calgary and has been for the last eight years. Most of his union experience has been with organizing workers without a union, including the Shaw Conference Centre and Lakeside Packers. They are seated in the public gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mark Wells. Mark was born in Bashaw, and he lives in Edmonton. He is a graduate of the University of Alberta with a BA in English. He has volunteered with IHuman Youth Society, helping them to produce their first play at the Citadel, and Mark was a 4-H Beef Club member in Stettler as well. Mark has now joined our staff as a sessional assistant. We're very excited with the communications and research work that he's been doing for us, and we look forward to his contribution. I'd now ask him, please, to rise and to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Dr. Gloria Keays. Dr. Keays is a deputy provincial health officer with Alberta Health and Wellness. As part of the public health division Dr. Keays works with her colleagues to provide leadership in disease control and prevention, wellness strategy development, and health surveillance. Equally important to the work done behind the scenes is the role our provincial health officers play in communicating with the public, raising awareness of health concerns affecting the province, and calming concerns by providing Albertans with medical facts and tips to keep citizens healthy. I'd ask Dr. Keays to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly I think it's 50 to 60 people from Parkland county, Parkland school division: teachers, parents, and students. They are in the public gallery, I believe.

Centennial of the Libraries Act

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to bring recognition to the 100th anniversary of the Libraries Act. March 15, 1907, marked the start of a century of knowledge, imagination, opportunity, and history thanks to Alberta's public library service. From Zama City in the north to Coutts in the south, from Bear Canyon in the west to Lloydminster in the east, Albertans have access to the world through their local library.

Alberta's libraries have grown and changed over the last 100 years. Originally referred to as reading rooms, libraries in Alberta began as a simple collection of books and documents. Over the years libraries have evolved to include computers, audiovisual material, and a variety of new online and digitized information sources along with the traditional book collections.

Libraries are also places where learning opportunities abound, from story and craft sessions for young children to online courses for adults. Last year Albertans visited their libraries more than 17 million times in person in addition to the more than 15 million visits they made to library websites and online catalogues. This reflects the passion that we feel for our libraries and the opportunities that they hold. Albertans have access to nearly 9 million books and 1.4 million other items such as CDs and DVDs, and Albertans aren't shy about borrowing these materials, with more than 32 million items borrowed from public libraries in 2006.

Let's not forget the efforts of library staff when it comes to seeking out answers to the questions that we have. In 2005 Albertans asked 4.8 million reference questions within libraries, and they asked 2.8 million reference questions online. Public library staff are knowledgeable, talented, and top notch when it comes to finding and sharing information. They truly are the gateways for all that libraries have to offer.

Mr. Speaker, many Albertans use their libraries to make their lives easier. For example, workers from crews come in to the Manning library to do their banking online. The library is the only place where they can go to do this, and it makes it easier for them to work away from home and still look after their personal business. For other Albertans their local library opens up a world of information. Patrons of the Hinton municipal library can read newspapers from all over the world online and have access to a number of databases thanks to the Alberta public library electronic network.

Libraries have been a part of Alberta since it began and, like the province, have grown and changed to meet the needs of our citizens. Whether you're looking for a book, searching for a job online, or learning how to use a computer for the first time, your local library is there for you. If you've never been to a library or even if you visit often, take the time to stop in and see what your library has to offer. You'll be glad you did.

*We have to acknowledge the members of that first Legislature for their forward thinking in passing that first Act To Provide for the Establishment of Public Libraries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Chief Victor Buffalo

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to recognize a distinguished Albertan and Canadian. Chief Victor Buffalo was inducted into the Aboriginal Business Hall of Fame on February 13 in Toronto. This honour is a result of Chief Buffalo's numerous contributions to the aboriginal people over the past four decades.

Chief Buffalo has actively encouraged economic development for the Samson Cree nation. In the 1970s as Samson grew, it was discovered that there was a need for financial capital to support the development of businesses. As a result, Chief Buffalo led the creation of the Peace Hills Trust in 1981. Today Peace Hills Trust is a very successful financial institution with $400 million in assets and is involved in oil and gas development, insurance services, real estate, and retail ventures.

Chief Buffalo believes in education as the key to ensuring a strong future for aboriginal youth. This vision has undoubtedly allowed his community to take an active role in the economic life of the province. He also was active in the creation of the Hobbema cadet corps to engage young people in positive activities, keeping them away from the temptation of drugs and gang activity.

In 2005 Chief Buffalo created the ki-son-i-ya-mi-naw, and that's Cree for "our money heritage trust fund," to manage $340 million received from the government of Canada. This fund will support the ambitions of present and future generations.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, Chief Buffalo has shown significant leadership for the aboriginal people. He has created a legacy that emphasizes self-reliance, which will secure the future of his people for many generations.

Once again, all members of the Assembly extend congratulations to Chief Buffalo for his outstanding leadership and accomplishments. Thank you.

Dr. Robert Stollery, CM

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great sadness and regret that I rise today to mourn the passing of a true gentleman, Dr. Robert Stollery. Few other men have lived a life as exemplary as Dr. Stollery's. His service to the community began early in his life, when he was a member of the Royal Canadian Navy in World War II. In 1949 he graduated with honours in civil engineering from the University of Alberta and joined Poole Construction. His first project was building the Aberhart sanatorium here in Edmonton, and once Bob Stollery started building, he never stopped. The many impressive projects he worked on included rebuilding the Jasper Park Lodge after it was gutted by a massive fire in 1952, the town of Inuvik in 1957, and the Walter C. Mackenzie Health Sciences Centre at the University of Alberta from 1977 to 1985. He helped set the stage for Alberta's current prosperity when from 1980 to 1984 he oversaw the construction of the state-of-the-art Scotford refinery project, that produced synthetic crude oil from Alberta's oil sands, the first refinery of its kind in the world.

What Dr. Stollery helped build is more than bricks and mortar, Mr. Speaker. It is our community. In recent years he graciously gave his time, money, and considerable talent to the Winspear Centre for the performing arts, Grant MacEwan College, the University of Alberta, the Edmonton City Centre Church, and the United Way. He founded the Stollery charitable foundation, which since 1994 has given hundreds of grants to community programs and charities here in Edmonton and in Kamloops, British Columbia, and he revived the Edmonton Community Foundation, which annually contributes more than $8 million to charities in the Edmonton area.

His biggest legacy is the Stollery children's hospital, which Dr. Stollery took the lead in creating. *Each year 140,000 patient visits occur at this hospital, a world-renowned centre that offers the best pediatric care to children from all over western Canada. With his passing it seems ironic that a man who built so much has left such a hole in our hearts. He will be missed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc–Beaumont–Devon.

Grant MacEwan Griffins Volleyball Team

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise to recognize an outstanding Alberta women's volleyball team. The Grant MacEwan Griffins came home national champions this past weekend. The Griffins entered the Canadian Colleges Athletic Association tournament at Capilano College in Vancouver as underdogs. They had to defeat the number one and number four ranked teams just to make it to the final. They were up against the hometown team, but the Griffins did not let a partisan crowd get in their way, winning their very first national title.

It takes a great deal of skill and dedication to win a championship banner. This achievement builds on Alberta's outstanding reputation for good sportsmanship and excellence in athletics. They've made their school, their community, and our province extremely proud, and I want to thank them. It is with great pride that I ask the members of this House to join me in congratulating the athletes, coaches, and training staff of the Grant MacEwan Griffins.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–Mill Woods.

Foster Parents

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a word in French, “parenté,” that looks like our word “parent” but means more. It's more than mothers and fathers. It's more than parentage or ancestors too. Probably, the closest in English is extended family. “Foster parent” is a term that pushes the envelope too. It means more than those who parent and more than those who take care of someone else's kids. It goes beyond the limits of the word “family” as we usually use it.

Families are those who will always take you in, who take all kinds of stuff from you, whether they deserve it or not. We do that supposedly because they're our flesh and blood, because we're biologically programmed to. If the ties are of adoption, they're still strong, growing out of a need to have ongoing significant others. We talk of the family as a pillar of society. They're bonds that are more than DNA, more than self-interest, more than natural need.

That is what foster parents bring, what they do, and what they are. Foster parents are the leading edge of what makes us civilized, extending next of kin to the human and global sphere. They give love and attention to those who may be with them only a short time. Mutual bonds and emotional rewards develop, but these may be cut as children move back to their own or others' homes. Foster parents show us a world where self-interest is not ultimate. They deserve far more than we give them: more in money, though they're not in it for the money, and more in respect and in recognition as role models, though most would shy away from this.

We give awards for those who rescue, who give long service, who put their lives on the line. Foster parents do all of this. In the province that pioneered Family Day, they deserve to be seen as family extraordinaire.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–Manning.

Parliamentary Democracy

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to speak in favour of our great Alberta parliamentary tradition and in defence of democracy. In our Alberta we are elected by the people, and MLAs represent their constituents. Members of this Legislative Assembly are members first, and nobody can take that away from us. From Magna Carta to today our Legislatures and Parliaments stand on the principle of representation. They rest very much today on the bedrock principle of democracy. Autocratic and controlling elites will spring up in corners of our system, but they cannot exercise total control. Albertans and all Canadians will not countenance control by the few.

In our Alberta the Alberta Act, the fight for Alberta's resources in the early 1900s, and then the energy wars of the '70s and '80s – we have clearly shown our disdain for elitist domination. But it is in the nature of some of our fellow humans, when they get even a little power over others, to exercise that power as if they can do so without restraint. In industries we see that sometimes in the phenomenon of the firing foreman. That was the guy who would use his power to fire at will or by whim. If they had to, innuendo, character assassinations, set-ups, and other deeds would be common tools. These guys don't care about the effects on the families of those at whom they take aim. In elected politics these types of characters do not care about or understand democracy, and we do see them. I have personal experience of that.

There are those in a democracy who will question the right to dissent, the right to think differently or put forward ideas in a different way. But a dissenting view may show the way to a better way to go. That different view may show the way to truth. We must respect dissent. Indeed, our parliamentary democracy, in the way it enshrines the right to dissent, in the way it protects the right to dissent, in the way that it safeguards our freedom of speech and to say what we think is right, is the true guarantor of our freedom in society.

I will close with a short updated quote from John F. Kennedy. It was given at Amherst College a short time before his fateful visit to Dallas, Texas.

The men [and women] who create power make an indispensable contribution to the Nation's greatness, but the men [and women] who question power make a contribution just as indispensable, especially when that questioning is disinterested, for they determine whether we use power or power uses us.

*MLAs must speak for their constituents. Thank God we have our Alberta Legislature. Thank God we can vote. Long live democracy.

The Speaker: Hon. member, sorry. Please have a chair. Yesterday the chair was severely criticized for allowing some members to go a few seconds beyond. Today I'm getting notes because I interrupted at two minutes. You can't have it both ways. The rule is two minutes.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I hereby submit five copies of the report of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts covering the committee's 2006 activities during the spring and summer sittings of the Second Session of the 26th Legislature.

Thank you very much.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 30, I wish to give notice that at the appropriate time I intend to move that the ordinary business of the Assembly be adjourned in order that we may hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance, namely the urgent need for the Premier or the Minister of Education on his behalf to protect the educational needs of the students of Parkland county and to foster goodwill between teachers, parents, and students and the school board by appointing a special mediator to help resolve the current Parkland school division labour dispute.

Thanks.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 203
Service Dogs Act

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill, being Service Dogs Act. This bill will prohibit discrimination against persons with disabilities using a certified service dog. It also makes provision for a mechanism to identify service dogs.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents today. The first is a news release from the Alberta Teachers' Association, filed on March 8 of this year. In this release the ATA is asking the government to appoint a special mediator to help resolve the Parkland dispute.

The second is a very heartfelt letter from Ms Cheryl Sneath. In the letter Ms Sneath notes that her daughters miss their teachers, miss their friends, and want to go back to school.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of the recruitment and retention survey done by the Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families related to the crisis in the child and family services sector related to retention and staff.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from my constituent Jim Sexsmith. He wants to amend the Residential Tenancies Act, the landlord to be "responsible for keeping their property in a safe and environmental condition."

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Lindsay, Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, pursuant to the Gaming and Liquor Act: the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission 2005-2006 annual report.

head: Projected Government Business

The Chair: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to the Standing Orders I would now ask the Government House Leader to please share with us the projected government business for the week commencing March 19.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under our new Standing Orders, of course, there is no opportunity for government business on Monday, so government business would continue on Tuesday, March 20, after Orders of the Day with the supplementary appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole, the interim supply bill in second reading; Bill 1, Lobbyists Act, in second reading; Bill 3, the climate change act, in second reading; and address and reply to the Speech from the Throne.

On Wednesday, March 21, under Orders of the Day the interim supply bill; supplementary supply bill; Bill 1, Lobbyists Act, second reading; Bill 3, climate change act, second reading; Bill 4, Child Care Licensing Act, second reading; and Bill 5, Health Statutes Amendment Act, second reading; and address and reply to the Speech from the Throne.

On Thursday, March 22, the interim supply bill, third reading; address and reply to the Speech from the Throne; Bill 4, Child Care Licensing Act; and Bill 5, Health Statutes Amendment Act, both in second reading.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the rule says that we should proceed with question period at 1:30. We do have another matter in the Routine that we have to deal with; that is, we have a Standing Order 30 application. The rules also say that we should proceed with the Routine till 1:30. So the Chair is going to exercise some discretion today by not calling and recognizing the member with the Standing Order 30 question in the event that this would be approved. If the Standing Order 30 application were upheld, there would be no question period because the House would go immediately into the discussion and the debate.

So the chair will take it that there is approval of the House to proceed with Oral Question Period and that nobody will rise on a point of anything.

head: 1:30 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: We will now recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Red Deer River Water Transfer

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been trying for the past few days to get straight answers from this government about the water transfer from the Red Deer River to the big development in Balzac, but we've received nothing concrete at all. Answering this question shouldn't be an option for this government. This is a serious matter of great concern for the people of central Alberta. Right now everybody is waiting for the decision on the water licence to be made. So my question is to the Premier. When can the people of the Red Deer River basin expect a decision from his government on issuing this water licence?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I will have the Minister of Environment give us a bit of an indication of how it's proceeding through the process. I have stood in this House, I think, three, four times answering a question with respect to the process. It's very clear. As to the timing of the decision, our minister will answer that.

Mr. Renner: The most direct answer that I have, Mr. Speaker, is that the applicant has asked that the decision be deferred until April, and that's the latest that I've heard.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier and his minister talk about process, but this process has resulted in delay after delay. The deadline's December 1, December 31, February 28, now apparently sometime in April. At that rate this whole project is going to be built and up and running before the water licence is issued. Can the Premier tell this Assembly why, in apparently such a well-established process, there have been so many delays? What's going on?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's up to the parties that, of course, make the application. There may be more information; there may be more evidence coming to the board. I'm not quite sure, but perhaps the minister has had further correspondence or knowledge of why the delay.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, there's a very clear process that's involved in applications of this nature. Most go very smoothly. Most are not as controversial as this one. There is a requirement for advertising and receiving of public input. That has constituted much of the delay that's been involved in this particular application. As I indicated, at this point the applicant has asked for a further delay.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier stated yesterday that the people of the Red Deer River Valley shouldn't be concerned with this. "They can trust us to do the right thing," he said. But he isn't giving the answers. Indeed, we have a government that's put millions of dollars into this project, a government in which ministers have stood in this very room and defended it. So, my question is to the Premier. Why in the world should the people of central Alberta trust this government on this decision?

Mr. Stelmach: Because, Mr. Speaker, I do keep my word.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to quote from the horse racing journal of November 2004. I'm quoting the CEO of the United Horsemen of Alberta, and he said, quote, we will have an agreement in place with the Alberta government such that if the government ever changes its philosophy on gaming and horse racing, there will be a commitment for a buyout. End of quote. The CEO of United Horsemen of Alberta. To the Premier: is there such an agreement?

Mr. Stelmach: I didn't catch the month of whatever the leader said, month of 2004. My responsibility at that time was Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. In terms of whatever is brought up today . . .

Mr. R. Miller: You're the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: He asked a question; I'm giving an answer. So please allow me to complete the answer.

I'll get more detail on what the hon. member has brought up.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: will the Premier bring an answer whether this agreement exists or not to this Assembly by Monday?

Mr. Stelmach: Who knows? It might be even earlier. You know, I'll just check to see what the issue is, and I'll get back to the Assembly.*

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the backers of this project have publicly claimed they have an agreement with the government for a buyout, or they will have an agreement as of 2004, is the Premier's flip-flop on this project from calling it ridiculous to now seeming to defend it because he now knows that Alberta taxpayers are on the hook if this project does not proceed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, this hon. member has brought forward, first of all, the secret deal. He hasn't been able to provide any evidence of this alleged secret deal. Now he's onto another tangent. His member sitting next to him seems to know a lot about horses and when they drink water. Maybe ask your neighbour; maybe he can tell you.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Highway Bypass Project in Grande Prairie

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The residents of the Grande Prairie region are deeply concerned about the quality of life in their area, about the impact of growth on a wide range of things. We were recently up there for a town hall meeting. People were in tears over the cost of housing. Traffic congestion is overwhelming. Schools are struggling, as is the college. My question to the Premier: will the Premier finally commit his government to funding the much-needed bypass connecting highway 43 to highway 16? It's a mere two miles.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the bypass he's talking about is a temporary bypass. The two miles that he's referring to, it just happens to be an issue between the county of Grande Prairie and the city of Grande Prairie. The actual long-term bypass planned goes right around the whole airport, and that is a project that will take a few more years to complete. What the member is referring to is just trying to tie a short piece of road so that we don't have the hundreds of trucks passing through today's Grande Prairie bypass, which has numerous lights on it.

Dr. Taft: Clearly, he understands exactly what I'm referring to, but my question wasn't: what am I referring to? I'm looking for a decision from a Premier who wants to lead this government. A decision, please, Mr. Premier. Will your government support this bypass project, which you know so well?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I am leading the government. Not "wants to"; I am.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, not much leadership – not much leadership. One more time: will you commit your government to building this pass, or won't you?

Mr. Stelmach: I think the question was whether we're committed to looking after many of the issues around Grande Prairie. I spent a considerable amount of time with both councils, very fully aware of their needs. We are going to introduce a very thorough capital plan, and that'll be in conjunction with the budget. Many of these growth pressures that we're experiencing not only in Grande Prairie but in other areas will be addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Royalty Review

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans know that they're being fleeced by the oil corporations thanks to the sweetheart deal they get from the royalty regime provided by this government. With oil prices pushing $60 a barrel, billions of dollars in unearned profits are leaving Alberta every year, yet this Premier has already broken his promise to conduct an open and independent review of Alberta's royalties. The question is to the Premier. How can he justify a royalty review which is dominated by friends of the oil industry and which will meet with private interests behind closed doors?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered this question quite thoroughly when the Leader of the Official Opposition asked it the other day. These are professionals. They have to follow codes of ethics. They're people very proficient in the business, especially economics. They come from a very wide variety of backgrounds, and their purpose is to present the information, put it on the table, so that all Albertans can assess whether the current oil sands royalty review – and also conventional oil and gas – is fair and just both to the companies investing and to Albertans as owners of the resource.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Pembina Institute has established four criteria to determine whether or not a process is open and transparent. Guess what? This process fails all four. Albertans are not actively involved. There are no mechanisms for meaningful public input. There's been no insurance about giving Albertans full access to details, and there are clear conflicts of interest on the review panel. Will the Premier come clean with Albertans and admit that his so-called royalty review is a sham designed to deflect criticism from the government's sellout of Alberta's resources?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, shortly after the swearing-in I met with the Pembina Institute in Calgary. We had a thorough discussion, and from the meeting we had, I thought they were very supportive of the position we're taking and the fact that we're doing the oil sands royalty review. But if there's any further information, the Minister of Finance can finish.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just add that each and every Albertan has the ability online to put in their opinions. That online service will be up shortly, will be available within probably the next two or three weeks. There will be four public meetings around the province, at which anyone in this Assembly or anyone, period, is more than welcome to come and make a presentation, that will be public to everyone.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier overrule his minister and require the committee to have public hearings around the province and to not meet with private interests behind closed doors? Will he do that?

Mr. Stelmach: I just heard the minister say that we're having four public meetings in the province of Alberta. Those are public. Unless you have some other definition, I don't know, but these are four public meetings where Albertans can present evidence to the panel.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Federal Equalization Formula

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of Alberta are worried and confused because this government is confused and sending out conflicting messages. On the equalization formula the minister in charge of intergovernmental affairs was quoted in the Calgary Herald. He is very worried about having resource revenue included in the calculations, while our Finance minister is quoted that he could care less whether the new formula incorporates resource revenue. Albertans care. Could the Premier please clarify if this government cares?

Mr. Stelmach: The government does care. It certainly cares about its people. With this particular issue it's very clear. The Council of the Federation has received a letter from the Prime Minister that indicated that there will be no inclusion of nonrenewable resources in the calculation of the equalization formula. We have moved, Mr. Speaker, as you know from a five-province standard to a 10-province standard. We've come a long way, but we'll see what happens on Monday in the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government claims it had to shut down hospitals, schools, and delay maintenance on infrastructure along with putting off building new schools, hospitals, and roads to be fiscally responsible. Will the new equalization formula account for such things as infrastructure deficit, unfunded liability of Albertans to the Canada pension plan versus the Quebec-funded pension plan, that is very lucrative?

Mr. Stelmach: I think that question we'd better ask the federal minister responsible for treasury because they're the ones going to be responsible for splitting the pool, the equalization pool, amongst the have-not provinces.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Credible economists like Brian Lee Crowley from Atlantic Canada point out the problems of equalization. After decades it's obvious the regions are becoming more reliant on transfers. It's not a hand up; it's an addicting and entrapping handout. It is not working. Does the Premier have the fortitude to fight for all Canadians and pursue a policy that insists on a sunset clause with the federal government on a new equalization formula?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, equalization is part of the Constitution, and it will require a constitutional change. The actual allocation of the equalization pool is still the responsibility of the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister of P3 education stated, "The research I did was that every time a P3 was unsuccessful, it was commenced by a Liberal or a socialist government." I would suggest the minister study harder in his social studies class. For example, let's review his Conservative government's failed P3 Calgary courthouse, the sweet private deal on the south link urgent care centre, and the cost overruns on the Anthony Henday. My questions are to the Premier. Was former Premier Klein, under whose watch these P3 failures occurred, a socialist?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if it's part of the responsibility of the Premier to talk about the political alliances of others that are not in the House. Let's put it this way: this is an area of disagreement, obviously. I know that there's a fully developed public/private partnership process actually part of government, and that's a part of the B.C. government. They do carry the Liberal label. They have built a considerable amount of infrastructure under public/private partnership, and it has been successful.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Yesterday the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation stated that we're not going back into debt. Mr. Speaker, the Premier is signing Albertans up for 30 years of payments to private companies. By any definition this is a debt. To the Premier: how much alternative financing, Enron juggling, P3 debt is the Premier willing to load onto the backs of Alberta taxpayers, who will be on the hook for the next 30 years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has put a whole bunch of different words in there, but just to get down to the very specific, of course a good project is the southeast leg of the Anthony Henday. It'll be completed this July, fully open to traffic. Here's the thing. We will know what the payout is on it on an annual basis, including maintenance. It's a fixed cost. I can assure you that it's infrastructure that's going to be enjoyed by the next generation and the generation after, and it will show up in our financial statements.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I'm sure the next 30 years of Alberta's generations will enjoy paying for an untold interest amount over that time period.

To the Premier: how deep does the Premier believe Alberta taxpayers' pockets are when it comes to paying the price for his government's alternative financing schemes? Is this the transparency and accountability the Premier has promised? Are you becoming so transparent that we can see through you?

Mr. Stelmach: Maybe he's got something else behind the eyes; I'm not quite sure. But, Mr. Speaker, talking about transparency, any liability incurred by the government on behalf of taxpayers is and will be duly recorded in our financial statements. This is one area of very large infrastructure getting built, getting built on time, and I will say at great savings when you bring it back to the net present value. If there's a further need to explain the process to any of the hon. members across the floor, we'll gladly have them sit down with our people and explain it.

Rent Regulations

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, hundreds of thousands of Albertans rent their homes or apartments. In today's rental market renters face a growing number of challenges; for example, rising rents and low vacancies. Some of my constituents who are moving out of their rental properties tell me that they are receiving their damage deposit back from their landlord without any interest included. My questions are for the Minister of Service Alberta. What is the policy on landlords paying interest on damage deposits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the policy on interest is that if a damage deposit is asked for from a landlord to a tenant, it must be put in a bank account, and it must pay interest based on a formula. Unfortunately for the renter, the formula has allowed virtually zero interest to accumulate since 2002. This year it's about .9 or .8. So they would normally get interest if interest had accrued, and it's the responsibility of the landlord to return that interest to the tenant.

Mr. Shariff: To the same minister: where can renters turn for help if they suspect that their landlord isn't following the requirements of the Residential Tenancies Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. Tenants – and we are contacted by many, as everyone in the House is aware of the issues right now – can contact Service Alberta consumer information at 1-877-427-4088 for information and assistance. As well, they can deal with the tenant advisory boards that are in Red Deer, Fort McMurray, and Edmonton. In any case, if they are in violation of the Residential Tenancies Act, they can take their landlord to small debts court.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ambulance Operators' Labour Dispute

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite a negotiation in progress between Flagstaff county and local ambulance workers in Flagstaff county the government has been heavy handed and preemptive in forcing the negotiation into a disputes inquiry board. The chaos created by the government's abandonment of the regional ambulance agreement two years ago continues. My first question is to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why the government uses a different set of rules for intervening with the Parkland teachers than for the ambulance labour negotiation in Flagstaff?

1:50

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is one matter that the minister responsible has all the information on.

Ms Evans: It is a good question, Mr. Speaker. The health care service of providing ambulance was identified in a previously done government report as something that may be an essential service. Although we haven't yet enacted legislation to make ambulance per se an essential service at the municipal level, it is, in fact, something that we have to consider when we're looking at the safety of providing service in a situation of dispute. I've spoken with the reeve on more than one occasion about this. In the first instance we hoped not to intervene, but we did because of concerns for safety.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: why does the minister's personal belief that emergency workers should not be allowed to strike trump the workers' right to do so?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, under no circumstance would a minister of the Crown say that their own personal belief trumps the right of anybody else. What I have pointed out quite clearly is the concern that we have had about the safety of providing service. In the view of our mediator who has been working with both parties to make sure that dates and process were properly in place, the concern that has been represented to me is that safety may be compromised. I have never seen the contingency plan for providing ambulance service if the strike were allowed to take place, and even in the absence of legislation, one in prudent management would have to be concerned if anything happened.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why is the Premier allowing the government to run roughshod over the local decision-makers' established process? Given that contingency plans were in place, why didn't the government give Flagstaff county and the union a chance to work through their own process?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I know the reeve, Bill Reister, quite well. I will give him a call and talk to him personally if there is an issue with respect to this matter, but I have full confidence in my minister that she is dealing with the issue the proper way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Seniors' Property Taxes

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1993 the Alberta government had an enormous debt, a fact of which we're all acutely aware, and every Albertan was expected to play a role to help eliminate that debt, and that included seniors. Suddenly in 1994 seniors were compelled to pay an education property tax, but at that time they understood its purpose. Well, that purpose has been served. I have some questions for the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Now that Alberta is debt free, will he eliminate the education property tax from the shoulders of seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek does appropriately mention things about programs of the past, where seniors did not pay the education property tax previous to 1993. It was felt at that stage, as all programs change in design, that we would focus more effort to ensure that we could provide the maximum benefit to the seniors in greatest need. So the programs have been designed to ensure that for those who have the greatest financial burden, we would help and assist in program design rather than saying that all seniors would be exempted from the education property tax.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I wonder if the minister would at least reduce that tax for those seniors who can't afford to pay it.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, with respect to reductions in this or any other program, part of that would also be part of municipal affairs, where that program element does specifically align. Our department at this stage does not have any specific designs for reducing the education property tax. Where I would say that we have specifically improved are the monthly cash benefits to low-income seniors. We could go through the assistance on one-time costs, like home repairs, furnace, major appliances. We could even go through how income taxes have helped reduce the burden on all seniors, for example, in keeping more money in their pockets. About $2 billion are going to various seniors' programs, very substantial amounts.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I wonder if the minister is prepared to cap or extend the cap or fix the cap so that those needy seniors who are really in trouble paying this tax aren't faced with the added burden of ever-increasing property values, which serves to increase property tax.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, in 2004 that's precisely what this government did: cap any increases in education property tax to all seniors. They do not pay any increase that we've seen, inflationary or otherwise, in their property taxes. They have been capped at that amount since 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Climate Change

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in his press conference the Environment minister declared to a shocked audience that climate change is real. Climate change is the number one issue for Albertans and Canadians, even above health care. In fact, man-made climate warming has been identified by the scientific community for decades, but this government has distinguished itself in ignoring science whenever inconvenient. In 2001-02 the then Environment minister spent several million public dollars convincing Albertans that cutting emissions would destroy our economy and jobs. Evidence now shows that governments such as this are passing on a disastrous environmental and economic burden to future generations. To the Premier: since you were part . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier. Sorry.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, environment, of course, is of utmost importance to this government. That's why we're the first jurisdiction in Canada to pass legislation, tabled here in the House, for regulations. In fact, quite frankly, given the kind of responses we've had from other provinces, industry, and Albertans, I know that we're on the right track.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: since you were part of the cabinet at that time, did you support the approach to climate change? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: What approach? The fact that we tabled the bill? Of course we did. The bill has been just tabled here in the House. We're in the process of ensuring that we have a very good system of measuring emissions. Those 100 or so emitters that will not be able to meet those emission standards will be paying a credit, and we'll ensure that that credit stays in Alberta to be put into technology and further infrastructure for the benefit of the next generation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think this Premier is willing to answer a question straight.

In 2001-02 your government took an approach to climate change. Did you support it, or did you not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we were the only jurisdiction, in order to put legislation in place, with a process where we have an ability now to measure the emissions between 2003 and '05 so that we can set a baseline to see who is emitting more than in those years. I mean, what's wrong with that? We're the only province that can do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Child Care Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two recent reports from Statistics Canada illustrate the dilemma faced by Alberta families struggling to find and pay for daycare spaces. Alberta is experiencing the country's only baby boom, yet Alberta had fewer daycare spaces in 2004 than in 1992. Families are feeling the squeeze because they do not receive enough support, and daycare costs to families are rising. The government hopes to attract even more workers to the province, but there are no plans to help young parents return to work or ensure family-friendly policies for new Albertans.

My questions are for the Minister of Children's Services. We read in today's paper that the government will get another chance at federal funding for daycare. Will the minister commit to using these funds and provincial allocations to provide operating grants directly to nonprofit centres to enable badly needed . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Second question.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to using these increased funds coming from the federal government, hopefully, and adequate funding from the province to provide operating grants directly to nonprofit centres to enable badly needed expansion of high-quality care in the province to happen?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Okay. Thank you very much. He actually raises probably my number one issue and a priority mandated by the Premier, which is to ensure that parents in this province receive accessible and affordable quality health care. There were a number of questions that were involved in your preamble there. I can tell you that we are taking this seriously. We have made a significant announcement last week that would help with the zero to six accessibility for parents of children of those ages. I've also committed on the six to 12 to work with our stakeholders, which would be municipalities and corporations and our operators, on some workable solutions to the issues that are facing them.

The Speaker: Sorry, Minister.

Hon. member, last question.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the increased availability of affordable child care encourages women with young families to work and is an important objective in light of Alberta's labour market situation, will the minister commit to extending funding for child care to children up to the age of 12 to help parents cover the cost of after school care for their children?

Ms Tarchuk: Okay. Thank you. I got cut off last time, so I'll just continue. Currently in the province we license both zero to six and six to 12 child care programs. We have the policy mandate to provide services on the zero to six. Programs through ages six to 12 are delivered if municipalities through our FCSS funding determine that it is a local priority.

I'm well aware of the issues that have been facing both zero to six and six to 12. Last week I made some announcements that immediately will improve the situation for zero to six. On the other side, that you're talking about, I have committed to taking a leadership role in working with all of our stakeholders in finding some workable solutions there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Health Care Workforce Supply

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the year 2010-2011 a new hospital will open in south Calgary. This is great news for our growing city, but as you know, a building is just a building if you can't staff the same hospital. We know that there's a critical need for more health care workers/professionals to staff this facility as well as others in the province. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What are you doing to address, say, the shortage of nurses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I was very, very pleased to announce that Mount Royal College in Calgary has officially become a degree-granting institution and, as part of that, has been approved to offer a new bachelor of nursing degree program, its very first degree program. We've also announced that we'll be adding more spaces to another new nursing degree program, that begins this fall at MacEwan College in Edmonton. As well, this will allow us to free up some spots at the University of Alberta. So since 1999 we have more than doubled the number of nursing spots in Alberta, and we recognize that there is a need for more.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. This is great news. However, previously nursing students from Mount Royal completed their degrees at Athabasca University. With this announcement made today, are we announcing the same seats under a new banner, or are these new seats?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, just for clarity. There was, I guess, a little confusion in some of the media today, and perhaps some of the members opposite might be a little confused as well about this issue. This morning's announcement effectively means that we will be more than doubling the number of graduates coming from Mount Royal in the next three to four years.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplemental is to the same minister. As well as nurses, of course, we need doctors and medical technicians to staff this hospital, so what is this minister doing to help us meet these health care professional needs?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to tell my colleagues that we've added a significant number of new spaces across the board in postsecondary and other health programs as well. Last fall we increased the number of first-year physician spaces to 257. That's a 13 per cent increase over '05-06, and that means that the total number of doctors to be trained will be 900 in the next four years. The total number of spaces in other health training programs – that's dentists, pharmacists, lab technicians – has increased by over 1,500. That's more than a 50 per cent increase in just eight years. We are working on our plan for managing all of the growth pressures to build a stronger Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It would seem that the Tory leadership race did not end on December 2. The Premier and the Finance minister are openly bickering about whether resource revenues should be included in the formula that's used to calculate federal equalization payments. Ordinary Albertans are confused by the mixed messages that the Premier and his ministers continue to send. My first question is for the Minister of Finance. Does this minister support Stephen Harper's election promise not to include resource revenues in the formula? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find it very difficult to comment on something that the Prime Minister has a full mandate to do or not to do. I understand that that question will be elucidated on Monday at 2 o'clock, so we certainly on this side wait with bated breath to see what the Prime Minister has to say, to see what the budget has to hold for Albertans. Both the Premier and myself are looking for fairness for Albertans in this upcoming budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Finance minister has said that he expects the federal budget to ramp up the Canada social transfer to Alberta and he doesn't seem to mind including resource revenues in the equalization formula, my question is this. Can he please tell all Albertans what kind of a secret deal he has made with his cousin the federal Tory Finance minister?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'm actually very complimented that the hon. member would think that I would go out and do some sort of deal to benefit Albertans. I would love to be able to stand here and say that we're getting a higher per capita increase. I'm hoping. Quite frankly, I think all Albertans are hoping that the per capita formula and the CST and the CHT would go to a realistic level where we, being Albertans, receive exactly the same amount as people in the rest of the country and other provinces. I'm hoping that that will be there. Do I have knowledge of a secret deal? The answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the cost of the federal equalization program increases, the federal government will either have to raise taxes, cut other programs, or run a deficit to pay for it. Even the Premier's director of media relations has said that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development should be Alberta's lead on the equalization discussion, so my third question is for that minister. On Monday I asked the minister whether or not his ministry had any concerns about the $5.2 million in federal transfers that they receive and whether or not that money might be in jeopardy if the equalization formula includes resource revenues. He's had a couple of days to think about it. Now my question is: are you worried about that money or not?

Mr. Mason: Just say firewall.

Dr. Morton: If you read Maclean's magazine, you realize that that word is very popular in Quebec, and it's why Stephen Harper is going to form a majority government by winning 30 or 40 seats in Quebec.

The member opposite should study the equalization formula. No money leaves the coffers of this government to go directly to Ottawa.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Postsecondary Opportunities

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Studies show that in the years ahead 70 per cent of all Albertans will require some form of postsecondary education. That means it's absolutely critical for all Albertans – every single one – to consider further learning. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is the government doing to help encourage all Albertans to consider, plan, and save for postsecondary education that they will so critically need?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. We are working with our postsecondary institutions in a collaborative, co-operative approach to communicate not only to the K to 12 system but to parents and to Albertans alike that the future is going to require that higher educated workforce, and the future is here in many respects. Currently we are expanding all of our apprenticeship spots, we're expanding all of our postsecondary spots, trying to meet the demand, but more importantly we're working in co-operation with not only the postsecondaries but all stakeholders within the system to lower costs so that it's affordable and to work on the affordability framework.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question goes to the same minister. Working with institutions to help create more spaces and make things more affordable is one thing, but there is a group out there that typically doesn't consider advanced education critical. What is the minister doing to raise the level of awareness of the critical need for further education among groups that typically don't pursue postsecondary education and are at risk of falling further behind the economic curve in this booming economy?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're working in tandem with the Minister of Education in the K to 12 system because the reality is that we need to have mentors involved in our K to 12 system telling students and telling parents about the opportunities that a booming economy like Alberta has but also the pathways that they need to achieve those opportunities. Certainly, we'll be looking for new and innovative ways to show students about science, about how they can achieve their potential in a postsecondary system in our global economy.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Child and Youth Advocate

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's most vulnerable citizens, disadvantaged children and youth, need to know that they have somewhere to turn when it seems there are no options left. A strong children's advocate can serve the interests of these individuals, but changes to the position are needed. To the Minister of Children's Services: will the minister demonstrate her government's often stated commitment to openness and transparency by having the Child and Youth Advocate an independent office that reports directly to the Legislature, not the ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that when I'm looking at anything within this department, I'm looking through the eyes of children and families, and my focus will always be on that. It seems to me that the advocate is absolutely doing a fabulous job when he's representing the interests of our children and our youth in care. To my knowledge the way it works now is working exceptionally well. I know that on a regular basis he gets to provide us with continuous feedback on our policies. On a regular basis he can continually influence our policy, and if the concern is accountability, he is accountable to both myself and to Albertans through his annual report.

Mrs. Mather: Well, a report commissioned by this government in 2000 recommended that the children's advocate be made an independent office of the Legislature, similar to the Ombudsman or Auditor General. The report stated that this change would allow the advocate to speak freely and without government interference to better serve children, who are often suspicious of the system, and to have more credibility than it does while housed in the ministry. Can the minister please explain why seven years later Children's Services has not moved forward on this recommendation?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the advocate does speak freely, but having said that, I don't know which report you're talking about. If you would like to forward that to me, I would be willing to take a look at it.

Mrs. Mather: If the minister has no plans to make the Child and Youth Advocate independent, will she consider creating an all-party committee, including the children's advocate, to review provincial child protection services and provide and make public recommendations about how they can be improved to better serve Alberta's vulnerable children and youth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'd reiterate that I think the advocate is doing a fabulous job. I think that the way it's set up now works very well for our families, our youth, and for this province. I would also remind the House again that he is very accountable to us through his annual report, and he's only one of many checks and balances. We also have appeal panels, we have mediation services that are offered, and as well we have the Ombudsman.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Contaminated Sites Cleanup

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the government has introduced a new environmentally friendly program to help clean up gas station sites that have contamination from underground petroleum tanks. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. What is the current status of this program, and how much money is involved?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that the province is providing an additional $50 million to help eligible municipalities and owners of small retail gas stations to take necessary action to address contamination of underground fuel tanks. I need to say that this is in addition to the program that was brought forward in the year 2000 of $60 million, and the program addressed 900 contaminated sites. The new program has already affected 200 applicants that were already in place and 100 . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary to the same minister: well, then, who is eligible for the new program? In other words, will this program help the average retailer out there?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the program is available to municipalities and small retail gas stations that meet the eligible criteria.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what is being done to ensure that sites that are not addressed through this program are also being cleaned up in Alberta?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act requires all owners to clean up their sites whether they're eligible for the program or not. This program assists individuals or municipalities that are eligible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, and would the third party be ready. The potential for the 18th question is here.

Edmonton Remand Centre

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After years of neglect and stalling by this government, finally the decision to construct the new remand centre in Edmonton was made last summer. However, guards are now extremely worried about their safety with respect to the proposed open concept design of the new facility, the open pod style. If things go bad, as can typically happen in a remand centre situation, our corrections officers will likely find themselves facing imminent danger, with their backs exposed. Did the Solicitor General consult with representatives of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees in general, or the local in particular, to hear their concerns with respect to the proposed design?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an excellent question. Yes, indeed we have consulted with our union to ensure that they are onside with this new state-of-the-art design, and we will be meeting with them again to ensure that any concerns they have will be addressed. This new facility is certainly state of the art and follows a model of approximately 100 other correctional facilities across North America. It's a facility that is going to ensure the safety of not only the staff but also the inmates, and we look forward to addressing those concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the primary concern when we're designing a new remand centre must be the safety of those who either work or live inside. Our corrections officers work in an extremely stressful and challenging environment, and they're expected to maintain order in an environment that is inherently dangerous and disorderly. We owe it to them to take their concerns seriously. If the guards overwhelmingly favour a closed pod system similar to the one at the current remand centre, what are the chances that the hon. Solicitor General will order the design amended or changed to accommodate those concerns?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, right now we're working on a proposed design, and if anything should come forward to indicate that we need to change our direction in this design, we will certainly do that. Our top priority is to ensure, again, the safety of the inmates and the safety of our staff, and I'm quite confident this new design will address those issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: will the minister make sure that the new remand centre is equipped with immediate lockdown protocols and equipment so that in response to a riot or a similar emergency the entire facility can be swiftly controlled, keeping both guards and inmates safe?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, we have not had an incident of an escape from the present remand centre. The new centre is going to be that much more secure than the existing facility, and all those precautions will be taken. I can assure the hon. member again that the safety of inmates and the safety of staff will be a top priority in the design and construction of this new facility.

The Speaker: We arrive today, hon. members, at 98 questions and answers. That's very good.

head: 2:20 Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: We have one order of business. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on a Standing Order 30 application.

Parkland Teachers' Labour Dispute

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 30(7)(a) stipulates that a motion under this order "must relate to a genuine emergency," and I will explain that urgency very shortly. I would also note that no other motion under Standing Order 30 has been dealt with today and that this motion only deals with a single matter which has not been dealt with in this session. It's not based on a question of privilege, and it's not a question that can only be debated on a motion on notice. Beauchesne 387 says that a debate under this standing order must deal with a specific question which requires urgent consideration, it must be within the administrative competence of the government, and there's no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

We are calling here today for a very specific action in this motion; namely, the immediate appointment of a special mediator to resolve the labour dispute in the Parkland county school division. Such an appointment is clearly within the administrative competence of the government. In fact, such a mediator was appointed in the past and proved to be very helpful in resolving disputes. I note that the Alberta Teachers' Association has also asked for a special mediator to be appointed at this time. Clearly, this is an action that the government is able to take, and I think a rigorous debate on this issue in the Assembly would give the Premier and the Minister of Education some clear direction to do so.

There are a number of other measures that fall within the government's administrative competence, but they are not likely to be as successful in resolving this problem as this motion I'm putting forward today.

If a debate is agreed to, I would be happy to elaborate and carefully consider the options we have before us. I would also refer to Beauchesne 391 and note that the dispute is not currently under the adjudication of a court of law. Certainly, the Labour Relations Board is playing a role in applying the labour codes to this dispute, but the board's involvement in no way precludes the action we are calling for here to be taken by either the Premier or the Minister of Education. Marleau and Montpetit also list the same criteria I have just outlined, on pages 587 and 588. So having established that the procedural criteria and the conditions laid out by the authorities have been met, I would like to very briefly speak to the urgency of this motion.

Mr. Speaker, before I was elected to this House, I myself was a teacher. I am also a parent. So I appreciate how difficult the situation is for all sides. Members of my caucus have received many heartfelt letters from residents of Parkland county pleading for some resolution to this matter in a most urgent way. I believe that all members are aware of how important education is and the foundation it lays for the future participation of our children in the economy as democratic citizens. The longer this dispute continues, the farther the delays are in setting the foundation for these children's education. There are 9,500 students in 22 schools between Entwistle and Spruce Grove, and they're all being negatively affected by this dispute.

We also need to be realistic about what is at stake. Teachers in the Wild Rose school division voted 90 per cent in favour of a strike last night. We know that negotiations for schools boards will be coming up across the province over these next few months. A proper stage needs to be set for these negotiations to be undertaken in a positive and a constructive way. There's always a lot of finger pointing in this situation, but the point is the urgent need for the government to finally take a positive and constructive role in bringing these sides back to the table.

Just before I conclude, I want to emphasize the urgency and the importance of having this debate here this afternoon. We can recall in 2002 the province-wide teachers' strike, and I know first-hand the damage that a protracted dispute can cause. Every day that the government delays only worsens the damage, especially for students writing diploma exams. The NDP opposition opposes a harsh and arbitrary measure such as back to work legislation and believes that the government has a responsibility to immediately foster conciliation between all parties in this dispute. The children and students of Parkland are counting on this Assembly to do the right thing and move on this motion here today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The chair will recognize anybody else to participate.

Please remember, now, that we're dealing with a procedural question in the House. It has nothing to do with the strike. That's not the urgency argument that has to be heard. That's not the issue. It's urgency of this Assembly to deal with the matter: that's the subject at hand here.

The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has put forward a motion that suggests that it is urgent and vital for this House to engage in debate on the issues surrounding the situation we have in Parkland, the Parkland school dispute. I fail to recognize what this House debating this motion at this time could do to reconcile the circumstances that we find ourselves in in Parkland.

While it is regrettable that there have been 18 days where students have not been in class, the debate about the urgency of it in this House may not do anything to resolve the situation we find in Parkland. In Parkland a mediator has been available, has been offered, has been available to both sides that are party to this dispute. Both sides have been told that if they could agree on a process for reconciliation, the DIB process with certain conditions, there would be an opportunity for them to come to some reconciliation.

Mr. Speaker, we can talk in this Legislature until the cows come home, but at the end of the day we have no teeth to compel both sides to come together. The best people to have the teeth in this situation are the parents and people in that community to really compel both sides to work together either to commonly resolve it or to in effect go further and ask the government collectively for a process that can in fact initiate resolution.

The Speaker: Okay. Methinks what the hon. minister was doing was participating in the debate, not dealing with the subject as to why we need to adjourn the remainder of the House today to deal with this matter. That's what the urgency question is all about. If it's upheld, then we will have the debate.

The hon. Member for St. Albert on the question of urgency with respect to the need to adjourn the House from the regular Routine.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in support of the request for an emergency debate on the situation in the Parkland school division. As an Official Opposition shadow minister for Education I've been in close contact with board members, a representative of the teachers, as well as parents and students affected by the labour dispute. I've previously risen in the House to ask the government how they're planning to bring a fair and timely resolution to the situation. So I and my colleagues are certainly aware of the urgency of the situation.

The heading for SO 30 is Urgent Public Importance. In other words, the case for urgency logically requires an underlying issue of great importance to the public. The current labour dispute between the teachers and the board of Parkland school division certainly meets the standard of being urgent because kids' education – I want to say up front that in the long run the education system is well served by fair bargaining processes, and that leads generally to good relationships between teachers and our school boards. But in this instance that relationship appears to have broken down, and it is very important to have both sides back at the bargaining table to negotiate a settlement acceptable to both parties.

It's worth noting that the situation is aggravated by the financial constraints faced by some of the school boards across Alberta. Mr. Speaker, this issue deserves our attention today because without the two sides actually talking, a fair, mutually agreed upon resolution won't happen in time for those kids that need to get an education. The result could be that students who are preparing for their diploma exams or applying for postsecondary programs may be disadvantaged. For example, the registrar of NAIT today suggested that once students are out of school for a month, the likelihood of success and even admission is very reduced, a crisis on the part of many families and kids. As of today kids have been out of school 19 days, and the holidays are coming up very quickly. This is urgent. This is essentially a full month of school which is probably going to be missed.

Another point that makes this situation so critical is that many working parents are struggling to find adequate child care. This is placing a huge burden on parents, their families, and the community.

Now to urgency. The authors of the authority set up a number of other conditions for SO 30. Beauchesne 390 indicates that the public interest can be served through discussion and debate. Therefore, the public interest will be served by setting aside the ordinary business of today to discuss this extraordinary issue that is affecting the people of Parkland. I hope the government will agree that this deserves the full attention of the Assembly.

I also note that Beauchesne 387 indicates that the Speaker may "take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate," and I hope the government side will help us express this wish. We think it's very essential.

In terms of today's scheduled business and whether there's adequate opportunity to discuss this issue, I would argue that there is not. There is no government bill scheduled for debate today that would provide an opportunity to discuss this issue. As this is not private members' day, there is no private member's motion scheduled for debate, and the next one up for debate would also not provide an opportunity to debate this issue. The next private member's bill, to be debated on Monday, will also not provide an opportunity to discuss this issue.

Written questions and motions for returns are scheduled to stand and retain their places. The debate on supplementary supply will not provide an opportunity since this Assembly is not being asked for additional funds for education. Interim supply debate is not a suitable or sufficient opportunity since this issue requires the full attention of the entire Assembly. Replies and responses to the Speech from the Throne also do not provide the kind of opportunity for a focused debate on this single issue. I still believe it's an urgent issue to be debated immediately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The chair has heard three speakers with respect to this matter. If there's a requirement to have more, so be it, but the chair is quite prepared to rule on this matter. Any hon. member insist that they want to participate?

Standing Order 30 is rather clear. We've had discussion with respect to Standing Order 30 before, and the Standing Order 30 application is one where the chair may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate, not the subject but the urgency of the debate, and then rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

First of all, I'd like to confirm that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has given proper notice of his intention to bring a motion under Standing Order 30. The hon. member fulfilled the requirement of section 30(1) by providing at least two hours' written notice to the Speaker's office. This arrived at 10:42 this morning. The chair also confirms that the subject matter was provided at that time, so there was opportunity between 10:42 and the hearing of these arguments now to do a little bit of research with respect to this and to consult precedent as well.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed is to be put to the Assembly, the chair must determine whether the motion fulfills the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

The member's proposed motion states: be it resolved that the Assembly adjourn its ordinary business to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the urgent need for the Premier or the Minister of Education on his behalf to protect the educational needs of students in Parkland county and to foster goodwill between teachers, parents, students, and the school board by appointing a special mediator to help resolve the current Parkland school division labour dispute.

The chair has noted on several occasions in the past – and hon. members alluded to them too – that the relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic of emergency debates are Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 to 398 and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589.

On an important technical note the chair notes that the wording of the hon. member's application appears to propose a decision of the Assembly; that is, to appoint a special mediator. That would run afoul of Standing Order 30(6). Standing Order 30(6) says, "An emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly."

As well, the chair would note that although this is a serious matter, the chair's understanding by checking the calendar is that this event has now been transpiring since February 16, 2007. The chair is not aware as to why this is a genuine emergency today but not yesterday or the day before or last Thursday.

The chair has reviewed these references closely in considering this request for leave and must emphasize once again to all members that to meet the requirements of urgency, there must not – not – be another opportunity for members of the Assembly to discuss this matter. Question period is one of those areas that's available to members.

To conclude, the chair does not want to detract from the importance of the issue, but the chair is of the view that there will be other opportunities afforded to the members to discuss this matter, and therefore the request for leave is not in order.

 Second Reading
 Bill 4
 Child Care Licensing Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act.

This new act is based on what we heard during two years of consultation with parents, child care operators, and other interested Albertans. Child care facilities are currently licensed under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. This act covers all facilities, including those for adults and children, and being more than 20 years old, it needs to be updated. Rather than amending outdated legislation, we are proposing legislation that is designed specifically for Alberta children. The Social Care Facilities Licensing Act licenses programs based on the state of a facility, not on the quality of the program, but we know that it's the programs and the people providing the care that ensure the best outcomes for children, not the facilities.

Mr. Speaker, this new legislation gives us a new way of looking at child care. It's an innovative piece of legislation that builds on our government's commitment to continue to support and create quality child care programs and will help respond to the child care needs of today's families. If passed, the Child Care Licensing Act would focus on licensing based more on the program than the facility, encourage innovative approaches to create new child care programs while placing a priority on the safety of children. It would enable the creation of new licensing categories, one being new group family day care, where two adults can care for seven to 10 children in approved private homes. This act would allow operators to make better use of the spaces they already have. For example, under the current act operators licensed to provide out of school care have their spaces sitting empty when the children are in school and do not have the ability to move preschool children into those spaces. Under the new legislation operators will have the flexibility to use this space for any child.

This act will reward excellence. Operators who consistently demonstrate quality programming will receive multiyear licences, which would mean less time doing paperwork and more time caring for the children. As well, this act provides for more effective monitoring to ensure that operators comply with the act.

It's time for Alberta's parents and child care providers to have legislation that ensures that the children we're responsible for have the best start in life. This legislation provides the framework that we need. I'd ask all members to support this very important piece of legislation. Your support will demonstrate our government's commitment to building a quality child care system that will most definitely lead to better outcomes for children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to talk about Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act, and I would like to thank the minister for sharing information with me beforehand through a staff member.

Countless Alberta families can't find or can't afford the child care they need. This situation is hurting Alberta's families, and it's hurting Alberta's economy. As I travel across the province, I hear the same concerns: not enough spaces, not enough staff. So I'm glad that this bill is an effort to look at licensing along with the quality of programs.

The years 2000 to 2005 saw the federal, provincial, and territorial governments reach consensus that the early years of life are critical to children's development and future well-being. These same governments also recognized that quality early learning and child care programs play an important role in promoting the social, emotional, physical, and cognitive development of young children and agreed to work together to improve access to such programs. They set forth objectives to promote early childhood development so that children would to their fullest potential be physically and emotionally healthy, safe, and secure, socially engaged and responsible, and ready to learn upon school entry.

In 2005 bilateral agreements, agreements in principle between provinces and the government of Canada, further outlined principles for the development of early learning and child care, including quality: regulated to keep children safe and ensure that they are cared for by professionally qualified child development staff. Universally inclusive: open to the whole range of children regardless of their family's income, children's ability, or culture. Accessible: early learning and child care programs are broadly available to children, and the cost is affordable for parents. Developmental: programs that include both care and developmental learning components.

In recognizing that quality early learning and child care experiences contribute to healthy child development, these governments have taken on a variety of roles that extend beyond ensuring that children in licensed early learning and child care programs are kept safe from harm. Placing the licensing process within this broader policy framework of healthy outcomes for children has expanded the role of licensing beyond keeping children safe to a shared responsibility to enrich programs for children. Licensing is a very complex process, and it includes the roles of investigation, regulation, and enhancement.

This Child Care Licensing Act has been developed to work independent of the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, which is outdated, refers primarily to conditions, and addresses many different ages, services, et cetera. So I am delighted to see the clarity and the concentration on the individuals that are involved in child care only.

This act will do the following. It'll remove criteria of a facility and instead license programs based on content, developmental appropriateness, et cetera, while still retaining some facility requirements. It will enable the minister to create licensing categories outside of what currently exists – centre, nursery school, et cetera – to enable greater flexibility and meet local and specialized needs. It will ensure that parents are well informed and involved in their child's care by requiring the posting of compliance orders.

I see this act as an empowering one. I look at the potential outcomes. I think this child care specific legislation will provide a stand-alone document relating to child care outside of the previous legislation. This provides greater clarity and focus, given that child care was previously licensed under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, which covered a wide range of services like long-term care, emergency housing, and child care centres. It will also open up the definition of child care, which was previously restrictive.

I like the fact that there's going to be reduced bureaucracy here because this bill will extend the length of licences for centres who have earned a good record of services, and that will result in a reduction of the level of administrative work needed by the centre and also, of course, reduce work at the provincial level.

The clear monitoring and enforcement powers clarify the process that the director can engage in to ensure the quality and safety of programming while also setting out the steps by which the director can encourage compliance and, finally, cancel a licence.

I like the fact that we have a stable appeals process now. It's going to move away from the appointment of ad hoc committees and instead create the standing committee to hear all appeals. This will cut down on the delay time, which I've heard a lot about in the past, between filing an appeal and appointing a panel and would also allow members to develop some expertise within the field in the appeals process.

So this bill is essentially a good step. The previous act was outdated and not child care specific. This legislation is clearly designed to remedy some of those failings. The bill also clarifies the role of the director and provides more stability to the appeals process. Stakeholder feedback has been generally positive, with some requests for greater clarity.

I'd like to look at the elements of the bill; first of all, the licensing. In order to be licensed, centres must conform to existing acts and regulations: the Safety Codes Act, the Public Health Act, child care regulations, the building standards act, and municipal zoning.

The extended timelines for centres in good standing is a good step. This will eliminate the administrative burden to centres with a good record of practice and also the department. It is important that with this increased time scale there will be monitoring to ensure that standards remain high. In regard to monitoring, the act is quite clear on what rights the director has to monitor child care programs, and it seems as though there are solid provisions to ensure access even if it's originally denied by the owner or staff member. One thing that I am concerned about is the fact that the level of monitoring is not mentioned here.

Enforcement is another concern that we have. Something that I've heard at various places in the province is that they feel that the licensing act doesn't have enough bite in it. This enforcement will provide a variety of steps to achieve compliance, and I understand that this includes probation, temporary suspension, and ultimately cancellation of a licence if needed.

The appeals process that's included here is clear. I like that it's going to have a permanent appeal committee where there will be the opportunity to develop some expertise and to reduce some of the delays.

My areas of concern are that although the bill clearly lays out how monitoring will take place, it doesn't make clear how often or how extensive this monitoring will be. In order to be effective and ensure compliance, it is essential that child care centres in all regions of Canada are monitored regularly. This is particularly important given that the bill also increases the length of licensing for providers with a good record.

As I look at the discussion guide entitled Toward a Child Care Act for Alberta, it proposed to include a provision about parental involvement through the creation of a parental advisory committee or a provincial child care advisory council. I'm wondering if the minister can explain why these are not included in this act. I can't see this in Bill 4.

Enforcement. There are two parts here. While enforcement is essential to protect the safety of children in child care, many child care providers with good intentions inadvertently break regulations. Many providers feel that they are not given time to either remedy problems that they were not initially aware of or to explain the circumstances that caused noncompliance, leading to enforcements that mar an otherwise positive record. It's not clear that this bill accommodates these concerns, yet on the other hand I've had people express a concern for the need for real teeth in licensing enforcement.

Consultation. This bill will directly affect child care providers, and it is unclear how many individuals in the field were consulted in the writing of this act. Providers often have the best understanding of how legislation affects their programs, and they also know the limitations caused by staff shortages and lack of funding. Consultations would provide the government with valuable insights in the crafting of this bill. We should know what the process of creating it was.

The other thing is access. The government press release states that this legislation will increase access to child care spaces by opening up the classification of child care settings. While this might be true, the fundamental problems facing child care operators still exist; namely, lack of stable funding and problems with staff recruitment and retention. It is really important to realize that licensing alone will not solve the need for spaces and staff. I hope this bill is the beginning of addressing the crucial needs for child care spaces in this province.

Looking at the appeals process, I want to commend you on the fact that it is very clear. The stakeholders are telling me that they can understand it, and they're not expressing any concerns in regard to appeals.

I do want to take a look, though, at investigation respecting unlicensed child care programs. It says that if the director has probable grounds to believe that child care is being provided without a licence, he or she can inspect the facility under the same terms as a licensed facility, including the ability to get a court order in the case of a refusal by the provider. The director can issue an order, including a stop order, requiring the provider to stop offering the child care program. This order can be appealed. I really want to commend you on including this because I have had concerns expressed to me about facilities in my own constituency that aren't licensed and have far more than seven children.

So when I look at the whole thing, I want to say that this is essentially a good step. It was a long time coming. I congratulate you on getting it here today. There are few fields where high quality and enforced safety standards are as important as they are in child care. When parents bring their children to a child care centre, they expect that they will be safe, happy, and well cared for. This legislation will provide some positive measures to ensure that that happens.

It's one thing to set standards and quite another to provide the support to ensure that they are feasible. Child care providers are struggling with critical staff shortages, high turnover, and lack of predictable government infrastructure funding. We need to address those concerns too.

I am pleased that this government is taking some action on child care, and I sincerely hope they will keep up the momentum by increasing funding in the upcoming budget. We are facing a critical shortage of child care spaces in this province, and this shortage is negatively affecting Alberta's children, families, and economy.

Mr. Speaker, if there are no more speakers, I ask you to call the question for second reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has advised the chair that he'd like to participate.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to rise and speak to Bill 4, Child Care Licensing Act. This bill would provide a stand-alone document relating to child care outside of the previous legislation. This provides greater clarity and a clear focus given that child care was previously licensed under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, which covered a wide range of services like long-term care, emergencies, housing, child care centres. It will also open up the definition of child care, which was previously restricted.

Reduced bureaucracy. Mr. Speaker, this bill would extend the length of licences for centres with a good record of services, reducing the level of administrative work needed by the centre and also reducing work at the provincial level.

Clear monitoring and enforcement powers. This legislation clarifies the monitoring and enforcement process that the director can engage in to ensure the quality and safety of programming while also setting out the steps by which the director can encourage compliance and, finally, cancel a licence. This bill also would move away from the appointment and ad hoc committees and instead create a standing committee to hear all appeals. I'm sure that this would cut down on the delay time between filing an appeal and appointing a panel and would also allow members to develop some expertise within the field and appeal process.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, has, I think, five areas of concern: monitoring, parental involvement, enforcement, consultation, and access. Monitoring. Although the bill clearly lays out how monitoring will take place, it does not make clear how often and how extensive this monitoring will be. In order to be effective and ensure compliance, it is essential that child care centres in all regions of Canada are monitored regularly. This is particularly important given that the bill also increases the length of licensing for providers with a good record.

The second one, parental involvement. The discussion guide entitled Toward a Child Care Act for Alberta proposed to include a provision about parental involvement through the creation of a parental advisory committee or a provincial child care advisory council. Can the minister explain why these are not included in this act?

Enforcement. While enforcement is essential to protect the safety and protection of the children in child care particularly, many child care providers with good intentions inadvertently break regulations. Many providers feel that they are not given time to either remedy problems that they were not initially aware of or explain the circumstances that caused noncompliance, leading to enforcements that mar an otherwise positive record. It's not clear that this bill accommodates these concerns.

Consultation. This bill will directly affect child care providers, and it's unclear how many individuals in the field were consulted in the writing of this act. Providers often have the best understanding of how legislation affects their programs and also how the limitations caused staff shortages and lack of funding. Consultations would provide the government with valuable insights in the crafting of this bill, and we should know what the process of creating it was.

Access. The government press release states that this legislation will increase access to child care spaces by opening up the classification of child care settings. While this might be true, the fundamental problems facing child care operators still exists; namely, lack of stable funding and problems with staff recruitment and retention.

Mr. Speaker, this is essentially a good step that was a long time coming. There are few fields where high quality and enforced safety standards are as important as they are in child care. When parents bring their children to a child care centre, they expect that they will be safe, happy, and well cared for. This legislation will provide some positive measures to ensure that that happens.

It is one thing to set standards and quite another thing to provide the support to ensure that they are feasible. Child care providers are struggling with critical staff shortages, high turnover, and lack of predictable government infrastructure funding.

I'm pleased that the government is taking some action on child care, and I sincerely hope they will keep up the momentum by increasing funding in the coming budget. We are facing critical shortages of child care spaces in this province, and these shortages are negatively affecting Alberta's children, families, and economy.

I definitely will support this bill, sir. Thank you.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this important piece of legislation, Bill 4, Child Care Licensing Act. The care of children when they're very young is extremely critical to their growth in later years. It's critical in terms of their personal growth, their development as persons, and also in terms of their ability to do well in school and community and in society in general as they move toward adulthood through their years of schooling and growth.

So this bill, Mr. Speaker, is very timely. I want to note at the beginning that I was very pleased that the minister made sure that the opposition parties were fully briefed on the bill. On our behalf I want to thank the minister for the briefing that we received from one of her staff. The briefing was thorough. It was quite a good exchange of information and ideas. When I look at it, the preamble gives me some hope. The very first statement of the preamble says, "Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes the importance of ensuring the safety, well-being and development of children receiving child care."

Mr. Speaker, refocusing child care services to children's early development is a positive step forward, a step in the right direction, and I want to express our support for this change in direction and emphasis. It's a bill which is a fairly substantive rewrite of the terms and conditions under which daycare facilities are monitored, licensed, and run. This is obviously not an amendment to an existing bill but a new act that substantially overhauls the regulatory framework by shifting focus from the facilities, which was the focus under the social care facilities act, under which the child care facilities operated, to the programming under this current bill. This refocusing on the quality of the program and laying out clearly the requirements and expectations with respect to the quality of the program would form, I hope, a critical part of this act and the regulations that follow from it.

Talking about regulations, certainly during the briefing I asked a question about whether or not we the Legislature will have some role in the drafting and the development of the regulations. It certainly is my expectation that we'll be involved in the regulations of many of these bills, including this one. Although there's a fair bit of detail, it still is sort of framework legislation, and the regulations matter a great deal about how, in fact, this bill translates into actual policy changes and the substance of those policies. So I would hope that the minister will comment on the role that this House and certainly members on this side of the House will have in the development and approval of the regulations related to this bill. We're given the understanding that there may be a role for us to work with the minister and her office during the development of the regulations, so I'm looking forward to seeing that happen.

The previous emphasis, as I said, Mr. Speaker, was on facilities rather than programming. The intent of Bill 4, to completely revise the regulatory framework but grandfather the facilities recommendations and make child care programming the essential core of the bill, is an important change. The developmental needs of children will become, I think, the integral part of assessing the integrity of programs and programming. The key importance of the bill, therefore, includes regulation-making authority over all daycare facilities, enabling new categories of childcare services to be created, including some innovative programs that may be created, administrative streamlining that allows for multiyear licensing of facilities. I have some questions on this. The first licensing will be for one year, but the renewal, I think, would be for a three-year period. As we move into the next stages of the debate on the bill, we'll have perhaps some further questions on that part of the bill and if necessary will bring forward amendments that reflect our concerns with respect to the extension of the licensing to a three-year period following the first year of licensing.

Inspection and monitoring with a range of prescribed actions is good.

A permanent appeal board rather than an ad hoc one under the previous act. I think that's also a positive feature of this bill, that we have a well-established panel, appeal board, which will be able to address appeals coming to the department from either the operators or from others concerned with the quality of daycare in the province.

Mr. Speaker, while this bill is a step forward, we are concerned about both the quality of daycare services presently available in our province and the shortage of spaces. In question period I tried to draw the attention of the House to serious shortages in the availability of spaces for quality daycare in the province. As we move to tighten the regulations with respect to licensing, monitoring, and making sure that the bill and the legislation and the regulations are enforced, enforcement and monitoring, I think I want to make sure that we don't ignore the issue of the quality of daycare that's presently available and the shortage of spaces. Both of these, the shortage of spaces and the licensing, are inextricably related issues, so the debate on this bill should provide us with an opportunity to address the question of availability of spaces as well as the question with regard to the quality of services available to families with young children.

It certainly begs the question of resources with respect to both enforcement and monitoring. While the intentions stated in the legislation with respect to monitoring and enforcement are very clear, certainly the question of availability of resources to do so on a regular basis and in a thorough manner remains an open question. Unless the resources are available, the mere commitment to monitoring and enforcement will not deliver the goods that parents in this province and members of the Assembly hope will be delivered with respect to the improvement of the quality of care and the availability of spaces in the child care area.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the licensing requirements and the focus on programming will encourage more daycare facilities to seek licensing. There are 545 child care facilities that are eligible for accreditation. There are only about 154 that have the accreditation at present. Clearly, I think there's a long way to go between the number of children who go to accredited facilities and the total number of facilities available and children going there. I wonder if the minister would have some information on the numbers of children. Of the total number who go to daycare, what percentage go to the nonaccredited daycare facilities, either in terms of percentages or in terms of gross numbers? That will help us have some idea about the amount of work that's before us that needs to be done. It's my hope that in the not very long future we will have all children who use daycare services go to fully accredited daycare centres because it is that accreditation that will underwrite or guarantee, if you wish, the quality of the daycare services that the children receive and deserve to receive.

I've indicated, Mr. Speaker, that we will be in principle supporting this bill. On the details of the bill we'll have an opportunity when the bill moves to the committee stage to seek any amendments or changes that we deem are necessary and believe will improve the bill even more than the improvements that it promises now.

Mr. Speaker, with these brief remarks I want to conclude my observations in second reading on Bill 4 and look forward to further debate on it as we move through the next stages. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, shall I call on the hon. minister to close the debate, or are there additional members?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, do you choose to close the debate, or should I call the question?

Ms Tarchuk: You can call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Interim Supply Estimates 2007-08
Offices of the Legislative Assembly and Government

The Deputy Chair: We continue from where we left off yesterday. I have no lists in front of me.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to participate very briefly in the discussion on the interim supply amounts for 2007-2008. I'd call it a discussion because it really isn't a debate in what I see as the traditional sense of the word. In order to debate anything, I think both sides need to come armed with all the information that is available, and the end result of the debate might actually be in doubt. We don't have either of those situations here right now. We're dealing here with only three pages of single line item numbers totalling a somewhat mind-boggling $10 million.

An Hon. Member: Billion.

Mr. Tougas: Ten billion. Oh, it's even more mind-boggling, then. Sorry.

How these numbers are arrived at and where all this money is going to be spent, specifically, remains pretty much of a mystery. Now, this is my second day of being in the Chamber for interim supply, which leads me to believe that I'm being punished by my caucus whip for some perceived slight. Among the more interesting comments to come from yesterday's discussion was a contribution from the Member for Calgary-Bow, and I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for making a contribution to the discourse of this House. We don't hear enough from backbench government MLAs, and any contribution is appreciated, so thank you very much.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Bow asked a very interesting question and one that came to my mind too. In essence, if I may paraphrase, she asked if the numbers contained in the interim supply document represented more than we should spend, or is it not enough? That's a very good question and obviously one that is impossible to answer based on the information contained in this document. The Government House Leader also made some interesting comments in response to the question from the Member for Calgary-Bow that lead me to believe that there is hope for improvement in the budgeting process, particularly in the new spirit of co-operation in the House.

Now, I'm not an accountant or a mathematician, but surely there has to be a better way to budget than the process we are participating in today. I believe that the Government House Leader was suggesting that there may be changes in the way budgets are produced and debated coming up in the near future, and as I look at these columns of numbers with unfathomable price tags, I certainly hope that in the future there will be a more realistic and reasonable way to participate in the budget debate.

The current process seems to be: don't worry; be happy; trust us. Well, I'm a trusting guy, but surely there's a better way to produce budgets and debate them than the system we're in right now. For instance, we can't realistically debate an amount of $728 million for Advanced Education and Technology. Now, that's a staggering amount of money, but it's not even the highest total we have to vote on. We have $3.6 billion – got it right this time – for health care, $1.2 billion for education, and $972 million for infrastructure. What we have here are a little more than numbers on a page with nothing to support the rationale for the numbers.

I would hope, for instance, that the advanced education money will be used to support some of the outstanding plans and projects I've heard about in my travels across the province. The University of Calgary, for instance, has great plans for the future, and the University of Alberta has a continuing goal of becoming a world-class university. That's clearly going to take a lot of government involvement. When I was at SAIT a few weeks ago, I heard a lot about their trades and technology centre, which is a major project for SAIT that they really want to get moving on, and they actually have $30 million in commitments from industry just waiting for the government go-ahead.

So these are the kind of things that are perhaps hidden in this document, perhaps not. Who knows, really, what any of these numbers mean? I could go on, but I won't. I promised I'd be short, and I am. I would leave that up to some of my other colleagues to expand on some of this. I would just like to repeat, though, that I believe there must be a better way to debate budget matters that serves the greater interest of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any minister wish to respond?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to have an opportunity to participate in interim supply debate this afternoon. Certainly, one can look at this as just an advance, but in reality there's a lot more to it than that. You look at the departments, and you realize that this money is necessary to carry on the day-to-day business of government.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark stated, it's a substantial sum of money. Hopefully, it is a great deal more than one-third of the government's annual budget. Certainly, the hon. President of the Treasury Board, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, is going to keep spending under control. I was sitting here watching him and the Minister of Finance and wondering what goes on at Treasury Board over there when they discuss what's going to be spent, where it's going to be spent, and in what time frame. I hope it doesn't come down to an arm wrestle to see who is going to get what money, where. I certainly hope that's not how it's done, and other hon. members are assuring me that's not how it's done, so that's comforting.

When we look at this government and its past expenditures, I am pleased to see that the size of the government shrank. The Premier is trying to give the perception that this is a new government. It's a stretch because the Premier, as we know, had senior portfolios in the previous government for the last number of years, going back 10 years, and before that he was, of course, a member of the Deep Six. The hon. President of the Treasury Board certainly wasn't a member of the Deep Six. He would still have been in high school.

Now, the Premier is trying to distance himself from past practices of this government, and I can see from a political perspective why that would want to be done. The past government has been spending a lot of money in questionable ways, and one way was to expand the size of government. The Premier did the right thing by putting the cabinet on a diet, and it shrank in size. Now, how much money the RAGE portfolio cost us, and how much money other portfolios cost us I can only imagine, but the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster knows full well that there's only one taxpayer.

When we look at the expenditure here, we look at support for the Legislative Assembly, for the Auditor General's office, for the Ombudsman, for the Chief Electoral Officer – there's $2,100,000 for the Chief Electoral Officer – the Ethics Commissioner, and I want to get to that in a minute hopefully, and the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, Advanced Education, Agriculture and Food, Children's Services, and Education.

We're going to allocate $1.2 billion for education. Now, I'm going to use this as an example, Mr. Chairman. I certainly hope those days are over. Last fall in the middle of this land of plenty there were neighborhoods in central Edmonton, five schools in the Edmonton public school district, that did not have $200,000 to fund a program that allowed support for children at risk the ages of three and four before they entered the kindergarten system so that they could have help to adjust when they went into kindergarten and through the elementary school system. These are children who for one reason or another aren't getting that support in the family home.

So we look at programs like this, and we don't have money to fund them. This was in September of 2006. I was alerted to this situation, and I didn't know what to do. I made some requests, and they were ignored. I thought: surely with the amount of money that we're spending in this province, we can find a little bit of money to support this much-needed program in the central neighborhoods of the city.

I looked through the public accounts, and I was seeing where we were giving grants, Mr. Chairman, to various golf courses across the province. Grants. I looked on the Internet at some of these golf courses. They may be perceived as public courses, but a guy has got to buy a membership in some of those. The memberships are various prices, and sometimes you can sell the membership. Some of these golf courses were getting grants on an annual basis for $125,000. Some of them were using this money for irrigation systems. Some of them were using it for new golf carts, for improvements to the greens. Some of them were even using this money to reduce their debt. I did a little bit more research and added this up, and you know these grants were well in excess of a million dollars. I couldn't understand why young schoolchildren in central Edmonton could have so little, yet this government had so much for golf courses.

I'm a guy that's trying to learn how to play golf.

An Hon. Member: You think this is frustrating?

Mr. MacDonald: If you think politics is frustrating, you should try golf. I would certainly agree with you. Some of the hon. members may think I'm to the right in here, some of them may think I'm to the left, and some of them may think I'm straight down the middle, but with my golf I'm all over the place.

I thought it was quite ironic that this was a priority of the government, that we would fund these golf courses through the grant system yet ignore these schoolchildren.

Now, at the same time that I was doing my research and writing the former Finance minister – and I must say publicly that I wish her well in her retirement. I hope she has a long and healthy retirement many years into the future with her husband and her family because she certainly served this province well, and in my opinion she worked hard in the time that she was a member of the Executive Council.

I decided I would write the government a letter in regard to these grants, and the issue sort of resolved itself. There was a bit of money provided. I don't think a person should have to embarrass the government into providing for children. I don't think that is normal. But at the same time that I was doing my calculations on the golf course, the Alberta investment management branch of the Department of Finance was entertaining themselves at the Fairmont Hotel Macdonald, the same period of time, September. Now, this is a branch of Alberta Finance that we're looking at in a bill that was introduced yesterday, I believe, to turn it into a Crown corporation.

This is, as I understand it, the branch of the Department of Finance which looks after investing all our money, whether it's in the heritage savings trust fund or whether it is in various pension funds. I'm told that in total they look after close to $60 billion worth of assets if I'm correct. They're busy people. I know that the individuals on the management team that I have met as a representative from our side of the House on the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee seem to work hard, and they've got the best interests of the province at heart. They seem to be doing a good job with the heritage savings trust fund. Could they do better? Well, we could all do better. But they seem to do a fairly good job.

They manage a lot of assets. I'm curious as to the practices of this. In particular, we're going to be shining the flashlight on this Alberta investment management company as we discuss whether it should be a Crown corporation or not, a separate Crown corporation, as I understand it from the discussions we had at the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee meeting. There's a bill. Mr. Chairman, I just can't find the Order Paper at this time.

They met at the same time, again, that these children and their parents still don't know whether or not the program is going to be funded in these inner-city schools for early childhood intervention. They met, and they spent a thousand dollars on a fine meal at the Hotel Macdonald. Now, there were 12 people there, I assume, because they all had a lemon chicken dinner. Each one of these lemon chicken dinners cost $42, for a total of $504. They had to rent the room to eat all this stuff in because they couldn't be I guess seen in public. They had to have a private room. They had two bottles of red wine, three bottles of white wine. These bottles cost 33 bucks each. They had a couple of juices, soft drinks. I think there's a house wine – I'm not sure – on this bill. They had one Chivas Regal. They had two one-ounce martinis. Interestingly enough, they didn't have any dessert.

An Hon. Member: Because they were full.

Mr. MacDonald: They must have been full.

The total cost of this was a thousand dollars. Now, that's fine. People are entitled to, you know, a good meal. I enjoy one as well as the next person. But while we're telling one group that we can't help them out, this seems to be a land of plenty for others.

My question in regard to the interim supply is: when are we making our financial decisions? Hopefully, it's before we gather at the Hotel Macdonald because I don't think that I would be satisfied with investment decisions that were made in that room at that time. People's judgment may or may not have been impaired. I don't know. But I don't think it is appropriate to be spending the tax dollars that way. It's going to be claimed as a business expense, so I can only assume that it was business. This is how business as usual used to be done with this government, and I'm really hoping that there's an improvement and that these days are behind us. Time will tell, but I hope these days are behind us.

