Employment, Immigration and Industry is expanding funding by an additional $900,000 to enhance rural development capacity and programming activities with partners and stakeholders and provide additional resources for initiatives for projects to support focused strategies and leadership.

You will also see that the department has gained 72 full-time equivalent positions. Mr. Chairman, I'm quite proud to say that the Alberta Federation of Labour has actually sent an unprecedented thing, which is a letter of congratulations and thank you for the increased staffing that will help us support Alberta's labour market.

The positions help us with occupational health and safety assessments and employment strategies. Twenty-two positions are supporting immigration in areas like the provincial nominee program, researching and developing immigration policy and marketing Alberta to the world. Thirteen are focused on occupational health and safety, among them five new investigators who will be responsible for increased compliance and enforcement. Nineteen positions, including 10 investigators, are addressing employment standards compliance. Seven are addressing workplace relationships, meaning things like labour mobility, foreign credential recognition, and the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement. Eleven positions are getting the province's new office of statistics and information up and running. Mr. Chairman, this office will help us with the management of our labour negotiations by providing a comprehensive tool for all ministries to use to gather statistics that are relevant and determine trends.

Albertans receiving income support are going to see a 5 per cent increase in their benefits starting this July. This will enhance Alberta's approach to giving people a hand up and not a hand out. We're helping people find new opportunities to enter and be successful in the workforce by ensuring that they get the training and support they need.

Just before I conclude, I'd like to address a question that one of the hon. members gave relative to temporary foreign workers. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing was asked today: what happens when temporary foreign workers come? Where will they be housed? Well, they will not be able to qualify for the homeless and eviction fund. It is very clear by the documentation that is in place for the temporary foreign worker that low-skilled and semiskilled workers will have to be provided for by the company that brings them over. They will have to do that planning.

Beyond that, we have the minister's affordability task force that is working on housing strategies. We have municipalities engaged in housing strategies currently, and we have a number of different groups. I think that by the time you see the next upgrader built, when Total sites its new upgrader 15 to 18 months from now, the first phase, you will see that there will be sufficient housing in place for the construction workers that will be availing themselves of that opportunity. I wanted to just cite that before we were prepared to answer any questions. I invite those questions from the members opposite.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. minister for her presentation. A lot of statistics I didn't catch, but I can read about them in Hansard.

I was pleasantly surprised to get a report from the department called Economic Outlook for Alberta: Spring Update, which is kind of in the form of a PowerPoint presentation. I don't recall receiving this before. I don't know whether that has always gone to all members of the Legislature, but I find it amazingly helpful in giving us a kind of snapshot view of the economy.

Some of the things you've already mentioned, Madam Minister: GDP growth of 6.8 per cent in 2006, more than double the national rate; Alberta's population, of course, increased 109,000 in 2006; 86,300 new jobs created in 2006; bankruptcies at an all-time low; $11.6 billion spent on oil sands projects in 2006, projected to rise to more $16 billion this year.

Then this presentation talks about the downsides and that this growth is not sustainable, which is an interesting comment considering that one of the goals of the department is sustainable economic growth. There are all kinds of problems in terms of sustainability: the housing shortages, rental vacancy declining from 3 per cent to .9 per cent. House prices are way up, 50 per cent increase last year in Edmonton, and are continuing to rise. The consumer price index was 5.5 per cent, so I'm not all that impressed by the 5 per cent increase to core funding for income supports. Labour shortages are acute, and that's a particularly challenging aspect for this department. Over 8,600 experienced engineers and technicians are required each year for the next 10 years. There are so many issues there.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, there are other ways to measure economic growth. GDP measures money changing hands, and Alberta certainly has grown in terms of GDP over the years. But economic growth is only one way of measuring growth. The downside of economic growth indicates that in terms of quality of life there are other indicators to look at. I particularly appreciate Mark Anielski's work with the Pembina Institute, where he's developed the idea of a system of genuine progress indicators, which examines trends in the area of quality of life. In looking at the trends that he has studied, crime in Alberta has increased considerably, the divorce rate has increased considerably, substance abuse has increased, poverty has increased. It'll be interesting for the department to consider actually publishing a genuine progress outlook for Alberta as well as an economic outlook for Alberta, which leads me to look more closely at the employment section in the estimates.

That's the biggest proportion of the Employment, Immigration and Industry budget: $644 million. The estimates are on page 112. It's interesting that this whole section is entitled employment and not social services. You know, whatever happened to the ministry of social services? It seems to me that when I was beginning to get really active in my efforts at fighting against poverty back in the early 90s, when there were lots of cuts, there was a ministry of social services then. It seems to me that social development, which is really what this section is about, and economic development should be seen as one, yet it appears that social development has kind of been subsumed under economic development.

Now, I understand that that's typical of Conservative governments in recent years, which try to connect social assistance with workforce strategies. Sometimes it's called workfare or work first or, in the case of Alberta, Alberta Works, with the goal of reducing social assistance caseloads and increasing workforce participation. But for this movement to happen, there need to be adequate programs in place and services to enable people to move.

Now, I have the same problem with this department as I have with Municipal Affairs and Housing. When you're looking at housing, it's really important to have sufficient programs in place to move people along the continuum of housing from emergency housing to transitional housing, subsidized housing to affordable housing. In the case of social assistance programs the programs have to be sufficient to move people along off the social assistance into the work world. In other words, there has to be an adequate, quote, welfare mix. I think that's the term that's used so much now in the writings that I've been reading: an adequate welfare mix.

So I want to talk a little bit about this welfare mix. One part of this welfare mix that's really important is, of course, health benefits. I commend the department for the emphasis on the health benefits. So along with the Canada child tax credit and along with things like Alberta family employment tax credit, I guess, which is administered through the Finance department, there is the issue of health benefits and the continuation of health benefits, which follows a person when they move from social assistance into the work world. That's commendable. I mean, it has been one of the problems in the past, I think, that people often fell back into welfare and social assistance because getting into the work world and making so little money, maybe $8, $9, $10 an hour, they didn't have the benefits like health benefits.

This is a program that's been in place for a while, but I think it's commendable that health benefits like prescription drugs, eye exams, glasses, dental care, emergency ambulance services, essential diabetic supplies, et cetera, actually follow the person when they leave social assistance and move into the work world. I'm not sure how long those health benefits last. I mean, it would be good if they lasted a couple of years, at least, while people are getting themselves on their feet.

Now, that raises an interesting issue because one of the suggestions that came up in the Affordable Housing Task Force is: why couldn't there be a comparable thing for housing? In other words, in the social assistance program the income support program is broken up like the core program and the core shelter. Take a single person, a single adult; the core essential is $234. Then there's core shelter, which is divided up into living with relatives, social housing, and private housing. I don't understand that at all, I mean, why you would have three categories under core shelter. It seems to me that one would be sufficient. I'd like to have an explanation as to why there are three categories. Living with relatives for a single person, $100; social housing, $120; private housing, $168: all of which are really low. I don't know how anybody can live with those numbers.

But it seems to me that if a person is moving from social assistance into the work world, it'd be great if they could take that core shelter benefit with them. I mean, there has to be some supplement in the area of income. If we're not going to have rent controls, we've got to have a greater emphasis on the income side, some sort of wage supplement or core shelter benefit. It would be great to have something like that. That would help people manage this terrible housing market, where the rents are going way up.

For example, there is something in B.C. and New Brunswick, apparently, called the self-sufficiency project, which actually provided wage supplements to single parents up to three years after they left social assistance. Actually, that kind of program would cost the government no more because people would be moving off social assistance and beginning to pay income tax. That would be a way of promoting the person moving away from social assistance into the work world, helping people move out of poverty and towards independence and self-reliance, which surely is what the program of income supports is all about.

I'd like to look closer at the core benefits program and the numbers here. You know, I'm struck time and time again by such low numbers. The Edmonton Social Planning Council has issued a report recently. I'll come back to that.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. May I just say that the focus that the hon. member has given, first of all, by starting out with appreciation to our department for the production of statistical evidence to support MLAs is very much appreciated. I have appreciated the initiatives to gather the members of the opposition's perspective on things like our office of statistics and information. Those kinds of things help us.

Well, thank you for focusing on the employment program. This employment program is built with the premise that the best social program is in fact having a job. Much of the initiative here is to not only provide supports for people who are not expected to work but for those that are expected to work or that are temporarily unable to work and those that want to work but want to be retrained in some other position. Much of the theory behind linking both the employment and the industry was to in fact do exactly what the hon. member suggested; that is, to link the employment opportunities, the trainer, the person that's counselling people to get employment with the part of our ministry and our government initiative that deals with ministry and the employer. So I think that that in itself in this new structure gives us a chance to tie those ends together.

The question about whether or not we have adequate programs to do that. One of the things that I think is really clear is that we have not only provided assessment services in 59 various Alberta Works offices but counselling for people who may need to have an opportunity to find out what they're best suited for. We look at the opportunity to tailor a program to the needs of the individual, so if they need more skills training, training in writing resumés, and job placement, if they have a disability, if they need only part-time employment because they're planning to go back to school, if they are a learner and they are going to school and they are living with family but can't quite make ends meet, we have programs that provide core shelter supports for people, for individuals, that tailor the expectation of what they would receive based on whether they are expected to work or are working, people who are not expected to work, or people who are temporarily unable to work because they're learners.

I'm glad that the hon. member opposite recognized the benefit of having a health benefit program available for people so that they have an incentive to continue to earn more dollars and their health care supports stay with them. Those health care supports bridge their income from barely adequate to making sure, at least, that they themselves as adults or their children have health care support that assures us that on dental, on glasses, on things that they may need to sustain their health, they are adequately looked after. That is a good part of how we help people as they engage back in the workforce and need extra supports.

In terms of the income supports for learners we make sure that the rate of increase, which will take effect August 2007, will help them with the increased demands that we have on the learner living allowance, so dollars there are going to help them with that opportunity. What the hon. member was obviously talking about in places like New Brunswick and other places is covered by the rent supplement program that's part of municipal affairs, so if they only need some additional supports for their rent to make sure that they can manage on the dollars they receive, that program is also available.

When you look at our homeless and eviction prevention fund, the fund has the stream of dealing with the $7 million for people who are in dire emergencies, who need shelter support, who might need damage deposits, who might need utilities paid for, who might be faced with eviction, so we can provide some assistance. If we determine that in the short term rent supplement is adequate or in the longer term a more permanent arrangement for rent supplement can be provided, there's an opportunity for us to help them navigate into that part of our support services, and our department has been bridging with Municipal Affairs and Housing to make sure that those supports are provided.

All and all, with this housing, with the supports for people, it is targeted at people that do have the needs who have not been recent immigrants. But if we have people that are new Albertans that have no place to go that have been looking for shelter, there's extensive work done through our offices to try and make them comfortable by linking them with other program supports that may be available.

I look forward to continuing to answer questions of the hon. members opposite. I do thank you for these questions on the employment side. I should state at the outset here for all of you that will be questioning our budget this evening that if there are things in our review of the Blues that have not been responded to, well, we'll certainly try and fill those gaps. But as nearly as I can identify, the question about the adequacy of the programs: it seems to be working well because we've noted that even since the conversation about housing supports has been presented in this House, we have very few people coming to the offices soliciting program support, activities, or program responses. We are doing our best with those, but it hasn't been a huge encumbrance because there haven't been many people asking.

With that, I will sit again and look forward to further questions.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you very much, hon. minister. Rent supplements are one aspect of enabling people to move off of social assistance into the work world. I notice that one of the government's responses to the task force also identified the possibility of actually putting money into the hands of renters apart from rent supplement. Rent supplement is when the cheque goes to the landlord. But I think what I was after is some sort of housing component or housing support system that would put money into the hands of people on social assistance and then continue with them as they move into the work world. When we went around the province, we heard from people that actually putting more money into people's pockets gives people who are living in poverty more choices, and I would think that for a government that's stressing all the time the importance of choice, that would be something to investigate. Anyway, I just wanted to look at some of the numbers in the income supports a little further.

Public Interest Alberta issued a report just recently which I found quite fascinating in which they surveyed Albertans about what the real needs of Albertans are. What do we need to have a living wage in Alberta? They came up with some interesting statistics. It just gives one example, and this is an example of a single parent with three children. If you add up the basic costs – food, housing, transportation, utilities – it's about $2,000 a month. Household costs – clothing, furnishing, housekeeping, recreation – $643 a month. Cost of services – child care, primary education, et cetera – $1,000 a month. Long-term expenses, $517. It comes to $4,635.

If you look at the social assistance – and it doesn't matter what program you look at, whether it's those who are expected to work or those not expected to work or learners – the numbers are quite low. For example, for a single parent with two children before August 1 the core program was $1,391, and there's a 5 per cent increase, $70. After August 1, $1,461 plus the national child benefit supplement of $306 is $1,767. Well, hon. minister, that's less than half of what Public Interest Alberta came up with. So I'm not really impressed by a 5 per cent increase.

What does it cover? Does a 5 per cent increase cover all these programs? It's very difficult to tell from the budget because some items appear to go up; some appear to go down. For example, for people expected to work or are working, it appears to go down whereas for people not expected to work, it goes up.

I have a document here which gives an idea of the average monthly caseload. For example, not expected to work is about 11,400 households representing 17,600 people, including 5,200 children, and for temporarily unable to work the caseload is 6,600 households, and so on. This is from an Employment, Immigration and Industry release.

It's very difficult for me, and I have to do some thinking. Perhaps the minister could provide me with some help in understanding how the caseloads have gone through the last couple of years because, I guess, there's a 5 per cent increase in the budget. But if the caseloads go down, the numbers would come out differently. So I'm not quite sure. It's a bit hard to figure out. I was wondering: is there a new category here? The 5 per cent increase is for not expected to work and temporarily unable to work. Are those the same? Is temporarily unable to work the same as expected to work, or is that a different category? We have a new category now. We have not expected to work, temporarily unable to work, expected to work, and learners. Or are expected to work and temporarily unable to work the same? I don't know.

I have problems with using all of these categories and identifying people in terms of work. I know that the hon. minister would disagree with me on this, but I guess if I draw on my theological background as a preacher, I was always preaching that human beings are made in the image of God, and they have inherent dignity regardless of whether they work or not. You know, when you talk to somebody, you immediately say: "What do you do? What do you do for a living?" We almost assume that a person doesn't have value unless they contribute something to the economy, but I think that's a terrible mistake. People who are actually unable to work are unique individual human beings. So I think that putting them in a category like "temporarily unable to work," "unable to work," or "not expected to work" is a kind of slur. It's an undignified way of referring to a group of people. I don't like that kind of stereotyping.

Anyway, another issue that I would like to draw your attention to is one that I'm sure is dear to the hon. minister's heart. I mentioned as an example a single parent. I mean, one-quarter of the families in Canada are single parents. I was surprised not to find very much emphasis in this budget on women's issues. Isn't women's issues an Employment, Immigration and Industry responsibility? Where is it in the budget? I can only assume that maybe there's somebody who works in the minister's office who has responsibility for women's issues, but that doesn't seem to me to be adequate.

For example, there's an interesting program that I read about in Ontario. On March 27 of this year the McGuinty government in Ontario announced that more than $1.2 million will help low-income women develop new skills. It's a program called WIST, women in skilled trades program: instruction in welding, carpentry, landscaping, construction. This is actually in addition to $2.7 million over two years that was already there to provide training and information technology for low-income women. I think that's marvellous.

Maybe I've overlooked something, hon. minister, but it seems to me that if we are going to encourage – and you did mention that the workforce has to look at people who have special needs, aboriginal people and people living in poverty and the disabled. Certainly, we need to have more women in our workforce, especially women who have lived in poverty and especially lone parents, women who really struggle and need to be educated to learn a skill so they can contribute to the Alberta economy. So I was looking for something like that, and I didn't see that very much money is put into that, but perhaps I've misunderstood the budget.

Well, I think I better not go onto something next because I want to get into another topic altogether. So, Mr. Chairman, can I ask the minister for a response at this point?

The Chair: Absolutely.

Dr. B. Miller: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you so much because I was just sitting on the edge of my chair wanting to get up and respond. I just have to say this: as a woman I have found it very objectionable that frequently governments, including the federal government, will list the disadvantaged this way: disabilities, aboriginal, Métis, Inuit, women. You know, like, I really take exception to that. There are a lot of men that have disabilities as well. When I was doing the round-table on family violence and bullying, men frequently reminded me of that.

So I'd like to disabuse the suggestion right off the bat that women aren't in this budget. Under 2.1.2, on program delivery and support, the person that liaises with the status of women federal programming initiative is housed. But throughout our government this government gives more support to women in various programs than any other government on a per capita basis in Canada. May I remind this audience that Children's Services was struck so that women and children and families that needed supports were getting that kind of tailored support.

The supports for families with the family supports for children with disabilities; the welfare act for the enhancement of child delivery service that the Minister of Children's Services will speak to; in our budget 2.1.3, child support services, over $5 million, $5.313 million: all of those things are areas where we are able to provide support to people that are living on low incomes, principally women.

In many respects the other areas in this budget include that support for women who are seeking new skills, training. If you go and look at programs we support, like the Changing Together support services that we provide many project dollars to, there are 3,000 immigrant women that come into that program, many children as well, and they get support from dollars within the budgets here. So a great deal of the supported benefits are provided here for women.

Now, I'm going to logistically draw something to the attention of people here. When we categorize by department budgets for very specific programming – the hon. member has said it's been confusing because we are giving less in some categories and more in others. We had found that we had fewer academic people that were expected to work as a category because we found them jobs. It was those that were not expected to work that rose. You couldn't categorize them as people expected to stay home, people expected to stay home part-time only, and learners. You have to find a way of categorizing that they are expected to provide some opportunity for work. And they do want that opportunity for work. Many of them are so thrilled to get a job for the very first time. We found that with this ministry Alberta Works has been so successful at that that we have a reduced demand for people in that category because they are getting opportunities to work.

So, simply put, if you're a learner and you need a hand up while you're going back to school, we provide that, and we provide that kind of support. But if you're a person that doesn't have the opportunity to go back, that you can never go to work again, we also support people in that category with income supports, supplementary health benefits, additional kinds of supports in other categories of financial support.

If you stack what's given in many areas, including to those people that don't pay health premiums, those people that are paying a lower tax rate, and certain categories, if you did a full analysis of what they are given in terms of supports, what their cost of living is – admittedly, in the last few months with the significant growth there are some places where people could be expected to pay more, and that's where we step in.

We don't give them a continual support. But, for example, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North looked at her paper on the weekend and saw that we gave $6,700 to relocate a family to Prince Edward Island. Now, that was because they needed the support. They had family there. They had a job there. They had an opportunity to provide better services for their children there.

In the long term this government looks to what is best for the people that are in question. One month you might get $1,000 for support, a damage deposit, your utilities paid, your rent arrears paid, and three months later you could be coming back and asking for more. You're not able to manage your costs, you need that extra support, and there is significant flexibility built in the capacity of the counsellors to provide that, especially on this homeless protection fund. The staff have all acknowledged that it's important to make sure that people aren't living with the mental pressure of not having that support, so there is significant latitude in them making those kinds of decisions so that people don't have core shelter problems.

Admittedly, if you look exclusively at the rates for the single parent with three children, you don't see much money in that category, but there are other areas in which we provide them supports. It's part of this budget, and it's part of the Children's Services' budget in some cases. People have particular disabilities or situations where they require supports: taking apprenticeship, self-employment, training, workforce training for First Nations, any of the agriculture skills service programming, occupational training programming.

I want to close with just one wonderful story. We had a 57-year-old that was laid off, a woman that was no longer able to work at her chosen career. We gave her retraining. We gave her an opportunity to learn about occupational health and safety. Today she's running her own business. She is a successful businesswoman, retrained after 57 years of age, and five years later is a successful breadwinner and highly successful because of contracts that she's been able to get in southern Alberta with a variety of companies. That's the kind of thing that we target, giving people that dignity in the workplace, providing them technical supports when they need it, bridging for them so that they can have that extra capacity they need.

I have to tell you that I've been so proud to meet the staff that we have in the offices. They really are geared to providing more for people.

The real question is: what happened to the department of social services? The member posed that earlier. The department of social services is now two departments plus an opportunity to learn more about the workplace. We have that rolled into this Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

If you added up what's spent in Children's Services and Employment, Immigration and Industry on the poor, the disadvantaged, the disabled, the aboriginal person, there will not be another government that will even closely approximate what we are providing. I haven't even touched on the area of education and some of the other programming.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, thank you, hon. minister. But I need to be convinced still. For example, compared to other provinces, social assistance for a lone parent with one child – this is in 2001 – placed Alberta 10th; I mean, last among the provinces. The assistance was only 51 per cent of the LICO cut-off. That's the low-income cut-off amount. You're arguing that it's better today. I hope so. Your pride in this social assistance program I hope is true. We'll have to look at the comparative statistics and see where that comes out.

Now, you mentioned that there are things covered by Children's Services and other departments. I don't know how you deal with the silo of a problem there. Child care is with Children's Services. Family employment tax credits with Finance. Housing is with Seniors and Community Supports or Municipal Affairs and Housing. Their health benefits are with Employment, Immigration and Industry. I really don't know how you can develop a holistic kind of comprehensive approach with just the right mix of welfare, which actually can save the government money down the road because, you know, if we have the right kind of programs that provide the kinds of supports that families need, then they can get on their feet faster.

I'm thinking of a really, really great program called families first, which is based on the research that Gina Brown did at McMaster University, which proved that supports for recreation, for example, for single-parent families save the government a lot of money down the road in terms of, you know, dependence on the health system and the criminal justice system and so on because kids are involved with sports and recreation and so on.

You mentioned the importance of the workers. I think they have a great responsibility. I commend them. I think they have to look at not just what people are entitled to, but they have to look at people holistically and really understand their needs so that we can sort of bridge the gap between the real needs that families have and the supports that they need.

I want to move on to a completely different topic; that is, the labour standards and workplace safety, which is another section in the estimates. I want to just begin by referring to a press release from the department recently about the provincial occupational fatality rate being lowest in more than a decade. I think that it's laudable that last year saw fewer workplace deaths, disabling injuries, and lost time claims in Alberta. There were 124 occupational fatalities in 2006 compared to 143 in 2005, including 33 motor vehicle incidents, and you know that's still high. The hon. minister is quoted in this press release as saying that even one workplace death is one too many, and I agree. So I'm encouraged by the commitment of the department to deal with this.

In the business plan there is mention about the provincial lost time claim rate, that for 2006 was 2.3 per 100 person-years, and that's down from 2.41 in 2005. But in terms of the goal of the department, it's to even get it down further, and I was wondering what it will take to get us to a better rate.

You mentioned in the beginning, hon. minister, about the inspectors, the additional hiring of inspectors to examine workplaces, and it was too quick for me. I started to write down how many new inspectors there would be doing different duties, and there's an increase in the budget of about $7 million, from $29 million to $36 million. That's commendable if there are more inspectors. You mentioned that the AFL had sent a congratulatory letter.

I think we are really concerned that there be adequate safety inspectors in Alberta. There was an announcement recently about one particular oil field service company being sentenced for workers' injuries, and that's interesting. I don't know how often that occurs and whether we have enough safety inspectors to actually provide the evidence so that that kind of prosecution can take place. I hope that that's going to happen in the future, that more employers are held accountable.

Now, I'd just like to say a word about the fact that 33 out of the 124 deaths were from motor vehicle accidents. In last year's budget I raised the whole issue of safety on the highways because there was the McDermid report in June 2004, which states that 3,875 people died on Alberta roads between 1992 and 2002 and that traffic crashes take six times more lives than homicides. The response to the McDermid report: I'm not convinced that it's adequate.

I know this department is not involved directly. It's the Solicitor General, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation – I heard the hon. minister talking about their response to the McDermid report a little while ago – and the Minister of Justice. But because so many of these motor vehicle accidents happen while people are engaged in work – and, I mean, so much work is done in the province with the use of our vehicles, whether you're talking about truckers or talking about workers moving from sites in northern Alberta and the oil sands down to Fort Saskatchewan. Surely, there must be an involvement in terms of cross-ministry efforts to respond to the McDermid report. I know that there is something called the traffic safety plan. I don't know whether this department is involved with that or not.

While we're on this topic of labour standards and workplace safety, a very important aspect of the budget in regard to workplace safety is the area of employment standards. Employment standards are very, very important in protecting the physical and financial well-being of Albertan workers. Job security is an important part of a worker's quality of life.

In announcing the employment standards review in 2005, the department of human resources noted that the employment standards code was last reviewed in 1988, and since then technological advances, globalization, and changes to family and workplace demographics have altered Alberta's workplaces. As a part of the employment standards review there was lots of involvement: 50 labour, employer, and social advocacy associations. Five thousand and five hundred individual Albertans contributed to this review through the public consultation process.

Clearly, this is a very important issue to the health of Alberta's workforce, but my question to the minister is: where is the employment standards review? Is the review process complete? When can we expect to see the report? Are there recommendations that should be implemented? Is there something that's blocking this report from being publicized? I think lots of people throughout Alberta who contributed to the review process would like to know where that report is at.

A couple of other items that I'd like to raise that I think are really important. I think Alberta is the only province in Canada that doesn't have a compassionate care provision in the employment standards. I was wondering if there was any intention on the part of the department to investigate compassionate care because, you know, in terms of our work responsibilities we often have to take time off to care for people, and all of us have had to care for elderly relatives, especially those who are terminally ill. To not have a compassionate care provision seems to be an oversight.

Another area that I'd like to see more investigated is working alone regulations. I know that there is a regulation under employment standards for working alone. But it's interesting. I came across some reference to the development of legislation in B.C. They call it Grant's law, which focuses on gas station workers, named after a fellow named Grant De Patie, who was killed trying to prevent a gas-and-dash robbery. On that . . .

The Chair: Unfortunately, time has elapsed.

It's time for the hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you very much. Perhaps I should just take a moment and comment about the interest the hon. member has expressed in safety and keeping people safe and looking at this whole area of workplace health and safety and the dollars we're expending and how we're expending it there.

I'll talk a little bit, first of all, about the area of the safety culture and the programs that the hon. member is asking about. I know that a good part of what was initiated last fall was a program to help what they describe as the rookie worker, the student in school that might be engaged in the workforce for the very first time. School programming in junior high and high school is beginning to build on the principles of safety that students are taught, hopefully, from the time they're born and build on what they need to know when they go into the workplace for the first time.

When I spoke with Dr. Louis Hugo Francescutti, he said that the best time to start training somebody to be safe in the workplace or safe anywhere in society is from the time they were born, to teach everything from turning the porridge pot in so that they won't reach up and grab it, and that the various things that a parent does in teaching a child are probably the most significant things that can happen to children in their growing years. We've also discovered that the rookie at any job needs to be taught. The first six months of almost any endeavour are sometimes the most hazardous because people don't know what they don't know, and they need a lot of mentoring and training to make sure that they're looking after things well.

So a good part of our employment standard positions – we've actually got 19 employment standard positions, including 10 investigators, in this budget to address compliance and education issues. They're the most excited team. I met with some of them in Calgary when I first got this ministry, and they're the most excited people to go out and engage people in meaningful dialogue about how to make the workplace safer.

What I feel that this budget is trying to do is really engage the workplace today in safety practices. I've spoken to Exxon Mobil. It's a fascinating boardroom. Their biggest and only sign in their boardroom is: nobody gets hurt. Their first agenda item every Monday is safety: what are the accident rates? It's been very heartening to talk to the major industries about what they're doing. We have to build on that, and that's what our thrust is.

To be perfectly candid, my department would very much have liked to see us able to table an employment standards review in this session, but we have, I think, a little bit more work to do on some facets of it. It's something that they have been doing their due diligence on over the last four years to try and make sure that it's ready for consumption in the House. I'd have to say that they have shown significant initiative around the employment standards review, but I think that in this legislative session we've got a pretty full plate.

Looking at other areas that the hon. member has cited, like motor vehicle accidents, like things contained in the McDermid report, there may be an opportunity for us to engage in a full debate on that at some future date. Clearly, the design of highways, the design of communities to prevent motor vehicle accidents is something that our transportation officials are looking at. When I speak to people like Ian Reid of Finning, he reminds me of the importance that he places on no use of cell phones in vehicles. Schlumberger has also moved to that policy. Many of the larger industrial providers that our friend Mr. Sloan talks to every day have those kinds of safety practices in order so that they are doing their part to make sure they reduce accidents. The RCMP are working with the Solicitor General on programs. They illustrate at county and community fairs the impact of accidents when people aren't driving at safe speed limits and aren't buckled up. So I think there are a number of programs that are hoping to address the motor vehicle accident initiative.

What I feel best about, if one can feel good about bad statistics, is that with the increased number of jobs this past year, we actually have a reduced number of people that met their death as a result of an activity, an incident at the workplace or associated with illnesses and disease affiliated with the workplace. So we are reducing that.

However, one thing the hon. member might like to know is that besides the lost time claimed, we are looking at a new statistic that was introduced by my predecessor relative to the modified time claim, which really shows the people that have been placed back in the workplace even though they have an injury. They don't do the same job, but we're adding those stats. I believe that that's going to give us a clearer picture. The net result and the reason why we keep reducing the numbers – while we would hope we have no more deaths, it may be unrealistic to get to that level in one year, but we keep setting the bar for fewer deaths so that people keep sensitive to the fact that ideally we would have no deaths in the workplace.

One program that Shell Canada provided for me was a very exciting and almost heart-rending program, where they took pictures at a sour gas plant of all the employees' children, and they posted them around the sour gas plant along with slogans saying: Daddy, come home today; Mom, I'm looking forward to seeing you after school. These big, blow-up pictures of the children are there to remind parents to get home safely. We are promoting this.

I had a meeting with a former senior officer from one of the major Edmonton-based industries the other day who spoke to me about something he believed would be an incentive, and that was that if there's a death in the workplace, the person that's responsible for that plant should know that they are released from their employment. Now, I'm not proposing we go that far at this time, but I am seriously looking at all of those things that can be incentives to better performance, which is my preferred route to the disincentives.

You'll see a track record in this government of higher fines for people that fail to report incidents, especially emissions and those sorts of things at the industrial level. I remember probably about 13 years ago an unprecedented judgment to an industry who had failed to report emissions that breached standards. I think you'll see today less and less tolerance for an unsafe culture. Our Premier would probably say that it was un-Albertan.

One other point on compassionate care. We recognize that the federal government has introduced compassionate care although it is not currently part of our employment standards. People with some of the small businesses have reminded me that if we did introduce compassionate care in the same manner in which it's been introduced federally, it may well be a burden that's too big for the small business owner to keep and retain a position for someone if they were away time and time again and with the extended family. They've noted that. But we'll look at that when we come back with any further legislative template on the employment standards.

With that, I'll sit and wait for more questions.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Yes. Thank you. I just have one more item to add to this area of workplace safety. Working with high-voltage power lines is an extremely dangerous job. Recently an EPCOR worker died as his crew was working to replace a wooden power pole. The issue I want to bring to the minister's attention is not the safety of workers because there are safety rules and lots of education in place for linemen working with high-voltage power lines. What about the safety of nonworkers, of ordinary citizens who may find themselves close to fallen power lines? Trained linemen can deal with live wires, but what about children and youth?

A retired systems operator in a control centre has explained to me that it is the common practice to re-energize a line – this is called a reclose – without knowing what caused the outage to happen. By reclosing the line without complete information about the nature of the fault condition, non utility workers and ordinary citizens might unwittingly be exposed to the possibility of injury or electrocution.

Now, I have the benefit of reading a paper that's produced by a member of your department, Ray Cislo. I think it's a really important, well-written discussion paper on this question. It's called Manually Reclosing Electrical Breakers Following an Outage: Safety Implications for Non-utility Workers. A question was asked about this in 1988 by Mr. Tannas, who asked the minister of labour about this very issue, but that's a long time ago. What has been done about this issue since 1988? Is it the policy of the department to accept the reclosing issue as an acceptable risk? I guess that's the issue. If that's the case, why should our provincial standards be lower than other jurisdictions?

Now, this is a very complicated issue, and I think that some companies, like Enmax, are dealing with it through more advanced technology. Still, it's of great concern on the part of a retired systems operator who had the responsibility of reclosing the line and felt the responsibility very deeply that somebody could be injured. Even if it was a balloon that hit the power lines and somehow the balloon was still connected to the power lines when the reclosing took place, then I don't know what would happen. I think it's a serious issue. Anyway, it would be nice to hear a reply about that. I was going to ask it in question period, but I never got the question out.

I want to move on now to immigration. The minister has signed an immigration policy with the federal government as part of a made-in-Alberta immigration strategy. I don't have many details about this agreement. I assume that it's to deal with the provincial nominee program, which the hon. minister mentioned in her introduction. There is an increase in budget to deal with the provincial nominee program. Manitoba's program brought about 6,600 skilled immigrants to Manitoba last year. Alberta is way, way down. I think the hon. minister mentioned some goals, that you expect to bring under the provincial nominee program many more immigrants, in the thousands, in future years. This, I think, is a really important part of the workforce strategy for Alberta. You know, this is completely separate from the temporary foreign workers, which we may want to talk about next. It's really important for Alberta to have an immigration policy that brings people here in such a way that they can stay here in Alberta and contribute to our workforce.

Now, the typical problems of immigration in Canada do occur here in Alberta. I mean, for one thing, it still remains to be the case that the proportion of immigrants living in poverty is much higher than for a native-born Canadian. You know, it's amazing how many years after immigrant families come to Canada that they still are not finding a way to be a part of the workforce the way they want to. I mean, I think the statistics from your own department indicate that 52 per cent of immigrants who have come to Alberta were not able to find a job in their intended occupation. There's something that doesn't fit here. If we're intending to get skilled workers to come to Alberta to be a part of our workforce and we're desperate for workers, how is it that so many people come here and don't find the job that they really want?

I can think of one particular temporary foreign worker who responded to an ad in Mexico to come to a farm in southern Alberta because they wanted somebody with veterinary experience, and he had a master's degree in veterinary science. When he got here, he didn't do anything of the sort in the area of veterinary work. He worked as a mechanic. He even drove a truck on the highway, and he didn't have a licence. He has since gone back to Mexico. It's a problem. It's really a black mark on our immigration program when things like that happen.

The retention of immigrants is a huge issue. Between 25 and 30 per cent of immigrants abandon this province after living here for a couple of years, compared to only 10 per cent in B.C. I've asked that question in the House to the hon. minister about this, and the response has been: "Well, they didn't fit into the community. They had problems with adjusting to the community." Really, when you look at the housing issue, surely that's a big part of it, that they can't get into the workforce right away. There's a time where they're really struggling. They're struggling to pay for housing, and they give up, and they go somewhere else in Canada. I think that's a huge issue.

You know, I'm happy that in the budget there is lots of money for programs that would support, for example, the Mennonite Centre for Newcomers, settlement services, enhanced language training, and so on. That's really important although I noticed that that money hasn't gone up.

There's more money for the provincial nominee program and international marketing. I'm not sure what that is. Is that a desk in every embassy in the world to attract workers? I'm not sure what that is.

There's more money for attracting immigrants to this province, but what about money to cover settlement services? I mean, one of the problems of retaining immigrants is to recognize their foreign credentials. Now, it's a problem not unique to Alberta but across Canada that immigrants have too often been underemployed or unemployed because the credentials they bring are not recognized, so it's important that we have adequate mechanisms in place to ensure that recognition takes place. We need the government to work more closely with professional associations to somehow speed up the process of recognition.

I mean, the statistics: one-third of immigrants never worked at a job that was related to their professional skills. One-third. Two-thirds of immigrants had to take over one or two unskilled jobs to support their families. That is not acceptable. We need to speed up the process somehow of recognizing credentials. I don't know whether the minister can shed some light on that.

I think that's all I want to say right at the moment. I'd like to raise the issue of temporary foreign workers in the next round. Thank you.

Ms Evans: Well, I'm just delighted to have an opportunity to respond on the immigration program because, quite frankly, this is an exciting initiative. In fact, when I first came into government 10 years ago, I would never have dreamed that we would have an actual profiling of immigration in a ministry at the provincial level because of the capacity the federal government brings to still examining the immigration file from the standpoint of the safety, security, and health of the individual coming forward.

Under direction from our Premier it's very clear to me that the first people that we bring to bear to the job market are Albertans. That includes aboriginal, both on and off reserve, and Canadians next. So very, very clear in my mind in this mandate for this minister is to make sure that we do as much as possible to provide Albertans an opportunity for working.

Now, the increased incentive to move forward on the immigration file is really because of what we perceive is the shortage of labour in a variety of positions, and previously they may have been predominantly in the skilled or academic area. When we look at the larger construction projects, the building of an upgrader that might take up to 4,000 individuals, it's very clear that we need to take a look at what our capacity is for labour mobility; hence, our B.C./Alberta TILMA agreement that gives us some options. Then we have to look at a number of other things. It's a very interesting process because there's no way you can address immigration in a simple yes or no.

For example, foreign credential recognition is an important part of what one does and the labour intensity that's involved in making sure that people have the capacity to engage in the jobs to which they have ascribed. A good part of what we are doing is working with the professional regulatory organizations – APEGGA, the chartered accountants, other professional groups – to make sure that the credentials that people bring to bear on these jobs are credentials that they can accept. One of the areas that's been most difficult, as the hon. member knows, is with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the qualifications of some 10,000 physicians in England that we would like to attract and bring over here. They might be missing obstetrics, so we have to figure out ways to bridge that so that they can become accredited here. There's significant work with the credentials for professional licensure.

For the skilled trades Alberta apprenticeship and industry training, AIT, is the only regulator of the trades. These assessments allow tradespeople to challenge the exam within 180 days of arrival in Alberta. These are things that we take very seriously. They must pass those examinations. If I get any complaints, it's frequently that people miss the exam by a small margin. We have to make sure that employers work at educating tradesmen, and that's another area of our engagement here.

Finally, the employers themselves. Given that approximately 15 per cent of the trades and professions are regulated and 85 per cent are unregulated, employers are responsible for recognizing the qualifications required on the job and their prior work experience in giving them those options for learning.

We've also placed in this budget another $500,000 for work on international credential recognition. We're up to $1.7 million. We have significant programs, bridging programs that enable people to get engaged. It's very interesting that many of the nonprofit organizations in some of the communities also help with their own bridging programs, so they can initiate the capacity of someone to get involved in the workplace, and they're doing magnificent things.

I would invite the hon. member to join his colleagues from Calgary someday who have gone to the wonderful activities there where they honour and recognize and provide awards to those people that have done so well. You can see the real efforts that have been made by the community in helping in the bridging programs. I do mention Calgary because 60 per cent of the immigrants that come to Alberta currently are residing in Calgary, and in that heated economy people would say: well, can they survive? They're not only surviving; they are absolutely glowing. I have to cite Lina, who is an incredible example of an Italian woman who started a small business, and it's mushroomed so that she literally employs immigrants from all over the world. So it's exciting to see what's happening here.

Our whole immigration program will expand on the foreign credential recognition, expand the numbers of provincial nominees from six years ago, 128, to about 2,500 provincial nominees this year, which will enable us to get chosen specialized trades, skilled trades, and professionals to help us build the capacity. In effect, it allows us to bypass the queue with those people that are particularly qualified. To the hon. member opposite: I think it's exciting that the federal government has agreed to write back to those people who have applied to be in the health care professions – doctors, physiotherapists, nurses, and pharmacists – and say: you wanted to come to Alberta for this purpose; here's your opportunity. We hope to get 2,500. We hope to tap in on international students so that we can really build that part this year.

The temporary foreign worker program is harder to respond to because it's contingent on, as I've mentioned before, the employer identifying the need, citing that need, going through the labour market opinions, getting that endorsement from the federal government in consultation with us, and then moving forward on the numbers that would be required.

I think that what I find most exciting is that this made-in-Alberta immigration program has been the result of workers that I have accompanying me, that are seated with me and also upstairs: Susan Williams, Ellen Hambrook. I see Mark Asbell up there and Neil Irvine, people who have brought together pieces of other ministries and have just gathered all of this immigration up and totally embraced the opportunity. I'd like to pay special credit to about 12 people that Rick Sloan has had working with him on the immigration agreement, which took an unprecedented 28 days to negotiate with the federal government and is a better agreement by far than the Ontario agreement because it doesn't cap the number of dollars that we are going to achieve for support of this immigration file.

The feds, for their part, have doubled up the amount of money on the integrated settlement services, and we believe that the pilot project on health, the additional co-operation and the partnership between Canada and Alberta, will bear fruit. There is a disputes clause, and in five years the government can review the capacity of this agreement to serve the needs of Albertans. Essentially, I think what we have is the groundwork for some very positive results.

Now, one more point to the hon. member. I would really ask the hon. member to provide me a copy of that interesting study that he cited at the beginning of his remarks relative to injuries that might be unintended consequences of being involved in the workplace, and I see, Mr. Chairman, that there's an indication that he may be willing to provide that. I look forward to it. Our staff are expressing great enthusiasm to have a look at it and see if there's any part of that that we can use in a measure of helping us with any of our safety issues. They are striving for the healthiest, safest workplace possible, so I look forward to receiving a copy of that at the appropriate time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this opportunity to participate in this discussion on the budget for Employment, Immigration and Industry this evening. Certainly, I would like to state on the record at this time to the hon. minister that there are some very diligent, compassionate, and kind citizens working in her department. Specifically, I had the opportunity to meet some of them in the employment standards office recently, in the last six weeks, and they are a fine reflection of the entire civil service. Hopefully, someone is not going to come by and hire them away for more money than what she is paying them, because they're worth every dollar that the province pays to them. They do their best under what I consider to be difficult circumstances.

Now, the minister just talked, you know, about our made-in-Alberta immigration program. I don't have the same confidence that the minister has in this program or her promotion of this program because I'm seeing first-hand through our constituency office the horror show which is this temporary foreign worker program. I have a number of questions, Mr. Chairman, in regard to that.

First, before I get to my questions, I would like to explain to the hon. minister that she cannot pawn this off on the federal government and say that this is a problem with the government because I have a document here that is from the Alberta government, from a department of the Alberta government, that is a letter indicating the qualification of a prospective temporary foreign worker before he comes into the country, before he even pays his $10,000 fee to the broker that is skinning him of his hard-earned money before he comes here. This is one reason why this government can't distance itself from the failures of this program, because this is an assessment of the workers' qualifications before they're allowed to come into the country.

I will read part of this. From your date of arrival in Alberta you will have 180 days to write the exams and obtain your Alberta certification. If you are unsuccessful with the exams to gain certification, you will no longer be able to work in this trade in the province of Alberta. The individual that's listed in this letter is an individual who holds a compulsory trade certificate. We are allowing all these individuals into this country and giving them 180 days to qualify for a red seal.

Now, we had a brief discussion on this, an interesting discussion, last week in Public Accounts. I would urge the hon. minister and her staff to read the responses that came from Advanced Education there because they are in contradiction to what is stated in this letter. Not only is this letter dated and signed by government officials from this province, but also it is used as a supporting document by the broker. All this is happening before the individuals get into this country.

Mr. Chairman, the questions that would also apply in this case are: what happens to these temporary foreign workers when the company who has the labour market opinion – the company is operating in Alberta and is listed on the visa as the employer – fails to provide the jobs listed? I have an example here of six if not seven welders, and we're always complaining that there are not enough welders in this province. These people paid megabucks to some unscrupulous broker to get to this country. They pay their own way here, and when they get here with these temporary foreign worker visas, there are no jobs. They're told at the same time by an agent of the broker in this country that they have to do what they say. These workers are being intimidated, they're being bullied, and it's wrong. It's not Canadian. It's un-Albertan, as the Premier would say. It's totally wrong. This program is out of control. Now, what happens to these temporary foreign workers? If you could explain this to me, I would be very grateful.

Also, Mr. Chairman, is this visa, which places so many restrictions on these temporary foreign workers for their employment in Alberta, a violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights? Do you have a legal opinion supporting that these visas here, which limit and restrict what the temporary foreign workers can do, are not a violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights?

What is the department doing to stop the agencies from charging these enormous fees to arrange these temporary foreign workers' visas, these fees and the promises that these people are making? I'm pleading with the minister and the department to get some sort of controls on these so-called agents.

If a temporary foreign worker has a six-month job opportunity to weld in this province, why are they only being issued four-month visas? If we've got 180 days to test them, they can work for four months, and their visa is going to expire. They're going to be long gone before any of the welds that they do are possibly X-rayed. There's something wrong with this program.

I can't understand why we're continuing with an immigration policy when we can't handle what we're already doing. We cannot blame it all on the feds. Some of it is certainly their fault but not all of it. And there's the whole issue of security. It takes people in this province longer to get a passport than it does some of these workers from different places in the world to get a temporary foreign worker visa. How exactly does that work?

Now, in the time I have left, Mr. Chairman, I would also like to ask if the department at this time is considering doing any work to study the possibility of giving WCB coverage to construction workers for cancers that are related to their workplace activities. I'm very grateful that the firefighters have WCB coverage now for some work-related cancers. Is the government studying the cancer rate particularly for welders and for boilermakers who do vessel entry and other tradesmen who are in direct contact with catalysts and other parts of the industrial processes? When can they expect to be covered for work-related cancers? Is the department doing anything to document that?

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I have one more question. I would urge the hon. minister at some point to visit an English as a Second Language class with me. I'd be delighted to make the arrangements, and she could come and meet some of these new Canadians firsthand. I'm sure she has met many. I don't think we're paying them enough to take their English as a Second Language courses on a monthly basis. I think we need to increase that rate to reflect what it costs to rent an apartment, what it costs to feed and clothe their families, and I really would again ask the department and the minister to have a second look at this as their immigration policy. Let's support family immigration from all over the world, and let's quit this corporate 21st century slavery that's going on in the form of these temporary foreign workers.

Thank you.

The Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(c) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Infrastructure and Transportation and Employment, Immigration and Industry relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 16, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/16

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Her Excellency Elena Stefoi, ambassador of Romania. It was my pleasure to host the ambassador at lunch earlier today and to welcome her to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, in 2006 Alberta's exports to Romania totalled more than $10 million, mostly in agrifood products, pork, peat moss, and animal feed. Immigration from Romania to Alberta is increasing, with skilled workers accounting for the vast majority of new arrivals to our province.

I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly some students from the Rosedale Christian school in Crooked Creek, a very prestigious and important small school in my riding. There are seven youths and six adults accompanying them in a group. They're here today to tour the Legislature and to observe the functioning of the Legislative Assembly. They're in the members' gallery. I would ask them all to rise, please, and I'd ask my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you members of my staff. This is indeed a privilege because my staff have been deep in the hollows of the ministry working very hard lately and have come out today for second reading of Bill 26. I would like to introduce Bill Nugent and Steve Murphy of the legal services branch; Ron Cust, the director of the legislative projects branch; Steve White, the executive director of the assessment services branch. If I could ask this Assembly to give them the recognition that they so much deserve.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you I'd like to introduce two very hard-working administrative assistants within the transportation and civil engineering division of my ministry. Mona Koch and Jennifer Tate are joining us this afternoon in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three people who work for a very important organization in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Jerry Roantree is the volunteer co-ordinator of the St. Albert Help Society and is the president of the Alberta Association of Meals on Wheels Services, which represents more than 30 Meals on Wheels organizations in this province. With her today is Liz Tondou, who is the executive director of Meals on Wheels in Edmonton, in my constituency. Jim Draginda is the manager of marketing and fund development for Meals on Wheels and until last November was our outreach caseworker in Edmonton-Centre, and we miss him. The three of them are standing. I would ask you all to please give them a warm welcome.

Second, I'm really delighted to introduce to you Melody Cesar. Melody is going into her second year at the University of Alberta. She is studying psychology and political science, but what she really wants to do is go on and take a master's in speech pathology. She is already speaking four languages, she's working on her fifth, and she would like to put that particular talent of hers to good use in helping people in the speech pathology field. She's with the Edmonton-Centre constituency office for the summer as our STEP student. I would ask Melody to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege today to introduce to you and to the Assembly three members of the Marie Lake Air and Water Society and concerned citizens: Don Savard, Helen Parfitt, and Chris Goss. They're here because they want to raise concerns about Marie Lake and the fact that they're not getting answers to their questions and concerns from SRD.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two members of the staff at the Palace Casino. Roxanne Draudson and Sheri Panas are both employees of the casino, and they have been on strike now for 250 days, due in part to the government's failure to provide fair and balanced labour legislation in our province. I would ask that they both please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Camrose Kodiaks Hockey Team

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night I attended the welcome home reception as the Camrose Kodiaks returned from the Royal Bank Cup, the national junior A hockey championships. Hundreds of billets and fans gathered to celebrate another outstanding season for the Kodiaks. After a division-leading season the Kodiaks won the Alberta Junior Hockey League championships and went on to win the Alberta/B.C. Doyle Cup. This gave the opportunity for the Kodiaks to represent Camrose, Alberta, and British Columbia at the Royal Bank Cup.

Unfortunately, this was not Camrose's year at the national championships. The Kodiaks lost the semifinals to the host Prince George Spruce Kings in a record-breaking fifth overtime period. Despite the loss, the Camrose Kodiaks still took the opportunity last night to recognize their successes this season. A highlight of the evening was when team captain Brady Cook spoke about each of his teammates and the outstanding contributions each made to the overall success of the team.

The Kodiaks have developed a very successful junior hockey program. This June the team will honour all teams and players at a 10-year reunion celebration. In their short history the team has won the Alberta Junior Hockey League championship four times, the Doyle Cup four times, national champions in 2001, and were national silver medallists in 2003 and 2005. Part of that success is based on the team's ability to recruit high-quality players from across Alberta. This year's Kodiak roster had players from such places as Strathmore, St. Albert, Calgary, Edmonton, Cochrane, Ponoka, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, Rosalind, Hardisty, Viking, Daysland, and New Norway.

I want to salute head coach Boris Rybalka and assistant coaches Doug Fleck and Miles Walsh for another outstanding season. The team is also dependent on the strong support of their owners, the Camrose Sport Development Society, chaired by Barry Fossen. The Sport Development Society's purpose is to promote sport and recreation in the Camrose region. Congratulations for 10 years of the Camrose Kodiaks in my constituency and best wishes for continuing success.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Edmonton Meals on Wheels

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I introduced Jerry, Liz, and Jim from Edmonton Meals on Wheels, and now I would like to celebrate their organization. Since delivering their first meals in 1969, Meals on Wheels' dedicated volunteers have delivered thousands of meals to seniors and housebound individuals in the Edmonton community. Every day 400 to 500 meals are made and delivered which promote health and well-being for their clients. The organization continues to develop new menus and programs to serve the increasing diversity of dietary requirements and the diversity of the clients.

The Meals on Wheels program ensures that the clients can maintain independent lifestyles. Eighty-seven per cent of the people they serve are over the age of 70, and 82 per cent are living alone. People choose from monthly menus, and the service can accommodate diabetic, no-rice, no-pork, and no-fish diets as well as offering texture-modified meals, which some people require. The choice given to clients helps meet the needs of the growing population of seniors and others in our community.

The greatest strengths of the Edmonton Meals on Wheels program are seen in the dedicated volunteers, who give of their time to help provide nutritious, balanced meals to those in need. Volunteers are asked to dedicate three hours per week to the organization, and in return the volunteers have the rewarding experience of making a difference in their community. In many instances a volunteer may be the only contact an individual has with others during the day. Volunteers come from all sectors of society: from high school and postsecondary students to parents and preschool kids to the retired and semiretired. In 2006 421 volunteers gave over 62,000 hours of their time to work in the kitchen, deliver meals, or help in administration. The service of these fabulous individuals is essential to the Meals on Wheels program. People receive not only meals from Meals on Wheels but also companionship and community.

Please join with me in recognizing the valuable and generous work done by the Edmonton Meals on Wheels programs and other Meals on Wheels programs in Alberta.

Agrivalue Processing Business Incubator

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I had the privilege of attending the grand opening of Alberta's new Agrivalue Processing Business Incubator in the city of Leduc. This is a $20 million investment in our agricultural sector. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food officially opened the incubator, and I had the chance to join him on a tour and even sampled some of the very delicious new products being developed at this facility. And I must say that I was truly impressed.

Mr. Speaker, this facility is state of the art and is Canada's first-ever incubator dedicated to supporting entrepreneurs and businesses in the food processing industry. Totalling some 74,000 square feet, it provides up to eight businesses with a private, fully serviced suite which they lease to grow their businesses in prior to launching out on their own premises. Staff from Agriculture and Food also work hand in hand with incubator clients to provide technical, marketing, and business support, service that goes above and beyond what is offered by other facilities.

Mr. Speaker, the incubator is also about encouraging and enhancing a value-added culture in our agriculture industry, something that is highly valued by our government. This centre will help get businesses and their new products and technologies ready for the marketplace. It would also bring new Alberta-grown and -produced products to grocery stores across the province and around the world.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate all the partners involved in the creation and operation of the incubator. It is a truly unique Alberta innovation that promotes our value-added industry and our province's can-do attitude. We should all be proud of this great facility.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Royalty Program

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers recently indicated that 33 of the 65 oil sands projects approved had reached the 25 per cent royalty payout phase. The list of projects that have reached this phase is not made public due to the provisions of the Mines and Minerals Act.

Financial statements from various oil sands projects do provide some information on the royalty status of some projects. The Canadian Oil Sands Trust 2006 fourth-quarter report reveals that their operation at the Syncrude joint venture shifted to the 25 per cent royalty payout phase in the second quarter of 2006. Canadian Oil Sands Trust ownership in Syncrude is 36 per cent. Crown royalties in 2006 amounted to 16 per cent in the third quarter and 13 per cent in the fourth quarter.

Nexen oil sands partnership owns a 7.23 per cent participating interest in the Syncrude joint venture. During the third quarter of 2006 Nexen paid a royalty of 11 per cent on its Syncrude production compared to a royalty rate of 23 per cent on its other Canadian oil production. Both Canadian Oil Sands Trust and Nexen are paying a lot less than the government-targeted range since their projects have achieved payout status.

These companies are following the rules made by this government. It is the government that is failing Albertans, who own the resource, when it does not collect a fair share in royalties. Albertans know that the royalty rate for oil sands projects after payout is far too generous when oil is selling at over $70 Canadian per barrel. Albertans tell us that they are very frustrated that they don't get a break at the gas pump, but producers get a deep discount on royalties from a resource that Albertans themselves own.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Provincial Taxation

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Personal income tax and sales tax were introduced in Canada in 1917 as a temporary measure. Our current GST was introduced in 1991 in order to eliminate the deficit in federal budgets. We could go back through history and review all the different taxes government has imposed on their citizens – or should I say subjects? – and the dividing of nations and regions that has occurred, such taxes as the salt tax in India during Gandhi's passive resistance revolution, the Boston Tea Party, and here in Canada Papineau and his colleagues arrived at the House of Assembly dressed in homespun suits to boycott tariffs on imported English fabric. Might I say that the further the government is from the people, the more insatiable its appetite is for increased tax revenue?

We now have surplus budgets both federally and provincially, yet our local governments do not have sufficient funding to sustain their communities and are dependent on arbitrary provincial and federal grants to function. This is not in the best interest of our communities. It is time to turn the tide on taxation and put one in place, a revenue-sharing formula that municipalities can count on, one that is not arbitrary to the whims of government. A good start would be to return unconditionally 10 per cent of the personal and corporate tax to the municipalities where it was collected from. We could also return 10 per cent of other taxes on tourism, vehicle registration, and fuel, to start the list.

The report presented by the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability is a case of desperation on their part. Their request for new taxes is a direct attack on our families and communities and is the result of this government's faulty micromanagement and arbitrary grants. Municipalities have very limited ability for long-term planning or savings needed for capital expenditures. Taber's waste-water treatment plant is just one example.

Our formulas must change and their conditions. Mr. Speaker, new taxes are wrong and should not be added to the burden of families in our communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Police Week

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day police across this province put their lives on the line to ensure that Albertans can live, work, and raise their families in a safe and secure community. These brave men and women face dangers and challenges few of us ever encounter, and they do so with courage, dedication, and professionalism. The security and safety they provide is the backbone of our society and allows us to live freely with dignity and comfort.

Police Week, which runs from May 13 to 20, is a unique opportunity to recognize and thank police officers for the outstanding work they do to ensure that our streets and neighbourhoods are safe and secure. This special week also serves to remind Albertans of their own role in helping police do their work, and I encourage every Albertan to take a moment to think of how they can better support the work of police in their community. In fact, there are few better deterrents to crime than a strong community working in partnership with a dedicated police service.

Mr. Speaker, the work being done by police officers deserves our respect and support. During Police Week and every other week of the year all Albertans take great comfort in knowing that they can count on our police to keep them and their families safe. I am pleased to take this opportunity to thank police officers throughout Alberta for their dedication and commitment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm continuing with the tabling of petitions dealing with the people who work with people with disabilities. This one today is from 262 Albertans from all over the province, and the petition is urging the government to make sure (1) that the pay is standardized across the sector regardless of where those employees are employed, (2) that they're fairly compensated and that the pay reflects the appreciation for their valuable service, (3) that we grant them access to professional development opportunities, and (4) that there has to be some province-wide service and outcome-focused level-of-care standards.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) I wish to advise the Assembly that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places. I give notice that on Monday, May 28, 2007, Motion for a Return 4 will be dealt with. Additional motions for returns will stand and retain their places on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling a summary of the infrastructure and transportation priorities of the municipality of Jasper, the municipal district of Lesser Slave River, the village of Longview, the summer village of Norris Beach, the village of Sangudo, the town of Taber, the cities of St. Albert, Edmonton, and Calgary, which were either ignored, devalued, or dismissed during last night's budget debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising this afternoon to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a constituent, Tina Voss, who is writing with her concerns about the sign language interpreters program at Lakeland College in Sherwood Park and the fact that it has not been funded for this year. She doesn't want to have to go to B.C. to take that course.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter dated May 15, 2007, from myself as chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly, and it is regarding the appearance of deputy ministers before the Public Accounts Committee.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today. One is from Susan Said, who is talking about the wage increases for daycare staff being "welcome news. However, let's not forget the many child care staff that work with children in the before and after school programs".

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to give two sets of tablings. One, a letter from Nicole Fedorak, the literacy intervention teacher at St. Philip Catholic elementary school, talking about the importance of the reading recovery program.

The second is the Workplace Respect Hand Book, which I got today from the Construction Owners Association of Alberta convention, which is meeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling of a letter from Lori Mekechuk, who is an Edmonton-Mill Woods resident. "Income Support allows me $545 to pay for rent and utilities. I am renting a condo from a private owner at $800 per month and pay for all utilities. I have received a rent increase notice of $400 per month." I'm asking you all to put yourselves in her place. Please, do something to help the situation.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Dr. Oberg, Minister of Finance, responses to Written Question 13 and Written Question 14 asked for by Mr. Miller on May 14, 2007.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Affordable Housing

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The lack of affordable housing in Alberta is a big problem, and obviously every indication is that it's going to get worse. The CMHC predicts that vacancy rates, which are already dangerously low, will continue to fall and rents will continue to rise through this year and through next year as well. It predicts that few – few – of those new housing starts will be for renters. My question is to the Premier. The Premier has boasted in here repeatedly about the number of new housing starts, implying that somehow supply is already catching up to demand. Could the Premier tell us how many of the new housing starts he describes are likely to be rental units?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this question that the hon. leader is asking today came up in a scrum yesterday with one of the reporters. Again, I repeated our four-point plan: $285 million going into affordable housing. It's followed up with legislation. There are also two safety nets there, for both rental subsidies and also for families, those that may not have a place to live. We're there to support those families to find appropriate accommodation, and we'll continue to do so.

Dr. Taft: The Premier is missing the point here. It's about rental units. That's where the crisis is. The government appoints a housing task force in February in a big rush. They hear from it in March. They ignore it in April. They stumble and fumble in May. Now they've assigned yet another committee to give them some more ideas in June. Who knows when actual decisions will be made on those ideas? My question again is to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us when this government's plan for affordable housing will be finalized, and when will it begin to reduce the pressures at that most intense point on the rental market?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, last week and again this week, quoting from Statistics Canada: of the 210,000 housing starts more than 25 per cent of those housing starts were in Alberta, with a population of 3.4 million. That is an unbelievable accomplishment for the province of Alberta. That's the kind of direction we have to keep going: building more housing units to take the pressure off those that are renting. Move into individual, free up space. That's the way it's done.

Dr. Taft: Sometimes it's like talking to a brick wall, Mr. Speaker.

The latest idea to be floated by the Premier, incentives to encourage developers to bring on new rental – rental – units, was proposed in the Alberta Liberal policy months ago, and I'm glad he's finally got around to reading it. He is certainly welcome to borrow more ideas, if he likes, from our policy.

Mr. Mason: And guess where they got theirs.

Dr. Taft: My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us: when will this decision be made, and when will the new tax measures be implemented?

Mr. Stelmach: I think, Mr. Speaker, we've got a disagreement in the House as to whose housing policy I read. The NDs feel that it was in their policy first.

All I can say is that we're taking a new leadership role as a government. We're looking at different issues, and in fact during the campaign I talked about looking at some incentives because time and time again mayors and city councillors and those in the building construction industry came forward in terms of issues tied to taxes. Some of that has come forward. We're going to look at it, and maybe there's an opportunity to work here with the federal government to change some of those policies.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Free Vote on Temporary Rent Regulation

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Unlike the health minister a number of Conservative members of this government from Calgary aren't ready to dismiss the views of the overwhelming majority of their constituents who support temporary limits on rent increases. In fact, a number of the members opposite are joining with the Alberta Liberals and calling for this decision to be revisited. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, it's nice to see. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier commit in the name of openness and accountability to bring a temporary rent increase cap back before this Assembly for a free vote?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, we have a plan in place in terms of affordable housing. All evidence that was brought to this House shows that the kind of plan that the Liberals brought forward would actually work in reverse. It would decrease the number of units built in the province of Alberta, actually exacerbate the problem even further, so we're not going to follow that path. Other provinces with a Liberal administration have, and guess what? They have actually decreased the number of homes and put people in an even more difficult position. So why would we want to follow something that hasn't worked?

Dr. Taft: The Premier claims he allowed a free vote on Bill 34, including the Alberta Liberal amendments that would have put in place a temporary cap on rent increases, but Tory MLAs who have publicly supported the idea did their duty and they toed the party line. My question again is to this Premier, who claims to want accountability and openness. Will he bring this issue back to this Assembly and allow a full free vote?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that one thing I don't do is kick people out of my own caucus for speaking their mind.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You're welcome to have him, Mr. Premier.

The suggestion that every member of this Assembly felt truly free to represent the interests of their constituents on the issue of temporary rent caps simply is not credible. Can the Premier explain to this Assembly why he's dodging this issue and why he will not allow a free vote of his own government on this?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, putting $285 million into affordable housing is not dodging an issue. It is a major, major contribution to the capital plan of the province of Alberta and will assist families in this province. Certainly, nobody is dodging any issue. This is the best plan available here for Albertans, and we're going to see a number of units built in the province of Alberta. I am confident it's going to work, our government is confident, and we'll see progress made in this particular area.

Municipal Planning

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, given their general approach to things, the fact that the confusion around the funding to Calgary continues to grow is no surprise. Now the minister of municipal affairs is flip-flopping on the position his government took one day, just one day, after meeting with the mayor of Calgary. One day he says that he will listen to Calgary's proposals, and the very next day he says that those proposals are off the table. It didn't take long for this Tory caucus to dismiss the city of Calgary. My question is to the Premier.

Can the Premier clear up the confusion that his government has created once and for all? What is the position of this government on unconditional sustainable funding to the city of Calgary?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that some people appear to want to divide Albertans and divide this great province, to pit one group of Albertans against the other. My responsibility as Premier of this province is to keep Alberta together as a province, to build for the future, to secure it. That's my responsibility and the responsibility of government. We will keep working with all municipalities so that we can find equitable funding for municipalities as they change and accommodate the massive growth that we're experiencing in this province. That's my strength, and I'll continue to work with all municipalities, not follow the leadership of the opposition to start dividing this province. That's not the Alberta way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the same confusion that Calgary is facing is also facing the city of Edmonton and the capital region. The Premier stated yesterday that there is need for a stable planning regime for the capital region to protect investment, but he won't do what he says. He's not bringing in any solutions. Will the Premier clear up these mixed messages? Will he bring in mandatory regional planning for the Edmonton capital region?

Mr. Stelmach: First they're talking about unconditional grants, and then the next question is about doing something mandatory, you know, to make it a law. Make up your mind. What do you want to do?

I will take a leadership role, and this government will take a leadership role in the capital region, and we will work together with all municipalities to build a good long-term plan for development. It is unbelievable the kind of opportunities we have, and we need to have a good long-term plan for the future. We will get there. We will have one with co-operation, not using some big stick like he wants to use.

Dr. Taft: Well, things are falling apart, Mr. Premier. Things are falling apart on your side.

Regional planning in high-growth areas is critical right now to manage the challenges municipalities are facing. We need to ensure as a province that communities remain sustainable in the future, that environmental concerns are addressed in planning, that Albertans continue to enjoy a high quality of life. We need to plan for the future. To the Premier: does the Premier believe that the province has a duty to show leadership in the direction Alberta's future takes, or does this responsibility, in his view, rest entirely with the municipalities?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have taken a leadership role. In fact, there is no jurisdiction in Canada that has put as much money on the table, $1.4 billion, for municipalities. This is going to be sustainable. It's going to be predictable. It's going to allow municipalities to plan for the future. Like I said, with $1.4 billion you would expect that we can find that co-operation between the government and all municipalities. Municipalities have different levels of assessment, different growth pressures, and we're going to work with everybody. The $1.4 billion that's in the budget for municipalities is going to go a long way in building this long-term plan.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Instead of action to protect renters from being gouged today, the Premier's been telling us about the hundreds of millions of dollars he'll spend on housing to make up for years of Conservative neglect. While the Premier keeps reciting this mantra about all the new money he's spending, he conveniently forgets the fact that it takes between two and five years to build new units, during which renters are at the mercy of a broken market. My question is to the Premier. What will he do to help renters who are being hit with huge increases during the next two to five years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the preamble the leader of the third party seemed to indicate that – what? – 11,000 people coming to the province in the first quarter of this year have chosen the wrong province to move to because there is no opportunity. There is no greater opportunity in the country of Canada than right here in the province of Alberta. We're working not only with new people moving in but with those Albertans that are here seeking their future, and we're going to continue to build on the plan that we have for affordable housing. Of course with respect to leadership, once the plan is put in place, we stick to it. We work with municipalities and the federal government to deal with this critical issue. We identified it many months ago, and we're working on it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, thousands of people are moving to this province in search of a better life, and many of them – many of them – are finding their dreams broken because they can't find housing that they can afford. Why is this Premier and this government failing to make sure that the opportunity is there for the people who want to come to this province? Why is this Premier following a hands-off policy that just breaks the dreams of thousands of people who would like to come to this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the reason that thousands of other Canadians – and this is 11,000 that migrated just from the other provinces to Alberta, not from other countries. The 11,000 people are here because there is opportunity. There is opportunity to raise their family, grow their family, retire here. Most importantly, there are jobs available here. If you look across Canada today, Alberta has had tremendous growth. We'll continue on our economic plan. That's what's attracting people to Alberta; it's jobs. They can't find jobs in their home province, so they're coming here. That's why they're here.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, a million Albertans live in rental accommodation, and the Premier's refusal to institute temporary rent guidelines and instead rely on programs that fund people who are short of money is going to force middle-class families onto the welfare roll. The fact is that instead of stopping the gougers, you would rather supplement them with tax dollars and force families into queuing up for government handouts. It's the Premier's vision that proud, working middle-class families should line up hat in hand asking this government for cash so they can pay their landlord. Why?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government is caring and compassionate, and that's why we have in our budget built-in programs to support families that may on a temporary basis be displaced in finding accommodation when they move here to the province of Alberta. We'll continue with those programs in our budget because it is important to support those families that are seeking accommodation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Seniors' Housing Authorities

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently seniors' housing authorities are not authorized by the province to borrow from the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, and as a result municipalities are requested to borrow money on their behalf in order to access low-cost loan rates. This puts a burden on municipalities' borrowing limits, and many of them are near or at their limits already due to the growth pressures. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Why are seniors' housing authorities not allowed to become shareholders in the Alberta Capital Finance Authority so they can access those low rates?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, through to the hon. member, what has happened up until this time is that the loans through the ACFA have been made to municipalities. Municipalities have then turned around and made the loan to the particular seniors' housing authority. That tends to be the practice today. The seniors' housing authorities are not shareholders in the ACFA.

Mr. Marz: Will the minister consider amending the Alberta Capital Finance Authority Act so that seniors' housing authorities are allowed to borrow directly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again through to the hon. member, I think that's a great idea, and it's certainly something that we'll take into consideration and take a look at. Because of the huge growth that is occurring in the province of Alberta, we're seeing some municipalities that are reaching their limit, and we also know that there needs to be a significant amount of seniors' housing. So this may well be an area where we can simply save the taxpayer some money by not paying as much in interest costs.

Mr. Marz: My last question to the same minister: could the minister indicate when these changes may take place?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously we are currently in budget deliberations at this point in time, so we cannot do it at this particular point, but I certainly will ask my departmental staff to take a very close look at this and determine whether or not we can. I think that this is a good alternative for seniors' housing, and it's something that we can take a look at from my department to help with this critical issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

1:40 Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, on April 2 this Assembly unanimously passed Motion 503, urging the government to immediately initiate negotiations on options for a reasonable, long-term solution to the teachers' unfunded pension liability issue, yet six weeks later there's been no offer to sit down with teachers and begin the negotiations. My question is for the Premier. Is it now the policy of the Premier and his government to ignore the wishes of this Assembly by refusing to take action on Motion 503?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, within the next couple of days we'll be announcing the next steps in getting this issue off the ground. I will also be speaking to the Alberta Teachers' Association on Saturday, making the same announcement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Six weeks later all that has been done so far is for the Education minister to send an incendiary letter to teachers designed to divide and conquer – and believe me, it has done that – a tactic well known to this government, and an offer made to teachers to sit at the table on yet another task force. We know what happens to task force reports in this province. They collect dust for 45 days, and then the government rejects 75 per cent of the recommendations. My question is for the Premier again. How can Alberta teachers and Alberta taxpayers, for that matter, have any confidence in this flawed process?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we have said is that we have committed to a long-term resolution to this issue. I have said consistently from day one that it won't happen quickly. It'll be fair, it'll be well thought out, and it will be in the best interests of both teachers and taxpayers.

There's no intent on this side of the House to do what that hon. member says. It's questions like his that are dividing and conquering.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, obviously, Mr. Speaker, he's not been speaking to teachers or the ATA, because that's exactly how they feel.

Mr. Speaker, the most recent letter from the Education minister reiterates the need to provide value to both Alberta teachers and taxpayers. My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Will he admit that it's a fiscally responsible thing to do to pay down this unfunded liability now, when we have money available to do so, thereby saving taxpayers tens of billions of dollars in future payments?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the Premier committed very early in his leadership campaign to address the issue of the unfunded teachers' pension liability, and he has the Minister of Education on track to have a responsible discussion about it. If the hon. member opposite thinks it's responsible for us to just cut a cheque for $6 billion or $7 billion and take that money from funding health care or funding education just to satisfy his urgency instead of taking some time, getting it right, getting in place a long-term, stable funding relationship with the teachers' union, that we support, then he's simply off base with financial reality.

Recruiting Foreign Workers

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current labour shortage in Alberta has a significant impact on the manufacturing companies in my constituency and elsewhere in Alberta. It affects their ability to compete globally. A major company told me that they have been working closely with federal and provincial agencies to mitigate the labour shortages, but the results are slow. These challenges continue to impact their market share. They continue to recruit locally and internationally, but the results have been much less effective than expected. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. What measures is your department taking to assist Alberta companies in this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new immigration agreement solidifies much of our partnership with the federal government. Our work with the local businesses, the businesses that are situated here in Alberta, identifies that there's very aggressive planning going in place for accommodating what we believe will be some 109,000 workers short in the next 10 years. On the international front we're working so that collectively with the federal government we develop a web portal to illustrate overseas what the requirements are and make sure that we have the opportunities clearly identified in other languages for people to know what they need in their credentialing. That with the PNP program will go a long way to addressing the issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same hon. minister. In Alberta we have employment standards. In other government-controlled countries the export of human resources is sponsored and run by the government authorities. What measure do you use to ensure that the foreign workers from those countries are fairly treated and equitably compensated by their exporters?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the manner in which the question is posed, it would sound like we're looking at what we can do with other foreign governments. We don't have any control over foreign governments. What they do when they encourage workers to come here would be to make them available to companies that would look at locating here in Alberta. We don't force any regulation on foreign governments; however, we do make it clear that our government insists that these contracts be duly constituted, that those employers act under the terms of the Fair Trading Act here in Alberta, that it is a requirement that the employee does not have to pay to become part of this, and so on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same minister. Dealing with foreign countries is not easy. I have heard of fraud and illegal recruitment activity in the name of Albertan and Canadian needs for workers, such as setting up a fictitious recruitment service in another country to milk victims or offering to pay Albertan employers here to recruit particular individuals. Given that illegal and fraudulent activities in Canada are prosecuted by Canadian laws, what do you do, Minister, to prevent this from happening in other countries? It damages the high reputation of Alberta and Canada.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, all employment agencies, all contracting firms must be licensed in Alberta. As I say, while we have no control over what happens overseas, those people that bring in workers here in Alberta must hold a valid licence. If workers have a perception or if people have accusations that people do not have those kinds of licensures, if in fact we get those kinds of reports, that is why in this year's budget we have some 72 additional workers identified to work on everything from employment standards to occupational health and safety. We are pleased to investigate and find out just exactly what the circumstances are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Infrastructure Maintenance

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This May long weekend officially launches the summer recreational season. Thousands of Albertans will be travelling the highways and secondary roads in vehicles crammed to the ceiling or pulling trailers full of recreational equipment. Their greatest challenge won't be finding a camping spot; rather, it will be navigating Alberta's appalling roads. The recently released Infrastructure and Transportation business plan shows that the government intends for this province to have over 20 per cent of its highways deteriorate to a poorer condition within three years, with another 26 per cent only in fair condition. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: why is this minister accepting this deterioration in the province's infrastructure?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as we've been saying all along, we aren't accepting whatever. That's a true fact that we have way, way more traffic than we've had for years. Our roads are deteriorating. We've upped our budget. We've got $18.3 billion in the capital plan budget over the next three years. We've only been rehabilitating about 400 kilometres a year. We're now going to do, in our business plan that we have right now, 2,500 kilometres over the next year. We've got two problems in Alberta. One is cost, and the other is capacity, and we're working on fixing both of those.

Mr. Chase: For too long this Tory government has casually neglected this province's infrastructure. The state of the roads is just one more example of this attitude. Albertans are now paying the price for the Tories' failure for over a decade to fund what was necessary for Albertans' well-being. Does the current minister accept that our decrepit infrastructure is a direct result of his government's past cuts?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it's really interesting to hear them talk gloom and doom all the time, and the sky is falling. If you look at our past 10-year history, we've built an economy that's the envy of the world. In building that economy, that's why we have all the people wanting to come to this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Rising rents and rotten roads will be this short-term government's legacy. In his mandate letter from the Premier the minister was given the priority to "provide safe and secure communities." His homework assignment is repeated on every single government of Alberta press release. Government-sanctioned deterioration of provincial highways to over 1 in every 5 kilometres may well save the government money in the short term, but it risks Albertans' lives. Why is the minister acting in direct contravention of his mandate to provide safe and secure communities?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, safety is one of the biggest mandates of this government. We take safety very, very seriously, and that's why we're working on a traffic safety plan that we're going to be releasing shortly. I myself really am concerned about safety on the roads, and I believe that we will increase that and make our roads safer as time goes by.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Municipal Taxation

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation recently released a study that indicates that Alberta families would pay about $900 more a year in taxes if the province adopts the revenue-generating recommendations in the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability report. My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Where in the government process are these proposals, and when can we expect this huge tax increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I need to reiterate that those are recommendations of the minister's council. The minister's council recommendations have come to this government. We are in the process of going through the responses. We will then consult with municipalities about those responses, and hopefully we will have a final recommendation or a final response sometime late in the summer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: would these proposed taxes be uniform, set levies that are in effect in all municipalities across Alberta, or will they create rich and poor councils?

The Speaker: A bit of a hypothesis there.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I'm going to try, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to you that they are the choices of municipalities. As recommendation 9 states, individual municipalities can by option decide whether to utilize those taxes or not. So it is not a tax by this government; it is an option for municipalities to use a particular tax.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, for your records questions 5 and 6 are to the same minister. Will property taxes be reduced accordingly, or should Alberta families expect an increase in their overall tax bill?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the choice of municipalities. Also, I want to say that the specifically named taxes were the amusement tax, tourism tax, property transfer tax, vehicle registration tax, split mill rate tax, and on and on. I want to say to you that it is the choice. If I read the recommendation right, it gives the opportunity – and I'll use the amusement tax – for a municipality to have a tax on a ticket when they're building a venue such as a coliseum. That way it is more of a user-pay tax.*

Resource Development in Marie Lake Area

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, the development pace in Alberta is reaching unprecedented levels. In the Cold Lake region most of the land has already been subject to development, and the mineral rights have already been sold off. In the midst of all this development one shining jewel does stand out, that is Marie Lake. This pristine body of water remains virtually untouched, but if this government has its way, it'll become subject to intense seismic activity and potentially damaging underground oil sands recovery wells. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why is this minister allowing intrusive, damaging seismic testing to occur that could have adverse effects on the aquatic life in the lake as well as, not to mention, danger to people who reside on the lake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, we haven't allowed any of this damage to take place that the hon. member alleges. He has to understand that the seismic stage of exploration is completely different from the exploration stage, two different processes, two different sets of hearings. But I'm happy to report that on April 19 we met with a group representing the Marie Lake cottage holders and interest holders. We discussed their concerns. We've subsequently met with the seismic company, and they're revising their plans to ensure that any testing that takes place is done in a safe and secure fashion.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, residents of Marie Lake have questions, but they're not getting answers from this government, so we'll try for them. Section 40 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act requires an environmental impact assessment "to predict the environmental, social, economic and cultural consequences of a proposed activity and to assess plans to mitigate any adverse impacts resulting from the proposed activity." To the Minister of Environment: can the minister tell us if the required company is conducting seismic testing to fulfill the requirements of the EPA, and if not, why not?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite simply because at this point the project has not proceeded to the point that an EPA is required. The Minister of SRD has responded that the responsibility for the decision on seismic falls within his legislation. Should the company decide to proceed with the development of the project itself, then they will be required to conduct the environmental appeal hearing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over and over again people of Alberta have told us that they're not happy with the direction that this government is going. On affordable housing the government ignores people. On regional planning the government ignores people. Now we'll see if the government ignores the people of Marie Lake. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: section 54 of the Public Lands Act states that no one may do anything on public lands that affects watershed capacity or causes injury to any lake or body of water. We have been told that the minister has the evidence. Will the minister put an end to any proposed activity under or around Marie Lake?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I could just repeat what I said to the first answer. We're consulting with the residents of Marie Lake. We're working with the seismic company. There's been seismic done on any number of lakes previously in Alberta with no adverse effect. But I'll repeat what I said last month: before any seismic takes place there, I'll ensure that there'll be base monitoring ahead of time, monitoring during any seismic, post-seismic monitoring, and if there's any damage done, the company responsible will pay for all mitigation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Institute for Health Information figures released yesterday show that annual prescription drug costs for an Alberta family of four are nearly $3,000, of which the health care system paid barely 40 per cent. Alberta's drug spending is the third highest in Canada, and most of these rapidly escalating expenses are being off-loaded to families suffering illness. To the Premier: how can this government stand by and let Alberta families bear the brunt of these out-of-control drug costs?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Health and Wellness I will take the question under due consideration, and I'm sure the minister will respond when he comes back.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is again to the Premier. I think the Premier would be interested to know that statistics show that countries which cover the most drugs in the public system generally have the lowest drug costs. Here is just one example. In Belgium 77 per cent of all the drugs are paid for by the public system, but the cost of drugs for a family of four in Belgium is about $1,200 lower than in Alberta. To the Premier: the NDP pharmaceutical savings plan could achieve real savings for Alberta families, but the government is ignoring these proposals and that fact and paying more. Why?

Ms Evans: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I'll be pleased to take this under consideration. I know that there's a very comprehensive pharmaceutical strategy that this government has been following, and I know that the minister would be pleased to respond in greater detail.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be good to see that strategy released.

Alberta public spending on drugs rose by 30 per cent over the last two years, years 2005 and 2006. Two years ago the NDP proposed an Alberta pharmaceutical savings agency to deal with these costs through bulk purchasing and other innovations. The health minister then praised the idea and said that elements of what was proposed were very appropriate. To the Premier: given this province's record as one of the biggest spenders on drugs, can you explain why the government has failed to do anything to bring down these costs of drugs?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would just respond in this fashion. I think there were incredibly parallel suggestions both from the Health and Wellness ministry at the time as well as from the third Alberta party, and I'm quite confident that when the pharmaceutical strategy is presented or when the minister comes back, the good ideas from this member of the opposition will be presented.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Incentives for Property Developers

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation announced that the vacancy rate for the city of Edmonton will drop to a 30-year low of .7 per cent this year because of the strong demand from newcomers and a shortage of new units entering the market. My questions are to the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta. What incentives are available for new apartments to be built, and will the government consider implementing new incentives for developers to increase the numbers of rental units?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that when the Conference Board of Canada identified that they were going to even get more shortages in housing, some would want to implement rent control that would obviously make the problem much worse. Probably one of the greatest incentives we've done as a province is make sure that people know that when they come and invest in Alberta, they'll be treated fairly, and there will be no arbitrary grabbing of the value of their property. One of the things, rather than even new incentives, when I met with the advisory board was that some of the taxation policies that are in place now are counter-productive to rental properties, whether it be municipal taxation levels or federal ability to depreciate and reinvest. So we have to work with our partners.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Finance. Will the government consider implementing tax incentives for builders of new apartment buildings or for owners of existing apartment buildings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, certainly, there are some issues when it comes to taxation for rental property owners. If we were to do, for example, what the United States does: when a rental property owner sells a rental property, as long as they purchase another one within 180 days, they pay no federal sales tax on the new property. So there are certainly things that we can do. We need to do it in conjunction with both the municipality, especially when it comes to their property taxes on multifamily dwellings, and when it comes to the federal government, on the capital gains side as well as to our rental side. So we certainly will take a look. I'm not making the hon. member any promises in this question, but it's certainly something that we're open to at any time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My last question is to the minister of municipal affairs. What incentives is the government providing to encourage the development of affordable housing in general in the province?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first incentive is providing $211 million to municipalities for them to have the decision-making on how they believe housing should be built in their areas, also the encouragement of having secondary suites coming on to the market to increase units. In the last two years with $100 million this government has initiated 3,700 units to be built or in the process of being built.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Teachers' Salary Negotiations

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Minister of Education has made it clear that his overall strategy in salary negotiations is to ensure that Alberta teachers will be bullied into paying the price of prosperity. Last year inflation in Alberta was 5.5, and earnings in the private sector grew to 4.3, yet the operational funding for school boards increased by only 3 per cent. This amounts to an effective budget cut. In a year when over 80 per cent of Alberta teachers will be renewing their contracts, the Minister of Education clearly expects teachers to swallow a pay cut. To the Minister of Education I have one simple question. Do you feel that teachers deserve wage increases that match those in the private sector and keep up with the cost of living in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the facts are this. We spent $5.6 billion on education this year in our budget, 95 per cent of which flows to school boards. That's a 5.2 per cent increase over last year. School boards have an accumulated surplus of some $220 million. So between a 5.2 per cent increase and $220 million there is plenty of room to negotiate reasonable contracts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a letter written last month, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing informed municipalities that the province would be increasing its take of the municipal property tax by 5.5 per cent. The minister explained that this proportion will keep up with the real growth in this province. To the Minister of Education: why does your department take into account actual inflation only sometimes, sir, like when its own revenues are at stake, but not where operational funding or teachers' salaries are concerned?

Mr. Liepert: Let me repeat. Our budget went up 5.2 per cent. We have a $220 million accumulated surplus with school boards. There is plenty of room to negotiate reasonable contracts between school districts and local ATAs.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, last week in his exchange with the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor the Minister of Education implied that salary negotiations will go smoothly because many school boards have accumulated surpluses that put them in good financial position to negotiate. To the Minister of Education: do you expect school boards like the Battle River region, which had an accumulated operating surplus of $8.5 million last year, to use this money to fund teachers' salary increases? Is that what you're saying, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I've said on at least three or four occasions in this House. It is up to the local school boards to negotiate with the local ATA. I would just simply say that we've had several settlements in the last two months that were retroactive for the year we just came through where teachers at the local level settled for roughly 3 per cent. So the hon. member can do what he likes in terms of trying to inflame the negotiation process that's about to get under way. I have a great deal of confidence in the school boards and the ATA locals that they will come to agreements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bear Encounters

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With the long weekend finally approaching, Albertans will be enjoying recreational activities throughout the province. I've heard concerns, though, about the threat that bears pose to hikers and campers. Friends of Isabelle Dube, who was killed by a bear by Canmore in 2005, have created a website to warn hikers of the location of bears and are urging the government to create a better bear warning system for hikers and bikers. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Does the government have any plans to implement such a warning system?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow for that question and use this opportunity to extend our condolences to the husband, family, and friends of Ms Dube. Her tragic death reminds us of the dangers inherent in bear/human encounters in the backcountry, but that's why our government has a series of policies designed precisely to keep our hikers, bikers, and campers safe when they're in bear country.

Ms DeLong: My first supplemental to the same minister: does the government plan to put up a website that would allow the public to post bear sightings, as requested by this group?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I won't say no now, but we're going to proceed with caution on that idea. We're concerned that a website might give a false sense of security to some people that there are no bears in the area. It's well known that bears can travel long distances in a short period of time, so there's a lack of reliability. Also, there's a curiosity factor. If there was a website, say, and there's a bear over here, there's the possibility that teenagers or tourists or maybe even the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore will run up there to try to count the bears. So we're going to proceed with caution.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. To the same minister: then are there any other precautions that the government is taking to protect campers and hikers?

2:10

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, yes. The government, as I said, has a spectrum of programs designed to promote safety. Our BearSmart program emphasizes education for hikers, campers, and tourists, how to avoid bear encounters. We also in known areas of human activity remove the berry bushes that attract the bears. We also have these new Karelian dogs, that are very popular around the province, that chase the bears off. If there's a dead animal around that's a known source of food for a bear, we put up signs and close the trail. Finally, as a matter of last resort relocation is a possibility for a problem bear.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Provincial Olympic Co-ordinator

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Responding to the Bob Maskell scandal the Premier stated: "I can assure you that under my leadership perception of this sort will not happen." The perception of Mark Norris's potential appointment as an Olympic ambassador is very bad given Mr. Norris's support of the Premier in his leadership bid. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Has the minister consulted the Premier on Mr. Norris's potential appointment in light of the Premier's assurances in this House just last month?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly at this stage the question that the hon. member is asking is pure speculation. However, I need to say that in response to the invitation from Premier Campbell our Premier requested that my ministry lead the development of an accord with the organization committee for the Olympics to be set for 2010, and we're looking at that aspect.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: who else is being considered for this position: former athletes, people who are actively involved in amateur sports, anyone other than top Tories?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, we truly believe that Albertans need to be engaged in the spirit of the Olympics. We believe that there's a role for enhanced tourist opportunities amongst the western provinces. We also believe that there is a lot to be done in the recreational areas and that the cultural opportunities are there. We're trying to devise systems whereby we can encourage all Albertans to take advantage of that.

Mr. Agnihotri: So that means Mr. Norris is going to receive a gold medal, right?

Mr. Speaker, now that the Premier has awarded all of his supporters in the leadership campaign with prime appointments, will this government begin to reward people based on ability rather than political favours?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the co-ordinator's or ambassador's role is only one of the initiatives that is being considered at this time, and there has been absolutely no decision at this date as to who might be leading those initiatives for the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, so far that has been 90 questions.

Does the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing wish to supplement an answer?

Mr. Danyluk: Yes.

The Speaker: Well, if so, then the hon. member to whom the answer is being supplemented has an opportunity to raise an additional question.

Mr. Danyluk: Not a problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar?

Rev. Abbott: Agreed.

The Speaker: Then please proceed with your supplement.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make sure that there was clarity in one of my answers, that answer being in regard to the approval process of the minister's council report. That minister's council report is before this government, and there has been no approval of the taxation that has been requested or that has been recommended by the minister's council.*

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, you have the opportunity for a supplemental if you choose.

Rev. Abbott: Well, I'm just wondering, Mr. Speaker, then, I guess, if the minister could be a little more specific in his timelines and if he has allowed municipalities to give further input on this proposal.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, this process is in front of the government right now. Once this process takes place and we look at some responses, I will take it back to municipalities and to the minister's council and hopefully have a final recommendation by the end of summer.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise today and move second reading of Bill 26.

The Municipal Government Act authorizes the operations of the municipal authorities and therefore affects the vast majority of Albertans. To improve the act, government is proposing some amendments for discussion and approval by the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 26, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007, will alter the legislation in a number of ways. I'll take a bit of time to explain what the amendments actually are intended to do. The proposed amendments involve the ability of a minister to make guidelines concerning the standards and procedures for assessment of property, the financial cost to municipalities incurring compensation claims relating to the effects of public works projects, and minor housekeeping for a name change to Infrastructure and Transportation.

I will now provide you with more detail on each of these amendments individually. An amendment to section 322 is needed to confirm and clarify the minister's authority to set the standards and procedures contained in the minister's guidelines for preparing annual property assessments. This is a procedural amendment to incorporate the substance of the minister's guidelines regulation AR 246/2006 in the act.

This has been done as a response to technical legal challenges made to the Municipal Government Board and the courts about the validity of the minister's guidelines. The guidelines set out instructions, procedures, and validate standards for annual assessment that have been in use since 1995. The guidelines are often updated to respond to the changing economic conditions. This flexibility is needed to ensure timely updates and communication to municipal assessors. As a result, this proposed amendment exempts the guidelines from being filed under the Regulations Act. In order to confirm the validity of all existing minister's guidelines, the amendment includes a retroactive provision.

Lastly, the amendment includes a requirement that a notice of establishment of guidelines be published in the Alberta Gazette. This includes information about where copies of the guidelines are available for review. The current practice is to publish the guidelines through the Queen's Printer and make them available on the government's website.

Overall, the proposed amendments protect the public interest by ensuring that municipalities have a stable and predictable property assessment base to raise municipal revenues, continuing to defend current provincial assessment policies, including the validity of the property taxes levied under these policies and procedures, and ensuring that relevant documents are available and easily found.

In addition, an amendment to section 534 is needed to provide protection to municipalities. More often, municipalities are faced with compensation claims in relation to the effects of public works projects. This is of particular significance to those municipalities experiencing rapid growth. Concerns have been raised that compensation claims are becoming unduly costly and that the scope of such claims is at times going beyond what was intended. The proposals clarify and in some cases limit the circumstances under which a claim can be made. Specifically, a requirement that there is a permanent reduction to the market value of land is now emphasized. As well, the use of the clarification term "abuts" rather than "adjacent" is proposed in relation to the geographic circumstance under which compensation may be considered.

Also, to ensure procedural fairness, the amendment provides that the municipalities publish a notice of completion of the public works in a local paper as well as issuing such notices to every affected landowner. This is in concert with the requirement that landowners submit the claim for compensation within 60 days. Instructions are given regarding the resolution of claims which could not be agreed upon between parties. This involves an option of binding arbitration, an appeal to the Court of Appeal for a decision of the Land Compensation Board.

Lastly, these amendments provide authority for the minister to make regulations respecting the practice and procedures before the Land Compensation Board. As well, a scope of the order of costs is included in the amendments.

Overall, these amendments will assist in protecting the municipality against an award of compensation that may be excessive and may impact the construction of public works. The ministry has met with officials from the city of Edmonton on several occasions since the summer of 2006 regarding acceptable amendments. A minor matter of the name change from Infrastructure to Infrastructure and Transportation is also included in this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to emphasize that the proposals have been developed in consultation with Alberta's representatives of local governments through the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability and targeted stakeholders affected by the public works projects. The overall result is that municipal authorities will be better able to continue providing the high quality of service that Albertans have come to expect. The bill is part of the government's responsiveness to the needs of Alberta municipalities and clarifies certain property assessment provisions and defines the scope of compensation claims related to public works projects.

I ask the consideration of this House to give approval to Bill 26, and I would ask to adjourn discussion. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. While the members are bringing in their staff, I'd just like to go over some of the rules. We're still breaking new ground on some of our new Standing Orders, and this is the first day of cross-ministry where more than one party gets to ask questions during the course of the debate. So what we will do is there will be 10 minutes of questions, followed by 10 minutes of answers by a minister. If more than one minister wants to answer or supplement a question, they have to do so within that 10-minute time frame. They won't each get 10 minutes before we go back to the members wanting to ask a question.

I also have a request from the Official Opposition asking if they could start off with questions instead of a statement from the ministries. Is that correct?

Ms Pastoor: Yes, it is.

The Chair: Would you like to just briefly speak to it?

Ms Pastoor: In consultation with the minister we've decided that we'll try it with him first but that on another one perhaps we could switch it. So I'm fine.

While I'm standing, could I have a request? We're going to divide our 10 minutes into five. Can you time us for five?

The Chair: We could do that.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Most appreciated.

The Chair: So five for one speaker and five for another? Is that what you're saying?

Ms Pastoor: Yeah, from our side.

The Chair: Is everyone in agreement with that?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Okay.

If there are any changes that either side would like during the course of the days to come as we go through this, if you could discuss between the House leaders prior to coming in, it would be helpful.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you for the request, and I'm sure the House leaders will be consulting. This is an historic opportunity, and we were hoping that this particular exchange in the cross-ministries would have perhaps less of the adversarial nature that one often finds in the regular ministry budget debates. It was meant to be much more of a collaborative effort in investigating how the ministries are working together on issues that cross over more than one ministry. So off we launch on our experiment, and thank you very much for your wise advice and oversight of this particular experiment.

The Chair: It is also a bit confusing if the minister is going to start with 10 minutes, the first 10 minutes for the government side. Which minister would like to proceed first? The hon. minister of seniors? I'll recognize the hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Could I ask a question? Actually, since this is new as well in format, if we have to speak from our own chairs, given that we've got three ministries and you have a lot of staff – we just coincidentally all happen to be right in the same spot, so functionally it doesn't work quite as well. I appreciate what that means, and we'll live around it.

The Chair: According to the Standing Orders a member can only be recognized from his seat. It would require unanimous consent to waive the Standing Orders in this instance. We can't do it in committee.

Mr. Melchin: You can't do it committee?

The Chair: We can't waive the Standing Orders in committee. The staff can sit wherever there's an empty seat. I recognize the situation with the particular ministries all being close together, but we'll have to do the best we can do. There are seats in the back.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on this point.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you. For clarification from the table officers: would it have been possible for us, prior to coming into committee, to request unanimous consent to do it when we were in committee, to have members not be required to be at their seat? In other words, could we have prearranged it? We don't need an answer now. Perhaps you can send it to me in writing once you have it, but just for future encounters it might be helpful to know.

Thank you.

The Chair: We'll get a clarification on that.

In the meantime, if we could start. I'm going to recognize the hon. minister of seniors.

Mr. Melchin: I'd like to further clarify that all of our ministers are close in communication and in work, so whether we are physically close in seats or in our objectives, it's all the same to us. We're delighted to have many of the staff from all of our departments here because we're a very unified, close-knit group anyway. This will work for us, and we will accommodate.

Children's Services

Education

Seniors and Community Supports

Mr. Melchin: Good afternoon to everybody. This being our first cross-ministry in Committee of Supply, I'm going to speak on behalf of my colleagues the Minister of Education and the Minister of Children's Services for opening remarks. To see if we can condense, though, we will use the time and respond to our own individual questions.

The topic today, vulnerable Albertans, certainly is one of critical importance to all of our ministries represented here today. While the specific issues that we work to address may be different for our various departments, there are vital links between the programs that we offer, and we certainly have very common commitments to helping Albertans on this topic in particular. Certainly, I would say that there's a strong connection between today's topic and one of Premier Stelmach's priorities of improving Albertans' quality of life.

I'll begin with the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports, whose focus is on providing assistance and protection to vulnerable Albertans. Our budget this year of about $1.8 billion is just under a 10 per cent increase from last year's forecast. Two core businesses: providing targeted financial assistance to seniors and people with disabilities and, secondly, planning, providing, and co-ordinating supports and services to help seniors and people with disabilities that live in the community.

In this year's budget we received funding to address the pressures of our growing and aging population and to take steps to improve programs to ensure that they continue to meet the needs of Albertans they serve. One example is the increase to the AISH program, in particular the inflation-proofing of the $50 increase to $1,050 being one of the acknowledgments of that that we've done over the last three years.

We're carrying forward about $10 million from last year to develop pilot projects in providing services to help clients work. We've increased our investment in persons with developmental disabilities programs, and this will help us address the workforce issues that are facing this sector. Funding has been provided to assist with agency staff recruitment, retention, and remuneration pressures. That being said, with our economy and challenges, creative innovations go beyond just money, and we are looking very much towards some creative ideas to provide services given that there's been a 90 per cent increase in the funding of PDD since 1999 while caseloads only grew about 20 per cent in that same period.

The ministry is committed to providing vulnerable Albertans with quality programs and services, and we are looking and will continue to look for ways to serve them better.

I'll introduce now those of my department that are here: Tim Wiles, deputy minister; Dave Arsenault, assistant deputy minister for community support programs and strategic planning division; Reegan McCullough, assistant deputy minister, disability supports division; Chi Loo, assistant deputy minister, seniors services division; Susan McCulloch, senior financial officer, corporate finance. I'll let the other ministers in due course introduce their staff when they have a chance to respond, in light of the time.

On behalf of the Minister of Children's Services I'd like now to briefly touch just on a few of the many ways that Children's Services is protecting and assisting a very important group of vulnerable Albertans: our children. Children's Services' program expense this year is $972 million, an increase of $68 million, or 7 and a half per cent. This includes $750 million for child intervention services, which helps some of Alberta's most vulnerable children. The ministry's work includes both preventative services, that help families before they reach a crisis, and protection services, when a family is unable or unwilling to provide a child with a safe environment.

Everyone here today knows that government ministries must work together to ensure that children and other vulnerable people get the help they need. That is why there is an increasing emphasis on cross-ministry work. For example, child and family services authorities work closely with Seniors and Community Supports to help youth who are turning 18 transition to services available through persons with developmental disabilities or AISH.

Here in Edmonton the joint action committee for children brings staff from school boards, health authorities, and the Edmonton CFSA together to find ways to improve service delivery. There is a policy in place to ensure that complex cases are reviewed and kids who are struggling in school get the extra help that they need. In Red Deer the health authority, the school district, and CFSA came together to deliver an integrated program for children who are struggling because of emotional, behavioural, or psychological problems. It only makes sense that the efforts of various ministries are co-ordinated to achieve the best results for the child, the family, and the taxpayer.

A similar philosophy is at work when it comes to the government's action to prevent bullying and family violence, decrease the number of aboriginal youth who take their own lives, and reduce the impact of fetal alcohol syndrome disorder. Those are just a few examples where several ministries are working together to help children, youth, and families. I'll allow the minister to introduce her staff at the appropriate time.

On behalf of the Ministry of Education Children's Services works closely with their ministry to help the needs of youth as they transition into adulthood. They also work closely with the Ministry of Education, speaking of the Ministry of Children's Services, another key player providing assistance to vulnerable Albertans.

Just touching on a few programs of Alberta Education, Alberta Education through its leadership and work with stakeholders provides all students enrolled in our kindergarten to grade 12 education system with a high-quality education. It is about ensuring that students are prepared for the next stages of their lives no matter what their abilities are. School jurisdictions receive funding through a flexible funding framework, which allows for local decision-making in the best interests of their children and students.

Alberta Education's budget for the fiscal year 2007-08 includes many examples of these supports for students. For example, funding for the student health initiative will increase from $41.7 million to $44.2 million, an increase of 2 and a half million dollars, or 6 per cent. As well, the department provides funding for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students to assist boards in providing programs and services for aboriginal students and children. These are just two of the many examples of supports in place for our children and students.

With those comments we look forward to entertaining any of the questions you might have as applicable to our various ministries. Thank you.

The Chair: Before recognizing the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, I do have a clarification on the request to have the ministers change seats. The cameras that are recording us and broadcasting through the Internet are programmed to the individual minister's seat, so the request cannot be accommodated.

With that, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Heaven forbid we'd miss our TV time.

Thank you very much for those opening remarks and for getting in under your 10-minute time frame. My interest, I believe, is probably more on the process side, and I think that's what I'll be talking to today, as I think some of my other colleagues will as well, which is sort of less confrontational, just the process of how we can make this a little bit better. I do subscribe to the KISS concept, but I spell it with only one S: keep it simple. I've noticed in my constituency office, of course, when people come in and they have a problem that appears to be simple to begin with, by the time they've dealt with two or three ministries, it becomes very, very convoluted. So I believe that's what we are here to discuss in some fashion today.

The government provides disability support programs for people with disabilities up to age 18 – I believe the minister has already alluded to this – but more often these supports are provided through Children’s Services and Education for schools, teacher, and students. But at 18 the programs and the services for the people with disabilities become fragmented and often unco-ordinated. People must navigate through different departments and organizations to receive information, advice, and support for employment or training, postsecondary support, housing, income support, and medical support among many other things. It’s compounded by the fact that there are often gaps in these services. What I have noticed with some of my experience is that the information that comes from the different ministries doesn’t always jibe, so that’s even more confusing.

The second transition point where Albertans with disabilities often encounter difficulties occurs at age 65, when people with disabilities must transition between provincial support programs like AISH and the federal programs like the Canada pension plan disability pension. This fragmentation of delivery often results in program and policy inconsistencies, wide variations in services and supports, unnecessary bureaucracy and expense, and the lack of co-ordination across the programs’ regions and the organizations.

On pages 8 and 29 of the government’s strategic business plan one of the strategies to improve quality of life is to improve supports and services for persons with disabilities through better co-ordination and integration. So to the minister of seniors: has caucus or cabinet discussed how to streamline services to Albertans with disabilities to ensure that they have easy access to required supports so that they have the opportunity to be fully participating citizens?

Questions to the same minister. Albertans with disabilities struggle to find their way through a maze of services. What action has the government taken over the past six months to address the differences, and has the government considered consolidating disability services for children, adults, and seniors under one department? Alternatively, has the government considered implementing navigators of some sort to help people with disabilities and their families navigate the many different community agencies and government departments to access the services that they need?

One of the things I might point out is that the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry has said that her department has hired extra people not only to help the investigation part of it but to help people through their services. So it has been done in at least one ministry.

The Alberta Brain Injury Network uses connected service co-ordinators to assist Albertans with brain injuries and their families to access supports from various programs and community resources. Is this something that the minister might consider for adults with physical and developmental disabilities?

To the Minister of Education: in what specific ways has the minister been co-ordinating with the Minister of Children’s Services to ensure that supports for children with disabilities are sufficient and appropriate? Has the minister met with any disability groups or parent groups to receive feedback on the success of current disability support programs for the schools, the teachers, and the students? I believe that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods has brought up autism over the last week. It’s a huge issue in this particular area.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for the second five minutes.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. I just think that it’s essential for us not to see children’s needs in isolation, so I’m very pleased with this process today where we can see the ministries not as being separate but looking at common interests.

I do want to focus on autism now. Family support for children with disabilities received a $6.7 million budget increase for total funding of $101.8 million, which is a 6.5 per cent increase. That’s from estimates, page 64, line 2.0.2. This will not be sufficient to meet the needs of children with disabilities in this province. In particular, I have strong reason to believe that this government has actively underestimated the level of need for services from children with disabilities by categorically denying access to services. The experiences of children with autistic spectrum disorder highlight this pattern, and I have been speaking about it recently in the House.

Autism spectrum disorder is a developmental disorder that affects thousands of Albertans. High-quality, specialized services and intensive intervention can dramatically improve the quality of life of children with autism and their families. Really, we’re talking about the difference between a child with autism becoming an independent adult and someone who will remain in institutions for the rest of their life.

Children’s Services uses multidisciplinary teams to assess children with autism for eligibility for government services. This process seems to be fraught with problems, and parents consistently complain about involvement in the process, that there seems to be random decision-making, neglect of regulations, and no consistency that they can see. To the Minister of Children’s Services: how much funding for specialized services is requested by parents with autistic children each year, and what per cent is actually granted? Then I’m wondering: how much of the funding for FSCD actually reaches families, and how much is spent on administration? How much funding is spent on costs associated with the appeal at the MDT process rather than actual purchase of services? It seems to me that the MDT process has become very convoluted and confusing for families. I’m wondering: what is it costing us, and are we really getting the value that we want?

Ms Blakeman: Speak out the acronyms.

Mrs. Mather: Multidisciplinary teams?

Several parents have explained to me how each year they’re forced to enter a costly and prolonged battle to appeal the decision of the multidisciplinary teams. Will the Minister of Children’s Services consider creating an advocate or ombudsman for parents who have children with autism and feel that they have been treated unfairly by the system? To the Minister of Children’s Services: what is the value in forcing children with autism to prove each year that they deserve access to services? We know that this is lifelong, almost a sentence, yet these families have to go back each year hat in hand and say: my child deserves these services. Will they ever enjoy stable, predictable funding?

To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: what specialized services are provided to adults with autism? Do you distinguish between people with autism and other developmental diseases? Are there any special funds dedicated to adults with autism?

To the Minister of Children’s Services: I have been inundated with concerns from parents of children with autism over the multidisciplinary team process, the regulations that are being ignored, and an overall lack of transparency in information available for parents desperate to know what is going on. Will you commit part of your budget or discretionary spending to undertaking a review that identifies and corrects problems related to the fairness of this process? I think it not only has to be seen to be fair or perceived to be fair; it must indeed be fair. We have many questions indicating that perhaps it’s not at this time.

The Chair: Does the hon. Minister of Education wish to respond?

Mr. Liepert: I'll try and respond to some of the questions relative to education, and then I believe the other two ministers would supplement. Before I do that, I'd like to ensure that I introduce to the House my deputy minister, Keray Henke. I have no other officials in the House.

I want to try and come back to a couple of the questions that were raised earlier relative to meeting with the disability groups. One of the things that I have attempted to do in travelling the province and meeting with school boards and parent councils is: some of those parents have children with various disabilities, and we've spent a fair bit of time discussing, in many cases, their own particular issue but also a broader issue. It is a very difficult situation. There's a parent with a child that has severe disabilities. I guess we have to determine from our standpoint what appropriate funding is. We fund for a child somewhere in the range of $16,000 per year for severe disabilities. Is it enough? I've heard from parents that it's not enough.

I've heard from other parents, however, that were very thankful for our programs. In fact, I was at a function just a week or so ago where a parent came up to me and said that he and many others have relocated to Alberta because of our special-needs programs in education. So it really does vary across the province.

There were questions relative to co-ordination. It could always be better. I think one of the departments that's not here today is health, and that is clearly one of those, I think, the fourth department, that co-ordination has to take place with. Relative to what's called PUF funding, when our funding expires or is used to the maximum, family and community services then kicks in to take on some of that funding. So that is one of the ways that we have the interdepartmental cross-ministry work.

I think that might cover it just for now. I'll turn it over to the Minister of Children's Services to answer a couple of questions, and I'll see if there were some that I missed.

Ms Tarchuk: Actually, I'll make a few comments regarding the first set of questions that were asked about co-ordination mostly between Education and Children's Services. Just so you know, with our family supports for children with disabilities, which we know, and it has been mentioned that that's a zero to 18 age group programming, we do start transition talks at the age of 16, sometimes younger. Those discussions engage parents in the transition planning. The worker and the family discuss future needs of the youth and services that might be available if needed, and that would include public guardianship, income support such as AISH, and PDD services for those who meet eligibility criteria.

Another important point that's worth mentioning is that we are currently planning a cross-ministry protocol to make transition planning across the province consistent. It will help ensure better youth transitioning to adulthood. And Children's Services will be working with PDD as part of the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports to promote co-ordination based on the protocol.

Just a couple of other points that I'd like to highlight. One is the disability link phone. We continue to operate a toll-free telephone line in Alberta. It's available to families anywhere to obtain information about disability services and what is available in their geographic area.

Actually, the last point on those transitional questions would be just to let you know that Children's Services, Education, Seniors and Community Supports, and Health and Wellness have developed a joint brochure, which will soon be released, if I'm not mistaken, I think in the next couple of months. That will provide for Albertans all the services that are funded by the government of Alberta for preschool children and special needs.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. As with all of these, if we miss something, we'll endeavour to follow that up in writing.

I want to introduce, actually, two other individuals that I didn't have in my speaking notes: Jim Menzies, executive director, finance and IT services, who is here on behalf of Dave Arsenault; and Bruce West, director of supportive living, long-term care development branch.

With respect to programs once you're 18, a child turning 18 and having the support services that you need, we do have a transition protocol that's been developed in working with childhood to adult. There have been a number of departments that have helped develop this: Children's Services; International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations; Advanced Education and Technology; Education; Solicitor General and Public Security; Employment, Immigration and Industry; Health and Wellness; and Alberta Mental Health Board.

The transition protocol is basically a guide to help youths and their parents get the information they need when they need it so they can make the best decisions possible. Families can use the protocol to learn how to access supports and services available after youths and disabled turn 18 and throughout their lives. The protocol addresses all areas of transition to adulthood, including – and I think it's important to note the supports and services available after the age of 18 – education, employment programs and opportunities, living arrangements, community life, financial independence, relationships, social and leisure, health care, and medical management. So it's very extensive. Whether it's been fully known and available: I guess that will be the ongoing challenge, to make sure that all of the children are aware as they're becoming an adult of this protocol precisely for that reason, because there are multiple programs that affect and impact the lives of adults. How would they become better educated and facilitated? That is the design and direction of that protocol: to help them.

With respect to seniors, on the other hand, and the transition from an adult to an older adult, we do work with the AISH clients starting at about six months before they turn 65. That's more to help them identify the benefit structures that are available through the seniors' programs. Those seniors' programs are not specifically designed for a program such as autism per se. They are programs that would be generally available to seniors, so they would be eligible for the seniors' benefit or a special-needs assistant or dental and optical. They can access Alberta Aids to Daily Living. And that would be part of our working with those AISH clients before they become a senior so that they'd be aware of the range of programs and services that are available to seniors.

As to the federal programs, I'm not a hundred per cent certain how to answer that. I guess we can follow that up. There are a range of federal programs as well, and making people aware of those – because that's part of our seniors' benefit that is very closely tied into the assistance of the federal programs. I imagine that linkages are there; if not, we'll follow up otherwise.

A couple of other areas. I thought we should talk about fragmentation of programs. It is true that persons with development disabilities have a range of programs that are available, so there's some degree of, I guess, fragmentation because there is such a range. Yet one point I would mention is that the design has been to make programs fit more the needs of the person rather than to have a uniform program. That requires a range of service providers.

You have, obviously, your intake people to help address that. You've got a different availability of service providers in each region, so you're taking advantage of the programs that are available and the expertise that would be available locally, sometimes of the family supports. Really, you tailor those to fit more, making sure that individuals' needs are met, and that will cause some fragmentation. It causes some problems, but it offers an enormous amount of benefit too. That doesn't mean you get the program right, and that's the ongoing challenge, I guess: assessing the need. But we do hear just that, because there is a whole range of programs that are provided, and I think it's a good question as to how, then, do you assess that you've appropriately met and . . . [Mr. Melchin's speaking time expired]

We'll follow up with the rest of the others.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that. I'll be talking about the supports for children with disabilities. Both the ministries of Education and Children's Services have some responsibility to ensure that children with special needs have the support necessary to be healthy and successful. Goal 1 of the Ministry of Education is to ensure high-quality learning opportunities for all by ensuring that children and youth at risk have their needs addressed through effective programs and supports. Strategy 1.3 of the Ministry of Children's Services is to enhance cross-sector capacity to respond to the needs of children and youth with special and complex needs and their families by improving coordination and access to services and supports.

As children get older, the services available to them and the department that administers them changes. Some parents of children with disabilities feel that they are shuffled from ministry to ministry and are somewhat confused about the services that are delivered. They are really never sure of who's responsible for what, so let me just pose two or three questions. Will the government make available information about services for children with disabilities from a single and easily accessible source? That's one question that I have.

The second question is: will the government take concrete steps to ensure that parental involvement is encouraged in services and programming for children with disabilities? Will the departments of Education and Children's Services make a concrete effort to work together to ensure that the division of responsibilities for children with disabilities does not result in confusion or inability to receive services?

School boards receive funding for supports for children with special needs based on how they are coded, which can lead to some students' being overlooked. Actually, tomorrow I have a recommendation I'll bring up in the budget for Education on that. That seems to be supported by something I received from a pool of superintendents this afternoon. Now I forget where I am, so let's just try and pose this question: has the government done any comprehensive reviews to ensure that school boards are confident that student needs are met through this system?

One of the programs that I really believe has received a lot of support and a lot of parents are very supportive of is program unit funding. I'm talking about Education now, but if you can help me, I think Children's Services is involved, and Health is involved in that as well. Maybe I'm wrong. Anyway, what I'm saying is that it's very specialized support for children with severe disabilities up to the age of 5, but after that the funding is no longer available. I think this program is so successful that – and I've got this from one of the superintendents in the region of the province where I live. I live, by the way, in the St. Albert constituency.

I was going to bring this tomorrow, but I think it fits here. He was saying to me in this brief paper that he gave that program unit funding was not extended – and this is in this year's budget; I want to make sure that I'm saying it for this year – to at least grade 3. The programming for special needs children, therefore, cannot be sustained beyond kindergarten, and a learning disability is magnified as a child progresses through grades 1 to 12.

I was talking to him this morning, and he was suggesting that to me. I don't know if you have the data about this with these children that are exposed to PUF, but there's about 20 to 25 per cent of the school population that starts in grade 1 that misses PUF, doesn't get exposed to it. He's asking clearly in his suggestion to me – and I've talked about this, I think, with the deputy at times – that PUF be extended to grade 3. Again, I think it's so essential that kids get a good start. I think even the minister believes that.

And you talk to people at the University of Alberta. They're doing some key research. I don't want to use names because they would be upset with me. It might cut their government grant off. But I think there is something to this. I think that a lot of kids that are not screened properly at grade 1 – we miss them – don't start school well. I think there's something we could do there, and I think that down the line it would cut off a lot of these kids that are turning away from school and not doing well later on in school. I think there's a whole challenge there.

So I'm really trying to say to you people that PUF to me is a good program, and I'm trying to urge you to expand it. Take a look at those achievement tests and bury them, and use that for children that start in grades 1 to 3, and do some remedial work with them. I think you'd receive so much praise that people would vote for you again probably. Who knows?

Anyway, now, the next thing I'm going to talk about is supports for children abusing drugs, and this is one . . .

Ms Blakeman: You're over.

Mr. Flaherty: I'm over? I'm dead?

Ms Blakeman: You're over. You're triumphant.

Mr. Flaherty: I'm triumphantly shot down.

Ms Blakeman: You are triumphant.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you very much. God bless. Even my own colleagues are turning against me. I was just getting started.

The Chair: Edmonton-Mill Woods for the remainder of the time.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. I want to support what my colleague from St. Albert is saying about the need for early intervention and the wonderful success of the PUF programming and that it really, truly does need to be extended because if we can help children at the earlier years in learning to make good decisions, positive decisions, and in feeling competent and that they actually can achieve, we might not have so many making poor decisions, such as abusing drugs, and that's what I would like to focus on now.

Many children who are using drugs seem to fall through the cracks in the system. Unfortunately, the cracks do go beyond Children's Services and Education, health through AADAC, and Justice because they all have a role to play in keeping children safe, healthy, and drug free. Page 16 of the government's strategic business plan indicates that a focus over the next three years is to support the healthy development of children and youth by developing "collaborative health, social and learning programs and services that ensure children and youth will be well cared for, safe, healthy and successful at learning."

To the Minister of Children's Services: how has the minister been collaborating with the ministers of Education and Health to support healthy, drug-free children? I'm wondering what strategies the minister has developed in consultation with the ministers of Education and Health to implement drug education and prevention programs among Alberta's youth. Are we looking at an expansion of the concept of the DARE program there, which starts in elementary? I'm hearing from parents that they need a DARE program to help them understand their drug-addicted children or to help prevent their children making those bad decisions by recognizing the symptoms ahead of time.

continue to build collaborative partnerships on initiatives such as Prevention of Family Violence and Bullying, Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder, Integrated Crime Reduction Strategy and the Community Spirit Program . . . and engage in collaborative decision-making as it relates to providing better outcomes for children, youth and families.

This is really admirable. I'm wondering, to the Minister of Children's Services: which stakeholders, interests groups, or agencies does the minister plan to collaborate with in order to meet this goal, and has the minister considered the link between family violence and bullying and drug use among children?

The Children's Services business plan notes that over a lifetime each individual with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder "will need about $1 million to $1.5 million in special care and support services" involving the justice, health, and education systems, to name a few. Again to the Minister of Children's Services: what collaborative initiatives is the minister currently working on with the minister of health to prevent or address FASD? I think I should include the Minister of Education there. Has the minister been working with the minister of health to determine how many youth drug treatment beds are truly required?

To the Minister of Education: has the minister considered making drug counselling and education services in schools more widely available? Of course, for that to happen, we would have to have more school counsellors. I'm talking about trained school counsellors, individuals who have got the university training required to assist with some very difficult and complex issues. Does the minister believe that counselling services currently available in schools are sufficient? What role does the minister see himself having in the effort to reduce drug use among youth? More co-ordination is required between the school system and social agencies when it comes to youth drug use. What steps is the minister taking to improve the relationship between schools and social agencies? What kind of continuum can we have there in terms of services? Can we have these people talking with each other?

The Edmonton Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation notes that the average age of someone pulled into prostitution is 14 and also attributes the increased number of prostitutes to the availability of cheap crystal meth.

The Chair: Does the hon. Minister of Children's Services wish to respond?

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you. First of all, I will commit to making sure that we have full answers to all of your questions, but I'm going to back up and talk a little bit about FSCD and also autism.

But, first, I actually need to introduce who's with me today on the floor. We have Gord Johnston, ADM; Deputy Minister Maria David-Evans; and Niki Wosnack, ADM. Up in the gallery we have Mark Hattori, acting ADM; Neris Havelock, executive assistant; and Sheryl Fricke, ADM. Thank you.

Okay. Just a couple of comments. To go back to the FSCD, I just want to refer to a couple of things that I think will be of interest to our members. First of all, I said a couple of days ago that I think that we're very lucky to live in a province that feels strongly that families that are dealing with and living with children with challenges deserve our support. Without a doubt, our FSCD program is one of the best in Canada. We hear that quite often. We have a number of other provinces that are interested and on an ongoing basis take an interest in what we're doing here. I don't know that any other program offers the wide range of services that we do, and the hon. member was right that this year we looked at just under a 7 per cent increase, raising that budget to $102 million.

All of the services that are under FSCD are based on each child's individual assessed needs. The program offers referral, co-ordination supports, respite, aide services, counselling, extraordinary child care, assistance with costs of medical appointment supports, health-related supports, and the list goes on and on. I know that at one point you had asked: when will there be consistency? I guess the simple answer to that is: we continually assess the children that access that program because we want to deliver exactly what their needs are. That is an ongoing service.

I thought that this is quite telling, actually two things telling. Eighty-seven per cent of the families surveyed in 2006 have said that the problem has had a real positive impact on their family, and that's quite a positive result, for sure. The other thing that's interesting is that prior to 2004 – okay, all of our decisions that are made under that program you do have the ability to appeal – there were close to 200 appeals. In 2004-05 there were 115 appeals. In 2005-06 there were 35 appeals. In '06-07 the number of appeals decreased to 22. So I guess I'd also say that that is something worth noting.

I also want to just refer quickly to the MDTs that you referred to, the multidisciplinary teams. To ensure that children with severe disabilities receive the most appropriate supports and services, an MDT assessment is required. They involve a review of the information provided by the child's family, service providers involved with the child, as well as the medical and assessment information that is available from various professionals in the field. It's important to note that the MDT does not diagnose the child but makes recommendations about the type and the level of specialized services.

I know that you asked some very detailed questions, and we'll get to that in terms of the costs of that. What I can tell you is: I do know that we will be enhancing the number of MD teams, multidisciplinary teams, to help with both workloads and consistency.

Then, if I can just switch over, I'm glad that you brought up the FASD. You know, we know that FASD is a long-term disability that is totally, totally preventable. I know that you're aware that in this year's budget we have $4 million to start the 10-year fetal alcohol syndrome strategy, and you've raised some good questions about that. The details on the strategy we probably will be rolling out in about a month and a half. So some of that will answer your specific questions. But I can tell you that the plan is focusing on enhancing and developing programs in seven areas: awareness and prevention, assessment and diagnosis, supports for individuals and caregivers, training and education, strategic planning, research and evaluation, and stakeholder engagement. Again, as soon as we have the details, I will share that with you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education to supplement?

Mr. Liepert: Yeah. I'll make a couple of comments. The member for St. Albert talked about coding. I guess that one of the things that has always sort of bothered me in this portfolio is the fact that we have to code kids. Somehow, there just has to be a better way of doing it. I don't have the answer, but I do think there has to be a better way of doing it. One of the things we are doing this year is a comprehensive review of the entire coding system. Hopefully we can come up with something that might be a little more appealing, and any suggestions the hon. members have would be welcome.

A lot was mentioned about PUF funding and about extending it through to grade 3. I don't dispute what the hon. member says. I guess it really comes down to a question of funding and how much you can apply in any one year. But it should be noted that many of the students who are on PUF funding up to grade 1, some $23,000 per year, then qualify for the $16,000 special-needs allocation on top of the per student grant. So when you add the two together, it's very similar to the PUF funding. It's just delivered in a different way.

The one thing that we are also attempting to do in conjunction with Alberta Health and Wellness is to ensure that we – we've got a couple of pilot projects under way relative to more comprehensive screening. Again, it's a word that has some connotations that may cause some concern. We haven't necessarily come up with a better word yet. We want to ensure that the children and their needs are identified at a very early age and then are treated accordingly.

Just a couple of comments relative to school counselling to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. We have to remember that it's not the Department of Education that delivers the education to students; it's really the school boards around the province. There are varying needs by school boards based sometimes on geography, sometimes on just demographics of the school. I know that a fair number of them have moved towards counselling and drug counsellors. I mean, I've been to schools where there is full-time policing with a dog in the school. I would like to ensure that it's the school boards at the local level making the decision literally on a per-school basis relative to those needs.

I think that answers the questions that were asked.

The Chair: Are there no other responses from the government side? Then I'll recognize the hon. Member for St. Albert again.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to compliment the minister on looking at the coding system. I have that as one of the issues from the superintendents, and I think that he's right on. Unfortunately, I don't think I have many answers for him, but it's a difficult one. It might be something that we could talk about privately because I think you're right on with that.

The next part. Both the Department of Education and the Ministry of Children's Services have stated goals of keeping children safe and from harm. Strategy 1.7 of the Ministry of Education is to "continue to foster a safe and caring school environment through . . . effective behavioural supports" and strategy. I would just like to comment on that. I think of the minister once in a while in my prayers. I've reluctantly not brought up the question about security in question period because I think it's an explosive issue, and I haven't wanted to bring it in the House in that sense.

I think the whole question there of safe and caring schools is a very, very important thing. What I worry about – and maybe it's because I have grandchildren, and I know you take it seriously, Mr. Minister – is that I don't know what is enough. I don't know what the boundaries are on that. I hope I'm not being negative here, but it concerns me as a human being. Some of the things I see when I visit schools sometimes even frighten me a bit. That's the whole bully syndrome. We get into a number of things there. I know you're sensitive to that, and I hope I never bring it up in an inappropriate place, but I hope that you're thinking of this. Maybe there's something we can do. Maybe it's a question of education. I don't know the answer there, sir.

The Ministry of Children's Services is to strengthen the provision of strategic leadership to cross-ministry work that supports children and youth in becoming caring, contributing, and self-reliant citizens. That brings me to a question here. Will the departments of Education and Children's Services work together to ensure that school boards have adequate funding to provide counselling services in schools? I think the minister has already touched on that this afternoon.

Strategy 3.4 of the Ministry of Education's business plan is to "collaborate with other government ministries, stakeholders, regional authorities and the community on initiatives to support children and youth." My question is: what partnerships has the ministry developed to create programming or curriculum in Alberta schools to prevent and address drug addiction? I go to the ceremonies in St. Albert in my constituency on the DARE program. I think it's extended now. Maybe the deputy could help bring me up to date. I think the DARE program is extended further into junior high, into grade 8 I think, this year. Certainly, in St. Albert it has.

I think it is a marvellous program, and from what I see, it's doing some wonderful things. I think there's a lot more you can do, but we are supplementing a lot of things the family used to do. The time that I spent with my father in the Shuswap Lakes and building an old rustic boathouse and learning that the Indian chief could come over and help us do that: I don't know where that happens anymore. There are some issues there. Maybe I'm beginning to sound like a priest here. I'd better get off that.

The other thing I would say to you is about the whole question of phys ed. My background: at one time I was a phys ed person. Again, believe it or not, I thought the half hour of phys ed in schools was excellent. I think it was a great idea. I think it was the way it was handled that was the bad idea. I would ask you, in terms of this question of children's health, if there is some way we are measuring in our schools what's happening with that program. Is it doing the job with our kids? I just had this knee surgery last year, and the doctor certainly told me about my body. He told me this . . .

Ms Pastoor: One minute, Jack.

Mr. Flaherty: One minute? I'm getting kicked off.

Well, I just want to look at this whole thing, but phys ed, to me, I hope somebody can measure. We have – and I'll bring it up maybe someday to the minister – a nutrition problem, an obesity problem in our schools and in our society, and I think it's a very serious one. I think prevention, working at the end that you're in, sir, especially the elementary school and junior high, could cut down a lot of our costs at the other end.

I'll leave it at that. I'm being told again by my own colleagues to sit down. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Five minutes isn't long, so I'm going to try and do a whole bunch of questions. One left over for the Minister of Children's Services is: what supports are available through Children's Services to children with disabilities who are being home-schooled? An example that I would have out of my own constituency is a woman who is capable of working with her autistic child, and there's a special – what's the word? It's not treatment, but there's a special criterion. There's a special way of working with children. I'm sorry. It has initials, and I've forgotten. But her suggestion is that rather than keep the child in a school where they weren't receiving that extra training that had been done from zero to six, now when they're in the school, they lose it. She would prefer that that money from the school be given to her, and she can use those dollars in her own home to use that special training.

The other thing that I was going to go on was family violence. It's a huge issue in this province. This province has the highest rate of family violence and spousal homicide. It really is a devastating social problem. I realize that the funding has been increased, but I think we need to have a better evaluation to find out if this really is having meaningful impacts on the rates of family violence and the experience of survivors. I've had the opportunity to raise general concerns elsewhere, so the purpose of this debate, again I'd like to repeat, is to focus on the cross-ministry aspect of these concerns.

To the Minister of Children's Services: what is the government doing to help disabled women who are the victims of abuse or violence perpetrated by family members? This sometimes goes into the public guardian side of things as well. It's the same as in elder abuse. Often it is the family, and it is such a tricky problem to work with. Sometimes it's almost impossible that we can help, yet we can see it happening in front of our eyes. It's really quite devastating.

Although goal 6 of the seniors' business plan, page 259, outlines a commitment to safeguarding people with disabilities from abuse, the only performance measure linked to the goal is the percentage of dependent adult private guardianship. I've just spoken to that, and I'm not sure what department that would come out of, but there has to be some kind of support and counselling with that family to perhaps break that cycle. If not, then we have to get these people out of harm's way.

To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Often forms are severely underreported, and disabled women face heightened barriers when attempting to help themselves. How will your ministry have any idea whether or not the efforts are working? That's sort of a redundant question, but I think you can see where I'm going.

Elder women, as I've mentioned before, are very vulnerable to violence and abuse. The Canadian Panel on Violence against Women estimates that 1 in 10 elder persons are victims of abuse, and two-thirds of these are women. Nonetheless, the government has made inadequate provisions for seniors' shelters. Only two seniors' shelters serve the entire province of Alberta, and the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters reports that they are underfunded and short on space. Because of my past profession I have witnessed this elder abuse on older women, and it's just mind boggling.

To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: do you have plans to increase the provision of shelter services to seniors who are victims of elder abuse? We need a co-ordinated response.

To the Minister of Children's Services: can you describe what efforts are being made at the assistant deputy minister level or higher to create a similar mechanism with the authority for long-term planning in Alberta to co-ordinate within these departments towards violence against women and seniors and the shelters and supports that they would need?

We often speak about prevention, and it's important to provide at least some measure of respite and protection to survivors of abuse. However, it's not going to end the abuse against women. So far we've only witnessed the symptoms and not the cause. The root causes against women often stem from gender inequality.

Mr. Liepert: I'll try to answer a few of the questions right off the top. The Member for St. Albert raised the issue around security. It's always a delicate balance because at the end of the day we want our schools to be friendly places. We don't want schools where you literally have to swipe to get in and out of every door that you enter. I know that some of the schools that I've toured this year have locked-door policies while classes are going on. It really, I think, again comes down to an individual school board decision. There are, obviously, some parts of cities and some parts of the province that school boards determine are less or more safe than others. But one of the things I would not like to see our schools become is not a friendly place to enter.

There was a question regarding the curriculum. We do have several initiatives that relate to curriculum. One that I can think of is with AADAC. We've got a program through AADAC that is part of the curriculum. There's probably more that could be done there, but that's one that comes to mind.

The hon. member mentions something that I think is very important, and that's the whole idea of: where does school start and society end? We just simply live in a different world today than when those of us who are sitting in this Assembly went to school. It would be a goal of mine at some future point that every student that so chose had the ability to have an outside mentor. I'm not sure at what age that might start. You know, the reality of it is today that we have an awful lot of our children in school who are from one-parent families. I think that an outside mentor in some of these circumstances would go a long way to not only assisting that student through the school years but helping that student think about the after-school years, where their careers might go. So that's something that we intend to work hard on in the next period of time.

The hon. member mentioned phys ed. It's probably too soon to do any kind of real assessment on where we're at with our phys ed initiatives. I guess the thing that I always sort of question around phys ed is: you know, there sure was no gymnasium when I went to school. We were kicked outside to play something that we called speed ball in the snow. You tackled each other and whatever you did, and you stayed warm, and none of us were obese, I don't think. Somebody said to me the other day that probably one of the real ways to deal with obesity is that the school bus should drop kids off three blocks from school and let them walk.

One thing that I did find very interesting last week when I was in Leduc in the Black Gold school division: they actually have an obesity intervention program, and they have had some 300 students go through the obesity intervention program. Let me rephrase that. A school official will determine that it is in the best interests of the child to have a discussion with the parents relative to that child's physical fitness. They have a tremendous physical fitness facility over the gymnasium, and they've won international awards for it. It's sad that we have to have our schools do that, but I believe that's, unfortunately, part of the society we live in today.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. Again, I'll get back with lots more information, but I'll make a few comments about family violence. You know, without a doubt we know that this has devastating consequences for our province and Albertans. We also know that it is true that we have the highest reported rate across Canada. I'm glad to say, though, that we are also known to be taking the most amount of action on this particular issue.

Just a couple of areas where we are taking action and I think we're making great headway is in our legislation. We added "stalking" to the definition of family violence, and we also made some changes regarding households when it came to that issue that you referred to, abuse of the elderly. We also have some very successful awareness campaigns and education initiatives. Our information lines, our help lines, and the websites have had unbelievable access, the number of hits. I think that that's just fabulous for this province. As well, the community initiatives and the local projects that we have going.

[Mr. VanderBurg in the chair]

Just to highlight some of the changes and the announcements regarding women's shelter. We have a budget of just about $36 million. I think that overall, with partnering departments, it's about $46 million. The women's shelter is a large part of what we do, and we are, I think, at around $22 million of funding. Last week we were able to make some announcements regarding safe visitation sites. It's a huge part of keeping children safe, related to family violence issues. Very well received. We already have five sites. That's going to allow, I think, another five sites across the province.

The other initiative that was received very positively was $500,000 of core funding to our sexual assault centres. That brings that core funding up to $1.5 million.

The community initiatives have been received so well that we bumped that up from $3 million to $4.9 million, and again that was well received. That initiative funds projects like HomeFront in Calgary. A lot of these are community-based programs, so they'll deal with local issues and what is a priority in their areas.

The other initiative that was quite good – and I think this is more than women's shelters. It deals with our child care workers. It deals with thousands of people that are delivering services to children and families across the province. It has to do with how we value the work that they do, and part of that is paying attention to how these people are living and what they're getting paid. With women's shelters in February we announced a 3 per cent increase that was retroactive to April 1, 2006. Last week we announced another 3.5 per cent, and that was retroactive to April 1, 2007.

The other great initiative is the bursaries that have been announced. Very well received, whether they be the women's shelter bursary – we gave $400,000 to put towards skilled training for some of their leadership staff. As well, we gave a $100,000 grant to the Council of Women's Shelters so that they could work with colleges and look at online training for staff: another very positive move.

What I can tell you is that we are absolutely committed to moving forward on the family violence initiative. We have moved forward in a number of areas, and I will get back to you with some detailed information on that. I very much appreciate your raising that as an issue.

The Acting Chair: The minister of seniors.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In response to family violence – and I won't go through all the things – we do participate in a cross-ministry initiative led by Children's Services to certainly address the critical issue of family violence. We do work on raising awareness with all of the stakeholders. It's very essential. You mentioned that we do support funding at this stage for only two seniors' safe houses, the Kerby Rotary House in Calgary and the Edmonton Seniors Safe House. Our budget in this ongoing year doesn't call for additional funding for more houses, so I can't say that there are additional houses being contemplated at this stage, though addressing it for education and enforcement, I would say, is essential.

As you're aware, there are new standards in supportive living that require staff in facilities to be trained in preventing abuse and reporting abuse, standards that you and the Member for Lethbridge-East worked very diligently on to ensure that these things are brought to awareness and that there is far more training and education of staff and people that are working among the elderly or otherwise.

The Acting Chair: We'll hear from the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. You know, it's unfortunate that many people still see publicly funded child care and early education as unfriendly to families, as state meddling in the nurseries of the nation. The history of early childhood education shows us something quite different. I go back to Maria Montessori, who founded schools for children whose families were challenged in providing the basics, and Friedrich Froebel, the founder of kindergarten, who recognized that poverty could be emotional. He developed a children's garden where education, care, and a constructive approach to life went hand in hand. Before and after school care is an essential service for many families to help provide that children's garden, if you like, of education and care.

Out of school care refers to services that promote the social development of children and their families and includes support services for young school-aged children. Services are provided before and after school and during lunch. A joint study undertaken by the cities of Calgary and Edmonton identified out of school care as a major contributor to the quality of life for children, parents, the community, and society in general. If families know that their children are safe before and after school when they go to work, it gives them peace of mind. They're probably more productive at work. They're happier families, which leads to happier communities and happier cities.

The provincial government does not directly fund out of school care. Instead, this crucial service is operated and funded by FCSS. FCSS is a crucial organization for family and community support services. It helps to improve Alberta's social infrastructure. This infrastructure is instrumental in preventing social problems from growing in scope. Funding for FCSS is truly an investment in social health and quality of life in Alberta. FCSS received an additional $3 million for a total of $71.2 million, a 4.3 per cent increase. That's from the estimates, page 64.

Out of school care is only one of the essential services provided by FCSS. As the population and income gap in this province grow, FCSS will certainly require extra resources. How can you justify increasing their budget by less than the rate of inflation? After reading the report mentioned above, I was struck by the difference out of school care makes to the parents, children, and teachers involved with this program. This social investment would certainly be beneficial to all families with parents that work outside of the home. To the Minister of Children's Services: how many people are currently enrolled in out of school care programs, and how many open spaces are available? What is the eligibility for these programs? The most recent annual report from FCSS notes a growing concern over the lack of funding and programming available in rural areas. How many out of school care spaces are available to children in rural areas?

To the Minister of Education: have you considered implementing a permanent policy body that could co-ordinate between the Department of Education and Children's Services on the issues of early childhood development programs such as out of school care, school nutrition, and junior kindergarten?

I'm pleased to see that the government is beginning to realize the importance of using incentives to attract and retain child care workers. Especially, I'm glad that we're including retention there because we must value the people we already have.

I'm afraid the size and scope of the $7.4 million Children's Services budget contained in this year's budget will not be enough. Not long ago I received a letter from Natasha Michaud, who was the director of an out of school care program in Edmonton. Natasha was very distressed by the current staffing situation in out of school care. To the Minister of Children's Services: will you extend the recently announced initiatives aimed at retaining staff in the child care sector to workers in the out of school care program? I think their work is just as valuable. They work just as hard; they care just as much. They provide a service to children – for that children's guardian I mentioned earlier – to families, and to our communities. They deserve the recognition, the regard of being a profession that really matters.

I think that's my time.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for being so objective in letting me stand here. I'm going to touch on a few things that I want to try and clean up. One of the areas looks at the Minister of Education, and maybe he can share some thoughts with me on this. I'd be very interested in hearing his thoughts because I do believe he believes in prevention.

The mandate from the Premier includes improving early learning opportunities for young children, and the Ministry of Children's Services' first goal is to ensure that children have a healthy start in the first six years. I think I've addressed that from the one to three thing, but the question on kindergarten is very important because, you see, a recent survey showed that 85 per cent of Albertans would support fully funded full-day and junior kindergarten programs. Well, the question is: will the government commit to looking at this, and will the government commit the funding necessary for the additional infrastructure program and staffing needed to implement these programs?

It was interesting, and I'm reluctant to – I'm not reluctant, I'll talk about it, but I don't have enough detail about this. I'm going to just throw this out to the minister because it's in Calgary, and I know he may follow up on it, and that's encouraging. One of the school boards, the Catholic board in Calgary, in the budget – they have a mandate there. I understand that there are 42 high-risk kindergarten classes that they get funding for. But what they got upset about – and I think maybe the minister's already been asked about this – was that they felt that there was a shift in their mandate to go into ESL, the children.

Now, maybe they have perception problems, and they feel someone's picking on them. The point is that they felt that this was done without consultation. They have 42 high-risk classes that they say are drawing a $1.8 to $2 million deficit, and they're wondering why that was not looked at in the budget. If they go into the ESL part of the program, that seems to be suggested in the budget – I think it was $7 million, but I may be out on my figure, so don't hold me to it. They're wondering why that happened. The implication here for that board is that if they've got to get into that area, they don't have the transportation or the infrastructure to handle that ESL program. So I'm just raising it with the minister. He might want to check. I'm just wondering.

We're talking about the very important part of kids starting school, and there are some wonderful programs across the province. I can think of my grandchildren in Okotoks. There is just a very, very wonderful program. One of the things I want to commend again: because of your funding my grandson's problem with hand/eye co-ordination in his writing was picked up. He's still not doing great at writing; he writes like me. But he's improving, and that's the key thing, and that's very, very important.

Now, one of the things that we talked about earlier was counselling, and I know a little bit about counselling. It was interesting last year. We have a thing in my constituency that I brag about: Java with Jack. It's being set up again this summer.

What happened to me. I went to some of the smart schools in St. Albert. It's scaring me what's going to happen. They're all dominated by women that are highly academic, successful. These are women with 80 to 90 per cent in their magic six academic subjects, and they're saying: "Mr. Flaherty, we didn't get any help with our career choices. They ship you to the computer and that. We don't have anyone to talk to about that."

What I get concerned about is two aspects: career, because my background's in that area, and old Dr. Zeal.* Some of you know Dr. Zeal. I used to think he was a Chicago gangster, but he was smart. He talked about the importance of career counselling not only for the academic student but for the career-educated student, especially those career students that are going out into the world of work when they're only in grade 11. They get intimidated by these foremen and bosses and all that. There's no one in the school – the teachers are so busy; the principal is so busy – to help those kids, and I have talked to many parents about that. You know, when you think of kids today and adolescence, boy, what they're going through in their personal development let alone their own careers is unbelievable.

The Chair: Does the hon. Minister for Children's Services wish to respond?

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. I'd like to just go back to some of the comments on FCSS, and that kind of leads into the out of school child care. First of all, I agree with you, hon. member. I think that FCSS programs are probably the best example of partnerships that we have in this province. We have, you know, just thousands of locally driven preventative programs that have been developed and implemented, and I think that their services are top notch.

I know that I've referred to this before. The FCSS report has been completed. Just in the last couple of days I sat down with the provincial organization of the FCSS and went through the results of the report and some of the recommendations in it. It will be public in the next several days, and then it'll be public what the recommendations are. I can tell you that the association received them quite well, and some of how we roll out the budget for FCSS will be based on that report.

With respect to the out of school – and it's no secret – I have mentioned over the last couple of months that in that report probably one of the largest issues identified was some of the gaps with respect to out of school programs. What exists in the province and makes it not an easy solution to deal with quickly is the fact that while we license zero to six programs and six to 12, we do not have the mandate to provide services for child care in the six to age 12 group. How we do fund that is through our funding through FCSS, and then areas locally determine if that is a program that they want to deliver and then do that if they so choose. Right now we have, I do believe, 44 child care programs that are operating across the province in out of school care. What I have told the association – and I know that I've told the House before – is that I will work with the stakeholders involved in that sector and take a look at some workable solutions in that area.

Just with respect to some of the comments, you know, thank you for the compliments regarding some of the changes to zero to six. I think they have been well received, and I do think that they will be successful in ultimately creating space, which is one of the goals that we have this year. With respect to making some of those changes, applying them to out of school care, again because of the lack of mandate, not possible. I should mention that we did extend the bursaries to out of school care. We did have the capabilities of doing that, so that will be available to the staff that are working in out of school right now.

I think that's all I wanted to say.

Mr. Liepert: I didn't get a lot of questions out of the hon. Member for St. Albert. I got a lot of passion, and I got some suggestions. But the couple of questions in there I'll try and answer. The member talked in many ways about the same sorts of things that I've been talking about, and that is the involvement of the business community not to privatize our public schools but to ensure that our students that are coming out of high school have some guidance and some assistance on what they might want to seek as a career.

I was told this morning that if there is one thing that we are falling behind on globally, it is that we are still graduating students with high academic skills, but they're not quite as competitive as they need to be internationally. We're now competing with countries that have a long history of having to be competitive to survive. I think a more collaborative effort with the outside world can make our students start to become more competitive. We have the genesis of that to some degree in what is called Careers: the Next Generation. Many of you would know Eric Newell, who has got a fine reputation not only in the business community but in the education community in this province, and he's very much promoting this concept. So I think we're heading down that path. There's lots more to be done. I would certainly agree.

The hon. member raised the issue with Calgary Catholic board, and I will look into what he's referencing. I believe that what he's referencing, though, is full-day kindergarten for children that are in need and at risk, that Calgary Catholic, like many other school boards, has implemented. There is debate whether full-day kindergarten is a benefit. I must say that in my meetings with school boards around the province it's split. Many school boards believe that the funding method that we have today whereby school boards have the choice to pick and choose where they might want to have full-day kindergarten versus blanket full-day kindergarten – we've got many school districts who have actually implemented pilot projects of full-day kindergarten.

I think this is something that I'd like to take a year or two to assess, see how it's working. As the hon. member would know, the recommendation of the Learning Commission relative to full-day kindergarten and junior kindergarten was taken to our caucus and was not approved, and while we may have had a change in leadership, it's still the same caucus. So it would not be my intent to go back to caucus with that proposal.

Just very briefly, there was a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods relative to co-ordination of ECS services, and we, in fact, do have a cross-ministry committee of deputies dealing with the co-ordination of ECS services. But there's no question. Like any of these cross-ministry initiatives I'm sure there are improvements that can be made to the delivery of services, especially to young children who have some sort of mild or moderate learning difficulty because in many cases they aren't identified early enough. So that's ongoing work.

The Chair: No one else wish to supplement?

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'll just wrap up. I'll do some questions that actually came from my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, and I'll go quickly.

Education, review of coding. Who is doing it? Please include special ed teachers. Often curriculum development does not include the teachers that actually teach the subject.

Counsellors. We need them in every school to keep students and families working with the agencies, and a reasonable level of local autonomy would be in the detection of allowing elected bodies to be accountable and responsive to all of the community needs at the local level.

Brochures for preschool special needs are good, but adults also need something to help them know which service providers really are available. I believe that we've heard that there's work towards that end.

I'll just wrap up and say thank you very much to the ministers and certainly their staff and thank you to my colleagues. I believe that we got what I believed we were aiming for, which was a true exchange of information and ideas of how we can actually all better serve the Albertans that we're all responsible for. So I thank all of the departments, and I know that we'll each go and speak with our people that we've worked with to do a debriefing on how we can make this process better. But I for one am very pleased with the process and the way it has gone. I'm hoping the other side will feel the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others on the opposition side? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. I just want to say that this has been a very useful process and thank you all for your attention and your work to help Alberta's children.

I do want to mention one thing that has always bothered me. My background is a school administrator, and the last years were in high school. High schools get about $18,000 for a special-needs aide, a full-time aide. The cost to the school is $38,000, so the other $20,000 comes from operating costs; in other words, the general population is paying for that need. I'm not suggesting that we shouldn't have aides. They're absolutely invaluable. They do wonderful work. But I think that we need to recognize that there is a financial cost there that's not being adequately funded.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: I'll just make a couple of quick comments. I appreciate the kind words from the Member for Lethbridge-East. I do think it has been a good exchange. I don't think there's anyone sitting in this House today that doesn't want to have the best for our young people who have challenges. The question is ensuring that you identify them early enough and have the proper processes in place, that parents don't get frustrated trying to access the services.

There were a couple of comments made I believe on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie relative to more counsellors in schools and involving special-ed teachers in the development of the curriculum. I'll take those under advisement.

Relative to the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods I agree that twice as much money would probably give us twice as much benefit. The question really comes down to how much can you afford to spend on education versus how much can you afford to spend on health care and seniors. I think we're always trying to get that balance, and it's not an easy balance. We all for our particular departments try and identify the needs. It would be nice if we could get more money for certain things, but I think the reality of it is you come up with what you feel is fair and make the best that we can. At the end of the day I would feel comfortable stacking up our programs when it comes to special needs with any in the country.

I would conclude on that.

The Chair: One minute left. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. The previous comments from Lethbridge-East were mine, not Edmonton-Ellerslie.

We are doing a wonderful job in this province. I have no doubt of that. But I think it's incumbent upon us always to strive for excellence for the day when we don't have poverty concerns interfering with education, for the day when everybody feels safe and secure, and I think we've got a distance to go.

Thank you.

The Chair: Half a minute left if the minister wants to respond.

The time is elapsed for the Liberal opposition. The next half hour is dedicated to the ND opposition. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A pleasure to rise and join the debate on the estimates for several ministries here: the ministry responsible for seniors, the ministry responsible for children's services, family services; and the Ministry of Education. I want to express my appreciation for the presence of all the ministers here and their respective staff.

Mr. Chairman, given that in this rotation the NDP caucus has only 30 minutes available to it, it's best, therefore, for me to perhaps confine my observations and questions to one ministry, and that ministry of choice for me will be the Children's Services ministry. The Minister of Education perhaps can relax for a little while.

The second observation, Mr. Chairman, that I want to make is that the rotation structure that the House leaders have agreed to – the first hour and a half are for the Liberal opposition, then a half hour for the NDP in this rotation, and so on – does create some difficult situations. I may be asking questions that may already have been asked several times, and I wouldn't want to be doing that. I'm trying, hopefully, to be innovative and see if I can ask some questions that may have been overlooked or not asked because of time constraints or whatever. But it's inevitable that there will be some repetition, so I hope they'll be understanding of that. I'm not just trying to waste the time of the House or of the ministers here with my observations.

I want to start, therefore, with the budget for Children's Services, especially for child care, that has included an increase of 5.6 per cent, I guess, in the subsidies that qualifying families will receive as a result of this budget. The incomes to qualify are indicated by the minister in one of the communications – I'll see if I can find this – but there are, certainly, ranges, between 35,000-some dollars to about 38,000-some dollars depending upon whether it's a single-parent family or a two-parent family with one child or two children and so on and so forth. But the range is between there.

Now, the first question that occurred to me has to do with many of these families. Even for these families the adequacy of a 5.6 per cent increase in light of the fact that many of these families that will be qualifying for subsidy will also be families that are renting their housing accommodation and knowing the rise in rents – and this House has been engaged in the scale of this increase in rental costs to families – I wonder if the 5.6 per cent increase in the subsidies will compensate for the 10 to 20 to 25 to 30 per cent increase in rental costs for the same families. So that's a question that I think needs addressing. Just focusing on the increases to subsidies without addressing the context in which this increase is taking place would not be very productive. I think we really have to be serious about asking whether or not this increase that's built into this budget for increasing the subsidies for parents who qualify – this is a very important question that needs to be addressed, and I hope that the minister will respond to it in some detail.

The second related question, of course, is the cut-off, you know, the qualifying incomes. What happens to that given the changed circumstances in which all kinds of costs for families are going up? Particularly, the rental portion of the family budgets is going to be really hit hard and is going to increase exponentially over the year for which this budget is being proposed and the year following. At least for the next two years we can expect massive increases in the rental costs to all families. So the second question, then, has to do with these income cut-offs or the income level thresholds and the ceilings that are presently in place which would allow certain families to qualify for subsidies and others not.

Is the minister in a position to make some comments on whether or not there's a need, in fact, given the changed circumstances with respect to rental costs in particular, not just that these income levels that have been in place need a revision? Is the minister willing to look at that? If so, what kind of impact will that have on the proposed budget? If more monies are needed, where are they going to come from? Are they going to be shifted within the budget, or how is the minister proposing to deal with that?

Another question, if I may move on, has to do with the prevention of family violence and bullying item in the budget, program expenses. It's increased by 7.6 per cent. First of all, I know that combining this or collapsing these two categories, prevention of family violence and bullying, which takes place I would think not only in the family context but outside, perhaps in the schoolyard mostly, out in the street or in the communities in general – I find it not terribly helpful. I'm seized of the importance of the relative scarcity and shortage of funding for women's shelters, for example, for victims of family violence who have to leave home and seek shelter somewhere else.

In order for us to be able to assess the adequacy of funds available and budgeted here for prevention of family violence and protection of those who become victims of it, I think we need to break down these two categories into separate subitems so that the question then is: what percentage of these 36 million and some dollars or what dollars out of this are allocated for bullying? The minister might want to also comment on whether or not bullying is an activity which takes place also within the family context and not just outside in the schoolyard or wherever. What dollars are for prevention of family violence? You know, the two categories. I think that's the next question that I had here.

This is a question, I'm afraid, that has been asked perhaps, but I'm going to repeat this, and just ignore it if it's answered. I'll see it in the Hansard. Protecting children from sexual exploitation. In this House over the years there has been a great deal of concern about children's sexual exploitation. We have been of course told again and again by a variety of ministers that this is a serious problem. It's a growing problem in our cities and towns, and it needs very special attention. I notice here that the budget allocation for this particular program is hardly changed from last year, maybe $3,000 more, whereas if you look at inflation, look at the increase in wage costs for people who are supposed to provide this care, it simply will be inadequate. This budget, to me, seems to be cut back.

I'll stop here and let the minister answer these questions.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. Once again, regardless of whether the questions have been raised before or not, I'll make sure that you get the answers to these questions if I don't get to cover everything.

To talk about the child care budget, you're right. The cut-offs and the ranges have not changed, but if I can just kind of backtrack and give you a little bit of the reason for that. As soon as I was appointed minister – and this was identified as a priority – I spent an awful lot of time with stakeholders, that being operators of child care, parents. The number one issue – well, there are actually a few, but we had to make sure that we would create affordable, quality child care spaces and make them accessible. It didn't take long and too much time with stakeholders to realize that when we're talking about space creation, what we really had to talk about was the attraction and retention of staff. When we talked to people across the province, there were a lot of areas where facilities are not a problem. We have all kinds of people coming to the plate in terms of offering space. It really came down to making sure that we had the staff. The child care centres just could not operate without staff, and we knew that child care staff were leaving their positions.

The reason I say all of that. What we've moved forward on really is based on what stakeholders had to say. Without a doubt, they all said that the five-point plan was a very good basis, and it really was the foundation to work from. We had way more families accessing subsidies. The wage top-ups were working and kind of slowed down the number of staff leaving the sector. The whole kin child care was very well received and is very well received and particularly offered new choices in rural Alberta. The number of accredited programs have significantly increased, and in terms of being interested in providing quality, that's been a very successful initiative. So the number one concern really was taking a look at the number of ways that we could impact the attraction and retaining of staff.

Now, making it affordable for parents was a concern as well, but I would suggest that the recommendations were just really to take a look at the cost-of-living index and adjust it to that level. We didn't play around with that much more than that. I think that the end result with the kinds of, you know, additional wage top-ups, the bursaries for child care workers, the increased professional development, the attracting staff back, the northern allowance – with all of that I think we will see improvements sooner than later, and we'll actually achieve the additional capacity that we're looking for.

In terms of the cost of bullying I'll get that detailed information for you, in terms of what it is we spend on bullying out of the family violence budget. Just to make a few comments on that. I had mentioned this earlier. Bullying continues to be a priority for the government, and we will continue to focus on that initiative this year. I think it's more important now than ever to make sure that we focus on raising awareness of the impact of bullying, identifying what it is that we can do to stop that behaviour, and really encouraging a change in societal attitudes because we know that the whole dimension of bullying has changed quite dramatically. What I had mentioned earlier is the number of hits – the success of our info lines, the helplines, and the websites has been absolutely phenomenal. We have a real appetite out there for information, and I think it's incumbent on us to continue on with that initiative.

There was one other thing: sexual exploitation. Again, I'll get the details for you. You were talking about the lack of the same level of increase in that particular area. Some of it had to do with what the budget had in terms of setting up some of the Internet and websites as well as some of the advertising, one-time costs, but I'll get back to you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the minister for trying to address on her feet some of the questions that require, I guess, more investigation and information than would be available to anyone in her position at this point.

I want to compliment the minister for the work that she's been doing on behalf of families and children in her responsibility for this particular portfolio. She's been working hard, and I have no reason to question her intention to continue to move forward with positive changes and expansion of delivery of services and improving the quality of the services that are delivered to needy families and children. I commend her for her commitment and dedication to our families and children.

Children, of course, are very, very vulnerable members of our communities, in our families and outside. The most vulnerable of all children, Mr. Chairman, it's sad to have to observe, are the children of First Nations communities and children who come from First Nations families. I wonder if the minister would be able to shed some light on the number of First Nations children in the care of the government. Is there some sort of pattern over the last few years, or what's happening to this picture? Is it improving? Is it persistent and resistant to any attempts to change it for the better?

I raise this question because at the national level this question was raised earlier, I think on Monday or Tuesday, and it has generated some debate. A great deal of concern has been expressed by the First Nations national leaders with respect to the very, very high overrepresentation preponderant – not just preponderance but huge overrepresentation – of First Nations children in care. I know this matter concerns all of us a great deal. We know that those who work in the field have found and have been confronted with frustrations year after year after year in making a dent in the problem. But I think that in order for us at the provincial level to develop an effective response to this problem, a response that will in fact make some difference, we have to be quite well informed about numbers among children in care. What's the total number of children in care? Of that, what's the number of First Nations children in care?

Similarly, children on the street, who need protection from sexual exploitation. We know, I think, perhaps the numbers overall, but what's the percentage and in absolute terms the number of First Nations children on the street who are in need of protection and/or are receiving the support and protection of this department or other related departments who may share this responsibility?

Mr. Chairman, the minister made, I think, a very interesting observation that when she took over this portfolio, she found out as she was consulting with stakeholders – and perhaps the department staff knew before that – that given the wage levels and in spite of the five-point program that was introduced by the government I think a year and a half ago – it wasn't last year; the year before, I think – which in fact seemed to have identified the problem of recruitment and retention of people who provide services and care in child care centres, the problem was the low wage levels, no opportunity to improve on their educational qualifications, to upgrade their skills. So the five-point program, I think, was intended in part to respond to that difficulty, that there may be lots of buildings and physical facilities available, but there simply weren't people able to provide these services, child care workers who could be recruited at the low wages and benefits that are associated with the work that they were doing.

Now, last year I think there was $30 million in underspending. The province did have a golden opportunity because we did receive about $69 million from the federal government the year before to be able to step into that huge gap and respond effectively. But because timely action wasn't taken, I think $30 million remained unspent. Those potential child care spaces, in terms of physical space that could have been made available and offered to families in need, simply couldn't be accomplished because there were no people that could be recruited. Staff wasn't available to provide those services in those potential spaces.

It's regrettable that a great opportunity was lost and that $30 million was unspent. In fact, I've been asking myself: why is it that that money remained unspent? Now I can understand it. I think it was in part because you simply couldn't use that money at the existing rates of pay and wages to attract more people back. In fact, this area of child care has been losing people to other areas in the economy. So the net gain was a result of not having taken these additional funds that came from the federal government and putting them in place so that child care workers could find doing this work not only attractive in terms of their occupational commitments and interests, but also find that it pays wages that they can live on, that they can expect to get a living wage out of providing this very, very important service, child care, to young children who need it very badly.

The other question related to this, of course, is how that money that came from the federal government was spent. Probably the question has been asked. I understand that Alberta up to this point has not sent a report to the federal government with respect to the expenditure of those funds. A report was expected. Some provinces have submitted such reports. Alberta is one of those five or six provinces that still to this point has not, and the question is: why? You talk about accountability. You talk about transparency about public funds. Whether these funds come from the federal level, they are taxpayers' funds, and whether they are our own provincial general revenue funds, they have to be accounted for.

One way of accounting for those funds is to prepare a report and make it available to at least those agencies or institutions that in the first place made those funds available. We have an accounting to give for $69 million that came down from federal government, which we could have used. In fact, we failed to use the budgeted amount of $147 million – was it? – in the child care area for 2005-2006. Of that, lots of money came from the federal government.

I remember asking questions of the former Minister of Children's Services to address this issue, and she said that she would. In the meantime, things have changed. So I'm asking again: is it the case with the five-point plan that although its conceptualization as a sort of framework was there, the resources weren't put at the disposal of the minister and the departmental staff for them to proceed with it, implement it immediately so that we could have spent this money to provide quality services in terms of child care to families who have to wait and can't get in?

So that's the question that I hope the minister . . . [Dr. Pannu's speaking time expired]

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you. Just to start with the aboriginal children in care. In terms of the numbers that you had asked for, this is a hugely important area to us because we know that aboriginal children make up 8 per cent of the child population in Alberta, but they are 58 per cent of the children in care. Out of the 8,805 children that we have in care, 5,178 are aboriginal. I know that this is a concern not just for us; it's a big concern to elders and leaders in communities across Alberta and across the rest of the country.

Just a little bit of information about our approach to aboriginal services in this province. We are committed to looking at improvements in that area. We do want to reverse those numbers. I know that when we put the enhancement act in place a couple years ago, it was incumbent on us and put in the legislation that we consider and consult with aboriginal people on the care for their children, also to pay attention to the cultural needs. As you know, we've got the delegated First Nations agencies. We have 18 of them in the province. On all of our family and child service authorities one of the co-chairs is aboriginal as well as some of the members on each one. Through our legislation and agreements that we have with the DFNAs, we have to recognize the importance of the culture, and we do involve elders and extended family in working together to improve outcomes for the children.

Some interesting stats here: there's been a real focus on trying to place aboriginal children in their own communities and, if they're unable to go back to their families, to place them with extended families. As of December 2006 we have over a thousand aboriginal children that have been placed through the kinship care program, so that's been very popular. Now, immediate family members are also encouraged, if it suits their family situation, to become foster parents as well.

I think that probably the most important announcement in the last couple of weeks that we've been part of as a government is the historical INAC announcement that was made April 27. This really will fundamentally change the way that child and family services are delivered on reserve. You're probably aware that the federal government has committed I think it was just over $15 million to provide early intervention services on reserve, and that's something that we've been advocating with our aboriginal partners for the federal government to do for a number of years. In this announcement the federal government chose Alberta as being the first province to launch the funding because of the Alberta response model and are encouraging that that be a model that should be looked at across the country. You know, that was great recognition of the really good work that's been done in this province in that area. Thanks again to our staff for the commitment that they have and just the real desire to see if we can reverse the kind of stats that we have in this particular area.

With respect to child care, you had mentioned the reporting. With the federal funding in the first couple of years, the five-year funding that ended up getting cancelled going into the third year, there was never a requirement for us to report. So the articles that you're referring to, saying that Alberta was one of the . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. minister, but the time is now open for all members of the Assembly to participate. I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased and honoured to rise in my first time up in supply. In doing so, I'm pleased to recognize a research assistant who is with me here today, Kirstyn Rau, from the fine central Alberta community of Daysland.

I'll begin with Children's Services, an area of huge concern to many Albertans. Indeed, this morning and yesterday I was at the Construction Owners Association of Alberta conference. There were something like a thousand different representative leaders in the construction industry there earlier today, and they were discussing many of the ways to try and ensure that we have adequate numbers of qualified and skilled people available for industry in our province, especially in construction of the upgraders and construction of the oil sands plants and things like that.

It came to mind what I've come to know in northeast Edmonton. I've seen the rate of participation in the workforce of women going down. Many women that I have met say that they are staying at home with their children in order to provide their child care. We do have a baby boom going on. We do have a lot of workers – tradesmen, engineers, technicians – in north Edmonton working extended work schedules, 24 and 4 quite often, or 24 days on and 4 days off, and finding that the spouse cannot find adequate daycare, so they're staying at home.

One of the big things this morning at the Construction Owners conference – and there were people from all over the industry, representatives from all facets, not just the owners that were there – was that there are not enough women working in construction. We're not bringing enough women into construction. The daycare issue is one of the key factors in causing the problem in bringing people that could be trained and maybe are already trained into the industry. That was one of the main topics, how to bring women into the industry, this morning at the Construction Owners conference.

My question on this matter is: how do we address this if there's not affordable access to daycare in place, and what is the ministry looking to do to try and ensure that there is child care available for those women who would like to participate in the workforce, especially in some of the nontraditional areas for women?

Just a note. I really appreciate and I've had many comments about the work of the minister, that she's been very conscientious in trying to create quality child care spaces and make them affordable. There are a lot of good comments I've heard about how she's bringing forward the five-point plan, trying to bring forward the various aspects and make them work, the various allowances to achieve additional capacity in our system. I think it's important, very much so, to commend you on that work.

A couple of other issues are certainly the family and spousal violence issue. Alberta does come out as the second highest in Canada. I haven't been able to review all the Hansard debates on this issue and what has been said already, but I would just like to know what new initiative the government is looking at to really curb spousal violence. I've seen the press release on May 9, and that was welcome news. But I'm interested to see what the new community programs are in the $1.9 million and what that might be, coming forward.

An additional area of interest, of course, is the bullying area. It was mentioned earlier in the questioning by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona while I was here, an area of great concern, understanding that 1 in 10 children is reported to have bullied others in our province and even 25 per cent in grade 4, every 25 minutes in the classroom, an area of tremendous concern. I tabled a report about bullying in the workplace by adults, and maybe training them not to do it is one way to stop kids from learning how to do it. What other initiatives might we be looking for?

Just to ask the chair a question, can I stop now and wait for the answers, or do I have to finish my 10 minutes?

The Chair: You have four minutes left. If the minister responds, that time is deemed to have expired, and then I could recognize you again, but I do have someone else on the list.

Mr. Backs: Okay. So I should finish my next four minutes.

I'll go quickly to seniors. I see that the minister is not here, but I'll maybe ask for written responses to my questions. Seniors was one of the reasons that I originally ran in the last election, to try and address a number of issues on seniors, seniors' care, and some of the issues that revolve around seniors' care.

The Auditor General's report very much came forward with some of the shortcomings that we noticed a few years ago. You know, one of the things in the 2005 report of the Auditor General stated that only 69 per cent of the standards related to care were met by the facilities examined and that many standards are outdated and must be monitored closely. How is the department improving reliance on these standards and ensuring that these standards are met?

There's added stress because of labour shortages. We've had quite a bit of discussion on the need and how we improve the numbers of people coming in. Has the government looked to ensure that standards are being met in terms of the number of hours being provided for long-term care facilities?

Has the government moved to determine and compare and ensure that rental rates are available and affordable for seniors on limited and fixed incomes?

You know, one of the areas of training that is important in terms of providing care is, of course, those caregivers. One of the areas that I've mentioned in other debates in the Legislature in the last month has been the efforts brought forward by the government of Saskatchewan to train aboriginal on-reserve women to help with many facets of long-term care, be it attendants, be it home-care attendants, be it those who train as practical nurses, and others in the health care professions. They've had some great success in actually bringing forward a number of people into the field who have moved to the cities and have settled in and become very important and contributing, viable parts of the community.

As we look to Edmonton becoming the largest aboriginal city in Canada within a very few short years and looking to the unemployment rate that we do see in our many northern communities, many of which don't have much economic opportunity, I just would like to hear from the ministry as to what they will be coming forward with or if they have been examining that option that Saskatchewan has been so successful with, according to the reports that I've been given.

The AISH reforms. Of course, the $50 is welcome, and the fact that it is reviewed every two years is welcome. I have quite a number of AISH recipients in my constituency, and they keep on asking me the question: I'm afraid of losing my place because of rent. How will the ministry ensure that rent does not take up most of the AISH recipients' income, and how can they quickly access all the programs available so that they ensure that they do not lose their homes? It's a real and severe fear for many of them.

We look to seniors. You know, it's a demographic where in 2006 only 10.6 per cent – and that's actually a lot right now – of the population were seniors. That will rise to over a fifth of the population: 21.4 per cent in 2031. We have 142,000 people on the Alberta's seniors' benefit. What is the ministry's forecast in the next 20 years for the use of that benefit?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. Okay. You've asked a lot of questions there, so I'll do what I can and get back. Some of them have been raised earlier, so maybe I'll briefly address those, but we'll follow up with more information.

I think I'll start with the bullying because I referred to a little bit of it, but I haven't had to get into that too much. The strategy. We were just as committed this year as we have been. We're into the third year. When you take a look at the initiatives, what the implementation this year will include is continuing to support communities to address bullying. Of the 225 community incentive fund projects funded in the first two years, 89, or 40 per cent of them, were related to bullying. So you can see that it's of high interest to our communities.

Implementing a youth leadership initiative, which includes a provincial youth bullying committee who provide advice and leadership. Training and tools have been developed to support youth to be leaders in preventing bullying in their communities. We have supported six taking action on bullying parent link sites, which are designed to help parents and schools identify bullying and give kids the skills to address it. I've mentioned a few times today how successful those programs have been.

We're also funding the roots of empathy project in Alberta. That is a community-based antiviolenace program that is working to build empathy in grade 1 students. We're also working with Employment, Immigration and Industry in implementation of the seeds of empathy program, which will support immigrant families with young children, ages three to five, attending child care programs. We are in the third year of a three-year public awareness and education campaign focused on educating children, youth, and adults in prevention and safe methods of intervention.

I'll just hop over to child care. I'm not sure if you missed some of the earlier conversation, but first of all thanks for your compliments. There has been a lot of time and energy spent on this particular area. Just to kind of recapture the last couple of months, coming into this position, we knew that we had a severe shortage of spaces in the province. We spent a fair amount of time with stakeholders, finding out what was working well and their ideas on what could be done to improve and increase, particularly, the number of spaces.

Very clear right from the start that what was working well was the five-point plan, all aspects of it, whether it was the wage top-ups or the kin care accreditation in terms of improving quality in our child care. The subsidies uptake was higher than the last couple of years. It proved to be the right foundation to move forward on. I was really pleased to go through the business planning process and even at that time get commitment, without any confirmation on whether we would get any federal funding, on not only approving the five-point plan but also enhancing it. So that is what we have focused most of our recent initiatives on.

I just wanted to speak in terms of the numbers. We're also conducting a space survey this spring, so we'll have a clear idea by the time we get into the summer just what the landscape is like in terms of spaces across the province and what our needs are. So that'll be very, very helpful information.

As far as your questions, I'll make sure that the Seniors' minister does get those questions and responds to you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A couple of themes that I want to build upon. First, on Children's Services: to provide safe and secure communities. I want to know from the minister and the staff what they're doing to help the providers that do such good work for your department remain in their jobs with such competitive a workforce? I'm hearing over and over from staff in government that, you know, we're at risk of losing our good people to other industries that will pay them more and will recognize their efforts in not such a constrained work environment. It's very hard for young rising stars that work for your department to get recognized because of the constraints within our labour system. I'd really like to see us be able to both financially recognize and promote these young stars within your department.

The second issue that I want to talk to you about – and it's the one that I get the most calls about regarding your department – is foster care and the children in protection of foster care. Are you getting enough foster families to take care of the children in need? Again, the hot economy has people thinking about how they manage their own jobs and their own lives and how they can get some time off, and I'm concerned that we're not attracting the quality of families and of homes. I'd like to hear your comments on that.

The other issue that I have, and again building on a stronger Alberta, goes to education. I hear from so many parents that children, the young men and women of our future workforce, are not being prepared properly when they leave grade 12 for the real world here in Alberta. Many of these young teenagers would like to get into the trades earlier. Through their CTS programs in school they'd like to get the recognition for, you know, maybe a first-year welder or a first-year electrician, just to name a few. I mean, there are all kinds of good trades we could promote within our high schools. But parents are really concerned that we're not getting that young workforce ready, and many of them I've hired.

When I got elected in 2001, it was the first time I had a paycheque that my wife didn't sign. We always hired lots of young people and built them into great young workers, but today more and more I'm seeing a problem. When I go to a store and the bill is $15.25 and I hand them a $20 bill and a quarter, they're looking at me with a funny expression. These are pretty simple math skills.

You know, the great educators that we have working for us, I think they did a fair job on a difficult student when they dealt with me, and I think they did an even better job with our sons. But today it seems like the teacher has so many other issues to deal with in the classroom, and I'm wondering if that's part of the problem, but I'd like to hear from you.

I would like to go back to Provide Safe and Secure Communities. I'd like to talk to the minister of seniors on what he's prepared to do in his budget, in his business plan, with elder abuse. I'm not talking the elder abuse when someone has a black eye or a broken bone. We can deal with that. It's the financial seniors' abuse that probably 90 per cent of our seniors have to deal with. For many reasons older people are at increased risk. They have something that the crooks and the scam artists want. They have property, they have money, and they're vulnerable. So, you know, I'd really like to know from the minister of seniors in his business plan what he's doing to get that message out. We can have all the laws, and we can have all the lawmakers and enforcers do a number of things, but I think we really need to deal with this and be up front with seniors that they're vulnerable and that they need to be aware that people are after their property and their wealth.

I've seen so many times when a new person comes into a senior's life and family members kind of think: "Oh, this is great. Fred from across the street is paying attention to mom and dad." But before you know it, mom and dad are being duped out of their hard-earned savings or jewellery or many, many other things. So I'm really concerned that we need to get that message out. We need to get the message out early.

Another thing. I wonder what the minister of seniors is doing when it comes to reverse mortgages? I'm hearing a lot of people talk about reverse mortgages on television and how great of a thing it is. Well, it's great because nobody is really talking about the end, when you have to move out of your home or when a person passes away. Who's going to pay that reverse mortgage, and who's going to pay all those fees that are loaded on the back end of that reverse mortgage? Who's there to protect the family at that time? I think, again, we need to be aware that there are some serious issues, and it's not always what you see on TV or read in the paper with regard to elder abuse.

I'll sit down and listen to the ministers talk about the issues I've raised.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Chair. Well, I'll try and address some of the comments that were made by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne relative to Education, and there were some other questions that the minister of seniors will handle as well as the Minister of Children's Services.

I guess that I'm a bit taken back with the comments that the member made relative to his encounter with the individual who couldn't calculate $15.25 from the $20 bill because consistently our math performance in international testing is among the best in the world, second or third right now in the world. My comment would probably be that our math majors aren't working in the convenience store, so the particular individual that the hon. member happened to be dealing with was probably one of those 10 or 15 per cent of the students who are dropping out of high school that we want to try and keep in high school. I wouldn't want the hon. member to think that somehow our math skills that are being taught by our teaching staff these days are any less or any more inferior than they used to be.

There was another comment made relative to ensuring that our students are ready for the workforce. There's no question that over the past number of years, for whatever reason, we've fallen behind in our ability to provide career and technology study, probably more the physical part of the courses. I think it was a case that equipment has become so expensive. We have to look at different ways of being able to offer those kinds of courses to students, especially in the larger centres. I think it has to be more a co-operative effort between the postsecondary trade schools. I think about Edmonton or Calgary, where maybe we don't necessarily have to have all of the industrial arts components in the high schools. Maybe we can have a much bigger, better facility at the technical and trade schools and have high schools collaboratively work with those trade schools.

The one other final comment I would make before I turn it over to my colleagues is that I mentioned in the House earlier – I'm not sure if the member was in the House at that time or not – that I think the one thing that has been brought to my attention that we have to be diligent about is that our high school graduates and postsecondary graduates need to really have a greater competitive edge than they used to have when they graduated out of high school because they're competing in a global environment where we are competing against countries that have been competitive for hundreds of years. So I think that's something that we have to work on with the business community to promote within our schools.

I think that addresses the issues around education.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services to supplement.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. Just to get back to some of the questions on foster care. It's a good question because we all know how important the work of foster parents is. Just so the member knows, we have in this year's budget increased the funding by $7 million, and that was to help train and support foster parents. That brings the total budget to $144 million. Now, we are actively recruiting families. We do know that the more homes that we have, the better able we are to match children with foster parents who best meet their needs. In fact, this year we're dedicating $650,000 to recruit more foster parents. As well, we work with the Foster Parent Association to determine on an ongoing basis how we can support what it is that they do, and I do have a meeting with them I think in two weeks to go through that.

Two pieces of information that are kind of interesting. As of December 2006 there were approximately 2,500 foster homes in the province; we have 665 kinship care homes in Alberta, and that's when the guardian is an extended family member. In terms of ratios we have approximately 1.9 foster children per foster home in Alberta, and in comparison provinces like Saskatchewan or Ontario both have a ratio of 2.4 children.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. In response to the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, first off, one of the things we ensured that did happen so we can raise awareness – and I thank the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for some of the work he's been doing as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council, specifically on this issue. Some of the information being brought back – and I think these are the kinds of initiatives we need to continue support. Sometimes getting around and seeing what other jurisdictions do and learn from a lot of experience – we don't always have to reinvent everything here. We find a lot of good solutions being practised around the world. I know a conference that he was recently at talked very much about this, and he supplied a report to us on some of the things that we might more proactively do, much of it education related.

You talked about financial abuse being one of the largest single areas of abuse inflicted. Things like social insurance numbers being kept confidential and not in your wallets and working with the federal government on identity theft and making sure those things aren't so readily available are very good proactive ideas. We will follow up and I think work more proactively about educating, making awareness far more understandable of the types of abuse that could happen, and making people better prepared to handle their lives and avoid these pitfalls. One thing I'd like to mention is that we are sponsoring a conference in June on elder abuse. It's promoting the second annual international Elder Abuse Awareness Day. This is on June 15. So there will be more things that will come out, and those are just some of the venues that we could use.

With respect to reverse mortgages there are a number of, obviously, financial instruments that are put out, and I can't really necessarily comment on whether some of them are good, bad, or indifferent, though there are always risks in attendant issues in education that people aren't aware of, like you said: some of the back-end costs that get deferred and what that might mean. I think that's part of what we have to make sure people are fully aware of, the options that are there to take care of their financial situation, especially for seniors, how they could be taken advantage of and making sure of full disclosure. So we'll be happy to follow up with that kind of thought and ongoing education awareness for seniors.

The Chair: I just want to remind all members that the member and the ministers may combine their total speaking time of 20 minutes and just go back and forth – you don't have to speak for 10 minutes – if it's agreeable to all. If that's the case, please advise the chair in advance.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think your suggestion is welcomed. I'm very happy to in fact have that flexibility so that we are not stuck with this 10-minute framework. You know, we can go back and forth.

I will pick up where I left off, Mr. Chairman. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. I had a question which didn't get addressed. I'll reiterate it so that the minister can either respond to it now or do it perhaps later. My sense is that it's one that probably she could answer here with the help of the staff who are present. It deals with the sexual exploitation of children. The one simple question I have is: how many children over the last year or two have been served by the protection of children involved in prostitution programs? Just the simple numbers. The ministry reports that 10 to 12 per cent of those involved in street prostitution are children. You know the percentages, obviously. We don't know the numbers on which these percentages are based. What would be the total number of children involved in street prostitution, and of that number how many are children of aboriginal ancestry or background? So that's just one question that was not addressed, although I had asked part of it before.

I have been looking, Mr. Chairman, at the budget numbers here. It seems that under program expenses – I think it's on page 64 of the government estimates, general revenue fund, lottery fund. The item number is 3.0.1, child intervention services. I look back at the other document, the ministry's business plan, and I'm unable to get an idea where this money goes, to which services. It's almost one-third of the program budget of the department, yet I cannot find any details on how this money is spent. It's a very large amount. I looked at the business plan, and unless I'm missing something there, there's no direct reference to this child intervention services. There is $355,451,000 dedicated to it in the budget, yet there is scant information, as far as I could look for it, that's available. I think we need some fairly detailed address to this question of: where is this money spent? What programs, what activities, and what facilities and services are funded through this particular budget?

I'll sit down and see if the minister wants to address that.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. I'll start with the PCHIP. The information that I have – and I will follow up and get that in more detail – is that the number of children that we have helped to date has been over 770 and that the feedback surrounding that has been very positive and that an increased number of those youth are receiving voluntary services. So it appears to be working well. I understand that most of it is street prostitution, but in terms of the specific numbers I'll see if I can get that.

However, having said that the bulk of that will be street prostitution, we know that the use of technology has decreased traditional prostitution. I'd just make the comment that a lot of time is going to be spent on educating and training staff and stakeholders and the public to recognize that sexual exploitation is changing because we will need the public's help in identifying the kids that are at risk. We'll need to know what signs to watch for, and we're also making that information available on the website.

I wanted just to follow up what I started to say to you earlier with respect to the federal accountability. When we got that funding in the first two years of the five-year program – and then it was cancelled – there was not a requirement for us to file any papers or be accountable to the federal government. Who we were accountable to and followed up with that accountability is to Albertans. With respect to what happens in the future, I don't know what it is we're getting, don't know what conditions will be tied. But that news coverage was wrong in the last couple of days. We did not have a requirement to account to the federal government.

With respect to child intervention services you're right; it is a huge part of our budget. I will follow up and get a breakdown for you, but what we're talking about is purchasing all kinds of services for children, whether it be their group care counselling, secure treatments – our contracted agency is quite a hefty contract – mental health, family aides as well as our in-home supports. I will get that detailed information back to you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise again. I'd like to focus at this point on Education and, actually, just mainly on a couple of points. One of those has been touched on somewhat by the minister, and that is the collaborative work of trade schools and high schools. I think that's a very important area to explore. I've spoken with a number of the traditional trades and with both union and non-union, people throughout the industry, and there's quite an array in the construction industry. This is one area that's been focused on a lot. Quite an array of companies that work in that industry.

Traditionally, the housing industry has been almost totally non-union, and people from that industry in the past have funnelled into the industrial sector, which in some ways has been much, much more union and has been much more highly paid. There has been co-operation in bringing people up through the different non-union aspects. In years gone by it seems to have gone off. There's a thought that maybe we should be looking at more of that co-operation to end some of these wars that have gone on in the last generation.

I know that in speaking to a number of the building trades, which I know very well, many of them are willing to train apprentices, be they coming into a union or a non-union environment at the end of their apprenticeship. Some of the trades are very well equipped to start them at a very early age and to, you know, look at more European models for training and to look at ways of bringing kids forward that are being lost. It concerns me that we do have these high dropout rates still. It concerns me that we somehow don't value hand knowledge, hand intelligence, hand-to-eye co-ordination, the ability of many people to bring forward their skills and intelligence through different ways than those which we often value academically.

I've talked to, you know, a number of the people in the school boards and all the rest of them, and they've always said: the focus has got to remain academic; the focus has got to remain on funneling kids to the higher levels. But is it actually a higher level to say that university is higher? Maybe they're equal in different levels of intelligence that we're looking at that are in human beings that can provide for very fulfilling and good lives if they are to go into a technical field, if they're going into a trades field. Many of the trades are now very technical. I remember dealing in trying to get certain benefits for heavy duty mechanics. Tools of the trade now are not just wrenches, not just hand tools, but laptops, computer programs, and other such things. These are integral to looking at how to do a diagnostic on a dozer. It's very real.

Some of the trades have even have gotten together. I know that local 496 of the plumbers and pipefitters in Calgary – I think they got together something like 200 contractors and offered to purchase a facility, if need be, to go ahead with training people in their field, that has a huge shortage, not after high school but before high school and even maybe as low as grade 9. Maybe that makes sense. Maybe that makes sense to keep a lot of kids in school and to look forward to training people in our labour shortage. Certainly, they've done so in some special cases with aboriginals, have brought in aboriginals to help them train in that area to try and bring forward their skills, some that have not even completed high school but just grade 9 or grade 8.

Another area I'd like to touch on is one that was brought forward to me by some individuals who were concerned that this program has been cut. It's the reading recovery program. I've heard such laudable comments on this program that I thought I'd better raise this particular one. It's a short-term individual literacy intervention program for grade 1 students, six years of age, who appear to be at risk in their learning of reading and writing. It consists of daily 30-minute, one-on-one lessons, and these lessons supplement regular classroom instruction. But the reading recovery is a data-driven thing. It takes explicit, individualized planning and decision-making instruction and continues until the child has reached the average range of the grade 1 class. Once a child's program is discontinued, another child gets into the program.

The research that I've seen clearly indicates that if struggling readers and writers are left without individual special help even for a few weeks, it will be much harder to unlearn inefficient ways of responding to print. In addition, such children who find it difficult to respond to classroom literacy instruction will fall even further behind their average-performing peers.

Now, literacy is so important. I participate in reading week. I think this last year I was in the Edmonton public schools' and separate schools' reading week and spoke to something like 1,870 children and really take the idea of reading and literacy and all the rest of it very, very, very much as an important thing. I wonder if the minister could respond if this could ever be reinstated or if it's being looked at to have some greater emphasis on this particular area because it does hit on a very, very clear area.

Just two broad areas of questioning. One is the one on the vocational schooling and what we might be able to do to take some innovative ways to bring forward training and that. The other is on the innovative program, the reading recovery program.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I'm not exactly familiar with the specific program that the hon. member refers to relative to the reading program. However, what I would suggest is that it is probably a particular program that a specific jurisdiction has decided to change direction on. I'll take it away and see if there's something that we could find for the hon. member. Again, one of the real strengths of our education system in Alberta is the fact that we do offer within various jurisdictions a wide variety and a lot of choice when it comes to specific programming and alternative programming. So we'll take a look at that and see if there's anything that I can add further.

The member commented a fair bit around the trades and the ability to ensure that students who may not necessarily be high academic achievers are recognized just as much as contributors to society going forward as those who are high academic achievers. I couldn't agree with him more. I think our challenge is to probably broaden the kinds of trades and skills that we offer in our post-secondary schools but also starting in our high school system.

I had the opportunity, the pleasure, actually, yesterday – and it's concluding today: the provincial skills competition, which is taking place at Northlands. To see the interaction between our post-secondary colleges and the high schools in terms of our skills competition is something that is quite eye opening. What is really interesting is that not all trades are heavy industrial. I mean, you've got everything from confectionery to trades around service in a restaurant. We need to look at how we can start to strengthen the area of the service industry, to put more opportunities to have people trained better to enter the service industry and make it a career. Many people do make it a career, but it's training on the job, if you might, rather than any kind of a specific course that might be offered. So that's an area that we have to probably expand on.

I think there's another area that came to mind. I know that there's been a lot of comment and discussion around how much money we allow the horse-racing industry in this province to put back into that industry. There are, I'm told, some 8,000 employees who work in the equine industry who, probably, if it weren't for that industry, may very well not have a career. That's maybe another area where we should be looking at how we can encourage and have programming that would apply to industries such as that. So I think there are lots of opportunities to expand what we already offer. We offer very good high school CTS programming, but it can always be better, for sure.

I thank the hon. member for his comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. Again, going back to the Minister of Education on three issues that I hear many, many times, over and over in my constituency. The home-schooling supports and the transportation busing agreement allocations: sometimes the home-schooling and the busing allocations go hand in hand. You know, we really celebrated with one of our school boards when we got our bus times down to two hours for students. In many of my 28 communities with 28 mayors and 28 councils and three schools boards, that all do great jobs for the community of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, I hear this issue about the transportation funding and the cookie-cutter type of approach that our boards have to use. They're concerned that, you know, the one formula doesn't work for all. I'm just wondering if you're going to have an opportunity to review that funding formula so some of our schools can access the busing grants that they need to service the constituents of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

As well, some years ago there was a study by the school building review committee, done by Jon Lord, Member for Calgary-Currie. In that there were some good suggestions that our government, the ministry of infrastructure and your ministry, could do. I thought it was quite a unique approach of having four or five schools pre-designed, pre-engineered, not with koi ponds and not with waterfalls and not with big glass mirrors, just some good, functional schools that we could move around in our province for communities in need. I think it could save us a lot of infrastructure dollars. I'm wondering what you're doing to promote that type of an idea just to try to stretch our dollar, get it into some more places and be a little more cost effective.

Again, I'd like to hear from the minister on the home-school supports and what he's doing with the home-schooling association and the many home-schoolers that sometimes are forced to try to bring education to their young families. You know, like I talked about, we celebrated the two-hour bus rides from two hours and 20 minutes. Still, if you have a kindergarten child or a grade 1 or grade 2 child, that's a long bus ride in the morning and then back at night, so some of those parents were really forced to teach their children through home-schooling and did a very admirable job, I must say, too. I'd like to hear from the minister on those comments.

Mr. Liepert: I'll try and address all three issues. Specifically with respect to home-schooling, I'm assuming that the hon. member is referring to the funding that's provided for home-schooling currently. There is a debate whether home-schooling should be funded at a higher level than it is today. I think there's also a debate whether private-school funding should be at a higher level than it is today. Those are all good debates that we want to take a serious look at over the next 12 months and see if our funding formula that exists today is still the right one for the year 2007-08 and beyond. I would just say that the whole area of funding, whether it's the funding framework that exists today or a different model, is something that I have committed to taking a look at, and I would include home-schooling in that.

Relative to busing, I've certainly met with school boards, and busing continually comes up. There are a couple of issues. One is the declining enrolment, so buses have to travel farther to pick up the same number of children. The other one, of course, is increased costs of such things as fuel prices. Now, we do have in place a fuel price contingency fund, which in this particular year is 15 and a half million dollars, for school boards. There's no question that busing continues to be an issue for school boards. Again, I would hope that that would be part of that overall look at funding.

I think the bigger issue around busing is really the amount of time that especially very young children are spending on school buses in some of our less populated and continually decreasing populated parts of the province. I would envision that there will be a day in the not-too-distant future when there will be areas of the province where children will actually go to school for only two days a week, maybe three days a week, because their bus ride will simply be an hour and a half or two hours one way.

That's where technology will come in for those other two or three days of the week. Students will have the opportunity to learn online. We simply are going to have to look at some of these alternative options because we have schools in remote areas of the province that have fewer than 20 students. It doesn't necessarily become a matter of dollars and cents; it becomes a matter of: can you attract teachers to those particular areas to provide the kind of education instruction that these students deserve?

I guess the third question that the hon. member asked was relative to a standard architectural design concept for new schools, and I think that has a lot of merit. One of the things that our new capital committee is going to be looking at, and there was a hundred million dollars put into the Department of Education budget this year specifically to sort of kick-start that initiative, is that we do take – and I don't know what the number will be – five, 10, 15, 20 schools that are actually the same design and locate them in the areas of need around the province. It seems to me that we've been spending way too much time and dollars on reinventing every school design. There are lots of school boards and parent groups that have ideas about what they would like their school to look like, but at the end of the day I don't think that we can afford to have that option much longer. There are some very good basic designs out there that function very well. So that's something that our new capital committee will clearly be looking at over the next few months.

I believe that answers the questions that were posed by the hon. member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few questions I would like to ask the Minister of Education. My questions will focus on three areas. The first one is ESL and ESL funding. Year after year I have seen that we recognize the need to have ESL teaching in school, and we have committed quite a bit of money in this area, but up to now I haven't seen a formal, standardized ESL program incorporated into the Alberta curriculum. This makes it very difficult to compare and to see whether a student has achieved a certain level of English proficiency or not, and it also makes the job of the teachers a lot more difficult.

When a student is taking ESL courses, whether he takes them in Calgary or Edmonton, I expect that student should learn the same thing and should have the same set of skills that he's expected to acquire after he completes the course. Right now that is not the case. Even in the same school a student who takes ESL in two different classes can learn in a totally different way. I think it's about time that we move forward to standardize the ESL curriculums and make sure that they are considered as part of the formal curriculum. Credits should also be given to the students. That way it can help the student to complete their high school diploma within the time frame that they're expected to.

This ESL program can also be linked to the dropout rate. I know that there are quite a few ESL students that cannot complete high school within three or four years, and therefore they have to drop out. If you can look at a way to help bring them along and make sure that their ESL courses are recognized as part of their education, then that may help.

The second area I want to focus on is the achievement tests. The achievement tests were designed to be a kind of measurement of how well our students are doing in the system. In reality more and more schools are now adopting a very interesting policy. They ask the students who are not doing so well in school to skip these tests. The children who are not doing so well do not have a chance to participate. Therefore, I wonder whether the test results truly reflect the academic level of our students or not. I want the minister's comments in that area.

The third area I want to focus on is the technology in our schools. Our society has moved a lot in this area. The way many of us work today is totally different than the way we used to work, you know, 15 years ago because of computers, because of the Internet, but the way students are being taught in school hasn't changed that much. The level of technology introduced in school depends on the amount of money that the parents council can raise and depends on whether or not they have a good teacher in the school who knows the technology. There is absolutely no standard as to what level of technology proficiency the students are required to achieve in school. We should have standardized programs for computer skills. Especially, the students should be taught how to use the Internet to do research on their own. The traditional way of teaching, of making people memorize things, may not be the best way to move forward in the future. I think that it's very important for the student to learn how to do research on their own, how to learn on their own, to be an independent learner. That will be a lot more useful for the student in the future.

I would like to see the technology funding become a stand-alone item. With the evergreen plan, you're in for every school board in the province, and they should have technology plans that are practical, that can be useful and can be implemented right away.

Also, the Minister of Education should have the program reviewed and agreed to by the minister of advanced education because the teachers, those who are going to teach the students, should have the level of knowledge that is required for them to do these things.

Mr. Chairman, those are my comments, and I'll wait for the minister's reply.

Mr. Liepert: I'll try and address the three issues that were raised by the hon. member. I'll work backwards.

Relative to technology, we do have a standardized curriculum on technology, and we have standardized assessments. There is a fair bit of discrepancy from school board to school board as to what is being taught, but the member makes a good point. I think, quite honestly, we're in the early stages of our technology development in our schools and exactly what it can accomplish.

We just launched within the last couple of months a pilot project. We committed $4 million to this pilot project. We've got a number of schools in the province that each student in that particular class is being provided with a laptop, and they will be learning almost exclusively through the laptop method rather than textbook method. We'll see how that pilot project evolves and see where that leads us on technology.

I take the hon. member's comments relative to student achievement testing as good information. I'm not quite sure that I agree with him on all of his comments, but I will take it as information.

We continue to put significantly more money into ESL. We've increased the number of years that you're eligible to qualify for ESL funding from five to seven years, and it's our view that at the end of seven years every student taking ESL should be proficient in English as a second language.

One of the focuses that we tried to emphasize in our budget this year was the early ESL programs, especially for those who have mild and moderate learning disorders, because what we're faced with in our province today is not just an ESL issue but an issue that also in some cases is literally a social skills issue. Some of our new Canadians, some of our children are coming from situations where they've, frankly, never even learned the basics of life because they may have been born and have lived their entire life in a refugee camp. So those particular children need more than just ESL education. They need basic social skills plus the ESL. I think that even in ESL there's a lot of learning that's going on because our country, our province is changing so much, and the numbers of children that are taking advantage of our ESL programs continually evolve and change.

I thank the hon. member for his comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have some further questions of the Minister of Education. I was very concerned in looking at some of the research in the '04-05 report that said that 57 per cent was the transition rate from high school to postsecondary within just a few years. There's very much a degree of concern that that is so high.

I was also very interested in the minister's talk about other trades that may be trained to come in other than those in construction and such or those that are traditionally focused on as being shortages in our economy.

In Edmonton one of the most important industries is actually the equine industry, and a lot of people don't know that. The people who participate in jumping, the people who participate in many of the shows and stuff with horses, the horse racing, and other areas are important areas for our economy in Edmonton and are very important in terms of employment in northeast Edmonton, especially in my area. There are a number of different areas that people do train up in. Horse dentistry was the subject of a major Supreme Court challenge here just in the last few years.

I was at a meeting just outside of my constituency. My constituency of Edmonton-Manning is the largest rural riding in the city of Edmonton, by the way, and there are quite a number of agricultural endeavours. There are a fair number of horses, or there are a fair number of people that do take part in the equine-oriented types of practices. My constituency assistant, one of the part-time ones, is actually into show jumping, and she's on the student council of a high school in my area. But horse dentistry, farriers, shearers, animal masseuses, groomers, veterinary assistants, different types of people who work in dressage and all the rest of it: these are actually important areas of training that would do well to come in at the grade levels in the schools. My question, I guess, again, in terms of types of learning other than academic is if these could be looked at, at least in the towns and such.

The various areas of social skills that the minister touched on. In my constituency of Edmonton-Manning there's a new thing in the last couple of years, a new organization called City Farm. It trains in short-term stints urban children with an understanding of agricultural skills that allow them to grow a crop for a little bit of time or to groom an animal or to do more than just be in a petting zoo. It's actually a very interesting and, I think, important addition to our urban landscape and the ability of kids in urban areas to learn about our agricultural practices and heritage.

That's just another aspect of that particular area that, you know, I'd like to mention, Mr. Minister, to see if you had any comments. Some of that is in Employment, Immigration and Industry, certainly, but training in it would also do well to begin at an earlier age.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, just a quick comment. The member talked at the very beginning about our 57 per cent transition rate. I want to make sure that it's understood that that is the transition within four years from an Alberta high school to an Alberta postsecondary institution. So if someone decides to go to university in western Ontario, they are not included in that transition. I recognize that it's not a very accurate way of tracking our students, but the problem is that if somebody goes on a scholarship to the United States, we have no ability to track them. Our numbers that are, sort of – I wouldn't say that they're hard data, but when we do some backtracking on individuals from between the age of 24 and 35 who have taken some sort of postsecondary training, whether it be maybe even correspondence or gone to postsecondary institutions outside the province, it's actually closer to 80 per cent. You can always play with numbers however you want to play with them, but that number around our transition is not one that we should be using in a consistent way.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be as quick as I can. I think there are only a few minutes left. My questions would be to the Minister of Children's Services. I wanted to continue a little bit on what I had started before about violence. Violence against women is widely regarded as an effort by men to control women and children. One of the goals, goal 1 of the Children's Services: I believe that will ultimately fail if it's not accompanied by efforts to advance gender equality. Part of my comments are based on the fact that Bill Clinton, Bill Gates, and Stephen Lewis have all said quite unequivocally that unless women are empowered, they will never be able to beat the AIDS scourge in Africa.

So a couple of my questions would be: whatever happened to the status of women department? My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Manning has pointed out that the trades are now saying that they want more women to be involved. I think that to get women more involved, I would like to see, perhaps, the status of women or some portion thereof to get women back because, as I said, it is important in terms of the gender equality.

The other thing is – this would be to the Minister of Education – would you consider adding gender/women's studies content to Alberta high school curriculum? I'm sure that my answer will be, "It would be up for debate," but I'd like to see that debate take place.

The Chair: Hon. members, I will now invite the officials to leave the Assembly so the committee can rise and report progress. I will allow the minister a moment while that's taking place to answer if she so wishes.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: No. I was just going to say that I know that we have another minister that's very interested in answering that part of that last question. I just wanted to point out that some of what the hon. member here was talking about had to do with the availability of child care spaces. I outlined the number of initiatives, good work that we're doing in that area.

The Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(a) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Children's Services, Seniors and Community Supports, and Education relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 33
Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh
Water Authorization Act

[Adjourned debate May 9: Mr. Backs]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise again to speak to the Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act. Again, I must commend the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for all the work he did in providing information to me on a number of the questions regarding this bill prior to speaking to it in the House. It's a very important bill for the village of Ferintosh. It's their water. It's their future. It's their ability to do so many things. You know, Alberta has invested in the infrastructure of the town. The people have invested in their businesses, their homes, and their farms. It is very important to understand that in having water come to them from nearby areas – this is actually an interbasin transfer from south to north – these are good things in Alberta. I'm not so sure that I would be all in favour of transferring water down to California or something like that, but within Alberta we have these established infrastructures that are very important to maintain and towns that will be there for a long, long time. I've heard some people say that we should be moving people to water and depopulating certain areas of Alberta. I must say that I don't agree with that.

I am very pleased to support this bill, and I commend the member for bringing it forward. I ask that all members of this Assembly support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments if there are any.

Seeing none, anyone else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make some brief comments on Bill 33, Water Authorization Act. This bill clearly will authorize the transfer of water from the South Saskatchewan River basin to the North Saskatchewan River basin to supply water from the town of Bashaw to the village of Ferintosh.

Currently, of course, we know that the reason the bill is required is that the transfer of water between major river basins has to be authorized while an act is to ensure that there is stability both environmentally and in terms of water availability. So this bill will authorize such transfer but limits it, clearly, to a certain amount at this point in time, 55.8 cubic decimetres, from the town of Bashaw to the village of Ferintosh because of a shortage of groundwater, and there are no other reasonable sources of water. Now, according to the village administrator Ferintosh needs some more water for economic growth and development specifically stemming from the sale of vacation property. So there's new, expanded economic activity envisaged in the area; hence the village administrator sees the need of additional water.

It is true that the village, in fact, currently trucks in water for the use of the very small population that the village has: about 200 people. The water diversion will represent a huge sort of injection to the life of the small community; there is no doubt.

In August 2006, Mr. Speaker, a Stantec report on the Ferintosh water supply recommended that water be transported from Bashaw since the groundwater supply was insufficient at Ferintosh. The surface water from the nearby lake, Beaver Lake, was undrinkable due to bacteriological contamination from the farming industry. The best thing to do was, of course, therefore, to pipe in water from Bashaw. However, the study also noted that the drinking water was not safe at Bashaw either and that it had not determined whether there was enough water at Bashaw to supply the village in any case. Additionally, Camrose county wants also to make an application for an interbasin transfer once the water supply is approved for Ferintosh.

From this cluster of information five issues arise: (a) larger industrial farming-related health problems regarding the safety of Beaver Lake, (b) the lack of safe groundwater at Bashaw, (c) the lack of environmental assessment regarding groundwater supply in the province, (d) interbasin water transfer from a river basin where new licences are prohibited due to groundwater conservation issues, and (e) a hidden water expansion agenda from Ferintosh to other areas that will sidestep environmental concerns.

Mr. Speaker, although the Ferintosh residents would appreciate water that comes there directly rather than having to have water trucked in – it must be expensive – it raises some issues. The bill is problematic, I'm arguing, for the following reasons. New licences are currently not being issued for the South Saskatchewan River basin because of groundwater availability concerns, but the bill seems not to address this fact properly and would authorize water transfers anyway. So this raises some concern.

Furthermore, the groundwater availability at Bashaw has not been established. The availability study should be done before money is allocated and water transported. The safety of the Bashaw water supply is a serious concern both for Bashaw and Ferintosh residents and should be looked into immediately. The bill, although well intended, does have serious ramifications which need to be addressed before this House authorizes this interbasin transfer as requested by our Bashaw and Ferintosh communities.

The interbasin transfer and prohibitions on it in our existing legislation are there for good environmental reasons. There is a need for us to be extremely cautious about opening this door which, I think for good reasons, was shut by the existing statutes and legislation given acknowledged and recognized environmental concerns. Once you establish a statutory precedent to now begin to allow interbasin transfers, all of those considerations, all of those concerns that were addressed in the existing statutes will have to be overlooked.

I don't think a case has been made, Mr. Speaker, at this point that will convince me that those considerations which were valid some years ago when that bill was before the House and was passed are no longer relevant or operational. Longer term environmental considerations must be taken into account, particularly in light of the fact that there is a very, very rapid economic growth under way in the province. Water resources are an extremely important asset that we have not only because some very crucial industries increasingly depend on their use – and I refer here to the tar sands project and how much water the production of each barrel of oil from that source uses to produce that one barrel – but also because water is, as we all know, the very basic fundamental condition for life. Quality of life is one of the key objectives of the new administration, as I understand it.

Mr. Speaker, imagine the next generation or generations beyond having to confront the problem of not having enough water for use for the daily needs of regular living that we all have. Water is the source of life. Water is absolutely necessary in order for us to have sustainable communities, sustainable living conditions. Sustainability of life, in short, depends upon the sustainable availability of potable and good water.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think it is of the utmost importance that we in this Legislature take all the time and care that this issue requires and give thorough consideration to interbasin transfer requests and the legislation that will permit that sort of transfer to happen. I think we need to involve water resources experts. We have them around Alberta. At the local University of Alberta we have outstanding scientists who can provide advice as to the advisability of interbasin transfers, specifically the transfer of water requested as in this piece of legislation before the House.

If it were simply a limited issue of two communities and servicing their existing needs for water, it would be one thing, but it appears, Mr. Speaker, that that is not what the requirements of the area are going to be. The whole area seems to have ambitious plans for further economic development and growth, and that will require . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The Assembly stands adjourned until 7 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 16, 2007 7:00 p.m.
Date: 07/05/16
head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Deputy Chair: As we conducted ourselves this afternoon, which was a precedent, with the new system that we have, the first 10 minutes were allocated to the opposition members, and they could share the 10 minutes among themselves, followed by 10 minutes for ministers to respond to the questions that were raised, and that would go back and forth. As you know, with the understanding that we have, the first hour and a half will be between the members of the Liberal caucus and the ministers responsible. The following half hour will be allocated to the members of the New Democratic caucus, and following that one hour is allocated to any other member that wishes to participate.

We shall begin with the first hour and a half by calling upon the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to take this opportunity, while people were settling into their places, to express my appreciation for everyone's willingness to embark upon this experiment. We had the first version of it this afternoon, and it went pretty well. I did want to underline that from the Liberal caucus we are approaching this in an attempt to have it be less adversarial than you might sometimes find in a budget debate and, indeed, more collaborative and collegial. We really are trying to explore the best possibilities for those issues that cross over more than one ministry.

You will find that the issues that we've chosen – and we did circulate to the government ministry staff the subjects that we were hoping to deal with today. Essentially, that's industrial development and health impacts in the northern oil sands area, development and health impacts in what we're calling Upgrader Alley, and then a sort of miscellaneous category in which there were a number of issues.

We look forward to this. We really are seeking information from the government on possible collaboration on ways that across the ministries, particularly around health impacts, we're able to monitor and evaluate. Once again, I express my appreciation to the ministers for the willingness to try this – having seen this afternoon, I already have a few ideas about how I would change it – but also to the staff who join us on the floor tonight for coming along for the ride with us. We appreciate it.

As the chairman has outlined, we will work in 10-minute segments from our side, sharing the 10 minutes among the three of us, and we ask that you be willing to do the same thing so that we can have a back-and-forth exchange.

With that, I will take my seat. Was there an arrangement for them to start, or may we begin?

The Deputy Chair: Well, maybe what we can do is we can have the ministers just introduce their staff and then allow the Member for Edmonton-Centre to take the first 10 minutes. Hon. ministers, would you like to just introduce your staff for the record?

We'll begin with the Minister of Energy. Would you like to introduce your staff for the record?

Energy Environment Health and Wellness

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With me this evening to engage in this discussion with members of the opposition I have Mike Ekelund, the assistant deputy minister of oil development; Anne Denman, associate executive director, electricity division; and Doug Borland, director of financial services for the Department of Energy.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Joining us once again – I guess that they must have enjoyed themselves so much last time – my deputy minister, Peter Watson, and assistant deputy ministers John Knapp and Bev Yee. We have a new face that has joined us this evening, that I think will be very helpful to the discussion at hand, and that's Kem Singh, who is the approvals manager for the northern region in Alberta Environment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have with me today, of course, the never-failing – she told me to say that – deputy minister, Paddy Meade; our executive director of public health surveillance and environmental health, Alex MacKenzie; and my assistant Sean Yam.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm the first person chosen to speak on our side. Mostly I'm concentrating on the first category that we outlined for you, which is development and health impacts in the northern area, obviously focusing around the oil sands. We're all aware that the Fort McMurray region has experienced rapid growth in the past decade, obviously flowing from the government of Alberta's economic development and energy policies. We certainly have experienced unprecedented investment and growth there.

My question is: how is the government of Alberta prepared for this continued growth in that particular area? In other words, how could Albertans feel confident that their health would not be jeopardized as a result of this growth? Can you help us understand why the government chooses to drive the growth at the rate that it's currently at? Why is that choice being made? Why does it need to be at the rate of growth that it's at? It certainly is very high, and I think a lot of the issues that we see flowing are as a result of that, so maybe you could help us understand your choices there.

I think we have a number of independent studies and reports that have looked at continued growth up into 2020, and I'm referencing particularly Strategy West's assessment that if all the oil sands projects are built and meet their start-up dates, we would have the bitumen production moving from, it looks like, over a million barrels per day to over six million barrels per day by 2020. This is increasing oil sands production by 463 per cent over a 15-year period.

What will the environmental and health impacts be for such a dramatic increase in production there? How does the government know about the heavy development over a long period of time and what its impact will be on people? Specifically, what studies or reports or analysis has the government done to this point that would help them understand that or plan for that? I'm also wondering if any additional analyses have been commissioned or are in the works.

Can you tell me or give me some detail about what you're expecting there?

I'm also interested in what indicators the government is choosing to use to monitor health impacts. What are those indicators that you are using to monitor? From the studies that you've already done, assuming that you've done studies, have there been any adverse health effects that have been identified, and what are they?

The environmental impacts. I'm just going to quote, if you'll allow me, from the Radke report on page 22.

While the benefits are enormous, the impact on the environment is undeniable. The key issues relate to the amount of surface and ground water used in the extraction process, the overall impact on the quality of surface and ground water, levels of greenhouse gas and other air emissions, land disturbance and the size of the footprint on the land base, land reclamation, and impacts on wildlife and endangered species.

I'm wondering what the government knows about these impacts on the areas of health and well-being. What environmental indicators is the government using from any of these three departments we're looking at tonight? Which of those is being monitored or all of them together? Or how are you doing the analysis?

I'm interested in knowing whether we're taking long-term action to ensure that we don't impact our health and well-being negatively, so it would be helpful to know which ministry is taking responsibility for conducting cumulative assessments to measure the long-term impact on health.

I was interested to hear that there is an environmental health person working in the Department of Health and Wellness, but for my purposes I'm wondering which ministry takes the lead on this. Is that minister able to tell us how the health of Alberta's population is being considered when deciding on the pace of development?

Can the ministers, all of you as a team or individually, provide a list, preferably in writing, of all of the government-commissioned reports within the last 10 years relating to health impacts of industrial development in northern Alberta? That's sort of a repeat of the question I started with, but I'm getting quite specific now.

On a slightly different topic I note that Dr. John O'Connor, a physician in the Northern Lights health region, has raised concerns about the high amounts of arsenic that have gone into the water, and a higher than average rate of rare cancer, which is his firm belief. Now, the results of an Alberta Health study found that Dr. O'Connor's claims were untrue or unfounded, and the minister of health is on record about that, but I also note that the government study was criticized as incomplete. I'm wondering what is the status of studies that are being conducted currently by the department of health or any other department in the Fort Chipewyan area.

I also note that when we look specifically at aboriginal health, a number of toxins have been released or found in water bodies like Lake Athabasca. These are relied on heavily by aboriginal populations. Is the government of the opinion that the water sources in northern Alberta are safe? Could you provide me with whatever backup documentation has you believe that?

I'm going to move on and talk more generally about the health and the general population in northern Alberta, particularly in the Northern Lights health region. I think we can all agree that the dramatically increased population in that area has had a major impact on health care delivery in that region. The northern health region health professional shortage has resulted, some would feel, in a lower quality of care for patients or, certainly, for more restricted care in that they've had to close some areas of the hospital, so there are wait times in emergency rooms to see physicians and for surgical procedures. I think health professionals are a bit frustrated. The population growth has also had implications for the entire community when it comes to STD rates, communicable diseases, nutrition, and the availability of emergency services.

That's sort of to set up this next section. In the Radke report recommendation number 10 was that a substantial increase in manpower (FTE's) should be provided to Alberta Environment and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development to focus on cumulative effects, [environmental impact assessments], research, policy development, monitoring and enforcement in the oil sands areas. Some new resources should also go to Alberta Health and Wellness to support the [environmental impact assessment] process.

That's from the Radke report on page 133.

My question is: how much money and resources are going to go towards environmental health impact assessments? Is this a function of the Department of Environment or the department of health? If it's a joint project, which minister is taking the lead on that?

Again, could I get a list of the research projects that are being conducted by or for the government pertaining to cumulative effects of oil sands development in northern Alberta? I'm wondering if ministers are conducting studies about future health and environment impact as the development increases in intensity. We know what we're dealing with today. What happens when that intensifies by severalfold? What are we dealing with there? Is the government aiming for some plans towards that?

I'm particularly interested in what indicators the government is monitoring for long-term, low-dose effect and if anybody has looked at what the occupational injury rate is or an injury rate from working, essentially, in that area. Is it increasing commensurate with the rate of growth overall? That is actually a question, if we had the minister of EII, that we could have pulled her in on. I'm wondering, in addition: what work has the government done in monitoring and evaluating data on any connection between growth and increasing rates of domestic violence, drug use, alcohol use, and suicide rates?

That's the end of my first 10 minutes that just went by in a flash. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. ministers, we have 10 minutes, and it's up to you three how you would like to take the 10 minutes. We'll begin with the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will start on some of the issues relating to the health side, but we've plenty of time – well, not plenty of time but have most of the time, I hope, for Environment because a number of the questions fall in the Environment area. Then a couple relating to the pace of development might well fall to Energy.

First of all, we did have the Radke report to talk about the impact on the northern oil sands area, particularly the Fort McMurray area. That report was responded to at the end of February with some substantial additional resources, particularly on the health side, which allowed us to deal with some of the more immediate issues relative to building capacity, the community clinics which will be needed, and some of the other issues with respect to retention of staff. Some of the issues around wait times, for example in emergency, have actually ameliorated somewhat as a result of the additional resources that have been applied.

We're working very closely with the health authority. In fact, we've provided the health authority with some management assistance to assist them through the transition process going forward because there were issues with respect to their ability to retain even the management staff that was necessary to do long-term planning and implementation relative to workforce strategies and growth. So we have been working very closely with the Northern Lights health region in that area, provided them, as I say, with additional assistance to improve their capacity to be able to deal with these issues as well as the resources to be able to deal with these issues.

Alberta Health and Wellness leads a review process which includes health assessment, but we work, obviously, with Environment in that area.* That process includes cumulative impacts of development. We're working co-operatively with Environment in that area. Environment deals with the water quality issues, and I'll leave those comments to my colleague.

With respect to STDs and communicable disease rates, as I've indicated in the House and publicly, we are concerned about the increase in STDs – and by that I'm not referring to short-term disability – not just in the Fort McMurray area. It's not isolated to the Fort McMurray area; it's actually spread across the province. While the nature of the mobile population in that area is a concern from a health issue in terms of behaviour, drug use, STDs, and other areas, and increases the use of portions of the health system, that's something that's probably true in most resource towns. That's an area that the health authority there certainly has to be prepared to deal with and that we need to deal with.

There were questions relative to Dr. O'Connor and the allegations that there was a higher rate of cancers in the Fort Chip area. We've done a review of the area. An examination of the cancer registry data does show that the rates of cholangiocarcinoma, leukemia, lymphoma, and other cancers are not elevated in residents of Fort Chip. Data related to other health conditions was examined by Health and Wellness. The prevalence of Graves' disease, rheumatoid arthritis, and congenital anomalies were not elevated in Fort Chip. The treated prevalence of asthma and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease was lower among residents of Fort Chip. The population being treated for lupus appears to be elevated for both Fort Chip and the Northern Lights health region compared to the rest of Alberta, but there's no difference in the data rates between 1995 and 2005.

The long and short of it is that the doctor has not provided his evidence to us that there is an increased rate despite being requested to do so. There is no good reason to withhold that data because cancer is supposed to be reported, so that data should have been available if it was there. The concentrations of arsenic, for example, in moose meat are the same in Wood Buffalo as in Yukon, and the long-term, low-dose analysis of sulphur dioxide and hydrogen sulphide exposure are under review at the present time.

I think I'll leave some time for my colleagues. You gave us a full raft of questions in the 10 minutes, which can't possibly be answered in 10 minutes, so I'll leave a little bit of time for Environment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Minister of Environment, you have about four minutes and 47 seconds.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's evident that it's easier to ask questions in 10 minutes than to answer them. I will do my very best to deal with at least some of the issues that were raised, and I'll do so by talking about some of the studies.

The member asked what kind of studies have been completed. I think it's important that we do talk about the fact that air quality monitoring, for example, has been ongoing in the Fort McMurray area since the 1970s. We have extensive monitoring that continues to be carried on by an excellent organization that we fund, WBEA, Wood Buffalo Environmental Association. This association is an excellent organization. It's a community-based organization that does air monitoring throughout the Wood Buffalo region. The results of that monitoring are available. I believe they even have a website, and the public is able to access that website and find out the extent of the monitoring.

We have a very extensive study that was done in the '90s, the northern river basins study. That included the Peace River, the Athabasca River, the Slave River, and Athabasca Lake. It deals with the issue of possible contaminants in the river. That study, which was a very extensive study, did not find evidence of industrial contaminants other than some evidence of nutrient loading as a result of some of the effluent from pulp mills and also evidence of nutrient loading as a result of agricultural activity in the region. In both of those cases work is ongoing as we speak to reduce and mitigate the issues surrounding those two operations.

Often mentioned and talked about is the fact that there are these tailings ponds that are associated with oil sands projects. People are always questioning whether or not those ponds are in fact leaking or if there is anyone checking to see. There are wells that are located around all of the tailings ponds that are monitored on a very regular basis by Alberta Environment. The dikes themselves that surround the tailings ponds are regulated and treated under exactly the same regulations as major dam structures, so the engineering that's associated with them has to be monitored on a regular basis. There are reporting requirements the same as there would be for an earthen dam on a river somewhere else in the province. From that aspect we have a very high level of confidence that we are not exposing the ecosystem and the watershed to any risk of contamination due to the chemicals that are contained within the tailings ponds.

There's also an interesting aspect to WBEA, the Wood Buffalo Environmental Association. They have been doing work on ambient air quality and water quality, and they also have an ongoing program that monitors human exposure by actually having volunteers wear equipment and monitor what individuals are exposed to on a regular basis. From that perspective I think we've got a pretty good handle on the overall situation with respect to the air and water quality in the region.

I don't think I have enough time, but I do want and, please, give me the opportunity to get into a discussion on how we see ourselves dealing with environmental regulation in the oil sands on a go-forward basis and from a cumulative impact. Some of the work that we've got, as the member knows – in the mandate letter that I had, one of the mandates was to develop cumulative impact, and I would be more than pleased to discuss it later on in the evening.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Minister of Energy, I'm sorry we couldn't get to you, but through the evening there'll be many opportunities for you to put your remarks on the record.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm sure I'll survive.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to make a very quick correction.

The Deputy Chair: Yes, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I misspoke. Environment leads the environmental impact assessment. Health leads the human health portion of it. I just wanted to be clear on that.*

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to congratulate the government, too, for this initiative. It's cross-ministry. It's trying to look at the bigger picture and includes at least three ministries in this case for what is, clearly, an important integration that's needed in our understanding of where we're going and how we're getting there and what some of the impacts are. I hope we can count on some written responses where we're unable to have the time to hear oral responses.

I guess one of the first questions that I would ask is whether you folks meet periodically or whether this effort tonight has stimulated you to start discussing some issues that you haven't before discussed and planned together on. Is there an opportunity to do more of that in your busy schedules? It's clearly an important dimension of governance now as we're dealing with multifactorial issues and complicated social, economic, environmental impacts.

I wanted to ask also for clarification about the health impact assessment that you mentioned and the environmental impact assessment and the cumulative impact assessment. We seem to throw around these terms a lot. At least part of what we need to be clear about is that when we're talking about a cumulative impact assessment, which I understand the Environment minister has talked about repeatedly since coming into his position, what we're talking about is a look at the total load on a river system, for example, existing and planned, and how that relates to the capacity of that bioregion to sustain over time those impacts. In other words, are we living beyond the environmental capacity of a particular bioregion?

There are other ways of thinking about cumulative impact assessment, and I think that maybe the minister of health might have been referring to ongoing impacts over many, many years and the cumulative impact on people. When I'm using the term and I think when the Environment minister is using the term, we're calling for – and I think he also has been calling for – a better assessment of the total impact of human activities on a bioregion and anticipating into the future what new developments will occur and will overstretch either the watershed or the airshed or the human capacity to deal with those impacts. So when I ask the health minister, which I want to do, “What indicators are you using for health impact assessment and over what period of time?” I want to ask that in the context of clarifying that that's not what I was referring to by cumulative impact assessment.

One thing that I've raised in the past is: when are we going to have health authorities that are capable of doing independent health impact assessments? At the present time it appears that most health impact assessments are done by the industry through consultants, and we haven't developed the capacity in health regions to do that.

On the other hand, where do we have the capacity to do cumulative impact assessment within the Environment department? This is a specialized area of study that clearly needs expertise and a serious commitment of dollars and time to do a good assessment of what that bioregion is capable of handling in terms of human beings and roads and activities of all kinds: industrial, agricultural, whatever it is that that whole bioregion is expected to cope with over the next 30, 40, 50 years.

Having just touched on those issues that arose from the discussion, I wanted to just take a step back and ask whether the ministries have talked at all about the idea of genuine progress indicators and whether in terms of thinking about sustainability we actually are developing some dialogue about what genuine progress would look like. The Pembina Institute, for example, has a series of 50 or so indicators that would tell us in fact: while our economic progress may be going like this, what is our quality of life doing? In some cases it may be going down. In some cases it may be flat. In some cases it may be going up. On issues, for example, like those that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre raised, STD rates and poverty rates and low birth rates and issues that have more to do with affordable housing and the arts, some of the social determinants of health: in other words, are we getting anywhere closer to looking at the total picture of our development in the province, or are we just going to continue to look at GDP and somehow throw in some indicators around health status or social indicators? Can we integrate those in some way and decide on at least a two- to three-year basis: is our genuine progress increasing, or are we actually declining in some areas that we need to be examining?

Well, to get to the specific areas around Upgrader Alley, which I was going to spend some time on, as you're well aware, there are a lot of people concerned about the pace and scope of development there and emissions: oxides of nitrogen and sulphur, volatile organics, particulates, ammonia, and fluoride, interestingly enough, from the Agrium plant, with high levels depositing on vegetables and some folks being requested not to eat their vegetables, not to grow vegetables. There are some real health concerns there, and I don't know that we're dealing effectively with these people, who are increasingly looking for answers and not necessarily getting them.

Assuming that we are committed to doing cumulative impact assessments, the Upgrader Alley is a prime candidate for cumulative impact assessment. What is that watershed capable of handling in terms of human activity and water withdrawals and emissions into water and airshed emissions? People are seriously wondering, as I am, how we're measuring that. How will we decide when we've reached the limit of that particular bioregion?