Now, this is an example, it's an illustration of two stories, one of plenty and one of need, probably within 20 blocks of one another in the city, and it is an illustration of just how far we've gone in forgetting what our purpose is here. These good folks in the Alberta investment management team certainly have to look after our assets, and they certainly have to make sure that our pension funds are invested in a timely and prudent fashion. I'm not saying that. But what gives with this sort of behaviour? It's the taxpayers that are footing the bill here. All I can say is that hopefully they were not there to make any business decisions in regard to the investments that are under their watchful eye.

I would urge the government at this time to please compare the lifestyle of those who are in the Hotel Macdonald, in the private chamber, having their dinner – their lemon chicken and their white wine and red wine and all the trimmings – and the fact that just 20 blocks away, 25 blocks away maximum, there are families that wouldn't have a thousand dollars in a quarter to spend on groceries let alone in one 40-minute period in a fancy hotel. Please don't forget that we have to look after those people.

We have to make sure that the children are given every opportunity to go through the public education system with confidence from the day they enter the door until the day, hopefully, that they graduate and go on to junior high and then go on and graduate from high school, that the day that they go in the doors of those public schools they're not afraid, that they're not afraid to learn, that they're not afraid to speak up because they will be ashamed that they know less than the next guy or the person sitting on the other side. Please – please – don't forget about those people.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I would like to say that as this entire budget process unfolds and as this money that we're talking about in interim supply gets to the programs and services that it funds, it will be spent wisely, it will be spent prudently, and we will never forget in this Chamber exactly who we're here to serve and who we're here to try to help out.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: I just want to go back to the start of the hon. Member for Edmonton–Gold Bar's speech where he talked about our new leader trying to distance himself from government. I can tell you that this new Premier has no reason to distance himself from government. As a matter of fact, no one in this Assembly on this side of the House or over there has any reason to distance himself from a government who has created a provincial economy that has allowed us to build and to develop and to grow a province that over a hundred thousand people a year want to move to. You know, yes, we can have discussions; there are growing pains.

But let's just back up and see why this new Premier doesn't have to distance himself. He worked all of his life in his community and started as reeve of Lamont county, worked on the health unit board in Vegreville and started to develop a reputation then for the nickname he has now: Honest Ed. He committed in times when raising a young family and trying to farm – and I'm sure the hon. members across and behind know how difficult it was through the years to farm – and was always compassionate, considerate of his neighbours, building a fine family.

I'm very proud to be one of the guys that eventually talked this man into running for office as an MLA. He challenged an incumbent gentleman and won. He beat Mr. Fox out in Vegreville. He grew up under the shadow of Don Mazankowski, who taught all of us in that area that he served that our reputations are what we've got, and that delivering to the people the honest goods is the most important thing you can do, and representing the people in that way is what makes you a true statesman. To this day we all know that the Hon. Don Mazankowski is still accepted in any office in Ottawa he goes to. I can assure you that long after our leader today decides that he no longer wants to spend time in this facility, he will still be regarded amongst the other provincial leaders and in the offices of this building as a truly decent man.

When they came to government and formed the group that they called the Deep Six, they brought an ideal to the back that said: "We need to watch ourselves. We need to be ever vigilant about money."

This has been one of the most compassionate Conservative governments that we've got. Why? It's because we've been able to afford that luxury. It's hard to believe some of the circumstances that some hon. members in this Chamber come from, of what a place of misery and woe we have here in this province. Yet you will recall back to the early '90s that we sat on par with British Columbia: 20-some billion dollars in debt, deficits of $3 billion or $4 billion a year. This Premier now along with members of his government said: we have to make some tough choices so that our children's future is in their hands. Through all of the demonstrations and all of the stuff that went on, they were part of a group that stuck to their guns. Many of those members are still here. They stuck to their guns, and they paid off the debt that we owed. They balanced our books, and they reinvested in Alberta. The hon. member will even know how much money we've used from our heritage fund to reinvest into Albertans, and still it's at 16-some billion dollars, among other funds. It's an enormously successful government that's been here over 35 years now.

I think it's a terrible situation that the hon. opposition finds themselves in. In fact, if they have to stick to the real stories out there instead of newspaper clips that are mostly irrelevant, I'm not sure what they're going to ask here except: "How did you guys do it? How did you take a province and turn it into the leading place of the 21st century?" As I travel, I continually find people asking: "How did you do it? How did you change the mindset of people that we don't have to be in debt to be happy, that we can encourage business to invest and develop economies, where we can develop innovative and elaborate technological advances in a little province, around 2 million people at the time when they had to start and 3.4 million now?"

The Premier was part of that. His position in there was always one of including new members into the caucus, teaching them the ways the House worked, teaching them the committee structure, where to go, how to get things done for their constituency, and always in cabinet a careful and thoughtful person who chose to think things through, find out the information around the discussion, and make good decisions. He is still around Alberta regarded as one of the best ag ministers this province ever had. Many of the programs that came in under his leadership are looked at by other provinces as some of the finest tools there are today to deliver services to our farmers.

In transportation and infrastructure: while all of the government's spending was under stress, who did we take from? The Premier said: "Look, I'll do what I can. We need to continue to fund health and education as much as we can, for sure. So we'll cut back. We'll get innovative. We'll do better things." And he created some abilities in his department to deliver things when most people would have just thrown up their hands and said: well, if I can't have all the money, I can't do it. Not our Premier.

He was representing us in international and intergovernmental affairs until he did the very honourable thing and stepped out of cabinet. One of the most heart-wrenching days that he had was worrying about his staff, people that had been incredibly loyal to him for many, many years. I know that what troubled him more than any other thing was: what about them and their families?

This guy has lived a life of commitment, of compassion, of leadership within our caucus and now at the head of our caucus. For the hon. member to suggest in any way that somehow this Premier would either want or need to distance himself from what he's done in this government or what he's done in his lifetime before is just nonsensical. With that attitude I can assure you he will be very surprised when he goes to the polls and the people of Alberta say: not only do we respect that, it's 150 years since any politician earned the moniker "honest" anything. You have to go back to Abe Lincoln to get to the point that Albertans consider our new Premier now, and the polls show it.

So, yes, it's a different style of leadership. Yes, he's restructured government to become more efficient, but he never said to us: well, do it with less people. He said: "Look at what will be the best delivery model to serve Albertans." You know what? If it takes more people, then we'll get them. If it takes getting out of each other's way to deliver programs, we'll do it. If it takes more money, thanks to his leadership, we've got it. If it takes co-operation and innovation, he's the guy that invented the words.

Does he need to apologize in any way or to distance himself? Not a chance. I think the fact that he's there now, met a heck of a lot of people in this province – many of us recognize and support completely what he's done and look forward to what he's going to do.

Mr. Boutilier: Last night I had the pleasure of attending with the Premier and the Lieutenant Governor the University of Alberta, of course, a fine institution, where it was the business leader of the year. The leader actually was an immigrant that during his time had been discriminated against. In fact, he was awarded last night the business leader of the year with other names like the late Mr. Stollery, like Winspear. It was really interesting when the gentleman who received the award, Dominic D'Alessandro, who was the president of Manulife, started off with what made him successful over the last 50 years. Sitting beside the Premier, it was really quite interesting that this leader selected by the University of Alberta, in fact, talked about integrity, about transparency, and ultimately this leader was listening.

The Deputy Chair: Somebody's rising on a point of order?

Dr. Swann: Is this related to interim supply?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this chair has allowed people a wide latitude for participating in the debate, and if you want to raise some issues or want to participate in the debate, the chair will definitely recognize you. Right now the minister has the floor.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If I could specifically address the issue that when Mr. D'Alessandro spoke last night to the thousand to a standing ovation, he talked about integrity. When he spoke about it, he sounded exactly like our Premier in terms of the message and his vision of where he wants to see Alberta continue to go. I found it very reassuring last night that a business leader selected by the University of Alberta, a wonderful example, was in fact using the platform that our Premier stood for in this House since, by the way, back in the early '90s, and here he was last night. I said to the Premier: Premier, it sounds like the CEO actually has stolen your vision of what, in fact, is taking place here in this province today. I think it's reassuring to Albertans and to the faculty at the University of Alberta that we are without question on the right track, specifically when it comes to interim supply.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for giving me the opportunity to speak on interim supply. I think the government has requested about $10 billion more, which is, I think, more than one-third of the total budget, I hope, and it's a huge amount of money. Everybody who's elected sitting in this House knows, you know, when they go door-knocking and ask the people, they always advise them to spend money very wisely. I'm sure everybody sitting in this House understands that, and they will make sure that this huge amount of money, which is taxpayers' hard-earned money, is spent very wisely and prudently. This fund, the $10 billion, they are using, I think, for their operations from April to July, which is April, May June, July, only four months, and this is more than one-third of the budget.

I personally want to see this interim supply funding being spent wisely because I want to make sure that all the money the government spends this time is spent where the money is needed. I mean, my constituents keep complaining about the health care system in my area because there's a long waiting time, and there are shortages of doctors, and some people are worried that this government will sometime introduce privatization. There are lots of rumours. My point is, you know, that I'm not sure in this extra money whether this government is spending anything on health care, which is the top priority.

There are some other priorities in my constituency, like education.

Last week I talked to a group of students from the U of A, and they are still complaining about the high tuition fees. I mean, those are the priorities for the students. That's the real investment. I know that one of the speakers pointed out that the population already increased, so we need more money. Yes. I'm not against spending money on the programs. I just want to request again and again and again that we spend the money wisely on the top priorities. Health care and education are always their top priority.

Personally, in my riding there's lots of construction going on, thousands of new houses. They need a couple of new schools, recreational facilities, and libraries, and every time the government keeps on postponing the capital funds: not this year or the year after or the year after. The people are still complaining. I don't know whether this time they will use that money to build new schools in new areas like Edmonton-Ellerslie. This is a very big concern for us. Some schools that I visited need lots of renovations and are, you know, in bad shape. I have noticed that sometimes the teachers do some handyman's job and fix those problems because it's hard to find labour to do a small job. So we should not ignore those priorities.

The seniors, especially vulnerable people, are struggling. They don't get attention, especially when it's one-third of the total budget we are allocating today. I don't think it's fair if they don't get a fair share because they sacrificed their life, and it's about time we should look after our seniors as well.

In my area the road conditions are really, really bad.

I already mentioned that the hospital waiting time is nine and a half hours, and I've questioned it many times. I remember in 1990 in Mill Woods there was a big demonstration there; 50,000 people gathered there. They demonstrated against deep cuts in the health care system, and at that time the waiting time was only four hours in emergency. Nowadays it's nine and a half hours.

I don't think we are serious. I mean, every time I pick up any papers, the government is saying that they are honest, open, transparent, accountable, this or that. I think this is just talk, lip service. People are not interested in slogans. They want to see action, and that's missing.

Another important issue in my area is crime. Crime is a big issue. I mean, people are stealing cars. There are break-ins. The drug problem is there. Poverty is there. I want the government to at least consider those people because that's the top priority. The gap between rich and poor is increasing, and we should look at that. Before we spend $10 billion, we should at least – at least – give them fair consideration.

Can this ministry be accountable and responsible with this money? This is a big question mark. I think that the two ministers – they are talking to each other – are elected to come here and listen to the views. I'm talking especially about my constituents, and if somebody is not listening, I don't think it's right. Mr. Chairman, I request once again that everybody use this huge amount of money wisely and prudently.

Another question is: how would this government spend money to improve the lives of working Albertans? A slogan is good, but what are the details? Where's the plan? It looks very nice when we see the five top priorities in the throne speech. Yes, it looks very nice in the papers, but in reality people want to see the actions, which are missing. Some groups are left behind.

I mentioned poverty. How many people sitting here went to the Bissell Centre in Edmonton? There are other low-income people who are suffering badly, and they are looking at us. They elect us. They elect us to make sure their voice is heard here. If I'm talking, and most of the people are not listening, I mean, how would they get the message? I know that everything is in the record. I request again and again: spend the money wisely and prudently.

Another question is that lots of people are complaining about their utility bills, utility bills every time. Nobody bothers. Twenty, $30, $50, or $100 more, and they get the bill, and sometimes they see the hidden amount in the bills. I don't think anybody bothers why consumers paid so much hidden amounts of money every month. I think they sacrificed a lot since we had those deep cuts.

Previously there was a bill in regard to daycare centres. Daycare centres are a big issue. Lots of parents can't find daycare places. I want to make sure that at least some amount of money out of this over $10 billion – billion, not million – reaches the area, the sector where the money is needed, especially the long-term care centres. They have shortages of staff. They have less doctors, and you know, some people are even complaining about the services there.

Another thing I want to mention, Mr. Chairman, is that some people argue here that this government is really good and that the new Premier is honest. I have no doubt he must be honest; he must be hard working. But I'll just remind this House that this government spent maybe more than 93 per cent of the energy revenue in the last 27 years. Those ministers who are talking about the new Premier were part of this government sometime. Where were they?

I mean, I'm not talking about this year. This routine, this overbudgeting and asking for more and more money, keeps on going again and again and again and again, and this government doesn't change its habit. I remember that I talked about the same issue last year, again, $10 billion, where they are spending it, proper breakdown. Nobody knows.

Another issue on this interim supply that I want to mention is my own portfolio: Tourism, Parks, Recreation, and Culture. I mean, this sector has been ignored for decades, even during the Tory leadership contest. All the leadership contenders agreed that this sector, you know, the funding should be increased. Some said at least double, and one of the candidates said: if I become the Premier, I will increase this funding three times.

After the Tory election nobody talks, and I don't think we will find any increase in this very, very important sector. The minister is sitting there. I just want to remind him that when he sits in his caucus, at least he discuss how important art and culture and sports are for Edmonton. You know, tourism is an economic engine, and we should consider that sector as well.

As I said before, maybe we are lucky that every year we receive billions of dollars of surplus from oil and gas royalties. We should be thankful to God. But what are we doing? I mean, if we had less money, we would be in the red at this time. I think this is a very serious thing. If we have the money, we should utilize this money very wisely and spend money where the money is needed.

Finally, I want to mention the WCB. Some people are in hardship and they can't work. I remember that the PDD department in the last budget got only a 2 per cent raise, which was less than the inflation rate. I don't think it's fair for those people: less than the inflation rate. I mean, if some small family's, two kids and a single mother, earnings are, say, $900 and the rent is $700 to $800, how will they survive? Then we expect them to be good citizens.

Everybody is complaining about society changing. Okay. Society is, you know, taking a bad shape or whatever. We can't blame society if we don't look after every sector. There should be a balance. We should look after those people who are unfortunate as well, not only the tiny portion of the people who are earning a hundred thousand dollars, even a million dollars, every year. They are a very small percentage of the people. If we ignore them, I'm afraid that that will be really bad for all Albertans. If we want to see Alberta flourish, we have to have a balance between all sectors, all average people in Alberta.

Another thing that I want to mention is about this amount of money that this government will spend on increasing transparency, as they mention in their throne speech, or they are going to improve the democratic renewal. I know that they took some good initiatives in the beginning, but still it's a long way to go. Long way to go.

I would suggest that the government consider a fixed election date and maybe a citizens' assembly and give more money to all the opposition parties so that they can reach out to all Albertans. I mean, I can tell you that the resources of the opposition parties are very small. They can't even drop flyers all over Alberta because it costs over $300,000. If their budget is, say, $900,000 or $800,000, how can they afford to at least convey their message to Albertans? This is not a democracy.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to enter debate on interim supply estimates 2007-2008. The House is dealing with a very important item of business: $10 billion of expenditures for the next fiscal year that we'll be making a commitment to. Based on the document before us, it seems that there is no real, substantive basis on which to judge whether the money that's being requested here will be spent in a way that will benefit Albertans, all Albertans. There's no way to be sure that by voting for this, I as an MLA will be reflecting the interests and concerns of my own constituents properly because there's not enough information here.

This is a common problem. Every year we come to this point, and the government has to request interim supply in order to keep the big machine running while the Assembly waits for the opportunity to receive the official budget, which reveals every year whether or not the government is changing course, whether or not it's making changes in policies and, therefore, reflects budgetary commitments relative to those changes which will benefit Albertans in general and, particularly, Albertans in need.

We have seen over the last many years, for example, that the budgets that this government has been presenting have increasingly shifted the burdens of taxation over to the shoulders of the middle class. Families in the middle income bear the primary brunt of the changes in the taxation policies of this government. Secondly, we have also known over the years that it has been the consistent policy of this government to shift the burden of taxation away from high-income earners and from the corporate sector over to the shoulders of the vast majority of Albertans which fall in the middle-income category, as they say. So the so-called working Albertans increasingly shoulder the burdens of taxation.

When discussing revenue expenditures in the form of this interim supply estimates, I certainly ask myself how best to comment on this document, how best to and appropriately comment on each request made by each department. In the absence of any idea of where the government is going to go in terms of the policy – and this year in particular, Mr. Chairman, the context is somewhat more special. This is the first time that I'm facing a government which is trying to rebrand itself.

We have a new Premier, and the new Premier and his cabinet seem to have made a decision, obviously, to present themselves as a new government, an entirely new government, a government that's making some important departures from the 36 years of the government that this party in power has offered. It is a difficult task. Unless there are fundamental changes in philosophy, unless there are fundamental changes in this party's historical loyalties to particular special interests in this province, the interests of those special interests having been reflected in the policies and the budgetary decisions this government has made year after year after year, it's very difficult for Albertans to believe that there'll be a real change in direction.

That's the context: the attempt of this government in spite of its history, in spite of its legacy of policies and plans and budgetary commitments to rebrand itself. So we'll have to wait until next month sometime before we can see if there is, in fact, any evidence, any substantive evidence, indicating that the government is willing and is poised to make decisions on budget, make changes in policy that reflect the real interests of hard-working Alberta families.

In the meantime the government must run and the money must be there to pay for all kinds of commitments that a government like ours has. So when everything is said and done, I'm sure the House will be willing to risk one more time approving this interim supply in the hope that certainly the NDP opposition and this side of the House, in general, will find that the budget reflects changes which reflect the interests of the vast majority of working Albertans, people who are hard-working, people with families, that there'll be policies that make our communities both stronger, healthier, safer, and that there'll be family-friendly items in the budget.

The one case in terms of family friendliness of the policies of the government that comes to mind is the case of provision of child daycare services in this province. Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal of concern among parents of young children that they'll find it difficult to get good quality daycare for their children. There's a severe shortage and a growing shortage of licensed, good-quality, child daycare spaces across the province. Men and women as family members, as parents of young children, decide to pursue careers, and many of them do so voluntarily because we live in a very different world today where women as well as men seek to have occupations or professional aspirations. They want to take part in the labour market.

Women, in particular, have fought over the years to have barriers in their way removed, one by one, whether they're educational barriers, whether they're barriers related to wage discrimination and wage inequity for jobs that are comparable across occupations employing men and women. They, of course, have been fighting and facing barriers in terms of traditional definitions of roles of males and females.

So while they have been fighting a valiant battle and taking steps forward in seeking equal opportunity and equity in the workplace, they find that they continue to face barriers, such as those related to availability of quality daycare for their children, which prevent them from taking advantage of the opportunities that otherwise may be before them, particularly given the favourable conditions of the labour market. A lot more women in this province probably would be working if it were the case that they could be assured that their children will receive good quality daycare while they're at work.

Many other parents, of course, face the problem of working at times when their children come back from school, and there's no adequate set of services available to look after children in the after school hours when either one or both parents may be at work. We know that it's not possible for most employees in this province to determine when they work. It depends on the needs of the employer as to when they go to work. But schools open and close at certain times of the day. There is a growing need and established evidence of that need for after school daycare for children at least until they reach the age of roughly 12 years so that they can be expected to look after themselves even if their parents are at work.

There's a need to see changes in policy, in daycare, in family supports for families to make life easier, to make things happen for men and women who want to take advantage of their professional qualifications, occupational aspirations, their educational skills, and the talents that they have that they are willing to offer and invest in the economy in making the lives of all of us living in our communities better.

Mr. Chairman, there is a report here, before we move, with respect to the present state of family benefits as they relate to British Columbia and Alberta compared with some other international jurisdictions. A study just released earlier this month by the Institute for Research on Public Policy called Measuring Up: Family Benefits in British Columbia and Alberta in International Perspective, authored by Paul Kershaw, is a telling indictment of the daycare policies of the two provinces mentioned here, Alberta and B.C.

The comparisons are with some other OECD countries although these are provincial jurisdictions. Alberta and B.C. come at the bottom of the list in terms of the family support and the child care services that are provided in these provinces. This says a lot, Mr. Chairman, about where we need to go, what kind of changes we would hope the budget will reflect.

The priorities have to change in this province. The priorities have to change in many ways but certainly in terms of the provision of child daycare services. We need to improve the standards. We need to guarantee a good quality of child care. We need to make that service universally available to families and parents who ask for it, and we certainly want to make sure that young children at a very early age receive the kind of developmental experiences that will enrich their experience of growing up so that when they enter school and go through the educational system to the point where they are ready to enter the adult world and become citizens as well as earners and producers of goods that we all need, they will have become the best that they can be. The critical importance of the provision of child care with focuses on early childhood development cannot be overstated, Mr. Chairman. There are tons of studies that provide solid evidence that investment made in early years in the development of our children pays off manyfold in their lives and in the future of our communities and societies.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, other policy changes that I hope will be reflected in the upcoming budget – reading these numbers here, I can't tell whether or not we can expect that those changes have taken place. The budget certainly would show those. In the case of seniors, for example, you know, there have been representations made to this government and to all parties represented in this House that we have in this province a seniors' advocate. We know that the seniors face growing difficulties in long-term care centres, in nursing homes, those who live in their own homes finding it difficult to pay all of the bills that they have to pay living on fixed incomes, the waiting times and the quality of care that they have to accept when they go to our hospitals and medical centres.

So there has been a proposal made by seniors' organizations that this province establish a seniors' advocate independent of the government, independent of the ministry that is responsible for seniors' services, and that that seniors' advocate be directly accountable to this Assembly. The report that I received a couple of years ago was also, I think, distributed to other parties represented in the House. It's a proposal rather than a report. The proposal spells out in detail exactly how this can be accomplished and what the mandate of such an office should be and what will be the cost and what will be the benefits. It seems to me that the benefits that will accrue to the senior citizens of this province from the establishment of such an office and the funding of this office, the seniors' advocate office, far outweigh the costs that will be incurred. It's a very persuasive and compelling document. I'm not sure if we will see in the upcoming budget that this document has received the attention that it deserves to receive and, in fact, is adopted by government as part of its desire to change policies and rebrand itself.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, looking at the health care budget request here from the department of health. Again, the time has come in this province to abolish health care premiums altogether. It's a regressive tax. It's called a premium, but it's a tax. It's a tax that's paid by most Albertans. It's a tax that's paid at the same rate, the same absolute amount regardless of the capacity to pay. Those families who earn high incomes – $250,000, $300,000 – pay the same amount as those who earn $30,000, $35,000, $40,000 a year. So it's inequitable in the extreme.

It's a tax in the form of health care premiums that, therefore, should be abolished, must be abolished as early as possible to, again, reduce the inequity in the tax burden that middle-income families in particular face and experience from day to day thanks to the changes in the personal tax regime that has been introduced and has been in place in the province for years. We don't know from these estimates, from this request whether or not those changes are forthcoming.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, I can go on to talk about infrastructure and the crisis that this province is experiencing in terms of infrastructure deficit. It's a hidden debt in the tens of billions of dollars that, Albertans are beginning to realize, has been created by a government that has spared no effort to convince Albertans that it has in fact paid that debt.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll take another chance later.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's difficult to give a critical response to the interim supply estimates as there is no detail. I am choosing to consider the Children's Services request for $311,000,000 for interim supply. The Children's Services ministry is responsible for essential services, and it saddens me that many of the agencies under the Children's Services umbrella are burdened by the need to fund raise for funds that are necessary for the staff and programs which support our vulnerable individuals.

Recruitment and retention of staff is at a crisis level across the province. Staff are often working overtime because there aren't replacement workers. Staff are overburdened, foster parents are overloaded, and often the work that is required is not done, leaving children, families, and youth at risk.

Social services don't have a choice about the services they offer, like Tim Hortons, who can decide to close overnight. They can't close a group home. There's no place for those individuals or those children to go. Social services impact human lives. Individuals at risk and the disadvantaged deserve the same supports as others in our society.

I don't see anything, of course, and I don't know whether this interim supply will actually address the fact that there's more staff needed to help social workers do the work that the latest case model tells them that they need to do. They have a mandate, but they're not getting the resources in terms of staff to help them. Therefore, the turnover is devastating. This means that the thorough investigations to support good decisions are sacrificed because of a lack of time due to the caseloads of workers. Social workers do not have the crucial resources to meet the expectations.

The recent wage enhancements are welcome news from Children's Services for child care, but this does not include before and after school care nor child care centres who are not accredited. How can these centres attract or retain staff so that they can meet accreditation standards if they can't offer the same salaries? At a time when the lack of child care spaces is acute, this exclusion of some centres for wage enhancements may result in closures of centres.

The interim budget, of course, doesn't tell us anything about plans for agencies that are contracted for children's services, agencies who can't fill positions, agencies who can't compete in the marketplace, agencies who can't compete with government positions, agencies who are losing staff to government positions or other businesses where they can get paid something more reasonable. Of course these agencies can't attract people who are at higher levels of income.

I particularly hope that the interim budget will address family and community support services needs. The annual FCSS budget should be indexed to accommodate increases for inflation and the cost of living and increases in the provincial population.

Our province is experiencing an ever-increasing rate of growth. However, with growth come increased social needs. The demand for services provided to support families who are separated due to work requirements has increased significantly. Increased prosperity is leading to increased family breakdown, addiction problems, and reduced community connectedness.

Most of the FCSS programs, especially those serving the sparse rural populations, have not seen a significant funding increase for several years. The cost of other programs' supplies and services, especially rent, insurance, energy, is also increasing rapidly for both FCSS programs and for nonprofit groups that are funded by FCSS. The cost of maintaining qualified staff to operate quality programs is increasing rapidly due to Alberta's booming economy.

FCSS and community services programs are already experiencing an exodus of staff to other, more competitive sectors of the economy, resulting in a loss of leadership, knowledge, and relationships within this sector. Clients of the community services sector often rely on long-standing, supportive relationships with these staff in order to effect a change in their lives. When that lack of consistency happens, often these people go back to square one.

Additionally, these populations that are most at risk are increasing at a faster rate than the general population increase. The aboriginal population is expected to increase by 44 per cent between 2001 and 2017. The number of seniors in Alberta is expected to increase from its present 10 per cent of the population to 20 per cent by 2031.

It seems that increases to the FCSS budget occur intermittently with no discernible relationship between the needs at the local level and the amount of the increases. As a result, it is impossible for municipalities to plan ahead and strategically set direction around funding priorities and sustainability. An indexed approach would therefore provide a predictable increase that would allow for longer term budget planning.

The booming economy and population growth are changing Alberta. The market economy for staffing, housing, and office rents in many communities is changing the landscape as well. A looming crisis in sector staffing, increased needs in demographic growth in certain populations are all placing demands on FCSS programs that are currently outpacing funding.

In order to keep the health and vibrancy in our communities, I believe there needs to be an increase in FCSS funding, an inclusion of a cost-of-living factor, and budget predictability. We want to keep our communities safe, strong, and healthy so Alberta can be the best of both the current economic boom and whatever is to follow it. We need to look at the need for predictable funding for this social need.

Another provision for funding that I would hope the interim budget might consider is the funding for the operation of licensed care of elementary school-aged children before and after school time. I appreciate that the Alberta government invests in a range of programs and services to meet the needs of families and that many municipalities are undergoing accelerated growth from the economic development, but this leads to growing demands for child care services. Family support networks have changed in our society. Most parents can no longer rely on extended family, friends, or neighbours to provide child care for their elementary school-aged children. You know, the circumstances that create the need for child care in the early years continue through the elementary school years, and quality care is still essential during those years. There's no child care subsidy for the care of elementary school-aged children, and this needs to change.

I recognize that licensed out-of-school care programs provide children with adequate supervision and opportunities to participate in activities which increase resilience and build protective factors, which are important in a child's development. One of the things these programs can do is to help children learn positive decision-making, help them learn how to determine critically what is a healthy thing for them to be involved in.

Finally, the nonprofit sector needs inclusion in this interim budget. Alberta's nonprofit sector is large, vibrant, and diverse. It makes a significant contribution to the quality of life in our province, serving and involving citizens in all neighbourhoods. There are over 8,000 nonprofits in Edmonton alone. The nonprofit sector touches the lives of almost every Edmontonian and member of our population in this province by finding support for aging parents and participation in sport activities, accessing employment services, serving on community league boards, attending places of worship, using the food bank, or sending kids to an after school program.

The nonprofit sector is facing a number of serious challenges which are making it tough to find the necessary human resources to do business. This is due to uncertain and unpredictable funding, inability to raise fees, rising utility costs, competition for staff, high turnover, and declining volunteerism. The factors that are affecting this sector are, first of all, project-based funding, which makes good planning and staff retention nearly impossible. Government contracts that do not cover core costs result in staff burnout and time spent on fundraising rather than on the programming. Rising operating costs mean less money for client services. Low wages and lack of benefit packages means staff are going elsewhere. In the current economic boom there's an increasing demand for service and no corresponding increase in revenue.

This interim budget, I hope, will look at the nonprofit sector. The need for staff has reached a critical level, with many groups now unable to deliver their services safely or effectively. High turnover, vacant positions, and lack of qualified candidates are leading to program closures. Liability is even becoming an issue as safety is compromised in some situations.

On the front lines, here are some examples. The Boys and Girls Clubs of Edmonton are operating at 65 per cent of capacity because they have 35 employee vacancies they can't fill. Highlands community league had to hold a second AGM to get enough people to fill their board. Catalyst Theatre can't find a general manager to work for the salary that they're offering. Group homes can't find people to work the overnight shifts and are lowering the level of qualifications required to fill positions. Support agencies for people with disabilities have experienced a record high employee turnover rate of over 40 per cent in the last year. Staff at an employment training agency are actually making less money than the starting wage their clients are making at the fast-food restaurant across the parking lot. Staff at another social services agency are at the point of needing services such as the food bank for themselves.

Organizations are going into a deficit situation as they spend so much time and energy on recruiting, screening, interviewing, and training while key positions remain vacant, creating a vacuum. These organizations feel that they are rusting out as those that remain behind struggle to carry on. Investment in the social infrastructure is just as critical as investment in the physical infrastructure. Nonprofit groups require both short-term and long-term help in order to stay healthy and hire and retain the staff needed to maintain the province's quality of life. Many agencies and groups are in a very precarious position, unable to fill critical front-line staff positions.

Our increase in population means an increase in demand for services. There are more people arriving and more people using food banks and clothing banks. Soccer teams, ESL classes, Brownie and Scout groups, societies to preserve cultural traditions, support groups for medical conditions: it's not just about roads and bridges; it's about healthy communities supported by nonprofit organizations with sufficient paid and unpaid labour in place to deliver the service.

We need increased funding to existing grant programs such as the community investment operation grant. We need more realistic funding for government contracted work. Government departments across the board need to fund these programs sufficiently.

Finally, I'm hoping, although I have no way of knowing, that this interim budget is going to look at once again affirming the principles of the five-point investment plan in child care, which was so good. I'm hoping that that major step that was taken will be supported and that in the future we will see expansion into the other points that this plan was intended for.

head: Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Ducharme moved that a humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 14: Mr. Snelgrove]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to stand and respond to the throne speech. It's an important time for Alberta, an important time to step back and see where the province is going, appreciate what we have accomplished as a government, as a province, and the tremendous resources that we are blessed with stewarding over the coming years. I was very impressed with many aspects of the throne speech and appreciate the sentiments and the commitment that this new Premier is trying to bring to the government, recognizing that it's not, in fact, a new government. It's continuing on with most of the people that have been around for a number of years with the Conservative government, with much the same agenda. Some are getting a bit older.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are looking for bold leadership, especially with the hypergrowth that's going on in this province, the tremendous inflation, the stresses and strains on people, on the environment, on some of the critical airsheds, watersheds in this province. There's real concern about the lack of planning over the last decade and where, in fact, this government is going.

We've got an inefficient transportation system that's very much focused on the automobile and the individual vehicle. We've got unaffordable housing in the province. We have a serious breakdown in some aspects of the health care system, that needs to be addressed with real reform and real leadership, and real stresses in the educational system. What is the vision, I guess, is what Albertans are asking and what I'm asking today. Where is the plan to deal with a tremendous opportunity and a tremendous danger in this time of hypergrowth and inflation? How will we guide Albertans and the various institutions and the business community, and where is the ethic of community and quality of life that we have heard so much about in the speech?

Mr. Speaker, particularly what jumped out at me as the Environment critic were some of the comments about the environment which weren't given their due place in the speech but considered as a sideline under managing growth. Clearly, the environment is primary in the minds of Albertans and Canadians, and separate attention and real focus and real investment are needed on the environment. Alberta Environment has been crippled over the last 10 years with cuts and by the failure to keep up with the resources that they need and the expertise and the staffing to do appropriate monitoring, to investigate problems, to enforce legislation, and to ensure that this hypergrowth is not leaving a terrible legacy for our future generations.

With less than .5 per cent of the provincial budget Alberta Environment has become the laughingstock of industry with its soft educational approach, and I quote from one of the senior Alberta Environment staff: we facilitate and broker the interests of industry with communities. They're not in this department planning to take leadership and to set limits. They are merely brokering the interests of industry with communities and letting them negotiate and hash out what's going to happen with our environment. This is not good enough, and I think that we're very anxious on this side of the House, as many of my constituents are, that we see some real leadership, some real backbone in this Alberta Environment and this government to address the critical challenges of limits in this province.

The question, I guess, is: who is in charge of this development? I used to believe it was the oil companies, Mr. Speaker, but over time I've come to realize that in fact no one is in charge of development in the province. It's a free-for-all.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you saying that there's no plan?

Dr. Swann: There's no plan, and I would like to see evidence that this government is changing its ways and not allowing unfettered growth and a weak Department of Environment and Energy and Utilities Board to allow this to go on without appropriate assessments, independent assessments, instead of depending on the assessments of the industry to decide whether something is acceptable or unacceptable.

So when I hear in the throne speech that we're going to manage growth pressures and protect the environment, it's difficult to take it seriously. This administration has been denying climate change for the last decade and, in fact, spent 3 million public dollars convincing Albertans that climate science was phony and that actions on fossil fuel reduction would harm our economy and eliminate jobs.

There's a huge inventory of contaminated sites, over $8 billion by some estimates, that await reclamation. How are we going to address this, or are we continuing to leave it to future generations?

Under Bill 29 we also learned last year that this government wants to let polluters off the hook. Instead of really remediating and cleaning up contaminated sites, we will allow them to manage risk.

There's no downstream oil and gas orphan fund. It's high time we had this. It's been discussed by the previous minister. I hope this minister will take it up and address it in a serious way.

We've overallocated and poorly managed our southern Alberta river systems, and now we're up against the limits of growth there as a result of this, with climate change going to aggravate the situation. We lack the staff and the expertise to at this time inspect and enforce the legislation in relation to these developments.

Another quote directly out of the Speech from the Throne is that we will be "a leader in practical, innovative, and sustainable environmental policies." Well, I would like to ask: when is the government going to begin to measure sustainability? When are we going to see indicators to help us decide what our airsheds can manage, what our watersheds can manage, and what sustainability means to this government? Does it not include social indicators? Does it not include health indicators? Does it not include a serious commitment to environmental stewardship that will allow the economy to continue into future generations? What's the evidence that we are acting sustainably in this province?

The province is gobbling up good agricultural land for resource development, acreage owners. It's allowing all manner of activity everywhere all the time. Look at the eastern slopes, where we're going to allow continued oil and gas activity, forestry, tourism, and somehow protect our watersheds. Clearly, this is not leadership. We've set no limits on carbon emissions and no significant incentives for renewable energy options.

There is still no cumulative impact assessment before major developments. I'm thinking of the upgrader alley. I'm thinking of a number of developments, including the one now proposed for the Bow River west of Calgary. That's the old Seebe site, the old TransAlta site, a plan for 5,600 people there without any cumulative impact assessment.

We're looking for a new way of doing business in Alberta, and we're not seeing signs of that. We see a government that's scrambling to catch up to an unsustainable path and no willingness to set limits and to slow down the development in this province. The most glaring example of the lack of oversight and planning, of course, is the oil sands in Fort McMurray, where there are critical health care risks presently being overlooked as we allow expansion after expansion in the Fort McMurray area. The First Nations are increasingly outraged at the level and scope and pace of development up there. In what way is this sustainable? We have increased social unrest, and we have clear environmental risks that our children are going to have to deal with. Does sustainability really mean allowing the market to do what it does best, compete, and the lowest possible cost rules the day? The examples from the field are legion.

The speech also alludes to properly managing our water supplies. Clearly, Water for Life has been an important document that's helped to shape thinking and planning for this province, but where are the resources? Where's the expertise to help these watershed councils do appropriate planning and implement sustainable watershed management? Where in 2007 are the fundamental instruments of government to do the job? Where is the land-use framework? This is the third attempt this government has made in the last 15 years to help us decide where our priorities are: where we will protect water, where we will protect agriculture, where we will allow industrial development, and where we won't allow these things to happen, where tourism is a priority. How long will this province have to wait for leadership on land use?

When are we going to see proper and expert cumulative impact assessments in this province? We cannot make good decisions on the basis of ad hoc or consultant reports paid for by industry, which is the way we're going today. When are we going to see genuine public consultation on how regions wish their development to proceed? When will we see a regional planning framework that supports win-win decisions for rural and urban municipalities, that respects the balance between economic, social, and environmental protection?

It's early in the mandate of this new leader, a decent man to be sure, and I'm sure that many people want to see, as we do, success in this administration. But this man has been part of the administration for the past 10 years, an administration that continues to refuse to do its job.

What does that job include? It includes establishing transparent goals out of a vision for human and environmental and economic well-being all together. The job of governance includes bringing together the best of science to assess planning and including people from various perspectives that balance the interests of all, placing environment primary, not secondary, to jobs and income. Governance includes a careful analysis of costs and benefits, short- and long-term, of the various development options. Governance includes a full debate and review of where we're going and how we're going to get there. Finally, governance includes careful monitoring and a willingness to make adjustments as the results come in.

If we're going to improve Albertans' quality of life, which is also emphasized in the throne speech, there must be an emphasis on bringing under control the hypergrowth and, in fact, the decreasing quality of life in this province: the increased levels of stress, increased violence especially in families, increasing levels of depression and other mental illness, suicide, workplace injury and death. I want to refer here especially to farm workers, who are still, in the 21st century, unprotected by occupational health and safety and unprotected by workers' compensation.

If, as this throne speech discusses, we're going to improve people's quality of life, what about those at the low end of the spectrum, Mr. Speaker? AISH continues to be, embarrassingly, among the lowest in the country. Social supports, employment insurance are not indexed to the cost of living. Again, we are giving ourselves increases each year while those at the bottom of the rung languish under very difficult conditions financially and increasingly turn to the health care system for support when, fundamentally, they need the support of this government to provide them with a decent living wage.

Mr. Speaker, we continue to look hopefully at the future. This is a time of great opportunity and of great danger if we don't deal as leaders with vision and include those in our community, particularly the most disadvantaged, in setting a course that is truly building stronger communities and demonstrating the compassion that this government talks about. Compassion is not a luxury. If we don't as governments demonstrate that leadership, we are going to see increasing turmoil, increasing breakdown, and increasing failure of a health care system that simply cannot keep up to the growing demands on it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak to the Speech from the Throne 2007.

The Speech from the Throne is an important document. It draws attention to what the government is planning to do, what changes it's planning to make to improve quality of life and to create a society in Alberta that's more just, that's more fair, where prosperity is spread across the population in a more even way than has been the case. The Speech from the Throne is about future plans with respect to strengthening and improving our educational system, both at the K to 12 level and the postsecondary level.

It is about changing direction in terms of the kind of economy that we want to create, especially in year 2007 when we're gathering momentum with respect to the determination of many countries in the world, many governments in the world to bring into being a plan, a program, and a set of policies that will effectively help us control the rate at which global warming is taking place. There is not just mounting evidence but incontrovertible and massive evidence on climate change and global warming. No one can deny anymore that the threat of global warming is a real one and that we need to act on it decisively and now. We have a very, very narrow window of putting in place policies, changing the protocols for greenhouse gas emissions, and ensuring that we have a government and a policy that makes it absolutely clear that the major emitters of greenhouse gases will not be allowed to flout the public will which says that absolute reductions in greenhouse gas emissions is a necessity and that no compromise is possible on it.

It also provides a window of opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to act on greening our economy, to bring in policies that will result in a green economy for the future, the next 50 to 80 years. There's a great opportunity awaiting us to engage in the development of technologies, scientific invention, and breakthroughs that'll put us at the forefront in this competitive world in terms of our ability to sell new knowledge, new technologies, and new programs to reduce the negative impact of global warming, to slow it down by controlling the emissions of greenhouse gases. So the opportunity is there. We are at the crossroads. We are at the centre of an industry which for Canada produces the largest greenhouse gases in terms of absolute amounts.

When I see the throne speech, it recognizes that climate change and the question of greenhouse gas emissions into the atmosphere is something that needs to be addressed, but what it proposes to do is essentially give in to the plans and the practices of the major greenhouse gas emitters, the oil and gas industry. There's no indication in the throne speech that the tar sands development should be slowed down. It not only is leading to Alberta becoming notorious for being the largest emitter of carbon dioxide into the air in Canada – Environment Canada issued a report yesterday that we have the dubious distinction along with Ontario of being the largest greenhouse gas and other air pollutant emitters – Alberta in fact is a leader in putting into the atmosphere the largest tonnage of greenhouse gases in Canada.

I think that when we have an industry such as we have, from which our economy benefits and Canada's economy benefits, we must take leadership at the same time and recognize the responsibility of being the leaders in introducing policies, legislation, and enforcement mechanisms for the legislation so that we can demonstrate that we not only have the will but also the legislative capacity to reduce those emissions in absolute terms. They talk about reducing greenhouse intensity levels, and we have a bill before us that talks about reducing the intensity of emissions, but it does absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker. There should be no doubt in anyone's mind that it will do absolutely nothing to reduce the absolute emissions. In fact, it will lead to massive increases year after year in greenhouse gas emissions emanating from Alberta from these industries.

So the Speech from the Throne is really disappointing. It's a betrayal of the hopes of Albertans, a betrayal of the obligations and responsibilities that we have as a province that is the site of this massive industry, from which we all benefit, to do what we need to do, to do the right thing, which is to bring in legislation which will give this government the tools to ensure that absolute reductions progressively year after year after year are obtained in this province, and that we serve as an example to other jurisdictions to do the same. But that's not there, Mr. Speaker.

Much has been said about other weaknesses and problems that this speech has. I'd like to draw the attention of the House to one major flaw that I saw in the speech. Over the last almost dozen years this is the first time that I've seen a Speech from the Throne which devotes so little space to postsecondary education. It has a mere two and a half paragraphs dealing with postsecondary education, an area of investment in human capital, in our own future in ensuring our prosperity and a green and prosperous economy for the future. It deserves and merits a stronger commitment than is expressed in the very brief mention that it receives in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, I'll quote from the speech. It says:

Your government will also increase access and quality in postsecondary education while strengthening its support for community education and literacy programs. It will work to improve high school completion rates and increase access to postsecondary education with an emphasis on the Campus Alberta approach.

It then concludes by saying:

Investments in advanced education will be targeted towards a comprehensive framework that will make postsecondary education, trade and occupational training more accessible to adult learners.

Nowhere in this very short space, two and a half paragraphs, is a reference and a recognition that the affordability of postsecondary education is a concern that this government has. It produced a document, A Learning Alberta, the final report of the steering committee, and then it produced the affordability framework following that last November. I'm curious why there is, it seems, a deliberate attempt to not mention the unfinished work on affordability. That causes concern to lots of people, including over 200,000 students who are part of our postsecondary education system.

The brief comments that I've referred to are a far cry from the emphasis that was given to advanced education in previous years. The government has two recent significant reports, A Learning Alberta and the affordability framework, that I've just mentioned, but much of the content of the affordability framework remains to be implemented, from reducing the interest rates on student loans to moving student financing from loans towards grants and bursaries and making it more affordable for the young people of Alberta currently excluded from postsecondary education to be able to take advantage of it.

There is a great deal of concern being expressed by students. I just met with some of them the other day, and they are expressing concern that the government may in fact be dragging its feet even on its own affordability framework, its own document that it put out just a few months ago. There's a great deal of room for improvement on the affordability framework. The student representatives that talked to me do not see the government wanting to honour its commitments to the affordability issues, commitments that it made just a few months ago.

The major challenge in the area of advanced education in Alberta is attracting students to postsecondary institutions. In A Learning Alberta the government committed to improving participation rates. Alberta has the lowest rate of high school students moving on to postsecondary institutions in Canada. We are dead last in university participation rates in the country. We need to address the sticker price of postsecondary education in order to change that situation, Mr. Speaker. This requires the recognition of education as a long-term social investment, a long-term guarantor of enhancing and enriching the availability of human resource and human capital in the province and in its economy.

The government must come to terms with the opportunity cost, the forgone income of postsecondary students. The reason that many Albertans who want to take a postsecondary education don't do so is the forgone income. Giving up the opportunity of earning income by entering the labour force is so much higher now than it was before, and the cost of going to school is also moving up very quickly. So add the two: the forgone income as a cost plus the actual costs of going to school, including tuition fees, residential costs, travel costs, books, and other fees. We haven't put in place conditions which will encourage students to want to go to postsecondary institutions first and then enter the labour market.

Tuition fees are the main factor in determining the affordability of postsecondary education because of their sticker price effect. This is one area where the costs are immediately and quickly amenable to public policy initiatives. Students are asking, of course, that the tuition fees must be rolled back to the 1999-2000 level. It will bring them down to about $3,000. That will make their tuition fees the lowest in the country. But the government's tuition fee policy does nothing like that. Students have accepted grudgingly what they have been given. It's better than what was there before, but because there's no legislated cap on where these tuition fees could go and the fact that they were not rolled back to what students expected this government to do – that is, roll them back to the level of where they were in '99-2000 – they continue to be very concerned about tuition fees and their impact on the affordability of postsecondary education in general in this province. Student leaders tell us – I met with them on January 15, Mr. Speaker – that they are pushing for a maximum tuition of $3,000 as a baseline.

Time runs quickly, Mr. Speaker. I take my seat.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and have this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne this afternoon on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Certainly, I listened with interest on March 7 as His Honour Norman Kwong delivered this throne speech. At that point I thought to myself that this was a blueprint of where the government wants to go. You open it, and the first thing you read is The Future Is Now: A Plan for Alberta.

This throne speech is an admission that there was no plan. In recent years there was no plan. The former Premier, Mr. Klein, admitted that there was no plan. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View certainly outlined some of the issues that are still outstanding, and they need attention.

Now, I don't know many people that try to build anything without a blueprint. I congratulate this government for coming forward with a blueprint. It's very vague. The details are still being drawn up at the draftsman's table, but the blueprint is at least here. How much is it going to cost us economically, environmentally, and socially as a result of operating without a blueprint in the last number of years? I don't know, but the bills certainly are mounting.

There are a number of issues that are of concern to the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I would like to talk about them at this time. I see here that we're talking about improving the quality of life of Albertans, managing growth pressures, governing with integrity and transparency, building a stronger Alberta, whatever that means, but there is no plan in here. That's why I say that it's a different quarterback, same game plan with this government. There's no plan in here to unplug electricity deregulation. There is no concrete plan in here to deal with the outstanding issue of royalties. I know that we're having this committee, and I know that it's doing its work as we speak, but I'm not confident in the outcome of that one.

We still have the issue in Edmonton and Calgary and some other communities around public school closures. What is the plan by this government on that issue? Is it still going to dictate to school boards which schools are to be closed without any rational reason? I'll never forget going to Calgary and talking to some of the Calgary city councillors there, and they reminded us not to close inner-city schools because as those inner-city neighbourhoods are developed, you're going to need the schools again. They're absolutely right, and it's a reminder that people on this side of the floor certainly will take seriously. There is nothing to address the whole issue of school closures in this speech.

Homeless people. Earlier this afternoon we heard members from across the way say that this is now a compassionate Conservative government. Well, I guess that's an admittance, Mr. Speaker, that in the past they were not compassionate. One only has to go down to Sir Winston Churchill Square and meet people down there who have no home, who are in need of care. They're not getting it. Straight and simple, they are not getting the care that they need. Many of these citizens, through no fault of their own, through unfortunate circumstances cannot look after themselves, and it's about time that this government starts to do that. It has been negligent in the past, and I don't see any improvement in that in this document.

Now, yesterday we talked in question period about issues surrounding temporary foreign workers and the whole issue of labour rights, who has them, and who does not. What does this government do? Eliminates the department of labour. I'm not saying that there shouldn't have been government departments eliminated and others reorganized. I'm not saying that, but the labour department should be a stand-alone department. It's hidden now in Employment, Immigration and Industry: EII.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Department of EII wants to increase significantly the number of temporary foreign workers in this province. In fact, we're looking at our own immigration strategy. After what I've encountered in the last couple of weeks, this government is not capable of running its own immigration policy. It's simply out of its league. It can't be done, and there are no recommendations, there are no words in this speech that will make me change my mind. We've got temporary foreign workers here that are being exploited. They've been short-changed. They've been cheated on their pay stubs. It doesn't matter if they're working as general farm labourers in Provost. We also have the same thing happening in urban areas.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is talking about bad employers. These bad employers are using recruiting agencies internationally and charging these people thousands upon thousands of dollars to enter this country, and then when they get them here, because of the restrictions on those visas they've got them here to exploit for the length of time of the visa. It is unfortunate, and this has to be changed before this province is capable of administering its own immigration policy. I'm sorry; this is not working out.

We have hourly employees that are coming here, thinking that they're going to get an economic foundation for their families and themselves, and they've been forced to turn into subcontractors, and then they have no rights. No rights. They're just paid a lump sum for an amount of work that's done. That's not what that program was intended to do, and it is totally out of hand. It is totally out of hand. Until that's fixed, the program has to be studied, and we have to do better. A lot of these people aren't even interested in the provincial nominee program. They just want to leave this country because of how they've been treated. We need better labour laws, and we need a government that's interested in enforcing them.

Farm workers. Well, that's another issue. But there shouldn't be a corporate farm in this province that is allowed to hire people as general farm labour and not pay them overtime, not pay them vacation pay, not give them time off where appropriate, not cover them for WCB, and not give them occupational health and safety training so that they can work safely. This is the 21st century, not the 18th.

Electricity. Individuals and groups have always been coming to the constituency in Edmonton-Gold Bar complaining about deregulation. Now, the largest power bill in Alberta's history has been calculated by a group of retired professional engineers. I'm disappointed to say that this is probably the largest power bill in Canadian history. It now stands, as a result of electricity deregulation, at $13.8 billion. This is since 2001. This, Mr. Speaker, does not include transmission costs, distribution costs, or the costs of all the middlemen, the middlemen with their hands out. They're getting all those added costs on the monthly power bills. Those costs are not included in this $13.8 billion.

Now, business owners, farmers, tenants of apartments, and homeowners struggle monthly to pay their power bills, and we know why: electricity deregulation. This government over the 36-year period has made a lot of mistakes, but electricity deregulation is the biggest.

Now, last fall I sent the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud a letter in regard to this, and the letter stated: what will you do, if you are elected Premier, to unplug deregulation or fix this mess? I didn't get a reply. [interjection] I'm getting a reply now, Mr. Speaker. The only candidates that replied, interestingly enough, were not members of this House: a former member, Mr. Norris, and Mr. McPherson. Mr. McPherson was the first one to reply. None of the others did, including the gentleman from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who eventually won the race. Electricity bills were going up. There were brownouts. There were emergency energy alerts all last year, and it was a priority issue for the citizens. Now, I asked all these individuals who wanted to be Premier how they planned to unplug electricity deregulation.

Since October power bills have continued to go up. The government in the past has adopted very many good ideas, but they have yet to adopt our idea for returning to an affordable and reliable electricity system for all Albertans. I see none of that in this throne speech, and that really disappoints me. I know you took our ideas on public accounts. You're welcome to them. But you're also welcome to this idea because we are going to ruin this province economically if we continue down the road of electricity deregulation. Manufacturers, some of whom have already left, unfortunately, are going to go to other jurisdictions where electricity costs are significantly lower and where the governments were smart enough not to buy into this electricity deregulation boondoggle.

Now, in six years, Mr. Speaker, deregulation again has added $13.8 billion extra to the cost of generating electricity in this province. Again, I have to remind everyone that this does not include transmission, distribution, and billing costs. Since 2001 the extra cost of power for residential, commercial, and industrial consumers has been $13.8 billion. Each year there have been many pennies per kilowatt hour added to your rate as a result of deregulation. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West is concerned about the cost of a kilowatt hour of electricity, and so he should be.

The true cost of generation, unless you use 2006 for an example, should be 4.4 cents per kilowatt hour. What is it under the Tory, the Conservative plan? Eight point five cents. More than double, and it's going higher and higher because there was no long-term planning done, and we don't have the baseload generation capacity that we need. There is a shortage of electricity. The transmission system is congested, constrained, and it's to the point now that we've got to ram everything through the EUB because we have to build a 500 kV line between Wabamun and Langdon in the north-west corner of Calgary, and we're overriding the interests of the landowners.

The Acting Speaker: Any comments or questions?

Any other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to respond to the Speech from the Throne. First of all, I would like to thank all my constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie from the bottom of my heart for the opportunity to represent them and also showing confidence in me in this Assembly. I will definitely continue to do my level best to represent the best interests of the hard-working people of Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Speaker, the throne speech is, obviously, an expression of this government's desire to pursue a certain level of action over the years. What I find in this throne speech is clearly a mixed reaction from my constituents. I talked to many people recently after the throne speech. Some people saw the throne speech on the Internet, and they have a mixed reaction. Some people are saying, you know, that they appreciate that at least the government took some initiative, that at least this new government is saying that they will make some plans in different sectors.

So far I haven't seen those plans, but I really appreciate that they are taking an interest. They are planning to form some committees, to form different committees for making plans. If you see this Speech from the Throne, you know, the slogans look really, really impressive, and you see that the government has a plan, that they will respect the environment, and they will be definitely fiscally responsible and inclusive. They will have a clear plan, and in reality they will deliver it. Well, I'm anxious. I'm waiting for that moment when we will have plans on health care, education, infrastructure, child care, real plans, not just the goals outlined in this Speech from the Throne.

It looks really nice when the government says that they will go on with integrity and transparency. Transparency, yes. When the opposition members ask the questions, sometimes some ministers answer the question very nicely, but sometimes they just ignore it. We have question period in this House, but we don't get the proper answers. I don't know what they are trying to hide. If they really want to serve the best interests of Albertans, they should answer all the questions properly because during question period time we have the cameras, and Albertans are watching them. At least, they should be honest because their constituents are watching. They elected them to be responsible and accountable to them.

But definitely I am impressed to see at least the goals, the direction they have in this throne speech. Like all Albertans, my constituents also have great expectations of all of us here at this Legislature. The people are looking for their government to be guided by professionalism. I mean, when we sit here and we debate or we question during the question period time, they expect us to be guided by professionalism and be gentlemen while we are asking the question or the minister answers the questions.

To be true to the government's promise of open, responsible government, government that is frugal when dealing with Albertans' purse strings, again – I've said it before many times – they should spend money very wisely.

In this Speech from the Throne, other than goals, I have seen at least dozens of times sustainability, transparency, but I still wonder when they talk about sustainability. Why suddenly have they started thinking about sustainability? Where were they in the last 15, 20 years? Why couldn't they think about sustainability? They've already spent 93 per cent of the energy revenue in the last so many years, 25, 27 years, and if we had a proper plan, this province would have been a paradise in the world.

We are fortunate. This government collects billions and billions of dollars from royalties, and this boom will not come again and again. We had the opportunity. I think most of the money they spent not wisely, I should say, because they didn't spend money where the money was needed. For example, the social deficit is increasing, and that sector was badly ignored for decades. Now we have sufficient money, and we ignore them, and this is not fair to those people. The government has always been saying that they are good listeners, that they will listen to all classes in Alberta, but I don't think this present government has given the Alberta advantage to everybody, which is wrong. They should admit that and start thinking about those people right now.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar just now mentioned electricity deregulation. I think the majority of even the government MLAs know and understand that electricity deregulation is totally a failure, and nobody admits that. Then they talk about honesty, and it doesn't seem nice. If we are wrong, we should dare to say, "Yes, we are wrong," and then we'll think about alternatives. Unfortunately, nobody so far admits that electricity deregulation is a failure. In this Speech from the Throne are just a few slogans, a few goals, a few directions. It looks nice but is not solving the problems that Albertans want to hear about from them.

I see that here it says: improving Albertans' quality of life. I asked the question to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture the other day, and he answered my question differently, I should say. He said that he has to make a balance between the Energy ministry and the ministry of arts and culture. Even Health and Wellness has been saying this for a long time. You know, they are focusing on the quality of life, on health and wellness, and what initiatives we have done so far. This is my third session, and every time I hear the same stories. The progress is zero.

Slogans. Yes. Whenever we ask questions about education, we are top of the world. Yeah. Universities. One of the best universities in the world, you can answer. If we have the best university in the world, why are the students crying out there? Why don't you sometimes visit them and ask them: what's the problem there? They are paying too much for tuition fees, parking facilities. We live in the richest province, and the students – that's the right investment, I think – don't get their fair share. That's the biggest problem. Nobody is trying to reduce the burden of student fees.

So far, I haven't seen any announcement in this throne speech about new colleges, universities. Some new spaces for apprentices, I know that they mention that they will do that. How will they do that? If they have a plan, what type of plan do they have?

Last year the top priority was the prevention of cancer. I know that government spent tons of money on that, but I don't know after that. There was no report on whether that money we spent was worthwhile or not, whether we need some more money into that because cancer, of course, is a big problem, and we all should try to overcome those problems in the hospitals.

In this speech there's no mention of increasing the medical seats. I was born in India. I was about 20 when I moved to England. In England or Europe, even in India, underdeveloped countries, they produce the maximum doctors throughout the world – throughout the world. In Canada, especially Alberta, for example, we can't produce doctors here. Can't we afford that? Can't we afford new colleges, new universities? Can't we increase the number of spaces? I mean, it's not mentioned, Mr. Speaker. There's nothing mentioned in this throne speech. This is a shame if we have a surplus of $7 billion and we are not spending money in the right place.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar already mentioned the shortage of workers. I met with a few people and talked about the temporary foreign workers. It's going to be one of the biggest headaches.

The Acting Speaker: Any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, please. The hon. member has in the past expressed concern about the high rate of violent crime. In this throne speech under the category Providing Safe and Secure Communities the government is stating that they will endeavour to establish a crime reduction and safe communities task force. My question for the hon. member is: what efforts have you made to talk to community leaders, to consult with community leaders to reduce crime in the city?

Thank you.

5:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in my riding there's a president, a council all over the area that consists of, I think, 11 or 12 leagues. They discuss this issue again and again. I mean, they have a meeting every three or four months because it's a big issue in that area. Crime is not a big issue just on the south side; it's all over. It's even growing in rural areas as well.

The problem is that we are not trying to find the root problems of crime. The root problem definitely, in my personal view, is social because if somebody is earning less than a thousand dollars nowadays and, as I said, the rent is so much and they have only a few hundred left for groceries, I mean, what do you expect from them? They will go outside and do something, you know, where they could earn easy money. So we should try to find out the root causes of crime. Especially, domestic violence is increasing.

The Acting Speaker: They're supposed to be brief comments and questions.

Mr. Agnihotri: Okay. Sorry. I'll finish in just 40 seconds. Okay? [interjections] Of course, yes, 40 seconds. Okay.

Anyway, thanks for asking me the question. It's a big problem.

The Acting Speaker: Any others with comments or questions? The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, a comment. I want to thank the hon. member for his concern and his efforts to reduce crime in his community. I would ask the hon. member if he's aware that crime is being reduced in the province of Alberta. The initiatives that we have in force are becoming very effective.

Mr. Agnihotri: Well, maybe crime is reduced in the papers, but in the newspapers, on the radio you see and hear every day that people are stealing cars, stabbings, murders. I mean, I don't know where you guys get the reports, but that problem is still there. I think the minister concerned should look at this problem seriously.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other comments or questions? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise at this time and move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. on Monday, the 19th.

[Motion carried; at 5:54 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members, we'll be led today in the singing of our national anthem by Colleen Vogel, and we'd ask all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly six members of the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS, and the organization's executive director. CAUS represents more than 70,000 university students throughout the province. These students are in Edmonton today to attend the CAUS annual conference, which provides them with an opportunity to meet with government and other organizations to discuss the future of Alberta's postsecondary system. I encourage my fellow MLAs to participate in this important conference. It's a great opportunity to learn more about the challenges that they face.

I would invite each of the CAUS representatives to stand as I call your name, and I ask my colleagues to hold their applause until everyone has been introduced. With us today are David Cournoyer, CAUS chair and University of Alberta Students' Union vice-president external; Charlotte Kingston, CAUS vice-president and University of Lethbridge Students' Union vice-president academic; Samantha Power, University of Alberta Students' Union president; Joanne Luu, University of Lethbridge Students' Union vice-president administration; Emily Wyatt, University of Calgary Students' Union president; Julie Labonté, University of Calgary Students' Union vice-president external; and Duncan Wojtaszek, the executive director of CAUS. Please join me and all members of the House in the traditional warm welcome.

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly nine social workers employed by Children's Services. March 18 to 24 is National Social Work Week, and Children's Services is very privileged to have these skilled and compassionate professionals helping our children, our youth, and families. Social workers choose their profession because they care about the people they help, and their work is vital to the success of our communities and our province. Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity of meeting with these individuals earlier today, and I believe Children's Services can count itself lucky to have these committed people working for Albertans.

I'd like to ask the following people who work tirelessly for the health and well-being of Albertans to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Danuta Potworowski, Cassidy Solikoski, Loïselle Arcand, Janet Dormer, Shirley Bourque, Mona Gunderson, Kim Weaver, Nicole Lightning, Shelley Sommerville. Also visiting today with the social workers is Rhonda Coubrough from our Red Deer regional office. Please join me in welcoming these very special guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to welcome 48 bright young minds from Jackson Heights school in my constituency to the Legislature today. We all know that our students are our most precious resource, and we're delighted to have you here. They are accompanied today by their teachers, Pam Schenk and Deb Colvin-MacDormand, and by parent, and in one case grandparent, helpers and volunteers James Norris, Larry Thomas, Terri Fuller, Jagdish Nischal, and Heather Slager. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the thunderous applause of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of my neighbouring MLA the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 23 students from Rimbeley elementary school. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Jim Moore, and by parent helpers Mrs. Holly Trenson, Mrs. Shantelle Boatright, Miss Abby Mann, and Mrs. Lauren Morton. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly 57 visitors from St. Gabriel school. They come from three different classes, and they are accompanied today by Mrs. Svetlana Sech, Ms Lauren Podlubny, and Ms Christine Uy. The teacher's assistants that are accompanying the group today are Mrs. Louise Dupuis, Mrs. Michelle Gascoigne, and Mrs. Fran Kraychy. They are all in the public gallery. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Tyler Bedford. Tyler was born and raised in Alberta, having grown up in Taber. He graduated from Red Deer College last spring and is currently completing his bachelor of arts in sociology at the University of Alberta. He's also a talented musician and sings with the local band The Bright Red. Tyler is a valuable addition to my constituency team as a part-time assistant in Highlands-Norwood. I would now ask that he rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Noah Weckel. Noah Weckel is six years old and has been a resident of Edmonton for the past four years. Noah already aspires to join us here at the Legislature and has done so since he first saw this building. He has a very keen interest in the environment, especially the conservation of our forests. Hopefully, someday he can join us and speak to the Assembly on this issue. Noah is joined here today by his great-uncle Reg Basken and his great-aunt Dorothy McRae. I would now ask that all three rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Immigrants of Distinction Awards

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to recognize the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society's 11th annual immigrants of distinction awards, which I was privileged to attend this past Friday along with the Honourable Lieutenant Governor; the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry; and several other MLAs from both sides of the House. Mr. Speaker, it was indeed a memorable evening in which we saw individuals who came to Alberta from far and abroad with visions of hope and prosperity recognized for their exceptional personal achievements.

I want to congratulate all of the award nominees and recipients. These individuals achieved personal success in the categories of arts and culture, business, community services, distinguished professional, and organizational diversity. I also want to congratulate the five outstanding students who received scholarships for their commendable personal merits and academic accomplishments.

These immigrants are individuals who came to our province armed with determination, a strong work ethic, and aspirations of creating a better life for themselves and their families. We can surely appreciate the difficulties immigrants face when they enter a foreign society and are challenged to adapt to a new environment.

The Calgary Immigrant Aid Society has provided important, culturally appropriate services for immigrants and refugees for over 30 years. I applaud the valuable services that this organization provides to immigrants who come to Alberta to create a new life and enjoy the freedoms and the opportunities that our great province affords us all.

*Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Millwoods Cultural and Recreational Facility Association

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, volunteers and visionings are an integral part of our success as a province, a city, and a community. One such incredible success story is the Millwoods Cultural and Recreational Facility Association, known as MCARFA.

Last Friday I was honoured to attend MCARFA's 30th anniversary, held in the beautiful banquet facility at the equally beautiful and wonderful Mill Woods golf course, a facility and golf course, I might add, that were built by and as a result of some enormously dedicated and visionary volunteers who were instrumental in helping to form MCARFA three decades ago. They were also responsible for having built the twin arenas in the Mill Woods Recreation Centre, the 440 track at the campus site, the blade and board and bike park, also at the campus site, and the trails, picnic sites, and pavilion at Jackie Parker park. The government of Alberta was recognized as a key partner and funder of these projects, and at least equal recognition was extended also to another integral partner, that being the city of Edmonton.

MCARFA volunteer presidents John Janzen, Max Bahnsen, Val Pohl, Joan Kirillo, George Bawden, Bob Strynadka, John Bracegirdle, and Larry Billings were also saluted and thanked. Additional MCARFA volunteers who were truly at the heart of MCARFA success were thanked and recognized for outstanding services, including 19-year volunteer and treasurer Jim Stokoe, Shaffiek Ali, Larry Kozak, Stu Orr, and others. I'd also like to thank head pro Darrell McDonald and his staff: Dave Robert, Mike Ellis, Derek Homan, and Wayne Parks.

Current projects under way by MCARFA include, in partnership with the Mill Woods Lions Club and the Woodvale Community League, the Lions spray park and the ropes and rock adventures playground at Jackie Parker park.

Congratulations, MCARFA, and thank you for helping to create and maintain such a high quality of life for our Mill Woods residents and visitors. You are truly amazing, and I am honoured and proud to be among your elected representatives.

National Social Work Week

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise today and recognize that March 18 to 24 is National Social Work Week. National Social Work Week was established by the Canadian Association of Social Workers to recognize the contribution these professionals make across the country.

Nothing is more true than the theme chosen this year, Social Workers Making a Difference in Children's Lives, because everywhere a child may need help, a social worker is there. In schools they provide services to children who are having difficulties learning. They work with teachers to address special mental, physical, or behavioural needs of children. In hospitals social workers help children deal with illnesses. They work with the children's families to address issues that can arise from sudden or chronic illness. In our communities they are there to enhance the health and well-being of children, providing services in the areas of mental health, family enhancement, and crisis intervention.

Mr. Speaker, I gave you a very small example of the contributions that social workers make to the betterment of the lives of Albertans. The government of Alberta is very privileged to have these skilled and dedicated professionals delivering programs and services to our children and families. I commend the men and women who take on the profession of social work. I hope that this week we all take the time to celebrate the important contributions social workers make to our lives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Violence against Women

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Violence has plagued human civilization since the dawn of time. It has caused infinite pain. It has hampered our progress, and it has scarred our souls. Even today, in this supposedly civilized time, the nightly news is filled with scenes of violence committed by one neighbour against another.

*[Mr. Amery was unable to complete his presentation, and the text in italics is the remainder of his member's statement]

Especially troubling are the stories of violence against women. I think that violence against women troubles us so deeply because women are seen as caregivers, as mothers, as the foundation of family life. When a woman is assaulted, it is an attack not only on an individual but also on the community, on the collective values we hold dear.

Sadly, no community is free of the spectre of violence against women. This madness is a real and undeniable problem. It's a problem without a single solution. There is no magic wand that will make it all go away overnight, but we are not helpless. This is not an insurmountable problem. With education, with respect for women, and with the conviction that violence is never the answer, we can dramatically reduce violence against women.

Colleagues, preventing violence against women must be given the priority treatment it deserves. But it's not enough to condemn. We must act. We must focus on tackling the causes, not only the effects, by backing our words and commitments with public funds. We must do everything in our power to make women less vulnerable, to make them feel safe on the streets.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MD of Northern Lights/Peace River Partnership

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday last, when I was invited to my constituency, I was asked to attend a joint meeting of MD No. 22 and the town of Peace River. I'm very pleased to inform the House that it was a very happy meeting in that the municipal district of Northern Lights and the town of Peace River signed a memorandum of understanding that sets the stage for a long-term partnership between the municipalities. The memorandum sets up joint development areas both in the MD and in the area soon to be annexed to the town, which will see development benefit both municipalities. Other opportunities for partnering are included, but of critical importance to both municipalities is the joint treatment and distribution of potable water.

Reeve Dueck of the MD was quoted as saying, "Everyone at the table understood the value and necessity of developing this long-term partnership, and it is a partnership in the truest sense of the word." Mayor Mann was quoted as saying: "We see the Municipal District and the Town as equal partners in the future development of this region. Through this Memorandum both municipalities share the risks and rewards associated with economic growth."

Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer my congratulations to Reeve Robert Dueck, councillors Joyce Vos, Ed Kamieniecki, Les Short, Darlene Frith, Ed Dollevoet, Al Dumas, CAO Theresa McKelvie, and from the town Mayor Lorne Mann, councillors Don Good, Iris Callioux, Tom Day, Geoff Milligan, Gordon Troup, Neil Martin, and CAO Kelly Bunn. Congratulations to both municipalities for acting in the best interest of their respective municipalities, for turning away from adversity and towards progress, and for setting a new standard for co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to acknowledge the efforts of Municipal Affairs and Housing, who provided mediation services delivered by Barb McNeil and Andrew Fulton.

Congratulations to all involved, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Service Dogs

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to highlight four qualities we find in our canine friends. The first is their extended senses. They smell things we do not smell, respond to sounds below our auditory thresholds and to moods we're barely in touch with ourselves. The second is dogs' capacity to bond, what humans call loyalty. As animals that think and act collectively, they are capable of accepting one of another species as their alpha leader. We use the expression "dog fight" to describe a free-for-all, but dogs are not that way. The only time they turn on each other is when their social structure breaks down.

Third, dogs exhibit amazing diversity. I'm not just referring to size, shape, and colour but the range of skills by which they serve us: guiding, guarding, pulling carts and sleds, and assisting a gamut of physical and mental disabilities. Their extended senses and bonding enable them to do this.

Fourth, dogs occupy a unique place at the border of the human and animal kingdoms. Those of you who know the stars may know that Sirius, the dog star, is the brightest star in the sky. Find Sirius, and if you see anything brighter, you know it's a planet, not a star. That's where dogs are in the firmament of our world. There's a reminder to humans here that if we abdicate our leadership and let the canine become alpha in our society, chaos breaks out, but if we hold our role responsibly as their masters and nurture them, we cannot ask for better companions. Albert Payson Terhune, author of Lad of Sunnybank and other beloved dog stories, wrote that if man served his God as dogs do their masters, the kingdom of heaven would have come by now.

I commend these qualities to my fellow members and ask that they support the Western Guide and Assistance Dog Society and all service dogs.

This legislation includes amendments to enhance the securities passport system and further harmonize and streamline Alberta securities laws with other Canadian jurisdictions. We have also included some enforcement and housekeeping amendments. The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 21 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Bill 25 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 25, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission it's my pleasure to table AADAC's 2005-2006 annual report. The commission continues to provide leadership in delivering services that assist Albertans in achieving freedom from the harmful effects of alcohol, other drugs, and gambling. This report summarizes the activities and achievements of the commission in '05-06.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table one of the many letters that I've been getting from Albertans who are opposed to the proposed Dodds-Round Hill coal gasification project. This letter is from Joseph Voegtlin, who is concerned that the project will endanger the important flyway for migratory birds, disturb a number of cemeteries, and could virtually destroy an otherwise stable community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a document I referred to last week in which the CEO of Horse Racing Alberta refers to an agreement committing to a government buyout of a project.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of an e-mail from Mark von Schellwitz, who is the vice-president, western Canada, for the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association. In the e-mail he says that the AGLC recognizes the severe labour shortage our industry is experiencing and as a result effective immediately AGLC will consider allowing minors to work in non-licensed areas of Class A (minors prohibited) establishments on a case by case basis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter concerning the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. This is a letter from a constituent of mine, Sharron Nelson, who is advocating that the proceeds from vehicles that are auctioned off be put back into actions to help the sex-trade workers themselves with their recovery and healing process rather than going into provincial revenue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is from Nicole Burns writing to bring attention and support for quality, licensed and monitored childcare programs for all children aged 0-12. All children should have the right to attend these childcare programs regardless of their age or their family's income level.

My second tabling is from Elaine Lefebvre writing to express "concern that there are not stronger penalties in Alberta for animal cruelty and abuse, particularly towards our companion animals."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to table a number of individual letters and the required number of copies calling on this Assembly to support that the accused killer of Joshua John Hunt be tried and sentenced as an adult due to the nature of his crime, his past criminal history, and that he is close to the age of 18 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter that I wrote to the hon. Minister of Energy. This letter is dated February 5, 2007, and it's outlining many concerns over the already high cost of the transmission line that is being proposed between Genesee and Langdon.

My second tabling this afternoon is information from the Save My CWB website. It's a website that's set up to hear all sides of the argument regarding the debate around the future of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of last Thursday's Calgary Herald For Neighbours article written by Alex Frazer-Harrison. Alex recounts the struggle led by Marilyn Marks to improve grandparent accessibility to their grandchildren.

The Speaker: Hon. members, when we sat last, there was a question from the Leader of the Official Opposition directed to the Premier, and the Premier had indicated that today he would provide a supplemental answer. Normally I would deal with this at the conclusion of the question period, but I sort of anticipate that this may lead to a further question today, and perhaps if we dealt with it now, that might in fact save some time. So we won't start the question period till we conclude this segment.

So, Premier, if you would like to supplement your answer, and under our rules the Leader of the Official Opposition then has an opportunity to ask an additional question, an additional response. The clock for the question period won't start until we deal with this matter first.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your decision. There was a question raised last Thursday by the hon. Leader of the Opposition with respect to a deal that the government has made with the horse-racing association. To the best of my knowledge and after conferring with the minister responsible, checking back well into 2004, there is no knowledge of any deal, any kind of buyouts with the horse-racing association. So there is no deal, period.*

The Speaker: Leader of the Official Opposition, if you wish.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the clarity of that answer. I am wondering if the Premier could tell us if there are any deals between his government and the MD of Rocky View on this project or between his government and the developers of the project?

*See p. 157, right col., para. 12

Mr. Stelmach: No. Over the weekend the reeve of the MD of Rocky View made it very clear that there are no deals with the government of Alberta, and that's my knowledge. In terms of this cabinet, this Executive Council, there are no deals with the MD of Rocky View.

The Speaker: Okay. Now we will start the question period, and the clock will start when the "n" in Leader of the Official Opposition is stated. Proceed.

head: 1:30

Oral Question Period

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Dr. Taft: Well, we'll see where the deals land between this cabinet or previous cabinets, this government and other governments. This government did have full knowledge of the plans for the water transfer from the Red Deer River to Balzac last summer. In fact, the former Deputy Premier stated right here that there was "good interaction between a variety of ministries in this government," concerning the Balzac project, and on August 31 she stated that "a lot of work" had been done on the project, again right here in the Assembly. My question, then, to the Premier: what members of his government have been involved with the meetings with the developers on the Balzac project?

Mr. Stelmach: Since assuming the position of Premier, none – absolutely none – of the members of Executive Council have met with any developers.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I saw a replay of a famous prime ministerial debate just this weekend in which one person stood up and said, "I had no choice," and the other said, "Yes, you did have a choice." My question is to the Premier. Whether it's your current cabinet or not, you are responsible for the deals of this government. You are. I need you to answer for your whole government.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll look forward to the debate any time, anywhere. It doesn't matter the time of day. Any time.

Dr. Taft: You know, Mr. Speaker, the people of the Red Deer basin want some answers. They want answers on the water transfer for Balzac, and we're clearly not going to get them from the Premier, so let's try somebody else.

In this Assembly last August the government made clear that a variety of ministries were involved in the development at Balzac. We already know that Agriculture is in for millions, so let's get the truth on some others. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: what resources has his department committed to the project at Balzac?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, we've committed absolutely no resources to the project.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ryley Landfill Project

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Balzac water transfer is a crucial test for this government's leadership on environmental issues, and we can see how they're doing so far. Environmental issues don't respect municipal or county lines, and the impacts extend far beyond those. Building a truly sustainable Alberta requires tough choices that put political considerations aside. My question today is to the Minister of Environment. Given the minister's detailed knowledge of and support for the Balzac project, did this government review the memorandum of understanding between the MD and the developers before it was signed, or are they strictly hands off even when provincial water is at stake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've answered this question in a number of forms before in the House. The process for applications and approvals of water licences is very straightforward. There currently is an application that is under consideration. To date no decisions have been made.

Dr. Taft: Again a total dodge.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's own backyard, figuratively speaking at least, is also the site of some pretty contentious projects with massive implications for the quality of life and environmental sustainability across a wide region. The area around Ryley is the site of a massive landfill project that may someday take in waste from around the continent, yet we have very limited support for regional planning. My question is to the Premier. What steps will the Premier take to ensure that the full array of regional issues is considered before further decisions on this massive project are made?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Beaver regional waste management commission went through some of the most extensive public hearings ever in the province of Alberta with respect to the development. I can't even recall the hundreds of hours of evidence that were presented to various authorities, both to the public health authority, the appeal authorities. All evidence points out that this is the most natural bathtub there is in terms of protection of water. You know, there is waste generated. We have to put it someplace. Apparently, according to the experts, this is the best.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The commission that owns and operates the dump is hoping to win the right to bring in 500,000 tonnes of trash shipped by rail from Vancouver every year. If successful, they predict that their revenues, of course, will soar, but there are residents concerned about the long-term impacts of this. Again to the Premier: given this government's generous financial support for the Balzac project, can the Premier tell this Assembly if any provincial funds have been provided to support the development of the Ryley landfill project, and if so, how much?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this person has got up a number of times in this House and made allegations without support. You now have an opportunity to put on the table the millions of dollars that went to the Balzac support by the government. Present it now, or don't mention it in any preambles. There has got to be some decency in this House. There's immunity in this House, and he behaves like he doesn't know the rules.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Computer Use Policy in Agriculture Department

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta released last September found many weaknesses in the department of agriculture, food and rural development's computer security practices. These weaknesses include no password policy, no controls over unauthorized software, no acceptable use policy. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Given that the Auditor General pointed out that there was no acceptable use policy for computer use in the department, what has the government done to address these weaknesses since the report was issued in September?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the Auditor General did bring up several issues for us to look at, and we're proceeding with those probably as we speak. As far as the computer issue I am not involved in that, but my computer works off the ag department. I have no problem with my password and getting in there, and I'm not a computer genius, so I guess the thing's not too bad.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the minister should be more involved. The website Save My CWB has a vicious, vulgar, and threatening e-mail posted. The website claims this e-mail came from the department of agriculture. The e-mail accuses farmers sympathetic to the Wheat Board of being total communists and relying on the taxpayer to prop up their farms. My question is again to the minister: given that this government has spent millions of taxpayers' dollars to try and discredit and dismantle the Canadian Wheat Board, is this e-mail posting what the Alberta government really thinks about farmers who continue to support and have faith in the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Groeneveld: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the millions of dollars. I'm not aware of the millions of dollars. I am aware that $1.08 million has been spent over four years, and only a very small portion of that has gone into the advertising aspect.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister should be more aware. My next question is to the minister. Given that this posting, which contains vulgar and threatening language, reflects very poorly on the people of this fine province, will the minister personally on behalf of the government post an apology on the Save My CWB website?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will post no apology for my position on the Canadian Wheat Board nor this government's position on the Canadian Wheat Board. I think it's solid. It's what Albertans are telling us what they want, and we will stick with doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Employment of Children

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the Alberta Federation of Labour and the Alberta NDP received a copy of an e-mail which said that the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission was going to approve the employment of children as young as 12 years old in kitchens of licensed premises, in other words in bars. The Alberta Federation of Labour president was quoted as saying that this is proof that the government has officially lost its mind. All the ministers that were involved indicated that they were unaware of it, so my question is to the Premier. Why is such a significant policy with such a significant potential negative effect being approved by the . . .

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a matter for the record. For 12-, 13-, and 14-year-olds any change in allowing work in bars would have to come through the Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry. The minister responsible heard about the policy direction, and when I heard about it on Friday, I put an end to it. I can assure you that after Friday, after hearing it, it's not only 12-year-olds but any minors who are forbidden to work at any bar anywhere in the province of Alberta. Period.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the e-mail says, and I quote: the AGLC recognizes that there's a severe labour shortage in our industry and "as a result effective immediately AGLC will consider allowing minors to work in non-licensed areas of Class A . . . establishments" except those that feature nude entertainment. Thank goodness for that. Why didn't his ministers know that this had been approved?

Mr. Stelmach: In my previous answer I talked about the process. It's not simply some 12-year-old walking into a bar. But after that, whatever the age, for any minor: no work in any bar. That means that maybe the hon. member may have to deal with shorter working hours in a lounge, whatever it is. But there won't be any minors working in any bar in this province of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's pretty clear that this would have been approved without the minister even knowing about it, notwithstanding what the Premier has just told us. My question to the Premier is: will he go one step further and eliminate the use of child labour in this province altogether?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, back to the earlier point. I mentioned that there was a process in place for 12-, 13-, and 14-year-olds. That policy had to work through the process. It had to get through to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, and it would not have gone through at that point. However, all I'm saying is that after hearing about it: all minors – period – no work in the province of Alberta in any bars.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Affordability of Postsecondary Education

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Everyone recognizes the value of having a postsecondary education and what a tremendous asset it is in our knowledge-based economy and our knowledge-based society. Earlier today I had a very informative meeting with three representatives from CAUS, the Council of Alberta University Students, who are with us still in the gallery as I speak and who raised several important points that pertain to university students and to those who hope to be university students. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. With essential living costs and all other costs on the rise, what are you doing to reduce or at least address financial barriers that university students, and others for that matter, are facing as they pursue . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Making postsecondary education affordable is a priority for this government – affordability, accessibility. In November of 2006 we released the affordability framework, which had a great deal of consultation not only with students but with other stakeholders in the system. We've rolled back tuition to 2004, and we've limited increases to the Alberta consumer price index, which I think was something that was supported in large measure by all stakeholders. That's about 3.3 per cent this year. Without those changes, students would have faced tuition fees anywhere from 6 to 11 per cent this year. An undergraduate student would save over $3,800 over the four years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. When will your ministry return so-called tuition fees principles back to legislation, an action that will surely lessen the load of any possible tuition fee increases in the future?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not necessarily true that it would lessen the load of any possible increases in the future because the process would be very similar. What we're saying is that putting it into the regulation enabled us to do exactly what I just talked about in my previous answer, and it enabled us to do it very quickly. I can commit to the students of this province and I can commit to the stakeholders of this province that we have no intention of making any changes without very extensive consultation with them and with members of government and members of the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: from an infrastructure point of view how do you intend to provide a better balance for undergraduate facility improvements and expansions and so on in comparison with graduate facilities, research, and advanced research facilities?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, a very good question and, I know, one that is on the minds of the student population. We had a meeting this morning with CAUS, and I've met with a number of the stakeholders in the industry or in the system about the Campus Alberta approach. Really, narrowing down into what the roles, responsibilities, and mandates are of each institution within that Campus Alberta approach and managing the growth pressures to build a stronger Alberta and a stronger Campus Alberta for all students and all stakeholders, we will come up with a collaborative, co-operative approach to making sure that we have a balance to our capital in all of those institutions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

PDD Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports has reallocated $11.3 million from the PDD budget to assist agencies with staff retention. Those dollars flow through the PDD community boards. Although it is very, very welcome and certainly will be appreciated, it still remains only one-time funding, and there are questions around that allocation. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. These dollars come from within the PDD budget. They are not new dollars. Will the minister explain what area or programs can afford to be cut and where those dollars have been taken from?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it is correct, actually, that the reallocation of the $11.3 million is not new money. This is within the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. As in all budgets there are estimates. As you get closer to the year-end, you realize that not all of the estimates have been spent as budgeted for, and recognizing the priority of this need, we wanted to ensure that we could address it, that we would get all the available dollars back into those agencies providing tremendous service for those with disabilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the minister has allocated these dollars specifically for staff retention, how can you explain the recent cuts to the Good Samaritan Society's options for community living day program, that provides recreation and volunteer opportunities, cuts which impact approximately 40 staff and 60 Albertans with disabilities?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the PDD boards – there are six of them, working with all the service providers in each of their local areas – are constantly assessing the needs of those with disabilities that they're servicing, and there are continually changes from one service provider to another. That's not a new phenomenon, but it is additional dollars provided to the PDD boards to allocate to their service providers for staff retention kinds of wage issues.

Ms Pastoor: Losing staff is really quite devastating to this particular group. Does the minister realize that a one-time funding commitment is not enough? These dollars must be stable, and they must be sustainable. Can the minister assure me that this conversation is going on with Treasury and that it will be reflected in the April 19 budget?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, sustainability of providing services to those in great need, like those with disabilities, is essential. When we're looking at how do we provide this funding, even this, and looking forward, how can we ensure and provide those assurances to those with disabilities that services will be there when they need them? Those things related to the budget: they'll be related in due course on April 19.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Oil and Gas Activity in the Eastern Slopes

Mr. Coumts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oil and gas seismic activity in the eastern slopes in southwest Alberta has the potential to threaten the water supply from springs and wells for farm and ranch operations and the growing community of Nanton, Alberta. Recently both communities put significant public pressure on the oil companies, forcing them to consult further with the people on those effects. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given the sensitivity of the effects on native grass and the precious water, can the minister advise what protection is available to landowners and residents of the growing communities of Nanton and district?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to assure the members of this Assembly and the residents of the Nanton area that this government and Sustainable Resource Development take the issue of water quality and aquifers very seriously. For this reason there's been a policy in place since 1964, updated in 2000, that prohibits any type of drilling or surface activity, including seismic, in a protected area around the town of Nanton. So that protection is in place.

In addition, more generally for the Willow Creek area I'm happy to report that the MD there has been in discussions with Compton Petroleum. Their seismic program has ceased, pending public meetings.

Thank you.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's good news.

My first supplemental is to the Minister of Energy. The Pekisko, the Porcupine Hills, and the Livingstone Landowners groups have asked to put a moratorium on all drilling in the eastern slopes. Will the Minister of Energy look at implementing that moratorium?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the government of Alberta does recognize that there are many challenges that face this region and, of course, as you know, all regions across the province of Alberta with respect to development, including the development in this particular area, population growth, and recreational and housing demands across the province. I'd like to make it clear that we are recognized internationally for our ability to explore for and develop our resources in an environmentally responsible manner. No resource exploration takes place in this province with disregard to the environment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what can be done to implement the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board provision IL 93, as it has become known, that allows for the better planning of oil and gas activity south of highway 1, north of highway 3, and west of highway 2 into the high elevations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The information letter that's being discussed, of course, outlines our expectations as a government for oil and gas development, planning, public consultation, and environmental impact assessments. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is currently working with the landowner groups and other stakeholders to update this particular letter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Access to the Future Fund

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago the government announced the access to the future fund, a projected $3 billion pool of cash to support innovation and excellence in postsecondary education. It is a fine idea even if it is just a watered-down rip-off of Alberta Liberal policy. However, since the fund was established, the program has been mired in confusion. We know from government reports that grants totalling $71.8 million have met eligibility criteria, but we have no way of knowing how much has been matched because we hear nothing from the ministry about the fund. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology my first question is simply this: in the spirit of openness and transparency, what is going on with the access to the future fund?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say in the spirit of openness and transparency that the hon. member might mention that the $71.8 million number he got, he got from our department due to a written request that he gave us, which I'm more than happy to bring forward to the House.

Yes, we've matched a number of donations that were put in play prior to the access to the future fund terms of reference being put out there. We now have the council, which has developed the framework and the formula where each institution in this province can share in that access to the future fund and the amount of dollars that are coming off it every year. The generosity of Albertans, as has been said in this House many times, has been overwhelming, and we're very, very appreciative.

Mr. Tougas: Well, Mr. Speaker, across the province there's growing frustration with the administration of the fund. The government only began the process of matching the $37 million donation by the Mactaggart family for the University of Alberta after Cécile Mactaggart shamed the government into action, and even then it is not using the access to the future fund money to do so. During a visit I paid to a postsecondary institution, a high-ranking administrator told me that the bureaucracy surrounding the fund is ridiculous. Is the minister of advanced education worried that donations may start to dry up if the government doesn't get its act together?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would love to know who the person was in that institution who felt that it was so bureaucratic. [interjections] They may be interested in the answer, seeing as they asked the question.

In spite of that, I don't believe that the council has made it onerous on any of the institutions as to how they would match over an ongoing basis. They all are aware of the formula that we're using, they're all aware of the amount of dollars that they have available to match donations, and they are all aware of where those donations are coming from and going to.

Mr. Tougas: Mr. Speaker, some postsecondary institutions in Alberta are training students on equipment that is not only older than the students but in some cases even older than the instructors. Donations of state-of-the-art equipment worth millions of dollars are not eligible for access to the future matching funds. Will the minister commit here and now to changing the regulations regarding the access to the future fund to allow for matching funds over and above the necessary stable base funding for unique donations of equipment?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're open to any of those types of ideas as well as looking at every donation on an individual basis with the institutions, but I must point out, too, that the whole idea is to provide access. That means access for seats for students. The ongoing operating costs of those seats is of concern not only to the government but also to the students. We want to ensure that those spots are available for the long term. We are working on a capital plan with the institutions to replace equipment, to replace buildings, to replace spaces, for deferred maintenance, to do all of those things with them on the capital side.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want their name to be attached to helping students get their education, their postsecondary education. We want to help them do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

CNRL Bonnyville Upgrader Project Delay

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has experienced extraordinary growth in the last few years. Much of this growth is from the unprecedented development and investment in the oil sands industry. However, Canadian Natural Resources Limited recently announced that its plans to build an upgrader to serve its in situ projects in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake area have been put on hold. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Mr. Minister, was CNRL's decision due to changes in provincial and/or federal government policies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Certainly, relative to the member's question this government does have a plan to manage growth pressure and to build a stronger Alberta, and we will be doing that. CNRL and other major players with respect to the hydrocarbon industry in this province are part of that growth and part of that strength. We have not done anything with respect to changing CNRL's plans. As you know, businesses will continue to assess their position in the marketplace, and CNRL's position here is quite simply that. This is a delay in a project. This project is not cancelled.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what impact does a delay like this have on the province's value-added strategy?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, our value-added strategy is alive and well and in place. We will continue to work with the assumption in mind that we are going to provide for Albertans continued opportunities in value-added. But in this particular case, this oil that was going to be upgraded or is going to be upgraded at some point in time by CNRL is partly oil that's being shipped out of the province now, partly new oil. It's very difficult to say at this point in time whether or not this has an impact on our ongoing plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the minister concerned that other oil sands operators may also delay their projects?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, most certainly it's a concern for our government and all Albertans, I think. When we look at the development that the province is faced with, the economic ramifications of any of these major projects delaying, moving, being extended, of course there is some concern, but I do believe that as we move forward with these and other projects, Albertans and the industry players in the province will find that this is indeed globally the best place to invest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like the tobacco industry, those with financial interests in increasing carbon emissions in the province, including this government, have misrepresented and cast doubt on the science and the cause of climate change. To understand why, follow the money. With overwhelming public pressure and evidence this government now appears to have accepted some aspects of the science relating to carbon emissions as the culprit, but conflicting messages continue. To the Environment minister: has this government accepted the science that carbon emissions are the major cause of climate change?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think the government has been very clear in the introduction of Bill 3 that we take the issue of climate change very seriously. It is widely agreed upon by the scientific community that mankind has had a significant impact on climate change. The world has always changed, will always change, but I think it's fair to say that this government accepts that at least part of that change is the result of human involvement.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government over the past decade has spent millions of public dollars denying and misinforming the public about the cause and consequences of climate change and delaying responsible actions. Experts have indicated that the cost of carbon-neutral development in the tar sands, for example, is only $3 to $5 a barrel. To the environment minister: will the minister fully commit to real reductions rather than false intensity targets for carbon emissions in the province?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. Bill 3 talks about very real reductions, talks about a 12 per cent reduction on a facility-by-facility basis. What it doesn't do, and what this government is not prepared to do, is restrict the development and restrict the ability of the industry to grow.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The overall emissions in Alberta are predicted to go up to 70 per cent higher than 1990 levels as a result of this approach to climate change reduction. Industry itself has said that intensity targets are not helpful to guide good business planning. Again to the Environment minister: when are we going to see absolute limits and timelines to emissions rather than these intensity targets?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, our plan is a plan that recognizes that the technology that needs to be in place in order for those hard caps to be implemented is not fully developed yet. The reason why we have introduced this legislation is to facilitate the development of that technology and to facilitate the introduction of that new technology on a project-by-project basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

User Fees in Provincial Parks

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This government seems ready to nickel and dime working Albertans again with higher park fees at the same time that they record another multibillion dollar surplus. Last week the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture said that he wouldn't introduce day fees for parks but then admitted that he's waiting to hear from the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Why would everyday Albertans be asked to swallow higher park fees when our provincial coffers are overflowing and the public actually owns these parks in the first place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly, the question is a very, very important one and one that is critical to each and every individual that uses our parks. If the member would have listened last week, I thought I was very, very clear that we are certainly not contemplating any fees whatsoever for day use or use to access our trails within our parks.

Mr. Eggen: The 2004 Alberta recreation survey showed that 90 per cent of Albertans think that parks would improve their quality of life and bring their families together, but 42 per cent said that they might not do so if the cost of camping was too high. We saw what happened in Elk Island national park. When expensive day fees were introduced, people stopped visiting. I'd like to ask the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development then: why might you be considering higher park fees when your own survey shows that doing so will in fact keep working families away from the parks?

Dr. Morton: We may have to invest in some hearing aids, Mr. Speaker, for the other side there. I think the minister of parks made it quite clear that he is not contemplating any increase in user fees for provincial parks. But I would say that I thought, generally, that the opposition parties were interested in the land-use framework, which Premier Stelmach is continuing and has given me responsibility for. We're into new times. New times call for new thinking, fresh thinking, and new solutions. When it comes to land use, that's the approach I will take.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My constituents would then be paying twice for parks: once through their taxes and again through private operators at provincial campgrounds. Thirty per cent of Albertans have told the government that private operation of public campgrounds is a reason not to visit; 42 per cent say that the cost is too high already. So I'd ask the same minister: will the minister please commit to scrapping park fees and, as part of the land-use framework, bring parks back into the public fold?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think that question is more appropriate to submit to me rather than the minister of sustainable resources.

Certainly, there are existing costs in individual parks. We've got individuals that use firewood, for instance. We've got individuals that use sewers. We've got individuals that might use power. For those that camp overnight and that will use those services and incur those costs, we would expect them to cover those particular costs. There are no fees for anyone to use our day facilities or group areas as well as our trails within the parks.

Waste-water Discharge into Bow River

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's Environmental Appeal Board recently gave the town of Strathmore the green light to temporarily allow Strathmore to release its treated waste water into the Bow River. Residents of the Siksika Nation who are downstream of the treated waste-water release are concerned that the release will contaminate their drinking water supplies. So my question is to the Minister of Environment. Why is the town of Strathmore being permitted to dump its waste water into the Bow River if the Environment Appeal Board has yet to issue its final decision on the appeal?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out a couple things that are included in the preamble to the question. First of all, this issue deals with treated waste water from the town of Strathmore, and secondly, the Environmental Appeal Board is considering whether or not the decision of Alberta Environment should be upheld or turned down. For that reason it's difficult for me to get into the specifics on this case but comment more in general terms.

In that regard, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that there were conditions that were put on this application that would apply to any application. Those conditions apply, including the time that the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is again to the Minister of Environment. How can the Siksika Nation residents be sure that the town of Strathmore will safely manage the treated waste water that's being put into the Bow River?

Thank you.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was explaining that the conditions that were applied are in place and will stay in place even during the stay that the appeal board put in place. Until they deal with this from a temporary perspective, Alberta Environment will work with the town of Strathmore and ensure that there is ongoing monitoring of both the discharge and the river to ensure that the terms of that discharge are upheld.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. How can the government be sure that this waste-water disposal in general doesn't impact the water supplies of other downstream communities throughout Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has some of the highest water and waste-water standards in the country, and the reason is included in the question: because practically everyone in Alberta lives downstream from someone else. If we don't have adequate protection to ensure that the discharge from one municipality doesn't adversely affect their downstream neighbours, we will have a great cause for concern.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his report on P3 financing the Auditor General highlighted a number of concerns. The long-term debt commitments made under such agreements are only of value if we are guaranteed not to pay any more than planned. Last week in the House the Premier pointed to the southeast Edmonton ring road as a prime example of what P3 financing could do. Surprisingly enough, I couldn't agree more. In the 2005-06 annual report for the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation, page 103, we see that the P3-financed southeast ring road was $34.6 million overbudget for that year. Could the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation please explain why these cost overruns occurred?

2:10

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that I didn't read the '05-06 Auditor General's report on that portion of the ring road, so I will have to get back to the hon. member with that answer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the government announced last month that the northeast Calgary ring road would finally be built, again through a P3 initiative. As a Calgary MLA I know as well as anyone that the ring road is needed. Nevertheless, given the cost overruns mentioned just now in the Edmonton project, $34.6 million, what can the minister offer to assure Albertans that they'll not be paying far more money than budgeted for a road they won't even own now?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I really have a hard time. I think this hon. member is speaking through both sides. I don't think he even wants a ring road in Calgary, to tell you the truth. He's just trying to stir up a little trouble here. But I will say that the actual ring road in Calgary will be done two years ahead of schedule than if we would have done it the conventional way, and we are going to have savings of hundreds of millions of dollars on that road.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I thank the minister for getting on the record in Hansard on the hundreds of millions of dollars that will be saved for my Calgarians, who desperately need that ring road.

What evidence, what cost does this government need before it will cease and desist with this P3 financing?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we will never cease and desist with this P3 financing because we need different alternatives to be able to handle the pressures that we have in this province, to handle the growth pressures because of our booming economy and the prosperity that we have in this province.

Electricity Line between Edmonton and Calgary

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Energy and Utilities Board postponed its hearings for a month regarding a permit to construct and license and operate a 500-kilowatt line between Edmonton and Calgary. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister advise the members of this Assembly about the cause for this delay?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly I can advise on the cause of the delay. Number one, as the member has pointed out, this particular matter is currently in front of the EUB, and there has been a stay, a delay in the hearings because they're taking into consideration the needs identification document that was previously approved with respect to the issue. So while they prepare their legal counsel to address the needs identification document in these hearings, there's been a delay of approximately one month.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. My constituents and I are concerned that this transmission project may not go ahead to meet the electricity needs of all of southern Alberta. Is there a potential that this project may not go ahead?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, this government has a plan to provide safe and secure communities for Albertans. Certainly, a robust and secure transmission grid, the backbone of the electrical system in the province of Alberta, is absolutely necessary to provide the safe and reliable communities that we have in our plan. I would suggest that significant generation has come online recently in the province of Alberta, and we certainly need new transmission to accommodate that.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplemental is to the same minister. I have also heard from landowners concerning the development of this infrastructure on their land. Can the minister advise me how their concerns are being taken into account?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As these hearings continue, the EUB will continue to hear evidence from interveners, from communities, and also from the applicants of this particular project. I think that the EUB has done a very good job with respect to looking at this situation. They have adjusted the hearing times and adjusted the hearing dates, and currently what you see in front of you is another responsible move by the EUB to address the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard government respond and express its dismay at children as young as 12 being employed in Alberta bars. However, the same government allows children down to age 12 to work in restaurants despite recommendations by the International Labour Organization that paid employment be restricted for children under 15. My question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Can the minister please tell us why the government appears to be worried about children's safety and well-being in one instance but not in another?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's a very good question relative to the use of children in any labour situation. Simply put, there is a process for children to engage in the workplace provided several criteria are met. Thus far over 80 establishments, restaurants predominantly, have engaged children in circumstances where they can be greeters, where they can do some bussing of tables, where they are, in fact, in a situation where predominantly we have food service and where parents have signed consent. It's a fairly involved process of application so that they are permitted to have children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While other provinces are struggling to keep children focused on academics until they finish high school, Alberta allows children to work when they are barely out of elementary school. Working at adult-type jobs has been associated with higher rates of dropout, low school performance, and poor attendance records. To the minister: will addressing Alberta's labour shortage sacrifice the academic success and well-being of Alberta's children?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a grandparent and a former parent one cannot generalize. It might well be of harm to some children if, in fact, they are working too much, if they are not academically inclined. That's something for the Minister of Education to comment on. What I can state is that there are very definite parameters around where and when children can work. It does involve significant parent monitoring of the capacity of that child to engage in any kind of labour.

I would suspect that the hon. member opposite that asked this question would be of the same mind I am. My children worked in delivering papers but, until they were 15 years of age, very little else.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you. The 2005 Alberta employment standards review apparently gathered community input about work standards in our province, including views about children 12 and up working in restaurants. Years have passed, and the responses to this survey are still hidden from the public's view. Will the minister do the right thing and commit to releasing the results of this survey so that we can judge for ourselves what Albertans think about this issue?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, relative to the employment standards review I would encourage the hon. member that we have more information to come out during the spring session. I'm not aware of what particular survey the hon. member is referencing, but I will consult with him later, determine what it is, and it might well be some of the information we'll provide.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Road Maintenance on Alexis Reserve

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. The Alexis First Nation within Whitecourt-St. Anne has some serious safety and maintenance issues on the main road that leads into the band off highway 43. Mr. Speaker, you're well aware of this; this used to be in your constituency. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Is the minister aware of any programs that the Alexis First Nation can apply for that would help cover the costs of road repair and upgrading on the reserve?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, infrastructure on federal First Nations land falls under the responsibility of the federal government. Infrastructure funding and programs for First Nations communities, including Alexis First Nation, are the responsibility of the federal government. Highway 43 does pass through the northeastern section of the Alexis First Nations, and we maintain and operate that. We also maintain and operate highways 765 and 627 to the south of the reserve. But local roads are actually the responsibility of the federal government. We would hope that the Alexis would get together with them and make sure that their safety concerns are addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that answer, I will ask the minister of international and aboriginal affairs to comment. Is there a role for his department to assist the Alexis band and my constituents on this issue? It's hard to get the federal government to the table to take responsibility.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In spring, when there's breakup, road conditions are traditionally worse. I want to assure the hon. member that if there's any role we can play in partnering with neighbours, in partnering with the federal government to assist towards this important safety issue, it will be my pleasure to assist in any way I can.

2:20

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 94 questions and answers today. Just a reminder again that it's inappropriate in the question – well, it's inappropriate at any time – to mention the name of individuals such as occurred once today. That's a nice little reminder.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of 32 grade 10 students from Bellerose composite high school in St. Albert. They are a group of very intelligent young people who are the future of our province. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Marc Swerda, Ms Kelsey Meades, and Mr. Mark Puffer. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Bill 202
Consumer Advocate Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act.

The drive behind or motive for this bill can be summarized in one argument, that consumers in this province, particularly in this kind of overheated market we're experiencing, need some degree of added protection against unfair market practices. I also think that the debate that ensues should as well focus on this question: what can we do to protect, educate, and assist consumers?

Market dynamics and competition usually help maintain a certain level of fairness where the interests of business and those of consumers and their rights are balanced. However, at times some, driven by voraciousness or greed, take advantage of consumers. The examples are numerous. How many times did you, Mr. Speaker, hear from your constituents that they were ripped off? How many times did the Premier or the Government House Leader or the Minister of Justice or the minister responsible for Service Alberta hear from their constituents that they were lied to or deceived? How many times did people tell the hon. members of this Assembly that they were, quote, taken for a ride? We all receive these complaints, and we all do what we can to refer people in the right direction. But sometimes these Albertans do not really have anywhere to go. They have no recourse, and the crooks cackle all the way to their banks at our expense.

What is an unfair market practice? What is this bill trying to address? Take price-fixing, Mr. Speaker, price-gouging, collusion, false advertising, or fraud. Ask people if they're concerned about fairness in the marketplace, and see which answer you get.

This bill establishes an officer of the Legislature, a consumer advocate, a market watchdog, whose mandate will be to advocate on behalf of consumers and defend their interests and rights. Consumers need a voice, and they need protection. They need someone in their corner with more than a wet towel or a spit bucket, someone who can rush to their aid if they need assistance righting a wrong. What we have now is not strong enough, and the current boom is unique. Consumer tip sheets on the Service Alberta website just don't cut it anymore.

Instead, I am proposing an advocate who will work closely with this Assembly, with the provincial government and its various departments and agencies, with fair trading directors and Service Alberta investigators, and with consumer organizations. The mandate will include a review of all legislation pertaining to consumer protection with the purpose of suggesting to the Assembly how these laws can be strengthened, how we can seal any loopholes and toughen our stance on this increasingly alarming trend in our marketplace.

The consumer advocate will also, one, assess the role and effectiveness of our province's Utilities Consumer Advocate; two, initiate, recommend, or undertake programs designed to promote the interests of Alberta consumers; three, operate a publicly accessible database of consumer complaints, the findings of the investigations, and details regarding any administrative orders that have been rendered, charges that have been laid, or fines which were levied, something like the Consumer Beware database in the province of Ontario; and, four, conduct consumer protection related research and submit an annual report to this Assembly, an annual market, health, and fairness assessment, a state of consumer protection, if you will. He or she will even provide us with statistics respecting things such as rent, utility costs, auto insurance rates, retail gasoline prices, et cetera, in this province as compared to other Canadian jurisdictions.

The advocate will have the power to investigate concerns or issues on his or her initiative but also on the recommendation or referral by or from the Legislature or any of its committees, a cabinet minister, or the Premier, for that matter. I trust that our consumer advocate will be kept really busy monitoring and investigating to ensure fairness and compliance.

Examples? There are numerous examples, Mr. Speaker, and the severity, gravity, and frequency all seem to be getting out of hand, escalating, and spreading. Take rent gouging. The Alberta Liberal caucus knows that landlords are for the most part responsible and fair. Some, however, go beyond what is a reasonable and justified rent increase to what can be easily classified as rent gouging or robbery. Someone has to be able to stop this practice. When rent increases over the period 1995 to 2004 have only averaged about 3.8 per cent annually and now people are being asked to fork over 35 or 40 per cent more for the same unit they have lived in for years and with no significant improvements or upgrades, then something is wrong. When rent goes up twice a year, as the law currently permits, or more often, which is a punishable offence, then tenants have a reason to complain and scream in despair and disgust.

Turning apartments into condos and kicking tenants out: that's another one. The hon. Member for Vermillion-Lloydminster, in an answer given in question period on March 15, 2007, indicated that tenants can take landlords to court if landlords breach the Residential Tenancies Act. Well, small claims court costs money: $100 if the amount is less than $7,500 or $200 if the amount is between $7,500 and $25,000. Many low-income tenants can't even afford this fee or the time requirement for a claim to move through this process, between their looking for a new place to live and trying to make ends meet, perhaps even working two or three jobs just to survive.

Rent gouging is also not as clearly defined as an offence under the Residential Tenancies Act because there is no maximum or ceiling. So these court challenges are likely also going to ultimately fail. Furthermore, one day my constituency office phoned the residential tenancies dispute resolution service here in Edmonton to chat, and the folks there actually were really clear that their mandate does not cover dealing with outrageous rent increases.

Take auto insurance. Why are Alberta drivers paying some of the highest rates in Canada? Why are the auto insurance companies hesitant to tell us how much money they make in profit each year? Why doesn't our provincial government reintroduce some form of public auto insurance? Why isn't insurance gouging vigorously investigated and acted upon? Also, pardon the ignorant question, Mr. Speaker: why do people with bad driving records seem to get more of a rate cut than those with perfect driving histories? I think the answer is simple. It's that these people represent a smaller number of customers, so giving them a more favourable rate won't hurt the company's bottom line. But it's not fair to the hundreds of thousands of good drivers in this province.

Take people buying new homes. The builder agrees in writing to a certain price then comes around and claims prices for supplies and labour went up, offers to refund the down payment or cancel the contract, knowing quite well that someone else will be more than happy to buy this very property at the increased price in this crazy housing market. Shouldn't companies stick to their contractual agreements? That is the question.

Take retail gasoline. Pump prices jump up so efficiently when the wholesale price for crude moves upward, but gas stations drag and stall before their prices are lowered, sometimes taking days after the wholesale price goes down. Motorists need an answer to this question. Also, why are we paying more here for gasoline than places in Ontario, for example? Isn't Alberta the gulf state of Canada? Is it simply supply and demand, or is there some inclination here to charge what you can get because no one will so much as raise a finger to question you? Don't tell me that it is because we don't refine here, because neither does Ontario. They sometimes even buy their products from Europe and still pay less.

Take electricity and natural gas prices after deregulation. Boy, was that a bad decision. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has statistics and calculations proving how much residential, commercial, and industrial consumers in Alberta were ripped off. Then you add another layer, Mr. Speaker. Take the people who do the marketing for natural gas and electricity. We have all heard horror stories there. These are just some examples, and I know that other colleagues can list a few more.

Again, members of this Assembly need only ask themselves if they're happy and satisfied with the status quo. They can choose not to support this idea if they truly believe that consumers don't need any extra protection and that it is not the government's responsibility to protect and assist them. If, however, you agree that something needs to be done – and I hope that most of you will – then let's send this message together, that Alberta consumers will now have a new ally and that unfair market practices will be dealt with swiftly and strongly. If you have other ideas or suggestions and would like to put them forward in Committee of the Whole, I am definitely open and willing to work with all of you.

I urge all hon. members to support Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act. Protecting consumers is a priority for me, Mr. Speaker, and for the entire Alberta Liberal caucus. It should be for all members of this esteemed Assembly as well. This is not a partisan issue; this is about people.

I thank you for this opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments. As far as the speech goes, I've agreed with almost everything the member said. We have problems with rent, and we have problems with car insurance and others. When I look through it, I think it's in the enforcement, not that we need to create another position. That's what I think the problem is. Let's be honest. If we're going to deal with the rising rents and the gouging that's going on – and we know about it; I was on the committee, and I've heard a lot about it – there's only one way to do it. An advocate can't do much about it. It has to be rent guidelines brought in by the provincial government. If we're going to deal with car insurance, the places where it's the lowest is where they have public auto insurance. That's what we have to do.

It's policy changes that we have to do, and I honestly don't think that creating another position is really going to solve the problems that the member so ably talked about. It seems that in policy formation, with the Liberals it's either an endowment fund or another advocate laid out.

Mr. MacDonald: You're just jealous.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. That's it. I'm jealous. I'm really jealous, hon. member.

The point I'd make is that I don't think it's the fact that we don't have the laws now. When I look at a comparison between the two, what the hon. member is bringing in as a consumer advocate and what Service Alberta has, I look at the statutes to be covered: in Bill 202, the Fair Trading Act; Service Alberta, the Fair Trading Act. In the Consumer Advocate Act, Residential Tenancies Act; Service Alberta, Residential Tenancies Act. In the Consumer Advocate Act: Natural Gas Price Protection Act, Real Estate Act, utilities consumer act, other acts deemed necessary. Well, all of these acts are basically there.

Punitive capability. In Bill 202 that the member is bringing forward: make recommendations and comments on issues presented. No punitive capability. In other words, you have to have the stick along with the carrot, as far as I'm concerned. In Service Alberta they have warnings, but they can prosecute, so it's actually a little stronger. Can they accept complaints from the public? Yes in both cases.

The other point that I would make, though, is that probably the most valuable suggestion that comes from this bill is that it does recommend the establishment of a publicly accessible database of consumer complaints. I think that would be something that Service Alberta could do. I think that would be useful, to be able to have that sort of information here.

Again, I commend the member for bringing forward some important issues, but I don't think, unless we're willing to actually tackle these things in a serious way, that setting up another advocate will necessarily do anything different. I believe the laws are there in Service Alberta if we want to enforce them, and I think that that's where the problem lies. Probably what I would suggest is that Service Alberta take the positive thing that I mentioned and set up a publicly accessible database of consumer complaints.

Mr. Speaker, I guess I'm saying: very good intentions, and it's good that we're debating this. Things are needed here because there are problems, but I would say that it's more an enforcement of what we already have that we should be looking at.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, normally we'd try and get an exchange going. If there is no additional hon. member who will capture my attention, I will then recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung for introducing something new, which I think was badly needed because I'm hearing lots of complaints. Maybe for some people it's minor complaints from the region, but there are complaints about some agencies, some big companies.

The highlight of this bill is to create the position of a consumer advocate, an officer of the Legislative Assembly, establish his mandate as the consumer advocate or any mechanism. I know that the government has a sort of information centre to respond to thousands of complaints, but if we established a consumer advocate, it might help to reduce the burden in this department when there are lots of complaints.

This bill also highlights and establishes the duties and powers of the consumer advocate. Basically, the purpose of this bill is to improve upon Alberta's existing consumer protection legislation.

The creation of the consumer advocate represents the renewed focus on consumer rights in Alberta. The bill speaks to and magnifies the importance of strong consumer protection.

Really, I think it's a very good idea, a very good bill. If needed, we can always amend a few things for the betterment of Albertans because we are all elected to serve Albertans. Lots of people are concerned about this issue, and we should address this issue and take it very seriously.

Now I would like to talk a little bit about the impact of the establishment of an officer of the Leg. whose sole responsibility is representing the rights and interests of Alberta consumers, the strengthening of Alberta's current consumer protection legislation. Mr. Speaker, what we have right now, as I already mentioned, is Alberta government services, now under the Ministry of Service Alberta, that has a consumer information centre which handles, I think, more than a hundred thousand inquiries from Albertans annually. The centre provides information on topics including landlord/tenant disputes, Internet purchasing, and how to lodge a consumer complaint. According to the Alberta government website, "the Office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate (UCA) works to ensure Alberta consumers have the information, representation and protection they need in Alberta's restructured electricity and natural gas markets."

Mr. Speaker, my constituents call me many times with their problems. Suppose they are renting properties – an apartment or condominium or subsidized home – sometimes the landlord has increased the rent once a year or maybe two or three times a year. Sometimes they ask for minor repairs, and there is nobody to listen to them. Lots of people don't know where to go, and maybe, you know, they just pick up the phone sometimes. They call their MLA's office, and mostly the assistants are there. They call some departments, and the departments just receive the message. It takes lots of time, delays after delays.

If somebody owns a condominium, there are lots of restrictions. They have their own condo rules. Even though they have condominium management, they are restricted to obeying the rules there. Still, it is sometimes so complicated that it's hard for elected representatives to answer those questions. The only solution for elected representatives like all of us is to approach the different departments, and that's what they are doing. But there is delay. So to reduce the burden of delay, I think this is a good idea. I commend the hon. member for taking the initiative and, you know, introducing this bill, which was badly needed.

My personal experience, being that my background is as a real estate agent, is that lots of realtors have many problems, whether their clients are buying a house or selling properties, when they write those complicated forms. Even the realtors are fully aware of lots of concerns. Still, you know, they're not lawyers. So if there's even a small error in the forms, sometimes RECA, the real estate people, take action against the realtors. It makes it even more complicated. You know, they have to go to the board sometimes to face complaints there. Those forms are sometimes complicated.

Another thing I want to discuss is that on one side there's a real estate board, RECA, and they have their own act. There's the Fair Trading Act, whatever you call it. There's the federal Competition Act as well. I think most of us might have heard the name of a new company, ComFree. I'm not taking anybody's side, you know, just trying to draw the attention of this House a little bit to a story from both sides. So ComFree is like an advertising company. They are not a real estate company. Like, the real estate board has their own board, their own ethics. They abide by the rules, and all of the realtors upgrade their education. They have to spend certain hours every two years or year, whatever. But this new company: their background is like just advertising, and when they advertise on the Internet, sometimes they mention the words "real estate" or sometimes they write "MLS," which belongs to the real estate board. What they sometimes advertise on the website is . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but I must now recognize another member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to joint the debate on Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act, brought forth by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. The bill aims to establish a consumer advocate who would be an officer of the Assembly funded by the Alberta government. The proposed advocate would be mandated to review Alberta's consumer protection statutes; assess the role and effectiveness of the Utilities Consumer Advocate; publish a report with recommendations; represent the rights, interests, and viewpoints of consumers in Alberta; receive, review, and investigate consumer complaints regarding any act or omission on the part of the Utilities Consumer Advocate or the director of fair trading; and initiate, recommend, or undertake programs designed to promote the interests of Alberta consumers.

Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta has been actively addressing consumer issues for many years. The government was an advocate for consumers even before the ministry of consumer affairs was created in 1973. Currently Alberta consumers are very ably represented by the consumer protection branch of the Department of Service Alberta. The department administers several pieces of legislation which help protect the rights of consumers, such as the Fair Trading Act and the personal information act. Additional pieces of related legislation: the Unconscionable Transactions Act, administered by the Department of Justice, and the Gas Utilities Act, administered by the Department of Energy.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta also has established the Information and Privacy Commissioner and Utilities Consumer Advocate. These offices work to protect consumers. The private sector is also very active in addressing consumer protection. There are many not-for-profit and industry groups which work to ensure that consumers receive fair and equitable treatment. Between the dedication of the federal and provincial governments and the private sector, there are a myriad of resources for consumers with grievances.

Mr. Speaker, of the many measures the Alberta government has set in place to protect consumers, I would like to specifically speak to the consumer protection branch. This branch's primary responsibility is to conduct investigations upon the receipt of a complaint from consumers, industry, or a competing business. When the consumer protection branch receives a complaint, it reviews the allegation to determine if there are grounds for an investigation. If it is determined that there are reasonable grounds to proceed, the case is assigned to an investigator for further study. Investigators have the authority to make any inquiries necessary to determine the facts surrounding a consumer complaint. Depending on the legislation that the complaint falls under, the investigator may also enter a business and demand that its employees produce and provide copies of relevant documentation.

When an investigation is concluded, the investigator makes recommendations of the appropriate actions to remedy the situation. If wrongdoing is found, the consumer protection branch may reprimand the business, place restrictions on it, apply to the appropriate regulatory agency to have the business's licence cancelled or suspended, order the business to stop certain practices, order it to provide compensation – that's only for complaints falling under certain legislation – publish the investigation's findings, or refer the matter to the courts for prosecution. Furthermore, an investigator has the authority to apply directly to the courts for a judgment and to initiate civil proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to its investigative capacity the consumer protection branch also works to educate Albertans in the private sector by publishing various tipsheets, running an information service, and rewarding organizations which promote fairness in the marketplace with the Alberta consumer champion awards.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude with a brief overview of the 1999 Fair Trading Act. The Fair Trading Act outlines the obligations of businesses to consumers, defines fair and unfair practices for pricing, marketing, and collections, regulates credit, and mandates penalties and remedies for noncompliance.

Under section 6(1.1) of the act "it is an offence for a supplier to engage in an unfair practice." Some examples of unfair practice include exerting undue pressure or influence on a consumer, taking advantage of a consumer's inability to understand the nature of a transaction, using exaggeration, innuendo, or ambiguity to misrepresent a material fact, charging a price for goods or services that exceeds an estimate given to the consumer by more than 10 per cent without the consumer's consent, and including terms in a transaction that are harsh, oppressive, or one sided.

Section 6(4) of the Fair Trading Act also defines unfair practices with respect to marketing and advertising. Prohibited practices include doing or saying anything that might reasonably mislead a consumer, misrepresenting the quality, ingredients, or characteristics of goods and services, representing used or deteriorated goods as new, claiming that a specific part or repair is desirable if it is not, and falsely using an objective format such as an editorial to market goods or services.

Mr. Speaker, any person who violates the Fair Trading Act or its regulations is subject to imprisonment for up to two years. In addition to this, they may be the subject of a fine of up to $100,000 or three times the amount they obtained as a result of illegal actions, whichever is greater. This is a significantly more aggressive penalty than can be found in any other Canadian jurisdiction.

As you can see from these two measures, the Alberta government is strongly committed to ensuring that Alberta consumers are adequately protected. Given the large number of measures in place to protect Alberta consumers from unfair practices, I urge Members of this Legislative Assembly to ask themselves if another piece of legislation, accompanied by another office, is required. Even though they are asking for one more officer, that officer will then have to be supported by a large supporting administrative staff.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, then Battle River-Wainwright and Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act. [some applause] Thank you. Thank you. Hold your applause.

I think this is a valuable piece of legislation. I intend to speak over the next few minutes very much in favour of it. It was interesting to listen to my colleague from Calgary-Hays as he read through some prepared notes on what current consumer protection legislation in the province of Alberta purports to do. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, there is what we say, and then there is what we do. If what we say is not backed up by what we do, then what we say isn't worth the paper that it's printed on.

I don't think that what the Member for Calgary-Hays had to share with the House here will be a tremendous amount of comfort or encouragement to the close to 60 residents of the assisted-living units at Holy Cross Manor in Calgary-Currie who were informed quite out of the blue a few weeks ago that their rent is going up on average 40 per cent on June 1, when their leases come up for renewal. They've been in that facility for a year. In fact, a couple of them told me that when they considered signing the lease in the Holy Cross Manor, they went so far as to ask a year ago what kind of increases they might be facing when their lease came up for renewal, and they were assured that it wouldn't be anything significant.

Well, I don't care if you're on a fixed income or you just won the lottery or you just struck oil. A 40 per cent increase like that is a pretty significant increase to your costs. I don't think that the remarks of my colleague from Calgary-Hays about existing legislation to protect consumers in this province are going to be of much comfort either to all of the people my office has helped find new accommodation in Calgary-Currie, where the average house price is about $635,000 now, as they have become victims of economic evictions since we were here last spring. It's been a very, very interesting about 10 months since May of last year in our office as we have dealt with case after case after case of tenants, renters who were suddenly faced with a doubling or near tripling of their rent.

Interestingly, just on Thursday I was speaking to a woman who runs some retail outlets, a couple of them, in various parts of Calgary, who has prided herself on paying her staff over the years at least $2 or more above minimum wage, whatever it was at the time, encouraging them to stay, to work full time, to build relationships with the clientele, get to know the product, that sort of thing. "Makes for a better employee," she says. But it's getting tougher and tougher and tougher because even at a couple of dollars an hour above minimum wage, you know, that's not enough to afford to buy a house in Calgary now or in Edmonton or Fort McMurray or Grande Prairie or just about anywhere else in this province. In fact, in the big cities in this province you need a family income of $80,000 now to carry a house based on the average house prices that we've seen this year.

But back to rental units. She told me about one long-serving employee, a single mother who's been working for her now for a number of years and been very responsibly going to work, paying the bills, raising the child, et cetera, et cetera, and is now in a panic because she just got notification that her rent is going up from about $900 a month to $2,500 a month. Mr. Speaker, I wish I could tell you that this is an isolated case, but I can't because it's happening all over my constituency and not just in my constituency. It's happening all over Calgary, all over Edmonton, at least in the core areas, where most renters live. These kinds of rent increases are going on all the time.

We've dug up some statistics, Mr. Speaker, about rent increases that show, for instance, that over the past 12 months the average increase for rented accommodation across the nation was 1.3 per cent, and in Alberta it was 3.9 per cent. I don't think many people would say that those numbers in and of themselves are problematic except to note that rents are going up three times as much in Alberta as they are in the other nine provinces and through the territories.

But within that 3.9 per cent we have figures for Calgary and Edmonton and Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie that show rents increasing much faster than that, and within those figures we have many, many cases, dozens, hundreds of cases of rents being doubled and tripled and going up 250 per cent in a particularly odious little twist on things because, you know, it takes six months to get rid of the tenant if you want to turn that rental unit into a condominium. The law in this province says that you must give the tenant six months' notice, but it only takes three months to put that individual's rent up by whatever you want.

You're allowed two rent increases a year in this province, and there's no upper limit to how high you can put it. So we've had a case, at least – well, we've had several cases that I'm aware of – in my constituency of usually new owners of the same tired, old building, where the suites have been affordable for years because, admittedly, not much money has been put into them, but at least they've been affordable suites. The renters have come home from work to find two notices on their door, one saying that they're to be out in six months to make way for condo conversion. We've had as many rental units converted to condominiums in the past year in Calgary, for instance, as in the previous 10 years combined. The figures, I think, are not that different for Edmonton, and I suspect that they'll be much the same by the end of this year. So they've got the one notice saying, "You're out in six months unless you want to buy your unit" and right beside it another memo from the management office saying, "And, by the way, in three months' time we're increasing your rent from, oh, $595 to $2,000 a month." That is a very effective way, Mr. Speaker, of getting somebody you want to get rid of out in half the time that the law requires.

I won't take up too much more of the House's time. [some applause] I won't be allowed to, I think. Save your applause, as I said before.

The point here is that the protection that we have for consumers and rent gouging of the sort that has gone on in this province over the last 12 months is a classic example of this. The consumer protection legislation that we have in this province is not being sufficiently enforced and may not even be, as it's worded, sufficiently enforceable.

While the Member for Calgary-Hays or any other of the members of the government side of the House can stand and fill their entire 10-minute allotment of debate time reading government legislation and reading government regulations to us, people are falling through the cracks in droves in this province. They are being hurt, and this government is not standing up for their protection. Our role as legislators in this province is to level the playing field and make sure everybody obeys the rules. If they don't, we put on the striped shirts and we card them. That's what we're supposed to do, but it's been a long time since we've done that. If nothing else, Bill 202 seeks to shine the spotlight on that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, then Battle River-Wainwright and Lethbridge-East. [some applause]

Mr. Dunford: Seems I have a fan. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few comments on Bill 202, but because we're dealing with the principle of the bill, I won't take too long. Also, I'm not in the habit of circulating Hansard to my constituents, so it wouldn't be necessary to have extensive rhetoric in there just to show that I might be doing something while I'm here.

The bill is one of these quiet bills. When you first look at it, you think: "Well, gee. I think we could probably support something like that. Why wouldn't we?" Then, of course, we start to look at it, and we start to think about it, and we start to think about where it came from. It's being put forward by a Liberal member. Now, what would that normally mean in the political realms that we're used to dealing with? It usually means duplication. It usually means additional cost. I think that that is what is proposed here if we were to accept this bill. So I for one, as a free-voting member of this Assembly, want to indicate to you that I'll be voting against this bill.

One of the other comments, though, that I want to make before I sit down: I have friends and acquaintances who are involved in the formal consumer advocacy situation that happens here in Alberta and through extension, really, in every province in this country. All of them are upstanding citizens. They're serious about what they do. They take concerns of consumers to heart. They lobby municipal governments. They lobby and actually boycott at times different retailers. They, of course, have come to me as a member of the Legislature and a member of government to bring my attention to what they feel is a wrong that's been done to a consumer.

Many of us, perhaps even all of us – I don't remember the vote – supported the Fair Trading Act when it came forward, so there is a fabric within this province for consumer advocacy that is already there. I think this Premier and this new government, that we're all involved in, have taken this steps further, of course, with the priority of openness and transparency.

It would seem, in my humble view, that all of the network is in place for consumers if they feel they've been wronged to have an avenue of approach. If it's to this government, then fine. If it's to a landlord, there are landlord/tenancy kinds of arrangements. I can't think of anything that could possibly happen to me as a consumer where I wouldn't have some outlet then to express that and if I am in the right to at least try to find some sort of restitution for it.

So I think that rather than vote for a bill such as this, let's, all members of this House, welcome the openness and transparency of this new government. Let's support consumer advocacy groups. Let them register as lobbyists – there is now a law that is going to require registries – and let's let people that are involved in these actual incidents and contracts, if that's what they are, actually pay, then, for the resolution of those and not keep burdening that poor taxpayer. I want to remind everybody that whether you're a liberal tax-and-spender or you're a fiscal conservative, the burden is on the taxpayer. We, if nothing else in this House, should be stewards of the taxpayer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get this opportunity to rise and participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act. I would certainly like to express my gratitude to the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung for bringing this important piece of legislation before the Assembly, and I would urge all hon. members to give it consideration. Please support this bill. I think it is necessary at this time.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I have been listening with interest to hon. members speak about this legislation. In fact, the previous speaker talked about the duplication and additional costs that this bill would place on the taxpayer. Well, I don't think it would be much of an additional cost. I found that statement incredible from an hon. member who has participated in cabinet discussions for perhaps the last decade, when we've seen significant increases in spending from approximately $14 billion to over $28 billion now. Respect for the taxpayer certainly didn't seem to be evident whenever we saw the dramatic increase in that provincial budget over that time.

In fact, when the Utilities Consumer Advocate was created – now, there's a dog without teeth or a dog on a short leash. Whatever way you want to describe the Utilities Consumer Advocate, it certainly is an office that's not working. It was created, Mr. Speaker, by the previous government when they were very concerned about the public fallout from deregulation and they wanted somewhere to send consumers who were experiencing frustration. They needed somewhere to send them, so they set up this agency or this office, and interestingly enough they had the consumers pay for it themselves through the Balancing Pool and also through their monthly gas bills. I would have to say that with this money coming from the Balancing Pool, you would have to wonder just how independent the Utilities Consumer Advocate was and is. This would be why I would urge all hon. members to support this bill: because, of course, we're going to have an officer of the Legislative Assembly – that's the consumer advocate – and they will report directly to us, to all Albertans.

Now, we have to look at the new home warranty program. The economic activity caused by high oil and gas prices is dictating that there be a large number of new homes built all across the province. This new home warranty program is not working. Consumers are looking at this whenever they're purchasing a new house, and they're saying: oh, great, I've got a year. That new home warranty program is not protecting consumers. The cost of these houses is going up, and consumer protection, unfortunately, is going down. This is why I would urge all members to support Bill 202.

We've got record numbers of condominiums being constructed. I for one don't have confidence in the safety code system, the buildings inspection system that was implemented way back when Stockwell Day was minister of labour, prior to 1997. If we continue with the practices that are going on now in the residential construction industry, there are eventually going to be a lot of outraged and frustrated consumers. We're slapping up a lot of these condominiums and houses, and you cannot convince me that the building code is being adhered to and the inspection process is working. Guess who's going to pay for all this? Eventually it'll be the consumer, and that's why I would urge all members to support this.

Another reason would be the high cost of gasoline, the retail cost of gasoline. I said – I believe it was in the summer session – that I had confidence in the free-market system and how we retail gasoline. [interjection] I do not now. No, I can't say that I have any confidence in the system. In fact, I'm totally disgusted with the system. At the Chicago or the New York exchange or wherever you go, whichever exchange you use for crude oil, crude oil prices have softened since last summer, yet we still see these high retail prices in Edmonton. We have refineries on the east side of the city. A mile and a half away we have gasoline at 99 cents a litre. Gasoline in Olds is cheaper.

An Hon. Member: What do we pay for Coke?

Mr. MacDonald: I don't care what we pay for Coke and what we pay for Pepsi.

There are many people coming to my constituency office, and they're complaining about the price of gasoline. They have every right to complain because the price at the wellhead is not going up to reflect these prices at the pump. I'm sorry. We have a system that's gone wrong. It's not a competitive system. I thought at one point it was, but I have to admit that I was wrong. There is no way that because a refinery in Sarnia is having difficulty, the price in Edmonton should increase so dramatically. If we have a free-market system, hon. member, it's not working. The consumer advocate could certainly look into that.

Just down the street from our constituency office is the legacy of the last Conservative regime, and that's the cheque cashing place. That's the legacy. [interjection] Yes, hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, that's the legacy of the last Conservative regime: a cheque cashing place. These cheque cashing places have to be regulated. The amount that they charge in interest has to be reduced significantly. Now, I'm not going to blame this on the banks, the increase in the number of cheque cashing places, but it's a reflection on this government's previous social policies. The consumer advocate could certainly rein those cheque cashing places in.

Electricity, Mr. Speaker. Now, we all look at our bills. I spoke about the Utilities Consumer Advocate before. I'm sorry, but for instance, I visited the office, and it was like getting into Fort Knox. There was a little glass window there, that I'm sure was bulletproof, and you had to poke your head in this window, and the person on the other side would buzz to let you in. At least I got in to advocate on behalf of a constituent, and I'm grateful for that opportunity, but it tells me that there's something wrong with this system when this office needs this sort of security to protect themselves from consumers. I don't know what's going on there, but it certainly wasn't a sign of public confidence in the whole process. That's, again, why I think we should support the hon. member's bill.

We look at all these charges that are on power bills: the administration charge, the transmission charge, distribution charges. We've got fixed and variable charges; we've got other administrative charges. I'm not sure that those charges are even legal. That's something that we're going to have to examine a little bit further. The hon. Minister of Energy is assuring me that they're legal, but I don't think they are. You can't have taxation without representation, and those are taxes, hon. member. The courts determined that those are taxes. If the hon. Minister of Energy is confident in his position on whether these administration fees are really fees or taxes, then he can get up and participate in the debate. But if you look at the court case that was settled in New Brunswick this summer, I'm not so sure that this would stand up in a court of law.

If we were really interested in protecting consumers, after we make this bill a law, perhaps the new consumer advocate could initiate a legal investigation. Just exactly, these fees that we pay on our natural gas and electricity bills, are they fees, or are they taxes? If they're taxes, it's taxation without representation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise to discuss Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act. I'm not going to talk about all of the pieces of legislation that already exist in the province extensively. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays reviewed the Fair Trading Act, the personal information act, the Unconscionable Transactions Act, the Gas Utilities Act, and all of the activities that the consumer protection branch can follow through in order to ensure that consumers are protected.

I'm going to take a different tack. Before that, I think that there are two members in this House right now that deserve praise. The first is the Member for Edmonton-McClung because obviously – and many of us have experience in our offices – this is an issue that needs to be addressed. Consumers are concerned about fair trading and some of the practices of businesses in Alberta, and every single member that rises in this House and presents an issue deserves congratulations, the respect of this House, and some recognition that they're bringing forward their constituents' issues.

The second member that I think deserves credit is the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who in 1999 brought forward the Fair Trading Act. Mr. Speaker, the Fair Trading Act is more powerful and more well-structured than any other act of its kind in any other province in this country. When it was brought forward, it pulled bits of legislation from all through Alberta's legislation into one cohesive, comprehensive piece of legislation designed to protect consumers. That legislation also had some very tough provisions and penalties for people who contravene the act. Two years in prison, $100,000 fine or three times the gains made from illegal actions is extremely punitive compared to many of the other jurisdictions in this country. It shows a clear sign that this province does have some very strict guidelines for protecting consumers.

I'd like to change the tack, maybe, from what's been discussed in this House before. As my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-West mentioned about defending the taxpayers in this province, when it comes to the taxpayers and spending taxpayers' dollars on anything, Mr. Speaker, I honestly believe in the philosophy of minimalism when it comes to government. You see, too often every government – and it doesn't really matter what type of government or what party they represent. Every single government has a tendency to take an issue that arises today and create a new piece of legislation to deal with it or some new regulations to deal with it or new penalties to deal with it without first reviewing hundreds of years of best practices and legislation and regulations to see if something has already been created to address the situation.

We have the consumer protection branch, which is a division of Service Alberta. We have the Fair Trading Act, the Personal Information Protection Act, the Unconscionable Transactions Act, the Gas Utilities Act, a whole lot of legislation and enforcement possibilities. I'm not asserting, Mr. Speaker, whether or not this legislation is adequate so far or if the consumer protection branch is equipped to do the job or whether or not they're doing an adequate job, but before we go ahead and create another office, another bureaucracy, another piece of legislation, something else that could just confuse the issue, first, I believe that we need a full review to make sure that the legislation that we have is adequate to deal with the needs. The offices that already exist: find out if they are doing a good job, and if they're not, why they're not doing a good job. That review is the most important thing to ensure that if we were going to set up the Consumer Advocate Act and create a legislative office to protect consumers, it's actually necessary and we're not duplicating something.

Mr. Speaker, I think that bringing this issue to this Legislature and the attention of the public and the media is an amazing thing. I think it's fantastic, and it's brought some very important debate here to the House that we haven't had in a long time. But I reiterate that I don't think we necessarily need to create another office. We may need to make sure that the consumer protection branch advertises more so that citizens in this province are aware of exactly what sort of level of protection they have. It may need more tools, more personnel to make sure that it can enforce the legislation properly, or it may need to be reminded that it has some punitive abilities to protect consumers. That may be the solution to some of the issues that we've been discussing.

Mr. Speaker, I really believe that the member across from Edmonton-McClung deserves a commendation for bringing this forward. I've received calls from constituents in my office, and I'm sure that every other MLA has. These debates are important and critical. Though I won't be supporting the legislation because I think we need to have a call for a review of what we have that exists and how effective it is and maybe how to make it more effective, I think the member deserves credit for bringing this up.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the President of the Treasury Board.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might also like to thank the hon. member across who has just complimented, certainly, my caucus member because I do support the idea of having a pure advocacy sort of person.

I've heard my colleague from Lethbridge-West talk about principles. Certainly, I believe that what is at stake here is the principle of fairness. People trust their governments. They really trust them to govern, to set legislation that will protect them. Is that the job of the government? Yes, I believe it is. At this point in time I think that I see an awful lot of attitudes of buyer beware, and trust me, buyers do not have a hope in Hades of actually being able to win against people who are immoral and unethical. Things that they do may be legal, but unethical and immoral behaviour: the buyer does not have a choice against that.

As far as the government members who have stood up and defended the particular process that we have at the moment, if it truly was working, we would not be receiving all of the complaints that we get in our office. I agree with the member across. I'm sure there isn't an MLA that sits in this House that does not have consumer advocate problems and questions that come across their desk.

One other thing: the Utilities Consumer Advocate. Of course, many, many of the problems that I have in my office pertain to the utility problems. The current person who serves as the head of the Utilities Consumer Advocate also works as a deputy minister of government services. I do have a problem with that because I believe that it represents the opportunity for a conflict of interest.

I'm going to use a couple of examples of things that are on my desk. I realize that we are speaking about principles, but I'd like to perhaps use these as examples of where the principles really aren't working. I had a constituent who got nothing but a runaround and, certainly, no accountability. I really believe that no matter what department and no matter what problem it is or how you can divide it down and say that it's some other department, it's some other elected body, the buck still stops at the desk of the minister that is responsible for that particular problem that fits under their ministry. The buck stops at the ministers' desks.

This particular constituent of mine had back problems for many years and went to a private clinic in Calgary. She paid $150 up front and had been promised a two-hour assessment. She was given a 15-minute assessment and sent home, knowing full well that she had received a far better assessment even from her local chiropractor. Now, this is a private clinic. The health authorities have no contractual relationship, but they do refer people to the clinic. So now where was she going to go? She thought: well, let me go to the medical association. Well, the medical association said no because this was a private clinic. Then she thought: well, I'll go to the chiropractic college because the person that did the assessment on me was a chiropractor. No. That person wasn't assessing for this particular clinic as a chiropractor. There was another dead end. Well, let's go to the city of Calgary and find out how they give out their licences. Well, pretty much they just give out their licences without really any judgment on the behaviour of the particular client or the business that they've given the licence to. So they just pretty much collect their money, and off they go.

I'm not even going to go off on a tangent about whether we should allow strip joints to be licensed. That's another whole issue. I'm going to save that for another day because I've got some good stuff.

Anyway, now we're down to the Better Business Bureau. We have gone down the whole line. The Better Business Bureau wouldn't touch it with a 10-foot pole, saying that medical issues are outside of their jurisdiction.

So where was this woman to go? Really, nowhere. No one was accountable. No one had the backbone to stand up and say: "You know what? Yeah, you're right." Now, this, in my mind, happens to fall under Health and Wellness, and in fairness, Health and Wellness did give my office a great deal of help with this. But this is just an example of how people fall through the cracks.

Another example that I have is the billing for utilities. Of course, that just goes on and on and on. What happens to a lot of seniors who are on fixed incomes is that they get bills, and they'll phone up. They will talk to the talking head that reacts to the talking screen, and they really have no authority nor ability to actually say, "Gee, I'm going to fix that for you," and if they do fix it, that person has to wait till the end of the month or whenever their next bill comes. If it's not fixed, they have to go right back to square one and say: it still isn't fixed. By using that system, instead of being able to correct it immediately and send out the corrected statement, sometimes people have to wait four and five and six months to get it straightened out.

In the meantime, this is creating tremendous stress, particularly for people on low incomes and, certainly, on fixed incomes. I cannot believe that in this day and age utility companies with their large resources and their huge computer banks cannot send that bill out instantly once the correction has been made, which usually is done by the person, the talking head that's working with the talking screen, so that someone at least can have redress within the week.

Some of the ones that are totally baffled by this sort of thing, of course, are immigrants. They've worked very, very hard, and they've saved, and they're not used to paying interest. They may have credit cards, but you can bet your bottom dollar that they're paid off monthly and they don't pay interest. In the meantime if a bill is incorrect, they are charged interest, and that really isn't fair.

I believe we're talking about the principle of fairness. I know the expression is that life is not fair, and I agree: life isn't fair. However, these unfair situations can be controlled. Therefore, they really are not fair to the people who are being penalized because the government doesn't have a proper advocate that is free and independent to be able to really help these people with some sort of authority to enforce, obviously, some legislation that we already have.

Many of our seniors that are caught in this, of course, have worked through depressions, they've raised families, and they've retained the values of hard work and saving. They believe, as this government does, that people should be responsible for themselves. I think that many, many people are more than willing to be responsible for themselves, but if you can't beat the system fairly, then you really don't have much of a chance.

Another thing that has been always on my mind is that big companies – utility companies, telephone companies, whatever – charge administration costs. Now, my question would be: if I am paying the administration cost, is that company writing those administration costs off as legitimate business expenses? If they are, why am I paying them? I think that's a question that should be asked. For instance, on my long-distance telephone I'm charged $4.95 a month, and I don't even use long distance. So if they're writing it off as an administration expense against their taxes and I'm paying for it, then I want a rebate. Either that or I want some kind of tax relief from those administration costs, that truly are a normal business expense.

I think I will leave it at that, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of instances there. I could probably go on forever. But I really believe that the point is that if we're talking about principle, it must be fair.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an interesting discussion we have. Often we're going to have to accept the fact that you are the one that is responsible for contracts you enter into. If you don't think that it's within your responsibility to do the due diligence of contracts you have, unfortunately the person you're dealing with will probably get the better of you. Quite frankly, you cannot legislate goodness. As long as there has been commerce and as long as there have been two or three or four men or women doing business, sometimes bad things happen to good people, and all the legislation in the world won't help it.

Ms Pastoor: Doesn't make it right.

Mr. Snelgrove: No, it certainly doesn't make it right.

Unless we're going to hire somebody to walk hand in hand with everyone who might mistakenly buy a bad car or sign a rental deal they can't do or have to pay a utility bill they don't like, unfortunately we're going to have to do it.

You've been told already about all of the programs the provincial government has. I can assure you that the people that work not only in the Utilities Consumer Advocate but on Service Alberta's consumer protection hotlines work very hard and are an extremely good resource for the people of Alberta as they are in many ways very, very helpful in directing these people to a solution to their problems. But, obviously, you can't solve them all.

Let's look across the country at what the federal government is responsible for. We can talk about the price of gasoline or the other things we do, but the federal government is responsible for the Competition Act. I would have to say that on long weekends it's magical that the prices go up. But, you know, the federal government has looked into that continually, and they come back and say: well, that's what happens. So take that up with the federal government.

They're also responsible for consumer packaging and labelling, and I can tell you, as someone who has dealt with businesses from outside of the country, that one of the most expensive barriers to getting into Canada to sell is the restrictions on labelling products. Extremely onerous, extremely complicated, and extremely expensive, especially if you're selling lower priced consumer goods.

They also have an office of consumer affairs, which works primarily to educate people. They've got the Competition Bureau. They've got the Canadian Council of Better Business Bureaus, which if anyone wants to access and find out, "Should I be dealing with this person or not?" they'll probably be in there.

But purely on a point of saying, “Well, maybe they’ve got something there; maybe the opposition has come up with something, and us old redneck Conservatives just can’t see it,” let’s ask around. Let’s go ask the good Liberal government in British Columbia: do you have a consumer advocate? Well, British Columbia does not. It could be they don’t need one, or maybe they’re just Liberal.

Maybe the NDs have one in Saskatchewan. So we’ll go ask our good friends in Saskatchewan: “What about you guys? Do you see that you need to have a consumer advocate?” Well, Saskatchewan doesn’t have one. But, you know, Saskatchewan has been working pretty hard lately to try and catch up to us and stop the people coming here to live.

Let’s ask our good friends in Manitoba: have you got a consumer advocate? Nope. Well, what does Manitoba know? They’re just a hard-working bunch of prairie boys.

The good people of Ontario, the industrial heartland of Canada, the centre of the universe: they must have a consumer advocate. No.

Well, guess what? Let’s go to la belle province. They have everything, right? Well, they must; we pay for it. They’ve got everything. No, they don’t have one. Doggone it. I tell you what: when they find out that there’s a position they can fill with our money, they’ll have one, I can assure you, but at this point they don’t.

So let’s go to the good people in Nova Scotia, who do have an insurance consumer advocate. But they don’t have a consumer advocate in Nova Scotia either, and you would know that they are darn good people in Nova Scotia.

Prince Edward Island. Tiny little place like that; lots of people been looking for work. Well, I’m sure they would have a consumer advocate, wouldn’t they? No. They don’t have one.

We’re not done. Canada’s got another couple of hundred kilometres to go, and surely the good boys on the Rock will have one because you couldn’t possibly get bad screech there if you had a good consumer advocate. So let’s ask Newfoundland and Labrador. Well, they don’t have one either. I give up. If Newfoundland and Labrador don’t have one and nobody else seems to have one, I don’t want one either.

Mr. Chase: Well, without going into a whole series of ethnic accents, I would like to suggest that Alberta could lead the way with a consumer advocate position. We’ve heard from the Member for Calgary-Hays, who listed ad infinitum the number of departments that could potentially intervene but unfortunately don’t.

We heard the Member for Battle River-Wainwright give credit to our member for bringing up the idea of the legislation. He suggested the notion that we need some kind of a review. If our current processes, our current ministries aren’t solving the problem, then we should have a look at reviewing these various ministries. That’s exactly what a consumer advocate would do.

The consumer advocate, the way I see it, would be a point person, the buck-stops-here person, a traffic controller. This would be the person who would bring the ministries together to do the job that they currently aren’t doing sufficiently effectively to keep people from finding themselves out on the street because their rents have increased by various percentages. There’s one individual, an apartment owner in Calgary, who was going to raise his rent by 400 per cent, and there’s nothing, unfortunately, to keep him from doing so because we have no rules. We have no regulations. You can raise it to whatever you like, six months at a go.

Now, what we have here is a difference in fiscal philosophy. Laissez-faire translated from French means: let do, let it happen; in other words, as it’s been expressed by our Premier, no brakes. The market dictates. Well, without getting wordy or attempting to wordsmith, I would suggest that the English equivalent right now in Alberta, what consumers are experiencing, is lazy – l-a-z-y – and unfair.

Where we differ is the fact that we don’t believe that all boats rise with the tide in our particular circumstance. We believe that there is a role for a social advocate to blow the whistle and say: rent increases of 41 per cent for fixed-income seniors are unfair. We need a whistle-blower to suggest that the 60 seniors from the sort of neighboring facility shouldn’t have to be transferred out to other facilities to have their needs met or become the unfair term “bed blockers” in acute care beds while their own homes are being looked after, while the fire regulations are being adjusted. We need an individual who will take on and co-ordinate these responsibilities.

Right now when people come into our constituency offices – and it’s not a Liberal office or an NDP office or a Conservative office – everyone hears concerns about the affordability of homes, energy, et cetera. Unfortunately, we don’t have a central individual or department that can make the changes. One of the jobs that I would assume this consumer advocate would have is suggesting the types of legislation that that individual would need in order to provide the enforcement that the MLA for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is looking for.

We know that that enforcement is not occurring now. We know that we’re in a desperate, anomalous situation in Alberta, but there are no departments that are taking it on. We know that when we try and help out a senior, for example – is it a health problem, or is it a housing problem? – quite often there is no one who will then take that senior and lead them through the process. This is where I see the role of the consumer advocate being extremely important.

I would hope that rather than just simply dismissing the idea, all members of this Assembly would consider taking this proposal to the next level and suggesting the amendments that would do the job that they feel at this point this bill is not doing. In other words, instead of just saying, “Well, from Newfoundland to B.C. there’s no such thing as a consumer advocate,” I would like to think that for a change Alberta would be out in front and leading, saying that not only are we the richest province, but we’re the one that cares the most about our citizens, and we’re going to have an agent of the government that will have the independence to act on their behalf, who will say to that individual who raised the rent by 200 per cent or 400 per cent: “No, this isn’t what we’re going to allow you to do. We’re going to put the brakes on it right now.”

One of the sort of enlightened areas that other provinces have looked at, whether it’s B.C. or Manitoba or Saskatchewan, is public insurance. A consumer advocate is not as necessary in those provinces because they have public insurance and they have the controls that we in this province unfortunately don’t have. Now, the previous Finance minister suggested that insurance companies who were found to be gouging Albertans should voluntarily lower their insurance rates. Well, only about 6 per cent of them complied; therefore, she required them to do that. This is another job that a consumer advocate could perform.

They could set rates, of course, with government ministries in support and debate within the Legislature, and going beyond that rate of increase would be unacceptable. Whether it’s for insurance or whether it’s for rent, we need desperately to get beyond the idea that market forces are all we need. Just sit back, let it happen, ride the wave, so to speak, and everybody will be all right. Well, we’ve seen and we know in our constituencies that this not happening. Regardless of whether our constituency has elements of wealth, we know that there are individuals who are suffering in each of our areas.

This is why Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act, is absolutely necessary. Somebody has to take on the job that isn't being done now. That person could suggest, as the Liberal policy has suggested, that there are abnormal times such as we're experiencing now, when there should be some form of control on rent for an extremely limited amount of time. We don't want to discourage affordable housing from being built, but when a person is about to be thrown out onto the step, who's going to stand up for them? Which of these Service Alberta outfits is going to actually intervene?

We had an Affordable Housing Task Force tour the province, and we had members from all parties represented, for which I'm very appreciative, but we're not getting the report until sometime later, and we'll get whatever pieces of that report, I suppose, that will eventually be tabled. The point is that people are out and are being pushed out by these high rent prices right now. They can't hold on. The city of Calgary is already looking into a new homeless shelter. Because of the widening of 16th Avenue they're going to have to get rid of the Brick. If we had a consumer advocate who talked about fairness and affordability and orderly rent increases and orderly insurance costs instead of things spiralling continuously out of control and instead of allowing inflation to go so far up that eventually we go from boom to bust – this consumer advocate could be that champion. We need the individual to take on the responsibility that hasn't been taken on to date by the other ministries.

Please support my colleague in pushing this bill to the next level. Amend it to do what you believe it needs to do. Please don't just simply dismiss it. We need a social advocate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to have the opportunity to speak in favour of Bill 202, brought forward by my colleague, and that is the Consumer Advocate Act, sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-McClung. I think what you see here is the quintessential ideological difference between the two major parties represented in this House. Here we have the government members, who say, "absolute minimal amount of legislation," and you have our side of the House, representing the Official Opposition, saying, "there is a role for government." Consumer protection is one of the roles we believe government should be fulfilling. Different story on the other side of the House.

Part of my experience in this House in the last 10 years has been noticing that legislation is absolutely useless if two things are missing. Those are two really integral parts of what should be outlined in the legislation, and then there should be adequate resourcing for it. By that I mean staff, budget, office space, vehicles, whatever is appropriate. Those two things that are so important for every piece of legislation and which we frequently do not see coming forward in legislation proposed by members of the government caucus are monitoring and enforcement.

Somehow these minimal schemes are put forward by government members who just don't seem to understand that it's one thing to say something, but if you don't double-check that it's actually happening, one, and two, if it's not happening, put some kind of enforcement mechanism in place to either make people have it happen or have some sort of repercussion if they don't – if you don't have those in place, why on earth would anybody bother following this? "Oh, well," I can hear them saying already, "voluntary compliance." Yeah. We've seen how effective voluntary compliance is. Oh, let me think. Climate change? Yeah, we sure got a lot of voluntary compliance on reducing emissions on that one. Now what do we have? We have, indeed, this very government coming back and going: well, gee, I think maybe we might actually have to put a very second-rate emissions control on it because it's intensity emissions, not straight caps. But you see my point, Mr. Speaker.

Consumer protection legislation: they've listed off a ream of them. But guess what? Very little of that legislation is actually working. Why? Because there's (a) no monitoring happening and (b) no enforcement happening. So, yeah, you've got it on the books, but it doesn't work because those two elements are either not in the legislation or they're not actively resourced in order to be effective.

Let me give you an example. I have a number of condominiums in my riding, and increasingly, I'd argue, probably just about every MLA in here does have at least one condominium in their riding. So their boards are constituted as an entity either under the Societies Act or under part 9 of the corporations act. So they're supposed to have annual general meetings, which are open to all of the membership. They're supposed to have their financial statements open at least once a year for scrutiny by the members. They are supposed to have access to the minutes of the meetings. All of those things are, in fact, in the agency's or the entity's bylaws as approved by either the Societies Act or part 9 of the corporations act. So that's what they're supposed to do. The plan is clearly there.

What if they don't do it? Ah, well, there's the rub. I have actually helped some of my constituents all the way through this rather sorry little tale.

Mr. Taylor: You don't trust the private sector?

Ms Blakeman: No, I don't trust the private sector.

When I've followed this through, there is actually no backup available through what's in place by this government. So what we have is dozens of complaints that I've investigated about condominium members, a member of a condominium. They should be able to get access to the minutes of the condominium board, and they should be able to review the financial statements, they should be made aware of an annual general meeting, and they should be able to openly attend an annual general meeting. That's not happening.

This is not only occurring with condominium boards. I'm sure we've all got examples of other agencies in the charitable sector or the volunteer sector.

So if you follow this back, you actually come to one person buried deep in what would now be, I'm assuming, Service Alberta, who admits that, yes, they are responsible for that particular section of the Societies Act and part 9 of the corporations act, which is the filing of those documents and all of the rules that say that you've got to have access to the minutes, to the financial statements, and to the annual general meeting. You say: "Well, we can prove that there's noncompliance here. Now what?" "Well, sorry. I have no ability to monitor what's going on, and I have absolutely no power to enforce." You say, "Well, what's the point of actually having this legislation if, when it's not followed, there's no recourse to any kind of action to support what the government has put in place." "Well, gee, you could go to the civil court." Oh, please. How helpful. Or, rather, how incredibly unhelpful.

I mean, in most cases we're dealing with individual homeowners who are just trying to get access to an annual general meeting or read some financial statements, and you're telling them they're going to have to go to court and pay how much money just in order to get access to this? Why is this again? Oh, yes. Because the government didn't resource this appropriately and didn't empower through the legislation appropriately to actually give citizens some assistance here. As well, there would be an expectation that a volunteer agency or a charitable organization would have to resort to the courts to try and get satisfaction on this. I mean, if I may so say, Mr. Speaker, that's truly beyond the pale, putting things back on the victim and blaming the victim and encumbering the victim with trying to find the resources to get themselves out of this when it either was in the legislation and was not empowered to enforce or was never in the legislation in the first place.

Another example I have of that is from a constituent that contacted me recently named Dan Onischuk. He's most exercised because he is being harassed by anonymous callers. How are they anonymous? Well, he goes back to the phone company, and the phone company says: oh, yes. They will give carte blanche use of anonymous phone calling for $2 a month. They're charging others to achieve this anonymous phone caller ability, who can then continue to harass people, and the other clients of the phone company have no ability to make them stop.

So when the Minister of Service Alberta waves his hands about and says, "Well, it's their own darn problem if they can't read their contract," well, in this case there is no contract with the individual who has a residential phone line, and that's how they're receiving their phone services. There's nothing in their contract that says that they empower the phone company to now make additional revenue by charging others to achieve an anonymous status. That's not in a contract that's enforceable for a residential phone caller.

In my case my constituent has tried to go to the city police, who were unable to help him, to the RCMP, and finally I think a city bylaw officer was able to get him some satisfaction but not very much. I'm sure we're all irritated by having anonymous callers. I think there was supposed to be a no-call list put through by the federal government, and I don't care which version it was, but we've never seen satisfaction on that either.

So ultimately what we're looking at here is a government that needs to recognize that consumer protection legislation like is being proposed in Bill 202 is in fact needed, and with it needs to come the monitoring and enforcement provisions that will actually make it a useful, workable document, a contract if you will.