Have you already established a baseline health status for people in that area that are downwind, particularly from the upgraders, so that we can over time make some assessment about whether their health status is improving or worsening? Are there some key indicators that you'll be monitoring over time in the Upgrader Alley area so that, again, we can say to people with some confidence not just that the health risk assessment was fine but: “Here are the indicators we've been measuring. This is why we think we're doing this in a sensible, appropriate pace and scope. We are going to act on aberrations to those indicators. We're going to stop things or change things if we see any indication that things are going badly.”

Alberta Environment reports indicate that there are intermittent exceedances of SO₂, benzene, and fluoride. What are we doing about those to communicate with people that we know what these are doing and that we know of some of the health effects and that they should not expect that any more frequently because we're getting a handle on some of those intermittent exceedances that happen to all industries at times? I think that fundamentally people are saying: what is the health impact that we've been experiencing now, and what can we expect in the future, and how can we have confidence in these ministries that were actually monitoring the things that we care about as people in this region?

Have you considered issues like climate change in some of these assessments? There are indications that we are up against a very serious set of impacts around air quality and also now around warming, which is going to affect water significantly according to the experts. We've already lost significant amounts of surface water. Groundwater is dropping in a number of areas in central Alberta. We don't fully understand that, but we have to plan for worst-case scenarios or at least precautionary approaches to development as a result of understanding that climate change is a very serious issue affecting mostly Alberta, I would say, of all the 10 provinces. We are likely to have the most serious impacts. How are we factoring that into our development, the appropriate pace and scale of development?

Finally, I'd like to say just a few words about reclamation issues generally in the area and the concerns that many of us have that there's been a lack of accountability of industry to get onto reclamation, to ensure that we know what it is we're looking for in a reclamation and remediation site, that we have independent assessment of that rather than simply taking the word of consultants hired by the industry, and that we do more auditing to assess whether we are getting what we think we're getting from some of these contaminated sites.

Again, it's a potpourri of questions and comments, but I hope they'll be useful to guiding our discussions. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. ministers, who would like to go first? The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll pick up where I left off in talking about cumulative impact because I think it's key as we go forward.

Traditionally, Environment departments of one kind or another have dealt with the regulation of development in a very prescriptive manner, where we go on a project-by-project basis. For example, we do deal with cumulative development today, but we only consider in an EIA the existing development and the announced or confirmed, planned development.

I think we need to go further than that, and we intend to go further than that. The way you go further than that is not by trying to develop the perfect plan and prescribe the perfect plan for what development is going to occur where and how much emission is going to be from this and this and this. We want to kind of turn the whole thing upside down, where we have a serious discussion and more than just discussion – based on science, based on sound science, based on hearing from all of the relevant stakeholders – about what is the acceptable level of impact that mankind through industrial development and human activities can have on the environment without creating a situation where our quality of life is not what we feel is acceptable.

I'm not saying that that's going to be a simple matter, but I believe that we can do it. Once we've done that, then that becomes our basis for regulations, and we don't have to be so prescriptive as to say: you have to do this, this, and this. We simply say: "Where's your application? Fine. How is that application going to fit into what's already here, what's already planned, and still live within the guidelines that we've established? If you can show us how you're going to do it, be my guest. If you can't, then we're going to have a difficult time dealing with this."

Where some have said that the government needs to be putting on the brakes and stopping development, no, we don't believe that that's our role. We believe we have a very legitimate role to protect the environment. We have a very legitimate role to determine: what is the maximum impact that we're going to have? But it's not up to us to decide which projects should go ahead, which should not go ahead. That should be based on the proponents of the projects and how they can use their technology, their innovative capability to fit in within that predetermined level of impact.

That's where we see this going. Frankly, we will be making some detailed announcements shortly, but I don't think it comes as any great secret if I put on the record tonight that the Industrial Heartland, as we prefer to refer to it rather than Upgrader Alley, is one of the areas where we see an opportunity to truly pilot the concept, to understand in a relatively confined area how we can deal with issues around airshed quality, issues surrounding water, limitations of water, water quality, what the development can have, and some of the other quality-of-life issues that have been referred to.

How we bring all of that together under one umbrella, I think, is something that we can all get very excited about. I'm not going to get into any more detail tonight because we're, frankly, in the formative stage now, but we have made a commitment that that's a direction that we want to go, and once we've got enough detail in place, we will be coming forward with more detail on the issue.

Let me just talk very, very briefly about reclamation. The member talked about climate change, and we're not going to resolve any differences that we have on the strategy that we've chosen to deal with climate change. I don't think that either the member or myself are in disagreement over the seriousness of climate change. We are in a disagreement over what the strategy is that we should be taking as a government and as a province to deal with climate change.

That being said, we believe that we are taking this very, very seriously, and we do so by dealing with existing industry, talking about the reductions in CO₂ emissions from existing industry, and then we also say: well, we acknowledge that there will be new players coming onto the scene. Those new players, yes, will be producing CO₂. They don't get a free ride. They're expected to use the absolute latest and best technology, BATEA, and they also will be expected to continue to green their technology and their equipment by having reductions over time as well.

We believe that we have set the agenda for that industrial growth to come not at the expense of the environment but in conjunction with sound environmental policy. I've also said many, many times that by investing in the technology surrounding CO₂ and greenhouse gas emissions, we want to reach a stage where we have management of CO₂, not necessarily elimination of the production of CO₂ but the elimination of the release of that CO₂ into the atmosphere.

With that, I think I'll turn some time over to the health minister.

Mr. Hancock: I think my colleague has dealt with most of the environmental impact side of this. A couple of things I want to specifically deal with. On the question of whether we meet periodically, you should be aware that there is a cross-ministry approach to this. In fact, there's a deputy ministers Sustainable Development Co-ordinating Council. There's an assistant deputy ministers committee on environmental management, and there's an environmental impact assessment leadership team. Health plays a strong role in all of those with respect to the health impact side of any of those assessments. In fact, we also play on the climate change team.

There is co-operation and collaboration between ministries, and of course our public health area and environmental health is a fairly strong and growing area of concern for us because we do need to do more on the quality-of-life side and the impact on quality of life and those measures. We make sure now or look now at quantifying the effects to make sure that there aren't any unacceptable health risks, but we need to do more on the quality-of-life analysis.

With respect to the RHAs' ability to do health impact assessments, we actually are of the view that that should be reserved to government to do it cross-ministry rather than do it on a stand-alone basis with a health authority. We're looking, as you are probably undoubtedly aware, at how to enhance our ability to really deal with the public health aspects and assurance area, that's so important not just to that region but to the whole province. We're currently working on a program in that area. But specifically relative to the RHAs' capability of doing those, we believe that it does fall within the government's purview to do the quality assurance role, whether it be water or air or health impact assessment, and that's something that's best done cross-ministry.

Mr. Renner: If I have a little bit of time left, I'd like to just talk a little bit about the monitoring that's going on with respect to the Industrial Heartland because we've got two excellent organizations on the ground right here in the capital region. On the air side, the Fort Air Partnership, similar to WBEA, that we talked about in the Fort McMurray area, is a community-based organization that does an excellent job working on air monitoring.

This format of having each of the opposition parties bring forward questions at different times is a little confusing because I answered the question of the NDP, and then all of a sudden I realized: well, you haven't heard the answer.

I think that it's very important that we continue to have this community-based monitoring. The analogy that I used the other night was that it's very similar to a Neighbourhood Watch program. If we want to ensure that we're having an impact on reducing crime in a neighbourhood, we enlist Neighbourhood Watch. Yes, we still have police, we still have the enforcement side of things, but police can't be everywhere all the time, nor can we get the buy-in from the neighbourhood that this is important and that we should be there. That's why I've become very much a believer in these community-based organizations from a watershed and airshed perspective.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I participate in the cross-ministry debate or discussion this evening. I was looking through the Auditor General's report for the department of health, and I don't know if I'm going to have an opportunity to get my questions on the record in regard to that or not, but I would like to start off with coal-bed methane. Now, currently there are over 6,000 coal-bed methane wells that have been drilled, with predictions stating that there could be over 50,000 wells drilled in the next decade. While the future economic potential of coal-bed methane to Alberta is significant – I think we have a bright future – the economic considerations cannot and should not outweigh the potential negative effects to water quality that are a potential danger in coal-bed methane drilling.

The day before yesterday I had an opportunity of appearing before the royalty review. I can assure the hon. Minister of Energy that many of his officials were there, and they seemed diligent. They were working hard. They were about, as they say. But I certainly think that we should, first off, have a royalty rate that is similar to what our neighbours to the south have. In fact, when we suggest that there's a royalty rate of 12 and a half per cent for coal-bed methane production, it's even less than what our neighbours to the south are collecting in royalties. The current low productivity well allowance is simply a giveaway. It's a massive incentive to develop the industry, in my opinion.

Certainly, we should have an immediate increase in the royalties. I know that freeholders have shown me the contracts that they have signed with land agents for the development of coal-bed methane underneath their properties, and the freeholders are negotiating anywhere between 15 and 17 per cent. So for the Crown to settle for next to nothing, I think, is – well, if this was a military operation, I think neglect of duty would be the charge.

With coal-bed methane, now, not only are the royalties an issue, but what happens when the wells are drilled? Also, with coal-bed methane drilling in some cases to increase production there is a process called fracturing. Hydraulic fracturing is a common technique used to stimulate the production of oil and natural gas. I'm not going to bore the minister and his officials with details on fracturing. They know fully well how it works and why. But can the minister tell us if his department has conducted an independent scientific review of the adverse effects that coal-bed methane drilling can have on human and/or animal health? Also, can the minister please tell us what potential long-term effects exposure to heavily contaminated water due to methane migration can have on human health? What effects can this have on animal health as well? What will be the potential impacts to water quality, both surface and ground, if coal-bed methane drilling increases to the estimated 50,000 wells that are to be potentially drilled in the next decade?

The EPEA, section 40, mandates that the government must conduct studies to predict what the adverse environmental effects of a proposed activity will be. Can the minister tell us, if you can do this, what studies have been conducted to determine the environmental and human health impacts that increased coal-bed methane activity could have, and what steps are being taken to ensure that this does not happen?

Now, we've all heard of the individual cases. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has talked passionately about this. He has brought individual cases forward. But the high methane content present in Dale Zimmerman's water and Jessica Ernst's water poses a risk of explosion if subjected to flame or spark. It's completely unacceptable that people's lives are at risk due to the actions of industry. Now, I know we're going to hear this story – at least, I hope we don't hear this story – well, it's naturally occurring in some wells, and it's just something that we have to live with. Certainly, there would be incidents like this, but I think that in these two cases that explanation just doesn't have any validity.

What will the effects of exposure to contaminant water be? Already we have seen residents' burns, skin irritations, and irritated and burning eyes. There are serious implications of exposure to water with extremely high methane content as well as other toxic chemicals. These need to be addressed immediately, before coal-bed methane development continues.

Now, risks to animal health. We hear this from farmers almost on a weekly basis. We get a call or two to the office. Dale Zimmerman has reported that his livestock refuse to drink the contaminated water. However, when they are forced to drink this water, they become sick and bloated. I don't know how they could be forced to do that. I don't know how that works, but maybe we can get an explanation from Mr. Zimmerman on that one, not the minister.

There are no assurances that when his cows give birth, the calves will be healthy. What are the implications to livestock as well as to their offspring from exposure to contaminated water? Will they be healthy, or will they have serious complications ranging from deformities to being stillborn? These are questions that cannot be answered by industry and by government, and these must be answered before coal-bed methane drilling is allowed to expand as rapidly as it is.

In fact, we're debating a bill here in the Assembly on an interbasin water transfer to Bashaw and also the village of Ferintosh. It was just before Christmas, about 10 days before Christmas, that I had an opportunity – and I see that some of the Environment officials who are joining us in the Assembly tonight were present at the very same meeting west of Rimbey. This was an oil company from Calgary who wanted to use water from the aquifer that Rimbey uses. The town of Rimbey has a licence for, or I believe they consume, 1,600 cubic metres of water a day from this aquifer, and this oil outfit wanted to take about the same amount, 1,600 cubic metres a day, for enhanced oil recovery. The farmers are, as I'm sure are the officials who are joining us tonight, well aware and will certainly back me up that the farmers and the landowners that were present at that meeting were very concerned about this proposal, very concerned indeed.

If anything, the bill that we are discussing on Bashaw and Ferintosh should tell us that we can't keep coming back every session with an application for an interbasin transfer. I think that if the citizens of Rimbey or the farmers west of Rimbey who were present at this meeting before Christmas were here this evening, they would tell us that we have to change our practices, that water is such a precious element, not a commodity but an element of life, that we should use it wisely and very, very carefully.

With the fracturing fluids, while this government maintains that a primary nitrogen water-based fluid is used for injection in shallow fracturing operations by industry, there remain questions about whether other toxic fluids are used to increase pressures. Now, there are concerns that these are highly toxic fluids. Will they contaminate aquifers if present in only trace amounts? Again, we have evidence in Dale Zimmerman's gas analysis that there is ethane and pentane present in his water.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. ministers, who would like to go first? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's certainly a pleasure to join the discussions here this evening with respect to the main estimates and budget for the Department of Energy. Some way or another I'd really like to connect my comments to Energy's budget, but it might be a bit difficult considering the questions that I need to answer.

Initially, I think, the hon. member asked about coal-bed methane and health effects with respect to coal-bed methane. I would suggest that over the last number of years there have been some extensive studies done with respect to health, both human health and certainly animal health with respect to animals living in the vicinity of natural gas production facilities. I could indicate to the hon. member that there were no adverse effects found with respect to the studies.

Coal-bed methane: of course, the suggestion that there could be as many as 50,000 wells drilled in the province of Alberta. Again, I would have to indicate to the members that although that's a number – and perhaps at some point in the future we might reach a number like that – the exploration activity with respect to coal-bed methane in the last couple of years in the province of Alberta has declined dramatically, in fact. I'd also like to indicate that out of the wells that have been drilled in the province of Alberta to date, about 90 per cent of them are in the Horseshoe Canyon, and it's dry. There is no dewatering necessary with respect to those particular wells.

In the area a little bit northwest of Edmonton, where there are some production wells in coal-bed methane in the Mannville, in fact, the dewatering process and the handling and treatment of the brackish water – and I might also suggest that this particular water, Mr. Chairman, is about twice as salty as sea water. I know that there have been indications here on the floor previously that no water is unusable, and I would agree with that. What happens in this particular case is that this brackish water is returned to underground saline reservoirs, so it's going back to the ocean, where it probably originally came from.

The suggestion that royalty rates for coal-bed methane are not suitable and the assumption that the reason that the royalty rates are low is because of the low productivity section that is evident in our royalty system. I think, again, there is a variation of royalty rates in the province of Alberta depending on the history of the wells in question, the time that they were drilled and brought into production, and also their capability to produce. So rate of production certainly is taken into consideration. I would suggest that royalty rates need to reflect the economic rent that's available, and that's why there is a section in the royalty regime that deals with productivity.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, for some of the wells that we have in Alberta I would suggest that this 12 and a half or 15 per cent royalty rate may be too high to allow for economic production of some low-productivity wells. On the other hand, when you look at high-productivity wells, of which we have a number as well, that rate may be and is in certain circumstances too low. The idea that somehow or another you can make a comparison and pick a number from a freehold contract and try to compare that to the royalty system in the province, the member's attempt at making some comparison there, is a difficult one simply because the 15 to 17 per cent that the freehold owner would negotiate with a company that they were going to get involved to work on production on their freehold land is a profit-share and bears little resemblance to Alberta's royalty rate.

One of the reasons that these companies can go and get involved in freehold operations and still manage to do very well and pay the freehold mineral owner 15 to 17 per cent or whatever number it might be is simply – there are a number, but one of the reasons is that there's no bonus bid been paid on that real estate. If you look at a normal coal-bed methane well where there's been a purchase made with respect to a bonus bid to do the exploration in the first place, I'd suggest to you that trying to take 15 to 17 per cent off the top after the fact would probably make those particular pieces of business not economic.

The majority of the remaining questions, Mr. Chairman, had to do with water and the management of water and the assessment and ongoing monitoring of the water resources, and for those questions I believe that I would defer to the Minister of Environment. That's more likely in his purview.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Minister of Environment, you have two minutes and 48 seconds.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I want to talk very briefly about this whole issue of monitoring of wells and following up on investigations with some interesting statistics. The member mentioned that about 6,000 coal-bed methane wells have been drilled. I'm not sure if that's an accurate figure, but it sounds reasonable to me. To date we have received 95 complaints. We have investigated each and every one of them. Seventy-six of those files have now been closed, and the reason that they're closed is because there was found to be no connection between coal-bed methane and the issue that the complainant was dealing with. In most cases the issue came down to an issue of well maintenance, and we talked about that in question period the other day. It is critical that the owner of a well on a regular basis shock that well with chlorine bleach and chlorine and do so in an appropriate manner. We encourage, again, all owners of wells to consult an expert and find out exactly how that should be done on an ongoing basis. So that leaves 19 files that are still open, and for many of those we anticipate, once we get further information and further results from some of the monitoring that is ongoing, that we may be able to resolve those issues as well.

Let me talk, for example, about the case that the member brought forward for Mr. Zimmerman, who claimed that there were problems with the water from his well and it was causing health problems with his cattle. As a part of that investigation we solicited veterinary experts. We had two different veterinarians who participated in the investigation, and they were able to find no connection, no reason to believe that there was any link whatsoever between the health of the animals and the water that was in the well that they had tested.

The other thing I want to bring to the attention of all members is that with respect to groundwater that's allocated to the oil and gas industry, only about 7 per cent of all groundwater applications are for oil and gas. The balance are for everything else.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I just want to inform all of the officials that are present here today that should you wish your glass to be replenished with water or require any coffee, please just raise your hand, and one of the pages will come and help you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I neglected to thank all the staff that are here tonight, especially my old colleagues from health. Nice to see you again.

The Fort Chip issue was raised and then the cancer review. I guess there's a problem with small numbers. There's a problem with which cancers we focused on. I think that more and more people are asking for a more comprehensive look at what's been happening at Fort Chip. With very small numbers it's impossible to make conclusions that there is or there is not a significant impact in terms of cancer rates up there. I would encourage you to look at a broader scope of indicators and a health impact assessment. It was mentioned that arsenic, for example, in meat is significantly elevated but that it's elevated elsewhere. Well, that doesn't make it any more safe to eat arsenic-contaminated meat. What are we doing about establishing a clear understanding of where arsenic is going in our wild meats?

The Minister of Environment indicated that cumulative impact assessment is an ongoing commitment. I guess I would have to ask if it's enough of a commitment to slow development until you have the cumulative impact assessment done. If you say that you're committed to setting limits on development based on a cumulative impact assessment, when are we going to see an indication that you will actually withhold approval until you get the results of your cumulative impact assessment? It's no good to say that you're working on it and that you're continuing to look at cumulative impact assessment as a tool and then continuing to approve every application that comes through the EUB. This is not leadership, and this is not what Albertans are looking for. You're losing the confidence of a lot of Albertans with this continued discussion of cumulative impact without any effects on our approval rates.

When we talk about the need to monitor air emissions in the Industrial Heartland, if you will, it is clear that you were monitoring 20 emissions, but there are 200 emissions coming out of the stacks of the Industrial Heartland. People don't feel confident that we're necessarily monitoring the significant toxins. Indeed, they want to see signs that we know exactly why we're not monitoring some things and why we are monitoring other indicators.

More and more people have been raising concerns about the EUB process and the lack of transparency, the lack of accountability, the lack of real meaningful public involvement in some of these processes and the restrictions of who's got standing and who doesn't have standing at these hearings, especially on public lands, where nobody has standing. This clearly undermines the credibility of an organization that continues to approve 98 to 99 per cent of all applications that it receives.

I think there's a serious need from a public credibility point of view to look at the way this organization functions and the way it seems to represent industry interests, but it doesn't represent the long-term public interest. Increasingly, people are getting agitated about this, and we're hearing more and more and seeing more and more evidence that they're not going to accept this for much longer.

Coal-bed methane the Minister of Environment talked about and indicated that the vast majority have not been able to conclude any impacts from resource development. I guess I would have to ask if isotope testing was done in all those cases. Without isotope testing it's impossible, again, to say whether there is or there isn't evidence of industry impact. It's not good enough to say that we found methane and that there's some bacteria and therefore the cause is bacteria. People are also getting very tired of being told that they don't maintain their wells very well, when they've had dramatic increases in gas and they've had dramatic changes in volume since oil companies have moved into town.

There's a huge credibility gap coming here, and unless we see an independent assessment of some of these results that you're giving us, Mr. Minister, again we're going to see a tremendous erosion of confidence in what we're doing here as government.

The Zimmerman issue is a key one. This man has lost 12 animals in the last year. We don't know anything about the postmortems of those because he couldn't afford to do the postmortems. He's also had a delay of 18 days in the delivery of his calves. That's the first time in 30 years that he's been calving that he's had a delay of 18 days in his calving. We know from the WISSA study that delays in conception are associated with H₂S and other hydrocarbon emissions. Could there not be a connection between this man's delayed conception, delayed delivery, and emissions from some of these that are now, presumably, being consumed in the water in this case of these animals?

There are a lot of issues that are unclear and unaddressed as far as we on this side are concerned and the public are concerned. There's an increasing credibility gap between what our government departments are telling us, what our regulators are telling us, and what people are experiencing on the ground in terms of their air and their water and their health issues. I think we have to take a serious look at these issues.

I would again ask to hear some indication of what health indicators you are using to monitor and establish health impacts over time in the Industrial Alley in the Fort McMurray area, in the Rosebud area, where there's clear evidence from independent testing that hydrocarbons have migrated from deep resource wells into five individuals' water wells. Those are the only ones that we've done some independent testing on. However, you have not found that. This is interesting, and again it raises serious questions about why we're not getting the whole picture and who do we believe and are we just fearmongering? [interjection] I don't believe we are. Are we reflecting what this government has been in denial about? That's the question, and increasingly people are raising it with us, and it's very difficult to stand up and defend some of what's been going on: neglect, in some cases, of our groundwater. Only starting baseline testing a year ago. How does that reflect confidence in how we're monitoring our most vital resource, groundwater? That's only one aspect of what we're dealing with here.

I didn't want to provoke unnecessarily the issues here, but I do want to say that these are the issues that I'm dealing with on a day-to-day basis, all in the context of climate change and increasing anxiety, that we're not taking leadership on the most vital issue on the planet today.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I'll just take a minute to address a couple of the situations, particularly the one around the fact that there's migration of methane to potable water. That's absolutely true. It's been true for I don't know how many years but certainly thousands of years.

The wells around my grandfather's farm in the area between Hythe and Beaverlodge, that part of the world, you could light every one of them, I think. I know that you certainly could light his. They used to have these little situations there. It was interesting, actually. When we were young there, in the wintertime, particularly at times in the spring and fall when the snow wasn't really deep, at night you'd see these odd little flickers of flame that would burn for no particular reason. Nobody lit them. They're just there. Methane. Natural escape of methane.

On the Peace River, north of the town of Peace River – so we're talking about downstream from the town of Peace River. At a place called Tar Island – well, actually, the natural gas leakage in the river is not quite at Tar Island, but it's close. There's a situation there, and I've been there and actually done it: lit the gas that's leaking out of the middle of the Peace River – right? – and made a flare that would certainly be, I'd suggest, a little dramatic in a room like this, cover three quarters of it at least. It's there. Natural methane in potable water is absolutely nothing new.

To suggest that the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is for some reason a second-rate organization: I really take exception to that. I would suggest to you that for all the years that the ERCB, the PUB, and then, joined together, the EUB have served Albertans, they have done an exemplary job. I would suggest to the member opposite that there are a number of countries around the world that continue to come to Alberta to see how we make this system work.

Further to that, I would suggest to you that there have been stresses, strain, increased numbers of applications for these members, the very good, by the way, people serving the public of the province of Alberta. Numbers of applications are increasing to the point where it gets a little difficult for them to manage. They have done a very good job of it. I intend to restructure the EUB into an energy resources conservation board and an Alberta utilities commission so that these two pieces of business – because they're a bit confused at this time in the public's eye. There are different cultures and different reasons for a public utility commission to exist and a resources conservation regulatory authority to exist. We'll clarify that. If that's part of the problem, we're going to resolve that. It won't be all that long, and we'll have some discussions on the floor of this Legislature with respect to that issue.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. Either of the other ministers?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. One of the questions that was asked was: can we do a more comprehensive study with respect to the cancer rates in Fort Chip? I guess I'll have to answer as I've answered a number of times: you can't get any more comprehensive than a hundred per cent. They've looked at every case, and the information is there. A review of the death registrations indicated 161 deaths of Fort Chip residents for the years 1983 to 2005, an average of seven deaths per year, a range of one to 13 deaths per year. The most common causes of death were heart disease, at 24.7 per cent. For the province of Alberta heart disease accounted for 25 per cent, so that's basically on the provincial average.

All cancers, 20.3 per cent. All cancers for the province, 28.6 per cent, well below the provincial average. With respect to poisoning, injury and poisoning, 16.5 per cent. Now, there's an issue we've got to get a handle on. And respiratory disease, 11.4 per cent. Given the rate of diabetes, hypertension, renal failure, injury and poisoning mortality, a focus on reducing the risk factors for those events would lead to improvement of the overall health status of that community.

I mean, there is cancer in that community; there's cancer across the province. We want to deal with it. We've put $500 million into a legacy fund to deliver $25 million out so that we can do colorectal screening, we can do prescreening on cancers, and we can fight the causes of cancer right across the province. But there's no indication from the examination that was done of a hundred per cent of the cases that cancer is higher there than anywhere else.

The doctor who has been claiming that despite being required by law to give evidence of that has not done so. So I would be very interested if he has evidence or if there is any evidence that suggests otherwise because we've had a very comprehensive look at this, and all the indications that we have indicate that that's not the case. There are issues that can be dealt with in that community like there are in every community. When you look at the higher rates for some areas in that community, those are the things that we really need to be focusing on to find out what's causing those.

Now, with respect to the question of arsenic the member didn't quote me, but he misinterpreted what I said, because I didn't say that there were higher incidents of arsenic in moose meat. I said that the incidence of arsenic in moose meat was the same in Wood Buffalo as in Yukon, which was a test thing. The other test was east of Edmonton, and it was the same, relatively, as east of Edmonton. The analysis of arsenic that was done, the independent investigation that Alberta Health and Wellness did, engaged experts to assist with the investigation in collaboration with Alberta Sustainable Resource Development and local aboriginal communities. The report found that there was no difference in arsenic concentrations in moose and in cattail root in the Wood Buffalo region as compared to the reference samples from Yukon and from east of Edmonton.

That was the report that was released to the community March 28 at a town hall meeting. It included evaluating the methodology that Suncor used to generate the predicted arsenic-related health risk that caused the issue to become a public concern, reviewed the arsenic exposure limits, evaluated the predicted health risk using alternate methodologies, and collected samples of moose, deer, and cattail root to establish existing arsenic levels. So let's be clear. I didn't say that there were elevated arsenic levels; I said that they were comparable to the reference samples. That was the information that was made available. The study did not indicate a higher degree of concern with respect to arsenic in that area.

Now, with respect to the role of Health and Wellness in monitoring the health of Albertans one of the ways that we do that fairly comprehensively is through enhanced disease and syndromic surveillance; i.e., lab data for unusual sets of symptoms and syndromes, including a connection with the poison and drug information service data. So we're surveilling the data to see if there are any unusual spikes, any unusual indicators on that side as well as the other health indication surveillance has done.

The Deputy Chair: We still have about a minute and 20 seconds. Any minister?

Mr. Renner: I'd like to in that short period of time address this question of cumulative impact and the question that the member asked: if we're going to do cumulative impact, why don't we just stop everything right now until we get it done? Well, the answer to that is very simple: because we're not in a crisis right now. We're recognizing that we need to do adequate planning, but we have done, as I said, all of this monitoring. As of today the ambient air quality in the oil sands area, for example, is very good. The acid disposition is below thresholds already established. Water quality is good, and we've set caps on water withdrawal from the river.

We don't need to put some kind of a moratorium in place. We don't need to stop everything while we figure out this cumulative impact. We can do them in parallel. And if there are one or two more applications that are approved in that process, it's not going to have a significant effect on the overall. As I indicated, once we've got this cumulative impact process under way, then the approval procedure goes upside down. Approvals depend upon: how do you live within our restrictions?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you have five minutes.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm grateful to get a second at bat here. Lots of stuff to cover in this. I'd like to loop back, if I might, and pick up some additional questions around the – I'm sorry; I'm looking for the term that we all agreed on – Industrial Heartland issue. I'm noting that in the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act division 1, section 40, is around the environmental assessment process. It lays out, you know, supporting the goals of environmental protection; integrating environmental protection and economic decisions at an early stage of planning; predicting environmental, social, economic, and cultural consequences of a proposed activity and assessing plans to mitigate adverse impacts; et cetera. I'm sure you're very familiar with this section.

I'm wondering if the government is able to tell me from any ministry whether section 40(c) has been followed and whether there have been any studies that were done to predict environmental, social, and cultural consequences of adverse impacts resulting from the addition of the upgraders that have already been approved or are likely to be approved for this Industrial Heartland.

I'm also wondering about whether there's any evidence that adding these additional upgraders to a fairly intense industrial area already would not have negative impacts on water quality and quantity. Have there been any modelling scenarios that have been conducted utilizing past and present data on water quality and water flow and future projected statistical data to give an idea of how much water will be consumed under these additional 10 upgraders? What treatment capacity would be needed to guarantee safe drinking water? The obvious question to follow that: is that waste treatment or water treatment capacity online? Is it being planned along with the rest of this?

You know, one of the problems we've identified is that we don't know how much groundwater we've got. I'm sorry. Is that right?

Dr. Swann: Mapping it.

Ms Blakeman: Mapping it. Is there a baseline estimate of how much groundwater is actually in the area? Has anybody done this? Energy or Environment or Health or anybody?

I'm also looking for any kind of statistical or scientific analysis to determine the relationship between groundwater and surface water in this area and if these studies have been completed prior to allowing these developments. And, I suppose, if not, why not?

I also note under the Public Health Act, section 3.3 sub 4 – and I'm coming in halfway through here – that denying a development permit for the project on the grounds there is likely to be an unacceptable negative impact on the water supply of nearby landowners. I'm wondering if the minister is satisfied – or have indeed the requirements been met? – that the approval of these upgraders can satisfy the requirements under the Public Health Act in that particular section and if there's been any involvement from the minister of health with the Minister of Environment in order to meet these prescribed requirements under this particular section.

Part of it is that if these water requirements couldn't be met, would the approval still go ahead on the assumption that it would catch up? Part of what I'm hearing tonight is that there would be no hesitation step, no slowing of any development here if it looked like there might be a problem or if there was a signalling of it. Am I reading this right, then? If there was a negative impact that was identified, would the upgraders continue to proceed at the pace that they wished to proceed at? I think that's what I was hearing the Environment minister say in a different context. I'm checking it for this one in particular.

I'm not going to have enough time. I'm going to try and come back later and talk about the Turner Valley gas plant site, which involves Environment and Health.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hour and a half allocated for the Liberal caucus has now lapsed. The next half-hour is allocated between the ND caucus and the ministers, and the ND caucus is indicating to me that he would prefer to go in chunks of five minutes, back and forth, if that is okay with all three of you. That's agreeable.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. You know, due to the time constraint I'm certainly going to move rather quickly. I presume that we have an agreement to get some answers in writing if we don't have the time to do it otherwise.

I'm glad to see Energy, Environment, and Health brought together here. There's a certain synergy of value that we have to assess that perhaps we're not doing in the fullness of time, measuring all of the cumulative impacts, perhaps, where a given energy megaproject might have a long-term impact on health, or an environmental initiative that we put in place might have some constraints on our energy program. Working together like this, at least in principle, we certainly do have some potential.

I'm going to use a framework of water and cumulative impacts, living conditions and health, and then some energy initiatives for my questions. I'm going to start with water. In the Athabasca River tar sands companies are currently allowed to continue withdrawing water even when the river levels are dangerously low. The municipality of Wood Buffalo states that Alberta Environment has not had the opportunity or the resources to undertake a review to determine whether there is sufficient available water to support all of the projects. This extends as well to the North Saskatchewan upgraders that we are seeing being proposed along with other initiatives downstream here from Edmonton. I would like to ask: why has the province granted licences for projects that together could in fact endanger the North Saskatchewan River flow?

Alberta Environment spokesperson Lisa Grotkowski, in fact, said that the department has taken a general look at the river and is confident that it could supply all the upgraders, but how can a general look, so to speak, replace a cumulative assessment actually seeing how much water is required? As well, in relation to that, then I would like to ask: why is it that the province has not prioritized the assessment of the combined impact of all of the mining operations on the Athabasca River side as well? These are cumulative impact assessment questions in regard to water flow. Of course, we see that the water flow of these rivers is not to be banked on. You know, we have changes in the flows and have over the last 20 years seen significant decreases in those average flows for those two rivers, so I'm very concerned about that.

As well, then, talking about, I guess, cumulative impacts, in 1999 the province recognized the environmental management frameworks, and we sort of saw this evolve to the Cumulative Environmental Management Association, or CEMA, from 2000. This is a network that is meant to look at the cumulative impacts. This was targeted for completion in 2002 but has not been released. However, the pace of projects in the interim still has not slowed down.

In Alberta we've seen that when protected areas are established after subsurface rights are granted, options for protection are actually constrained because the existing mineral rights trump the protected land designation. I would like to ask: why cannot the reverse be true and, in fact, the protected portion of that equation be trumping the mineral rights?

You know, we've had more than, in my assessment, 3,224 oil sands leases that have been issued to date, and the operations are affecting almost 50,000 square kilometres. I'd like to ask: does the government plan to have an environmental management framework before or after projects for the exploitation of the rest of the tar sands region are granted? This is a very important consideration. In relation to that, will the framework modify the actual 10-year regime to ensure that decisions include a cumulative environmental assessment of the region?

As well, just as sort of one of my own personal questions in regard to this, has the government considered putting aside equivalent tracts of land that would be protected in perpetuity to somehow counter the permanent destruction that is incurred at any given tar sands mining site? We've not seen much success at all with reclamation, so perhaps a protection equivalency program could seek to mitigate some of the destruction that we're seeing in the northern boreal forest.

The provincial land use . . . [Mr. Eggen's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have to say at the outset that I'm disappointed in the questions that have come forward because if I'm not mistaken – and I stand to be corrected – at least half of the questions that the hon. member brought forward were exactly the same questions that he asked two nights ago standing in this very place, particularly with respect to the Athabasca River. I talked about the water withdrawal from the Athabasca River. Like I say, I stand to be corrected, but I think I answered those questions. However, I'll do it one more time.

The issue on the Athabasca River is one that we have dealt with in the form of the IFN, the in-stream flow needs. We did a scientific analysis of the river, and we determined that there are three different and distinct rates of flow that the river is historically at. At high flow there are huge amounts of water, and there is relatively little impact from water withdrawals. At a middle stage, the yellow stage, we've designated that one as green. We have the yellow stage, where there's a little less flow, where we've reduced the amount of water that can be withdrawn. I think the most important is that at the red stage, which is primarily at winter when the river is frozen over, that's the lowest stream flow, and that's the point that we have indicated that there is a maximum of eight cubic metres per second that can be withdrawn. That amounts to about 5 per cent of low flow. It's an insignificant amount related to high flow, but it's 5 per cent of the low flow, which is, frankly, well within the range of error for even determining the flow.

It is, in our estimation, the most restrictive, protective covenant on any river system in North America. That same kind of analysis will take place on the North Saskatchewan River, so when we begin to deal with the cumulative impact, the planning that I've been referring to earlier with respect to the Industrial Heartland, we will have that same kind of scientific analysis on the North Saskatchewan, and we'll have that same determination on what is the maximum withdrawal that can be taken from the river at any given time and not affect the ecosystem.

I want to make this abundantly clear to all members, to the last two members that have talked about licensing and permitting for upgrader plants in the Industrial Heartland: no licences have been issued. No applications have been received. We haven't done all of the analysis that the member refers to for determining whether or not there is available water, whether or not there is this, this, and this because we haven't even received an application to know what we can base that upon.

I did indicate, however, that it is the intent for us to use this as a pilot project, to look at cumulative impact to determine what is the maximum amount of impact that would not significantly impair the quality of life, impair the quality of the ecosystem, the health of the ecosystem, the quality of the airshed, all of those things. At the end of the day, when it comes time to deal with the applications, which in all likelihood will be coming forward – we have every indication that there will be applications coming forward. But as of this point the only EIA that's under way is for the Redwater application. No other applications have come forward to date, so it's all at this point at the discussion stage.

We're being proactive, as the member suggests that we should be, by looking down the road, reading the newspapers, hearing what individual companies have in mind and announcements that have been made. We should be preparing ourselves. We should be getting ready for it. We should be doing it proactively, and we are going to be doing that. But we do not have environmental impact assessments under way simply because we don't have applications that have been received at this point in time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you. I would like to continue on, then, with the second section that I had indicated, which is talking about living conditions and health. Alberta emits significant industrial air pollutants, and these pollutants include certified emissions such as sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide, which have adverse effects on forest, fresh water, soils, and human health. They are the main precursors, as well, of acid rain, which contributes to the acidification of lakes and streams and such like. Health effects include breathing problems, respiratory illnesses, changes to the lungs' defenses, and worsening respiratory and cardiovascular disease. I would like to ask in a general sense: how does the province plan to deal with the acidification of water due to acid rain, and how does the province plan to prevent and attend to respiratory problems associated with the high acidification of these emissions?

The regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, which includes the city of Fort McMurray, is suffering perhaps the most acute strain from development. We've heard quite a number of interesting submissions and reports from this area. According to the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo it is particularly interested in the deficiencies of quality-of-life indicators identified by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, which include a wide range that I do believe are not just health indicators but quality-of-life indicators:

affordable housing, social infrastructure, local economy, natural environment, personal and community health, personal financial security, and personal safety.

Particularly in regard to health care delivered through the area of the regional health authority in the Fort McMurray area, Northern Lights has difficulty delivering community health facilities, community care facilities in the community. The number of acute-care beds is lower than the provincial average, et cetera. I just was, in fact, at one of the EUB hearings up in Fort McMurray in August, and the emphatic request by the regional authority was to slow down the pace of growth so that the quality of life and some of these health indicators can be recognized. I was wondering why the province is not attending to this request from the population of the municipality, which otherwise probably has the best finger on the pulse of the overall health of the community of Wood Buffalo. In the face of the incapacity of infrastructure to keep pace with the project approvals up there, you know, are we in fact perhaps precipitating the decline of quality of life in that region, and what could we do to turn that around?

Some communities are also very concerned that the cumulative impacts of resource development on the environment have direct implications on the health of individuals. As the minister has pointed out, although we haven't had formal approvals of the industrial development to the northeast of Edmonton, certainly we will expect that to indeed happen. You know, it's important to be proactive, I believe, in regard to these issues in terms of acidification and the monitoring of carcinogens in the environment so that we can be preventative in regard to these issues.

What programs together cross-ministry, with the three ministries here available, do we have available to assess the overall impact of human health in regard to this rapid pace of development? This is an interesting discussion that I would like, you know, people to reflect on here in the province. Would this assessment or ongoing sort of revealing of this information be available as the oil sands projects continue to be approved?

You know, I note that the core business of the ministry of health is to lead and participate in continuous improvement in the health care system. However, this is at odds with the pace of development and the delivery of this core business pledge by the ministry for continuous improvement . . . [Mr. Eggen's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. So much to say and so little time. The hon. member started off, I think, by saying that he was up there last August, so he has missed most of a year of progress in terms of health. Certainly, as I indicated in earlier questions tonight, there was a report done by former deputy minister Radke with some good support, some very good people on the committee. They did an analysis of a number of things relative to the development and the impacts of development in the Fort McMurray area. One of the areas that they focused on was health.

The issue that was raised, as I understand it, in the hearings previously was that there needs to be something done to ameliorate the impacts of rapid growth from the health authority's perspective, the increased population issue, and the shadow population issues, and how they deal with their ability to deal with that. That was their concern. Well, we've addressed that concern. We've added a significant – in fact, I think the Northern Lights health authority: 81 per cent increase in their budget – 81 per cent. Now, if that's not a significant addressing of the issue, I don't know what is.

Where does that money go? Well, a lot of that money went for the purposes of addressing their staffing issues because that was one of their primary concerns. The northern allowance, which they asked for as their primary concern: the first meeting I had with them almost immediately after I was appointed to the ministry, the issue hit the table as to what we were going to do with respect to the issue. They were particularly concerned about what was happening over the Christmas season and then following that.

So we started working with them immediately on that issue. I started working and the staff in the department were working with them over that period of time. I met with them as soon as I could in January, and we talked about what they needed in terms of being able to address some of the issues. We addressed those as soon as we possibly could through attending at Treasury Board.

One of the first issues that they had concern about was physician coverage, and we put in place a program. We worked with the AMA to provide for coverage at the hospital. There were some concerns. I mean, some of the doctors in the area were asking for about $2,400 a day to provide coverage at the hospital because they had to take that time away from their very busy practices. We did better than that, Mr. Chairman. We provided $1,200 per day and brought people in to help.

Now, that did impact other areas of the province. That's not a long-term solution, but it allowed the doctors who were there to continue to serve their patients and supplemented the resources that were there. That's the type of response that we made in the short term to immediately deal with the issues and then brought the resources to the table to help them with the northern allowance issue so that they could retain staff. The early report on that is that it has been very effective for them as a tool, as they expected. And we made the commitment to the community health facilities that they need in order to continue to sustain that population.

The hon. member asked about health status and points to our role in health status. Well, of course, that's very important. That's not just a Fort McMurray issue, to be frank. That's an Alberta issue. If we want to be able to sustain the acute-care health system, we have to be focused on health status. There are so many issues around that. We are very concerned about monitoring health status and making sure that if there are any spikes – and as I indicated earlier, we're doing enhanced surveillance, monitoring the data through disease and syndromic surveillance, lab data, looking for unusual sets of symptoms and syndromes, looking for unusual occurrences. But our clear focus is on encouraging all Albertans to take responsibility for health status, and that can very much be focused on in the Fort McMurray area.

Living conditions and health and quality of life are very important, and there are issues relative to quality of life that have to be dealt with in a fast-growing community. Government across the board has moved on those with respect to making sure that there's land available so that more housing units can be made available because housing quality is certainly an indicator of quality of life. Building bigger, more expensive houses doesn't enhance necessarily your quality of life, but making sure that you have living units available is certainly important.

Respiratory problems averted through analysis and environmental impact assessments to make sure that no unacceptable health conditions will exist . . . [Mr. Hancock's speaking time expired] I would be happy to come back with more.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Five minutes doesn't last long.

That's for sure. Perhaps what I would like to do is try to not bring up so much but, instead, focus on a couple of issues more specifically.

A statement of the Environment minister intrigues me, and he mentioned this the other night as well: looking for a Neighbourhood Watch model for environmental concerns and for health concerns as well, perhaps, as a way to engage the public in the way that industrial and drilling and energy initiatives in their environment – perhaps become more educated about those and participate. You know, certainly I encourage this as well, but what I've seen in the last couple of years or so is that municipalities do want in fact to engage in having more of a say in what sort of industrial activity or drilling activity is occurring in their area, but often they will be rebuffed at a higher level.

Say the Strathcona county was trying to place some limitations on sour gas well drilling in areas close to populated regions. You know, this is, I believe, an indication of this interest in the Neighbourhood Watch model. But then the reality of it is that often the municipalities or local groups will in fact be at odds. It's more of an adversarial situation set-up rather than a consultative approach, the same that I could see so often with EUB meetings, as evidenced by the 500 kV line, the controversy that's happening now in Rimbey. I mean, I want to encourage the idea, but then the reality is something else, and it ends up more of a combative model than a consultative and collaborative approach.

I would perhaps like to ask if there is any initiative that might be coming from either the Energy or the Environment group where we could see the actual consultation taking place on the decision for any given energy project or drilling project or electricity lines, where the municipality actually does get a say in whether or not these things go forward.

As well, certainly, the issue in regard to health and sour gas is an issue that I'm very concerned about because we're not necessarily seeing the full picture unfolding. Different anecdotal stories that I hear from different parts of the province, you know, suggest that the sour gas emissions, in fact, do cause health problems not just for humans but for livestock and such, so I was wondering if there was an initiative between Alberta Health and perhaps Energy and Environment to consult more specifically on the effects of sour gas emissions on livestock and human health as well.

Also in that vein one of the difficulties that I have categorically between Energy and Health and Environment is that so often when we're dealing with any given energy project, be it an approval in the tar sands with heavy oil or a coal plant or what have you, it seems that Health or Environment are less able to step in and shut down or to have the definitive say on a coal plant or on a tar sands project, as opposed to the EUB perhaps having the final say. So I would just like to see more of a collaborative approach between these three ministries.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Initially, I'll just address some of the concerns here, I think, with respect to the Industrial Heartland area and some of the questions around sour gas. Certainly, the Industrial Heartland area in the province of Alberta is a strategic region, and it will have strategic importance for the province and, most certainly, for the energy industry as we move forward. Industrial development in the area will improve the growth of the value-added sector in the province, and we'll do this taking into account and consideration all of the necessary environmental and other approval processes that are currently and will in the future come into play in the province.

All of these projects, upgrading projects or any other projects that would move ahead in the Industrial Heartland, require Alberta Environment and EUB approval. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to you that the health of Albertans and the health of our environment is top of mind during any approval process. The EUB guidelines in place ensure that any Albertan who may be affected by the development of energy or any facilities can participate in the process. The best interests of Albertans are a priority when we consider industrial development in the heartland or in any other part of the province of Alberta.

Suggestions that there should be municipal consultation or that we would initiate some form of consultation on a well-by-well basis or, you know, some kind of an idea that we can micromanage each one of these pieces of business that would come before the EUB by consultation and have municipal consultation on each well that's proposed in the province of Alberta would be, I would suggest, an interesting exercise because although we've had a little decline in activity in 2007, in 2005 there were, just wells alone, 24,000 some-odd wells drilled in the province of Alberta. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be quite an interesting process if we had a consultation on every one of those projects.

Sour gas accounts for roughly one-third of the total gas that's produced in the province of Alberta. Of course, the concern with respect to sour gas is that it contains more or less degrees, concentrations, of hydrogen sulphide. Hydrogen sulphide, Mr. Chairman, most certainly is toxic to humans and animals.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the time allocated for the ND caucus has now lapsed. The balance of the time, which is one hour, will now be allocated to any member of the Assembly that wishes to participate. It will be in 10-minute time slots.

The chair will now recognize the Member for Edmonton-Manning, and I'd request him to please introduce his guest to start with.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to introduce Robin Williams from Edmonton. Actually, her family is from the great Alberta community of Fort Assiniboine. She's here to help today. Thanks for coming.

I'm very pleased to rise. This is the first day I've been up on these debates. I'm very pleased and honoured to be able to stand in this Legislature to question the minister and departments. To start with, I must say that I think the 9.5 per cent increase in funding for the health authorities is a good move. I mean, it's far above inflation and all the rest of that, but I think there are many areas where we can gain cost savings in the long term and try to ensure the health of Albertans.

Now, the issue of home care is one that has come home to me quite a bit in the last little while. I've talked with a recipient with MS in my constituency office just a couple of days ago who is having great difficulty getting home care largely because of the issue of getting attendants who will actually be working in the industry and the shortage of people working in the industry. The difficulty in that is increased, and it's severe.

I raised this to some degree in speaking to Seniors this afternoon, but one area I saw in a presentation to an economic development conference in Camrose last fall, I believe it was, where an aboriginal leader spoke to the great success that they were having in Saskatchewan with training individuals from northern reserves in Saskatchewan to get their qualifications in various health care professions.

They moved into the urban centres of Saskatoon, North Battleford, and other areas to provide assistance in the shortages that Saskatchewan was having in that area. My one question is whether the minister is, in terms of training – and some of that goes to other departments, of course – trying to encourage that in terms of trying to find some ways to deal with the staffing problems that we have in so many of our health care and long-term care types of processes?

Now, the removal of the home-care ceiling. I think that was a very good move. I am just wondering what the total cost might be, on average, per individual for this type of funding. It's something that I must speak to a little bit personally because my mother was always a strong advocate for home care, going back 30, 35 years. She would even attend conferences and lobby in Ottawa and do other things. This is a very strong development in this area. I hope that it helps in the funding and will be a very positive development for many Albertans.

The Northern Lights health authority has been a great concern for many people in my riding because there are many Edmontonians that work and are that shadow population in that area and, you know, live on living-out allowance or fifth wheels or many in the camps. The provision of proper health care, the ability to access health care is an issue for many of them. I was up there just a few weeks ago and met with a number of the municipal officials, the mayor and such, and talked about the continuing problems. There is certainly a look by the government to try and deal with those problems by some of the ways that it has dealt with the community clinics, the northern allowances, some of the other factors, to try and deal with what are essentially labour issues and cost issues with a burgeoning population and a large shadow population.

I guess one question is: is there any true and hard estimate of what that shadow population does average out to in a year – I know it's up and down and up and down – and what the projected costs are in terms of health care funding for the Northern Lights authority?

Another area that I think is important in the health care area – and I'm just going to concentrate on Health for now and maybe, hopefully, get up again to speak about Energy and Environment. Now, I've lost about 85 pounds since December, and it's a good thing. Part of that is not having to sit in long caucus meetings and listen to . . . Sorry about that. I diverge.

You know, that's consistent workouts, and it's going to the gym, and it's changing diet a little bit. Wellness is important.

Mr. MacDonald: Eighty-five pounds?

Mr. Backs: Eighty-five pounds, yes. It certainly is a factor in health and certainly is a factor in making things good.

Being at the health care centre in my area, I'm getting a lot of questions. I'm seeing posters, actually, and they're asking me questions about these posters, about whether the ministry will support some extension of wellness accounts – I know that there are some for provincial government employees – in a larger area or to encourage them with private employers and, perhaps in the next budget, to look at some sort of a tax credit that is similar to some of the measures that are done for children at the federal level. I proposed a children's recreation tax credit as a private member's bill idea a couple of years ago and was pleased to see the feds kind of move a little bit on that idea. It at least gets a little bit of money for children into the hands of parents. Many people in my health club are asking about whether or not this type of thing could be extended for all individuals in our society and say that it, indeed, would be and could be a great saving for the health care system.

Now, again, primary care networks are a great success on the part of the department and the government and the health authorities in our province and have very much increased the confidence in health care provision in our province by what has happened with hips and such. I guess another question is: what might be other additions to the list of these team approaches, and how might they be considered in 2010 in the three-year look forward on that?

I've also had raised with me some of the issues on the personal touch in terms of complaints. Capital health had a new restaurant information system, and just reading a little bit from an article here about getting waited on with a personal touch: Capital health launched a pilot project to offer information from the latest restaurant inspection reports via the Capital Health Link telephone line, but instead of having a Health Link worker give the information, inquiries are being returned by the actual health inspector who performed the most recent inspection on the restaurant in question. Now, that's only a temporary measure, but it's an interesting sort of pilot program. I've had it raised to me because somebody brought forward the article and said that, you know, they are interested in the same type of approach being brought forward, perhaps, on a province-wide basis and maybe even extended to such things as accommodations, rental accommodation, or even motels and such. There was a clear desire to ask on that particular point whether or not that might be some sort of possibility even if in the future.

The health care system. I must commend the minister for many positive approaches that have been brought forward. The communications on the part of the department have been, I think, very well done.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Those questions all seemed to be in the area of health, so I'll see if I can handle most of them for the hon. member.

Home care, getting attendants. The workforce strategy is a very important piece. It's one of my mandates. Obviously, while a lot of the focus seems to be publicly on where we get more doctors and where we get more nurses, the actual area of significant need is really on the personal care side. How do we make sure that people have access to appropriately trained personal care attendants to manage their living needs so that they can live independently if possible if they can live in their own homes with support where needed and also, of course, in residential accommodation, whether it's a designated assisted living or long-term care?

Getting personal care attendants and making sure that they're appropriately qualified. The hon. member will know that we have a new set of standards in place with respect to care, and that's being applied to continuing care and privately run facilities as well as to health authorities in terms of those care standards. But that adds some complications because now that there's a set of accreditations that are required, people are concerned that the income levels are not such that a person would actually be inspired to get the accreditation because it's not necessarily compensated for in income. Other service businesses are perhaps being too competitive in that area, so it's difficult to attract people to the field. So that's an area that we need to deal with. We need to get more personal care attendants. We need to make sure that they get access to the accreditation of the standards that they need so that we can serve well.

There are some very important things happening in that area. Alberta just signed an agreement with Capital health authority, for example, to make some training positions available on the aboriginal side, as the hon. member mentioned. Careers: the Next Generation

Foundation the hon. member will be familiar with, and Alberta Health pays for a special focus on aboriginal students in the health area.

I just came back from meeting with the East Central health board, and they're talking about things that they're doing in co-operation with NorQuest and with Grant MacEwan with respect to the workforce and involving local residents who perhaps have capacities that are underutilized. I think they told me they deal with 17 different advanced education institutions in terms of making courses available to local residents so that they can get the capabilities that they need to be consistent players and to be participants in the system, including discussion about a health care aide curriculum piece which could be added to the high school curriculum available just as courses are in cosmetology or other areas which would lead to a student graduating from high school with the appropriate accreditation in hand to enhance their ability to move immediately into the workforce if that was their desire and give them a leg up on a health care profession if that's where they wanted to go. So there are some very interesting things happening in that area.

Now, the hon. member talked about Northern Lights, particularly with respect to the shadow population. First of all, I should say that we're working with Northern Lights and Peace Country health to better define the whole concept of shadow population and a mechanism to count and what type of formula might work to include them in a funding formula. But having said that, there are some things that should be of interest.

First of all, in reviewing the health care data, it would seem to be clear that apart from emergency services most of the shadow population goes home for their health care. That home may be here in Alberta or it may be in other parts of the country. But there's no evidence, at least on the surface – and, as I say, we have a task force that will be looking into this in more depth – that there's a huge impact on those health regions from the shadow population other than, as I say, with respect to the provision of emergency services.

In fact, I would point to the data that we have with respect to our funding allocation for this year. The Northern Lights health district has actually paid an export of $17 million. Now, I don't know whether we actually make them pay that or whether we just account that. [interjection] We just account it, but the suggestion would be, actually, that they send more people out than they bring in. If the shadow population was getting medical services in that area, the health data should reveal an import because they would be paid because the residency of the shadow population would be their home residency and the import/export formula should account for that.

As I say, we're not dismissing that area. We're looking at it very seriously. That's been a concern of both Peace Country and Northern Lights. We want to know the impact of the shadow population, but the surface evidence would suggest that that's not as big an issue as it's made out to be, and there may be other issues that the person should be looking to.

The hon. member mentioned wellness, and I'm glad he did because that's one of my favourite topics. If we want to have an acute-care system that's there to take care of our parents when we need it and our children when we need it and, heaven forbid, ourselves from time to time, we have to make sure that fewer people need the system. That's the only way it's going to be sustainable in the long term. This is a long-term issue because wellness is not something that you can accomplish and measure on a day-to-day basis, notwithstanding the hon. member's mention of weight loss. You know, this is a long-term project. I'm sure the hon. member knows, as I know, that weight loss can be fickle. It needs to be sustained over a long period of time.

The issues of wellness, though, are very, very important for us.

We can talk about all the acute-care delivery. We're going to expand. We know that we're going to expand the delivery of acute-care services. It's been exponential over the last 15 years in terms of the number of services that are delivered, the number of hip surgeries and heart surgeries, the number of MRIs, and the number of scans. It's been exponential in terms of its growth.

We can do more for more people because of the new techniques, new technologies, new drugs. We're doing hip surgery on 90-year-olds that we weren't doing before on 70-year-olds. If we're going to do that – and we are – then we need to make sure that fewer people actually need those services by increasing the health status of Albertans. To do that, we need to make sure that Albertans take responsibility for their health status and are supported by the health care professionals through PCNs and others in their community to make sure that they can take care of their health status.

Now, one of my favourites, of course. The PCNs are a great way of bringing a team approach to health care delivery and leveraging the health care resources, making best use of the health care resources, the health care personnel that we have so that doctors can do what doctors are well trained to do, that nurses can work to their capacity, that dieticians and pharmacists and other health care professionals can work as a team.

We found that approach to be so supremely effective with the bone and joint team, the Bone and Joint Institute process, and the steering committee. Yes, we put more resources into that project, but what we learned from that project was that by re-engineering the process and using a team approach and using health care professionals for the health care needs and using support people to help them to expand their capacity, we could take the same amount of resources and do a whole volume more of work and improve the access times and improve the results.

So we need to take the learning from that and translate it to other areas. The process engineering is what is really important, coming out of that, to show that the teamwork approach really does enhance our ability to deliver the services. That can be used not just on hips or knees; that can be used for any skeletal processes. It can be used in ambulatory care. It can be used right across the board, and that's very important learning that we have from that to be applied.

Now, the Auditor General commented on food audits in the 2005-2006 annual report. As a result of the issues raised by the Auditor General and issues raised in general by the community, we are moving to develop a process to address public disclosure of restaurant inspections. In fact, the project that the member referred to with respect to Capital health is in fact the pilot project that they're doing on our behalf to work out the kinks, to deal with the systemic issues that might have to be dealt with so that we can take the learnings from that and develop the system for a province-wide system of reporting that's appropriate. The recommendations from that pilot are expected in December 2007, and then we should be able, if it's successful and if the details work out, to expand it across the province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've got a few questions that I'd like to leave for the Minister of Energy. The department's 2007 to 2010 budget plan states that "installed generating capacity will need to increase in order to keep pace with Alberta's growing demand for electricity . . . [pending] enhancements to Alberta's transmission system to ensure access to market." What kind of generation is being looked at for increasing Alberta's electrical capacity, in particular coal-fired generation?

Another question, Mr. Chairman. The business plan commits the minister to developing an integrated, co-ordinated approach to research that supports clean-coal technology. How far along are these efforts, and how will this tie into plans for more generation capacity?

There's some talk about Alberta as a stable, reliable source for energy, but a lot of the discussion is about oil and gas, and that's natural gas. Coal is not such a prominent part of the discussion. What is being done to promote Alberta's coal outside the province?

Another question: what is being done to improve well site cleanups?

A lot of my constituents in West Yellowhead have been complaining that utility companies are not doing actual meter reading for months, and then they're charging large amounts on one month's bill to make up the difference. What sort of recourse is available to these individuals? The department's business plan says that metering policy recommendations will be developed to support advanced metering technology in the retail market. Is this something that can rectify this situation? Will there be guidelines preventing this sort of situation?

Another question, Mr. Chairman. The department has a significant increase in its budget for biofuel initiative. From $5 million in 2006-07 it then jumps to $41 million in 2007-08. The estimates are on page 128. What sort of work will be done to utilize wood debris left over from timber harvesting in biofuels?

Another one is on the orphan well abandonment program, which had its budget cut from $13.5 million in 2006-07 to $13 million in 2007-08. The estimates are on page 132. What I'd like to have the minister explain is: why these cuts?

Now, if I can jump into Environment. Many people in West Yellowhead are concerned about climate change. It was reported in March that 7 per cent of Ontario's greenhouse gas emissions result from logging in the province's boreal forest. What kind of effect is logging having on Alberta's carbon dioxide emissions? Is increased logging due to the mountain pine beetle going to have a greater effect?

West Yellowhead constituency office is getting a lot of calls from people looking for grants to help make energy efficient improvements to their home or for buying environmentally friendly vehicles. There have been a few small-scale programs run by Climate Change Central and Energy Solutions Alberta that have helped people make those sorts of upgrades. Are there any plans for new grants like these?

There is some concern from the residents in West Yellowhead about a possible contamination of water because of drilling new wells. The minister said that there are studies under way to see what effect coal-bed methane development has on groundwater and that there are a number of monitoring wells and there are ongoing programs for water testing. What sort of testing is being done, and when can we expect the results from these studies? Are the studies going to be ongoing or one time only?

When Bill 205, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007, was hoisted, the minister committed to moving forward right away to improve reclamation standards. What sort of progress has been made on improving these standards?

If you can get back to me if we run out of time, I'd certainly be pleased to have those answers from both ministers. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Would any ministers like to respond? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The questions that were asked certainly relate very well to the Ministry of Energy and, of course, to our budget. I think the first question had to do with increased capacity and the ability of Alberta to generate electricity. With the fortification of the transmission system in the province of Alberta, what are we looking forward to with respect to being able to supply more electrical capacity? The question was particularly asking about coal. What I would suggest is that investors certainly have more confidence in the electric industry in Alberta as a result of the competition and our open market approach. Industry has expressed interest in investing in about another 4,800 megawatts of new power development in the coming years, which would ensure that we continue to meet the province's growing demand.

Thermal sources account for the majority of Alberta's installed capacity, and coal-fired plants make up about 50 per cent currently of the province's total capacity. Natural gas accounts for about 40 per cent, and that includes some very efficient cogeneration at industrial sites that produce energy as a by-product of their normal activities. The remainder, Mr. Chairman, is hydro, wind, and biomass. Those sources of energy from organic waste such as wood waste, garbage, or animal matter are, again, an important piece of the business.

Among new projects coming on stream, there's a 450 megawatt coal-fired plant being jointly developed by EPCOR and TransAlta at Keephills. Those companies have a successful track record in developing coal-fired generation, and they're using state-of-the-art technology that reduces air emissions, reduces greenhouse gas emissions and NOx and SOx and particulate matter by significant amounts.

Genesee 3 was completed in March 2005. It's one of Canada's most efficient coal-fired electrical-generating facilities and the most advanced coal combustion technology in Canada.

The efforts to support clean coal technology continue. We have ongoing research involved with the hydrocarbon upgrading task force and most certainly hydrocarbon upgrading demonstration projects. We're working with and very interested in Sherritt's proposal to do coal gassification. We're working with the front-end engineering design – the FEED study – with our energy innovation fund. We've put about $11 million dollars into it. That study will research the best design for power generation facilities capable of removal of significant percentages of the emissions, including NOx and SOx and particulate matter, mercury and carbon dioxide, all with a base of Alberta coal as feedstock.

Mr. Chairman, a pulverized coal-feed system. Recently, some articles have been coming forward with respect to it. It produces electricity at a very, very favourable rate compared to the standard processes. We see that it uses an air separation system and ultrahigh pressure steam. Of course, we'll be continuing to monitor these pilot projects that people have and continue to be involved with them.

Alberta's coal, of course, is promoted as a commodity outside of the province and around the world and is accepted in many places, particularly with respect to steel manufacturing, as one of the best sources of coal for that industry. We continue to support that, and the department of economic development does a very good job around the world with respect to helping people that have a requirement for coal to understand where we fit in the marketplace.

Well site cleanups. We're off on a bit of a different situation here and, of course, Environment's upstream oil and gas reclamation remediation program is in place and does ensure that land that's used for oil and gas development is restored to a productive state. We have an orphan well program, and there were some suggestions that the budget for the orphan well program had been decreased. In fact, that budget is a number that's set at $13 million, and it's a levy on industry. There wasn't actually a decrease. What happened was: of the $13 million program there had been an ask in the last year to have some additional money for particular projects with respect to the orphan well program. We added the $500,000, and in the budget for '06-07 that money doesn't appear because, of course, that ask was a one-time situation. So we're back at $13 million, where we've been historically.

Another question that was asked: the meter policy. Again, we're working on recommendations now with respect to net metering. The idea that smart meters and net meters and meters that are capable of direct read by remote sources and that sort of thing: we're continuing to do that. Smart metering in the industry is referred to as advanced metering infrastructure, and that generic term is for meters that have advanced technological capabilities. The Department of Energy continues to work with market participants to develop this type of metering.

The biofuel initiatives. Of course, again, it's a topic, Mr. Chairman, that's predominant in the agricultural industry today in Alberta. The forest industry is extremely interested in this program. We've allocated $41 million in this budget, and what we have in front of us is a program over a number of years that's going to provide $239 million to biofuel initiatives.

The programs that were announced in October 2006 include two elements. There's $30 million over three years committed to the commercialization program, that would support technology investment in the province with respect to biofuel. It also supports the establishment of infrastructure that's required to market and distribute bioenergy products. As you know, biodiesel would have to be blended at some point in time in the system, and today rack blending is the method of choice with the industry, so we want to promote the ability of producers to do that in the province.

Two hundred and nine million dollars over a four-year period: that's committed to the renewable energy producer credit program. What that will do is assist when people get up and running and have biofuel production in the province. There will be some assistance there to help them offset the initial costs of organizing and building infrastructure and getting into that business.

I'll leave it there. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There may be some issues around water that my colleague would want to address.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Maybe I'll focus my questions to Environment since my colleague from West Yellowhead didn't have an opportunity to get some responses, and we'll give the Minister of Energy a chance to catch his breath.

First of all, Minister, I want to thank you and your department folks here for always providing a quick response when my office, either in the constituency or here, call, and especially a thank you through you to Rick Ostertag, that does the work out in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. When I have a problem, he's there, and he's there quickly, and he responds quickly.

You have a $164 million expense in your budget. Friends and constituents that call me often talk about the Department of Environment and what money is allocated to their concerns and what you're planning to do to improve on the concerns raised.

I want to talk a little bit about train derailments, cleanup, your emergency response team. In the last six months or so I've had two train derailments, and the last one I was able to monitor with your team. It was just outside of Onoway. I have to tell you that they're very professional; these folks are ready and take charge on-site. I want to know, you know, if this team was ready for me at Onoway, what happens at the same time down in Lethbridge when there's a problem there. Is there a unit in the south? Is there a unit in the north? How has this response team worked with my 28 municipalities, getting the mayors and the reeves and their people in tune with what you're doing?

The second issue that I hear many times – I just got a report from the milk container recycling program, and, you know, they claim that great things have happened. I don't think that just over a 50 per cent recovery rate is great. I think we can do a lot better. We've proved that with our containers that we have a deposit on. It's pretty amazing when you hear the stats of, after a product is purchased and a deposit is paid and it's consumed, how fast it gets back to the bottle depot and gets back into that circle that we need it to. I'd like to know: in your budget is there opportunity to move the milk container program into the same type of a program, and when are you going to do that?

The other issue I get is from regional landfills and transfer stations. It's getting harder and harder to site these facilities. The municipalities are doing the best they can to make sure that these landfills stay as long as they can, but they all know that when it comes time to locate a new landfill, they're in trouble. You know, I've had the opportunity with your deputy to go and visit areas that no longer allow landfills. The technology is there. We don't have to study it through huge grants. Other municipalities are taking a zero landfill policy, turning that garbage or waste into energy, into heat. Just wondering when you're going to take some of this $164 million and turn those funds into a program to shut down our landfills and turn them into fuel.

The other issue is the municipal water monitoring program, and I know that with many of my communities your staff has done some good work. I understand that there's a major effort coming about in the municipal water monitoring program. I want to know: in your $164 million, when you identify problems in a community, is there enough money allocated into your budget for help to our communities when they run into a problem?

I'll sit down, and this will give you an opportunity to answer my questions and the questions from my colleague from West Yellowhead.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. First off, let me thank the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for his comments about our staff, particularly those that are in the Whitecourt area. I certainly share his admiration for some wonderful people that we have not only out in the field but here in our headquarters in Edmonton.

I'm going to take a little bit of time to go through each of the issues that he dealt with, but if I can be very, very brief, I want to try and address the issues that West Yellowhead brought forward as well and see if I can't get everything done all at once.

First of all, the issue with respect to climate change and logging and the fact that logging as a result of mountain pine beetle may have an effect on CO₂ emissions. I need to point out that the CO₂ emissions that would result from logging are not a direct result of logging but would result from the elimination of the carbon sink that a healthy forest is. While there may be some effect on CO₂, it's hard to calculate. It could be marginal. The pine beetle logging will also be accompanied by reforestation, so while you lose mature forests, those are replaced with forests that are aggressively growing. It's really hard to calculate what the net effect would be, but I would say that overall it would be marginal. The one side benefit that we may have is that the available fibre that would result could be used in some form for conversion to ethanol. There may be some opportunities to have some advantages there.

The member also asked about whether or not the government has any plans to bring incentives for environmentally friendly vehicles. The answer to that is that at this point we do not, but we've just completed our community consultation on climate change. One of the issues that we discussed at those community meetings was whether or not there is a warmth on the part of Albertans for us to do so. That would be very much part of the discussion as we bring forward our new policy under climate change and climate change policy.

The next question dealt with water wells and coal-bed methane. There are a number of monitoring wells that we have in place. We have testing that's done on our own wells. We also are available to do testing on individually owned wells. The question is: is testing ongoing or one time? It's both. The ongoing testing in our own monitoring wells will be there for a length of time because we want to establish whether or not there are any trends that need to be noted, and we're also available to do testing on individual wells should individuals suspect that they have some problems that they would like investigated.

Finally, a member asked about Bill 205 and what the status of this bill is. He's quite correct. There was a hoist motion that was approved by this Legislature on this bill. I'm pleased to report to the member that as of this date a reclamation criteria advisory group has completed an update for forestry reclamation criteria. The update was agreed upon by a multiparty group, including the Alberta Forest Products Association and Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. We will be proposing an amendment to the conservation and reclamation regulation, and that amendment should ensure that reclamations are reviewed every six years as a minimum requirement. The criteria will also be updated as new science and knowledge become available.

Now, if I could deal with the questions from Whitecourt-St. Anne on the train derailment. As a result of lessons learned at Wabamun, I think we have a much improved position at this point in time. ASERT, which is a new organization that we've put in place, Alberta support and emergency response team, has a network throughout the entire province. So to answer the question, if we have two events at the same time, we have primary responders located throughout the province. Then they draw upon the support from the main operation here in Edmonton as is necessary.

Co-ordination with municipalities is actually one of the things that we're very proud of, and I'll give you an example. When I was in Fort McMurray earlier this year to talk with them about climate change and then we also spent the day working with the municipality and working with the local media to discuss the possible risk from ice jams, that very day our representatives from ASERT were in an exercise with the first responders in Fort McMurray, going through a tabletop exercise so that everybody fully understood what everyone should be doing should the issue of an ice jam cause some flooding. We're very proud of the work that they're doing.

The milk container issue. Frankly, hon. member, I'm not in disagreement with your views on this. I think, intuitively, container recycling is something that we need to have some consistency in. On the other hand, there are strong arguments made by the dairy industry that their containers should continue to be exempt from our recycling. I've indicated in this House before that I think this is an excellent opportunity for us to review our regulations with respect to beverage container recycling, and it's one of the things that I intend to refer to a standing field committee as soon as they get up and running and established. I want them to have a look at this whole issue of beverage container recycling and provide me with some recommendations before we renew the regulations.

Finally, on the issue of landfill locations I don't disagree that it is increasingly difficult to deal with replacing landfills. I think that there are two issues that we need to have a look at here. We need to have a recycling program that is sufficiently supported, that we are minimizing the amount of material that goes into any landfill so that we have a policy in place that landfills are used a very minimal amount. I'm not so sure that gasification is the answer to replace landfills. I'm told that there are economies of scale associated with gasification and that in order to have the volumes that would be required to successfully operate a gasification disposal site, you would have to have a major population centre. I don't know that remote municipalities want to get into a situation of having to truck all of their refuse into either a Calgary or Edmonton facility for gasification.

I wouldn't write it off. Technology has a way of changing. But in the meantime I think that we're better off to concentrate on having landfills that serve regional needs at a reasonable distance so that we're not hauling huge distances, but that those landfills are designed so they pose no significant risk to the environment, so that they contain a minimum amount of waste material, and in the long term they serve the needs of Albertans in the most cost-effective and environmentally friendly way.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, you have the full 10 minutes, but if you want a response, you may want to leave a few minutes for the minister to respond to you verbally. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First, I would like to talk about the energy side. I know that energy is very important to our province and is in the good hands of our minister and the department people.

I would like to just give an idea. I see that energy has two parts. One is our own consumption in Alberta for our industry and for our household consumers. So in this aspect I want to just pose a question about the ministry programs regarding efficiency and conservation of energy in our own home, our own province here. We need to meet the growth of economic development and also meet the needs of population growth. So that's talking about our internal usage.

Also, energy earners add revenues to fund health care and social programs and education, the people programs of Alberta. We should not forget that energy export is the source of our wealth, Albertan wealth. In that context, I want to address or ask the minister: what is the measure or the program in which the government helps industry to develop our industry sector in terms of making it attractive for investment and also removing uncertainty so that the energy industry keeps growing well in Alberta? That's for the Minister of Energy.

I want to focus on the Ministry of Environment. As far as I know, Minister of Environment, we are facing what I call the threat, a threat for our environment. But in any threat there is opportunity for Alberta. So I want the minister to tell me about how you deal with the threats. Then what are the opportunities for us to grow in our technology or economy in terms of dealing with the threat of environment?

Also, there are some other issues such as recycling of electronic waste, recycling of waste disposal in general. But there's one thing that I learned from other jurisdictions that I searched around the world. I learned about what they do for water recycling, preservation of water, conservation of water. Basically, I learned from some jurisdictions that they classify water into a kind of colour: the dark, the brown, and the clear. Each one has its own stream. The dark one is like sewers. It goes to different pipes and is going into different treatment. The brown water is like the domestic water that we use for washing dishes and in our sink at home and all that. That's the brown kind, and it goes through a different pipe and then goes into different treatment. Then the clear water, which is the surface water that either we water our lawn with or the rain, and disposal of that. I've seen that addressed in some other jurisdictions, so I wanted you to comment on that.

One thing that's pretty close to my constituency is the remediation approval process. It's a good process. It's a solid process, but some of the people in my area say it's too long. So I wanted you to take note of that.

My third area is on the health side, the Minister of Health now. I know that health is very important. It's a big expenditure in our budget. It's also the top concern for Albertans. But I see a lot of things that we can do. For example, I want the minister to comment on prevention investment – that is, the first part, the prevention side – so that we don't need to spend on curing.

Because the health care system has a lot of investment, big dollars, $13 billion in there, there are a lot of operational efficiencies that I would think about. So my question is on re-engineering of health care operational processes. For example, just trace all the steps from the time a patient first starts and until the time that he's discharged. How many people touch that patient in terms of treatment and bill the government for all of those steps and the complexity of that? The more we look at that, we can streamline, and we can, I should say, allay the cost of health care to other areas of health care which are more efficient.

One other area I want to address, which comes from my constituency, is the community health centre kind of idea: one-stop shopping for a person to come in. Regarding that, there's a question about compensation to doctors, alternate compensation.

So I just want to leave with that and hope that the minister has some ideas. If not, then it can be answered in other forms. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. I'll be very brief. The initial questions, I believe, that the member had with respect to the Department of Energy had to do with the consumption of resources internally in Alberta and the export capabilities. Most certainly, Mr. Chairman, I'll start, first of all, with the disposition of crude oil. These are 2005 numbers, the most comprehensive thing that I can give the member at this point in time. In thousands of barrels a day the province of Alberta consumed approximately 422,000 barrels. The rest was shipped to the rest of Canada in exports and some offshore exports, actually. Total disposition: about 1,928 thousand a day.

With respect to natural gas disposition in bcf per year, consumption in Alberta nearly 1,400 bcf. We shipped internally in Canada about 1,200, 1,300 bcf and exports of around 2,500. Total disposition in bcf – well, this would actually turn into tcf – about 5.2 tcf a year.

The question I think related to: how much are we using, and what can we do about conserving some of it? Most certainly, in my mandate, Mr. Chairman, conservation becomes part and parcel of our integrated energy strategy. We will be moving ahead. The Department of Environment continued to work with Climate Change Central with respect to looking at programs that assist people to be more fuel efficient and more conscious of their consumption.

With the consumption, of course, that we have and the exports that we have, the member alluded to: how do we continue to maintain a balance? Most certainly, we are working very diligently with respect to this issue. Part of our integrated energy strategy would be to provide for our customers internally in Alberta, Canada, and North America and globally a basket of products, Mr. Chairman, that we can go out and market that continues to provide Albertans with the maximum value for these resources.

With that, I'll leave it with the Minister of Environment to close his remarks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief as well and try and get time for the minister of health to get involved as well.

The member referred to threats versus opportunities in Environment. I think it's very true that there are some opportunities that we can deal with. It comes down to this whole issue of climate change, and do we see this as a threat or do we see it as an opportunity? There are very real issues related to climate change, but there also are opportunities. One is that if we can spend significant time and effort on the carbon management science and technology, there may be opportunities for us not only to control our own CO₂ but to export that technology and assist other countries and regions throughout the world in doing the same. So I think there's a good example.

He also talked about recycling, particularly with water. There are sort of two ways that we can recycle. One is at the home base, where you can have within an individual home two sets of pipes so that you have a double-flush toilet . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Environment, but I'll now invite officials to leave the Assembly so that the committee may rise and report progress. I'd also like to thank them for their participation today.

Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(b) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Prins: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Energy, Environment, and Health and Wellness relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008. The committee reports progress and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:02 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 17, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a special treat today to introduce a former member of this Assembly who is seated in your gallery, Mr. Len Bracko. Mr. Bracko was first elected in 1993 as an Alberta Liberal Member for St. Albert. Before that, he was a teacher at St. Albert high school as well as an alderman in the city of St. Albert, and he is once again a councillor in the city of St. Albert. He's a wonderful servant of that city and of the entire province. I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of all members here.

Thank you very much.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all Members of this Legislative Assembly three very special guests seated in the members' gallery. The first is Mr. Darren Hill, who's a Saskatoon city councillor and president and CEO of Junior Achievement of Saskatchewan. Accompanying Darren is Jay Ball, president and CEO of Junior Achievement of Northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories, and of course a very good public speaker, a past junior achiever and university student, Mr. Ryan Lim. They were all present yesterday at the wonderful celebration of Junior Achievement in this province, and together with the Minister of Education we enjoyed a wonderful evening of hospitality.

Once again, on behalf of all Albertans we extend to each and every one of you a sincere thank you for the effort and the time you spend with our students in all the schools and with junior achievers. Thank you so much. I ask you to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Legislature pedway has been the host site for several years for the annual Historica Fair, providing an opportunity for students from schools in the surrounding area to present projects celebrating Canada's heritage. This year the Legislative Assembly of Alberta initiated a new award to recognize an Historica Fair participant who demonstrates outstanding achievement in celebrating an aspect of Canadian parliamentary democracy, governance, or political history with a specific focus on Alberta.

It's now my pleasure to introduce the inaugural winner of this award, a grade 5 student who presented a most spirited and enthusiastic representation of the life and work of Nellie McClung, specifically her role as an Alberta MLA and one of the Famous Five. Please join me in congratulating Tierra Stokes, a grade 5 student from John Paul II school in Stony Plain. Tierra has also been invited to take part in the national fair, to be held this year in Lethbridge. She's accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Brenda Stokes, and her teacher, Mrs. Cory Berndt. If they would stand in the Speaker's gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we're always delighted to recognize young people who show such interest and initiative in participating in such events as the Historica Fair, and I'm pleased to welcome Colin Benesch, who is a grade 6 student who was chosen by his school to participate in the regional fair. He attends Leo Nickerson school in St. Albert, and he is accompanied by his father, Chris Benesch, also in the Speaker's gallery. If they would rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly three guests that I have here today. The first is Mrs. Rosemarie Oberg, who is a cousin of mine from Forestburg, Alberta. The second is Virginia Schorak, who is a friend from Forestburg, Alberta, and the third is well known to you and well known, certainly, to a lot of members in this Assembly, my wife, Evelyn Oberg. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 15 students from the Sturgeon composite high school in my constituency. Along with their teacher I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and an honour to introduce a group of volunteers from the constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs but, more particularly, from the neighbourhood of Dunluce. This week is Crime Prevention Week. Many volunteers throughout Alberta do magnificent things to limit and curb crime in our communities. Well, the Dunluce Crime Council has been chosen by the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security as a winner among this year's crime prevention programs. With us today is Alice Althouse, a manager of McMan Youth Services in north Edmonton; Donna Harasem, a capacity builder for the neighbourhood empowerment team, Edmonton Police Service, north division; Constable Neil North of the neighbourhood empowerment team, Edmonton Police Service, north division; and Maureen Morris, the resident manager of Lancaster Terrace in Dunluce. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure on behalf of the Member for Battle River-Wainwright to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this House 15 students from Coronation school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Dan Kinakin, and parent helpers Terry Kopas, Terry Belcourt, Roxanne Canadine, Betty Tellier, and George Nichols. If you would please join me in welcoming them all with our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 12 individuals from the inner-city schools' Breakfast for Learning program. This is an organization that promotes nutritional breakfasts for schoolchildren. They are in the gallery: Chelsey Chalifoux, Nelson Egbende, Nick Lannin, Cheyenne Moses, Meagen Pancel, Dave Sherburne, Don Turner, Deron Bilous, supervisor/teacher Nik Linden, supervisor/teacher Jayme Metzger, supervisor Val Wilbur of Breakfast for Learning, and Kay Joyce of Breakfast for Learning. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that all of my guests are here, but I will introduce the group that has arrived so far. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of concerned Alberta citizens. They're here today to say with one voice: enough is enough; we need rent stability and affordable housing. These guests were among the hundreds of people gathered on the steps to support the NDP's call for affordable housing and for rent guidelines. They're just a small fraction of the people who are affected by skyrocketing rent control increases. They're here to witness first-hand how the government responds to the calls for action from the NDP opposition. They are all seated in the members' and public galleries, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First of all, I would like to introduce 15 members of CASA House who are here today to watch the proceedings and who are led by Ms Mary Johnston along with Najib Mohamed, Janet Cathro, Lyle Steele, Jamie Parry. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would like them now to stand and receive the welcome of the Legislature.

As well, I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Deron Bilous. Deron was born and raised here in Edmonton, received his bachelor of education degree from the University of Alberta, teaches English and phys ed at Inner City high, and he is our candidate in Edmonton-Centre for the next election. He is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Rosalie Cristobal, Merla Jamandron, and Shirley Dalmacio. They are Palace Casino workers entering the 251st day on strike due to this government's failure to protect Alberta workers from unfair employers.

Rosalie has worked at the Palace Casino for five and a half years in the slots department. Rosalie is a very strong voice for her fellow workers, and she has spent many hours each week on the picket line.

Merla has been at the casino for almost three years in the slots department. She went on strike because the wages within her department are simply not enough to live on. When she's not working, Merla likes to spend time sewing, embroidering, and crocheting, and she gives all of her creations to her grandkids. She has five grandkids, ranging in age from eight months to 14 years of age.

Shirley has been at the casino for just over a year. When she is not being an advocate for workers' rights, you will find her either bowling or in her garden.

Rosalie, Merla, and Shirley are seated in the gallery, and I would ask now that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to introduce to you and through you today to the Assembly Harold Neth, one of my constituents who is a teacher and a member of the ATA's provincial executive council, one of three in Edmonton representing teachers in both locals. I'd like to ask Harold to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One other introduction for me, to you and through you to all members of the Assembly, is Sherry Robbins, who is an ATA district representative for the Edmonton public teachers' local. She is here to watch proceedings this afternoon carefully and to express her disapproval of the government's attitude towards teachers.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the summer STEP student for the Edmonton-Glenora constituency office, C.D. Saint. He has a BA from the University of Alberta in music and Canadian studies. In the fall he will be going to Austria for his master's degree in peace and conflict studies. Mr. Speaker, if you'd like to use him as a resource, I'd be glad to loan him. I invite him to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Louheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the members assembled Mr. Jim Sirup, vice-president of Jayman MasterBuilt, an organization supporting the Alberta MS Society. Jim is in the members' gallery. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Crime Prevention Week

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Crime prevention is about communities taking ownership of neighbourhood crime issues. It's about families, businesses, all levels of government, and police working together towards a common goal of safe and secure communities.

May 13 to 20 is Crime Prevention Week in Alberta, and it's a good time to talk about what each of us can do to prevent crime in our communities. Our police do an excellent job every day preventing crime across the province, but every Albertan also has a role to play. Whether its kids, grandparents, businesspeople, homeowners, or renters, everyone has something to contribute in the fight against crime.

The efforts of individual Albertans are also being recognized. Every year the Solicitor General and Public Security crime prevention awards honour people and organizations whose actions have helped in preventing crime. This year, Mr. Speaker, the award ceremony is being held on Friday, May 18, in Calgary, and I extend my congratulations to the award recipients. I'm sure their actions will inspire others across Alberta to take action on crime-related challenges in their own neighbourhoods.

I'd like to extend a special congratulation to the Dunluce Crime Council, award recipients from my constituency. This group meets monthly to discuss community crime trends and develops action plans to address issues that arise. The Dunluce Crime Council also hosts community barbecues and cleanup projects to revitalize the neighbourhood.

Mr. Speaker, thriving and safe communities are made up of people who know each other, people who spend time with each other, and people who look out for each other. This week I encourage every Albertan to take the time to get to know their neighbours better and to work together to find ways to make their community safer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

International Museum Day

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and speak about the importance of museums. Tomorrow, May 18, marks International Museum Day. Alberta is home to hundreds of museums, from those in our smallest rural communities to the world-renowned Royal Tyrrell Museum and Royal Alberta Museum.

Albertans and visitors outside of Alberta come to our museums and support our communities. Last year visitors spent $30 million visiting 17 provincially owned museums and historic sites, generating an economic impact of over $60 million to our province and helping to employ over 1,300 Albertans.

While museums have employment and economic benefits, more importantly, Mr. Speaker, they educate us, entertain us, and enrich us. As stewards of our past museums help us to understand and appreciate our heritage. At the same time, museums encourage us all to be responsible ambassadors for our future. They do this through collections, research, exhibitions, curriculum-based education, and lifelong learning opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, International Museum Day has been celebrated around the world since 1977 as a day to raise awareness of the value of museums. This year's theme for International Museum Day is Museums and Universal Heritage, reminding us that museums and all of us have a role in preserving and promoting our heritage.

And now for the really good news. To celebrate International Museum Day many of our heritage facilities will be offering free general admission on May 18. For the first time on International Museum Day Albertans and visitors to our province will be able to visit these historic sites at no charge for one day, an awesome opportunity for young and old to learn more about our great province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all Albertans to remember how important our museums are. They're not just about our past; they're also about our potential. Museums share the Alberta story in all its dimensions while opening a window on the world for us all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. The MS Society in Alberta kicked off the month by opening a new, expanded facility in Edmonton, which will offer even more education, support, and care to those who live with the chronic disease. This new facility was made possible in part by a grant from the Alberta government.

The grand opening of the facility featured a $1 million gift from builder Jayman MasterBuilt. This gift will be used to improve multiple sclerosis care through education and research. I am pleased that Jay Westman, president of Jayman MasterBuilt, and his sister Diana Joseph, of Wen-Di Interiors, are represented today in the gallery by Jim Sirup, vice-president of Jayman MasterBuilt's home division.

There are more than 11,000 people affected by MS who receive care through community neurologists and through MS clinics in Calgary, Edmonton, and Red Deer. Access to the clinics, to the neurologists, and to the continuing care system throughout the province is vital. It's vital because Alberta has one of the highest rates of MS in the world, and that number is growing.

There is research being done which holds hope for new treatments and an eventual end to this devastating disease. The MS Society in Alberta is a leading investor in research being done at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary.

However, a shrinking talent pool threatens to slow or stop the dramatic achievements made in recent years. The MS Society of Canada is building a program that will accelerate research so that new treatments and a cure can be discovered. It will also encourage young scientists and clinicians to choose MS research in Canada as their career path.

The MS Society in Alberta is doing what it can to improve the quality of life of Albertans with MS and to find a cure. So are donors like Jay and Diana, and they are to be commended.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

AMPIA Awards

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 28 at the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association dinner recipients of the Alberta film and television award, the Rosie, were announced. However, just to be nominated by a peer group is an award. There were 50 categories and on average five persons nominated for each.

Large numbers of professionals are required to make these movies, television shows, advertisements, and the written and musical scores. I was cheering for George and Sherri Gallant. They have Coulee Pictures, based in Lethbridge. Sherri is an awarded journalist. George as producer was nominated for best production reflecting cultural diversity. His documentary Alone in Chinatown is an amazing look at what remains of a very vibrant Chinese community in Lethbridge.

Chinatown has always been a part of Lethbridge's history. Of course, a fact of interest is the fact that some of the herbs and medicines found in their original jars were a hundred years old and very valuable, but the knowledge that accompanies these herbs is beyond value.

This nomination is not the first nor will it be the last for Coulee Pictures. My frustration is: how do I and other Albertans access these productions? How can our young people interested in this industry examine nominated and winning works and learn from them? How about the general public just wanting to enjoy a good show?

I heard two days ago in this House how this government sent a thousand copies of a documentary by a Toronto filmmaker to schools across Canada. May I suggest that this government do the same for these award-nominated productions and send them to all the public, university, and school libraries across Alberta. In the past Alberta books were donated in this manner. There are four appropriate ministries that could cost share. What a legacy, visionary action, and benefit that all Albertans would use and enjoy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Provincial Skills Competition

Mr. Herard: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the Minister of Education as well as the members for Lethbridge-West, Calgary-Bow, Cardston-Taber-Warner, and I had the pleasure of attending the 15th annual provincial skills competition held here in Edmonton. This three-day Olympic-style event allows competitors from around the province to demonstrate and test their skills in their chosen craft. This year was no exception, with more than 600 of Alberta's most talented high school and postsecondary students and apprentices competing in more than 35 different areas of trades and technology. Competing disciplines range from automotive services to website design, electrical wiring to culinary arts. Winners will be competing in a national skills competition to be held in Saskatoon from June 6 to 9, 2007.

What is remarkable, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that many of the organizers who started this competition 15 years ago are still involved today. Karen Fetterly, from Alberta Education, and Terry Cooke, formerly from NAIT, were among the organizers of the first skills competition held at St. Joseph's high school in 1992. There were only eight events and 80 competitors involved back then, compared to the 35 events and 700 competitors today. Terry Cooke is now the national president of Skills Canada and also presides over WorldSkills Calgary 2009, when Calgary will host the international WorldSkills competitions in September 2009, with more than 40 countries competing in more than 40 skills, with thousands of students, experts, craftsmen, jurists, and parents from all over the world converging on Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, today's students are tomorrow's workers. The provincial skills competition is doing its part to ensure that our students are well prepared to leave school ready for the world of work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Aga Khan Development Network

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Global poverty affects us all. Throwing money at it doesn't fix the problem. Give a hungry man a fish and you will feed him for a day. Teach him how to fish and you will feed him for a lifetime. We must find smart solutions.

Albertans, Canadians are some of the best in the world at innovating to build a better world for all of us. Health, education, rural development, the enhancement of nongovernmental organizations in the Third World require smart solutions. The Aga Khan Foundation Canada targets training and expert technical assistance to overseas partners. It also sends young Canadians overseas to assist in international development.

The Aga Khan Development Network is a nondenominational group set up 40 ago years by His Highness the Aga Khan. It is dedicated to improving living conditions primarily in Asia and Africa. The members of the network share a common objective, which is to empower people to take charge of their own lives and environment. This network emphasizes community participation, the creation and use of local expertise, rigorous management of resources, use of appropriate technology, and ultimately self-sufficiency.

John Stackhouse in the Globe and Mail said, and I quote: through the Aga Khan world support program, Pakistan, more than 100,000 people have formed village groups that cover 3 out of 4 rural households in Northern Pakistan; they have built irrigation canals, schools, and health centres and pooled about $10 million in savings; it has proved a textbook case of success. Unquote.

On Sunday, May 27, the Aga Khan Foundation Canada will be holding their 2007 World Partnership Walk in Edmonton. The opening ceremonies will start at 11 a.m. at our Legislature Grounds. Tens of thousands of Canadians in nine cities will come together to support this wonderful effort to alleviate global poverty. One hundred per cent of proceeds goes to programs. That is good. I wish all members, indeed all Albertans to support this walk.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This time I am tabling 27 signatures, mainly from Edmonton, on a petition that reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government . . . to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence in light of the ongoing rent affordability crisis which is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Bill 211

Planning for the Future of Communities Act

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-Currie I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act.

The purpose of Bill 211 is to provide a mechanism to plan for future sustainable communities where growth pressures are presenting a challenge to municipalities that have implications beyond their borders. This legislation will allow us to make rational and balanced decisions about the way we grow in the future, decisions that will strengthen our economy, promote a healthy and sustainable environment, and support a high quality of life for all Albertans.

This is enabling legislation that would allow the designation of certain geographical areas as growth plan areas and the development of plans to focus and guide the region's future development. These are goals deserving of this Legislature, and Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act, will allow us to achieve them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 211 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Bill 212

Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, Bill 212.

[Motion carried; Bill 212 read a first time]

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ryley Landfill Project

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The landfill at Ryley, east of Edmonton, is poised to become the largest landfill in North America, yet nearby landowners and area residents have repeatedly raised concerns about adverse impacts on their lands and livelihoods and on the integrity of the environment. It has grown tenfold since it received original approval 15 years ago, and it hopes to grow much larger still, yet an environmental impact assessment has never been done, and impacts are accumulating. It's been piecemeal approval, typical of development in Alberta. To the Premier. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, section 40(c), requires an impact assessment prior to approvals of large-scale developments. Will the Premier commit to getting an environmental impact assessment?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is talking about an approval establishing the landfill that goes back probably 12, 13, 14, maybe even 15 years. It's the county of Beaver and the regional landfill commission, and they have worked over the years with the Department of Environment, held extensive hearings. That area has been tested time and time again. The group bought a fair amount of land, a buffer zone, around that whole area. Extensive, extensive testing. If there is something, if the hon. member has a specific issue that we have not identified in the years and years of testing, I'd be willing to carry that forward.

Dr. Swann: Well, there are concerns, Mr. Speaker. Protection of groundwater and surface water is essential. It cannot be sacrificed to profit margins and other considerations. Leakage from the landfill site, known as leachate, is toxic and contaminates groundwater and surface water if there's poor design, poor maintenance, or flooding. Residents are concerned that the leachate systems were reported to have, quote, blockages or even collapsed without being fixed. Is the Premier confident that the landfill is being operated effectively to ensure maximum protection against contamination?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, today maybe there was someone who brought an issue forward to the hon. member. That development is in the constituency that I represent. I don't have a letter in hand today from any resident that said that there was some blockage. I watched some of that construction and toured the facility a number of times. We have, really, the latest technology applied there in the development. I guess that the best way to describe it is: one of the best natural bathtubs. It's blue clay. I can give much more information in terms of how impervious this is to any seepage.

Dr. Swann: We're also concerned about surface spray and spills as a result of flooding.

Mr. Premier, last year the landfill received approval to recirculate leachate, and concerned residents appealed it. At the appeal hearings the appeal board raised concerns about "important gaps in the scientific information . . . regarding possible negative impacts" when he made his original decision, including information on the effects of the toxic substances on the landfill's liner. To the Premier: is the Premier fully confident that critical environmental decisions on this landfill are being made on the basis of complete information and scientifically sound evidence?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I am confident in not only the engineering firms that have tested this but, of course, our staff in Alberta Environment. Again, if there is a specific concern, now is the time to send it to me personally. As I said, it's a development in my constituency, and I'd like to hear from the individual or individuals who had raised a concern. I've not received anything that I'm aware of in our constituency office but would certainly be willing to hear from those individuals.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Student Accommodation Costs

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard much over the past two weeks about the plight of Albertans on lower fixed incomes who face excessive rent increases. Alberta's postsecondary students are particularly susceptible to rent increases. This government's belated moves to increase the cost-of-living allowance will be completely negated by rent increases. My question is to the Premier. With Alberta's postsecondary institutions located in Edmonton and Calgary, does the Premier accept that the housing crisis presents a barrier, particularly for rural students, that may deter them from pursuing postsecondary education?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our government has a concern for all students in all communities. There are pressures, of course, in Grande Prairie, Lethbridge as well, and larger urban communities for students to find accommodation. That is one area that both the minister of municipal affairs and the minister of advanced education will be addressing: finding accommodation for students. It is a barrier. There's no doubt about it. It is increasing costs for those competing for space in these communities, so we are going to be addressing it.

Mr. Tougas: Caitlin Scruggs, a student at MacEwan College who wrote to the Official Opposition, certainly has a far better understanding of the housing situation than this government. She put it this way, and I quote: sometimes it seems that the boom in Alberta is only booming in the pockets of a few and busting the pockets of many. That's a pretty good definition of the price of prosperity. Students like her will have to take out bigger loans, and more will need hardship grants. Again to the Premier: what can the Premier say to this student and so many like her who are going to fall further and further into debt simply to keep a roof over their heads while they pursue their studies?

Mr. Stelmach: The college that the hon. member was referring to has of course just completed a large housing unit for students. I'm not quite sure if it has been fully subscribed, but it's millions of dollars of investment in housing. It's just another example of how we're working towards building more units in the province to reduce the pressures and increase the number of available units of housing.

Mr. Tougas: Alberta is the only province in Canada that allows its student residences to be charged municipal property taxes. At the University of Alberta alone that bill came to $900,000 last year. Residences across the province pay millions of dollars to municipalities, and those dollars come from increased rents paid by students. There are two clear options for the government: either close the loophole that allows municipalities to assess property taxes on residences or pay the property tax. To the minister of municipal affairs: which of these two approaches will the minister take to ensure that, come September, students living in residence will have at least a slightly more affordable university experience?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of municipal affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government very much understands the challenges of students coming from rural Alberta to find housing, to find accommodation. That is why we have added funding for municipalities to try to address some of those issues as well through secondary suites. We have had discussions with universities. We've had discussions as well with student representative bodies, talking about housing and how we could best deal with those challenges.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Government Appointments

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears to Albertans that on the Premier's list of priorities, appointing political supporters is above integrity and transparency. The Premier's practice of rewarding his supporters is very clear. Just look at his cabinet. Mark Norris is the only one of the Premier's leadership supporters that has not received a cushy appointment. [interjections] Well, you can see. To the Premier: has the Premier had any communication with the minister in charge regarding the possible appointment of Mark Norris as an Olympic ambassador? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite sure some of the people sitting on the front bench here don't look at it as a cushy appointment.

I believe what the hon. member is talking about is that starting this evening and into tomorrow we'll be meeting with the government of B.C. This is the fifth time that both governments are meeting to discuss items of mutual interest to both provinces. We've come, really, so far ahead. What the hon. member is referring to is a letter that Premier Campbell sent to the province of Alberta, to me personally, to ask how we can work with the province of B.C. in terms of exposing more advertising for the province of Alberta during the upcoming Olympics.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the Premier again: does the potential appointment of a defeated Tory as an ambassador mean that the Premier is not confident that the minister of tourism is capable of doing his job to promote Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have tremendous confidence in my cabinet. In fact, they're all doing really great things for the province of Alberta.

Look, we're meeting with the province of B.C. They are our guests today, and all of this stuff being raised just takes away from the very positive story. Do you know what our attempt is? It's to build a much larger economic marketplace, build up western Canada so we're a greater force within Canada, globally competitive around the world. There are so many positive things. Day in and day out just picking away, nibbling at the ankles: I don't know what it all means. You know, we're still going to stay focused.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again. The federal government publishes a guide showing government positions, rules for appointments, and compensation rates. This allows for an open process that prevents positions from being created to satisfy party loyalists. Will this Premier follow through on his promise of openness and transparency and create a similar guide for Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're way ahead of where the opposition is today. In fact, we do have a committee that was put together to review all boards, agencies, the way we appoint people to these agencies and commissions, and also a good governance model for both. We'll be bringing that report forward to the House once it's complete. It'll be a model, I think, that others can follow, and . . .

Mr. Agnihotri: This is their model. You show me yours.

Mr. Stelmach: The poor fellow gets excited over the smallest things.

We'll be bringing this forward this fall for further examination.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, when you utter the phrase, "You show me yours if I show you mine," it may lead us in opposite directions here.

The leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hate to sound a sour note on the day that the government is meeting with their soulmates, the Liberal government of British Columbia, but I have to ask this question. The rent crisis deepens, and this Premier has no answer. Alberta's NDP has heard from hundreds of Albertans faced with unaffordable rent hikes, and they get no answers from this government. They want action today, Mr. Premier. Will you help them?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are helping. Many times in the House I talked about the four-point plan.

I just want to cover one statement that was made with respect to our visitors to the province. The Premier of British Columbia coupled with the former Premier of this province have brought forward tremendous vision in terms of harmonizing regulations, reducing the trade barriers that we have between and amongst provinces. It is an agreement that's helped us. Other provinces are asking to join in to see how we can work together and reduce the $14 billion worth of economic costs to Canadians as a result of provinces not being able to work together.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are close to a million Albertans who live in rental accommodation, and the Premier can't even be bothered to answer a question on that issue.

There's no new rental housing currently being built in Alberta. What little affordable housing that is going ahead will take between two and five years to become available. In the meantime, rents will continue to rise in this province for the next two to five years. Why doesn't this government take some real action for renters and support the Alberta NDP's proposal for temporary rent guidelines?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we held our convention a few weeks ago inside. Apparently, we should pick the stairs to hold it in the future.

I want to read you some housing stats: home base housing projects, 26 units, 17 affordable; Habitat for Humanity, low to moderate income, partnerships with every one involved, 40 units; the relocation project from Rotary, low-income single males, 20 units; North Bridge Suites in Ponoka, low to moderate single income, persons with special needs, 23 units; Heartland affordable housing project, town of Stettler, 30 units. To say that nothing is being done is absolutely nonsensical.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I have the government news release, and I'd like to inform the minister that this is all federal money. You haven't even put a nickel into this. It's 150 units. No units in Calgary. When are you going to get off your duff and do something for the renters of this province?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, let's keep trying. If he doesn't like that, how about the 200 at St. Michael's in Lethbridge? How about the 140 extended care in Lethbridge? How about the Medicine Hat Cypress View lodge, 40 more? This is all Alberta money. How about Spruce Grove? Or the 60 in Macleod Place? Or Sherwood Park, Summerwood Village, 30 more? Rosedale in Sherwood Park, 30 more? There are over 2,000 units on here that have been in the planning and in the works since 2005. So for the hon. member to suggest that nothing has been done or is being done is simply irresponsible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Capital Investment in Alberta

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oil prices rise and fall, are hot and cold like the seasons. Alberta knows the seasons. Capital investment, especially major projects investment, is the real driver in our booming Alberta economy. Many present projects were started in a climate of $20 oil, but Alberta has high costs. Stability is the key to investment. Wages, income tax, royalties, and other revenues follow. At the Construction Owners Association conference yesterday in Edmonton it was reported that major investors have levelled off their investment plans for the coming years. My question is to the Minister of Finance. What is the minister doing to ensure that major investors in international investment sources continue to regard Alberta as a stable investment site?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent and a very astute question. As a matter of fact, I attended the Alberta Chamber of Resources this morning, and they said exactly the same thing. Last week I had the opportunity of attending to bond agencies to private equity investors to the Wall Street people and the Bay Street people in both New York and Toronto, and the message that I wanted to send to them is that Alberta is still wide open, that things are wonderful in Alberta, and that we would like them to invest in Alberta. The message I got back was a message of confidence from these people. Indeed, in going to Moody's and Standard & Poor's, the bond rating agency, they advised: well, I'm sorry, but we can't give you anything higher than triple A rating.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the same minister. The rest of Canada gains huge dividends in every province from the development of our energy reserves in Alberta. What are the estimated levels of economic activity in the rest of Canada that are the result of the Alberta boom?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again a very good question. What we have to remember in Alberta and in Canada in general is that when Alberta booms, the rest of the country benefits. CERI, the Canadian Energy Research Institute, has estimated that in the next 20 years there'll be $885 million in spinoff benefits from the oil sands alone, and of that $102 billion is designated for the rest of Canada. When it comes to federal taxes, we receive about $17 billion in services from the federal government yet pay out $32 billion. That $15 billion goes directly to the federal government and other provinces. So the bottom line is that what happens in Alberta is good for the rest of Canada.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The biggest benefit from large capital investments has been work for Alberta businesses and Alberta workers. They pay their taxes here and contribute to the community. Temporary foreign workers send their paycheques home. Foreign contractors do the same. Will the government be taxing temporary foreign workers and contractors to gain benefit for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. Again an excellent and very astute question by the hon. member. Temporary foreign workers do pay taxes in Alberta. They pay taxes at exactly the same rate as any other worker in the province of Alberta, and it's money that is kept in Alberta. Yes, they do send money home, but that comes out of their net income. When it comes to foreign companies working in Alberta, if there is a treaty signed, then basically they do pay taxes here as well. They receive benefit from Alberta, and we want to ensure that they are putting their money back into Alberta as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Alberta/B.C. Joint Cabinet Meeting

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fifth annual Alberta/British Columbia joint cabinet meeting will be held tomorrow here in Edmonton. My questions are to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Can the minister give the House a general outline of what will be discussed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One thing about this government and its Conservative principles, we work with those who have principles and want to keep taxpayers' money in their own pocket. Unlike the Liberal opposition and New Democrats, who want to shut down economic growth like the oil sands, we are working on labour mobility. We are working with investment. On the agenda will be environmental issues, will be the Olympics. They want to learn from the Calgary Olympics, which is so important. We're going to be sharing with them best practices, and ultimately we are going to be demonstrating private/public partnerships. Alberta is viewed as a leader all over North America.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us what concrete results have come about from previous joint Alberta/B.C. cabinet meetings?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, it certainly is a pleasure working with a government with principles in British Columbia that have a plan about things that we have. Did you know that there were 25 agreements between both provinces that have helped the voters and the citizens of Alberta and British Columbia? Did you know that 7.8 million citizens benefit because of the principles we employ in this province, that B.C. wants to look toward sharing with us and them together. It's amazing that, ultimately, a Liberal government with good principles, unlike what we hear here, is something that can truly work in helping citizens . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Can the minister advise us what will be discussed relative to the Alberta/B.C. trade investment and labour mobility agreement, TILMA, at tomorrow's joint cabinet meeting?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as you're aware, on April 1 we signed a monumental agreement with British Columbia. It is truly an economic juggernaut. Unlike the Official Opposition, who want to shut down development in Alberta, British Columbia is learning from Alberta. We're learning from British Columbia. Ultimately, the economic juggernaut that the rest of Canada is looking at is exactly why we are working collectively together with the Liberal government in British Columbia, who believe in the plan that this government is working on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

School Nutrition Programs

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hunger is often described as a real and persistent but hidden problem. It rears its head when a child is forced to show up for school with an empty belly, dreads having to go to the lunchroom, or makes excuses for not having their own meal. In a province as wealthy as Alberta it is unacceptable for that child to go hungry. It is here, though, where more than one in eight children live in poverty, and tens of thousands go to school hungry each day. To the Minister of Education: why does this province refuse to follow the lead of almost every other developed country and implement a comprehensive school lunch program?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let's make sure that we understand that it is not the government's responsibility to feed, clothe, and shelter every child in Alberta. Therefore, we have a number of schools in Alberta, some 48 out of 62 school jurisdictions, who do provide some sort of lunch program for those children in need. That's what we should be focusing on, children in need, not a blanket lunch program for every child going to school.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, let's look at it from an education point of view. A child who is hungry has difficulty concentrating, is more easily distracted, and may exhibit behavioural problems. Nineteen published studies connect participation in school nutrition programs with higher achievement on standardized test scores. Establishing healthy eating habits now can also prevent future problems with student performance and adult health. For a relatively tiny investment we can ensure that no child goes hungry and improve the long-term health and learning outcomes of all Alberta students. To the Minister of Education: why don't you make this an investment and get at it?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, that tiny investment would be added to the one that the hon. member yesterday suggested: that we increase the amount of funding so that we can give teachers salaries that exceed 5 and a half per cent. Then it adds to the one in the estimates yesterday that he talked about: that we need to increase our funding for disabilities by in excess of 6 and a half per cent. Then there's another one here where the hon. member is suggesting that our program unit funding go beyond kindergarten and go to grade 3. There's a whole list of them here. By the time this Liberal plan would be implemented, we'd be at $10 billion for education and saving 30 per cent in the heritage fund. Booga-booga.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thought the budget was to be discussed this afternoon.

Anyway, let's try this one. Alberta is the only province in this country that does not directly support school breakfast or lunch programs. In Canada other provinces have taken the lead, Mr. Speaker. This year the Ontario government, which is Liberal, will provide meals to over 270,000 students in close to 3,000 sites across the province. To the Minister of Education again. Can you answer this question? How can Alberta have the best kindergarten to grade 12 system in the world that he tells us about when other provinces are much more dedicated to the nutrition and health of their students?

Mr. Liepert: The easy answer to that question is that I could say, "Yes, I can answer the question," and sit down because that's what the question was. However, I think I want to continue here, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we had the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford suggesting that we write a cheque for $6 billion or $7 billion to pay off the unfunded liability. I think we're now up to $16 billion, $17 billion a year on education under the Liberal plan, that is going to first of all take 30 per cent out of the nonrenewable revenue and put it in the heritage fund, which I don't disagree with, and they're only going to increase spending by 2 per cent across the board. It's unbelievable.