The last piece I want to bring up here is that if the government will not do this, cannot do this, who else is capable of doing it? No one. That's why the public looks to the government to enact consumer protection rules and regulations and to monitor and enforce them. The government is the only one that is capable of doing that, that has enough overriding authority to do it, and therefore, I would say, they have a responsibility to do it.

For the minister to say, "Oh, well, you know, we looked at all the other provinces and nobody else has one, so we won't have one," oh, please, Mr. Minister. I'm a little ashamed of you there. I mean, this is the very same government that prides itself on being a maverick government, on getting out there ahead of things with all kinds of brand new stuff that nobody has done. Except for when it comes to consumer protection. What an interesting choice to make: like to get out there in front and be on the front pages of the national paper except for where it comes to consumer protection.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege and pleasure to stand to Bill 202, Consumer Advocate Act. I, too, have had a number of concerns expressed to me as MLA in Calgary-Mountain View, especially about the rapid growth rate in the province, the inflation issues, the rent gouging. I'm sure that's coming from both students at university and postsecondary institutions, and it's coming from seniors. It's really difficult for them to know where to go for help when their basic rights as a renter are being violated, and we see continued gouging, up to the tune of 300 per cent in one condo block that I visited.

Another big area that I've had complaints about and gone out to visit is seniors who are in private health care facilities and feel very strongly that they are being increasingly compromised in terms of their health as a result of having to spend so much of their income on rent, food, and accommodation, which has gone up very substantially over the last couple of years. This is actually compromising their ability to sleep at night in some cases and certainly to take care of themselves adequately. Those are two big areas that I've heard a lot of complaints about.

I myself have had experiences with transferring funds out of the country and feeling that there has to be a cheaper way of transferring money to some of the poorer countries in the world where there are, in fact, very high rates of interest, or user pay. I haven't seen any recourse to challenging the sometimes 15, 20 per cent of the total value of the money I was sending. That happens to be another area where I'm concerned that we need some consumer protection.

Quality of electronics: at times I've had problems with and had very poor response in the retail sector, repeated poor service. I suppose I could complain to the Better Business Bureau, but I've never felt that there was a real advocate for me as a consumer on some of these issues.

Home renovations: a similar issue where, because it's so difficult to get plumbers and electricians, there could be serious concerns about the safety of our homes. These folks are charging through the roof for some of the changes that are absolutely essential for health and safety in homes.

So the idea of a consumer advocate and a consumer protection package is eminently sensible and much needed in Alberta. Those are the key issues that I wanted to focus on, Mr. Speaker. I also know that in some of my constituents' minds is the whole area of electrical deregulation, the sense that we are paying way beyond what we should be and could be if we had maintained the electrical production under a public utility and what recourse people have. There's confusion, especially again in seniors who are being marketed to by different companies who are producing the electricity and wanting people to sign on for five or 10 years at a fixed rate, and they're not sure whether to go with the floating rate or whether to go with a company and their particular hard sell.

Without an advocate, without a support system for people who don't understand the electrical system, which many of us struggle with – it is very complicated. The billing process is difficult to understand. I have difficulty interpreting my own electrical bill. I know that seniors especially have talked to me on the street about how to deal with their feeling that the way deregulation has gone isn't necessarily fair and isn't serving the public interest.

Motor vehicle repairs and motor vehicle changes: again, many of us feel vulnerable because it's hard to assess what a mechanic may tell you from one day to the next. Getting two estimates doesn't necessarily solve the problem if they're not following ethical practice and leaving us as consumers in the dark.

I think it would send a strong message to all kinds of industries, all kinds of service organizations if we had an advocate in place, someone who took to task those who are not acting responsibly or ethically and made examples of them, frankly, and made it public, and if there was a penalty involved with a failure of ethical practice.

I am here to speak very much in support of the bill and ask my colleagues to do the same in the interests of the public of Alberta. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to make some comments with regard to consumer protection on the utility side, and just to correct some of the statements that the member opposite made just previous. You know, the Utilities Consumer Advocate and a broad representation across the province of board members have done a great job for Albertans on the utility consumer side. They have fielded thousands of calls over the last few years and helped many that had billing difficulties and problems getting hooked up, and the list goes on and on.

As well, the Utilities Consumer Advocate has created a website to make sure that people know where to get an electrical contract. You can click on different websites from there to find out prices from competitive companies. If this member is having a hard time reading his bill, there's even an opportunity there to teach you how to read your bill.

One of the things I was surprised at is the comments that the member was making with regard to utility contracts. You know, right in southern Alberta we've got a company called Enmax that's offering the EasyMax program. You hear about it on television, in newspapers. I don't know why you haven't heard about it, but I've signed up. My mom has signed up; it's such a good deal. It protects consumers from fluctuating rates in the future. It's a seven-cent contract that many of us could look at and advise our constituents about the options that are out there.

So the Utilities Consumer Advocate has done a great job on the utilities side. If the member's not aware of it, I encourage you to click on the website. Read the newspapers. In every newspaper I read, I read about the utility company's advertising rates, and you know I encourage you to encourage your constituents when they do have problems with utilities to call the UCA and contact them.

The member earlier talked about the deputy minister being the advocate. The deputy minister's not the advocate. There's a new assistant deputy minister that's acting right now – I think her name is Cathryn Landreth – and she works for the Department of Service Alberta. She's available to field questions, and there's a great team behind her to help those that want to find out more about their utility bill or if they have problems with utilities throughout Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak toward Bill 202, Consumer Advocate Act. Certainly, in my experience as a member of the Legislature for Edmonton-Calder I've seen plenty of reasons to look to strengthen consumer advocacy in the province of Alberta. We have had plenty of opportunity to look at the range of problems that constituents face in regard to high rents, in regard to utility problems, in regard to a whole range of social service issues. Consumer advocacy is something that I do certainly want to see strengthened here in the province of Alberta. You know, there is just a whole range of issues that people find themselves without representation on, and as a result they can end up having to spend money in civil court or having to spend both time and effort to fight what becomes often much larger entities than themselves and up against very formidable opponents in regard to, say, utility bills or rent, landlord issues.

Consumer advocacy is, I think, something that has to evolve over time. Ultimately, I think it's a reflection of the democratic construction of our society and of people's interaction with the Legislature itself. So looking specifically at Bill 202 here, certainly, I would like to commend the spirit of the bill. It does have quite a number of good points. However, I do have some specific criticisms that I would like to bring forward just on a practical level, just looking at different sections of the bill and where I saw some potential problems, I suppose.

The first area was on page 2, which is section 3(1)(a), which somehow entails reviewing consumer protection statutes. You know, I just want to recognize that this is already the mandate of government services, of course. The business plan of government services in fact says, "to develop and/or modernize consumer legislation." So there is that part of our existing mandate within government that would perhaps make this section somewhat redundant.

On page 3 of Bill 202 section 4(1)(b) outlines under duties and powers that the consumer advocate has to represent "to receive, review and investigate consumer complaints." Consumer complaints are in fact covered by the agency known as Service Alberta, and while certainly I do have my differences with some of the strength and perhaps the execution of Service Alberta, just in regard to the regulations and legislation surrounding Service Alberta, this Bill 202 is somewhat redundant.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The next section that I had some concern about was on page 8 of Bill 202, and this section outlines what will happen after an investigation takes place. The problem is that the most a consumer advocate as outlined here can do is issue a report to the appropriate department or ministry and have it followed up through a report in the Legislature, so I find this a bit wanting in regard to the enforcement value of this consumer advocate as described in Bill 202. Service Alberta, in fact, again, on the books less than in action but more at least in its legality, does have a range of punitive actions that it can engage once it has concluded an investigation. So, you know, just to build this legislation to somehow have it fit within existing legislation, Mr. Speaker, I found some difficulty with that part there.

Then one other section that I just wanted to point out is on page 3 of Bill 202, 4(1)(e), Mr. Speaker, and this is the section that calls for the establishment of "a publicly accessible database of consumer complaints." The establishment of this database would bring about openness and transparency for consumers and act as a stick-based encouragement for businesses to engage in ethical business practices. So I just wanted to point out that this, certainly, is the section that I like the most of Bill 202. This is something that is wanting, quite frankly, and I hope that each of us here in the Legislature looks to forward the spirit of this section, particularly in future legislation that might come before the House because this is something that I do in fact find wanting.

So those are some of the specific areas that I wanted just to point out here, and while, as I said, there certainly is a need for consumer advocacy as pointed out here by Bill 202, those are some specific problems that I might see in terms of meshing this private member's bill with existing legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Consumer Advocate Act – I've been sitting intently this afternoon listening to some of the debate that's going on – and offer a few comments that might be able to assist Albertans in determining the fact that there are a fair amount of accusations here this afternoon that say that nothing is being done and that there is nobody to go to and there is nobody to follow up.

I think it's really important for us to reiterate the fact that the Fair Trading Act in this province is a stand-alone piece of legislation that was fairly debated in this House for a considerable length of time, brought in by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I do remember having many conversations in my constituency office when this legislation was on the floor of the Legislature, particularly from businesses that felt that the legislation might have been a little restrictive. But, you know, through a whole series of consultations those problems were overcome, and probably the best legislation for consumer protection across this country now sits in Alberta.

This bill that is before us wants to make that legislation appear to be more transparent and bring things more to the floor of the Legislature through a legislative office. That would give the impression, Mr. Speaker, that there's absolutely no one to go to if you have a problem as a consumer, whatever that problem might be, if you feel that there's no place to go and you don't know where to get the information. Having an advocate in place would certainly raise the profile, but this debate in the House today gives the impression that there is no place to go.

Some members on the government side have been very, very careful in pointing out that there are places to go, particularly when we have discrepancies about utility bills and how the bills should or could be interpreted. The idea of contracts for procurement of electricity, how legalistic they were. Certainly, setting up a Utilities Consumer Advocate at that time was the right thing to do because of the numbers of complaints that were coming through. The government was proactive in bringing forward that consumer advocate, and the consumer advocate did the job that was required and continues to today.

When it comes to complaints of a normal nature, if someone feels that they have been done wrong by a contract or if they didn't have a contract and felt that the individual did not do the work that they said that they were going to do, et cetera, there are many avenues for coming forward and bringing their complaint to the Department of Service Alberta. They have people in the Calgary office, Edmonton office, and other small cities around the province to handle these complaints. They have investigative powers as well that have been brought out in the act, and they take their jobs very seriously.

I can remember a number of complaints that came through in my short tenure as minister. We'd forward them to the complaints department, and they immediately put investigations into place. Many of them dealt with companies that had a history of maybe not doing the proper thing by the people that they were providing the service to. The people that are doing the investigations know of the individuals because they do have a history, and they use the provisions within the act that are legally acceptable to do the penalties, and they leave it to the courts. Now, that's the strength of the legislation that we have in place.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close the debate.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me first start by thanking all the hon. members who participated in this debate this afternoon: the ones who supported Bill 202, and the ones who signalled that they weren't going to support Bill 202.

Bill 202 attempts to strengthen market oversight and to offer consumers more protection. The market usually looks after itself, Mr. Speaker, but it is ultimately this government's responsibility, any government's responsibility, to deal with unscrupulous business practices. People elect governments and legislators to look after them and to protect and promote their interests. Consumers expect and request action whenever they are ripped off, lied to, or defrauded. Today this House can send the message that we as MLAs are on the consumer's side, that we care, and that we have taken action, even if only a first step, to ensure fairness in our marketplace.

4:20

In response to the President of the Treasury Board, who said that he won't have a consumer advocate because other provinces do not, Alberta should be the leader in consumer protection as it claims to be in free enterprise, but with the necessary recognition and the unwavering statement that people come before profit and that the integrity of our processes and compliance with our legislation are not matters we take lightly.

I also want to thank the many Albertans who shared their consumer-related concerns and issues with myself and my colleagues. I want to thank them for putting their trust and their faith in us. Hopefully, today this Assembly lives up to their expectations.

In response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, the advocate will be more effective than what we have now. It offers the oversight that he said was lacking and guarantees that if government agencies or ministers choose not to act with respect to consumer complaints, this Assembly will find out, and we can discuss these deficiencies here.

In response to the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, I am not questioning the good work of our consumer protection branch employees, but I am offering an enhanced tool to deliver more protection to our consumers. We not only need to be acting in a stronger manner, we also need to be seen as acting more strongly and decisively. People need to know that there's someone on their side. This officer will not waste taxpayers' money. He or she will save Albertans a lot of money and grief.

As I close the debate, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this esteemed Assembly from both sides of the House to support Bill 202 in passing second reading. Hopefully it makes it to committee, where some of those suggestions or concerns from some of the hon. members can be addressed. We are open to receiving amendments. We are open to working with both sides of the House.

I have to admit that I was a little disappointed that at least two of the government backbenchers who had privately told me they were going to support this bill have either absented themselves from this debate or otherwise stayed quiet. I was under the impression that private members' business is a free vote. It is in our case. It is always a free vote for the Alberta Liberal caucus. I'm hoping that they will now stand in support of Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 203 Service Dogs Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in the Legislature today and open debate and move second reading of Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act.

This act will allow people with disabilities the right to be accompanied by an accredited service dog in all areas open to the general public, free from discrimination. As chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I'm proud to sponsor a piece of legislation that ensures that a group of Albertans, those who rely on service dogs, have the opportunity to participate fully in the life of the province. Mr. Speaker, the mandate of the Premier's council is, first of all, to remove barriers that confront persons with disabilities and allow these people to pursue lives free of those obstacles that prevent full participation in society. Another mandate is to listen to the issues of the disability community and to communicate those issues back to the Alberta government. The result has been that the council has encouraged steps to be taken to improve the lives of persons with disabilities.

Since 1988 the council has advanced the cause of persons with disabilities in Alberta. One of the accomplishments of the council was the creation and release of an Alberta disability strategy. The strategy seeks for government to better co-ordinate and implement policies and programs that impact persons with disabilities. The strategy also strives to assure greater physical access for persons with disabilities, and as such the Service Dogs Act serves to advance the work of the council and the intent of the Alberta disability strategy by removing barriers and increasing access for Albertans with disabilities. This complements our government's goal to work to ensure that its policies reflect the varied needs of the disability community.

Why is there a need for a Service Dogs Act, and why are we pursuing this legislation now? Persons with disabilities who use a service dog could seek redress through the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. However, this can leave people without a clear resolution to their concerns and the possibility of decisions being made without the benefit of a clear set of standards and expectations for the training and certification of service dogs.

I want to recognize the protections provided to blind individuals under the Blind Persons' Rights Act, the BPR. It was proclaimed in 1980, and the BPR is an important symbol to individuals with vision challenges as it provides them with the opportunity to fully participate in society. It was amended in 2004, and it is a model in terms of outlining the certification and monitoring of guide dogs. The BPR has strict penalties for discrimination against a blind person who's accompanied by a guide dog.

It may be a good time right now to comment on one of the definitions in the legislation. In the definition of a service dog it says that a "service dog" means a dog trained as a guide for a disabled person." "Guide" in this case is not referring to a guide dog. In the 1983 Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act it stated that a hearing dog is one that is trained as a guide for a deaf person. "Guide" in the broad sense of the word, then, means to assist by helping a person reach a destination or navigate through some unfamiliar space. That's the intent of the term "guide" in this legislation. Bill 203 intends to be complementary to the Blind Persons' Rights Act by extending similar rights and protections to other persons with disabilities. There's no better time to debate Bill 203 and finally enshrine in law provisions to allow those Albertans needing service dogs full and unfettered access to society.

This is not the first time that this Assembly has considered legislation protecting persons who need service dogs. In 1983 the Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act was passed. It provided persons dependent on hearing ear dogs similar rights to persons needing seeing eye dogs. However, that amendment has never been proclaimed, and as such it will be repealed with this act.

Private members have proposed legislation to protect all persons with disabilities dependent on service dogs at different times over the past 14 years. In the early '90s a private member's bill was sponsored called the Service Dogs Act. It proposed broadening the Blind Persons' Rights Act by including all persons with disabilities. About seven years ago I also sponsored similar private member's legislation seeking to amend the Blind Persons' Rights Act to include all persons with disabilities by turning the BPR into a service dogs act. Now, these different private members' bills received first reading but did not have a chance to proceed further.

Past service dog legislation centred on amendments to the Blind Persons' Rights Act. This was seen as one way of putting in place legal protections for individuals using service dogs and to meet the growing use of and requirements for those service dogs. In light of this demand a review of the BPR, the Blind Persons' Rights Act, was completed in 2001. The review found that the BPR should remain as stand-alone legislation providing protections to blind people and their guide dogs. It also recommended the development of new legislation to address the issue of assistive animals. Public feedback confirmed the view that the BPR should remain as stand-alone legislation. Bill 203 reflects this view. It moves towards addressing the issues raised by the review relating to service dogs.

Guide dogs and service dogs serve different but complementary purposes. Bill 203 respects this difference and serves to place these principles in law. Guide dogs and service dogs serve different needs. There are certification and accreditation issues specific to service dogs that have to be addressed through regulation, much like in the BPR, with its passing. I view the Service Dogs Act as a first step towards developing the regulations that will provide direction for the specifics of training, certifying, and using service dogs.

We need to ensure that our processes for addressing the certification of service dogs is clear. For example, one question will be: do we grandfather dogs that have been self-trained? We must also ensure that there are clear standards for the accreditation of schools for the training of service dogs. An organization called Assistance Dogs International sets training standards. It's a highly regarded organization that in the past we have looked to for help in setting standards in regulation.

Part of the process will include educating and communicating to Albertans about service dogs and the requirement of ID for both the owner and the dog. Bill 203 gives those Albertans with service dogs and those who may need service dogs in the future the protections that they need. There are issues to be addressed; for example, the need to establish a process to issue IDs to people who have service dogs. This is critical to minimize fraud and allow people with service dogs to go about their lives as freely as possible. These are workable issues. Solutions will be found to deal with certification, accreditation, and identification.

Alberta needs the Service Dogs Act to provide protection to persons with disabilities, and as a province we need to make sure that all aspects of the bill are delivered as expected by clearly stated regulations. Bill 203 will protect persons with disabilities requiring service dogs and continue to ensure that Alberta meets the unique needs of people with disabilities. We need legislation that works for persons with disabilities rather than no legislation going forward at all. I see working with the disability community to ensure that the Service Dogs Act delivers results. We'll need to keep open the lines of communication with the disability community to continue to develop responsive and responsible disability policy in this province.

I'm pleased, as I said earlier, to bring forward the Service Dogs Act. It's the best way, I think, to deal with the issue of service dogs at this time. We all know that there are many dogs out there being used these days, and there are no regulations or certification that is apparent for them except for some that have come from other organizations and have some measure of identification with them. We need to build that goodwill with the public. They need to know what service dogs are and what the rules and regulations are about them and their identification.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to see this legislation being brought forward by the Member for Strathcona. I'm aware of his history in trying to get similar legislation up previously, and I've worked with him before on this. I will have to apologize in advance to my constituent who has worked with me over so many years on this legislation because I can't remember her name. She has been very helpful in outlining the issues around guide dogs and service dogs to me, and I want to thank her as part of my debate. I apologize for not being able to remember her name.

I think this is legislation whose time has come. Actually, I'd argue that it's past due. We certainly understand as a society the value of guide dogs for assistance with those that have sight impairment. These service dogs will allow a whole range of Albertans to participate fully in the life of the province. I'm talking about dogs that can, for example, offer assistance around seizures. We know that there are a number of dogs that are now working with autistic children, to support them and also protect them, and for other people that have health issues.

That does give rise to a question that maybe the member can answer for me in further debate. The definition of disabled person seems like a very narrow definition. I'm hoping that it does in fact cover, for example, persons with epilepsy or with autism. I don't know that those would usually be classified as disabled, but, whatever, that definition needs to be able to include them. Certainly someone with epilepsy would not usually, for example, be getting benefits, as someone on AISH would, because they can generally, if they can control the seizures, you know, carry on a full working life and participate in the life of the community quite well.

But some have really violent seizures. I went to university with a fellow, and he had grand mals. Man, he was in serious trouble if he had one of those because he didn't, actually, sort of recover for quite a period of time. I'm talking like 48 hours. A dog that was with him that could sense the seizures coming and would be able to alert him to that so he could get himself in a safe place for what was coming would have been very helpful to him. So I am quite supportive of this.

Just a couple of issues I wanted to raise. One was around the definition to make sure that it was anticipated to cover people like those with epilepsy or autism, even migraines, I think, in some cases.

Secondly, I don't see the usual clauses in here that allow for the regulations to be developed in support of the legislation. I see where it's defining the minister who would be responsible, but I'm not seeing the usual clause that says: and then the minister can make regulations as he sees fit. I appreciate what the member here is saying, that regulations will be developed, but I don't see the clause in the bill that allows you to do that. So that's something we might want to look to in Committee of the Whole, to amend for that.

The other criteria that I think is missing here is a reference to training criteria. What will the criteria be as far as a trained dog? It basically talks about the application of the act, the discriminatory practices that are prohibited, issuing of identification tags, fines, and offences. Oh, I'm sorry, there it is, section 5: "The Minister may make regulations respecting qualifications." My mistake, Mr. Speaker. Then, the application to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act is where redress should be sought.

I don't see any section in here that is specific to how you would establish the criteria for what training is acceptable and what isn't. If I could just add the caution that we learned from the Blind Persons' Rights Act, in which the blind dogs are talked about, because that was narrowly defined as being products of certain schools, and I think that's too narrow a definition. I think any regs would have to outline pretty clearly exactly the test that they would have to meet rather than being a product of a particular school.

I also note under the discriminatory practices section, which is section 3, that it's quite specific as to occupancy. It's basically specific to accommodation, to occupancy and term of occupancy. But, generally, under human rights or prohibition of discriminatory practices, it applies to employment, accommodation, and to access to government programs and services. Those are the, sort of, three benchmarks. I don't see the references to the other two here, so maybe there can be an explanation on what was anticipated a little further on in debate about that.

Having raised those few points, if I might recommend to the sponsor of the bill, the British system that has a very good identification system and also testing and issuance of licences for the identification. They have what they call a public dog. That dog has to go through a series of tests to show that it can move about in public areas and not be spooked or behave in an uncontrolled manner. They'll actually put them in a median in the middle of quite a busy road, and the dog just has to stay there no matter what happens to them, which is part of their test. The dog actually has a tag with a picture of the dog and the owner, and vice versa for the owner. If I might recommend that if you haven't already investigated that, in my opinion they have quite good standards in England. They're dog mad there, so I'm sure they've had much more experience with that.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this and in support of the bill, and I'm happy to support the member with Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. I'm glad to see him trying it one more time. Let's hope that it passes this time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have been given the opportunity to join the discussion on the Service Dogs Act, 2007. I fully support Bill 203 because it allows for a wider cross-section of citizens to be fully integrated within Alberta. Bill 203 would guarantee that people who use service dogs are legally and adequately protected from discrimination. This bill would clarify and strengthen the rights of those with physical disabilities who need service dogs to assist them.

Bill 203 calls on Albertans to move towards greater understanding of diversity within our province. It eliminates the current confusion regarding people who use service dogs and makes them feel more comfortable about carrying out their daily routine, such as going for coffee, grocery shopping, picking things up from the ground. And, yes, Mr. Speaker, I recently read about a dog that can even put his owner's ATM card in the ATM bank machine. A service dog can make all the difference in the world for someone with reduced mobility. Certain chores which are essential components to leading independent lives are not equally . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, but under our Standing Orders the time limit for consideration of this business today has now expired.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Support for Alternative Energy Technologies

502. Mr. Lukaszuk moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to examine the feasibility of establishing an endowment fund and other incentives, including legislative and policy changes, to encourage the Alberta energy industry to research, implement, and commercialize alternative energy technologies.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Motion 502.

Mr. Speaker, the word "environment" has become a trendy one in recent Canadian politics. In parliaments from coast to coast this word is tossed about weapon-like, where political parties assault each other, attempting to establish themselves in the eye of the public as environmental champions.

The colour green has also gained some prominence and fashion status, with sightings of aspiring politicians clad in green scarves with Kyoto-named dogs in tow. In this Chamber, however, we are not immune to this green fever. Recently I recall members daring each other to park their vehicles and revert to walking. "Why this sudden green madness?" you may be asking yourself, Mr. Speaker. Well, because it appears that there are two camps of Canadians: believers and deniers, those who believe that our planet is in the midst of general atmospheric warming resulting from human activity and those who simply don't. Hence, Canadian airwaves, political conventions, and Hansards are filled with excitable rhetoric, which in itself contains enough hot air to raise our beloved planet's temperature.

Against this backdrop, Mr. Speaker, it is my humble hope to introduce Motion 502 and generate some constructive discussion which will not require us to take sides, point fingers, or don green scarves but, rather, will encourage us to examine Alberta's energy policy and determine how it can be improved. Alberta is blessed with a superabundance of energy: coal, natural gas, conventional crude oil, tar sands, and, if you want to look at the renewable forms of energy, wood, biomass, hydropower, and of course a lot of wind and sunshine.

The confident predictions of scientists and economists of the '70s, Mr. Speaker, in which the last drop of oil would be squeezed out of the ground, have proven to be false. The inventory of available oil, for that matter, has risen to match the demand pretty well every year since then.

Our prosperity, and for that matter the prosperity of our continent, is based on the assorted energy resources. With 800 years of coal and more than 100 years worth of oil available, it's no wonder that we're the envy of the planet. You could ask why, given this vast amount of raw energy, we should really bother to think about sustainable energy. After all, we could just let things go as they are. Well, Mr. Speaker, this may not be an option that we will have. As you know, the Stone Age did not end simply because they ran out of stones. It ended because bronze was found. Similarly, I predict it will happen to our energy resources: the era of carbon fuels will end long before we hear that slurping sound in the ground indicating that we're running on empty.

We understand that carbon and the by-products that are produced when it's turned into energy cause serious health problems by polluting the atmosphere. Nitrous oxide, sulfur dioxide, and soot have all wreaked havoc on the health of people and the environment, where the concentration of those gases have accumulated. However, it isn't these gases that are receiving all the attention. It's carbon dioxide, which in itself is a harmless gas, that is now being blamed for creating the greenhouse effect, which, in turn, is causing the average temperature of our planet to rise. In general, a large portion of the carbon dioxide is generated from decaying organic matter, but over the last century the proportion of gases generated from industrial processes and transportation has increased dramatically.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my motion is not to judge whether or not science is correct but, rather, to seize on the opportunity to build on those significant successes which we have already achieved in twinning economic and environmental goals so that we can become and be seen to become world leaders in sustainable energy production and consumption. Alberta is ideally positioned to lead the world in the development of environmentally friendly energy production and sound energy consumption. We have attracted to our province global authorities on the subject matter, who, given supporting policies and adequate funding, are ready and willing to undertake this challenge. However, the first step must be ours. We must, through review of our current legislation and policy, identify any systemic barriers and correct them.

Also, Mr. Speaker, not unlike the development of any other industry sector, our leadership will require funding, which will be leveraged against private-sector dollars. This funding would be a sound investment in Alberta's future economy, assuring that this province will remain the preferred source of energy for North America.

So what possibilities are there? Let me start by speaking a little about oil sands because that's what's driving a large portion of our economy. At the same time, the method by which bitumen is extracted from sand is what produces the majority of greenhouse gases right now. With the production rate targeted at 4 million barrels per day by 2025, Mr. Speaker, from the present 1 million barrels per day, if production methodology remains the same, the consequences are obvious. Not only that, but the whole of the project output from the Mackenzie gas pipeline will be needed to liberate oil from the sands, leaving the initial purpose of this project rather questionable.

While there have already been significant reductions in process energy used by using solvents to leech out oil from sand, most of the production still uses heat to produce bitumen. Natural gas, Mr. Speaker, is the energy source of choice right now, which, I would argue, could be compared to converting gold into lead. However, there is no reason, given appropriate direction, why clean hydro-energy harnessed from rivers within northern Alberta could not be used to displace a portion of the energy used by the oil sands.

Hydro systems have had a bad environmental image over the last three decades, with opponents raising complaints of loss of habitat of rare species, safety, and rotting vegetation from the initial flooding, which in itself produces copious amounts of greenhouse gases. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Speaker, there are several sites that have been technologically studied and found suitable for hydro development.

One of the most suitable is Smith Rapids in the remote northeast part of the province, which I understand was the subject of extensive studies in the early '80s and then, shall we say, shelved. The site can produce approximately 1,500 megawatts of sustainable green energy without the need for a large storage area because of the depth of the gorge through which the river flows and the large flow of the river. With the oil sands production at its doorstep, the replacement of finite energy, being gas, with clean hydroelectricity, an estimated reduction of some 120 tonnes of greenhouse gases annually, should be reason enough to review these reports and give them some consideration.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the first step must be ours. Smith Rapids is not the only potential hydro source in the province. Another development of similar magnitude was suggested for Peace River at Dunvegan. As well, Canadian Hydro is now seeking approval for a 100-megawatt runoff at the Peace River.

Mr. Speaker, another way to produce clean energy would be through the use of nuclear plants to generate both electricity and steam for purposes of synthetic oil production. If we are serious about the protection of our environment, we must at least consider all options. Wearing green scarves and pointing fingers will not suffice, although it may gain one a few votes. There has been a great deal of concern expressed about the danger of nuclear energy over the years, with some justification. The horrors of Chernobyl come to mind at the mere mention of the word, but hon. members ought to be aware that Germany, France, and the United Kingdom rely heavily on nuclear energy for their core electricity needs and have yet to report a serious accident.

Nuclear plants that are properly engineered and operated produce no greenhouse gases and should be given serious consideration. Ironically, in Europe those considered as environmentalists are the main proponents of such a source of energy, juxtaposed against Europe's dirty-coal electricity generation. Again, Mr. Speaker, we must lead this debate and determine whether nuclear energy is a suitable option for this province.

Alberta is already North America's leader in the production of biomass energy, with the assistance of Alberta's research institutes. Biomass encompasses all those systems which derive energy from decaying vegetation or animal matter. The most popular item on the market right now is ethanol production. However, with some assistance from this government and the expertise of Alberta research institutes, Alberta is now home to North America's first methane gas electricity production facility, where livestock waste is converted into energy. This facility, in our own Premier's riding, converts livestock manure into electricity. This manure would otherwise be spread on adjacent land, creating greenhouse gases, threatening our fresh water supply, and causing social discontent.

Mr. Speaker, the potential for such facilities in our province is limitless. The facilities could convert municipal sewage and other organic waste into electricity. However, again the production capacity is limited by systemic barriers. If we truly care about our environment and diversification of . . .

The Speaker: I'm now unfortunately going to have to move on, hon. member, and will call on the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. Other members who wish to participate, kindly advise.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand up and discuss Motion 502. I'd like to speak in favour of this motion but have a few twists on where he talks about including other incentives and including legislative and policy changes. One of my concerns with an endowment fund when it's sponsored by the government is that it isn't always in the best interest, and we're picking and choosing winners and losers. But going on from there, the hon. member has brought up a lot of good things to discuss and good things that are happening, especially when we look around the world.

The first area that I'd like to talk about is, as he has referred to so passionately, the oil sands. It is the heart of our oil industry, perhaps, right now in terms of dollars being spent and invested, but we really do have a problem. He talked about turning gold to lead. I have to agree with the hon. member that to think that we're taking natural gas and water in order to extract the bitumen certainly seems a little bit old fashioned and out of tune with the times when we see the problems that we're having with greenhouses gases.

The area of nuclear energy. I recently had the opportunity to go to a nuclear energy conference. I've always been pro nuclear energy, but now I'm even more pro after going and listening and understanding the situations and realizing what's really going on. Here in Canada the discussion always seems to be around Long Island and Chernobyl and the disasters that were there. I would say that that's the equivalent of telling someone that we want to fly to Europe when all they know about is Amelia Earhart, and they say: "Oh, I'll never fly. That wasn't good." Yes, we've had a couple of accidents in the world, but both of those were due to great negligence and poor maintenance, and they've learned from that. It's a very safe system if it's run properly.

Here in Canada, with the CANDU 3 and CANDU 4 series close to coming online, it's a great opportunity where we could produce as much electricity as we needed in the province and use our natural resources to the best of our ability. A good Scout is taught to use his resources wisely, and Albertans very much believe in that. If we could produce heat from electricity, from the hydro, as the good member talked about, and from nuclear energy, we would free up a lot of gas that could be used for much better purposes and reduce the amount of particulates and other things that go into the air from burning the bitumen in order to extract it.

The other opportunity that it would give us and something that we could look at is that we could perhaps use the natural gas more to power our vehicles, to power farm equipment. The amount of energy that we're using could compress that natural gas and be used much more efficiently.

The point that I guess I'd like to urge, along with this motion, is the problem we have with entrepreneurs and progressive businessmen wanting to take the step forward. Often they're at a great disadvantage, especially when it comes to the U.S., in raising capital. I just want to go back a few years to when we were thinking ahead and trying to develop the next energy system. Alberta was very concerned that we were running out of oil, about what we were going to do. So the government realized that, well, we can't afford to put our money in there, but what we will do is give some very good tax incentives for business to put their money in there.

We really need to take a look and let businesses raise the capital and be able to have the tax credits, whether that's for wind power, hydropower, or nuclear power, for whatever the technology might be, biomass or whatever. If they have this ingenious idea and the ability to get this new power, we could give the incentive to the average Canadian, the average Albertan to put money in there, much like they do with flow-through shares to explore and try to discover new oil wells and gas wells.

What we really need to come up with as a government is seed money for ingenuity and good ideas. If we are to allow that for, like I say, nuclear energy or any of these other ones, all of a sudden there'd be a great interest because the capital could be raised. Right now the biggest problem that I see and the people I talk to see in all of these areas is raising the capital. So I am very pleased with this motion. I support it, and I hope that we can come forward as a government with legislation that would hurtle us ahead into the next century.

My other big concern is that if we don't do it quickly, we're going to miss it, much like we have with our highways and our infrastructure. Right now, because we failed to do anything, there's a shortage in the industry, and it's costing us an arm and a leg. If we don't act fast and get ourselves educated on nuclear energy, the rest of the world where they have a shortage are going to jump on it. What we're going to find in one year, maybe even three years, is that there's going to be a five- or a six- or a 10-year wait to hire a company to come in and build any nuclear facilities because they've all been booked around the world. So it's something that we need to talk about, that we need to educate ourselves about quickly, and that we need to move on because the decisions that we make today will definitely define the direction that we go in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very much in favour of this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Minister of Energy.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that I listened to the exchange between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. As we discuss this Motion 502, I'm curious if either hon. member has any advance knowledge of a nuclear waste disposal site in either one of their constituencies because certainly with atomic power you have considerable amounts of radioactive waste generated, and that is an enormous problem. Where do you store that on a permanent basis? That issue is yet to be resolved. I would urge both hon. members to exercise caution in their promotion of atomic energy as a source of heat or steam in the tar sands.

Now, when we talk about this motion, it's very similar, oddly enough, to one that was put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View in 2005. It's very similar, certainly, for the member that is sponsoring this.

I'm just looking at the fiscal plan for 2005-2008, Mr. Speaker. This is the Alberta government's fiscal plan. In here they're talking about strengthening Alberta's innovative capacity. "Alberta has developed a research infrastructure that is helping the province to become a world leader in new technologies." Two years ago our budget apparently enhanced this position.

Research endowment funds. The government, I would remind all hon. members of this Assembly, "has two major research endowment funds, whose total assets are forecast to reach nearly $1.9 billion by 2008." That's next year. "Over the three years, the two endowments are expected to support approximately $250 million in medical, and science and engineering research in Alberta."

Now, the Alberta energy innovation strategy:

A five-year, $200 million Innovative Energy Technologies program has been established to encourage the development of innovative technologies to enhance oil and gas recovery. The program is also designed to help find a technical solution to gas over bitumen issues.

That we really need to do because of past mistakes in the Department of Energy. Now we're finding out that these past mistakes are again costing us millions and millions and millions of dollars. Not only do we have problems with electricity deregulations, but this gas over bitumen is an issue where the bill is continuing to go up and up and up.

Also with this Alberta Energy innovation strategy, the program, as I understand it, is designed to help find a technical solution to other issues. Assistance started last year, I'd remind all hon. members, and will be provided to royalty adjustments of up to a maximum of 30 per cent of approved project costs. So that's another innovative energy technology that is supposed to cost us only $200 million, but I suspect it'll be a lot more by the time this government is finished. It's another example of what happens whenever you operate without a plan: megabucks from the taxpayers to cover up those mistakes.

Now the energy and climate change research. I would remind again the hon. members of this House that over $50 million in research funding is being provided over three years for oil sands upgrading, clean coal technology, water management resource, enhanced conventional recovery, alternative energy sources, and greenhouse gas emission reduction through carbon dioxide management. There are also other innovative programs. The innovation in service excellence program and emerging opportunities program will provide $64 million over three years to support innovation and research in both the public and private sectors.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs may not be satisfied with these programs. Certainly, if he's not – and he's calling for the establishment of an endowment fund here – I would like to ask the hon. member: what is the matter with these current programs? Are they not working? Is he not satisfied? Or do we need more?

You know, we look at the oil sands and, certainly, in the past to get it off the ground the government has been involved in this in a significant way. There are royalty holidays already in existence for oil sands projects to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. It's surprising that they haven't been used more readily, but when I say that, I don't know for sure how they've been used because the information is top secret. It's not secret; it's top secret from the Department of Energy from the individuals, the citizens of Alberta, who own the resources. Certainly, if this government is going to be open and transparent, those top secret files on royalty giveaways with the oil sands projects have to be opened.

Now, we already talked about the atomic energy and where you can store that waste, Mr. Speaker, but earlier I talked about water management research. This is probably where the hon. member is going with this, and maybe it's out of concern for the evidence that there was no plan by this government when they were providing the information to the regulatory authorities with the latest round of approvals for oil sands projects.

The Radke report, responding to the rapid growth of oil sands developments, certainly indicates that there has been very little water management research done. In fact, the research that has been done has essentially been ignored. If it has been completed, it has been ignored. This is a direct quote, Mr. Speaker, from issue 11 in the Radke report: "Alberta Environment has not been able to provide timely advice and direction to industry relative to water use." Again, three projects have been approved.

If this is where the hon. member is going with his motion, and if the acceptance of this motion and the establishment of an endowment fund would be used specifically to determine once and for all how much water we can license to be used in the lower Athabasca River system or how much water we can allow to be withdrawn from the North Saskatchewan River for the upgraders, then this reason alone would be enough to support this motion. It's incredible that this government would proceed with this sort of industrial development without knowing whether we've got the water to operate or not. I see the hon. Member for Stony Plain shaking his head over there, and he should know from his great deal of experience around Lake Wabamun and the coal-fired generators that use Lake Wabamun as a water source. He should know just how precious water is.

Now, I'm dismayed to read the Radke report and realize that little work has been done by the Department of Environment to advise and direct industry, upgraders, and other plants who are planning to locate in the industrial heartland about the availability of groundwater or withdrawals from the North Saskatchewan River. They go on to say in here that there needs to be a substantial increase in manpower to the Department of Environment and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development to focus on these issues. Certainly, if we were to create an endowment fund, the salaries of these individuals wouldn't be coming from the interest off that endowment fund, but it's very important that finally this government first realizes that they have no plan, never had a plan, and that they take this Radke report to heart and develop a sound plan now.

Perhaps this is where the proposal, Motion 502, comes from with the hon. member because certainly we have to look at the provincial government's planning system as it relates to high-growth areas and the inadequacies that are there.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to make some comments here this evening with respect to Motion 502. One thing I would like to indicate. The hon. member opposite indicated moments ago that there's no plan with respect to water use and upgraders and that we don't know how much water we'd need to take from the North Saskatchewan River with respect to doing that particular piece of business. Very interesting, and I'm sure the hon. member would know that the city of Edmonton is engaged in discussions currently with the heartland community to use waste water from the city of Edmonton, in fact, for upgraders. So that issue has a very good possibility of an outcome there.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the motion, of course, expanding our renewable energy resources is a very important item in the mandate letter that I received from the Premier, and I will assure the House that it will be a very key component in the comprehensive energy strategy that we develop. Renewable energy is now, certainly now, and will continue to be an important part of our portfolio of energy resources. We have a number of very well defined renewables that are at play in the province now, and most certainly we'll continue to work with industry to develop more of those. You know, the one that I think tops the list is wind power. We've got some very aggressive wind power plans in the province of Alberta, and we certainly enjoy very good success with respect to that industry and, again, continuing to work with them to allow them to expand. They are now and will continue to play an important and, I think, ever-increasing role with respect to our resources.

Mr. Speaker, most certainly small hydro projects – it's been mentioned – in places like Dunvegan. There's an excellent opportunity there for Albertans to receive electrical energy from a run-of-the-river project on the Peace River at Dunvegan. There are opportunities not only for small hydro but, I would suggest, opportunities for some fairly large hydro still remaining in the province of Alberta. When you look in the northeast, the possibilities on the Slave River, I think, are areas that this government is certainly interested in pursuing.

Renewable energy now, Mr. Speaker, I believe, accounts for about 12 per cent of the total installed capacity in the province of Alberta, and we look at that as an important piece, and we're sure that it will continue. It's very important, I think, relative to some of the things that have been said, with respect to the fact that more needs to be done in research, and more emphasis needs to be put into the development of new technologies.

I think it's important to understand there are a number of initiatives in place that encourage research and encourage the implementation of new and effective technologies for the province of Alberta. For example, Mr. Speaker, there's a $200 million energy innovation fund that was announced last fall, and it supports clean, leading-edge, and competitive energy projects, such as $33 million to find new, commercially viable ways to reduce emissions from coal-fired electrical generators to near zero and $29 million to help design and build a facility to convert municipal waste into electricity. That is happening right here in the city of Edmonton.

The fund, with additional money from other programs, will allow the government to commit $239 million over the next five years to strengthen and support and expand Alberta's biofuel sector by encouraging manufacturers to bring more biofuel products to the marketplace and another $200 million, Mr. Speaker, to leverage industry investment in pilot projects that improve environmentally responsible conventional oil, natural gas, and in situ oil sands recovery.

Technology and innovation targeted at recovering resources that might otherwise be stranded underground will help ensure that the energy sector continues to provide economic and social benefits for Albertans well into the future. Mr. Speaker, further increases in the recovery of reserves, even seemingly small ones, make a big difference. A 1 per cent increase means an additional 600 million barrels of conventional oil, 17 billion barrels of bitumen, or 2 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. That's 1 per cent.

Let's not forget that even as we encourage innovation in alternative fuel, Alberta's traditional oil and gas sectors have and will continue to provide Canadians with a secure supply of energy and Albertans with substantial economic benefits. Mr. Speaker, I can't stress enough that the government of Alberta is doing, I think, a tremendous job with respect to support with these particular programs.

Alberta advanced education oversees ASRA. The Alberta Energy Research Institute, the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, and the Life Sciences Institute all work, Mr. Speaker, with funding opportunities from this provincial government and partnered with industry and institutions, towards technical solutions to some of the problems that we have with respect to alternative energy.

Mr. Speaker, I agree that the motion, as the member has indicated, is a good opportunity for us to bring debate to the floor of this Assembly with respect to the issue around alternative and renewable energy sources. We agree in the Department of Energy that it's one of the mandates that I have indicated has been set out for me with respect to going forward. The Premier of the province has indicated that it is an important piece of work for Albertans, and our integrated energy strategy will include renewables and alternate forms of energy as we move forward.

Thank you.

5:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Motion 502, Support for Alternative Energy Technologies. I first wanted to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for what I thought was quite a balanced speech in regard to the immediacy and the need to engage in alternative energy technology here in the province of Alberta, although I do have some reservations about the scope and, perhaps, the lack of focus of the motion. Certainly, the motion being such as it is, I would consider supporting it.

You know, we're looking to speak about a number of energy issues here specifically in regard to the bills brought forward this legislative session and also to engage in a general debate that is taking place both inside and outside of this Legislature. You know, it's important for us to try to embrace in the broadest way what it is to generate energy and what is, in fact, a sustainable energy future not only for this province but, indeed, for humankind in general. So when we look at, I guess, the spirit of this motion, I'm encouraged certainly. There are a number of areas that I would like to elaborate on here this afternoon.

Of course, we have the Alberta Energy Research Institute, which has been passed by the government to develop innovation in the energy sector. Certainly, the Alberta Energy Research Institute has a mandate to develop green and sustainable energy technology as part of its priority areas, six different priority areas. My concern about this is only that it doesn't engage in sustainable and green energy technologies in the manner in which these ideas deserve to be developed. Of course, we are on a sort of collision course with a crisis not just in Alberta but across this country in regard to delivering sustainable energy systems, and these green or sustainable energy technologies deserve to have the funding that we might put forward to some of these other alternative technology energy programs that we see even just starting to be brought out here in the last few days.

Indeed, if we approached funding that this new CO₂ pipeline seems to warrant, then certainly we would be moving in leaps and bounds in regard to sustainable energy technologies, not just in the research and development of them but in the implementation of alternative and sustainable energy systems here in the province of Alberta. Of course, we don't need to just reinvent the wheel, Mr. Speaker, every time we have difficulty in these areas. There's a wealth of knowledge around the world that has in fact met these challenges head-on. It's simply a matter of adapting technology that's been used around the world to our own special conditions here in Alberta. You know, for every dollar that we invest in conservation, of course, the longer we have to be able to build a system that is sustainable over the long term. Between using the existing appropriate technologies – research and development, certainly, is important – and, above all, conservation, I believe that we are most able to deal with and meet our renewable energy needs here in the province of Alberta.

You know, since I've begun with this area, I've been working hard with groups across the province to bring forward suggestions in regard to these things. I just wanted to remind the House that I did bring forward two private members' bills in this regard, that I would like to have considered in the spirit of this motion. The net metering Bill 219 from the fall would allow private individuals to generate their own power from alternative energy sources. We would reduce our overall reliance on fossil fuels based on power generation. We would allow for the commercialization and implementation of alternative energy sources. I believe, as well, that we would engage the public in looking actively for these alternative energy sources in their own backyard, so to speak, Mr. Speaker. So I think that in the spirit of this motion and in the spirit of public sentiment and practical solutions to our energy needs I'm certainly hoping that the net metering concept will move forward here in the next 12 months or so. I think that it would be a fine, fine thing, that I would be happy to have, not just for domestic consumers but for commercial consumers as well.

Another bill that I did bring forward last year, I believe, was Bill 211. This called for the establishment of a committee to look at ways to set up a revolving fund for the purposes of retrofitting houses and businesses to make them more energy efficient. Again, you know, this is not necessarily devising some magic bullet of some new technology but, rather, making an investment in appropriate technology to make buildings, both residential areas and commercial buildings, more efficient and to in fact conserve energy such as it is. I think this is very much in the spirit of this same motion from Edmonton-Castle Downs. Again, it's an idea whose time has come not just here in Alberta but across this country.

We believe, certainly in my personal experience, that we've not taken these matters seriously to the detriment of the province. You know, the perfect statistic that might illustrate that is the fact that we have in fact increased our carbon dioxide emissions here 39 per cent from 1990 to 2003. Indeed, these emissions continued to rise and grow geometrically over these past four years since 2003.

It's important for us to consider that emissions in terms of carbon dioxide have to be reduced absolutely. The development of alternative technology to achieve this goal, in fact, is the key to establishing absolute reductions because until you build the infrastructure that allows you to decrease your reliance on carbon dioxide, it's almost impossible to fight the increase in carbon dioxide emissions into the atmosphere. Perhaps the results are slow in the beginning, but once you've established that system, absolute reductions would be entirely possible.

The other issue which, of course, muddies this whole debate is the fact that while we might impose alternative energy delivery systems such as the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs was suggesting, until we in fact place a moratorium on new tar sands proposals, we will never be able to get a handle on our carbon dioxide emissions because those new plants coming on stream are increasing the carbon dioxide, again, geometrically into the atmosphere, and it becomes impossible to catch up, so to speak, Mr. Speaker.

Certainly, the spirit of this motion, I think, is to be commended. But there are a number of things that have to be there in concert with the intention of this motion to actually bear fruit. So if I were to make some recommendations to this motion just to sharpen it up a little bit, I would suggest that it would say something like "undertake a long-term budgetary commitment from a nonrenewable resource income" instead of "endowment fund," as it says in this motion. You know, this speaks to a firm commitment that the Alberta New Democrats have to fund priority motions and issues in regard to using actual line items in the budget instead of using the endowment fund system. Of course, the missing link here in terms of investing in renewable resource energy development is to in fact increase the revenues that we get from nonrenewable resources to fund this transition into a green economy for the province of Alberta.

The second part that I would amend here would be to say, “so that we may reduce absolute emissions of our GHG to meet our Kyoto obligations,” at the end of the motion. Again, that would, I believe, create a perhaps more balanced motion.

So if I were to amend this – certainly, I’m not withdrawing my support of this motion in spirit – I would say something like: be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to undertake a long-term budgetary commitment . . .

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to speak to Motion 502. I appreciate that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs has brought it forward at this time. Alberta is blessed with significant resource bounty. In the 2006-2007 fiscal year there is $11.5 billion of nonrenewable resource revenue projected in the budget. There are 173 billion barrels of oil sands currently accessible and another 1.6 trillion barrels potentially available. This is in addition to the 1.6 billion barrels of crude oil, 40 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, and 37 billion tons of coal that currently remain. These raw resources translate into considerable wealth for Albertans. Alberta has the highest labour participation rates and the highest GDP per capita in Canada. Our prosperity will continue for many years to come, thanks in part to over $100 billion of investment in future capital projects.

It is very clear that nonrenewable resources are a part of Alberta’s past, present, and future. There are centuries of potential in the oil sands, and we are increasing the recovery of conventional resources. The capacity of upgrading the oil sands is now expanding and will add value to bitumen. Alberta must also set its sights on new energy sources to ensure that it remains at the front of the pack in energy development. There has been much discussion in this province about wind, solar, and nuclear energy. Each has its merits and pitfalls, but I would rather take this opportunity to discuss the potential of biomass as an emerging energy source.

Biomass is a process that captures the methane from animal by-products and household waste and converts the gas into heat for electricity generation. The biomass process can capture the methane gas from animal by-products or household waste, taking these gases out of the atmosphere to generate electrical energy. The technology for biomass is available. One example, which I’ve mentioned before in this Assembly, is IMUS, the integrated manure utilization system, which the mover of this motion referred to earlier. IMUS takes manure from a feedlot near Vegreville and converts the methane into electricity and the solid product into biofertilizer. This is an exciting concept, and one can recognize the potential in managing agriculture waste in an environmentally sound manner. It is also important to note the work that the Alberta Energy Research Institute is conducting in the field of biomass. Through the Alberta energy research strategy AERI is encouraging the use of municipal solid waste as a source of synthetic gas for electricity production. This could greatly assist municipalities in managing landfills and would provide a new source of electricity for growing cities.

Using biomass to generate energy has the potential to create a bio industry for Alberta. This industry could sustain rural communities through electricity generation and the sale of biofertilizer. It also has the potential to limit the nuisance of municipal dumps and feedlots, which could allow for more productive land use. Perhaps most importantly, bio industry looks to limit the emissions of methane, a greenhouse gas that is considerably more potent than carbon dioxide. Instead of methane seeping into the atmosphere, it can be turned into a usable fuel. This concept is something we should all be very keen on implementing.

Mr. Speaker, in a way we are already doing the work that Motion 502 encourages. I think all members of this Assembly recognize that a broad range of energy sources will ensure the sustainability of Alberta’s economy for many generations to come. I as chair of the Alberta Research Council know that the bio industry has great potential in this province. I am encouraged that the government set aside $200 million into an energy innovation fund. This fund will advance the vision of a sustainable energy future for this province which includes bioenergy.

New technology and approaches require public and market acceptance. It is important for government and its research institutes to engage industry and the public in thinking about new energy sources. I think that if we continue on the path Alberta is on, we will find acceptable solutions to fill our energy needs.

I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for bringing this motion forward. This debate is a good opportunity to remind Albertans of the potential of the wide range of energy sources that will sustain our prosperity for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a former teacher I believe in the importance of doing one’s research and homework. I had the good fortune to teach a young gentleman by the name of Steven Keating, who is the son of John Keating and has a more famous uncle, Brian Keating of the Calgary zoo. I had an opportunity on a number of occasions to talk to John about alternative energy sources. He provided me with a number of possibilities, the obvious ones being wind and solar. He also talked about the run of the river which doesn’t get in the way of the fish or impede any natural flow, but energy is produced as a result. That seemed, with the number of rivers that we have, a possibility that has yet to be considered.

The government’s going to have to change the direction they’re going. If they believe in alternative energy sources, then they’re certainly going to have to, first off, get rid of the cap on wind energy. Right now I believe it’s capped at something like 10 per cent, and that prevents it from being added to our grid with no negative effects that I’m aware of. There are certain communities in this province who have already experimented with solar. For example, the town of Okotoks was profiled on CBC last week for the advances that they’ve made not only in housing projects but in heating their community arenas and warehouses and so on. The town of Vulcan, I believe, has been experimenting with geothermal, which is another basically renewable form of energy that doesn’t result in emissions. Both solar and geothermal have been proven as nonrenewable energy sources used extensively in Europe. So the technology exists for us to take advantage of these various forms of energy.

I have also had, in terms of doing the research, an opportunity to talk to Dr. Maunsell of the University of Calgary, who is connected with the ISEEE project, ISEEE standing for Institute of Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy, I believe the third E is. He talked about the possibility, as part of the bitumen processing and separation, of taking out the O₂ from the CO₂, combining it with hydrogen, and producing more water and, therefore, being less dependent on the Athabasca River because we know that any of the water that comes out of the Athabasca for use in separation of bitumen never makes its way back in. We also know what happens with the waste water in the form of tailing ponds and so on, so anything that can cut down that footprint would be very much appreciated.

Areas that I'm also familiar with – I had an opportunity to talk with a lady whose company is recognized for carbon credits. She provided a PowerPoint presentation for myself and our hon. shadow minister for Environment from Calgary-Mountain View. In it she gave examples of capturing the methane from manure, that other members have talked about, and using that energy to heat the pig barns or provide heat for chickens and so on and also on top of that getting credit for having done it. So you get sort of a double benefit. You can sell the emissions credit, and you can capture the methane. I know the city of Edmonton, for example, at its dump captures the methane and uses that energy positively rather than having it just disappear. Well, it doesn't disappear. It hangs in the air, unfortunately.

The various types of energy whereby some of the energy that is produced by heat is then recaptured and reused, that is already being used up in the Fort McMurray area, is obviously an advantage. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview in his alternative throne speech and in his response to the Speech from the Throne set 2012 as a date whereby a Liberal government would begin not only dealing with emissions intensities but actually capping emissions. In other words, a Liberal government would work with industry to sequester the CO₂ and use it, as has previously been indicated in discussions in the House, to inject and force out oil and gas. So it would be a win-win circumstance: get rid of it from being expended into the atmosphere and use it as a tool.

I do not share the enthusiasm for ethanol of the hon. mover of Motion 502. My understanding from the reports that I have read is that it takes as much energy to produce a barrel of ethanol as the ethanol provides, and while the emissions are reduced from lead forms of gas, the amount of chemicals that is necessary to be added in the form of fertilizers to encourage the various crops to grow, basically, negates the advantage achieved by ethanol. Ethanol quite often seems to be, particularly down in the States, more to do with winning votes than providing alternative energy sources.

As for nuclear energy that's a large concern of mine both because of the amount of energy that's expended and the emissions caused in the extraction and processing of uranium. Of course, as a grandfather who is focused more on the future with the birth of two grandsons, I don't want to leave them a legacy of radioactivity, that has not been proven to me that it can be stored safely because we know that it will remain radioactive for thousands of years. We know we can sequester CO₂. It's being done throughout Europe. It's being done in Saskatchewan as it's transferred from North Dakota.

If this motion gets to the committee stage, I will enjoy the opportunity to pick and choose the parts of it that I consider to be worthwhile, most of which I consider to be worthwhile. But when we talk about ethanol, to me that's just for getting votes, not for fuel in cars. Also with my research – I see a group – thanks to the Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy I've had the opportunity to go to lectures talking about alternative energy in the form of fuel cells. There is a tremendous amount of advantage in fuel cells in terms of being able to activate them in remote areas. So the research is being done. It's being done here.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, there have been a number of people who have indicated to me that they would like to participate in this debate, but I notice that the clock is striking 5:55 p.m., and we have given a full hour of debate to this matter. So under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to close debate on Motion 502.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and with pleasure I shall do so. I'd like to thank the Minister of Energy for supporting this motion and all members of this House for supporting the motion, including the Member for Calgary-Varsity, whose comments perhaps were not as positive. I believe that, indeed, the time has come to discuss alternative energy sources in a positive manner in this province, and I encourage all members to vote in favour of this motion.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn and reconvene tomorrow at 1 in the afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:57 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our people. Let us be guided by our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you someone who is well known to the majority of the members of this Assembly: Mr. Don Tannas, now seated in the Speaker's gallery. Don was a four-term MLA for Highwood, the constituency I now have the honour of representing. He served his constituents with distinction from 1989 to 2004. In 1993 Don became the first elected Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Legislature, and he served on numerous committees and sat as chairman of various organizations over the years.

Prior to being elected to the Assembly, Don was employed as a teacher and principal for the Foothills school division until 1989, taking a leave of absence from 1969 to 1971 to work with CIDA as a teacher trainer in Uganda. To this day Don has a great empathy for Africa and has visited several times during the intervening years.

Now that he is retired, he serves as executive director of the Western Communities Foundation. Also, Don is well known for his charitable work, particularly with the High River Rotary Club, which he continues to pursue. Mr. Speaker, I'm also very pleased to tell you that Don is a very active member of the Highwood Constituency Association and keeps us right in line. I'm delighted to see Don back in the House, and I now ask that he rise so that all the members may accord him a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly an honoured guest seated in your gallery. Julius Yankowsky is also no stranger to this Assembly. He served as the MLA for the Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview constituency for three terms, from 1993 to 2004. Mr. Yankowsky is presently enjoying his retirement and, of course, is keeping an active volunteering schedule. We're glad to have him join us today, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a colleague of mine from the Northwest Territories. I would like to take this opportunity to welcome the Hon. Michael McLeod, who is the Minister of Environment and Natural Resources. As you may or may not know, ministers in the Northwest Territories are multitalented. Mr. McLeod is also the Minister of Municipal and Community Affairs, and our relationship goes back to the days when we were colleagues in municipal affairs as well. Accompanying Mr. McLeod is his executive assistant, Mr. Doug Pon. I would ask both gentlemen to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui j'ai le privilège de présenter en votre nom, à vous et à l'Assemblée, des invités spéciaux venant de la communauté francophone. Ils sont assis dans votre galerie et sont ici pour souligner la Journée internationale de la francophonie ainsi que les Rendez-vous de la francophonie, une célébration nationale annuelle de l'histoire et de la culture française.

Je suis heureux de vous présenter en premier lieu les membres exécutifs de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta. L'association, connue sous l'acronyme ACFA, a son secrétariat provincial à Edmonton et chapeaute plusieurs autres organisations; donc, 14 bureaux régionaux ou cercles locaux à travers la province.

Présents parmi nous aujourd'hui sont M. Jean Johnson, président de l'ACFA, et M. Joël Lavoie, directeur général. J'aimerais également vous présenter M. Rhéal Poirier, directeur général de Francophonie jeunesse de l'Alberta, et M. Denis Perreux, membre exécutif du comité local organisateur des Jeux de la francophonie canadienne, qui auront lieu à Edmonton en 2008. Les accompagnants pour cette journée spéciale à la Législature est M. Denis Tardif, directeur général du Secrétariat francophone.

Je leur demanderais de se lever et être reconnus par l'Assemblée. Je vous invite à vous joindre à moi pour leur souhaiter une bienvenue chaleureuse.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to members of this Assembly a number of guests from the francophone community who are here to commemorate the International Day of the Francophonie as well as Les Rendez-vous de la francophonie, a national two-week celebration of French culture and history. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery.

I am pleased to introduce executive members of the French Canadian Association of Alberta. The association, commonly known as the ACFA, is the provincial umbrella organization representing all francophones, with a provincial secretariat in Edmonton and 14 regional or affiliate chapters across the province.

Here today are the president, Mr. Jean Johnson; the executive director, Mr. Joël Lavoie; Mr. Rhéal Poirier, executive director of the Francophone Youth Association of Alberta; and Mr. Denis Perreux, executive member of the local organizing committee for the National Youth Francophone Games, that will be held in Edmonton in 2008. Joining them on this special day at the Legislature is the executive director of the Francophone Secretariat, Mr. Denis Tardif.

I would ask them to stand to receive the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly five very talented young Alberta students. But before I do, I would just like to provide a bit of background.

Since assuming this portfolio, I've visited a number of schools in the province, and without exception at every school I go to, I've just been incredibly impressed with the artwork of our students. So beginning today, some of that work is going to be displayed in my office in the Legislature, and it's my hope that soon the walls of my office will be covered with Alberta student artwork and that it then spreads out into the hallway and maybe down even into your offices, Mr. Speaker. I encourage every hon. member to come by our office and enjoy this great artwork.

Today with the Premier we had the pleasure of unveiling the first five pieces of student artwork, including a sketch by one of our grade 6 students of the next hockey superstar, Sidney Crosby, which happens to be hanging in my office over the fireplace. Today I would like to ask the Alberta student artists seated in the gallery to stand as I recognize them. We have Ashley Lougheed from Louis St. Laurent school, Christian Comeau from St. Boniface school, Cassiel Pedro and Joshua Dipnarine from Virginia Park school, and Victoria Barnay from Edmonton Christian school. They are all accompanied by their very, very proud parents, their art teachers, principals, and other family members. I would ask if they would all stand and be recognized and warmly received by this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How do I beat an introduction by the Ed. minister? But I think I can do it.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly guests from grade 6 of the Heritage Heights school in my Highwood constituency. This is a new school, just opened this last fall, and a week from Friday the hon. Minister of Education and myself are going to officially open this school, and a beautiful school it is. Let no one in the world say that we don't have some new schools because we do, and this one's a great one.

Mr. Speaker, the total number of students, I believe, that we have with us today is 39. They did have an enduring trip coming up; I think they got some roads that weren't great. I would like to introduce their teachers Mrs. Alison Rattai, Mrs. Ada McIvor, Mr. Bill Cunningham, and parents Mrs. Roxanne Gibbard, Mrs. Cindy Mooney, Mr. Leonard Johnson, Mrs. Debbie Hagel, Mrs. Kristyn Hall, and Mrs. Toni Bouvier, who just happens to be my niece and whom I'm very proud of. She has her daughter Brooklyn with her in that group today. I would please ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two representatives of the Alberta College of Social Workers. As I mentioned yesterday, March 18 to 24 is National Social Work Week.

The Alberta College of Social Workers does an outstanding job representing the social work profession in Alberta. It advocates for policies, programs, and services that serve the best public interest. Through its membership activities the college establishes and maintains standards that promote skilled and ethical social work practice. I'd like to ask Lori Sigurdson, professional affairs co-ordinator, and Rod Adachi, executive director and registrar of the Alberta College of Social Workers, to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly a couple of guests that we've got up here from Champion, Alberta. Dick and Izzy Ellis have been lifelong residents of the village. They're very involved with the community, and Dick is heading up the Vulcan waste management authority. He's come up with a wonderful idea on how to dispose of all the waste that we have throughout the counties, and I hope he's had successful meetings with a couple of the ministers in attending the AAMD and C. I also know that they're looking forward to a tour that your staff will have for them to see this magnificent historic building. Dick and Izzy, would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three individuals from the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, of which I'm very proud to serve as chair. Seated in the members' gallery today: Mrs. Jean Dreger and Mrs. Diane Caleffi, both of Calgary, both well known to the Calgary caucus members. Both are volunteers who serve tirelessly on this council ensuring that Alberta seniors have an advocate and a place to turn for advice. Seated with them is Dianne Laird, the manager for the Seniors Advisory Council, my right arm and a very dedicated individual with the Seniors Advisory Council, and I'll tell you that she's very, very sharp. I am proud to work with them as their chair, and I'd like to ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled the authors of the book French Canadians in the Political Life of the Province of Alberta, 1891-2005. Seated in the gallery are Dr. Ernest Mardon, his son Dr. Austin Mardon, and they're accompanied by friend Arthur Lau. I would mention also that Austin is a member of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am so very, very proud this afternoon to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an absolutely amazing group of young people. I have with me today a grade 5 class from Keheewin elementary school in the south part of Edmonton-Rutherford. These students on their own initiative undertook an exercise to write me with their concerns about global warming and climate change. As a result of those heartfelt letters, our Leader of the Official Opposition included comments from their letters in his alternate throne speech, and they were here today to share some of their ideas in terms of addressing the issues of global warming and climate change.

I'd like to ask all 23 students to rise. They are accompanied today by a number of adults: Ms Lorraine Boggs, the principal of Keheewin school, which incidentally is celebrating its 25th anniversary this year; their grade 5 teacher, Ms Cindy Pang; and teacher helpers Joy Procinsky, Debbie Ainsley, Leslie Clarke, Jeanette McDonald, and Carol Wilson. I would ask them to all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you members of the school of Neil M. Ross, 51 students, two teachers, and five helpers: Mr. Brett Arlinghaus, teacher; Mrs. Cathy Bagdan, teacher; parents Mrs. Cathy Traynor, Mr. Tony Gannon, Mrs. Dianne Hajek, Mr. Ed Karl, and Mr. Daryl Wright. Would they please rise and receive and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Dawn Freeman and Karen Mykietka. Dawn and Karen both reside in my riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. They serve as the editor and managing editor of the Rat Creek Press, both since 2004. The Rat Creek Press is a community newspaper that serves north-central Edmonton, including much of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Their goal is to highlight community news, activities, and recreational opportunities as well as local residents and businesses to support the growth of a strong, vibrant, well-connected community.

I would like to thank Dawn and Karen for the important contribution the Rat Creek Press is making in our community, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House members of the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS. These guests met with the NDP caucus this morning and briefed us on the state of postsecondary education in Alberta today. They provided us with valuable recommendations, and in our opinion these merit the most serious consideration of the members of this Assembly.

I would now ask each of my guests to rise as I call their names and ask my hon. colleagues to hold their applause until each has been introduced. David Cournoyer, chair of CAUS and VP external of the University of Alberta Students' Union; Samantha Power, president of the University of Alberta Students' Union; Emily Wyatt, president of the University of Calgary Students' Union; Julie Labonté, vice-president external, University of Calgary Students' Union; Joanne Luu, vice-president administration, University of Lethbridge Students' Union; Duncan Wojtaszek, executive director of CAUS. I would now ask that they receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call upon the first of six to participate, 18 years ago today, on March 20, 1989, the citizens of the province of Alberta went to the polls. There are three members in this Assembly who were elected for the first time 18 years ago. So let us congratulate the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, and the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House on their 18th anniversary as Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Let us also wish happy birthday today to the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui, à l'occasion de la Journée internationale de la francophonie, c'est un plaisir pour moi de présenter à la Chambre une explication d'un événement canadien qui s'appelle les Rendez-vous de la francophonie. Neuf millions de francophones se rassemblent à la grandeur du Canada sur une base annuelle pour célébrer les Rendez-vous de la francophonie. Cette année les Rendez-vous ont lieu du 9 au 25 mars. Durant cette période de temps on célèbre les communautés francophones afin de promouvoir la langue et la culture française tant par ses activités sociales et ses célébrations que par sa dimension humaine et communautaire.

Les Rendez-vous contribuent à renforcer les liens entre les anglophones et les francophones du Canada et favorisent un plus grand respect entre ces deux communautés de langues officielles. De plus en plus nos municipalités albertaines se joignent aux Rendez-vous en tenant des cérémonies pour reconnaître leur communauté francophone. Parmi ces municipalités cette année on compte Red Deer, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Rivière de la Paix, Falher, et Fort McMurray. Félicitations à ces municipalités.

Vibrante comme elle l'est, la communauté francophone célèbre sa langue et sa culture tout au cours de l'année par l'entremise de festivals de la chanson, festivals de film, carnivals d'hiver, et j'en passe. J'aimerais profiter de l'occasion pour inviter tous mes collègues à connaître la communauté francophone en participant aux événements qui ont lieu dans leur circonscription pendant l'année.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today on the occasion of the International Day of the Francophonie it is my pleasure to provide the Assembly with information on a wonderful Canadian event called Les Rendez-vous de la francophonie. Nine million francophones get together for the annual Rendez-vous de la francophonie, which runs this year from March 9 to March 25. During that period of time attention is focused on francophone communities, with the idea of promoting French language and culture as much through community and human relations as through social activities and celebrations.

Les Rendez-vous contribute to the reinforcement of links between francophones and anglophones in Canada by fostering greater respect between the two official language communities. More and more of our municipalities are joining in Les Rendez-vous by holding ceremonies to recognize their francophone communities; for example, in Red Deer, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Peace River, Falher, Fort McMurray. Congratulations to all of them.

Vibrant as they are, francophone communities celebrate their language and culture throughout the year through music and film festivals, winter carnivals, and other celebrations. I would like to take this opportunity to invite all my colleagues to get to know the francophone community and to take in some of these events in their own ridings throughout the year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

Cremona Cribbage Champions

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and congratulate the Cremona Legion cribbage team of Diane Davies, Jack Borton, and Bill and Donna Kidd, who have recently won the Alberta-Northwest Territories provincial championship for team cribbage. To achieve this feat, they first had to win tournaments in Cremona, Carstairs, and Cochrane. They will soon be on their way to Halifax, Nova Scotia, where they will compete for the national championship from April 27 to April 30. I understand that some of them are watching today, and I know this Assembly will join me in cheering them on and wishing them all the very best of luck as they compete for this national championship.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Trojans Girls Wrestling Team Gastroparesis

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wrestling for recognition. Today I'd like to speak about two types of wrestling events. While both forms of wrestling matches are fought by individuals, the support they receive in their struggles is dramatically different. The first type of wrestling is the more traditional form of Olympic wrestling, which I had the pleasure of coaching for over 20 years. Therefore, I was extremely pleased to hear of the recent successes of 15 members of the William Aberhart high school Trojans girls wrestling team from the Calgary-Varsity constituency, which I represent. Thirteen of the 15-member team qualified to wrestle at the provincials. The girls' achievements are the result of their personal commitment and the support of their dedicated coaches, team, schoolmates, and families.

In contrast, across this province thousands of Albertans are engaged in a different type of wrestling match. These Albertans are grappling individually with the limited resource support of their second mortgaged families against the debilitating effects of gastroparesis. While gastroparesis, a motility disorder which prevents an individual from properly digesting their food and therefore being constantly on the edge of vomiting, has yet to be cured, it can be managed.

Calgary-Varsity teenage constituents Thomas and Jennifer Keith-Ferris, aged 15 and 17 respectively, along with 23-year-old Krysta Livingstone, a Medicine Hat resident, have had their quality of life returned to them through the implanting of a GES device, a gastric electrical stimulation device, which has been approved federally but not provincially. Because no medical facility exists in Alberta and since the Alberta government does not cover the costs of either the travel or the treatment of this disorder, many families cannot afford the life-restoring implant costs. Once again I'm calling upon this government to restore and increase funding for motility research, to stand in the corner of the thousands of Albertans wrestling unnecessarily with the debilitating effects of gastroparesis. Please support the efforts of Dr. Christopher N. Andrews, a gastroenterologist specializing in gastrointestinal motility disorders, based out of the Foothills hospital and associated with the University of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Maple Sugar Festival

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last weekend there was a very sweet event in Calgary, the annual Maple Sugar Festival, le Festival du sucre d'érable, celebrating the unique Canadian tradition. During the era of the aboriginal people in eastern Canada they would make an incision in the trunk of a maple tree with a tomahawk, and a piece of wood was then inserted, serving as a spout to gather the sweetness of nature. When the people from France learned of this tradition, the tap hole was made with a small axe, and a wooden reed was installed, allowing maple syrup to gather in a wooden container. Around 1885 the wood reed was replaced by a metal one, and from then on the tap hole was made with the help of a steel gauge. Around 1890 the wooden pails suspended to the tree by a nail made their appearance to gather every drop of the sweetness. So that's the history part.

This Maple Sugar Festival is now part of Canadian culture. I'm very pleased that the celebration of this original eastern Canadian tradition is now in modern times in Alberta, in the far west of Canada. Indeed, it's now from sea to sea, a mari usque ad mare. The sweet event in Calgary was offered in an array of lively festivities in an atmosphere of family joie de vivre.

I want to commend the event volunteers, performers, and organizers, mainly from francophone groups.

J'aimerais remercier les volontaires, les artistes, et les organisations qui montent annuellement cet excellent Festival du sucre d'érable, apprécié par les gens de tout âge.

I want to recommend that everybody should attend this festival in Alberta each year. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Continuing Care Accommodations

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent controversy surrounding the Holy Cross long-term care centre in Calgary is a deeply troubling example of the government's long-standing refusal to deal with substandard care, that is too often provided to our seniors and Albertans with disabilities in this province. Indeed, it shows the devastating impact of creeping privatization in continuing care. Albertans know that the profit motive in long-term care leads to exactly the same results as it does in any other kind of health care service: higher costs and lower quality. Private operators have a vested interest in keeping down the cost of labour and services in order to maximize profits on their shareholders' behalf.

Perhaps the most pernicious way that the profit motive is being implemented in seniors' care is the conversion of long-term care facilities to assisted-living centres. This is a growing and serious problem for many Alberta families. Not only are the expectations of care lower in assisted-living centres, but residents can receive essential care services only if they can pay for them out of pocket. All too often families are forced to pay thousands of dollars per month to maintain respect and quality of life for their aging parents or disabled loved ones. A system-wide shortage of continuing care spaces means that people who should be in long-term care are forced to wait and pay in assisted-living facilities. Meanwhile, long-term care facilities in Grande Prairie, Jasper, and other communities are expected to be closed and replaced by assisted-living lodges, where the same residents will simply have to pay more.

The minister of health should put an immediate halt to any further conversion of long-term care facilities to private, for-profit assisted-living centres. The NDP opposition will continue to push this government to take real action to ensure that Albertans have access to safe, affordable, high-quality continuing care. Guaranteed delivery of safe and high-quality care for our seniors and others in need requires immediate action to improve standards, properly monitor facilities, and end creeping long-term private care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition, the first of many, with 88 signatures on it. This petition urges the government of Alberta to "prevent the development of the Sherritt Dodds-Roundhill coal gasification project until the expressed consent of the families . . . in the affected and surrounding areas is obtained" and, furthermore, urges the Alberta government to “develop a comprehensive energy plan that uses our abundant energy resources to develop a green and sustainable future.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today again I am rising to table a petition, signed by 80 residents in Edmonton, which reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Edmonton, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to complete, as soon as possible, the overpasses and interchanges at the locations where the Anthony Henday Drive (Edmonton Ring Road) intersects Lessard Road, Callingwood Road . . . and Cameron Heights Drive.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 22

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 22, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, this bill allows for the separation of Alberta Investment Management from the Department of Finance into a stand-alone provincial Crown corporation. The legislation also balances operational independence with the highest standards of accountability and transparency.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

head: 1:30 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Municipal Waste-water Infrastructure Assistance

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier challenged me to provide evidence that this government has committed millions of dollars to the water transfer from the Red Deer River to the project at Balzac, so I will. If the Premier checks page 18 of the supplementary supply estimates from just last August, he'll find a line that commits $4.8 million “to support a project in the Municipal District of Rockyview that includes a horseracing track and an equine centre.” This matter has been extensively debated in this Assembly and approved by a vote of this government over the objections of the opposition. To the Premier: will the Premier now admit that this government has approved millions in spending on this project?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader kept talking about a secret deal. I said: present the evidence of a secret deal. The supplementary estimates were of course debated here in the House, and it's no secret. It's a matter of the record, and he finally found it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Prop him up, guys; prop him up.

To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: since this money is under the jurisdiction of his department, how much, if any, of this money does the department plan to spend?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes. As the Premier said, I've been waiting for this question for quite some time. He just hasn't quite got down to me yet. This came out of a program that's designed for municipalities, and we've had this program for close to nine years now. It's designed to assist municipalities with costs for water and waste-water infrastructure. It's for new projects that benefit our economy and grow our agriculture processing industry. Only municipalities are eligible for this funding.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. So let's focus in, then, on the specifics of the deal concerning the Balzac water transfer. Again to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I will assume that there's more than just a verbal arrangement between the government and Rocky View on this one. Can the minister tell this Assembly and all Albertans: what are the terms of the deal under which this money will be spent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are no specific terms of the deal. This is a program that we've had around for nine years, as I've said. They qualified for the program, so when they get their proper approvals, the money will be forwarded to them. At this particular time the money hasn't been forwarded to them because all the systems are not a go yet.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A freedom of information request to the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation has informed us that there are 1,800 pages of documents relating to the Balzac water transfer in this department's files – 1,800 pages in one department. None of those have been made available to us at this point, but they indicate that a lot of work has been undertaken by this government on this water transfer. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: given the intense public interest in this issue, will the minister make the 1,800 pages of the documents public, or does he intend for them to remain secret?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I don't know anything about the 1,800 pages. I do know that there have been some applications for water that my predecessor had actually rejected and said that they didn't meet the criteria.

I don't know exactly why the person that runs FOIP in the department wouldn't – if there is some reason that we cannot give the information out because it implicates a third party that wants to say, “We don't want that information out there,” that's up to whatever the rules are in FOIP on whether or not they give out those.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that the minister does his homework a little more extensively. Thank you.

A simple, straightforward question to the minister: exactly what has been done by the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation on the water transfer to Balzac?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I stated yesterday, as far as I know, there have been no deals done. I know that we had an application from the MD of Rocky View. It didn't meet the criteria, and it was turned down. Other stuff that was done, I will tell you – I shouldn't say that; I do know of another thing that happened. Ivanhoe Cambridge has been working with our department on whether or not they can have access into the property. Our department is doing their due diligence and making sure that all safety is adhered to. They're talking about interchanges and things like that, and the experts in our department have to do their due diligence and see whether or not it can be done.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This time to the Minister of Environment. Please just answer the question. Given the minister's detailed knowledge of and support for the project at Balzac, did this government review the memorandum of agreement between the MD of Rocky View and the developers before it was signed?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated many times before, the responsibility for reviewing the information is borne by officials within my department. I expect my officials to review all relevant information before they come up with a final recommendation, which has not taken place at this point.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Environmental Policy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to ask some questions that were inspired by the grade 5 class of Keheewin school in Edmonton-Rutherford. They're here in the members' gallery. In a series of letters expressing their concern about the environment, the emotions and concern and conviction that was displayed by these letters remind us through these children of the reason why we must work together to put the environment first. To the Minister of Environment on behalf of Lindsay from Keheewin school concerned about waste: when will we see a provincial blue box program to promote recycling?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. The issue comes down to the role that government plays in encouraging people to take issues regarding recycling seriously. At this point in time the government continues to support municipalities in both financial form and from an expertise perspective in encouraging further development of recycling programs. A province-wide program, frankly, I think is not that practical because it needs to be coordinated at the local level by municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Emma and other students expressed great concern about deforestation, especially in our northern forests, saying, I quote: without trees we can't breathe, and without trees all the carbon dioxide will stay in the air; clear-cutting causes more water pollution and higher costs for water treatment. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: can the minister tell us if he will stop clear-cutting practices in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that question on behalf of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. There are very clear plans in place in the province of Alberta with respect to forestry to ensure that we do not compromise in any way the watershed system that is so dependent upon our forests. I can assure the hon. member and the student who asked the question that issues related to water and the watershed are paramount in decisions regarding forest management.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another issue discussed by the students today with our members is that we need to stop burning so much coal and fossil fuels and encourage more solar, wind, and other renewable energies. To the Minister of Energy: can the minister tell us why we do not give the same incentives to renewable energy that we give to the fossil fuel industry?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that there are very good incentives in the province of Alberta for all energy projects, including renewable and, we're hoping, alternate energy. We continue to work. As part of the mandate that I've received from the Premier of the province of Alberta, we will develop an integrated energy strategy, and the integrated energy strategy includes all of the above. Fossil fuels are a base for Alberta. On top of that we will have very aggressive wind power; we will have hydropower; we will have green power with biomass: all forms of energy.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Employment of Children

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier confirmed that the Conservative government was asleep at the wheel with respect to major policy changes that would have seen 12-year-olds working in Alberta's bars. Flash back to 2005, and you will recall that this Conservative government approved major policy changes that allowed for children to work in restaurants without permits, and this change was made without debate in this House and without public consultation. My question is to the Premier. Why did the government turn back the clock to the 19th century with respect to child labour laws and allow children to work in restaurants?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the hon. leader is trying to get to, but yesterday I was very specific, I think, spoke very plainly, that after the minister responsible, the Solicitor General, and myself heard of the planned policy change, we put an end not only to 12-, 13-, 14-year-olds working in bars but all minors. So for the matter of the record, all minors: no working in bars and lounges in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier seems to believe that any boneheaded policy decision by this government is okay as long as he reverses himself once he gets caught. The members opposite ought to put down their copies of Adam Smith and try picking up Charles Dickens. The number of children working in restaurants in this province is now in the hundreds. Will the Premier now admit that his policy of allowing child labour is reckless and cannot be morally justified? Will he end child labour in this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, talking about the government decision: this was not a government decision. It was made by the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. There are a number of steps that this policy would have to work through, especially through the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. So it's not something that would have happened overnight; there were checks and balances in place.

With respect to young people working in restaurants, sooner or later in this province, Mr. Speaker, younger people have to learn the value of hard work, work for their parents or maybe their relatives in a safe environment under good supervision. There is nothing wrong about people learning the ethics of work.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the checks and balances in this province are the Alberta Federation of Labour and the Alberta NDP. [interjections] Well, how else did this get reversed but that we caught the government at it? Will the Premier admit that kids should be working on their homework, going to school, playing hockey, playing sports, and not working in restaurant kitchens? Will he end child labour?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we will do whatever we can to ensure that that party stays as the check and balance in this province forever. Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Career Transition for Military Personnel

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our military services are vital to the existence and security of our nation. We enjoy our home life while our armed forces defend our way of life and system of government. Some of my constituents have served in our Canadian armed forces as tradespersons and truck drivers. They voice to me that their qualifications in the military were not recognized and certainly not easily transferred into the same civilian occupation. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What policy or specific program does our government have to help our former military personnel in their career transition?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The men and women who serve our country are strong leaders with remarkable skills. Obviously, we want to incorporate them into the regular working areas of our economy as quickly as we can because of those skills. It's important for Albertans' postsecondary credentials to be recognized globally, and it's equally important for our province to recognize credentials that are earned outside of our postsecondary system. I am pleased to say that Alberta is working with the Department of National Defence, the Canadian federal National Defence department, through the Canadian Council of Directors of Apprenticeship to recognize military trade credentials. To date the board has recognized the certificate of military achievement, qualification level 5, and will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents, who were truck drivers in the military, told me that they have a hard time getting civilian truck driver licensing, so my only supplementary question today is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Through what policies and programs does the government help military truck drivers in their transition to the civilian occupation?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are aware that a constituent in my colleague's riding has raised concerns about retraining. In response my department has committed to conduct a further review to determine whether Alberta should consider equivalency arrangements. Alberta does operate like other provincial and territorial jurisdictions within Canada by not accepting military driving credentials without retesting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Holy Cross Care Centre

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program in October 2004 and January 2005 the owners of Holy Cross Manor in Calgary were granted over 3 million provincial tax dollars to build a total of 230 units of affordable housing. Enterprise Universal Incorporated hasn't been paid out the full amount yet, and thank goodness for that because not only have they not produced a single unit ready for occupancy; they haven't even made a substantial beginning on the second project. The rules say that the deadline for completing these projects is 24 months from the time the money is granted. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, who clearly didn't see this mess coming: why isn't the minister on top of this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do want to say that the ministry is on top, and we have continuing consultation with developers on their progress. We also have communications with those developers to see if there are any difficulties. At the present time that is what's been done.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the minister wasn't minding the store, and he wasn't staying on top of things, or else we wouldn't have gone two months beyond the completion deadline without the work even commencing. Or could the minister prove me wrong, perhaps, by sharing with this House, in the interests of transparency, the details of how this tight, ongoing process of dialogue works to produce results? I don't see any.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the Grey Nuns building project: part of it has been and is behind schedule. But I do want to say that the $3.2 million that was committed, the 1950s building project for 100 seniors' units, is near completion. The second phase, or the second part of the application, which involves $4.5 million: there has been no indication from the developer of him pulling out of the project, but I will say that we are having continuing dialogue with that developer.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, Albertans don't need excuses. Albertans need affordable homes. Everybody needs a home. Enterprise Universal now says that it does need more time and more money, or else it will pull the plug on the second project, 130 units of affordable housing for families and seniors, and give back the million and change the province has already advanced it. Doesn't the minister think it's about time to take them up on their offer, or is he planning to shovel even more tax dollars into this money pit?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the project that was applied for was a good project. There are criteria for those projects, and the criteria were adhered to by this developer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child Care Funding

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The most important concern for many young families is the care of their children. Many working parents depend on the provincial government to help provide high-quality, affordable, and accessible child care. Alberta families have been struggling to find and pay for daycare spaces and after school care. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Yesterday the federal government announced $250 million for provinces to create child care spaces. Can you tell us what this means to Alberta?

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am really pleased with yesterday's news. We all know that we do have a shortage of child care spaces in this province. My understanding is that the funding will be distributed on a per capita basis, so presumably we're talking about $25 million. I can say today that I look forward to getting more details, both in the confirmation of the amount of money that we're getting and also whether there are any requirements or conditions that go along with that funding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: I'm happy for the province, but what does this mean to the average working family in Alberta who has young children?

Ms Tarchuk: I mean, ultimately, Mr. Speaker, I can say that what this does mean is more choices for parents. It's too early to speculate on how we're going to spend the funding, but I can tell you that we will work with our stakeholders, and while we're planning, we will also build on the strengths of our five-point investment plan. Of course, any plans that we go forward with will have to go through the appropriate government approval process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's federal budget offered proof that Alberta is basically on its own when it comes to creating new child care spaces. The funding offered to Alberta is only a fraction of what was offered in the previous federal/provincial child care agreement. Provincial leadership is essential to create the new child care spaces that many Albertans need. To the Minister of Children's Services. Many individuals who would like to start child care centres cannot afford the start-up costs. Does the minister have a plan to address these funding shortfalls, which directly limit the number of new spaces created?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even before this announcement yesterday we have committed to continuing with the five-point plan, and that has been well received across the province. Also, two weeks ago we proceeded to enhance that five-point plan. Like I just said, we welcome the funds from yesterday, and we will continue to plan for additional child care spaces in this province.

Mrs. Mather: Labour shortage remains one of the biggest barriers to the creation of new child care spaces. The shortage of child care workers with level 3 certification, the highest level of training, is causing many centres to cut spaces or close altogether. What is the minister's plan to deal with this specific labour issue?

Ms Tarchuk: I can tell you that in our planning process we're looking at all aspects of areas that will help create child care spaces, and that does include professional development accreditation. As you know, a couple of weeks ago we dealt with wage top-ups. So we are taking a serious look at that issue.

Mrs. Mather: Municipalities across the province need more child care options. From Brooks to Fort McMurray to Cochrane to Grande Prairie the message is the same: the shortage of child care spaces is hurting families, the community, and the local economy. Again to the Minister of Children's Services. Alberta used to be a leader in provincial/municipal partnerships in child care. How will the minister enhance the role of municipalities hoping to get more involved in child care provision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that I have met with several stakeholders over the last several months. We are just finalizing an FCSS review that is going through the process in the next couple of weeks, which will come forward with some recommendations for the program that the hon. member mentions. I do know that during the review it has been highlighted that funding for out-of-school programs is an issue. Like I said last week, while we've made some changes on the zero to 6, with the 6 to 12 we don't have a policy mandate now, but I have committed to taking a leadership role in working with municipalities on some workable solutions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Regional Taxation Issues

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Based on the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability report it appears that Edmontonians can look forward to some new taxes which likely will not be levied in Strathcona county as this county has ample revenue from their industrial base. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Will the minister assure the residents of the city of Edmonton that if there are any new municipal taxes introduced, this new tax regime will be administered to the entire capital region?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability released its report yesterday, and I need to say that the council's blueprint – and that is the council blueprint – for sustainability for municipalities is that report. I also would like to say that the government is still reviewing the recommendations of that report and will report later this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will taxpayers of Edmonton hence be looking forward to a higher overall tax bill?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, if new taxation powers are granted to municipalities, it will be up to the individual municipality to determine the appropriate level of municipal taxation within their communities, not different than the municipal tax levies that are in place right now.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Fair enough. To the same minister: but if differences persist, will the provincial government force the Edmonton area municipalities to work together?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are certainly looking for opportunities to strengthen intermunicipal co-operation not just in Edmonton but throughout Alberta. The Premier has given me the mandate to address regional planning issues and intermunicipal disputes. As I previously mentioned, I expect to release the government's response to the minister's council very much in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Parkland strike is over, but there are fears that this strike was the first of many. Within the past week negotiations in two other school divisions have broken down, and over 80 per cent of school boards will be in negotiations this spring and summer. Without decisive action now the Parkland strike could be a pattern we see over and over again in the coming months. To the Minister of Education. School boards will be in labour negotiations this summer, but the province has the final say about the financial position the boards will be in. Will the minister commit to providing adequate funding to school boards to ensure that they can bargain effectively this summer?

Mr. Liepert: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, that is a budgetary question, and I would encourage the hon. member to ask that question about the 20th of April. But let me just say this. I'm an optimist when it comes to negotiations going forward. I tend to look at things from a positive viewpoint rather than a negative one.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's preventive that we should be talking about.

The deferred maintenance problem in Alberta schools is bad and getting worse, Mr. Minister. The Calgary board of education alone has a deferred maintenance backlog of $426 million. Will the Minister of Education commit to addressing the deferred maintenance backlog in this province's schools so that school boards can put money into programming and instruction rather than paying off past government neglect?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, again that's a question where I would encourage the hon. member to wait for the budget. But what the province did last year was put in place a policy whereby we did put money into maintenance and modernization. I can only be optimistic that there'll be as much or more money to spend in Education in this budget than there was in the last one.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A lot of parents are waiting for that, hoping it's going to get better.

Let's try this one. The $6.4 billion unfunded teachers' pension liability continues to be a huge problem for teachers across the province, and this government has been dragging its feet on the issue for years. Numerous leadership candidates, including the Premier, promised to take action to address this issue. Will the minister commit to finally – finally – eliminating the unfunded liability in the teachers' pension plan? Will you do something about it, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: As the hon. member is aware, that is one of the objectives that the Premier has mandated me to work on. I will be doing that, and I would ask the hon. member to stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

2:00 Affordable Housing Task Force Report

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have in front of me a release out of the municipal affairs department about the Affordable Housing Task Force, that I was a member of. If it's correct, it says that the 15-member panel spent 45 days gathering input, compiling the report, visiting nine communities with more than 800 presenters and another 600 written reports. I go down a little further, and to my dismay I see that the government will review the report and not respond till May. There's a crisis out there. We heard this. Rents are rising. There are more homeless out there, condo conversions, and we're not even going to allow the public to see this report till May. It's irresponsible. My question to the minister is simply this: why are we waiting for May to see what should be a public report released very quickly?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to concur that I did receive the report from the chair of the committee yesterday, and I do want to compliment the work that was done by the committee, the thorough work and the dedication. I also want to comment that I believe the news release commented that there will be a response from the government to the recommendations by May, not necessarily a release of the recommendations but a response to the recommendations.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, in the same release it says, "The task force's report and the government response will be released publicly at the same time." That's what it says in your own release here, Mr. Minister. My question again is simply this: why is it that all the people that took the time to present to this task force, a lot of hard work, cannot see the results of this? The government can do their analysis after, but this should be made public immediately. Why not?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I did receive the report yesterday. I am going to take the proper procedures to bring the report to government, and at that time we will release the report.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not asking the government to respond immediately. What we're asking for is the task force report to be made public so Albertans can see what's in it. Then the government can respond. That's what we want.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how to better answer the question except to say to the hon. member that I have received the report. I am going to take it through the proper channels of this government and will release the recommendations, will release the response to the recommendations as quickly as possible because I very much believe that that report is very thorough and very important to Alberta.

Electricity Line between Edmonton and Calgary

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, about two years ago the Alberta electric systems operator, the Department of Energy, and others met with the EUB in Calgary, and out of that meeting was a determination that there was a necessity for a 500-kV line from Wabamun to Calgary. Now, the other thing that flowed out of that meeting was that there were about 13 proposed locations for this line to be built. AltaLink was charged with coming up with which would be the best location. It quickly was reduced to two, without the input of the landowners along the lines. It then was reduced . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. Forty-five seconds has gone.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll proceed on the basis that I would understand that the hon. member is speaking about a particular 500-kV line that runs between Edmonton and Calgary. It's currently being reviewed by the EUB. The hearings with respect to the issue are set off until the middle of April pending the result of a legal question around the hearings.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the landowners are feeling that they've been dealt with in contempt, and they want the hearing to now be postponed till the 1st of June. So to the Minister of Energy: will you ask the EUB to hold off till the 1st of June, and if not, why not?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, as I had mentioned previously, yesterday and again moments ago, this issue is in front of the EUB. They are not part of this government. They operate separately from the government. They are charged with the responsibility to assess this application along with many others, and they will continue this process in due course. It's been set off now till the middle of April. I have no indication whether or not the delays would go beyond that point in time.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the EUB has a policy that they will not determine before the hearing whether in fact the consultant and/or lawyer would be paid for. This puts the landowners in a very difficult position. Not only that but they will only pay up to $250, and today you cannot get a lawyer or consultant for $250 an hour. They charge around $300 an hour. Will the minister look into that situation?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, the EUB has fairly strict guidelines around the issue of paying for people that intervene with respect to these hearings. Most certainly I will take the comment of the member under advisement with respect to moving from a $250 an hour legal fee amount to a $300 amount. If there's something that the EUB is missing there with respect to the price of lawyers, certainly we could ask the EUB if they wouldn't mind reviewing that particular issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Provincial Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just 4 per cent of Alberta is designated as protected areas and provincial parkland. Unsurprisingly, over 10 per cent of Alberta's wildlife is endangered and threatened. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture: will the government commit to expanding the parkland in this province so that we at least give these creatures a chance to avoid being wiped out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very, very much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is certainly right in asking that particular question. Our policies in the province of Alberta are such that we do want to protect a number of species, including wildlife and including wildflowers and various live materials that are out there. So, certainly, we are doing some of that in the province of Alberta, and we'll look at other endangered species as we move along.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the minister talked about the need to honour existing commitments to oil and gas companies operating in protected parkland. Will the minister honour his commitment to Albertans and ensure that in the future "protected" actually means "protected"?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think I also indicated last week that we had various categories of protection, and I may want to repeat those. One of them is the wilderness areas. Others are the ecological reserves that we have. We've got also Willmore wilderness. We also have wildland parks, provincial parks, heritage rangelands, natural areas, and recreational areas. In each one of those we have different rules and regulations that we adhere to. In some of them we allow absolutely no activity aside from on-foot travel and participation, yet in others we provide a broad range of activity that can happen in those areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you again. Given that the minister's mandate to defend protected areas conflicts with his commitments to oil and gas projects in protected parks, can the minister tell us if he's taking his marching orders from Premier or the Minister of Energy?

2:10

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think it's neither of those. Certainly, we are working with all the stakeholders. We are working with the energy industry. We are working with Sustainable Resources. We are working with Agriculture in establishing what can happen in all of our areas. We try, as I indicated before in this House, to achieve a balance. In some areas, again, we are protecting them wholly. In others we are saying that certain activities will be allowed to happen.

Capital Cost Allowance Program

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's federal budget the government of Canada announced that it would phase out the accelerated capital cost allowance program for oil sands development. There have already been a number of concerns voiced by the industry about the potential impact that this change will have on the future of the energy industry. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Because this program is being phased out over a number of years, is there a possibility that this could lead to the unintended consequence of even more rapid development, putting additional strain on our labour market and on our infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, initially I have to express my concern and disappointment with the federal government's budget statement indicating that the accelerated capital cost allowance would in fact be removed. More to the question, I would suggest that there is an economic climate in the province of Alberta, including now the situation around accelerated capital cost allowance, our review of royalties, a rather inflated cost of doing business in the province of Alberta: I think that these things added together will very likely temper applications.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, at the same time that the phase-out of the capital cost allowance was announced, new capital cost allowance provisions were announced for manufacturers. Given the minister's mandate from the Premier to increase the amount of value-added in the province, what is the potential impact on projects such as the announced or proposed upgrader projects that are happening in the industrial heartland?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker, thank you. Most certainly, the province of Alberta is going to continue to move ahead. We are very, very positive with respect to the resource base that we have in the province of Alberta. We will continue to move ahead. With respect to upgrading, I believe that there is an opportunity for us here on the manufacturing side. The feds have left a bit of room there with respect to that issue and accelerated capital costs. We will be pursuing that.

Mr. Doerksen: My next question is to the Minister of Finance. Given concerns raised by the industry that they are facing uncertainty due to this announcement and its impact on capital and investment, can he advise members of this Assembly whether this change will be taken into account during the review of the royalties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an absolutely excellent question. The last thing that we want to have happen to our oil industry is a one-two-three punch, with number one being the income trust, number two being the accelerated capital cost allowance, number three being potential climate change issues. So in our Royalty Review Panel I have asked the panel to take a look at the accelerated capital cost allowance, see what that has to do with the royalties, and see exactly the position that the oil sands companies are going to be in with respect to that. I think it's a very important question, and it's something that we certainly have to take a look at and take into consideration when we take a look at royalties.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every secretive government's dream, contrary to international standards on public openness, a huge step backward in the fight for more open and transparent government, unacceptable, noxious: these are the words that were used by experts in informational laws, political scientists, and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation to describe Bill 20, which was forced through by this government in 2006. The blanket exemptions in Bill 20 serve one purpose, and that is to protect this government from any form of public accountability. To the Premier: given that Bill 20 prevents the citizens of this province from accessing internal government audit documents for 15 years – 15 years – is it the Premier's position that such an exemption supports an open and transparent government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government has moved quickly on openness and transparency. It started, first of all, with a posting on the web of all of the manifests of government aircraft. We also are going to be making public all ministerial expenses, EA expenses on the web starting in April. We're moving today, of course, second reading of the Lobbyists Act. We're moving with the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007. We have done more in the last 90 days than any government before.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that Bill 20 prevents the citizens of this province from accessing ministerial briefing notes for five years, is it the Premier's position that such an exemption supports an open and transparent government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the bill was debated and passed in the House, and it's up to me to uphold the law. That law is Bill 20, that was passed. If the opposition has other ideas that they want to bring forward to the House, so be it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Well thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier made the following statement regarding Bill 20 in May of last year, and I quote: if it does restrict openness and transparency in some way, then so be it, and I'm sure that no matter who is elected as leader, that person will find the need to change the legislation. End quote. To the Premier: given the scathing reviews from information law experts and academics regarding Bill 20, does the Premier now support the statements that he made during the leadership campaign, and will he enact changes to the legislation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll stand on my record in terms of the movement we made over the last 90 days to openness and transparency in this government, but there is more to come. In fact, we're opening up this Legislature to all-party committees, and we'll see soon where they stand on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Highway Maintenance

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the course of this winter travelling back and forth, many of us see the deterioration on our highway network, especially when it comes to cracks and potholes and lane identification. My question today is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. I'd like to know if the maintenance of these potholes and improvements to the lane identification are part and parcel of the contracts we have with our contractors that maintain the provincial highways, Minister.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for that very important question. The hon. member is correct in that this winter has been very hard on pavement and pavement markings. Our maintenance contractors are responsible for filling the cracks and painting lines on our highways. The contractors have to work to the standards set out in their contracts, and government inspectors ensure that the work is done properly and in a timely manner.

Mr. McFarland: Second question. If that's the case, is there any way that the department and the contractors could facilitate some accelerated maintenance, especially when it comes to lane identification?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, our highway maintenance contracts are performance based and encourage the contractors to be out there and doing whatever work is necessary. Our contractors are paid only for the work they do actually perform, so it's in their best interests to be busy. If they don't do the work, then they don't get paid. There's no incentive for them to be sitting around the shop when there's work to be done outside. Of course, it's in the travelling public's interest for the contractors to be out there as well. I can assure the hon. member that our contractors are doing whatever the weather permits them to do.

Mr. McFarland: Given that traffic volumes and the weather conditions have, in fact – and I'm back on the lane visibility – deteriorated substantially, and I know that it's impossible for this stuff to be done during the winter, is there any way to get a more durable or a more timely application of some of these lane identifiers?

Mr. Ouellette: As I mentioned in my first answer, the amount of snow clearing and sanding this year has taken an unusual toll on pavement markings. My department is always experimenting with paints that are more durable and reflective, Mr. Speaker. We need to test the products first before we put them on the approved material list for our contractors to use. We also are trying more permanent inlaid plastic markings on some of our higher volume roads, and these markings are considerably more expensive than traditional paint but do last longer. They have been used successfully in warmer climates such as California, and we're hoping they will work in the Alberta climate. Should they prove cost-effective and work well, we will consider, then, putting them on the roads for . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electrical Power System

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Business owners, farmers, tenants, and homeowners struggle to pay their monthly power bills. We know why. Last fall I asked the now Premier how his government planned to unplug electricity deregulation. To date, unfortunately, I have not received an answer. Hopefully, this afternoon I will. My first question is to the Premier. Given that in six years deregulation has added $13.8 billion extra to the cost of generating electricity in this province – and this does not include transmission, distribution, and billing costs – when will this government do the right thing and unplug electricity deregulation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this province has gone a long way in adding additional generation in this province. In fact, even with all of the cogen that's happening in the province, we still require more generation. The other is that through deregulation in terms of generation we have also looked at new generation for wind and solar and, very close to my constituency, even cogenerating electricity from manure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Premier: if this generation has added so much capacity to the system, why are prices continuing to skyrocket for homeowners, for commercial users, for farmers, and for businesses in this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the cost of electricity – moving electricity to homes, the cost of infrastructure, the overall cost to each and every Albertan – has risen in some cases because of the fact that we haven't kept up with maintaining our transmission lines and our distribution lines over the last number of years. Then, of course, with respect to generation natural gas prices are up. We will soon have, depending on what happens from the federal government, perhaps even more in terms of electrogeneration from coal, given new rules possibly coming from Ottawa. So there's a lot to come in the area of electrogeneration, I can assure you of that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Premier. Because there was no long-term planning done with electricity deregulation, we now see first-hand the mess with our distribution and transmission system, which adds many dollars to the bill but specifically to the cost of electricity. Why is the cost of electricity going so high?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think what he's trying to imply is that through a regulated system, then, these changes would have been made a lot faster. Actually, it's the reverse, and history has proven that.

The other is, Mr. Speaker, that in spite of all these issues that the hon. member may be raising, there are still over 500,000 people that move to this province, and more people insist on moving to the province of Alberta because, quite frankly, it is the only – only – jurisdiction in Canada that has any economic growth.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we dealt with 98 questions and answers today.

We'll now revert to where we were in the Routine, and I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for an introduction of a bill.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 24
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 24, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2007.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Loi modificative de 2007 sur les emblèmes de l'Alberta (reconnaissance du fait franco-albertain)

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to request leave to introduce a bill, being the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007/ Loi modificative de 2007 sur les emblèmes de l'Alberta (reconnaissance du fait franco-albertain).

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to table a copy of a letter that a constituent, Bonita Davidson, has sent to me. She's a personal care attendant, and for some time she's been working as a live-in caregiver in the self-managed care program. I referred to her in my response to the throne speech. She's particularly raising issues about the need for respite care for caregivers and also the fact that many caregivers are not covered by WCB, and if they become injured, there's no assistance for them. So I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of that letter today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a press release issued by the Ed Stelmach leadership campaign, including a pledge that the teachers' pension fund unfunded liability would be addressed through a final and fair and lasting resolution.
Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter that I wrote yesterday to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food, and it is, again, suggesting that the Minister of Agriculture and Food post an apology on the website in regard to question period yesterday.

The second tabling I have is a press release and supporting research documents indicating that electricity costs have increased by 38 per cent since 2000 in Alberta for farmers whenever you compare them to the other western Canadian provinces, which have seen single-digit increases in their electricity costs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups of tablings here today. One is from the Unity Centre in my constituency, which is a tremendous resource centre for the less advantaged in northeast Edmonton. It speaks to homelessness and the need for more affordable housing.

The second group is calling on the Assembly to support that the accused killer of Joshua John Hunt be sentenced and tried as an adult due to the nature of his crime, his past criminal history, and that he is close to the age of 18 years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the prerequisite number of copies of an article talking about the Keith-Ferris family and their struggle with gastroparesis. The article is entitled Life-changing Device Helps Local Kids Stay Active: Provincial Funding Needed for Gastroparesis Patients.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from my constituent Linda Smith. She is concerned about crime. She's urging this government to punish young offenders who commit crimes and not give them second, third, or 10th chances to keep committing crimes. Five copies, please.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, pursuant to the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research Act the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research 2005-2006 programs and financial highlights; pursuant to the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act the Alberta ingenuity fund 2005-2006 annual report; pursuant to the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board 2005-2006 annual report; the Alberta Prion Research Institute 2005-2006 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Dr. Oberg, Minister of Finance, a report dated January 2006 entitled Organization and Governance Review of Alberta Investment Management, prepared for Alberta Finance by Capelle Associates Inc. on behalf of Capelle Associates Inc. and KPA Advisory Services Ltd.

Second Reading

Bill 1
Lobbyists Act

The Speaker: I'm going to call on the hon. Premier. I'd just advise all hon. members that under our Standing Order 29(1)(a)(i) the Premier is limited to 90 minutes' speaking time.

The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that extra time.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, of course, to rise today and move second reading of Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act.

I'd like to really begin, Mr. Speaker, by touching briefly on the history of this legislation, of this bill. Last spring an all-party Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee reported back to government, and one of its key recommendations was the creation of a lobbyists registry. In addition, this bill was one of the commitments which I campaigned on last fall. I committed to taking it one step further.

This bill will accomplish three goals. First, it will require lobbyists to register; secondly, it will prohibit lobbyists from simultaneously lobbying and providing paid advice to government on the same issue; and, third, it contains provisions to have the listing of entities who receive payment from the government posted online. This is a dramatic step, a first in Canada, and one which will allow all Albertans to see and compare for themselves who is being paid to lobby government and also who is being paid by government.

Mr. Speaker, lobbying is a legitimate activity. It can be very valuable to government during the very important decision-making process. Albertans have the right to communicate with decision-makers, provide information, and, of course, their views on issues that are important to them. As the preamble to Bill 1 clearly states, "free and open access to government is an important matter of public interest." At the same time, it is important that both members of the public and public office holders know who is being paid for trying to influence government decisions. A lobbyist registry will provide for greater transparency while maintaining open access to government.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly define the role of a lobbyist. A lobbyist is an individual who is paid to communicate with public office holders in an attempt to influence government decisions. Lobbyists may be retained for a fee or may be employees or paid officers or directors. They may work for nonprofit or for-profit based organizations. Lobbyists include sole proprietors and partners in partnerships who lobby on behalf of their business.

However, not all communications with government are considered to be lobbying. For example, a person making a submission to a committee of the Legislative Assembly or in the course of proceedings before a board or tribunal is not lobbying. A constituent does not need to register. Of course, those that come, you know, on a weekly basis to our offices do not need to register before communicating with their MLA unless they are communicating with their MLA about a private bill for their own special benefit. There is no registration required if a person is asked for his or her opinion by a public office holder, nor must a lobbyist register when they want to influence a public office holder about the interpretation or application of legislation, regulations, or a government policy as it applies to the lobbyist's client.

However, a lobbyist must register if he or she wishes to influence government decisions in certain areas. These areas include influencing the content of legislation, regulations, or government policy. A lobbyist must also register if he or she wants to influence the awarding of a government grant or financial benefit or a decision to privatize a government service. The definition of "lobbyist" and the types of communications which require registration are carefully designed to ensure that registration is required in appropriate cases but without impeding access to government.

The registry will be freely accessible to members of the public in a searchable format through the Internet. Information contained in the registry will include the name of the lobbyist, the issues on which he or she will be lobbying, and the communication techniques to be used, including identifying whether they will be communicating with ministers, MLAs, or public servants.

The registry will be overseen by the Ethics Commissioner, who will have the real authority to appoint a registrar. The registrar will have the authority to issue advisory opinions and interpretation bulletins to assist lobbyists and all Albertans in understanding the registration requirements.

A second key feature of the bill is that it prohibits both lobbying and providing paid advice to the government on the same issue at the same time. This prohibition addresses an issue of concern to Albertans and works to ensure that government receives objective advice. As part of their registration lobbyists will have to provide a declaration that they are not in violation of this prohibition. The registrar will have the authority to investigate breaches of the legislation and, when in his or her opinion it's been breached, can impose administrative penalties of up to $25,000. Breaches of the legislation could also be prosecuted through the court system. This bill provides for fines of up to $50,000 for a first offence and as high as $200,000 on a second or subsequent offence. These, Mr. Speaker, are the highest fines of any province in Canada. Additionally, when a person is convicted of breaching the legislation, the registrar can prohibit that person from lobbying for up to two years.

Mr. Speaker, the third element of this bill is that it provides for the publication of an index of government accounts paid. The index will be fully accessible and searchable on the Internet. The index will include individuals and corporations who are paid under government contracts. This information will be readily available to the public. It is information already collected. There will be no extra steps to take for Albertans doing business with government. The index will provide openness and transparency in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 will allow Albertans to see for themselves that lobbying activities are being done openly. This is leading-edge legislation. It demonstrates my government's commitment to governing with openness and transparency. This bill will go a long way to restoring public confidence and respect for this democratic institution. I encourage all members of the Legislature to support Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act.

I would now move that we adjourn debate on Bill 1 and return to it at a later date.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 20

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007.

The supplementary supply estimates provide additional spending authority to five government departments. All of the spending has been reported in the third-quarter fiscal updates. The estimates include capital for postsecondary institutions, agricultural assistance programs, housing initiatives and programs for the homeless, and funds for physician services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon in second reading of Bill 20, the supplementary supply No. 2 act, which means, of course, that this is the second time this year that this House has considered a supplementary supply. [interjection] The second time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the new Premier and his new cabinet have talked an awful lot about the fact that this sort of spending is not to be seen as often, as regularly, or as much in the future. I can tell you one thing for sure: this shadow minister is going to hold them to their word. I will dog them every day to make sure that they're true to that. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that it has been a bone of contention ever since I was elected to this Chamber, that we saw quarterly updates to the budget, and in most cases we saw as much money being announced in spending at those quarterly updates as there was extra in the surplus. This is no way to run a government. It's no way to run a business. It's no way to run a household. So, as I say, I certainly intend to hold them to their word on that. I've noticed in some of the comments from the President of the Treasury Board more recently a bit of a softening on that stance, so I'm serving fair warning today that I will be watching very carefully.

You know, really, if the purpose of supplementary supply is to deal with emergent and emergency situations – and we've discussed before whether it should be forest fires or flooding or even, I suppose, you know, a downturn in the value of the Canadian dollar which causes the price of new government airplanes to rise dramatically. I suppose you could argue that that's an emergent situation as well. But when I look through Bill 20 and some of the areas where we're providing supplementary funding, bearing in mind that this bill is coming forward after the new government was sworn in and the new ministers were sworn in, yet there are a number of items in this particular bill that cause me to question whether or not they are in fact emergent or emergency.

I'm just looking, for an example, Mr. Speaker, at Advanced Education and Technology, $34.5 million for a grant to match private donations to the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. I think my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark was referring to this yesterday. We know that some of that money is to match the Mactaggarts' wonderfully generous donation to the University of Alberta. The government has known about this for a couple of years now, Mr. Speaker. I remember the day that we had the Mactaggarts in your gallery and the announcement was made. So here we are now quite some time later and finally providing the matching grants, and it's a good thing. It's something that we were all in favour of. My question is simply this: why does this have to have been done in supplementary spending? Why could it not have been in either last spring's budget or in this spring's budget, which is really the proper place for that spending to be?

One point five million dollars for enhancing science literary awareness programs at the Science Alberta Foundation: a wonderful initiative. I'm sure nobody on this side of the House is going to argue against the merits of spending the money in that particular program. The question is really: is it emergent? Was it an emergency? Was there some compelling reason why it had to be done in a second supplementary supply bill, or could it not either have been done in last spring's budget or have waited another month and been in the 2007-2008 budget?

Five hundred thousand dollars for enhancing awards and promoting the annual gala event at the ASTech foundation. Same argument, Mr. Speaker, so I'm not going to belabour the point.

We look at the Department of Agriculture and Food asking for $50 million to supplement the CAIS program. Again, I'm sure there are some very valid arguments for that being an emergency. That money is most likely very desperately needed by the folks in our agricultural community. Perhaps a justifiable expense and one that I wouldn't necessarily have a problem with.

We look, however, at the Department of Finance, and there's $7.07 million to reimburse public sector pension plans, research endowment funds, the scholarship fund, and other minor funds for investment losses. Now, Mr. Speaker, I've reviewed the Hansard from last week when we were in committee debating this, and I didn't see any response from either the Finance minister or the President of the Treasury Board or the Premier indicating what happened with those particular funds and why they lost $7.07 million in an economic environment when virtually every fund I'm aware of made money last year. Certainly, I watch the stock markets as closely as most members in this Assembly do, I'm sure, and I watch with particular interest the heritage savings trust fund, which generated a healthy return last year. I'm quite curious, and I think that before I could lend my support to this bill, I'd want to know what happened with those funds that we lost a total of over $7 million in them. Were any actions taken against the managers of those funds or some hard questions asked as to investment decisions they were making? In this economy it's hard to imagine that funds would be losing money.

Another one that jumps out at myself – and I know that the Member for St. Albert asked a question in question period this afternoon about the unfunded teachers' pension liability, Mr. Speaker. Here we have in one lump-sum payment $40 million that the government is putting into their share of the management employees' pension plan unfunded pension liability. Again, I reviewed Hansard; I didn't see any reference to this in the Hansard. Perhaps I missed it. But $40 million, as near as I can tell, covers the lion's share of the government's share of that unfunded liability, and it's made in one fell swoop in the middle of a budget year, without any explanation for why it would be an emergency.

At the same time we have nearly $7 billion in an unfunded liability to the teachers' pension plan, which we press this government constantly on. We are continually told time and again that it's going to be addressed, that there will be movement made on it. In the meantime, we carry on with the difficulty in attracting teachers. We carry on in a situation where taxpayers are funding this to the tune of some $45 billion over the lifetime of the project as opposed to dealing with the $7 billion liability today. So clearly for taxpayers it would be a good deal to look after some or all of that unfunded liability today.

I'm hoping that there will be some addressing of that in the budget that we see next month. Again the question is: why was this $40 million needed in the middle of a budget year? If there's $40 million for that particular unfunded liability, what about all of the other unfunded liabilities that the government has, certainly the largest of which is the teachers'?

I look at the Health and Wellness department getting $147 million for higher than budgeted costs of physician services. Again, given the state of health care in this province and the urgent need for that, I'm not going to pick a bone with that in particular. I think there's probably good justification for that, so perhaps that is a good use of supplementary supply.

Likewise, Mr. Speaker, Municipal Affairs and Housing: a total of $42.846 million is being requested. It looks like the majority of that is going to rent supplement programs: $15.173 million for an affordable housing program, $16.142 million for the off-reserve aboriginal housing program, and a further $9.531 million to address "homeless or near-homeless people through outreach teams administered by seven major community-based organizations." Well, I don't have to tell you or any member of this Assembly how important the issue of housing affordability has become.

When I give my response to the throne speech either later today or sometime in the near future, I will definitely be addressing that particular issue as it relates to the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford and how it has over the last year and a half become the number one issue in my constituency office. I'm going to guess that that's not dissimilar to other experiences that members of the House are having.

So a total of $42.846 million going to various issues surrounding housing affordability. Again, this is an emergent issue, and this is the sort of thing that I can certainly live with in terms of supplementary spending.

I guess, to sum up, as I said, the two for Finance, both the $7 million to address losses from various investment funds and the $40 million in one fell swoop being dumped into the management employees' pension plan: I really have questions as to what the emergency is there, and, Mr. Speaker, as I outlined, the three different ones from Advanced Education and Technology: 34 and a half million dollars to match the donations, $1.5 million for science literacy awareness programs, and $500,000 for the awards and promoting the gala event at the ASTech Foundation. I suppose a question that might be relevant as well, since we're discussing it, is: just exactly how much of that $500,000 went for enhancing the awards and how much of the $500,000 went for promoting the annual gala event? I'd be curious to know that. If there's somebody on the government side that might be able to answer that question prior to the vote being taken later this afternoon, that would be helpful information as well.

With those comments I will close for now. As I said, I would hope that this document is going to become a dinosaur, that we will not be seeing great big supplementary supply estimates anymore, or at least if we do see them, they will be restricted to true emergency situations like affordable housing crises, like forest fires and flood relief, and such instances that all members of this House would recognize as being truly important in terms of addressing midstream, mid budget and that honestly cannot wait until the budget process would take its due course.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to this supplementary supply. There are a number of very important issues, I think, that are covered in this supply, and these are the earlier mentioned homeless and near-homeless funding, the affordable housing programs. These are things that should be funded.

I'm surprised that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford would mention that the China Institute should be delayed in its funding. I was just there last week and they were very, very concerned that their funding would be coming forward. That it is in fact coming forward I think is crucial to them, and it's crucial that this will get going, provide the matching funding that the Mactaggarts so generously gave, and look to push forward the economic development that the China Institute will give.

Another area that I've heard about often is the area of public/private partnerships, which seem to come up in sup supply quite a bit. The nature of public/private partnerships is that sometimes they look like rent-to-own, and we've got to look very carefully at these P3s, as they are often called. There are many types of contracting with government and contracting actually in the private sector that are used in order to try to get a job done. Often the cost-plus way, which uses contractors, is not really the best way to go in that it just provides almost a guaranteed profit. The public/private partnerships usually use contractors. I think that to use a cost-plus mode would not be a good way to go in that type of situation.

We have had many types of P3s over the years. I mean, in my constituency, for example, the Northgate Lions seniors' centre is a good example, using the Lions Club as one of the contracting agencies, as one of the groups in a public/private partnership in order to bring about a facility that was very, very successful in coming forward over the decades and over a number of expansions in providing a tremendous service to seniors in my constituency.

The Auditor General has said that the government would be remiss if it did not look at whether it utilized public/private partnerships in its endeavours. One of the main things I think, though, in this time of expensive rising costs is to get projects done quickly. In my constituency I don't think the Anthony Henday will be able to get going unless we use P3 financing for that purpose. I think that is the best mode to do so for that, and I support that. It is important to look at that and to move forward on these projects because if we don't move forward quickly, there will be much more cost over time.

That's all I have to say on sup supply. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is the third speaker, we now have this opportunity under Standing Order 29(2)(a) to have a five-minute question-and-comment period.

Before we get to that, might I draw to the attention of all members in the Assembly the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a former Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and a former minister of the Crown, now Mrs. Shirley Cripps, formerly the hon. Shirley Cripps.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the question-and-comment period.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. In light of his remarks regarding P3s, does the hon. member have any concern over the fact that there was a significant cost overrun at the Anthony Henday Drive ring road project? The last annual report from Infrastructure and Transportation revealed that in a $108 million budget, I believe it was, there was a $36 million cost overrun. Does the hon. member still have that much confidence in P3s after that cost overrun?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. The nature of the P3s that we're seeing and what we've seen in Anthony Henday and how we want to see it go forward, especially, I think, in the bridge on the east portion of Anthony Henday, is to see that we will ensure through the cost – and to be truthful, I wonder if the cost overruns would not have been more in the long term on the other portions with the increases in costs that we've seen in construction, which has actually percentage-wise often risen far more than that in other areas.

If we're to move quickly in order to have our infrastructure in place for the bridge across the North Saskatchewan on the east leg, we have to get that going quickly. There will be much greater costs to our city, to the northeast, to the movement of goods and services, to so many things if we do not move quickly, and I think that's the only way that we can actually finance that at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert on the question-and-comment period.

Mr. Flaherty: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would be very interested in hearing the good MLA for Edmonton-Manning talk about the whole question that he's raised about P3s regarding schools. One of the biggest problems that we're having in this province is that the neighbourhood school and the community school concept is disappearing, and people are feeling that they're being left out. What we're leading to is the deterioration of the community and the well-being of people in the community in terms of the school being an integral part of that particular community. I get really concerned when I hear the good MLA for Edmonton-Manning suggest that this is an answer to the construction of schools as well, I imagine you imply. I'd be very interested in hearing your comments on that. I hope that you've done research on it because I'd be very interested in hearing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to respond.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some years ago I spent five months plus, I think it was, working on a report on procurement and travelling across this country, more in the small business area but looking at larger areas like defence, education in the federal sector, many, many areas. We reported directly to cabinet in that particular function. We were full-time. We looked at all of the functions of contracting, and I chaired the small business hearings across Canada.

The function of contracting is not always so simple as that it should all be done by public servants and all the rest of it. The fact of the matter is that when you build a school, it's almost always done by a contractor in any case. It's how you put it together, how you get it going, and how you ensure that it is built in a timely fashion and in a quality fashion that counts. That's what we've got to be looking at.

I know that in many areas of the north end and where I'm at we need schools. We need them built quickly, and we've got to do it somehow. The nature of public financing sometimes calls for different and imaginative ways of doing things. I think that we've got to be looking clearly at different and imaginative ways of doing things, and sometimes, not always, P3 may be the way to go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the Q and C section.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's sounding an awful lot like a job application, I think.

Mr. Speaker, when I purchased my house, I signed a 25-year mortgage. I paid payments on it for 25 years, and then I owned the house. Is it not true, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, that this is just another form of debt financing?

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I seem to be a popular source that needs to be questioned today, and one should not be . . .

The Speaker: I must sorely regret and intervene now. The time has now escaped us.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I believe you caught my eye.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 20, which is No. 2. In this bill the government is asking for an additional amount of money from the last budget. I think the total money the government is asking for is $393,516,000. You know, this is the second time since I've been elected where I saw that during the budget time they don't calculate properly, and after the budget they ask for an additional amount. This is the second time again. So I should say that this government again failed to stay within their limit, within their means.

But Albertans are looking. They are expecting from us that we should live within our means. When the government, you know, introduces the budget and makes sure that they include everything, they should anticipate what's going on in the coming time, but I think that once again they failed. They keep on spending more and more money.

The problem is that they are spending money unwisely. That's the main concern of lots of people I talk to, and they are mad about it. They said: you know, this government spent 93 per cent of energy revenue in the last 25 years. This is the Tory government's record. At one time they used to blame some other parties. That includes Alberta Liberals. "Fire the Liberals. They are spenders." But I think this Tory government is the big spender. I think they broke all the records so far.

Now, once again they are asking us to sign a blank cheque, a blank cheque for $393,516,000, and this is the second time after the budget. This is totally out of control, and we don't have the proper details. I know they are spending on specific ministries, but there's no breakdown of how much goes where, no full details about where they are going to spend money or whether they already have spent money on any particular ministry.

This is not acceptable to most of the Albertans, and they have to change this bad habit. I don't know why, after repeating the same things again and again, this government doesn't listen. I think it's their duty to listen and to do something good for the people who elected them. But they are not listening, and I still wonder because suppose they don't spend money wisely or prudently?

Priority-wise the Premier has the mandate on certain things. Some other priorities were not even included in the throne speech. My constituents are concerned. The main concern in my constituency is hospitals: still nine and a half hours' waiting time. I don't think that they are seriously addressing that issue because this problem is still there for a long, long time. We still have shortages of doctors in our area. It's not only in Edmonton-Ellerslie, but it's all over Alberta, wherever I go. Even some members sitting in this House have mentioned it a few times, and they understand that it's a big problem all over Alberta. If it's a huge problem, why don't they take it seriously and at least guarantee Albertans that they will look after their best interests in the hospitals?

Education is another priority in my constituency, Mr. Speaker. My constituency is growing so fast. Next door to my riding is Edmonton-Whitemud and Edmonton-Mill Woods. Those three ridings are growing so fast. You know, they need schools. They need recreational centres. They need libraries. I wish those priorities would be included and that this government spend money, particularly in building new schools in Edmonton. I saw in a paper just a couple of weeks ago that this government is building eight new schools in Calgary and none in Edmonton. We are growing like Calgary, and I wish that this government would concentrate on the growing area all over Alberta. I'm not saying that they should spend money only in Edmonton but all over Alberta. Education is still the top priority, and they should take it very seriously.

Wherever you go, whether you go to Calgary, you go to Grande Prairie or Medicine Hat, road conditions are terrible. It's terrible.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the Messier Trail.

Mr. Agnihotri: Yeah. I mean, ask anybody. Urban or rural area roads are terrible, and I wish they would spend some amount of money in this area as well.

Another serious thing which I think we should address here is the low-income people. The social deficit, Mr. Speaker, is increasing. We should at least think about those people who are earning less than $20,000. Still there are people who are earning $20,000 annually, and their rent is going higher every year. Some people, I mean, are hand to mouth. They can't even, you know, afford at least a reasonable amount of money for their groceries. So with those unfortunate people we should consider them very seriously, and we should address their concerns as soon as possible before it's too late.

I remember that we increased the AISH payment after so many years, and after that there was no review. Those people – I mean, everything, all the prices have gone up. How are they going to survive? If we don't take seriously those people who don't earn too much money, that problem becomes socially very serious, and those people will go on the street and will try to earn easy money in a way that society doesn't expect. So before we are too late, we should seriously consider and address this issue.

The last time I questioned the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, he said that the crime rate in Alberta is reducing. I don't believe that. I'm sure there are lots of other people sitting in this House . . .

Some Hon. Members: I don't believe it.

Mr. Agnihotri: You don't believe it. You see, Mr. Speaker, this issue speaks for itself. It's a big, big problem in Alberta. Not only in Edmonton, not only in Calgary, not only in Grande Prairie but all over. It's even growing in rural areas. So we need some more police officers and staff to make sure that our children, our parents, especially seniors, walk freely during the nighttime. I tell you personally that it's very dangerous to even walk on the streets after 9 o'clock in some areas, and it's getting worse. So before it's too late, I think we should give this sector a little bit more priority.

Environment is a big issue. Yes, I'm glad that government has started taking an interest in environmental issues. But let's see, anyway. I don't want to discuss this issue right now because we are dealing with another bill. I will address that issue when we deal with that.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that this government is throwing money at the problems. They keep on throwing money at the problems. Still they don't have long-term, sustainable policies. They started forming some committees. Maybe they want some input from opposition parties, which is a good thing because we are all elected to serve the best interests of Albertans, right? But I don't know why they didn't have those plans for a long, long time. We always get the lip service. If they had proper sustainable policies 25 years ago – for example, I'm sure with the money that this government received from the nonrenewable resources, we could have so much, a huge amount of money.

At least, if you see the Alberta Liberals' plan, even the 15-year plan, if we had that plan, we could have savings of about $120 billion – $120 billion – in our heritage fund. That means that out of $120 billion if we calculate at today's rate of interest, $7 billion interest would have come out of that money. We could have used that money in the general revenue. We could have the best universities in the world. We could have the best hospitals. We wouldn't have a long waiting time in the hospitals or have to sit two hours, three hours in the surgery. Whenever I go and see my doctor, I have to wait there for two, three hours, and the doctor always says: "Just tell me one problem. If you want to talk about the second one, come next time." [interjections] This is true. Maybe you get preference that we don't.

One time, Mr. Speaker, one of my good friends, a doctor, said, "You know, I can look after this." I said: "Doctor, I respect that. I don't want preference, okay?" Everybody should be equal. Yes. It's true.

The Speaker: Unfortunately, hon. member, I regret to inform you that the time for this segment has now expired.

We do have five minutes, though, for questions and comments if an hon. member would like to participate under the standing order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on this Q and C section.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to ask the hon. member if he might be able to share with us a little more about his comments regarding his visit to a doctor and having to book a second appointment if he has a second issue he wishes to discuss. This is a very serious issue. I heard members on the other side indicating that he should just get another doctor. Well, I've had constituents come . . .

The Speaker: Please, hon. member. No. I accept that it may be a serious thing, but right now we're debating second reading of a supplementary supply bill. What this has to do with service by individual doctors is beyond my comprehension. There has to be some degree of relevancy with respect to it.

Perhaps, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you wanted to participate in the Q and C section?

Mr. Martin: No.

The Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow on the Q and C section.

Ms DeLong: Yes. Thank you. I was listening to my hon. colleague, and there were some interesting things that you did say during the beginning of your speech which I think are valid questions – okay? – but I would suggest that you should also be providing valid answers. What you were questioning was the amount of money that we were spending and that we were asking for more money for particular, specific items. Now, which of those particular, specific items do you think we should not be spending money on? You also made reference to us generally spending more money, so could you please specify what things you would like to cut, where we should be spending less money?

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish, proceed.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you very much. I appreciate your question. You know, I don't mind spending. I already said that spending money on the programs is not a bad idea. I was talking about the priorities. In my constituency we have different priorities, and I want to make sure that I raise my voice for the people who elected me.

In this bill you're asking for $393,516,000, the total amount, and on health care $147 million. I want to make sure that if we are sanctioning $147 million on health care – it's a huge amount – that at least we will be able to, you know, reduce the waiting time, increase the number of doctors, staff, beds. That's what I mean. Yes, I was talking about, you know, going out of the way because every time the government introduces the budget – make sure they calculate everything. Not second time, third time, fourth time. They keep on repeating the same things again and again, again and again. That's a big problem for me, and this is not acceptable to me. This is not acceptable to all Albertans who are listening here today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional members to participate in the Q and C section?

Then that being the case, we'll now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the hon. Member for St. Albert, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. But if there are additional members of another side that want to participate, we'll insert them in.

Right now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to make a few brief comments about the supplementary estimates. It's more to do with the process, but there are a couple of things I do want to go over.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

We've had this debate in the Legislature, and I hope that this particular debate will be fast coming to an end. In the past we've dealt with budgets in March that really didn't mean anything. We'd pass the budget, and then in June we'd have more money, and in the summer we'd have more money, so nobody took the particular budget very seriously. I doubt that the cabinet ministers did because they could come back and say: well, I need more money.

Now, supplementary estimates were never meant to be part of the ongoing budgeting of the government, Mr. Speaker. I've mentioned this before. When I was first in this Legislature, they were set for what we'd call genuine emergencies; you know, forest fires or, I suppose, if there's a pandemic or something like this. Nobody can predict that, so that's why you need supplementary estimates. But under the previous regime, if I could put it that way, they became just part of the ongoing way we did business: bring a budget in in March, pass it in June, and then immediately it would be outdated because we'd have to have more spending.

Now, I think – I hope that I'm correct in this – that as we change and go to fixed election dates, my understanding is that we would be dealing with the budget a week or two after the Speech from the Throne, which is basically the way it used to be. If that's the case, Mr. Speaker, we really should not have a big need in the future for huge amounts of supplementary spending. I hope that's the case. I think that puts onus on the government, then, to be realistic in terms of the budget, to put some work into it because they shouldn't be coming back asking for millions of dollars – hundreds of millions of dollars in the past – for extra spending. They have to be more realistic is what I'm saying.

Mr. Speaker, it just goes to show with the supplementary estimates. Health and Wellness: I know where that is. Probably it was needed because we're in a crisis situation, as we are in so many other areas, for the doctors' settlement just recently. But surely we could have projected that we would need something like this way back when.

Municipal Affairs and Housing. Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, having listened to Albertans, that this is also another crisis, and this amount of money here is not really going to solve the problem. Now, we'll obviously have to wait until we see what the budget brings forward. We'll be watching it very closely.

But I guess I say to the President of the Treasury Board and the Treasurer that I hope that we've come to an end of this idea that a budget that's passed in June is outdated. That's an unacceptable way to run the people's business. There's absolutely no doubt about that. I understand that for this particular time we do need supplementary estimates, and there might be times down the way where emergencies come up that we may need it. But hopefully the budgeting process changes to the point that people are realistic, knowing that they can't just come back. I think that's the job of the two honourable gentlemen across there, to make sure that budgeting is realistic in the future and we're not passing, as I say, hundreds of millions of dollars after the budget is passed. That's unacceptable. It's not transparent. It's not open. It's inefficient, and it wastes money, Mr. Speaker.

So we will look forward in the future to this next budget. We'll certainly look forward to the next two budgets to see how this process works.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move to adjourn debate on this bill at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 25

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. I now rise to move second reading of Bill 25, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007.

Interim supply estimates provide funding authorization until the new budget is approved. These interim supply estimates will provide the spending authority to government from April 1 to July 1, 2007. Approval of the interim supply estimates pending the approval of budget is not unusual for government. It is required whenever spending authority is required to bridge the gap between the last fiscal year and passage of a new budget. Interim supply estimates are higher this year than previously because the new budget is being introduced and debated later than usual.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak in second reading to Bill 25, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007. Let me just start off by saying that I hope that this is the last time I will ever have to rise and speak to an interim supply act.

As most members of this House know, Mr. Speaker, there are new rules contained in the House leaders' agreement, which, hopefully, will be coming to this Assembly for its approval sometime in the near future, which would establish a set sitting date, every year in February for this Assembly to meet, and a set date by which the budget would have to be brought down. My understanding and sincere hope is that this House will adopt those rules. If, in fact, we do, in all likelihood the budget would always be passed in advance of the end of the fiscal year; therefore, we would never again find ourselves in a situation where we're being asked to approve nearly $10 billion without any real solid explanation as to where or how that money is going to be expended other than to say that it's needed for the operation of the government until the budget is passed.

I expressed last week when we discussed this interim supply in committee that this is, perhaps, the most frustrating exercise for an opposition MLA. I think, probably, there are several government MLAs who feel the same way, that it's almost like writing a blank cheque. I used the analogy of your teenager coming and asking for an advance on their allowance and not wanting to tell you what they're going to use it for. I don't think that this is really that much different.

So, as I say, my hope is, certainly, that the House will adopt the House leaders' agreement, that we will find ourselves in a situation where henceforth we will always know when the budget will be introduced, and it will always be passed in advance of a fiscal year end, and we won't have to have interim supply bills in front of us anymore.

I would like to expand on those comments just a little bit by saying that the President of the Treasury Board indicated that it is not uncommon for governments to do this. I think what he meant to say was that it is not uncommon for this government to do this. I've done some research, and there are many examples of governments that do not routinely use interim supply or other terminology that would be similar. So, yes, indeed, it happens with regularity in Alberta. It doesn't have to happen.

Let's just be mindful of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the members opposite and their political party are in complete control of the agenda. They're in complete control. They're at nobody's mercy when it comes to when this House sits. They had complete jurisdiction over when their leadership race would take place, they had complete jurisdiction over when a new Premier and a new cabinet would be named, they had absolutely complete jurisdiction over when this House would be called back to sit, and they have complete jurisdiction over when a budget will be introduced. So the fact that we're not seeing a budget introduced until 19 days after a fiscal year ends and that that budget may not be passed until well into the month of May or perhaps even June, this is nobody's fault but their own. This is entirely foreseeable. This was entirely avoidable.

The fact that we're here today voting on $10 billion in interim supply without really knowing what we're granting that money for could have been avoided. It does not have to have been the case whatsoever. The members opposite and their leadership and their political party, that wing of them, have to take full responsibility for the fact that we're even here debating this today.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to cede the floor to other colleagues who may wish to comment as well. Thank you.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You'll have to forgive me, but I must seek direction. We are still on Bill 20?

The Acting Speaker: We are dealing with Bill 25, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007. The other one was adjourned.

Mr. MacDonald: The other one was adjourned.

The Acting Speaker: We'll get back to it.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay.

Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to get an opportunity to speak on Bill 25. I was certainly anxious to speak on Bill 20. I have some concerns in regard to Bill 20 and, of course, the Auditor General's report on, being specific, how the CAIS program is currently administered and managed and how the Auditor General would like to see improvements made on that. Hopefully, I'll get an opportunity to discuss that with Bill 20.

Certainly, concerning Bill 25, interim supply, we see a long list of allotments to various departments. At this time my first question would be in regard to the office of the Chief Electoral Officer and the $2.1 million that we're allocating here to be spent between now and July. I would like to ask: exactly how much money in total will we be spending in that department this year? Is this money being used to prepare for an early snap election after the April 19 budget? Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was talking about the budget in April, but is that part of the plan of this government?

An Hon. Member: Absolutely.

Mr. MacDonald: Absolutely. Well, I'm glad to see that they've got a plan of something, Mr. Speaker. It's evident that they have an absence of plans with other directives.

An Hon. Member: Order your signs.

Mr. MacDonald: Order my signs? I've got them stored out in the country, and they're ready to go.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor. The chair will be happy to recognize anyone who wishes to participate in the debate, but currently the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor. You may proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward with interest to a response from the hon. members across the way in regard to the budget on April 19 and the fact that they seem to be generously funding between now and July the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. We'll just see what happens here.

Now, certainly, we look through this and the long list of expenditures between now and July, and it's a significant amount of money. We almost seem to be cavalier, we almost seem to be casual about spending money in this Legislative Assembly, and it concerns me. There seems to be an unlimited supply of money. This is a government, I'm sorry, that treats the Treasury like a credit card without a limit, and we have to be very, very careful.

I know that the hon. President of the Treasury Board is fiscally responsible. I know that. He has proven that to me in the past. I think it would be interesting, Mr. Speaker, to be at a Treasury Board meeting to see how all this plays out. I'm sure there are many members who want to see this budget increase significantly, and there are those that want some fiscal restraint. I think that in light of the fact that we've been operating without a plan for so long and we've seen the budget increase so dramatically, caution needs to be exercised. I realize there are all these spending requirements. Certainly, we have the money to deal with them.

There are the little things that concern me with this government. For instance, I'm looking at the government's executive fleet operations, and this was a document that was tabled as Sessional Paper 525/2006. We don't seem to mind spending money on ourselves, and this is a reflection and a comment on this current government. You look at the long list of individuals who enjoy a car from the executive fleet. They're all listed here alphabetically.

Mr. Flaherty: How many are out there?

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know, hon. member, how many there are. I know there's a deal signed with a leasing company that still doesn't make economic sense to me.

I look at this, and I see Murray Smith, Alberta's representative in Washington, DC. The unit description is a 2006 Subaru Tribeca. Now, I've never heard of this model.

Mr. Flaherty: Very expensive.

Mr. MacDonald: Very expensive? It's $42,000 to the government, and it's still worth 40 grand. Now, why do we need to supply this individual with a car at taxpayers' expense in Washington? I know there's a handsome salary involved with that job. I know there are expenses. Last year at this time I asked in debate: does this individual have an eligibility for a government pension? I was never given a direct answer about that. This former member of the Assembly seems to be doing very well. Oddly enough, he is, like the current Premier, a former member of the Deep Six, who were very concerned at one time about excessive government expenditure and wasted money.

At the same time that members of this side of the Assembly are asking for increases in support payments for clients of AISH, clients of social services, an increase in the Alberta seniors' benefits, these increases don't seem to happen. [interjection] Now, the hon. Minister of Energy says that that's good, I think, but I would have to disagree with him because as the cost of living increases, those individuals that I spoke about are receiving less and less because of, unfortunately, inflation eroding away their disposable income.

Inflation certainly has increased, hon. member, and one of the reasons why inflation has increased and these people have so much less money is because of the high cost of electricity. Electricity costs have reduced their disposable income because many of those individuals pay a power bill. I know that may be a difficult concept for the hon. minister to grasp, but some people have difficulty at the end of the month paying their power bill because of electricity deregulation. They get nervous whenever they open the bill because it's a big bill. This government made a big promise, that deregulation would reduce the cost of electricity, but unfortunately that hasn't happened.

There are groups, there are individuals who certainly need this government to be kind, to be generous because they themselves cannot for one reason or another look after themselves, but I think Murray Smith is quite capable of looking after himself and his own financial interests. It just amazes me that we are so generous with party insiders, former members of this Assembly, yet with other people we're not so generous. In fact, we're mean. Whether this government is going to change or not, I don't know, but I'm disappointed in this government. I think you can do better, and I think we can spend our money more wisely.

Whenever we look at Bill 25 and we see the amount that's going into the Health and Wellness budget, we see Infrastructure and Transportation, we see Finance, we see Energy, and we see Education, certainly these are all important and very vital portfolios, and they need to be funded. They need to be funded so that the managers of those departments can budget. We need to ensure that the civil servants are paid. We need to ensure that we can attract more civil servants because certainly as the civil service gets up there in years, we need to attract younger people into the civil service.

Now, with that, Mr. Speaker, I think I will conclude my remarks on Bill 25. Again, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to exercise caution. Let's be careful, let's spend the money where it is needed, and let's just look at some of the excesses. I consider our political appointee in Washington, the fact that we are looking after his wheels, to be an excess. It's excessive, it's unfortunate, and it's unacceptable.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any comments or questions?

Any other speakers?

The hon. President of the Treasury Board to close debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

Bill 20

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. Renner]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to speak on Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007. I will be very direct in my remarks.

I would like to discuss the $50 million allotment to the CAIS program. Certainly, in my travels last fall I heard the CAIS program referred to, and this was in southern Alberta, south of where the current Minister of Agriculture and Food operates his farm. South of there the farmers I talked to sort of fondly referred to CAIS as chartered accountants' income support. After I read the article in the Edmonton Sun the other day regarding the amount that had been collected by the hon. minister of municipal affairs in CAIS payments, he and his family certainly have a very able accountant. Now, I had thought at one time that the minister would share his detailed knowledge of the CAIS application form with all farmers across the province, but it turns out that the farmers have to contact the hon. minister's accountant.

Now, the CAIS program is certainly going to change. This government's federal cousins seem to be determined to eliminate it. I was quite surprised to be watching CPAC last fall whenever the Canadian Wheat Board debate was on, and during question period the federal minister of agriculture stated that there would be fundamental changes, that the CAIS program was not working as it had been designed, I believe.

Now, we find here a $50 million expenditure for the CAIS program. There have been, certainly, issues with the CAIS program in the past. This government was very anxious to get support payments out in 2004. In that year, of course, we had the significant overpayments, which put many farmers in a great deal of financial difficulty, and they are being gradually returned. There were some changes made last year to the CAIS program to make those returns easier.

When we consider this $50 million amount, we should also look again at the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta. This is volume 2. The Auditor General and his staff have been very busy in the last year. I don't know if this is a reflection on the lack of planning by this government, but there has been, of course, his annual report, which came out last November, I believe. We also have the supplementary reports on AADAC, aboriginal affairs, Infrastructure and Transportation, Lakeland College's contracting practices, postsecondary institutions like Grant MacEwan and others with computer control problems and contracting practices, and the agriculture, food, and rural development expense accounts and what should go on there.

Specifically, the Auditor General and his staff also spent some time on the CAIS program, and this is not the first time that this has happened, Mr. Speaker. In the 2004-05 annual report, page 120, the Auditor General recommended that the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation improve controls over the administration of the Canadian Agricultural Income Stabilization program by:

- documenting its policies and procedures,
- strengthening its claim verification procedures,
- maintaining sufficient documentation on file,
- developing criteria for waiving the application of the structural change,
- developing criteria to identify high-risk participants –

I guess that wouldn't include the hon. minister of municipal affairs – and

- testing spreadsheets before implementing them.

Now, that was two years ago, hon. members, and as far as the Auditor General is concerned, this government is making, as we debate this $50 million expenditure, satisfactory progress.

The current audit findings indicate that there should be “improvement in CAIS internal controls.” Now, the corporation, as I understand it, made a number of internal control improvements to the administration of CAIS, including

- documenting and implementing CAIS policies and procedures . . .
- creating a Program Cross Compliance and Investigations unit to establish criteria to identify high-risk participants,
- working with the Department to access complete BSE information, among others. This has been done. CAIS controls have improved, and I'm pleased to note that, but “some deficiencies continue to exist.”

The Auditor General's staff found that program documentation and data entry improved; however, the following control deficiencies persist:

- reasonability tests – in 6 of the 40 claims [that the Auditor General's staff] examined, the Corporation did not explain variances from the reasonability tests that exceeded thresholds or the reasonability test was not completed at all;
- documentation trails – for 2 of the 40 claims, we were unable to assess how the Corporation determined certain amounts used in the calculation;
- use of spreadsheets – the Corporation has not defined the spreadsheets that must be tested – before use.

Yet as we sit quietly in here this afternoon contemplating an additional $50 million to this program, I think we should heed the deficiencies that have been outlined here by the Auditor General.

Now, the Auditor General's report also indicates: “Control weaknesses to be improved in new CAIS computer application.” There are a lot of problems, I understand, in the Department of Agriculture and Food with computers and access to computers and whatnot, and that is reflected in other parts of this report. But this is what the Auditor General had to say.

The Corporation will rectify two control weaknesses by implementing the new CAIS computer application system, which will be used to process claims from 2005 and later. System controls to be implemented and improved include:

- reasonability test reporting on claim verification results,
- sharing common information between the CAIS, insurance and lending computer application systems to assist with claim verification.

Now what remains. The Auditor General indicates that to finish implementing this recommendation, the Corporation needs to:

- implement and comply with the policies and procedures, including improving the documentation of reasonability test variances and calculation amounts,
- implement the new CAIS computer application system,
- develop criteria for identifying high-risk CAIS participants, [and]
- test spreadsheets used to calculate payments – before using them.

If these spreadsheets had been tested in the past, maybe farmers wouldn't be stung with this $80 million overpayment that they have to wrestle with in their annual budgets.

That is what the Auditor General has brought up, and I would be interested to hear from the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Mr. Speaker, I can't help but want to say “and rural development” as well. It amazes me that this government would remove rural development from the ag portfolio. I'm not satisfied with that. I know that there was a lot of confusion in December when the government was reorganized, but to find this over in EII, I just don't understand it. The hon. minister made reference to this this morning when he spoke at the AAMD and C, but I wasn't satisfied with his response. The $100 million rural development fund – I think development belongs in the department, not over in EII. There's still confusion over how all that worked. Some staff were put over in EII and then moved back. Others didn't know which way they should go.

Mr. Speaker, I think that before we go any further with this $50 million request, we should hear from the minister, and he should explain what is being done to ensure that the Auditor General's recommendations and concerns are being dealt with before any more money from the CAIS program goes through the system and is allocated to farmers. Hopefully, the farmers will not be asked by this government for that money back because of an error in calculating the payment.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions? Hon. minister of agriculture, do you have a question, or were you wanting to speak?

Mr. Groeneveld: I want to make a comment which is probably going to hopefully answer some of the hon. member's questions. However, I've got to scat out of here in a few minutes to take a phone call from the federal minister of agriculture. Maybe he's got a direct pipeline through this inefficient computer system and knows exactly your questions and he's going to answer them that quickly. I'm not sure. At any rate, I don't think I'm probably going to get through this before you want to cut me off.

Some Hon. Members: Try. Try.

Mr. Groeneveld: Okay. Just a couple comments, and I will give you some written answers if I have to leave and I can't get this done.

I'm really quite upset with your opening statements implicating the minister of municipal affairs and this CAIS program. I think that was totally inappropriate, and as you'd like to say to me, I think probably you owe the man an apology. I think you were implying that he made some false claims. I'm not sure, but I don't think . . .

Mr. MacDonald: No. Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this is comments and questions. This is a brief five minutes back and forth.

Mr. MacDonald: A point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order on comments and questions? Okay. Go ahead.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. minister of agriculture: I did not say anything like that, and I would ask him to withdraw that. I just pointed out the facts, and the facts are in the report of selected payments to Members and former Members of the Legislative Assembly and persons directly associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly, and this is for the year ended March 31, 2006. I would now ask him to withdraw that allegation.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, people have been around in this Assembly for a very, very long time. When you rise on a point of order, the chair requires a citation. There was no citation, so I hope that what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has done is clarify his statements.

Hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food, if you would like to continue your comments, you may proceed now.

Debate Continued

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to touch on a few quickly. About the $50,000 . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Fifty million dollars.

Mr. Groeneveld: I'm sorry. Fifty million dollars. Point of order, yeah. Okay. Let's get it straight.

Mr. MacDonald: It's a lot of money.

Mr. Groeneveld: Yes, it is a lot of money. However, probably what the hon. member doesn't realize is that the ag department – and basically this all comes back from CAIS because the program wasn't used – lapsed just about $290 million in the third quarter this year.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Groeneveld: It was $290 million, give or take a few dollars and cents.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, this is supposed to be brief comments and questions. I'll ask the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar if he wants to respond.

Mr. MacDonald: Just briefly, and I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. This gets back to my opening remarks in regard to the cavalier attitude that this government has. There's a big difference between $50,000 and $50 million, and we've always got to be mindful of that in this House.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other comments or questions? The Minister for Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: I will withdraw the $50,000 – I'm sorry; it was a slip of the tongue – if that will satisfy the member.

An Hon. Member: A typo.

Mr. Groeneveld: A typo. Right.

So the nature of the beast is how we work. The $50 million sits in here, and as I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I believe, mentioned, it is in what we call a disaster fund area to keep the reference margin pilot project alive for the farmers. So what it does is keep their premiums down. It will make them more eligible to collect out of the CAIS program.

The computers: I'll quickly touch on that. That has absolutely nothing to do in this world with CAIS overpayments. That was estimates to get the money out quickly. That was through the federal system. When the people applied, they were warned that this could happen, and when they received the money, they were also warned that this could happen.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the time allocated for questions and comments has now lapsed. Any other speakers?

The hon. president to close debate?

Mr. Snelgrove: Question.

Bill 3

Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of points that I'd like to make respecting this bill, not the least of which is the pride with which I come forward introducing the first bill of its kind in Canada that establishes legislated greenhouse gas emission reductions targets. I want to at the outset talk just a little bit about this whole issue of intensity versus hard caps because I think that there's been much discussion in the public about how intensity will or will not lead to real reductions. I think that there are some who, maybe, don't understand how the intensity targets are reflective of the whole picture as opposed to the individual facilities that are covered under this act.

On a number of occasions I've indicated that there are approximately 100 facilities – actually there are about 104 or something like that – that are affected directly by this act. Mr. Speaker, what's important to note is that each of those 100 facilities will be affected by this requirement in a very significant way. They will be required to reduce their emissions by 12 per cent, and someone will say: well, aha, see it's intensity; it's not emissions.

The thing that we have to keep in mind when we're talking about one individual plant is that we've already established what their targets are. We already know what their emissions are through the mandatory recording. We know what their production has been over that same period of time. So we have an enumerator, we have a denominator, and we know what their intensity has been over that period of time. They are required to reduce that intensity, so simply reducing, turning down the production, won't do it because, presumably, if the technology hasn't changed, the same degree of CO₂ emissions will still come into play.

What intensity means is that from a global perspective we're not going to restrict them from expanding their facility, nor are we going to restrict someone else from opening a new facility. In fact, many of these facilities are under construction as we speak. What we are going to do is make it abundantly clear to industry that this government is taking climate change very seriously and that we expect them to begin the implementation of the necessary technology so that they can reduce their emissions by 12 per cent.

That's the essence of what this bill is all about. The 12 per cent, by the way, Mr. Speaker, is actually in the regulations that I tabled in conjunction with the bill. The bill itself puts the framework in place for regulations to set that target. So, as a result, as technology advances and as the implementation of that technology advances, it allows us some flexibility to change the targets to a more appropriate level over a period of time as it becomes clear that there may be opportunities for further reductions.

The other important thing to note is that the bill comes into force on July 1. Clearly, there is little likelihood that all of the industrial emitters will be able to change their production and install the necessary equipment or even find the necessary equipment so that they can meet the target by July 1. The government knows full well that in the vast majority of cases the options available to these industrial emitters will be severely limited, and most will be contributing to the technology fund that's provided for in the legislation.

That allows us to do a couple of things though, Mr. Speaker. It allows us to ensure that the dollars that are contributed to that technology fund remain in Alberta, that those dollars are committed to dealing with the necessary research, science, and technology so that we can see the development of some extremely promising science, that is just really on the cusp of reality, that will allow us in a significant way to manage CO₂ production over time. It will also make it clear to the public and to industry again that the government is serious.

Let's role the clock ahead and consider what the ramifications are. We won't have the final reconciliation done until sometime in early 2008, and that'll be for a six-month period. Some have suggested that we should have this effective January 1, 2008. Well, that being the case, then we don't do the reconciliation and have the initial impact until well into 2009. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think the public has made it abundantly clear that they expect this government to take action sooner than that. They expect to see the results of that action sooner than that, and that's the reason why the July 1 date was chosen.

The other point that I would like to make is that these 100 facilities represent about 70 per cent of the total industrial greenhouse emissions in the province. While this is a relatively small number of industrial emitters, they form a very significant portion of the greenhouse gas emissions in Alberta. So if we deal with this in a meaningful way, if we encourage the technology that needs to be in play so that we can indeed deal with the management of CO₂ and greenhouse gases, we have an opportunity to make a significant advancement on the climate change file.

That's not to say that this is the end of the government's commitment. As members well know, we have begun, as a matter of fact, an extensive consultation with Albertans to discuss the future of climate change and how we should be developing a climate change policy that not only deals with these 100 industrial emitters but also deals on a go-forward basis with the rest of us in our places in society that drive cars, heat our homes, drive trucks, and transport material across the province. There are, I think, ample opportunities for us to engage in a discussion with Albertans on how the government can continue to lead the charge and ensure that we are doing everything that we possibly can to deal with issues related to greenhouse gas emissions.

The other point that I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that much of this bill deals with the administrative authority that allows us to have the legislative authority and ability to actually enforce the standards. Rather than reinventing the wheel, the procedure that's used to a very, very large extent, with the exception of one or two words here or there that are appropriately changed, mirrors the legislative compliance mechanisms that we have in the other legislation that is the responsibility of Alberta environmental protection. So what we have done is create new legislation, recognizing that we need to have the same kind of compliance mechanisms to deal with greenhouse gases that we already have in place to deal with both particulate emissions when it comes to air standards and water standards and, in fact, contaminated land.

Frankly, I'm very excited, very proud to be standing here debating this legislation, the first of its kind in Canada. I encourage all members to support this legislation so we can get on with it, have this legislation passed and the necessary regulations in place so that we can meet that July 1 line in the sand that we've drawn for ourselves.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to speak to Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. The minister has rightly indicated that the government of Alberta wants to lead the charge. Unfortunately, they are way behind the parade and appear to be scrambling to catch up to both the science that has been there for decades calling for action and the public who are increasingly vocal, anxious, and angry that this government has been kowtowing to industry and other interests ahead of the long-term future of Albertans and our ethical responsibility on the planet.

A couple of comments in preamble. The timing of this is interesting when, clearly, this is an issue that affects all provinces and the national government is coming forward in the next weeks with a plan. So it's interesting that this government chooses to rush ahead of the federal government and put out something, anything it seems, that will give the impression of action when the federal position is the one that is going to take the lead and to which we must align ourselves and find some common ground and work together, not only that but, of course, the international community which we have already made a commitment to through the Kyoto protocol.

Other comments would have to do, I think, with just setting the stage for where this particular policy or bill fits into the whole picture of action on climate change. We talk about two general areas, Mr. Speaker. One is mitigation, or reducing the emissions. Clearly, that has to be a priority. But the second whole area of action has to be adaptation. That would address more the issues of how are we going to deal with drought, how are we going to deal with extreme weather events, new emerging infectious diseases, flooding, increased forest fires. We are paying millions of dollars every day now as a result of our inaction on climate change in this province and this country and across the world. So to imply that we are taking leadership is far from the truth when we as public are paying for the results not only of these weather events that are occurring at an increasing rate and the droughts that are increasing, but we are also paying the health costs which industry is imposing on all of us as a result of the decline in air quality and the impacts on human health.

The second thing, I guess, that I want to emphasize is that this fits into the context of a global commitment to ethical action and leadership. Clearly, we need to fit in with other countries' and, in particular, our federal government's initiatives. The public are looking for leadership. They have been calling for leadership over the past decade, and what they have gotten is misinformation and deliberate avoidance of governance, which is to do the science, to assess the impacts, to make a cost-benefit analysis of the options, and to look seriously at what it's going to take to actually do our job as government and act in the public interest.

I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, gross domestic product and jobs are not the sole measure of public interest. This is a continued problem with the way this government looks at and measures public interest. We're looking at questions of sustainable survival. We're looking at lives lost, livelihoods gone, flooding, and serious consequences on the prairies of drought and food production problems.

Again, I guess that I would have to emphasize, especially in Alberta, the great concern that Albertans have over water and the loss of glaciers. Clearly, rainfall and precipitation are going to change. We're going to have flooding in some areas and drought in others. There were expressions from the Athabasca region last night from constituents who are very worried not only about the quantity of water that's being taken out of the Athabasca but the quality as a result of our inaction on some of these issues.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, just as preamble, the whole question of intensity targets as opposed to absolute reductions. I would like to make an analogy of a family where the father drives a 10-year-old vehicle and gets about five to 10 miles per gallon, and because of his concern about improving the environment, he buys his son a small compact car. The compact car actually gets 20 miles per gallon, and he thinks he's doing something for climate change because he has gotten a little more efficient car for his family to add to his own emissions.