The Speaker: There will be a point of order raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, obviously, with this exchange that has just gone on. I'll ask both of the members to be there.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Removal of Home Care Ceiling

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's been a very welcome decrease in wait times for my constituents in Calgary emergency rooms due to recently improved processes at the Calgary region. However, the region still cites a shortage of hospital beds, clogging the emergency room access. In turn, they point to a lack of long-term care beds clogging up the availability of hospital beds. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what can we as a province do to help address this situation?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was quite a lot of noise, and I didn't catch the full gist of the question, but if I understood it correctly, it was: what can we do to add more long-term care beds so that people who are currently in acute-care beds who should be in long-term care will free up those beds so that we can get more access from emergency? If I caught that correctly, I guess there's a whole strategy relative to that. We do need to add long-term care capacity, but where we're adding even more capacity is in the continuing care end and at the home care side. The hon. member might be aware that there was an announcement with respect to home care where we took the $3,000 per month cap off. That will go some way to assisting in this area. It is a complex issue. Since the Broda report more beds have been added in continuing care, designated assisted living, and long-term care to help deal with that issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: can the minister explain how the removal of this home care funding cap will specifically address the needs of younger Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Often when we talk about long-term care, we think of it in terms of seniors. The reality is that there are a number of younger Albertans as well who have care needs which create a dependency. They need to either be in long-term care or they need assistance to stay at home; they need the assistance of a home care aide. By removing the cap of $3,000 per month, a number which hasn't been adjusted for a considerable number of years, regional health authorities can work with individuals and their families to ensure that they have the supports they need so that if living at home is a choice, they'll be able to manage it within the dollars available.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week members of the Alberta Liberal caucus met with labour leaders representing a wide diversity of Alberta workers and professionals. Labour plays a critical role in Alberta not only in ensuring fairness and safety for workers but also ensuring the economic strength of Alberta. Unfortunately, this Conservative government has too often ignored their concerns and marginalized their voices. My questions are to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. The number of temporary foreign workers will soon double from 25,000 to 50,000, yet many unions report significant numbers of underemployed or unemployed skilled tradespeople from right here in Alberta. How can the minister claim that all of these temporary foreign workers are needed when we still have skilled Albertans ready and waiting for work?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's quite correct that there are frequently workers that are not employed where other jobs exist, and simply put, in many cases these workers refuse or choose not to take jobs in remote or outlying locations. Frequently that has been the issue. I've spoken with some of those people, for example, in the greater Edmonton community that have deliberately chosen for their own reasons not to take those jobs in remote locations. So there may be Albertans available to work, but they're not in the right place. I somewhat resent the implication that this ministry is not meeting with the labour unions. I have met with the labour unions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has claimed that employment standards protect all workers, including foreign temporary workers, yet this claim ignores the fact that workers seeking protection have to come forward with complaints. As the minister well knows, these temporary foreign workers have limited mobility rights, often language problems, and their jobs may be at risk if they come forward. Will the minister commit to a reasonable, realistic inspection program to ensure that foreign temporary workers are fully protected by employment standards and can come forward and complain?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, two nights ago the hon. member opposite that has just tabled the question was here when I explained that we hired 72 more workers in our department principally for the reason of enforcement of occupational health and safety and labour standards, investigators that will do just that. As testimony to the belief that the unions have that we're doing a good job, I have a letter from a Mr. Gil McGowan. He was highly complimentary. He could hardly believe his eyes when he read our budget and realized that this government is . . .

An Hon. Member: Will you table that?

Ms Evans: I would be pleased to table that letter the next week because, Mr. Speaker, I don't have it in front of me. But I think he was very pleased to see that we are putting our money where our mouth is.

Dr. B. Miller: These same labour groups that we met with are deeply concerned about the trade investment and the labour mobility agreement, or TILMA. The process behind this agreement was profoundly undemocratic. The government did not consult with the public before signing TILMA. The government did not properly consult with labour groups before signing TILMA. The only people the government did consult with were those they wanted to. That is not democracy. Will the government, therefore, commit to having a full debate in this House so that we can deal with the issues, the concerns that labour groups have so that we can better understand this agreement?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, further to TILMA agreement, I know that the minister of intergovernmental and aboriginal affairs will respond, but could I just say that we have not had those concerns expressed. We have had officials meeting with British Columbia officials. They're currently meeting on foreign certification and are very satisfied that we're working through some of the issues on certification. But about the agreement itself, to my colleague.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the preamble was 100 per cent totally inaccurate balderdash. We have consulted. We continue to consult. Furthermore, Chambers of Commerce, as I mentioned, the association of nurses had indicated their contribution towards this consultation process. We are in the Legislature now with it. Nothing could be further from what the hon. member has said relative to his preamble to the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Food Safety in Restaurants

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The restaurant and food business is vital to Alberta's economy and enriches our cultural diversity and quality of life. A recent discovery of a Calgary restaurant kitchen worker with hepatitis A has led the Calgary health region to issue a rare public warning. This affects a number of people directly and scares a lot more Calgarians. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. What are our government's policies and enforcement laws to prevent such health scares and threats to the public confidence in the restaurant business?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each regional health authority has a medical officer of health, and each regional health authority is responsible for ensuring public safety, making sure the public is protected when infectious diseases such as hepatitis A are confirmed. The Calgary health authority in this case took immediate steps to ensure public safety when the case of a food handler at the Wildwood Grill & Brewing Company was confirmed. The health authority issued a public alert to advise patrons who ate food at the Calgary restaurant from April 30 to May 13 that may have been exposed to hepatitis A. The health region has been holding public vaccination clinics throughout the week, and several hundred people have already been vaccinated as a preventative measure. The region indicates that the restaurant has been providing full co-operation during the investigation. In short, it must be made public, and it must be dealt with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that prevention is better than a cure, does our government have laws or regulations that require health screening for restaurant food handlers or similar measures?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Public Health Act food regulations require food establishments with six or more employees on the premises to have at least one management or supervisory staff member who is trained in food safety and hygiene on-site during the hours of operation. The regional health authorities work closely with food establishments to ensure that food regulations are understood and followed. Courses in food safety and hygiene are offered at SAIT, NAIT, the Red Deer College, and through regional health authorities as well as through a number of private education providers. There are currently more than 50,000 food service workers certified in food safety and hygiene in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, it's not always easy to detect a disease like this early, but when it is detected, then there are mechanisms in place to make sure that the public is protected after the fact.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. In general, can the minister inform us of the effectiveness of the food service health safety inspection program in terms of inspections, number of violations, and remedies?

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Mr. Speaker, Albertans can be confident of the safety and quality in our food system. Health inspections of food establishments are performed by public health inspectors employed by local health regions. We depend on the health regions to use their judgment and local expertise as to how they can best ensure public health. In this case the Calgary health region exercised prompt action to protect the public.

As we discussed last night, there's also a pilot project happening with the Capital health authority with respect to the posting of health inspection reports on the Internet. If the pilot project works out, it will be expanded across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The housing crisis is going to get worse before it gets better. Canada Mortgage and Housing has made that very clear, but this government stubbornly refuses to even consider rent guidelines because of the triumph of ideology over common sense. But at the very minimum, then, what they should be doing is telling us exactly what is affordable housing. How much of a person's income should be going towards housing? My question is to the minister of municipal affairs. What is the government's definition of affordability?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is talking about rent supplements, this government has a policy at the present time that an individual should not pay more than 30 per cent of his or her salary towards housing. At that time there is a program, the rent supplement program that does support individuals, to support them with that cost.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, then I'm sort of confused why the government would not accept from the task force when it says to adopt a consistent definition of affordable housing for policy and program development. It is 30 per cent. That's a standard thing. But the government doesn't accept the task force's recommendation, yet the minister is saying that 30 per cent is the case. Why didn't you accept that when the task force said it?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government did not accept it because we are already doing it. At the same time, we are having consultation with municipalities, with different groups and making sure that we do have the right definition of the needs of low-cost housing for individuals.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that doesn't make any sense at all. You reject the recommendation; the government does, yet you say that you're doing it. Why wouldn't you accept it? The sad reality is that more and more people are spending 40, 50, 60, 70 per cent of their income on accommodation. That's why they didn't want to accept the recommendation. Is that, in fact, the case, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, precisely, with the forecast that we're going to get even worse into a housing crunch, why would the members from the ND want us to impose rent controls, which are shown to be a disaster in building new things? You know, after they get rent controls, then they can go to price controls, and then they can go to wage controls, and then they can control every little part of their lives, and that's a wonderful utopia. I also want to tell you about $2.5 million to the Polish seniors for affordable housing here in Edmonton or the $1.5 million to the Vietnamese senior affordable housing, 62-unit housing. Rather than sit and live and try and talk about what rent controls or price controls would do, get on with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Gasoline Prices

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Striking a balance between landlords and tenants is one area where the market needs to be monitored and, at times, regulated. Retail gasoline pricing is another. To the President of the Treasury Board. Alberta drivers are puzzled and angry at how gasoline prices keep going up for no apparent reason, and with the latest hikes they are particularly upset. Notwithstanding that this minister, myself, and all members of this House get our gas paid for by the taxpayers, does he have an explanation to give to those Albertans who actually do have to pay at the pump?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, when the price of gas goes up, the price goes up at the pumps. That's pretty simple. Gas is a commodity that is dealt with on a global basis. We are part of it. There's a danger in thinking that somehow we're isolated from the global economy. If the hon. member wishes to look on the Internet or go into the newspapers and see what the price of gas around the world is – across Canada, through the continental United States, or other areas – and look at what we get from gas in the way of taxes and the comparatives in the production and to the delivery and retail part of gas, he would see that even compared to the early '20s and '30s, when it was a far greater cost, we're still getting gas at a relatively . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The price of crude has not changed from 2001 till today. The price at the pump has changed. When the price of gasoline goes up, everything else gets more expensive, like food, for example. So this issue has implications. The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives has just released a study demonstrating that there seems to be no correlation whatsoever between the cost of crude – and then you add refining and marketing upcharges and then you add taxes and normal profit margins – on the one hand and then what we actually pay at the pump on the other. Every penny per litre adds more than $1 million to the net bottom line of the oil and gas industry. What would the President of the Treasury Board's response be to these findings, and is he at all concerned that motorists are actually hurt at the pump?

Mr. Snelgrove: Absolutely. Mr. Speaker, if you were to go in and control the price of fuel, if this is another one of the good opposition things – we've got to control the price of fuel so that people don't have to pay – then things like conservation efforts don't work. If we're going to reduce – and you need to agree that most of the people have said: if you let the price work, then conservation methods, which are truly the best way to control prices, work. When you artificially lower the price of gas, all of the efforts you use to conserve energy, which is ultimately what we're trying to do, fail.

The Speaker: There was a point of order raised there, which we'll deal with at the conclusion.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. Third question.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question here is investigating potential gouging. We're not asking for regulation of prices at the pump. When I introduced Bill 202 in this House earlier this session calling for better consumer protection, the President of the Treasury Board and many members of his own government caucus adamantly rejected the idea, claiming that consumers don't need any extra protection and that the market works just fine; thank you very much. One of their stock answers was that Service Alberta already has the mechanisms in place to monitor the marketplace. Can the minister tell us who in Service Alberta today is investigating potential gasoline price gouging at the pump, and if no one is, will he start an investigation?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's the gouge of the day. You know, it can be rents. It can be gasoline. It might be lettuce tomorrow. Whatever the Liberals feel is the important thing today, if it doesn't fit within their perfect little guidelines of how socialism works, it's gouging. The federal government competition bureau has investigated many, many times the price of gasoline. They have concluded that there is not collusion between them. It is a commodity that moves up and down. Is it difficult for business? Absolutely. Is it difficult on people that have to have gas to drive? Completely. That's why we need to make sure that we reflect the real price so that the conservation message we're trying to send gets through: that carpooling and LRT are all driven by something else.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Forest Industry Sustainability

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne has a strong forestry base. As such, it's largely dependent on the forest market globally. Other countries have significant competitive advantages, such as short growth cycles, much lower transportation costs, and companies with mills located right next to their plantations, just to name a few. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given these competitive advantages in other jurisdictions, is Alberta's forest industry resilient enough to withstand the current down cycle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the opportunity last week to attend a PricewaterhouseCoopers conference in Vancouver on the Canadian forestry industry's place in the global economy. The message was not an encouraging one, as the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne indicates. In addition to the fierce competition from around the globe, we're looking at the problems with the pine beetle, higher costs, and also the export tax associated with the softwood lumber agreement. However, I have met with Alberta forestry companies. We've consulted on a competitiveness project, and I expect to receive very shortly a report on competitiveness and look forward to implementing and working with the industry on those initiatives.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that answer, you know, communities that depend on the forest industry, such as the one that I live in, Whitecourt, are very concerned about this. With the answer that the minister has given, I'm really concerned about the prospects for the sustainability of forest-based communities and the industry within it. Can he comment on what those prospects are for our communities that host these large forest companies?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, again referring back to the PricewaterhouseCoopers conference that I was at in Vancouver last Thursday, I do believe that what I heard was that there is light at the end of the tunnel in the median sense. A number of speakers pointed out that our forestry industry is next to the largest market in the world. Right now that housing market is depressed, but they expect it to come back in the next two years, by 2009, so there is light at the end of the tunnel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'd like some clarity from the minister and his department on what he's doing to encourage our Alberta companies to diversify or to alter their practices in order to remain competitive.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again referring back to the conference I attended in Vancouver last week, there were a number of speakers that emphasized that global warming and fuel shortages create some new opportunities, unique opportunities for our forestry industry. A speaker from Finland indicated that if the forestry industry takes advantage of technology, it can contribute to mitigating climate change, mitigate the cost of climate change, and also develop future profitable business in alternative fuels. So we're working with Alberta industries in a number of ways to facilitate those opportunities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents is a single parent who is renting in a building that the family considers unlivable, with mould, ants, and an unresponsive landlord. They believe there is a connection between their living conditions and repeated trips to the emergency room and doctor for respiratory problems. Although they've tried to find other subsidized housing, they're told that they face a two-year wait-list. My first question is to the minister of housing. What advice does the minister have for this family, who has to decide between unhealthy accommodations or being on the street?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, I want to say that we would very much ask that individual to either contact our office or contact the president of . . . [interjections] Anyway, what happens is that there are guidelines in the tenancy act that should ensure that there is a standard of quality, so it has to be brought forward.

Ms Blakeman: Indeed it does, Mr. Minister, but if they bring in public health and public health certifies that that's an unsafe condition, they're out on the street now with no place to go and a two-year wait-list. What advice does the minister give to this family when those are the conditions they're facing?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly why we have the opportunity for individuals to come to EII, and I'll let the minister continue.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, at lunch I had the privilege of speaking to people from our west-end office, who are very pleased to intake any person just exactly like the hon. member has described, assess their situation. Without having a director make a decision, they can look to whether or not these folks need income as a temporary basis for emergencies, whether they need any other provision for a place to live, and if there is a health hazard, our staff are very equipped to contact the proper health authority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. You guys do not get this.

To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: is this government going to increase benefit programs so that low-income Albertans and Albertans already on benefit programs – they're not going to qualify for anything more according to your criteria – can maintain homes in the exploding housing market that this government refuses to regulate with rent caps? You've got them coming and going.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the beauty of the programs offered by this government is that even if they are on an income support program that of itself does not increase, there are other programs available to supplement that program on an emergency and as-needed basis. Yes, we are prepared to look after people, vulnerable people, wherever we can help them to make sure that they don't face what the hon. member has described as homelessness or eviction. We have had meetings arranged with these people. There are not an overwhelming number of people coming forward, but those that are coming forward are being cared for.

The Speaker: Hon. members, during the QP we had 82 questions and answers and two points of order, which we'll get to momentarily.

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence between myself and the Member for Edmonton-McClung. The correspondence relates to comments made in this House on March 21, 2007, in which the member referenced an alleged incident involving a disabled inmate in one of our correctional facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition, the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Jason Rutledge, who is a young teacher in the second year in the profession: a very thoughtful letter expressing concerns about educational issues, the strains on funding and salaries, and the unfunded teachers' pension liability.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling a letter from Kent Ashbey. Mr. Ashbey is currently a resident of Athabasca who is very concerned about rent gouging, impending increases, and homelessness because the government refuses to protect Albertans by introducing temporary rent guidelines.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Construction Sector Council recently published the Construction Looking Forward document. I'm tabling a graph from that document shown to about a thousand delegates at the Construction Owners conference yesterday showing the levelling of oil sands investment.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, do you have a tabling?

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate amount of copies of a letter from Gerry Brin, and he is expressing some difficulties that he's had with the police.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today: the first tabling, answers to questions raised in Committee of Supply by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on May 8, and a copy of a letter to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in response to a question that he raised in the House yesterday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday evening I had the pleasure along with my colleague from Calgary-Varsity of attending the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers' gala stewardship dinner and awards ceremony. I'd be pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of the program outlining the 17 nominees for stewardship awards, including the four winners.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an analysis advocating rent guidelines for Alberta prepared by Professor David Hulchanski, who is the director of the Centre for Urban and Community Studies at the University of Toronto.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms. Tarchuk, the Minister of Children's Services, responses to questions raised by Mrs. Mather on May 3, 2007, Department of Children's Services 2007-2008 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Knight, Minister of Energy, responses to questions raised by Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Hinman on May 3, 2007, Department of Energy 2007-2008 main estimates debate.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms. Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(6) I would like to request of the Government House Leader that he share with the Assembly the projected government business for the following week.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next week being a constituency week, we will reconvene during the week of May 28. Of course, on Monday there is no government business, it being private members' day. In the evening the estimates in Committee of Supply for the Solicitor General and Public Security, Justice and Attorney General, and Advanced Education and Technology. The Liberal caucus will be on deck there.

On Tuesday, the 29th, after Orders of the Day, time permitting, we would proceed with Government Motion 21 and anticipating government motions 23 and 24, those three motions being referral motions referring bills 1, 2, and 31 to policy field committees; also available, should time permit, bills 26, 32, 33, 39 in second reading. Obviously, there won't be time for all of those, but one of those would proceed if time permitted. Commencing at approximately 2:45, Advanced Education and Technology and Education would be in Committee of Supply with the New Democrat caucus questioning. Time permitting, after Committee of Supply that afternoon the same order of business that I mentioned before Committee of Supply. In the evening in Committee of Supply the Finance, Service Alberta, and Environment departments.

On Wednesday, May 30, in the afternoon the same order of government business that I mentioned because, of course, with the limited amount of time only a portion of that would get done. In Committee of Supply in the afternoon Energy, Infrastructure and Transportation, Sustainable Resource Development, Environment, and the government business that I mentioned. In the evening in Committee of Supply Agriculture and Food, Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture, International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, and Justice and Attorney General.

On Thursday, May 31, after Orders of the Day again the same government business that I mentioned in terms of motions and bills and in Committee of Supply Sustainable Resource Development, International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, and Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Speaker, one other government motion that may be on deck which is on the Order Paper is Motion 22 with respect to evening sittings. It's not in projected government business at the moment, but I thought I should mention that it could be brought forward as business should we determine that we'll need those evening sittings to deal with the pieces of government business that I mentioned. As I say, it's not on projected government business now because at the current time we don't anticipate needing it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, two purported points of order. On the point of order that will be raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I provided to both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and the Minister of Education a copy of the draft of the Blues to this point in time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon the Minister of Education in his response to a question from the Member for St. Albert I believe contravened our Standing Order 23(h) and 23(i). As you know, 23(h) involves making "allegations against another Member,” and 23(i) involves imputing “false or unavowed motives to another Member.”

Mr. Speaker, I’ve had the opportunity, as you just pointed out, to review the draft copy of Hansard, and the exact quote that is represented there from the minister says, “Yesterday we had the hon. Member for Edmonton–Rutherford suggesting that we write a cheque for $6 billion or $7 billion to pay off the unfunded liability.” Well, that, in fact, is simply not the case. I would suggest that this is where he is making false allegations and imputing false or unavowed motives. In fact, yesterday afternoon the President of the Treasury Board did the same thing, and I should have called a point of order then. I didn’t, but I’m certainly more than . . .

The Speaker: Let’s stick with what we’re on now. Let’s not lead this astray, please.

Mr. R. Miller: Sure. Mr. Speaker, then I would like to draw your reference to the Hansard from yesterday afternoon. My question as it was presented to the Minister of the Treasury Board said, “My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Will he admit that it’s a fiscally responsible thing to do to pay down this unfunded liability now . . .”

Mr. Speaker, I never suggested once, nor has the Official Opposition suggested at any time, that we pay off the unfunded liability in its entirety now. We have never at any point suggested that the government write a cheque for $6 billion or $7 billion. That’s not ever been a part of what we’ve said. Just to be clear, it was page 1185 of yesterday’s Hansard.

The Minister of Education went on to talk about the Official Opposition now having a total of $16 billion or $17 billion a year in our education budget. I would challenge him to show us where he gets that number because, again, that’s simply not the case, Mr. Speaker. He also goes on at the end of his reference today to suggest that we also want to put 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue into the heritage savings trust fund. That again is not the case. If he would read the policy that has been tabled in this Legislature, he would see that, indeed, we do wish to save 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenues in a number of different funds, a percentage of which would certainly go into the heritage savings trust fund.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, he indicates that we would only increase spending by 2 per cent across the board. Again, this is simply not the case. It is very clear in the policy that was tabled in this Legislature that spending would increase by both the cost of inflation because those numbers are in 2005 dollars and also by the rate of growth of population.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that the minister has contravened 23(h) and (i) on several fronts but, most specifically, on my exact wording yesterday, which asked the government to pay down the unfunded liability, not to pay it off.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On this point of order, Hon. Minister of Education?

Mr. Liepert: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to quote yesterday from Hansard with the hon. Member for Edmonton–Rutherford. He does say, “My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Will he admit that it’s a fiscally responsible thing to do to pay down this unfunded liability now, when we have money available to do so” – this is the important thing – “thereby saving taxpayers tens of billions of dollars in future payments?” Well, if we’re going to pay down the unfunded liability by a couple of thousand bucks, we’re hardly going to save tens of billions of dollars. I’m suggesting in my answer today that if we’re going to save tens of billions of dollars, we’re writing a cheque for somewhere around $6 billion or $7 billion. I rest my case.

The Speaker: Beauchesne’s, page 151, has a very interesting section called Acceptance of the Word of a Member, section 494:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

This may very well be one of those rare occasions, and both members were given an opportunity to clarify their positions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton–McClung.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise on a point of order today referencing section 23(h) of the Standing Orders. It basically pertains to Oral Question Period today in an exchange between myself and the hon. Minister of Service Alberta, the President of the Treasury Board.

The questions that I was asking of the hon. minister were all pertaining to potential price gouging at the pump, gasoline price gouging. Section 23(h) basically talks about making allegations against another member. I would argue that it actually represents a case where the hon. minister made allegations not only against myself but against the entire Alberta Liberal caucus and the Official Opposition.

Unlike the point of order discussed earlier, I don’t have the Blues in front of me, Mr. Speaker, and I’m not sure if you yourself have them yet. However, the hon. minister alleged that one day we are asking for rent regulation or control and that today we’re asking for the same thing for gasoline. I would argue that the hon. minister did not correctly hear my questions. There seems to be a trend with this government where they don’t actually reply to what we actually said on the record. They reply to what they thought we would say. The question was about consumer protection and investigating potential price gouging. It wasn’t about ideology or where the Liberals are coming from or where the Conservatives are coming from.

Now, although I’m not terribly offended by the hon. minister’s response – and as a matter of fact, we on this side of the House have gotten accustomed to this tactic used by the government time and time again – I am more interested, Mr. Speaker, in the hon. minister retracting that comment in the interest of setting the record straight. This allegation is not founded. We didn’t raise it in question period today, nor was it ever mentioned in stated Alberta Liberal policy. Basically, the minister either did not hear the question because of the noise in the House or chose to reply to something that wasn’t part of my question and part of my preamble, particularly on the second part of my question.

Mr. Speaker, I humbly request that the hon. minister retract that comment. Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I honestly have to tell you that I truly hoped and felt that the first time I would be called on a point of order it would be more spectacular than this. I am very disappointed that somehow this is a point of order. Honestly, after listening intently to his suggestions about what I may have done, I am very disappointed that it will go down in Hansard that that was my first, probably not my last, point of order. I have no idea what he would really like me to apologize for.

The Speaker: I take it there are no further ones.

Earlier this week, May 15, 2007, at page 1139 of Hansard, I indicated – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung basically stated this in his statement – that the rules apply to members, not to caucuses. I do not have a copy of the Blues; they're not here right now. But this appears to be pretty much a disputation of some facts.

It also has something to do with the preambles that come with the questions as well that lead to a lot of increasing debate rather than questions. The members themselves have written the rules about 45 seconds/45 seconds, and the chair will enforce that, but it also leads to this kind of a dialogue and debate. I think we had some clarification here this afternoon, which is good work on behalf of all of the members.

head: Orders of the Day

Mr. Hancock: A brief point of order, if you'll permit me, Mr. Speaker. I made an error under Projected Government Business. The paper I was reading from was not accurate, and it may have to be corrected.

The Speaker: Well, okay. Might we have unanimous consent, then, to revert to the point of our Routine which allows the hon. Government House Leader to respond to a question from the hon. Official Opposition House Leader about the upcoming schedule?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

head: Projected Government Business
(reversion)

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My apologies to the House. I'll be more accurate in the future.

On the 28th in Committee of Supply in the evening it is the Solicitor General and Public Security, Justice and Attorney General, and Advanced Education and Technology, and it is the Liberals' day.

In the afternoon of the 29th Advanced Education and Technology and Education, and it is the New Democrats' afternoon. In the evening it is Finance, Service Alberta, and Environment, and that is the Liberals' evening.

I neglected to mention, I think, that on the 30th in the afternoon and the evening the departments are correct, but those are private government members' days.

On the 31st, again, the departments were correct, but it's a Liberal day.

Thank you.

head: 2:40 Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

Education

The Chair: Items for discussion today are the departments of Education and Agriculture and Foods, and I understand that it's an hour and a half allocated for each one, roughly. We'll start with the Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Today I am pleased to present the Education budget for the 2007-2008 fiscal year. Before I do, I should again introduce my deputy minister, Keray Henke. We did have the opportunity yesterday to answer a number of questions from our opposition members, and hopefully we'll get to answer the rest of them today.

This year's budget totals just over $5.6 billion, which is an increase of $195 million or 5.2 per cent more funds for the classroom over the previous year. Some specifics are: $4.2 billion in operating support to school boards, $357 million for the teachers' pension plan, $144 million for accredited private schools, $87 million for basic education programs that support school boards such as the learning resource centre, high-speed networking, technology, and provincial Microsoft licensing, those sorts of items.

There's $86 million for program and ministry support – that, of course, being our department – and $925 million for school facilities. I want to repeat that: almost a billion dollars for infrastructure, which includes $417 million for plant operations and maintenance and $508 million for the infrastructure portion of that expenditure.

All school authorities will receive a 3 per cent increase in operational grants for the 2007-2008 school year. In addition, other grant adjustments reflect the initial planning and development of strategies to address the three priorities in the Premier's mandate letter. Of course, they are explore early learning opportunities, improve high school completion rates, find a reasonable solution to the teacher's unfunded pension liability, and a fourth one that I've added, which is build schools where students live and learn.

Seven million dollars this year is going to be added to provide early learning opportunities for children as young as three and a half with English as a Second Language programming. Early childhood services programs for children aged three and a half to six years with mild or moderate special needs or as young as two and a half to six years with severe needs are available for children who are enrolled in a recognized program, whether at their local school or an accredited private ECS operator such as Head Start.

A $2 million dollar increase is to extend English as a Second Language funding to accredited private schools; $4.5 million is to support improvements toward existing career and technology studies, facilities, and equipment; a $33 million increase for special-needs funding; an $11 million increase in transportation funding and continuation of the 15 and a half million dollar fuel price contingency fund; $6 million in new funding for technology initiatives, including more video conferencing suites; $9 million for enhancing teachers' skills and abilities and the implementation of new curricula, which includes the third year of social studies implementation and the first year of math implementation.

Provincial support for the small class size initiative will increase by $35 million, which is a 21.7 per cent increase, and that's for the retention of 2,500 new teachers who were hired under the initiative to maintain reduced class sizes. This brings funding to $194.5 million this fiscal year, which will provide all school jurisdictions with a 3 per cent increase in their class size funding. The total government funding for CSI to date is about one-half billion dollars, almost $500 million to reduce class sizes throughout Alberta schools.

In addition, the government continues its support for innovation and student learning through its $73 million commitment to the Alberta initiative for school improvement, better known as AISI. Students and young children with special health needs will also benefit from the continued investment of more than $44 million to the 17 student health partnerships across the province. These partnerships provide access to health care professionals and related support services. Under Budget 2007 funding for the student health initiative will increase from $41.7 million to $44.2 million, an increase of two and a half million dollars, or some 6 per cent.

I'd like to deal briefly with school infrastructure. The government has provided significant funding for school infrastructure in the past and continues to do so. A total of nearly $1.3 billion over the next three years has been allocated for previously announced projects. The 2007-2010 capital plan includes funding for 71 previously announced new or major modernization projects, including 12 schools to be opened in 2007-2008. An additional 8,226 new student spaces will be opening in this coming school year across the province. In the 2007-2008 budget a total of $508 million is allocated for school facilities infrastructure, with $96 million directed toward the infrastructure maintenance and renewal grants to school boards for school building upgrades or to improve school energy efficiency.

The capital plan also includes an additional $300 million over the next three years, which has not yet been allocated to individual school projects. The government will examine alternative procurement methods to deliver school infrastructure, and this allocation of $100 million per year over the next three years should help to drive some creative solutions for school construction. Treasury Board is taking a lead in planning on behalf of government.

I'd like to deal briefly with the teachers' unfunded pension liability. It's one of the priorities the Premier assigned to me. The teachers' contribution to their portion of the pre-1992 liability is and will continue to be a disincentive to teachers because just over half of the teachers in the system today did not have any role in its creation, and there is a feeling by those teachers that they should not be responsible for solving it. Paying off the past liability can be and is a barrier to the recruitment and retention of teachers.

In 1992 the government of Alberta agreed to pay two-thirds of the liability, which now stands at $4.3 billion, while teachers accepted to pay for one-third, which is now $2.1 billion. This totals $6.4 billion and is increasing every day. At present contribution rates the liability will grow to about $14 billion by 2044, and it won't be paid off until 2060. This means an increasing number of young teachers will pay for the pre-1992 liability for the next five decades.

I presented the ATA with an open and clear process for resolving this issue. A task force will be struck to research and consider options to address the teachers' share of the unfunded pre-1992 pension liability, and as a sign of good faith the government of Alberta will assume for one year 100 per cent of contributions for teachers with up to five years' experience, which equates to approximately $1,400 on a salary of $50,000 annually. Seventy-five per cent of the contributions will be paid for teachers with six to 10 years' experience, which equates to approximately $1,300 on a salary of $60,000 annually. For teachers with 11 to 15 years of experience the government will pick up 50 per cent of their contribution, again, approximately $1,200 on a salary of $75,000 annually. Finally, 25 per cent of the contributions for teachers with 16 to 20 years of experience will be accepted by government, and that equates to approximately $650 on a salary of $80,000 annually.

This approach addresses the fact that our youngest and newest teachers are the most disadvantaged by paying for a liability they did not create. This initiative is intended to create an environment that allows the task force to have a positive and constructive dialogue with the various stakeholders. This liability is the responsibility of both parties and needs to be addressed in an open and transparent manner. We're looking for fiscally responsible solutions that provide value to Alberta students, teachers, and taxpayers with specific attention to the recruitment and retention of new teachers.

I believe that Budget 2007 sustains our excellent education system and manages areas of growth. Our department business plan provides particular focus to the four priorities. Education is about innovation, outcomes, student success, and collaboration. Everyone has a role, and that's why I've listened and discussed education matters with a range of individuals and associations. All of our futures depend on what happens in the K to 12 system, so I intend to reach out beyond the usual education community and talk with business leaders and other decision-makers.

Since my appointment I have met with school board chairs, trustees, principals, teachers, parents, and students. Those meetings have been open and honest, and I've had some excellent discussions about school jurisdictions' local challenges as well as opportunities involving collaboration and innovation in delivering education. I'm impressed by the good work going on in our education community. I'm supportive of and strongly believe in locally elected officials and their ability and responsibility to make decisions that are in the best interest of their community.

In closing, I want to emphasize that this budget underlines government's commitment to manage growth and the need to have a plan for the future. I would entertain any comments or questions for the remainder of the estimates period.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll attempt to go at the budget. I thank the minister for his overview, and I'll try and go through some of the things that he raised and touch on them and bring some of my points clear.

First of all, operational grants to school boards will increase 3 per cent in September. Clearly, in the unique situation of Alberta and its overheated economy this increase in funding will frankly, Mr. Minister, not be enough. Several school boards have already told me that they aren't sure how they will be able to cover all their costs without making cuts. It reminds me a little bit of last year again, but anyway let's get into specifics.

I know that the minister likes to talk about 5 and even 10 per cent increases for his overall budget, but what it really comes to for the schools and teachers and students is the operational funding. The fact of the matter is that this budget only contains a 3 per cent increase in all existing operational grants to school boards. The thing that really interests me in this – and I'll raise these questions if it's all right with the minister, and he may want to write back to me or talk to me after I sit down – and my question is: how will school boards be able to ensure that the wages of their teachers keep pace with increases in the cost of living? Again, I'm just looking at this.

Earlier this week in question period the minister suggested that school boards should use any operating surpluses they might have to negotiate with teachers. I went out and looked at last year, 2005-2006 – and we're doing an analysis of this presently. For example, if you're using surpluses for funding teachers' salaries, I found it very interesting that the Calgary school district No. 19 – and, again, you can comment, Mr. Minister – has what I see here as a deficit position. I looked over at the Edmonton Catholic separate school district No. 7, and they have, let me just say, an $8.8 million deficit position. I look at the Edmonton school district here, and they have a $1.7 million deficit. I look to my constituency, which is the Greater St. Albert Catholic regional school district, where they have a $1.3 million deficit. Will this be the policy of the minister, to instruct school boards to use operating surpluses to ensure teachers are given a fair wage increase? I don't know if that's the policy now, but I still want some clarification there.

The Minister of Education likes to emphasize that Alberta spends more money on education than any other province. While this may be true, it is important to remember that Alberta is not like every other province. In fact, when total education spending is seen as a percentage of total wealth, which is the more comparable measure used by economists, Alberta actually ranks last. How does this last-place ranking fit with the minister's overall vision of having the best education system in the world?

Now let me turn to maintenance and construction. School facilities operations and maintenance support will increase to $417 million, a 3.2 per cent increase in the 2007-08 estimates, page 95, line 7.0.1. School facilities infrastructure has received $508 million this year, which is a decrease, the way we look at it, of 13.8 per cent since last year. That's the estimates page 95, line 7.0.2. The question is: why is the department decreasing its school facilities infrastructure budget by over 13 per cent when need is severe and construction costs are only rising? Maybe you could explain that to me.

The city of Calgary, where the minister resides, and the municipalities all over this province are rapidly expanding. Premier Stelmach himself talks about that all the time. He notes that Alberta leads the country in area housing starts. Is this really the time to be cutting our school infrastructure budget? I don't think it is, but maybe there's something I'm missing there, and maybe the minister can straighten me out.

The estimates suggest that Calgary alone has a $0.5 billion deficit in badly needed repairs to deferred infrastructure. I ask the question: what steps are being taken to prevent this situation from getting worse? I don't know. Maybe they're using decentralized budgeting, and maybe the money is going somewhere else down there. I'm not sure. We have heard from the Calgary education community that there are close to 40 subdivisions that need new schools. Can the minister confirm the size of the need in Calgary? Just clarify it for us.

Now, the minister talks about the whole thing of P3s. I talked to board members, you know. I talked to one of them that's in the construction business, and he said: maybe this is a great idea, Jack, and you're just being too negative. But why doesn't the minister come out with an operational framework, a rationale, and let the school districts know what he's planning to do? Why keep the thing a secret? If it's so good, tell us what it is, and then maybe we can get on the bandwagon and start promoting it. But we still wait and wait and wait. I'm expressing the frustration from some of our superintendents and some of our trustees that talk to me. I certainly don't talk to as many as the minister, though, so maybe I've a limited sample.

Anyway, school districts are hopeful that the infrastructure, maintenance, and renewal, IMR, funding that was announced in 2006 would be sustained over three years, and they're talking about a longer range period to do some planning and repairing, all that kind of thing. Rather, the 2007-08 IMR budget has been reduced from $200 million to $96 million. It is expected, therefore, that the allocations of school jurisdictions will be reduced by approximately 50 per cent. So my question is: why did this department decide to reduce funding for this year? Does it anticipate that the need for maintenance and renewal of existing facilities will be less? Maybe they do have something that they think is less. I don't know.

The unfunded liability. Let's just talk about that for a few minutes. The cost of financing the unfunded liability is $156.7 million this year, an increase of 2.9 per cent from last year and 8.5 since the 2005-06 estimates, page 94, line 3.0.2. The minister proposed to take on a portion of the cost to teachers of the unfunded liability for one year at a cost of $25 million. Now, during Premier Stelmach's leadership campaign he promised teachers that he would . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, Beauchesne 484 . . .

Mr. Flaherty: Hon. Premier? Sorry.

The Chair: . . . allows a person to refer to himself by name, but it doesn't allow for a speaker to refer to other members of the House by name.

3:00

Mr. Flaherty: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Can I say the leader of the government? Is that appropriate?

The Chair: That would be fine. Or Premier.

Mr. Flaherty: Anyway, I'll go at it this way, Mr. Chairman. Thank you. You're always on guard. That's great.

The promise that was made to the teachers that the government would separate the teacher liability pension issue from salary negotiations and resolve the issue once and for all. That was said. My question is: do the provisions attached to the $25 million in this budget – this is from the letter that the minister wrote to the teachers, and I probably had something like 25 letters and about 40 phone calls, and I know the ATA has had many more on this letter. "In the event of job action, the Government may direct the task force to discontinue its work and discontinue assuming the teachers' share of the annual unfunded liability." What I'm still wondering: how does this letter help teachers to reach a decision and help the minister on this? In fact, how does this accomplish what the minister wants to accomplish? I'd like to know what his motive is. Maybe he could tell me right now today: is the ATA involved in this thing now, or where are they at? Are they refusing to sit on this task force? In other words, where are we at with this whole business of the unfunded liability? It would be very interesting for us to know that. I think that would be very important.

I'm running out of time here, I think. I'll skip over private schools and come back. Maybe I can get back on schedule because I know my colleagues . . . [Mr. Flaherty's speaking time expired]

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll attempt to address the comments, as I made notes. First of all, let's talk about teacher negotiations that will take place over the summer and into the fall. The hon. member is correct that school boards received 3 per cent across-the-board operational grants. Funding to education, however, as I've mentioned many times, has our budget increase going to school boards in the range of 5.2 per cent. It's school boards' determination as to how they want to use those funds.

I would remind the hon. member that in the last couple of months we've had two settlements in the province that settled their retroactive – in other words, for the current year that we're in – wage settlements in Chinook's Edge and Wild Rose, that averaged somewhere around 3 per cent.

Now, a couple of other things need to be noted. One, as I've said many times, the schools boards' accumulated surpluses across the province total $220 million. As the representative of some 2.5 million taxpayers in Alberta I have difficulty in advocating for higher funds for school boards when they're sitting on that kind of money. Yes, there are a couple of school boards that have prior deficits. They have presented to us a plan to pay down those debts and are doing so.

It should also be pointed out that every school board has the ability this fall to put a plebiscite to the voters as part of the municipal election requisitioning 3 per cent on the mill rate, and they could specify, if they so choose, what they wanted to use that for. If the hon. member is suggesting that maybe his St. Albert school board would like to put to the taxpayers of his constituency a vote this fall that says, "Would you be in favour, Mr. and Mrs. Taxpayer, of a 3 per cent mill rate increase specifically to pay for teachers' salaries?" I suggest that he make that suggestion to the school boards in St. Albert.

There were some comments made around infrastructure that I think need to be addressed. No one knows the infrastructure backlog more than I do. My particular constituency of Calgary-West happens to have, currently, two public schools – one public, one Catholic – and seven private schools, and I say that that is not giving choice to the residents of my constituency, and it's not giving them the choice, frankly, of a public school system, which is not acceptable. We need to do something about our backlog of infrastructure deficit. However, that deficit is some $3 billion, and if the hon. member has a suggestion on how I can find the $3 billion in our provincial budget somewhere, I encourage him to give me all of his suggestions.

It should be noted, however, that in this particular school year we will be opening some 12 new schools. We've opened 16 new schools in the current year that we're in, and we will be increasing the number of school spaces by over 8,000 across the province. This is at a time when our enrolment is relatively flat. Our question is not a matter of not enough spaces. The problem is that there aren't enough spaces where the kids live, in the right parts of the cities. So we're working on that.

As I said earlier, we've put a hundred million dollars into the budget. I know that the hon. member is quite anxious to hear about how we want to allocate that money. That decision is currently being discussed. The hon. member is getting quite frustrated because we haven't come forward with a proposal on P3s here on the 17th of May. I'd ask him to be patient. We will have that in the next few months, and then he can assess whether or not proceeding with some different financing methods to get schools built where kids live is the right approach.

I'll conclude for this portion on the unfunded liability. The hon. member talked about the Premier's commitment to separate negotiations from the discussions around resolving the unfunded liability. Well, that's exactly what we are doing. We as government will be dealing directly with the ATA on the unfunded liability issue. School boards, on the other hand, will be dealing with their ATA locals, and the ATA has made it fairly clear that the locals bargain at the local level. We are not involving the school boards in the discussion around the unfunded liability, the negotiations, so they are in fact separate.

Now, relative to the letter that was written, I would ask the hon. member – he was pretty close to this particular situation – to reflect back to when the teachers were on strike in Parkland and think about that situation for a moment. That created an awful lot of angst. It created a situation that was less than desirable to hold any kind of negotiations or any kind of discussions. I ask that hon. member if he would feel comfortable with this task force that is out meeting with stakeholders in some way being influenced by bad feelings that exist throughout the negotiating process if we have various locals on strike. What I have suggested in the letter is that the government has the prerogative that if a strike occurs, the work of the task force is pulled back until the labour situation is resolved. The task force then resumes its work. I think that's fair. I don't want to see this task force unduly influenced by a cantankerous labour dispute, and I would hope the hon. member would not want to have that happen either.

The final question is: where is the ATA at? I'm afraid I would have to ask the hon. member to ask that question of the Alberta Teachers' Association. The offer stands that we would like the Alberta Teachers' Association to name a representative to our task force. The offer will be open for a few days, but if the ATA does not choose to have a representative on the task force, we will proceed.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to enhance some of my comments from yesterday, and I thank the minister and his assistant for being here.

I'd like to start off by paraphrasing from an Edmonton Journal article in March of this year written by trustee Don Fleming, looking at the history of education and school boards in Alberta. This is something that is dear to my heart for a number of reasons. But I want to clarify my position. I think every person in the community has an opportunity to help determine the direction of their public school jurisdiction through the election of public representatives.

In 1994, the Alberta government changed the way local boards operate and took on the collective obligation to fund centrally and completely the provision of educational services to every student in Alberta. It was a one-size-fits-all approach that ignored the historical link of the community to its schools and set in motion a chain of events which left school boards with little flexibility.

It is my belief that almost every problem that we deal with in terms of the school districts can be traced to that limiting nature of that 1994 legislation. I appreciate the minister's faith in school boards to make good decisions; however, we must return a reasonable level of local autonomy to school boards. Doing so would enable elected boards to once again be accountable to the communities and show them that they've been elected to serve.

Schools need to be ensured of an adequate block of funding each year. Schools, unlike factories or other industrial business undertakings, cannot be treated as though they are producing products that can be made, shaped, moulded in an identical manner. Stable and adequate funding allows schools to function, whether they serve an academically elite population or a population comprised of less able students. Without stable and adequate funding we teach too many of our students, I believe, young people who may already be disillusioned with adult society and angry, that school is irrelevant, that adults are not caring, and that society has abandoned them. It's a high price for society to pay.

There are many things here to look at, and I will try not to repeat what my colleague from St. Albert has said, although I will emphasize some of those points. In terms of the operating budget the biggest part of the school boards' costs are staffing related, so we have to ask: why does the government increase the basic instructional grant by just 3 per cent when the index for increasing MLAs' salaries was closer to 4.9, I think? A 3 per cent increase to the budget – when you factor in yearly inflation and that teachers are waiting for contract resolutions, if you look at the 4.9 increase that we thought was okay for MLAs, how do we expect teachers to accept less? Schools will be budgeting for probably a 4.5 increase to cover anticipated expenses, and that means that without inflation's effect, they may possibly be 1.5 per cent poorer to do the same work. Money must come from staffing to work the budget.

The goal of 17 in division 1 and 23 in division 2 is just not possible with the current money. Then we look at the cost of aides. Sometimes we can do that by splitting two classes for half a day and try to keep the numbers lower with the help of the aide. With grades 5 and 6 we're trying for 25 and 26 in the class, and the goal was supposed to be 23. I'm talking to various principals in the district, and very few of them are able to meet the standard of 23 or less for division 2.

If the province is serious about making each child successful, let's consider tying assistance to families to attendance in school and fulfillment of reading or homework assignments and so on.

I want to emphasize again the strong position that we have for school nutrition programs. They have proven to be successful in increasing student achievement. It only makes sense that if a student is not hungry, he's going to feel more comfortable, more secure, and have a better sense of well-being and a better idea that they do have potential.

I want to mention the reading recovery program, which is an amazing program. One teacher to seven or eight students twice a year has had excellent results, I'm hearing from one school. But it's so costly that schools are not able to afford it, yet they believe that in the early years it's probably the best program to promote success. Teachers in that program would work daily with seven or eight children, 30 minutes of structured reading one-on-one. However, a teacher unit cost is about $80,000, and most schools can't afford that.

Again, I talked a bit yesterday about the full funding for aides. School boards don't get enough money for special-needs students to fully fund their needs. As a result, they either don't hire what they need or take money away from something else to subsidize. I know that there's only so much money. However, I think we have to look at the priorities. Once again, if we can invest in these early years, we're going to have cost savings down the road. We all know that. So I think the number one way to ensure success is to give the students that need it the teacher ratio to support them so that they have the opportunity for success.

The other thing that I've talked about many times in here is the time frame for the Education budget. Based on the budgets schools have in April, they make plans for the following year, and by the beginning of May the students having concluded, generally, the registration process for the next year, they start making serious plans for the next year. So by the end of May they may be having to declare teachers surplus, and a process begins to place teachers for the next year. Teachers move, schools change, and maybe they'll lose a teacher that they really did not want to lose. This causes angst for everybody. Then sometimes suddenly there's money in August, and you find, "Well, we could have kept that teacher," but you can't get that teacher back. I just don't feel that the timing of the Education budget is as supportive as it could be to make the process one that's efficient and less of a guessing game.

The differences in budgeting timelines between the ministry and school boards can lead to inaccurate or incomplete information being submitted by boards. School boards need to be sure of their budgets because of staffing completion by May. The ministry can improve this by providing early feedback on the feasibility of the budgets submitted and information on grants as soon as possible. So I really encourage you to take a look at that factor.

Another thing that I'd like to ask is – you've heard the term "clawbacks," I'm sure, and this is dealing with high schools and credit funding. If $250 million of education funding is dependent on high school credit completion and the completion rate around the province is 90 per cent, that would mean that $25 million would be clawed back from the school boards, which could go, possibly, to teachers' salaries, textbooks, support staff. It could have gone there. I would suggest that in many jurisdictions the completion rate is much lower than 90 per cent. Some schools continue to load 40 students in a class because they know that students are going to drop out and there's going to be less course completion. Those schools and jurisdictions with the lowest levels of funding often have the highest dropout rate. So that's a real concern to me.

I'm wondering about AISI. My experience with it was generally very positive. Have we got evidence to say that it actually improved high school completion rates, or has the money gone to expensive consultants, PD days, which teachers often don't even want? I'm wondering if a more suitable alternative would have been to put that money towards reading recovery programs. I think about five years ago teachers identified lack of reading skills as the main obstacle to success, yet the Department of Education and school boards have ignored their recommendations and have chosen other areas to concentrate funding. I'm wondering if this is the best use of taxpayer money.

Another concern is the provincial curriculum review that resulted in science and social studies. Schools will have to have an additional $110,000 in some cases for textbooks in these two areas, and there's no extra funding allocated from the province to assist with these changes. I noticed when I was talking to a colleague who had just been to B.C. that that province awards additional funding for high-needs schools and students based on socioeconomics and demographics. Thus there are schools in our city of Edmonton that would get additional funding to assist with programing needs for their students.

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, let me address the issue around the pooling of taxes. The member raises a good point. I think it's probably about due for review whether or not at least the residential tax base should be something we should be considering returning to school boards. That would be something that we'll be discussing as a caucus over the course of the next year.

The member made a comment that I absolutely have to take – it was not correct. If I heard her right, she said: discussing with principals, very few were able to meet the class size guidelines. Those are not our numbers. With the exception of the 1 to 3 classes almost across the board school boards have managed to meet the class size initiative. Keep in mind that that was over a three-year period. The recommendations of the Learning Commission were over a five-year period, and they've done this over a three-year period. Now, there is some tweaking to be done around this. We've now funded it fully, and I think it's time to take a step back and say: what is working well, and what isn't?

The one area that the member discussed was the timing around notifying school boards of their budgets. I think we'll both be pleased to know that that problem should hopefully take care of itself in the future because of our own House reforms. Part of what we're doing, in my understanding: the budget will be delivered on the third Thursday of February every year going forward, and therefore schools will certainly know, compared to this year, considerably earlier how much their funding is going to be. I think that would take care of that.

There was some concern around CEU funding and high schools and clawbacks. The CEU funding has pros and cons, but clearly one of the pros is that we are not going to use taxpayers' dollars to pay for kids who don't go to school, and that's the reason why it's funded in that manner. We have pretty flexible guidelines around funding relative to attendance and classroom achievements.

Comments relative to the AISI program. In my travels through the province in the short time I've been in this portfolio, I don't think that there is an initiative that this department has taken that is more well received at the local level than AISI. There is just some wonderful stuff being done with AISI money. It is project specific. There are some pretty – I wouldn't say tough guidelines. It simply is not money that's just handed out without any accountability to it, so it's one that I really think is a good project.

I guess that I would just like to make one comment, and it was part of what we discussed in question period today. I know that I'm supposed to be supplying the answers, and they're supposed to be asking the questions, but I'm going to ask a question of our learned friends across the way. I would like to know from them: which one of the big-spending departments – Health, Seniors and Community Supports, and Children's Services – have they recommended we cut back on so that we could spend more money on education? I challenge them. I haven't heard any suggestions on which one of those departments we should cut back funding on. This province spends – what was our budget this year? – 30-plus billion dollars. So to continue to make suggestions that this needs to be funded, that needs to be funded, and this is underfunded: it's great to make all those accusations and raise all those concerns, but I haven't heard many answers.

I look forward to suggestions on what part of my hon. colleague the Minister of Health's budget we should not approve this year so we can increase that operating grant from 3 to 6 per cent. Maybe we don't build the south Calgary hospital. Which part of the disabilities programs that we have in Seniors and Community Supports should we no longer fund? Maybe we shouldn't spend money on the child care spaces program that my hon. colleague has announced, which is just a terrific program. So I'd be open to any suggestions on which programs we cut in the big-funding departments so that we can spend more on education.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and join the debate on the estimates for the Ministry of Education. First of all, I want to thank the hon. Minister of Education and his staff for the preparation of the estimates. I'm going to ask a few questions on key issues. If you can answer my questions today, it would be nice. If you don't, any time within a week at least if you can answer my questions, I would really appreciate that.

The key issues. I think a few of them have already been addressed by my colleagues the MLA for St. Albert and the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Woods, but I have few more. I want to talk a little bit on the school lunch program, operational funding, maintenance and construction – the unfunded liability was already discussed – private-school funding, transportation, special-needs students, and classroom size, as well as ESL.

First of all, I'll start with a few questions which concern my riding, Edmonton-Ellerslie. As we all know, not only Edmonton but all over Alberta the population is growing, especially in the new areas. My constituency, Edmonton-Ellerslie, is growing so fast. You know, when I was door-knocking last summer, most of the complaints I heard from that area were that they need a school and library in that area. Then I set up a meeting with the trustee in my riding – that was about 18 months ago – and he told me that the capital planning for the school in the Ellerslie area was 2007-2008, but recently he showed me another capital funding program. I'm not 100 per cent blaming the government, but when you talk to the trustees, they always blame the government because they say that they cannot operate without the money.

Money is important, and you have the chequebook, so here we are. This is another chance for me, and I would like to point out those important issues, which are very important for my constituents. They desperately need a school. I actually had the opportunity to visit a few schools in my constituency. I mean, in one of the schools their library is carpeted, you know, and needs lots of renovations since five or six years. This is my personal feeling. They are so scared; they don't want to talk to the MLAs. I don't know why. You ask them: do you have any concerns? They hardly answer questions from the opposition side. They think that only members from the government side can help. I want to point this out because I think it's very important. Maybe next time I will take the minister with me to the schools and make sure that the minister will take care of that.

The trustee I met mentioned to me that, first of all, his concern was about the lobbyists' registry act. He said that all the trustees are elected representatives like MLAs, MPs, Senators. They read this act. I don't know which stage that bill is in, but they are concerned about that, that they are elected representatives like Senators, MPs, or MLAs, and they should be included. They don't need to register for the lobbyists' registry. I mean, naturally, they are complaining about why they were excluded, being elected representatives.

Another thing he mentioned to me, as other members also indicated: recently the government, you know, increased only 3 per cent, which is not sufficient. They called it operational funding. Operational grants to the school boards will increase 3 per cent in September. Clearly, in the unique situation of Alberta and its overheated economy this increase in funding will not be enough. This is exactly what he mentioned to me, that even MLAs got a raise, 4.9 per cent or something. He said: the MLAs can get a 4.9 per cent raise, and everybody else expects at least above the inflation rate. I think 3 per cent is even below the inflation rate, which is not reasonable, especially at this time. You know, the construction price, even the grocery prices have gone up, so this is one of his major concerns, and he asked me to pass on this message to the hon. Minister of Education. I think some other members already indicated on this particular issue.

I know that the Minister of Education likes to talk about a 5 and even a 10 per cent increase for his overall budget, but what it really comes down to for schoolteachers and students is operational funding. The fact of the matter is that this budget only contains a 3 per cent increase to all existing operational grants to school boards if you see the Education budget background. My question is: how will school boards be able to ensure that the wages of their teachers keep pace with the increases in the cost of living?

Earlier this week in question period the minister suggested that school boards should use any operating surpluses they might have to negotiate with the teachers. Another question: will this be a policy of the minister, to instruct school boards to use operating surpluses to ensure that teachers are given fair wage increases? If they are getting fair wage increases, when should they expect them?

The Ministry of Education likes to emphasize that Alberta spends more money on education than any other province. I heard this from many members from the other side of the floor again and again. While this may be true, it's important to remember that Alberta is not like other provinces. In fact, when total education spending is seen as a percentage of total wealth, which is the more comparable measure used by economists, Alberta actually ranks last. This is a shame. How does this last-place ranking fit with the ministry's overall vision of having the best education system in the world?

I want to touch a little bit on maintenance and construction because schools in Calgary and Edmonton – I'm not saying that all the schools need renovation, but most of them do. I receive so many complaints in Edmonton, and I see a few e-mail letters from Calgary too. You know, the schools need some maintenance, but some schools have been looked after really very badly. Suppose they need some renovations today? If we don't spend money right away, the problem deteriorates. So if we don't look after that problem today, suppose today the cost is $1 million, if the government approved in the capital . . . [Mr. Agnihotri's speaking time expired] That's it?

The Chair: That's it.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I had to slightly chuckle when the hon. member said that school trustees seem to be afraid to talk to the MLA. He must present a much more intimidating force than I do because, let me tell you, if there's one thing that I've encountered in the four or five months I've been fortunate enough to have this portfolio, it's that I haven't encountered any trustee who is afraid to tell me exactly what he or she thinks. So maybe I will have to take the hon. member with me one day out to south Edmonton and see if we can get the trustees to talk.

I am disappointed because I concluded my remarks a few minutes ago by suggesting that I would be more than open to suggestions as to which one of the high-spending departments the opposition would like us to take money from to add more money to Education. The member did not address that, so I await those suggestions.

The member used an interesting analogy: percentage of total wealth. Well, if I put that into my own personal perspective, that's like saying: the wealthier I get, the more I should spend whether it's necessary or not because you should be obligated to spend a certain percentage of your personal wealth. Well, I don't happen to agree with that, Mr. Chairman. I happen to believe that you do an assessment of need, and you fund it accordingly. I would suggest that no one could accuse this government of not funding education accordingly: $30 million per school day. Let me repeat that: $30 million per school day.

There was some mention made about maintenance of our schools. Yes, it is an issue. In previous years our infrastructure maintenance repair, more commonly called IMR, budget was $48 million. Last year we did a one-year infusion where we increased it to $200 million for last year. This year it's $96 million. So you could either say that we doubled what we used to spend on IMR or you could say what I've just heard: we've cut it in half. Now, several school districts have told me that when we increased it from $48 million to $200 million, yes, they've got projects out there, but with the heated economy some of them are having trouble ensuring that all of those funds in that particular budget year are appropriately spent. I believe our school boards are very good managers of our money, and that's one of the reasons why we've got the accumulated surplus that I have mentioned on several occasions.

While we're dealing with maintenance, I think that's one of the real reasons why we need to look at some alternative funding mechanisms for schools. One of the mechanisms to look at is new construction or modernization that includes a 20-, 25-, 30-year maintenance contract with it, and at the end of that time frame if that school isn't returned to the school district or the government, whatever the arrangement is, in a condition that is set out at the beginning of the agreement, there's a penalty attached to it. I believe there are some great opportunities going forward so that those folks sitting in these chairs 25 years from now aren't going to be having the same discussion about deferred maintenance. That's one of our challenges.

The hon. member had some questions around infrastructure relative to new school construction. I think he's probably aware that last fall we prepared a document called Schools for Tomorrow. It was, in fact, a compilation of the needs around the province, and we are now trying to address: okay, we've identified the need; how do we meet it? We only got halfway by the end of last year. Identifying the need is the easy part. Meeting that need and how to meet it is the tougher decision.

There were some comments around the lobbyist registry, and I completely agree with the hon. member. I have raised that issue with my caucus colleagues. I would encourage the hon. member in committee stage to propose an amendment to the bill which would exclude school boards from being listed as lobbyists. I think that's totally appropriate.

Those, I believe, were the notes that I made relative to the hon. member's questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a very important question. Some people are asking why in this budget the private schools receive a big increase this year. What is the main reason for this increase? Is it this government's plan to increase public funding for private schools? Why is the increase in operational funding for private schools larger than the increase for public schools?

Also, I want to talk about classroom size. Stats Canada's report released in 2004 confirmed that Alberta still had the highest student-to-teacher ratio. Could you tell me what the ratio was last year and how this funding increase will affect the ratio for 2007 and 2008?

Special needs is also, Mr. Chairman, a big concern. The overall special-needs per student funding for students with mild to moderate disability or delay increased by 3 per cent in the year 2007-08 funding manual for school authorities. Funding for students with severe disabilities also went up by only 3 per cent. Special-needs education remains critically underfunded.

Although I heard from several school jurisdictions that their severe-needs profiles may not reflect their actual need, most feel that in any case the decision of Alberta Education to review the integrity of the severe-needs profile assigned to each school jurisdiction will do very little to address the underfunding of special-needs education. One school division reported that the revenue it received per student was less than half of the actual division expenditure per student. In large part, this funding shortfall stems from coding issues.

We heard from the education community that the criteria of the severe-needs coding are too rigorous. There are a growing number of students with severe needs, but they do not satisfy the severe needs. The fact of the matter is that this budget only contains a 3 per cent increase to all existing operational grants to school boards. How will school boards be able to ensure that the wages of their teachers keep pace if they keep spending money on programs like this one? How can they spend money on ESL programs? How can they spend some money on classroom size?

And, especially, the transportation in my riding. I received a few letters recently, and the people were complaining that now they had to pay for their transportation. Sometimes they have to send their kids, you know. They spend an hour on the bus, and they were always worried. Transportationwise, there are some areas where they charge a small amount of fare for the buses, and the other areas are charging more than some areas. So that's my question.

I would really appreciate it if you answer those questions. Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I repeat again, I did not hear any suggestions by the hon. member whether we should not fund child care spaces or take money out of the hon. minister of health's budget. It's great to stand there and talk about spending more money on this, that, and the next thing. I said in question period today: I think we're now up to – I don't know. I'm just running numbers in my head. But the Liberal plan would be – I don't know; pick a number – somewhere between $10 billion and $15 billion spent on education. I mean, where does it come from?

I need to make a correction regarding private school funding. This year, for the first time ever, we're funding ESL in private schools. It's the right thing to do. It's a $2 million investment above and beyond the operational grants, and what that translated into was the fact that private schools appeared to get more money. Private schools continued to get 60 per cent of the base operational grant, and that hasn't changed. To say that somehow overall funding for private schools was out of whack with public schools is not correct. Really, what we've done is that we've caught up on the ESL side of it.

There was some mention made around coding. We are going to do a review of our coding of students during the next year. It's an issue that we discussed at some length yesterday with the two hon. members. I don't think it would be good use of House time to repeat what was discussed yesterday.

I think that's about it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, it's a pleasure, again, to participate in the estimates briefing from the Department of Education. I must get on the record, hon. minister, that I have been involved in a few of these discussions and debates over the budgets this spring, and I must say that you have a very small contingent from the department with you. Your deputy minister certainly did very, very well in Public Accounts. I'm confident that if we have any questions, if you cannot answer them, he certainly can. I've seen other ministers come in here with six and eight staff, but I can see why you only come with one: you only need one. That's an ace you've got there.

The Department of Education. I've been listening to the debate, and I've been listening to the questions all spring from various members. Recently, in the last half an hour, I was listening to the hon. minister talk about the schools that we're building, and the ones that, unfortunately, are being unnecessarily and arbitrarily closed, particularly in mature neighbourhoods in the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary. I don't understand the rationale why good public schools in neighbourhoods are being suddenly closed. It seems to be poor planning. I don't know who's to blame. Is it the department, or is it the respective school boards? In the city here if we're not careful, we're going to have a doughnut effect, where in the central neighbourhoods we're going to have no schools, and in the fast-growing suburban areas where we do need schools – we need new ones, and they are being built – we're going to have a major planning problem.

We have seen not only in this latest round of school closures in Edmonton but in the last round where the parents felt so strongly that they were willing to take the school board to court. Not only in Edmonton but in Sangudo and Whitecourt parents also took the school boards to court over this issue. We have to be careful about this. We have a utilization rate that's cumbersome. It's out of date. It's not reflective of the times. In five years, in 10 years we could need the same public school again.

If it has low enrolment now, and I can only talk – let's pick on Glenora. Just the other day there was a meeting in Glenora about a large housing complex that is proposed to be constructed. That will change the demographics of that neighbourhood. Strathearn over in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar: if even half of that redevelopment proposal is accepted, it's going to make a heck of a difference. There are other neighbourhoods throughout the city where we're talking about increasing the density in the central area of the city, and we're closing schools. It just does not make sense. We're closing schools to save $260,000 on an annual basis. It just doesn't make sense to me.

Also, I would like to at this time express my gratitude to the minister. The minister was quite open about sharing some information that the department had accumulated, regarding a Sabrina's Law for this province. I really appreciated receiving this. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I sent a note to the hon. minister on March 13, 2007, and the next day – I must say on the record that I was very impressed – we got a report back from the minister on what the department was doing with students with severe allergies. This issue brief is the progress of the committee that was struck to deal with this issue. I think it's time that we have in this province a Sabrina's Law, similar to the one that was introduced in Ontario to protect children who have severe allergies.

Now, some of these allergies – we all think, Mr. Chairman, that they are restricted to peanuts or other nuts, but they are not. This anaphylaxis is life threatening. It's a life-threatening allergy. It could be to food; it could be to insect bites. We have to be careful because some people think it is the same as hay fever. Unfortunately – and there are tragic examples of this – children could die from exposure within seconds of contact with peanuts.

It is at this time that I would urge in this budget year for the department to take a good, long look at presenting before this Legislative Assembly a law similar to Sabrina's Law in Ontario so that we have minimum standards across the province for all these children who are affected by this condition. There seem to be more and more, and I don't know why children are affected by this. I don't think it's too much to ask. It's not too much for the school boards to administer or the local schools to administer. It would just be a standard so that everyone would know if there was an incident or an event how to deal with it, how to handle it, and how to save a life. I would plead with the department to again consider a Sabrina's Law for this province.

I have some questions in regard to this. Given the recent death of Carley Kohnen, a 13-year-old person from Victoria, B.C., another child that has passed away from this, is the government of Alberta now prepared to introduce legislation to safeguard all anaphylactic children within Alberta schools? Again, in this budget year why is the government supporting a policy approach when Alberta schools already have the Canadian School Boards Association's policy handbook, a handbook for school boards since 2001. How will this new approach differ?

In conclusion, if the government is not prepared, Mr. Chairman, to introduce legislation to protect anaphylactic school children, is the government at least prepared to admit that anaphylactic school children are special needs as defined in the School Act, and therefore to complement any policy, these children require teachers' aides to ensure that preventative measures are consistently and objectively undertaken in each classroom no matter the size of the classroom and, more importantly, no matter what the teacher or the principal's predisposition is to the issue of anaphylaxis.

Now, I appreciate – and I'm going to express it again – the information that the minister shared with me regarding this, but I think we can do something proactive here. We can introduce legislation very similar to what Ontario has passed and British Columbia, as I understand it, is currently discussing.

With those questions at this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move on to another part of the budget – and I'm going to apologize if this was already covered – certainly, the funding of private schools. Am I correct in observing and listening at Public Accounts that there has been a significant increase as a percentage of total spending going to private schools that public schools are not getting, or are they both getting an equal amount of an increase? There is some talk that private schools are being funded by this government.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: First of all, thank you for the kind words relative to the good work that our department does perform. I would just offer that going forward if a member of the opposition has an issue that he would like some help with in answering constituents' concerns to ask, and we will be more than happy to try and provide the information for their constituents. It should also be noted that while I may only have one person sitting on the floor, we have some very capable people in the gallery that probably could give me various finger signs if I needed them.

Relative to Sabrina's Law we have asked the Alberta School Boards Association to do a review around their policies, and that is, I would presume, soon to be completed. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has made comment in the House on a few occasions relative to us in government not supporting an initiative from the opposition. I would encourage the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to consider a private member's bill on that area. You might be surprised whether we'd be supportive or not. So I'd leave that with him.

Just very briefly, to deal with the private schools. I did answer the question a little earlier. In essence, what it was is we committed $2 million this year for ESL funding for private schools, and previously private schools did not get ESL funding. Their percentage of operating grants remains at 60 per cent of the public school funding on operating grants, but when you inject the $2 million in there, the percentage goes up. I think that overall the funding that the private schools receive in total from government this year relative to last year is a 6 per cent increase, but it's all because of that $2 million injection into ESL.

I want to talk a bit about the closure of schools in more mature neighbourhoods. The hon. member sort of threw out the ask and said that he's not sure who to blame. The answer to that is that I don't think anybody is to blame. It's a fact that in years gone by in a particular community we built more schools than we would build in a similar size community today. With some of these schools that are closing, there may be as many as three schools serving a community where, actually, all of the children could walk to one or two schools.

The other thing that has significantly impacted attendance at schools – it's a good thing. The Edmonton public school board is probably the best example of offering a tremendous number of alternative programs. You may have Spanish over here. You may have an arts school over there. You may have a music school over there. What that means is that you have children from all over the city coming to that one particular music school or that one particular arts school, or it may be a charter school that has an all-girls school, as an example. What happens in a situation like that is you start to pull children out of the community to go to schools elsewhere, and what happens is that, frankly, the numbers simply don't warrant it.

It's never easy to close a school, and I know that school boards don't do it lightly, but I come back to the facts. The facts are that we'll be opening 12 schools in the next school year. In this school year that we're just wrapping up, we will have opened 16 schools. Well, there are 28 new schools, and our enrolment, in essence, across the province is flat. Those 8,200 spaces that we're going to be opening up next year are going to be drawn from somewhere because currently they're probably in the community where that new school is being opened. Those kids are currently bused into an older neighbourhood. So as soon as that new school opens, that school where they have been bused to is probably going to be underutilized.

It's not an easy situation for school boards to deal with, but I believe they're doing the best that they can under the circumstances. I think that for the most part, as I said earlier, it's never easy when the school across the road from you is being closed. If I were a parent, absolutely I'd be trying to keep that school open, but the likelihood of those children having to go a great distance to go to school is not high.

I think that answers the questions, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You know how proud I am of my hometown, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada. I am even more proud because it has been named the cultural capital of Canada for 2007. So I would like to introduce two artists who work in Edmonton, who are helping to make Edmonton the cultural capital of Canada. Those individuals are joining us in the public gallery today. Mark Henderson is the artistic director of Theatre Prospero. With him today is Jennifer Spencer, and she is actually working for Theatre Prospero right now. They are currently touring Alberta schools with a production of Hamlet. I think Mark is actually from Edmonton, and we are very lucky to have had Jennifer move here to help us be the cultural capital. I would ask them both to please rise and accept the warm welcome and appreciation of the Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Could I introduce a guest, Mr. Chairman, first and then go on?

The Chair: Yes. You may.

Mr. Flaherty: I'd like to introduce, in the gallery, Frank Bruseker, the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association. He's here. We appreciate his attendance.

Education (continued)

Mr. Flaherty: We know that the minister is a wise politician. He used to be around Peter Lougheed. He threw out the hook, and I'm just going to bite into part of it. You should look back into the discussions I used to have with the former Minister of Education. I challenged him. See, I don't want to attack other departments to get dollars; I want to look at your department to get some dollars.

One of the things that we talked about – and I think it's important to get this on the record – and one of the things that I got excited about when I heard about your background was that you really believed in prevention. I've talked very clearly in this House – and it's on record – that I think we should get rid of the achievement tests in grade 3.

We talked yesterday about PUF, making sure that we utilize that service, because I think it's a good program, I want to emphasize, in screening kids, so that all kids get it and that we look at that whole elementary area, laying the foundation for the school program and starting to identify where kids may be having some problems and do remedial education in the elementary school. That's what you can do with the dollars.

I even asked the minister last year if he would do a pilot in the province and try that. If you go over and talk to the people across the way here at the university, they're telling me that there are lots of kids leaving school, falling through the cracks because they can't read; they can't do their math.

You know, the other interesting thing about this, Mr. Education Minister, when I was on this panel with the ATA, was the question of – I hope I get this right or maybe Frank will kick me after – achievement testing. We don't do any of that with our aboriginal students. I was told by someone from the Fraser Institute in British Columbia – he said that we don't do anything. B.C. does, evidently, because they're not afraid to try and say: here are the problems with these kids; this is how we want to help them.

I think there are ways in your own system that you can develop some dollars or do some very exciting things. I think you're the kind of man that can do that. So I'd urge you to do that, and the money could be redirected.

We won't get into talking about the communications part of government. There are a lot of dollars there.

I just want to start touching on special needs. I think I'd better do this because I've got a lot of information from superintendents and districts here. Overall, special-needs funding increased. Funding students with a mild to moderate disability or delay increased 3 per cent in '07-08, and funding for students with severe disabilities also went up by 3 per cent. Special-needs education remains critically underfunded, Mr. Minister.

Although I heard from several school jurisdictions that their severe-needs profiles may not reflect their actual need, most feel that, in any case, the decision of Alberta Education to review the integrity of the severe-needs profile assigned to each school jurisdiction will do little to address the underfunding of special-needs education. One school division reported that the revenue it received per student was less than half of the actual division expenditure per student, and one of my school districts in St. Albert – and you know better than I do – has a massive debt in their special education program.

In large part this funding shortfall stems from coding issues, Mr. Minister. We heard from the education community that the criteria of the severe-needs coding is too rigorous. There are a growing number of students with severe needs, but given that they do not satisfy the severe-needs criteria, they are coded as mild and moderate, which has a much lower funding rate. The question is: why does this department not have any funding measure in place to address the needs of students that fall in between the mild category and the very rigorous severe-needs category? That's one question.

Learning disabilities can be magnified if children progress from grades 1 to 12 in the system without appropriate early programming.

For many students one year of ECS program funding is not enough. We talked about it yesterday. Why does this government refuse to extend the program unit funding until at least – and we talked about that – grade 3? You'll probably address that.

Strategy 1.7, which falls under goal 1, high-quality learning opportunities for all, states that the department will "continue to foster a safe and caring school environment through," among other things, "effective behavioural supports": Education business plan, page 104. I have heard from many teachers who teach behavioural improvement classes, BIC, that it's very difficult to secure funding for children that need extra attention. Is there any new money in this budget targeted for BIC children?

Now, the class size initiative you've talked on. Funding for the class size initiative is $194.5 million, an increase of $34.7 million, which is an increase of 17.8 per cent. A Statistics Canada report released in 2004 confirmed that Alberta still has the highest student to teacher ratio. Could you tell me, Mr. Minister, what the ratio was last year and how this funding increase will affect the ratio in '07 and '08? I think it would be interesting to know what that is at elementary, junior high, and senior high. Maybe you could clarify that for us.

ESL. Seven million dollars was added to the early childhood services program to provide children as young as three and a half with English as a Second Language programming in support of early learning opportunities; $2 million was included to provide funding for children and students in private schools who require English as a Second Language programming. I guess the question is: is the minister confident that the budget increases for ESL will be adequate to support the full cost of putting in place an ESL infrastructure? Several school boards have told us that while they appreciate new funding for ESL, their need in this area is not really as large as needs in other areas. Did the decision to make English as a Second Language programming a priority come from school boards? That's another of the questions that we have there.

Now, we've talked about school closures. This came up in question period last week. Today I've learned to say the word properly relative to "Rockyford." I want to make sure that we get this on the record straight. Rockyford is very distressed by the announcement that their K to 9 school would be closing soon. The minister may remember that I raised this question in question period, and it was my fault that he didn't answer, not his fault. Although the minister denied knowledge of potential school closures in east Wheatland earlier this week, I believe he owes it to residents there to clarify his comments. Recently the Golden Hills school division announced that it would be closing the high school located in Hussar. In conjunction with that motion a second subsequent motion was approved to allow the school division to explore the option of a single, consolidated school to serve the east Wheatland sector. Is the minister aware of these motions? Probably he is by now. Certainly, I am sure he is right on top of it.

The second motion clearly demonstrates that the K to 9 school in Rockyford is at heightened risk of closure, as at three other east Wheatland schools. This motion also demonstrates that the minister is very aware that Rockyford school is facing a potential closure. At the meeting where the motion was adopted, Mrs. Christene Howard, chair, told the board that she had previously advised Hon. Ron Liepert, the Minister of Education, that the board would possibly be considering a second motion. Even better, the minister indicated to Mrs. Howard that he would support the board's request should one be forthcoming. Well, given all that, given that the minister is now clear where the Rockyford school is facing a potential school closure, can he please answer these questions from the village of Rockyford and the residents of east Wheatland? Maybe he can tell us today where they stand because they've asked us.

Schools are crucial to the health of communities everywhere, and this is especially true in rural areas. Strategic priority 8 in the Department of Education's business plan commits this government to keeping schools in places where people live and learn, business plan, page 103. Recent news of four potential school closures in rural areas of east Wheatland demonstrate that this government needs to look at this question.

The Chair: Just one more reminder, hon. member. You can't refer to members by their proper names.

Mr. Flaherty: Yeah. I got excited, you know. It's been a long day. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm learning, and you're doing a good job of helping. I'm in the disability class.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Let me deal first with the fascination the member has with east Wheatland. I'll try and fill in some of the blanks. The Golden Hills school division met with myself and the MLA for the area, who happens to be the Minister of Finance. They've got a unique situation in east Wheatland, and that is that, frankly, all of their schools are not in good shape. There may be one of them that is in pretty good shape, and I think it's Rockyford actually.

The decision to close the Hussar high school program was proposed by the board, and it was done for the right reasons. Hussar is 25 miles from Drumheller. We are spending a significant amount of money on modernization of the Drumheller high school as we speak. The decision was made that the Hussar program could be transferred to Drumheller. However, in meeting with the MLA for the area and the school division, we decided that at some point in time in the not-too-distant future a couple of their schools in that area needed to be replaced. So until we can get our capital planning finalized, we agreed that we would not make any changes in the east Wheatland area.

There is no intention to close the Rockyford school. Down the road there may be consolidation if the board determines that that area would be better served by one new school for four communities. That will be their decision. But there is no imminent closure of the Rockyford school. The decision to not hold high school classes at Hussar this fall has been put on hold. In essence, going into the 2007-2008 school year, nothing will change in east Wheatland, so you can relax on that one.

The member raised the issue around grade 3 achievement tests. I know that this is a discussion point that has gone back and forth a number of times, and there are certain stakeholders in the education system who don't happen to agree with achievement tests, period. We fundamentally believe that the achievement testing that we've done gives us a baseline so that we can determine how well our students are performing.

The thing about the grade 3 level achievement testing is that it also helps us identify some of those very specific situations that the member refers to around identifying early learning difficulties. It may seem like an easy thing to do and would free up a tremendous amount of money. In essence, it wouldn't free up very much money, maybe a couple of million bucks, but what it would do is it would not allow us to actually test students until grade 6. The member himself has mentioned on several occasions that in order to ensure that these students are properly screened and identified, that is one method of doing it, through grade 3 achievement testing.

A number of comments around special needs and funding for special needs. It's always an issue that you could always do more on. There's no question about it. I know that I have nothing but the greatest of respect for the teachers and the aides who work with special-needs students on a daily basis in schools. They really are special people. It would be tremendous if we could commit, you know, significantly more money to special needs and early learning identification.

We took a look at a number of areas in this year's budget. We were told in many cases by the local school districts that their greatest challenge is identifying the early learning difficulties in students who don't speak English as a first language. That was one of the reasons we focused the majority of our funds on combining the early learning difficulties with English as a Second Language.

One other thing. The member was quoting some Stats Canada statistics relative to class size initiatives, and I believe the Stats Canada data that the member was using is quite outdated. First of all, I think it would make the most sense, rather than to use statistics from somewhere else, to take the recommendations from the Commission on Learning and say: let's match up and see how we're doing. So let's do that. Keep in mind that this is only year 3. We have implemented the recommendations of the Learning Commission in three years when it was recommended that it be done in five.

So guidelines that were proposed by the Commission on Learning for grade 10 plus – I may be off by one here; hopefully, not more than that – were 28. We're averaging 25. For grades 7 to 9 the guidelines recommended by the Learning Commission were 25; we're averaging 23. For grades 4 to 6 the recommendations were 20, and that's exactly where we are on average: 20. Now, as I mentioned earlier, the one area that we have not managed to meet the recommendations is in K to 3. The Learning Commission recommendations were 17, and we're somewhere in the range of 18 to 19.

As I said earlier, it's those kinds of tweaking that we need to do to ensure that over the course of the next year to two years we get those numbers totally in line with the recommendations. Keep in mind that these are averages. There are going to be situations that evolve. Whether they're because of infrastructure inability to meet certain numbers or maybe even the availability of teachers, there may be some of these on occasion where you'll get a particular class that doesn't quite meet the guideline. But on average those are the numbers.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I would like in the time remaining to have a discussion with the hon. minister regarding the Auditor General's recommendations for the Education department. The Auditor General had a good look at the Department of Education in his annual report going back to 2005-2006, and when we discuss this budget year, we have to ensure that the department – and I'm certain they are – is taking a keen interest in the Auditor General's remarks and his recommendations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, recommendation 25 of the AG's report talks about an improved school budgeting process. To do this, they would like to see funding information as soon as it is available to ensure that school boards can prepare their budgets, grants, new funding. We always hear that from respective school boards across the province. The Auditor General is also recommending that we require school boards to use realistic assumptions for planned activities, costs to be disclosed to trustees and the ministry. The recommendation also includes a suggestion that there be established a date for the school boards to turn in an approved revised budget with updated enrolment and results information and reassess when and how the ministry should act to prevent school boards from incurring an accumulated deficit position.

Certainly, in Public Accounts we had a very frank and robust discussion about which school boards had deficits and which ones did not. Some taxpayers are quite surprised when they find out that school boards have deficits and are carrying debt. They say: oh, but we thought the province was debt free. Unfortunately, that's not true. Not only do we have a debt carried by many of the boards, but in some cases it's a significant amount of money.

Now, the ministry is not providing, in our view, adequate guidance to school boards and trustees regarding interim financial statements to ensure that school boards fulfill their financial monitoring responsibilities. This can lead to poor financial decisions that affect the quality of public education. That being said, in light of some of the announcements in the last year where there was significant – I believe the same money was spent twice in the Edmonton separate school system. It was in the millions of dollars. I don't think we can blame it on this department, Mr. Chairman. It would be totally unfair. I think if there's a fault, it would lie with the auditing processes of the individual respective school boards. How this went on for two years if not three years is beyond me, but it did. The school board is making every effort to correct it.

When we look at the Auditor General's report, I don't think we can find fault with the department on some of these matters. Now, there certainly are differences in budgeting timelines between the ministry and the school boards, and this can lead to inaccurate or incomplete information being submitted by the boards. There's no doubt about that. School boards need to be sure of their budgets because of staffing completion by May. The ministry can improve this by providing early feedback on the feasibility of the budget submitted and information on grants as soon as it is available. The Auditor General specifically suggests providing assessments of school board budgets by February rather than May.

Again, out of the 75 school jurisdictions, Mr. Chairman, 28 school boards and two charter schools had annual operating deficits. Now, four school jurisdictions – that's up from three – had accumulated operating deficits as of August 31 of this year. Annual deficits are considered acceptable by the ministry. We have to have a good look at that now.

Also with this department, you know, we're talking in this budget about the price of prosperity. We look at the program spending on kindergarten through to grade 12, and we look at the grants for school capital projects. They'll reach $5.6 billion. It's a lot of money.

Earlier today it was humbling to sit in here, Mr. Chairman, and see the teenagers from an inner-city high school coming in here, looking down on the floor of the Assembly, and think that some of those students may be hungry in school or before or after school through no fault of their own. We have an obligation and a duty to do something about that. We look at this enormous sum of money, well over $5 billion, and I'm surprised that we can't find money to adequately fund on a yearly basis some lunch programs, again in the central areas of Edmonton, and I would assume that the same issue is occurring in Calgary.

We shouldn't have to point out, Mr. Chairman, the lavish grants that this government provides through the lottery funding to golf courses. Golf courses all over the province are using this money for everything from debt reduction to improving the paths to purchasing new irrigation equipment to purchasing golf carts. It is quite ironic that if you look through the public accounts, you see this long list of grants to various golf courses. Some of these golf courses even charge membership fees in the thousands of dollars. You look at that and then you meet with officials who don't have enough money in their budgets. They're not asking for a lot. They're asking for less than $2 per day per student to provide a hot lunch program.

These programs are really needed in some areas, Mr. Chairman, some areas more than others, and there are also other programs, I think, that we should have a second look at when we're spending our money and perhaps fund them so that the operators of these programs know that they can rely on this minister. In September they know that the funding is going to be there.

Another program would be for early kindergarten for some inner-city children. It makes a real difference for them when they get into kindergarten and go on through the elementary school system and get a good, solid foundation in the elementary school system to build an economic base for the rest of their life through a sound education. You know, we talk about the dollars, but we've got to be very careful about how we spend them and where we spend them.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I would urge the minister and his staff and all members of the government to take a second look. Not only is it the Department of Education; it's also the minister of tourism, who is the minister in charge of lottery grants these days. If we can afford to be so generous to these golf courses for debt reduction, surely we can provide programs for young people residing in the inner cities of Edmonton and Calgary and give them help in getting a good, solid foundation in the elementary school system.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, as we've become accustomed to in this House, it's always interesting to listen to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar sort of cover the waterfront and link everything together. Whether it makes any sense or not, I'm not sure sometimes. I have no idea what he's talking about when he's talking about us funding golf courses. I can guarantee you that out of our budget we don't fund any golf courses, so he would have to take that up with the minister of tourism and parks when his budget comes before the House.

The member mentioned the school lunch program, and as I pointed out in question period today, 48 of 62 school boards offer some form of school lunch program. I guess it really comes down to the debate about: what is the responsibility of parents to children, and what is the responsibility of the state to children? I think we have a very solid Department of Children's Services. If in need, a child receives the attention and care that it needs. We have the Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry that also encompasses what used to be known as manpower and human resources. If someone is destitute enough that their children are going to school hungry, I'm sure there is a mechanism whereby there are other departments that can assist. But it is not the responsibility of this department to feed, shelter, clothe, and raise the children of Alberta. It is our job to educate the children of Alberta. I don't know how you institute a province-wide hot lunch program without feeding every kid. [interjection] Well, we are starting. Forty-eight out of 62 schools boards are already doing it. So why would we then go in and say: well, for the other 14 that aren't, we're going to come and provide free meals.

I get back to what I suggested earlier, that it's great to make these suggestions about how to spend more money, but I still haven't heard very many good ideas other than some cockamamie idea about golf courses that we're funding. I am not going to stand here and authorize that there's any authenticity to that claim. But we'll see.

Mr. MacDonald: I'll bring you the information.

Mr. Liepert: Yeah, I would like to see it.

The hon. member started off his comments about the Auditor General's report, and earlier in the debate we did cover that off. I met with the Auditor General early in the new year. We went over his concerns in his report as it applied to Education, and I believe that he was quite satisfied that going forward we should have no difficulty meeting some of his concerns. The major one revolves around when we actually deliver a budget. As we well know, this year our budget was significantly later than normal due to a whole bunch of things that happened last fall and earlier this year. The member would be aware that we have reformed the rules of the House, whereby under the new rules the budget will be presented on the third Thursday of February every year, and I see no reason why that budget presentation on a consistent basis wouldn't meet the concerns that were expressed by the Auditor General.

The member talked about school board debt and annual operating deficits. Again, we dealt with that question in question period a few weeks ago. It is correct that some school boards in the province now are running an annual operating deficit, but they in many cases, most cases in fact, have an accumulated surplus. In order for them to access that accumulated surplus, you have to run an annual deficit, or there's just no ability to access that accumulated surplus. As I commented earlier, I don't believe the taxpayers of Alberta want us to continue to see school boards build accumulated surpluses. It doesn't make any sense. I think we'll be dealing with that over the course of the next year or two.

I believe that answers the questions.

The Chair: Hon. members, there's about two minutes before the next item. Did you want to take the time for Education?

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to thank the hon. minister for the exchange that we had this afternoon and thank his staff. If he would take me to lunch some day with that expense account he has, maybe he and I could redesign the system in such a way that I could show him where he could do some wonderful things and still save some money right within his own budget. In fact, I had a section that I was just going to talk here about, his communications department, but we won't have time for that.

On a serious note, thank you very much. I appreciate it. Have a good two or three days with your family. I'll stop right now.

Thank you.

The Chair: Did the hon. minister wish to respond quickly?

Mr. Liepert: No.

The Chair: The time has elapsed for the discussion on the Department of Education. We will now start with the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, discussing the budget estimates. I will ask the hon. minister to begin.

Agriculture and Food

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, and good afternoon, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak today about the government's commitment to Alberta's agriculture and food industry and talk about the 2007-08 Agriculture and Food budget. Five months into my job as Ag and Food minister I can certainly say that the success of this ministry is due to the high calibre of staff that we have, who show real commitment and passion for the industry here.

Joining me here today are Rory Campbell, my deputy minister; Faye Rault, assistant deputy minister, organizational effectiveness and rural services; Jim Carter, our senior financial officer from Alberta Ag and Food; and Brad Klak, president and managing director of Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. Also, touring in the building here somewhere, keeping an eye on us, are Brian Rhiness, assistant deputy minister, industry development; Colin Jeffares, assistant deputy minister, planning and competitiveness; John Donner, assistant deputy minister, environment and food safety; Dr. Krish Krishnaswamy, vice-president, finance at AFSC; Jim Kiss, the Farmers' Advocate; Donna Babchishin, director of communications; and last but not least is my executive assistant, Michael Norris.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture has been at the centre of Alberta's history for a very long time. Homesteaders brought a strong work ethic, a sense of adventure, and a spirit of community to this province. This heritage is still part of our rural communities today. The agriculture and food industry is critical to maintaining diversity and resilience in the Alberta economy. With $7.81 billion in farm cash receipts in 2006 Alberta is the second largest agricultural producing province in Canada, and the $9.6 billion food and beverage industry generates 27,000 jobs in Alberta.

Today's farmers and producers still work the land to grow crops and raise the livestock that fill our food basket. On top of that, today we also see that sense of adventure in innovative entrepreneurs who are building our value-added sector. The producers will always be the heart of our sector, and they will continue to drive our reputation for the quality made-in-Alberta product that is needed for our value-added sector. Together with the growing value-added sector and so many new ventures, we have a recipe for success. This formula has resulted in tremendous growth over the years. In 2006 our agriculture and food industry generated $5.8 billion in international exports, roughly one-fifth of the nation's agrifood products.

Like the rest of Alberta we know that the agriculture and food industry holds even greater potential, and we are focused on the future. This government is committed to ensuring that our agriculture and food industry continues to grow and thrive. Our current business plan takes into consideration the challenges facing our industry today and outlines how we're working with industry to take advantage of tomorrow's opportunities.

Our current goals, core business, and strategies support the mandate set out by our Premier, but as a ministry we recognize that we are part of a bigger picture. Our objectives line up with the government-wide priorities set out by our new Premier. These priorities are reflected in our mission of enabling growth of a globally competitive, sustainable agriculture and food industry through essential policy, legislation, information, and services. Madam Chairman, that mission lines up with our ministry's vision of growing Alberta farms, processors, and all other agriculture businesses in support of a vibrant rural Alberta.

The work of the Ag and Food ministry directly or indirectly supports all the Premier's priorities. In particular, our programs are designed to manage growth, build a stronger Alberta, and improve our quality of life. We are strategically linked to the government of Alberta business plan, and we will continue to contribute to the goal of having a prosperous Alberta economy by enhancing industry competitiveness and growth.

Key initiatives such as the agriculture growth strategy and the agri-environment strategy will help provide direction. This also contributes to the goal of managing growth pressures. Managing growth pressures means bringing challenges with opportunities, and that's something we do a lot of in the ag industry. We have been responding to some particular food safety issues, labour needs, and market influences. For example, BSE and several years of low commodity prices have presented some ongoing problems for our producers. However, in resolving issues, we have found ways to strengthen our industry, create greater stability, and capture untapped potential.

The Premier's mandate to me for the Ministry of Ag and Food builds on this desire to turn challenges into opportunities. I mentioned earlier that our mission statement speaks to sustainability and provided some examples. We are committed to building on the existing research as we lay the groundwork for an institute that would help us turn our concern for the environment into market opportunities. We already know that Alberta's farmers are good stewards of the land, so this is a natural fit for an industry that earns a living in partnership with Mother Nature.

Another mandate is to develop a transition program for agriculture to work within the boundaries of any World Trade Organization agreements. This work will be critical to our ability to compete internationally.

The success of our farmers also depends on ensuring that they have access to capital for their business. The Premier has asked that we work with our partners to improve agricultural financial services.

Madam Chairman, as a ministry we have been working diligently to address all these mandates, and we continue to move in the right direction. We need to work with our industry to ensure that they're ahead of the game and remain strong competitors in the changing global market. It is very clear how these mandates from the Premier fit with our three core business areas: facilitate sustainable industry growth, support and strengthen rural sustainability, and strengthen business risk management.

Within those areas we have identified the following priorities: developing traceability systems, which will help mitigate BSE risks and other food safety concerns; addressing labour shortages through a workforce strategy; expanding the value-added sector by capitalizing on innovation and untapped markets; and responding to evolving consumer interests as well as shaping and supporting our overall competitiveness.

At this point I'd like to talk about some of the specific areas of our budget that will help achieve these priorities. The total Agriculture and Food budget for 2007-2008 is $1.026 billion. Together the ministry's leadership and spending reflect our support and commitment to the province's agriculture and food industry.

Our funding commitments overall have not changed dramatically, but I'd like to highlight some new funding. We have provided $3.6 million in new funding to support our ministry's priority to enhance food chain traceability programs. This funding along with continued assistance to help industry respond to the enhanced feed ban will help keep us competitive. We have also allocated $1.1 million to new workforce strategy funding. Alberta experienced extraordinary growth in 2006, but as you know, there is a price for this prosperity. Like other areas agriculture has experienced labour shortages. This funding will help address this impact on our success.

We have all seen some increases in funding to ongoing programs. We are directing $5.7 million towards the Canada-Alberta farm water program. That's an increase of $4.3 million. The extra funding will help farmers develop projects that promote efficient use and conservation of water in their farming operations.

That highlights some of our major programs provided for in this budget and those that have seen increases. I'd also like to point out that many of our programs are demand driven and tied to our statutory commitments. We are influenced by what happens outside our provincial borders. Our needs vary from year to year. That's why you'll see some areas of funding go up or down slightly from year to year as we adjust to target resources where and when they are needed.

Our loan-based programs provide lending that is specific to agriculture at all levels, from value-added to stock start-up primary production. As I'm sure you're aware, our farmers routinely face some hefty cost pressures, such as fuel and fertilizer prices, which are dictated by the world market.

Madam Chairman, I quite look forward to continuing the discussion as we go on.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I have first on my list the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I again appreciate the opportunity to discuss the Agriculture and Food budget this afternoon. I'm still having difficulty getting around the fact that development is not at the end of this, and I think it was a mistake. I don't know what sort of politics were played there, but I still think of agriculture, food, and rural development together, and I hope that at some point the hon. minister gets rural development back where it belongs: in his department.

Now, I would like to first talk about the budget on page 46, the farm fuel distribution allowance. That's expense element 2.0.6. It's estimated to be 33 and a half million dollars. If one goes back 10 years, when the current Premier was minister of agriculture, the farm fuel distribution allowance was $30,300,000. Actually, it was overexpended in that year, when the current Premier was minister of agriculture, by a little over $2 million. So when you add that farm fuel allowance amount, $32,427,000, roughly 10 years ago, to what we are today requesting in the budget, it's basically the same.

My first questions would be regarding the Auditor General's report. The Auditor General had a lot to say about how the farm fuel benefit program is working or not working in the department. I consider this to be scandalous over the last 10 years. The minister has to accept responsibility for all the inactivity that has gone on with the series of ministers in there over the last 10 years. The Alberta farm fuel benefit program is designed to offer fuel to Alberta farmers at prices competitive with those paid by farmers in other parts of North America, according to the Auditor General in his report, and there are 60,000 individuals registered in the program.

The Auditor goes on to state that the Fuel Tax Act and the fuel tax regulations authorize the program, which has two parts. It has an allowance part and a fuel tax exemption part. The allowance part of this benefit is costing us $34 million. That's an annual direct cost, which I referred to, and we also have this fuel tax exemption for another $72 million. This is an exemption that allows farmers to buy marked diesel fuel and gasoline without paying the provincial fuel tax of 9 cents a litre. The allowance gives you 6 cents a litre off the cost of diesel fuel. So in some cases here there is a significant saving, and there should be. Farmers are facing a lot of input costs these days.

No one in the province would have a problem, I don't think, with this farm fuel benefit allowance and the intent of the program, but when you consider that the Auditor General states that there are 60,000 individuals registered in the program, how does the program work when Stats Canada, in data that were released yesterday, indicates that the total number of farms in this province is only 49,431? We've got 60,000 people on the books with these cards to get fuel reductions, and there are only 49,000 farms.

That's not all, Madam Chairman. The Auditor General goes on about the eligibility criteria of these programs and indicates: anyone who has been "actively involved in farming in Alberta, with gross annual farm income of at least $10,000." That's one of the criteria to be eligible. Now, the Stats Canada information that was provided yesterday – and I got it from the library today – indicates that there are a number of farms in Alberta where the total gross farm receipts are under 10 grand. So let's have a look at this. The total number of farms is 9,791 where the gross income is less than 10 grand. I have a lot of questions regarding these 60,000 individuals who are packing these cards in their pockets and how they're being used.

I think this government and this department along with the Department of Finance, Mr. Chairman, have failed the taxpayers miserably in the administration of this program. Is the Stats Canada data wrong? How on earth does this work? Here's what the Auditor General found in his audit regarding this program.

The Department does not verify the information in application forms before issuing a certificate. Nor does it have any other processes to ensure that only eligible individuals get certificates – or to identify people who become ineligible.

The Auditor General goes on to say that the renewal process has not been completed since 1997, when the current Premier was in charge of the entire department.

Program application forms state that a registration renewal is completed every three years and registrants must submit confirmation of their continued program eligibility then. However, the Department has not completed a renewal process or requested confirmation of eligibility from registrants since 1997. The Farm Fuel Regulation gives the Minister authority to extend the expiry date on certificates. This is what the Department has done for the past nine years – instead of a renewal.

This is from the Auditor General.

This total program costs us $109 million. In 2005-06 the entire amount collected in gas tax in this province was $664 million, and it's anticipated, Mr. Chairman, now that we are going to collect $720 million in gas tax. Now, this amount that we're giving back in these programs through these 60,000 cards is close to 15 per cent of what we're collecting in total gasoline or in fuel tax according to the annual report.

I have a number of questions now. Is the Minister of Agriculture and Food registered in the Alberta farm fuel benefit program? Why does this department not verify the information in application forms before issuing a certificate? Why does the department not have any other processes to ensure that only eligible individuals get certificates for what could amount to in some cases up to a 15-cent a litre break? I'm not saying that it happens in all cases. It could be 6 cents, it could be 9 cents, but whenever you look at the millions of dollars here, this is significant. Why is there no process to identify people who become ineligible? Why has the department not completed a renewal process? Why has the department not required confirmation of eligibility from registrants since 1997, when the current Premier was minister? Why has the department extended the expiry date on certificates?

We look at this and we look at the Auditor General's report, and we see that in 2006 there were 60,000 registered, packing these cards around in the province of Alberta. Statistics Canada the 2006 Census of Agriculture indicates that there are 49,431 total farms in Alberta. If we do a little bit of math on this, Mr. Chairman, we find out that on average these 60,000 individuals would get $1,766 in savings every year per cardholder. That's a lot of money. That's $33.80 a week if we wanted to look at it that way. If 10,000 of these extra cardholders should have been deemed ineligible, that's over $17 million in one fiscal year that went out in unauthorized use. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, a long time to ask two questions, but I appreciate where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is coming from.

I'll talk a little bit about rural development. Yes, we certainly have made some changes, and I was probably part of some of the discussions along the way. Of course, at one time we had moved ag societies, we'd moved 4-H and a few of the others and, of course, quickly realized, partially from the push back we got from the people out there, that they certainly belonged with agriculture, and they indeed came back to agriculture.

Rural development, I guess, hon. member, is a bit of a cat of its own. Yeah, it belongs with agriculture, but rural development certainly is more than agriculture. I know it's now in the camp of the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. They have a special board that looks after administering the finances because I think we sent about seven people and a hundred million dollars over there. It's now in their camp, but I think that probably we still have that relationship where we discuss, you know, what we feel belongs with rural development, as do the other ministries as well. The truth of the matter is, I guess, that rural development is more than agriculture, so maybe it'll come back someday. We don't know that. However, it's where it's at now, and I think probably it will work out all right.

You know, government understands that our rural communities have unique needs, so we have to take a co-ordinated approach to economic growth, probably, and quality of life and infrastructure, health, learning, and skill development. It's been moved over there. It's going to stay there for a while, and we'll see how it goes. I guess that if agriculture feels that it's definitely in the wrong spot, we'll make our thoughts known in the process.

Farm fuel. It doesn't surprise me, hon. member, that you probably brought this up. In fact, I thought you would probably ask me in question period about this earlier in the game because of the fact that certainly the Auditor General has flagged this as something we probably should be dealing with and reviewing. That process, I think we probably might say, internally is happening, and desk audits are being completed as we go along. Certainly, we will have to take it further than that, you know.

A lot of this goes back to the crisis, I guess, we were in with the BSE and the drought that we were having, where we were absolutely almost devastated in the farming community in either the grains and oil seeds or the livestock side. It's kind of tough to get out there and really chop at that particular stage of the game. I know that's not an excuse. You indicate how many people probably are, you know, using this that don't qualify, and no doubt that's what we have to look into. That's what we have to ascertain. It's really difficult, and I know that the $10,000 limit is, as you say, what they're trying to use.

In farming today it seems that we have the great, large farms with hundreds of thousands or indeed millions of dollars' worth of income, or we have the people that are in the niche markets now, in organic farming perhaps and what not, and a lot of off-farm work. Perhaps there are some wives or parts of the family doing this that probably don't fall below that $10,000 range that you're talking about. Does the wife qualify to drive her half-ton to town or not? These are the types of things that we probably have to look at.

Am I a user of farm marked fuel? Yes, I am. On the weekend I do go home, and I slog around in the corrals. I pick up the list my son has left me: "Hey, you're in the cattle business with me. You better get to work." So I have to drive my half-ton. I honestly feel that I qualify driving my half-ton around with marked fuel in it.

These are some of the issues, I guess. Certainly, you know, like I said, reducing access to benefits while industry is recovering would almost be impossible, but we will have to go that route. The Auditor General has directed us, so we will.

There are renewals called for every four years. I think that probably the first renewal was called for at the time of the first severe drought that we had out there. I can see what happened. I wasn't there, but I can see, you know. I can get some logic to what happened.

I guess I'll go back a little bit to: who qualifies? Certainly, we know there are some out there that probably don't qualify, and that's just the nature of the beast. Also, the fuel distributors are somewhat under the gun on this in that they're supposed to keep an eye on what's happening, and indeed they do. We do sign – I don't know if we've done it for a while – a declaration, you know, so it's not just willy-nilly. You put your name on the line, and there can be repercussions if you get caught, other than the purple gas man sticking his little dipstick in your tank and checking, which, by the way, they don't do a whole lot of anymore. That probably compounds the problem as well. Having said that, I don't know if I've particularly answered your questions on that, but I certainly understand where you're coming from with the questions.

One of the other issues we want to talk about: on a particular farm more than one operator on that farm can qualify. They can't use the same fuel, but they can qualify because they are using it. So that skews the numbers a little bit when you try and justify, you know, a farm or how many farms are out there. There could be, particularly on a corporate farm, I guess, three or four operators that could qualify under the same scenario. Even Stats Canada tells us that we have more operators, 71,000, than farms, 49,000, which I think doesn't quite line up, probably, with the numbers that you have because you've got the most recent ones. I think you've probably picked off the ones that came out yesterday. I think it was yesterday.

Mr. MacDonald: I'd been waiting, yes.

Mr. Groeneveld: Yes. Right. Exactly.

We have started the renewal process in-house, and we definitely will take it to the next step. To be honest with you, the Auditor General probably put his finger on a few other things that we were doing that we felt maybe were a little bit more important. We have dealt with some of those others, and we're in that process.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that answers the hon. member's questions. He's probably got a few more tucked away in there someplace.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I appreciate the responses from the hon. minister.

Certainly, I don't think we can relate this program to BSE or any of the other farm issues that we've dealt with over the last five years. I was waiting. I had read the report last fall, and I saw that 60,000 number, 60,000 individuals that had these cards, and I saw the fact that in 2001 we had roughly 53,000 farms. You can see that going down since 1976, I think, or 1977. You know, the hon. minister is absolutely right. There are less farms, and they seem to be getting bigger. But I was waiting. The librarians told me that this information would be available on May 16, and sure enough it was.

But there's no excuse for this. If these people are not farming, they should not be packing these cards around in their pockets getting a fuel break. It has nothing to do with the BSE crisis or any other issue that farmers faced. This is a simple case of a government dropping the ball not only for one year but for 10 years. I have sympathy for the hon. minister. He's been in this department for less than a year, but it's his predecessors that should be in here answering the questions on this because they did nothing. They did absolutely nothing to ensure that these programs were accurate.

Well, in the Stats Canada information the total number of farms in Alberta is 49,431, but over half the farms are sole proprietorships, so there should be only one individual with one of these cards. That's another point that I would like to make: 27,815 of our farms are sole proprietorships. There are another roughly 14,000 partnerships with and without a written agreement. There are 6,700 family corporations. The hon. minister is stating that, well, there could be more than one card with those outfits. You know, that's understandable, but the fact is that this doesn't add up. We've got 60,000 cards running around, and it's costing us megabucks. It's costing us year after year, in my opinion, a lot of money. If only 10,000 of these people were ineligible for one year and if we're going to average this, it means that the government is losing $17 million. That's in one year, and that's if only 10,000 of them are ineligible.

Mr. Chairman, it's scandalous, and alarm bells should have gone off in this department with the overexpenditure on the farm fuel allowance in 1998, in the year ending March 31, 1998, when the Premier was the minister of agriculture. That's when people should have started paying attention to this. Obviously they did not because as the Auditor General points out, the department has not completed a renewal process or requested confirmation of eligibility from registrants since 1997. It's just a rubber stamp. I'm sorry, hon. minister; that is simply not good enough.

Now, what is the minister willing to do to investigate the abuse of this program over the past 10 years while the government of Alberta simply ignored its responsibility, in my opinion, to monitor? Mr. Chairman, I can only ask: what other programs under this ministry have gone unmonitored for so long? How does the hon. minister explain this department's failure to protect millions of dollars in taxpayer money over this time period? It's not unreasonable to ask – I don't know if there would be a privacy issue here – will the department produce a list of all the certificate holders? Surely, someone must know who the beneficiaries of this program are. Maybe there are 15,000 cards that are in the back of the wallet and never been used, and maybe others are racking up $8,000 and $9,000 in fuel savings in their operations in a year. Maybe it's all valid; maybe it's not. But who are all these people with these cards?

Alberta consumers right now, just before this long weekend, depending on which area of the province they're in are looking at well over $1.10, $1.12, $1.14 a litre. And they're pulling up to the pump paying 9 cents a litre less for their gasoline. Taxpayers would love a break like this. They'd love to be able to whip out one of these cards. I'm sure if people had known that this program was not monitored – who knows? – the odd person may have applied for a card, but they didn't. This is completely unacceptable by this government that prides itself on fiscal management. Well, this is yet another example. It has failed. It has failed, Mr. Chairman.

Albertans will be outraged to hear that we've got this poorly administered program that's costing us millions and millions of dollars. The government has done nothing about it. Yet a consumer will roll up – hopefully, they won't have to push their car – to the pump this weekend and put $50 or $60 in it to top it up, and they'll pay the bill. They get no help. They get no help. This program should be set up for farmers and farmers only and farmers that need it. I can only imagine what the bill has been since 1997 for people who are ineligible for these amounts. Now, when we look at the number of farms as reported by Stats Canada, there certainly have to be a lot of ineligible cardholders who are fleecing the taxpayer.

Mr. Chairman, hopefully, we're going to get some answers. I don't know how this is going to be investigated. I can see where the department has said that it accepted the Auditor General's recommendations in regard to this matter and plans and processes are well under way. This is good, but does that mean that the department is simply ignoring the fact that abuses may have been happening over the past 10 years? Are we just going to forget about this, hope that frustrated consumers forget about this, hope that taxpayers forget about this?

I just can't understand how this was allowed to continue to happen as the Auditor General has pointed out in his report. There are too many implications to this. Tax dollars, in my opinion, are being wasted, and I think we've got to have an immediate action plan from the government on this. Whoever was responsible for this omission – and it's not this minister; it's previous ministers – has to be held accountable. They have to explain why there is this complete lack of control over this program. Someone must have known. Someone must have known because in 2001 there were 53,652 farms registered by Stats Canada, yet this program just seemed to breeze through every year. The Legislative Assembly gave the money, Alberta Finance administered some of this, and the taxpayers year after year have lost millions and millions of dollars. Again, Mr. Chairman, it's scandalous. There's only one way to describe this.

Mr. Dunford: An outrage.

Mr. MacDonald: Taxpayers will be outraged, hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Chairman, every farmer in Alberta is not a crook.

Mr. Cardinal: That's what the Liberals think.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, obviously.

Mr. MacDonald: No. We're not saying that, and you know it.

Mr. Groeneveld: I think you kind of give that impression when you start talking about millions and millions of dollars, you know. How do you know that particular figure?

Mr. Chairman, it takes resources to conduct an audit. We know that, so that's part of where we're at. We agree that the issue has to be addressed. You know, I can only assume in answering your questions where you kind of lay the blame on the previous ministers that they probably figured it was maybe better to focus our energies on dealing with the response to the drought and the BSE that was out there. I'm not going to make an excuse for anyone, but I know that life was not a lot of fun out there in the last few years. In fact, it's not all a bed of roses yet, or probably the hon. chairman and myself wouldn't be sitting in this House if it was so rosy out there. I don't know. That's only an assumption.

I would also add that the Auditor General reported that the minister did an outstanding job of administering the drought and BSE progress. We sent out $1.7 billion worth of support in that process. Perhaps the hon. member disagrees, but the Auditor General has reviewed our process and issued his opinion. I already indicated that we are going to go ahead; we're going to look into this. We don't do that overnight. We cannot under the FOIP rules, of course, list the names of the people that use the marked fuels.

You keep talking about cars, and I think that if you go out into rural Alberta and you start looking around and you see the amount of tractors out there that use marked fuels and half-tons that legitimately use marked fuels, I think that probably millions and millions of dollars being misdirected is a stretch. At least, I certainly hope it is. However, we are going to deal with this in the future. You know, we're not ignoring anyone in the process. The Auditor General has brought this up; we know in our department that we're going to deal with this.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member talks about the Statistics Canada release that came out yesterday, you know, and just to mention a few things that have happened on the agricultural side of the industry. This consensus provides a profile of Canadian agricultural operation information on the number of farms, the crops that are out there, how the land is being used. They talk a little bit about the land management practices, which, of course, is something that we're dealing with very much now with SRD and their land-use framework. They talk about the livestock and poultry industry, which as the hon. member said: BSE, drought that's no reason to do what we did. It's not a pretty picture out there yet, particularly, and I think the hon. member has to understand that.

They talk about farm machinery: what's happened out in farm machinery where farmers are now paying up to $400,000 for a combine or $400,000 for a tractor, of what that's doing to the farm economy out there and how, of course, we see fewer farmers out there. But that doesn't mean that they're all corporate farms. In my own instance, my son and I run a corporate farm for various reasons, but it's still what I consider very much a family farm. Statistics can be a tad misleading on quite a bit of those issues.

They talk about the gross farm receipts, which is kind of interesting. In Alberta here they actually went up. So that part is encouraging, I guess you might say. Maybe there's a little bit of light at the end of the tunnel.

You know, there are profiles on farm operators, and they talk about one other issue that we hear from the opposition from time to time: farm-related injuries. That's a statistic that we in Alberta are not happy with. I think we're .4 of 1 per cent higher than the national average. I guess that we work on that .4 or try to get that down, but as you've heard us say many times in the process: one farm injury or one farm death is too many. I think these are the type of issues that we have to look at these statistics and come back and say: "Hey. We have to deal with these in a prudent manner as well because we can't always look at the dollars and cents sign that is out there."