Another analogy might be a doctor who is dealing with a smoker. He tells the smoker that he can increase his smoking as long as he starts jogging. That will improve his health, as if there is no need to reduce and eliminate the smoking. So both analogies are to try to understand what we're doing when we talk about intensity rather than absolute reduction. We're talking about reducing the emissions out of this province. When are we going to see some action on that? That's what people are asking me.

I will say that the minister has indicated that even in July this year they're going to be demanding of industry $15 a tonne from those large final emitters that emit over a hundred thousand tonnes per year. That's progress. I mean, I have to admit that he's taking leadership in the sense of getting payments and action by July of this year and ensuring that that's going into a fund that is going to invest in some new technology, carbon capture and storage, which should fundamentally, as a priority, go to coal-fired plants. They're the ones that are producing most of the emissions here. We should not be building a new coal-fired plant in this province without the capacity. How is it that we've now just approved a new coal-fired plant without that capacity – it's a mystery to me – if we're serious about climate change?

The other limited feature of this bill is that if some companies come on stream in 2000, they could wait nine years before they actually have to implement any emissions reductions. That hardly seems like strong leadership.

Again, it will be incremental increases in this province. If we adhere to the present plan, we will see a 50 per cent reduction in intensity, which means a 70 per cent increase in absolute emissions in this province by 2020. This is not leadership. Albertans are very concerned about this issue, not to mention our people in the north of the country and around the world. How is it that countries like the U.K. and many in the European Union have already achieved Kyoto targets at 6 per cent below 1990 levels?

Mr. Bonko: Because they had leadership.

Dr. Swann: Well, that's the question. How is it that we can't have leadership in the richest, most technologically progressive country in the world? Well, again, as I mentioned in the House before, follow the money. We are addicted to the income from these industries just as much as the public is addicted to fossil fuels for all of our activities. We have to all be part of that solution, and fundamentally the people of Alberta want to see strong leadership on this issue. It has exceeded health care in interest and support in this country, and we don't see it being reflected in Bill 3.

A 2 per cent reduction annually in intensity for these newer emitters is hardly going to result in real progress in this province. It actually speaks to the whole question, I guess, of whether this government is serious about smart growth, about sustainable growth, about putting in place measures of sustainability as opposed to simply using the word sustainable when it's convenient, but where they're actually going to measure what sustainability means in terms of preserving and protecting social, environmental, and economic values.

I've talked about the vital difference between emission intensity and absolute emissions, and I think it would be nice to hear the minister speak to that issue. I indeed would be hopeful that the federal minister will be addressing the question of absolute reductions because that's clearly where we have to go, with progressive leadership on these. We have made commitments to the people of Alberta, to the international community to take this very seriously.

It appears from other discussions that this government in Alberta is not prepared to go further than this in terms of what comes out of the federal government. That would be profoundly disappointing to Albertans, if we're not willing to ramp up these guidelines and be consistent with tougher guidelines if they do appear. I sincerely hope that they do appear from the federal government in the next couple of weeks. In a spirit of co-operation we need to work together to solve this.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In summary, Mr. Speaker, some of the key questions I have and the reasons I can't support this bill are that there are no clear absolute targets and timelines. The cost per tonne of $15 is way out of line with the rest of the world, where they're paying $30 to $35 per tonne and sending a clear message to industry about the importance of making the transition to cleaner technologies, to energy efficiency, and to investment in renewables, that could be doing a heck of a lot more than they are today in providing our energy needs in the province.

We also, I think, are being restricted in this bill to carbon trading within the province, which is a restriction that is not helpful to industry. That's not helpful to promote the interests of the whole country and to create a more competitive environment, which business appreciates.

From many of the industry people that have spoken to me, there's clearly a need for more fixed targets for them to do their business planning and to actually make a clear commitment within their business planning and new developments, to know where to put their investments and where it's not going to be fruitful. There is a lack of clarity and a lack of consistency, and still many businesses and industrial developments are unsure where to go with this bill.

Clearly this bill needs to be integrated with other aspects of our land-use planning: agriculture, forests, and in particular water use and urban development. I hope that there will be more to come in relation to harmonizing those.

Mr. Speaker, I'll leave it there. Those are the key objections that I have and that I'm hearing from my colleagues and citizens. I'll look forward to further debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. If other members would like to participate, a little note would help.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a great deal of interest to make my initial comments in regard to the proposed Bill 3. At the outset I do want to express my appreciation to the hon. minister for, I guess, bringing forward this bill. This is an important debate that we have to have here in the province of Alberta. Certainly, I'm hoping as well that in the spirit of co-operation it gives us an opportunity to debate this issue specifically and the larger issue of climate change and pollution and development in this province, to seek a productive end for all members of our province.

Indeed, this issue of climate change has come to a focus point, not just in Alberta but around the world, I think probably at the very least because people can now start to see the effects of climate change with their own eyes. You know, this is a very powerful teacher, Mr. Speaker, when you can actually see things happening around you. Certainly, it is unsettling at best and potentially catastrophic at worst to watch the short-term effects of climate change and to anticipate what the long-term effects are as well.

So with this first round here, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to outline some of the, I guess, baseline information that I am drawing from so that we have a clear idea of where I will be going with this debate and with Bill 3 specifically. Hopefully, as I say, in the spirit of the Legislature as it is set up here, we can come to some sort of progressive conclusion with Bill 3 that will serve the purposes and the interests of all Albertans.

First of all, it's important to recognize that Canada produces 2 per cent of global GHG emissions, carbon emissions, but with only representation of .5 per cent of the population of the planet. According to a very recent study Alberta is producing 40 per cent of those emissions that Canada produces. So considering our smaller population, this gives us a very high percentage of actual carbon production. In fact, it means that Alberta, representing .005 per cent of the world population, produces almost 1 per cent of global GHG emissions.

You know, these same GHG emissions rose 40 per cent from 1990 to 2005, to 234 million tonnes from 168 million tonnes. At a 4 per cent growth rate, which we easily meet and probably exceed, Alberta's total carbon dioxide emissions will rise between 66 per cent and 83 per cent above 1990 levels even if intensity was reduced as this Bill 3 might be suggesting. So really these statistics make it clear that we are in fact one of the great centres of carbon dioxide production and pollution on the entire planet Earth.

Why is it important to make some changes? Of course, we know that global warming, which I would like to introduce and keep in the forefront of this debate, is in fact irrevocably changing the environment around us and of the planet as a whole: 19 of the 20 hottest years happened from 1980 onwards; 2005 and 2006 have been some of the hottest years in recorded history on the planet. We've increased our contribution to this unfolding disaster by 40 per cent since 1990, just to keep the statistics in mind. Good environmental stewardship, Mr. Speaker, entails thinking globally and acting locally, and I'm hoping that we can start to show both of these things, which I think have been sadly lacking in the past 15 years or so.

What good are intensity levels, Mr. Speaker, if our total contribution to the problem actually increases? How does this address in any real way the first phase of the climate change bill when, obviously, total emissions have been instrumental in making the situation what it is? Thus, this issue needs to be addressed.

Allow me the indulgence of an analogy as well. My analogy is akin to an unhealthy person eating a hamburger. Let's make him "he." He states that he will reduce the fatty portion by 50 per cent and then simply just triples his intake. The person's intake may have gone down per serving, but his overall consumption actually increases, thereby negating any of the benefits of reducing the portion as such. [interjection] It's not a bad one. I'm sure we'll have more. Metaphors are something I'm strong at, for sure.

Mr. Speaker, we oppose this bill as it stands on the grounds that it does not address in any serious manner the issue of climate change, nor does it bring anything meaningful overall to the environmental agenda. Bringing in legislation that would start to roll back our GHG output until we are 6 per cent below the 1990 level I think would be a little more realistic. Start a long-term budgetary commitment to develop renewable, sustainable, and alternative energy generation and conservation technology. Three, look at ways of successfully implementing technology best habits and best practices, both vertically and horizontally across the economy, to cut our fossil fuel dependency, not just here in Alberta but in fact across the country and around the world. Even if we ignore the lack of openness and transparency when it comes to some things here in this province, let's look at what we do know in terms of climate change here in the province of Alberta. Okay?

4:30

Mr. Speaker, my main concern, then, is to put out some of these general issues. Certainly, I have a number of amendments that I would like to put forward in regard to Bill 3. I would just like to reiterate as well from the comments I made at the outset: I do commend and know that there is potential not only from the Ministry of Environment but from the opposite side to actually make a meaningful contribution here to climate change and to make a positive step in terms of legislation in regard to carbon dioxide emissions and climate change, from all sides of the House here. We'll certainly endeavour to work with everyone to create something that in fact reduces our carbon dioxide output in absolute terms and not just in terms of intensity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in, so if there are questions that you would like to be directed to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, please advise.

There being none, then I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to discuss Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. When I first heard that the government was in fact waking up from its long slumber with regard to climate change as well as the environment, I was a little excited when I did come across the bill. But then as I read a little bit and we were able to get some specifics, I was disappointed because of the fact that it's time right now for Alberta, for Canada, indeed the entire world, for our governments to take a lead. We're failing here to take the necessary steps to really fight climate change. We're giving lip service again instead of real action.

There's an opportunity here for the government to talk to the industry and to the federal government, to come up with some real plans for real reductions in absolute emissions, what essentially Albertans and Canadians want. What we're receiving in this bill will do nothing to stop the greenhouse gas emissions from increasing while everyone else is prepared to take real changes.

Real governments take and show real leadership. We're stuck with the same old, tired government that hasn't really had a change of position from that of 2003: a 50 per cent reduction in emissions and intensity in 2020. The same goal was in 2003, so nothing has changed there. They will do absolutely nothing to stop the further effects of climate change. This government refuses to listen to science, to the people, and even to industry, who are prepared to take the necessary steps and changes here today for right now. They've said that, but we're still dragging our feet.

The industry, as I said, is prepared to move on climate change, and this government has stubbornly refused to deviate from their stance. This bill represents exactly the same old Tory government, stuck in the past and refusing to do what needs to be done, to take a bold leadership way. Instead, they're waiting for industry to show the way. What the world and what Alberta needs right now is its leadership, and it's vital, especially in Alberta. When our government is leading with this amount of money, we could certainly make impactful, meaningful changes not only for today but for future Albertans. We need leaders, not cheerleaders.

If we go back – and I digress a little bit. When you think about it, a lot of us have been in Alberta for a long time. Go back even 20, 30 years. What were we looking at? What's changed? What's noticeably changed? Well, our weather. If we just talk about our weather, we no longer get the huge amounts of snow that we once did. That's an automatic, definite change that we see. Maybe in the outlying areas they've got a little bit more. But over the past 20 years there's been a significant increase in the amount of changes that have been happening. As well, the summers used to be hot. They used to be long. They've been changing. Last year may be an exception. It was a nice change, but again it's changed over the last 20 years.

As a youngster I remember going up to the Columbia Icefields with my grandparents and walking on those glaciers there, on the icefields, as I've said. I've gone back with my kids just a few years ago, and they've receded a whole 200, 300 metres. That's a couple of blocks, if we want to just put it into context there. They're no longer the same ice that I stepped on as a kid. It's gone back, way, way back, and it's receded. Now, you know, kids today, what are they going to see 20 years from now? They're going to see it receding even further. This is a huge step. This is a visual step. They've been marking this decline of the glaciers, these icefields, for over 100 years. They can see it. They've measured it in sticks and time and actual dates recorded with pictures as to what has gone. That, in a nutshell, should be enough, especially out in the rural areas, out in the outlying areas, that these areas are.

Maybe it doesn't matter to people like the Member for West Yellowhead. His area is up towards that area. I've not heard him say anything. He usually just claps when we talk about coal and everything because he's so excited to have this spewing into the atmosphere, but not about real change and real effective change that's out in his area.

We're talking about, like I said, the rivers, the lakes, the streams. These are the things that matter to the kids, the same things that I had as a young child, the same things that I want for my children and for my grandchildren, for all children of Alberta. Perhaps that's not what the other side wants, but that's exactly what I want: something that is going to be able to last, a legacy of a lifetime.

Our natural areas are something that we should be able to embrace. It's a natural tourist draw. We get thousands upon hundreds of thousands coming up to our mountains, to the Jasper and Banff areas to see the scenic areas where all of our water is derived from, which is the mountains. But that's slowly, slowly receding due, it's obvious, to climate change.

So I can't support it as it is right now. I know that we are going to be putting through some amendments. I look forward to those, and I look forward to the debate from the other side as we try and, again, achieve something for everybody, which is a meaningful climate change bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. If there are questions to be directed to the hon. member.

Shall I call on the hon. Minister of Environment to close the debate? I have no further speakers.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, then.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Bill 3 in its second reading, the climate change act. The issue of climate change is an extremely important issue. It's grown in significance over the last several years, especially since the controversy over the science of climate change died down. I remember the debate on the Kyoto treaty and the decision by the federal government of that time to sign onto this international treaty, control of GHGs into the atmosphere, and acceptance of the challenge set before the signatory countries with respect to the absolute reductions in the GHGs, as articulated in the Kyoto agreement. I remember that the government of Alberta, under the leadership of Premier Klein at the time, was dead set to oppose the implementation of Kyoto targets and promised to bring in what they call made-in-Alberta policies and programs impacting climate change.

Nothing has happened since, but at least one thing that's been settled since that time is the organized attempt on the part of those who did not favour taking any action on the climate change issue to challenge fundamentally the integrity of the science of climate change. Thankfully, that debate is now over, and there's absolutely overwhelming agreement everywhere, globally, on the integrity of the climate science and what it's telling us needs to be done if we are not to be facing extremely serious risks with respect to future economic prosperity.

More than that, the negative impacts of climate change on our quality of life, including the availability of fresh water, the future of our lakes and rivers, and the fact of the rapid disappearance, or recession, if you wish, of our glacier formations in the Rockies suggest a kind of future which looks bleak unless we take determined, effective action to get a handle on the forces that are leading to climate change. Human activity, particularly the pumping of greenhouse gases into the atmosphere, is seen as the major cause of global warming and climate change.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is a belated attempt on the part of this government to enter the scene and claim that this government is ready to take action on climate change. To do that, the bill suggests that this government is going to focus on controlling emission intensity rather than absolute emissions as such. The problem with this fancy term, emissions intensity, is that it simply focuses on certain reductions, a percentage reduction, 12 per cent at the moment, in the emissions per unit of energy produced. We know that the tar sands are a huge operation in this province, and the millions of barrels of oil that are extracted from the tar sands continue to grow by leaps and bounds. So the volume of production is going up exponentially, and a 12 per cent reduction in the intensity of production per unit is not going to take us even close to achieving in the short to medium run any absolute reductions.

This government has not put forward a comprehensive plan of which this particular act could be seen as a first, important, and immediate action. It vaguely promises to bring in some other measures later on, but we don't know how this particular act forms a plan of a comprehensive strategy on the part of the government of Alberta to move towards meeting Kyoto targets, which are very, very modest, Mr. Speaker. If we become partners in a national effort and a global effort to at least achieve the minimalist GHG control standards set forth in the Kyoto agreement, we will then be among those who can work actively to convince many other countries, developing countries such as China and India, to come on board later on, following, say, 2012 and the years immediately following that. Unless we take and accept our responsibility, do our part in moving countries and societies around the globe to move towards absolute reductions, I think we are risking not only instability in the climate globally, but we are risking our own prosperity, risking our own quality of life in the years to come.

Mr. Speaker, in a book just published by Nicholas Stern on the economics of global warming – and I would certainly encourage my colleagues in the House to look at what this book has to say. I heard someone talk about this book a couple of weeks ago and then requested our Legislature Library to order this book for our use. The book is around now. Presently I have it. I'm happy to return it quickly to the Legislature so that my colleagues in the House can look at this.

This serious work of scholarship, Mr. Speaker, is an eye-opener. It does two things. On the one hand, it draws attention to the massive risks that are ahead of us if we don't do anything, if we continue to talk in a convoluted way about reducing greenhouse gas emissions per unit of energy produced, the carbon-based energy produced, and deliberately turn attention away from the need to in fact achieve absolute reductions between now and 2050.

If climate change continues apace in the direction in which it has been going for the last several decades now – and particularly the last decade is very, very important in setting the pattern of change in climate – we risk putting the lives of hundreds of millions of people at risk across the globe from violent changes in weather, which lead to flooding in some places, drought in other places, jeopardizing the places where hundreds of millions of people now live across the globe. They will not have that space available to them to live. They'll be made homeless. They'll be rendered jobless and destitute.

If we wait another 30 years, by 2080 things will get worse. They'll begin to affect all of us, regardless of where we live on the globe, in ways which Nicholas Stern says should be an eye-opener for us. We should do everything that we can to stem the trends effectively enough; that is, achieve absolute reductions in a systematic way over the next 30 to 50 years to avoid that catastrophic future that the science of global warming warns us about and that is very carefully elaborated and analyzed by Mr. Stern in that book that I just mentioned.

So this bill before us, Mr. Speaker, Bill 3, climate change act, does not and will not lead us in the direction of joining those governments and those forces and those societies which are finding ways and are willing and determined to take action to move towards absolute reduction in the greenhouse gas emissions into the atmosphere in a timely fashion.

We know that the European Union is moving in that direction. They are in fact going to call on all of their members to undertake programs and policies that achieve that direction. I think we, as the beneficiaries and as the trustees of this important resource for our own children and their children, have also to take action. This bill, I think, falls short, Mr. Speaker, of moving us in that direction.

So it's a matter of concern. Albertans are watching us. They want us to take action. They know that we have to, what's called, balance economic considerations with our concern about protecting our environment from future harm because of climate change. But it's the issue of balance. What is the right balance? If you read Nicholas Stern's book, then you begin to look at the whole issue of balance in a very different way.

It would be very short-sighted of us to ignore the consequences of global warming if absolute reductions are not achieved within an acceptable time frame, the next 20 to 30 years. In order to get there, we have to start now. If we don't, then the economic prosperity that is claimed to be at stake if we take serious action now on climate change will become, I think, a story that we don't want visited upon us later on. Unless we take seriously the issue of climate change, the chances of risking our future are so high that we ought to look at the question of balance between our economic future and our ability to control climate change in a different way.

The very definition of balance must change. There are huge benefits to be had from developing alternative technologies, to begin to develop alternative sources of energy that will be not only not harmful to the climate and will not further accelerate the negative changes that are taking place but, in fact, will help us both become more prosperous and achieve reductions in global warming that will protect us and others around the globe equally. It's time, Mr. Speaker, that we moved away from our attachment to this language of reduction in intensity to making clear and unequivocal commitments to absolute reductions in the longer haul.

This is not a political issue. This is an issue that's global in nature, and this is where the local and the global intersect and meet in a very dramatic way. What happens elsewhere will have consequences for us. Today it may be other places that will be negatively affected, but 20 years from now we may be the ones who become, in fact, the victims of the change that we now are unwilling to see as upon us and take effective action on. Effective action can be taken, and Stern, I think, in a very detailed way tells us what actions we can take without harming necessarily either our quality of life or our current or future prosperity. There are huge opportunities, particularly for advanced societies like Canada, where we, I think, have the opportunity to act on it.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry. The time has gone.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have this opportunity to participate in the debate at second reading this afternoon of Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. I, certainly, had a good opportunity to look at this legislation first hand at Government House on March 8. I was quite surprised there to go through the press release and then a copy of the specified gas emitters' regulation. It was the first time that I had been involved in a news conference on legislation, on a bill, where the printed regulation was the focus. No one seemed to notice there that we were looking at the regulation and not the statute itself. I found this ironic and interesting at the same time.

This is the first carbon tax in Canada, and it's historic legislation. Some would say: well, we should call it a CO₂ tax. I could certainly live with a CO₂ tax or a carbon tax, but it is the first attempt at a carbon tax in this province. What we do with the money that is raised from this tax is also an interesting discussion.

I think at first glance that when we look at making changes to CO₂ emissions in this province, we have to give this bill consideration. I don't know how serious consideration, but we certainly have to give it consideration, as these changes in Bill 3 are designed to introduce a full range of compliance options with an appeals process supported by audit and investigative powers.

Perhaps the hon. Minister of Environment can answer these questions, or we can get answers in committee. I'm going to start with the regulation, not the bill, because I have some questions before we get to committee, and hopefully the hon. minister can provide answers. Now, when we're talking in the regulation about industrial process emissions, we need a clarification on this. I'm not trying to confuse anyone here, but total direct emissions minus industrial process emissions equal actual emissions intensity, and there's a definition in the regulations on actual emissions intensity, but it's important that we get a handle on what is an industrial process emission. There's a definition of this here under the letter (n) in the definition portion of the regulation, but I think we need this to be explained further.

Now, when we look at this, Mr. Speaker, it indicates in this regulation that industrial process emissions means direct emissions from an industrial process involving chemical reactions other than combustion and where the primary purpose of the industrial process is not energy production. So does this include cokers and reactors in a process stream? Where do they fit into all this? Does this exclude pulp mills, petrochemical plants, fertilizer plants, industrial feedlots? What exactly is the meaning of this? As I understood it at the press conference, only 70 per cent of Alberta's industrial emissions were represented by this legislation. Does that definition exclude the other 30 per cent? Again, what are we going to do with the other 30 per cent of these industrial emitters?

We all know that there was a significant royalty holiday in the oil sands projects. One of their allowed costs was equipment or capital that was employed to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Certainly, there has been with some projects a reduction in their intensity, but I don't know how much money has been spent in this manner by the oil sands project owners. I would be curious if the hon. minister could provide an answer to that.

I'm going to have a lot of questions in committee on this because I have been reviewing it and reviewing it with a significant amount of interest, but with Bill 3, before we get to committee, section 8 is being repealed, and the following is being substituted.

Agreements re: interjurisdictional co-operation

8 The Minister may not enter into any agreement under the Government Organization Act providing for co-operative, complementary or compatible actions with other jurisdictions in respect of specified gas emissions unless the agreement is consistent with this Act and the specified gas emission target for Alberta established by section 3(1).

This is interesting. Why is it necessary?

Now, also we heard – and the press reported on this – that there were significant penalties under section 45 of Bill 3. You know, in the case of a corporation we're looking at a fine of not more than a million dollars. In the case of an individual, a hundred grand or imprisonment for two years or both a fine and imprisonment. Now, if you were guilty of an offence under section 44, there's also a $50,000 fine or in the case of a corporation a fine of half a million dollars.

So how would all those penalties work whenever we have administrative penalties also to be used? I think that if my interpretation of this is correct, the administrative penalties are going to be subject to the regulations, and everything seems to be subject to the regulations. But surely there is an answer available. If the hon. minister could provide it to the House in the course of debate before we get to committee, I would be very grateful.

Now, there is a lot to discuss in this bill, but certainly the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has been consistent in bringing up the need for CO₂ sequestration. The Premier, the current Premier, on March 8 indicated at that press conference that the enhanced oil recovery CO₂ sequestration pilot project that was going on down by Joffre had increased the flow rates on the oil wells east of Joffre by 18 per cent, which is significant. But that's pure CO₂ coming off the industrial process stream at Joffre, and it's not the capture and compression of a CO₂ gas stream from many different sources.

Now, there's talk about the pipeline that is to be built. CERI has already done some research on that. They've crunched some numbers that are a little older than this legislation, two or three years. The Canadian Energy Research Institute indicated that a 20-inch line filled with liquid CO₂ at the pressure of 1,000 psi would cost roughly about $400 million to construct from Fort McMurray down to some of the mature oil fields surrounding the Edmonton area. There was talk that this had skyrocketed in price to $1.4 billion. Certainly, there seemed to be excitement, and I was glad to see the federal government get excited about this project because we on this side of the House have been following the research done in other jurisdictions on CO₂ capture and storage, or sequestration, for a number of years now. I was pleased to see that the federal government and this government are at least looking into that.

I can understand why we need to study this issue, but I hope we're not spending money on research projects that are ongoing and some of which have been completed. Certainly, I think we have the same sort of geology in the western sedimentary basin as the Williston basin, and there in Weyburn, Saskatchewan, is the CO₂ monitoring and storage project that has been going on since 1999. The Alberta Research Council has been involved in this. Saskatchewan Industry and Resources is involved. EnCana, of course, is involved. The University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, the Geological Survey of Canada, and the Colorado School of Mines are also involved in it. There are quite a few people. Industry is well represented in this endeavour by EnCana, of course, by SaskPower and Nexen, Chevron, Texaco. TransAlta Utilities is also involved. Of course, the CEO, I believe, of TransAlta Utilities, Mr. Snyder, is involved in this research project that is to go on. But the results from this Weyburn project that are out are significant.

I would like to know why we have to proceed with the current study when so much work, it's apparent to me, has already been done on our behalf, and certainly with the Alberta Research Council involved, surely this government is aware of the study and the results that have come in the last six years. It seems to be a very, very good idea to sequester carbon. If it's good enough in Weyburn, I think we have the same sort of geology here in Alberta.

Now, I'm not going to go through this project in a great deal of detail, but I would urge all hon. members to have a look at this. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I believe I'll table this report for the information of all members here tomorrow. In the province of Saskatchewan, where this project is going on, this is quite interesting.

The Province of Saskatchewan is unusual in that it has long required operators to provide records of operational and well histories and the Province has archived roughly 600 cores from the field as well as all the geophysical logs and other relevant information. All this data was made available to researchers and it provided a thorough historical dataset in addition to the pre-injection baseline dataset.

This is to allow accurate research to be done in this Weyburn oil field as far as CO₂ injection.

The CO₂ enhanced oil recovery has contributed – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview will be very interested to know this. Since they started injecting CO₂ into the mature oil field in Weyburn, they have increased production by 5,000 barrels per day. That's a significant increase in production, Mr. Speaker.

At this time . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Your speaking time is over, hon. member.

Now we have to deal with the question-and-answer and comment period. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the question-and-answer portion?

Mr. R. Miller: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question is whether or not the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would like to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Well, the speaking time elapsed. We heard the clock, and the words were not uttered, so I'll recognize another member. If another member wants to participate, the other member can stand up and adjourn the debate. Then we'll go on, and everything will work really well.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, would you like to participate in the question portion or in the debate portion?

Mr. R. Miller: In the debate portion.

The Speaker: Sorry. First of all, anybody else want to question or comment?

Then, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, you're recognized to participate.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1 Lobbyists Act (continued)

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. Stelmach]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. The hon. leader will be restricted to 90 minutes.

Dr. Taft: Aw, shucks. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will restrain myself. I will restrain myself. [interjections] Oh, I'm sorry to disappoint everybody.

It's a privilege to rise and debate what is a very important bill, and the government and the Premier acknowledge the importance of this bill by making it Bill 1, their flagship bill. I imagine it will get farther than the loyal opposition's flagship bill got, Mr. Speaker, which was voted down in second reading at the first opportunity. However, I imagine this bill will move forward, and that's fine. We think it's a step in the right direction. You can be sure that we'll be bringing forward a number of amendments before this debate is over.

There's a long history to Bill 1. I think it might be worth beginning by just making everybody aware of where the term "lobbyist" comes from. At least my understanding is that if you go back through the history books and look at the operation of the British Parliament, that fabulous building at Westminster, when people wanted to influence government – in fact, this would even predate the building at Westminster – they would linger about in the lobby of the building trying to capture the Members of Parliament at the time on their way into Parliament. They would corral them and say: well, will you please do this or will you please do that or channel money this way or pass this legislation that way? That was a normal part of business, and because it was all done in the lobby of the buildings, they were called lobbyists, and that's how we end up with the term "lobbyist." So a little bit of interesting background.

The history of this particular bill is also pretty long although it doesn't go back centuries. It goes back over a decade. I think it's worth reviewing this legislation because I do believe that if this legislation were brought forward 10 or 15 years ago, it would be truly pioneering legislation, but having been brought forward now, it's really, as it stands, an effort to catch up to most of the rest of the country. And catch up we should, but I'd like us to do better than that. I'd like, before this bill is finished in this Assembly, for Alberta to be leading the country in handling its lobbyists.

An important year in this Assembly was 1996 because of the tabling of the so-called Tupper report, which was commissioned in response to a conflicts of interest scandal concerning the Multi-Corp affair. The actual title of the report is Integrity in Government in Alberta: Towards the Twenty First Century, Report of the Conflicts of Interest Act Review Panel. It was chaired by Allan Tupper, a well-known political scientist. Two other members were on it, Patricia Newman and Francis Saville. It was submitted in January 1996, and among its key recommendations was a lobbyist registry. That's 11 years ago now almost exactly.

That recommendation was taken very seriously by the Official Opposition, so that very spring a member of a previous Liberal caucus introduced the Lobbyists Registration Act, Bill 223. Of course, it was a private member's bill, Mr. Speaker, and as happens with so many private members' bills no matter how good they are, it got voted down at the first opportunity. Interestingly, though, the following year a government member introduced a private member's act also proposing a lobbyist registry. In 1997 the Lobbyists Registration Act was introduced as Bill 212. Sadly, it met the fate of most private members' bills and was voted down immediately as well.

The years ticked by. I think there were other efforts. The Member for Edmonton-Gold-Bar reintroduced the bill.

An Hon. Member: How come private members' bills are always voted down?

The Speaker: The hon. leader has the floor.

Dr. Taft: Sorry. I'm getting questioned.

The Speaker: Sorry. There are no questions. The hon. member has the floor. Please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

So by 2001, after I think at least one other attempt to introduce a lobbyist registry through a private member's act was voted down, there was a provincial review. One thing led to the next, and ultimately another committee was struck, chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. I must say that all reports are that that member did a very effective job of chairing the committee and leading a team and producing a good report, so my congratulations to the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill and to all the other members of that committee.

Anyway, that report was quite comprehensive, and among other things it recommended, once again, a lobbyist registry. Every time the idea of a lobbyist registry has been raised in this Assembly, up until this spring it's been mocked. I remember the previous Premier doing his fair share of mocking and accusing the opposition of lobbying for a lobbyist registry and things like that. I'm sure that the Speaker remembers those kinds of debates as well. However, we finally have a breakthrough here, and we have a proposed Lobbyists Act. It is a step in the right direction.

I've sometimes thought that we could call it the Rod Love act or something like that because there are a number of very specific concerns stemming from some actions in the last number of years by certain individuals closely connected to the governing party, among them the former Premier's chief of staff, in fact, two chiefs of staff of the former Premier, and their actions moving back and forth between the Premier's office and the private sector in getting hired. The case, for example, of Peter Elzinga being hired by a major oil company to lobby on their behalf to get a change in the royalty scheme or the case of Rod Love, for example, being hired by a consortium to lobby on behalf of a railroad to Fort McMurray.

People quite rightly raised a lot of concerns about those circumstances and the fact that there was no systematic way of knowing who was being paid how much, by whom, to speak with which cabinet minister. The public has a right to know, Mr. Speaker. The public has a right to understand who is lobbying which member of government on which topic on whose behalf, and that's what a lobbyist registry is about.

The effect of this bill or the intent of this bill I think, as with most lobbyist acts, is to draw a clearer line between the public interest and the private interest, and I'm all in favour of that. To the extent that this bill does that, I think it's a good idea. We want to tighten it up. But clearly there are conflicts of interest when people attempt to influence the decisions of government in such a way that may lead to their private enrichment or their private benefit, and that leads into a murky situation of real problems. As MLAs all of us need to work hard to improve public confidence in the actions of our Assembly, in the actions of our office, and I think a lobbyist registry will do that sort of thing.

I myself have wondered recently about what kind of lobbying activities are going on. I noticed, for example, a sudden surge of interest in nuclear power in Alberta, particularly among a number of government members. I found myself wondering: well, who's lobbying the government on behalf of the nuclear industry? I have no way of finding out. With a lobbyist registry I hope that we'll find out. Likewise with private health care: the surge of interest from time to time in Alberta in private health care, undoubtedly fuelled by lobbying on the part of private health industry interests. But the public has no knowledge, no capacity, no tools to find out who's doing the lobbying and on whose behalf. Similarly with P3s. And, of course, the water transfer that we've been debating so heatedly in this Assembly undoubtedly has lobbyists connected to it. In fact, I know that various members of this cabinet were well briefed on the project last summer, even earlier. Well, let's find out who did the briefing and what the outcome was there.

So that's some of the background. To the extent that the bill will make public things that are wanted to be kept private but should not be private, I think that's a good idea.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's worth noting that there are already lobbyist registries in many jurisdictions in Canada. In fact, the federal Lobbyists Registration Act goes back two decades. It goes back to the 1980s, and it has been amended and tightened several times since then. Ontario has had a lobbyist registration act since 1998, Nova Scotia and British Columbia since 2001, Quebec since 2002, and Newfoundland and Labrador since 2005. So you can see here that despite the claims of this government that this is somehow the first in Canada, in fact, we are trailing behind.

Now, as to some of the specifics, Mr. Speaker, I think we might want to move to tighten up some of the provisions around definitions of lobbyists, the nature of their activity, exactly when somebody is considered a lobbyist and when they're considered a contractor, and if there's too much room to manoeuvre around those issues. The fact that a person might be able to switch from being a lobbyist to being a contractor with very little effort at all and sort of get around some of the rules is going to be a concern for us. But, as I say, in principle for our opposition a lobbyist registry is something that we've long called for. We'll work with the government and look forward to perhaps some constructive co-operation around bringing in some amendments to this bill and look forward to strengthening the very foundations of democracy in this province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will move adjournment on Bill 1. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, your guidance: are we still on Bill 1?

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, there was a motion to adjourn. The chair called for the vote on the motion to adjourn. There was a voice call, and it sounded to the chair like the motion was carried. So we've finished with this business, hon. member. Okay. Would the members give unanimous consent for the chair to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to participate in second reading on this bill?

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Sorry. We're back to where we were. The next order of business.

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Ducharme moved that a humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Oberle]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, you've not participated yet?

Mr. R. Miller: On the throne speech response, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. R. Miller: No.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. R. Miller: I will. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to have the opportunity to rise this afternoon and respond to the throne speech delivered by the new Premier of Alberta on the 7th of March.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge once again the confidence that the residents of Edmonton-Rutherford have placed in me as their MLA, the continued support that they express through my office for the work that myself and the members of the Official Opposition are doing. I would just like to say that I am incredibly humbled at having the opportunity to serve the nearly 35,000 residents of Edmonton-Rutherford and represent them to the government through this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, in listening to other members of this House give their responses to the throne speech over the last couple of weeks, it's been interesting to me once again – and I say once again because it seems that history does repeat itself – to listen to members of the government when they respond to the throne speech. If you were to take their word, you would think that the world is all rosy and everything is wonderful and Alberta is heaven on earth. Then you listen to members from the NDP opposition, and you would think that the sky is falling and that Alberta is just about the worst place in the world to live and nothing is going well and everybody is suffering.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, you will know that the Official Opposition has a view of the world that I think is a little more in alignment with reality, and that is that Alberta is definitely the best place in the country to live. There is no question about that. But the reality is that with the boom and with all of the successes that we're enjoying and with all of the wealth and prosperity that is evident in this province right now comes an awful lot of responsibility, an awful lot of challenges, and an awful lot of difficulty and hardship for those that for whatever reason don't find themselves being brought along with that success and prosperity.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

So this is a much more realistic view of the world, and I would like to reflect some of that in my comments this afternoon. Yes, things are booming, and, yes, there are a lot of people that are doing very well, but, yes, Mr. Speaker, there are also a lot of people, including a lot of people in Edmonton-Rutherford, that are not enjoying all that this current economic boom can and should bring to them.

Now, I'm going to just sort of flip through the fancy book. I don't know how much it cost to print this Speech from the Throne.

An Hon. Member: What colour is it?

Mr. R. Miller: I have a member asking me what colour it is. Surprisingly, it's orange and blue, Mr. Speaker. I do find that a little ironic for reasons that I'm not going to necessarily go into right now.

My first comment really would be under the heading Acting on Albertans' Priorities. The government talks about wanting to act on Albertans' priorities, and they trot out the five platforms that we've come to know so well. I'm not even going to repeat them because, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I'm starting to get sick and tired of hearing them. This is not rocket science to trot out these five platforms that the government trots out. I understand that they now have banners they have put up at every press conference that talks about these five things. Well, you know what? It's motherhood and apple pie. Of course, we want to improve Albertans' quality of life. Isn't that what we're all here for? Did we need a couple of former newspaper columnists to dream this up, Mr. Speaker, that we wanted to improve Albertans' quality of life? Of course not. That is absolutely what every member of this House is here for, and if it's not, then it should be.

The next heading in the document talks about Governing with Integrity and Transparency. I think the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition touched on that a minute ago. You know, certainly, as he pointed out, these are lofty goals that the Official Opposition has been pushing for for years in this province. This is not something new. This is not something innovative. In fact, it's really an example of the government finally – finally – recognizing what almost every other jurisdiction in North America has recognized over the last number of years. We're slowly but surely dragging ourselves into the 21st century.

You know, there's a hole in that particular Bill 1 that was being discussed a minute ago that's big enough that you could literally drive a truck through it. That is the section that deals with ministers contacting stakeholders and then not having to register as lobbyists. Now, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't take a lot of brains to figure out that if a minister really wants to circumvent the process and protect a stakeholder, all he has to do is go through his phone book and phone all of these various stakeholders and tell them: I want a meeting with you. Now suddenly they don't have to register as lobbyists. I'll speak more on it when I have the opportunity to speak to that bill, but clearly there was a major problem with that bill right from the start. Here we are, you know, in the early days of a new administration that's talking about integrity and transparency, and we continue to see examples of how that is not taking place.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon in question period I raised questions about Bill 20, that was passed last year in this House, which was extremely regressive in terms of allowing openness and transparency. The Premier played dodge ball with me and wouldn't even answer the questions that we were asking. So we've got a long, long way to go before we're really, truly addressing the issues of integrity and transparency.

Mr. Speaker, Managing Growth Pressures is the next subtitle here, and this is one that I'm going to spend some time talking about because it's probably the most important section in this document that the government produced and probably the one that I'm hearing most about in my constituency office from the residents of Edmonton-Rutherford. Particular in that is the issue around housing affordability.

I've mentioned it before. I come from a background of small business. I have to tell you that I find it very frustrating serving in government now, the pace at which things move even when there is a crisis. I have to say, you know, that when I was first elected two and a half years ago, we heard mostly in the constituency office about issues of WCB claims. We heard a lot about health care, particularly when the third-way debates were coming up – we still do – had a fair amount of correspondence over same-sex marriage, lots of talk about education, but, Mr. Speaker, about a year and a half ago we started getting calls into the office about housing affordability.

You know, when I was in business, if I had a call and it identified a problem and then I had another call and it identified the same problem and soon there was a pattern, Mr. Speaker, I would pick up the phone, and I'd call the plant manager. I'd say: "There's a problem here. We've got to fix this." We would put all of our resources into it, and within a short period of time it would be fixed, but unfortunately that's not the way things work with this government.

A year and a half ago we started hearing about the problems around housing affordability and some absolutely horrendous stories – and I'll touch on a few in a minute – just horrendous stories about real people, real lives, and I know that this isn't just happening in Edmonton-Rutherford. I know that this is happening across the province, Mr. Speaker.

So a year and a half ago we started hearing about it, and then as we went through the summer, the calls became more frequent, the examples were much more serious, much more heart wrenching, and quite clearly happening all over the place. Then we move into the fall, and the Conservative Party has their leadership race under way. Suddenly they're all talking about it, and it's become an issue. Then they elected a new Premier, and he says that in 45 days he's going to establish this commission and that within 45 days they're going to report. Great.

Now we've got the report. It's in the minister's hands, and he's saying that it's going to be well into May before we see responses from the government on this. That doesn't even mean, Mr. Speaker, that we'll have action. It just means that the government is going to announce what their responses to the recommendations are.

By the time we get to some real, concrete action addressing this very, very serious issue, we're probably looking at two years having passed from the time that it first became evident in the constituency offices that citizens of this province were having real difficulty finding housing that was affordable to them. Two years, Mr. Speaker. That is just absolutely unacceptable when I know that day after day every one of us is having calls into our offices concerning this issue. Why it should take two years to get concrete action on an issue that is so terribly important I don't understand, and I do find it frustrating as somebody who comes from a business background, where you can pick up the phone and make things happen.

I want to give a couple of examples of calls that we've had in our office that deal with this. One was from a lady who's been diagnosed with a progressive illness, and very rapidly she's losing her health. She had wanted to move into some sort of assisted living that would accommodate her as her health deteriorates. Unfortunately, as is the case not just across Edmonton but across the province, there was a long waiting list to get into this particular housing that would support her in that way. Mr. Speaker, not only was there a long waiting list, approximately two years to get her into there, but they wouldn't even allow her to put her name on the waiting list at this point because her health isn't bad enough. They literally told her that unless she walks with a cane or is in a wheelchair, she cannot put her name on the waiting list.

Now, she's got all sorts of evidence from every one of her doctors, including evidence from her employers, just showing how rapidly things are progressing, and she will very soon, within a matter of months probably, be walking either with a cane or a wheelchair. But she can't have her name even put on that waiting list until such time as she is. So there's something wrong with a system that doesn't address that.

As a result of the fact that she can't move into assisted housing that will accommodate her, she's going to have to make a move now and then probably a year or so down the road, as she becomes more and more debilitated, another move. So we've got a situation of a relatively young woman who's struggling with all of the issues that come with facing this illness, and now she's going to be forced to uproot herself not just once but twice. Lord knows where she'll be moving to.

One of the issues that was illustrated – and I'm sure that it's going to affect this lady but was illustrated by another lady that came into the office as well – is the dramatic increases in rent, which most of us, I think, are recognizing as rent gouging because landlords in so many cases are asking for anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent, sometimes even more, in terms of increases over the period of a year. I've had two instances now, this other lady that I was referring to a minute ago and now another one that was in the office last week, that are being forced to move and not just forced to move into another accommodation but, because of the dramatically increasing rents, being forced to move into another accommodation literally miles away from where they are now. You're doing exactly what my colleague from Edmonton-Decore just mentioned. You're moving them away from family and friends. They're finding that they have to move away from all of the support services that they've built up over the years.

The second lady that I'm referring to now is a senior. She's divorced and has been living on her own in the same apartment complex for over 20 years. She's now faced with the situation of having to move away from the neighbourhood that she's come to know, away from the friends that she's developed, away from the church that supports her, away from the social agencies that have supported her, and, you know, that's a recipe for disaster. This is going to be a big, big problem. As I say, just two examples in my constituency. I've had many others, and as I'm speaking, people around me are saying that they've had similar calls into their offices. So this is an issue that needs to be addressed, and it needs to be addressed before May. It needs to be addressed before April. We need immediate action to help these people.

Mr. Speaker, I see that I'm fast running out of time. I do want to touch on a couple of other things that are really important to the residents of Edmonton-Rutherford, and they do fall under managing growth pressures as well.

Certainly, the 23rd Avenue interchange at Calgary Trail, which I knew in 2004 was going to end up being an election issue – I was told that it wouldn't be. Sure enough, it did because of the way that the funding came down to municipalities from the government and the fact that Edmonton received . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, were you signalling me that you wanted to adjourn debate?

Mr. R. Miller: I was signalling you that I would like to adjourn debate. Thank you.

Bill 1
Lobbyists Act

[Adjourned debate March 20: Dr. Taft]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on Bill 1, the government's flagship bill, which addresses a long-standing concern among Albertans and among my constituents in Edmonton-Strathcona. Over the last 10 years that I've served in this Assembly, this is an issue that has come and gone without any action being taken. They've taken a long time to get here.

We have a long way to go in putting in place legislation, making changes in policy, amending existing legislation to restore the confidence of Albertans in the integrity of the manner in which we do our business in this House and in this government in the province of Alberta. This bill is certainly one step in that direction. It's a step in the right direction, but we want to make sure, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans expect us to make sure and my constituents would want me to make sure that we take our time and pay attention to the details of this bill so that we get it right. Late but right.

We are followers in this respect as a province. Other jurisdictions, provinces, the federal government have had legislation speaking to this issue in place for years. We need to learn something from a sort of comparative study of those pieces of legislation and the practices that have arisen from that to make sure that our bill becomes, then, stronger as a result of the fact that we can benefit from and should benefit from looking at this experience in other provincial jurisdictions in the country.

Mr. Speaker, I've been following the activities of Public Interest Alberta, an organization which is holding hearings around the province on the issue of democracy in the province. It's seeking broad-based public input into what Albertans would like to see change in in this province to strengthen democratic decision-making, to achieve transparency in the way decisions are made in public forums such as this one, or in the government, and seeking participation by Albertans in sort of determining the future course of action which all of us collectively need to take to roll back the big tide of cynicism that has gripped Albertans over some time. This is reflected in the declining voter participation in our provincial elections over the last 15, 20 years. We all, I'm sure, are concerned about this continuing decline in the number of Albertans who turn up at the polls to vote when they get a chance every three or four years to express their verdict.

So this bill, Lobbyists Act, Bill 1, I think is a bill that is attracting lots of attention of Albertans. I was in Lethbridge the weekend before last weekend, about 10 days ago, Mr. Speaker, at one of these public forums held by Public Interest Alberta. There were about 45 people who took part in this forum. A lobbyists registry and the prospect of a piece of legislation in this province coming into being was greeted with high expectations and some gratification. At last there is action on the horizon, in the process being taken by this House to enact a law that will regulate lobbyist activities in this province, that will make public for the first time who is a lobbyist, whom lobbyists are lobbying and for what purpose.

The bill clearly is a first attempt at this. So there'll be changes that we'll be seeking in the bill both in terms of definition of a lobbyist, the activities that are considered as lobbying activity. We'll be joining the other members of the House in making improvements in the bill by way of amendments when we have that opportunity, when the bill reaches the committee stage for debate.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to, of course, lobbying, people want changes in election funding. They want some legislation to regulate that. People expect there to be some legislation in place, to have a legislation which requires a disclosure of contributions to leadership contests for political parties. So there's a long way to go before Albertans will be satisfied that we as legislators have taken actions on their behalf that they think will lead to restoration of their full confidence in the way business is done around this province by our government, by legislators, and by other public agencies that are responsible for serving the public interest.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it's important to remember and for me to note that our exclusive obligation is to serve the public interest. Public interest is best served if democratic institutions, democratic traditions are respected, legislation is in place that requires us to act in ways which puts our conduct beyond any question with respect to integrity, openness, and our commitment to public interest: the core function of the office that I hold and the office that all of us hold who have the privilege of sitting in this House. So we are in principle in support of the bill. We see problems with some provisions in it, which have been commented on by other commentators too.

I just want to draw the attention of the House to the first reaction to the bill that came from the co-ordinator of Democracy Watch, Duff Conacher. Democracy Watch is an organization with an office in Ottawa. One of the serious weaknesses, loopholes in the bill that he puts his finger on is the request-initiated activities of what otherwise would be considered lobbying activities. So long as the request is initiated by the government from the minister's office, from a minister to seek advice and approach a consultant, that will not be considered as lobbying.

Mr. Speaker, I want to underline the fact that this is a very serious loophole that's been noted. In fact, when the federal legislation, which was more recently amended in 2005, plugged that particular loophole, the number of lobbyists registered multiplied by eight times. In other words, this loophole allows a very large percentage of people who engage in lobbying activities as defined in this act to not have to register.

So the effectiveness of the bill very much depends on our ability at this stage, while we're debating this bill, and particularly at the amendment stage, where amendments can be introduced, to plug that particular loophole, that request-initiated consultations or lobbying activities must be covered in this bill. That remains a major concern, certainly, of my caucus, and we will try to address this and, hopefully, will have the co-operation of all members of the House, make sure that this bill becomes, in fact, leakage-proof. If you allow this leakage to happen, then surely this important step that's being taken by way of this bill after waiting for years and years and years will again prove to be ineffective.

So we can't fail. We can't afford to fail in making this bill as strong, as good as we possibly can.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 5:51 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 21, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/03/21

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Pál Vastagh, ambassador of Hungary. Also seated in your gallery is the ambassador's wife, Leeze Vastagh, along with Ferenc Banyai, deputy head of mission, and Béla Balaz, honorary consul general in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, more than 40,000 Albertans trace their ancestry to Hungary, including many who came as refugees in the 1956 rebellion. Between 2001 and 2005 Alberta's exports to Hungary averaged almost $3 million per year, consisting mostly of machinery, especially for our oil and gas sector, and also pet food. Over the past five years Alberta's imports from Hungary have averaged approximately $19 million per year, including computer parts, telecommunications equipment, and aluminum.

On behalf of government and the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations my wife, Jennifer, and I had lunch just a few moments ago and had a great experience. I know he really enjoyed his meeting with you, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to wonderful things between Alberta and Canada and Hungary.

I'd ask our honoured guests now, Mr. Speaker, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also an honour and a privilege for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a guest seated in your gallery. Mayor Judy Gordon of Lacombe is no stranger to this Assembly. She served ably as an MLA for the Lacombe-Stettler constituency for three terms, from 1993 to 2004, and we are glad to have her here to join us today. I'm going to ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members will know that you are the chair of the very active Alberta branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, or the CPA. This province shares a common bond across the globe with over one-quarter of the world's population. I'm therefore pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members Mr. Thembekile Mzantsi, Serjeant-at-Arms, head of safety and security, Eastern Cape Provincial Parliament, South Africa, and Mr. Hasani Ngobeni, Serjeant-at-Arms, Limpopo Provincial Parliament, South Africa. Both are here today on a two-day attachment to study the operations of our visitor, ceremonial, and security services branch. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce a number of employees from Alberta Environment who are participating in the public service orientation tour. They are seated in one of the galleries, and if I could, I'd like to quickly read off their names and ask them to stand as I do so: Sheree DeCoteau, Ashton Stewart, Judy Tran, Monique Dietrich, Frauke Meyer, Rachel Dennis, Krista Westover, Laura Partridge, Greg Nelson, Santiago Paz, Jennifer Martin, Carolyn Skoworodko, Keith Denman, Justin Sabourin, Elizabeth Smith, Jason Stianson, Angela McGonigal, Kendall Tupker, and Lorie Wagner. Again, I'd ask all of the members to give them a warm traditional welcome as they experience from the public service side what the elected representatives deal with on a day-to-day basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you a group of 23 provincial employees with Infrastructure and Transportation. They work in the ministry's properties division, which is responsible for the operation and maintenance of government-owned properties. These dedicated employees are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise as I read their names: Cheryl Alty, Carlo Amodió, Sandye Glass, Tara Fitzpatrick, Koby Godwin, Colette Haakman, Lauralee Harrison, Karen Herd, Rhonda Holland, David Jesse, Tanya Jerasi, Karen Johnson, Trudy Lewis, Sherry Liptak, Deborah Marriott, Mike MaGathan, Jason Ness, Peter Nietereasta, Elena Nyhus, Judy Tumm, Jerry Wasylkiw, and Siân Wright. Please join me in wishing them a traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure and honour to introduce to you a group of 37 young and enthusiastic people from Edmonton-Castle Downs, which in itself – I know you will agree, Mr. Speaker – makes them superstars. They are students of Bishop Savaryn elementary school, and they're currently studying governance in Canada. They are accompanied by a couple of teachers: Mrs. Evelyn Sopkow and Mr. Mark Harvanka. With them is a volunteer parent who I know spends a great deal of time volunteering in that school and whom I consider to be a friend as well, Mrs. Anita Armet. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour and a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some very important members of our community in Red Deer. They are from Catholic Social Services, and they are here to watch us represent them and to see how government works. They're accompanied by their group leaders

Mrs. Sherry Albrecht, Mrs. Shirley Butler, and Mrs. Suja Varghese. These people are very special people themselves because of their caring and compassion, that helps to make the lives of the people in their care better and happier. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly 12 very special people from the High Park community in my riding of Edmonton-Glenora. They are here in support of their school, High Park school, which is being considered for closure. I would ask them to please stand as I call their names: Clare Peters, Kristine Peters, Arlen Peters, Jackson Peters, Kim Kotyk, Jorge Kotyk, Gary Kotyk, Kim Patten, Geniene Elder, Reilley Elder-Cherry, Tess Crowthers, and Joan Deverill. I ask the House to please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Council of Alberta University Students has been at the Legislature meeting with elected officials all week to make known their concerns and the concerns of students in Alberta's postsecondary institutions. On Monday they were introduced by the hon. Minister of Education, yesterday they were introduced by the third party, and today it is our turn to introduce this group as a way of showing that they have the ear of all sides of the government. Here with us today – and I introduce them to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to all members of the House – are David Courmoyer and Duncan Wojtaszek. If they would rise, please, and if you would all give these guests the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

1:10

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two guests who are part of the Save Our Schools group from Newton school. They are Gerry Hofs and Brenda Hovan. These dedicated members of my constituency have been working hard with other parents and community members on a proposal to save Newton elementary school from closure by the Edmonton public school board. They have an innovative plan to convince the board that Newton school is sustainable and should be saved for the good of the students, the parents, and the community. Gerry and Brenda have shown incredible commitment to the idea of community schools, and I would like to commend them for their efforts. I would also ask them to now rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Michele Jackson. Michele was raised in Ottawa, Ontario, and moved to Edmonton seven years ago. She has worked on Parliament Hill as well as for the Centretown Citizens Ottawa Corporation, which was a nonprofit social housing organization. She has also served as an archivist in the national archives of Canada. Here in Edmonton Michele has worked for various francophone nonprofit organizations and for Western Economic Diversification Canada in communications. We were delighted to have Michele join our NDP caucus team as my executive assistant last fall, and we're indeed fortunate to have someone with her skills and experience in our office. I would now ask that Michele rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

St. Joseph's General Hospital

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Albertans are aware, a situation has arisen in the East Central health region. My ministry took immediate action upon learning about this situation, and that work is continuing. It is unacceptable to me, as I'm sure it is to most Albertans, that this situation could arise in our health care system. I am very concerned, and I'm determined to find out how it could have happened.

Yesterday our focus and priority was on the health of Albertans who may be at risk and ensuring that those Albertans are properly informed and properly taken care of. While this remains a priority, we are moving forward, continuing to investigate, and looking at next steps. I want to be absolutely certain that East Central health has the management capacity it needs to ensure the quality of patient safety and care, so today I will be announcing that I have asked my ministry to contract with appropriate management and other experts to manage and support East Central staff as we move forward. The chair of the health region has also requested that pursuant to the Hospitals Act I have the ministry develop a plan and appoint a board of management to oversee the management of St. Joseph's hospital while we address these issues.

As we look deeper into the situation, let me be clear. I am committed to taking whatever further steps may be necessary. Albertans deserve to receive quality health care and expect nothing less. It is this government's and this minister's commitment to deliver just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise and respond to the minister's statement.

This situation in Vegreville is a very serious problem. Few things can be more serious than the health and well-being of Albertans. Albertans are concerned, and they need and deserve assurances that their health system is working.

There are two equally important issues here. The first is the local level and problems regarding inspection control practices at that hospital. The second is the adequacy of provincial oversight with monitoring and enforcement of standards. Alberta Liberals have long been concerned that one of the risks in this government's approach to health care reform is that its capacity for enforcement and oversight of standards has been steadily diminished throughout the 1990s. It has yet to recover.

This situation scares us. It scares all Albertans. Residents, their families, and members of the communities directly affected have a right to know that they will be okay. More broadly, Albertans want to know that their government has strong prevention practices established so that these things never happen in the first place, but if they do, they want to know that the government has a comprehensive emergency response plan in place. The closure of a hospital so critical to this community or any community is an issue of public confidence and public trust. This situation should not have happened. I look to the government for leadership.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in Ministerial Statements our rules allow a minister of Executive Council to make a statement, and our rules allow a representative of the Official Opposition to make a statement. For additional members to participate requires unanimous consent.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has caught my eye. I know he will want to rise to seek unanimous consent for the leader of the third party to participate.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I and my caucus colleagues in the New Democrat opposition are deeply concerned for the health and wellness of the residents of Vegreville and surrounding areas. I sincerely hope that further cases of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus, or MRSA, are not found.

I note that the East Central health region has halted new admissions to the hospital and closed the central sterilization room due to MRSA and sterilization concerns. However, there are some very serious questions which must be answered with respect to this MRSA outbreak and the hospital sterilization techniques.

During an audit the East Central region found that the sterilization of hospital equipment was not happening according to proper procedures. This audit was provided on February 13, 2007. East Central ordered the cancellation of sterilization and a cessation of surgeries in the hospital; however, St. Joseph's hospital sterilization room continued to operate. Over a month passed between the health region's order and the closure of the sterilization room. If individuals were exposed to or infected by any blood-borne or communicable diseases between the time of the order to close the sterilization room and the government taking action, then a full public inquiry must be struck in order to protect the public from further occurrences of this sort.

Mr. Speaker, it's a matter of great concern that the appropriate safeguards in our health system have eroded during the cuts of the 1990s and have not yet been corrected. The minister has promised immediate action and will put in place a board of management for the hospital, but that does not close the matter as far as the New Democratic Party opposition is concerned. We need to have an inquiry into the events that led up to the causes of this occurrence and make sure that it cannot happen again. Certainly, the delay in implementing the health region's order is unacceptable and must be explained as well as any government knowledge or responsibility thereof.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are joining communities around the world today to recognize the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This day represents a rallying point for the world to eliminate racism and intolerance. This year's international theme is Fighting Everyday Racism.

On this day 41 years ago the United Nations declared March 21 the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This special day was created to commemorate the 69 individuals who lost their lives during a peaceful antiapartheid protest on March 21, 1960, in Sharpeville, South Africa.

In Alberta a number of events are taking place all month in recognition of this day: a multicultural book reading and short story contest in Calgary, a film showcase in Edmonton examining racial stereotypes found in Canada, a discussion in Red Deer on the harmful effects of racism on children, an event with food and cultural displays from various ethnic groups in Brooks. Students and schools throughout the province are also hosting a variety of events to commemorate the day.

Alberta's municipalities have joined an international coalition of cities against racism. This project aims to have municipalities follow key principles in order to help build communities that are respectful, safe, and welcoming. The Human Rights and Citizenship Commission and the Alberta Urban Municipalities are actively involved in supporting this initiative.

Mr. Speaker, on this International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination I ask the members of this House to join me and communities throughout the province in taking action against all forms of racial discrimination and encouraging fairness for all citizens.

Mr. Speaker, let's all fight racism every day. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Arts Vibrancy in Rural Alberta

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to acknowledge the artistic vibrancy that exists in rural Alberta. I recently enjoyed a performance of On Golden Pond at the Rosebud Theatre. The hamlet of Rosebud was once a coal mining, railway, and farming community on the brink of extinction in the 1960s. The population had dwindled to 12 people. To help revive the community, a school of arts was founded, and the Rosebud Theatre followed in 1983.

What was once a struggling community has now become the home to western Canada's largest rural professional theatre. Thirty-five thousand people a year from all across Alberta and beyond visit this theatre in a community still family oriented and still based upon a strong attachment to the land.

The success of the Rosebud Theatre has allowed the community to preserve many original buildings in the area. The local hotel is now the administration office for the theatre. The former United Church is now an art gallery, and even the theatre itself was once used for grain storage years ago. The theatre has not only saved the community, but it brought the spirit back to Rosebud. Building on the success of the theatre, the hamlet has seen even more development with bed and breakfasts, a gift shop, and galleries.

Other rural Alberta communities are revitalizing their hometowns by embracing arts and culture as well. Fifteen years ago the tiny hamlet of Kelsey, near Camrose, launched a dinner theatre event. It started as a fundraiser to help restore the local community hall, but today the Kelsey Drama Club and local volunteers continue to welcome guests from as far away as British Columbia. Stony Plain has embraced the arts in another way, with outdoor murals and sculptures depicting the town's history. This attraction is always open for everyone to enjoy, and guided tours are available.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

High Park Elementary School

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The neighbourhood elementary school is an integral part of every vital and dynamic community. In many communities the local school is the hub of social life. Given the bonds that tie families, children, parents, and grandparents to a school, it is a tremendous shock to the whole community to learn that their beloved school is being considered for closure. A parent wrote in a letter: when you take away a community school, you take away the heart of the community. But the shock gives way to anxiety and anger, and then one by one individuals and families begin talking and gathering and planning for the future.

This is what happened in the High Park community here in Edmonton, and I want to use this moment to pay tribute to the residents of High Park for their courage, resourcefulness, and their grit. They proved what the community organizers say, that when it comes to community assets, the glass is always half full, not half empty. In the face of many barriers, including cruel, all-too-brief timelines, they never gave up, and they are here today to proclaim that High Park is their school, and it is their community.

Governments and school boards should be in the business of building up and strengthening community, not destroying it. Our legislation should make it possible for all sectors of the community – residents, parents, politicians – to all come together and work together to preserve the viability of the community.

It is obvious that closing a school has tremendous costs. It means a migration of young families out of the neighbourhood. It means the decline of social cohesion in the community. It means the breaking of the bonds of community for many generations identifying with the school. It means a spiral of decline which is very hard to turn around.

I am proud of the efforts of the High Park community, and I hope against hope that the outcome of their efforts is successful.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Growth Pressures in Central Alberta

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, much noise is made in this Assembly over the growth pressures in the Wood Buffalo region, the city of Calgary, and the city of Grande Prairie. Specific responses have been made to accommodate the growth in these regions, and rightly so, but I want to remind this Assembly not to lose sight of the fact that there are other growth pressures in this province which face their own considerable challenges.

Stats Canada released the 2006 census results last week, showing the growth from 2001 to 2006. The province of Alberta grew by 10 per cent while the rest of Canada grew only by 5 per cent. Calgary grew by 12 per cent, Edmonton by 10 per cent, the Wood Buffalo region by 24 per cent, and Grande Prairie by 27 per cent. But little heralded is the fact that Red Deer grew by 22 per cent and Sylvan Lake by 36 per cent.

This puts central Alberta into the same stratospheric category as the aforementioned communities. It is no wonder central Alberta communities are anxious to protect their freshwater resources to accommodate their population and economic growth potential for the future. This is an important reminder that government programs must be balanced in their approach to address the needs of all communities, not only the ones that are media favourites and flavour of the month.

The census results also demonstrate the impact of small and mid cities on the growth patterns of Alberta, communities like Red Deer, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Sylvan Lake, Spruce Grove, Strathmore, and Airdrie. While justified, I am loathe to begin a small cities caucus because I believe we govern for the province as a whole, but let it be understood that these cities have unique challenges which are not the same as large cities or the rural communities. Whether as regional centres for health care delivery or postsecondary education or centres for water and sewage treatment, they have enormous positive impact in Alberta that should not be underestimated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a day to acknowledge that racism is still present in our society. Racism is an outdated idea and still present and accepted. Discriminatory laws and practices are very much in vigour in some places. In other places people accept silently more subtle forms of discrimination.

Racism and racial discrimination make a mockery out of human dignity. No rhetoric about equality or fairness is credible if we accept racism and racial discrimination. We must look forward and agree on the best strategy to rid mankind of the corruption and pollution that creates racism and discrimination. We must raise awareness and involve all Canadians in the movement against racism and advocate against all forms of discrimination. Through education and information we fight the ignorance and intolerance that breeds racism and discrimination.

As Canadians we should make some effort to support acceptance and diversity. First of all, speak out against racism. In this case silence is not golden. In fact, silence, too, can lead to greater discrimination, so you have the right as well as the duty to speak out. When you have a chance, stand up and protect our society's great diversity and respect our differences. We must work together to break down these barriers brick by brick. Racism can be stopped. Together we can accomplish this goal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Role of Private Members

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of Alberta have placed their trust in their representatives. We are elected to represent the people of Alberta to uphold their values and their vision. We work very hard in the Legislature, and we need to remember that the work we do does lead to great things. While some criticize, others act. Barack Obama said: do we participate in the politics of cynicism, or do we participate in the politics of hope? I participate in the politics of hope, and I chose to make good things happen.

There are days in this Assembly when the detailed work of line-by-line consideration of legislation makes most of us and the public sleepy, when the noise and chatter of question period embarrasses some of us, when the long afternoons of occupying a seat for the sake of quorum are mind-numbing. On those days some of us wonder how effective our role as a private member is. However, the good-news story is that PCHAD, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, a hard-fought-for private member's bill which I had the honour of sponsoring, now boasts some instantly recognizable good work, which warms the hearts of those who have seen the ravages that drug abuse causes among the young.

This act has had an impact. It has saved lives and saved families. Of the 232 young people who have been temporarily held for drug abuse assessment, 50 per cent have voluntarily gone into treatment. Ask me if the faces of the mothers and fathers of these children don't show real relief and a great big thank you to all in this Legislature who fought to pass this bill against enormous odds and tight deadlines. Voluntarily to treatment, 50 per cent: in that number lives are saved. This is effective work of private members. The governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have implemented similar legislation, and I thank all members of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

St. Joseph's General Hospital

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's news of shocking oversights at a hospital in Vegreville has Albertans extremely worried. Not only are residents in the area concerned that they may have been affected by improper sterilization practices, but they're worried about this government's failure to alert Albertans in a timely enough fashion to a major health risk. My questions are to the Premier. How long has the Premier been aware that St. Joseph's hospital wasn't meeting standards since they seem to have had a history of problems?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister and I followed the advice of professionals, and that is our public officer of health. They posted, of course, on the doors of the hospital last Friday a public health order, and it's for those people that were going to gain access into the hospital. Over the weekend the minister of health met with officials to follow up, and we're doing whatever we can as quickly as possible to restore confidence not only in St. Joe's hospital but all hospitals in the province of Alberta.

Ms Blakeman: So the Premier knew at the same time as the public.

Again to the Premier. There was a failure on the part of this government to monitor and enforce the situation. There is no doubt that this province is going to face lawsuits from patients that may be infected due to this negligence. Has the Premier begun discussions with cabinet and legal counsel on the scale of this government's liability?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of behaviour that Albertans find upsetting. First of all, let's assess the situation. The officer of health said: minimum risk. We are going to ask all those that had any service in terms of the hospital, any kind of health care delivery service, that were in contact with the CSR – we're going to make sure that we contact them all, make sure that they're aware of the risk. But to say that we're already anticipating huge court cases, et cetera, is – you know, folks, let's first restore the confidence in the hospital.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I would have called it planning.

Again to the Premier: what deadline has the Premier set for the report by the Health Quality Council of Alberta to be completed, and will the Premier commit to making the report public immediately after receiving it?

Mr. Stelmach: The minister will respond to the actual time limit of the Health Quality Council.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I have requested the Health Quality Council to look into all aspects surrounding this situation and to report back to me. I have not as yet put a deadline on that process. We need them first to look into what it's going to take. We will be in discussions with the Health Quality Council leadership this week to talk about the nature and extent of the inquiry and what needs to be done, and we will set appropriate time frames at that time. I want to make sure that the work is done thoroughly and completely, so I'm not going to put artificial deadlines on it. But on the other hand, we're going to make sure that they understand that it has to be done as soon as possible.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

School Closures

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals have long shown that they value community schools, but this government has proven again and again that it does not. In January the Minister of Education himself stated: I don't buy into the concept that the closure of a school is going to collapse a community. Well, we dispute that sentiment, and there are a lot of people in the gallery today that would dispute that sentiment. Will the Premier admit today that school closures have a profoundly negative effect on students, parents, and the entire community?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this province places a tremendous priority on education. In fact, I'm proud to say that in terms of comparisons to other jurisdictions, we lead in so many different areas of achievement. It's a great tribute, of course, to the teachers and our students. That is the really positive message that we want to get out to all Canadians.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Community members who are most affected by school closures feel shut out of the process. The timelines for closure are too short, and the views of the community are not taken seriously. The Alberta Liberals would encourage more community involvement in schools, not less. Will the Premier commit to extending the timeline and level of community involvement in school closures to ensure that important voices are being heard in the community?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've always taken pride in the fact that our government listens to Albertans. It does get out to every corner of the province, our ministers and caucus members.

On the administrative, in terms of regulations within the School Act, the minister can respond.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: I thought he was responding, Mr. Speaker. Sorry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has the floor.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this government is behind the trend when it comes to community schools. The Alberta Liberals have introduced excellent policy and legislation that would protect valuable community schools from closure and would expand their role in the community. The government has been happy to borrow Liberal policy in the past, so why not now? Will the Premier call for a moratorium on school closures until a clear community schools policy is in place?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, whenever we enter into discussion, of course, with respect to a possible school closure, there are very clear rules that school boards have to follow in terms of working with the community, working with parents, working with the municipality. I partook in a number of situations where the public came together in terms of the discussion of a reduction of a program within an existing school. I think the process we have is good. If it requires some improvement, we'll certainly listen to any Albertan that would come forward with any advice.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

St. Joseph's General Hospital

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. MRSA is one of the superbugs now found in many hospitals. The most successful way to prevent this is handwashing before touching patients. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How much of the MRSA infection has been transmitted from St. Joseph's hospital in Vegreville to the community? If someone infected with MRSA has gone into the community and, say, served lunch at the local seniors' centre, then it is cycling through the community and back into the hospital. What plans does the minister have to test the local population for this superbug infection?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, an interesting question. First of all, I would say that of all the admissions to St. Joseph's hospital, to my understanding nobody came into the hospital with MRSA.

The other thing I would indicate is in terms of my discussions with the provincial public health officer. The MRSA infection, although there are some community instances known about it, is primarily a hospital infection. The question about whether it has been transferred or could have been transferred out into the community is a very interesting one, and I guess that what we need to make sure is . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: how do we know that the emergency room patients are safe? They were exposed to the same contaminated equipment and unsanitary practices.

Mr. Hancock: What we need to make sure of, Mr. Speaker, is that people in the community know and understand the symptoms of MRSA, which are rashes and lesions, and, if they have those symptoms, to immediately seek medical attention.

With respect to the sterilization of the equipment: there was an immediate order put in place to stop use of equipment. All of the equipment was removed from the hospital and appropriately sterilized. So on the go-forward basis, appropriate steps have been taken to make sure that no person attending at the emergency at St. Joseph's hospital would have any concern about the sterilized equipment. That has been taken care of on a go-forward basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. A directive by the health region to close the sterilization room on February 13 was violated by the hospital for a month. Can the minister determine what went wrong here? I don't want to wait months for a Health Quality Council report. Is it a default in monitoring or in enforcement?

1:40

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's precisely the reason why we're moving ahead today to put in place a plan and a board of management to take control of the management of that institution under the Hospitals Act. That's the appropriate methodology in this type of institution. If that board of management is not successful in making sure that we can have total assurance of the quality of management and operation of that facility, then a supervisor can be appointed after the board of management is in place. But that's precisely why we've moved to the board of management: so that we know with certainty that directives of this nature are being followed and that all appropriate protocols are being followed in that particular hospital.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On February 13, 2007, during an audit of St. Joseph's hospital the East Central region found that sterilization of hospital equipment was not occurring according to proper procedures. East Central ordered the cancellation of sterilization and a cessation of surgeries in the hospital. However, over a month passed between the health region's order and the closure of St. Joseph's sterilization room. My question is to the Premier. Why did this hospital continue to operate its sterilization room for over a month despite being ordered to close it?

Mr. Stelmach: The Minister of Health and Wellness is following this file very closely, and he'll respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That indeed is a question that we need to get to the bottom of. But when this minister was made aware of the situation on Thursday last, March 15, I immediately briefed the Premier, and I immediately called in the provincial public health officer, immediately got in touch with the local medical health officer, and immediately an order was put in place to close the sterilization room, remove the equipment, and do proper sterilization procedures. The rest we will find out and we will take care of.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that the health region ordered the sterilization room closed and surgeries to take place elsewhere. That did not happen, and there was a potential for people to be exposed to or to be infected with blood-borne diseases, including HIV and hepatitis B and C. My question is to the minister. Was the February 13 audit provided to the minister or his department of health before Thursday, and if so, when?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, first, no services were performed of a nature that would involve the equipment in question after February 13. I'm satisfied from an inquiry that that is the case. So no Albertans were at risk at that stage. That should be made clear because we don't want to unnecessarily alarm Albertans. To the best of my knowledge the first awareness that the department had and certainly the first awareness that the minister's office and that this minister had of this situation was on March 15, and we took immediate action.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I hope the minister will be able to assure the House that there are procedures in place, that his department is informed of these types of audits in a timely fashion in the future. The public might well have been at risk. I would ask the minister: if any individuals were exposed or were potentially exposed to any blood-borne pathogens, will the minister commit to a full public inquiry to look into the systemic failures in our health system that this exposes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that we do not want to get people unnecessarily alarmed. First of all, the audit that the member is talking about was a joint operational audit between the East Central health authority and St. Joseph's hospital, which is contracted to the East Central health authority. So it was their internal process to look at their operations. That was not an audit that we had instituted. We should have been advised of the circumstances, and they should have taken it more seriously. We'll get to the bottom of that.

With respect to the go-forward, I think the hon. member should be patient. We will have the Health Quality Council have a look at the issue, and we will determine from there what facts needs to be followed up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Tax Deductions

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our booming Alberta, trades, techs, and engineers work long hours at the highest tax rate with few tax breaks. Alberta needs more trades and techs. Why not help them with their tools? We need venture capital to convert our research into commercial reality. We need qualified coaches and choreographers in volunteer roles to help keep kids off the streets. Why not tax breaks? My question is to the Minister of Finance. With the feds only giving small tax breaks for trades tools, will the minister ensure that Bill 207 from 2001 – that's on tool tax breaks – is finally proclaimed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member may or may not know, Bill 207 was passed in this Assembly. It was sponsored by, I believe, the MLA for Strathcona. It was a very progressive bill. The federal government saw the wisdom in that bill and actually followed suit a couple of years later. They brought in a tool tax deduction, and with that the tax deduction was actually carried on into the province as well. So the province is doing a tax deduction also. I would ask the hon. member, as well, that if he sees fit to have more of a tax reduction, he would be welcome to bring back the bill, and we can certainly have it looked at again in this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplementary to the same minister: with most provinces and the feds providing tax breaks for contributions to labour-sponsored venture capital funds, when will Alberta put this tax break into effect?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, across Canada the federal government does indeed give a tax credit to the labour-sponsored venture capital funds, and some provinces have paralleled this. Interestingly enough, in Ontario, which is where probably the biggest fund has been, they've actually started to phase it out, and it will be phased out in the year 2010. Their reasons and rationale for phasing it out are quite simply that it wasn't effective. So I think there are better ways to encourage venture capital. It's certainly something that we want to do, and the hon. member's question is very well received. It is something that we have to do in Alberta, and we're looking at other ways to encourage venture capital, to encourage the higher risk investments within Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the coaching shortage in sports and culture and too many kids on the streets will the minister consider a tax credit for qualified volunteer coaching for kids?

Dr. Oberg: Again I thank the hon. member for this question. I will say honestly that it wasn't an angle that I had actually looked at. What happens typically is that the deductions for health and fitness, especially, have come on the side of the student, have come on the side of the kids participating in the sport. But I think the hon. member has an excellent idea. I think that it would fit very well under the minister of tourism, parks, and recreation and his community spirit committee, and I have asked the minister to take a look at that. I think it would work out very, very well there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Employment of Children

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. There have been a number of comments and questions in the last few days about children as young as 12 working in different places in the province. A simple question: what are the rules about this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across Canada children at the age of 12 have been allowed to work. There are very strict rules about work. For adolescents, for example, on school days they cannot work during the time that school is in session. They can only work two hours per day, and they cannot work between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. So there are some time constraints, and there are also some parameters around it. We always – always – require that parents give written consent before adolescents are allowed to work. Across Canada in many places, in many family businesses, in grocery stores, and delivering newspapers . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: has there been a change to these rules so that restaurants could hire younger workers for the purpose of addressing the labour shortage that we're experiencing?

Ms Evans: No, Mr. Speaker. There has been no change. This has not changed. All we did was stop issuing permits, and then we added a new requirement. Restaurants have to send in safety checklists, very detailed ones, for every adolescent they have working. We've had rules for adolescent employment since 1974, when restrictions were brought in to prevent children under 12 working and restrictions were put on the type of work that adolescents and children age 12 can actually do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: how do you know if employers are actually complying with these requirements and regulations?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have employment standards officers. We are adding an additional number, a significant number, in the budget that will be presented later this spring. I'll be happy to talk about that at budget time. We do checks to see if they're adhering to those compliance requirements. If an employer is found to have hired an adolescent inappropriately, we will put in place a cease-and-desist order. We will close the business. We also conduct regularly other public health inspections. Public awareness around adolescent employment has increased, and employers and employees alike are aware of the laws that we have in place for 12-year-olds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many people in my riding were alarmed at the Minister of Education's comments: I don't buy into the concept that the closure of a school is going to collapse the community. For the past five months I've been working with members of my constituency in Edmonton-Glenora to prevent three school closures, and it is clear to my constituents and to me that there's nothing more important to a community than a school. Can the Minister of Education tell us today whether or not he believes that schools are a crucial part of communities?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, decisions by school boards to close schools, whether they are in urban centres or in rural Alberta, are always trying times for parents. But the reality is that a flat enrolment across the province and the requirement to build schools in new neighbourhoods where kids live mean that school boards are faced with decisions on school facilities that have declining and low enrolments.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, the closure process, Mr. Speaker, is brutal for a community. My constituents feel like their voices have not been heard by the school board or the government in this process. Will the Minister of Education commit to changing the government's school closure policy to allow for at least 18 months of timelines and more community involvement in closures, a step that has already been taken by other provinces, such as Ontario?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think the process that's in place is fair. It's clearly laid out, and school boards need to comply with what's laid out in the School Act. It's a reality, as I said in my first answer, that you're going to have schools that have very low enrolments, and school boards are elected to make those decisions and are making them.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the government has proved year after year that it's far easier to close a school than it is to open a new one. The importance of community schools to neighbourhoods is profound, and many people in the High Park community are worried about the long-term sustainability of their own community. So could I ask the minister: will he tell us what plans the government has to ensure that the community is protected and can continue to be a vital community if the school is closed?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that in a lot of mature neighbourhoods – and I certainly know this as an MLA for my constituency – there are a number of schools that 20, 30 years ago were constructed as neighbourhood schools. We are now at the point where, simply, the fact that a particular school is closed does not mean that there isn't a school in the community. So it's a decision that school boards have to face. It's not an easy one, but that's the fact.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Support for Music Festivals

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since its early roots in our province in 1908 the Alberta Music Festival Association has been promoting and developing music and speech arts in Alberta through performance and workshop-style adjudication. The association is made up of 35 local festivals, mostly organized by volunteers. Regardless of the size of the community and whether it's the Kiwanis music festival in Calgary or local festivals in Crowsnest, Athabasca, or Red Deer, children around the province have benefited from being involved in the arts and music. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Can the minister please outline what kind of support is provided for music festivals in Alberta?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the arts are very, very important and integral to the quality of life of all Albertans. You know, the government has recognized this, identifying improving Alberta's quality of life as one of this government's top five priorities. Music festivals are an important component of the arts in Alberta, and the Alberta Music Festival Association through its local festivals does an extremely good job of introducing music to students of all ages, helping them develop not only as artists but also as individuals. Funding is provided to the Alberta Music Festival Association on an annual basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The musical talent of the youth of Alberta exists across the province regardless of the size of community, and all Alberta youth who choose to pursue the performing arts are equally deserving of encouragement and support. My only supplemental is to the same minister. Can we expect funding to increase for these important community-based programs?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, in 2006-07 the budget for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts was nearly $23 million. That was an increase of 16 per cent over the previous year. Every year funding from the foundation supports the arts in Alberta in a number of other ways, including funding to 55 festivals across the province, including music festivals. We also support arts organizations, from the Calgary Opera to the Okotoks Arts Council. We also support 260 schools in bringing artists into their classrooms. As well, we provide grants to 1,200 musicians, visual artists, and dancers.

The Speaker: Hon. member, did you have a supplementary?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Holy Cross Care Centre

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first concern is to get affordable housing built in a timely fashion. My second concern is this: when provincially funded affordable housing isn't built on time, as in the case of the Holy Cross centre, we get all our money back and give it to someone who can get the affordable housing built. We learned today that the government neglected to put into the contract with the Holy Cross a guarantee that if the project fails, we get all the money back that we're entitled to. To the Premier: can he explain why there was no clause in the contract requiring Enterprise Universal Inc. to pay back the money with interest if the project fails?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's a very specific question to a specific agreement. We'll get back to the member with respect to that specific agreement, and we'll consult with the housing minister.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I look forward to that answer.

At 5 per cent compounded, in two years the party in possession of $1.137 million can rack up about $120,000 in interest. That's a sizable chunk of coin, I would say, in any ordinary Albertan's books. It could pay for another affordable housing unit. Will the Premier direct all government departments to include a repayment with interest clause in all government contracts? It's our money, after all. It doesn't belong to the contractor who fails to deliver.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the priorities, of course, that Albertans talked to me about during the leadership campaign. Of course, as the new government we moved immediately on this critical issue. We now have in possession a report, a report, quite frankly, that was done by an all-party committee, really a first of its kind. The minister now is reviewing the report. He will be presenting his recommendations to the cabinet policy committee, to caucus, and to this government, and we will act on it.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, you don't need a task force to answer that question.

Interestingly, the amount of interest equals the $120,000 that the company has already spent on demolition and design, which the government says it's not expecting to be returned. You know, I'm not very good at math; that's why I'm not the Finance critic. To the Premier: does one cancel out the other, or is the taxpayer now out $240,000?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, I guess that's why he was a radio announcer before he got here.

An Hon. Member: Low blow. Low blow.

Mr. Stelmach: You know, I hear from across the way, "Low blow." They can snip and snipe away, make all kinds of obnoxious comments, and then in jest with a smile on my face – and all of a sudden look at how they're all getting upset. [interjections] Look at that. Whoa. Man.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Water Management

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the impacts of climate change, including drought, are a very real possibility in today's environment. Water scarcity as a result of climate change is a primary concern for many Albertans, including my constituents. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Water storage could become increasingly important to communities facing the threat of water shortage. What is this government doing to ensure that reliable water supplies are available well into the future for all Alberta communities?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's Water for Life strategy has been in place now since 2003, and it is acknowledged by such authorities as the Rosenberg water institute to be among North America's leading comprehensive plans to deal with water. That plan acknowledges that we have to have a long-term plan on both the conservation side as well as the management side of our water.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, during the government's public consultation process for the Water for Life strategy Albertans asked that the costs and implications of potential reservoir and diversion projects be known. To the same minister: in a government promoting its openness and transparency, what action has the government taken on this initiative under Water for Life?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Environment is in the process of working itself through the Water for Life strategy. Two of the priorities that were identified under the strategy were to first prepare an inventory of potential water storage sites. That phase has been completed to this stage. The current phase of the study is to assess the potential for those sites and put them into some kind of a priority situation. The final report will provide Albertans with ample opportunity for valuable input and comment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: if water storage is determined to be the best option for securing reliable water supplies for Albertans in the future, how will Albertans be involved?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the development of any kind of a water storage project has a process that is very dependent upon public input, community input of all kinds. I can assure the hon. member that should any of these projects that have been evaluated as having potential proceed, there will be ample opportunity for input from the public.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Public Interest Alberta released its comprehensive report on postsecondary education. The central message of the report is that our advanced education system has still not fully recovered from the deep and short-sighted cuts of the '90s. Years of neglect have strained our education system beyond limit and leave the government rhetoric about building a learning Alberta ringing hollow. Alberta needs a concrete and comprehensive plan put in place immediately. Will the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology today commit to ensuring that all qualified Albertans have access to affordable advanced education by aggressively reducing tuition levels until they are the lowest in the country and set timelines for achieving that goal?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. I'm glad it was asked because we're doing a very similar plan like that right now with postsecondary institutions. I've mentioned several times in this House that we had a round-table discussion with all of the postsecondary institutions in the province, both public and private, on the 26th of February, and that was to develop the road map, to develop the Campus Alberta approach of roles, responsibilities, and mandates.

The issue is capacity, Mr. Speaker. Tuition is one piece of the affordability puzzle, but we need to create the spaces for those students, and that's what we're going to do in collaboration, co-operation, and by communicating with the postsecondary institutions.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I haven't heard the minister talk about timelines that are needed here.

My second question. The government's current commitment to create 60,000 postsecondary spaces by the year 2020 will create new spaces at a rate no different from the rate by which this system has been expanding anyway. When will Albertans get a firm commitment and clear timelines for significantly increasing the number of postsecondary spaces in Alberta, and will the minister commit to fully funding those spaces through operating and capital grants?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the hon. member has recognized the amount of rapid growth that we've had and the fact that we've been maintaining that rapid growth in the spaces. We will continue to do that to make the number of spaces that are necessary for those students that need to have access to our postsecondaries. In addition to that, my goal is to have that roles, responsibilities, mandate framework completed by the end of this year so that all of the postsecondary institutions and government and students and all stakeholders can look to the future and the spaces where we need them, when we need them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Successful learning requires highly skilled, permanent full-time faculty and staff. Alberta does not have a comprehensive plan for attracting and retaining the best. Will the minister commit to tabling a plan, including a firm timeline for implementation, during this session of the Legislature?

Mr. Horner: Well, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona rightly knows from his past experience, each institution does their own faculty planning. Each institution is responsible for hiring those faculty members that are responsible for delivering the courses. Obviously, if we're going to build infrastructure, we are going to propose to the institutions that we're going to fund them to deliver the programs within those institutions. As part of the overall roles, responsibilities, and mandate plan, we intend to do exactly that in collaboration with the postsecondaries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mountain Pine Beetle Effect on Timber Harvesting

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A slowdown in the U.S. housing market has meant low prices for timber and huge pressure on the logging industry in many rural communities. This morning Alberta Forest Products Association stated that 2006 revenues were down $569 million, and they expect this trend to continue. Despite this, the government's plan for dealing with the pine beetle requires that firms cut and process even more timber. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why are we asking timber firms to clear-cut large swaths of trees when the market cannot deal with the excess timber?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to report to the House and the hon. member that I've met several times with the Alberta Forest Products Association and many of the major lumber firms that work in this province. We've discussed our plan on the pine beetle and put it in the context of the softwood lumber process and also the market conditions in the United States. There is a strong consensus on how to move forward. We have something called the forestry competitiveness paper. I received that in January, and we're discussing that with the industry now.

Thank you.

Mr. Bonko: Will the minister direct forest companies to change this practice instead of building up timber which will lay on the ground and be susceptible to the pine beetle, or are they going to change the fact that they're going to allow them to continue to cut, putting the product, with its low commodity, at risk further?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we take a collection up for the hon. member to send him over to British Columbia and see what the effects of doing nothing are. In British Columbia they said: stand back and wait. There's hardly any pine forest left over there. I'll put down the first $20.

Thank you.

Mr. Bonko: The pine beetle is a threat to our forestry industry. It's a natural part of our ecosystem and will remain one in the future. We must adapt our practices accordingly. Our forests are particularly vulnerable because decades of manmade forest suppression and artificial reforestation have made them that way. What is the minister going to do to change the practices in this province to ensure that our forests are never again vulnerable to the pine beetle, as they are now?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, finally the hon. member has hit a good point here. Our forests are susceptible to pine beetle, also to disease and to forest fire. Why? Because of the success of our fire prevention over the last many years. I'm happy to report that the healthy forest initiative, that this government is in the process of developing now, will precisely through harvesting restore a healthy, age-balanced forest that will be more resistant to disease, to pine beetle, and to forest fire.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Surface Rights Compensation

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question as well is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Over the past year I've had numerous calls from landowners very concerned about the amount of compensation they are being offered by the energy industry to access their land for drilling oil and gas wells, the installation of pipelines and power lines, and the like. I understand that the rates have not had a thorough review since the 1980s, when the Surface Rights Act was passed. Could the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development tell me if there are any plans under way to do a thorough review of surface rights compensation rates in the near future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Stand up for property rights, Ted.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An excellent idea from the NDP as well, in response to standing up for property rights, I mean, one of their few good ideas.

I have heard the same concerns as the hon. member about the Surface Rights Act and the Surface Rights Board. I recognize that no changes have been made for 25 years, since the last review, and the industry has changed tremendously since then. It's time to take a good look at it. I'm happy to report that I am prepared to consider reforms and amendments to that to improve both fair compensation and timely access.

Thank you.

2:10

Mr. Marz: I'd like to thank the minister for that answer.

My second and last question would be: will the minister commit to having a committee of MLAs, landowner groups, and industry representatives be part of such a review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, one of the first principles of this government is to listen to all Albertans when it comes to issues like this. But it would be premature for me to commit to a full task force at this point in time. I did receive just this week the surface rights review task force report of the Alberta association of municipalities and districts. It's an excellent report. I've looked at their recommendations. I'm ready to consider many of them. In fact, yesterday I committed to accepting two, indicated that two of their recommendations I'm prepared to accept already. But I want to have further discussions with Albertans before we decide how to proceed on this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Disabled Inmates at Remand Centres

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our remand centres are holding facilities designed to house people charged with committing certain crimes until they're sentenced. There are many problems surrounding our remand centres, overcrowding being the main one, leading sometimes to triple credit for time served while incarcerated in them. Edmonton is finally getting a new facility. The question is: what do we do in the current centre until we get the new one, and what do we plan for this new one that we're constructing right now? Some inmates are people with disabilities. There are no supports available to assist them with things like personal cleaning and showering, using the toilet, or doing their laundry. To the Solicitor General: can the minister tell us why there are no provisions in the existing remand centres to provide support and services to disabled inmates before they're sentenced?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. All our prisoners that are held and all those that are held in remand centres are treated with dignity and respect, and to the best of my knowledge all those that are there are given the proper care and opportunities to shower, et cetera.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, in the eye of the law remanded individuals are innocent people until they're proven guilty. Even those who are eventually convicted still have a right to be treated with dignity, and they should be offered assistance with regard to their physical disability, as stipulated in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. Recently in the Edmonton Remand a disabled person in a wheelchair was forced to endure terrible conditions due to inadequate support. Dragging oneself across the floor and climbing onto the toilet, having to do the same to get in and out of a bathtub surely meet the definition of a loss of dignity, contrary to what the hon. minister has just said, a violation of human rights. To the minister of tourism, parks, and culture: will this minister commit to investigating the conditions at the Edmonton Remand Centre to ensure that disabled inmates are not discriminated against because of their disability and that they get the support they need to live with dignity while they're incarcerated?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond. The Member for Edmonton-McClung has a right to be concerned. However, I would need to look at the details and get some of the information. Then I'd be in a better position to respond.

We also have the Human Rights Commission, where the member could lodge a complaint if he feels he needs to go that route.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Solicitor General. As the minister responsible for the new Edmonton Remand Centre and its design, the fate of any disabled individuals who may be housed there is in his hands. It falls to him to ensure that the new remand centre is designed so that disabled people don't have to crawl on the floor to go to the bathroom or use the shower, that their laundry is looked after, especially those with ostomies or bowel or bladder problems, and, basically, to design a more disability-friendly site. Will the minister assure us that this new site is going to have a percentage of units and washrooms that are wheelchair accessible and that there is going to be some provision to assist those with disabilities with their cleaning and housing needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the hon. member that the new facility will be designed to properly look after all of the folks that we're holding there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mountain Pine Beetle Effect on Watershed

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I read reports from British Columbia of a study linking the mountain pine beetle with increased flooding threats in affected watersheds. My question is directed to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Is the minister aware of and concerned about the findings of this report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, this report is timely and important to Alberta, but the report highlights, if anything, the importance of taking pre-emptive action to harvest these highly susceptible, older pine stands before the pine beetle takes effect in these. So I can tell you briefly about the B.C. study. It was based on a computer model of an interior B.C. tributary system, and what it found was that in a pine beetle infested area the threat for flooding, the damage to the watershed, and the resulting threat to flooding were greater from trees being killed than from logging.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I concur with the hon. minister. As a professional forester in the province of Alberta I agree with him that that's really the only strategy that works.

I'm concerned about the report though, and I'm wondering whether the minister concurs with the study's finding that hydrological assessments are required in watersheds that are heavily affected by the beetle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I agree completely with that. Surprise. That's why in Alberta, unlike British Columbia, we've required hydrological assessments as part of forestry management plans for the last 20 years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the minister could enlighten us on what other actions the department is taking to ensure that watersheds are protected from beetle impacts in the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to report that the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development has recently hired an additional full-time hydrologist to focus on this very area. We have strengthened our ability to assess the relationship between watersheds and pine beetle to put us at the forefront of all Canadian provinces in this area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Capital Cost Allowance Program

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition has long demanded a public review of the royalty structure to determine whether or not Albertans are receiving a fair share of their resource. Unfortunately, the Minister of Finance, who is overseeing this review, continues to fire shots over the panel's bow before it has even begun its work. He continues to make leading statements on matters related directly to this review. My question is for the Minister of Finance. Does the minister have reports or studies that project what financial losses, part of what he called the one-two-three punch, will be for the oil sands companies in light of the federal government's decision to phase out the accelerated capital cost allowance? If he does have them, will he table them in this House?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would be more than happy to table them in the House. We are currently tabulating exactly what potential the accelerated capital cost allowance has of affecting our industry. We have to remember that in Canada the oil and gas industry is an incredibly important component of a very vibrant economy. Our Premier always talks about that if it wasn't for Alberta, the growth in Canada would almost be flatlined. This is a very important issue. It's an issue that we have to stand up for on behalf of our industry. My biggest fear is what the hon. member just said, the one-two-three punch: income trust, accelerated capital cost allowance, and potential climate change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister concede that by telling the panel members to take into account the ACCA phase-out when determining their final recommendations, he has effectively undermined their independence and the mandate of the panel? And this is the panel that, I have mentioned earlier, Albertans have so long been calling for.

Dr. Oberg: Actually, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would have seen the press releases and listened to what I had said when I first announced the panel, I had actually asked them to look at the accelerated capital cost allowance at that time, and that was some two months ago. That was before we even knew what was in the federal budget. So this is something that we have asked them to look at: how taxes and royalties in general are affecting this industry.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I've long suspected that the minister knew what was in the federal budget long before the rest of us did.

My last question is also for the Minister of Finance. Does the minister have studies or reports that project the potential savings for oil sands companies who now invest in green technology, and will he table those reports in this Legislature?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, on response to the hon. member's first part of his question, I wish I did know what was in the federal budget, but unfortunately we didn't.

I'd be more than happy to do that. We're currently tabulating exactly what the accelerated capital cost allowance will do on our green projects. But we do have to remember that when we're talking, for example, about the CO₂ pipeline, that's about a billion and a half dollars versus a hundred and some billion dollars that are currently projected to be invested in the oil sands, so there is a difference in magnitude of scale on that. We thank them on the green side but not necessarily on the accelerated capital cost allowance for oil sands.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move to the next order of the Routine, just to let you know, there were 92 questions and answers today.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a fine group of students and their teachers and parents from St. Mary's in Taber. We have with that group teachers Mr. Pat Pyne, Ms Alissa Henriet and parents and helpers Mrs. Kathy Collett, Mr. Mike Cudrak, Mr. Ed Derksen, Mr. Tony Fiedler, Ms Connie Green, Mrs. Sheila Heal, Mrs. Kathy Knibb, Mrs. Audra Ness, Mr. Joe Smith, Mrs. Judy Strojwas, and Ms Jody Green. It's a real pleasure to have visitors come this far and see the excitement that they have in wanting to know about the democratic process. Mr Pyne has made many trips to Edmonton from Taber to share this with his students, and I look forward to meeting them after. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 1,044 people asking the government to take immediate steps to halt further closures by the Edmonton public school board by amending the closure of schools regulation to provide parents and other community members with a period of not less than 18 months to formulate a revitalization plan, to strike a task force comprised of trustees and qualified members of the public to review and make recommendations regarding the Edmonton public school board's current school closure process, and encourage ongoing consultation and partnerships between parents, communities, and municipal and provincial agencies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a petition of a much larger group. These are the citizens from Edmonton-Manning who are supporting the construction of a new Edmonton remand centre but not in northeast Edmonton. There are 218 in this group.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give notice that at the appropriate time I will move that written questions and motions for return appearing on today's Order Paper will stand and retain their places.

The second is a letter from Erick and Katherine Guevara of Calgary regarding the issue of child care in Alberta. "At a time when the population is growing and the high cost of living demands more childcare programs, it is strange that support for all children 0-12 with appropriate benefits is lacking and is leading to crises in childcare."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table eight letters and appropriate copies regarding the possible closure of High Park school, heartfelt letters expressing their desire to have the school stay open from Beth George; Gary Kotyk; Ron Hayter, a councillor of the city of Edmonton; Kathy Paradis; Jesse Sorensen; Judy McInroy; Alexandria Woycenko; and Gloria Krischanowski.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings, the first recognizing the fantastic accomplishments of the Calgary-Varsity William Aberhart Trojan girls' senior wrestling team that won the city this past week. They did extremely well.

My second, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of four letters with the appropriate number of copies regarding the possible closure of High Park school. These letters of concern come from Kristine Peters, Jerry and Kassie Kissel, Arnold Hickey, and Karen Johnson.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, the first being four more letters regarding the potential closure of High Park school, and these letters are from Donna Kelly, Jennifer Reeve, Hans-Juergen Kirstein, and Roberta Paradis.

My second tabling this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is the requisite number of copies of a document entitled Edmonton: Going from Good to Great. It includes the 2006 annual report of the Edmonton Economic Development Corporation. I and several of my colleagues from the Legislature were fortunate enough to attend their annual luncheon today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Anything in there about the Oilers?

Mr. R. Miller: I think the document is silent about the Oilers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is the requisite number of copies of the University of Alberta: Celebration of Teaching & Learning program book, which is a wonderful celebration ceremony which I attended. It took place on Friday, September 8, 2006.

The second one is eight more letters from concerned parents who are writing to us and to the Minister of Education with respect to the possible closure of High Park school. These letters are from Melodie Stewart, Frank and Marion Kapuscinski, Harry and Muriel Grant, Josef Messmer, Alec Kelly, Lisa Henkel, Constable Troy Jacobsen, and Nikki Andrea.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning Public Interest Alberta, a nonpartisan public interest advocacy organization, issued a discussion paper called Where To from Here: A Vision and Plan for Post-secondary Education in Alberta. I'm happy to table five copies of that paper.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a couple of groups of tablings, one here is two letters from the Unity Centre calling for more affordable housing in northeast Edmonton.

Some more tablings requesting this Assembly to support that the accused killer of Joshua John Hunt be sentenced and tried as an adult due to the nature of the crime, his past criminal history, and that he's close to the age of 18.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to do two different tablings. The first tabling is letters and the appropriate number of copies from parents from High Park school regarding the possible closure. The letters today are from Brayden Kelly, Genève Elder, Cheryl Highfield, and Sylvia Yurko.

A second group are from the same school, concerned about the possible closure of High Park school. Those letters are from Evelyn Kelly, Doug Billey, Nickolaus Hee, and Kim Patten.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the interest of all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly the CO₂ Monitoring and Storage Project report, that is going on in Weyburn. I referred to that yesterday during second reading debate on Bill 3. I would urge all members to please have a look at this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I am pleased to table in the Assembly the annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the calendar year 2005. The report includes the office's financial statements for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2005.

statement released by the Canadian Labour Congress on this issue. I hope that all members have a chance to look at the statement and reflect on the role each of us plays in fighting prejudice and discrimination.

Thanks.

Orders of the Day

head:

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 20

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to move Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007, in Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Just for Albertans who aren't familiar with the supplementary supply estimates procedure, more detail is provided than is provided in the interim supply estimates, so we have more than just a single line item. In some cases we have as many as six or seven specific amounts listed, and we have a sense in a general manner of where this money is going to.

Under Advanced Education and Technology for expense and equipment/inventory purchases $107 million has been committed. This is one of the larger commitments to supplementary supply. A question I would have for the hon. representative of the Treasury Board is if he can break this down a little bit further with regard to the amount that is going to, for example, the infrastructure – for building, for classroom space, for seats – versus the amount that would be passed along to research, and I'll get into that in greater detail.

Agriculture and Food is receiving an additional $50 million. Finance is receiving almost that same amount, $46,570,000.

Health and Wellness, which continues to be one of the major expenditures of the province, will receive $147 million.

Municipal Affairs and Housing, by comparison, is just receiving $42 million. When I go through the various departments, I'll ask about what portion of that is going to incent affordable housing building.

Infrastructure and Transportation is receiving one of the smaller amounts. That's $500,000. Considering the delays in projects, that seems like a very small amount of supplementary transfer.

Service Alberta is to receive $530,000, and in Monday's discussion of the need for a consumer advocate a lot of responsibility was placed at the feet of Service Alberta. I'm not sure that that amount of transfer will provide the due diligence and enforcement that we would hope to receive from Service Alberta with the loss of the concept of a consumer advocate.

In total, the amount of expense and equipment/inventory purchases under the supplementary supply act is $393,516,000, a number very similar to the relief that is being provided for the municipality of Wood Buffalo. It's a relatively small amount in terms of the interim supply budget, which is actually approximately $10 billion.

From the capital investment – as I've pointed out previously, the capital fund – which contains approximately $6 billion, a small amount is being transferred, $530,000, leaving a considerable amount which could be put towards reducing infrastructure deficits, building schools, and a variety of worthwhile projects.

With regard to the general revenue fund again I'm pleased to note that Advanced Education and Technology score largely. As I indicated at the beginning of my presentation, we get into more details, which I very much appreciate, and we get some of the breakdowns; for example, for postsecondary institutions. The enrolment planning envelope receives approximately $214 million, almost $215 million actually. Of that, the supplementary appropriation is $31,700,000.

Now, we know that postsecondary institutions are in desperate need of increased space. In Calgary alone over the last two years 25 per cent of eligible students who had the appropriate marks and could afford the high tuition increases in this province had no access. So this small amount of transfer is not going to assist tremendously in increasing enrolment, as is suggested by this enrolment planning envelope.

With regard to infrastructure for postsecondary facilities this is an area where I would like to see a much greater transfer both in the interim supply, which I'll be speaking to later, and also in the supplementary supply because the supplementary appropriation here is only $69,100,000, and this is a concern I have because our future is determined by the quality of students we produce, whether it's from technical colleges or academic universities. It is interesting to note that Mount Royal College has recently been granted certain status as a university in the specific area of nursing. Hopefully, there will be support from the government and also, in terms of governance, further appropriate development at the University of Calgary.

I commented earlier about research, and I notice that the research innovation capacity is $2 million. That seems like an extremely small amount given the amount of research that universities are expected and required to carry out.

The information continues with regard to ministry support services, and basically I see, in thousands of dollars, the equivalent of a million dollars. In terms of program delivery and support I gather that the government didn't consider this an area that was in need of support because there's no budget line for that item.

Postsecondary facilities infrastructure. Again, this is an area, considering that the University of Calgary just last year celebrated its 40th anniversary. There are a number of buildings at the University of Calgary which are basically falling apart. A good example of that would be the old arts and admin building. There is a dramatic contrast when you go into the accompanying Haskayne School of Business. It's a considerably more attractive and well-supported facility, largely due to the fact that the Haskayne family donated a large amount, for which the University of Calgary is very appreciative.

In the details of the supplementary estimates for Agriculture and Food I note that Canadian agricultural income stabilization – in other words, thanks to the federal government's CAIS program – $50 million is being transferred. A number of farmers are very dependent on that CAIS program. One of the areas that I would like to see further transfers for in these supplementary estimates would be supplying farmers with a kind of equivalent of a workmen's compensation program so that farm labourers and farmers themselves and their families could be supported in the tragic event of an accident. So this is an area where I would suggest that more money could be provided in terms of supplementary estimates.

One of the areas that I am concerned about with regard to the agricultural industry is the oversight. For example, a number of farmers for years have been incented by this government to take on alternate forms of agriculture, including such questionable practices as elk and deer ranching. Previously, we know that with the onset of BSE the testing for diseases was extremely limited, and one of the reasons that we didn't find out about our first outbreak of BSE was the fact that there weren't enough testers, and CWD and testing for it was being taken up. So this is one area I would like to see more supplementary supply being extended to, and that's the testing program.

It's still in the very early stages, but my hope is that with possibly some of the money put into agriculture and some of the money put into postsecondary research, we will be able to test animals for CWD and BSE while they're still alive so that we don't end up with what personal members of my family have experienced, losing their entire herd of Angus cattle because the animals couldn't be tested while they were still living. I realize that we have to take drastic measures to ensure that the spread of disease is eliminated. I would support research into live testing, and I know that the countries to which we export the meat would be very appreciative of that as well.

With regard to Finance, treasury management has received an increase, most likely because a new department has been created to oversee Finance in terms of the Treasury Board. I'm not quite sure why that extra oversight is required when we're talking about eliminating a number of ministries. I'm appreciative of the fact that the government did reduce the number of ministries, but this was a new ministry that was added, and possibly the minister can explain to me some of the expenses associated with creating this new ministry.

Investment, treasury and risk management. Today in Public Accounts and for the last two weeks in the House I have talked a tremendous amount about risk management in the form of the risks associated with P3s: private, for-profit at public expense projects. I've also brought out the fact that despite the government's assurances with regard to risk management that there would be no cost overruns in P3 projects, it has already been noted that there was an almost $37 million overrun on the southeast leg of the Anthony Henday. I've already spoken about the concerns I have with the ring road in Calgary and the associated expenses.

With regard to Health and Wellness, it comes as no surprise, given the fact that the government reached an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association, that there would be supplementary monies going to this area. This is an area that I very much support in terms of the transfer of funding because in Calgary alone – and I'm sure the story repeats itself throughout the province – we are losing general practitioners. We're losing front-line staff. In Calgary we lost 41. I know that, for example, in the Wood Buffalo region there is a desperate need for doctors, to the point where doctors are being offered $1,200 a day. They're being incented to help out the Fort McMurray circumstance. Of course, this is just an interim band-aid situation, but supplementary supply is a form of sort of meeting the need now and making the appropriate transfers.

Another area, of course, that is of concern is the management of the health services, and I look forward to the fact that Public Accounts will be calling before it the two large health regions in Calgary and Edmonton, Capital health and the Calgary health region. Also in Public Accounts today I suggested that I would like to provide support for the Wood Buffalo region, which is experiencing tremendous growth, and of course south in Grande Prairie there is a need for hospital and health support and infrastructure housing.

This province is booming, but there are expenses associated with that boom, and one is the social deficit. So when I note that $147 million was added to the amount, I'm appreciative of the fact. I think it's money well spent, although again the detail is not quite clear. I notice that in line 3 on page 24 it says Assistance to Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chase: I agree, but unfortunately there is no line item; there's no supplementary appropriation for this extremely important area.
2:50

Again, I'm very pleased with the discussions that occurred today in Public Accounts about the desire to have a very strong, financially effective, and supportive AADAC operating in the province. It has been noted that the AADAC organization, which deals with addictions, receives only 3 per cent of the money that is raised in terms of gambling and lotteries. It seems like it's an extremely small amount to cure the problem of gambling addiction. Of course, of all the money that we receive from alcohol taxes, I would like to see a tremendous amount transferred to the AADAC program in terms of prevention. Just adding new bells and whistles on VLTs and slots does not dampen the addicted individual's enthusiasm.

In terms of Municipal Affairs and Housing, I indicated at the beginning my concerns that there is very little money being added under supplementary appropriation. I note that the $42.846 million is a total amount. There's a very small amount under housing services. It says rent supplement, and it shows a 2,000 figure here. Of course, we're talking in the thousands so approximately $2 million for rent supplements. I keep referring sometimes to thousands when I should actually be noting that the book indicates that this is in thousands of dollars.

The Alberta Liberals have been calling for an emergent support in the form of rent supplements and subsidies. A number of people on AISH and on fixed incomes, who are supposedly not required to expend more than 30 per cent of their total earnings on rent, are being forced to pay up to two-thirds of their meagre $1,000 AISH amount on rent, and that leaves very little for food or other necessities, such as transportation. So the area of supplementary supply for housing, especially to initiate affordable housing, is an area where I would definitely like to see more money spent.

Thank you. I'll look forward to rejoining.

Mr. Snelgrove: One of the things the hon. member talked about was the $530,000 in Infrastructure. That's simply a transfer from Infrastructure to Service Alberta for the planes, so it was not supplementary spending in Infrastructure.

Mr. Chairman, it doesn't really matter to me if we want to debate Bill 25 or Bill 20 or rent controls. It's the hon. member's time, but most of what he talked about wasn't really relative to supplementary supply. They may be addressed under Bill 25, interim supply, and the budget, but the elk farming and rent controls and P3s – it doesn't matter to me, but that misinformation about the $530,000 was directly related to my department. The other ministers may want to comment on this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak on Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007, in Committee of the Whole. This is an estimates that's including capital for postsecondary institutions, agricultural assistance programs, housing initiatives and programs for the homeless, and funds for physician services. It's money that's viewed as urgently needed, or emergent.

I'm just thinking how nice it would be if a lot of the Children's Services agencies could have the same opportunity to bridge the gap in their budgets with supplementary supply, as our government does. These agencies need predictable and stable funding. I noticed that Children's Services is not asking for supplementary supply. I wonder why some areas are asking for additional funds but Children's Services is not.

As I look at this bill, which is asking for additional money from the last budget to the tune of $393,516,000, this is the second time in my term here where I have experienced this request for supplementary money. In a sense it's like signing a blank cheque because we don't get much detail about where the money is going. I know that they're spending on specific ministries, but there's no real breakdown of how much goes where and the full details about where they're going to spend money or whether they've already spent some of it, as a matter of fact.

First of all, I'd like to talk from the point of view of my own constituency. Some of these things are being addressed here in supplementary supply, and I'm really happy to see that. We have a grave concern in Edmonton-Mill Woods about the waiting times at hospitals, and this is a shortage of doctors and nursing staff that's a real and ongoing concern.

I hear about the roads in urban and rural areas, I guess. It's not just in Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Another real concern I have, though, is about what I'll call the social deficit, with low-income people and more and more middle-income people feeling that they are now low income. We should think about these people who are earning less than $20,000 and who are finding that their rent costs are going up astronomically and unreasonably. They're concerned about electricity rates. Of course, there are some that are facing homelessness. These are issues that are of grave concern in my constituency.

Environment is also a big issue, and I'm glad that the government is taking some steps to address environmental issues.

Another thing that is a big concern all over this province is the problem with addictions. There are not enough beds for detox or treatment, yet we're not asking for supplementary money to help with that area and that issue.

The purpose of supplementary supply is to deal with emergent and emergency situations. So I was looking at this and looking at Advanced Education and Technology: $34.5 million for a grant to match private donations to the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. My question is: why does this have to be done in supplementary spending? Why could it not have been done earlier, last spring in the budget, or in the upcoming budget? I'm not sure why that is. I also am wondering what capital projects are being funded with the $66.3 million that's been requested. Another question: is the $34.5 million grant from the access to the future fund, or is it from general revenues? If it's from general revenues, why hasn't the access to the future fund started paying out yet? I believe that that is what it was set up for.

Looking at the Department of Finance, there's $7.07 million to reimburse public-sector pension plans, research endowment funds, the scholarship fund, and other minor funds for investment losses. I'm wondering how it happened that we have investment losses when we are in a wonderful, incredibly hot economic market or economic environment right now. What actions were taken against the managers of those funds? What hard questions were asked about the investment decisions that resulted in a loss? It's hard to imagine that in this economy we'd be losing money like that.

Additionally, with Finance we have in one lump-sum payment $40 million that the government is putting into their share of the management employees' pension plan unfunded pension liability. We know that we have nearly $7 billion already in an unfunded liability to the teachers' pension plan, which we press this government about fairly consistently. We're continually told time and time again that it's coming, something is going to be addressed with that, but we don't see the movement on that. So this is a situation where taxpayers are funding this to the tune of some $45 billion over the lifetime of this project as opposed to dealing with the $7 billion liability right now. It would be a good deal, I believe, for taxpayers if we could look at this unfunded liability today and get rid of it.

I'm hoping that this is going to be addressed in the upcoming budget. Again, the question is: why was there $40 million needed in the middle of a budget year? If there's $40 million for that particular unfunded liability, what about all the other unfunded liabilities that the government has, certainly the largest of which is the teachers' unfunded liability fund?

I look at the Health and Wellness department getting $147 million for the higher than budgeted cost of physicians' services, and I believe there's an urgent need for that. There's probably really good justification for that request, but I'd like to ask: how will the money be allocated? Can the minister provide a breakdown of how the money for physicians' services will actually be spent, and I'm wondering why that money wasn't included in the 2006 budget. Could these costs not be predicted? How is it possible to under-budget by $147 million? Then, I guess, always we have to ask what measures are being taken to be sure that Albertans are getting value for their money.

I look at the total of $42.846 million going to various issues surround housing affordability. This is an emergent issue, and it makes sense to me that we are asking for this now.

I have concerns that some things are not included, like Children's Services: the need for more child care spaces, so acute in this province; the need for child care staff; the need for adequate funding for our agencies, who are struggling with all kinds of stressors these days. I'm looking at the need for predictable, stable funding for FCSS agencies and the AASCF agencies, where over and over we're hearing that it's hard to function with the tyranny of project-based funding and the uncertainty of knowing what's coming next month in terms of help and the amazing amount of energies that have to go into fundraising so they can provide the programs that we know are needed for the vulnerable in our society.

I would hope that we won't be seeing supplementary estimates anymore. I think that a good job of budgeting would make the need for this extra request for money not necessary. I would like to see that we can actually do some serious thinking and strategic planning, long-term planning so that there is no longer a need to be asking for supplemental money.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour for me to stand and speak on Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) bill. I haven't had a chance so far in second reading, and I've been following the debate in Hansard.

I just want to speak for a few minutes about the supplementary supply under Municipal Affairs and Housing. It was, of course, a privilege for me to be on the Affordable Housing Task Force and to go around the province and listen to people and their concerns, so immediately my attention was riveted on this portion of the supplementary supply.

The $2 million to fund 600 additional units for the rent supplement program, of course, is an excellent move. I think that more is required because that program is such a good program. It enables people with low income to be able to move into apartments where there's a supplement to the 30 per cent of their income that is put into the rent, so the landlord receives a cheque directly from the government to provide that extra money. Given the fact that our low-income people are really struggling in this province, in many, many cases I don't know how else they would be able to find a place to live.

We are facing a housing crisis in this province, and all that we can do to help low-income people, especially on the income side of things, not just the supply side, is something that we should seriously look at. The problem is that low-income people, not just people who are on AISH or receiving money from Alberta Works but low-income people who are actually working but whose salaries don't provide enough income to provide for rents given the rise in rents in this province, need help. I applaud the government for at least making this step, and I hope that there will be more support for the rent supplement program in the future.

Now, I still want to make a comment about the next line, the $15,173,000 for the affordable housing program to increase the availability of affordable housing units in the province. I believe that this is a part of the affordable housing trust program, but the money referred to here is actually the money that the provincial government has received from the federal government, the one-time federal funding of $81.1 million which has been provided to Alberta over three years. I think in answer to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who is our housing critic in the Official Opposition, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing did respond that this, indeed, was federal money, and that's the explanation for the sentence here, "This spending would be offset by a transfer from the federal government."

Well, this is a bit misleading because here's an announcement of money that's going into this affordable housing trust program, but it actually is federal money. Where's the provincial money? Shouldn't this federal money be matched by provincial money? That would be a more interesting announcement so that we would really be clear that the provincial government is committed to this program, not just using federal money but actually adding more money. So instead of $81 million over three years if the province actually matched that money, we'd have $162 million over three years, and that would be, indeed, good news in terms of developing more affordable housing in this province. As I said before, we have just a crisis in housing in this province, as all of our task members heard, and we just have to be vigilant now and make the right kinds of decisions.

Of course, the minister will wait and respond to the task force. The task force report has already been delivered to him. I would like to see that report become public much earlier than sometime in May; nevertheless, we need to have the government moving in the direction of more support for affordable housing.

I could say exactly the same thing on the next item, $16,142,000 for the off-reserve aboriginal housing program to increase the availability of housing for aboriginal Albertans living off-reserve. So this, again, is a reference to the off-reserve aboriginal housing trust, which was a one-time federal funding of $48.4 million that will be provided for Alberta over three years. My understanding is that that federal money actually has already come and is sitting in the treasury and awaits distribution, so this is an announcement that $16 million of that money will be distributed. That's great, but what about the rest, and what about, again, matching? What about an announcement that the province is actually going to match this federal money also?

I am very impressed by various aboriginal groups in the province, including Métis settlements and the groups that are concerned and the nonprofit organizations that are ready to move to help build this housing for aboriginal people. It's been a program that's worked in the past, and it will work in the future. But I don't see the commitment of the provincial government here reflected in these numbers. I mean, it's fine to transfer the federal money on, but what about matching this money so that we can really indeed deal with the crisis in housing in this province?

Those are my thoughts on the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) bill. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 20, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Carried.

Bill 25

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. I now rise to move Bill 25, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007, to Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise and participate in debate on the interim supply bill in Committee of the Whole. Some of my remarks are going to be somewhat repetitive from the last two years as this is my third time participating in deliberations on interim supply.

In my opinion, as I have stated before, interim supply should really be minimal. It should be for emergencies or unforeseen circumstances, Mr. Chairman, and certainly not in the billions of dollars and not before each and every budget, each and every year. So the question that I basically keep asking of this House is: what is really the purpose of a budget if the government cannot stick to a budget?

Also, the issue of how late the budget usually arrives: typically one would think that a budget has sort of a fixed date, a fixed expectancy date, when we anticipate that it might be coming down. Then year after year we are faced with a situation where the budget is delayed, and sometimes it's delayed more than one time in the same interval, or in the same year.

Interim supply, by my definition, really means a cash advance. Mr. Chairman, take your credit card debt, for example. We all know that cash advances are the worst kind of transaction. I personally as an individual and in my family, in my household, never do cash advances. We budget, and we stick to our plan, and we never run out of money this way. So why doesn't this government budget as an individual or as a family? Why don't they use the same methodology as I use in my own household?

Also, having interim supply tells me as an individual and as a member of this esteemed Assembly that there is no plan. There is no overall plan where we know that we're going to need this money, and it should be built into the budget, and budgets come on time, and it's really simple and not in the tens of billions of dollars.

Another question which is really puzzling in some way. In 2004, just to use one example, interim supply was $5.5 billion. It is almost double this amount this year when we're asking for in excess of $10 billion for this fiscal year, 2007-2008. Why this big jump? I mean, I don't think the cost of running the government or the cost of conducting government business has increased by this amount, and I don't think it's also a factor of the fact that, you know, this year the budget is a little later than in 2004, for example. How much of a delay I don't think explains this big discrepancy.

Now, having said this, I recognize and appreciate the argument that the wheels of government have to turn and that our civil servants need to be paid in the interim until the actual budget is introduced. The question is: why is the budget more than one month late? Customarily we have expected budgets to be announced in this Assembly or in this province sometime in mid-March. Why is this budget coming on the 19th of April instead? Couldn't we have avoided interim supply altogether or greatly minimized the amount by being on time? That's the question.

Another question, Mr. Chairman – again, this is a layman asking – there seems to be an apparent conflict or duplication where now we have a Minister of Finance, or a Provincial Treasurer in the old definition, and then we also have a President of the Treasury Board. So role clarification, I think, is warranted. We need to know what each of them really does.

Mr. Flaherty: Good luck.

Mr. Elsalhy: My hon. colleague from St. Albert is saying, "Good luck," and I think that, yes, we need more than luck to understand this unique situation where we have two people entrusted to dispense and expend taxpayers' money and why we need two ministers with two huge departments, lots of staff, and making two minister's salaries, for example.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, when the former Premier created a ministry for restructuring and government efficiency following the 2004 election, adding to the government bureaucracy and trying to convince us that we needed an extra department to make government more efficient, I questioned this, and many of my colleagues in the Official Opposition questioned this. We called a spade a spade, and we said that it was such a colossal waste of money and that it wasn't making government any more efficient. But the decision stayed, and we had a minister with staff, making a minister's salary, and also in turn a large transition allowance when he is no longer an MLA, all at taxpayers' expense and with no apparent benefit.

After the last Tory leadership we were told the good news, that the size of cabinet had been reduced, but we didn't really tackle the issue of duplication or conflict, redundancy. We have two ministers likely going to share some of the responsibility or going to have overlaps, and they might be at times rowing in opposite directions or at least pulling on those purse strings in opposite directions. Then you add the hon. Premier. The hon. Premier has a lot to do with financial decisions, and from time to time he would offer an edict, or a decree, as to how things should go, and now you have an interesting triangle, Mr. Chairman, unfolding before your eyes. You have a President of the Treasury Board, you have a Finance minister, and then you also have a Premier, who all contribute to that discussion on financial matters.

Anyway, I'm not going to go through each of the 20 entries in this interim supply schedule.

Mr. Chase: You're leaving it for me.

Mr. Elsalhy: I am leaving it for my hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity because he's better versed in all things financial, but I need to focus on maybe one or two of them, and I know that other members have raised the same concerns at earlier stages of debate.

First, I wanted to talk about Municipal Affairs and Housing. They're getting, if I remember correctly, about $235 million. That's a decent chunk of coin. Hopefully, part of this would be to immediately and decisively look at issues surrounding affordable housing. What is more important to me is rent affordability. My argument, Mr. Chairman, is that for every man, woman, or child who is on the street now, who is already homeless, there are probably 10 or 11 waiting or ready to join them. So rent affordability to me is more important. It's more of an issue. The ones who are on the verge of becoming homeless outnumber those who are already on the street by about 10 to 1. So I'm hoping that some of this money is going to immediately go toward programs to offer rent subsidies, to offer relocation allowances, to increase the supply of units that are available.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that you agree with me that the current boom is placing a lot of difficulty on Alberta families, people on low income or fixed income. The term "homeless" now is not just people who are on the street living in cardboard boxes or in shelters. We have people who are living with other people, living in basements, renting a couch at somebody's home. We have people living in their cars. I don't think that waiting for the findings of that task force that toured the province – what I'm saying is that we can't wait till the end of June to hear what the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing is willing or ready or prepared to do. What we need is action right now and action two months from now and action six months from now and action that keeps going because this problem is only going to escalate with this type of market that we're living in. Municipal Affairs and Housing: I hope that some of this money is going to be put to use immediately.

Second, a combined comment on both the Solicitor General and Public Security and Justice and Attorney General. Justice is getting $119 million, and the Solicitor General is getting something like $600 million, if I do the math. Between them I think, again, that some of this money should immediately go to funding and providing resources for front-line police officers. Our mayors of the cities and towns, the Reeves of the smaller communities, police chiefs across the province are asking for better per capita funding, and they're asking for increased training and programs to avert crime at the front end or upstream, if you will, Mr. Chairman. Hopefully, some of this money should go toward these programs.

Today there was an announcement on sort of a crime prevention task force. It's something that has been announced, and it's going to be a nine-member panel chaired by a member of this House. While task forces are useful and while they are beneficial, sometimes we have too many of them. I think the answer to our crime issue is not to have another road show where people submit their complaints or their concerns. We've already heard these, and it's not that we are likely going to hear anything new. I think the message is loud and clear. We need more resources, we need more funding for police services, and we also need to build community assets.

What do I mean by "community assets"? If you use the model in B.C., for example, Mr. Chairman, it's basically engaging young kids and keeping young kids busy and keeping young kids away from the streets and away from bad influence. What you're doing is opening doors for them to engage them in the community, to make them use their time a little more constructively, and to prevent them from falling prey to things like drugs, illicit substances, gang violence, all that stuff. So to build community assets, offer kids scouting programs, offer them sports programs, arts programs, get them busy in their communities helping clean up the community, helping with, for example, Crime Watch. They can help with, you know, a community fair or a community barbecue or raising funds for charity or stuff like this. You add to their feeling of self-worth, but you also get them away from those negative influences that might actually get them in trouble down the road.

If you ask the mayor of Edmonton, if you ask Mayor Bronconnier in Calgary, if you ask the mayor of St. Albert, they're all likely going to tell you that asset building in the community is the way to do it plus increased funding for police services. If you ask Chief Boyd here in Edmonton about what he thinks – and he comes from Ontario, and he has spoken to members of the opposition and, notably, the hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora about this – he would tell you that asset building in the community, while it might cost a little bit up front, will save a lot of money and grief at the other end. If you, Mr. Chairman, or the hon. Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General speak to the RCMP in Richmond, B.C., for example, they're going to likely repeat my message and say: "Yes, it works. We've had it for a few years, and it is proving to be very useful."

So I'm hoping that some of this money in this interim supply would be used to really think outside the box and to try to do things that people are asking for. Having the task force is great, fine, but we could probably cut down a lot of money and time commitment by just going to the root of the problem, the cause of the problem, which is that we need more police officers on the streets.

This task force is going to cost $1.5 million, and if you do the simple math, Mr. Chairman, $100,000 would get you a good, strong, well-trained police officer on the street. So we could actually get 15 more police officers on our streets policing our communities for this amount of money. Instead, we're doing a repetitive consultative process, which is likely going to take some time and then yield a report which is likely going to sit on some shelf collecting dust, and in the interim we haven't really done anything to address the issue. So I think that a better use of this $1.5 million would have been to just go ahead and hire 15 more police officers, maybe another 15 six months from now, another 15 a year from now, and so on. This is what people are asking for, and I think this is the proper way to do it if it were up to me.

Anyway, I'm not going to take more of the committee's time, Mr. Chairman. I understand that some of my colleagues and some people across the way are eager to jump up and speak because they feel so passionately about interim supply, and I thank you for this opportunity.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciated the opportunity last week to begin discussions on interim supply. I must admit that I felt somewhat shortchanged because I knew that there were a number of members who had not had the opportunity to deliver their throne speeches, and I did not want to compromise their time at that point.

One of the circumstances that I always attempt to begin my discussions with is setting the scene. Again, this is from 34 years of being a public school teacher. For those people who are concerned about interim financing and how the government operates, we're back to the document, the very thin document, that has basically one-line items mostly in the multimillion dollar categories.

With regard to Advanced Education and Technology I've already talked about the state of decay in terms of infrastructure at the University of Calgary, but I want to talk about a very proactive group that's connected with the university, and that's the Shaganappi Trail advisory group, that consists of members from the communities that surround the south Shaganappi Trail, which kind of bisects the Calgary-Varsity area. There are representatives from the University of Calgary, representatives of the Calgary Foothills hospital, representatives of the research park, which is across the road from and will hopefully with infrastructure support have a direct linkage to the University of Calgary. It represents groups such as Parkdale, Montgomery, and of course my constituency of Calgary-Varsity.

This is a very wonderful organization, to which there is government representation in the form of Infrastructure. There's also representation from the city of Calgary. What it does is discuss concerns where one particular organization might affect directly that of another area, and of course with the University of Calgary desperately in need of expansion to meet the government's plan of 60,000 new spaces by 2020, there is a lot of desire to build.

One of the areas where I would hope that some of this $728 million, almost $729 million, is going toward would be the west campus. There are some very exciting plans being drawn up for the west campus, basically, which now has given a fair amount of space to the Children's hospital, the new and very exciting Calgary Children's hospital. It's also worth noting because of the close proximity that the Ronald McDonald House will be opening up this coming Friday. That's a wonderful facility that sort of sits between the university and the Children's hospital and will provide parents and children, of course, with a tremendous amount of support.

One of the ongoing concerns that's brought forward from the south Shaganappi is the delineation of responsibilities between the city and the province. The city is very pleased that the province, through its infrastructure department, is widening highway 1, the Trans-Canada, which in Calgary cuts through a large section of my area. In fact, the southern border of the Calgary-Varsity constituency is 16th Avenue. Now, 16th Avenue has had some rather negative intrusive effects, both on the community of University Heights, that I represent, and the community of Parkdale, that my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View represents.

In the case of University Heights, in Calgary-Varsity, a very small retaining wall was built, which was supposed to be a sound barrier, but unfortunately this wall was built in a ditch, so the height of this wall is basically two feet. It doesn't quite reach the nuts on the wheels of the semis that go by, and of course the stacks on the semis tower over this wall as though it were nonexistent. That's the problem that the people north of 16th Avenue that are members of the south Shaganappi advisory group face.

Those in Parkdale, to the south, are facing a couple of problems, for which they've been looking for results from Infrastructure, that will hopefully be part of the money that we'll be talking about when we get to Infrastructure. They're facing light pollution in that the lights that were supplied that are supposed to focus on 16th Avenue are actually focusing in their backyards. We've had a number of meetings with representatives of Alberta Infrastructure, but no resolution has taken place.

Another concern that representatives of the Parkdale community have is the fact that the landscaping opposite the 16th Avenue overpass under which Shaganappi Trail flows has not had a commitment from the province to be completed. There is a little bit of decorative work in terms of cement trees, as opposed to the real version, that the Parkdale community would like to see occurring. They would like to see basically the same kind of quality landscaping that the Calgary health region has done beside the Calgary Foothills hospital extended for the benefit of the Parkdale residents. The beauty of this advisory group is that we constantly get updates from various members, including the research park across from the university, that works hand in hand with the university on developing exciting projects.

Of course, I've referred before to the Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy. It is my hope that some of these millions of dollars will be going to that area although I'm also very aware of the need for tuition support for university students facing a variety of challenges due to increasing tuition costs and finding themselves having to rely on the food bank. This is a rather sad commentary on the Alberta boom, that not only are students having to go to the food bank, but some of their professors are as well. That's a rather sad circumstance.

I've already talked about my concerns about agricultural funding under supplementary supply, so I will not go into great detail in this area although I would like to see farmers being encouraged to grow alternative crops and not simply a singular suggestion that ethanol crop production is one of the areas we'll subsidize. I would like the government to support farmers as they experiment with different types of crops, different forms of crop rotation, which by so doing enrich the ground so that less fertilizer is required. So under agricultural research initiatives I think this would be a terrific expenditure.

Children's Services I referred to briefly the last time I had an opportunity to speak. I commented on the $11 million. But now that the federal government's budget has come down, we recognize the fact that not very much money has been provided for children's services, whether it's to support the stay-at-home parents, that Bev Smith, a social advocate, has recommended, nor is there much in the way of funding to help parents with daycare or before school or after school care. It was refreshing to hear the Minister of Children's Services talk about extending the support for children beyond the school entry level and taking into consideration what the other provinces do throughout this great nation, and that's the idea of recognizing that children need support right through to grade 6 or 12 years of age. This is an area that hasn't been sufficiently supported in the past.

Education, of course, is an area that I noted briefly before received $1,200,000,000. But as former colleagues have mentioned, the unfunded liability itself approaches $7 billion, and if the government does not address that, its commitment as well as that of teachers will continue. So under the education area I definitely would like to see movement taking place on the unfunded liability.

Also under Education I'm concerned that there's a trend. Instead of taking kids off buses by building schools in new areas, the reverse is happening. We're actually putting more students on buses, and they're coming from the schools that are being forced to close in inner-city areas. There's been a lot of discussion, of course, of the fact that when you take out the school, the heart of the community, then you do not incent new families to rejoin that area.

Under Employment, Immigration and Industry I note $221,800,000. Again, an item that has received a tremendous amount of discussion in this House – and we're just getting started – is protection for immigrants; for example, immigrants who become landed immigrants, those like the 200 that are being sworn in today at my former junior high school, F.E. Osborne, in the Calgary-Varsity constituency. I've talked about the lack of support for English as a Second Language families as well as students, and we have also talked about the example of the Mexican immigrant whose contract was not recognized when he spent all the money to get here from Guadalajara.

Immigrants are the key to our future. We know that we have a declining birth rate, even given our provincial boom and spikes in the birth rate. We know that immigrants are the builders of our province and of our nation, and we want to make sure that the support they receive when we entice them to come is there. So I don't believe the $222 million is sufficient to provide the base and protection that they require.

In terms of Energy expense and equipment again, referring to the federal government, they seem very reluctant to take away the $1.4 billion of tax holidays. In fact, it seems to me that they've deferred that for another eight years. They're not addressing the holidays that industry has received in this province. I would appreciate explanation as to where this $96 million is coming from. I would like to think that maybe a large portion of it will be reclamation or a more sensitive form of intrusion into areas so that in the future the degree of reclamation, such as what is currently necessary in Suffield, will be reduced by a more appropriate first-time exploration and extraction.

I spoke to quite an extent on support for environment. In my throne speech I referred to the Water for Life and the blue gold as being great things to talk about, but the fact is that we still haven't mapped our aquifers. If we put together all the data from extraction and exploration in terms of minerals and combined that information, we would have a pretty good sense of our underlying aquifers. I would hope that some of this money, the $40 million that's being provided through interim supply, will go to accurately mapping our aquifers because without water we've got nothing left. No amount of oil or gas is going to make up for the fact that we don't have water to live on.

Infrastructure and Transportation has received $972 million. Of course, when we look at infrastructure and transportation, basically that responsibility has been downloaded onto the municipalities. In their latest municipal report they noted that between the years 1990 and 2005 there was approximately $5 billion of money that wasn't transferred to support the municipalities. When we look at our infrastructure and transportation deficit, which is the result of paying down the so-called debt at such a rapid rate, basically we traded that debt, as I've said before in this House, for an infrastructure deficit. That deficit finds its total, I would guess, now approaching $12 billion. We know that the infrastructure defrayed budget of the Calgary school board alone is $441 million. We're not talking new infrastructure; we're simply talking repairs of existing infrastructure.

Schools for the future. The number of schools that are being required and have been on school boards' plans for years and years and years without any resolution makes us wonder at what point they'll finally be undertaken. Of course, the promise that was provided with the space utilization formula for school infrastructure was that by closing an inner-community school, that was supposed to free up the funding for a new community. Well, we've seen that that's not the case. In terms of expenditures on infrastructure I can't think of better expenditures than schools.

Of course, I am so relieved that the government has finally agreed to fund the southeast hospital and build it in a publicly transparent fashion.

I will look forward to the debate that the minister of the Treasury suggested I save my comments in terms of infrastructure and transportation for, but I have concerns about what's happening at this point.

The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, my colleague, brought up concerns under the supplementary supply about how aboriginal First Nations groups were being supported. Of course, we see a very small amount being attached to International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations of only $23,500,000. We know that Alberta, specifically here where we are in the wonderful city of champions, Edmonton, second only in importance and splendour to Calgary, is going to receive the largest off-reserve aboriginal population in Canada. Within the next five years Edmonton is going to surpass Winnipeg, and aboriginal individuals will be looking to Edmonton for gainful employment and education.

Thank you very much. I look forward to finishing off my concerns.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. I am delighted to have this opportunity to speak to this bill, the interim supply. It's difficult to give a critical response to interim supply estimates because there's no detail, but I'm choosing to focus on Children's Service's request for $311 million.

First of all, now that we know that the new federal plan is inadequate to meet needs, I'm hopeful that the five-point plan will remain intact with PD funding and incentives with accreditation. I'm not familiar with the plans for the coming years. I do know that there are concerns in this province everywhere I go about child care. This situation is hurting Alberta's families, it's hurting Alberta's economy, and it mustn't continue. Alberta can afford to invest in quality child care. In fact, it can't afford not to make that investment. I'm hoping that this interim budget is going to put some money into child care, and that it's, I guess, a first step towards what the budget will be telling us in the next little while.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

Like our economy our need for quality child care is growing faster than any other province, and yet Alberta only has child care spaces to accommodate about 10 per cent of our children, and child care centres face a relentless, uphill struggle to recruit and retain staff.

It's an unsustainable situation that we have, and it urgently requires solutions.

Every Alberta family should have access to quality child care, and families who care for their children at home should be supported with that choice. The Alberta Liberal caucus is committed to expanding child care in quantity, quality, and in the availability of spaces at a reasonable cost. The current situation is that we have long wait-lists for child care spaces, we have difficulty retaining staff, there are concerns about the quality of care, and parents are struggling to meet the demands of working and raising children.

Right now in Alberta our unsustainable system has regulated child care spaces for about 10 per cent of our children. Only Newfoundland and Saskatchewan have fewer. Quebec and Yukon can accommodate about 30 per cent of their children. Alberta is the only province where the number of daycare spaces dropped significantly between 1992 and 2004, and during that same period the number of spaces country-wide more than doubled. In 2004 Alberta had Canada's lowest percentage of women with preschool children in the workforce. Many Alberta mothers simply can't return to work due to a lack of child care options.

This is affecting our economy. It's affecting our workforce in the medical fields as well as many other sectors. If even half of the people that we know could be working were working, that would be about 17,000 if we compared to Quebec's ratio, that would make a hugely beneficial impact on our labour shortage. In 2004 Alberta had the lowest public spending per child care space of any Canadian province. Alberta is the only province or territory that invested less in child care in 2004 than it did in 1992, and there's no guarantee that the new funding based on discontinued federal transfers will be maintained. Alberta is the only province, I'm ashamed to say, that does not offer parents subsidies for child care up to the age of 12. In addition to all of that, Alberta places harsher restrictions on maternity and paternal leaves than any other province.

Also, I want to again mention stay-at-home parents, who need to be supported and recognized in that choice. As we look at phase 2 of our Alberta Liberal child care policy, we are consulting with people like Bev Smith, the author of Who Cares?, and others to address this sector.

Another area I'd like to look at is the Family and Community Support Services Association of Alberta. This is a program that has an 80-20 funding partnership between the province and municipalities and Métis settlements to provide preventative social services. Currently 305 municipalities and Métis settlements participate in FCSS to provide 200 programs across the province, either as single municipalities or sometimes as multimunicipal programs. Of these 200 local programs, 187 are members of the FCSS Association.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

From the early PSS, which was called preventative social services, beginnings FCSS has grown to fill several roles in Alberta's communities. They provide ideas, resources, support facilitation, and leadership, and they're strong community partners. They ask questions, they find the answers, and they advocate for action to improve the lives of Albertans. This is an organization that needs our strong support, and one of the things that I'd like to suggest is that the annual FCSS budget be indexed to accommodate increases for inflation, cost of living, and increases in the provincial population.

The province of Alberta is experiencing an ever-increasing rate of growth, and with that growth comes increased social needs. The demand for services provided to support families who are separated due to work requirements has increased significantly. Increased prosperity is leading to other problems: family breakdown, addiction problems, and reduced community connectedness. Many FCSS programs, especially those serving sparse rural populations, have not seen a significant funding increase for several years. The cost of other programs' supplies and services, especially rent, insurance, and energy, is also increasing rapidly for both FCSS programs and for nonprofit groups that are funded by FCSS. Then there's the cost of maintaining quality staff to operate quality programs. This is increasing rapidly due to the booming economy.

So as we look at the budget, I am hoping that we're going to see beyond this interim into the next budget some consideration for FCSS and community service programs because they're already experiencing an exodus of staff to other competitive sectors of the economy, resulting in a loss of leadership, knowledge, and relationships within our sector. Clients of the community services sector often rely on long-standing supportive relationships with the staff in order to effect a change in their lives. The staff is changing, and there isn't that consistency and the building of a trust relationship. These vulnerable are not going to have the same benefits as they would have if there were stable relationships.

The number of seniors in Alberta is expected to increase from its present 10 per cent of the population to 20 per cent in 2031. FCSS programs for seniors have proven over and over again to be a huge benefit to our province.

To me it seems that the FCSS budget increases are intermittent, with no discernible relationship between the needs at the local level and the amount of the increases. It's impossible for municipalities to plan ahead and strategically set directions and priorities and sustainability.

In summary, the booming economy and population growth are changing Alberta. The market economy for staffing, housing, and office rents in many communities is changing the landscape as well. There's a looming crisis in sector staffing. Increased needs and demographic growth in certain populations are also placing demands on FCSS programs that are currently outpacing funding. In order to keep the health and vibrancy of our communities, I believe that we need to be looking at increasing FCSS funding, making it realistic so that they can budget with some predictability.

Another concern with FCSS, I think, is their efforts to help with the homelessness initiatives. Alberta municipalities have adopted comprehensive strategies to help end homelessness in their communities. They're experiencing significant pressures due to unprecedented growth, employment, and economic issues related to the lack of social infrastructure to support their citizens, including a lack of affordable housing options. Again, this is another area where I think that the province of Alberta needs to renew and strengthen its support for a long-term plan and sustainable and predictable funding for minimizing homelessness and supporting affordable housing initiatives. I'm glad that we're seeing some of that with the supplementary budget requests.

The other great concern I have is for the provision of funding for the creation and operation of licensed care for elementary school-aged children during out of school time periods: before and after school and, perhaps, at lunch time. If we want to look at the stated goals of Alberta Children's Services – to promote the development and well-being of children, youth, and families; to keep children, youth, and families safe and protected; and to promote healthy communities for children, youth, and families – we need to provide and invest in a range of programs and services to meet the needs of families. At this point Alberta doesn't provide any funding beyond six years although the needs certainly don't end at five years.

Family support networks have changed in our society. Parents don't have extended family that they can rely on or friends or neighbours to provide child care for their elementary school-aged children. The circumstances that create the need for child care in the early years generally continue through the elementary years, and quality care is still essential during these years. I would suggest that we need to look at licensed out of school care programs that provide children with adequate supervision and opportunities to participate in activities which increase resilience and build protective factors and help them learn positive decision-making. This is an area where we are sadly lacking in Alberta.

Another area I'd like to look at is the Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families. To do this I'd like to quote from a letter I received from David Horricks, president of this association.

The Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families (AASCF) is a membership-driven association of agencies providing services to children and families throughout the province. The AASCF was founded in 1967 and has worked for 40 years to strengthen member agencies and to promote attitudes, practices and conditions that contribute to quality services for vulnerable children and families.

The AASCF currently has over 110 members from across Alberta representing agencies that serve some 80,000 children and families each year. Our agencies also employ over 7,400 people and have more than 7,900 volunteers that provide over 526,000 hours of support and assistance.

In late 2006 the issue of recruitment and retention of staff reached dangerous proportions. To verify this anecdotal assessment, a province wide survey of child and family service agencies was completed. 141 member and non-member agencies were contacted.

The results were extremely distressing.

- Annualised staff turn over [for these agencies] was 39%,
- 30% of staff work at two or more jobs.
- 68% of the positions vacated could not be filled.
- 66% of responding agencies were concerned about being unable to meet contract obligations and/or sustain high levels of professional standards.

The primary reason for loss of staff and the inability to attract replacement staff relate to low compensation and inadequate benefits. This is a particularly difficult situation since the principal competitor for staff is the same government institutions that are the main contract funder of agencies.

While the survey confirmed the serious and growing gap in compensation levels, it also provided troubling indicators of future directions.

- Large numbers of professionals are leaving the social services sector for other professional opportunities.
- The demands placed upon staff are steadily increasing with declining compensation and recognition.
- Young people are making career choices that avoid the helping professions because they don't see a future. They don't see security and compensation.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the social support [programs] for children and families are facing serious human resource problems. It is also evident that there will be no quick or easy solution. However, if we fail to collectively confront the situation we can surely expect to experience more frequent and distressing failures of the social services [agencies].

I ask all members to seriously consider the valuable work that these agencies do and the support that they need. They can't fill positions. They can't compete in the marketplace. It's difficult to compete in this economy, and it's difficult to compete with government sites. They're losing staff to government positions or other businesses.

They got a 3 per cent increase, and they're grateful for that, but it's only for salaries and benefits. At the same time, heat, food, clothing costs have not been adjusted. No real cost-of-living adjustments have been made to this sector since 1993. Grid movement for staff costs 5 and a half per cent between all levels, so they can't attract people who are at higher levels. They have to pay less, and they're losing people.

I'm not proposing that we eliminate that gap between what government agencies can pay versus these others, but we should be doing something to help with fixed costs. Repairmen don't work at the same rate as they did in 1993. Again, I'm hoping that we'll recognize that some of these agencies can't run at capacity because they can't get the staff; therefore, they can't compete with the rest of the sector. Some agencies are running with 60 per cent of the staff that they could have, and that will result in a reduction in the number of kids that they can have, and they can't function because of the economy of scale.

Many agencies are running right now with open positions that they can't fill. There's not enough relief staff. Overtime is expected. People are burning out. If there are further drops, they're going to have to cut teachers or assistants or secretaries, and they won't be able to keep programs. I think the minimum should be 10 per cent to cover costs and to help them deal in a realistic manner and give them an opportunity to truly compete.

Again, a concern that I have is that if we look at our social workers, many of them are overwhelmed. There are too many demands, and there are not enough resources. This includes the amount of help that they can give to foster parents. Often they can't make the number of visits that they should, so the supervision may not be there, which produces risk. The problem is that we don't have enough people on the front line. I'm hoping the next budget is going to address that.

In regard to foster homes I'm wondering who establishes the criteria. What are the criteria? You know, it's possible that a foster home may not be a good placement because there are a number of young people and children now that have very serious behaviour problems. I think we're leaning on foster parents to take more and more kids, and some of them are more difficult kids. That's related to the reduction in group homes that was made in Alberta. We're getting more difficult kids, that used to go to supervised group homes, being placed in foster homes. Alberta used to have treatment foster homes for kids with extreme high needs. These were eliminated, I gather, because of expenses. Now we only have two types, general and advanced. Even the advanced are often not trained or supported, but they're still getting kids with very severe problems.

I also want to mention the issue of addiction services. There are many kids in care who are addicted and need that help. I'd like to talk about the help that we do offer, but I'm running out of time. I want to mention, though, that we don't have enough beds for detox or treatment. We've taken some small steps, and I'm hoping that we will have the opportunity in this Legislature to look at some stronger, more meaningful steps in regard to addictions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to, as the song says, rise again. My comments are going to deal primarily with Municipal Affairs and Housing. The amount of money that is being put forward, the $234,900,000, approximately $235 million, seems like a large amount of money if it was in the form of a lottery prize. But with the increase in the pricing and the inflation of housing, this really is a fairly small amount. I realize that it's supposed to be just a tide-over amount, but we know that quite often in the budgets there isn't a sufficient amount of money dedicated to affordable housing and housing developments, such that these interim budgets are necessary.

I want to speak very specifically about the terrific constituency of Calgary-Varsity, which is an older community but can be part of a solution in terms of affordable housing with some government support. I am hoping that some of this money, the approximately $235 million that is being indicated, will go towards better planning between municipalities, in this case the city of Calgary and the province.

We have a desire to increase density. I know the city of Edmonton has come up with some very creative projects to increase density in communities in connection and in planning with the school boards to use part of the former playground area of schools to create affordable housing. In the city of Calgary, specifically in Calgary-Varsity, there is a plan, at least on the drawing board, to have two 12-storey apartment buildings built in the area of 53rd Avenue and the cross of Varsity Estates Drive. While this increased development would help eliminate the urban sprawl that is, unfortunately, one of the markers of large cities like both Calgary and Edmonton, there is not sufficient infrastructure at this point to provide for the smooth entering and exiting of the area.

Crowchild Trail has been widened, and I am very thankful to the province that they've recognized the necessity of building a series of overpasses to eliminate the former traffic lights. Nose Hill Drive is one of the ones that is rapidly progressing, which I'm pleased to see. But, unfortunately, what has happened in this Calgary-Varsity development that is being suggested is that a high-density area is being shoehorned into an area that does not have the road to support it. For example, when the Dalhousie station was added to the west Dalhousie, the Dalhousie side of Crowchild, north of Crowchild, the traffic problems that were caused by the increased volume as people cut through the area in order to reach other developments farther to the north and west have caused a great deal of difficulty. Now, with the application to build two 12-storey towers without a way of getting into the district on 53rd, what we have is basically the equivalent of a vise.

On one side we have the development of the Dalhousie station shopping centre, and we have a ground-level-only parking facility, which does not meet the necessity of current Calgary-Varsity constituents in terms of accessing the LRT. On top of that, we add these two 12-storey towers with no extra exit or entrance possibilities save, basically, a two-lane overpass into the area, as I've indicated before, the two lanes that come off Crowchild Trail to enter either to the Dalhousie station or to continue on along Crowchild Trail with the option of turning left across the overpass on 53rd. The province has suggested to the city that simply a traffic circle will get rid of the traffic flow problem.

I've been to three different community association meetings where members from provincial infrastructure have been present as well as members of the city's planning department, and I've asked about the possibility of putting just a short lane, basically, that would parallel the existing LRT and connect with the Crowchild Square development, which would allow people at least to get out of the community without having to use 53rd. They'd still have the problem associated with it. But it's unrealistic to think that people living in these towers are not going to have vehicles, that they're simply going to get onto the LRT and head off into the various areas of Calgary to work.

I'm hoping that within this $235 million there is money – again, I'm thinking Calgary, but as my responsibility as shadow minister is for the entire province, I would hope that there is money here for Edmonton as well, for their LRT. What Calgary is finding is that given our population one alderman, McIver, who is a very creative, hard-working individual, has talked about possibly taking seats out of our LRTs so that we could have more standing room available. Well, I would suggest that the solution is longer trains, but in order to accommodate that, we're going to need infrastructure money and municipal affairs money in support to extend the existing LRT platforms, never mind extending the LRT west in Calgary.

So expending money on transit as well as the infrastructure of roads would be greatly appreciated, and of course I know that the Edmonton LRT system has experienced a series of delays. It's not gotten to the point where it is in Calgary, but both cities desperately need to cut down on the amount of car traffic. In order to encourage public transportation, it's got to meet the demand. I don't know Edmonton as well as I know Calgary, but I know that, for example, there aren't interconnecting bus lines that run on a regular basis to a number of the industrial developments. People are basically forced to hop in their car in order to access these areas. So this is where I believe the expertise of the province when combined with municipalities, that shared expertise, as well as the necessary funding transfers would allow for a better use of our transit programs.

I very much hope that an extra lane, as I say, can be added to that short section between Shaganappi Trail and 53rd. There's a berm that exists there right now that could theoretically be taken out without interfering with the Dalhousie LRT station. I believe there is the potential of having a lane which would allow access into this development, which would cure approximately half of the problem. At least, people could get out even though they'd still have trouble getting in.

In terms of regional planning there is a need for the province to not be sort of the judge and executioner, but the province should have a role as a facilitator with regard to regional planning. I know that in both Calgary and Edmonton this is a problem. On the number of upgraders that are being suggested for the Edmonton area, the discussion over the various dumps that are being proposed, again in the Edmonton area, the municipalities need to be brought together in some form of regional planning.

We have the AUMA and the AAMD and C seemingly at odds in terms of regional planning. We have disputes between every single city and their surrounding area, whether it's Calgary and Rocky View over Balzac, whether it's Grande Prairie county or the city of Grande Prairie in terms of acquiring land. This is a common problem, and this is where we need provincial leadership. Again, it's just a one-line item, but this is an area that I would certainly promote greater investment in in terms of helping the province take a lead role in facilitating the regions together coming up with development which will eliminate urban sprawl, which will set aside zones for green space.

I don't know whether it's to the same extent as the problem in Edmonton, but there is great concern because of the fact that the Bow River in Calgary is glacier fed and that the proposed clear-cutting in the forest management agreement between the province and Spray Lakes is threatening our watershed. This is one of the reasons we need this kind of provincial leadership. We need to buy back our watershed or at least manage it.

The beauty of the land surrounding Calgary is that to a large extent it's Crown land, so we should as a province have a greater say in how that Crown land is being developed. I don't want to see lumber companies put out of business. In terms of regional planning I would like to see the government help organizations like Spray Lakes to develop a selective logging practice which doesn't eliminate the entire forest but takes out those trees that have reached a certain maturity, that their value is considered of importance for timber. We know that the pine beetle prefers trees that are of the 80-year-old variety, so as part of our process we could select and take out those trees that are most susceptible, in areas that have proven to be infested.

Also, in terms of regional planning instead of fire suppression, consider the strategy of fireproofing around municipal areas such as Bragg Creek by encouraging the kinds of controlled burns that have been happening in the areas of Canmore and Banff. This is a much more effective way of getting rid of trees. The fire moves through, and new growth comes up whereas if we clear-cut, we dredge up the area to such a point that it takes years and years and years to recover.

The last topic that I would like to talk about has been covered to a large extent by my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, and that's the support area, Seniors and Community Supports. My colleague has gone into great and appreciated detail on the fact that supports for individuals, whether it's supports for children, whether it's supports for seniors, whether it's supports for disabled, are woefully inadequate. There is no respite care for the caregivers, and as a result they are being burnt out to a tremendous degree, and they're not being replaced. I have visited the homes of caregivers who have told me that the amount of money it would take for them to have a week's holiday would be the equivalent of three months' worth of wages that they would have to pass along to someone else to allow them to take their much-needed respite, and of course they can't do that.

With regard to opportunities for seniors for respite care, this is an area that I would hope would receive greater support so that caregivers have the opportunity to have time for themselves. They could temporarily put their loved one into respite care, get a chance to recharge their own batteries, reinvigorate themselves, and continue on being better caregivers themselves.

I will talk just briefly about an area that has always been of high importance to me, and that's Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. The province knows that for every dollar basically invested in tourism, in arts, and in culture, there's a $12 return. By providing money for parks without the necessity of user fees, which given the wealth of this province are basically an insult, we should be able to gain greater advantage and encourage not only Albertans to get out and have a healthy experience but also be promoting our tourism to a greater extent world-wide. We have certain markets – for example, China, Japan, and Germany – who are frequent visitors to Alberta.

In terms of promoting our culture, one of the ways we can do that is to promote an Alberta film industry. There has been a lot of news in the papers recently about Alberta film producers' crews moving to B.C. because British Columbia provides greater filming incentives, and that's had a drastic effect on the film industry in Alberta.

Currently – and I guess that it relates to seniors as well as to the disabled – there is only one area, Watson lodge in Peter Lougheed provincial park, where seniors and disabled individuals have the infrastructure facilities to have a safe wilderness experience. From a disabled point of view the access to so many of our parks is extremely limited. The facilities, whether it's the washrooms, whether it's the layout of the trails, are not user friendly to anyone who is bound by a wheelchair or whose mobility is restricted. I would like to think that Alberta parks are for everyone's enjoyment and that we would make more parks available to individuals with disabilities.

If Alberta is going to continue to be a tourism destination, we have to realize that trees left standing have greater value than trees cut down, as has been pointed out by the Member for Edmonton-Decore in terms of how little our timber is valued. A living tree provides a series of benefits, whether it's filtering the water, whether it's holding the soil, whether it's serving as habitat for wildlife, birds and animals, and a tree living has a considerably greater value than a tree that is cut down and put into board feet. This is a concern that I've especially brought up before, but I'll refer again to the Bragg Creek area and to the areas surrounding Calgary through which the Elbow and the Bow rivers run. There is great concern in the Sibbald Flats area, in the Ghost-Waiparous area, and in the Bragg Creek area.

Thank you for the opportunity.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The interim supply bill, Bill 25, gives me an opportunity to raise an issue that I have great concern about. I notice in Employment, Immigration and Industry the $221 million for interim supply. I have no idea what that might be applied to. This is a department that has many different pieces to it. It used to be called human resources and employment, now Employment, Immigration and Industry, and it involves things like immigration, workplace safety, and economic development. I believe rural development is now a part of EII and also Alberta Works, and that is my concern. If a lot of this money that's being voted on for Employment, Immigration and Industry is directed to Alberta Works, then that might be a good thing, but I have no way of telling without any details.

One of my passions for many, many years has been the issue of poverty in this province. I mean, we have a very wealthy province compared to many other provinces in Canada, and many people are doing very, very well as they get very good incomes, but the gap between the rich and the poor is getting wider all the time. Low-income people, people on Alberta Works are just falling way behind.

Now, the fact is that this whole area used to be called social services. I don't know what happened to the expression "social services." It used to be called the department of social services. I don't see the term "social services" anywhere related to this department. It's almost as if the whole issue of poverty, of concern for those who have very little in our province, is just disappearing. Maybe it's the policy of the government to not have any attention on that, and then we can pretend that it doesn't exist. But, Mr. Chairman, the problem of people who are living in poverty in Alberta is extreme, and it's critical.

There was a recent report by Public Interest Alberta called The Reality of Low Wages in Alberta, all about the whole question of a living wage. They point out some interesting facts about Alberta. For example, the current minimum wage is really insufficient to allow individuals or families to escape from poverty. Our minimum wage has not increased for so long, and the value of the minimum wage has declined over the last 30 years. There's no indexing of minimum wage to inflation, so it just gets changed arbitrarily once in a while.

The rising costs of things like housing: again, as part of the housing task force I heard terrible stories of people that just can't handle the rising cost of homes. I mean, homes in Edmonton went up almost 50 per cent last year. So people on fixed incomes and people with low incomes and people who are getting money through Alberta Works, they can't possibly afford the housing that's available in a city like Edmonton. Rising costs put people behind, further and further behind.

There are lots of Albertans who are not earning what we could call a living wage. The numbers don't add up. They just can't put the numbers together and be able to pay for everything that they need in terms of food and clothing and rent and so on. One in four employed Albertans earned less than $12 per hour in 2005 – one in four earned less than $12 an hour – and a lot of those people are people who, as my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods indicated, work in agencies that deal with people with mental diseases, children who need special care, have special needs. These people work for $12 an hour, $13 an hour, and there's tremendous pressure on them because they just can't make ends meet. Sometimes they work overtime; they work in two different jobs. They like to work in those kind of positions where they're caring for people who are needy, but they just can't do it because there's not enough money. So it's a tragedy that one in four employed Albertans earned less than $12 per hour in 2005, and it's probably the same today.