Of course, as I said, the major highlight from the statistics was the decline of farms in Canada. Nationally our numbers fell 7 per cent from 2001, to 229,373 farms. This trend, you know, was evident here in Alberta as the number of farms decreased by 7.9 per cent since 2001, to just under 50,000 farms. Despite this drop, Mr. Chairman, Alberta still has the second-largest number of farms among all Canadian provinces. As well, farm size in terms of the area has increased since 2001. The shrinking farm numbers should not be mistaken as the death of the family farm because as people move into corporate farms, as I said before, we are still family farms. Indeed, yes, we have some large corporate farms out there. But when we look at Alberta, we have quite a few of the Hutterite brethren farms out there, which are corporate family farms, and you certainly can't say they're not a family-run organization. There are some pretty big corporate farms out there that way.

Alberta Ag and Food helps maintain and grow family farms through a number of different programs. It probably should be noted that with newer technologies certainly more people can farm more land. I'll just go back to my own situation where my son does the grain farming and we work together on the cattle. When I'm up here, he gets up in the morning. He doesn't get up, like you might indicate, at 5 o'clock in the morning to milk the cows because those days are long gone, but he gets up at a reasonable time in the morning. He feeds 200 cows, and if he doesn't seed 200 to 250 acres a day, he figures he's had a pretty bad day. The life has changed out there so much, and it's changing ever so quickly as we move along in the last couple of years. Really, it results in, you know, fewer farmers running the farms. It's not all gloom and doom, I guess.

5:30

The consensus also noted that farmer input prices increased 9.6 per cent since 2001 – and that's a concern – while the prices received for their products dropped 2.6 per cent. Of course, the people at AFSC certainly see that happening as they go through the various programs that we have. I think that probably in Alberta we are so much farther ahead of the other provinces because of the fact that the people at AFSC come up with the Alberta-only programs to add to that. In Alberta here we don't like what's happening, but we're probably still head and shoulders above where the other provinces are going. Certainly, my department is concerned about the increase in input costs and the decreased prices recovered for the products. We've known all along that the input costs are rising, and it's not just the farming sector.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I have a lot of issues to bring up with the department. I would like to state again for the record, to correct the minister: it's this government's total incompetence that we're pointing out. It has nothing to do with the farming community. It's the incompetence of this government – total incompetence – in administering this farm fuel program. I would advise the minister, clearly, to go over Hansard in the course of this debate, and I will expect an apology from him for his comments on the Monday that we resume discussions in this Assembly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Auditor General also has other recommendations for this department, but in the time we have, I would like to discuss some of the specific, again, line items in the budget, this element 2.0.3, regarding the Alberta Grain Commission. Now, the Alberta Grain Commission, from what I can see going over its website for the last five years, has been nothing more than a shill for the anti Wheat Board forces. Tax dollars going in here, increases all the time. The 2006-07 forecast for the Alberta Grain Commission is $522,000, $35,000, or 7 per cent, higher than what was budgeted last year, this respective fiscal year, Mr. Chairman.

The Grain Commission, again, does not publish an annual report. You're giving it megabucks, you're increasing the budget all the time, but there's no annual report, and there's really very little information to be found on the commission except its anti Wheat Board rhetoric. We've had to submit written questions, Mr. Chairman, just to get basic information about this organization. There's a serious lack of openness with the Alberta Grain Commission. Can the minister tell us why the commission overspent its budget last year? Why was this additional $35,000 needed? Can the minister provide us with a detailed breakdown of how the Grain Commission uses its funding?

I know the Grain Commission played a big role, as I said earlier, in the campaign to discredit the Canadian Wheat Board in the past number of years. Can the minister tell us where the commission will be focusing its attention this year? What initiatives will the Grain Commission, again, be focusing on? Will the department be providing public information regarding the Grain Commission's activities? In the spirit of openness and accountability, will the minister commit to having the Grain Commission publish an annual report so that taxpayers can see where the money has been spent? We shouldn't have to get a written question across to the department. They are tax dollars, and you should explain how they are being spent.

Now, the Auditor General had some concerns about the Alberta Financial Services Corporation. In the 2005-06 Auditor General's annual report, volume 2, page 43, the AG recommends that "the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation improve: employee information system security awareness." We all know that computer problems are rampant in the department, the use of computers at the wrong time. We've dealt with that issue, not to my satisfaction, but at least we've dealt with it.

The Auditor General also recommends that the AFSC monitor "employee compliance with its computer access policies and procedures," and we've seen what a lack of computer use policies can lead to in the case of the agricultural employee who had to be suspended for inappropriate behaviour. Can the minister tell us if he's dealt with the AG's recommendation as it relates to the AFSC? What, specifically, has the minister done to fix this problem?

Also, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to have a look at some of the major funding increases and decreases in the department. In the estimates on page 46, element 1.0.3, the Farmers' Advocate. The Farmers' Advocate is $3,000 less than for the 2006-07 forecast year. The minister has been telling us about how tough times are. Can the minister tell us why he is reducing funding for the Farmers' Advocate if farmers are in as much trouble? And they are. I agree with him; it's tough these days. Given the important role that the advocate plays in assisting farmers, particularly with energy development issues on farmland, does the minister not agree that the advocate should be well funded to serve rural communities? Is it the minister's position that the advocate will need less resources this year than the office did last year, and if so, why?

Also on the same page in element 3.0.2, rural utilities. Electricity deregulation has cost Alberta farmers significantly, particularly when you compare farm electricity costs to other regions. I did a comparison with Stats Canada data, and it was shameful. If farmers are in a tough situation, it's even tougher when they walk to the mailbox or go to town and get their power bill. They've probably got to go right to the bank after that. Can the minister tell us if he supports electricity deregulation, in light of the fact that Alberta's farm electricity costs have risen by an unbelievable 38 per cent since 2000? Does the minister believe that farmers in Alberta should be paying more for their electricity than farmers in Saskatchewan, B.C., or Manitoba? How does the government of Alberta support farmers who are struggling to pay their electricity costs brought on by the failures of deregulation?

Also on page 46, line 3.0.3, rural community and leadership development. There's a very important item here, and I don't know if we're going to get time to discuss it. Maybe in question period we'll get the chance. Rural community and leadership development is $412,000 more than was budgeted last year. This is a significant case of overspending. How does the minister justify spending more than $400,000 more than was budgeted for this particular program? Can the minister tell us what this program does and how the additional $412,000 was spent?

I think we'll go now, Mr. Chairman, to page 47 of the estimates, and we'll start with element 4.0.1, program support. In the 2007-08 estimate for program support there is a 38 per cent increase from '06-07. This is a significant increase in funding. Can the hon. minister tell us why this additional money is needed? How will this additional funding be utilized? Does the minister expect a significant increase in the level of support that industry development will require this year?

Element 4.0.5., bioindustrial technologies. The 2006-07 forecast for bioindustrial technologies is $4.2 million, 60 per cent more than was budgeted for last year, an additional $1.59 million. Can the minister please tell us where this additional funding was used? Why did the minister accept the need for additional funding? What kinds of bioindustrial technologies has the department been investing in? The 2007-08 estimate is more than $1 million dollars less than the previous year. Will this be enough, or will we be overspending again this year?

Element 4.0.6, business expansion and commercialization. This is a 28 per cent increase. This is a significant increase. Can the minister explain where he would like to see this additional funding used? Is this additional funding going towards developing grain marketing options for Albertans in light of the recent CWB vote?

Line item 4.0.7, agriculture industry development and diversification. There's a 19 per cent increase in the 2006-07 forecast. Can the minister tell us if this funding will be focused on any organic food initiatives? In what areas would the minister like to see greater diversification? Will any of this funding go towards producer-owned marketing co-operatives? Will any of this funding go towards the development of agricultural tourism initiatives such as U-pick, farmers' markets, or value-added specialty products?

Element 4.0.8, the Growth Strategy Secretariat. Again, a 29 per cent increase from the previous year. Can the minister tell us what this additional funding will be used for?

Element 4.0.9, infrastructure assistance for municipal waste water. Oh, I've run out of time, Mr. Chairman, and I'm disappointed.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food to respond.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. My first discussion I would like to have – his opening comment on the last round was the total incompetence of this government. I would like to comment that that's probably one person's opinion, unless the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East would like to jump up and express her opinion. Then I might have to say that it's two people's opinion, but I'm going to take that with a grain of salt. Coming from that side of the House, I guess that's a natural thing to say.

Alberta Grain Commission, something I certainly don't mind talking about. Their budget is $495,000. Hon. member, the results are reported in the annual report of the ministry. I would be happy to provide copies of the contributions to the hon. member if he so desires. His allegations, perhaps, about the barley plebiscite and the grain commission: Mr. Chairman, could we stay here till about 10 o'clock? Because I would like to express my opinion on that one. But I think probably the hon. member, as he did in the previous ministry, kind of likes to bait people, whether it's with golf courses or whatever the case may be, so I'll take that with a smile on my face.

At any rate, I would suggest that the Alberta Grain Commission's position on the barley plebiscite is probably somewhat a direct result of what myself and the department's position has been all along on the Canadian Wheat Board, so to speak. As you know, it's a federal initiative, and they chose to deal with the barley portion of it. It was all that they chose to deal with at this time, maybe a little bit to the chagrin of myself and my department.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the Minister of Agriculture and Food, but I will now invite officials to leave the Assembly so the committee may rise and report.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Chairman, I would gladly supply to the member the answers that we didn't get to.

The Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(a) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Education and Agriculture and Food relating to the 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That's carried. So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 33
Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh
Water Authorization Act

[Debate adjourned May 16: Dr. Pannu speaking]

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with regret that I move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. on Monday, May 28.

[Motion carried; at 5:48 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday, May 28, at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 28, 2007

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in this sitting of the Legislature, we ask for the insight we need to do our work to the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, if you now would join in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Please sing in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Hon. members and particularly the young people in the audience, the gentleman who led us in the singing of our national anthem, Mr. Paul Lorieau, one year ago was of course riveting everyone in North America in singing the national anthem at the hockey games for the Edmonton Oilers. Sadly, neither the Oilers nor the Flames are involved this year, but we are all supportive of the Ottawa Senators.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly His Excellency Tsuneo Nishida, ambassador of Japan, and his wonderful wife, Keiko. With the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations it was my pleasure to host the ambassador and his wife at a luncheon earlier today to welcome him to Alberta.

Japan is one of Alberta's most important international partners, with annual two-way trade totalling more than $2.5 billion. Since 1970 Alberta has had a trade office in Tokyo promoting Alberta's exports and encouraging Japanese investment. But, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's Japan relations go far beyond trade. For example, 18 Alberta municipalities are twinned with Japanese cities and towns, and Alberta has had a sister province relationship with Hokkaido for more than 25 years.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that our honoured guests will now please rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very talented and successful Alberta youth, Mr. Ryan Hodgson of Okotoks. Last year Ryan was chosen from among 132 candidates to receive the 4-H Premier's award, the highest award in the 4-H program.

Ryan has been a member of Alberta's 4-H program for the past 10 years, specifically the Millarville Stockland 4-H Beef Club and the Millarville 4-H Multi Club where he's held several executive positions. He is well known in his community for his exceptional leadership, communication, and personal development skills, and it was these qualities that earned him this great honour.

Along with 27 other exceptional youth Ryan spent last year as a 4-H ambassador promoting the opportunities of the program. I know that his efforts played an important role in contributing to 4-H, culminating this year as the 2006 Premier's award winner. Ryan is here to be presented to the Assembly and to meet with Premier Stelmach. Mr. Speaker, Ryan with his parents, Steve and Debbie, and his brother Matthew are seated in your gallery, and I ask them to now rise and receive the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three guests visiting from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency. Watching these proceedings today are Francois, Elizabeth, and Sarah Hebert. Mr. and Mrs. Hebert not only farm; they operate a large feedlot in the St. Paul area. But, most importantly, they are the very proud parents of Matthew Hebert, who is a researcher with the government caucus. They are also accompanied by their daughter Sarah, who is in her third year of education at the University of Alberta. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a group visiting from Mother Teresa school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. This is a group of 27 students who are here for the week, and they are participating in School at the Legislature. They are led by their teacher, Ms Kelly Laxdal, and she's also ably assisted by teacher-partners Ms Virginia English and Ms Jolene Ryall. This group is in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a class of 57 grade 6 students from Albert Lacombe, teachers Mr. Joe Esposito, Mrs. Paddi Brown, and parents and helpers Mrs. Donna Maxton, Mrs. Leslie Begert, and Mrs. Bourgeois. I wish them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The second group, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce the chairman of the Greater St. Albert Catholic regional school division and the vice-chair. The chair is Rosaleen McEvoy – and I don't know where she is, but hopefully she's here – and Jacquie Hansen, the vice-chair. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two series of introductions today. The first is a very special group of visitors from Norway that are here as part of a Rotary group study exchange. They're led by a Rotarian of 14 years, Kristin Mourud, who is a physiotherapist and also a coach. The team members are Siri Svere, who is a sheep farmer and also a municipal politician in Oslo; Roger Espeli, who is involved in hotel management; Mr. Finn Holm, who is in health management; and the last member of the team is Camilla Brekke, who is a lawyer. They're accompanied by three members of the Rotary Club of Edmonton South: Gordon Edmiston, Delores Knudsen, and Hank Hendricks. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a very special person to the members of the Alberta Liberal caucus. She is a long-time health care professional, a former vice-president of the Alberta Liberal Party, and currently the nominated candidate in Sherwood Park. I would ask Louise Rogers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Carol Wenger and Brenda Komick. Carol and Brenda are Palace Casino workers entering their 262nd day on strike due in part to the government's failure to protect Alberta workers from unfair employers. [interjections] The compassion can be heard around the House.

Carol has worked at the Palace Casino since June of last year in maintenance. Carol originally hails from Saskatchewan and came to Edmonton in 1972. In her off time she enjoys relaxing and going for walks. Brenda Komick is a slot attendant at the Palace Casino for the past three years. She has a son who is 17 years old and moved to Edmonton from Vancouver four years ago to be closer to her mother, who lives in a seniors' home. In her spare time she likes to be with her family.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Ukrainian Foundation for College Education

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to acknowledge the efforts of the Ukrainian Foundation for College Education and its Kyiv Konnection fundraising banquet held earlier this month. More than 300 people attended the banquet, including representatives from the government of Alberta, businesspeople, academics, and members of Alberta's Ukrainian community. The event raised about $12,000 for MacEwan College's Ukrainian resource and development centre.

The Ukrainian resource and development centre fosters innovation, leadership, and education within the national and international communities in community development, the arts, digital communication, business, education, and assisting Ukrainian Canadians to develop and retain their cultural identity and participate more effectively in the multicultural life of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Ukrainian Foundation for College Education is a nonprofit society, and since 1994 its overall purpose has been to raise funds to carry out Ukrainian education projects, particularly in co-operation with the college system. Projects include providing students with financial awards and promoting donation giving for Ukrainian college education. Over the years the Ukrainian Foundation for College Education has helped to raise more than $4.5 million for these worthwhile projects.

Mr. Speaker, we should all be very proud of the volunteer work and the accomplishments of these dedicated Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Community Initiatives Program

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in question period the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie raised objection to nonmatching grants issued by government to volunteer groups, which include St. Luke Catholic school, Alberta Native Friendship Centres, Kids Help Phone, River Valley Alliance, and St. Albert Senior Citizens' Club. These groups deliver valuable services to our communities. Their members offer thousands of volunteer hours. However, at times they are not in a position to match their grants. In these cases, from time to time this government supports them with nonmatching CIP grant assistance, which is subject to transparent grants reconciliation. In his question the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie further referred to the CIP grants issued to these volunteer groups by saying, "Well, you were paying [them] five times more than they deserved anyway."

Mr. Speaker, let me set the record straight. I suggest to you that this government could not do enough to support such volunteers, who take the initiative and donate their personal time for free to enrich our children's lives, to address social issues in our native population, to protect our children from violence and abuse and offer refuge, or build parks in the province or care for our seniors. Anyone who suggests that this government supports these groups five times too much is either ignorant of the value of the work that these groups provide or has little appreciation for volunteerism.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to use this opportunity to thank previously mentioned groups and assure them that this government will continue to appreciate and support their efforts despite the opposition's criticism.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Alberta's Social Infrastructure

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to talk about potholes and politics. Potholes happen. When we live in a climate where the ground freezes and thaws, spaces will open and road surfaces collapse. Depending on the budget for roads and the kind of winter, they may be repaired by summer, or we spend a long time trying to avoid them. We may blame the authorities, but we know that even with the best of care some potholes are inevitable.

Some political crises are like that. Whoever is in power, there will be incidents, many not of their own making, that they have to deal with. Though it's the job of the opposition to highlight these, to find neglect and call for inquiries so this never happens again, we know that some things do happen. If the sides were reversed, we could not prevent them any more than we can prevent potholes.

There are potholes that happen and potholes that proliferate. There are the potholes that run together to become trenches until the roads weaken from the water that flows through them. When roads become obstacle courses, we stop talking of potholes and talk of neglect. Mr. Speaker, this is precisely what has been happening in the past decade in Alberta, not only on our streets but in social infrastructure. For years we've closed our ears to problems and dismissed messengers as whiners. We have shipped our poor out of province, drowning out complaints with chants of the Alberta advantage. Just as four-wheel drives weave through the washboard and call it freedom of the road, our Premier calls for managing the pressures of growth.

Given the neglect that has brought this on, we need a plan and new direction. Potholes happen; washboards do not. Accidents happen; neglect does not. Human neglect is no accident. I urge citizens to keep this in mind as they drive this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Medicine Hat Tigers Hockey Team

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of pleasure that I stand in this Assembly once again to pass on the news regarding Medicine Hat's beloved Tigers Western Hockey League hockey team. The Tigers played well and fought hard during the Memorial Cup tournament in Vancouver. Unfortunately, this year it wasn't meant to be. However, this team has a great deal to be proud of. The tournament brought to an end a very successful season for the Tigers.

Last Wednesday night the Medicine Hat Tigers defeated the Vancouver Giants in a 1-0 round robin victory that secured them a spot in the finals. They once again met up with the Giants on Sunday night. In their ninth meeting in three weeks the Tigers had their last encounter with the heavy-checking and highly talented Giants that unfortunately saw our boys get shut out from the title by a score of 3-1. Throughout a tense and electrified game the Tigers put on a brave fight and left the Giants just barely out of the first period with a scoreless match. By the second period the two teams rallied back and forth in a tied pursuit. However, by the third and final period the efforts of the Giants came to the detriment of the Tigers. The underdogs – or should I say the undercats? – fought hard and proved that teamwork is a force like no other.

I'm pleased to be able to tell the House that this season was a conference-best regular season for the Tigers, who relentlessly clawed their way to the Memorial Cup.

To all the players that will be leaving the team due to age and other professional commitments, we wish you all the best, and your province congratulates you on all your successes with the Medicine Hat Tigers, including your hard-fought series with the Giants.

Also, I'd like to offer my best wishes to the Giants on their first win, a first in the team's six-year franchise history.

I know that I speak for the members of this Assembly and Albertans when I wish the Medicine Hat Tigers a restful off-season and all the best in the hockey season to follow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Government Task Forces

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unmasking the task force farce. In a pathetic attempt to appear more transparent and accountable than his predecessor, our interim Premier has not only assigned his new/old cabinet colleagues specific homework projects, which to date have gone unmarked, but has sent information-gathering task force farces hither and yon throughout the province, frantically compiling several clear-cut forests worth of pulped paper for what purposes other than a public relations/frustrations exercise.

Who can forget the 2005 task force that toured the province investigating long-term care shortcomings and abuses highlighted by Auditor General Fred Dunn's scathing report? That MLA committee set the task force standard as it toured the province, hearing a series of heart-twisting, gut-wrenching stories of neglect and abuse from concerned seniors' family members and advocates. How many of the task force recommendations has this government acted upon?

For 45 days this winter and spring the Affordable Housing Task Force toured the province, gathering several more forests worth of reported recommendations, including 38 of 52 which this government outrightly rejected.

The rigged royalty review's outcome has already been compromised by the Finance minister's premature conclusions.

The crime and community support task force completed its relatively short, by Affordable Housing Task Force standards, 14-municipalities tour this past Friday at the University of Calgary, in the Calgary-Varsity constituency, which I represent.

With the exception of the government's sleight of hand-picked royalty review, which won't report until after the Legislature's sessional spotlight has been turned off, the other task forces contained MLA men and women on a mission who sincerely wanted to hear from Albertans in order to address their concerns. They and their equally dedicated committee volunteers and Albertans who participated must feel duped and betrayed by this government, that sent them on a mission only to ignore and reject their recommendations.

Instead of the boy who cried wolf, Albertans have the Premier who cried task force but failed to follow through.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am rising today with a petition with 182 signatures on it. All 182 signatures were gathered during our housing rally on May 17. The petition notes the Conservatives' continued refusal to protect Alberta families from rent gouging and urges the government to immediately introduce temporary rent guidelines.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 39

Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 39, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007.

This amendment act proposes changes which reflect a new governance model that the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists, and Geophysicists of Alberta, fondly known as APEGGA, and the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals, fondly known as ASET, have agreed on. It's one act and two associations. This proposed model is in response to the request the Alberta government made of these two groups last year to work together to come to a mutually agreeable solution over the governance of Alberta's engineering and geoscientist technologists.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 39 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Personal Directives Amendment Act, 2007

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce Bill 40, the Personal Directives Amendment Act, 2007.

These amendments reflect the input of over 4,300 Albertans and will make it easier to benefit from the Personal Directives Act. Bill 40 will include a voluntary standard form that Albertans can use to write their own personal directive, which will ensure that their wishes are respected if they are unable to speak for themselves. It will also include a voluntary registry for their personal directives. The act will also provide safeguards, including a new process to reassess decision-making capacity and a new process for investigating complaints about agents when there are concerns about harm to the maker of a personal directive.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 40 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three tablings, all from the same source. They were shared with me when I attended the Alberta Funeral Service Association annual conference earlier this spring. The first one is their booklet called Funerals: An Information Guide. The second one is called Yours, Mine and Our Children's Grief: A Parent's Guide, to help parents with little children who are grieving. The third booklet is called Grieving: "Our Time," which helps grown-ups.

I must say that they were really pleased to have an MLA, who brought greetings from the Legislature, and they wish all members in the House all the best.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings, all with respect to questions raised in Committee of Supply on the evening sitting of May 16, answering questions from Edmonton-Calder, Edmonton-Manning, and Calgary-Fort.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today: the first from constituent Colin MacIntyre, noting that he thinks "the housing market is now officially out of control, and it is hurting a lot of people" and believes "it is the Government's responsibility to do something."

The second from constituent Seth Franklin, who has a good-paying job but is feeling that he has to look away from this city for housing, but that would take him away from his young daughter, who lives in Edmonton with her mother. He's particularly disappointed with the Capital Housing decision to tear down a complex rather than to sell it, as had been previously promised, to low-income earners.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from a constituent, Gloria Williams. She has multiple sclerosis, and she can only work part-time. She's asking for help with the stress in her life caused by expensive medications and now an unacceptable rental increase.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, I rise to present two tablings. One is the program for the excellent theatrical production at John D. Bracco school on Friday of Storybook Love. It was written and directed by Darolyn McCrostie and Jason Ashmore. The program describes the role of each of the 36 students. A great night was had by all.

The second tabling is from northeast resident Liz Lister, calling on the federal government to act on youth crime. Her son was swarmed in a northeast Edmonton neighbourhood on the weekend.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is the 15th anniversary joint fundraising breakfast program of Apache resources, Calgary Stampeders, and the Calgary Urban Project Society.

My second tabling, along the same theme, is a homeless awareness week program pamphlet entitled: 3,436 people are looking for a place to sleep tonight. That pamphlet comes from Homeless Awareness Calgary.

My third tabling is a program entitled Living Legends, that highlighted a number of First Peoples' dance and music, which was put on by energetic youth from Brigham Young University, cohosted by the National Energy Board and the Church of Latter-day Saints.

My fourth tabling is the program from the 2006-2007 showcase awards of the Consulting Engineers of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling today copies of documents concerning correspondence on the transfer of water from the Red Deer River to the mall and racetrack at Balzac.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, pursuant to the Regulated Forestry Profession Act, the College of Alberta Professional Forest Technologists fourth annual report 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Knight, Minister of Energy, response to a question raised by Mr. Mason, hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, on May 14, 2007, Department of Energy 2007-2008 main estimates debate.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Red Deer River Water Transfer

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The controversy involving the water transfer from the Red Deer River to the shopping mall and racetrack at Balzac won't go away. In fact, it's going to escalate. The Alberta Liberal caucus has obtained internal government documents clearly showing that this government is committed to this water transfer no matter what the Premier says. To the Premier: does the Premier still deny there is a commitment by your government to have this water transfer take place?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the matter of the water licence is before the Minister of Environment and before the committee to review the application. The leader tabled documents just a few seconds before you called question period. I'll review those documents that he tabled, and I will respond to his allegation tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The documents come from the government. Support by this government for this water transfer has been in place a long time despite this Premier's denials. An e-mail dated July 31, 2006, from a high-ranking official in agriculture, food and rural development states that "at a meeting that took place a while back with several Ministers in attendance, it appeared that support for the project was going to be forthcoming." Construction on the project was in full swing a month later. To the Premier: will the Premier finally admit that this government has been behind this project from day one?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my earlier comments hold true. On occasion the Leader of the Opposition has tabled documents and carved out a few words to read publicly in this Assembly, but when you look at the total document, the meaning is completely different. As I said before, we'll have a look at what has been tabled to review it and respond appropriately. It's only fair given the way that this House conducts itself.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would have thought the Premier was well briefed on an issue of this size.

The case keeps building. An e-mail dated July 10, 2006, from the executive director of rural development states that "the developers were meeting with Ty Lund last week." To refresh memories, that would mean the developers were meeting with the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. To the Premier: will the Premier instruct the former Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to provide a written account of that meeting and any documents associated with it so that we can all see what deals were made?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I didn't and I don't read all of the e-mails that come to every minister or every MLA in this House. He's quoting an e-mail from back in 2006. If it is part – if it is part – of the very thick documents that he tabled in the House earlier, we'll have a look at it and respond.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, when the Premier reads his own material, I see that it gets better and better.

An e-mail dated July 10, 2006, from the former agriculture minister's EA states that Doug "has flipped me an e-mail asking on the status of our work with the county on applying for the water/waste water program . . . Doug indicated that developers are looking for a letter from us today." The person referenced would be the current Minister of Advanced Education, by the way, who appears to have been interrupted in a caucus meeting for this business. Will the Premier instruct his government to make public whatever letter or other communications were sent to the developers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, allegations are raised in the House and words like "apparently." I said that we'll review the documents. We'll also pursue this particular matter, because again the member is using the privileges of this House to make certain allegations in the House. We'll look at all the information that was tabled today and review it and make the necessary statements.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the reply to that particular e-mail says, "Ron and I have a meeting scheduled regarding other matters at 1:30 – we'll get a draft done after that." The subject line on this e-mail is "Balzac-water for county." It doesn't get much clearer than that. To the Premier: exactly how many people in the government were working to make this water transfer occur?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Before I call on the hon. Premier, there's a point of order. Hon. minister?

Mr. Horner: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. At the conclusion of question period.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite sure that the Liberals have three questions. Three times three: that's nine. He'll find a few more e-mails to read out publicly in this Assembly. Keep doing that. The answer will be the same. We'll review the information, and tomorrow we'll make the necessary reply to these allegations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even more evidence: an e-mail dated June 27, 2006, states that a representative of the United Horsemen inquired what the outcome was at Treasury Board regarding water supply for the project at Balzac. The e-mail states: "Apparently [the] issue was discussed at length last week at TB under Ministers Horner & Renner." To the Premier – we'll try to come at this a different way – has this government brought all work on the water transfer to this project to a halt?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the licence is before an authority for consideration, and once that authority makes its decision, that decision will be made public to all, not only the developer, the MD, but also to the opposition.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite this Premier's denial of his own government's involvement in this, the same thing is happening under his watch. On January 22, 2007, a briefing note to the minister of agriculture, food, and rural development states this, and I want everyone to listen carefully: "The government is providing funding for a project involving the movement of water from the Red Deer River to a development in the Balzac area near Calgary." There it is in black and white. This government is committed to this water transfer. My question is to the Premier. Will this Premier finally say in public what this government is saying behind closed doors, which is that this government supports the water transfer from the Red Deer River to Balzac?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if the e-mails or alleged e-mails or whatever this Leader of the Opposition brings forward in the House were all so true, then I'm sure that waterline would have been built right from the start. It's before an authority. That authority has very specific criteria that they follow in making very important decisions. It's up to that authority to make those decisions. They only respond to the Minister of Environment. Those decisions, of course, and all of the information that comes before the authority will be made public once the authority makes that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this and in other material we've obtained, there is overwhelming evidence showing that this government was bending over backwards to get this water transfer approved. There are extensive meetings with cabinet ministers; there are thousands of pages of documents; there are millions of public dollars involved. To the Premier: on March 19 you said you would debate me on this issue of water transfer "any time, anywhere." Will you live up to your own word and debate me on this issue in Drumheller before the next by-election?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the opposition leader is showing his disrespect to this House. We also have a leader of the third party. If the leader of the third party wanted to get involved and debate issues with respect to rural Alberta and all the concerns raised across this province, I'm quite sure that all three would get involved. It's a by-election, both in Calgary-Elbow and in Drumheller-Stettler, and that's what the purpose is.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I'll give the Premier one last chance to live up to his own words. Will you debate me as you invited "any time, anywhere" on this water transfer in Drumheller before the next by-election? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the opposition leader is talking about keeping his word, especially coming from him.

With respect to the two by-elections, there are two candidates, of course, in the by-election of both Drumheller-Stettler and Calgary-Elbow. They are not members of government. They're seeking to run for the Progressive Conservative Party. There are also candidates representing the Liberal Party. They're up there to win those elections for themselves. In this particular case we have very good candidates both in Calgary-Elbow and in Drumheller-Stettler, and they debate all of these issues very well.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I would love to debate the Premier and the leader of the Liberal Party, but I'd like to talk about a bunch of other issues.

One of the most important issues that we've got to deal with right now has to do with housing and control of rents because when it comes to helping renters, this Premier is all talk and no action. After learning of massive rent increases in Edmonton, the Premier called them un-Albertan. After residents of the Mission apartment building in Calgary got $1,200 per month rent increases, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing called the increases immoral. Now, aside from calling gouging landlords bad names, what concrete steps will this Premier take to help the residents of Calgary's Mission apartments?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this House debated at great length a very good piece of legislation in terms of condo conversions. In that legislation there is a fine, and that's $10,000 per unit. So if there is evidence of a condo conversion in violation of this act, there's a very significant penalty. If the hon. leader of the third party, who doesn't want to get involved in the other issue, has evidence to bring forward that there is hard evidence that this is a condo conversion, then deliver that evidence to the minister responsible, and we will take the appropriate action.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier seems to think the opposition should do all his work for him, you know, but I think it's up to the government to protect tenants in this province.

Now, the people in the Mission apartments have received an increase of $1,200 a month. Condo conversion or not, Mr. Premier, that's too much. What will you do to help them?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, we have numerous programs in place. There's a very good rental supplement program. There are also safety net programs for those families that may be evicted or move into Alberta and can't find a place. My information is that we have helped a significant number in Calgary. We are compassionate. We do care about the residents, and we'll be meeting with them to see how we can assist them.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier calls gouging landlords un-Albertan. His minister calls them immoral. The Premier calls his own government compassionate, yet the facts say otherwise, Mr. Premier. The facts say that this government isn't going to do anything to help the people in Mission apartments in Calgary or other renters that are getting massive increases. Why not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again the third-party opposition leader said, you know, that we're not doing anything in this area. That is wrong. We don't have to rely on the opposition to do any of the work. We have very good programs in place. There are hundreds of millions of dollars that we're putting into housing, $285 million. We also have millions of dollars in safety net programs to assist Albertans, not only Albertans that are here today but those that are moving to Alberta that can't find accommodations. So it's a very good program, and we'll continue to extend that program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Municipal Financing

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This hon. leader would love to be part of the debate too, but the democratic process seems to be lacking. We'll see the numbers in the polls in a couple of weeks.

I've been out knocking on the doors of Hanna. I've been down in my own riding, and this last week the municipal assessment rolls have come out. Two weeks ago or a week ago the Premier said that the only way the taxes are going is down. It isn't correct. They're going up. It's affecting the families and the communities that I represent and those throughout Alberta. But, Mr. Speaker, what we need to do is to look at a different formula, one that the people can count on and one that municipalities can count on in order to fund them. My question to the Premier . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to tax increases for property, that's a decision made by the local municipality. In terms of the municipal funds that will be allocated to various municipalities, we have a formula in place. This last weekend the minister of municipal affairs met with all of the CAOs of both urban and rural municipalities. They've looked at the formula. They've looked at the allocation and also at the accountability, and that is important. As municipalities receive money from the global taxpayer, each municipality has to have some accountability attached to it.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, the question was that if this government would adopt a policy to return 10 per cent of the provincial personal and corporate tax back to the communities from which it originated.

My next question. The town of Magrath is suffering from lack of lots and trying to develop them, but the conditions that this government puts on funding says that they must go out and have a bid. They had a bid to develop six lots. The bid came in at $560,000 to develop six lots. They went ahead, and they did it for $150,000. My question is to the Premier. Will you restore the democratic process and allow the local government, like the Magrath town council, to decide what is best for their community by putting sewage and drainage ahead and making it their top priority?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe where the hon. member is coming from is the fact that in terms of procurement there is legislation in place, and I believe it's part of the internal trade agreement that says that any work $100,000 or more has to go to tender. I believe that's what the hon. member is referring to. That can be changed. However, we would have to do that in co-operation with neighbouring jurisdictions because it's an internal trade agreement; that is, within Canada. I'm not saying that we can't do something about that. If he feels that it's important to bring it forward for discussion, we certainly will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'd like to, I guess, go back to May 14 again where the hon. Premier said:

Certainly we would be able to work out any issues in terms of getting that money out to municipalities and getting the best value for it. So if it's water, if it's infrastructure . . . We'll be there, we'll listen to you, and we'll make those programs work.

We have desperate situations in our constituency. Will the Premier please instruct the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to come down and meet with myself and our local mayors and Reeves to work out these issues? They are desperate. They're not being addressed, and it's water and sewage, top critical issues.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the capital plan our budget increased 105 per cent for water and sewer. It doubled. Plus new money going to municipalities: this year $400 million, of course, and then it will ramp up to $500 million, and in 2010-11 it will be $1.4 billion. So there is considerable money today plus in the future.

Now, with respect to some issues, if there is something to do with the allocation or the accountability that's attached to the dollars—the minister met this last weekend with all of the CAOs. If there's still some issue, then he can take it up independently with the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As rents continue to soar out of control in this province, so do damage deposits. One of the biggest challenges that renters face when they're looking for accommodation is finding that first month's rent and a damage deposit. At a housing forum last week I met William, who's making $11 an hour and sleeping on the front seat of his girlfriend's car . . . [interjections] Without his girlfriend. So I think all members can understand how uncomfortable this is.

Mr. Speaker, my question for the housing minister is this: will the homeless and eviction prevention fund put money into William's pockets in advance? Because when he goes and finds a place, then his challenge is to find that money . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In our present budget, as the hon. member knows, we have added $285 million to housing, part of it going to the concerns of the homeless. We have also given $143 million to municipalities. Municipalities have the independence to address the needs that they feel are most important. Also, there is funding that has been allocated for the challenge . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the minister doesn't understand is that by the time people get the funding that they need, by the time they get the supports they need from the government, they go back and the accommodation is gone. It's been rented by somebody else. They need to have something in advance so that they don't lose the opportunity. Now, let's not forget that the issue of affordable housing has been an issue in Alberta for a long time. The government was warned nine years ago by their own affordable housing symposium that this was going to be a problem, and that symposium was chaired by the current minister of immigration. The question is: how did they manage so badly to mess this up, and what did she do or not do about it?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to share with the hon. member opposite that we do have a fund. We've had numerous applicants for the fund. It deals with evictions. It deals with damage deposits. If the hon. member would care to share his name and address, his co-ordinates or his girlfriend's co-ordinates, I will certainly try and get in touch with him and see what I can do to make sure that there's something provided for both of these young people.

Mr. R. Miller: If I can provide it, Mr. Speaker, I'll get the licence plate number for the car.

Mr. Speaker, everybody needs a home. It's now two and a half weeks since the passage of Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, and confusion continues to reign. As far as I've been able to determine, the bill has yet to receive royal assent. The minister's office says that it's coming soon, Parliamentary Counsel has told me that it doesn't need royal assent, and realtors, landlords, and tenants are still wondering what the heck is going on. My question is simply this: has it received royal assent yet? Is it going to? When is it going to? How long do these people have to wait so that they understand what rules they're working under?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it has not received royal assent yet. It will soon. We are working very closely with the different departments to make sure that both landlords and tenants understand what is in the new bill. It's not very complicated, but it's not all that simple. We will work very closely with all of the information avenues we've got to bring the bill out so that both landlords and tenants are familiar with all aspects of the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Deer Overpopulation

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This spring the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development allowed a cull of 1,400 deer in eastern Alberta. The farming community in my constituency has experienced a devastating effect of deer on their hay feed. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: what plans in the near future do you have to allow the culling of deer in northern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for that question. We've had many requests and letters concerning the population of deer, moose, and elk in your constituency and in other northern constituencies. It's related to the harsh winter we've had up north, and the snowpack has driven the animals into the farmyards. We're looking at that closely. But I have to tell the member that the cull that was conducted in eastern Alberta was in response to a disease that the deer had, chronic wasting disease. A cull is a policy of last resort and wouldn't normally be used for this type of issue.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: if there's an ability to allow culling for testing, why is culling not allowed for damages sustained to private property?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, both myself and all members on this side have a real concern with protection of private property, unlike members across the way here. When it comes to dealing with deer overpopulation, there's a spectrum of policy opportunities, policy choices, starting with meeting with landowners, providing fences, and that type of thing. We can also extend the hunting season. We might give multiple tags if there's an overpopulation of deer. We can also have quota hunts. A quota hunt is a hunt after the regular season. But this is done after a survey of the deer population, and this year we want to do a new survey because we don't know the extent of the damage done by the heavy winter.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, my last question is to ask whether or not that study will be done as soon as possible in order for us to be able to address the very issue that affects my farmers.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I hear the concerns of the Member for Lesser Slave Lake and other members from the north. My department will give it their attention. But I have to warn the member that as seductive as her proposal is, I have to consult with Bambi first.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government continues to fumble the education ball. First it bullies the teachers over the unfunded pension liability. Then it lowballed operational funding. Now it's turning its back on school boards. My question is to the Minister of Education. How does he expect school trustees to get re-elected on a tax increase platform when this government would never do the same thing?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure I understood the essence of the question, but let me just read into the record some facts. The operational funding to school authorities has increased by 86 per cent over 10 years. The inflation rate for that same period has grown by 28 per cent, and teachers' salaries increased by 45 per cent over that same period.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's give it another go. Education funding is about priorities, Mr. Minister, and this government's priorities are clear. Bob Maskell doesn't complain about his generous salary. Horse Racing Alberta doesn't complain about their millions. Why does this government continue to put its friends ahead of educational funding in the province? Tell us the answer, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, 3.3 million Albertans we consider to be our friends, and that's who we're representing in this Legislature by ensuring that there's enough money for education going forward this year and into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much. Will the minister accept that plebiscites will not help the Calgary Catholic school board? Mr. Minister, they don't help.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be put on the record that last week the Calgary Catholic board released a document, or it was released, that said that they were going to have this budgetary shortfall this year. Well, I recognize that school boards are going into negotiations with the ATA locals, and if I were them, I would do exactly the same thing because what they need to do is ensure that there isn't an expectation that is too high. I was asked the question: were there other ways that school boards could raise funds? I said: there is the provision in the School Act to hold a plebiscite. That's as far as it went.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had an opportunity to meet with many teachers in Whitecourt-St. Anne as well as the ATA reps from Northern Gateway, Living Waters, and Grande Yellowhead school regions. There were real mixed feelings on the $25 million gift from Albertans to teachers to help offset the pension costs. Young teachers simply thanked me. More experienced teachers complained about the disparity in payments. To the Minister of Education: what was your reason for giving larger subsidies to younger teachers?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it should be clear that in the six months or so that I've had the privilege of being in this portfolio I have consistently heard that one of the issues that is a deterrent for recruitment of the best students into the teaching profession and keeping them there is the 3 per cent unfunded liability that each teacher must pay off of their paycheque. So as an effort while we resolve this issue in our budget, we made it clear that we would assist those younger teachers. Starting on September 1 all teachers that have under 15 years of service will receive approximately between 1,200 and 1,400 bucks a year.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister. Mr. Minister, you've told teachers that a task force will be established to address concerns about the unfunded debt that exists in the pension plan. Why would you tell this task force to suspend its activities in the event of a labour disruption? It hardly seems fair that one part of the province could go on strike and the rest of the province is penalized.

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, we are going to establish this task force so that it can meet with interested parties around the province to find out what would be a fair return for taxpayers in order to assume a $2 billion liability. That task force will be up and running shortly, and it will report back to us by the end of October. What I wanted to ensure while this task force was meeting with Albertans was that if we had a situation – let's take as an example the Parkland strike, which we're all familiar with, of a couple of months ago. I believe that in that environment the task force could be unduly impacted by the negative media and opposition comments that were being made.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister. The debt in the teachers' pension plan exists because of an equal problem between the ATA and the province of Alberta. Labour negotiations are an ongoing challenge for school boards and local unions. Why will you not treat these issues as two separate, distinct challenges? Why tie them together?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, they are in fact two separate issues. We as the government of Alberta are responsible for resolving the unfunded pension liability issue with the Alberta Teachers' Association. The individual school boards are responsible for negotiating contracts with their local of the ATA. Those two processes will work parallel to one another but, clearly, not together or in conflict with one another. So they are separate issues, and they will both go forward independently.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Affordable Accessible Housing

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a renters' listening forum last week, sponsored by city of Edmonton councillors and the Edmonton Social Planning Council, a myriad of issues were raised about the hardships facing renters. Affordability is not the only issue facing some renters. There is a scarcity of rental units that can accommodate Albertans with physical disabilities who use mobility aids such as wheelchairs. My question is to the minister of housing. In this housing crisis what can the minister offer to Albertans in wheelchairs who require rental housing to be both accessible and affordable?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we look at affordable housing, we need to look at all sorts of different solutions. I will say that there have been applications that have dealt with associations or agencies that have dealt with people that are handicapped, and we have tried to address those situations and supported those projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister. For disabled Albertans looking for accommodation, their first priority is accessibility, and then they have to worry about the cost. It took one constituent four years to find accommodation suitable for her wheelchair. What are these Albertans supposed to do when their rents skyrocket and they find themselves on the street?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as mentioned previously, with the Minister of EII, if I could get her to answer, please.

Ms Evans: If they are concerned, if they receive an eviction notice, I would encourage them to come immediately to any of our offices or phone and establish where it's most convenient for them to learn about what's available.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. This question is directed to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. A person using a wheelchair who has lost their apartment because of high rents cannot sofa surf at a friend's or camp in the river valley. Even if they have a great job, rent is being raised beyond their means. Now, will these people with disabilities be able to access the homeless and eviction prevention fund? What exactly are the criteria? Will they be income tested?

Ms Evans: I think the best thing about this particular fund, unlike many of the previous funds, is that the director has the discretion to look at the personal circumstance of the individual involved: employment opportunities; needs of that individual, both physical and financial; the total social milieu. When I spoke to some of the workers in one of our offices, they said that the best thing about this fund is that they have the flexibility of making decisions that aren't confined to a strict adherence to a particular set of rules, but they deal with humans on a human basis, so they are entitled to identify what their needs are, and then we will look for them accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Education minister owes Albertans a full explanation. He has underfunded classrooms in this year's budget and invented some half-baked excuse to claim that his 3 per cent cut to education is actually a budget increase. Calgary Catholic schools know better. They would lose 30 or more teachers with this budget. School boards across the province know better.

Just do the math. To the Education minister. Grade 6 students know that subtracting 6 per cent inflation from 3 per cent budget increase nets a loss of 3 per cent. Can the minister explain how six minus three does not equal a 3 per cent cut?

Mr. Liepert: Let me reread what I did a few minutes ago so that when we tie things to inflation, we keep it in perspective. Inflation over the past 10 years, Mr. Speaker, has grown by 28 per cent. Meanwhile, funding to the classroom has grown by 86 per cent over the last 10 years. Teachers' salaries grew by 45 per cent over the last 10 years when inflation grew by 28 per cent.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, those figures that he keeps going on about are half-baked at best. They're based on 1993, when the budget was cut to pieces, and quite frankly it's an insult to Albertans to continue to bring those up. The Education minister claims that his budget has increased, but he tells school boards to go ahead and hold a plebiscite for a separate tax increase to cover the shortfall built into his budget. Talk about a slap in the face to schools and the public. Here's a simple question. Why isn't this government giving schools the resources that they need to cope with inflation? Why not deal with this now, in the spring, before it becomes a crisis that could threaten instruction in the fall?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, if we want to talk about half-baked, we should talk about half-baked mathematics because there is no cutback in this particular budget. There is a 5.2 per cent increase in the Education budget. If we want to go back to the budget documents that were tabled in this House last year compared to the budget documents tabled this year, the increase in Education over a 12-month period is closer to 10 per cent.

You know, Mr. Speaker, just one final comment. There was a graduation class at Ross Sheppard high school this past week. Of 573 grads 236 graduated with honours or honours with distinction. It would be really good if these guys would talk about the positive stuff in education.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could get some of those Ross Shep grads to come and build the proper Education budget for this next coming year because, certainly, this one is not going to be functioning for the fall. School boards across this province have developed a dedicated capital reserve for expenditures. For example, a school board buys a bus and then puts money away for a replacement down the road. Maybe we could learn something from that too. The minister is now having the audacity to suggest that school boards should blow off that prudent long-term planning to make up for this government's poor budgeting practices. Did not this government learn from last spring that there's nothing to be gained and everything to lose from shortchanging public education?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I do appreciate about this caucus is that they don't hide anything. They want to spend, spend, tax, tax. At least they're not like these guys who want to say: we're going to save some money, and then we're going to spend, spend, and spend. So we have a philosophical difference of whether we're going to spend, spend, and tax or whether we're going to put a budget before this Legislature that is fair to Albertans, and that's what we believe in doing on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Trade Corridors to Prince Rupert

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been hearing a lot about the Asia Pacific gateway and the efforts to revitalize the port of Prince Rupert. There's a huge economic potential to be tapped for Alberta. I know that the federal government is putting a lot of resources into developing transportation routes to that port. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: what is being done by this government to help develop the Prince Rupert port to better serve Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question because this government really understands how important the port of Prince Rupert is to all Albertans, and we're working with other governments on strategies to develop key corridors to Prince Rupert that will benefit all of Alberta. Last week we announced a $150 million highway interchange just south of the city – on 41st Street I think it is – in partners with the city of Edmonton and the federal government, that will facilitate a major container terminal in south Edmonton, that will be CP's new intermodal yard. Last month I was in Winnipeg and met with other transportation groups.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to develop the north-south corridor to benefit all Albertans, but it's particularly important to develop an east-west corridor to especially benefit northern Albertans. A lot of farmers in northern Alberta, especially in the Peace country, can't get their grain to market because there are virtually no railcars available to move grain. What is this minister going to do to address this situation?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have met with CN about this situation. As you know, railroads are regulated federally in this province, but I've spoken with CN, and they're going to do the best they can to get more cars there. Also, a little bit of a problem is how all containers work in Canada, and we're working with the federal government to try to change that. In Canada we have to have our empty containers back to port within 30 days, and we can only reposition them once. In the U.S. they have 365 days and can reposition them as many times as they like to get the containers back to port. We're working on those regulations.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Finance. I know that the Alberta government made a significant loan available to the grain terminal in Prince Rupert several years ago. In the annual report from his department it shows the loan as still on the books. Can the minister tell us what the status of the loan is and how the government might be able to leverage this loan in order to make the grain terminal more effective?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back in 1981 a loan for $106.3 million was given to the now Ridley Grain terminal. This was amortized at 11 per cent through a bond issuance. As of today we are sitting at a capital and interest payment of monies owed of around $96 million. The loan is absolutely up to date. It is not in default. But I really must emphasize to the hon. member that we are simply the lender. We do not have a share in the Ridley Grain terminal. We are simply a lender to that particular consortium.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Crown Land Adjacent to Bissell Centre

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Monday on land reported to be owned by the province, west of the Bissell Centre and north of the Remand Centre parking lot in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, the Edmonton Police Service was forced to evict homeless Edmontonians. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Why did the province force the Edmonton Police Service to evict the homeless people from Crown land last Monday?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, that's not quite exactly how it worked. Our department got a call from the Edmonton Police Service that they had a whole bunch of complaints about things that were going on in that yard, not necessarily legal things, and asked permission if they could go in and see. We did grant that permission.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will the province consider selling this property for $1 to any group who is interested in constructing affordable housing units at this location, or will the province consider selling for $1 any other suitable location across the province that could be used for homeless initiatives? You've sold land for $1 before to developers.

Mr. Ouellette: On that particular land the same thing I will say again. What was going on in there? After the police went in there, they found lots of garbage; they found human waste; they found condoms; they found drug paraphernalia. It was very much a safety concern. To his question: we do have a housing minister, Mr. Speaker, that I think is addressing affordable housing very well, and he will talk to us if he needs any more help. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister. Given that on the Sunday previous I had walked across that land and found none of the incidents that this hon. member has stated occurred there, my question is this: how much is the fence around this property going to cost taxpayers, and why are you building this fence now?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure. I haven't seen any of the quotes on the fence. To be very honest with you, I'm not even sure that there was a fence being built, but now that he's brought it to my attention, I can check on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Speed Limit Enforcement

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. A recent publication by the Alberta Motor Association Foundation for Traffic Safety states that there are around 100,000 vehicular collisions, 27,000 injuries, and 400 traffic deaths in Alberta every year. Almost three-quarters of the fatalities occur on rural roads and highways. According to the foundation these crashes cost our society about $4.8 billion per year, not to mention the toll in personal grief, sorrow, and pain. A major factor in these crashes is excessive speed. Will the minister take real action to reduce this carnage and step up enforcement of the speed laws on our roads and highways?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to let the hon. member know that this government is taking real action. We are committed to safe and secure communities. Highway enforcement is an essential element of the province's traffic safety plan. Since 2004 we've increased our spending on policing by $31 million and put an additional 300 police officers on our streets. We now have 60 traffic sheriffs who are patrolling our highways, targeting aggressive drivers, helping reduce collisions and fatalities. In fact, on the July long weekend we'll have an additional 24, bringing that total up to 84. These sheriffs are making a difference. On the May long weekend alone they laid over 1,300 charges.

The Speaker: I think we have to go on.
The hon. member.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, many motorists speed based on the assumption that law enforcement officials will not ticket them if they're travelling 10, 15, or 18 kilometres over the posted maximum. This gap seems to be growing despite the increased accuracy of today's technology for speed enforcement. Even regular bus services between Calgary and Edmonton build speeding into their posted schedules rain, snow, or shine. Will the minister take steps to enforce the actual posted speed limit and not some nebulous and expanding limit, which seems to be widely practised by law enforcement officials?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. member. We have a strong commitment to making our roads safer. I want to acknowledge the great job that's being done on our highways by our police officers. As I was alluding to, on the May long weekend over 1,300 charges were laid by our sheriffs, including 773 for speeding and another 99 for seat belt infractions. The response to sheriffs working our highways has been extremely positive since they started patrolling last September. Since that time they've handed out 25,000 tickets. As a result of their work our highways are a lot safer today than they were yesterday.

Dr. Brown: Will the minister's department support the expanded use of technology, including more speed and red-light cameras, to reduce the number of crashes in the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly support any initiatives that are going to help reduce collisions and improve highway safety.

I would ask the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation if he may want to supplement.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, our department takes safety in Alberta very, very seriously, the same as this government does. We are working on a traffic safety plan right now, on implementing some of the traffic safety plan. We're looking at speed on green right now. We would only put those at high-collision intersections to make sure that we can see what's going on, and we will put that technology in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Wind Valley Wildlife Corridor

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In 2003 the province developed a wildlife corridor plan for the Wind Valley just east of Canmore. Many species in the area are endangered, and they rely on this area for protection for their migration. The plan did offer that. But just last month the government sold a large portion of Crown land to a private time-share company for development. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Is this the kind of sale that you're hoping to get with your land-use strategy? Is that the type of sale you're trying to create?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd like the hon. member to clarify his question and say specifically who this land was sold to because I think he has his facts absolutely wrong.

Mr. Bonko: It was a private time-share company, Mr. Speaker. I'll go to my next question unless you'd like to have this one again. It was a private time-share company. I've clarified that.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to inform you and the House that this private time-share is actually owned by the members, 95 per cent of whom are Albertans. They've owned it for 25 years. They've asked to purchase another attached parcel. We haven't made a decision yet. I've talked with the mayor of Canmore. We're taking it under consideration precisely because that area is indicated as a wildlife corridor. We're discussing the matter with Canmore and other affected parties.

Mr. Bonko: The lands in question are within the boundaries of the town of Canmore. Sustainable Resource Development sent a request for comments from the council. The council passed resolutions making very clear their objections to the sale of this wilderness corridor. Is the opinion of the town council going to be ignored, or is it going to be accepted? They do not support the sale.

Dr. Morton: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be backpedaling rather quickly. I thought he began his question by saying the sale had already been made, if I understood him correctly. Now he's saying: oh, yes, this sale is under consideration. Yes, I've talked with the mayor of Canmore. As I said, this condominium complex is owned 95 per cent by Albertans. It's been there for 25 years. They're looking at an additional parcel, and we're discussing it with the mayor and the council of Canmore.

Speaker's Ruling

Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 90 questions and answers today.

A few comments on procedural matters before I deal with the point of order and recognize the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. First of all, there were three occasions today in which members' names were used. The two circumstances were rather different. In the case of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food he clearly inappropriately used the personal name of a Member of this Legislative Assembly, and I say: inappropriately used.

Then we have the Leader of the Official Opposition. In the ten years that I've had the privilege of being in the chair, I've never really run across this kind of a situation before. The Leader of the Official Opposition tables some documents in the House. Then he quotes from those documents in his questions. An appropriate quotation would have to be 100 per cent accurate. In this case it meant that the names of members of this Assembly were used. That would appear from the chair's perspective to be an appropriate usage of names although the chair doesn't really think it's very good if hon. members don't pronounce those names correctly. That leads, then, to a different kind of a subject matter. But in this case the names were pronounced correctly.

So for those members who would say, "Well, why in this case would the Leader of the Opposition be allowed to use the name and some other member not?" the chair is ruling that, in fact, it is an appropriate usage of it to ensure 100 per cent accuracy of the quotation that's found in the document. But, again, the first time in 10 years that that has happened, to the knowledge of this chair, so that makes it rather rare.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford did something which is not very nice: he brought the table officers into debate on a question. Please remember that the chair and the table officers of this particular Assembly are neutral and nonpartisan. When we have questions and answers in the Legislative Assembly, often times under our new 45-second ruling there's some debate that goes on. In the case of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, making a point and addressing it to someone else, basically saying, you know, "Is it, or isn't it?" even when I've been told by the table officers that it is, in fact, brings the table officer into the debate or the Speaker into the debate. That's something we should not do, just to make sure that we have absolute clarity and that we respect the role of the chair and the table officers. [interjection]

We're having an exciting day today, aren't we, hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar? I applaud your energy and enthusiasm, but sometimes it's best to be quiet for a while. [some applause] Well, that obviously was well received, hon. members. There's a message there.

Point of Order

Imputing Motives

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a point of order, citing Standing Orders 23(h) and (i), imputing false or unavowed motives to another member, as well as Beauchesne's 494 where it states that imputation of intentional falsehood is not allowed in the House.

The hon. leader of the Liberal Party has dug deep today to try to find something which, in his mind, represents some sort of secret deal that would impugn the integrity of the minister of the day, to which he was referring. That minister was rightly identified several times by the hon. member as myself at the time. In fact, he went out of his way to do so.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would have done his homework instead of casually tossing out what he perceives to be a scandal, he would have found and would know that the project he was referring to is one which has been in place for many, many years in the agriculture department in the province and the county that it was involved with. This is one area where the information was perhaps misleading: that there was somehow a deal between my department at the time and the company involved. That's certainly not the truth. The truth is that it was an arrangement, as we have with many counties around the province, with the department of agriculture for water and waste-water infrastructure should their water licence be approved, should their development be approved, should a number of factors move forward.

At the time, Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the county did have some urgency to their application, and certainly it is this government's role to work with our municipalities and to work with them as hard and as fast as we can so that they can move forward with these types of proposals where they want to move. As has been done many times in the past, our agriculture department has helped value-added agricultural commodity ventures grow in rural Alberta. The infrastructure/ag program in question deals with those water and waste-water issues. Our agreement, as I said, is not with the proponents but with the county.

In my previous role as minister of agriculture, food and rural development I met with many agricultural-based businesses. I'm not afraid to admit that. That was part of my job. I met this morning with some industry folks, some companies in the aerospace business because we're trying to develop those industries in our province. That is our job, and I pride myself in doing it with integrity, with honour, and with the utmost of respect to all individuals involved and, at the end of the day, with the best interests of our province in mind.

I and my family have invested heavily in the reputation which we have because that's all we have, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to this Assembly, the utmost respect to all hon. members should be given. There should not be any impugning of motives, especially when – and I have the documents in front of me that were tabled and have had an opportunity to quickly peruse but also being part of some of these documents. These documents prove my point: that there was no agreement between Agriculture and the proponent, that there was an application from the county, that the county has to apply for a water licence – they were advised of such – that no money had changed hands because no water licence had been issued, that the proponents fit all of the program criteria for the program and project that was in question.

Mr. Speaker, my issue is that knowing these facts, the hon. member still stood in his place today and gave Albertans by way of this medium a picture that would impugn the motives that I had at the time, that would impugn the motives that this government had at the time, and that certainly, I would say, even brings into question what the county and the members of the council of the day did.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the project in question met all of the criteria. The inference by the hon. member is that I approved something that was not right. This certainly makes an accusation, and it certainly in the way it was done impugns improper motives on my behalf, which I find to be offensive. I believe that the hon. member should recheck his facts and that he should apologize to this House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've reviewed this, and I've reviewed the Blues. I'm quite prepared to rule on this matter before hearing anybody else with respect to this.

What we have here is a situation whereby a member of this Assembly during question period raises questions and has before him and tables some documents. First question, and I quote the Leader of the Official Opposition.

An e-mail dated July 7, 2006, from the former agriculture minister's EA states, quote: Doug has flipped me an e-mail asking on the status of our work with the county on applying for the waste-water program. Doug indicated that developers are looking for a letter from us today. End quote

I'm assuming that that's correct and true, factually correct.

The person referenced would be the current Minister of Advanced Education, by the way, who appears to be interrupted in a caucus meeting for this business. Will the Premier instruct his government to make public whatever letter or other communications were sent to the developers?

It's pretty straightforward. I don't see where there are any accusations or innuendo with respect to the context of that.

Second question.

Well, the reply to that particular e-mail says, and I quote: Ron and I have a meeting scheduled regarding other matters at 1:30; we'll get a draft done after that. End quote.

I'm assuming that that's factually correct in this quotation.

The subject line on this e-mail is, quote: Balzac water for county.

Okay. That's a title.

It doesn't get much clearer than that. To the Premier: exactly how many people in the government were working to make this water transfer occur?

Okay. The Leader of the Official Opposition in this case makes the statement that "it doesn't get much clearer than that." Well, under our 45 seconds you have a chance to wax eloquent. It may be clear to the Leader of the Official Opposition, whereas it may not be clear to anybody else.

I think we've afforded the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology an opportunity to clarify the matter with respect to his understanding of the e-mail in question. This is all part and parcel of the give-and-take now of the new question period. It's not a point of order. It's part of the thrust of what we've arrived at. Hon. member, Beauchesne's 494 says, "Acceptance of the Word of a Member." I read this the other day into the record: "On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident." In this case there are probably not two contradictory accounts. In this case there are probably two different interpretations. There's nothing in the statements that I would find to be accusatory of the former minister of agriculture, food, and rural development. But this is question period and it's answer period.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd move that written questions on the Order Paper stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that motions for returns other than Motion for a Return 4 standing on the Order Paper stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Ministerial Expense Claims

M4. Mr. R. Miller proposed that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all ministerial expense claims broken down by minister submitted between December 1, 2006, and March 1, 2007.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the intention behind this motion is quite clear. There have been a number of examples and issues raised in this House over the past couple of years regarding ministerial office expenses. Given today's technology I would expect that it should be relatively easy for this information to be consolidated and put into a form that could be provided in the way of a written response. Obviously, this is not the sort of thing that ministers responsible would be expected to provide during question period, but given the resources that the government has, I'm confident that they can provide it to us in this manner.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, as you most likely know, there has been a commitment to post such information on the Internet by the end of this month. We're looking forward to that. Here we are on May 28, only three days away, and looking forward to all of this information being posted for all Albertans to see in the future. All we're asking now is to go back a year and provide the same information that will be posted for all Albertans to see in the future for the previous 12 months.

I look forward to the government's response. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do propose to accept this question, although I would just want to clarify that it's not the past 12 months; it's December 1, 2006. I presume the intention of the question was back to the beginning of the current cabinet, which is actually December 15. We haven't actually brought forward a formal amendment to the question, but it would be our intention to accept this question because in the interest of openness and accountability, as our Premier has indicated, we will be posting expenses of ministers on the website effective April 1. So that information will be available from April 1 on, and there's no good reason why it couldn't be made available from December 15 on. That is what we will propose to do as I assume that the wording of the question really refers to ministerial expenses of current ministers. Certainly, we'll accept the question and look forward to making that information available.

Mr. R. Miller: Nothing much more to say, Mr. Speaker, other than that I acknowledge the interpretation that the Government House Leader has made. That was the intention of the question, and I'm pleased to see that the government shares our point of view on the matter. We look forward to receiving that information and, as I said, all Albertans having access to it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. The chair has to call a vote here with respect to this, and the chair would want to be very, very clear on what the members are voting on. The members are voting on Motion for a Return 4 as it's written, which says: commencing December 1, 2006, or are the members being asked to vote on a motion that says: commencing December 15, 2006?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, if it would help to clarify. As I read the question, it's clearly for the current ministers, and those expenses actually start after December 15. But it would be good for clarification if we had the unanimous consent of the House to read that as December 15 in the motion.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. members now are voting on a motion which basically says that Motion for a Return 4 should read December 15, 2006, in place of December 1, 2006.

[Motion for a Return 4 carried] head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 208
School (Restrictions on Fees and Fundraising)
Amendment Act, 2007

[Debate adjourned May 14: Mr. Martin speaking]

Mr. Elsalhy: I'm pleased to rise to participate in debate on this particular bill, Bill 208, School (Restrictions on Fees and Fundraising) Amendment Act, 2007, which is sponsored by my colleague from St. Albert. Mr. Speaker, I will start my comments with one impression I've always had, the impression that with minor exceptions, very minimal exceptions, education, at least kindergarten to grade 12, is free or is supposed to be free or ought to be free.

I know that the hon. members from the government caucus always remind us in this House and outside of this Assembly that nothing should be entirely free because, to them, you have to put a dollar value on programs and services and products that the government is responsible for for people to value those services and programs because anything that is free could be abused or taken advantage of somehow. So they want to have some control over programs, services, and products that the government is responsible for for people to value those services and for them to respect those services and to, you know, take care while dealing with these services or using them.

A bit of history, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago, responding to some of my constituents in Edmonton-McClung and other Albertans from all over the province, a petition was commissioned. I put together a legislative petition and approved it with Parliamentary Counsel, and the petition was distributed province-wide in every school. It basically asked for the elimination of school fees that were for instructional essentials, schools fees for the basics. The petition did not ask for the elimination of all school fees. The petition just focused on what is deemed essential, what is deemed of instructional description.

It was widely received, and it was really telling how many people from across this province signed it. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we occasionally get signatures, even this year, from across the province because people understand that this issue did not go away and that it still exists.

Now, I would have to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, to you and to all my colleagues in this House that parents agree that they don't want to relinquish all forms of fundraising and all control over their kids' education. What parents agree on is that there seems to be no definition or no set criteria for what is deemed reasonable and fair and what is not. Parents don't want to relinquish all forms of fundraising for their kids. They don't want to not pay any fees whatsoever. The argument is basically: what is reasonable to expect from those parents, and what should we ask them to be responsible for, and what is pushing it? Again, it's the definition of what's essential and what's extra.

When you consider technology, Mr. Speaker, computer labs in schools, networks, you know, most schools now have networks where more than one computer is connected. When a certain school tells their MLA that their network seems to be failing all the time, that you turn on one computer and all computers crash, something needs to be done. Now, is it a fair expectation to go back to the parents and say, "Please fund raise so we can actually fix the network and replace older computers with newer ones that are more stable"? A school fund raising for photocopying paper is totally unacceptable. A school that's fund raising for desks and textbooks is unacceptable, in my opinion.

Rev. Abbott: It's illegal.

Mr. Elsalhy: Now, some member from the government caucus is saying that it should be illegal, and I agree. It should be illegal, and maybe we should investigate.

The province every now and then comes in and sets the curriculum for certain courses, say, chemistry for example. Schools have to get new textbooks to deliver that new program. So they change the curriculum, and they tell schools that they have to change their textbooks. Now, in my opinion again, I think the province should really cover that cost or at least significantly pitch in to alleviate that concern. You know, if you're changing the curriculum, then support us to bring in the textbook that basically teaches that course.

Now, sometimes different books from different providers or different authors or different sources are available to teach that very new course that the government is asking to be implemented, but the Ministry of Education insists on one of them and not the others. More frequently than not, Mr. Speaker, the one book that they select is more expensive than the others that are available out there, and parents sometimes are puzzled. Why this one in particular, and why not the other ones?

I've had a constituent, Mr. Speaker, who came into my office and told me that she actually visited the Ministry of Education library and looked on the shelf under that particular subject matter and found two other books, but when she confronted the staff and said, you know, "Why not these, and why the one that the minister recommended?" they said, "Let us find out, and we'll get back to you." Then when she didn't hear anything, she went back. She went to that same spot on the shelf, and those books had mysteriously disappeared. When she questioned the staff, she was told: "Oh, you weren't supposed to see them. Actually, we shouldn't have had them on the shelf from the beginning." Maybe she's paranoid. Maybe I'm paranoid. But she felt that, you know, something wasn't entirely above board.

The question of fundraising expectations. Again, what do we consider necessary? What do we consider optional? What do we consider fair and reasonable on the part of parents and guardians? What's really pushing it when we ask them for stuff above and beyond? Fundraising expectations, school fees, bus fees, the cost of supplies, et cetera: you add all of these up, Mr. Speaker, and definitely certain parents are having a hard time making ends meet. Now to make things even worse, you add things like food and clothing, and the situation gets even harder for some parents.

Now, remember that the former Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker, had a reputation for touring the province and meeting with school boards and parents all over the place and listening to the public and listening to educators. I know that most parents and educators agree that that former Minister of Education was really trying to do a good job, and he was better than most who came before him and certainly now is being remembered with some degree of fondness given the current minister's style and the choices he makes.

Remember when that minister told this House and when he told school boards and the media and parents that he was studying this whole issue surrounding school fees and he promised to release his findings, the report if you will, last year, in 2006, before the beginning of the school year '06-07? Then we were told that, you know, final minor details needed to be worked in and that the report was going to be delayed slightly, and it was going to come after the beginning of the school year. Then we were told that another delay was expected and that it was coming sometime in December of 2006. Then the minister lost his cabinet post. This new minister came in, and no word of the report. The ministry staff are not willing or are not allowed to tell us what's in the report or where it is.

My question would be to the current Minister of Education. Where is that report on fundraising and school fees? What's in the report, and why has it not been released to all members of this House and to the public and to the media and to all who are concerned? If that issue was studied and if it was examined that thoroughly, then at least give us the details and give us the evidence that's contained in that report.

Now, the issue of school fees and the issue of fundraising are not new. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, and I remind all my colleagues that this has been something that the Learning Commission studied. We know that there is a tendency in this province, there is a trend developing where task forces and commissions and fact-finding missions are established. They go around the province, and they hold meetings, and they listen to stakeholders and experts. The report is produced, and then the report is shelved, and nothing is done.

Now, the Learning Commission had some 89 or 90 recommendations, if I remember correctly. The province kept telling us which ones they are accepting this time, and which ones they are accepting this time, and so on. While any progress is good, sometimes slow progress is not that good. My question is: where is this one?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak in support of Bill 208, School (Restrictions on Fees and Fundraising) Amendment Act, 2007. First of all, I want to thank the MLA for St. Albert for introducing this private member's bill. As we all know, education is one of the top issues, and the reason for supporting this bill is due to lots of concern raised regarding school fees and fundraising.

For example, the school fees can present an unreasonable economic burden on low-income families. School fees and fundraising allow government to pass on the cost of delivering public services to parents and communities. Higher fees attached to specialized programs can affect who can and who cannot attend or take part based on the family income. Educational opportunities may differ from region to region based on the relative wealth and willingness to pay of parents as well. So school fees and fundraising puts school boards and staff in the position of having to raise money to pay for public services. This takes time and energy away from educating and administration.

Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of Bill 208 is to eliminate school fees and fundraising for all curricular activities. The Department of Education will be ultimately responsible for ensuring that public education is funded adequately following this change. The impact of Bill 208 is that fundraising will not be allowed for raising funds for educational materials but is allowed for extracurricular activities, including clubs, school sports, and extracurricular trips.

Eliminating school fees, Mr. Speaker, will divert responsibility for school fees from parents back to the provincial government. Eliminating school fees would also ensure that quality of education is not determined by the wealth and willingness to pay of parents. The impact of this change will be determined by the willingness of the government to replace this lost source of revenue with government funding.

This bill requires that the minister report to the Legislature with a study to ensure that school programming and instruction will not be negatively affected by the reduction of the school fees. To ensure that students and school boards are not negatively affected by the loss of revenue, the Minister of Education must make a report to the Legislature detailing how the department will ensure that restricting school fees will not negatively affect the quality of education in this province.

Article 26(1) of the United Nations declaration of human rights states: "Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages." School fees can create a financial burden for families, for low-income families in particular. High school fees for some extracurricular activities, including things like band class, field trips, can be prohibitive for some students, leading to a situation in which students obtain different educational experiences based on their financial resources. A refusal to introduce a cap on fees and fundraising or provide a province-wide guideline on these activities leads to confusion and vast differences from school board to school board.

Currently students enrolled in public school face different school fees based on where they live and what school board their school is in. This creates inequalities in the level of financial contribution, a contribution parents are expected to provide for their children's schooling based simply on place of residence.

Mr. Speaker, this government is happy to pass on the cost of public services, and in this case parents and school boards are the ones picking up the slack. Alberta has the money to make public education truly public, so why isn't it moving forward on eliminating school fees? The revenue from school fees represents less than 1 per cent of the Education budget, yet the government refuses to provide the funding necessary to eliminate school fees. Other provinces have done it. Why can't Alberta?

In the year 2005 Alberta parents paid over $40 million so that their children could attend public school. That's an average of $70 per student each year, but fees for things like band classes and class trips can be much higher than that. Ability to pay should not affect the education of K to 12 students.

This year the department provided only a 3 per cent increase in the operational funding. Without reasonable funding for operational costs, school boards will have no choice but to pass on the cost of education to parents. We need action on school fees now to ensure that parents are not paying for this government's refusal to fund our education system adequately.

Following the Alberta Learning Commission report the government pledged to take action on school fees, but instead they have done nothing to address this issue. The government has not even provided a set of guidelines or recommendations for what school boards should charge.

Rev. Abbott: It's called the School Act. You should read it.

Mr. Agnihotri: School Act. Okay. Thank you very much. Thanks for your advice, member sitting on my right-hand side.

An Hon. Member: Far right.

Mr. Agnihotri: Far right, yeah.

Mr. Elsalhy: Extreme right.

Mr. Agnihotri: Extreme right. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about school fees in Alberta very briefly. Currently the School Act allows school boards to charge fees to cover the cost of instructional supplies or materials. Tuition fees are not allowed. In the year 2005 the Alberta School Boards Association released a report showing that while income from school fees remained relatively stable from the year 2000 to 2003, around $31 million, they began increasing thereafter and reached $40 million in the year 2005. This amounts to an average fee of $70 per student each year. There is currently no cap on what school boards can charge in terms of fees, so this means that students in one jurisdiction can pay fees that are entirely different from students in another. Furthermore, there is no unified policy on how to address parents who are unable to pay. Recently there was some controversy in Alberta when a school board directed a file to collection agents.

The government has firmly supported the right of school boards to raise funds through school fees but has also refused to provide adequate funding to school boards. Fully covering the amount of funding gained through school fees would represent only .78 per cent of the current Education budget. Revenue from fundraising in Alberta's schools, Mr. Speaker, has been going up since the year 2001, and the total is about $142 million in Alberta, $280.58 per student.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, then Edmonton-Gold Bar, then Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to address Bill 208, School (Restrictions on Fees and Fundraising) Amendment Act, 2007. I wish to point out the importance of education. A highly educated citizenry is of utmost importance to Alberta's prosperity. Knowledge will enhance Albertans' quality of life. Education shapes the lives of those who partake in it. A reputable and educated workforce will attract investment. Technical training is crucial to the advancement of Alberta's economic success, and education will drive our province to be a world leader.

In 2003 the government of Alberta thoroughly examined our education system through months of extensive consultation and study. The government's aim was to make a great education system even better. Ninety-five all-encompassing recommendations resulted from the Commission on Learning. One specific recommendation is highly relevant to the debate on Bill 208, and that was recommendation 86, which stated:

Clearly define and set province-wide policy on what is considered "basic" and what are considered "extras" in relation to fund-raising by school councils. Limit school councils' role in fund-raising to "extras" consistently defined across the province and require schools and school councils to report annually on their fund-raising activities and how the funds were used.

The commission was concerned about the variation across the province of what was termed as basic and extra when fundraising. In some cases library resources, technology, computer equipment, and playgrounds were considered basic, and therefore fundraising was not allowed. In other schools fundraising contributed significantly to these areas. Consistency is needed across Alberta's school districts to ensure that all students receive an equal level of quality of education.

The commission was reluctant to exclude fundraising altogether. A number of special events and extracurricular activities add value to education but are clearly beyond a core curriculum. Preventing fundraising entirely would result in many of these special events and activities being completely eliminated or the burden being shifted entirely to individual students and their parents, many of whom could not afford the extra costs. Among others, recommendation 86 was supported by the government of Alberta.

In April 2006 Alberta Education reported on the status of the recommendations and reported that during the 2004-2005 fiscal year the minister supported a project plan for province-wide consultations to determine and set province-wide guidelines on what is considered basic and extras in relation to fundraising. Consultations started in spring 2005, and during the 2005-06 fiscal year, Alberta Education consulted with stakeholders, and a draft summary of the findings was prepared for stakeholder comments. Recommendations are being considered in the development of a policy on fundraising.

School fees allow for flexibility and variety within our large education system. Some parents choose to enrol their children in specialized programs and courses, for example. Fees allow these children to get the specific type of education and training they believe is most beneficial to their growth. Because different children have needs and ambitions that sometimes exceed a basic level, I cannot support the restrictive nature of Bill 208.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, then Edmonton-Gold Bar, then Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in support of Bill 208. Speaking as a father of three sons who have been through the Edmonton public school system, I can tell you that this bill speaks to me. I have in my time spent an awful lot of money on extra fees, and I would like to discuss that for a moment here.

Now, I recall that two weeks ago, May 14, when this issue was debated previously, there was some discussion about textbook rental fees and how textbook rental fees were actually meant to provide an incentive to return the books. This isn't quite the case, Mr. Speaker. I have a $75 fee for my son in high school right now. If it really was an incentive to return the books, I'd get that $75 back, but I don't get it back. That $75 is gone. It doesn't matter whether I return the books in tattered condition or whether I return them in pristine shape because he hasn't opened them all year. I don't get my $75 back, so it is not really an incentive to return the books. It is actually a way to raise money for further textbook purchases.

There was also some discussion about how this bill would ban fundraising for extracurricular activities. In fact, it does nothing of the sort. It very specifically says that fundraising for extracurricular activities is allowed. We've heard a lot of discussion about: oh, well, we'd have to go to the minister and ask for money. Wrong again. This bill says very specifically that you can raise money for extracurricular activities.

Now, I have here a list of student fees from the school that my son attends. It starts off that this year I paid $226 in compulsory student fees. I got off lucky. A friend of mine actually has three kids at that school, so her bill came to over $1,000 in compulsory fees. That started off with $75 for textbook rental; a student ID card worth $5, this is like an eighth of a cent of paper; a student handbook, $8; athletics, access to the fitness centre, and intramurals, $13; learning resources – library, periodicals, and novels – $5. I can understand asking for money to rejuvenate a library, so I don't have a problem with that. But there are also technology resources, which includes computer maintenance, printing, and mail-outs, $20; student locker rental, $5 to rent space in the school to put your coat – for some reason you get a dollar back at the end of the year, but I don't know why – and student leadership activities, another $5. That came to $136 in compulsory fees. This is not: you have the option. This is: $136, you must pay this.

There was also – and this goes back to the textbook rental fee – a student caution fee of $90 which is refundable when you return the books. So what it's telling you is that that textbook rental fee is actually a fundraising thing for schools, and it is not the incentive to return your books in good shape because the incentive is the $90 student caution fee, which I also had to pay.

Now, there were also fees for a variety of other courses. Art, $20 or $30 for supplies, I assume. There's a class called communication technology information processing, which is essentially a form of – well, it's like typing class really, and for some reason there's an additional $15 for that one. Food studies, $25; industrial education, $30; fashion studies, $25; English Shakespeare notes, $7; physics 20 and 30 workbooks, $13; phys ed 10 gym uniforms, $25. This uniform, believe me, is not a $25 uniform. The gym uniforms when you get into phys ed 20, which also includes out-of-school trips and speakers, are $80. I can understand some extra money for out-of-school trips – I have no problems with that – but there's also a charge for the phys ed locker, another $4. So you've got $5 for your regular locker and $4 for a phys ed locker. There's a workbook if you're taking Spanish that costs $17. French student resource fee, I don't even know what that means, $10. Instrumental music, understandable that there's some money involved in that because there's equipment, but there's also choral music, which as I understand it is voices, and there's a $20 charge to, I guess, bring your voice.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are an awful lot of charges that accumulate for a typical school, and I believe a lot of it is just designed not as incentive to return books. It's really very small, sort of, nickel-and-dime fundraising things, and there should be a limit put on this. I'm very, very supportive of the Member for St. Albert for bringing forward this bill. Particularly, as I said, as someone who has paid out thousands of dollars over the years, I'm wondering exactly why I've been paying out this much money.

I know that previously the Minister of Education has indicated that it wasn't his government's responsibility to feed and clothe students, but is it not the government's job to fund education fully? We're talking about textbooks, technology, and the whole range of issues that I've discussed in this list of student fees that I have in front of me.

Mr. Speaker, I know where this bill is going. It's going down to defeat, but I certainly would wish that the members opposite would give it some thought. It's legitimately an honest bill, and it would do a lot of Albertans a lot of good.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, then Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 208, the School (Restrictions on Fees and Fundraising) Amendment Act, 2007, is aimed at stopping schools from charging students or parents for services or supplies required by courses of study or education programs.

The province determines education funding to school boards. School boards are then responsible for the allocation of funding to the schools. Alberta's education system is a balance between provincial responsibilities and directions, local school board autonomy, and considerable flexibility for individual schools and communities.

Alberta is not alone in allowing schools to charge for services or supplies. Up until last fall parents in British Columbia were required to pay school fees. The B.C. Supreme Court ruled that a school board is not permitted to charge student fees for any materials required to successfully complete a course for graduation. While this ruling is not binding in Alberta – and I understand that our two systems are very different – the effect of the passage of Bill 208 could be similar.

After the B.C. Supreme Court's ruling it became clear that optional programs and enriching activities like music, trips, and apprenticeship training would soon be eliminated for lack of funding. Charging school fees was the only way to maintain these programs at a high level of quality. This ruling left schools in British Columbia no option but to start cutting some worthwhile programs. This is not the position that anybody wants schools in Alberta to be in. The loss of revenue caused by the passage of this bill would be significant; it's estimated at about $41.5 million in instructional resource fees. Schools in British Columbia could not accommodate a similar loss of fees.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The government of British Columbia has now introduced Bill 20, which does nearly the exact opposite as Bill 208 here. Bill 20 allows school districts to charge fees for some courses and materials, including noninstructional costs for specialty academics and costs in addition to those of a regular education program, the purchase or rental of musical instruments, and the purchase or rental of tools and materials for a student's personal use in trades training or apprenticeship programs.

British Columbia's Bill 20 will not impose financial hardships on students or parents. School boards will be required to have a policy in place to enable participation by students for whom the fee may be a financial hardship. Fees for specialty academics must also be approved annually by boards and school planning councils.

Continuing to permit the charging of reasonable fees to enhance school programs will maintain the exceptional quality of public education in Alberta. Again, while our education systems are far from identical, the example of British Columbia should urge us to seriously consider the potential impacts of Bill 208.

I appreciate the intention of the Member for St. Albert in introducing this bill, but I don't think legislation is needed to address this issue. Because I do not want the quality of education in Alberta to suffer in any way, I will not be supporting Bill 208.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. I have reviewed the bill thoroughly and read it, and I've been listening to the comments made by members on both sides on this bill. I find that perhaps I may contribute to this debate somewhat from various perspectives: from my past, somewhat limited experience in the teaching profession but more so now as a parent of a child in a public system where I am sitting on a parent advisory council actually involved in fundraising for a school.

Some of the comments that I hear from the opposition relevant to registration fees and fundraising fees are not the comments that I'm gathering from my parent colleagues on the parent advisory council and parents of the children with which my daughter attends. If you were to pose the question to taxpayers – do you want fees? – the answer is obvious. The answer always will be: no, I don't want fees. It's like asking somebody: do you want to pay taxes? The answer would be no.

The fact of the matter is that any and all of those services which are provided in schools can be broken down into two categories. There are those mandatory curricular services, which constitute the basics that have to be delivered, which the government of Alberta imposes on school boards, which are further, then, superimposed on schools. Then there are those which we, probably all in this chamber, would agree are good for children. They are beneficial to children, and they enrich their school experience, but they are not the core basics, instruction of which are required by Alberta Education, and are not the basics on which students are tested in various parts of their academic career, particularly grades 3, 6, 9, and 12.

Now, if you look at the bare bones of education, the requirements, all that is within the budget which the school boards then schools receive. Just to put a little bit more factual information on it, it would be of interest, I imagine, to those who are viewing this debate right now or who are interested to read the Hansards later that approximately $27 million is spent per day – $27 million per day – on education between kindergarten and grade 12. We would agree that that's a lot of money.

Somebody will say: well, you have to spend money on that. Indeed, we do. Education is a priority. It's the second-highest expenditure in Alberta's budget. But we also have to compare ourselves to others. How do we compare relative to other provinces? The fact of the matter is that numbers are funny; you can play with them in many different ways, but if you're really honest, if you really compare apples to apples, we do spend, right now, the most on per-student funding between kindergarten and grade 12 in Canada. Budget 2007 ensures that operational grants to schools will increase by 3 per cent in September 2007 in addition to more funding which will be allocated for the small classrooms initiative.

That takes care of the basics of education; now let's talk about those extra activities. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, when I say extra, I don't mean that they're not important. They're very important, but they're not mandated by Alberta Education; hence, taxpayers don't have to be on the hook for those expenses. We as parents want our children to have as rich an educational experience as they can; hence, we volunteer to raise some extra dollars. Those include intramurals, which keep our kids active during lunchtime. Those include field trips. They include uniforms, Mr. Speaker. They include the building of playgrounds on school properties, that we all volunteer for. As a parent I would be hard pressed to say that I ever had another parent come to me and complain about the fundraising.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that having had the chance to work a casino for the school and having had the chance to attend numbers, hundreds of these meetings, they are positive. There's probably more positive that stems from those meetings than negative because those meetings give parents an opportunity to discuss their children's education in a given school, they allow parents to partake in decision-making in a school, and they allow parents to then be involved in the decision-making on how the school will be operated and how dollars will be spent within the school.

Now, if I was to yet put a third hat on, a past hat that I used to wear prior to being elected to this Chamber - I was a chair of the Citizens' Appeal Panel, which is the highest level of appeal for any social benefits in this province – I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there isn't one family in this province who is in receipt of social services who would be faced with children's registration fees that could not request from the department a supplemental benefit for that particular expenditure because the department does have funds allocated for registration of children. It's actually very common. If you were to speak to any social worker within the ministry, they will tell you that in the month prior to registration of children to school many families reliant on social assistance do apply for additional benefits to offset the extra costs of registering kids at school. Furthermore, most schools, if not all schools, very often waive these fees for students whose parents have multiple children, where the fees would pose a hardship on the family, or where it is known to the school that the family simply is not in a position to pay these fees, and these fees are offset by other parents who pay for their children.

So to say that there is gloom and doom in the system and that there are children who are denied public education is simply not true. It's inflammatory, and it doesn't contribute to a good, knowledgeable debate in this House. The fact of the matter is that if you don't pay for these fees out of your right pocket, hon. Member for St. Albert, you will pay for those fees out of your left pocket because those are services that need to be delivered. Unless you argue that we as government should only be mandated to provide our students with basic education, based on which we test our children in grades 3, 6, 9, and 12, if that is the argument, then indeed we can eliminate all these extra fees, and only that will be provided to our students. But if you are of the opinion that we should enrich their educational experience as much as we can, you have a choice of which pocket you want to pay for it from, your right one or your left one, because either the minister will fund it through your taxes or he will fund it through what can be called a user fee, being parent paid and paying for it directly.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the system right now works very well. I have yet to receive phone calls from my constituents saying that their child has been denied registration to his or her school because they couldn't afford to pay. It simply doesn't happen. Are there other activities that we as parents would prefer to do other than sometimes attending a meeting or fundraising? Perhaps. But one of the benefits and one of the pleasures of having a child is to do those things. It's to coach soccer, it's to fund raise, it's to do bottle drives and attend scouting meetings, and that's what we as parents do. Now, to pass a law that will disallow parents from doing that, I don't find it would be productive and conducive to education.

Mr. Speaker, I can't vote in favour of this bill even though it is motherhood and apple pie because, simply, it is not addressing an issue that is out there. At least, it's not an issue that should be at the forefront of our debates in this House. I would suggest to the Member for St. Albert that there are many more important issues that we should be addressing than perhaps putting bills forward that, one could argue, would definitely attract the attention of many parents because you're asking them, "Do you want to pay, or don't you want to pay?" but will do nothing for our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get this opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill 208 this afternoon. I appreciate the efforts of the hon. Member for St. Albert in bringing this much-needed bill forward, and I would certainly encourage all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly to give it serious consideration when we have the opportunity to vote on it.

Before I go too far with my discussion this afternoon, I would like to remind all hon. members of Bill 208, section 49.1(2). Mr.

Speaker, it reads: "Nothing in subsection (1) restricts a school operated by a board from raising funds for extra-curricular activities offered by the school." Some members may be confused, but this clearly gives schools and school boards the option for extracurricular activities for fundraising.

What we find and what I think my hon. colleague is trying to do with this bill is follow the guidelines from the Learning Commission. The Alberta Learning Commission, when it reported, indicated that the government perhaps should take action on school fees. As I understand it now, the government has not even provided a set of guidelines or recommendations on what public school boards should charge or should not charge. Certainly, school fees can be an economic barrier for some.

In fact, yesterday I had an opportunity to have a look at an American newspaper, and on the front page of that paper was a story about how the education system in America was setting up an economic barrier. Very able students with a lot of academic ability from families who had low incomes, they were finding, could not participate in getting a good, solid formal education. Surely, we are not advocating that in this province. I certainly hope not, but after I listened to the remarks from the last speaker, I'm unfortunately concerned because one of the merits, one of the great benefits of a public education system is that everyone has an equal chance regardless of household income. If we don't start to control some of the fees that are being charged, then some people, unfortunately, through no fault of their own, Mr. Speaker, will be left behind.

Now, this government in the past has been very happy to pass on the costs of public services. There's no doubt about that. In this case parents and school boards are the ones again picking up the slack. Alberta has the money to make public education truly public, and I would urge all hon. members to support Bill 208 to ensure that that happens. There's probably not a member in this Assembly that at one point or another has not been involved in school fundraising projects. The hon. member talked about attending a casino or whatever to raise money. Everyone in this day and age is forced to do that.

With the changing curriculum, with the changes in information technology, it is not unusual for schools to organize campaigns to raise money for computers and computer labs and even security systems. Some parent advisory councils have discussed at their meetings whether or not they should spend money that was raised by the parents on a security system. Some school councils have replaced burnt out stoves and fridges that no longer work in home economics classrooms. That's not the role of parents, Mr. Speaker. Parents are already contributing through the tax system.

If there is more money needed to provide a basic public education, then perhaps the government should look at its priorities. One of the priorities that the government could change is the pool of cash that we're allocating through the lottery funds for the subsidies to the horse-racing industry. Well, perhaps we should look at ending those and putting that money directly into the public education system.

It's interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that in 2005 Alberta parents paid over $40 million so that their children could attend public schools. That's an average of $70 per student each year, but fees for things like band classes and class trips can be much higher than that.

Again, I would emphasize that the ability to pay should not affect the education of a K through grade 12 student. The $40 million that we are using to subsidize thoroughbred horse racing: well, perhaps we got our priorities wrong, and we should just pool that cash into our public education system. If that wouldn't be enough, some of the golf courses that we are giving direct grants to could perhaps pay their own way. I'm a golfer. Maybe I've got to pay 50 cents more for a green fee or a dollar more for a green fee. Well, maybe I should pay that.

Maybe these outfits should stand on their own merit and not be going back year after year to the lottery board for money for golf courses. Why should some golf courses get money from this government and not others? It's not fair to the ones that are family owned. It's just so ironic that some golf courses would be getting money from the lottery boards in this province, others are not, yet we're debating about whether or not there should be school fees or there should not be. I think it's another example of how this government has its priorities all wrong, and I would again urge members to please consider support for the hon. Member for St. Albert's Bill 208.

Now, how much revenue comes from school fees? Well, the information that I have, Mr. Speaker, is that revenue from school fees represents less than 1 per cent of the Education budget, yet the government steadfastly refuses to pay. Other provinces have done it. I don't understand why we in this province cannot. In fact, we are recruiting people from all over Canada to come to work here. One principal that I had discussion with last week told me that a lot of the parents that are getting set up in this province are concerned about the school fees. They're concerned about the school fees because a lot of them don't have a lot of financial resources when they first come here. They always respond to the principal in this way: well, where I came from, we didn't have school fees.

Mr. Lukaszuk: That's why they came here.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs says that that's why they came here, and they certainly came to better themselves economically. Perhaps not as many would come if they knew the consequences and how often they would have to open their chequebooks just to get what is considered a basic public education service. Maybe they would decide among themselves that they would be better off staying where they were and that perhaps it's not to their economic advantage to come here. If you have two or three children and you're paying the school fees, whether it's in high school, whether it's in junior high or even in elementary, it's a significant amount of cash in September and, in some cases, then again in January. Everyone, hon. members, should have a chance to participate.

This year the Department of Education is providing only a 3 per cent increase in operational funding, and this was debated and discussed in question period. It's quite interesting to listen to those exchanges, but without reasonable funding for operational costs school boards will have no choice but to pass on the cost of education to parents. So what is the likelihood that the fees are going to go up? Hon. members, it is significant.

Rev. Abbott: It's zero, zero.

Mr. MacDonald: It's not zero as the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is indicating. I wish it was, but unfortunately it will not be. We need action. We need action right now on school fees to ensure that parents are not paying for this government's refusal to fund our public education system adequately.

Thank you.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take a great deal of interest in speaking to Bill 208, which is to restrict extra fees and fundraising by parents and by community groups for schools. My arguments today are in balance, I would suggest, because certainly with a long experience in regard to school fees as a teacher and a parent I have a great deal of reservation as to the effectiveness towards public education that school fees, in fact, employ. The fundraising that schools are basically obliged to do to meet a certain standard of education, again, I found to be quite onerous as both a parent and a teacher. Particularly, I found the use of casinos to fund schools personally very difficult to reconcile in my mind.

It's a problem that only seems to be continuing as parents and schools require a broader range of funding and must seek the sources that will provide that funding in the biggest possible way, which is of course to get a casino licence. But then, you know, the problems associated with that, societal problems being the least of which, make it a difficult choice, I would suggest.

Anyway, as I said, I'm going to present both the pros and cons of this bill. I certainly do have some tentative support for it, though not without some quite significant reservations. This bill seems to add a section that would prohibit fundraising through parents, a provision of normal ministry . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member for Edmonton-Calder, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for St. Albert to close debate on Bill 208.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate, by the way, all the members participating in the debate, but I think what we have to look at here is the question of leadership. We have a new Minister of Education, and I think we have, I believe, a commitment from the government to look at this issue. You know, we have a wonderful information technology division in the Department of Education that we're spending millions of dollars on.

The elimination of school fees for basic education items, providing guidelines for school boards on what fees can be levied, and setting caps on fees were recommended by the Alberta Commission on Learning 2003 report. Now, why do I mention that again? It's because this information technology division – there was a pledge made by the provincial government that they would define and set province-wide policy on what is considered basic and what is considered extra in relationship to the fees. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think the Department of Education has failed us. They've passed out on the achievement test. They haven't passed it.

The failure of the Department of Education to provide guidelines as to what are considered basic and mandatory fees has led to confusion and complexity involved with varying fees across the province. We have a fee in the Lethbridge school system of $40 in elementary, $53 in junior high schools, $71 in high school, and a band fee of $65 for a total of $229.

Now, I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, there are some people in this province, believe it or not – your own document says 1 in 5 – that go to school poor. I think the onus is on this Ministry of Education to look at this matter and give us some direction on school fees. Define what basic education is. Let's look at it carefully. These new texts that are coming out are a tremendous cost to parents, and that's what they're going to have to pay. The discussion of extracurricular: I couldn't believe what I've heard. Let's define it as allowing – remember, this bill allows individual schools to carry on with that funding, and that seems to have been missed.

Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed the debate. I'm quite disappointed. I want to emphasize, you know, that the Minister of Education has talked many times about some new directions in the province, taking the bull by the horns and providing us with some new direction. So far I have seen nothing. I'm waiting. When's he going to come out with something? This was a pledge, a pledge made by this government, a pledge made by this ministry to do something. Maybe the trustees are supposed to be doing it, the Alberta School Trustees' Association. Maybe they've got all of the material over at their office, and they're afraid to give it to us. I don't know. Are they working for the government? I'm not sure.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for allowing me to speak on this. I'll await the vote. Again, I'm going to remember this as something the government has pledged to us. They don't seem to want to take action.

I think there are some trustees in gallery today. I know that I talked to several school boards in Lethbridge, Alberta, last week and southern Alberta. Very disappointed. Some of them are going to be writing the minister and want him to come down and talk to them, see him eyeball to eyeball and talk about the real issues in education. I think this is one of them, and I think this government is missing the boat today.

You know, they set up these situations to listen, but nothing ever happens. The school fees are a perfect example of that. This was a pledge that the government made. Nothing has happened. The commission recommended that they look at this, and nothing has happened. I feel sorry for the parents today, but I'll sit down.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for your tolerance, and thank you very much.

Bill 210 Gaming Planning Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. It's my great pleasure and honour today to begin debate on Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act. I recognize that not all MLAs are given the opportunity to bring forward their own bill, so I am grateful for the opportunity, and I hope that we have a fruitful and thoughtful discussion about the merits of Bill 210.

Bill 210 is quite straightforward. The Gaming Planning Act calls for the creation of a nine-member all-party committee whose mandate is to investigate and report on the gaming industry in Alberta. This committee will conduct the first fully public investigation of all aspects of gaming in this province. The committee will assess the amount of gaming revenue that is allocated to charities and how it is distributed, examine whether we should re-establish the community lottery boards, evaluate the role of charitable organizations and gaming activities, address the social impact of gaming, and examine the role of gaming in Alberta in the future in regard to the number of casinos and gaming machines in the province. In short and in less legal terminology, Bill 210 will allow for a sweeping public review of how gaming is conducted in Alberta and ask Albertans what future they see for gambling in the province of Alberta.

Now, why a public review of gaming? Simply put, gaming is big business in Alberta, very big business. In fact – and this may surprise most hon. members – Alberta has the widest variety of legal gambling options available of any jurisdiction in all of North America. Yes, even the state of Nevada, the world's gambling mecca, does not have as many legal gambling options as does the province of Alberta. For the record the missing element in Nevada is a state-run lottery, which, oddly enough, is illegal in that state.

The dollar figure most often used in discussions of the economic impact of gambling on the Alberta Treasury is the bottom-line figure of profit. For 2005-2006 that number is $1.4 billion. That number tells only part of the story. The amount of money actually gambled, coins put into machines, tells an even more remarkable story. According to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission's annual report of '05-06 Albertans poured more than $11 billion into slot machines and more than $10 billion into VLTs for a total of more than $21 billion into gaming machines alone. There are more than 8,600 gaming machines and casinos in Alberta and another 6,000 VLTs in bars for a total of more than 14,000 gambling machines. There are now 17 casinos in Alberta and nine others in the final stages of the approval process. Little by little gambling has become a very big, very important industry in this province. This is an industry that is crying out for full, open, public scrutiny.

If I may, I'd like to give a little background on why I proposed Bill 210. Under the previous government there was a ministry of gaming. I asked to be assigned to be the critic for the gaming ministry because I truly believe that gambling in Alberta is both a social issue and an industry worthy of scrutiny. While I was gaming critic, I had on a number of occasions asked the minister of gaming what he saw as the future of gaming in Alberta. Was it an industry that we should grow, or should we rein it in? Did the gaming minister have long-range plans for gambling in Alberta? Was there any upper limit on the number of casinos or slot machines that would be allowed in Alberta?

Now, I asked these questions on a number of occasions, and repeatedly I received no substantial answers. After two and a half years of asking the government questions, I was not at all surprised by the nonanswers, but I started to wonder if the government didn't have a long-range plan for gaming, or if they did, were they keeping it a secret? It seemed to me that Albertans deserved an answer and that the public's opinion on gaming should be heard.

When I was the gaming critic, I was inundated with questions from the public about gambling. Was the government addicted to gaming revenue? Was it morally correct for the government to profit from gambling? Was it necessary to have volunteers work long hours for casino funds? Was the division of revenue equitable? The questions just kept coming.

Oddly enough, Mr. Speaker, I believe the government itself is of two minds about gambling. While it is happy to reap the benefits of a hugely profitable industry, it knows that there are moral implications to the whole issue of government profiting from what is still considered by many to be a vice. The government's confused attitude towards gambling is evident in its policy towards promoting the gambling business. While it has allowed and even encouraged a healthy domestic gambling industry, there still remains a prohibition against using gambling imagery in tourism promotion, yet the AGLC annual report notes that the new trend in the industry is destination gaming to attract tourists and businesspeople. It almost seems that the government acknowledges the gaming industry it has helped create but is not really proud of it.

Mr. Speaker, there has not been to my knowledge a full public debate about gaming in Alberta. I know that the government response will be that there was a major review of gambling in Alberta as recently as 2001. This review called Achieving a Balance was a gaming licensing policy review and was quite wide ranging, but it varied significantly from the committee that I am suggesting in Bill 210. The objective of the 2001 review was to "address issues of growth in gaming and continue to ensure the effective regulation and socially-responsible delivery of gaming activities in the province." However, the 2001 review did not hold public hearings into gambling and did not include the all-party element. The gaming licensing policy review of 2001 also did not include a widely distributed report. In fact, the final report was not even tabled with the Clerk of the Legislature.

It is also worth noting that the objective of the 2001 report was to "recommend gaming licensing policies" that spanned the following five years. Well, those five years have passed, and I think it's time for another more all-encompassing review that will set the course for the gaming industry and the administration of the charity model for the next decade. There has also been significant growth in gaming since the 2001 report. In fiscal year 2001 gaming activities in Alberta generated gross sales, that is before prizes, of $14.6 billion from all forms of gambling in Alberta. In '05-06 gross revenue in gaming came in at more than $22 billion.

There is certainly precedent in other provinces for a full review. In 2005 the government of Nova Scotia released its gaming strategy called A Better Balance: Nova Scotia's First Gaming Strategy. Nova Scotia has taken the unusual step of forming the Nova Scotia Gaming Corporation, a Crown corporation governed by the provincial Gaming Control Act that is charged with leading an economically sustainable and socially responsible gaming industry for the benefit of Nova Scotians and their communities.

Should all gambling in Alberta fall under the umbrella of a Crown corporation? Perhaps, but that is just one idea that could come forward during a comprehensive review of gambling in Alberta.

The Gaming Planning Act would also give the committee the right to retain experts. We are fortunate in Alberta to have some renowned gambling experts such as Dr. Garry Smith, a gambling research specialist at the University of Alberta, and Dr. Robert Williams at the University of Lethbridge. You can applaud the University of Lethbridge.

Where will the final report on the Gaming Planning Act take us? Well, clearly there's a public taste for gambling. For the overwhelming majority of Albertans gambling is simply another form of entertainment. Public opinion has changed dramatically when it comes to gambling. While once considered a vice that had to be curtailed at all costs, gambling has gone mainstream. The fact that we now have televised million dollar poker says a lot about how gambling has grown in public acceptance. Back when I first began studying the gaming industry in Alberta, shortly after being named the gaming critic, I would have bet, if you'll pardon the pun, that the public would have been opposed to growing the gaming industry in Alberta if they were asked. Now I'm not so sure. I suspect now that the public's attitude towards gambling overall has changed dramatically, so much so that it could be that today Albertans might even welcome the growth in gaming.

Could Alberta become a Las Vegas north? It may be time to look upon gambling as an actual growth industry and tourist attraction. Could gambling become an economic pillar for Alberta once the oil runs out? Again, another question that needs to be asked. And what of Internet gambling? Clearly, many millions of dollars are spent by Albertans on Internet gambling. Should the government tap into this revenue source as well or let millions in potential revenue slip away? And what of the volunteer sector? I have heard from many charitable groups who have concerns about the volunteer aspect of casino gambling and the tremendous pressures it puts on the volunteers. Even some casino operators I've spoken to have found the volunteer aspect to be problematic.

There are also questions about who qualifies as a charity. Why, for example, should one minor sports team with limited financial needs get the same revenue windfall as a social service agency that serves the needs of hundreds or thousands of disadvantaged people? Should all lottery dollars, regardless of where they're earned, go into a common pool for all Albertans to share? Again, these are questions that need to be asked, and I think Albertans would like to express their opinion on these matters.

Hon. members, before this government or any other government takes further steps in the gambling industry, I believe it is time to consult with the people. It is, after all, the people of Alberta who most benefit from gambling and who have the most to lose.

Hon. members, this is not a witch hunt or an attempt to derail gambling or to promote it. This is not an attempt to embarrass the government in any way. Bill 210 would ask Albertans in the most open and transparent manner possible exactly how they feel about gaming and where we should take the charitable model in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to put this bill before the House, and I look forward to the debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to spend a few moments this afternoon discussing Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Bill 210 proposes a review of gaming policies in Alberta through an all-party gaming review committee. This committee would examine current revenue sharing policies for charities, roles of volunteers and casinos, social impacts of gaming, the future role and scope of gaming in Alberta. There may be many gaming opportunities in this province. This includes VLTs, casinos, lotteries, and horse racing.

Albertans partake in these activities as a source of entertainment and enjoyment. That said, gaming activities must be balanced with the need to be socially responsible. Gaming activities must also be conducted within a legal framework which discourages fraud and corruption. I believe that Alberta's approach to gaming respects and promotes that balance. Most importantly, proceeds from gaming activities benefit Albertans.

Albertans reached a consensus on gaming activities in 1998 as a result of the Lotteries and Gaming Summit held by the provincial government. A number of recommendations emerged from the summit. In general, the recommendations stated that, number one, resources be dedicated toward gaming research, particularly towards prevention and treatment of problem gambling, the social impacts of lotteries and gaming, native gaming issues, and emerging gaming activities; number two, a charitable model for operating casinos and bingo be maintained; number three, all gaming and lottery profits collected by the province be directed to charitable and nonprofit community initiatives; and four, gambling addiction, prevention, and treatment programs be increased. Our current gaming system reflects those recommendations.

Overall the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission regulates all charitable gaming activities in the province. The AGLC strives to maximize the economic benefits of gaming in Alberta. By monitoring gaming establishments and ensuring compliance with gaming regulations, the AGLC delivers on its commitment of generating gaming revenues that benefit community and nonprofit organizations.

The AGLC is one part of the gaming system in Alberta. The other part of the system is the Alberta lottery fund. The Alberta lottery fund collects the government's portion of revenues through gambling activities and lotteries. In this fiscal year the Alberta lottery fund will distribute $1.45 billion to numerous initiatives that improve quality of life, build a stronger Alberta, and provide safe and secure communities.

I want to mention a number of important initiatives supported by the Alberta lottery fund. As announced in the recent budget, the lottery fund will be supporting two major initiatives to improve community facilities in our province. The major community facilities program will provide $280 million over the next two years to assist municipalities and nonprofit organizations to upgrade and build large regional community facilities to encourage community participation and individual well-being. This program will support the construction of sports, recreational, cultural, and wellness facilities. Such facilities are needed to address the expectations of Albertans as they make the province a desirable place to live, work, and grow. The other component of the community facilities development announced in this budget is grants for recreation and sports facilities. The lottery fund will allocate $90 million for this purpose in Budget 2007.

In addition to these two new programs the Alberta lottery fund provides funding to communities through the community facility enhancement program and the community initiatives program. CFEP provides funding to communities to construct and approve community use facilities throughout Alberta. In 2007-2008 CFEP's budget was $38.5 million. The municipalities, First Nations, nonprofit organizations, and regional child service authorities can apply for CFEP grants. CIP supports community projects such as libraries, seniors' services, culture, sports, recreation, and health and wellness initiatives. CIP funding is approved on a matching grant basis. The maximum grant would be $75,000 per project. CIP's budget for 2007-2008 is $30 million.

The lottery fund supports research into the effects of gambling. The Alberta Gaming Research Institute examines the implications of gaming from a number of perspectives. This includes the impact on the health care system; sociocultural, economic, psychological impacts; and the impact on government and industry policy as it relates to gaming. This research institute is a partnership between the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and the University of Lethbridge. The institute will receive $1.6 million from the lottery fund in 2007-2008.

Communities receive additional benefits from gaming activities beyond the Alberta lottery fund. Charitable organizations receive a portion of gaming revenues as a result of volunteering at bingos and casinos, for example.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it's very clear that Albertans benefit from our gaming system. By striking a balance between offering a variety of gaming activities and providing social benefits that improve quality of life, Alberta is a model for other jurisdictions to follow. As a result, I cannot support Bill 210.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and speak in support of Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act. I want to thank the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark for introducing the bill. I really appreciate his time and efforts to prepare all the paperwork for this very important bill.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 210 would allow for a sweeping public review of how gaming is conducted in Alberta and ask Albertans what future they see for gambling in this province. This bill establishes a committee to plan the future role of gaming in Alberta. Part of the mandate of the committee is to reconsider re-establishing community lottery boards for distributing gaming revenues.

I still remember some time ago, when one filmmaker received $5 million within a very short period of time and some other filmmakers were struggling. I just want to ask the minister if he could give us a brief summary, brief details, of how they assess the applications. I just want to make sure favouritism in awarding the grants doesn't happen in any of the programs under this Gaming Planning Act or the CIP grant or CFEP or other programs and general grants in different departments.

I think there should be a fair system for all. We are not against the grants as the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs mentioned in his private member's statement today. I just want to say a few words in response to his private member's statement. We always try to make sure the integrity of all the institutions is protected. We are not against awarding grants to any community. We just want to make sure that the system should be fair for all the recipients. We asked questions recently about the other initiative programs for which we don't have even the rules. We are always talking about the openness, transparency, and accountability, and we are always asking to make sure that the rules are not broken.

Unfortunately, the government made the rules, and they break their own rules. That is not acceptable to us, and that's the reason we raised a few questions about CIP grants and CFEP grants and, for example, the Applewood community. I'm still not sure, even after the investigation in the Auditor General's report, whether that money was recovered or not. I would request the hon. minister because this is a long time, okay? The public wants to know whether that money is recovered or not. Ordinary people, if they don't pay even a small amount of money to the government, receive one letter after another. Then they, you know, collect the money through different agencies.

My question is: why, so far, has this government failed to collect that money which the government is owed from the misused money in one of the grants? It's not only one grant I mentioned, the CIP grant; it was 43 grants. Rules were broken, but the minister very tactfully ignored. He hardly accepted that the rules were broken. Sometimes he said: it's a fraction of people. This was the wording used. Then he said: we give grants to thousands of people, and that was only 43 grants. You know, it's not the number of people, the number of the groups. I mean, he should admit that the rules were broken.

Rev. Abbott: He did. Under his discretion.

Mr. Agnihotri: Listen. Let me finish. I just want to know whether in the future the government maintains the rules they make. That is what we were asking.

The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs keeps on saying – it appears to me that he was trying to portray that we are against awarding those grants. It's not true. This program is good. We always appreciated that. Lots of people see that the rules are broken and that favouritism is going on. If the ruling party MLAs or ministers are involved, they get the grant easily. That was the question.

Now I come to the little bit of background of this Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act, Mr. Speaker, a general and useful chronological listing of the gambling in this province, gaming history and facts. For example, you will find that community lottery boards were eliminated in 2002. Bill 210 addresses the gambling planning in Alberta. Recent government gambling planning initiatives include: 1990 to 2000, gaming licensing policy review initiated; Gaming and Liquor Commission undertakes a review of gambling in Alberta; casino moratorium issued. In the year 2001-2002 the gaming licensing policy review was completed, with 61 recommendations. According to the report the objective of the review was "to recommend gaming licensing policies that will address issues of growth in gaming and continue to ensure the effective regulation and socially responsible delivery of gaming activities in the province over the next five years." It's on page 2-1.