Many working parents do not earn enough to support their families. In fact, over 86,000 children lived in poverty in the year 2004. I mean, we are used to the statistic that one in five children in the whole of Canada lives in poverty. That's no different in Alberta. So, Mr. Chairman, I hope that some of this money is going to those who need it the most, people who have lived in poverty and experienced poverty daily in their lives.

When I look at the numbers in terms of Alberta Works, sometimes it's really difficult to understand how this all fits together. I feel sorry for people who have to deal with Alberta Works and try to get what they're entitled to because sometimes it's pretty puzzling to try to figure out how it all works. But there are two categories in this social service area called Alberta Works. There's the monthly core benefits for those who are expected to work and monthly core benefits for those not expected to work. I've always had difficulties with that kind of categorization. I mean, I think there are a lot of problems when you characterize people as expected to work and not expected to work. Tying welfare benefits to work, the issue of work, I think does not demonstrate the showing of dignity to people who for various reasons will never be able to contribute much to our economy, but they're human beings and ought to receive the dignity and the respect that we all should show them.

When you look at the numbers, a single adult who is expected to work gets $234 a month for the so-called essentials, like food and clothing, transportation – I mean, that's not very much money, $234 a month; how do you even buy a bus pass out of that? – then for shelter, for finding a place to live, $100 if you're living with relatives – $100, well okay – social housing, $120; for private housing, so getting a room or trying to rent a bachelor suite, $168. That's all. Now, how can a person in this kind of hot economy in Edmonton, where the prices went up so much, possibly find anything for $168 a month? I mean, it's totally absurd.

So that's a total of $402 a month if a person is in private housing. Now, I'm not sure why there's a distinction on the housing side between living with relatives, social housing, and private housing anyway. I mean, a person who is living in poverty needs money for housing. It should be just one amount. There should be a tying of these rates to the standard of living so that when the standard of living goes up, these rates go up, instead of their being changed just arbitrarily.

I've been following these rate numbers for years. In the early '90s when the government was so concerned about paying off the debt and so many programs were cut, including social service programs, we were quite upset. Those of us who were working in the community and working with people who were living in poverty were quite upset that the numbers were cut back. That made people even more vulnerable than they already were. Through the years it seems to me that what should have happened if we're going to really get serious about dealing with poverty is to tie these rates to the standard of living.

In fact, I was a part of a group called the social economy sector group at the Alberta economic Growth Summit in, I believe it was, 1998. The social economy sector group was chaired by Bettie Hewes, a former leader of the Liberal Party in Alberta. The paper that we presented was on the importance of taking together social development and economic development.

So it's not enough just to be in favour of economic development and go full speed ahead in terms of developing our economy. Economic development should dovetail with social development so that our quality of life does not suffer, so that people who do live in poverty are able to have their needs met so that they can participate in all that this rich province offers. At that Growth Summit we proposed that welfare rates should be indexed and that the housing portion for people living in poverty, dependent on welfare should go up as the standard of living goes up. But that's not the case.

If you ask why we have so much homelessness in this province, this is one reason. People can't afford to live in the rental accommodations that are available, and to me it's a great tragedy. Even when people finally are able to move from getting welfare through Alberta Works, the expected to work or not expected to work, as soon as they get a job, then what happens? Well, one of the good things that has happened is that the health benefits that have been available to people on Alberta Works do follow people as they move into the work world. I think that that has been a good thing.

Why not also have the housing allowance follow people as they move from Alberta Works into the employment world so that they could manage even if they make minimum wage or just a little bit more than minimum wage? If they have that housing allowance that actually goes with them into the work world, then they might be able to make ends meet for a time. What happens to many families is that when they finally do get some employment, they can't make enough money to make ends meet, so they go back onto welfare. Surely we need to develop programs that can enable people to move.

So I'm really concerned. This is the one reason why I became interested in politics in the first place. For years and years and years as a minister in a church, working with people, I saw lots of people come up to the church door seeking handouts. I worked with people in the inner city. Of course, all the churches are working in the inner city in cities like Edmonton and Calgary. You know, so many churches have actually taken up the work where the government has failed. When all the cuts happened in the early '90s, then of course you saw more food banks, more people without housing, more homeless. Mr. Chairman, the people in the churches who have been doing a lot of work to help people in poverty are really tired. They have been working hard to work as volunteers in food banks, to try to attend to people in need, but they're very, very tired. I mean, for them the government has a social responsibility to enable all Albertans to participate in the great wealth that we have.

I guess that's what I want to say. I mean, with $10 billion in interim supply, $220 million for Employment, Immigration and Industry: what portion of that is going to help people in poverty? What portion is going to Alberta Works? Are we going to see changes in the rates, or are we going to see more homeless people, more people living on the streets, and the gap gets wider and wider? Then people may wake up and say: well, what is this economic development all about? What kind of world are we creating when we have 12-year-olds working in restaurants, not bars but restaurants? What kind of Alberta are we creating? Unless social development is intermeshed together with economic development, then I think there's really something wrong with the policies that the government is pursuing.

So those are all the comments that I have to make. Boy, I'll come back to this issue again and again and again because that's my passion. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 4 Child Care Licensing Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to take this opportunity to provide some clarification around some questions that were asked during second reading of Bill 4. First, I'd like to refer to a question that related to the consultation process which led up to the development of the bill. I know that some members are wondering who was involved with the consultation process. What we did is we conducted an extensive public consultation in 2005, which provided valuable input that guided the development of the Child Care Licensing Act. We received over 900 written submissions and input from about 225 focus group participants, including parents, operators, child care association representatives, and other interested Albertans.

In relation to space creation I've been asked if I know how the shortage in child care spaces plays out region by region. The answer is: not yet. Children's Services has traditionally collected stats that tell us how many child care spaces are available in Alberta's daycare sector as well as the number of children enrolled in these programs. We need to have better information on what the supply and demand is by region. I've asked my staff to gather this information. We are currently surveying all child care operators – daycare, family day homes, nursery schools, and out-of-school care – to determine how many spaces we have and how many more spaces we need to meet the needs of families looking for child care now and in the future. I expect to have these results later this spring.

What we do know is that the lack of spaces is largely due to the shortage of qualified staff. I'm pleased to say that we're starting to make headway in this area. This month our government announced a 40 per cent increase to staff wage top-ups for child care professionals working in the daycare centres and family day homes. This move has been welcomed by the child care community, and we feel that it will help increase the number of qualified staff, which will ultimately increase the number of spaces available to parents looking for child care. Bill 4 also supports space creation through the introduction of new licensing categories such as home-based child care and other innovative models of programming.

The legislation also supports communities coming forward to identify innovative child care programs that will meet the needs of parents. These types of programs could require a unique consideration of regulatory requirements such as extended-hour programs set up to care for children of parents who work shift work. By licensing programs, not facilities, operators will be able to make better use of the spaces they already have. For example, under the current act operators licensed to provide out-of-school care have their spaces sitting empty when the children are in school and cannot move preschool children into spaces licensed for out-of-school care. Under the new legislation operators will have the flexibility to use this space for any child in their program who needs one.

We had some questions regarding the level of monitoring. Currently the child and family services authorities monitor programs a minimum of four times a year. Bill 4 will not change this requirement. This is a policy requirement, not a legislative one. However, programs with noncompliance to regulated standards are and will continue to be monitored more often.

There was also a question about how the province will issue multiyear licences. Programs will have an opportunity to renew their licence for up to three years. However, in saying that, I want to clarify that these licence holders will need to have a good history of complying with the regulations, meeting municipal and health standards, and dealing with parent concerns before they will be eligible for the maximum three-year licence renewal. Monitoring will continue during a three-year term, and if compliance to standards become an issue, the terms of the licence would be shortened.

With respect to questions surrounding enforcement, ensuring that programs comply with the act is a critical part of ensuring that families have access to quality child care programs. However, it is a fine line. While it's important that the act have some teeth when there is a need for enforcement due to a major noncompliance, it is also important that we have the mechanisms in place to work with the good-intentioned operators when trying to rectify minor situations. The act provides a range of enforcement options to enable the licensing officer to act based on the severity of the noncompliance such as the ability to issue a new probationary licence. Providers will be advised of the concern and the timelines for compliance in writing. In addition, enforcement actions will be strengthened by requiring operators to post notices of noncompliance. In a case where a licence has been refused or cancelled, the operator will be required to wait two years before reapplying for a licence.

I've been asked if the necessary resources are in place to ensure that proper monitoring and, when needed, proper enforcement actions can take place. I can competently say that, yes, we have the expertise and the resources to ensure that programs comply with the act.

Our discussion guide Toward a Child Care Act proposed that the act include a provision that would ensure that programs establish parent advisory committees. The guide also proposed that the child care act mandate the establishment of a provincial child care advisory council. I've been asked why these items were not included in Bill 4. During consultations we heard that requiring each program to establish a formal parent advisory committee could be problematic for small, rural, and remote programs. Therefore, we are providing more flexibility through regulation for parental involvement to take different forms based on the size of the program and the needs of the parents who utilize the service. Similarly, legislating a requirement for a provincial child care advisory council in the act limits the ability to have informal and varied forms of consultations with Alberta parents, operators, and stakeholders that ensure that this legislation and the programs and services we provide give the children we're responsible for the best start in life.

Which leads me to the question raised about who will be involved in the development of the new child care regulations. Mr. Chair, I can assure you that there will be an open and thorough consultation. Everyone, including parents, operators, community leaders, and all elected officials, will have an opportunity to provide feedback that would be used to draft child care regulations to ensure that families have access to quality child care programs. I expect this consultation to begin this spring and be completed sometime early in the summer.

I've heard a lot of positive feedback regarding the Child Care Licensing Act, which reconfirms that we're moving in the right direction. Bill 4 will go a long way in helping government achieve its priority to ensure that quality child care is available to the children and families of Alberta.

Thank you.

4:50

Mrs. Mather: First of all, I want to thank the hon. minister for clarifying a number of questions that we did have and offering us even more information, helping us to understand the intent of this bill. Bill 4, Child Care Licensing Act, is an important first step in developing a comprehensive child care act.

As I speak to the Committee of the Whole, I want to refer to the discussion guide Toward a Child Care Act for Alberta from July 2005. In that guide it states that building a bright future for Alberta's children includes creating an excellent, child-development-focused child care system – a system that is supported by solid legislation and that includes parents and communities in decision making and planning . . .

Children and families in Alberta [should] have access to a broad range of regulated and non-regulated child care options.

Licensed child care includes day care centres, nursery schools, drop-in centres, out of school care programs and early childhood development programs such as Head Start.

Un-licensed child care is provided by agency-approved family day homes (operating standards and requirements for the day homes and the agencies are outlined through ministry policy and specified in service delivery contracts under the province's Child and Family Services Authorities), private babysitters and parents and families . . .

Quality child care depends on a strong, cohesive infrastructure that includes networks of community support, public awareness, integrated programs, state-of-the-art training, ongoing staff development and a continuum of programs and services that meet children's physical, intellectual and emotional needs from the cradle to the schoolroom and beyond . . .

[We know that] research over the past decade has shown that quality care for children is critical for healthy child development – whether child care is provided by parents and families or outside the home by paid caregivers. Quality care plays a key role in helping children grow into healthy, well-adjusted, self-reliant adults equipped to succeed at school, at work and in life.

Licensing defines minimum standards that protect children from harm. However, it must be used in combination with other regulatory and non-regulatory tools – including accreditation – to achieve and maintain quality standards that exceed minimum requirements. These tools must work in tandem with inspections and monitoring in order to establish accountability within the child care system.

The need for a Child Care Act was identified in the course of Alberta Children's Services' review of the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. [That] review was launched in 2004 . . . [and concluded that] Albertans need a comprehensive, responsive Child Care Act that supports the complex needs of modern-day families and provides children with high-quality, developmentally focused care and programs. Alberta's Child Care Act should provide a foundation for - regulation that outlines specific rules and requirements.

- policy that sets out standards and guides how rules are applied.
- operating procedures to make things work from day to day.

While we are addressing some of the recommendations from this review and this discussion guide, there are more that we are not, and I'm wondering if there will be more legislation coming to support the ideas in this discussion guide.

This act is going to do a number of things. It's going to move beyond criteria of a facility and, instead, license programs based on content, developmental appropriateness, et cetera, while retaining some facility requirements. It's going to enable the minister to create licensing categories outside of what currently exists, like the child care centres, nursery schools, and so on, to enable greater flexibility and meet local and specialized needs. It's going to ensure that parents are well informed and involved in their child's care by requiring the posting of compliance orders.

As I look at the parental involvement aspect, the discussion guide that I referred to, entitled Toward a Child Care Act for Alberta, proposed to include a provision about parental involvement through the creation of a parental advisory committee or a provincial child care advisory council. The minister has just explained the reasons why this parental advisory committee has not been included, and I appreciate that. I wondered though: are we going to look at a child care advisory council at the provincial level?

If we look at parental involvement, I want to ask some questions. The ideas in the discussion guide indicated that the promotion and "involvement of parents in the planning, delivery and evaluation of child care programs for their children" would help "enable the expansion of the range of child care choices available to parents." Also, this act would "set standards for child care programs."

Involving Parents.

Parents need a voice in the decision-making process that determines the type, quality and accessibility of child care and development programs available to their children. They need a voice in determining local and provincial priorities for children. They need a forum that [helps them and] allows them to serve as advocates for their children and for the child care system as a whole.

Now, I know that you have indicated that you thought that parent advisory committees would not be realistic because of the different sizes of communities and so on. What about a provincial child care advisory council whose members would include parents, early childhood educators, child care service providers, community representatives and experts from service areas who play a role in the "quality" of children's lives?"

I'm wondering if you've given thought to that.

Finally, I'm wondering about the posted information, which would also help the parents be involved. I think it's already mandatory for licensed child care providers to post their licence, which, I would imagine, would now indicate whether it's conditional or a probationary status. The discussion guide says that they would like to see inspection sheets posted as well and "notices specifying requirements for corrective action and documenting the licensee's response."

Another recommendation was that parents should have online access . . . to selected inspection-related information that is stored and monitored by Alberta Children's Services. This would allow parents to make comparative ratings and their own assessments about the quality of various child care programs.

The discussion guide even suggested that there should be annual report cards on their child care facility's staff qualifications, compliance with legislation and standards, and efforts to support continuous improvement, [that] these report cards would be issued by Children's Services staff from information stored on [their] databases.

The idea was that it would serve two purposes. It "would help parents make informed decisions about their children's care, [and the] report cards would help child care providers monitor and evaluate their own performance and identify areas that need improvement.” Are you considering this suggestion or recommendation of report cards?

I'd like to look at access. We have the idea that we should be increasing access. Your government press release stated that this legislation will increase access to child care spaces by opening up the classification of child care settings. This might be true, but I think that the fundamental problems facing child care operators right now still exist; namely, lack of stable funding and problems with staff recruitment and retention. Licensing will not solve the need for spaces and staff. So I hope this bill is the beginning of addressing that crucial need for child care spaces.

I wanted to take a look here at another thing that related to access. The discussion guide that I referred to said that the “Child Care Act should support the expansion of the existing child care system to provide more choices for parents – in rural communities as well as in urban centres.” That requires looking at home-based child care. This would be a new licence category and would facilitate the establishment of child care in rural communities where the population may be too small to support specialized daycare facilities. The recommendation was that it “would allow two providers to care for a maximum of 10 children. Care would be provided in a private home rather than a specialized facility, operate according to specific standards, and be monitored [still] by Children’s Services.”

This suggestion of creating more spaces also involves the suggestion that you could license for school-aged children spaces being used for other children. The Minister is quoted as saying that this act would allow operators of before- and after-school facilities to make better uses of the spaces that they already have. I'm wondering if this would create possibly an unmanageable situation after school when most preschool kids are staying and after school kids are arriving, and I'm wondering how daycares could double up on spaces. The other thing to look at is the furniture and the toys and the equipment that would be needed because they're different for school-aged as compared to preschool.

Access to daycare is a real issue in Alberta, and even with the announcement of a new federal plan this week, it's apparent that providing adequate daycare is going to be primarily the province's mandate.

I'd like to also look at compliance and enforcement here. While enforcement is essential to protect the safety of children in child care, many child care providers with good intentions inadvertently break regulations. These providers often feel that they're not given time to either remedy the problems that they were not initially aware of or to explain the circumstances that caused noncompliance, leading to enforcements that mar an otherwise possibly positive record. So I appreciate the minister's stating that there's going to be consideration given for those situations.

Then, on the other hand, I've heard concerns that there aren't real teeth in licensing enforcement. So it's a difficult question. It's important. I want to again state that I think the appeals process is very clear. My feedback from stakeholders is that they appreciate that. The one question that I'm getting about noncompliance is that perhaps it's in the nuts and bolts that we could have a little bit more clarity on what the consequences for noncompliance are.

We look at what's included and what's not included in this.

The legislative foundation provided by a Child Care Act is one of many aspects of a quality child care and child development system. Alberta's Act will apply to specific components of that system – namely, to formal, program-based child care provided through child care centres, home-based child care centres . . . nursery schools, early childhood development programs, and out of school care centres.

So this act will support children who use child care services provided by these above-listed agencies.

What's not included are the Parent Link Centres, Family Day Home Agencies, Home Visitation programs or Alberta's voluntary Child Care Accreditation program. Although such programs are key components of the child care system as a whole, they are monitored through policy, not legislation.

You know, day homes, I feel, are an important choice for parents, and many of them provide quality child care. But what's in place to ensure monitoring and safety in day homes? Again, going back to the discussion guide, on page 11 it states that the child care act that we need - supports parents and families.

- gives children access to quality child care and quality child development programs.
- recognizes excellence and innovation.
- provides the foundation for an integrated, comprehensive system that makes the best possible use of family and community resources and addresses the needs of children from cradle to schoolroom.

I believe that this bill's intention is to do those things.

As I said earlier, we haven't addressed all of the recommendations, but it is a good first step, and I look forward to more legislation coming to address the concerns about the lack of regulated child care spaces, staff recruitment, staff retention, help from municipalities in starting child care facilities, help for existing centres so that they can flourish, increasing choices for parents, and specifically looking at zero to 12. That means looking at specialized assistance for infants and toddlers and, at the same time, looking at the six- to 12-year-olds, whose needs don't vanish when they turn six years old.

I'd like to conclude by saying that the Official Opposition supports Bill 4 because it is a very good bill. I ask you to give the same consideration to my bill, Bill 207, which is coming up in the future. I hope that when it's presented, it will be allowed to at least get past second reading.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to just comment on my colleague's comments. If I can get these changes made, I'll support it.

In terms of – is it Bill 4? – increasing access to child care, St. Albert daycare providers are wondering loudly about its practicality. Bill 4 would allow, as I understand it, child care spaces licensed for school-aged children to be used for any child. The main thrust of the act would allow operators to make better use of spaces they already have.

The daycare providers in my constituency are worried, have concerns that increasing access will bring about an unmanageable rush after school. Most preschool kids stay after the kids arrive, and they see it being a very difficult type of transition. They're suggesting that the timelines would clash, so they've got concerns about that.

Another issue in St. Albert constituency is that preschool and school-age kids use different furniture and toys. There's a different type of need for that, different kids of different ages. So that is another concern.

One of our biggest problems in St. Albert is access to daycare. In St. Albert this is a very big issue: long lists, and some daycare providers are already refusing to take names for next year. So it is a big issue in my constituency.

Now I'll just get off that tune and talk briefly about two points on the basis of my past experience. I believe that monitoring daycare is crucial for kids, and I think there should be regular inspections at different times of the day to see if standards are being implemented in the operation of daycares. I think that if it's not done correctly, you're going to find that we're going to have some serious problems with looking after children and some of the problems that they may face.

I also think there's a key fact that the government didn't allow back a few years ago in terms of educating parents. I think there should be a major effort on the part of the government to educate parents on how to select and pick a good daycare program. That could be done through videos or through brochures. Sometimes the government has what they call a hands-off policy because they might interfere with people making money out of it. I'm not so sure that that's a good cause.

Anyway, those are my comments, Mr. Chair. Thank you for allowing me to speak. I will sit down and let you go on. Thank you.

5:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to make my first comments on Bill 4 here this afternoon, the Child Care Licensing Act. Certainly, both myself and the Alberta New Democrats in general are happy with what we see in regard to this licensing act. It seems to be quite a substantive rewrite of the terms and conditions under which daycare facilities are monitored, licensed, and run. It's not just an amendment to the existing bill but truly a new act that substantively overhauls the regulatory framework of this part of society by shifting focus from facilities under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act to programming, which will be under this Bill 4. Certainly, this is a step forward, Mr. Chairman. I think that this was, in fact, long overdue.

The intent of this bill, as I see it, is to quite completely revise the regulatory framework by grandfathering the facilities' recommendations and making child care programming the central core of this bill. The goal, I believe, as far as I can read, is to see to the child's developmental needs, not just babysitting, so to speak. This is something to be applauded.

The key components that I would like to highlight in a positive light are, one, the regulation-making authority over all daycare facilities, a unifying concept which is long overdue and welcome to all parents requiring these services across the province; two, the enabling of new categories to child care services to be created, including a family group care and other potentially innovative programs that may arise in terms of what people might come up with; three, administrative streamlining, which allows for multiyear licensing of facilities, which certainly, I believe, is a reasonable bureaucratic amendment; four, expansion and monitoring, with a range of prescribed actions with regard to monitoring, which is certainly a very important part of any child care legislation; finally, a permanent appeals board that would be more substantive than the kind of ad hoc one that was in the last act.

So the bill seems to be focusing on quality of care, but we as New Democrats and, I think, representing the population would like to bring forward the importance of dealing with the quantity of care as well, just with the shortage of spaces that are available across the province, not just in major cities but all across the province. The federal government a couple of days ago, five, six days ago, abandoned its plan to create 125,000 new daycare spaces, and we find this deeply troubling, Mr. Chairman. Instead, the money was just going to be given to the provinces. So we certainly would encourage and, in fact, would like to demand that this money go directly to providing public daycare facilities across the province.

I think it's the prerogative of this Legislature to provide choice for families in regard to daycare, and the choice that we must provide, that we have the capacity to provide here, is for an affordable public daycare option that people can go to and trust with their most important family members, which are the children. Providing that choice of a public daycare system I think is an idea whose time has come in the province of Alberta.

There are 154 accredited child care facilities in the province of Alberta, and there are 545 facilities that are eligible for accreditation. Daycare spaces in real terms have fallen 7 per cent between 1992 and 2004 while nationally daycare spaces, in fact, doubled. You know, that sort of simple math I think highlights the problem that we've had with child care in this province over the last 15 years or more, and really it speaks to a problem that we have in supporting families and working families. Certainly, for most families it's the norm and it's not just a choice: it's a reality of life that both parents must work to support the family. So people are looking to daycare, and if we don't supply that, then the whole economic engine that we've grown accustomed to starts to break down.

The birth rate, as well, in Alberta is much higher than the national average. So, you know, when we throw in that factor, which is a good thing, I believe, then, in fact, this daycare shortage goes from acute to potentially a crisis. The sector of daycare in Alberta faces a two-pronged problem of both retaining staff plus the fertility rate. The demand for new spaces is much higher as well, so you have the resulting acute shortage.

The minister recently announced $13 million to top up fees for children's and family services. I would again give some applause and kudos to the new minister. I think that she certainly has potential to do very well in her new position. She said that the government is acting to help employers recruit and retain staff at daycare centres as well as contracting agencies and women's shelters. I saw on the television last week where there was a daycare facility bemoaning the loss of workers at her facility to the fast-food service industry. You know, it just stood out as a highly ironic thing, to say that the people who are charged with looking after our most precious resource, our children, in fact have the same price rates as people working at hamburger or fish and chips places.

A March 2007 report found that Alberta ranks quite poorly when it comes to child care. It's recommended in this report that the provision of a revamped labour law with better parental components, combined with the need for public or publicly funded daycare facilities, is absolutely imperative. This is the Paul Kershaw report, Measuring Up: Family Benefits in British Columbia and Alberta in International Perspective, from March 2007. You know, I think this puts it, perhaps, in the most stark and obvious terms. We often talk about economic competitiveness with our immediate counterparts, both provincially and throughout the United States. This is a factor that I really think trumps many other traditional areas of competitiveness in terms of taxation and law and the ease of starting businesses. The Quebec model of affordable daycare certainly starts to rise up as perhaps one of the very top means by which, at the very least, we continue to create a competitive economic environment in the province of Alberta.

How will this bill deal with the chronic shortage of daycare spaces in the province? These are the questions that we must ask ourselves. How does the government intend to deal with the shortage of daycare spaces in high-growth areas in the province of Alberta? Can we expect the minister, please, to give us a full report of the shortages that are affecting Alberta families across the province so that we can itemize and perhaps prioritize where we should be focusing our monies and attention? Finally, if the minister is claiming that the government is helping to recruit and retain daycare staff, what progress has been made and how do we compare nationally, especially when we're trying to make a claim that we have a great child care system? Of course, that always begs the question: compared to what?

So those are my comments that I will stay with here for now, and certainly I will have some specific section analysis in the not-too-distant future. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. It's my pleasure to rise to discuss Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act, which I very much appreciate my government colleague bringing forward. I have spent the majority of my life looking after children in one form or another. As people are well aware, I was a teacher for a number of years of my life, and in the summers when I was going to university and when my wife was going to university, I ran a number of child care programs, so to speak, for the city of Calgary, from adventure playgrounds where children as young as five years of age could come and handle a variety of equipment – hammers, saws, nails – and build themselves a fort to a number of arts programs.

I consider it absolutely essential that children receive the best kind of care that is possible. In my new role as a grandfather now of two grandchildren I can't think of any more vulnerable group that needs the support of government than children. It might be a close sort of balance with seniors in long-term care, who in a lot of cases have reverted to their childlike trust. With regard to the children, this licensing act will provide a degree of standardization across the various forms of child care that has not been there before. This is an important first step.

Another step that I see is necessary, that we'll work towards and would support the government in their pursuit, is the accreditation of the individuals who work in the various care centres. I know that there are different levels of accreditation, from the kindly mother who chooses to not only stay home to look after her children but, in order to add a little bit to the family's economy, takes in some of the neighbourhood children as well. These various levels of support, obviously, have different rules. I think that as parents and as grandparents we know how much difficulty there is to keep, especially, toddlers safe and entertained and, I would add to it, educated. I'm sure that a number of Calgary parents and grandparents and caregivers every once in a while hit the TV channel 17 to get a little bit of respite and, hopefully, sit down with their children and sort of go through the program, rather than just simply leaving it on as the single child care monitoring device.

It's absolutely essential that children, especially children in the formative ages, have the motivation, the inspiration, a form of education which challenges them to a great degree to develop their potential because we know that those early child years are the formative years and we want to achieve a very strong foundation in those formative years.

It's extremely important, as part of this bill's success, that monitoring be established. There has been some discussion as to the fact that this bill will establish what are, sort of, the minimum standards acceptable. But I would like to think that we would through our monitoring have a process where we'd recognize the high levels of quality care – call it the copper, silver, gold standards of care – and attempt to move everyone towards what the government would consider to be the gold standard. That's where we would have individuals who themselves had the accreditation and the fluency of language – fluency of languages would be even better – to provide a successful program for children that isn't just caring and nurturing but also has an education component to it.

I look at what's happening in Calgary and I'm sure is repeated throughout the province, the number of children with single parents, and sometimes with both parents, who are forced to move each night from one church basement to another church basement, thanks to the caring provision of the Inn from the Cold program. I know that in Calgary the school board at least tries to provide stability, in that the children, without being labelled, have the opportunity to attend the same school on a regular basis even though their sleeping arrangements in various church basements vary from day to day.

Hopefully, in terms of child care we will also provide the stability for these parents and for these children, especially those who are not of school age and, basically, have no regular programming or support while the parents wait to go back down that basement later in the evening for shelter. There's nothing provided for them during the day. I would hope that as an extension of this program we would be able to provide programming and support for parents who find themselves without a home. To me, this is an important area that we need to pursue.

Specifically to Bill 4: it is a good first step. We will need to work on the accessibility, as other members have brought out, because my understanding is that the demand for child care versus the reality of it – I believe that child care meets about 10 to 12 per cent of the needs of a number of parents who would like to have the opportunity to work outside the home but because of the expense of child care don't have that opportunity to work.

It's a different category, but I would hope that in future bills, in terms of supporting child care, we would come up with an allowance similar to the old family allowance, whereby we would support children within the homes, to the point where parents would have the choice where they could say: just give me a little bit more so that I can buy those groceries and pay the bills at the end of the month so that I could keep my children at home and be their primary caregiver and be their primary educator. That is what a number of families who emphasize traditional values, unfortunately, aren't able to accommodate because of the cost of daycare, which in accredited institutions can be over $1,200 a month, especially if it's an infant involved. But I do very much appreciate what the Minister of Children's Services has brought forward in this bill.

5:30

I am hoping, as other members have mentioned, that there is a strong monitoring component to the bill. I realize that monitoring is expensive, but there cannot be a more valuable resource than our children, and their safety and their quality of life must be encouraged and supported.

I thank the member. Mr. Chair, I would suggest at this point that we close debate and call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we rise and report bills 20, 25, and 4.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 20, Bill 25, and Bill 4.

Second Reading

Bill 1
Lobbyists Act

[Adjourned debate March 20: Dr. Pannu]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to rise and participate in debate on Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act. This is, basically, the flagship bill for the government, and the substance that's being discussed is both timely and significant.

Lobbying itself is not necessarily a bad thing, Mr. Speaker. Lobbying is important in some regards because people need to be able to have access to their elected officials. Lobbying is, basically, an integral part of democracy because elected officials were elected to be conveyors of ideas. As an MLA myself I take ideas from my constituents and bring them here to this forum, to this Assembly, and as policy-makers or decision-makers we need to be accessible and be seen to be accessible as well.

So lobbying itself is not necessarily an evil or a bad thing; however, there are two main challenges to democracy with respect to lobbying. The first challenge is, basically, one that deals with openness and transparency. Governments are and should be held accountable to their citizens, and their accountability dictates that we have a certain degree of transparency.

Citizens have to be able to evaluate the performance of their representatives and their government, and they have to know who has the government ear at any one point, who is talking to whom in any particular or given department or agency. They also have to know if taxpayers' money is being spent properly, who is gaining or winning government contracts, how much they're paid, why they are paid this amount of money and for what work, and outcomes of such decisions.

Disclosure and transparency are all about leveling the playing field. As an individual I should have the same degree of access to my elected officials and my government as a person who is a professional lobbyist or a person who is paid on behalf of an agency or a group or a business or an interest to influence government decision-making. So lobbying is legitimate, but it should be and must be public.

In this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, we do a bit of lobbying ourselves on behalf of our constituents. Constituents have direct access to this Assembly as well because they submit petitions and they send us letters and other things that we table on their behalf. So this is an avenue for them to express their point of view and have the Assembly's ear and have the government's ear through the Assembly. This is one way for them to gain this access, and no other way should be given prominence or given more importance than this particular way.

Take Hansard. Hansard is a tool that this Assembly has adopted, which we didn't have before. You know, I think that, if my memory serves me right, 35 years ago we didn't have Hansard in this House. But now we do, and it serves a great purpose to actually show people what we are saying. They can read the Hansard excerpt. They can actually check what a certain member said at any one time in any particular debate. They can review votes and proceedings, you know, who voted for what and who voted against what. Some of it is also available in audio and video, which is great.

I think the audio and video service should be inclusive, gavel to gavel. Basically, these proceedings should be taped and televised and archived in digital format from the beginning till the end. I also think that committees should be recorded in video format as well. But that's another topic.

Now, I mentioned that there were two challenges to democracy. The other one is, basically, equal access and opportunity, which I touched on briefly. In the U.S., for example, they take it a step further. They also place limits on how much lobbying a lobbyist can do or how much money a lobbyist can charge to lobby the government. We're having the same discussion here now about campaign finance reform: how much money candidates in elections can raise and from whom, which sources; how much, you know, party leadership candidates can raise money and from which sources; disclosure: how much information should be disclosed, how much information should be withheld, if at all; and things like this.

As parliamentarians, as legislators, we have an opportunity to not only bring in transparency and openness but also to send a message to the public that we mean what we say. We have to recognize that the appearance of openness and transparency is equally important as actual openness and transparency. Because politicians have such a bad reputation with the public, we are trying to convince them every day that we are hard-working, honest people and we are driven by the public good.

This Bill 1 is a good start. It's certainly a good start, and I'm willing to support it after some of my concerns are addressed and after some amendments are hopefully passed in Committee of the Whole.

Now, I will start just a little bit by talking about the preamble. In the preamble the third one reads: "whereas it is desirable that the public and public office holders be able to know who is engaged in lobbying activities." That's wonderful. We need to know who is a lobbyist, but we equally need to know who they're talking to. I don't want a registry of lobbyists that just tells me that ABC company is lobbying the government, and then it doesn't tell me that ABC company is talking to the Minister of Energy, for example, or to his deputy minister. So, yes, we need to know who is talking to the government, but we also need to know who in government is being approached.

5:40

The fifth preamble talks about where it's "desirable that the public and public office holders be able to know who is contracting with the Government of Alberta and Provincial entities." I'm hoping that we should really include how much they're getting paid as well. I don't want a database that basically tells me that ABC company won a contract for, you know, road maintenance, but then it doesn't tell me that ABC company was awarded the contract for $2 million, for example. So these are little things that are hopefully going to be addressed in second reading and in committee.

Another question I asked myself is, basically, with respect to the disclosure component, the reporting component. This bill puts the onus for reporting on the lobbyist, which is a good thing because they have to be held responsible and accountable, and some of them are getting paid, so I have no trouble asking them to do the reporting.

However, an outfit like Democracy Watch in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, wants the onus put on public officials to disclose because what if the lobbyist fails to disclose, inadvertently or intentionally? I think there should be an equal commitment on behalf of the public office holder – a government minister, a department head, a deputy minister, people like that – to also somehow fill in the blanks, to also somehow report who is being approached and what the subject matter being discussed is. So how do we do this? I don't know yet. This is something I am struggling with, but I think there's an equal responsibility on behalf of the public office holder to also tell us that they are being lobbied with respect to a certain subject or a certain decision.

Another thing that I thought about was, basically, with respect to charities and nonprofit groups, community organizations, and entities like this. They are going to be classified as an organization lobbyist, which is fine. Under this definition it is talking about "an employee, officer or director of an organization who receives a payment for the performance of his or her functions" with respect to lobbying. So what if it is a volunteer member of that organization? Now, they're not receiving payment, so will they be not required to report? I need clarification.

Also, what if they're a paid director? What if it's, you know, the secretary for the organization, for the United Way, or what if it's the treasurer for Salvation Army or some other group that actually fund raises to contribute to charitable work? They don't receive a certain, stand-alone, clearly defined payment for their lobbying effort, but they're paid a salary at the end of the month or they're paid an honorarium for carrying out these duties.

So is there going to be a stipulation on a percentage of your work that has to be dedicated to lobbying, where, basically, that's the definition of a lobbyist, or are we going to say that any officer who just receives any payment on behalf of this organization or in lieu of, you know, services that they do for this organization would now be captured under this definition?

Moving on, I have a concern with respect to keeping things in regulation and allowing the minister or the Ethics Commissioner or whoever is going to be in charge of this piece of legislation to put things in regulation. Take, for example, restrictions on the application of the act. Basically, to which areas does this act not apply? We added members of the House of Commons, we added employees of municipalities, we've added members of Métis settlement councils, diplomatic agents, et cetera, and after this very extensive list we also said, "any other individuals or categories of individuals prescribed in the regulations." I think we should try to change this philosophy and the preference of this government that everything should be in regulation or that the bulk or the meat of any bill or act is kept in regulation because it's flexible. Yes, a certain degree of flexibility is needed but not where it basically limits the strength of any piece of legislation itself.

Another trend which I don't like is basically, you know, the plan by this government now to include little bad things with other good things. They basically lump together questionable sections in an act or in a bill with good things. Now everybody in this House is going to be forced to either adopt it all, accept it all, vote for it all, or decline to support all of it again together. They embed loopholes or they embed sort of bypasses to allow themselves some wiggle room.

In particular, I have this issue with section 2(c), which basically allows a public office holder to bypass the system totally if he or she initiates that discussion with the lobbyist. If the lobbyist approaches that minister, for example, the lobbyist has to register, but if the minister phones up the lobbyist and solicits information or advice, then nobody has to register. I am hoping that through deliberations in Committee of the Whole this section might be amended. Again, if we're really serious about coming across as honest people, that we have nothing to hide and that everything is going to be open and transparent, then this, in my opinion, is one section that needs to be taken out.

I mentioned that the duty to file should be shared to a certain degree with the public office holder. I'm not saying that they should do it within 10 days like a consultant lobbyist would or, you know, 30 days like an organizational lobbyist but maybe once a year. Maybe once a year there is going to be a summary from the public office holder who lobbied him or her, and maybe we should really compare the two lists, compare what the public office holder submitted once a year with all the submissions that we accrued through the year from the lobbyists themselves and see if someone somewhere is not telling us the truth.

Payment information to contractors. Again, that's very useful, and I commend the government for accepting this recommendation. But again they are leaving the details pertaining to those payments in regulation because they say "prescribed Provincial entities" and "in accordance with the regulations." So who is going to be captured under this definition? Which entities? I think this is something that we should discuss in this House and that should not be left to regulations to be done behind closed doors. Again, it's the appearance of openness and transparency versus actual openness and transparency. While I agree with the government that anything is better than nothing, we need to strengthen this further.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) five minutes for questions and comments, if any.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. This bill reminds me of a game that we all played as children, and that game was Mother, may I? We had various steps that we could take, you know. Mother, may I take a giant step? Mother, may I take a baby step? How many baby steps? I view this legislation as, rather than something that I would shout from the rooftops, more something that I might sort of pass off in casual conversation as: "Guess what? Alberta has finally done or is starting to do what the rest of the provinces and the federal government have done for some time. They're going to actually have a lobbyist registry." [some applause] That's about the volume of the clapping that I would provide for this particular bill.

When I gave my response to the Speech from the Throne, one of the areas that I pointed out and the weakness of this particular bill is that if the government comes courting, there's no reporting. In other words, if the government approaches a particular organization and requests their services, then there is no obligation on the government's part to report it because, in fact, they were doing the lobbying.

When we look at past practice with this government, which would still continue given this form of lobbyists registry, there are circumstances like Kelley Charlebois, who received a series of contracts totalling in excess of $400,000, but there wasn't even the equivalent of a bubble gum wrapper's amount of written information on the services that he provided. This was all verbal, and of course there were no tapes and no record. So this kind of behind-the-scenes, closed-door justification of service can still take place.

I also remember Rod Love. His employment was somewhat sketchy. He was flying on government planes at the same time as he was lobbying on behalf of a private railroad organization that wanted to extend some track up to the Wood Buffalo area. Because of his cozy on-again, off-again relationship he was allowed to have access to that government plane to do his lobbying. Well, as far as I can see from this lobbyists registry, that kind of close coziness would continue.

Another area that the government is touting as being extremely transparent is the idea that they'll post the flight manifests. Well, we've always asked for the flight logs to be posted. Again, this doesn't get into the kind of transparency that we're looking for. Simply having the name of a person who approached the government, without knowing the details of what was being discussed, doesn't provide the kinds of transparency or accountability that Albertans are looking for from this government.

I support the idea of taking the baby step, but I look forward to the government going beyond that step. A lobbyist comes in, talks to the department of infrastructure, and says: "Look, we've got a new process for the hardening of cement. With this particular technique we can speed up the drying time. This new technique will involve being able to construct without restriction, any time, whether it's summer, winter, whatever." I would like to think, John Silverman of Cements Are Us, that the information that was discussed with the minister or deputy minister or some bureaucrat within the Infrastructure and Transportation department, the actual discussion and the notes of that discussion, would be made available.

Granted, there are a whole lot of people who wouldn't go surfing the Net to see that information posted, but for those who are concerned about public accountability, such as the Canadian Taxpayers Federation's Scott Hennig and so on, they would like to know what actually took place behind those closed doors other than the fact that somebody from such-and-such a company on such-and-such a day spoke to the government.

So while I commend the government for taking the smallest of initial steps, I would remind the government that for 2004 and 2005 running, they received the most secretive government award. By simply having a lobbyist registry that indicates who approached, I don't think that's going to prevent them from receiving that most unpublic, most opaque as opposed to transparent, most secretive government award.

I do look forward to discussing in greater detail during Committee of the Whole the amendments, the strengthening of this legislation, which is absolutely necessary and which my colleague referred to as taking things out of regulation and putting them into the bright daylight of legislation. The assumption that the benevolence of a minister is sufficient to make decisions behind closed doors without even consulting his own cabinet members, never mind the opposition members, is insufficient. It's not transparent.

So I would task my hon. colleagues from the government with the homework assignment of creating real transparency. In future projects surprise us by bringing in whistle-blower legislation. Surprise us in terms of your transparency by setting election dates. You know, wow us by overturning Bill 20. Add to my Christmas wish list by putting Bill 40 back into legislation rather than regulation.

I look forward to working with the government on the standing policy committees. The reason I look so forward to this is because the minutes of those standing policy committees will be available for public viewing. It's that kind of transparency that I wish to see from this government on the lobbyists registry. To be truly transparent, provide the details of the meeting. You've really got nothing to lose if transparency and accountability are as important as it has been stated, and you have a whole lot to gain. You might even stay in as government for one more term.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone wishing to participate.

Mr. Chase: According to the operation of the House, am I allowed to adjourn debate at this point? With members' approval I would suggest that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:58 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 22, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/03/22

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui j'ai le privilège de présenter en votre nom, à vous et aux membres de l'Assemblée, des invités spéciaux venant de ma circonscription, 17 élèves du secondaire accompagnés de leurs deux enseignants. Ils sont assis dans la galerie et sont à Edmonton pour célébrer les Rendez-vous de la francophonie, une quinzaine de jours où l'on célèbre l'histoire et la culture française.

Alors, c'est un grand plaisir de vous présenter les élèves de l'école Georges P. Vanier, accompagnés de leur enseignant M. Roger Doucet, et les élèves de l'école Héritage, accompagnés de leur enseignante Mme Anita Johnson. J'aimerais aussi vous présenter un membre de mon équipe, Mme Cindie LeBlanc, directrice-adjointe au Secrétariat francophone, une finissante de l'école Héritage.

Je leur demanderais de se lever et recevoir une bienvenue chaleureuse de cette Assemblée.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a number of very special guests from my constituency: 17 high school students and their two teachers. They are seated in the gallery and are in Edmonton to commemorate Les Rendez-vous de la francophonie, a national two-week celebration of French culture and history. It is with great pleasure that I introduce the students from l'école Georges P. Vanier, accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Roger Doucet, and the students from l'école Héritage, accompanied by their teacher, Ms Anita Johnson. I would also like to introduce a member of my staff, Ms Cindie LeBlanc, assistant director of the Francophone Secretariat, who is a graduate of l'école Héritage. I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly on behalf of the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry a class from New Horizons school, 38 in number. With them are their teachers, Ms Camie Hamilton, Mme Suzanne Le Gars, and Mr. Shaun Wilde. Also, it has been brought to my attention that there is a relative of yours in this group named Paul Matichuk. I would ask the guests to please stand and for this Assembly to give them the appropriate recognition.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you 17 students from the Neerlandia school. They're accompanied this afternoon by teacher Jim Bosma and parent helpers Rhonda Tischer, Mike Waggoner, Evelien Koekkoek, and Johanne Leonard. They are seated in the public and members' galleries this afternoon. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 42 visitors from the Gibbons elementary school in Gibbons. Along with them are teachers Mr. Don McIntyre and Ms Colleen Lowe and parents and helpers Robin Kathan, Gary Haynes, and Lorna Simpson. I believe they are seated in both the members' and the public galleries. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly today a fine example of the many hard-working and dedicated members of the public service. As chair of the Regulatory Review Secretariat under Service Alberta I am working with Angela Prokopetz, who is a secretariat director. In this fiscal year the busy secretariat will process about 275 requests from departments and regulatory authorities. Of course, all of these require an analysis by the secretariat. Angela is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask her now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed it's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all the colleagues of our Assembly a lovely lady that is an acquaintance of many of us. She has a very distinguished job, and that is to maintain our minister of culture. I would ask that Angie Goudreau stand up and that our members join me in wishing her a good day and a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure today to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House 16 individuals who are here visiting the Legislature as part of the Fushimi exchange. It's a junior high school exchange that's operated by D.S. MacKenzie junior high in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford.

I would like to introduce all of them if I could. The teacher that has co-ordinated the program is Ms Christine Cao. The volunteer parents today: Glen Burley, Ann-Marie Cote, and Cyndy Lang. There are six D.S. MacKenzie students, four of whom will actually be going to Japan in July – Ashley Lang, Cleah Takahashi, Cassie Carroll, Corbin MacKenzie, Chris Burley, and Sawyer Marsden – and the most important guests, of course, the six exchange students from Japan. Please bear with me as I try to work my way through their names: Nami Miyazawa, Hirono Takano, Saori Komata, Mei Sasao, Hidetaro Matsuno, and Chieri Namba. I would ask them to all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me today to welcome to this Assembly 15 travelers from the Northwest Territories, including four members of government from both the territorial and the municipal governments. They're here to present to the Legislature a resolution, passed on March 5, named the Right to Water, and I have a laminated copy here which they have asked me to pass on to the Premier.

Let me introduce them: the MLA for Yellowknife Centre, Robert Hawkins; the MLA for Fort Smith, Michael Miltenberger; city councillor for Yellowknife, Paul Falvo; city councillor for Yellowknife again, Kevin Kennedy, with his wife, Roberta; Martin Kennedy; Christa Domchek; Juniper Falvo; Daron Letts; Doug Ritchie with Ecology North; Raymond Beaver from Fort Smith; Gilly McNaughton; Steve Whittaker; Martin Dubeau; Archie Smith from Fort Smith; Alex Beaudin; Tom Unka from Fort Resolution; Phillip Bealieu, Fort Resolution; Lindsay Telfer; Leila Darwish; and Meredith James. I'd ask them all now to stand and have the recognition of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mr. Perri Garvin. Perri has been involved in the labour movement for the past 30 years as a board member, a delegate, a shop steward, and a health and safety activist. Perri became a delegate to the Edmonton and District Labour Council in 1987 and was just recently re-elected as their recording secretary for his 10th term. He has been with the Alberta capital region's United Way for the past seven years as the labour co-ordinator and has worked with over 200 locals in the Edmonton region. Perri's work brings unions in the community and the United Way together in helping to make the Edmonton region a better place for all of us. Every year union members contribute a substantial portion of the United Way's fundraising goal. I would now ask that Perri rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a number of environmental activists and citizens concerned about the uncontrolled growth of the Alberta tar sands. They're here today to recognize International Water Day and to call for a moratorium on oil sands development, something that we in the NDP have long been calling for too. I was present today at their rally and commend them on their hard work and dedication to environmental issues. I will call each of their names, and please reserve applause till the end: Lindsay Telfer, executive director of the Sierra coalition; Leila Darwish, associate director of the Sierra coalition; Meredith James, Mackenzie Wild co-ordinator; along with Meghan Newman, Alli Conroy, and Mike Neuman. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:10

A second introduction is Robert Hawkins. Robert serves as the MLA for Yellowknife Centre in the Northwest Territories Assembly.

Robert was elected to the 15th Legislative Assembly in 2003. He was educated at SAIT and graduated as a mechanical engineer. He's here today as well to add his voice to the growing concern about the environment and the effects of industry. I'm very honoured to introduce him to our Legislature, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask him now to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have two guests to introduce to you and to the House today. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Paul Pomerleau. Paul is a proud member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers local 424. He divides his time between working in Fort McMurray and at home in Beaumont. Paul is here today to show his concern around the employment of temporary foreign workers despite some of his colleagues being unable to get work here in Alberta. Paul has lived in Alberta all his life. He and his wife spend much of their free time driving their two sons around to hockey practices and tournaments across the province. I would now ask that Paul rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction today is for Linda Duncan. Linda has been a tireless advocate on environmental issues not just in Alberta but globally. She is currently the vice-president of Sierra Legal Defence Fund, a national nonprofit organization litigating precedent-setting environmental cases for Canadian communities. She is also the vice-president of the Lake Wabamun Enhancement and Protection Association, a grassroots organization of residents and lake users concerned about industrial impacts on one of Alberta's recreational treasures. She is an active member of the Alberta Environmental Network's energy caucus as a board member. Most importantly, she's the NDP candidate in the next election in the federal riding of Edmonton-Strathcona. I would now ask that Linda rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have two guests today, and I'd like to introduce them to you and members of the Assembly, two very active women in the city of Edmonton. First of all, Docia Lysne is a tireless advocate and constituent of mine in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. She is a home provider with the Elizabeth Fry Society and vice-president of Planned Parenthood in Edmonton. She is very active in the Unitarian church and works with the Kara Family Resource Centre in Edmonton, who provide safe environments and programming to enhance the self-esteem and independence of low-income families.

Also with her today is Marion DeShield. She is the former leader of the national black women's coalition and is a senior citizen volunteer with a seniors' centre here in Edmonton. By the way, Mr. Speaker, Marion will be celebrating her 87th birthday in June.

I would now ask that both of them rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Neil McCrank, QC

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1998 the Alberta Utilities and Energy Board has regulated the safe, responsible, and efficient development of Alberta's energy resources under the watchful eye of its chairman, Mr. Neil McCrank. On February 21 of this year Mr. McCrank announced his retirement. His significant role in increasing the public's awareness of energy and utility issues will be greatly missed.

A native of Val d'Or, Quebec, Mr. McCrank graduated with a bachelor of law degree from Queen's University and was admitted to the bar in 1971. After coming to Alberta from Ontario in 1979 to work with the Alberta Attorney General, he served as a special prosecutor, assistant deputy minister for the criminal justice division, Deputy Attorney General, and deputy minister of the Alberta Department of Justice until his appointment as chairman of the EUB. During his tenure with the EUB Mr. McCrank has served on numerous national commissions, steering committees, task forces, and review panels related to emerging legal issues.

Mr. McCrank embodies the finest values of service to the public. He is an active community volunteer and currently serves as a board member at a number of educational institutions and professional organizations.

On behalf of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta I would like to thank Neil for his service to Albertans as chairman of the board during this period of unprecedented growth in our energy sector. His leadership of the EUB will be missed, and on behalf of my colleagues and this Assembly I wish him all the best in his retirement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin Sports Hall of Fame Inductees

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday I will be attending the Wetaskiwin and County Sports Hall of Fame banquet. This event celebrates Wetaskiwin's impressive history of athletic competition. This year five individual and one team are being recognized for their excellence in sports and for their outstanding contributions to the community.

Valerie Greenwall-Weldon will be inducted as an athlete for her distinguished play in softball. She represented Alberta at a number of national competitions, including the western Canadian championships in 1974, the Canada Summer Games in 1977, and the Canadian junior Olympic team in 1978.

The late Tom Dorchester will also be inducted as an athlete. He was considered the Gordie Howe of chuckwagon races as he consistently won races from 1937 to 1981. Mr. Dorchester was inducted into the Canadian Cowboy Hall of Fame in 1982.

Willie Littlechild is being inducted as an athlete builder. He participated in numerous sporting events, especially hockey, as an athlete and coach. He represented Alberta at the world aboriginal games and the 2006 Canada Senior Games. As well, Mr. Littlechild has been inducted into the Alberta and Saskatchewan hockey halls of fame.

The late Ralph Pocock is being inducted as a builder for his work in building the Wetaskiwin curling rink and tennis courts. Mr. Pocock played a pivotal role in developing minor hockey in Wetaskiwin.

The Brightview Huskies hockey team is being inducted for accomplishments as a team. The Huskies were Wetaskiwin district champions from 1946 to 1952 and from 1943 to 1952 lost only three games while winning over 100.

The final inductee and special award recipient is the late Vern Henry. Mr. Henry was involved in numerous sports, including midget fastball, girls bantam soccer, and minor hockey. He also was chairman of seniors curling in Wetaskiwin.

I want to congratulate all of the inductees for the distinguished contributions to the sport history of Wetaskiwin.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Water Management

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every living system has limits to growth, and this has seldom been recognized by this government on development issues. Overall allocation of the Oldman and Bow rivers systems, groundwater contamination from oil and gas activity without adequate groundwater monitoring, and threats to the quality and quantity of the Athabasca River from oil sands development have shocked and mobilized not only Albertans but citizens from the Northwest Territories, as we've seen today. Albertans are looking for enlightened leadership on our finite water resources, only 2 per cent of Canada's freshwater supply.

An independent water study commissioned by this government, the Rosenberg report, highlighted the lack of planning, investment, science, and action on Water for Life at a critical time when these are most needed. Population growth and climate change have increased the demand for wise and integrated water management. Another example is the need for collaborative planning on the eastern slopes, the source of all of our water in the province.

Integration is also clearly needed between government bodies such as Energy, Environment, and Sustainable Resource Development, that continue to compromise both land and water resource through lack of full consultation. But full integration also requires good science. We don't have the information we need on groundwater, even in the upper Bow River, our primary population water source. We know that water withdrawals affect both surface and groundwater. They're connected but in unpredictable ways that must be defined in each region. All major development must have cumulative impact assessments before approvals, as the minister has admitted in the House yesterday, but this government continues to make development decisions without that framework and without cumulative impact assessment.

Meanwhile the government has denied and delayed action on climate change, the most profound and unpredictable threat to human security on the planet, with added impacts on our water. Water is our lifeblood. It must guide development decisions above economic considerations. Alberta's future will not be defined by oil but by how we manage our water and place limits on growth. They will not accept any compromise on the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Joffre Carbon Capture and Storage Project

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to speak about a carbon capture and storage project near Joffre and Prentiss, in my constituency. This project, led by Glencoe Resources, captures carbon dioxide from the MEGlobal and NOVA Chemicals petrochemical complexes southeast of Lacombe. Once captured, the carbon dioxide is converted into a purified and liquefied form. This liquid CO₂ is then sent through an 80-kilometre pipeline grid into oil fields in the Ponoka area. It is projected that this particular project will capture about 365,000 tonnes of carbon dioxide a year, or about 1,000 tonnes a day. This is the equivalent of taking 80,000 cars off the road. This will reduce the emissions for the two petrochemical companies by at least 25 per cent.

CO₂, when injected into certain types of partially depleted oil fields, has the ability to enhance the recovery of oil that would not be recoverable without the CO₂ stimulation. This is good news for our province as it can represent a large increase in oil recovery from these depleted oil fields. As a result, Alberta will gain the full potential of these valuable resources.

Capturing carbon dioxide also represents a positive for the environment. Instead of releasing CO₂ into the atmosphere, this project will turn it into a valuable asset. There has been much discussion recently about managing the effects of carbon dioxide emissions. Two weeks ago Prime Minister Harper and our hon. Premier announced the creation of the carbon capture and storage task force. This task force will find solutions to implement carbon capture technology on a large scale. I hope that the task force will take the opportunity to come to my constituency to look at the Joffre/Prentiss carbon capture project. This is an innovative project that is a perfect example of what we are doing here in Alberta to solve greenhouse gas challenges, and I look forward to the adoption of this concept throughout our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Millwoods Cultural and Recreational Facility Association

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I attended a celebration of a significant group in my constituency. Inscribed at the bottom of the cover of a classy black-and-gold program was: building the community's dreams. If you heard those words in another context, you'd probably think that was an advertising slogan or the target for a fundraising drive. In this case they were not hype but a description of achievement.

The Millwoods Cultural and Recreational Facility Association is not simply one organization that has grown up on the coattails of a growing community. In many respects MCARFA has grown Mill Woods into a dynamic community, a community that if incorporated would be Alberta's third-largest city. Thirty years ago "Mill Woods cultural association" would have been an oxymoron. A friend of mine, writing a field trip manual for Edmonton public schools, was encouraging teachers to look at the resources on their doorsteps, in their own communities. "That's all very well for the rest of you," a teacher in Mill Woods complained. "Here all we have are strip malls."

The fact that this is no longer true is due largely to MCARFA. An arena complex; the Mill Woods golf course; the Jackie Parker park of picnic sites, trails, and an all-season pavilion; a 440 track adjacent to two high schools; and a rollerblade, skateboard, and bike park are projects that MCARFA has brokered among 10 community leagues, city, and provincial funding when no one group or level of government could have done this work on its own. A spray park and adventure playground are set to open this summer.

These achievements are more than fundraising and organization. They represent an impressive mobilization of volunteers across local neighbourhoods and cultures in a larger spirit. MCARFA brings together resources and contacts in an effective way that is a model for other communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Temporary Moratorium on Oil Sands Development

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our political environment reached a tipping point sometime last year. Research and scientific consensus and numerous public opinion polls combined to push some other political parties past the point of no return on their emissions policy. Suddenly it's considered good politics to talk about emission reductions. But Albertans have good reason to be skeptical about Conservative and Liberal plans for emission reductions. The Liberals say that they would cap emissions only years into the future, while the government says that we don't need absolute reductions at all.

What neither the Conservatives nor the Liberals are willing to admit is that unless you are willing to manage growth, particularly in the development of the tar sands, then you can't manage emissions. The NDP has called for a short-term moratorium on approvals of new tar sands projects and expansions of existing ones. We understand the connection between pace of development and attempts to control greenhouse gas emissions.

By contrast, the Premier is on record saying that the government won't press the brake and has warned of dire consequences should Albertans attempt to manage the development of our tar sands. Similarly, the leader of the Liberals said that a temporary moratorium would be like locking the brakes on a speeding car. The moratorium we propose is only a short-term measure but an important one. Alberta needs a plan to deal with the serious economic, social, environmental, and infrastructure impacts of tar sands development.

A temporary moratorium on new approvals will allow Alberta to catch its breath and to get caught up. The management of our nonrenewable resources must be done in a way that lays the groundwork for a post oil energy world. It is time to talk seriously about using our present tremendous wealth to invest in a truly sustainable economic environment.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Bill 205

Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 205, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007.

This is an act that will help forestry and oil and gas industry to meet some of the targets that our Environment minister is looking at under Bill 3.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bill 207

Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce private member's Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act.

The purpose of Bill 207 is to increase the number of high-quality, affordable child care spaces available in our province. This will ensure that parents are better able to find the care that they need for their children. The bill will also improve accountability and transparency surrounding child care in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bill 208
School (Restrictions on Fees and Fund-raising)
Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce private member's Bill 208, the School (Restrictions on Fees and Fund-raising) Amendment Act.

The purpose of Bill 208 is to eliminate school fees and fundraising in Alberta's public school system. All Albertans have the right to schooling from K to 12, and the ultimate responsibility for education funding rests with the government. This bill will provide relief to parents struggling with costs of school fees and ensure that students have equal access to education in our province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

head: 1:30 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

St. Joseph's General Hospital

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past hour we have spoken to a woman whose father died from the MRSA superbug after contracting it at the hospital in Vegreville. This woman's father contracted the infection at the Vegreville hospital in 2003. He was moved to a facility in Viking, then to the University of Alberta hospital, where his infection was treated very seriously. He was eventually transferred to a long-term care facility, where he died of MRSA. In the fall of 2003, this same woman has told us, she contacted her MLA, who is now the Premier, to raise her concerns about safety and treatment issues at the Vegreville hospital. To the Premier: did he take any action based on the concerns that were brought to him about the hospital at Vegreville?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is suggesting that I had some contact with an individual. I don't know who he's referring to. Usually in this House documents are tabled with respect to information when they're pointing special attention to either the Premier or any member of this House. So, first of all, there's protocol.

Secondly, this is a serious matter, and I find it very upsetting that it has to come up in the House.

With respect to an individual patient, we are very concerned about the health not only of the patients in St. Joe's but in every facility in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a very serious issue. Again to the Premier: can the Premier tell this Assembly and all Albertans if any other persons have died as a result of the breakdown of infection control at the Vegreville hospital?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this Leader of the Opposition is making an assumption, nonprofessional. I'd like to see the report that has confirmed that as a result of some health care service in St. Joe's hospital it was proven that that individual has passed away. I haven't seen that, so I'd ask him to table it.

With respect to the further protocol followed with respect to St. Joe's hospital, the minister of health can answer.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier on what we all agree is a very serious issue. These are questions that Albertans want answered. Can the Premier tell this Assembly if any other local health professionals, such as dentists, were using the sterilization facilities at the Vegreville hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is an interesting question. I don't know the answer to that question. I will make inquiries. We do have the Health Quality Council on site now looking and talking with the people who operate the hospital and the region to define the scope of the investigation that they're going to undertake. Certainly, that will be one of the things we'll want to know: to what extent was the CSR in the hospital used and for what purposes? But let's be very clear. This is not a situation where it is prudent for the opposition or anyone else to alarm Albertans. The look back that we're doing is being done because there were found to be inappropriate procedures followed, and it bears us to investigate and to let people know.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The public health issues emerging in Vegreville are just the thin edge of the wedge. What about next week, next month, next town? Albertans are worried about whether this government is capable of anticipating future problems and producing a strategy to protect public safety. My questions are to the Premier. We are already aware of one patient who died in Viking after contracting MRSA at St. Joseph's hospital in Vegreville. This patient was transferred several times between hospitals. How many other potentially infected patients were transferred from St. Joe's to other sites?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is not a prudent thing to do – this is a very serious situation, and we have the Health Quality Council looking at it. We've made sure that no further incidents happen. We've made sure that the CSR there is shut down until the investigation is done and appropriate protocols are put in place. We don't know that anyone died of the thing. The hon. member has raised one individual situation and is taking that reference. We'll be happy to take that reference if you provide us with the details and investigate it and any others that people might bring forward. But it's not prudent to do this in an alarmist fashion. It's prudent to do it in a serious manner with an appropriate, responsible review, alerting people to have blood tests done, and following up appropriately.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the Premier. The East Central health region has lost 17 full-time registered nurses over the last year alone. It is common practice for staff to transfer between hospitals for shifts, especially when facilities are short-staffed. What steps are taken to reduce the risk of spreading MRSA if staff from St. Joseph's hospital rotate between facilities?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it is known and understood that the MRSA virus is one which is transmitted hand to hand, or by touch, and that the most prudent way of stopping the spread of the infection is by properly washing hands and properly disinfecting surfaces. That is something that every health professional knows and understands, and that's something that's being reinforced for them through this incident.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. A final question to the Premier. In Vegreville there hasn't been any sort of government response, public information session, or town hall held to reassure the Vegreville residents. Why has the Premier waited so long to make himself or government staff available for an information session to inform and reassure the people of Vegreville?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we immediately sent professionals to assess the situation. They posted a public health order. The Health Quality Council is there today interviewing people in the hospital and making sure that steps are being taken immediately to deal with this situation. Once further information is made available, we will of course communicate with not only the town council, the chamber, but all of those that may be interested with respect to what we're doing in their hospital, at St. Joe's.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Standards

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government, which has included the Premier for 13 years, has spent that amount of time dismantling Alberta's public health care system. It has politicized the regional health boards. It's accelerated the privatization of health care to the detriment of our quality public system. Vegreville is only one symptom of the problems that have ensued. We have an opportunity here to fix the system before other problems arise. To the Premier: given that the Premier along with the member from Brooks and other members of the so-called Deep Six was part of the group leading the charge to cut essential health services, does the Premier accept responsibility for the inevitable outcomes of these decisions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Vegreville hospital, St. Joe's, is not a private facility. Again, innuendo, misleading, giving information that is totally incorrect. Secondly, in 1993 the budget was about $3.2 billion or so, $3.3 billion. I believe that over a period of time in that first year about $200 million was reduced, most of that on the administrative side. The budget today is, of course, the largest per capita anywhere in the country of Canada. I believe our health professionals are doing extremely well in this province. In fact, we have people coming from other provinces to access services here.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, this isn't an isolated case. The decision of his own government has resulted in patient safety problems at the Holy Cross, in the Calgary health region, and in long-term care centres across the province by dismantling the system's capacity to set and enforce standards. Will the Premier admit that the department of health needs the very capacity to set and enforce standards that this government pressed so hard to eliminate?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the department of health has been doing a very good job. We've attracted some of the world's best in terms of cardiologists, oncologists. I mean, this is where people want to practise. We have, of course, the Alberta medical research trust fund, that again is attracting Nobel prize material not only in research, but now we are benefiting from that research in terms of new medical treatments and pharmaceuticals, new drugs, right here in the province of Alberta. I think we've come a very long way.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has sidestepped the issue absolutely completely. Will the Premier commit to reassembling the centralized monitoring and enforcement standards in the department of hospitals that were dismantled by this very government in the 1990s?

Mr. Stelmach: What I will commit to is to ensure that we get to the very bottom of the situation at St. Joe's so that we put at ease, of course, other Albertans that may be accessing services in hospitals in this province, find out what the issue was, what the problem was, and make sure that it never happens again. That is what I'm committed to.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

St. Joseph's General Hospital

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. While the Premier may say that he wants to get to the bottom of this, this government's response so far is very similar to the response of the Harris government in Ontario to the Walkerton situation. The Vegreville hospital scandal has threatened the health of Albertans. Today I wrote to the Premier and asked him to appoint a public inquiry to get to the bottom of this matter. Will the Premier accept that recommendation from me and, I'm sure, supported by many thousands of Albertans and appoint a public inquiry?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I've asked in this House a number of times in answering questions that we not make this alarmist. What has happened in Vegreville at St. Joseph's hospital is that there was a breakdown in the protocols with respect to the sterilization of certain equipment, so the sterilization room was closed. The infectious disease specialist who was asked to examine this indicated that because of the breakdown – we're not aware that any blood-borne pathogens actually were transferred, but there may be a low possibility that that happened, and therefore it's prudent and in the best interests of the people there that we do a look back and we ask them to have blood tests done. This is not a Walkerton, and to put it into that context is alarmist. There's no sense making the people of Vegreville area alarmed about this. We're dealing with it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister says that we shouldn't be alarmed about it, but I think that Albertans would be a lot more confident if this government was seen to be taking clear action instead of giving it off to this toothless tiger, this Health Quality Council. This is for the Premier. Why won't the Premier appoint a public inquiry to make sure not just that the Vegreville hospital is safe but that all Alberta hospitals are safe?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, by having the Health Quality Council there, these are professionals in their field of practice that will assess the situation, find out where the breakdown has occurred. They will report to the minister, and of course the minister will follow the recommendations of that committee to ensure that we even further – further – improve practices in facilities across this province.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council has been in place apparently to take care of these things for a number of years. Where was it? Why didn't it do its job? And why won't the Premier admit that the Health Quality Council was never set up to do this kind of thing and that a full public inquiry, as was eventually forced on the Conservative government in Ontario over Walkerton, is the way that we have to get to the bottom of this?

Mr. Hancock: Walkerton involved a large number of people who were infected by bad water. In this situation the experts tell us that there's low risk. But it's prudent to look. It's prudent to go back and do the tests. This is a far different situation from Walkerton. The Health Quality Council was not the council which was supposed to make sure that protocols were followed, but they have expertise in – guess what? – health quality. That's why we're asking them to investigate why there was a breakdown, bring them in as outside people to determine why there was a breakdown, what should be done to fix that breakdown, and what we can learn from it. They will have all the authority they need to do that. They will report to this minister, and this minister will act on that report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Water Storage

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As has been mentioned, today is World Water Day, and we here in Alberta are truly blessed with this critical resource. We must continue to use and develop this resource wisely. Our water flow agreements allow us to utilize 50 per cent of the flow of our rivers. We are unable to utilize approximately 50 per cent of our allocation, though, due to lack of storage. It took approximately 30 years to build the Oldman River dam. Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: will this government release its plans for immediate action for capturing and storing Alberta's water or admit that they don't have one?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Water for Life strategy is a good one. It's quite complex. It's got many components to it, and I'll allow the Minister of Environment to respond.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, we store and divert hundreds of thousands of acre-feet of water here in the province, and we now have thousands of kilometres of canals and pipelines. Our 1906 Water Act needs to be amended as it segregates our water into industry, irrigation, and municipal use and prohibits the use of even irrigation spill water when it passes by an industrial location. To the Premier: does this government have any plans to amend this divisive water policy and stop the segregation of water between irrigation, industry, and municipal communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in answer to a question from another hon. member I indicated that the Water for Life strategy is an ongoing process. With respect to storage I indicated that we now have identified a number of promising locations to do off-stream storage, and we are in the process of prioritizing those opportunities. We're beginning to consult on a more intense basis with Albertans on other aspects of the Water for Life strategy as time progresses.

Mr. Hinman: We're about 20 years too late, Mr. Speaker.

This government's policy on water does not allow for efficient use and wise use and storage of our water. To the Premier: will this government be open and honest, as it claims to be, and release the latest MPE study for on- and off-stream storage that Alberta Environment commissioned them to do?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I actually answered most of the question in the answer to the previous question. We do have at this point an inventory of possible locations for off-stream storage. Work is being done to have a qualitative analysis of those sites so that we can prioritize them, and we do intend to consult with Albertans and discuss the output of that report in due course.

Water Management

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The pace and scope of development in this province, especially the oil sands, may be good for business in the short term but is not responsible and will not sustain our water into the future. The recent Rosenberg report, commissioned by this government, was very critical of the lack of knowledge and action on responsible water management in Alberta and identified real risks for the future, yet the Premier has said that he will not slow economic growth. To the Premier: how does the Premier explain to fellow farmers this uncontrolled growth in management?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as one that has grown various crops in this province of Alberta, we do depend on the good Lord to give us a sprinkle from time to time to grow our crops. I mean, without rain we don't have any crops.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. The Environment minister admitted yesterday in meetings with municipalities that approving one project at a time without doing a total cumulative impact assessment of all activities on our watershed does not serve Albertans. That's also the message of our neighbours to the north, who travelled here for 24 hours to talk to this government about management. Despite the lack of a proper cumulative impact assessment many projects each month are approved in Alberta. To the Minister of Environment: having admitted that the approval process is not adequate to guarantee responsible development, is it not reasonable to slow down development until we have appropriate science?

Mr. Renner: Well, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, how someone can interpret words in different ways. What, in fact, I indicated to AAMD and C when I was talking with them yesterday was that we are going to be developing cumulative impact processes so that we can improve the way we deal with our environmental approval process. I never indicated at any point in the conversation that the process that we have in place now is not adequate. I just indicated that there is room for improvement, and we intend to move in that direction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With a fraction of the resources that the Alberta Environment department needs, at .5 per cent of our provincial budget, a fraction of what they used to have, and a massive increase in development and water impacts, Albertans are wondering if the government has received the message that the environment is their number one concern. The Rosenberg report reinforced concerns about gross underinvestment in Alberta Environment. To the minister: when will we see proper investment in Alberta Environment?

1:50

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I happen to be an individual who measures success by things other than the amount of dollars that are spent on me.

As for the specifics on Environment's budget, I encourage the member to await introduction of the provincial budget, which will be coming in due course.

Community Treatment Orders

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes after incidents involving persons with mental illness, there are calls for the government to pass legislation regarding community treatment orders. I'd like to ask the Minister of Health and Wellness to explain to the members of the Legislature and to the members of the public viewing QP today what community treatment orders are.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A community treatment order, or CTO, is a tool to encourage compliance with mental health treatments in the community. It's a part of a broader strategy, and my primary concern is finding ways to improve the scope and effectiveness of community-based mental health services. Our goal is to help prevent the deterioration of individuals living with mental illness and to position them to lead a full and productive life to the extent possible. These are individuals with severe and persistent mental illness who are admitted to hospital as formal involuntary patients. They're released when they're stabilized. When treatment lapses in the community, their condition deteriorates, and they are readmitted. With CTOs we can help to prevent this deterioration. A CTO provides a patient with a plan . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, in light of that information I'd like to ask the minister if he's considering legislation regarding community treatment orders.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we are intending to bring in legislation which will involve community treatment orders, but more importantly that will be part of a broader strategy to involve enhanced services in the community, to give community-based mental health treatment, and to help work with what's called assertive treatment. CTOs should be considered as a last resort when the community health system cannot provide the support necessary to prevent deterioration of someone suffering mental illness.

So yes to the legislation being brought forward this spring but yes also to working with the community to enhance the services that are available in the community so that we can prevent the deterioration and the necessity for readmission.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has committed to enhancing the services and working with the community in that regard. I'd ask the minister if he will be working with the community to discuss with them bringing forward this legislation because many groups are in favour of community treatment orders, but others oppose community treatment orders.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we will be bringing forward the CTOs. I want to emphasize that this was recommended by a fatality inquiry last year, that this tool should be available to us. I also have received numerous calls and letters from parents in the community who want to have this tool to help assist with their adult children.

We do want to work with the community groups, associations that have been dealing with mental health issues over the years on what is necessary to provide a full scope of service in the community for persons with mental illness, and we will continue to do that not only before the bill is brought forward but right through the process until it's effectively implemented and onward.

Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday a High River man was seriously injured while working with cattle, and like thousands of other farm workers he is not covered by employment standards, occupational health and safety, or the labour code. He is now suing the farm owner for $1.2 million. The Premier recently made statements in the House that all Albertans are equal, yet this government continues to deny farm workers the same basic rights that others take for granted. To the Premier: does the Premier agree that all workers in Alberta regardless of sector should be protected equally, or are some Albertans more equal than others?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this matter has come up in the House a number of times with respect to protection that farm workers have. There are, of course, those working on family farms and those working on corporate farms. These are the questions that as a caucus we have chatted about. I know that the minister of agriculture and also the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry are looking into the matter and will bring forward to our caucus, in turn, some recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I hope we get past the review/recommendation stage and get to action.

Mr. Speaker, this lawsuit could possibly have been prevented had basic workplace regulations been in place. This would have benefited the worker by helping him to avoid injury and also the employer, who might now not be on the hook for over a million dollars. To the Premier: acknowledging that the costs associated with meeting basic safety requirements and coverage may be difficult for some agricultural operations to bear, will this government fund these costs and finally move Alberta into the 21st or even 20th century?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in many cases why should we be funding common sense? I mean, if it's a dangerous situation in any respect, just because we have regulations does not mean that somebody is going to follow them. We have many regulations. We have many laws. We have laws that say that people should stop at a stop sign, and they don't. So what is he saying? That we put a policeman at every intersection in this province to prevent people from not following the rules?

Mr. Chase: During the 1990s this government cut back on safety inspectors in all circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear that some small farms may deserve special consideration in Alberta's regulation and laws, but current legislation also shields large-scale and factory farms from any responsibility for farm workers' rights and safety. Will the Premier finally agree to put protection for farm workers in place on these large-scale operations?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the large-scale farm operations that I'm aware of have good, quality programs in place in terms of safety because they know that the health of their workers is critical. Secondly, it's also a liability issue for them, and they go a long way in terms of training on a regular basis. So a lot of work is being done by not only small operators but large corporate operators as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Wood Debris from Timber Harvesting

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What steps are you taking to ensure greater utilization of wood debris left over from timber harvesting in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Thank you for the cheering gallery here too.

Mr. Speaker, the debris fibre, the slash, that remains in the forest after harvesting belongs to the forest management agreement holder. That FMA holder, that company, is also responsible for removing or disposing of the debris and the cost of that removal in order to reduce fire hazard. There is some fibre intentionally left in the forest to decompose and provide nutrient. As for the remainder, the forest sector, the FMA holder, has the opportunity to process that wood debris for its own uses or to direct it to any other user.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is his department working with industry and others to explore options for wood debris?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer to that question is yes, absolutely. We start, of course, by knowing what we're dealing with, and my department is now reviewing the potential of the biomass resources in our forests. Three different ministries – Sustainable Resource Development, Energy, and Advanced Education – are looking into opportunities to direct this wood by-product, wood debris, into bioenergy initiatives. I'm happy to report that next week my department is cosponsoring a symposium here in Edmonton looking at bioproducts and bioenergy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What action is your ministry taking to examine bioeconomy opportunities related to wood debris?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Developing new uses for wood debris offers significant opportunities for sustainable economic growth in communities across Alberta to help us build a stronger Alberta. Both the Alberta Forestry Research Institute and the Alberta Research Council are supporting scientists working to develop value-added products with this debris fibre or biorefining technologies. They're looking at technologies to convert wood debris into transportation fuels, into chemicals, into power, into other materials. In fact, even opportunities for value-added products may soon exist in the plastics, pharmaceuticals, and chemical industries. One energy company, Expander Energy, has plans to convert wood fibre debris into hydrogen for heavy upgrading.

Holy Cross Care Centre

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Apropos of nothing yesterday in question period the Premier brought up my career in radio. Perhaps like many other Albertans he misses me on the radio because now he can't get both sides of the story like he used to. I had one basic rule on my talk show, and it was this: answer my questions, and I'll leave you alone. I'm looking for the answer the Premier promised me yesterday. Can he explain why there was no clause in the contract requiring the owners of the Holy Cross centre to pay the province back with interest the affordable housing grant they were given if that project fails?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I will say that the hon. member sent me a message asking me to stay here for his question, so thank you for the message.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you for staying.

Mr. Stelmach: You're welcome. What I was going to say is, of course, that this is a responsibility of the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, and he'll answer the question.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, there is a clause in the affordable housing program grant funding. The agreement is between the government of Canada, government of Alberta, and Enterprise Universal, such as you stated yesterday. Under the terms of the agreement . . .

The Speaker: We'll get to it, I'm sure, in the next one.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I guess we'll have to get the hon. minister to table that so we can read it. I've got constituents left, right, and centre calling my office, and they want answers to all kinds of questions they've got about the Holy Cross, going back years. So I'll try again with another question, and I don't want to hear about the affordable housing task force. Its report, which the government continues not to release to the public, is irrelevant to this question. Will the Premier direct all government departments to include a repayment with interest clause in all government contracts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can't say that now. I'll have to investigate further and see what it applies to in all departments, what it means. Most certainly, we'll investigate and get back to the hon. member.

The Speaker: You want to supplement, hon. minister?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I do want to say that the recipient must return the grant or the unused portion of grant including interest.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been looking for that answer for a few days now. Again to the Premier, and I promise that if he doesn't make fun of my old career, I won't make fun of his although, I suppose, both can involve shovelling some manure. Will the Premier please make clear to this House, the taxpayers of Alberta, and the constituents of Calgary-Currie how much money his government is going to lose on the Holy Cross gambit if the Grey Nuns affordable housing project fails to go through and get built?

Mr. Stelmach: Very tempted to – no, I won't go that way although I am very proud of my heritage, Mr. Speaker.

But specific to that, if the minister can answer in 15 seconds, fine. If not we'll get it to you.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, very clearly: none.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.