One of the problems with this study is that nearly six years have passed since its completion. In addition, the gaming licensing policy review was commissioned by the Gaming and Liquor Commission without all-party involvement or significant public consultation. During this period, Mr. Speaker, the casino moratorium was lifted. The minister of gaming established the MLA Review Committee on Charitable Gaming Licensing Eligibility and Use of Proceeds in January 2002. Yvonne Fritz was the sole MLA named to the committee.

An Hon. Member: Hey, you can't use the name.

Mr. Agnihotri: Sorry. I'm just giving the reference in the past, Mr. Speaker. I'm not trying to name anybody.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you were in the Assembly this afternoon when the Speaker did make some rulings, and I know that you're aware of it.

Mr. Agnihotri: Yes. I understand. I withdraw that remark.

Mr. Speaker, in 2003 that MLA Review Committee on Charitable Gaming Licensing Eligibility and Use of Proceeds made 42 recommendations, and now, after 2003, my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark introduced this Bill 210.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for bringing this forward. As a former AADAC chair I've seen first-hand some of the negative sides of this industry, and surely continued diligence is required.

Now, Bill 210 as presented, the Gaming Planning Act, proposes establishing an all-party gaming review committee to conduct a sweeping review of gaming practices in Alberta. This would not be the first time that gaming practices in Alberta have been closely scrutinized. The 1998 Lotteries and Gaming Summit, an open, public forum on all aspects of gaming, recommended maintaining the charitable model for operating casinos and bingos, and this model seems to have affected and served Albertans well. It directed all gaming and lottery profits collected by the province to supporting charitable and/or nonprofit community initiatives. The charitable gaming model allows eligible charitable or religious groups to apply for licences to fund raise with casinos, bingos, raffles, and pull tickets. Thousands of charitable and religious groups conduct charitable gaming activities to raise funds for their worthy projects and services.

Last year about a quarter of a billion dollars was invested in Alberta's communities through these initiatives. The government's revenues from ticket lotteries, slot machines, video lottery terminals, and electronic bingo and keno are directed to the Alberta lottery fund. These revenues totalled nearly $1.4 billion in 2005-2006. Each year the lottery fund estimates are voted on right here in the Legislature. These revenues are then allocated through 12 ministries in support of public initiatives and the foundations and grant programs. Due to the support that these monies provided, thousands of volunteer, public, and community-based initiatives are able to proceed each year.

CIP, or the community initiatives program, provides support for project-based initiatives in areas like community services, seniors' services, libraries, arts and culture, sports, education, health, and recreation. I'm sure that pretty much every member has seen this in action and probably heard a lot of positive feedback from CIP.

Now, CFEP, or the community facility enhancement program, provides support for expansion and upgrading of Alberta's many community-use facilities. The Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, the Wild Rose Foundation, and the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund – that's a mouthful – also provide support to causes that improve Albertans' quality of life. It's very affirming to have these people come forward and express their appreciation.

Albertans are probably familiar with some of the government programs that the Alberta lottery fund supports. Last year over $14 million helped support the Alberta film development program, to international acclaim; $4.5 million was dedicated to the prevention of family violence and bullying initiative, something I think all of us in the House can agree on; and $2.3 million helped support learning television. Hundreds of millions more supported other invaluable community services. I wish we heard about this more in the newspapers. Perhaps the news is too good and wouldn't sell enough papers.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, the 2007-2010 business plan for the Solicitor General and Ministry of Public Security sets a goal of ensuring that Alberta's gaming industry operates with integrity and social responsibility and benefits Albertans. In 2005-2006 92 per cent of Albertans reported that they were satisfied with the gaming activity they participated in and that it was provided fairly and in a responsible manner. I recognize that there is a certain percentage missing, and we must continue to take care of that remaining percentage. I believe our AADAC programs are aimed at exactly that: not only treatment but prevention and information.

But back to the task at hand. Given the support of Albertans' volunteer and charitable efforts that gaming affords, the level of satisfaction with gaming in this province, and the fact that the Solicitor General and Ministry of Public Security conduct reviews of gaming policies, legislation, and regulations, I do not believe it's necessary at this point to create yet another committee to review gaming practices in Alberta.

Once again, thank you to Edmonton-Meadowlark. I look forward to the rest of the proceedings.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly start by congratulating and thanking the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for working hard and developing this Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act. I think that the Gaming Planning Act is needed. It certainly would allow for a good public review of how gaming is conducted in Alberta and ask Albertans themselves what future they see for gambling in this province.

Now, if we were to adopt this bill, Mr. Speaker, we would establish a committee to plan the future role of the entire gambling industry in Alberta. Part of the mandate, as I understand it, of the committee is to consider re-establishing community lottery boards for distributing gaming revenues. Certainly, if for no other reason than that, I would urge all hon. members to vote for this bill because we know that back in 2002, when this government got rid of the community lottery boards, there was considerable disappointment in the community. We went to this sort of grip and grin, with Conservative MLAs going across the province with cheques.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, yes. Big, phony cheques.

Mr. MacDonald: Big, phony cheques with their own names on as if it was their own money. This is what happened.

Ms Blakeman: They got caught for doing that.

Mr. MacDonald: They certainly got caught by doing that, and I think it was the diligent research from the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark that caught them. They were going across the province with their own names on the cheques. They were embarrassed into stopping this procedure. As far as I know, some of them may still be at it, but it's wrong. It's totally wrong.

In fact, one Tory MLA wound up in the Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency, and he was late, an hour late, with the cheque. He didn't know his way around the constituency. The local community league phoned me, and they had a great laugh about this. They thought it was hilarious that the Tory MLA didn't know his way around Gold Bar. The meeting was over by the time the cheque presentation was to take place.

An Hon. Member: It sounds like a problem.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a problem, hon. member. It certainly is a problem. That's why we need to go back to the community lottery board model. The allocation of gaming funds I think would go much smoother, much better because the community knows best. There is absolutely nothing the matter with allowing a group of citizens from the community to get together and decide which projects have merit and which ones should be funded and for how much.

Now, do I think golf courses would be getting all these megabucks that they're currently getting from this government if we had this community lottery board plan? I don't think so. I do not think that golf courses would be getting so many lottery board grants. In fact, it's a play on the whole idea of green fees, you know, and the Tory party I think should reconsider through this government this whole plan of supporting some golf courses and not others. We talked about that earlier this afternoon, and I'm not going to continue on that.

I think we need to have a general and a useful listing of gaming in Alberta. If we look at the history and facts of gaming, we will see where it has grown from an industry, or whatever you want to call it – I don't know if industry is the correct term. But it has grown from a source of revenue for this government that was a little over $20 million to what it is now: $1.3 billion, $1.4 billion. In some years it could go as high, Mr. Speaker, as $1.5 billion.

There are 8,600 slot machines in Alberta casinos; 6,000 VLTs in the bars. That's over 14,000 gambling machines. That's a lot. I think it's too many. In fact, I was a volunteer at a casino up in Manning, and I couldn't believe the number of slot machines that were in there, yet there is another casino at Northlands, just a little bit to the south. I don't know how they actually stay in business. If we adopted this bill before we expand the number of casinos, perhaps this committee could have a look at it.

There has been a study that estimates that close to 5 per cent of problem gamblers in Ontario in 2003 accounted for 36 per cent of Ontario gaming revenue. Now, if we were to pass this bill, perhaps our committee, in a public review, could find out exactly what is going on in this province. In this study, according to Dr. Williams, a leading expert on gambling research, First Nations citizens have the highest rate of problem gambling in North America. Now, this is in North America, and I think we should have a look at this for our province. This, again, would be a role for this committee to perform.

Now, we know that there are racetrack slots, casino slots, VLT terminals, and we know the various percentages there to the retailer and to the government. We're talking about a considerable amount of money. Alberta needs not only a plan for gambling but it needs a plan in general, and it's evident to me that there is a plan for neither. How truthful was the former Premier when he finally admitted that this government has no plan. Bill 210 would be a way, certainly, for this government to develop a plan for gambling. Albertans need a say in how the gambling industry will operate in the future. Bill 210 will evaluate best management practices for the gaming industry concerning rural, urban, and aboriginal or First Nations communities.

When we're talking about casinos and we're talking about expanding casinos on First Nations land, I don't know what's next with this government. I would caution all hon. members about this. Legally I don't think there's anything that could be done, but we're setting up these destination resorts for gambling on First Nations land. I suspect that this government is also planning or encouraging private hospitals to be located on those First Nations lands. That'll be the next thing, and there are absolutely no rules or no laws against this. First Nations land is independent. They're autonomous, and if they wanted to set up a private hospital, there would be nothing to stop them. I certainly hope that this government is not using that as a way to finally get their private hospitals in this province, that they've been quietly promoting for the last dozen years or so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, again, Bill 210 considers re-establishing community lottery boards as a means of distributing gaming revenue. That is, as I said earlier, very, very important. Let's get on with it. Let's vote for this bill.

When we would establish under Bill 210 an all-party committee to investigate and report on the gaming industry in Alberta, I, if I was privileged to be a member of this Assembly, would like to sit on that committee. Now, with this committee we would assess the amount of gaming revenue that is allocated to charitable organizations; evaluate the role of charitable organizations in gaming activities, including religious and other volunteer organizations; evaluate the existing formula for allocating gaming revenue to charitable organizations; examine the role of gaming in Alberta . . .

I'm sorry my time is up, Mr. Speaker, but thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and join in the discussion on Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act, which has been proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Alberta's gaming industry is a very important part of community action in this province. Gaming activities contribute to Alberta's quality of life by providing opportunities for charitable groups to raise funds through the provision of entertainment options to adults in Alberta. Our community organizations are able to benefit financially for their respective causes. These revenues, as was indicated, total well over $1.3 billion each year and are used to annually support thousands of volunteer, public, and community-based initiatives.

While there is no all-party committee in place to review gaming policy, I'd like to make it clear to the hon. members that this government is committed to ensuring responsible gaming activities in this province. Certainly, as a ministry we review the gaming activities, and on the funding side we constantly review that. It will be noted that the First Nations funds were developed following some very extensive consultation with existing groups in the province of Alberta.

Alberta's gaming policies are founded on the basis of community giving. This Assembly can be sure that this goal will remain a guiding principle. The public expects the government to control and manage gaming activities in a socially responsible manner and expects appropriate measures to be taken on an ongoing basis.

The shape of the industry is determined by the legislation, regulations, and policies governing gaming activities, or the gaming policy framework of our province. Because we have such a sound system, Albertans have indicated to us in a 2006 survey on gaming that 74 per cent of respondents were pleased with the process of gaming in the province. Of those Albertans who had taken part in gaming activities in the previous year, more than 90 per cent felt that the service was provided in a reasonable and equitable manner.

Having cohesive gaming policies in Alberta means a stronger bond with charitable giving. Promoting a compassionate society is a part of this government's mandate, and we are consistently looking for ways to bolster this mentality. Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, as Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture I was given the mandate from our Premier of setting up a community spirit program. This involves charitable giving to support increases for private charitable donations through tax credits. As per our Budget 2007 Alberta's tax credit system for total annual charitable donations over $200 will increase to 21 per cent from 12.75 per cent. When combined with the federal charitable donations credit, Albertans will receive a 50-cent tax credit for every dollar donated over the $200 threshold.

Volunteerism, Mr. Speaker, encompasses the importance of community spirit in this province. When organizations come together and partake in bingos, casinos, and the like, it presents communities with the opportunity to showcase a sense of pride in the causes for which they are raising funds. This sort of community benefit wouldn't take place without the participation of volunteers.

At the present time gaming proceeds may be used to reimburse volunteers for approved expenses that may be incurred as a result of participating in the administration of charity gaming events. According to the 2003 MLA review committee on charitable gaming report a credit is a value placed by a charitable group on the contribution of that member to volunteering at gaming events. It may be used, for example, to offset the cost of registration fees or competition fees in an acceptable, charitable activity, such as amateur youth athletics or dance. Volunteers working a licensed event may receive credits to help offset the cost of registration fees, competition fees, travel expenses, or other uses currently approved by the AGLC for an approved charitable activity conducted by the licensee.

Mr. Speaker, given the ongoing review of gaming policies that is undertaken by AGLC in conjunction with the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, the role of volunteerism in gaming is continuously being re-evaluated in order to ensure that their safety, reimbursement, and general best interest are certainly front and centre. The cornerstone of Alberta's approach to its gaming and liquor industry is that all activities are conducted in a socially responsible manner, including the role of our volunteers.

Over the course of the past two decades there have been a variety of reviews that have allowed the government to connect with the public and clarify the gaming needs of Albertans. Given the new structure of our government, we can remain confident that the appropriate competencies will be aligned to ensure maximum community benefit in an open and transparent manner. Given the presence of an appropriately regulated gaming industry in Alberta, hon. members can rest assured that the best interests of our volunteers are at heart as well as those of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to join in – well, I can't call what I've heard a debate – an exchange on Bill 210. I really appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark bringing this forward in a very thoughtful way. I can tell by listening to his opening remarks that he had really thought about this. It's frustrating to hear other members respond to it by just reading something off a website because I think what the bill was designed to do was to generate a fulsome discussion about where we are with gambling in the province of Alberta. Is this really where we wanted to be in 2007? Are these really activities that we want people partaking in? Is this really the way we want to fund or reward our volunteer and charitable sectors? Do we feel that we are flowing an appropriate amount of money through to those who have problems with gambling? I think those are questions that should be discussed, and they aren't.

If I may indulge in a little historical vignette here, a little wander backwards in time, I always find it really interesting that this province got into gambling because they wanted to get in ahead of organized crime. Yup. Good reason for getting into gambling: so you could get in there ahead of organized crime. But that is indeed what is on the books as to why this province got into the whole VLT business.

Then in 1997, or it could have been the end of 1996, there was a plebiscite on VLTs across the province. Frankly, it didn't turn out too well. It was really, really close to 50-50. I think that scared the bejesus out of certain people in the government caucus because it really was people saying: "We don't like this. We don't like what it's doing to our communities. We don't like the fact that it's inciting people to gamble more money than they can afford. This is not entertainment." It was really jeopardizing a huge revenue source for the government. I mean, we're well over a billion dollars, and it was VLTs that took us there. The amount of money the government has made from ticket sales, 6/49, our share of the Western, and all of that kind of stuff has been consistent at around the $200 million, $300 million mark. Consistent. It was the VLTs that really vaulted us from that sort of $200 million, $300 million up over a billion dollars. It just rocketed. It's a steady line upwards on the graph if you watch across those years.

So having that plebiscite really scared people, and two things came out of that. One was the gambling summit. It was very fashionable between '97 and 2001 to have summits on everything. We had a justice summit and a gaming summit and a whatnot summit. Lots of summits. Anyway, there was a gaming summit that was held in Medicine Hat, very interesting, and I attended that. Out of that gaming summit came a number of recommendations, most of which have yet to ever be implemented. The then Member for Lacombe-Stettler, Judy Gordon, who served this province very well and very faithfully around gaming issues and how to best find that balance between the community and the money-making aspects, led that gaming summit, gambling summit.

You see it right there; right there is something really interesting. Everybody else was calling it gambling. The government's Public Affairs Bureau kicked into gear, and now we're all going to call it gaming because that made it seem, well, kind of fun and kind of not so dangerous and not such a dark side. It's just about entertainment really, but there's no negative side to that. That's exactly the kind of mindless spin that this government has done over and over and over again. Don't deal with the issue; rename it and give it a better spin.

Anyway, coming out of that gaming summit we had quite a long review that was led by Judy Gordon, and we ended up with community lottery boards, which was a very good idea as a way of distributing those lottery funds back into the community. What was the problem that the government had? They had a whole bunch of communities saying: get rid of this gambling; we don't like it. There was a range of, you know, "We think it's evil" to "We think it's not a good idea" and everything in between. That really scared the government.

So, fine, we're going to give each community a little piece of that action. They can make up their own minds about how they spend it, and guess what? It actually worked. I don't think they intended it to, but it actually did work. Communities very thoughtfully put together committees of people, some of them on a regional basis, and distributed that money. There was no cap to the amount of money they could give out. It was based on a per capita as to how much they actually received in each community. The committee, the lottery board, could decide that "Look, what we really need here is, you know, a new recreation centre, and we're going to put all of our money towards that," and that's what they did, and it worked out. Localized decision-making.

The second thing that flowed out of that VLT plebiscite was core funding. Up until then really the gambling money had only been used for extras, funding the arts, funding the foundations that existed at that time: Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife; the Wild Rose Foundation; Multiculturalism; the Foundation for the Arts; those foundations. That's where the money went.

How could the government make it so that everybody needed to have that lottery money and nobody was going to say: "Well, we don't need it that badly. We'd rather not have the gambling"? All of a sudden – and you guys can go back and find this – the 18 departments found programs that had to be funded through lottery programs. We went from having none of the core funding of core projects funded by lottery dollars to 18 departments having several projects in each of their departments being funded exclusively from lottery dollars. So you can't now say, "Oh, well, we would get rid of gambling completely in the province," because, oh my goodness, that would be capital funding for hospitals and schools, that would be an aboriginal program, that would be some farm programs plus all of the original foundations that had been disseminating money. Very interesting to watch that happen. We're still doing it. Fourteen departments get programs funded by lottery dollars. So it's very hard to say: let's get right out of gambling. The government does its level best to entrench gambling.

I would like to see some of the questions raised in Bill 210 actually discussed because I think the question "How much is enough?" has still not been answered by this province. How much gambling activity is enough? How much revenue generated by gambling activities is enough for this province? Is it limitless? Do citizens in Alberta really want to just keep going: more casinos, more bingos, more VLTs, more slots, more whatever, forever, ad infinitum? I think the answer to that is no, but I don't know where that threshold is reached, and I would like to have that discussion.

What are the consequences of having our funding for the voluntary, charitable sector primarily coming from gambling dollars? What are the consequences for the volunteer sector? Is this really where we want to spend our activities? When we go out for those volunteer activities, we want to help somebody. We want to deliver Meals on Wheels. We want to learn something by going and volunteering for a group that could teach you, like Habitat for Humanity. You could learn a new skill doing that. Or we want to have fun. You could volunteer at any number of festivals to have some fun doing stuff.

That's, I think, what people want to do, not work a casino to raise the money to offset the cost of having your kid play hockey. Is that really how we want to be spending our precious nonworking, nonhousework time, working a bingo or a casino so we can raise money for ourselves and our kids to participate in whatever time they've now got left because they're all spending it working casinos and bingos to raise the money? There's just a ridiculous treadmill that we start to get on with this. I think a lot of people would argue: let me off of this treadmill; this is not what I anticipated around this.

Do we really need this money to be doing that? Shouldn't it be just funded by regular sources through general revenue? All of those questions. We don't get the opportunity to discuss it. Why? Because the government squelches it. They darn well need that money, and they're going to weave it into the texture of everything to try and make sure those tentacles are really deep and can't get pulled back out again by another scary thing like a VLT plebiscite.

I've heard a number of references here to the voluntary sector. That's one thing that I keep raising here: the fragility of that voluntary, charitable, NGO sector right now. It has been hollowed out by choices that this government has made. We have a number of organizations that exist to serve or provide services in that sector who are literally hollowed out. They're quite fragile. Why? Well, because they're having to try and raise a number of their dollars for operation, thereby subsidizing the services that they're offering to make the province a better place. In a number of cases they're actually contracted by the government to provide services, and they're still having to go and raise charitable dollars to subsidize those services that the government is giving.

Please vote for Bill 210.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act, is aimed at establishing an all-party gaming review committee to undertake a review of gaming practices in the province. The provincial gaming industry is appropriately regulated and controlled. Reviews have been conducted to improve Alberta Gaming practices. Regular annual reports occur, falling in line with the Alberta government's priority of being open and transparent. The 2006 survey of Albertans' views on gaming-related matters indicated that 74 per cent of respondents were satisfied with the conduct of legal gaming in Alberta. Of those who had participated in a gaming activity in the previous year, over 90 per cent were satisfied that the activity was provided fairly and in a responsible manner.

The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission provides recommendations to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security regarding the procedures, licences, and licensing of gaming in the province. This ensures that key policy objectives are being met according to legislative and regulatory requirements.

Each year the lottery fund estimates are voted on right here in the provincial Legislature, ensuring transparency and full accountability. Thousands of volunteer, charitable, and nonprofit groups across the province benefit from the Alberta lottery fund each year. A complete list of lottery fund dollars allocated to the various ministries and a searchable database containing the groups and communities that receive funding can be found online at albertalotteryfund.ca. Using key strategies, like ensuring that lottery fund revenues are appropriately allocated and helping to inform Albertans about lottery-funded initiatives, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission manages the Alberta lottery fund to enhance the quality of life for all Albertans.

The committee that Bill 210 proposes to create would look at re-establishing community lottery boards to distribute lottery funds. Now, the community lottery boards were locally administered and made up of community representatives who were recruited or appointed by regional nominating committees. The community lottery boards were discontinued at the end of the 2002 fiscal period and replaced by the community initiatives program in order to increase transparency.

The government of Alberta created the CIP to establish standard criteria for CIP funding. This allows lottery funds to be allocated according to the priorities of Alberta communities and ensures that the funds are being utilized by communities appropriately. The CIP provides funds from the Alberta lottery fund to enhance and enrich project-based community initiatives throughout Alberta. We're all aware of these. They happen in all of our communities.

The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission manages and controls the growth of Alberta's gaming and liquor industries responsibly and with integrity. This means that all industry players compete on a level playing field where the rules are fair, clear, and consistently applied. It means that sound policy and effective regulation work hand in hand with monitoring and enforcement. It means a commitment to working in partnership with charities and private businesses to deliver high-quality services to the public. It means a commitment to excellence, openness, and accountability.

Now, charities report on the use of proceeds on an ongoing basis through the annual Charitable Gaming in Alberta review document, which includes tables that summarize how charitable and religious groups use the proceeds from gaming. This annual review provides information about Alberta's charitable gaming model, including which groups are eligible for gaming licences, how charitable gaming funds are used, the amount generated by charities from each gaming activity, and how the province maintains the integrity of gaming activity.

Many reviews have been conducted regarding gaming practices in Alberta. These reviews have produced numerous recommendations that have been implemented to improve the transparency of gaming activity. A Lotteries and Gaming Summit was held in 1998 to fulfill a recommendation of the 1995 lottery review. The committee called for the impact of changes in gaming to be monitored on an ongoing basis. Now, the summit produced eight core recommendations. Recommendation 7 dealt directly with transparency and accountability. It recommended that lottery and gaming regulators and the provincial government improve accountability and disclosure of gaming activity in the province. This would include keeping citizens better informed of the amount, type, cost – both social and financial – and the benefits of gaming activity in the province. All of these recommendations were adopted by the government of Alberta.

Now, the MLA Review Committee on Charitable Gaming Licensing Eligibility and Use of Proceeds report included 42 recommendations that were adopted by the Alberta government. Building on these recommendations, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission has consolidated the current licensing eligibility and the use of proceeds policies into one set of policies.

In addition to the variety of reviews that have taken place, the provincial gaming industry remains properly monitored and controlled. Past reviews have produced recommendations on ways to ensure that gaming practices in Alberta are accountable and transparent, and most recommendations from these reviews have been adopted and are current practice.

Bill 210 is redundant and unnecessary. The Alberta government conducts reviews and continually monitors gaming activity to ensure that the scope of gaming in Alberta is open and transparent and meets the needs of the citizens of this province.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Disclosure of Political Donations

508. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to amend section 2 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act to make donations to leadership campaigns subject to the same contribution limits and disclosure requirements as other political donations.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to indicate that the Alberta New Democrats have been actively advocating this particular approach for a considerable period of time. It became evident to us during the recent leadership campaign of the Progressive Conservative Party that this particular piece of legislation or clause of legislation was absent and that it could give rise to significant difficulties thereby. During that particular campaign race we raised the issue repeatedly and actually were partially successful in getting a number of the candidates to reveal part of their list of donors and the money that they had raised.

What was clear, Mr. Speaker, during that campaign was just how much money was actually being donated to the various campaigns, the various leadership races. In particular, there were campaigns that raised and spent over a million dollars for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party. For example, TransAlta, Telus, and a number of law firms donated a considerable amount of money. I won't bore members of the House because it's a matter of public record exactly how much some of the candidates received. The fact remains, though, that there are considerable gaps in the public's knowledge, considerable gaps because there is no legislation which requires leadership contenders to disclose. However, if these donations were given to a political party, then disclosure would be required.

In our view, a number of the leadership contenders, including the Premier, have failed to demonstrate openness and transparency because they have not disclosed the contributions of all of their donors to their leadership campaigns. The Premier has failed to disclose the sources of 80 of his contributions, totalling almost $163,000. There might be talk about transparent and open government, but Albertans know that corporations who donate to political parties or to candidates for the leadership of political parties expect that their issues and concerns will be taken more seriously. The claim that this government is committed to governing with transparency and accountability rings false in the ears of Albertans when even the Premier refuses to reveal who his supporters are.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that big energy companies in particular donate tens of thousands of dollars to the Progressive Conservative war chest on an annual basis, but we don't know in full whether they made similar donations to any of the leadership candidates either before the leadership vote was held or after cabinet appointments were announced. Open disclosure of campaign contributions actually protects former leadership candidates and ministers in particular from even a whiff of wrongdoing. The Premier's aim to govern with transparency and accountability got off to a bad start with their proposed $5,000 access-for-cash fundraiser. Had that particular event taken place, it would have placed the Premier as well as the ministers of health and Finance in a conflict of interest.

Although the scheme did not occur, resulting in the Ethics Commissioner clearing the Premier and the ministers of any wrongdoing, the May 11 report of the Ethics Commissioner says:

There have been numerous media items about the lack of "rules" for leadership campaigns and, most specifically, the fact that no candidate is required to disclose publicly the names of contributors and the amounts contributed. Political campaign contributions are often viewed in media items and by "watchdog agencies" as potential conflicts of interest and even potential corruption.

In the interests of protecting leadership contestants in all parties from the slightest appearance of conflicts of interest or the perception of corruption, it's vital that the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act be amended to include the leadership contestants and guide and govern the financing of their campaigns.

The government has time and again voiced its support for legislation governing the financing of leadership campaigns. In fact, the Premier has vowed to introduce legislation on leadership campaign disclosure following the approval of his party. We believe that this position was adopted as a result of the pressure which the Alberta New Democrats applied throughout and following the conclusion of the PC's leadership race. The approval for that was gained when delegates to the PC convention in early May endorsed the development of provincial legislation that would set campaign finance contribution and disclosure rules for leadership elections for all political parties in Alberta. It's now time, Mr. Speaker, for the government to act on this endorsement.

I want to just add that federally and in provinces including Manitoba, Ontario, and British Columbia there is already legislation that governs contributions and disclosures for party leadership campaigns. This legislation allows residents in those provinces and all of us at the federal level to monitor who is supporting our leaders and to keep an eye on whose interests the government is promoting. Surely, Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve the same respect and consideration.

Section 2 of Alberta's Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act presently reads:

This Act does not apply to campaigns and conventions carried on or held in relation to the leadership of a registered [political] party or in relation to constituency association nominations for endorsement of official party candidates.

So, in other words, Mr. Speaker, the current legislation includes a clause which specifically exempts leadership races or races for constituency association nominations, and it could very simply be remedied if this particular exemption was removed from the legislation.

The act also stipulates that contributions made to a candidate in a provincial election that in the aggregate exceed $375 during the course of the campaign must be reported with the contributor's name and address to the Chief Electoral Officer and will be a matter of public record. This is very simple. This is very straightforward. It ought to apply in leadership campaigns as well.

The Alberta NDP has established leadership contest financing rules which set the limit at $50,000. All contributions and expenses must be reported to the provincial executive. The maximum individual contribution limit is $5,000. Those are the rules around leadership races in the New Democratic Party.

The PC government has made a number of statements on financing legislation. On Wednesday, February 28 of this year, the Premier avowed to the Calgary Herald editorial board that he would introduce legislation demanding that all donations to party leadership campaigns be fully disclosed. He said that he would run it by the party first.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that we believe that this is essential. There are very good and sound reasons why disclosure rules are applied in the case of political parties, and that's been accepted by everyone. That's been accepted by the Conservatives and the Liberals, and this should also be accepted by all sides of the House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood more. As a matter of fact, I do appreciate the opportunity to join in the discussion of Motion 508, and it is important that we address Albertans' concerns regarding the sources of campaign financing.

Mr. Speaker, the most recent leadership race of which our great Premier, Alberta's 13th Premier, the Hon. Ed Stelmach . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you were here in question period today when you heard the Speaker make remarks about naming other members in this Assembly. This is the second time this afternoon that the same thing is occurring, so I'm cautioning you. Please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill is rising on a point of order on this matter?

Point of Order
Referring to a Member by Name

Dr. Brown: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Speaker has already ruled once today on Beauchesne 484 that it's not the custom in this House to refer to members by their proper names. My friend has just done so, and I'm rising on that point of order.

The Acting Speaker: I think the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar wants to withdraw his remarks so that we can proceed with the rest of the debate.

Rev. Abbott: Absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do apologize sincerely to the House and to the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill as well.

Debate Continued

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, the most recent leadership race directed attention towards leadership contests and the disclosure of the contestants' financial contributions. The disclosure of a contestant's finances for a political party leadership campaign is an issue that is being dealt with by the government of Alberta under the direction of our new Premier, the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. How's that, Mr. Speaker? [some applause] Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, accountability and transparency are characteristics of our new government, and I want to emphasize that we will continue to take appropriate action to improve the democratic process when necessary.

[The Speaker in the chair]

For example, Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge the successful review of the Local Authorities Election Act, which was conducted in 2005. It demonstrates our ambition to further improve the democratic process for Albertans. The review took place after general, municipal, and school board elections, and it was an enhanced review that concentrated on the elimination of any discrepancies associated with municipal elections. The review was led by an MLA committee that focused on the following local election procedures and issues: voter identification and lists, special ballots, campaign advertising, and terms of office. The committee also integrated the recommendations from the Clark inspection report, which analyzed the alleged irregularities in the 2004 Calgary ward 10 election.

Mr. Speaker, the public was encouraged to provide input throughout the review process. Public participation in the election process is essential to the success of democracy. The mandate for the review included the following objectives: number one, promoting "integrity and public confidence in the election processes by setting appropriate election standards that [would] result in more secure and transparent election processes; number two, ensuring that "legislation permits small and large jurisdictions to respond to their specific election process needs by permitting some discretionary procedural options within the legislation's framework."

At the conclusion of the review, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, recommendations were provided, and, yes, these suggestions are being considered for the upcoming 2007 municipal and school board elections. My wish is that we will be like PEI and that we will see an 85 to 90 per cent turnout for these elections.

In closing, our government has been actively engaged in making sure that all election procedures and activities in Alberta are held to adequate standards; in fact, let me even say excellent – excellent – standards, Mr. Speaker, the highest in the country. The Alberta government will not remiss on the concerns put forth by Motion 508. As the hon. Premier has promised, he will continue to investigate all of the factors that impact the disclosure of party leadership campaign contributions and make an informed decision that is in the best interest of our democracy. He will do what's right for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a list of some six speakers, and we'll go in this order: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, and I'll convey the remaining speakers later.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and participate in the debate on Motion 508, limitations and disclosure of leadership campaign finances. I support this motion because this motion fosters openness and transparency.

This motion supports the Alberta Liberal appeal for democratic renewal in Alberta. This motion brings openness, accountability, and transparency to elections, leadership campaigns, and the government. By having combined maximums for donations to the party, candidate, or constituency associations, no Albertan or lobby group will have a stronger voice in the Legislature. We cannot stop at campaign finance reforms. We need a lobbyist registry, whistleblower protection, et cetera.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is dramatically behind the federal government and other provinces' initiatives to create transparency during leadership campaigns. If full disclosure is important for Ottawa and other provinces, why is it unnecessary here in Alberta? Albertans have a right to know who financially backs leadership candidates and at what price. By disclosing who is contributing and what the contributors may expect in return, it would offer a step in the right direction to correcting the democratic deficit in Alberta. Unless the Premier fully discloses leadership donors, concerns about potential conflicts of interest will continue to plague him.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for action on this issue. We are sick and tired of listening to lip service from this government. If you don't, stop claiming that the government is accountable, transparent, and open.

I have read so many articles from the media indicating that they were unsatisfied with the lack of regulation on their donations and disclosure being up to the discretion of the candidates themselves. Moreover, Democracy Watch cautioned against using broad donation categories and suggested that donors over a set amount should be named with the exact amount given.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to talk a little bit about the background of this issue. In British Columbia leadership candidates must file their campaign contributions for amounts greater than $250 with Elections B.C. but are still allowed to list anonymous donors. In Ontario every leadership candidate must fully disclose all their patrons who donate more than $100 even though there is no cap on donations. In the year 2001 Manitoba amended their Elections Finances Act to regulate a $3,000 combined maximum that individuals could donate to any party, any provincial candidate, or to any constituency association. Moreover, Manitoba changed their legislation so that registered political parties, candidates, constituency associations must disclose to Elections Manitoba the details of all contributions, not just the contributions of $250 or more. With the recent passing of the Federal Accountability Act, December 2006, federal party leadership candidates must disclose their donors who give more than $200 up to a maximum of $1,000 and have their finances audited when the campaign is finished.

In Alberta the regulation of donations to leadership campaigns is notably absent. Over the past year the concern for the lack of legislation governing leadership candidates was evident, especially through the recent PC Party leadership campaign. Adequate guidelines are required with adequate disclosure. Until full disclosure is given, everyone in Alberta should assume that the Premier is in conflict of interest until he proves that he isn't when he discloses all his donors.

In August 2006, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Klein made an announcement of his retirement. The Tory leadership candidates began raising money unofficially for campaigns, which raised questions regarding public disclosure. After that, everybody knows, the former Premier, Mr. Klein, resigned, and then the leadership started. Four of the present ministers were candidates at that time, and at least three of them, you know, did not disclose the full statement. One or two might have an anonymous donors list.

If this government claims that they are open, they are transparent, they are accountable, it's about time they show what they believe in. It's what Albertans are looking for. They expect all of us to be open and transparent. Why do we delay?

Already so many questions have been asked during the question period time. Wherever I go, I mean personally, in my riding and outside my riding, the people keep on asking the same question again and again. Why some ministers . . . [interjections] Okay. Settle down. Maybe it's not a big issue for you guys, but Albertans are serious.

They want to know the reason why this government is hiding the money they received from – I have to choose the words because I should be very careful. What is the government hiding? Why don't they come clean and show Albertans the money they received, from $1 to maybe $1 million – who knows? – and what benefits they are going to get if somebody pays them huge amounts of money. I don't hesitate to say that if this is true, then this is corruption. I mean, why put the people in the dark?

All the candidates who were involved in the Tory leadership contest, I would request them: please come forward; please provide the full details, not the anonymous donors only but a full, complete list. Then we will believe that, yes, you know, the government is serious and they act on whatever they said. Otherwise, not only myself but the majority of Albertans will suspect that this government is just giving us lip service, nothing else. Okay? It's about time.

I already mentioned some background in other provinces and even the federal government. I mean, if they can do it, why can't we do it? It's a very serious thing if the government doesn't come clean, if four or five of the present ministers who were involved in the Tory leadership contest don't disclose their donors list. Lots of people can assume that they are hiding something. There will be many, many questions not only from my constituency but from all over Alberta. They are suspecting this government . . . [Mr. Agnihotri's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have to move on.

As this is a topic of considerable interest, it's 8:20 in Prince Edward Island, and the projections are that there will be a new government in Prince Edward Island. The Liberals are currently leading, projecting 18-plus seats.

The hon. Member for Red-Deer South, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order?

Mr. Lukaszuk: That's right.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have risen prior, but I haven't had a chance to capture the chair's attention. Hence it seems a little out of order.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, Mr. Speaker, has been making allegations that definitely need to be dealt with by this chair.

Ms Blakeman: Citation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I will get to my citations in due course.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please have a chair for a second, okay? Today is private members' business. If there's a point of order, make it very, very brief because I don't want this Assembly to use its time, which is only 60 minutes for this matter, dealing with procedural wrangling. So make it very brief.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This matter is really important. The citation is 23(h), (i), (j) of the Standing Orders. The Auditor General has dealt conclusively with the issue of donations to the Progressive Conservative Party leadership race. To be making comments – and he is attributing to certain members. He names the minister. He names the Premier of this province. He tells them to come clean. He makes allegations to the fact that they have received large amounts of money and that now they need to come clean to Albertans, which by reference – I don't think I'm drawing a long, far-fetched reference – means that they are not clean, that they're doing something dirty – come clean on the money that you have received – and that they're being influenced by certain donors on decisions that they are now making in their official capacity as ministers of the Crown and Premier of this province. It's simply unacceptable . . .

The Speaker: I'll interrupt the hon. member to say that the whole purpose of this motion is the debate. So the chair and hon. members will look forward to the hon. Member for Red Deer-South making exactly those points if the hon. member chooses to.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to enter into this debate. I want to actually approach this motion through a series of questions that, actually, the motion begs. The first question is: should there be disclosure requirements and contribution rules in leadership campaigns? That will be the first question that really has to be answered in this motion. If the answer to that is yes, then the second question should be: should this be governed by individual parties or governed by an act of this Legislature? If the answer to that question is yes, then you move to the third question, which is: if you agree that legislation should govern all parties, what should the rules be? In fact, you could ask a fourth question, although I'm not going to deal with the fourth question today. The fourth question would be: should those rules be put in place for municipal elections, et cetera?

I want to deal with the questions in the order that I've listed them. On the first question: should there be disclosure requirements and contribution rules in leadership campaigns? I think that quite clearly the answer to that is: yes, there should be. In our party, the party that I represent, we grappled with that particular question at our most recent annual general meeting. Quite clearly on that question overwhelmingly the answer was: yes, there should be disclosure requirements and contribution rules in leadership campaigns.

That moves us to the second question, which is: should this be governed by individual parties, or should this be governed by an act of the Legislature? On this question there are actually compelling arguments on both sides to either agree with that or to not agree with that. There would be a really compelling argument that party business is party business and that you wouldn't want government to reach their hand into party business on all sorts of matters, including this one. In fact, that was one of the arguments that was presented at the annual general meeting.

Conversely, one of the reasons that I think this matter became evident during the last leadership campaign that our party had is because we invited all Albertans to participate in the leadership race, regardless of whether they might currently hold a membership in our party at the time. Our process was such that it was open to all the people of Alberta. They could participate, and they did so because they knew that the chosen leader of our party would also become the Premier, and hence I think they also demanded greater accountability. So in my own view that is a compelling enough reason to answer this second question also in the affirmative, that in this case because of the process that our party, in fact, has established, making it open, there should be requirements in legislation to make this happen.

Again, there are compelling reasons on both sides of this debate, and as our own party grappled with that question, it was not so clearly defined. It was probably more 60-40 in favour of legislation versus having it dealt with internally. I think, frankly, there are good arguments to be made on both sides. In my case, as I've said, I land in favour of the legislation.

This motion proposes, really, to make some rules, and it basically says that the rules should be the ones that are in effect currently for other matters of general elections. On this one I'm not so categorical. I think that is a good framework from which to start the discussion, but there are many more elements to rules for leadership that need to be discussed, including what form of legal structure you might accept for how you would accept donations, for time periods, for spending. So on that one, even though I'm going to vote in favour of this motion, I want it to be clearly understood that I'm not so categorically stuck to that last phrase in the motion that says these are the rules we're going to follow. I think that discussion has to happen yet in this Legislature and among all parties before we decide what the rules, in fact, are going to be on the motion.

I will accept the member's intent on his motion, that he, in fact, wants to create this transparency and accountability to Albertans. On that basis I will support the member in this motion.

The Speaker: The results from Prince Edward Island, if hon. members are interested: 293 polls out of 319. I guess at 8:28 P.E.I. time, so far unofficial results: Liberals 23, PCs 4.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to participate in the discussion or the debate on Motion 508 this evening, certainly a motion that I intend to support. I thank the hon. member for bringing it forward. It certainly doesn't go, in my opinion, far enough. We need to have a significant review of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, but it's a start. To amend section 2 to deal with donations to leadership campaigns certainly has merit. I would urge all hon. members to support it.

We should go even further than this. We should change the act so that prosecution – and this goes to section 52, Mr. Speaker: “A prosecution under this Act may be commenced within 2 years of the commission of the alleged offence but not afterwards.” Well, I think we should open that up too, hon. member, and also the restrictions here under section 53: “No prosecution shall be instituted under this Act without the consent of the Chief Electoral Officer.” I think if the Alberta Justice officials or any other officials would like to go after someone for a mistake or an error, then they have every right to do so. I don't understand why the office of the Chief Electoral Officer should have this power in this case.

Specifically to section 2, there has been a long list of campaign donations to respective leadership hopefuls from across the aisle. Some of those leadership hopefuls have given disclosure; others have not. Some may at some point give disclosure. But what I find interesting in this discussion is that we are not talking about limiting the amount an individual can give, and I think that there should be strict limits on the amount of money that can be donated, whether it's to an election campaign or to a leadership campaign. There should be strict limits. I personally would like to see corporations and unions prevented, prohibited, from donating to political parties. If your name is not on the voters' list, you should not be able to donate to the political process. This is my personal view, Mr. Speaker.

That being said, this is a very competitive occupation. One has to get donations. If you're going to compete with the Progressive Conservatives, you've got to take donations where you can get them. But I think we would be better served in this House and in this province if we were to take Motion 508 and expand on it so that we limit the amount of money that can be donated and where it can come from. I think we would have a better democracy.

Now, I'm pleased to see that at the May 4, 5, and 6 AGM that the Progressive Conservative Party held in Edmonton there was financial reform in the air. There was a notice of motion for a constitutional amendment from Calgary-Foothills, I believe, Mr. Speaker, and there was an effort with this notice of motion to make transactions and affairs that occur during the year regarding financial reporting more consistent. I commend the Progressive Conservative Party for doing that, and I have to ask the question: why?

Well, when we look at the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, we can see where there have been examples in the recent past where things just haven't worked out, and I'm referring, Mr. Speaker, to the foundation fund. I was going through the books up there last fall at Elections Alberta, and I saw reference to this foundation fund in the act. Some years where the Progressive Conservative Party was obligated to report the expenditures from this fund, they didn't. They didn't. The fund is of significant value. It's $1.6 million, as I understand it, and only the interest from that fund can be transferred into the general revenue of the party. There were years where there was no disclosure of how this money was spent. You had to look through other parts of the financial statement to try to determine where the money went.

Some years, Mr. Speaker, there was half a million dollars – no, I think $240,000, I should say; excuse me, I stand corrected – transferred from the fund to the party. Other years it's as little as $40,000, $50,000. But it is quite interesting. I'm not satisfied with the explanation I got from the office of the Chief Electoral Officer in regard to this matter. In fact, I had to wait a long time, from October 31, 2006, through to March 22, 2007. I'm willing to quote here, Mr. Speaker, a part of this letter, and it reads:

It is unfortunate that neither the records nor the annual reports themselves, for the missing years, were found. While the public files maintained by this Office are lacking some of the annual reports, we have been assured by the Association and their Auditors that no were added to the Trust, and that the only expenditures from the Trust were the transfer of earnings back to the Association for the period in which annual reports were not filed.

Now, this letter that I received, I think there's a word missing there because it certainly doesn't make any sense to me at this time.

This is yet another example of why we have to support the hon. member with his motion. Not only do we have to support it; we have to expand on it because there are many things that we can do here. I understand that each political party has volunteers that do a lot of their work, and mistakes can be made. Mistakes can be made. We've made mistakes.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. The Conservative Party, by my calculations, has made mistakes, and certainly the New Democrats have made mistakes in addition and subtraction. Everyone who campaigns knows that there is a group of volunteers that do their very best. These rules seem complex. Volunteers can make mistakes, and that's why you have an auditing process. None of these disclosures should be rubber-stamped, just checked over and "Yeah, that's good; that's good enough" and left to be filed. I think the election office should have a good look at all parties' respective filings before they put them in public view and make sure that they're right. Make sure that they're right. Hopefully, in the near future when there are leadership campaigns, regardless for which party, that will be part of the disclosure that's available in that little room that's off to the right as you go to the office of Elections Alberta. Regardless of who they are, they can go there and see for themselves who gave what money.

With that, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of individuals who have expressed interest in this matter, and I will cede the floor to another hon. member of the House. Thank you.

The Speaker: I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, then the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Just to give you the final update with respect to P.E.I., at 8:36 this evening it shows that with 296 polls out of 319 reporting, the Liberal Party, with 52.9 per cent of the vote, has 23 seats; the Progressive Conservative Party, with 41.5 per cent of the vote, has four seats; the Green Party, with 3 per cent of the vote, has zero seats; the NDP, with 1.9 per cent of the vote, has zero seats; and the independents, with 0.8 per cent, have zero seats.

I've received an impassioned plea from the leader of the third party for me to announce the results of the Manitoba election, which showed ND 36, PC 19, Liberal 2.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Motion 508 proposes that the government include donations to political party campaigns under section 2 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. This would make donations to a leadership campaign subject to the same guidelines as donations received by political parties.

The topic of leadership campaign donations is especially popular at this time, as we all know, because of the recent prominent leadership contest. I don't know if Mr. Speaker would like to announce the results of the latest election here in this province. I'll just continue on with my speech, though. That leadership contest recently resulted in the election of the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville – and I will not say his name, Mr. Speaker – to the office of Premier.

The first priority of the hon. Premier is to govern with integrity and transparency. We hear about that very regularly here, including with Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, which will let Albertans know who's accessing government and who's providing services to government. All-party committees have been established, allowing for additional debates on bills and items of importance. I'm looking forward to working with our colleagues from various parts of the House on that. They include the Affordable Housing Task Force, and they allow members on both sides of the House to co-operate in the development of legislation, I trust, a huge step forward.

Since taking office, this government has posted flight logs from government aircraft on the Internet, and soon ministerial office expenses will be posted online for all Albertans to see.

There is no doubt that this government is taking great steps in acting in an honourable, transparent manner. However, Mr. Speaker, that does not mean the government is standing still or is closed to new ideas. Our Premier is committed to discussing the issue of donations to leadership campaigns with the membership of the Alberta Progressive Conservative Party. We know that, and we know that it's critical because leadership campaigns are a function of political parties, and political parties are critical stakeholders in this process no matter what political stripe we wear.

If you know the hon. Premier at all, you know that listening is one of his greatest assets, an admirable quality, and in addition to discussing leadership and campaign financing laws with members of the PC Party, he is keen to hear from all Albertans on this topic. Therefore, today's motion is very much accepted.

Mr. Speaker, briefly, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act may be the right model for disclosing leadership campaign contributions. The act requires political parties, constituencies, and candidates to disclose contributions by filing two reports, one outlining all contributions less than the magic number of $375.01 in aggregate form from any single contributor and the second listing all contributions that exceed $375 in aggregate from any single contributor. The act limits contributions to political parties, constituency associations, and candidates as follows in any year: $15,000 to each registered party and $1,000 to any registered constituency association, $5,000 in aggregate to the constituency associations of each registered party. Furthermore, in a campaign period campaign contributions are limited as follows: $30,000 to each registered party, $2,000 to any registered candidate, $10,000 in aggregate to the registered candidates of each registered party.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these guidelines have served our political process well, and I want to thank the hon. leader of the third party for beginning this discussion in the Assembly. The hon. Premier is committed to looking at the issue, and the discussion must continue with all Albertans before concrete action is taken.

I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate. We don't have much time, so thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join in the debate on Motion 508, proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood essentially to amend section 2 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, making donations to leadership campaigns subject to the same contribution limits and disclosures as other political donations. I support this as an individual, as a legislator, as a member of the Liberal caucus. I think it's important that we achieve fairness and some certainty around this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I was really interested when I attended the COGEL conference a number of years ago to find out, you know, how they do it somewhere else, because one of the great values of attending those conferences is that in comparison you understand your own system better by seeing how other systems work. I was really interested in the American system, in which donations are a free-for-all there. Like, anybody can donate any amount of money to anybody for anything, but you absolutely, positively must disclose it. And I thought: "Well, that's a no-brainer. Why wouldn't you disclose it if there was no limit on who donated or how much? Why would anybody want to sneak around and try to hide that? I don't understand." The more you look into it and you talk to some of the other people that were at the conference, I did start to understand what this was about. Really, it's about the public's trust in us as individuals and in us as legislators and politicians. They want to know that we're approaching our job as we should, with all of that good heart and bright mind, and that we're not carrying forward somebody else's agenda because, essentially, we've been paid to do so. The public wants to know that.

So why would the Americans be so caught up in being interested in not disclosing? That just did not make sense to me, but when you started to look at it, you thought: well, yeah, if you had a politician and it was out there that they had received a significant amount of donations or all their donations from a particular sector, then everybody would start to think they're going to want to support that sector. And I don't care what sector it is; you're dealing with both a perception there and a reality. To be fair, that legislator may not care that they got all their money from a particular sector, and they may not be interested in carrying that message forward at all, but there's going to be a public perception of that. That's why the Americans structured the system in the way that they did: anybody can donate to anybody for anything for any amount, but you have to disclose it and no sneaking around.

Some of the things they get involved with there are things like someone that owns a medium-sized or a large company basically giving money to their senior executives and saying: you go and donate that money to so-and-so. That was a way of filtering more money through to a candidate without it appearing to be coming from either a particular individual, the owner of the company, or from a particular sector. That kind of stuff was hunted down with great fervour by a whole legion of lawyers that work for the equivalent of their ethics and chief electoral officers.

I was just fascinated by that because our rules are all about total amounts and at what point you disclose, and there are a lot more limitations on how much people can donate and to whom. The idea that you could have it wide open on one side but very clear disclosure and why you would need that disclosure was a real eye-opener for me.

The situation we have in Alberta is, I think, to a number of people not a level playing field in that they can't get their own certainty. They can't get assurance that any leadership candidate, if they don't have to disclose where they got the money, how anybody is able to look at the facts and go: "Okay. I know what's going on here. I can research this. I can look at the facts. I can see where this leadership candidate from any party got their money, and I can make my own decision based on this." We don't have that opportunity right now.

We have very specific rules that are set in place around political donations during an election campaign for all candidates and for all parties, but when we get to leadership contests – and those leadership contests can be very important. We've seen here in this province that in running for the leadership of one political party, in effect, when they came out of that leadership race, they were going to be Premier of this province. That raises very, very high stakes, and with that I think we need to have very, very high standards as legislators.

We have an opportunity here to support this motion and to move very quickly toward getting legislation into this Assembly that would set in place a level playing field. It would give us that certainty that I think legislators, people interested in running for political office, but also the public are seeking.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Albertans are quintessentially fair-minded, and they really, really get annoyed when what they see is one person getting an advantage over another person. That really irks them, whether it's somebody getting an advantage over them in their own lives or whether they see that situation somewhere else. I think that's the situation that's been set up here with the lack of requirements for leadership candidates, people seeking the leadership of a political party, not having to disclose anything about their donations. They don't have to disclose who; they don't have to disclose how much – nothing – or how the money came to them, whether they raised it through a special-access cocktail party or through a plain old cheque or selling chocolates. We don't have any information on this, and I think it muddies the water as we try to restore respectability to political representation.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think the battering that politicians have taken we are mostly responsible for ourselves. As we call each other names in the House and out of the House, as we allow and we participate in running down other elected officials, where we step in and, in fact, replace elected officials, where in Alberta we've had school boards replaced, we've had municipalities replaced: we've done that to ourselves. So it's very hard for us to look out in the public and say, "You should respect us. We're doing a good job. We're all working hard here," when we don't treat each other with very much respect and where we call each other names and get into long, protracted sessions in knocking each other down. You know, we've trained the public to think of us in a very poor light.

This opportunity presented through this Motion 508 by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood gives a venue to start to restore some of that credibility – I can't say this is a profession, and I don't think it should be a profession – to a calling, and I would support that. I support the motion. I think it's a good idea for everyone in this House to support this. I think it would also fulfill a desire from Albertans for us to do a better job as politicians, as representatives, as legislators.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this, and I urge all of my colleagues to support this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise today and join in the debate on Motion 508. Since I only have a few minutes, I find myself in the unique position where I actually agree with the leader of the third party because this was a motion that was debated at the grassroots level of the PC Party of Alberta. The majority of people who were at that meeting also agreed with the member of the third party. [interjections] On this point only.

This motion aims to encourage the government to introduce legislation to make party leadership campaign donations subject to the same contribution limits and disclosure requirements as all other political donations. This is a timely issue and deserves discussion in the Assembly.

Alberta currently has policies in place to ensure that there is responsible conduct in electoral politics, and these processes have served us well. But I'm pleased that we are taking the opportunity today to discuss this matter and that if we proceed with this motion, we will have a level playing field for all parties in Alberta. This Legislative Assembly is the entity that has control over electoral matters, so it's appropriate that we approach this topic. Our government is always committed to exploring opportunities to make the political process more accountable for parties and voters alike. So, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning, I'm very happy to support this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. Very briefly, I just think it's interesting that this party here has had one leadership campaign in the last 14 years. The Liberals have had five, NDs have had four, and all the other parties in Alberta have had around 10. It's kind of interesting that when we have a leadership race, well, we've got to put all the money out there, or as one hon. member said: you should assume that anybody who gave money to this Premier, he's in conflict. That's what he said: you should assume that. Well, that's not what I assume most Albertans think. But it's interesting that they seem to have all the leadership races. You know, at a three-year average I think maybe they're getting ready again pretty soon. So I look forward to the campaign contribution openness that they would certainly like us to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to close the debate.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much all of the comments from all members on all sides of the House with respect to this motion, and I appreciate that it seems that most or all of the members who did speak are supportive of the motion. I actually have some hope, then, that this motion will pass, and I will look forward to legislation when it does come from the government.

I also want to indicate that I heard a number of members say that Albertans need to be consulted on this matter, and I agree with that and, secondly, that all political parties need to be consulted on that. I look forward to that as well, if that should come to pass.

I think it's time that we took this step. This is a small step. There are other steps that need to be taken as well, Mr. Speaker. Particularly, we need to look at the role of corporations and unions in the financing of the electoral process. I believe, as does my party, that the financing of the political process needs a great deal of scrutiny and careful rules, but particularly we also believe that individual citizens are the components of our democracy and ought to also be the bedrock of the financial support for the political process. But that's for another day.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that I think this is an important step, and making sure of transparency and openness in government and in our political process is of the highest importance and not just a matter of words. But certainly, I think that it is an important step, and action is important. I thank members opposite for their support, and I will avoid responding to the hon. President of the Treasury Board and his somewhat provocative statements. We're not expecting a leadership race any time soon in our party, and we certainly think there's a chance that you may have another one soon, perhaps right after the next election.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 7 o'clock this evening, at which time we would reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:58 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 28, 2007

7:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/28

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Chair: I'll invite the hon. Minister of Justice to provide his opening remarks.

Justice and Attorney General

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's certainly my pleasure to be here this evening to present the budget of Alberta Justice to all of the members of the Assembly, who are obviously paying keen attention to what I'm about to say.

Before I start, however, I would like to introduce the members of my executive management team who are with us this evening both on the floor and in the balcony. I'll start with those in the balcony. In no particular order we have Sharon Lepetich, senior adviser to the deputy minister; Neil Dunne, acting assistant deputy minister, legal services division; Shawkat Sabur, senior financial officer and executive director, financial services; Sylvia Church, manager of business planning and corporate services; Kevin Quail, acting director of the maintenance enforcement program; Mark Cooper, director of communications; and Andrea Hennig, executive assistant to the minister.

At this particular point in time I have been asked by the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry that if there are any single men in the balcony, to please raise their hands. Seeing none, I will continue.

With me on the floor are Terry Matchett, my deputy minister, immediately to my right. Also to my right is Barb Hookenson, assistant deputy minister of court services, and to my immediate left is Greg Lepp, assistant deputy minister of criminal justice.

The Alberta Justice and Attorney General budget to be voted on for the 2007-2008 fiscal year is $359 million. That's a net increase of $15 million, or 4.4 per cent, over the 2006-2007 forecast, but if you take into account a decline of $15 million in capital, it is actually an increase of some $30 million in operating expense. The new funding will help Alberta's justice system respond to more cases and help improve public access to the courts.

In my comments I'll briefly highlight some of the initiatives we're working on in the ministry, and then I'd be pleased to address questions. I'll begin with initiatives that come under criminal justice. The overall purpose of the criminal justice division is to promote safe communities in Alberta by effectively conducting criminal prosecutions and striving for just outcomes. This year's budget for criminal justice is $53.2 million, with a $3.1 million increase.

A functioning justice system needs adequate resources to do the job. This year Alberta Justice will be adding 10 prosecutors and 12 support staff to help the system respond to more cases and improve public access to the courts. This is a total of 64 prosecutors and support staff added in the past two years. There will be five new family violence prosecutors, three new prosecutors to handle an increased caseload and megacases, one new prosecutor for the integrated market enforcement team, or IMET, and one new prosecutor dedicated to the education and training of our junior prosecutors.

Mr. Chairman, we're hiring the five new family violence prosecutors and associated support staff because this province has the highest rate of family violence in the country. I'm optimistic that the $1 million we are allocating in new funding will contribute to breaking the cycle of family violence, and it will protect the safety and security of children, families, and communities.

Three new prosecutor positions are being added to manage the demands of megacases. These cases typically result in very lengthy and complex trials. Alberta Justice is currently working on two megacases: Project Kare, the task force investigating murdered and missing women, and Project Infiltrate, the mortgage fraud case investigated by the integrated response to organized crime unit, or IROC. They place considerable pressure on the prosecution services. They require several prosecutors to work on one case often for months or years. The addition of the new prosecutors will relieve this impact and enhance the ability to prosecute other serious and violent crimes.

Moving on to the court services division, court services promotes fair and equitable access to the justice system for all Albertans. This year's budget for the division is $159.5 million, an increase of $12 million. One of the major challenges court services is facing is that their major information systems are dated. These information systems are used by court administrators, Crown prosecutors, the judiciary, and ultimately they help the public's access to the justice system. Alberta Justice through the justice information management system, or JIMS, will convert mountains of paper into electronic information. This year $2.5 million in new funding has been allocated to the JIMS project. Part of this funding will be used to cover project start-up costs for this multiyear project.

Another challenge in the justice system is the area of traffic tickets. An increased population and the Solicitor General's traffic enforcement initiative have resulted in more traffic tickets being issued. There is also an increase in the number of people challenging tickets in court. That means we need more people to process them. This year $3.8 million has been allocated to deal with cost increases and to hire an additional 25 Provincial Court staff.

We also recognize that the justice system and, indeed, the government needs to pay competitive salaries to retain and recruit staff. With that in mind we accepted the recommendations of the 2006 Alberta Justice of the Peace Compensation Commission, and our budget reflects an additional $216,000 for justices of the peace.

I'd like to turn now to the legal services division of the ministry, which provides effective legal and related services to government and other ministries. The budget for civil law is $29.4 million for 2007-2008. Of this funding $3 million will go toward dealing with complex aboriginal litigation against Alberta and aboriginal consultation matters. Another $45.3 million will support the Legal Aid Society of Alberta. That's an increase of more than $2.1 million. The additional funding will help Legal Aid handle the increased demand and continue to provide this important service to Albertans.

The Public Trustee administers the estates of dependent adults, decedents, and minors. This year's budget for the Public Trustee is $12.8 million, with a $700,000 increase to hire new staff.

The medical examiner's office investigates all unexplained deaths in Alberta. To keep pace with operating requirements as well as physician earnings and funeral director overhead in rural Alberta, the ME's office will require $342,000 in new funding.

Dealing with the maintenance enforcement program, or MEP, this program ensures that individuals pay spousal and child support under the terms of their court orders and certain agreements. The program administers approximately 50,000 active cases and collects close to $200 million on behalf of 65,000 Alberta children. This year's budget is $17 million. That is a $2.1 million increase over last year's budget. Funding of $1.6 million has been allocated for MEP to hire 18 additional collection officers.

The Alberta Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force is a key mandate for this ministry; $1.5 million dollars in new funding has been allocated to this important initiative. We're confident that community groups can help us identify successful strategies to get at the root causes of crime that can be shared or incorporated as best practices.

There are a couple of other areas that are receiving new money this year to support ministry initiatives. The ministry strategic leadership team works with Albertans and stakeholders to respond to key issues in the justice system. They will receive $614,000 and six new staff this year. The bill forfeiture collection team ensures that money owing to the Crown is recovered if an accused breaches bail conditions. The budget includes $500,000 and six new collection officers.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to turn now to this year's budget for staff in the Department of Justice. Alberta Justice has a manpower department employing mainly highly trained individuals. The services Justice provides are heavily dependent on the knowledge and skills of its staff. More than 65 per cent of the ministry's budget is allocated to manpower. In this budget there is an increase of $5.7 million to manage inflationary pressures, including manpower. Funding of $4.3 million has been allocated to address the ministry's capital requirements in 2007-2008.

The Calgary Courts Centre will open this summer on time and on budget. This year there is $2.8 million in capital funding to complete the installation of technical infrastructure and equipment at the Courts Centre. This includes electronic evidence: video, audio, and computers.

Other capital investments in this budget include $800,000 for the maintenance enforcement program to enhance its management information system and to upgrade its telecommunication system, and $340,000 to replace obsolete lab equipment for the medical examiner.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, it's clear that we all share an interest in an efficient and effective justice system, and I know that the additional dollars that we are seeking in this year's budget will take us some ways towards that.

I'm happy now, Mr. Chairman, to take questions.

The Chair: It's the chair's understanding that both members have agreed to share the time back and forth, for the timekeeper's benefit.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, a pleasure for me to rise to respond to the hon. minister's moving of the estimates for his ministry, the Ministry of Justice. I want to start by thanking the hon. minister and his staff for their warmth and their receptiveness when I first became the shadow minister for his department and they invited me to go over the general background information with respect to the ministry. Then we met again after that before the commencement of this sitting of the Legislature to go over their legislative agenda. So I wanted to put on the record that I truly valued those two meetings. Hopefully, we can work together in the future again, be it the fall sitting or next year if we're both still members of this esteemed House.

I also want to welcome the staff who are in the gallery and the deputy minister and assistant deputy ministers on the floor of the Assembly. You know, I'm truly envious of the support that this minister receives from his support people in his ministry. I have one researcher, and there's one of me, but we'll try to sound intelligent today, and we'll try to seek some answers to some of the questions that we have with respect to this budget. Now, I just have to emphasize that we don't have too much time, so I'm going to try to be brief. I know the minister in his eloquent way is going to give us the answers that we're seeking in short sentences, please.

I'm not going to repeat some of the numbers or percentages that the minister mentioned. Generally, I like the direction that we're increasing funding for court services because there is definitely a higher workload on the part of the courts, and we need quicker justice. I've always maintained that quick justice is good justice; slow justice is bad justice. Definitely the workload is increasing. The minister mentioned something like traffic ticket processing and the fact that more people are contesting, you know, or questioning those traffic tickets and are fighting them in court and so on and so forth. We definitely need to address this increased workload, so that's a direction I like.

Also, funding for legal services is going to increase for the hiring of more Crown prosecutors, civil lawyers, and support staff, and on top we're also adding funding for maintenance enforcement, which is an issue, really, that I have many comments with respect to. So, again, that's a good direction.

The one number that I'm going to mention is the $1.5 million that has been allocated for the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force. Time and time again in this House, Mr. Chairman, we talked about this developing trend, that this government seems to like task forces and commissions and, you know, fact-finding gatherings where they tour the province, listen to stakeholders and experts, and come back, prepare a report, and the report is given to the relevant minister, and then end of story. We don't know what happens.

So I'm going to ask the minister: with respect to this $1.5 million what was the minister hoping to learn that we haven't heard before? We've all heard, you know, the same concerns with respect to drugs, prostitution, domestic violence, gangs. Not to sound like some of the people that are always criticizing, voicing those alarms and raising these flags, we know that there is also an underlying component, be it education, be it poverty. So it's not just a law enforcement issue. Really, what was the minister hoping to hear by putting together this Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force? We've heard from our hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity today, who really questions the merit of having task force after task force, and there doesn't seem to be any eagerness on the part of the government to listen to the recommendations by those different task forces.

The other question with respect to that exercise is: how much of this $1.5 million went to or will go to the MLA from Calgary-Fish Creek, who chaired the task force, if in fact she receives any compensation? I wanted to know if some of that money was earmarked for her chairing the task force. Also, wasn't she the Solicitor General herself at one point in the past? What was the hope for that new information that she would now learn versus her time at the helm of that ministry in particular?

Lastly, does the minister agree that this money could have been better spent on actual law enforcement versus what I think was a public relations exercise; that is to say, maybe hiring 15 or 20 beat officers on the streets and playgrounds in Edmonton and Calgary, for example? Now, I know that the minister has all the details and has all the background information. He might question me on where I'm coming up with the 15 or 20. I don't know. I think a good beat officer in Edmonton or Calgary or Red Deer, the bigger centres, would probably cost the system somewhere between $90 grand and $100 grand. I don't know, and I don't profess to know. What I'm thinking is that however many we can get on the streets is probably a better solution in terms of law enforcement right there. I know that any money is welcome, and I know that any increase in the number of officers patrolling and policing our communities would be welcomed by those communities.

This is my first launch into this debate, Mr. Chairman, and I am interested in hearing the minister's comments. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To the Member for Edmonton-McClung, thank you very much for the complimentary introductory comments, in particular with respect to the support I have as Minister of Justice and Attorney General. You're quite right: you should be envious. I have professional people around me who do a very good job indeed. We have great challenges, but they lessen the burden, without doubt.

On the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force I would remind the hon. member of a community meeting that both he and I attended at MacEwan College. I believe it was in February of this year. I was on the stage as part of the panel addressing, generally, community crime issues along with Chief Boyd of the Edmonton police force. What I recall Chief Boyd saying at that point in time, among other things, was that the justice system is ill-equipped to address all of the issues associated with criminal matters. The criminal justice system essentially is a catch basin. The police and the prosecutors and the court system deal with people after they have committed the crime, and if we are going to address the issue of crime reduction and if we are going to address the issue of safe communities, we have to do something different than what we are doing.

Let me be the first to say that we will probably continue to increase, as we are this year, the number of prosecutors, as the Solicitor General in his budget likely will be doing in increasing the number of police officers, because we do have issues out there on the street that require what I would consider to be the standard way of addressing criminal matters, and that is catching the perpetrators and prosecuting them successfully. The other thing is that crime is becoming far more complex, and in fact it takes more people to do those things.

So that part is still part of it, but the crime reduction task force itself is trying to address two or three things that I think are absolutely essential for us. First of all, what they're asking for are best practices in communities as they go around Alberta. As you know, they've been to 14 communities throughout the province. They want to know what the community is doing, what has worked so that they can share this best practice. We firmly believe – I firmly believe – that it is the community that is going to be the best indicator of the problem and how to solve the problem. So that's very, very important information.

Secondly, from my perspective, the communities can give us some assistance in ordering the information that we have, prioritizing, if you will, where we should be putting our efforts. There's absolutely no doubt that there's a plethora of information with respect to the issue of what causes crime. Indeed, I believe the hon. member knows that as a government, going back to the spring of last year, we established a cross-ministry initiative called the crime reduction strategy task force, which involved, I believe, some 13 ministries.

That came about as a result of the deputy ministers identifying that something had to be done before the catch basin, if you will. As a government that particular committee started a literature search of all of the literature that was created up until this point in time. There is no doubt that there is a lot of it, but you have to pick and choose where you are going to go, and I think that this work of the task force committee will assist us in picking the top priorities that we as a government can address.

I can tell the hon. member that I met with the task force in Calgary when they were in their last of the 14 meetings this past Wednesday, and each and every one that I spoke to said: "Thank you. We have learned a great deal. We are going to be able to produce a report that we believe will be of value to Albertans." All I can say to the hon. member – I have not been to the 14; I have only appeared at two briefly – is that the people who are in fact doing the work are very optimistic that they will be able to produce something that we in this House will be able to receive and work with in a productive way to make the communities in our province safer.

We will provide you with a breakdown of the expenses as we know them. At this particular point in time it's an ongoing exercise, so they will not have all been expended. I do not expect the report until later in the summer. Going forward, we have in the latter part of June a two-day symposium in Calgary, which, of course, has not yet occurred.

From my perspective, hon. member, it is important to do this task force. The $1.5 million, which is a one-time expenditure, I think will prove to be money well spent. It is not ongoing, so you can't equate it to X number of police officers in the long term. It's one-year spending. This is all there's going to be. I hope to be able to show you a report in the not-too-distant future, one which we both will be able to agree will be of some assistance in making our communities safer.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for offering that reply. Moving on, I mentioned briefly in my introductory remarks the maintenance enforcement program. I know that every member in this House receives numerous calls from constituents who are concerned about this program and how effective it is. I should really start by saying that it's not really a question of whether or not staff are doing a good job with the resources that they have. In fact, most of them that I myself individually or my assistant in the constituency office spoke to have been quite eager to help and quite efficient in their daily doings.

In the estimates on page 247, line item 3.0.5, we're talking about $16.9 million, up from last year's forecast of $14.8. I think it's really a small amount. I think any improvement is great, and any improvement is welcomed. It's just surprising that with all the information that we're receiving as MLAs – and the minister, no doubt, is as well – and numerous media accounts of difficulties parents are having with the maintenance enforcement program in general, this seems to be a very small increase.

Can the minister tell us how many new collection officers this will translate into? How many will be hired? Will this be enough to ensure that MEP, the maintenance enforcement program, is effective in locating and securing funds for Alberta families? Are there enough staff currently to deal with the increasing number of files that they deal with, and is this money going to only replace staff that are retiring, or are we, in fact, adding new staff to this program?

The other question, in general terms, would be on interjurisdictional co-operation between the provinces and territories when you have, Mr. Chairman, a deadbeat parent basically jumping from province to province, trotting, to avoid paying to support his or her children. What is the money in the program currently going to do in terms of co-operation between the provinces and preventing that from being used as a way out for deadbeat parents, you know, parents who don't want to support their own children, which in my opinion is one of the lowest and most disgusting crimes? In general terms, maintenance enforcement is a big issue, and it seems to be a small amount. Can the minister explain: if it's only this much, why?

Mr. Stevens: Well, thanks to the hon. member. You're quite right: maintenance enforcement is a very important area. They have a very busy workload. A great deal of stress is associated with the job because the clients are often waiting for dollars or having difficulty coming up with them. So you're absolutely right about that. The funding of $1.6 million of that amount has been allocated to 18 additional collection officers, which is actually a significant number.

I can tell the hon. member that like probably most ministers that appear at budget time, we would like and think we could in a perfect world justify more dollars with many of the programs, perhaps all of the programs that we have. I know that in Justice maintenance enforcement is one of those areas where we could spend more. We have other initiatives that we could embark upon, perhaps as pilots, or we would be able to put additional staff into the field. So you're quite right: you can always deploy more. But we feel that this is a significant number of dollars and a significant increase in collection officers to address the issue.

Yes, we are working with other jurisdictions relative to collection of dollars. In fact, we continue to expand that all of the time and from my perspective are doing a reasonably good job in getting dollars in Alberta for other jurisdictions and getting, through co-operation of other jurisdictions, dollars for children here in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Moving on, I wanted to briefly touch on the extra allocation for enhanced prosecutor services, the hiring of additional Crown prosecutors and staff to assist them. We also know that many experienced provincial Crown attorneys in Edmonton and Calgary have either retired or have signalled their intention to retire either last year or this year. We know that in the past 18 months some 29 prosecutors in Edmonton and 26 in Calgary have reportedly left general prosecutions.

Can the minister tell us if his ministry is hiring enough prosecutors to replace the experienced ones who have left? In other words, are we going to see an increase in the overall number of prosecutors, or are we only replacing the ones who left via attrition? Can the minister tell us what he is doing to ensure that more senior prosecutors remain in the role as Crown attorneys? One would definitely reach the conclusion that as these new ones come in, maybe they don't have the expertise or the experience to handle complex and difficult cases, so to give them time to gain that experience, I think we should retain some of the veterans, if you will. So that's a question in terms of: how many new ones are being added, and how many of the old ones are we replacing?

Mr. Stevens: Well, clearly, we've been adding to the budget for additional Crown prosecutors. I believe that in the last two years we've added 20 to 25 new positions in the budget. This year it is 10. As people retire, they are still in the budget, and we would be replacing those.

I can tell you that recently I answered a question on this in the House, and at that time I indicated that, yes, we have lost people to the private sector. Yes, we have lost prosecutors to retirement. Yes, we have had prosecutors go from general prosecution into special prosecution, so you go from doing everything into, perhaps, one of these specialized areas. But the average experience is 11 years at this point.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but the time for this item has elapsed.

We'll now proceed with the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security. I will invite the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security for his opening remarks.

Solicitor General and Public Security

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present an overview of the Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security estimates and the 2007-2010 business plan.

Before I begin, I'd like to introduce staff from my ministry and the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. Those with us here today are Eric McGhan, Deputy Solicitor General and Deputy Minister of Public Security; Bruce Anderson, assistant deputy minister, correctional services division; Brian Skeet, assistant deputy minister, public security division; Jim Bauer, senior financial officer; Norm Peterson, CEO of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. In the members' gallery joining us soon will be my executive assistant, Maureen Geres, and Andy Weiler, director of communications.

Mr. Chairman, over the next 10 minutes I'll provide you with highlights of the services and supports that the Solicitor General and Public Security provide to Albertans. I'll also provide an overview of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, which now falls under my ministry. Following my presentation, I'd be pleased to answer questions that may remain. If we run out of time, I'll be happy to provide responses in writing.

In regard to our business plan Solicitor General and Public Security's vision is to ensure that Albertans have safe and secure communities in which to live, work, and raise their families. Every day we strive to achieve this vision by providing Albertans with services and supports in the areas of policing and crime prevention, corrections, and assistance to victims. We have eight goals that lead the programs identified in the business plan. They are to provide leadership in law enforcement to promote safe communities, ensure that crime prevention and community safety programs are in place to promote safe Alberta communities, provide secure and efficient custody and community supervision, ensure that offenders have the opportunity to access rehabilitative services and programs, ensure the safety of Albertans by providing government security services and crisis management planning, victims of crime will receive assistance information and support, Alberta's liquor industry operates with integrity, and Alberta's gaming industry operates with integrity, social responsibility, and benefits Albertans.

In regard to our finances Solicitor General and Public Security's 2007 budget has increased $49 million over last year's comparable forecast, to $506 million. Our booming economy continues to attract people and families from across Canada looking for a better future. Our province has a population of more than 3.3 million, and it is projected to continue to rise by 1.5 per cent per year. Unfortunately, we are not only attracting hard-working families but criminals looking to cash in on a hot economy.

In an effort to ensure that our communities are safe and secure, we have increased funding for public security by $29 million over last year's comparable forecast, to over $286 million. We will increase funding to our provincial policing programs by $11.5 million, to $162.5 million, to cover the full-year cost for 80 RCMP officers that were added in '06-07 and to address other inflationary costs. We will be adding 14 additional RCMP officers who will be dedicated to six First Nations communities. We will increase municipal policing grants by $1.3 million, to almost $47 million.

We also continue our relentless battle against the spread of organized crime in Alberta. Drug dealing, identity theft, prostitution all have ties to organized crime. We will spend $17.7 million this year in support of several specialized units that aggressively target criminal networks to disrupt and dismantle those operations.

With more and more people travelling on Alberta highways, we need to ensure that they get where they're going safely. Enforcement is an essential element of the government's traffic safety plan. Last fall we trained 39 sheriffs in traffic enforcement, and they now patrol provincial highways, targeting aggressive drivers and speeders. Our sheriffs have handed out almost 25,000 tickets and have helped take more than 50 impaired drivers off our roads between September of last year and the end of April this year. Budget '07 provides $7.5 million for an additional 42 sheriffs, who will be on the highways this summer. In fact, the first class of 20 new recruits hit the highways on the May long weekend.

Mr. Chairman, everything police do now faces greater scrutiny by the public, who have more access to information than ever before. We have allocated $3.8 million to establish the Alberta serious incident response team. This new investigative agency, to be headed by a civilian director, will investigate allegations of a serious or sensitive nature relating to the actions of a peace officer or incidents where the direct actions of a police officer may have resulted in serious injury or death.

We also received $1.4 million to establish a warrant apprehension unit. As of December 2006 there were approximately 165,000 outstanding arrest warrants in Alberta, close to 8,000 of them for serious and violent crimes. Two teams of sheriffs, located in Edmonton and Calgary, will work closely with corrections staff and police to bring these fugitives to justice. Once caught, these fugitives will end up in one of our department's correctional centres. In Budget '07 we will spend $176 million to operate correction services programs, including eight adult and three young offender facilities, four correctional camps, 41 community correction offices, and two attendance centres for adults and youth.

It is no secret that we are experiencing serious overcrowding issues in our remand centres. We will spend $6.3 million this year on our interim solution to overcrowding at the Edmonton Remand Centre. Until a new, larger facility can be built, we are transferring inmates to various correctional facilities, including the Grande Cache federal institution. The $6.3 million will be used to hire 70 additional staff, including 56 corrections staff and 14 sheriffs, cover transportation costs between facilities, and cover per diem costs to the federal government.

Our responsibility encompasses not only institutional programs but community correction programs, which involve supervising offenders in our communities. As part of Alberta's strategy for prevention of family violence and bullying, we're allocating $1.3 million to hire additional probation officers. Their job will be to help break the cycle of family violence by ensuring appropriate supervision of offenders who will live in our communities.

We have also budgeted $2 million to complete our comprehensive court security program and $2.5 million to continue to develop our $100 million information technology strategy announced last year.

Preventing crime is just as important as solving crime. To that end we've allocated $1.7 million to crime prevention in Budget '07, including almost a million dollars in grant money for community-based crime prevention and restorative justice initiatives.

We're also spending almost $18 million to support victims of crime through grants for agencies and groups that work with victims and financial assistance for those who have been victimized.

Under gaming and liquor, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission now falls under the Solicitor General and Public Security's mandate. We will ensure that the economic impact of gaming and liquor activities are maximized to the benefit of all Albertans. Having said that, much of the AGLC work is focused on social responsibility. We ensure that Albertans have the tools and programs to make informed choices about liquor and gaming and know where to get help if needed.

Money that the government receives from VLTs, slot machines, and ticket lotteries is placed in the Alberta lottery fund. This year lottery fund payments will total $1.45 billion. Every year thousands of volunteer, public, and community-based initiatives benefit from the ALF for a variety of projects and initiatives. Some examples include community facilities, libraries, museums, athletic events, major exhibitions, arts and cultural groups, seniors' groups, and historic resources. The types of public initiatives that use these funds include building new schools, health facilities, and maintaining our roads. To assist government in making policy decisions, we will continue to provide $1.5 million to the Alberta Gaming Research Institute this year.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my opening remarks. I welcome any questions that the opposition may have.

Thank you.

7:40

The Chair: Hon. minister, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has indicated his desire to share the floor back and forth as provided under Standing Order 59.01(2). Is that agreeable to you?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. minister and his staff and the deputy ministers and the program heads and the people in the gallery as well for agreeing to accompany us as we walk through this estimate and to provide the hon. minister with his background information and all the stuff he needs to answer our questions ever so eloquently.

I also want to thank him for meeting with me when he took over as the Solicitor General after the latest cabinet change and also again for meeting with me afterwards when we were discussing the legislative agenda. I want to comment on his willingness to share information and his willingness to allow his staff to be receptive to the requests from the Official Opposition. In that regard, I want to put that on the record and thank him sincerely.

The other thing I wanted to thank him very briefly for is the visit to the Edmonton Remand Centre, which he cohosted with the Minister of Justice, and allowing myself and my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora to tour the Remand Centre and speak to some of the guards and employees there and also to have a very brief visit with some of the inmates. Now, my kind request, which is going to follow from there, is for the hon. minister to organize a visit for myself and my colleague from St. Albert to hopefully visit Kennedale school in the north end of Edmonton. It's one of those institutional schools under his purview. I have to tell him that I tried to secure that visit on my own, and I was told that the hon. minister's approval is necessary. Perhaps it's for security purposes or it's protocol. So here is my new request, and hopefully, if he grants this one, I might think of a third one later.

Moving on to the budget, Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to do as the minister did and thank my researcher for coming up with the information and background research on this estimate. Without him, honestly, I can't conduct myself as effectively in this House as the shadow member for the Solicitor General.

My first series of questions are going to be talking about police funding. Definitely this should come as no surprise to the hon. minister. We've had some exchanges in question period on this very subject, and I bet he's also aware of some concern in the community, outside of this House. Agencies like the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and different community groups are highlighting the fact that the police funding formula doesn't seem to be as equitable or as fair as it once was, perhaps.

I would argue that a main area of concern in maintaining safe and secure communities as per the minister's mandate is the issue of police funding. It's an area that has not received a significant increase over the last number of years. The provincial policing program, which pays for the full-time costs of RCMP officers in Alberta, has received a very modest boost, in my opinion, from $151 million last year to $162 million this year. This area of RCMP funding and an increase in the numbers doesn't really show, in my opinion, a strong commitment to having more RCMP officers in our communities.

To be fair, Mr. Chairman, this was not the case in 2005, where the government reacted to the tragedy in Mayerthorpe. We saw a significant increase. I honestly can't remember if I participated in that debate then, but I know that I was very supportive of that direction, and I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora was as well. However, it was reactionary. We would like to see a commitment reflected in the budget every year in terms of RCMP funding.

Rural communities, which are served by the RCMP, have expressed certain concerns, and most of the concerns stem from the funding formula applying to different communities having different population sizes. The province's funding formula for communities of up to 5,000 is one way, and then between 5,000 to 20,000 is another way. The 5,000 to 20,000 increment provides for a base payment of $200,000 annually plus an additional $8 per capita. I would argue, again, that this is not enough to pay for true policing costs in rural Alberta. We know that there has been a documented trend now for certain criminal activities and organized crime to move into rural areas because they think policing there is less and weaker. So I'm interested in hearing the hon. minister's thoughts in terms of this particular issue.

Now, I know that we're told in this House that any minister in any department goes to his caucus and his cabinet meetings and asks for money for his or her programs, but if all of them ask for a ton of money for all their programs, then we are not going to have a budget; we're going to break the bank. My question is: did the minister, in fact, ask for the funding formula to be improved and was turned down in cabinet? Or should I stay tuned? Is there something happening next year that I'm not aware of? If he can commit today to doing that, then, you know, maybe it will be a good sign of things to come. But it is definitely clear that the funding formula as it is now is totally inadequate, and I want to know where this minister wants to take this particular issue.

The other question is in terms of the RCMP negotiating their contract in the near future. I want to know where the minister is with respect to this particular file and if even informal negotiations or contacts have been started with the RCMP. Maybe a quick update from the minister would be tremendously appreciated. That's the second question.

The third question would be if the minister has given any thought to a graduated funding formula. As the community increases in size, as the population grows, maybe we should have an escalating formula like a graph or a chart – basically a community under 5,000 is this way; a community between 5,001 and, say, 7,500 is this way; 7,501 to 10,000 is this way; and so on – to try to make it more fair and more equitable instead of a one-size-fits-all. Again, if the minister can shed some light on this, it would be greatly appreciated.

I'll take my seat and listen attentively. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you. First of all, I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung for his kind comments – I certainly have enjoyed working with him – and his comments regarding my staff. I certainly believe that I do have the best staff in the government. I want to also commend the hon. member for his dedication to fulfilling his role. He's taken it upon himself to come and tour, as he mentioned, the remand centre, and I might as well let the hon. member know that I'd be pleased to approve a visitation by the hon. member to any facility that's managed by my ministry. So let's get together, and we'll set something up.

The hon. member spoke about our RCMP officers and the reason why we didn't have a huge increase this year. I want to let the hon. member know that we do have 14 new members who are coming to patrol our aboriginal communities, and that is going to free up some of the members who are currently working in detachments to provide more of their time patrolling off those aboriginal communities.

I would also like to mention that the hon. member mentioned a number that we increased our numbers by in the last couple of years. Well, unfortunately, we're still short approximately 80 of the positions that we requested from the RCMP, so until they have an opportunity to catch up on that, we felt that it would be better to put our resources into other areas, which we've done.

In regard to municipal police funding, as the hon. member mentioned, when urban municipalities exceed 5,000, they become responsible for their own policing costs. Our grant covers as much as 44 per cent of those costs for municipalities with a population of over 5,000 to 20,000, and the amount that we pay actually averages 24 per cent. Our department is exploring options to modify the policing grant formula and to provide greater support to municipalities when their population does exceed 5,000. We recognize that any modification within the $46 million grant envelope will mean redistribution of those funds.

The hon. member had asked if I'd run anything by my colleagues and been turned down. No, that certainly has not been the case. We are reviewing, as I mentioned, our options, and we will take those to our caucus and ask for their input and support. I would also encourage the hon. member that if he has some ideas, which he spoke to, we certainly will consider those as well.

I want to mention that municipalities also benefit from policing in regard to some of our departmental initiatives, such as ALERT, which is designed to attack serious and organized crime in Alberta. We invest over $17.7 million in that, and that includes such things as the IROC, the integrated response to organized crime; ICE, the integrated child exploitation initiatives; and Project Kare.

I also want to let the hon. member know that our sheriffs highway patrol program, which complements enforcement efforts by the RCMP on provincial highways, also allows the RCMP to focus their attention on a lot more serious crime issues. This year we have put an extra $7.5 million in our budget to enhance our sheriffs program. Policing is all about working more effectively and efficiently and getting outside of our silos and working in unison with the other agencies. Again, our sheriffs program working with the RCMP is an excellent example of how we're doing that, and we're actually having great results with that in regard to patrolling our highways and increasing highway safety.

I want to mention to the hon. member that Alberta is the only jurisdiction I'm aware of in Canada which actually returns fine revenues to municipalities. I believe it was in 2006 that there was approximately $90 million that was turned back to the municipalities, which, again, assists them in their policing costs.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I believe I've answered the questions.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the natural progression from here would actually take us to, again, police funding but this time for cities that are over 100,000, the bigger centres: Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer, Fort McMurray, places like that. The funding formula, as I understand it, for communities over 100,000 is simple: $16 per capita, and it's a flat rate. The funding for this comes from line item 2.2.4 in the estimates, which is virtually unchanged from last year. It has only risen by $600,000 between 2007-08 and last year's forecast. For Edmonton and Calgary what this means is that they are now receiving virtually the same amount of funding, but we know that this is despite the fact that there is more crime. Crime seems to be on the rise in terms of violence, in terms of frequency, in terms of sophistication. There are issues with drugs, there are issues with gang activity, and so on.

Again, it's wonderful on the one hand to have mandate letters and to have stated policy directions that, you know, this government is going to be tough on crime, but this commitment has to translate into numbers in the budget. We have to take it a step further from talking about it to really implementing it. So $600,000, I would argue, is really, really minimal, Mr. Chairman. For 2008 the city of Calgary, for example, will receive $15.8 million, up from last year's $15.2, which is that $600,000 which I mentioned. The city of Edmonton has the same amount of money. There has been no increase.

I understand that this minister makes decisions in terms of the province in general. You know, he worries about Alberta in general, and I do too. But the city of Edmonton, in which I represent one of its constituencies, has increased in population. The latest estimate, the most conservative estimate is that we've exceeded 1 million people already. I know that in my own constituency of Edmonton-McClung we have added at least 4,500 people since the last election. I need an explanation from the hon. minister why this particular area of policing did not receive the attention it deserves. The bigger cities are growing at a faster pace than our smaller communities and our rural centres, so why did this not translate into this budget this year?

Strategy 1.2 of the business plan under the ministry's goal 1 clearly states that the ministry will provide leadership to ensure safe and secure communities and that they will ensure effective policing through the provision of various programs. Now, I know that the minister had mentioned in his first reply that, you know, we're always behind because now we're missing 80 RCMP officers, so until we catch up, there's bound to be some concern. He's going to field those concerns and those complaints from myself and from this side of the House and potentially from his own caucus colleagues as well. Until we catch up, until we add on the 80 RCMP officers and then re-evaluate the situation, what other programs is the minister talking about in terms of improving policing services in Alberta's bigger centres like Edmonton and Calgary?

Before I take my seat again, I just want to clarify where the minister stands on the issue of supplementing traditional policing services with the use, now, of sheriffs as per the sheriffs department under his authority. Is it only a cost-saving measure? How complementary are they? We know that the RCMP are happy to work with sheriffs and to facilitate and co-operate between themselves and the sheriffs department. But why the move to now utilize more of the sheriffs services versus traditional RCMP, and what is the obstacle to hiring more RCMP officers notwithstanding the fact that the bigger centres have their own police departments as well?

That's that, and I'm going to reference some communities in particular which seem to be feature communities for this extended or expanded role of those sheriffs, communities like St. Paul, Cold Lake, and Grande Prairie, for example. Again, we've heard some of these concerns attending Alberta Urban Municipalities Association meetings or even the AAMD and C meetings that actually happen every year throughout the province.

Funding for the bigger centres and the mechanism whereby sheriffs and the RCMP work together is an area of interest for myself, and I would appreciate the minister's response to this one.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, the hon. member mentioned earlier the RCMP contract and the status of those negotiations. I just want to let the hon. member know that those negotiations are with the federal government, and all provinces and territories are involved in those negotiations; it's one contract that covers all of Canada. We will certainly have our input into that, and we're actually kicking off those negotiations now in the sense that we're preparing all of our information so that we're in a position to make sure that we get a good contract for Albertans. We will soon be talking with our counterparts from across the country to hear what their thoughts are in regard to renewing this contract as well and then also, of course, sitting down with the federal government to kick off these negotiations.

In regard to the larger cities and the $16 per capita the increase that occurred this year, of course, is strictly for population growth. I know that the AUMA had put in a request for a different formula, increasing it, I believe it was, to $32 per capita. Well, our estimates indicate that that would have had an additional cost of $60 million. We feel we could spend that kind of money better on some of our other initiatives where we work co-operatively with all of the agencies. An example I would use would be our new IT program. That's a hundred million dollar program where we will make sure that all policing agencies share the same data, and that's certainly going to help them work a lot more efficiently and effectively and also improve the safety of not only the officers but of the public. It'll be a great assistance to apprehending those criminals.

Another initiative that we're working on is a first responder radio system for the entire province, which will put a radio system in place that will allow the police and fire departments and the ambulances to communicate in a much more efficient manner than they are now.

A couple of other areas where we're investing money to improve policing are two warrant apprehension teams that we're putting together. We have a large number of outstanding warrants in the province. These people don't just stay in one jurisdiction. They move around, so it's important that we have a mobile apprehension team who can follow these people around and work with our law agencies to ensure that we get those folks behind bars, where they belong. We're working on a surveillance team as well to ensure that we can track in a lot more efficient manner the activities of organized crime in our province because again they do not stay in one municipality, so it makes it difficult for one police agency to track the activities. Again, if we have teams that can move around the province and follow those activities more closely, we believe that that's going to go a long way to reducing and fighting crime.

The member talked about the sheriffs and the reasons for putting that program in place. Our sheriffs are peace officers. They have expanded authority based on their level of training. The additional responsibilities they have taken on recently: traffic surveillance, our response to gaps in service delivery that we believe can be filled with an appropriately trained and directed peace officer rather than using a full-fledged police officer. Police services are experiencing significant recruiting and retention issues, and the solution that we are offering with our sheriffs allows them to focus their resources on a lot more serious matters without a drop in service.

The member also spoke about costing. Well, an RCMP officer costs the province in the neighbourhood of $150,000* per man, and we can provide the services that we do with our sheriffs for approximately $85,000. So there is a cost saving there. Again, their role is limited, but for the work they're doing, they are very well trained and just doing an excellent job.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that answers the questions of the hon. member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Moving on and staying on the subject of peace officers and sheriffs, can the minister provide more clarification to the House regarding the training that sheriffs are receiving before they are allowed to conduct traffic stops on highways? We know that for the training they receive, they do good work, and this is reflected in the budget increase of about 7 and a half million dollars from last year's estimates, basically because they conduct, you know, traffic enforcement on provincial highways under the traffic safety plan.

But there is a concern that has been raised not just by the opposition but also by police officers themselves who indicate that the minister may want to ensure that these sheriffs can perform those functions but not jeopardize the safety of themselves or the public. Now, you know, stopping a racing car or pulling over somebody who appears to be under the influence are scary situations, I would argue, and we have to remember that sometimes there is something called road rage. Sometimes tempers fly high, and then these sheriffs are armed. They have side arms. So what training do they get to not put themselves in danger and also not to endanger innocent civilians? This is a very specific and serious concern which we have, and it was also raised by some members of the police. The training should reflect this safety component, and law enforcement, in my opinion, is primarily about safety, safety for the people who actually enforce the law and then also safety for the people who are either being questioned by law enforcement officers or innocent bystanders, like I mentioned.

The other question would be their training in terms of their primary duties. Do they receive any scenario training, or are they given examples of things they might encounter in real life, and how are they trained to defuse situations? How are they trained to try to talk somebody out of committing a crime on the spot, you know, the point control tactics training? I'm not an expert, and I don't even try to become one, but how do they defuse these situations, and how do they receive the training that allows them to deal with these scary scenarios and not use force except as a last resort? So physical training, situation training. I'm not sure if they also receive some basic psychiatric techniques that they can use to defuse situations. Any information from the minister would be greatly appreciated.

My overarching argument – and I would like to be corrected if I'm mistaken – is that they don't receive the same level of training as a full-fledged police officer. Are we asking them to perform a full-fledged police function without affording them the necessary training in full? So that's my question, and again I would cede the floor to the minister to respond.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you. First of all, I want to clarify the response I gave previously where I indicated that RCMP officers cost $150,000. That's what they cost, but our share is 70 per cent, so it's around $109,000.*

In regard to the question around training of our sheriffs they receive 200 hours of safety training. Traffic training is another 200 hours. They have field training on top of that. I want to assure the hon. member that our sheriffs are trained to a higher level for traffic than most front-line police officers, and I also want the hon. member to know that our sheriffs do not do high-speed pursuits. Their use of force training is the same as the police follows, the AACP use of force continuum. Their responsibility covers enforcement of the highway traffic act, the liquor control act. If they see a Criminal Code authority activity required, then they call in the RCMP.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Carrying on with this training theme, I would like to ask the hon. minister why there seems to be no mention in this budget of any money associated with the proposed police college in southern Alberta. As far as I am able to tell, there has been no allocation of funds to continue with the announcement from last year with respect to the police college. Why is there no money in the budget for the construction of the college, and is the minister still committed to having a police college, or is this program being scrapped? Has he changed his mind, or did the government, in fact, change its position with respect to this?

Then maybe a general question that would follow from there is: can the minister tell us if there are, in fact, other files or other projects under his purview which have been shelved or postponed or frozen since he took over as Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General?

Basically, if they were priorities before and they are no longer, which ones, if in fact there are? The police college question: why doesn't this budget contain any money with respect to construction or progress on this said project?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, in regard to the police college the reason there's no money allocated in our capital budget is because we are planning on proceeding with this initiative on a P3, a public/private partnership. It is going ahead in Fort Macleod, which is the site that we chose last fall. Before we go out for an expression of interest on a P3, we need to identify the projected class sizes, course material, that type of thing, to ensure that we get the appropriately designed facility. So we're hoping within the next month, actually, that we will be going out for an expression of interest on a P3, and we'll proceed from there. We hope that we will start construction next year, so that particular initiative is moving right along.

None of the capital projects in my ministry have been put on hold. As the hon. member knows, we have recently announced that we're proceeding with the Edmonton Remand Centre, which is a project much needed and will proceed at a cost of a little over $300 million. Again, we are proceeding with the design of that facility, and we hope to start construction on that later on this year. So things are moving right along, and we're quite excited about the projects under our ministry.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the minister: why utilize a public/private partnership, or a P3 model, for the construction of the police college versus a project that's entirely funded by taxpayers? It might be a question for maybe the President of the Treasury Board to answer, but I'm just interested in hearing what this minister thinks. You know, the value of using a P3 versus an entirely public project and if he believes that a P3 is going to provide the taxpayers with cost savings and if, in fact, there has been any comparison of potential costs and, in his opinion, how much we stand to save by utilizing a P3.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yeah, I'd be glad to offer my thoughts on a private/public partnership. First of all, I want to assure the hon. member that unless this P3 turns out to be in the best interests of Albertans, it will not be proceeding in that manner. I am fully confident, though, that at the end of the day, when we look at the cost of a private/public partnership versus the government up fronting the money over a 25-, 30-year period, this particular project will be an example of how well P3s can work. I just firmly believe that it has all the right ingredients for a successful P3, and as we proceed through the expression of interest and getting in proposals, I guess that will be borne out. But at the end of the day, whichever avenue we pursue, we'll make sure that it will be in the best interests of Albertans. A lot of times, in this particular P3 example, there are examples when it's easier and a lot better to use other people's money to build something and pay it back over a period of time, when your maintenance costs are guaranteed over a period of time, et cetera. So those are all things that we will be taking into account. Again, I'm confident that this project will proceed.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I noticed that the minister was smiling. He probably knows that I'm skeptical, but that's a discussion we should have a different time.

Moving on to the victims of crime, on page 288 of the business plan under goal 6, core business 4, it states: "The ministry ensures that . . . victims of crime receive prompt financial benefits and assists community groups and organizations to establish . . . programs and initiatives that meet the needs of victims of crime." My question is: how will the ministry do this? Will the minister provide funding for things like sexual assault centres? The question is with respect to the victims of crimes fund. After those boards are chosen in the different jurisdictions, they resort to fundraising. Does the minister have any thoughts in terms of offering them assistance so their reliance on fundraising would be minimized or eliminated? You know, certain areas seem to be benefiting from the victims of crime fund allocation compared to others, so I'm interested in hearing the minister's thoughts on this.

I have an example here of an agency like the John Howard Society which stated to members of the opposition that they need more funding for operations. Currently their funding is tied to the delivery of specific programs. Will the minister as part of his strategy look into providing more funding to organizations and allowing them some room to manoeuvre, some decision-making mechanism so they can actually administer their programs the way they see fit? I'm not asking for complete autonomy; I'm just asking for some wriggle room for them to allocate those funds as they deem appropriate, with full accountability to the minister and to this House on how they spend it.

I'm going to reference the MLA report of the Alberta Victims of Crime Consultation, which was released to guide the government's development of programs and services for victims of crime. Can the minister tell us if there was, in fact, any progress after that report was released and if any of these recommendations were implemented? Can the minister also tell us what specific initiatives have been developed to expand, one, the knowledge of the victims of crime fund and, two, access to that fund?

There is a major problem with the existing program in terms of what seems to be a surplus situation. I honestly think that people who are genuinely classified as victims of crime, people who have been seriously affected by crime, should gain access quickly to the program and to the funds in it and also equitably. How many people were turned away? How many people were told, "No, you don't qualify"? There seems to be an increasing surplus, a surplus that keeps growing every year in terms of this fund. Why is the money in that fund not being used more, if I can phrase my question this way? So there seems to be a sort of stockpiling of funds. What is it being used for, and why aren't more people successful in accessing those programs? Where are these surpluses going? Are they sitting in the fund? Are they leaving the fund? Are they being reabsorbed into the general budget? I need to know. I also want to know how many people are employed to adjudicate or to handle requests for compensation under that program.

To recap: why does there seem to be a surplus? Where is it going? How many people administer this program? Why can't organizations be given the flexibility to make those allocation decisions with more room and more responsibility on their part, again with full accountability to the minister. We're not asking for this to be taken away. You know, they're the ones on the ground. They're the ones with their ear to the ground, basically, and we should allow them to do this job if they choose to take it on. Again, helping them so they don't have to resort to fundraising in the different jurisdictions. Those boards, you know, once they're established, that's basically something that they do, and I think definitely there is a role for government to accept more of this responsibility as compared to those individuals.

Thank you.

8:20

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, in regard to the progress of the recommendations in the MLA report I want the hon. member to know that half of these recommendations have been completed, and the remaining ones are in various stages of completion.

In regard to funds for organizations that can apply to victims of crime, there is $4.4 million in '06-07 that was put into that program. These services provided to victims by these organizations would include such things as information with the criminal justice process in the victim's case as it progresses through the system, information about the victim impact statement program, the financial benefits program, the requesting restitution program, preparation for court, and the accompaniment to hearings. Other specialized services to distinct types of victims are provided by approved community-based programs.

As the hon. member is aware, we recently released a victims of crime protocol, the first ever in Canada. It was introduced last month. This particular document was also translated into 11 different languages to help new Albertans through our system, to give them full knowledge of what they can expect as they work their way through our justice system.

In regard to actual victims of crime payments this is all covered under the Victims of Crime Act. In '06-07 that fund was at $10.5 million as one-time payouts to eligible victims. Because we increased the awareness in regard to victims of crime consultation, we are seeing an increase in the number of victims coming forward, and the budget this year has increased by $1.9 million, Mr. Chairman.

In regard to staffing levels there are 10 staff who look after the victims of crime funds.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Moving on, I would like to briefly talk about asset building. First, I'd like to mention the fact that the Alberta Liberal caucus has received a presentation from Chief Mike Boyd, who really thinks very strongly about this asset building component as a way to reduce crime and to catch stuff, as he refers to it, upstream rather than downstream, when the actual criminal act has been committed.

We discussed in the earlier estimate of the Ministry of Justice the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force, and I questioned the hon. Minister of Justice as to what value he thinks we're going to get from this particular task force. One thing the task force heard was that we should be doing more than just adding police officers and that we should be proactive and collaborative between the different police agencies and services, between the different communities, between the different levels of government, and so on, and so forth. It's good to hear these ideas, but really the communities today need more than listening forums. They need more than words. They need provincial leadership to address the root causes of crime.

Again, in the Ministry of Justice's deliberations earlier tonight we talked about education, and we talked about poverty, and we talked about all these root causes of crime and what we can do to catch things before they happen. The province has the financial capabilities, and according to goal 2 of the business plan they also have the desire to do this. However, the only action we have seen so far is the task force.

In Richmond, B.C., the RCMP have forged a relationship with communities based upon the model known as asset building, which I mentioned earlier. Quite simply, it basically means that the police and the community can work together to show young people that they care about them, that they care about their future. They help achieve this by building sustained relationships with youth and youth leaders, rebuilding connections and commitments in neighbourhoods, getting involved in youth service programs, influencing organizations and networks, sharing a vision of safe and healthy communities, and involving the young people in that vision to get them to be players, to be active participants rather than people who just watch things happen or watch things develop. The theory is that the more assets a young person has in their lives, the more likely they will make positive choices. That's one example.

Another study or another example titled A Portrait of Sustainable Crime Prevention in Selected Canadian Communities was conducted by Carleton University for the Federal/Provincial/Territorial Working Group of Community Safety and Crime Prevention in 2004. This particular exercise looked at different community profiles and developed strategies to form community partnerships to reduce crimes at the grassroots level. I would argue that reducing crime at the grassroots level is by far the most successful model, and it's probably the model we should be pursuing most aggressively.

Can the minister tell us if he has instructed his department to look at asset building as a provincial model to reduce crime in order to achieve goal 2 of his ministry's business plan? In other words, it's commendable that municipal police forces are looking at this on a municipality-by-municipality basis, and them taking the initiative is laudable. But more centrally and more province-wide is this also a direction that this minister is headed? Has he in fact instructed his staff to adopt this model, and what steps has he taken to do that? If not, then frankly the question would be: why not? If not now, then why not now, and why not immediately?

Mr. Chairman, I'll just cede the floor to the minister again because I think this is an important issue. Then I'll have a couple more questions, and I know that some of my colleagues also have a couple more.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you. Yes, in regard to asset building, Mr. Chairman, my ministry firmly believes that the whole community needs to be involved in crime prevention. In regard to consulting with our community, I believe it's important that we get out into our community to find out, first of all, what concerns they have and also to get their input on solutions to ensure that we utilize best practices as we move forward.

I also agree that it's important to have programs in place to ensure that our children stay on a straight and narrow path and avoid getting involved in criminal activities. I want to just mention the success we've had with the Hobbema cadet program, where I believe that over 400 of that community's youth are now involved in a program that keeps these children busy, teaches them some discipline, and keeps them away from gang activities.

I also want to let the hon. member know that, yes, my entire staff are committed to looking at the whole spectrum of crime prevention. It's not just a matter of putting more policemen on the street and building more prisons. Obviously, anything we can do – in fact, our whole government is committed to a number of cross-ministry initiatives which put programs in place to ensure that we get to the youth, especially, in our society to keep them active and involved in activities that keep them away from criminal activities. Also, in our correctional facilities we have a number of programs, obviously, there to ensure that those who do get involved in criminal activities have programs in place to ensure that when they get back out into our communities, they have the skills necessary to get on with their lives.

The hon. member should know that this department has developed a five-year vision that encompasses all aspects of a law enforcement network, from developing a single-site training centre to recruiting and retention to creating more dynamic and flexible information technology systems. This will help guide us as we continue to evolve our business to meet the ever-changing face of crime in the 21st century. At a recent round-table on policing held in Red Deer, we had law enforcement leaders. Those responsible for police oversight and academics agree that working together more effectively with available resources will strengthen how we respond to and how we prevent crimes. Our department will hold a similar round-table next month to look at options to address recruitment and retention issues currently facing all members of the law enforcement community.

Other asset-building priorities include the development of a correction services blueprint to ensure that our department is properly positioned to face short-, mid-, and long-term challenges related to infrastructure, staffing, and delivery of evidence-based correctional programs.

Replacement of the Edmonton Remand Centre with a state-of-the-art facility will improve staff and inmate safety, reduce transportation costs associated with moving inmates to other facilities, and also will reduce overcrowding.

I mentioned earlier our $100 million information technology strategy to address the information needs of our department, the law enforcement community, and the criminal justice system.

We're also committed to work on a network radio communication system to ensure that first responders can communicate with each other during times of crisis and allow law enforcement agencies to continue to work together to tackle organized and serious crime.

We're also committed to the development of the Alberta police and peace officer training centre, our new training centre, which I already spoke to, which will deliver standardized training, which will ensure that all of our police and peace officers in the province have a similar and a standardized level of training.

Cross-ministry initiatives include the crime reduction strategy, which the hon. Attorney General and Minister of Justice spoke to. We will co-ordinate the work of 14 government ministries and the recommendations from the safe communities task force to help reduce crime in our communities.

Work continues with Alberta Justice to complete our comprehensive court security plan. This includes perimeter security at courthouses and the final stage of our video conferencing initiative.

Mr. Chairman, our government and my ministry in particular have a whole number of issues regarding asset building to ensure that we meet our goal of reducing crime in the province of Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, to switch gears to some extent, I would like to talk about this minister wearing the other hat, which is being the Minister of Public Security. You know, in other jurisdictions they call him the minister of interior, sometimes also referred to as the minister of emergency preparedness. I'm talking about security threats. We've heard that Canada has been identified as a potential target for terrorism, for example. Under goal 5 of the business plan for this ministry strategy 5.5 states that the ministry will "assist industry in their crisis management planning to ensure industry is prepared in the event of crisis." Canada, like I mentioned, has been on that target list for international terrorism. The RCMP has confirmed this through their own threat assessment protocols.

Can the minister tell us what involvement his ministry is having with industry currently to ensure that Alberta industry is protected from a possible terrorist attack? I'm talking about existing industry, Mr. Chairman, and then also potential industry because we've all heard musings or rumours about this government's recent change of opinion, and now they're appearing to be more receptive to having nuclear energy brought in for operations like the oil sands, for example. That has its own heightened level of risk associated with it just by the nature of that operation. Has the minister started talking to industry, both existing and industry that is contemplating moving into the province, to assist them in terms of their crisis management planning?

The other thing I would like to reference is that it's not only industry that the minister should be talking to. I recently read an article that was published in the publication FrontLine Security in their spring 2007 issue. This particular article was written by Dr. Joe Varner. It identifies more than just industry; it basically talks about critical infrastructure. Critical infrastructure has a definition in the U.S., and it also has a definition in Canada. The Canadian definition is broader. It's more thorough and more complete. Basically, as per this article, it says that public safety and emergency preparedness Canada defined critical infrastructure as those physical and information technology facilities, networks, services and assets which, if disrupted or destroyed, would have a serious impact on the health, safety, security or economic well-being of Canadians or the effective functioning of governments in Canada.

It identifies 10 sectors, so when I say that we shouldn't just be talking to industry, here are a few other examples. The 10 sectors are energy and utilities; communications and information technology; finance; health care; food; water; transportation; safety in terms of chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear safety and hazardous materials, search and rescue, emergency services, and dams; government, in terms of services, facilities, information networks, assets, and sites and monuments; and manufacturing. That's the last one, manufacturing, and so on. So we're talking more than just industry.

I just want to know if the minister has really started developing this plan. Many times in this House the government has been criticized for its lack of a plan. I think one of the areas where we should really start developing this plan is right here in this minister's department because this is a plan we can't afford to not have. Is there a plan? I know the minister mentioned his five-year vision. Is this part of that five-year vision for his ministry? What negotiations, if any, has he started, and where is he going from here?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to assure the hon. member that, yes, we have a plan. In fact, our security plan is held up as an example for the rest of Canada. Our plan is a partnership between our province, our police, our industry, and the federal government. Our plan identifies terrorist threats as early as possible. We warn communities and industry of any threats, take immediate action to prevent or mitigate the terrorist act, and our plan will ensure the continued delivery of essential services. There is a protocol that ensures that I am informed of serious threats that may require an elevation of our province-wide threat level, and we are always examining and re-examining our counterterrorism and crisis management plan to ensure that it remains the best in our country.

In regard to nuclear reactors, the oil sands, or pipelines we definitely have a counterterrorist plan in place to protect all critical infrastructure in our province. As I mentioned before, we use the best intelligence that's available not only across our country but internationally. If a terrorist act were ever to occur, our plan gives all partners, including law enforcement agencies, the ability to respond immediately.

As I mentioned earlier, our plan is hailed as one of the best in the country, and I can assure the hon. member that currently there is no identified threat to our province.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to switch gears one more time and talk about the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, which has recently been moved and now falls under the Solicitor General's responsibility.

This might be looked at as a rhetorical question, or it might not be the place for it in the budget debate, but I would like to know if the minister is at all concerned that there seems to be a trend developing with respect to liquor retail in this province. We had at one point in the past a provincial monopoly, and then we were told that this was not the way to keep doing things and that it was bad for the consumer. We allowed privatization to come in, and now, with all the mergers and takeovers that are happening in the retail liquor network, we are basically seeing the creation of private business monopolies. I would like to hear the minister's opinion on this particular matter.

Also, in terms of the distribution network, if, in fact, the problems from last summer and, basically, the problems we witnessed in 2006 and early on in 2007 have been remedied, if he is satisfied with the liquor distribution network. Again, that's a monopoly, and there were suggestions that maybe we should have one distributor for northern Alberta and one for southern, if not three even. Where does the minister stand on this particular issue, and is he satisfied that all the wrinkles of the past have been ironed out and that the system is functioning again the way it was intended? So the monopolies question and then the liquor distribution question.

Under the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission my third question would be with respect to gaming. I have to emphasize that where I'm coming from, Mr. Chairman, is that gambling does not create wealth. Gambling only redistributes wealth, and it does that basically on the basis of a social ill. It's a problem, and the moral or ethical question of whether government should be generating revenue from gambling is maybe a discussion for a different day, but we know that a large percentage of the revenues generated by gambling in this province comes from problem gamblers. A question to the minister: in his opinion, what should we do to minimize problem gambling? And maybe, you know, a question with respect to programs to help people who want to quit their addiction to gambling, and the other question with respect to the lottery terminals in the province.

We've had discussions, you know, on and off about the integrity and security of those networks, if in fact lottery owners/operators are winning a disproportionate number of prizes. I know that the minister is currently reviewing some audit findings and recommendations and that there seems to be also an internal investigation going on now. Again, if he can share with us an update with respect to this particular issue. You know, if people absolutely have to gamble, then at least we can even out the playing field for them. Most lose their money, but some would win. That's how I look at it. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission now is under his authority, and I am interested to hear his thoughts on those two issues.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, in regard to liquor retail sales in the province of Alberta the hon. member spoke about the deregulation of the industry back in the 1990s, a time when we had, I believe, 200 government-owned liquor stores, approximately 3,500 different types of products on our shelves. Well, today we have over a thousand retail stores and over 16,000 different products on the shelves. In regard to customer service that has been very successful.

However, the hon. member talked about the concern around takeovers and if it follows a trend of big business, where we end up again with only one particular company or two companies running the whole industry. We're nowhere near that in Alberta. In fact, the takeover that has been discussed recently in the news, if that were to proceed, would give one owner I believe 20 per cent of the market. The way our industry is structured with a lot of smaller ma-and-pa type stores, at this point in time, I don't have a concern with these takeovers upsetting the market. I think it's important that the Gaming and Liquor Commission ensure, as they have to this point, that it's a level playing field for all people who are involved in that industry. At this point in time, I'm quite comfortable that this particular buyout, if it takes place, will not create a problem for the smaller businesses, that they will continue to operate in an effective manner.

In regard to the distribution problems we had last year, yes, when the deregulation of the industry took place, there was a monopoly that was set up in regard to the warehousing. It actually worked quite well for I believe 15 or 16 years before we ran into a problem last year. The problem, of course, was due to an increase of sales in the province, which is a sign of our booming economy. Then when we did start having a few shortage problems, a lot of the retailers themselves escalated that problem by trying to stock up with more than what they would normally carry in the warehouse. It did create a bit of a problem, but at the end of the day liquor sales in the province were up approximately 15 per cent from the year before.

It was a bit of a glitch in the system. We've hired an independent consultant, who reviewed the concern. We have put in short-term measures and are quite confident that this year we're going to be getting through the busy season without the types of problems we had in the past. We have proposed some changes to the agreement with the warehouse to ensure that things move onwards and upwards, so I believe that in the short term and the mid term we're in pretty good shape, but we are, of course, reviewing long-term solutions to make sure that our public continues to be served in a very professional and forthright manner.

In regard to gambling the social responsibility side of gambling is certainly a big responsibility and one that we take very seriously. The hon. member talked about the per cent of Albertans who gambling is a problem for. Our numbers indicate that it's less than 10 per cent of the people who have a problem with gambling, and less than 5 per cent would be considered serious. That being said, we want to make sure that those people who need help get the help that they require, and we have programs in place to ensure that that's happened.

We're always looking at improving as well. We are setting up information kiosks in a lot of our casinos, information that would help somebody if they did think they had a problem. We're also looking at putting hosts in our casinos so that they can go through the gaming areas on a regular basis and monitor the activities there. If they see somebody who they think may be a problem gambler, then they can discuss that with them and, again, offer them the help that they need.

So there are a number of initiatives that we're moving forward with, but we're always cognizant of the fact that there are some people, whether it's through liquor sales or through gambling, who run into problems. It's important for us, and we take the responsibility very seriously. We're going to make sure that we have safety nets to make sure that those folks get the help they need.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. My questions have to do with the co-ordination of enforcement services. For example, we've got a variety of enforcement agencies. We have special constables, we have sheriffs, we have court security officers, we have conservation officers, city police, and RCMP, and I've probably left out three or four different organizations. I'm just wondering how the government co-ordinates the services and how it establishes the priorities in terms of who outranks who, whose jurisdictional authority sort of covers or is in charge in certain circumstances.

I want to go very specifically to Crown lands, parks, and protected areas, where the chief responsibility for maintaining and enforcing laws has to do with the conservation officers. I would like to note that since the early 1990s almost half of the original conservation officers were laid off as part of the government's cutbacks in order to pay down the debt. Now conservation officers have such a wide expectation in terms of kilometres of radius that they're expected to cover. When it comes to long weekends, it's impossible for the conservation officers themselves to carry out their duties. I know that, for example, sustainable resources has co-ordinated to a degree, say, in the Ghost-Waiparous area, which was a fairly lawless area, particularly on long weekends, by having more off-duty RCMP put in overtime, and that's appreciated.

My personal experience from 2002 through 2004, when I ran the campground at Cataract Creek, was that the nearest RCMP base was over 60 kilometres away, in Turner Valley. The only time I ever saw the RCMP out was when one of the campers got lost. The RCMP came by the following morning, rather perturbed at having to follow up on the poor choices this camper made with his children to go hiking late at night. It caused an awful lot of consternation for the police services. Fortunately, everything worked out well, but in three years I saw the RCMP out there once.

In 2002 thanks to the G-8 we had a greater predominance. We had the army, obviously, providing extra security for members of the G-8, and we had a number of seasonal conservation officers added to the policing. But when it came to 2003-2004, I felt very much on my own as a campground attendant, and some very strange circumstances occurred.

For example – and I'll go back to 2002 – a military-style assault shotgun with a complete clip on the outside was protruding out of the pack of one of my campers, who was sporting a bowie knife, and I indicated to the individual that you can't have an unsealed firearm in a campground. The conservation officer responded about an hour and a half after I called in this particular article, but basically the only thing between me and the potential offender – another example: a fellow who was demonstrating to his kids that he could protect them from the roaming black bears and grizzlies set off a bear banger in the campsite, and again I was left to deal with this individual, who had frightened all the campers and all their children in order to demonstrate his capability to protect his own. I couldn't deal with that. I dealt with it on my end.

My concern is the lack of policing in general, the potential of communication between the various organizations. For example, RCMP are equipped with satellite phones; conservation officers aren't. As camp personnel, front-line individuals who frequently came across an accident first or a security breach in the wilderness, we only had our two-way radio, which was not a very effective service.

My last comment has to do with sheriffs' training. I do not believe that a six-week course qualifies a person to have the responsibility of operating a provincial vehicle, pulling over speeders, and, you know, enforcing a whole series of laws, including the potential of having a shotgun in the vehicle.

The last concern I have is: what kind of fluidity, if any, is there between the various types of enforcement officers? Right now, I believe, the RCMP are taking on an awful lot of extra responsibility looking after and supervising the sheriffs. Rather than having the extra support from the sheriffs, it's taking them an undue amount of time to supervise them. I believe sheriffs should receive training similar to that of conservation officers, which is at least two years of training at, for example, the University of Lethbridge.

It's somewhat rambling, but what co-ordination of enforcement services is there? Will we require in the future sheriffs to have greater training before they're turned loose on our highways and court systems, et cetera?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, in regard to the opening comments, I guess, regarding the different agencies at different levels of policing authority in the province. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity spoke about our sheriffs, the police, the peace officers, the city police, the conservation officers, the folks that patrol our provincial parks. First of all, I want to say that it's important that these different agencies all work together to the best of their ability. They do that. You know, we certainly can always look at improving it. In regard to their authority, the authority of whatever agencies you've looked at is covered under legislation, so it's quite clear to each of these agencies as to what their roles and responsibilities are. I want to say that even during the May long weekend our sheriffs, the RCMP, and the conservation officers all did work together in regard to patrolling our Crown land and also privately owned land to keep in check some of those who tend to abuse those lands.

I want to also point out to the hon. member that it's the responsibility of the whole community to ensure that our lands are protected and looked after in a proper manner. Citizens need to be more and more vigilant to keep on top of these activities. The hon. member knows that Alberta is a big province. I don't think we could ever have the resources to patrol all of the Crown land and all of the lands that are being utilized by a lot of these off-highway vehicles that we see around today. Yes, it would always be nice to have more officers on the street, but, again, it's more than just having more people driving around in pickup trucks, et cetera, enforcing the law. It's also educating the public to let them know what's expected of them when they are on the land. Using these lands is not a right; it's a privilege. We have to improve our vigilance in making sure that we get that message out.

The hon. member spoke about the communications between the different agencies. The IT program that we're putting together now will ensure that we have a common database for all of our policing agencies across the province so that they can share data in a lot more proactive manner than they are today. We're also working on a first responder radio system, which, again, will tie in all these agencies to ensure that they can communicate back and forth. Those two initiatives are certainly going to improve the effectiveness and the efficiency of the agency as well as their safety and the safety of the public, so we are moving forward on those initiatives.

The hon. member spoke about the hours of training for our sheriffs and concern around their ability to patrol our highways. I want to let the hon. member know that these sheriffs are trained to a higher level than conservation officers are. They're all graduates of programs. They've taken an additional minimum of 400 hours of training. They do not carry shotguns in their vehicles. They are trained and carry side arms. They are all on our highways to enforce the highway traffic act and the liquor control act. They are not authorized to enforce the Criminal Code of this country. When they run into areas like that, where they need the assistance of the RCMP, they call on the officers for that.

Now, initially, when the sheriffs first came out, there were comments around that they were going to create extra work for the RCMP, that they would have to come out and rescue them. Well, that hasn't been the case at all. In fact, all the RCMP officers I talked to are quite thankful that we have the sheriffs out on our streets because they work very well with the RCMP in carrying out their mandates. They're doing just a great job, and actually, by being out there, they allow the RCMP to do a lot more work in patrolling the backcountry that you're talking about to ensure that those people that are using those lands follow the laws that apply in those particular areas.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. You have about 30 seconds.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I just wanted to make one very quick comment about the provincial integrated child exploitation, the ICE team. I just wanted to say that if anyone in this House has ever looked into the eyes of a four-year-old girl who has been traumatized by a sexual predator, they would make sure that there was extra money being put into the funding for these teams that will protect our children.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, but the time for this order of business is past. The minister may want to respond in writing.

We are now moving on to the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology, and I will invite the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology to present his opening remarks.

Advanced Education and Technology

Mr. Horner: Well, good evening, Mr. Chairman, and thank you. It's an honour to present to the Assembly the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology's business plan for '07-10 and budget estimates for '07-08. Before I begin my presentation, I would like to introduce the officials within my department who played key roles in developing this plan and who are with me here on the floor of the House, the first being Bob Fessenden, my deputy minister; Phil Gougeon, the assistant deputy minister of adult learning; Shirley Dul, assistant deputy minister of apprenticeship and industry training; Gerry Waisman, executive director of postsecondary institution services; and Blake Bartlett, the executive director of finance and administration.

Before we get into the questions, Mr. Chairman, I do have some opening remarks that I'd like to make. Our business plan reflects how the ministry is moving to strengthen Alberta's advanced learning and innovation systems while helping to build a more diverse economy. This plan also focuses on ensuring that Albertans have access to develop the learning, work, and life skills they need while tapping into the long-held Alberta spirit of entrepreneurship and lifelong learning.

It was December when the Premier gave Advanced Education and Technology a clear mandate: increase access, affordability, and quality in postsecondary education as the number one; number two is to increase support for community education and literacy programs; three, develop a strategy for technology commercialization and value-added economic diversification. Our mandate and the three-year business plan guide the ministry's future initiatives and ensure continued collaboration with institution and industry partners as we work together to build a stronger Alberta. The business plan details a number of key projects, priorities, and initiatives for Advanced Education and Technology. We want to ensure that Albertans have the opportunity to access postsecondary programs and flourish while within the system and following graduation.

One of the key priorities is to better define the roles and responsibilities of postsecondary institutions in Alberta. Work is already under way on encouraging institutions to work more collaboratively. From the youth in Lethbridge who is taking academic upgrading online to the adult student in Fort McMurray who plans to enter medical school, Alberta Advanced Education and Technology has significant opportunities to make the system serve people better. A key initiative where work is continuing is the concept and principles around Campus Alberta, which can be realized by emphasizing transferability, seamless learning, and curriculum sharing.

Another important initiative we've undertaken is to build on the momentum of the affordability framework, which was released last November, and to ensure that financial need is not a barrier to any Alberta learner. With Budget 2007 we've made critical investments that will provide direct financial assistance for students before they begin classes this fall. The ministry is providing increases to student loan limits and living allowances, eliminating vehicle restrictions, and reducing parental contributions. Students facing rent increases will be helped by these changes as well as through the regular programming that we have through Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry. The commitment to student finance is focused on enabling more students to qualify and access our world-class system while also opening the doors to more scholarships, bursaries, and grants and expanding tax credits to full- and part-time students. Our approach to creating an affordable postsecondary system is a holistic one.

My ministry is also providing institutions with funding that helps address and offset impacts of the affordability framework and the limits on tuition fee increases. Our business plan also addresses the capital and infrastructure needs of institutions by increasing our funding for the expansion, upgrading, and maintenance of Alberta's postsecondary facilities.

It's also important to note that a postsecondary education is not just limited to universities and colleges. My ministry is working to make a difference for Alberta's apprenticeship and industry training system. The business plan will see Advanced Education and Technology adding new apprenticeship technical training seats and funding learning resources, supplies, and services to support these additional training seats. This increase in funding answers the calls from industries in regions across our province. Registration for 2007-08 apprenticeship technical training classes at more than 10 technical training institutes in the province began May 14 of this year. For up-to-date information on the availability of technical training seats across the province you can visit the Alberta Advanced Education and Technology department's trade website.

Our commitment to apprenticeship doesn't end with our investment in spaces. We will also work with Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry to implement the building and educating tomorrow's workforce strategy.

Advanced Education and Technology is also expanding the amount of learning opportunities available in our communities, enhancing partnerships and ensuring that Albertans have the skills they need to contribute to our society, to our economy, and to the high quality of life we enjoy today. The goals for advanced learning in Alberta through this business plan are ambitious, important, and focus on the future, a future that is helping to build a stronger province for generations to come.

In terms of technology the '07-08 business plan continues to move forward with strategic funding for research, innovation, and technology commercialization initiatives. The three-year plan covers our traditional sectors, including energy, agriculture, and forestry as well as new emerging areas like life sciences, nanotechnology, and information and communications technology.

With energy being the engine of our economy, it is important for the ministry's investments to advance energy research and innovation in bitumen upgrading, clean coal and carbon technology, enhanced recovery techniques, renewable energy, and CO₂ capture and storage. Enhancing Alberta's value-added capabilities is an essential element in realizing Alberta's energy future. Taking our natural resources further up the value chain offers hope for new industries and opportunities for Albertans. Our commitment to the efficient recovery and getting more value from Alberta's energy resources calls for and is met by an increase in funding to the Alberta Energy Research Institute.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

In November 2006 the government of Alberta committed $30 million in funding towards implementation of a water research strategy developed through the efforts of the Alberta Science and Research Authority and other Alberta-based partners. The water research strategy implementation is being managed through an agreement with Alberta ingenuity, and the life sciences branch budget for 2007-08 contains an increase to support this investment.

We will also continue to support the implementation of the Alberta nanotechnology strategy. In every phase of technology and innovation a strong environmental platform has been created where highly qualified people can conduct their research and pilot their projects right here. To see these discoveries and technological advances come to fruition will require government's guiding hand to take them from concept to reality.

Implementing the goals for technology commercialization has been enhanced by the creation of the Value-added and Technology Commercialization Task Force created earlier this year. This summer the task force will bring forth a report to the ministry which will identify actions to increase the commercialization of market-driven, made-in-Alberta, value-added products and services. Ultimately, with feedback from other sectors of the industry we will create the right policy environment to spur individuals and companies to continue to build on Alberta's excellence in research infrastructure, world-class community of scientists, and renowned advanced learning and turn the dreams of technology commercialization into reality. The objective is to ensure that our economic and social well-being can be enhanced through science, technology, and innovation.

It's especially gratifying to see how far we really have come. The commitments to quality and access in advanced learning combined with our foray into frontiers like life sciences and nanotechnology will help to ensure a very bright future for Alberta's technology and innovation market.

Managing our growth is the theme of Budget 2007, and in a province that is realizing unprecedented growth, the postsecondary system and the technology capabilities must also anticipate and plan for the future. The total government of Alberta investment in Advanced Education and Technology for 2007-08 is $3.1 billion. This year's spending represents a 22 per cent increase over last year. The '07-08 budget includes a 6 per cent increase in base operating grants to institutions, bringing total operating grant funding to $1.5 billion. Further increases of 6 per cent per year will be provided in the next two years.

Postsecondary institutions will also see a funding increase of $347 million for capital projects this year. A total of $1.6 billion will be invested in capital projects over the next three years, including $300 million in unallocated capital. This funding boost represents a 41 per cent increase in the '06-09 capital plan. This funding will help complete a number of projects, including the Robbins health learning centre at Grant MacEwan College in Edmonton, the expansion of the Lakeland College campus in Lloydminster, the construction of the community learning campus at Olds College, and the University of Calgary's health research innovation centre.

Funding from Advanced Education and Technology in '07-08 will go towards the construction of facilities for the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Calgary, replace the Donald Cameron Hall at Banff Centre, and the Centennial Centre for Interdisciplinary Science on the campus of the University of Alberta. Decisions on the balance of the $300 million in unallocated capital will be made in accordance with the government of Alberta's capital planning process after and during the roles and responsibilities process being finalized.

We're also ensuring that our postsecondary system is affordable and accessible to Albertans. The ministry is also providing an additional $4 million for student spaces in '07-08 while increasing overall funding support to postsecondary learners by 31 per cent for student assistance. [Mr. Horner's speaking time expired]

I'll continue at another time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has indicated a desire to utilize the 20-minute time frame shared back and forth. Is that agreeable to the minister?

Mr. Horner: Sure.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to introduce my support staff, too, but as you can see, when you're in opposition, you learn to work lean and work a little smarter, I hope.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that we'll have a good 60 minutes of debate here. As you said, I'd like to do the little give-and-take thing so we can get as many questions and answers in as possible over the next hour.

You know, one of the good things about being the – sorry, what's the term now? – shadow minister for advanced education is that you get to travel around the province quite a lot and meet some very good people. I have to say that in my travels across the province the people that I've met in the positions of authority in the postsecondary institutions are really quality people. I'm very impressed by the calibre of the presidents, the executives, the students. I see that we have some representatives from the U of A listening attentively up above there. There are some excellent people working in the postsecondary world in Alberta, and I've been very impressed by them.

I hope that I can ask some questions that they have presented to me over the last several months as I've travelled around the province. As the minister said, we have a 22 per cent increase this year, which is good. But, of course, there is a lot of ground to be made up over the last several years, the years when postsecondary was not quite as high a priority with the government as it should be. We in the Official Opposition are very pleased to see more money going into advanced education since this is something we've been asking for for quite some time.

I have a number of topics that I'd like to touch upon here. I'd like to start first with the access to the future fund or maybe the mysteries of the access to the future fund. As you know, it was the centrepiece Bill 1 two years ago, and at the time I believe it was said to be going to grow to be a $3 billion fund. We're very supportive of this fund, and everyone that I've spoken to across the institutions in Alberta have all agreed that this is an excellent idea. Originally an Alberta Liberal idea, but that's the end of my political statements here. I just had to throw that one in. You know, I have to get one in anyway. That's the only one. That'll be it. No more after this. Well, maybe a few more.

It appears that the last time any money was put into the fund was in August of 2006, when I believe $250 million was added. It doesn't seem, unless there's a massive infusion of money planned very quickly, that this will get up to the $3 billion which was supposed to happen within three years if my memory serves me correctly. So I have a number of questions regarding the access to the future fund, and then we'll go on to some other topics if that's okay.

Now, I don't see anything in the budget adding to the access to the future fund here. Page 180 of the estimates, the Finance section, internal government transfers, shows that there is no planned transfer to the access to the future endowment. My first question is clearly: where is the money for the endowment, and what is the situation with it at this time? Are we going to see it reach a $3 billion cap within the next two years, three years, five years? Do you have a long-range plan for what we can see for the access to the future fund?

I've also heard from a number of institutions that they were a little unclear about how the fund is being administered. Some stakeholders have expressed this concern with me. There's clear agreement, as I said, that the fund is very worth while and very welcome, but I sensed that there was frustration in the way it is being administered because they're not quite sure exactly what the rules are. Many donors also want to know what is going on. Prospective gifts hang in the balance, from what I've been told.

Now, the minister may recall that a while back in question period I mentioned that one senior administrator at an institution called the bureaucracy around the fund ridiculous. I won't tell you who said that; it doesn't matter. But it's an interesting point that he would come out and say that he thought there was something seriously wrong with it.

What I'd like to hear from the minister is an update on the access to the future fund. What is the situation? Why are there no funds being put into the access to the future fund at this moment? I'd like to hear a little bit more about what has been paid out and how we can get information about it. It seems that there's very little information available about the money that is actually being awarded from it. Generally there would be something on a website or press releases. If there's anything being awarded from the fund, it's very hard to figure out exactly what it is, so perhaps the minister can enlighten us a little bit about how much money has been distributed from the fund and if we're going to get a little bit more information in the future about it.

Also, I've been asked to inquire why donations of equipment have not been included in the matching formula. This is also another area where there's been millions of dollars of equipment offered to postsecondary institutions, particularly SAIT and NAIT, but it doesn't fall under the agreement so that they can actually get matching funds for it.

If the minister could expand a little bit on the status of the access to the future fund right now, I would appreciate it, and then we'll just go on to some other topics.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, agree that in our system we have exceptional staff. We have exceptional managers and CEOs of those institutions. We also have exceptional board members that are working with these CEOs and these institutions to help guide and direct Campus Alberta. We have high-quality researchers, very high-quality researchers. International countries are looking at us and saying: wow, you're becoming very globally recognized. We have high-quality students and motivated students that are interested not only in what their personal studies are but also in what's going on around them.

You know, as far as the access to the future fund and being very supportive of the fund as a good idea, I, too, think it's a great idea. You know, great ideas have many friends and cousins; bad ideas are always orphans. So it's interesting that who came up with it first is probably debatable.

In terms of the access to the future fund it has its own statements because it is a fund outside of government. It's an endowment fund, so they do establish their own statements. But what I can certainly tell the hon. member is that the access to the future fund is managed by the advisory council, who take their role very, very seriously, are very, very keen on the fund and the vision behind that fund, and are very keen on working on the original vision of the access to the future fund and the innovation fund to be coming out of that.

In 2007-2008 funding for the access to the future fund rises to about $53 million. The fund was created to enhance access to high-quality, affordable advanced learning opportunities by matching donations as well as supporting innovative and collaborative projects. I think we're going to see that become very, very important when you talk about student access, student transferability, being able to access the system at one point and creating a pathway for your career learning. It is, after all, all about the students and filling that need, the societal need that the students are trying to fill. Each of the institutions gets an amount out of that $53 million based on the criteria set up by the council. The council has a clear set of rules and mandates that are communicated to the institutions.

Yes, the hon. member is correct that when the fund was announced, there was, I guess, an outpouring of generosity from Albertans, you know: here's a great idea, and it all came at once. That was never the intention of the fund. The fund was set up to establish an ongoing amount every year that the institutions could then use to match with public generosity, which they will continue to do. As a period of time elapses, you're going to catch up on some of those. I think the generosity of Albertans isn't based on whether or not they get matched now or get matched over the future but that they get matched. Certainly, there are a lot of very good things that are happening with that access to the future fund.

The government, I think, made it very clear in their budget, when they announced the budget in early April, that should there be surplus funds to what was budgeted, the budget part of that is that one-third is going to go into savings. The first one-third of that is going to go into savings, as the Minister of Finance had mentioned. The priorities are set by the government as to the savings allocations, but the hon. member knows that there is only one other endowment that isn't in my ministry, and that's the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

I look forward to working on those priorities in the future. I agree with them. All of the institutions believe this is a good idea. All of the industry folks that we've talked to believe this is a good idea, and where we can leverage dollars, we will endeavour to do so.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. I'd just like to clarify a few comments here. The access to the future fund: I just want to clarify that there is no additional funding going into the fund this year. I'd just like to clarify that. You did mention that $53 million, I believe, is being allocated from the fund – is that correct? – in '07-08, as I understand it. But I would like to know: is there any additional money going into the fund right now? Does it still sit at a billion or whatever the fund is right now, or will there be some more money going into it?

You also mentioned there are a number of very good things that are happening with the access to the future fund. Again, I'd like to go back to that it would be nice to know what they are. I still haven't found an easily accessible way to see where the money is going and who it's going to.

If the minister could maybe just expand upon those two issues a little bit, please.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. In September of this year the annual report of the access to the future fund will probably be tabled in the House. I'll make sure that we do table it when we come back to the session in the fall. But, certainly, it probably would be released before that, so the hon. member will have an opportunity to review the annual report of the access to the future fund that the council will put forward.

In the meantime the hon. member is probably well aware that the institutions are the ones that are doing the programming to match the projects on an individual basis. In fact, where institutions were not able to raise matching dollars, those dollars are going to actually roll forward for them, so it actually adds to the ability in some of the more remote areas to add to that opportunity that they have.

At this point in time if there's some other detail that you'd like, I'd be more than happy to get you a copy of the listing that every institution – there's a list of what they received, their allocation if you will. We could get that to the hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: When you say their allocation, do you mean how much they are allowed to get or how much they have received in terms of matching funds? I just want to clarify the wording there.

Mr. Horner: Well, essentially the original intent was always that there would be a certain amount that each institution would be allocated from the funds coming out of the billion dollars that we currently have, the $3 billion at its maturity – right? – when it's fully funded. Then there is an amount that every institution is going to receive from that to be fair to all institutions across the province. Some institutions have a much easier time at raising dollars than others, and that's part of the issue here. So the $53 million which I referred to is separated out amongst those institutions, and I'd be more than happy to get the hon. member the list.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Just one last time on the access to the future fund: is there no money being put into the fund this year? Is it just going to sit at that current total? Are there any plans for any further money to go into the access to the future fund?

Mr. Horner: Well, as I mentioned to the hon. member earlier in my response, the budget that was brought in this spring does not have any allocation to the access to the future fund; however, should we be in a position to do so from further surplus, the budget does state that we would be taking one-third to savings. It is my view and what

I will be lobbying hard for is to have an increase to the access to the future fund.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to go on to capital projects and capacity now for a few moments. I see that there was an increase of 88 per cent in capital grants this year, which is an impressive number and certainly necessary. We, of course, have a lot of catching up to do after a number of years when our postsecondary education was somewhat on the back burner.

I have a little bit of an understanding of what the minister must go through trying to figure out where the money should go. In my travels around the province I hear at each institution I've been to: "Look what we've got here. We've got this brilliant thing planned. We've got this monumental project here. We've got this. We've got that." Everybody has wonderful projects, and I suppose that if the minister had found another billion dollars floating around somewhere, everybody would be happy. [interjection] Four billion dollars. Okay. That shouldn't be too hard to find.

It does bring up the whole question of the decision-making process of I believe you call it the capital planning process, and I'd like to go into that for a little bit. For instance, SAIT, as you know, has that capital project, the trades and technology complex I believe it's called, and of course NAIT has the proposed Ralph Klein campus. From what I've heard, they believe that they're not getting any money for it. SAIT is not quite sure what's going on there, either, the last time I spoke to them.

Maybe the minister can go on for some time about how the capital planning process works. I'm sorry, not some time. Briefly. I know you could probably go on for a long time about it. Exactly who does call the shots on this? We've heard that institutions can put forward project options, but the ministry, of course, holds the purse strings, and they make the decisions about what is going to be funded, and what isn't. How collaborative is this process? Is there a certain amount of, "Well, NAIT got money this year; SAIT gets money next year." Is there anything along those lines? Does the President of the Treasury Board, say, have any sort of say in how this money is spent, or is this envelope of money that you would have entirely at your disposal?

I'm wondering if maybe the minister can talk a little bit about why the money is kept under such tight control. I know that you don't want to just throw away money all over the place, but at one institution I talked to, one of the representatives said: "Just turn us loose. We can raise money. We can do this if we just get the okay." There seems to be a certain level of frustration. They're waiting. You know, "We're ready. We've got our plans. We're ready to go." But then there's kind of a road block somewhere, and it's generally with the government, waiting for the money to show up.

Secondly, the press release that came out with the budget listed the following major projects as receiving funding over the coming three years: the University of Alberta centennial centre for interdisciplinary science, the University of Calgary digital library, a health resource innovation facility at the University of Alberta, a health research innovation centre at the University of Calgary. I believe the minister mentioned some other ones too. I didn't have time to write them all down. I'm wondering if there are any others in the future that we have not announced or if he can give us sort of like a pecking order, perhaps, like top of the list, some sort of priority?

Mr. Horner: You want me to announce them now?

Mr. Tougas: Yeah, sure. Why not? We've got nothing else to do here.

There's the whole question, of course, of construction cost overruns. As you know, it's getting hugely expensive to build anything here. Could we get to the point where you're just going to say: it's just too expensive to build this thing, and we're just going to have to shut this one down? As I recall, I think it was the previous Premier who said, "Just don't build it if you can't afford it" or something along those lines when he was talking about cities and how they're going to spend money. Is this going to be something that could be happening at some time in the future?

Maybe I'll let the minister answer a little bit of that question, and then I'll have some more supplementary questions on capital projects and capacity.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, the capital planning process and the prioritization of where we're going is a huge task given the number of institutions that we have in the province and the number of institutions that are currently experiencing growth and expanding. There are capital projects under way at pretty much all of our institutions at this point in time in one way, shape, or another or in planning, or the ground is dug.

In essence, we are moving towards the roles and responsibilities and mandate framework that we are working collaboratively with all of the institutions. I know that the hon. member is aware that we had all institutions into Government House in early February to discuss this idea of roles and responsibilities and mandates within a framework of Campus Alberta. As part of that, what we need to do on an annual basis is determine what the need is in terms of the capital, in terms of the spaces. What is industry telling us that the need is out there on the job market, as an example? What is the need in the health workforce strategy? What is the need in government? What is the need for the postsecondaries to offer the right type of programming, geographically, in remote areas perhaps? What's the appropriate need for the institutions in terms of their maintenance? All of those things have to come together for an overall plan for the province.

All of the institutions, then, need to look at their individual plans. Whether this was done in the past or not: I've only been in the post six months, hon. member, so I'm not going to say whether it was or not. Each of those institutions needs to look at their plans in the context of the Campus Alberta approach and the needs that we have throughout the province.

We need to be able to gather information from the students. What are the students telling us through their applications into the system? Once we have all of that information in hand, and we then take a look at the capital plans that have been prepared by the institutions, we're going to get a lot closer in the discussions with the institutions about how they fit into that and then determine whether the plan that they had is going to fit.

The hon. member mentioned NAIT and SAIT. There's no yes to that, and there's no no to it as yet, so perhaps NAIT was a little premature in that regard.

Having said all of that, we know areas where we need to expand. We know that we need to expand in the apprenticeship program, but are we expanding in the right places? Are the students in the right places? Are they able to access in the right geographic areas? We're going to be moving forward with a lot of that due diligence and have been doing so over the last several months.

The hon. member mentioned some of the programs that we're currently working on. As an example, we have the Bow Valley expansion that is currently under way. Grant MacEwan College, Robbins health, I mentioned. There's the Keyano College sport and wellness centre, the Lakeland Lloydminster campus expansion. We are working with NAIT, actually, on some expansion of the apprenticeship training, their centre for apprenticeship technologies. We are working on a plan for the northern part of the province for trades expansion. We're working with Olds College on their equine centre of innovation, community learning campus; with Portage College, the Cold Lake campus; with Red Deer College, trades expansion.

Of course, we have a number of other larger projects that were announced, like the Edmonton clinic, the University of Calgary health research innovation centre, which I mentioned earlier, the University of Calgary Taylor digital library, University of Lethbridge Alberta water and environmental science building, and quite a number of other smaller projects, as I'm sure the hon. member can relate to. But in terms of how we develop the plan, that's the process that we are currently involved in parallel with the roles, responsibilities, mandate framework that we're talking about.

The Chair: The hon. member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Concerning deferred maintenance and the problem of the condition of a lot of the buildings, particularly at our universities, if you take the University of Calgary, for instance, they're facing what they believe is a $300 million deferred maintenance bill. Does the minister accept that that's a roughly accurate number and that there is a serious problem with deferred maintenance or maintenance overall? I'm wondering if the minister can tell us what proportion of the capital budget is going to maintenance, if there is something specifically set aside for that, and is this problem going to get worse before it gets better.

There's a lot of building going on right now, but I'm a little concerned that there's not that much being put into existing buildings. Is this something that the universities and colleges have to take out of their existing budget, or is this something for which we can expect some additional money from the government so that they can catch up and improve the condition of some of the buildings that the students are in right now? While the new buildings are great and they're going to be great when they're finished, there are a lot of problems with some of the existing buildings. I think my friend over here will ask a few questions later on about the situation in Calgary.

I wonder if the minister, again, could tell us what proportion of the capital budget is going to maintenance and if he sees this as a significant long-term problem and what his approach to solving this problem is.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Chairman, one of the priorities that our Premier has enunciated I think very, very well is that deferred maintenance in all areas of the province's infrastructure is a key issue for us to work on. Our budget for the three years on the IMP funding for the various buildings and other areas that are not actually part of the renovation, where we're actually putting dollars into, is about $107 million over the three years. Do I think that's enough? No. And I think the institutions would probably agree that it needs to be added to.

Again I go back to the budget announcement. Two-thirds of the surplus dollars, if there are surplus dollars, are already budgeted to be put into the capital account mostly for deferred maintenance. It's our intent – and the Premier has said many times – that you can build all the brand new buildings you want, but if you don't take care of the ones that are already out there, you're going to have longer term problems. So we are looking towards the coming years and getting as much of that deferred maintenance taken care of as we possibly can.

Mr. Tougas: Is there a number in the budget?

Mr. Horner: Yeah. It's $107 million over three years.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. From the outset of the discussions and questions I want to make it very clear that I am not, nor are any members of my Liberal caucus, suggesting a Peter/Paul scenario, that the U of C should do well at the expense of the U of A, that the University of Lethbridge get more funding than Medicine Hat College, and so on. So I want to put that notion to rest.

I do want to champion the needs of the University of Calgary, which I represent as the MLA for Calgary-Varsity. I had an opportunity to discuss through Public Accounts the concerns – and these were raised as well by Conservative colleagues from Calgary – of the discrepancies in funding between the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. I am very aware that the University of Alberta is an older institution, but I would like to indicate that the University of Calgary has a number of buildings that are now 41 years of age, so that aging infrastructure is definitely a factor in terms of the maintenance that my hon. colleague mentioned previously.

Now, the University of Calgary's difference is basically $1,200 per student less than what the University of Alberta receives, and when you add up the total student population and multiply it by that $1,200, the figure you arrive at is close to $350 million. Acknowledging the fact of age, acknowledging the fact that there are different programs, such as the University of Alberta having a dentistry program, the University of Calgary does need greater support.

In terms of its priorities I had a chance last week during our constituency week to meet with Donna Mastel, government relations, and Roman Cooney, who is a strong advocate of the University of Calgary. They asked me to bring forward their top priority, and that is $283 million for 600,000 square feet for the ISEEE building, and that's the Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy, and an additional $40 million for phase 1 of the experiential learning centre to address critical science lab safety deficiencies. Among the discussions we had was the fact that the province has suggested that we would have 15,000 new spaces by this fall and 60,000 new spaces overall throughout all the postsecondary institutions by 2020. Any assurances that I could bring back to the University of Calgary with regard to the acknowledgement of the $350 million portion of their $1.5 billion needs list – and notice that I didn't call it a wish list; I called it a needs list – would be very appreciated.

I would also like to bring forward questions about the downtown campus concept. The University of Calgary, Mount Royal, Bow Valley College, and SAIT have all expressed a desire to have a combined sort of education shopping mall, basically, in downtown Calgary. Lance Carlson, who represents the Alberta College of Art and Design, wants to preserve the uniqueness of his academic college of art but would like to be in an area where potentially shared facilities like food services could be shared.

Another one of the exciting parts of this downtown campus, which hopefully the government will support, is the idea of student dormitories. If we have a sufficiently large high-rise of dormitories, that would not only address the student housing issues, provide extra classroom space, which is absolutely essential, but it could also be a partial answer to the affordable housing crisis by having dormitories partially occupied as affordable housing for not only the students but people working and living in the downtown area.

There has also been recent discussion about extending degree-granting capabilities to Mount Royal. In general the Liberal Party supports the idea of Mount Royal university as well as Mount Royal College, but there is the minimum expectation that the peer review processes that go into establishing the academic credentials be met. In discussions, for example, at Grant MacEwan, Grant MacEwan welcomed 32 different peer reviews to support their applied degree programs, and I'm sure that Mount Royal would undertake a similar circumstance.

I know that both Mount Royal and Grant MacEwan, for example, are much needed for nursing – we have a medical shortage – so any check-offs, any information I can bring back with regard to the downtown campus, with regard to the $350 or $1,200 per head discrepancies, and any future addressing of those problems, either in this budget or projected budgets, I would be very pleased to hear and look forward to.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the participation of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. Certainly, I've had a number of discussions with the institutions in Calgary, and in terms of this issue around taking the total amount of grants, the total number of students, dividing it up, and then making the comparison, I'm sure the hon. member would agree that the funding, the mechanisms by which we teach, the course load that they take are all very, very complicated. It would be very simplistic to do that. It comes out with a nice easy number, but it doesn't make any sense. It's not a valid number.

One of the problems that you have is that the U of A has a number of high-cost programs that, quite frankly, are not even offered at the U of C, which contribute to the higher cost per student. An example would be dentistry at $69,000 per FLE. Agriculture is even at $17,000 per FLE and forestry at $23,600. I'm sure that the hon. member would agree that you can't take that and just compare it straight across. The other thing is there are more students at the U of A, considerably more students. You mentioned the older buildings at the U of A, and that is a concern, given the maintenance costs of those buildings and their replacement. About 34 per cent of the U of A's buildings were built before 1960 and only about 17 per cent on the Calgary campus.

That's not to say that Calgary doesn't need more spots. It does. We are working with the University of Calgary, with Mount Royal College. We just did some announcements there earlier this year as well as with Bow Valley on their expansions. In fact, Bow Valley College right now is in phase 1 of what will turn out to be something in the range of a $58 million expansion. We have already dollars set aside for their expansion into phase 2. Obviously, as has been mentioned in the House earlier, there may have to be a little bit of reconsideration of what that expansion might be, given current costs. But there's already an allocated amount for Bow Valley to expand there.

Certainly, when you look at the ISEEE building, I agree. It's certainly one of the higher priorities in our department right now, trying to figure out how best to see how we might be able to work together with the U of C and perhaps other partners in bringing forward a solution to their issue.

The hon. member mentioned the urban campus. Really, again, I want to go back to how we are planning on working with the institutions in terms of: let's identify what the need is; let's identify what our current inventory is; then let's identify how we fill those gaps, whether that be by infrastructure or by spots. We have roughly around 140,000, 150,000 students participating in our postsecondary system today. That's a lot of spots, and the reality is: is saying that we're going to create a certain number of spots the right way to go, or is it better to do it in a collaborative, co-operative method, with all the institutions sitting at the table helping us plan what the future of Campus Alberta is going to look like?

The urban campus is a very interesting concept. How it fits into that Campus Alberta approach and the entire plan is what we're working on right now. It looks like there's certainly some opportunity there for P3s. You mentioned the housing. I think there's a prime opportunity there for some energetic institutions to look at the possibility of creating some housing spaces, student dormitories, through a P3 opportunity.

The hon. member mentioned Mount Royal College and the degree granting that they've been requesting. I'm sure he's aware that they do have now degree-granting capabilities. In fact, they are on a pathway that I think will fulfill their desires as we are trying to create the framework around which the institutions will define their niche and define their role and define what they're going to do for this Legislature because this government and we as representatives are watching the dollars that we send to those institutions. It has to be based on what the students need and what Alberta needs. I think Mount Royal College is agreeable to working with us in that way and on the pathway.

He may also be aware that earlier this year we announced 200 new nursing spots at Mount Royal College as well as an additional 200 spots at Grant MacEwan. We are working to address the space requirements in the health care sector, and Mount Royal and Grant MacEwan and other institutions around the province are all playing a part in that. Again, it goes to that holistic Campus Alberta approach, looking to what is the need for the province and then trying to meet that as a collective group, keeping some autonomy in each of those institutions so they can grow and flourish in a direction that their boards want them to go.

The other side of this. The hon. member mentioned, you know, peer reviews and this sort of thing. My goal is to ensure that we have a seamless, highly transferable system in play for our students that is high quality, that's affordable. Those are some pretty heavy goals. The department that I have is well suited to hit those goals because we have a great team, and we have a good plan in place in terms of these roles and responsibilities.

One last comment on the funding side of it. I think, you know, the hon. member would agree that it's difficult to make that kind of comparison between U of A and U of C, but having said that, we have a government funding to postsecondary review every five years. In 2005 that review did lead to an equity readjustment for several institutions, including the University of Calgary. There was an equity adjustment at that time of about $2.7 million in ongoing funding.

Having said that, in our roles and responsibilities framework and those goals that we set out and the needs analysis and a lot of the stuff that we're talking about moving towards as a group with the institutions, I think it's generally accepted that we're going to have to look at the overall way that we fund institutions today and see if that's going to meet the needs of tomorrow in the Campus Alberta framework. I have given the commitment to a number of the institutions that we are more than willing to take a look at that and see if there's a better way for us to do things.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Since we do have some members of the University of Alberta Students' Union here, I'd like to ask a few questions about student finances now. Goal 1 of the business plan states that a desired outcome is: "Financial need is not a barrier to participating in the advanced learning system, and financial assistance is available to students to support a seamless system." I'd like to know from the minister: how far away do you think the system is from achieving this outcome, where financial need is no longer a barrier? It seems to me that it's always going to be a barrier at some point. Is it really an attainable goal?

The government has also made some moves towards improving student tuition affordability. Unfortunately, tuition fees remain in regulation, not legislation. I know that this is not strictly a budget item, but is there any interest on the government side in returning tuition to legislation? I was told by some students that during your party's leadership campaign the current Premier expressed an interest to returning tuition to legislation, at least as a possibility. I'm wondering if you could address that as well.

I have a question about specific line items in the budget. Line 3.0.3, bursaries and grants: last year it was apparently underspent by several millions of dollars; only 70 per cent of the budgeted amount was spent. Line 3.0.4, student loan relief benefit: less than half of the budgeted amount was spent. I'm wondering if the minister has any thoughts as to why this money is going unused. Is it a matter of not promoting it properly, or is it just that people don't know it's there? It's curious to me that there would be money left over in something that is as important as that.

Since I do have a number of other topics that I'd like to cover, and the Member for Calgary-Varsity also has some other questions, I think I'd just like to end right there and see if I could get some answers from you on those questions.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The affordability framework came forward, and in my meetings with the students' union executives, CAUS and ACTISEC, I asked them: what would be the most important things that we could do? We can't do it all at once. I think everyone would recognize that some things take some time. This is the first year of a three-year plan on the affordability framework, and I think we've come quite a ways. One of the things that they told me was: "The cost of living hasn't been changed in a long, long time. You need to bump it up, and it needs to be more than 10 per cent." We did that.

The other thing that we talked about is that, you know, sometimes there are stupid little rules out there. As a father of two individuals who are either going or have gone to a postsecondary, I knew that they had to drive on the roads a fair bit. It didn't make a lot of sense to me that we would limit students to driving old junkers because I guess that didn't denote a need or something to that effect. I thought it was a stupid rule anyway, so we got rid of that, which the students also agreed with me on.

We introduced an increase to the annual student loan limits. It's important to note in Alberta the remission rate that we use on the loans, where it's quite likely and quite feasible that at the end of a student's student career, the loans that they're going to be left with are only, actually, the federal portion, which we have really no control over. A lot of what we provide is in the bursaries and the grants program.

Tuition in regulation versus legislation. I've talked to all of the student councils about that and talked to them about some of the reasons why I think maybe that's not such a bad idea. Either way

I've given them a very firm commitment from this ministry that if there was ever going to be some consideration to changing the way we're doing things now, they would be definitely consulted in that respect. I think that when one looks at tuition and the tuition policy that we have today, it will only get better and better and better in Alberta as other jurisdictions start to surpass us even more than they have already given the limit to the increase that we've done, whereas in other provinces and other jurisdictions there are no limits, and things have been moving quite steadily onward.

The hon. member brings up an interesting point on the student relief and the unused portions of that relief. All of the changes in the affordability framework that we're working on are to actually help students see that as a good program. An investment in one's education is the best investment they will ever make in their lifetime. Certainly, if we have a way to help them make that investment, we want to do that.

The student relief program: quite frankly, if the students don't apply for it, it goes unused. That is what has happened in some cases in some years. You see ebbs and flows in how it works. We had a limited amount of uptake in some of these programs. Granted, the strong economy may have something to do with that. There may be other areas of finance that students are accessing, and they may feel that perhaps it was too complicated and didn't want to get involved in it. We're working on the entire process of applying for the student loan. I'm actually quite excited by some of the things that I've seen in terms of the IT that we're going to employ to help students understand better their needs analysis that's done by the student finance system.

Again, hon. member, this is a joint project that we're working on with the federal government, and we have to be cognizant of what they want just as much as what we want and certainly be cognizant of what's easiest for the students.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Just going back to the cost-of-living increase that you discussed earlier, is this something that we can expect to see on a regular basis? Are there annual reviews of the amount of money for students that you were talking about before, or is this kind of a one-time thing? Do you look at it every two or three years, every year? Can you just expand a little bit on that, please?

Mr. Horner: Well, obviously, Mr. Chairman, in the affordability framework report that came forward, 14 per cent was not the number that was in the report. The cost-of-living increase: obviously, in Alberta the cost of living is going up, and I would like to see that increased. We'll have to see, going through the next budget process, how successful we are at doing that. But I also think there are other ways we might be able to help students as well that were in the affordability framework, and I would like to introduce some of those as well, if I can, in our next two- and three-year plan so that we get a balance of the entire affordability framework and not just concentrate on one certain thing. We want to get a balance so that we catch as many of those students in need as we possibly can.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Just one of the benefits of the urban campus that I didn't previously refer to is the fact that not only would it provide more spaces for students and have that flexibility and interaction from one institution to another, as you mentioned, with the Campus Alberta concept; it would provide a possibility of allowing students who did not necessarily have the high grade point averages to have an opportunity to receive a postsecondary education.

What's happening right now with a number of our university requirements is that they're becoming so high as to be almost to the point of elitist, and we're losing a lot of students who have rounded capabilities as opposed to strictly a one-sided grade point average. This isn't just a problem that the University of Calgary is facing although it has been noted that for the last couple of years running that 20 to 25 per cent of eligible students who could afford the tuition and who had the high grades were forced to turn away.

Can the minister give me some kind of sense as to how close to that 15,000 goal that was announced three years ago the government is approaching, and are we on track with our current policies to reach that 60,000 by 2020? Is that still the plan?

Mr. Horner: Well, one has to remember that apprenticeship spaces are also involved in there and that whole side of it. In fact, when you include apprenticeship spaces in all the things that we're doing, we are on track.

I want to go back to what I was talking about a little bit earlier, Mr. Chairman, and that is that we need to develop these spaces and the infrastructure plans and the capital plans based on the need of the province. Yes, it's true that we need more spaces in Calgary, and we're working on that. Undergraduate spaces do need to be expanded, but do they need to be expanded at the universities, or do we need to expand the entire system and feed into that so that the universities can work on the plans that they have and students have access in more than one place?

The hon. member mentioned Mount Royal College, which I don't think is one of the partners in the urban campus at this point in time.

An Hon. Member: They've been on and off.

Mr. Horner: As the member says, they've kind of been on and off on that one.

It's an interesting concept, and there are capital dollars that are out there for other projects that could conceivably – if the institutions decided that that was where they wanted to go, we could sit down and make a deal in that respect too. But having said that, I'm interested in following up on their discussions. I'm interested in the P3 opportunities that the urban campus may present, and over a long period of time perhaps that's an answer.

Twenty-five per cent of eligible students forced to turn away is a difficult thing for me to agree to because I'm not sure where they went. How many of that 25 per cent actually chose a different institution? It's very difficult for us to determine that right now. All we can say is that an offer was made by the institution and the student didn't accept, or the student made an application and there weren't enough spaces. But did that student get turned away, or did that student actually go to another place? Surprisingly enough, at certain times of the year all of a sudden there are spaces open in different places because students didn't go when they said they were going to go or, you know, life changes.

I think that given the new system that we're talking about putting in place in terms of applications, the APAS system, we need to expand that. We need to bring it more in line with what we're talking about in terms of the Campus Alberta approach. We need to ensure that the information goes both ways because it would be critical information for government and for the institutions to do that planning, to do that infrastructure and space planning, if we have an idea as to what the flow is actually doing. If we can get that flow properly documented and the information back and not just to government but to the institutions as well, it'll help us in planning what we need to do in the future as well as the industry telling us how fast they're filling up their needs so that we can be flexible in how we build the capacity around the Campus Alberta approach. I think it's very, very important that we follow up on those things because remember that tuition is based on cost, and if we can reduce the cost in our postsecondary system, that will help keep tuition down.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, but I will now invite officials to leave the Assembly so the committee may rise and report.

Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(b) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under its consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Solicitor General and Public Security, Justice and Attorney General, and Advanced Education and Technology relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Acting Government House Leader.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you very much. We've had a very productive evening, excellent presentations, and I would move now that we adjourn and reconvene tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock.

[Motion carried; at 10:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 29, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/29

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning you hosted the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association bursary and essay contest award presentation ceremony in the Legislature Building. The bursaries are presented annually by the Alberta branch of the CPA to young people from TUXIS, Alberta Girl's Parliament, and the grade 6 essay contest. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the award winners and their guests, who are seated in your gallery. I would ask that the guests rise as I call their names.

The first-place CPA essay contest winner, Allyson Kupchenko from Strathcona, and her parents, John and Christine Kupchenko, grandmother Jutta Ferko, brother Mitch Kupchenko, and Candy and Kailee Dilley, family friends.

The third-place CPA essay contest winner, Emma Maria Van Loon from the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency, and her mother, Ilse Van Loon, siblings Anne, Vincent, and Lisa, and family friends Jack and Alice Burlet from Barrhead.

The Alberta Girls' Parliament recipients are Rebecca Bootsman from Edmonton-Centre and her mother, Heather Nickless; Amanda Garrow of Calgary-Foothills and her parents, Pam and Curtis Garrow, and sister Naddison Garrow. They are accompanied by their adviser, Ms Edie Jubenville.

The TUXIS organization is represented by Mr. Tim Beechey, chairman of TUXIS.

Please give our guests the very warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A little bit earlier today I had the pleasure of having my picture taken with 50 of Alberta's brightest and best students. They are from the Calmar school, and they've come to visit us in the Legislature today. They're actually going around collecting autographs from some of the MLAs and talking about our favourite hockey teams. But let me tell you something else, and that is that they're accompanied by one of their teachers, Mrs. Jeanette Wilson, who is the mother of page Luke Wilson and former page Natalie Wilson. Also along with the 50 students is Mrs. Angie Podgurny, Mrs. Kathleen Sikliski, Mrs. Kathy Timmons, Mrs. Tammy Vandenberghe, Mr. Troy Mutch, Mrs. Lori Workun, Mrs. Randy Doolittle, Mrs. Tania Gartner, and Ms Heidi Hough. I would ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly Jon Friel. Jon Friel was born in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. He left Moose Jaw and went to the University of Saskatchewan, where he was a linebacker for the University of Saskatchewan Huskies, and much to his mother's surprise he also excelled at academics. He has been retired for 32 years from Corrections Canada and now runs a private practice as a psychologist. He is still active as a hockey player in Sherwood Park. Dr. Friel is married. He's a proud grandfather of a grandson and granddaughter. He lives in Sherwood Park. He shops frequently at Toys "R" Us. In the last election he got 4,115 votes. Dr. Friel is in the members' gallery, and I would ask him to now rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 35 bright grade 6 students from St. Richard elementary school in my riding, accompanied by their teachers Roxanne Rachinski and Elizabeth Evaristo. They are all seated in the public gallery. I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. I request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled my constituency assistant in Strathcona constituency, Laurette Strong, and the student working with us during the summertime, a student of the U of A political science program, Brittney Timperley. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House three people from my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora: Mary Ladouceur, Eunice Minkler, and Norma Bower. They are back again. They were here a few weeks ago. They are still concerned about the unacceptable high increase in rents in our community. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure as well to reintroduce a guest who was here a couple of weeks ago to hear her questions asked during the debate of Bill 34, and she's back again to follow up on that visit: Ms Marilyn Sjulstad, from the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. She's rising in the public gallery, and I would ask all members to give her the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three individuals who care for children and families in Alberta. The first is Anita Moore, board chair for Hospitals and Community Daycare in Edmonton; the second is Cyndi Deloyer, Fort McMurray Family Crisis Society; and finally, Nancy Ranu, Rainbow daycare society, Edmonton. I'd like them to rise and please accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Richard Yiu and John Hladik. Richard and John are Palace Casino workers entering their 263rd day on strike. These Alberta workers have been on strike due in part to this government's unwillingness to create labour legislation that protects workers from unfair employers.

Richard has been at the Palace Casino for five years as a card dealer. He's a father of one daughter and one son. He works full-time at the casino, and in his off time he enjoys visiting other casinos and partaking in gaming.

John has worked at the casino for five years as a dealer. John has been active in community sports throughout his life but in the last few years has decided to relax a bit and enjoy his time a little bit more and take his mind off his trouble with a good book.

They are joined by UFCW 401 representative Don Crisall, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Little Bow, you have guests coming a little later?

Mr. McFarland: Yes.

Asian Dinner for the Homeless

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about an event at the Calgary Drop-in & Rehab Centre. On the occasion of the Asian Heritage Month of May a group of caring Albertans organized a taste of Asia dinner for the homeless. I took only a small part in it, so I want to thank those who organized this special dinner: Kim Hoang, Manh Hong Nguyen, Eric Sit, Vicky Hong, Kim Yoon, Jason Klinck, Evelyn and Doug Porter, Gwendoline Cham, Amtul and Naem Khan, and many individual volunteers, particularly from the MSBCA Association, the Ahmadiyya Muslim Community, and the Calgary Centre for Newcomers.

We served meals and performed musical entertainment for 1,300 homeless Albertans. I did partake in the meals and sang a couple of songs along with our homeless guests. It was an uplifting feeling for all of us who were there.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with you what is written about the homeless.

Homelessness has many faces. When visible, homelessness stands on street corners and panhandles, huddles beneath blankets in city parks or digs through garbage bins looking for bottles.

Sometimes, homelessness is not visible. A cousin couch surfs for a few weeks after leaving his girlfriend or losing his job. A woman hides [away] at a friend's while trying to get out of an abusive relationship. A friend moves from the other side of the country and needs a place to stay until he/she can find a job and afford a place to live.

Homelessness has many causes. Addictions, mental [illness], life crises, illness, bad decisions, escalating rent, conversion of rental units into condominiums, economic booms leading to escalating rents and urban redevelopment.

Homelessness is numbing. It rips away self-esteem, destroys hope and breaks apart families.

I should note that the funding . . .

The Speaker: And I think, hon. member, we're going to thank you and move on to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

4-D Human Atlas Project

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise to share a truly inspirational story based right here in Alberta. Last week Dr. Christoph Sensen and his team in Calgary unveiled a stunning new application of a technology which will benefit people around the world and will continue to move our province to the forefront of the international technology landscape. The 4-D human atlas project is a federal/provincial collaboration which is actually three provincial success stories in one. KasterStener Publications, a Red Deer company, and the WEPA team, based at the U of C, have employed the computer programming language Java 3D, which was created by a Calgarian, James Gosling, to convert anatomical and graphic details in ways that clinicians have only dreamed about.

Mr. Speaker, I witnessed the technology myself last week, and I can tell you that even when you see it with your own eyes, it's almost impossible to believe. Not only are the images in 3-D; they are also life sized and on four screens. The detail is 10 times clearer than any other system on Earth, and the images are customized to each individual's unique DNA. Then the fourth dimension is added, and the resultant demonstration of what happens to each body system and between each system when exposed to pharmaceuticals, illicit drugs, and disease over time will change the way we conduct research. Just as critical is the ability to evaluate treatment options in conditions like Alzheimer's, diabetes, and cancer, and there are amazing surgical applications as well. For example, doctors can actually practise open-heart surgery on a patient without ever even touching them.

This incredible project is evidence of what can be done in this province when government, industry, and academic interests collaborate for the advancement of science and technology as we work together to improve the quality of life for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Lieutenant Governor of Alberta Arts Awards

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the arts contribute enormously to the cultural, educational, social, and economic well-being of our province, yet the artists, the arts organizations, their staff and volunteers, sometimes do go underrecognized for the contributions they make. However, I'm very pleased that one of the top priorities for our new government is additional recognition of and support for the arts, including new initiatives and increased funding for the arts as announced recently by our Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

We also have arts scholarships that are presented on an annual basis on behalf of the province, such as the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta arts awards program, which was created to celebrate excellence in the arts and to underline the importance of the arts in Alberta.

Today it's my great pleasure to recognize the 2007 winners of the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta arts awards, which were presented in Lloydminster last Saturday. I know that our hon. President of the Treasury Board, who is also the MLA for Vermilion-Lloydminster, was in attendance along with the special guest, the Lieutenant Governor, to celebrate this occasion.

This year's recipients were Greg Hollingshead, Edmonton author and professor emeritus at the University of Alberta; One Yellow Rabbit, a Calgary ensemble of theatre artists; Tom and Isobel Rolston, the Banff Centre's husband and wife musical team. Each of these artists or artist groups received a cheque for $30,000 in recognition of their outstanding achievements and significant contributions to the arts, and each one of them spoke very glowingly about being an artist in Alberta.

Additional shortlisted artists included Bob Baker, the artistic director of Edmonton's Citadel Theatre; Rudy Wiebe, an Edmonton writer and editor; and Sharon Pollock, a Calgary author and playwright. Each of these artists received a cheque for $5,000.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all Members of the Legislative Assembly join me in congratulating these very creative Albertans for their artistic skills, for what they do to open our eyes to our new perspectives, and perhaps most importantly for their dedication to enriching our lives, which contributes to the quality of life in Alberta.

Child Care Professionals

Mrs. Mather: Mr. Speaker, I draw the attention of my fellow members to child care professionals. Their duties place them in loco parentis, as teachers are. Unlike teachers they have no professional act to secure their standing. What they do is indispensable, yet we dismiss it as babysitting.

Recognition of professional child care goes back at least as far as the agreement between the pharaoh's daughter and Moses' mother. Many of the first child care workers were slaves. Alexander the Great expressed appreciation and admiration for the slave who reared him. A century ago many Americans paid tribute to the black nannies who brought them up, whose lot was little better than slaves.

In the movie Why Shoot the Teacher? we see the disrespectful way many teachers were treated during the Depression. In Alberta it took a new government led by a teacher to introduce legislation that treated teachers fairly.

A historical footnote. The six-sided Star of David is linked to a leader who began as a shepherd. Shepherds were looked down on then. The sophisticated considered them coarse. David's brothers, who were soldiers, thought him inferior. When a prophet came for his sons, David's father didn't include him. When asked, "Are these all your sons?" he replied, "There's one more with the sheep." The Hebrews' greatest king was a shepherd, who raised the status of shepherd from casual labourer to strong leader.

I have a challenge for the leader of our government, who carries with pride his profession as one who cares for the land. I urge him to show a similar regard for those who care for children. If he does, future Albertans may regard him as one who established the rule of heart and hand over the demands of the marketplace.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Affordable Student Housing

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The preparation of a qualified workforce should be a strategic goal for the future development of this province. However, under the policies of this government the university participation rate of about 16 per cent has remained the lowest in the country for several years. This is largely a result of the growing costs of pursuing postsecondary education in this province, and the cost of housing accounts for a large part of that increase.

When the government refused to adopt rent control guidelines, it left many Albertans unprotected, including thousands of students who are facing excessive rent increases all over the province.

Mr. Speaker, the average debt of an Alberta graduate is approximately $20,000. The decision of the government not to control rent increases will only add to the burden that students and their families already bear. Many students come from rural areas and depend on affordable housing in the city. Student organizations have repeatedly complained about the shortage of housing appropriate to the needs of students. An average Albertan who wants to attend university or college and who lives away from home has few options to finance her or his education and is disproportionately likely to live below the poverty line.

Student loans are often the only means to handle the ever-escalating costs of pursuing higher education. As we know, these loans are controlled by a limit on the total amount and the living allowance. A recent increase of 14 per cent in the monthly living allowance can hardly offset exorbitant rent increases that await tens of thousands of postsecondary students as they prepare to return to school at the end of August. Students not only will face immediate hardship; they will be even more indebted in the long run when they graduate.

Instead of forcing large numbers of Albertans to incur massive debts, Mr. Speaker, the government should provide conditions for individuals to pursue an affordable higher education. Alleviating the student housing crunch and preventing rent gouging are vital measures to build a modern and ready-for-the-future workforce.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

U of A Augustana Faculty Convocation

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Sunday I had the great pleasure to attend and be the guest speaker at the University of Alberta Augustana faculty's annual convocation in Camrose. This was a special opportunity for me to reminisce on Augustana's history as I was a faculty member and administrator at Augustana for 30 years and prior to that a student.

This year 154 students received bachelor's degrees in arts, science, management, and music. Hundreds of these students' families, friends, and faculty were in attendance at Augustana's convocation hall. It was Augustana's third convocation under the University of Alberta banner.

Natalie Rayment, a bachelor of music graduate, received the Augustana medal during the ceremony. This medal is the highest academic honour at Augustana and is given to a student for academic excellence and outstanding campus leadership.

As I have mentioned in this Assembly before, Augustana is undergoing a period of growth and construction as a result of its merger with the University of Alberta. For example, Augustana is an important partner in the Camrose regional sport development centre, which will open this fall.

Most important to Augustana's growth is the construction of a new library, which is well under way, the groundbreaking having taken place last month. The library project will extend into the construction of the Augustana forum, which will contain student space, classrooms, and administrative offices. The new library and the forum project have been long awaited and dreamed about on campus for decades. They are both integral to the future of Augustana and will support additional students in the decades to come.

I am very pleased to say that our government is committed to completion of both facilities. This commitment is an important part of the fulfillment of the merger agreement between Augustana and the University of Alberta, which has put Augustana on firm footing for its second century, beginning in 2010.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a brief reminder that on your desks I've provided all of you a notice of an event that will take place tomorrow morning, Wednesday, May 30, at 9:30 in the Legislature rotunda. We'll make available to the public of Alberta a series of books that we've been working on for five years called the Centennial Series. Over 180 people have now indicated their intent to be present, so if hon. members choose to come, would you kindly convey your availability to my office later this afternoon so we'll have sufficient chairs.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to table Alberta's Promise 2006 report to the community, highlighting the achievements of Alberta's Promise partnerships created last year. As chair I'm proud to report that to date there are more than 1,000 partners across this province – last year about 600; we gained 400 – all working together to do more work for Alberta's children and youth. Our young people are the most visible beneficiaries of the partnerships established. Communities, service clubs, and businesses also benefit through their involvement. This report has been distributed to media throughout the province and is available online as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table responses to questions raised during the debate of Government Motion 20 on May 15. As well, I'm tabling responses to questions raised during Committee of Supply for Agriculture and Food on May 17, 2007.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I table responses to the questions on May 8 of the Committee of Supply with regard to Treasury Board.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today. The first is an e-mail from July 31, 2006. This e-mail is from individuals in the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation, and it's regarding the proposed east Balzac development area.

The second tabling is also from July 31, 2006, and it's an e-mail from Infrastructure and Transportation officials. It's a rejection of money for the east Balzac development area from that department.

The third tabling I have is a memorandum from Alberta Agriculture and Food, dated January 22, 2007. It's in regard to the grant agreement with the municipal district of Rocky View No. 44 for $8.2 million.

The fourth tabling I have is a letter from the hon. minister of agriculture, food and rural development, dated August 16, 2006, and it's regarding the grant assistance, the approval of the $8.2 million for an industrial wastewater infrastructure project.

My last tabling is a project evaluation report in regard to the racetrack that's going to be constructed north of Calgary at Balzac.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and table five copies of documents: an interoffice memorandum, a briefing note to the deputy minister, and correspondence between the deputy ministers of agriculture, food, and rural development and Alberta Finance dated 2006 related to the Balzac equine centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of correspondence from a constituent, Kristine Jassman, who notes that she's a single mother on assistance, and she's trying to start a day home. Her hopes for that were dashed when Capital Housing informed her that the program they were running where they sold off social housing – they decided to tear that particular building down and rebuild a new one starting at $250,000 as a buy-in price. She noted that a rent cap would have been a prudent thing to do for this government.

My second tabling is also from a constituent, David Gurnett, who notes that as a renter whose rent has risen 54 per cent in the last year, he hopes that the government would consider placing a limit on the amount of rent increase as well as the number of rent increases.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of an e-mail from Stephen Renaud, a member of my constituency, stating:

It is absolutely outrageous that housing has become so unaffordable to many Albertans. Rents are out of control. Too many landlords are taking advantage of the situation and boosting rents to unconscionable levels. This is worse than loan sharking!

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is the 2006 annual report for the Edmonton Food Bank.

The second is the Edmonton Food Bank's Plant a Row Grow a Row instruction pamphlet, which draws attention to the press conference and such we had this morning, planting a row for food.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five sets of tablings reflecting the importance of recognizing and supporting Alberta's children. The first is a handout entitled Know the Bow, that I received last week from students at University elementary school in Calgary-Varsity as part of their SEEDS water conservation recognition assembly. Of the over a million conservation actions taken by children across Canada, Alberta kids are leading the way. My second tabling, presented to me by grade 3 and 4 UES students, is a series of letters sent to the SRD minister appealing to the government to protect Alberta's endangered species, including the grizzly bear. The letters were authored by Kyran Lackan, Matthew Hunter, Meghan Mehra, Dana Murphy, and Jennifer Omoregie.

My third set of tablings consists of the 2006 annual report for Alberta's Breakfast for Learning, which notes among many highlights achievements of having last year served 1,853,379 student meals, an increase of 22 per cent over the previous year, and also noted that 791 individuals volunteer daily to make the program a success.

My fourth tabling is the launch of the Fuel up with Vegetables & Fruit handbook sponsored by the Edmonton Oilers community association. Also worthy of note is that Calgary-based Enmax has come on board in a big way this year to help feed Alberta's children.

My fifth and final tabling is a pamphlet entitled The Breakfast Club, Vegreville's school snack program, which, together with an award handed to the Vermilion breakfast support group, highlights the fact that child hunger in Alberta is not an urban anomaly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies from the Alberta Food Bank Network Association, its 2006 annual report. It highlights the impact that the food bank has not only on city but on rural folks within Alberta.

head:

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, pursuant to the Workers' Compensation Act the Workers' Compensation Board 2006 annual report; responses to questions raised by Mr. MacDonald, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and Dr. Miller, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, on May 15, 2007, the Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry 2007-08 main estimates debate; and the Consulting Engineers of Alberta 2006-2007 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Snelgrove, Minister of Service Alberta, pursuant to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act the freedom of information and protection of privacy annual report 2005-2006.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Red Deer River Water Transfer

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was a time when the Premier shared our deep concerns about a proposed water transfer from the Red Deer River to the Balzac megamall and racetrack facility. He went so far as to call it ridiculous, and he promised to get to the bottom of it. We're still waiting. Now the Premier and his ministers hide behind due process in trying to explain what's taking so long on the water licence decision. This process was supposed to have been completed last fall, but it's been delayed and delayed and delayed. To the Premier: why has the decision on the water transfer not been made yet?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my information is that the MD pulled the request to apply for a licence. They delayed it, and that's where the matter sits today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again. It's almost four months now since we submitted our FOIP request for Balzac-related documents to Alberta Environment. The information the Premier just shared with us about the MD pulling the water licence request is certainly interesting, but it's difficult to follow that up when you don't have all the supporting documentation. We are short some 1,700 pages of materials that are being hidden from the public. Will the Premier admit that the release of these documents is being delayed until after this legislative session and the provincial by-elections are over?

Mr. Stelmach: No. It's more of the unfounded allegations. Even yesterday if you really read the Hansard, it's like: more evidence. What evidence? A whole bunch of e-mails. Then you follow up today, which I could on every question that was raised. You know, the meeting with the then minister of infrastructure: the meeting was not about water; it was about an entrance and exit off highway 2 to the development. But would they say that in the House? No. You've got to raise that allegation to get everybody watching Alberta: oh, maybe there is something behind this. They continue to do that. We gave them all the FOIP documents; they've had them now for a considerable amount of time. Then the other member starts tabling them. Give them back to the Legislature. Well, you've got all the documents. What are you tabling them for?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, that's only a partial fulfillment of his promise to respond to all the allegations yesterday. We do not have those FOIP documents. Let's not forget that the main issue here is that the government has been so supportive of a project that's dependent on taking water from the Red Deer River to service a horse-racing track. Let's not forget that the people in the Red Deer River subbasin were never consulted by the government, that the government was very secretive about the water licence application from the start. The simple fact is that they don't want the people of Drumheller, Stettler, Red Deer to know what they were up to. To the Premier: will the Premier direct his government to release the 1,700 pages of FOIP material that have not been released yet so the public can see what his government is up to?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, part of the information that this critic will not ever say to the public is that notwithstanding the application that has been pulled for the Balzac development, there is water that flows through a pipeline through three communities: Beiseker, Irricana, and Acme. There is water flowing through those communities. It's like they think this is just some big, new decision that was supposed to happen. All the allegations made in this House are totally unfounded. The application has been pulled by the MD. I suspect they're looking for, perhaps, other sources of water, but that's up to them.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives have continually denied any involvement in any aspect of this Balzac project, yet it's clear they have been involved up to their eyeballs in every single aspect of this project at every step along the way. Case in point: documents obtained from the Ministry of Finance reveal a high level of support for funding for the Balzac equine centre through the new rural development project fund in July 2006. A couple of problems with that: the new fund was supposed to operate at arm's length from government, and its funding process hadn't even been announced. To the Premier: is this high-level support for funding related to the merits of the project, or is it really about your government's ties to the horse-racing industry? Let's compare oranges to oranges, not oranges to road apples.

Mr. Stelmach: Here again they're trying to twist information more to excite individuals. Any grant program is fully accessible by either those municipalities or whoever can apply for those grant programs. In any application with respect to water there are programs available under various ministries. The number one issue here is: no money unless there is a water licence that's been approved. If there are no approvals, there's no money going to anybody. I'm going to repeat that again. If the MD wants to put the application forward and if it's approved, then money flows. But there is no application before it – they withdrew it – and no money flowing to anybody.

Mr. Taylor: Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, there was much talk about money flowing.

This same letter between the deputy ministers of Finance and Agriculture indicates that the assistant deputy minister of agriculture has committed to keeping representatives from Olds College "advised of the status of the corporation's developments to ensure that the college has opportunity to best position the initiative for appropriate support from the corporation." That would be the rural development project fund corporation. Does the Premier expect Albertans to believe that this support at the highest levels of government wouldn't influence the decision of a supposedly arm's-length funding agency?

Mr. Stelmach: That, Mr. Speaker, again doesn't read all the way down the e-mail. Those are the tricks that they try and pull in this particular House: always talking about having evidence, all kinds of evidence, but they haven't been able to prove anything or even deliver anything substantial, just parts of e-mails, making allegations against members of this government and members of other communities, especially those of the MD of Rocky View, totally unsubstantiated and misleading. Here's the proof. You have the evidence. Provide it right now. You want to read more e-mails; go ahead. They already have them because he tabled them earlier.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the evidence has been tabled. I didn't know that we could use visual aids in the House.

The Speaker: Hansard is not a visual aid.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Internal briefing notes indicate that Olds College was promoting the Balzac equine centre as – and you might want to pause to hear this – a legacy for the Deputy Premier. This would be the former Member for Drumheller-Stettler. They wanted to honour her past and continued commitments to the equine industry. They also indicated that because of prior meetings with the Deputy Minister of Finance the project would have "good potential to obtain support." The question everyone wants to know from the Premier is this: what did your government then and why does your government now continue to completely support a project that will draw its water from the Red Deer River over the objections of the people in southern Alberta? Why are you trying to steal their water?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, totally wrong information brought forward by the critic. They'll continue to do that, I guess, because they want to make some kind of a point, but they don't have any evidence to present. The application has been withdrawn by the MD of Rocky View. There's no money flowing to any authority. You know, what I hear from the opposition is that ministers are not allowed to meet with any potential developers, any Albertans with ideas on how to grow the economy in this province, increase employment. We can't do that because all of a sudden it will be somehow in effect contravening or violating any of the grant programs we have.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Money did flow, and it flowed from the department of agriculture, food and development at that time.

On July 31, 2006, Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation refused a developer's funding request for the waterline at the Balzac racetrack. Sixteen days later, using ministerial discretion, the department of agriculture, food and development granted $8.2 million from the taxpayers to this development. To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: why did the department use ministerial discretion to fast-track this funding approval when only 16 days earlier Infrastructure and Transportation said "no way" to that project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The members across have very short memories. They asked the same question on Tuesday, March 20, '07. The answer has not changed. The municipality qualified under a program that's been in existence for nine years now, that no money has flowed until they get a water licence. To say that the money has flowed is erroneous and wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, a letter from that department, tabled in this House this afternoon, indicates that the money did flow.

Again, Mr. Speaker, will the minister of agriculture admit that the ministerial discretion was needed because this development did not fit the government's program requirements?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, ministerial discretion was built right into the criteria, and the program started in 1998. The bottom line: documents show department records eligibility.

I don't understand why the opposition across doesn't table the documents that answer the questions as they went about it yesterday, little clips here and there. The answer was right there. All they had to do was finish off the statement, but they come with little clips, and the answer was right there. Why can't they continue on?

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, taxpayers will not accept that answer.

Again to the same minister. The project evaluation report states:

The annual economic benefits of the operations of the Calgary Racetrack and Racing Entertainment Centre and the Olds College have not been estimated nor have the potential economic benefits of agricultural industries that are likely locate in the new development.

Why did the department grant more than $8 million for a development that had not even estimated the economic benefits of the project for agricultural users?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, that was part of the program. That was the agricultural aspect of it. The whole program was $48 million. We approved $8.3 million if they qualified. The money is still there. If they qualify, they will get that money because they qualified under an existing program. Why don't you table the documents about the grant checklist, detailed applications, supporting documents, a clearer report, and cost breakdowns? Why don't you table those?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's more than water and money flowing in this Chamber today.

Mr. Speaker, the desire for a better life is a powerful motivation for anyone. Unfortunately, there are those who will take advantage of this for a profit. The temporary foreign worker program has opened the door to trafficking in vulnerable human beings who simply want economic security for themselves and their families. My question is to the Premier. Why does this government stand by while temporary foreign workers are enticed to Alberta by unscrupulous work brokers who leave them high and dry without work, money, or even a ticket home?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the third party raises a good matter. It's a human issue, and the process of approving employers and job offers, of course, rests with the federal government. Recruiters cannot charge a fee for getting people to come to the province of Alberta, but there are other parameters to this program. It's one area that our minister is going to work towards and resolve this issue. You know, to attract people to the province and then not have the jobs available for them is not right.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Recent reports of abandoned temporary foreign workers in our province crammed 15 to a house, isolated, and alone are disturbing to say the least. Yet it's the union, whose own membership is being deliberately being undermined by this government through the temporary foreign worker program, that is reaching out and lending a helping hand. My question is to Premier. Why is it that labour organizations such as the international boilermakers union and the Alberta Federation of Labour have to step in and help temporary foreign workers while this government has completely abandoned them?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the minister responsible has met with the union.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, well, I agree with the member opposite that deplorable treatment of any foreign worker is unacceptable, and I know that Service Alberta, under the terms of the Fair Trading Act, investigates those kinds of criminal allegations. I've met with the Alberta Building Trades. I've met with Gil McGowan and the groups that represent many of the trades up there and have had conversations with them. We are on the site that is being discussed here doing an investigation with a contract engineering firm. We have currently a stop work order in place. We're paying close attention to the allegations that have been made. We are working with the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, these bait-and-switch schemes exploit vulnerable human beings. Unscrupulous brokers are not properly regulated, and there is no place for temporary foreign workers to go. My question to the Premier is: will he, before this spring session is over, put in place a program or legislation that gives temporary foreign workers who are being exploited a place to go and a guarantee that help will be forthcoming from this government, that their rights will be protected by this government?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if I may continue. We are negotiating currently under the new made-in-Alberta immigration agreement an annex over the next eight months with the federal government about the kinds of parameters for the temporary foreign worker. We are taking all of this kind of advice under advisement and finding ways to work with our federal government to provide for that worker when they arrive or compel the employer when they arrive to undertake the same kinds of protections that we give to any worker in any part of Alberta. We are paying close attention to it. Relative to anybody who does recruit in a manner that isn't consistent with the Fair Trading Act or the laws of Alberta, the Minister of Service Alberta can respond.

Land-use Framework Consultation

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents have expressed a desire to play a role in ensuring that Alberta's land and natural resources are preserved for future generations and as such would like to attend the remaining land-use framework public sessions under way across the province. However, some are questioning why these sessions were arranged for a time of year when these people are busy with spring work. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why are these sessions being held during a time when people like ranchers and farmers may be too busy to attend to provide their input?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, there's never a perfect time to hold public sessions: in the summer, of course, people are on vacation; in the fall there's harvest; in the winter travel on public roads is often dangerous. Our goal is to have a draft framework out by December, so time is very much of the essence. We've already held 15 sessions. We've had sessions in Edson, Peace River, Wainwright, Edmonton, Lloydminster, St. Paul, Slave Lake, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, and High Level. People have come, they've read the workbooks, they've filled out the workbooks, and so far we're having good response.

Mr. Johnson: Now that the good weather is upon us, can the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development tell Albertans how they can take part in the land-use framework if they are unable to make it to the public information sessions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have until June 15 to complete their input, and there are a number of options on how to do this. There are still a number of public sessions being held: today in Medicine Hat, Hanna tomorrow, Calgary on May 30 and 31, and Red Deer on May 31. These sessions are usually from about 2 to 9 o'clock and are being advertised in the local papers. You can also pick up the workbooks and information books at an MLA office, including the opposition members' offices, and you can also do this online. So there are a number of options. My message to Albertans is: this is your province; this is your chance to influence how we develop into the future, so please participate.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have been asked to have their say in land-use related topics before. To the same minister: what assurance can the minister give that the land-use framework will be more than just a paper exercise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the hon. member that all input will be taken very seriously. The completion of the land-use framework is one of the Premier's objectives in managing growth and also is one of the priorities given to me in my mandate letter. The workbook questionnaire builds on previous input from stakeholders. In fact, the input we're getting now from the public will go back to more stakeholder consultations, which begin next week. I'll be meeting with stakeholders in Red Deer next week. This is part of a serious policy development process. All of the input is valuable, and I'm looking forward to presenting the results to this Assembly next February.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Out of School Care

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta out of school care programs are struggling to provide quality care for school-age children. Many people operating in this field have told us that they don't know how much longer they can provide existing service levels, much less expand to address growing wait-lists. Children and workers are placed in unnecessarily stressful situations when providers are unable to find and retain qualified staff. To the Minister of Children's Services. Recently this department announced a staffing initiative aimed at retaining staff in the daycare sector. Can you please explain why out of school care providers were excluded from this initiative?

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know I've had several opportunities in the last couple of weeks to address this particular issue. Very simply, it comes down to: the province has the mandate for providing services to zero to age six in terms of child care, but we do not have the mandate for six to 12. We do fund FCSS, and if they determine that that is a locally driven need, they do provide those services. Having said that, I've also talked to the Assembly about an FCSS review that we've done. Out of school care has been identified as an issue that we are looking at.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When care providers are unable to retain qualified staff members with their current funding levels, they must hike their fees to make up for the shortfall. In Alberta fee increases are particularly devastating for families with school-age children because parents with children in grade 1 and on are not eligible to receive child care subsidies. To the Minister of Children's Services: will this government join every other province and territory in Canada and ease the out of school care crunch by extending eligibility to cover children that are between six and 12 years old?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As well, I know that I've mentioned this in the past. The FCSS review did identify out of school care as an issue. We were waiting to get that report through the process, which we did last week. We have accepted all of the recommendations in that report, taken out the part with respect to out of school care and have committed to reviewing the issues surrounding that. I can tell the hon. member that in the next several weeks – we have already started to organize some stakeholder talks, and we'll also be endeavouring to survey parents. So we are moving forward on taking a look at workable solutions for the out of school care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. This year's budget provides a modest 4 per cent increase to the family and community support services, FCSS, program, which is responsible for funding out of school care programming, yet no new money was targeted at addressing the problem facing the out of school care sector. To the Minister of Children's Services. The FCSS review completed by this department identified care for school-age children as facing the most desperate challenges. I appreciate that you're going to look at this and have further consultation, but why was no new money targeted to this crucial area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the simple answer is: no new money was targeted for that particular area because right now we don't fund the out of school programs. But I will commit again that I will be working closely with all of our stakeholders to see if we can find some workable solutions and do that as quickly as possible in the next couple of months.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Agriculture Competitiveness Initiative

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we heard that Canada had been given controlled BSE risk status. Access to foreign markets is critical if we are to compete internationally. While this decision is good news for my constituents who are beef producers, many other areas of the farming and agriculture industry are also facing similar challenges. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Can the minister tell us what is being done to help all of our agriculture industry to compete in the global marketplace?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Agriculture and Food is well aware of the global challenges; for example, new competitors and technologies and a growing demand for the biofuels. But it's critical that we look at the industry as a whole. I'm very happy to report that today we announced a new competitive initiative. I've appointed a group of agriculture and business experts to identify concrete actions that can address both the challenges and opportunities. They will work towards balanced solutions and address industry's long-term profitability and competitiveness.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to hear about this new initiative and the approach being taken. To the same minister:

what will the process be, and will there be opportunity for stakeholders to provide input into this process?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, this steering group will be reviewing existing research and doing some further study and addressing any information gaps. Then they will determine some of the tough questions, I guess, and potential solutions. At that point I have asked them to invite a large number of agricultural and food organizations to meet with them and provide feedback. We plan to post the draft recommendations on our ministry website. It can be a very powerful tool when industry comes together to share their expertise and generate new ideas, so I'm quite excited about the potential of this initiative.

Mr. Prins: Thanks. My constituents will be glad to hear that the process provides the opportunity for them to contribute their thoughts on this important work.

Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister: when or how soon can we expect to see the results of this work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is certainly anxious to move forward, and we are pleased to provide leadership in this area. Considering the scope of the work ahead, we have set a pretty aggressive timeline for our steering group. The group is expected to have recommendations for industry feedback in early 2008 and a final recommendation to the government by June of 2008.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Renter Assistance

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents, Fred Bisschop, is facing severe difficulties paying his rent. He's on fixed-income support, so a rent increase of nearly 50 per cent to $1,100 a month is well beyond his means. The increase takes effect on the 1st of June. Mr. Bisschop will not be able to pay that rent. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: is the homeless and eviction fund the minister keeps referring to where Mr. Bisschop should go for help?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I've been quite clear that if people have received an eviction notice or have any kind of income support problems, they should visit the office or contact our office. One of the issues we've discovered in Calgary is that some have not yet had a notice, and there has been some lack of clarity in the minds of people that have visited about whether or not they're asking for rent supplement or whether they need some other kind of income support, so quite clearly it's on an individual basis. We'd be pleased to get the information, and we'd follow up on his behalf.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. When I wrote to the minister detailing this case amongst others, I was indeed directed to the Employment, Immigration and Industry fund. Mr. Bisschop has called the so-called helpline offered by the minister. He called but got no help. He was told that because he is already receiving some rent assistance, he is ineligible. Clearly, something is very wrong with this situation. Why does the minister keep suggesting these helplines and programs when they are completely inadequate for those affected?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, several people – hundreds of people – have received over $300,000 in the last few days. There are several success stories where they have been helped. I can't comment on this particular circumstance because I'm not familiar with the detail, but if I'm provided it, I will follow up. While on one hand we have – when I say several, maybe hundreds, in certain circumstances a lot more than that. We're working on a case-by-case basis, and if someone has already been in the circumstances of receiving social assistance to some degree, then we have to look at them quite closely and see if there's something else we should be doing. But just please provide me the information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The information was already provided, and he can't afford the bus fare.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing has claimed in this House, and I quote from May 10 Hansard: "The policy of this government is that individuals should not pay over 30 per cent of their salary – 30 per cent of their salary – for housing." Indeed they shouldn't. The minister's solution to the fact that many Albertans face sharp increases is to subsidize those increases. Well, Mr. Speaker, 30 per cent of Mr. Bisschop's income would still leave a $650 hole. Is the minister suggesting that the best way of dealing with this situation is for the government of Alberta to pay Mr. Bisschop's landlord $650 a month rather than putting temporary restrictions on these increases?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this government has made it very clear that we do not believe that rent controls increase the availability of units. We do have programs that are available. The case that was brought forward by the hon. member: if he does bring the particulars forward to either myself or the Minister of EII, then we'd be very glad to look at it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:00 Lesser Slave Lake Aboriginal Policing

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I've been blessed to have First Nations who are proactive and willing to improve the lives of their people. One of the ways they have done this was to take over the first ever aboriginal policing in Alberta. Unfortunately, last September the agreement with the Lesser Slave Lake Indian Regional Council and the Horse Lake First Nation was terminated. This has been a difficult time for all involved. I've attended many a meeting regarding this issue. I'd like to ask the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security: what is the status of the negotiations which were taking place between his department, Canadian officials, and the Indian Regional Council?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that every Albertan deserves to live in a safe and secure community. Last September, following a review of the former Lesser Slave Lake Regional Police Service, it was clear that a different approach was needed to address some very serious operational issues. Community leaders along with representatives from the Alberta and federal governments have been working on a new policing plan for the area through a commitment of all parties to find a solution that works for everybody. We have developed a new, innovative policing model that will meet the needs of that community.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, we had a doggone good plan before, and that was tossed out. Could he explain to me and to my constituents how this new model is going to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe it's a doggone good plan as well. The Lesser Slave Lake police service will consist initially of 10 RCMP officers over the next five years, qualified individuals we recruited and sent to the RCMP depot in Regina for training. Once they return to Alberta, these recruits will do six months of on-the-job training with the RCMP at the Lesser Slave Lake police service before assuming their duties. As recruits come on board, the original RCMP officers will return to the provincial police complement.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased to hear that we are going to do a number of really good things. However, one of the biggest concerns has been that there was never enough money to be able to help the aboriginal policing. My question to the minister: are there going to be additional dollars provided, and can you tell me how long this process is going to take to complete?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, yes, there are some additional dollars that have been committed to aboriginal policing. In fact, in the budget this year we've allocated dollars for 14 members to patrol aboriginal communities. In regard to the time frame for this particular plan with the Slave Lake region, if we can get the recruits, we hope to have everything in place within five years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the annual meeting of the food bank associations last week concerns were raised about the increasing demand on Alberta's food banks. Albertans are spending more of their income on rent and have less money for food. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: given that many Albertans no longer have room in their budget for food, why does this government continue to refuse to implement temporary rent caps?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, in this budget we did increase support for Albertans that were in need, in fact $285 million. That funding supported not only affordable housing and rent supplements; it supported the homeless. If I can say, when we look at the availability for individuals, we do look at it according to need.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister. According to the Calgary Centre for Newcomers immigrants are often not counted among the homeless because they stay with their friends and family. What advice does the minister have for families living in crowded spaces who face two-year wait-lists for an affordable place of their own?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, new Albertans, people that are affected by the lack of income supports, people that have special needs can come to one of the 59 offices in Alberta that deal with income supports. I'd like to just point out that many of the people that come don't come directly to Alberta. They haven't been solicited to come to Alberta. They come from other places like Toronto or Winnipeg or Montreal, and it's often much more difficult for us to track them. They don't come in announcing that they've come through another place. So beyond the immigrants that are here, that come because they've been invited for a job, they come frequently to visit family, and then they want to stay.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister is too eager to answer. I'll ask the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry this time. Some organizations are warning immigrants to avoid coming to Alberta until they have secured a place to live. Does the minister realize that this government's failure to implement rent caps will directly impact workforce recruitment and retention strategies?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that everybody in Alberta recognizes that there are issues that we are tackling. Whether it's managing the labour force shortages, managing the housing, it's going to pose challenges. I think it's prudent, before you come here, to find out whether or not you have a job or a place to live. We're going to try and provide people offshore, particularly, that kind of advice so that they don't come with unrealistic expectations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Education minister has achieved something remarkable this year. He has angered teachers with his approach to the unfunded pension liability, frustrated school boards by shortchanging their funding and talking about a surplus that doesn't exist. School boards and teachers now stand united to defend public education against a confused and adversarial provincial government. So I'd like to ask the Minister of Education: when will he take a couple of steps back for the sake of good relations, cut the antagonistic attitude, and sit down to negotiate with teachers and school boards? Another round of layoffs and potential strikes serves no one's best interests.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the provincial government is not involved in the negotiation of contracts, so I'm not exactly sure what the hon. member would like me to sit down and negotiate with teachers and school boards. We provide funding to school boards. School boards are responsible for negotiating contracts with their local ATA, so that will proceed as planned.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, the issue that I'm speaking to directly is in regard to pensions, and there's a tremendous amount of confusion around this issue. The Premier, in fact, during his leadership campaign said, and I quote: I would never use such an emotional matter as a bargaining chip in the heat of a labour dispute. Unquote. If everyone is ready to sit down and sort out a deal now, isn't that better than waiting until November, when 30,000 teachers will be without contracts and the unfunded liability would have grown that much more?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I would be quite happy to negotiate a long-term resolution to the unfunded pension liability if the hon. member would give me some suggestions as to what the Alberta Teachers' Association would be prepared to give up in return for the taxpayers of Alberta accepting a $2 billion liability. To date I haven't heard one single good idea from the third party as to what that might be as a trade-off.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, the very best and first thing we have to do is sit down and talk. Obviously, the parties involved with the teachers' pension are the government, which is you, the teachers, and the general public. The teachers are ready to go to the table and talk. The public wants this resolved, so clearly the stick-in-the-mud is over here on the government side of the House. The Premier said that he wants the pension issue sorted out now without tying it to contract negotiations. Why won't the Education minister ditch his pension task force idea and get this sorted out now, before it further erodes the good faith of teachers, parents, students, and the public at large?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just simply have to disagree with the hon. member. I think the prudent thing to do is to do what we are doing: have a small group go out and listen to Albertans. They can listen to the taxpayers of Alberta and get a feel for what taxpayers feel is a reasonable ask of the Alberta Teachers' Association for us to pick up a $2 billion liability. It sounds pretty reasonable to me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

2:10 Incentives for Property Developers

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we are facing a serious lack of affordable rental accommodation in Alberta. The supply does not meet the demand, and in order to encourage the development of new rental units, we need to take decisive action. A healthy housing policy is essential in order to have a healthy economy. In 1981 the federal government introduced a program called multiple unit residential buildings, or MURBs, to encourage the building of rental units. It was a federal/provincial/municipal program that encouraged investors to invest in affordable housing by changing the tax laws to provide incentives to do so. To the Minister of Finance: is the provincial government thinking of any incentives that would encourage investment in housing and help alleviate this situation in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would say that there were a lot of lessons to be learned from the MURB investments back in the early 1980s. In essence, the federal government and the provincial government as well as municipalities allowed people to write off the soft costs, things such as legal fees and annual depreciation, if they were to go out and buy an apartment building. What subsequently happened is that we actually saw the prices rise because the write-offs were there. We saw people getting into a position where the business case just wasn't there, and subsequently in 1982, '83, '84, when we saw the real estate market crash, you saw hundreds of thousands of these MURBs actually being put on the sale block because people lost their money. They lost their shirts on this particular plan. But in saying that, I will reiterate what I first said. I think there are lessons to be learned. I think we can do better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister. The provincial government has announced a generous program to provide assistance to those facing increases in rent or evictions. Would it be even more effective to use tax dollars to provide incentives to builders as well as providing assistance to those facing rent increases?

Dr. Oberg: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, that's a very difficult question. What we want is to get more doors on the market. We want to get more rental units on the market to give the renter more choices in where to live. How we can do that as a government is very difficult. As I was just stating with regard to the MURBs, they actually backfired to a large degree. They had their good points, a good point being that 195,000 units were built. The bad point was that it cost $2.4 billion, plus numerous, numerous investors lost their shirts. What we need to do is sit down and take a look and ask the simple question: how can our tax system help with what is occurring out there?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister again. There are many investors in Alberta, large and small. Is the provincial government considering any tax incentives for large and small investors to encourage the building of more affordable housing units?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, as everyone in this House knows, we're currently debating our budget. Our budget for this year has not yet passed. When it comes to tax incentives, my department, certainly this government will take a look at anything that is reasonable. Indeed, in effect for next year's budget we will be looking very seriously at some tax incentives. We'll be looking at tax cuts. We'll be looking at the taxation issue from all different angles. I can't promise the hon. member anything, but if there are good ideas that come forward – we need to get more housing units on the market.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've talked to temporary foreign workers who, obviously, are being exploited by unscrupulous brokers when they come to this province. We heard the hon. minister's response earlier. What I want to ask the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry is this: does she think that laws have been broken in the actions of brokers based in Alberta, and is she prepared to investigate?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is not the role of this minister. Service Alberta deals with the legislation that regulates and controls the Fair Trading Act, that deals with the people and what the licensing requirements are. I'd defer to the President of the Treasury Board.

Speaker's Ruling Legal Opinions

The Speaker: It's inappropriate for ministers to give legal opinions, and it's also inappropriate to have any questions dealing with interpretation of statutes. So I'm not sure where we're going to proceed other than to go to the second question, hon. member.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that employers are told to inform the government when the temporary foreign worker leaves their job or quits their job. What happens to the temporary foreign worker who comes to Alberta and there is no job for them? They have a different language. They have a different cultural background. They don't understand our laws. What kind of government assistance is there for them?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, Service Alberta is conducting an investigation if it's relative to the story of 15 men that were brought to this country without the proper kind of opportunity provided. The opposition seems to infer that this is something that we would tolerate or provoke. We did neither. We're as upset as any other Albertan when people are brought here by people who are unscrupulous. They gained access to this country on a false pretext. We will investigate that. When we're made aware of their plight, they have an opportunity to come as people who are asking for assistance, like any other new Albertan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the costs of bringing foreign temporary workers to Alberta include all kinds of things, like payment for travel to and from Alberta, arranging accommodations and programs for spouses and children, language classes, orientation seminars, and so on. To the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure that employers take more responsibility for the costs of bringing foreign temporary workers to this province? Why are employers not bearing the costs rather than having brokers charge workers between $7,000 and $15,000 just to facilitate their arrival in this province?

Ms Evans: At last Friday's meeting with the immigration minister of Canada and my other counterparts, my peers from other provinces, we did talk about what the employers should be doing. They very definitely undertake a contractual relationship. Many are very honest, dealing with very honest brokers that follow through with the terms of the contract, provide housing, provide training, provide employment, provide return tickets home. If you were to talk to many of the people that are doing many of the larger construction jobs in Alberta, they are very solid employers that are doing their due diligence. For the people that aren't, for the people that might be coming here as new temporary foreign workers, we will provide more information in the months ahead.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Foreign-trained Physicians

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago I had the opportunity to talk to a new immigrant. He's a taxi driver. He's actually a doctor, born in India, and he completed his medical school in the Czech Republic. He's busy driving a taxi and trying to prepare for his tests with the College of Physicians and Surgeons. He told me that even if he passes his tests, there are only a couple of seats available for successful candidates. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Would the minister explain to me and to this individual why there are so few residency spaces available for these new potential doctors in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a number of options available to help internationally trained medical professionals to practise their chosen profession in Alberta, but we've more work to do. The Alberta international medical graduate program is one example of a highly successful provincial program helping these physicians to practise in Alberta. It provides international medical graduates residing in Alberta with dedicated residency training positions; in other words, residency positions which are outside the normal matching process for residency. Applicants are interviewed, put through a three-month assessment and orientation before being offered a funded residency program. Providing residency training spaces to qualified IMGs is just one option that Alberta is using to ensure an adequate opportunity for physicians to meet health care needs in Alberta. Last year an additional $3 million was made available to support the expansion of the program.

The Speaker: I think we'll move on to the hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is such a well-spoken, qualified young doctor who wants to practise family medicine facing such barriers in Alberta today when we have a crying shortage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was indicating, we added $3 million to the project. That takes the IMG spaces, the intake available this July, up to 48 residency seats. Additional residency seats will mean more doctors available to see patients in Alberta. There are, however, some other barriers that have to be taken into account. Some foreign-trained physicians have not practised for a considerable length of time, and their skills and knowledge are not current. Others come, perhaps, from a country or from a school that is very different from what they might have received here, so they need to be retrained. But we do want to make use of the medical talent that's available, and we do want to make sure that all those skills can be used in Alberta.

2:20

The Speaker: And we'll get it in the third question, I'm sure.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why can't these individuals work in the hospital system while they're upgrading their skills or preparing for the tests? Even a journeyman mechanic gets to get paid and make a living while he's earning his licence as a qualified mechanic or a tradesman.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question from the hon. member, and it's something that we're working on as we speak, to make sure that for every person who comes to this province with skills and abilities in the health care area, we have the ability to do a prior learning assessment, an assessment of their qualification and experience, and that we find a way for them to use that qualification and experience in our health care system. It may not be for what they felt they were trained for. In other words, you may not be able to be a doctor, but you certainly could be a physician's assistant. When we bring out the workforce strategy, we're working now on the mechanisms to make exactly that happen.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Referral of Bill 1 to Government Services Committee

21. Mr. Stevens on behalf of Mr. Stelmach moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly refer Bill 1, Lobbyists Act, to the Standing Committee on Government Services for the committee's consideration, review, and comment and request the committee to report to the Assembly on or before the first week of the fall 2007 sitting.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a significant motion. Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, is a reflection of this Premier's commitment to govern with integrity and transparency. The referral to this particular committee is a first in that we have amended the rules of this Assembly to allow for policy field committees to talk to Albertans about our legislation. Bill 1 has of course passed second reading, and we are looking forward to this committee and its report back to this Assembly later this year.

The Speaker: This motion is debatable.
The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's taken us a long time to get to this point and this day. When I look back upon this day, I hope that I'm happy it came. This is historic. We are now attempting to refer the first bill to the new policy field committees, in this case specifically to the government services one. Indeed, it's probably appropriate that it was the flagship bill of this government, the first one brought forward by the new Premier.

When I went into negotiations on this, I really approached it with good faith and good heart, hoping that these policy field committees would be good working opportunities to explore issues and to actually get a debate going, a discussion with an exchange of ideas, and I hope that that is what happens here. I mean, certainly what we had in the House leaders' agreement and what manifested itself through into the Standing Orders – you know, Mr. Speaker, it could go either way. If the political will is there and the political leadership is there from the government side, I think it could be quite a useful process. If the government decides that they're just going to do the same old thing that they've done for my whole 10 years here and just use that big majority to ram through whatever, then it's not going to be what we hoped for.

When I look exactly at what the policy field committees were to be doing, it really just notes in the Standing Orders that the "four Policy Field Committees, consisting of 11 members each, shall be established to consider the following," and then it goes through the four different categories. I do note – and I think it was a good idea – that the chairs are members of the government and the vice-chairs are members of the Official Opposition.

There's really just one line that pertains to the policy field committees reviewing bills, and it says, "A Policy Field Committee shall review any Bill referred to it." That's all it says. There's a whole bunch of information about what it can do when it's considering regulations, when it's considering any number of reports that could be referred to it from Crown agencies or provincial departments, government departments: public hearings on regulations and even independent inquiries, that the policy field committees could start their own inquiries on something. But when it comes down to the bills, it just says that they can be referred. So it's a pretty wide open mandate. It'll be interesting to see how the committee conducts itself and what sort of parameters it sets up for the examination of this bill.

One of the things I noted in Motion 21 that I did like was that there is a report-back date. One of my criticisms of this government has been the black hole that many of these reports and requests for information disappear into. They never seem to come back onto the floor. We never know what happened to them. There's no tabling of anything. They're just gone. So I appreciate that in the crafting of Government Motion 21, there actually is a date that's given that the report will come back to this Assembly. Specifically, it's on or before the first week of the fall 2007 sitting, so we're assuming late October, early November. One presumes at that point that that information would then be integrated into the debate on Committee of the Whole and third reading.

The lobbyists bill itself, which is Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, has also had an interesting history. I mean, I think it came out of what's commonly called the Multi-Corp situation or scandal. Flowing from that situation, we had the Tupper report, that made a number of recommendations. This is appearing on page 6 of the final report of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee from May 2006, and it's quoting the Tupper report here. The Tupper report did recommend that lobbyists be registered and that there should be standards governing their conduct.

In a democracy, citizens must know which organizations and individuals influence public policy, the techniques they employ, who in government they meet and when, and the extent of their efforts to shape public policy, which I think is a good, all-encompassing statement. They felt very strongly that legislation governing lobbyists would enhance openness of public policy-making in Alberta. We also had the Ethics Commissioner make a submission to this committee, and they supported very warmly the idea of a lobbyists act. So I'm hoping that we will get an airing and a genuine give-and-take in exploring the ideas. That Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, obviously, did look a little bit at lobbying but mostly concentrated on conflict of interest.

I think there's a number of issues that arise out of the legislation that's been proposed here, and I think it's appropriate that it does go to that committee. I'm just very cautious that the committee will actually be a good working committee and will be respectful of all the points of view that are brought forward. I'll tell you why I have some hesitation around that. I noted that earlier in this House – actually, it was on May 14 of this year – we attempted from the Official Opposition to refer a private member's bill, that being Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, to the appropriate policy field committee, and that was rather vehemently shot down by members of the government, with all kinds of excuses running the range of possibilities there, and I was very disappointed in that.

Granted, it's nice to have Bill 1, the flagship bill, the first bill of the new Premier be the first one that flows through into the newly created policy field committees. I mean, there's a certain appropriateness to that, a certain synchronicity, I suppose. But I was really alarmed at the push back from the government members to the idea of sending an opposition private member's bill through to one of these committees. That discussion takes place in Hansard, page 1088 onward. It includes a fairly severe and dismissive section from the Minister of Education against that amendment, and a number of others spoke against it as well.

As is always the case, Mr. Speaker, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. We'll see whether there actually are the leadership and commitment flowing from this Premier to uphold the idea of an all-party policy field committee which is to explore substantive issues and to see whether having the idea of a government chairperson and an Official Opposition vice-chairperson will help us in honouring and hearing the debate and encouraging the debate on all sides. Hopefully, we'll get better legislation out of all of this because that was the point, that we would have more people on the record bringing forward their point of view and representing their constituents. Ultimately, we would end up with better legislation, the ability to call witnesses in, to access experts, to have committee resources to support research so that we could do a better job as legislators.

So I'm happy to support Motion 21 referring Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, to the Standing Committee on Government Services. I sure hope this is going to work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of remarks. Certainly, we're going to support this particular bill on the lobbyist registry going to the Standing Committee on Community Services. There is a very good reason, I believe, why this bill should go there. Looking at the original act, I happened to be on the select committee that recommended this, and it was a very good committee; I've talked about that. I believe there's a loophole in there broad enough to drive a truck through, and we've talked about that in the Legislature. I think it is quite appropriate that this bill be brought forward for this discussion. Hopefully, we can make it a better bill.

I mean, with the policy field committees we're into unknown territory, Mr. Speaker. I've called it a work in progress, and I believe that's exactly what it is. We'll see how this works. I think this is an appropriate one, as I said, to involve ourselves in, the committee, to work forward. I can see how it's going to work with bills being referred because I think now we have this one and two more coming forward in the next little while, and I have no problems with the other two coming forward. I think they are bills that appropriately should be looked at by the policy field committee. We'll see how it works once we're in there. That's a totally different situation.

I think that with the policy field committees, though, the other aspect of how they work is that they hopefully will have some room to be proactive themselves, and it won't be just a matter of only looking at bills that come from here, the House, and back there. There are many issues that perhaps the Legislature should be looking at but we're not in terms of having bills being debated in the House. There are issues that are occurring all the time. We've been talking about some of them, but I would hope that these committees, especially when the sessions aren't on, could be proactive in bringing groups in. Maybe flowing from there, we'd get some legislation coming back the other way. Because of what was happening with people coming forward to the policy field committees, it might work the other way. They would then posit that bills be brought forward here.

It's going to be an interesting time to see how these work. I guess that hope springs eternal, and as I say, I think this is certainly an appropriate bill, as the other two are, to proceed into the policy field committees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to conclude?

Mr. Stevens: Question.

[Government Motion 21 carried]

Speaker's Ruling Referral of Bills to a Policy Field Committee

The Speaker: Just a procedural comment here with respect to the Standing Orders, this matter now having been dealt with. Hon.

Opposition House Leader, comment was made with respect to an event that occurred in this Assembly earlier this spring when during the debate on a private member's bill an amendment was put forward to refer such bill to a committee. Well, Standing Order 78.1 would not have permitted that. Standing Order 78.1 says: "Immediately after a Bill has been read a second time." The circumstance in question had not seen the bill arrive at a conclusion to second reading. It was still prior to when the debate was still on. So there's perhaps a bit of an interpretation there. Clarification might be required.

I take it, then, we're finished with this matter?

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall call the committee to order. The committee has before it today estimates to deal with the departments of Advanced Education and Technology and Education, and today has been set aside for the New Democratic caucus.

Before I call upon the minister, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure today – and I apologize to my group for the wait. For 15 years we've had Vauxhall elementary school come up to this Assembly every spring, and this year is no exception. I am really pleased that the kids from Vauxhall elementary school and the parents and the teachers that have come along made a big journey up here today to take in part of the Legislative Assembly. Just so that everyone knows, these are potential stars of the Vauxhall Baseball Academy, and they're also from the town which is known as the potato capital of western Canada. Could I introduce teachers Ms Kim Kerr, Mr. Terry Olfert, who has been involved for 15 years here, and Mrs. Trina Mantler-Friesen; the parent helpers Mrs. Cindy Skretting, Mrs. Gwen Dorchak, Mrs. Sarah Hiebert, Mr. Chris Burns, Mrs. Dawn Cameron, Ms Cheryl Lanz, Mrs. Norma Brouwers, and Miss Jenny Tashiro; and all the kids from Vauxhall elementary school. Would the Assembly please give them a warm welcome and wish them a good trip.

The Deputy Chair: Before I call upon the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, I just want to let the members of his staff know that should you wish to have a glass of water or a cup of coffee, just raise your hand and somebody will come by and provide that to you.

head: 2:40 Main Estimates 2007-08

Advanced Education and Technology

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to discuss again in committee our ministry business plan and budget for the upcoming year. With me today in the Legislature I have, of course, our deputy minister, Bob Fessenden. I have our assistant deputy minister, adult learning, Mr. Phil

Gougeon. We have Mr. Blake Bartlett, who is the chief bean counter in our department. I've forgotten what his exact title is. We also have Shirley Dul, who is in charge of our apprenticeship programs, as well as Gerry Waisman, who is the executive director of our postsecondary institutes. We have a number of staff up in the gallery too. I won't get into the introductions on those.

Maybe I could give a brief overview. I did give some opening remarks last night, so I'll try not to repeat too much as I know that that's already in Hansard. I think it's important that we talk about the ministry's mandate up front. That was made very clear in December from our Premier. He gave Advanced Education and Technology a very clear mandate in the areas of increasing access, affordability, and quality in our postsecondary education, to increase support for community education and literacy programs, and to develop a strategy for technology commercialization and value-added economic diversification.

One of the key priorities is to better define the roles and responsibilities of postsecondary institutions in Alberta. Work is already under way, Mr. Chairman, on encouraging institutions to work more collaboratively. We brought the institutions together a number of times to talk about this roles and responsibilities mandate framework because our view is that a lot of our decision-making and a lot of the processing, a lot of the collaboration, co-operation, and co-ordination is going to come from that kind of framework. A lot of the aspirations of many of our institutions can be realized through the framework by identifying their niches, their roles, their responsibilities.

From the youth in Lethbridge who is taking academic upgrading online to the adult student in Fort McMurray who plans to enter medical school, Alberta Advanced Education and Technology has significant opportunities to make the system serve people better. As part of that, the key initiative where work is continuing in relation to the roles and responsibilities framework is in and around the principles of Campus Alberta. We want to emphasize transferability, seamless learning, and curriculum sharing. An important initiative we're undertaking is to build on the momentum of the affordability framework for students.

But also in terms of the roles and responsibilities we want to look at what is the need. What is the needs analysis of our system both from the student side and from the societal side and the industry side? Take a look at that needs analysis from a Campus Alberta approach and say: where do we need to build the capacity? We know that we need to build some capacity in certain areas. Intuitively, people can figure that one out pretty quickly. But where do we need to look into the future and say: in collaboration with the postsecondaries where do we need to build that?

After we've completed that process, there's obviously the process of: does the funding formula that we currently have meet the objectives of that framework, and can we make it better? Or is it adequate the way it is, and can we move forward based on that funding formula? So we'll be doing a review of that as well.

On the international co-ordination side is it appropriate that we have individual institutions with individual plans on international, or should we collaborate on that as well to try to get the biggest bang for our buck?

So we're going to be moving in a number of those areas over the coming months.

Certainly, with Budget 2007 we've made some very critical investments that are going to provide direct financial assistance for students before they begin classes this fall; that is, providing increases to student loan limits. I know that it was brought up today in question period about increasing those loan limits and increasing the cost-of-living allowance, which are things that we did based on our discussions with the students this spring, simple rules like eliminating the vehicle restrictions and reducing parental contributions.

We're going to be working with the postsecondaries and the students to see if there are innovative, interesting ways that we might be able to help in the student housing initiatives that are ongoing around the province. We are within the framework of the postsecondaries building a number of new student residences and student housing initiatives. The department is going to be working with Municipal Affairs and Housing as well as the postsecondaries to see what we can do even further in that regard. This commitment to student finance is really focused on enabling more students to qualify and to access what is already a world-class system and open more doors to things like scholarships, bursaries, grants, and expanding tax credits to full- and part-time students.

The ministry is also providing institutions with funding that helps address and offset the impacts of the affordability framework and the limits that we have put on tuition fee increases. It's one thing to say to the students that we will not increase the tuitions to what perhaps the costs have risen to, but it's another thing to say to the institutions that we won't do that, so we are going to address that by way of additional funding to the institutions to offset what we have done in terms of limiting the tuition fee increases. The business plan also addresses the capital and infrastructure needs of the institutions by increasing our funding for the expansion, upgrading, and maintenance of Alberta's postsecondary institutions.

It's also important to note that postsecondary education is not just limited to the universities and the colleges. As this House has learned on a number of occasions, we are working very hard to make a difference for Alberta's apprenticeship and industry training system and expanding it considerably. There's a lot of pressure in that area, and we're working with, again, the institutions to try to bring as many spots as possible forward.

Advanced Education and Technology is also expanding the amount of learning opportunities available in other communities. We're enhancing our partnerships. We're working on ensuring that Albertans have the skills they need today to contribute to our society, our economy, and the high quality of life we enjoy today.

In terms of technology the 2007-08 business plan continues to move forward with strategic funding for research, innovation, and technology commercialization initiatives, of course covering the traditional sectors but also working in some of the emerging sectors like nanotechnology, like renewable energy, like CO₂ sequestration. We're making strategic investments in all of those areas.

We're talking about Alberta's value-added capabilities being an essential element to realizing Alberta's future, so moving not only our natural resources and agricultural products but our technology up that value chain is critically important to Alberta's future. We're working in that area as well. We're looking at the water research strategy and have committed $30 million in funding for that as well as the implementation being managed through Alberta Ingenuity in the life sciences branch.

We're obviously going to continue our support for the nanotechnology initiative in this province. We believe that we can be very much a global leader in that area. It could be the next quantum leap in research and development and product applications. We want that to be researched and developed here in Alberta, and we want it to be commercialized here in Alberta to create that next economy.

Some of the other things that we're working on: obviously, in the life sciences, a number of the other science areas, enhancing the role of ASRA, looking at ASRA to do a review of all of the research and development that we're doing in the province to ensure that we are on the right track, that it's collaborative, that it's co-ordinated.

I can go into some of the detail on the estimates, Mr. Chairman. Our total government of Alberta investment in Advanced Education and Technology in the '07-08 budget is $3.1 billion. That's a spending increase that represents about a 22 per cent increase over last year. The 2007-08 budget includes a 6 per cent increase in base operating grants to institutions, bringing the total operating grant funding to 1 and a half billion dollars. Further increases of 6 per cent per year will be provided for the next two years.

Postsecondary institutions will also see a funding increase of $347 million for capital projects this year. A total of $1.6 billion will be invested in capital projects over the next three years, including $300 million in unallocated capital at this time. That funding boost represents a 41 per cent increase over the '06-09 capital plan, projects like and including the Robbins health learning centre at Grant MacEwan College, the expansion of the Lakeland College campus in Lloydminster, the construction of the community learning campus at Olds College, and the University of Calgary's health research innovation centre. Funding from Advanced Ed in '07-08 will go towards the construction of facilities for the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Calgary, replace the Donald Cameron Hall at Banff Centre, and the centennial centre for interdisciplinary sciences on the campus of the University of Alberta.

We will be looking at, as I said, this needs assessment that we're going through right now. My hope is that that will be done fairly quickly as we go through that needs assessment and sit down with the postsecondaries and talk again about what is the Campus Alberta approach. Decisions on the unallocated amounts in our capital budget will be made utilizing the capital planning process and utilizing the discussions that we have on this needs analysis so that we make the best decisions we can as they relate to the capital and the capacity of the province.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I just need some direction from you. Would you like to go back and forth for a set period of time?

Dr. Pannu: Right. Ten-minute segments should work all right.

The Deputy Chair: Ten-minute segments? Okay.

Dr. Pannu: If necessary, we'll modify them on the way. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I want to start by thanking the minister for redoing a part of what he did do last night. I tried to do my due diligence this morning to go through the Hansard to see what's been already done so that I don't repeat much of what has already been discussed, but, unfortunately, the evening portion of the Hansard is not available to us until perhaps tomorrow. So if I do repeat, it's because I do not really know what had happened last night. I do want to thank the minister for making his introductory remarks, which touch on some issues which are important to all of us, are on top of our minds.

Before I go into the substance of the debate, I also want to acknowledge the presence of the minister's departmental staff. Welcome again. I think you were here last night, all of you. Without the work that you do, I know that we wouldn't have any information available to us of much value that people like myself can use in engaging the minister and the government in debate on its policies and expenditures, that turn their policy into programs and action. So thank you for your work.

Mr. Chairman, the minister talked about, among other things, the affordability framework. He made mention in his introductory remarks to this. The accessibility/affordability framework certainly is a part of the business plan that the government has, a key part of it, as I think it is their core business 1: a learner-centred system accessible to all Albertans. I'm looking at page 59, I think, of the book that deals with business plans. Under strategies the very first point, 1.1, is: "Implement the accessibility, affordability and quality requirements in the Access to the Future Act." Speaking to this general issue, I am going to draw the minister into commenting on something that's, perhaps, not in the budget as such but certainly bears on what could be in the budget. Certainly, in terms of forgone revenues the government on a yearly basis does forgo some revenues as part of the education tax credits scheme.

I just came across a report that was released today by the millennium scholarship fund. It's a national report. I have before me the executive summary, and it certainly draws attention to the two kinds of tax credits that are available to students and their families in order to ease the burden of, I guess, affordability-related costs: the tuition fee tax credit, which is applicable to income tax paid federally and provincially; and the second one, the education tax credit available federally and in all provinces but Quebec, claimed for every month during which a student is enrolled in postsecondary studies and intended to defray such costs as books and living expenses.

I draw the minister's attention to this report because I think it has some significant policy recommendations here. I want the minister's initial comments on it if he can do that on short notice. I'm not sure if he had the chance or if his staff had the chance to look at the report or the short executive summary that is there. The report finds that the effects of the credits, education tax credits and the others, are at best neutral and at worst regressive and that they are bad policy, at least in terms of encouraging postsecondary participation. It proposes alternative ways to use the money over the discussion of the pros and cons.

Now, the minister did in his introductory remarks refer to perhaps even extending this tax credit scheme in order to move towards attaining the goal of affordability. This report speaks against the existing program, specifically educational tax credits and the tuition fee tax credit. What it does say, however, is this: as alternative, better policies, which are progressive, not regressive, in their effects and consequences, direct grants are one way.

Grants paid directly from governments are the largest source of funding for colleges and universities, currently accounting for 54 per cent of total expenditures. Increases in grants might enable an expansion of the post-secondary system and, consequently, the number of students.

Now, we know, whether we're talking about NAIT or SAIT or Mount Royal College or the University of Calgary or the University of Alberta, that thousands of students are finding it difficult to get in even though the participation rate in Alberta in the postsecondary system is one of the lowest in the country. In spite of that, there are thousands of Alberta students who are now being turned away from colleges and universities because of the problem related to availability of spaces, in other words an accessibility problem. Here is a suggestion that's made by this particular report, and I'd like the minister's comment on whether or not he's willing to look at changes in policy in light of the research that's available to us, that I'm speaking from.

The second recommendation that's made here is direct grants to students. The issue of affordability, I think, is addressed here. The money committed to the tax credits would be enough to give each postsecondary student a grant of approximately $1,100 annually. That's the figure that comes right from the executive summary here. Another policy alternative to the existing policy that I urge the minister to consider and see if he would like to comment on where he might go with this suggestion.

Expanding the student loan program is the third one. Adding the value of the credits and their $1.3 billion to the $800 million – this is Canada-wide, so I must make this note – from the student loan program would expand it by 2.6 times, making it much more effective. This study also looks at other options, including one from a separate foundation study that says that eliminating credits would allow systemic reform so that needed funds could be targeted to low-income students.

There are a number of issues here that this report raises that certainly are a matter of concern to me, and I'm sure the minister would find it important to address them as well. Having said that, I want to make sure that I don't forget this or run out of time before I draw this to the minister's attention for his consideration, Mr. Chairman.

Now, I will go on to the estimates themselves. Mr. Chairman, this ministry, Advanced Education and Technology, is a sort of restructured ministry now. Some of its budget items are, I think, ones that perhaps appeared a year ago in the 2006-07 budget in the ministry of science, innovation and technology, so they are here. I'm not sure, when the minister says that the overall budget increases, that the percentages that he gave and the absolute numbers that he gave really are an accurate way of assessing the real increases because the ministry was very different from the ministry whose budget we debated in this House last year. I would like the minister to assist me in evaluating the exact range of the increase.

I'll stop here and let the minister respond to a couple of questions.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before I recognize the minister, I just wanted to bring to the attention of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and other members that the Hansard Blues are accessible on the Internet 60 minutes to 90 minutes after the words have been uttered in the House, so while the hard copy may not be available, the information is accessible on the Internet within the hour, hour and a half. In future, if you want to reference, please go on the website, and you'll be able to access that information.*

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This member is still in the paper mode.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. As the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology I was going to point out to the hon. member that we are online all the time.

As to some of the comments, perhaps I'll try and tick them off, hon. member, and if there's something that I miss, just point it out to me, and I'll come back to it. In terms of support for post-secondary learners there were a number of questions that were asked that were kind of policy level questions, not necessarily budget, but we'll throw some discussion out for you.

The voted budget for student assistance is approximately $120 million, which is going to enhance the changes that we made via the affordability framework last fall. It includes funding for achievements scholarships, bursaries, grants, loan relief. The statutory budget for student assistance is approximately $88 million, and that includes funding for the heritage scholarships, the Alberta centennial education savings plan, and the provision for the future cost of student loans because of our loan relief program.

The $45 million increase between the '06-07 forecast and '07-08 estimate is expected due to the changes in the students' assistance program. We believe that under the new rules many more students will qualify for more bursaries and more grants, so we are budgeting a higher amount because we expect that those students will not only apply for but receive those bursaries and grants.

When you talk about the tax revenues issue and the millennium fund report, the first thing that I would say is that the report the Canada Millennium Scholarship Foundation came out with was a look at the Canadian system. It wasn't necessarily a picture in time of the Alberta system. That, hon. member, is very important because the Alberta system is second to none in the country. If we're going to take an analysis of, you know, what is the average system across the country and what could be better, perhaps there are some very valid points to be made in the Canada Millennium Scholarship. I would suggest to you that the Alberta loan relief program is probably second to none in the country.

We were looking at more of a holistic, balanced approach to affordability for students. We have a number of programs that are out there for students who are in need in terms of the lower end of the income scale. Certainly, there has always been an approach, and it has historically been so, that where parental assistance is available, we would expect that that would come into play. The federal government's tax system has always been there in terms of student tuition relief on taxes. But there is a vast number of students who are neither rich, nor are they poor. I think what they're looking at is: I would rather see my income taxes reduced because of my involvement in my postsecondary education and my investment in my future and my career. So I do see this as one piece in the tool box to make the entire holistic approach a balanced approach to affordability for Alberta students. What we're trying to make sure is that, as we start to implement a number of these issues in the affordability framework, we don't identify just one group and just try to help that and put all of our resources into that. We want to have a very balanced approach to managing the growth in that.

We have a fairly substantial increase in the grants. The hon. member mentioned that he felt that one way of reducing tuition would be to increase the grants to postsecondary institutions. We've done that because we put a limit on the increase of tuition, so we had to increase the grants to postsecondary institutions to make them whole. I would argue that another way that you could conceivably reduce tuitions is by reducing cost, because tuitions are cost based. We're going to be looking at that as well but only in the context of maintaining quality, only in the context of building the capacity.

Another issue that the hon. member raised was that we do have an issue around students being turned away or not being able to find the appropriate space. I'd like to make a couple of points on that. The first point is that it has probably very little to do with tuition. It has a lot to do with capacity and having those spaces available in the right places, I might add. So what we've been doing – when you look at a $1.6 billion infrastructure budget for postsecondary, I'm sure that there are many jurisdictions in Canada that would love to have that capital plan and those dollars to deal with capacity issues. We're working diligently at that. We have a huge amount of growth in the system.

The hon. member might remember a report that the same group, the Canada Millennium Scholarship Foundation, did some months ago that indicated that they were concerned that we might be 300,000 students short in the near future if we continued to build capacity or even if we didn't continue to build capacity. One has to take these reports along with other information from other areas, balance them out, and make the prediction for just Alberta.

The other point I'd like to make on this concept of students being turned away is that it's very difficult for us to determine whether they've been turned away, whether they've decided to go to another jurisdiction, whether they've decided to go to another institution.

It's difficult to track right now. One of the things that we're working on with the roles and responsibilities framework and some of the other collaborative projects that we have on with the post-secondaries right now is to figure out a system which would provide more seamlessness and transferability for the students and also provide us with the information that we need as a collective group to do the planning for those necessary spaces and to give us an idea of where the students really want to go. If we can track where they're actually going and what curriculum they're actually taking and where they're going after that in terms of their employment, that will help us project and determine what capacity we need to build into the system.

Currently we've got something in the range of $50 million in bursaries and grants going out to some 30,000 students. The Alberta loan relief program automatically repays debt accumulated beyond $3,750 per semester. The latest numbers that we have coming from graduates, some statistics that were given to us, show that Alberta students even today – well, in the latest numbers – graduate with the lowest average debt of any of the students in Canada.

I think what we're trying to do, as I said before, is take kind of the balanced approach to where we're headed. We're trying to make sure that overall we have the affordability framework on stream, on track. Did we do everything that was in it? Not yet. Are we going to try and do as much as we can? Yes. But it's going to take a period of time because the institutions have to be able to respond, and we have to ensure that the quality and student accessibility are still there.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is gratifying to note that the minister was paying close attention to remarks and tried to respond specifically to some of the questions that I raised that arise out of the millennium scholarship report.

I think there's something that intrigued me here that he might want to know. He talked about how students benefit from the education tax credit or the tuition fee tax credit. It is true, but the numbers, Mr. Chairman, the percentage of students who benefit from this is very, very small. It's very difficult for me, and I think for the minister, at this stage to be able to give the Alberta numbers, but nationally, at least, the numbers are given which are quite instructive. I'm sure that the minister and his staff would like to take a closer look at the corresponding numbers for Alberta.

Here are some numbers that I'm just going to draw the minister's attention to.

Most postsecondary students [Canada-wide] (61 per cent of full-time university students and 64 per cent of full-time college students) have an income of less than $10,000. There is no real advantage for them to claim the credits during their studies.

I'm reading directly from the executive summary of the research report that I referred to.

Less than five per cent of youth earning less than $10,000 pay any tax and, when they do, the average amount paid is a mere five dollars.

When income reaches $20,000 annually, post-secondary students who use their credits realize tax savings of $500 compared to non-students earning the same amount. However, less than eight per cent of university students and ten per cent of college students are in this earning category.

These are numbers for Canada. I think it's incumbent on us to find out what the corresponding numbers for Alberta are if we want to either defend the current policy in place or want to develop a justification for changing that policy or tweaking it if these numbers here are, in fact, such that there is justification to rely on them in terms of policy guidance.

I agree with the minister that not every report you can take word for word. You have to read them critically and understand them carefully before you accept or reject the findings, but here is a report, in my view, that makes some very serious and sound observations, which merit the attention of the department and of this government and of the minister.

A question on loan relief. The minister did of course draw attention to the fact that the amount for student loan relief has been increased. My specific question to him is about numbers, both in terms of the number of students who have enjoyed loan relief over the last year and the total amount spent. What's the increase in terms of dollars to that particular item in the budget for relieving students of the loan burden? I think it's a needs-based program. Is this true? If the minister would outline the assessment criteria, then, as to for whom this relief is available. Are the conditions and the qualifying criteria being relaxed in this budget? I think the minister made a reference to it. I would like to hear more concretely about the relief and the criteria used to determine whether one qualifies to have access to the loan relief program that the government has.

The idea of loan relief, I think, is laudable, Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Minister, I want to commend and express our support for that policy. The point is about how accessible it is and what percentage of students in need, in fact, are able to take advantage of it. I think that in my judgment, based on what I hear from students, this loan relief program is welcomed by students, but they think that it's unnecessarily restrictive in terms of its accessibility to students in need.

On the issue of quality, the minister again said that they were looking at the holistic picture. The minister talks about a 6 per cent increase, you know, the base funding increase, to postsecondary institutions, universities in particular. We know that the inflationary costs alone in this province now are close to 6 per cent. I'm not sure what the inflationary increases are with respect to educational inflationary costs. The minister might have some numbers on it. Is 6 per cent adequate even to maintain the current quality of services provided? Quality, Mr. Chairman, I want to draw to the minister's attention, is very much contingent on the class size in postsecondary institutions.

I have spent all my life in postsecondary institutions at the university level. I know that class sizes grew enormously during the period of difficulty starting in the early '80s, and the problem was simply exacerbated and became much more severe during the '90s and the early years of this century. Faculty-student ratio is one of the key determinants of quality, particularly at the end of the graduate level.

Is a 6 per cent increase, then, commensurate with the existing facts and the need to reduce class size, particularly at the end of the graduate level, in our postsecondary institutions? It seems to me that it's a budget made, in this regard in terms of a 6 per cent increase to postsecondary institutions, essentially to maintain the conditions that are currently prevalent in our postsecondary institutions, not to improve them. Is the minister satisfied, in other words, with the current quality of education? Is that the best we can have? Or does he in fact agree with me that there are challenges in that area? If so, what's in the budget to begin to address those challenges year by year over the next three years as part of the business plan? So that's a question for him.

The minister also I think misunderstood me when he said that the students are not necessarily being turned away from universities and colleges and that there's no way for the government to exactly have a clear handle on this. Again, the matter is complex. I think people apply to two or three institutions at the same time, hoping to get into law school or medical school or so on and so forth. We know this. But if we have to have a policy with respect to availability of spaces which reflects the existing demand and our own commitment to creating a future workforce which will serve Albertans' needs in the coming years, then we have to have some way of developing a reliable picture of that demand. I'm asking the minister: is the minister or the department capable of doing this or not?

I mean, it's an inexact science, I'll agree. You have to rely only on best estimates. Nevertheless, in order to plan for the future and to increase accessibility, which is one of the commitments that the minister makes in the business plan, there has to be some way that the department has to determine potential demand. If we don't do it and simply say, "You know, the matter is too complex; no one can be sure about it," then I think that's not the answer. So that's my next question to the minister.

The fact that the University of Calgary admission standards have been sort of jacked up to an 85 per cent average from high school – and I think similar numbers can be found at the U of A – tells you that there's no clear relationship between admission standards, the minimum kind of average you need to have to get in, and your ability to take advantage of that. Is 70 per cent not good enough? Is 75 per cent not good enough? These are public universities. These are not the Harvards of the world. You know, it's not as if... [Dr. Pannu's speaking time expired] All right. Let's stop and go on from there.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I made a remark earlier about accessing the Blues on the website. I was provided information that's not necessarily accurate, so let me just make sure that the accurate information is provided to you and other members. I am given to understand that within an hour, an hour and a half of words being uttered in this Assembly a hard copy of the Blues is accessible in the backroom there. Otherwise, it's accessible on the LAO network, but only certain people have access to it. So it's not publicly available. My apologies for that.*

Mr. Horner: As to the LAO network, we do have access to that as well, Mr. Chairman.

I was interested in what the hon. member was saying at the end there as it related to entrance requirements set by the universities, so I'm probably going to ask a question at the end of my answers here of the hon. member because of his, I know, many, many years' experience in the postsecondary in his role as a professor.

We'll go back to the education tax credit. The hon. member is very correct when he says: do we have hard numbers as to, you know, income and earnings of students and how that affects? We do, actually, carry some fairly good numbers. When a lot of these students apply, they're using their tax base to establish their need in the student finance system.

One of the things that is kind of interesting in some of the data that we've seen is that Alberta students' income has risen 18 per cent in the last two or three years, which is indicative of the economy in which we are. It's indicative of perhaps a little bit of a shift in some of the students' lifestyle choices that they're making these days, a little bit of a shift perhaps in more part-time students and part-time work at the same time, which I think personally we're going to see more and more of in our institutions, and we're going to have to cater to a workforce that wants to take us up on our word of lifelong learning. They're going to want to be able to work and continue to increase their knowledge, which is a very good thing. It's not a bad thing. It's a great thing. We want the highest level of educated workforce we can get. The student income is probably higher than the national, and again taking into context the national report applied to our province, there are going to be some differences, some variances, and we need to take that into consideration.

The other thing with these tax credits. If the students during their studies can't have access to those tax credits, remember that they roll over to the next year and the next year and the next year. At some point in time the student is going to benefit from the investment that he made in his education. Given that the numbers would indicate that a student taking postsecondary education is more likely to earn a million dollars more in their lifetime than someone who has not taken postsecondary, tax credits might come in quite handy down the road. Certainly, it's always nice to see more dollars in your pocket than sent to the government.

Again, it's part of the basket. It's part of the mix that we put together for the affordability framework, hon. member. We're going to continue to build on that framework. We are, obviously, as well enmeshed with the federal government in a number of these programs. We are mirroring the federal tax credit so that we have some continuity with regard to the program that the federal government has put out.

We talk about changes to the student finance system and the needs-based analysis that we do on the loan relief program. If the students qualify as needs students and their loan relief is fully implemented on the Alberta side, the interesting thing is that the debt that they are left with is entirely the federal portion. There's no loan relief available on the federal portion of the 7140 I think is the number.

Again, when you start to talk about things that Alberta wants to do within a federal/provincial joint initiative, if we're going to make some fairly significant changes to that, obviously we have a partner involved in this that we're going to need to make some changes with, and they're going to look at it from a national perspective. Would I like to look at some other methods that we can use provincially to open up more accessible dollars for investment for students? Yes, and we're going to be pursuing that avenue as an investigation this year. There's nothing in the budget for that this year.

I would agree with the hon. member that class size is certainly something that is important in the system. I'll go back to one of my other answers to the hon. member's questions about doing the roles and responsibilities framework and the needs analysis. The needs analysis is exactly what you're talking about. It's talking about: what is the demand, what is the employment demand, what is the inventory of capacity that we have in play today, and how do we mesh all those things together from a Campus Alberta perspective?

In order to plan for those capital dollars and plan for those spots and plan for those apprenticeship spots, that's the kind of needs analysis that I'm talking about doing. You were asking: why aren't we doing it? That's exactly what we're doing. It's ongoing work as we speak. We will be bringing all of the postsecondaries in again in August to talk about the results of that needs analysis and perhaps even sooner than that in terms of the capacity in the facilities to talk about where we see the future of the inventory of capacity versus the demand on that inventory and talk about their individual plans, their individual capital plans.

One of the things that I as minister will freely admit is that I think we have allowed an independent system of individual capital plans to be built up without a lot of interactivity between the two of them so that you get some semblance of a co-ordinated approach on the capital side. We're going to change that. We're going to start asking for a lot more co-ordination on the capital that they're going to put into the capacity for the system.

Quality is not always about dollars. It's not always about capital dollars or operational dollars. Quality is about being recognized globally as an educational system that provides the types of pathways for students to achieve their career dreams. That's the kind of system that we want. If you talked to our major universities, they would say that a global university has a ratio of postgraduates to undergraduates of perhaps 1 to 2 or 1 to 3. It allows them the opportunity to pick those undergraduates that are high achievers to work with those postgraduate researchers and to develop that global presence of international students and researchers.

I'm not saying that that's where we're headed, but if the colleges are interested in moving down further the undergraduate degree programs, I think it's not a bad idea to say that they would be a feeder source, that one of their roles, one of their mandates could indeed be taking some of these undergraduate programs to relieve the pressure from the larger universities. As the hon. member knows, that's already happening. Take a look at the nursing program at Mount Royal College, the nursing program at Grant MacEwan College, just to cite a couple of very good examples. I'd be interested in the hon. member's opinion of that type of system where the universities would perhaps aspire to have a higher ratio of postgrads to undergrads based on entrance requirements to compete, I guess, in the global environment.

One last point and then I'll sit down for the hon. member to ask some more questions. As he rightly pointed out, we are an amalgamation of two previous departments, although I must say that the two departments were intricately linked previously because of the research component that we do in our postsecondary system and the applied research component as well, so it made eminent sense to put the two departments together.

If you just looked at the old advanced education budget, if you will, and then pulled out numbers – and this is, as I'm sure the member would appreciate, a little bit of a difficult exercise and not one that we really did to any great degree, but just sitting here and doing some fast calculating – we ended up at just around a 20 per cent increase year over year on the operational side on advanced education if you separated all that stuff out. Don't hold me to that number one hundred per cent because we just did it really quickly here, but we can certainly start to pull some of those numbers for you, and I'd be happy to give that to you in writing.

As to the determination of need, I think it's pretty straightforward to say who's determinate of need based on income, and that's essentially part of what the student finance system does. There are a number of factors that would indicate need for the student. As an example, is it a single mom? Have you been living away from home for more than a year? What is your income? Do you have a disability? Are you geographically challenged? You know, there are a number of things. I'd be more than happy to again provide in writing to the hon. member the criteria that are used in the system to figure out where that need is.

Again, the loan relief program for those students in need, which is really, I think, the category the hon. member was pointing a lot of his remarks at. For anything over $3,750, in terms of the loan, the Alberta government has a loan relief program that basically wipes that clean for the student. So it's a very good program. I don't think it's comparable anywhere else in Canada in terms of the loan relief, and we're very proud of that. Yes, it can be complicated at times. Yes, it can be onerous, if you will, at times. But the other thing we're doing on the technology side is we're going to use it to make it easier.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the minister for responding as best he could on his feet, as it were, to some of these questions which really don't have quick answers to them.

3:30

I don't want to return to the questions that we have already gone back and forth on, except that the issue of quality is an exceedingly important one. In pursuit of affordability, in pursuit of reducing costs per student that goes through our postsecondary system, over the past 15, 20 years I think we have ignored and, unfortunately, sacrificed quality in the process. It's an issue that does require, in my view, very special attention on the minister's behalf. I know that, typically, universities in this province have coped with the scarcity of resources – funding, that is – relative to staffing by resorting to changing their hiring practices. Full-time faculty, tenure track faculty proportions have gone down over the years, and that has been replaced with the casual employment of academics: teach two courses, three courses for a year and then see what happens, sessionals, increasing demand on graduate students to pick up the teaching load, increased class sizes.

I think there's a need to take a closer look at how over the last 15, 20 years postsecondary institutions, particularly universities, have found their hand, in fact, forced to change their recruitment policies and recruiting teaching staff and faculty and how that bears on the quality of education. I'm not at all saying that sessionals are less qualified. It's just a matter of how much they're called upon to do, the uncertainty under which they work from term to term, year to year, and therefore are unable to invest their most and their best energies to the task before them, including teaching and research, which, of course, enriches teaching. So there is an issue here that I think we shouldn't just pass off as a political point made and remade back and forth but an issue that really needs some serious attention.

On the loan relief, the $3,750, I think that only students who meet certain needs criteria would enjoy the relief beyond $3,750, not every student, if I understand the minister. Or does every student who qualifies for receiving the loan also qualify for this? There's some clarification, I think, needed there.

Moving on from there, Mr. Chairman, to some other questions. With respect to financial aid the minister said that's been increased this year. I think it's $97 million – is it? – now to students in the budget. I think that's the number that I have here coming from the general revenue book, on page 26. I'm not talking about program delivery. I'm talking about the $97 million for financial aid, or whatever that is. I think the question that I have relates to last year's expenditures on this budget item. Last year I think that for financial aid, $94 million in the budget, of which only $8 million was spent. So it was underspent. I think I would ask for some explanation on why it is that the money that is available for aid, which students claim is not enough, remains unused. What does it say? My worry is that the minister might draw the wrong conclusions from it, that it's not been used because there's not enough need there. So that's my question. I think one has to look carefully again at that one, you know, the underspending. Is it the too restrictive and limiting criteria that prevents students in need to qualify to access student aid, or what is it? That's a question that I have there.

On to some other questions. You know, when I looked at the Calgary postsecondary institutions, within the Calgary system alone 13,000 students were turned away from one institution or the other. Here are some numbers that I have for your note, minister. The University of Calgary received applications from 14,341 students, accepted 8,316. According to my numbers more than 6,000 students were declined entry. If you have some concerns about the reliability of the numbers, then tell me and say that we can't rely on these numbers. For Mount Royal College I have only the number of declined admissions: 1,112 according to my numbers. SAIT had 11,376 applicants, and 5,337 were declined admission. So here are some of these numbers, and that refers only to Calgary. Calgary, albeit, is a major part of our postsecondary system, of Campus Alberta. Nevertheless, these are large numbers.

I need to know whether the minister thinks these numbers are, in fact, real. If they are, then we have to admit and acknowledge that there is an accessibility problem that is very serious in Calgary as we speak. We can't simply slough off this issue by saying: we don't really know how many people applied; you know, they apply to 10 different places, and then they don't turn up. The information available here is about admissions declined by institutions, not admissions people accepted and then not turning up on the day that the classes start.

If I may move to a question or two on the health workforce issue. You have a joint responsibility, I think, that you share with the Minister of Health and Wellness on this. I understand that that phantom report is available somewhere but not to the ordinary folks like us on this side of the House. Does the minister have access to this report? Is it real? Does it in fact exist? Is he willing to share that with this member and this House?

I think it's crucial that we have the report, have its recommendations, look at the numbers, and have an opportunity to assess whether or not the numbers in the report and the recommendations in it are current given the sort of expansion that's happening across Alberta both in demographic expansion, the expansion of the health care system, the needs of it, and the frantic attempts being made by public health care employers within the health system to seek nurses and doctors and others, physiotherapists and whatever have you, for their respective regional health authorities. There are serious shortages. We are going out to Britain and other places to recruit nurses these days. Why is it not important for us in the House to have that report available so that we can have some informed debate and discussion, exchange of ideas on it?

Here are some numbers that I have. I think they relate primarily to the Calgary regional health authority. An estimated 1,500 doctors will be needed in the next three to five years. That's 1,500. I just find it an incredibly large number. Calgary will need an additional 34,000 health care professionals by 2015 to handle retirements and population growth: 22,500 from retirements, 12,000 to handle demographic growth. I understand that an operating room at the Peter Lougheed Centre was unused for a week because no nurses were available. They were either retiring, or they were on sick leave. Yet only 280 nursing spots were available when 1,200 people applied for them at the Mount Royal College. The minister, I know, talked a while ago about how it's going to increase, the capacity of . . . [Dr. Pannu's speaking time expired]

Mr. Horner: I'm just checking a couple of my notes, Mr. Chairman. A lot of questions in that last little bit.

I'm interested to note that the hon. member feels that quality has suffered in our faculties. The student surveys that we've done, the interest that we've had internationally would indicate that, certainly, the perception internationally of our major institutions that have global reach – which, actually, all of them do now – is a very high regard for the quality of the students, the quality of the faculty, those sorts of things. I think what perhaps is happening is that there's a bit of a change going on in how they manage the affairs of the university to adjust for what is probably a current reality in terms of the students and the changes in the requirements coming out, lifelong learning in terms of the desire of the students and how they want to be taught.

That's not to say that if you were to ask me if I thought we were done, I would say yes. I think that there's much that we can do, and I think part of this whole concept of the roles and responsibilities in the framework is helping them focus in on what it is they want to be the best at. It's going to be a critical factor moving forward with this roles and responsibilities framework. I think that enabling the faculty and the institutions to be nimble, to be responsive and flexible is going to be just as important as, perhaps, you know, in the early days of universities when they had to be rigid and structured. Perhaps that's not exactly the route that the future will hold for them, with some structure to them, obviously.

I think one of the biggest things that's going to be critical for them in terms of some of the issues that the hon. member brought up is going to be the consistency of the dollars going forward, that they know that the dollars are going to be there. So we say things to them like: "Yes, we recognize that tuitions are not going to go up perhaps what market or costs would indicate that they're going to go up. Don't worry about it. We're going to make you whole. We're going to add and we've already put into our budget that 6 per cent to ensure that."

We're going to work with them on their capital and the plans for that capital to ensure that they have operating dollars when they build a building. What a novel concept. We're going to make sure that we do those sorts of things to fill the capacity on that needs basis. So we're not duplicating. We're doing lots of things so they can focus then on the quality of the instruction and the quality of the university and the research and all of the good things that happen there.

I'm just going to give you a very brief idea of the kind of provision that we put out there for the future cost of loan remissions. The loan relief completion payments are automatically awarded to students who have completed, graduated, or left full-time postsecondary studies and have an Alberta student loan, so they've qualified for a student loan, and have exceeded the minimum debt level for their program. The programs have minimum debt levels. If they have fulfilled those three items, then the relief program kicks in. It's fairly straightforward, although again I say that in order to get the loan, there's a bunch of other criteria that is embedded in that. We will make sure to endeavour to get that to you in writing.

The hon. member pointed out that we had dollars that were underspent and that he was concerned that I might get the wrong impression by that and decide that it must not be a program worth keeping. I would suggest to the hon. member quite the opposite. I'm somewhat concerned about it, that students aren't accessing the available dollars and programs that we have. I know that the hon. member was involved in the A Learning Alberta report and the affordability review, and they told us: "You've got a bunch of silly rules in there. Your cost of living is too low. The student loan limits are too low. So change those things, and we'll access the programs." If the hon. member would note, we've actually increased the dollars available for it because we're hoping that the students will take advantage of these programs that we've put out there.

You know, the stupid rules like the $5,000 car: I just don't understand that one. We should have got rid of that one years ago. Raising the loan limits, raising the cost-of-living allowance: those are the things that we hope are going to attract more students to utilize the services and the bursaries and grants that are available under that program. So quite the contrary, hon. member. I think it's a very valuable program. It's part of the affordability framework. That's why we put more dollars into it as opposed to less.

My hope is that in terms of when we talk about accessibility and these numbers being turned away and the number of students applying and those sorts of things, it was not my intent to give you the indication that I'm not listening to those numbers. Quite the contrary. We are doing a lot of work, trying to figure out how accurate the numbers are. We're doing a lot of work and spending a lot of time and resources on trying to get a handle on what is the actual need, what is the actual demand. As I've said, the needs analysis.

It's our hope, too, that a system that we're working on in cooperation with the institutions, called APAS, might help us with that. The vision, hon. member, is to have it so that a student sits at his computer and creates the pathway for his success in our postsecondary system. Through that system, he can apply for a loan, he can apply for assistance, he can apply at the various institutions that have outlined their pathway for the career of his choice.

I think it's important that we get information from that system that tells us whether he was successful in his application, where he went, and what course load he took – was it because the other one was full, or was he refused? – so that we have that information. You can imagine how important that is to us to do exactly what the hon. member has been talking about: determine where we need to build space and capacity. It's my hope and the vision of this government and this department that we're going to get to that type of a scenario sooner rather than later. We're going to push very hard to make that happen.

There was some discussion around a phantom report. I don't know about any phantom reports, but I can tell the hon. member that the three ministries are working very hard with industry, with the regional health authorities, and with the postsecondary institutions on doing a very similar kind of exercise of that needs analysis, saying: what is it that we need to do to train our own? What is it that we can do to repatriate? What is it that we can do to bring successful students from other jurisdictions to complete their studies here or do their residency here? We're looking at ways that we can coordinate the numbers.

Again, the numbers that the hon. member spoke of – the 1,500 doctors, the 34,000 health care professionals – I would say that those numbers are somewhat high given the information that I have seen from various different sources. Is that to say that we don't have an issue on our hands? No. We have an issue. The issue is capacity in Calgary. The issue is capacity in Edmonton. The issue is capacity in Grande Prairie. The issue is capacity in some of the northern areas, the University of Lethbridge, in certain programming areas. We are working hard to try to address that capacity. I can't wave a magic wand, and poof, there we go; we've got it. But we do have a plan, and we're working towards that plan of a strategy for the health workforce that I think we'll see how we're going to achieve those targets, how we're going to get there.

I think we're going to have to review that annually because, as you know, things change on an annual basis. There are different environmental aspects that may come into play in terms of the employment of these health care professionals that may change those numbers, and we need to make sure that we do this on an annual basis. That's our target. That's our hope.

We have committed, as the member said, some dollars already. We doubled the number of nursing spots in Mount Royal College. We doubled, essentially, the number of spots that were going to come out of Edmonton. We are looking at high-priority fields in health care. We've added $47 million in the planning envelope to create spaces for degree, diploma, and certificate programming there.

We do recognize that we have issues around space not only in the health care fields but in many, many, many fields. We're working as diligently as we can to identify appropriately so that we're not overbuilding either, that we're identifying appropriately where the right place is for us to invest those dollars. Even if you have the dollars, you still need the instructors, you still need the labs, you still need all of those things that I know the hon. member is very aware of. It can't happen really quick. It's got to happen in consultation with the institution.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to follow up where the minister ended. I say that there's no doubt with the economy we have right now, that I call on steroids, it's creating all sorts of problems. Certainly, it's occurring. We talk about the housing. We talk about public education, health care. In your department I'm not sure how you deal with this problem, to be honest, in the short run.

You know, I look at the figures, and I think about all of us who went to university at one time. When you now need an 85 per cent to get into university, I doubt that there are many in this Legislative Assembly that would be going to university at this particular time. So that's sort of – and I know the minister is aware of it – a double-edged sword. Now we have a whole group of people, thousands of young Albertans, and we need them, certainly, in the workforce, but they're not going to get in. I don't have the figures, but I know that it's high to get into NAIT or SAIT or Mount Royal or Grant MacEwan in many of these programs. It's very hard. So we have a whole group of capable people, average or above average students, and I'm not sure what we do with them. I mean, I guess the oil patch can take some of them. But we're creating, I think, a definite social problem down the way. I know that you can't snap your fingers and deal with that capacity overnight. Again, I would argue that we should've been doing this planning a long time ago. I know that the minister has only had this portfolio for a short period of time.

Then the other double-edged part of the sword is this, especially in apprenticeship. We're trying to do some work in apprenticeship, but we're at such a shortage now that without our own people being trained, we have to try to bring in temporary foreign workers. We've had a discussion in the Legislature, you know, about the problems there that we're facing.

So I agree with the minister. There's not, you know, sort of a snap your fingers and we can solve this particular problem. I suggest, honestly, that as long as we're not prepared to put the foot on the brakes – and I think the fact is that nobody wants to overspend in any area – as long as we have the economy that we have, it's going to be very hard to keep up. We're going to have to spend more money. You can't do it on the cheap. I think that's true in this department. It's probably true in other departments. I know that the Minister of Finance talked about that in his budget this year, that we've had to increase it. Whether that's enough or not, it's a lot of money. But it has to do with the economy that we're facing.

I know that there's not a simple answer there, but I suggest that this is a dilemma to the minister, and maybe he could comment on it. How many students, then, are we losing, that can't get in because of the marks going up that ordinarily in the past would be going to one of our institutions? What happens to them? What sorts of social problems are we going to create down the way? At the same time, we need these people. It'd be nice to have them being trained to go into the various shortages that we already have. I think there's a huge social problem developing there, Mr. Chairman.

I want to just look again at the health care because that's partly in my area too. I've raised questions with the health minister about this. I expect the problem is this. I think the task force was supposed to report – correct me if I’m wrong – a year or so ago. But I think the numbers keep changing because of what we’re talking about. If that’s the case, I wish the minister would tell us that and also indicate to us when we might take a look at this.

I suggest that we’ve got a serious situation developing. I think we’re in negotiations with a lot of the nurses right now. We’re in negotiations with the doctors. Next year we’re in negotiations with the health sciences. At the same time, growing shortages. We talked about whether the figures are high in Calgary or not. The minister knows that it is desperate in many areas.

I think it’s important to get that task force report out quickly. Even if we can’t deal with it, which I don’t think we probably can in the short run, at least we begin to know sort of the magnitude of the problem. Then, frankly, I think the government has to decide broader than this department, you know, how fast we should continue with the growth that we’re facing if we can’t keep up.

I think these are very broad issues that we all have to deal with. I have some sympathy, frankly, for the minister when I look at sort of the figures that I’ve seen. We have a department with a budget, whether it’s gone up a little bit or not, and we see the magnitude of the problem. How do we deal with it? But we’d better start dealing with it in a very significant way.

Mr. Chairman, I guess I’m asking, rather than a specific question, about some general problems that I see coming up overall and a little more specific about the task force on health care. In Calgary there are code burgundies almost all the time. There are the same in Edmonton. You know, we’re going to face these stresses. I guess I’d just like to follow up, if we could very briefly, on more sort of a philosophy, to see where we’re going, as he sees it, in a broad sense.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you may proceed. We have enough time.

Mr. Horner: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had the opportunity to recently travel to China with a number of our postsecondaries. They have a lot of very solid relationships in China as well as the Minister of Science and Technology in China. When the hon. member said that we have our economy on steroids, relatively speaking to what they’re doing over there, we’re a little bit. It’s interesting to see how strong their economy is going and what’s happening over there. It gives you a little bit of an appreciation. They’ve got some issues around infrastructure. They’ve got some issues around postsecondary, health care, all of those sorts of things. They’re all very similar. Relative to us, they’re very, very serious, and it’s managing that growth that’s going to be the key factor moving forward.

We didn’t believe and I don’t think there’s anybody in Canada – certainly, the Canadian millennium foundation – who believed that we might be 300,000 students short, for all of the facilities that we’re building. It’s very difficult to say that this is because we didn’t do it before. Before there was probably somebody saying: why are you building all this stuff when there are not going to be any students? Now they’re saying: why didn’t you build it? Because now we’ve got all these students.

It’s also difficult to ascertain, as I said before, even an approximation of the number of students who did not end up in a postsecondary institution somewhere in our system. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, they may have applied to five different places and got into one, but those other four said: well, we didn’t have space for them. It’s difficult to determine that. That’s my hope on the APAS system, that we’re going to be able to get much clearer data about where we have the issues around capacity.

That’s not to say that we don’t have an issue around capacity. We do. I would love to not have the opportunity to say that it isn’t a tuition issue; it’s a capacity issue. If you reduce tuition to zero, you still wouldn’t get one more student into our postsecondary system. There just isn’t any room. We need to do a lot of expansion of the capacity in our system. That’s what $1.6 billion worth of capital is at work doing today with our postsecondaries. We are responding to the issue, and we’re working hard on it.

When you talk about 85 per cent to get into university, the hon. member is very correct: there is no way I would have gotten into university with that kind of a thing. But I think it’s not a fair statement to say that every one of our postsecondaries requires an 85 per cent average. There are certain pathways that students can take that require less of an entrance requirement but will get them to the same end result, perhaps in a different way. I think that was true of my day and probably true of the hon. member’s day, that there were other ways to skin that cat, and there are today other ways to do it as well. That’s not to say, again, that we don’t have an issue around capacity.

Partly, too, in some instances the particular institution might be targeting a certain level and quality of student that they want to put into that particular place to work with some postgraduate researcher or some other quality issue that they might want to pursue, so that has to be taken into consideration when you start talking about that.

To say that we could have averted the temporary foreign worker issue by training our own, currently we are well over 65,000 spots for apprentices, more than anyone would have ever dreamed we could even possibly do in this province given the infrastructure that we have, more than I think any province in Canada with maybe the exception of Ontario. Certainly, we have responded in spades to the demand there, and we’re continuing to respond. In fact, in this budget there are allocations there to continue to expand our apprenticeship spaces.

Having said that, the industry tells me that there is no way that by doing this we could even hope to respond to the actual need that’s out there. We need more people. It’s very evident that we need to bring more people in. Can we bring them in and train them? You bet. We’re going to be working on that as well.

In terms of the health care task force, again, I will reiterate that, yes, we know that there is a serious issue around being able to train, repatriate, bring in health care workers at all levels and in all classes, all different vocations in the health care field. Again, the expansion of that industry and the expansion of the need has been very, very dramatic, much more than anyone would have ever been able to forecast.

As the hon. member knows, I used to be in a little bit of the forecasting business and based my income on trading in futures and grains and foods and everything else around the globe, on trying to predict where the next spike might come from. If I’d had the ability to predict any one of these things, I’d be a very profitable person today, and you would be asking for a lot of advice from me for a whole bunch of different things.

I don’t think anybody could have predicted this, nor could anybody predict the extent that it’s going. It’s going to be extremely difficult to predict what the need is going to be, and that’s why we have to be very careful about the information that we use when we do those predictions. As I’m sure both the hon. members would appreciate, we’re going to be as careful as we possibly can to ensure that our numbers are right and that our investments are in the right places. In the timeline that it takes, we have to be as close to being right as we possibly can.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, we have about eight minutes left to conclude advanced education, so you may use your time accordingly.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Absolutely. I appreciate you, Chair, for pointing that out. Certainly, my colleagues have done an admirable job in outlining our concerns in regard to postsecondary education. I perhaps just wanted to continue on the lines of our previous speaker just in terms of – and not to sound callous or anything like that but to make the best use of the labour that we have available in our province. You know, I bring that forward as not just someone who follows education but also as someone who has young people in my own family. I would like to ensure that they are getting the education that best suits their ability so that they can contribute in the best possible way throughout their lives to the economy.

You know, sometimes you just have to crack some eggs, so to speak, to make an omelette. We're at a place now, I think, that's not dissimilar to perhaps the early mid-60s in this province of Alberta where we expanded our postsecondary capacity by a tremendous amount. The benefit that we derived from that significant expansion we're still feeling here today in this province by having a reasonably high level of education amongst a certain generation, that allowed us to make a big leap over into sort of a postagrarian-based economy. Certainly, the oil and the gas and the energy were a helpful addition to our overall economy, but we had a whole generation of educated people who could exploit that in the broadest possible way, so the overall value of our society increased exponentially, not just from raw extraction of energy but our capacity to build value-added to that energy industry.

Here we are in the similar situation, I would venture to say, Mr. Chair, where we're looking at a need for a quantitative leap in our capacity to train people. This is evidenced by these lineups. It was like rock show or something in my constituency at NAIT where people were lining up 24 hours in advance to get a position in welding or radiology or what have you.

You know, these are all our sons and daughters that have the ability, the capacity to contribute to the next generation of our value-added economy. It would just break my heart, not to mention cripple us economically, to not make sure that they get the best education possible, and so my suggestion – and certainly I know that the hon. minister has this idea – to make sure that we go ahead and spend a bit to create that capacity to ensure that those students get an education in a timely manner.

There was one concern that I did have that I wrote down here: changing, perhaps, the way in which we look at a postsecondary degree to unfold and having that unfold over a longer period of time or a part-time basis and whatnot. Certainly, we have to have the flexibility to see that possibility, but, you know, it's again shortchanging the expertise that we require in our economy and shortchanging students as well to say: well, you're going to have to take, you're compelled to take your university or your apprenticeship training or your NAIT training or SAIT training over a longer period of time because – you know what? – we just can't accommodate you right now. I think that it would not serve the purpose of our secondary needs very well to look at it that way.

You know, I would say that this is a bit of a distortion of this idea of lifelong learning. Lifelong learning is a great thing, and certainly if people can have the fortune to train for two or more careers over their lifetime, that's wonderful. However, we need to educate students to the very best of their ability in a timely manner so that they can contribute to the economy and contribute to a quality of life for them and their children.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we have about two and a half minutes.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be very brief as I want to try and cover off four quick points. The hon. member talked about making the best use of the workers that we have in the province, so I look forward to his support when we start talking about scope of practice in the health care fields as to ensuring that workers in the health care fields are actually doing the things that they were trained to do and changing some of those perhaps archaic rules around some of the ratios and those sorts of things. I look forward to that, and indeed that would be cracking some eggs to make more than one omelette.

The lineups that you mentioned at NAIT is interesting commentary. You know, the perception is that that means that they were lining up to try to get in because they didn't have a spot. In actual fact, it was a lineup to try to get in because it's first come, first gets to pick the day that they get to go in. There may be better ways to do this, and, certainly, I think NAIT is probably looking at that. When you say that today is the day, and it's first come, first gets to pick the day that they get to go to school, it doesn't mean that the others don't get to go. It means that they don't get to pick, and I think we need to be cognizant that that was the reason for the lineups.

The other thing is that I don't want the hon. member to go away with the wrong impression about what I said in terms of part-time students. It's not that we as a government or that the postsecondaries are saying: "Gee, here's a neat way to save costs or do something different. Let's make them all part-time." The students themselves are making these choices; they're the ones. What we're seeing is that the students are making a lifestyle choice to say: I want to work, and I want to go to school to better myself, and I am more than willing to do it over a longer period of time because that's what I want to do. It is not us that are doing it. But at the same time, our postsecondaries need to be responsive to what the student body is actually asking for. That's, after all, what we're here for: to respond to the students. I didn't want the hon. member to leave with the impression that we were pushing that agenda as much as our clients are, and that's really who we serve.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, particularly your staff, I just want to thank you very much for coming here to support your minister and provide the necessary assistance.

Education

The Deputy Chair: I call upon the Minister of Education to introduce his staff and proceed from there.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have only one staff on the floor, Deputy Minister Keray Henke, and I hope that we can answer all of the questions that are posed today.

I would not propose to make any opening comments. We went through this process with the other opposition members about a week ago. That time, it's well recorded in Hansard, my opening comments. So I would be open to try and answer questions from the third party.

4:10

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, just before I recognize you to speak, I need some direction from you and your caucus as to whether you would like to continue the format of the 10-minute or you would want a 20-minute time clock going back and forth, question/answer.

Mr. Eggen: If it's okay, we would like to continue with the system we were using previously if it's okay with the Minister of Education as well.

The Deputy Chair: Very well. We will begin with you with the 10-minute time slot. Go ahead.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. All right. Thanks, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to thank the minister and his deputy minister for this time to go over some aspects of the budget in more intimate circumstances, perhaps, than we did earlier in the afternoon. I would certainly like to thank, as well, the ministry for being quite forthcoming in providing information that we've required in the past, and we would certainly appreciate that to continue here in the present and the future. My questions are around, sort of, four areas: addressing capital projects, addressing program operating funds, discussing the unfunded liability issue to some degree, and speaking about private school funding. These are the areas that myself and my colleagues as well will pursue.

I'm going to start off with the capital project issue. You know, we have this overarching theme that goes on with each of these ministries, K to 12 education certainly not being excluded, and that is a tremendous growth in our population here in the province and a corresponding increase in students that require K to 12 education. We have a little bit of a mini baby boom taking place in the province, so we know that people must be feeling stable enough to reproduce. But that, of course, means that we have to look into long-term planning for the expansion of our K to 12 capacity in the province because of this, as I say, increasing population both from inside and outside of the province. It's a fine thing to have, and we'd like to provide that capacity.

You know, looking through the budget, the $508 million this year going towards capital projects – that's from page 95 of the budget – is looking into this, sort of, vast chasm of requirements for building new capacity in the province. There are 71 previously identified projects, including 47 new or replacement projects and 24 modernization projects, 12 new schools or so announced this year, and $96 million for infrastructure, maintenance, and renewal. My calculation is that while this certainly sounds ambitious and is a reflection of our growing economy, in terms of absolute dollars this seems to represent a drop by at least a number of 12 per cent. I would like to ask the minister if this corresponds to his perception.

As well, if you factor in inflation, which is quite a rampant issue here, unfortunately, in Alberta, then I'm seeing a 24 per cent drop in actual dollars. Perhaps the minister could comment as to how he perceives this to be unfolding – right? – from the previous year's budget.

According to our calculation, this leaves approximately $400 million a year for the two subsequent years, including money for maintenance and renewals. We have an incredible request for 172 new or replacement schools, so, you know, by my simple calculations here this budget that we have before us barely addresses half of the recommended projects. I would ask the minister, then, first of all, how the government intends to deal with this chronic shortfall of schools that will be required across the province. We need both a short-term and long-term plan to deal with this infrastructure deficit, so to speak, as well as the practical development of these schools. So I'd be curious to see how we're going to tackle this here in the immediate and long-term future.

I would like to know as well how many new seats the government foresees this province needing in the next five years, let's say, considering this request for so many new schools as well as replacements with the population increasing like it is. You know, given that the maximum amount available for the next two years would be $300 million, I would like to ask the minister as well how he would intend to cover the inevitable space shortfall in the education sector. Really, that's a similar question as to how we're going to meet the needs of these new schools. It's a matter of geography, Mr. Chair. You know, there's a shortage of schools in certain places where new subdivisions are being built, where people are choosing to move from other parts of the province or other parts of the country.

Moving on to the second section that I had outlined, talking about program operating budgets. Again, we've had this discussion here and there, here and otherwise across the province. There's some confusion about the budget and how much base operating of the shortfall there is. Perhaps we can gain some clarification on this part of our debate.

Program budgets received a 5.5 per cent increase over the last year's budget according to page 94 of the budget. I'm seeking clarification here, right? Of what I see as a 5.5 per cent increase, 3 per cent seems to be going to general program spending by the boards. An increase as well is earmarked to the class size initiative, again on page 94 of the budget. Then 2.5 per cent goes towards prescribed funding, according to my calculations, Mr. Chair. You know, this is the nub of the debate that we've been having here. Again, I'm just seeking clarification if there's any other funding that is going to general program spending.

Of course, the big criticism that the school boards and the Teachers' Association as well as the Alberta New Democrats have is that this 3 per cent doesn't seem to match the inflationary pressures that we see, thus we could be in for a net decrease in capacity to run the schools, to hire teachers and support staff. We've seen the manifestation of that already with the Calgary Catholic board painting some bleak headlines in the Calgary Herald last week, saying that they would actually have to lay off teachers the next school year if we don't put some supplementary funding into place. That's our criticism.

As well, this is less of an increase than what other ministries actually received for their budgets. Other ministries seem to build their capacity for inflation and expanding programs, what have you, expanding economy in general, into the budgets, but with the K to 12 budget I just see a bit of a problem, right? So perhaps we could get some clarification on that. I would appreciate it.

The other issue that applies pressure to these budgets is that there are so many school boards that are going up for negotiations with their teachers. Of course, the teacher portion of the overall education K to 12 budget is by far the lion's share. How can we accommodate for the increases that will be inevitably negotiated with these new teacher contracts that will be coming up in the fall? I'm just looking for a sense of where the long-term stability in K to 12 is going to come from with some of these rather tight margins for base operations combined with the demands of labour, right? Of course, there's always hyperbole involved with these things, but with the teachers in particular there seems to be the potential for a bit of a standoff, which I don't think anyone would be well served by any means.

As I said before, Calgary Catholic has sort of been the first one to speak up on this. You know, a lot of the large urban school boards don't have that extra capacity built into them to perhaps accommodate for vagaries in the budget, so that's where you usually see the canary and the coal mine, so to speak. The large urban budgets being stretched as they already are is an indication of probably where a lot of other school boards are going to be as well.

So, with that first round, I would ask if the minister would care to . . . [Mr. Eggen's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much. I will attempt to try and cover all of the issues that were raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, but I may very well miss a few of them. If I do, we've got another hour and 22 minutes.

The member talked a lot about our growing population and the demand for seats. The reality of it is, though, that our enrolment is not increasing significantly. It's less than 1 per cent. This year alone in Alberta we will be adding about 8,200 classroom seats, and the enrolment growth is expected to be less than 5,000.

Our issue is not with lack of space; our issue is lack of space in the right places. I can say that nobody knows that better than myself. Although there are two new schools under construction today in my constituency – I have one public school and one Catholic school – I happen to have a catchment area that takes in an older part of Calgary, so the kids are all bused to the older part of town. We could meet literally all the demands if we could just pick up those schools and move them to where the kids are. Of course, the hon. member would know and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview would know that if you build a new school over there, that means you pull kids out of these schools in the older neighbourhoods. All of a sudden you've got three schools where probably only two are required; therefore, you run into the old issue around closing schools in the inner city.

While our population is growing, our actual enrolment last year was 1 per cent, and we're projecting a half a per cent this year, so we will have enough spaces for children. It's a case of them not necessarily being in the right place.

I wanted to deal with the issue around the decrease of some $70 million in our budget relative to infrastructure. Two years ago our infrastructure maintenance funding stood at $48 million annually. Last year we increased it to $200 million, and this year we've set it at $96 million. Now, you can either look at that as a 50 per cent reduction from last year or a hundred per cent increase from two years ago. If you compare it to last year's amount on infrastructure maintenance, we're down about $70 million. So that's where that discrepancy comes in. I think you referenced it from page 94.

Now, there's also another issue in there which relates simply to cash-flow timing. There is a certain time of the construction phase of new schools when cash flows out at a higher rate than at different times of the year, and we just happen to be in the cycle where last year there was a significant amount of cash flowing out for the construction of new schools. We're in a bit of a dip now, and that'll probably increase next year. Overall, our capital budget for new school construction is relatively unchanged from last year. The only new funding that we've put in is the hundred million, which I hope to be in a position over the next few weeks to expand a little bit more on how we intend to allocate that. I would ask the hon. member to just watch the news.

We then went to the area around funding. Well, we have had this discussion in the House on a number of occasions. I know that there is always the desire, if you're attempting to negotiate contracts, to, I would say, tie it to the most convenient number you might want to tie it to. Today it happens to be the rate of inflation. I know that the Teachers' Association has talked about the rate of inflation of 6 per cent and that the base operating grant is only 3 per cent. I don't happen to subscribe to that just because this year the rate of inflation is 6 per cent. If it happens to go to minus 2 per cent next year, my guess is that we're probably not going to have a rollback in wages. I believe in a combination of things: the 3 per cent base grant, the fact that school boards across the province have an accumulated surplus. Some other issues that may evolve over the next while will result in the ability of school boards and local associations to arrive at contract settlements.

I didn't quite catch the wording, but the hon. member related something about getting involved in negotiations. I want to make it very clear that we will not be involved in any negotiations. That is clearly between the ATA locals and the various school boards. I guess, just to sort of conclude on the negotiation side of it, I believe that teachers teach because of their passion for education. There are a number of young teachers in this province that could tomorrow leave the profession and probably earn twice as much money working on the oil rigs, and we're never going to be able to compete with that. That's just a reality.

I believe that our wage grid for our teachers is extremely competitive. It's among the best in Canada. I want to look at it positively. I don't want to sort of start on the doom and gloom and say that there's trouble on the horizon. I believe that overall we'll see some significant progress in that area. I've mentioned on a couple of occasions that we have had in recent months settlements that were retroactive in two or three school districts that were in the range of 3 per cent. Inflation last year was no different than inflation is going to be this year. So if there's a willingness there to sit down and work it out, I do believe that is possible.

I think that that probably covers the majority of those issues.

Maybe one more quick thing. I think it's important to put on the record that while the base grant increased by 3 per cent, we did increase our class size initiative funding in this budget by 21 per cent. Student health initiatives went up by 6 per cent. Our current cost of the teachers' pension plan is 7.4 per cent. So we really have to take everything in consideration and use the 5 and a half per cent as more of a guideline as to what school boards will be receiving versus the 3 per cent operating grant.

I think with that, I'll sit down and respond to any other questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair, and thanks to the minister as well for his frank assessments. You know, there are a number of problems associated with what the minister is setting up here. I've raised these before in some small way, but I would like to perhaps speak to it in more detail, right? First is the overall accumulated surplus for school boards across the province of Alberta. My understanding is that there's about $200 million, $220 million, something like that, out there if you add it all up. However, because I was very curious about this, I actually looked into this and even consulted my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, who has extensive knowledge of this issue. You know, what happens is that this is a calculation of all of the funds that school boards have put in place to ensure long-term funding of their operations.

The example I used yesterday, I think, was with buses, right? A school board will purchase their school buses but also buy into a fund that will allow for a replacement of those buses in eight to 10 years or however long a bus lasts. That's a calculation, the $200 million or $220 million, that includes those types of expenditures or types of investments, we could say, by the school boards.

You know, using that as an accrued investment that school boards have made and then somehow applying it back to an annual cost which school boards have in their teachers' salaries I don't think is a very fair comparison. In fact, it's a little bit dangerous because, of course, some school boards, the big ones, don't have a lot of that surplus there anyway. If you took all of that surplus and applied it, say, to salaries or to the operation of schools across the province, then it would only last a couple of weeks anyway, right? So I don't think it's fair to look at that number and say that that money is there as a way to bail us out because we're in a situation where, as the minister very aptly pointed out, the overall increase in our population of students from K to 12 is not increasing to keep pace with the population.

What is increasing is the demand for schools in certain geographic locations coupled with a dire need to invest in the crumbling infrastructures that we've sort of been putting off over a long period of time. You know, I can think of so many schools across the city here and in Calgary, say, that are just crying out for significant investment. By putting that off for so long now, we've come back to having to pay the piper on those buildings. While the overall enrolment might be only increasing by 1 per cent across the province, the need to reconstitute our system is significant. It's historically significant here in the province now. So my question is: what are we going to do about it?

I know that the minister has been talking about P3s as a way to save the day. To what degree is he willing to invest in private partnerships with businesses to build schools in areas that require them or to refurbish schools that require extensive refurbishment? You know, where's the plan on that? We would like to see that because, of course, we have very serious reservations about public/private partnership arrangements to provide public services. We would like to certainly see the details so that we can provide the constructive criticism that would be undoubtedly required in regard to that idea.

The issue, as well, that we just were speaking about from the beginning is about this idea of negotiations and where we can go with it. Certainly, as the minister might know, I was a teacher and consider myself to be one still in some degree. It's certainly true what the minister says about the goodwill that teachers bring to the profession. It's a choice that they make. But my suggestion and constructive assistance for you in your planning is: don't rely on that goodwill too much. You know, you can put a certain price on it, but don't overestimate how much it's worth because at a certain point that starts to fall apart.

What I'm starting to see is that the new generation of teachers is much more practical, I would say, in this regard in looking at less of a sacrifice to the future education of our young people and not being willing to be taken advantage of by that. I think that's not such a bad attitude to have, quite frankly, because, of course, these are professionals that require a lot of postsecondary university training. They've invested a lot, and they want to get on with their lives too. So to rely on the goodwill of teachers, especially when they're facing large inflationary pressures on their own personal budgets, I think is a little bit tricky, certainly.

As well, I just wanted to speak on that and how it plays into teacher retention and building the profession up over time because, of course, the quality individuals that make the schools function – you have to invest in those individuals, both administrators and teachers, and support staff, over time to come to create that critical mass of a good public education system. I mean, let's not forget – and state it clearly now – that we do have quite a good public education system here in the province of Alberta. It's something that we are invested to keep and to improve upon over time. That's an important thing to remind ourselves of here.

You know, the individuals who run the schools and teach in them and the support staff who make the world go around with education – if we are somehow compromising the affordability of the profession, if people can make that choice and know that they can have a livelihood to raise a family and make a career out of teaching, if we're somehow compromising that with unstable funding or what have you, then we end up in the less than advantageous position. We don't have to look far to see where public school systems have kind of crumbled and fallen apart. Believe me, we don't want to go there.

I would like to ask the minister as well about high school completion rates. This is an issue that is very much close to my heart because, you know, the system that we have available is a good high school system, but we seem to be losing a good portion of students from year to year. Students not completing within the three years is somewhere around 30 per cent in the province. I find that to be very unacceptable. Certainly, students come back over time to finish, perhaps over a five-year or a six-year period, but you lose a lot of those people. There's a critical time when you can educate someone and move them on to higher learning. I would like the minister to perhaps make some comment on the success of targeting funds to increase our high school completion rates. Our high school completion rates are not comparable to the rest of the country, and I think that we need to find out why and perhaps target monies directly to that problem.

As well, I just wanted to make some comment on private school funding. It's interesting, I found, from page 95 of the budget, that private accredited schools is one area where the budget actually went up in this year's K to 12 budget, which is nice to see some exception to a trend. In '06-07 the government spent $135 million. In this budget, this year, the budget goes up by 6.5 per cent – there you go; that's a nice number reminding us of inflation – to $144 million, including $39 million for the school boards' administration funding. This is a greater percentage increase than, of course, what the public schools received. I would like to know why that might be so, to seek some illumination on that.

It is our position as New Democrats that we should be limiting the public monies that we spend on institutions that charge students because we lose some degree of accountability there. You know, you are creating some social stratification there as well because, of course, private schools can augment and supplement people's education in various ways and decrease student-teacher ratios far in excess of what we probably can do publicly. That's another question that I have too.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, the member alluded to a few comments off the top relative to the accumulated surpluses of school boards. Let me just make sure that it is clear that the accumulated operating surplus for the Calgary Catholic school board in '05-06 was $9.5 million, which was a 14 per cent increase from the year previous. Calgary public is at $18.2 million, which is a 52 per cent increase from the previous year. Edmonton public – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview would be interested to hear this – went from an accumulated operating deficit of $1.7 million to a surplus of $5.6 million, or an increase of 429 per cent. So to say that the large city school boards don't have operating accumulated surpluses is not correct. I don't believe that the taxpayers of Alberta are prepared to say: we will increase our education budget significantly so that school boards can continue to build up surpluses.

I think the member also mentioned that these accumulated surpluses are there for such things as replacing buses and that sort of thing. I think we have to start to ask the question: what business are school boards in? Are they in the school bus business? Are they in the carpentry business? It goes on and on and on. I think it's about time that school boards took a step back, did a cost analysis to say: "You know what? It might be cost efficient for us to start to lease school buses, or it might be cost efficient for us to contract out the busing services for school buses.”

It seems to me that unless we start to really take a look at how we operate our school systems, our school divisions, we’re never going to become more efficient and more effective if we always continue to do everything the same way we did it last year and the year before and going all the way back to the ’30s. So I think it’s time for some creativity, and I believe we have the people in place to do that.

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

Now, the hon. member referenced our crumbling infrastructure. There’s no question that we have a backlog of maintenance that, frankly, I wish we didn’t have. It’s there. We’ll have to deal with it. We simply do not have the money right now in terms of fixing it all at once. We made tremendous progress last year with the $200 million in maintenance renewal funding. The city of Calgary alone repaired something like 49 roofs of schools.

I do hear, however, that with the $200 million we gave to school boards last year for infrastructure maintenance, in some cases there was a real challenge to actually commit that money, a shortage of personnel to work, and just, frankly, spending all that money in one budget year. We’re going to sort of assess where we are on the $96 million. We’ll talk to school boards as we work through the year and see whether that funding is where it needs to be or if it needs to be adjusted somewhere down the line. That’s work in progress, but there’s no question that it’s an issue.

Now, the member raised the issue of P3s. We have a philosophical difference around who should own every building in town. We don’t happen to agree that the government should own every building in town. I think one of the real values you can get through an arrangement with a public/private partnership is that you can actually get a long-term commitment that would build in the maintenance costs, and we wouldn’t be faced with this crumbling infrastructure as the member refers to.

The member made a statement that I’m going to take exception with. He said that we have quite a good education system in Alberta. Well, I’d like to say that we have an outstanding education system in Alberta, and I think he should be saying that we have an outstanding system. I could relate a litany of evidence to that effect, but I really think we need to start talking about our outstanding education system in Alberta.

He talked a bit about teachers and teachers’ salaries and are we competitive. Are we competitive with some of that external world out there? I don’t think we are, and we’re probably never going to be, but I don’t believe that we can have our – and I’ll use this term in a general sense – public servants, if I might. It doesn’t matter if it’s my deputy minister or if it’s a schoolteacher or a health care worker, we are not going to be competing with some of the external world out there relative to this province.

For instance, just a couple of weeks ago I met a couple who were teachers in Saskatchewan. I remind the hon. members of the philosophical views of the government of Saskatchewan. This couple actually moved to Alberta because we paid and treated our teachers much better than they did in the neighbouring province of Saskatchewan. So I would ask the hon. member to do a bit of a comparison on our teachers’ salary grid compared to . . .

Mr. Martin: I know two that just went to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Liepert: Well, there may be other reasons for it, but that wasn’t for pay reasons, hon. member.

Some discussion around the high school completion rate. I absolutely agree with the member: our numbers are not acceptable.

In fact, what I would say is even more concerning is that we measure those who enter grade 10 and those who graduate – and we’re in the 70-some per cent range right now – but what we don’t measure is those who actually never make it to grade 10. We have some real issues in the Métis and aboriginal communities. There are some issues around some of our newer Canadians that never make it to grade 10. They don’t even count in those statistics, so we have a lot of work to do there.

I don’t believe that money is going to solve the problem here. We did some good work last year with the high school completion symposium. What we really found out in that review and talking to students was that, you know, it’s the experience in school that keeps them there or makes them drop out of high school. So what we need to do is a better job of creating an environment in school, whether it’s career pathing, whether it’s ensuring that every student feels safe in the environment at school. We need to do a better job in that area, and I think our high school completion rate will continue to move upward.

I think another thing that could really help a lot is we need to involve all Albertans in the education system. We need to encourage more mentorship within the school system. There are many students who really would benefit by having an outside mentor that could help guide that student not only through school but after school years. Those are all things we’ll be working on.

Just one quick note around private school funding. The hon. member needs to ensure that he doesn’t distort the facts around private school funding. The only reason the increase in private school funding is 6.5 per cent is because this year for the first time we put an injection into private schools for ESL, English as a Second Language. We have to recognize that there are a number of private schools in this province – all private schools aren’t a bunch of rich kids, so let’s make sure that’s clear – that are ethnic based or are religion based around certain ethnic groups, and it is unfair for them not to be receiving English as Second Language funds. Obviously, if a particular private school doesn’t have English as a Second Language students, they don’t get the funding.

So just to be clear, private schools receive 60 per cent of the base operating grant, and this is the only additional money they receive. They receive the various programs like AISI and others, but there is no transportation funding; there is no operation and maintenance funding; there is no capital funding. I want to make sure that the impression isn’t left that somehow we were giving private schools a greater increase in funding than we were public schools. On the ESL side of it, which increased the percentage, we are only bringing them up to what we do in the public school system.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments I’d like to make, and there are a number of places to go. I would say to the minister, though – and I don’t want to spend a great deal of time on this – that the Edmonton public didn’t have a surplus for a long time. The surpluses were in the rural areas. My guess – you probably know better than me now – is that that budget would be $700 million. If they’ve got a $5 million surplus, that’s not a great deal. Now, what they’re using it for, I don’t know, but let’s keep that in perspective, that that’s not a lot of money in that sort of budget.

Friendly advice to the minister because I think we have the potential of being back to where we were when I was a trustee in Edmonton public, when we ran into, you know, the situation with the strikes which started in Edmonton public and spread to Calgary public. Eventually the government had to get in. We went through arbitration. I'm sure the minister's well aware of it even though he wasn't here. I wasn't here, but I was very much a part of it as an Edmonton public trustee. These issues are difficult. Admittedly the minister does not have an easy job because we have an overheated economy, inflation is running high, pressures on salaries. It's not only teachers; it's all the other people. Roughly 80 per cent of the budgets have to do with staffing, you know, when you're dealing with public education.

But I want to say that there's no point in picking a fight right now with anybody: the school boards, the ATA, or anybody. Nobody wins in this situation. We went through this when the minister at the time, now the Finance minister, took the hard road on it and said: this is the way; it's my way or the highway. I was there. That's very much the impression that came back, and nobody won in that. Certainly, the government didn't win, and it created a lot of friction that was unnecessary. It's going to be difficult enough, you know, with the number of contracts that are coming forward now. So for a person I've known for a long time, that's some friendly advice. It's just not going to help anybody because everybody will get their backs up, and there's enough power on both sides that nobody wins. So I would really suggest that we have to try to improve the tone because the negotiations are going to be difficult as it is.

I want to though go to something that's very close to my mind. The minister talked about it. It has to do with the schools being in the wrong places. I think there are a couple of things that I'd like to suggest. I don't know if the minister has looked at it, but it was a discussion that we held with the previous Education minister about how we deal with school closures and how we look at schools generally. You know, there is nothing worse than going through a school closure process. I've been there as a trustee, and I was there as an MLA. It's a very emotional time. There's a community involved, and it's a difficult process.

Now, I'm aware that sometimes schools can eventually close themselves, you know, because enrolment keeps going down. But I think there's a process that we have to look at differently. Number one, I think the ministries have to work together. If there's something worthwhile that's happening in the school – I don't care if it's a seniors' group or if it's a daycare or whatever – we look at the school as a community centre, and we try to keep that going. As the economy grows, we can't begin to build enough new schools out in the new suburbs. Maybe we should be encouraging people to move back into the core group of the city. I think we're going to have to do that. History tells us that we have to do this. There's a chance, then, that people will move in with younger kids.

But I think that if we can keep the schools together – we have examples of this in some schools where we do have those groups there. If that would count on the utilization, as long as that school's active and it's participating with the community and it's a community-based school, it seems to me that that makes sense for everybody. There could be money not just from Education but from other departments that are involved in the school. I really think that we should take a good long look at that. We've made some strides in that direction. I know that. But I think we have to go all the way with it.

With the school closure process it is so divisive the way it is done now, you know, through the School Act. All of a sudden you get an announcement that the school could close. Then we have – I was there as a trustee – these phony public hearings. Everybody knows that they probably made a decision on them, and there's just rancour, and then all of a sudden the schools close down the way. The pressure has always been on schools in the inner city to move. I'll come back to the minister's comments. If we build the schools in the right places – gee, if we close them down here, we're going to get new schools out in the suburbs. Well, it hasn't happened in many cases because we just don't have enough money to build all the schools that we would need.

As I've mentioned, in Ontario – and I wish we'd take a look at this – they say in the school act that you cannot use that as an excuse to get new schools, closing down the school. There have to be different criteria. They do it for a longer period of time. I was more up on this a year ago.

I really think that those two things would go some way in doing what the minister was talking about, trying to put, you know, the school where it's needed. If they were community centres and there were other useful things there, that certainly would be a use to keep that school going. I think it would be beneficial to the community, beneficial to the taxpayers. It doesn't matter whether it's the Minister of Education or the minister of health or the ministry of community development. It's all the same taxpayers; I think the minister would agree. There are things I think that we can do in that area to make the process better.

I'm sure we'll have time to talk about P3s. I will come back to that, but I wouldn't have enough time to go on about it now.

I just want to talk about the dropout rate. Some of the work that we were doing – and I know it's happening in other places in Edmonton public with the emphasis on full-day kindergarten, some of the high-needs areas, and some of the extra help that we are giving. Hopefully, that will be the biggest thing that we can do. The big impact is K to 3. Of course, you won't see if that's going to impact the dropout rate till much later.

You know, the biggest single indicator – and I think the deputy minister would probably agree – you can almost predict at grade 9. If a student comes into grade 10 and they're one year behind in their reading level, the odds are that they're going to be a dropout. There are some answers to that, I think, that wouldn't require a lot of money. But that's the fact as I understand it. If you're one year behind in your reading level, the odds are pretty good.

So somewhere in junior high or elementary we need some extra help in remedial reading because if you can't read well enough, then that's going to be the impact. I think we could take a very good look at that sort of area. That's not going to solve all the problems, but I think that with some remedial reading it might not take a lot of extra money to do that. I think you would have a major impact, at least from the studies I've seen in terms of the dropout rate, if you could do it as quickly as you can in elementary level or junior high.

Now, the reading recovery programs in elementary were very successful, especially in the high-needs areas. They're very expensive, but they may be a good investment over the long haul. I don't know – as I say, I've been away from being a trustee for a while – how many of those programs are still going, but the work that they were doing there at the elementary level was very significant. Even in junior high some remedial programs may be necessary, especially if we can predict the kids that are a little bit behind in their reading. If we're doing some work there, I think that that could have a major impact. I'd like the minister to comment on that. If he's not aware of the reading recovery program, I don't expect people to know everything overnight.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, as the hon. member mentioned, we have known each other for a long time, so I accept some of his fatherly advice. But I also throw back a couple of comments. You know, it's been said before about picking a fight, improving the tone. I'd like him to be more specific about it. I'm not picking a fight with anybody.

We have some serious issues in this province relative to where we go with expenditures, and I think we have to start to become more creative in how we meet the public demands.

I know that it's very easy to sit there and say: spend more money. I understand the philosophical difference we have between fiscal responsibility on this side of the House and less than fiscal responsibility, I would suggest, on the other side. But this isn't about picking a fight. This is about making some tough decisions over the next few years because we are going to hit a wall here pretty quickly, and it might be as quickly as this year if some of the economic indicators that are out there right now continue. So there is no improving the tone; there is no picking a fight. It's laying out some of the realities that exist out there and trying to solve some of the problems.

Now, the member talked a lot about school closures and schools in the wrong places. I guess that one of the comments that he used was, and I quote: there is nothing worse than closing a school. Well, my learned friend I have to disagree with. Yes, closing schools are difficult choices, but we have to make those tough decisions once in a while in life. I can think of a whole bunch of things that are a whole lot worse than having to close a school. In many of these neighbourhoods where they're closing a school, you simply have several schools in an area. If one school is closed, it is not the inconvenience for those children in the larger communities that exist today in a lot of these newer subdivisions where children are riding the bus for an hour to get to school.

I come back to what I've said on many occasions. I was disappointed to hear the hon. member use the term "phony public hearings." Hon. member, you're degrading what you used to do as a public school trustee. Let me give you an example in Edmonton this year. Those phony public hearings resulted in one school not being closed; am I not correct? They were proposing to close four schools in Edmonton, and they had these phony public hearings and then chose not to close one school. I think the hon. member might want to consider whether or not he's using language that frankly does a disservice to the good work that our school districts and trustees do.

Good comments around the dropout rate. I would take his advice relative to remedial reading. I would like to say to the hon. member that I believe the dropout rate starts way lower than grade 9. I think that in elementary school on many occasions there would probably be a trend that you could see in grade 3 to grade 6 with your dropout rate. You could probably identify a pretty high number of students that might be dropping out. We have made a commitment this year financially in the budget relative to putting more money into early learning initiatives to identify some of those children who have early learning difficulties, to work with them to get them to the level at grade 1 where they can be on par with children who don't have any learning difficulties.

Just to flip back to the community schools concept: the member makes good points around the importance of a school to a community, whether it is turned into a daycare or it's turned into a seniors' centre or whatever it might be, but I would have to say that I don't believe that the member can lay that responsibility on the provincial government or the Minister of Education. I think that's a community decision, and somebody has got to pay for those facilities. School boards have budgets they have to work in. They have to run a new school over here; they choose to close a school at this location. It's a transfer of funds.

I guess we could say that going forward, there will be never be another school closed in Alberta. We could probably accomplish that with about a 10 per cent budget increase, but, again, it comes back to a philosophical difference of whether you are fiscally responsible or not. I take great pride in the fact that I believe this government is fiscally responsible.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Yeah, there are some philosophical differences, no doubt. I prefer, if we're using language, to look at public education – we all have to live within budgets; we all understand that – as investment. The minister talks about it always as an expense, and I think that's the difference. A good public education system, hopefully, is investment.

Beyond that philosophical difference I wanted to come back to a couple of things about the school closures. Mr. Minister, you might not like the term I used, but I will repeat it. It wasn't the school boards because I'll tell you what happened, at least when I was there. There was a memo that was quoted in here where the minister was virtually telling the boards that you had to close schools down if you were going to get new schools.

Mr. Liepert: That's baloney.

Mr. Martin: No. There was a memo. I'll bring it to the minister. Not this minister, not you as the minister, but it was brought forward – and I think we put it here in the Legislature – strongly suggesting that.

That was certainly the feeling that I had as a public school trustee, that we had to close schools down if we were to get new ones. That was fairly common knowledge at the particular time. That's the point I'm saying. If we could change the consultation and make it longer, it would be more meaningful. The parents felt that they weren't being listened to and the communities, as I went through some of them both as a trustee and another one.

Mr. Minister, I said this very clearly, that sometimes a school will close itself down. It's just inevitable, but that should be the last step rather than the first step. That's why in Ontario they have said right in their school act that you cannot use that reason to get new schools. That's what I'm suggesting that we do here. Then the consultation would be much more meaningful in that regard.

Now, I do believe the previous minister, from Edmonton-Mill Creek, was trying to move away from that approach, but it was never written down or officially endorsed that I'm aware of that there have been changes. Again, I'm trying, whether it's fatherly or not, maybe brotherly advice to the minister to take a look at that whole process. That's all I'm suggesting. Then the process will be, I think, meaningful.

I can't speak for the rest of the province. Fair enough. But the ones that I went through both as a trustee and that, people felt that they weren't listened to. They thought the process of one public meeting was just pro forma. We do it, and then they do whatever they want.

Now, I want to just talk about the community school again. I agree with you. All this money can't come out of public education. The city centre project in Edmonton public when we there, what they did is health. They had a nurse working in the school, and they had social workers there. They came out of those departments. But it was really hard to get the bureaucracies together.

So, yes, the community has some responsibility, but I think there has to be some responsibility cross-ministry here, that they see the schools as a community centre and that money not just flow from out of education tax dollars but from other sources, wherever the source of the program occurs. Maybe it's Children's Services. Maybe they can donate as they were in some of the city centre projects, Mr. Chairman. I agree with the minister that it shouldn't be just education dollars. That's my whole point about the community centre.

Just to come back to the other about the school dropout rate. Yes, absolutely, it's a cumulative effect. The only point I was saying is that in the studies I've seen on that cumulative effect, by grade 9 if you're a year behind – and I forget the actual percentages – then the majority of kids will not make it at that level, so it didn't just happen in grade 9.

I'm hopeful that some of the things that are occurring now in K to 12 – and the minister talked about the initiative, extra money going in those areas, that I think that will have an impact. Again, Mr. Chairman, we're not going to see the results of that for, you know, another, well, I guess, eight years. I'm trying to think of when the initiative occurred. There are some exciting things going on in the high-needs schools. As I say, full-day kindergarten, reading recovery, extra help with some of the social workers being involved there at the school, health, all those sorts of things working together. I think there are some very good projects going on. Hopefully, that will have an impact.

The point I was trying to make about grade 9 is that if we can predict it, it is a cumulative effect. If we can do something even in junior high with the remedials – and I don't think it would take a lot of extra money or some reading recovery programs – I think that might have a major impact. I think it would be worth looking at.

Mr. Chairman, I want to stress to the minister that I understand that there are limited dollars; I understand that there are priorities; I understand all this. I've been around, you know, a fair length of time. I had to make those decisions. It's not just because we're over there that there's a budget worry. But you're right. If it's priorities, if we have to move here, it's like I say: governments collect taxes. The question we ask is: are they collecting them fairly from everybody? Government then spends, and the question we then ask is: are the priorities straight?

Of course, that's what the budget debate is all about. I think that there are things that we can do that can have a big impact without a lot of extra dollars. Sometimes it does take dollars. We know that. You know, we have a public education system that costs a lot of money. A health care system costs a lot of money. It's well worth it, but there are things within that system I'm convinced – and maybe the minister and I agree on this – that we can do differently, that can sometimes make it better, that don't require a lot of dollars. That's, I guess, all our jobs: to try to figure that out.

Mr. Chairman, there are a lot of other areas. It's a broad department. I would certainly allow the minister to comment on what I've said, and we'll move on from there.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I just want to make it clear that I feel very strongly that school closure decisions belong at the school board level. We as a department take in utilization as one factor only in terms of building new schools. There are a whole bunch of factors that go into it. I can't comment on previous ministers, but there will be no directive from this minister to any school board saying: you must close down a school before you get another school. That is not going to be happening.

Relative to the public hearing process I believe the hon. member has advocated in the past for a longer period of time for the consultation. Well, currently it's 12 months, which is a year. I think the most difficult part of the school closure is that public consultation time because that's when it becomes the most heated. That's when you have your public hearings. To extend that to 18 months or 24 months just doesn't make sense to me. If you can't make a decision in 12 months, then there's something wrong with the process.

Mr. Martin: It's within the school year. It's not 12 months.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'm of the understanding that it's 12 months, so we'll have to debate that and clarify that. I believe it's a 12-month notification. Even if it's within the school year, let's assume the school board decides to close the school – well, I mean, I think that I will check on that. I do believe that the longer that you have it drawn out, the more difficult it becomes, and probably the dragging out of it won't change any decisions. I think that if you have meaningful public hearings, school boards have the ability to take the input, and I believe our process actually works pretty well with respect to that.

I take the member's comments around remedial reading, and I think he makes some excellent suggestions. It needs to be part of the whole student assessment that's in place. We'll take that under advisement and carry on with the discussion.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. Further to that, then, we were just talking about remedial reading and focusing on students that we can see that could potentially not complete high school. I would venture to say that the real investment that you can make is in those very first years, when a child is educable, and I mean in a school setting.

In my estimation – and I think a growing majority of people would concur with this – what we need to offer as choice for parents is to have a full-day kindergarten program and a junior years kindergarten program. This is where you make the necessary foundation for students to succeed, especially students that could potentially be at risk for whatever socioeconomic reason or otherwise, right? The full-year kindergarten program and junior years kindergarten program: interestingly enough, countries that have those two programs functioning as a choice are countries that you will see doing the very best in terms of education retention and a lower crime rate and the whole range of socioeconomic things that are there.

I know that once again we're bumping up against some ideological differences that perhaps the minister and myself and the New Democrats have, but what I'm saying, using your language, quite frankly, is: give the people the choice to have full-day kindergarten and junior years kindergarten and see what happens. What you will find, Mr. Chair, is that the modern industrial work situation that we have in this province, combined with the high cost of living and whatever – there's a whole list of 21st century things that are going on – requires or has people making the choice to have both parents working, right? So that's the number one practical consideration.

Number two, we have a much more sophisticated work environment where we're looking for students that are not just intelligent and capable but also have the aptitude to learn. My suggestion is that junior years kindergarten and full-day kindergarten as choices that parents can have would seek to solve our high school completion rate better than any other single thing that we could do, and we'd get lots of other benefits to boot. This is something that we've been pushing for for years. I know that eventually we'll come around to it. I think that if we could lay down the tracks to do so now, the sooner we will get on with the benefits of having this as a program.

Certainly, Head Start programs are an indication of how successful this kind of thing can be. Head Start programs in different places, where there is perceived to be a potential problem, really do make a huge difference. What I always thought of as a teacher and as a parent is that whatever good program you come up with, what's wrong with being able to use that in the broadest possible way for students in situations that seem to be in a similar type of need, like the city centre project that Edmonton public had instituted around the downtown Edmonton? There are so many places that aren't physically in the city centre that are just crying out for that kind of program. The potential there, at the very earliest level, I'm saying – pedagogically it makes sense, socioeconomically it makes sense, and ultimately it's an investment. It's value for your money because you get such a great benefit from having a student that is not just completing high school but is successful coming through our public education system.

You know, that kind of leads me somewhat tangentially but not entirely to another set of programs that I would like to see expanded that I know would increase the quality of learning and a whole range of other things, and that is offering school lunch programs. When I look around the world, I see that in the United States and Europe and in Asian countries and South American countries the overwhelming majority of schools offer some kind of lunch and nutrition program. I know that the particular historical circumstances here in the province have made it less common in Alberta, but certainly children are the same. Physiologically they're the same, and their learning needs are the same.

One of the things that I noticed over time as a teacher was that, you know, for students that had problems concentrating in school and coming to school and perhaps working with the material – so often there was a range of things that were getting in their way, not the least of which was the fact that they didn't come to school eating properly – right? – having either breakfast or taking a lunch with them or whatever. It's part of a larger process of what public schools serve to function when they're at their best. It's not just to learn your times tables and your alphabet but to enter into a positive relationship with public institutions in the broadest possible way.

We often scratch our heads and wonder out loud why young people will go out and vandalize things and have a negative attitude towards society and all of this kind of thing. Part of the way by which we can mitigate that is to have a positive relationship with public institutions at the very youngest level. A school lunch program, quite frankly, is one of those things where you know that you're going to be looked after, you know that you're going to not go to school hungry, you know that a child is going to get not just intellectual enrichment but some physical enrichment as well. The cost and the value are not even comparable, right? For the cost of the few cents that it takes to provide some nutrition at a school level, the value is immeasurably much higher.

I have a specific problem here with the budgeting. I learned recently that Alberta Education is no longer going to fund the construction of cafeterias. I learned that from the Victoria school plans, which change on a regular basis, it seems like, for a number of reasons. You know, there's not even any provision. Alberta Education says that they're not going to fund school cafeteria construction anymore, period. I find that indicative of the opposite direction that I think our school system should go towards generally, and then specifically, you know, this is an example of it. We have lots of these older schools with cafeterias in place, and somehow that all was the first thing to get axed. You put those cafeterias back into action, and you create, again, this much more positive atmosphere where kids learn about nutrition. Perhaps this child obesity thing could be somehow mitigated with a school lunch program as well. There's a whole range of possibilities there.

I'd like to speak very briefly about the unfunded liability question and the task force that we've seen almost put together. As I said this afternoon, there's one important part of that that's missing, and that's the teachers. The teachers – and I take their arguments as being logical – say that they're ready to go ahead and start negotiating on this instead of having a delay.

You know, there's a practical thing, Mr. Chair. Here we are at the end of May, so during May, June, July, August we have a chance to sort out this problem during this four-month window without having to jeopardize or compromise or call into some question the fall and winter sessions of school. On a practical level this is just a great time to get this pension thing sorted out. Certainly, we're not advocating that the government just writes a big, giant cheque. I mean, that's ridiculous. But there's got to be a way to do it and a time to do it. I'm saying that the time is now. My suggestion, very helpful and in the most positive way possible and with the utmost respect, I would say, is let's scrap the task force thing and move on and start some direct negotiations.

The other thing that I would like to speak about specifically in the budget. As my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview mentioned, I think part of the issue is looking at older schools and the value of older schools over time. It's important because as we create different urban environments, we're creating density, so where there might be less students around for a while, certainly the plan is to have more students there in the future. When we're looking at the long-term picture, I think that we have to change the utilization formula.

Thanks.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, I mentioned at the outset of the remarks today that there's an obvious philosophical disagreement between the opposition New Democrats and this government, and we're probably not going to solve that today. I think it is very interesting.

You know, it's probably a good thing that this budget debate only lasts an hour and a half. I'm sort of tallying up as we're going here, and if we were to implement what our friends in the New Democratic opposition would like us to implement, we've now added a billion dollars onto the budget. It's about a billion dollars. So if this went for another couple of hours, we'd probably be up to another $3 billion or $4 billion.

As I said at the very outset, we have a party over there that believes you can spend your way out of any problem that exists, and we have a party over here that happens to be in government that is fiscally responsible, so we have this philosophical difference. The member trots out a whole bunch of comments that there is no data that backs up what he says. In fact, he talks about countries in the world that have full-day kindergarten that have better results than we do. Well, we have the best results in the world, so how can we attach those two? It doesn't make any sense at all.

Then he goes into the school lunch program. Well, we have 48 of 62 school boards who provide some sort of school lunch program for children in need. We have a number of programs around the province for kindergarten and junior kindergarten for children in need. What we try to do on this side of the House is direct dollars to areas of need rather than this blanket coverage, you know, cradle-to-grave coverage for everything that exists out there: we're going to feed every child in Alberta; we're going to pay for their junior kindergarten and kindergarten. Let me tell you what junior kindergarten and kindergarten would cost us: $375 million a year. Province-wide school lunch program: $354 million. So now we're already up to almost a billion dollars. Again, it comes back to a philosophical difference.

I just wanted to make one quick comment. The member raised the issue around Victoria school, that the province somehow won't pay for a cafeteria. Well, we have a situation where the Edmonton public school board would like to replace Victoria school, and what they're attempting to do is get within a reasonable budget to replace the school, and one of the decisions that was made, through the downsizing to try and fit the budget, was not to include the cafeteria. So for him to say that somehow the province says that we won't fund the cafeteria is just absolutely false.

I'd like to conclude my comments around the unfunded pension liability. The hon. member says, like many on that side of the Legislature have said: let's just sit down and negotiate. But I have not heard one suggestion as to what these members would ask the Alberta Teachers' Association to give up in exchange for the $2 billion liability that the Alberta Teachers' Association is asking the taxpayers of Alberta to assume. So where do you start negotiating? I don't have the answer to that, and that's why I'm not going headlong into negotiations without some basis to start those negotiations. We know what one side wants, but let's find out what's a fair return. Let's ask the people of Alberta, interested stakeholders, what they think we should be asking the Teachers' Association to give up in return for the $2 billion liability. I think that's fair. I think it's fair to taxpayers, and I don't think it's unfair to teachers. In the interim those young teachers who had no part in creating this liability will have their 3 per cent picked up starting September 1. I don't know what's unfair about that.

5:30

This is an issue that's been kicking around for 30, 40, 50 years, and for us to take three to four to five months to figure out some reasonable options for it, somehow that's unreasonable? Well, I don't happen to buy that particular argument. So we can have this debate back and forth all day long, but I know that if I'm going into negotiations on anything, I want to make darn sure I know what I'm prepared to negotiate away. If the hon. member has a whole slug of suggestions about what the ATA is prepared to give up, then bring it on.

Mr. Martin: Where do we start? We should keep this going for a couple of hours, Mr. Chairman.

I just want to come back quickly to the school closure because it's been a big issue with me, one of the reasons I went into being a public school trustee to begin with. Talking about the length of time – I won't go through the other things – I would say that I'm glad to hear the minister say that that would not be a directive from him. I don't think it was from the previous one, but it certainly was there before. I would say: take a look at Ontario. They actually put it in the act. It's not up to the minister; it's part of the school act. I think that would be useful to look at.

The reason I asked for the longer period is because I've been there. It's during the school year, and I think the deputy would agree with that. The problem – and I've seen it happen – is that in November it goes out to the board, you know, and then it's going to be done by June. Even if it's a legitimate school closure, the feeling is that it was just sort of railroaded through quickly. That's the reason I say to start earlier.

I think Edmonton public is starting to look at this a little differently too. As a school board policy – you're right – they can do this, but I think it might be useful in the School Act. If they feel they've been consulted, and they have a year or two to take a look at it – everybody has great ideas after the school closure comes through of how they could have saved the school. If they've had that opportunity, I think the feeling is: "Well, okay. It has been a fair process. We just couldn't do it." I think that's why I would look at a longer period of time, and even though some of the school boards are doing it as part of the act, inevitably I heard when there was a school closure: "Well, if we'd only known, this is what we should have been doing. We could have got kids in this way or that way." I'm just throwing that out, Mr. Chairman, you know, for consideration, again, in the School Act.

The other thing I want to broadly talk about is – is it AISI? I'm trying to remember the program. Is it AISI? Yeah. That's a very good program. The only thing I would suggest, though, is that when we find things that work – it's like so many. It's not just in education. It's like we have these pilot projects that seem to work pretty well, but there doesn't seem to be some sort of follow-up on how we can bring them in as part of the broader system. I think that's happened in some cases with AISI because then you have to reapply two or three times.

I'm not sure what the answer is, but I'm thinking of the things in the city centre education project which I was aware of. We found out that certain well-documented things worked, I think, but there didn't seem to be a way to expand that beyond sort of that narrow selection of schools. I guess I'm sort of suggesting maybe best practices or some sort of way that if something really works well, it can spread throughout, you know, the rest of the education system in the province of Alberta. We don't seem to have a way to be able to do that, I don't think, particularly effectively.

The other thing I would like the minister to comment on, because it's been a big issue across the province, is the whole problem with child obesity and the role of the school here. Now, I'm not expecting the minister to go out and, you know, hand-pick parents and the rest of it, but there are some initiatives. I know that Trustee Colburn tried to get a motion through at Edmonton public – it didn't go – to at least look at the foods we're serving in the schools. I'm wondering, just quickly, if there's any initiative coming from the Department of Education in this whole matter.

The other thing that I would like to allude to. I know something about Victoria school. It started off as a $63 million project promise from this government even while I was there. Then it got scaled back. By the time they come together with another project, the costs have gone up, so you have to redo it. Where are we now with Victoria school? Is it finally going to move ahead? I mean, part of it burned down now, so maybe there's some emphasis. But that's been going on. Remember, they were promised $63 million to begin with.

The unfunded liability. You know, we can say that all of a sudden because we're advocating different things – you're the tax savers, and we're the spenders. That rhetoric, you know, doesn't work well. We all have to live within budgets, and people do it wherever. [interjection] You asked the question. It wasn't a billion dollars. You don't know that. There were no figures. You said that you didn't have any figures yourself.

Mr. Liepert: Right here.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. You know, I could take some of things that you've said, twist them around and say, "Well, they're spending $2 billion on things that they shouldn't." But that's the reality of what I'm saying. It doesn't work in terms of that rhetoric. It's old-time rhetoric.

The unfunded liability. I don't have an easy answer to this, but we know that it's a serious problem. Now, the problem that I would point out to the minister – and I can't answer for the ATA, nor can you. That's why you have to negotiate. There have been some agreements fairly recently. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I think Newfoundland just dealt with their unfunded liability in the last year or two. I don't know what they did. Maybe there's something that we can learn from that. I know about Newfoundland. I think it was about two years ago that they did. Didn't Manitoba just recently do some agreement on their unfunded liability? I know about Newfoundland for sure, but I think Manitoba. Maybe there's something there that we can look at as a beginning basis because the teachers there and the governments both accepted it. So there's a suggestion. Maybe we could take a look at what they did. It might be an opening. Who knows?

As I say, nobody's going to win on this as long as it keeps going because as the minister is well aware, the unfunded liability is going to get greater if we don't deal with it. I think that's the emphasis. Is there an easy way out? Probably not. Perhaps there is a way out if there's goodwill on both sides. That's the point that I'm making. But I don't know if there are things that would come forward from Manitoba and what they did and from Newfoundland to see if that could be a basis for opening. Who knows? Maybe.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chair, let me start backwards and move forward while it's fresh in my mind. Let me be clear. My intention is to work with the ATA to get this issue resolved. What is missing in this equation is not what the ATA wants; it's what is fair for Alberta taxpayers in order to assume the $2 billion liability. That's what I don't have the answer to, and I don't think the ATA has the answer to that. Why would they? That's not their job.

My job is to represent the taxpayers of Alberta, so I want to ensure that we take a little bit of time. I'm not suggesting two, three, five years out. I'm saying a few months. Let's meet with interested stakeholders, whether it's school boards, whether it's the ATA, whether it is the taxpayers' association. You name it if you want to make a submission. I want a small group to not only do that but also look at Newfoundland and Manitoba and maybe Czechoslovakia, for all I know. I guess it's the Czech Republic now. There are other examples out there of what would work, and that's all I'm asking the task force to do.

I do know about Newfoundland in a rough sense. It was assumption of the teachers' portion of the liability for a set increase in wages over the next several years and labour peace. That's one option that the task force may recommend. There may be a whole bunch of better options for taxpayers.

Manitoba is a little different. Manitoba went out and borrowed money to pay down their own liability. But we're not talking here about our liabilities, the government of Alberta; we're talking about the teachers' liability, the teachers' portion of it.

I still maintain that over the course of the next few months this task force will be fair. It will look at all of the options. It will come back with some recommendations, which I will make public. Those will be the basis to go to the ATA and say: here are some options to negotiate on.

A couple of other quick things before we have to conclude. I very much take your suggestions around AISI. I think it is an excellent program, but like anything else we do, we should be assessing it to see whether it needs to be broadened, whether it needs to be integrated. We shouldn't just say that it's a great program, that we'll keep doing it the same way we've always done it. So I very much take your comments.

Around the school closures let me say this. It is not my intention in the near term to open up the School Act, but if we open up the School Act for a whole bunch of reasons, I would take the hon. member's suggestions around school closures as something we would consider at the time the School Act might be opened.

Finally, the issue around student obesity and health issues. That is a huge challenge for us. I think what we have implemented and tried to implement into the school system is the daily physical activity. That has been received in some quarters with grudging acceptance. I think, though, that student obesity, nonstudent obesity is a much bigger problem than the education system. This is an issue that we all have to take responsibility for as individuals.

I should say that there was an interesting program in Black Gold. The Black Gold school division actually has something called a student obesity intervention program. If they feel that there is a student who has an issue around obesity, they will actually contact the parents. They will have a session with the parents, and they will work out a program that they feel would be best for the student. It's been incredibly successful. I want to take a look and see whether there are some opportunities. They've won international awards for it.

You know, I guess it just comes back at the end of the day to some of the comments that we made earlier. We have so many wonderful things going on in our education system, things that are happening at the local level like this particular program in Black Gold. I believe that all of us need to talk more about all of the great things that are going on in education and, frankly, quit spending 99.9 per cent of our time talking about whether this is funded properly or that's funded properly. So that's my objective over the next months and years or however long I am in this portfolio: to highlight and focus all of the terrific and tremendous things that are going on in education.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have about one minute left. Is there any other member who wishes to participate?

Very well. Then I will invite the official to leave the Assembly so the committee can rise and report progress.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(c) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Advanced Education and Technology and Education relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 26
Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate May 16: Mr. Danyluk]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and join in second reading debate on Bill 26, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007. This is a fairly straightforward bill, and our understanding of it is that it essentially does a couple of things. It gives the minister the ability to make guidelines concerning standards and procedures for the assessment of property.

Additional amendments involve the financial cost to municipalities concerning compensation claims related to the effects of public works projects. There are a couple of other little housekeeping things in there, too, that the minister spoke to when he kicked off second reading debate. That's on record in Hansard, and there is no disagreement from this side of the House on that.

Really, as far as we are concerned on this side of the House, there's very little about this bill that causes us concern; only one area, and that is around the amendments to section 322. I'm hoping that when it comes time for the minister to close debate, he can speak to this. The concern I have – and I will admit quite freely that I am not clear in my own mind as to whether I'm interpreting this right or not. I've had some correspondence from an individual by the name of Wayne Llewellyn, who I believe has corresponded with most members of this House, who has some concerns that the amendments to section 322, which have the effect of allowing the minister to set the standards and procedures for preparing assessments and valuation standards for property and so on and so forth and which brings the substance of regulation 246/2006, the minister's guidelines regulation, into the MGA itself, might somehow prevent an ordinary taxpayer from appealing his or her property tax assessment.

I think, if I'm interpreting this bill correctly, that the intention here is to in effect legitimize the guidelines so that no one can come along and launch a frivolous appeal of their assessment based on the notion that, well, they just didn't agree with the guidelines; they don't like the guidelines; the guidelines aren't valid. But I don't think – and I hope the minister will clarify this, and I hope he's going to agree with my interpretation because if he does, I don't think were going to have too much in the way of problems with this bill – that it says that the property taxpayer can't appeal the assessment. I sure hope it doesn't because, of course, market value assessment does things to people's property taxes that people in Edmonton and Calgary and many other municipalities around this province very much feel a need to be able to appeal.

There is much about market value assessment that is far from perfect. I believe that the current minister's predecessor once described market value assessment in words something along the lines of the least-worst way of assessing property values. I hope that over time we can find a better way of doing that because market value assessment, although it may be less worse than the other methods tried so far, is far from a perfect way of doing it. Until we come up with a better way of doing it or until, I think probably more importantly, we move municipalities, we move cities and towns off their total reliance on property taxes as their only self-generating sustainable form of revenue, we need very definitely to protect the property owner's right to appeal an assessment that the property owner feels is unjust.

That is our concern. I do hope that when the minister rises to close debate, he can provide an answer to that, and I await that answer with great interest.

Thank you.

5:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to go on long. It's my understanding – and I'd like the minister at some point to comment on this – that the provincial government is facing a lawsuit regarding its regulations and guidelines. Correct me if I'm wrong about this, but I'm just trying to get the information before we go into Committee of Supply. My understanding is that there's a lawsuit from the city of Calgary claiming that it pays a disproportionate amount of property tax since market value assessment of properties has risen faster than the regulated assessment of properties. In my understanding it's brought forward by sort of the administrative staff of the city of Calgary.

I'm wondering how this fits into what we're doing in the bill. Is this the reason we went back retroactively, I think to 1995? How would this impact it, if you like? I take it that this would take away that suit. I'm wondering if there's been some discussion with the groups and where all this sits. It seems unusual to bring forward a bill, you know, in the middle of a suit, but maybe there's a reason for it that I don't see at this particular time. I'm not asking for it to be done right here, but perhaps when the minister has time, he could allude to it. I'm wondering if the bill does affect the lawsuit and its potential outcome. Where all this fits is what I'm trying to figure out, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. minister to close the debate.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I can reassure the hon. member opposite that Bill 26 does not affect the right to appeal assessments, on the basis that they have been prepared correctly, of course, or that the legislation has been interpreted properly. So, yes, I confirm what you are saying. You have a very good, I would say, summary and synopsis of what the situation is.

If I can clarify very quickly, the minister's guidelines have been used since 1995 to assess regulated properties, and I stress regulated properties. It has nothing to do with market value. I understand some of the concerns you have, but it has nothing to do with market value. Some stakeholders, as the hon. member from the third party has mentioned, have raised the procedural issue as to whether the guidelines were properly established. That's where we are. The procedural issue was that the guidelines were not filed as regulations. Bill 26 confirms the use of the minister's guidelines and ensures the stability of the property assessment base. Mr. Speaker, it is confirming the power to authorize the use of these guidelines.

If you have questions, we'll look at Hansard to make sure that we have your exact questions answered, and I will do so. Okay?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 7 o'clock this evening, at which time we would reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:55 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 29, 2007

7:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/29

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening, hon. members and officials. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Chair: The committee has for consideration this evening the budget estimates of the departments of Service Alberta, Finance, and Environment. The chair has been informed that an hour has been allocated for each department.

I invite the hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the head: Treasury Board to make your opening comments.

Service Alberta

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. I want to welcome all of my colleagues here tonight. It's an honour to be able to present to the Leg. the Ministry of Service Alberta. I would like to introduce for the record our staff here, that I've enjoyed to get to know in the past several months. Paul Pellis is the Deputy Minister of Service Alberta. Shirley Howe is the public service commissioner in the personnel administration office. Brian Fischer snuck in under the name of Brian Fischer. Brian is our assistant deputy minister of financial services. Cathryn Landreth is our assistant deputy minister of business services, Service Alberta. Tom Thackeray I'm sure used a different name to sneak in, but Tom is the assistant deputy minister of information services, Service Alberta. Dennis Mudryk, wearing that lovely tie in the second row there, is assistant deputy minister of technology services, Services Alberta. Laurie Beveridge, sitting directly behind me, is assistant deputy minister of registries, then Mary Anne Wilkinson, assistant commissioner of corporate human resource development, and my executive assistant and my boss in the stands, Dwight Dibben and Cathy Kiss.

Since everyone is here, we'll begin. Service Alberta's vision is one government, one employer, one enterprise driving innovation and excellence in service delivery. As we work to achieve this vision, the ministry has 1,855 full-time equivalent employees, who develop and deliver services and programs across Alberta and across government. Service Alberta includes the functions of the former ministries of government services and restructuring and government efficiencies. It also encompasses the personnel administration office.

PAO's vision is Alberta's public service proudly working together to build a stronger province for current and future generations. In support of this vision the PAO collaborates with ministries across government to develop corporate human resource frameworks that assist ministries in attracting, developing, and engaging employees.

The estimates I present today will be for both areas of the ministries. However, Mr. Chairman, as the opposition were not able to question the Treasury Board because of things, we're certainly open to questions about Treasury Board.

Service Alberta has a wide range of responsibilities that support to some extent all of the government's five priorities. To a great extent the work of the ministries is helping government manage growth pressures and improve the quality of life for Albertans. As Minister of Service Alberta my specific priorities as outlined by the Premier are to continue the public service renewal initiatives, which include addressing the impacts of an aging workforce and strengthening the public services support to elected officials and developing policy; develop a plan for innovative approaches to improve service delivery to Albertans in a variety of ways: in person, by phone, or through the Internet; and accelerate the implementation of a corporate approach to information management and information technology.

Service Alberta's business plan outlines goals for Service Alberta and the PAO that link closely with the priorities assigned to me by the Premier as well as the government's five priorities. The business plan can best describe the work of our ministry through our three core business. First, the ministry provides services to Albertans. These registry and consumer services include registering a car or a house or starting a business. Service Alberta processes more than 17.5 million transactions each year on behalf of Alberta consumers and businesses. The ministry also ensures freedom of information and privacy, and we maximize consumer protection through the marketplace awareness initiative, a ministerial contact centre for enquiries and complaints, and regular reviews of business trends and marketplace practices.

Our second core business is providing services to government. Service Alberta provides corporate and shared services to ministries in a standardized efficient and effective manner. For example, Service Alberta is responsible for the timely delivery of over 22 million pieces of mail each year, and every year the ministry handles the photocopying of more than 39 million documents; 38 million of them are in my office. The ministry works collaboratively across the government to improve the ability of the departments to deliver government programs and services, reducing duplication of services and ultimately better serving the public.

The personnel administration office delivers the department's third core business: develop and promote effective human resource management. It is important that we position our public service to continue doing excellent work as they develop and deliver high-quality programs and services to Albertans. It's not always easy. Our government faces similar challenges as other employers in Alberta in attracting and retaining skilled and knowledgeable employees in a highly competitive labour market. The PAO is building a strong public service by developing and implementing progressive resource strategies, helping to ensure our public service continues to be one of the best in the world.

Service Alberta is structured to help the department accomplish these goals. For the estimates to achieve my mandate and our business plan goals, the ministry needs adequate government investment.

I will now outline the funding we require as I present the ministry's estimates for the '07-08 fiscal year. The overall amount to be voted on for expenses and equipment and inventory purchases is $383,147,000, as noted on page 297 of the government estimates. Of the overall estimates $13,762,000 is for the ministry support services. This includes funding for the minister's office, the deputy minister's office, and corporate services.

The estimated budget for the ministry's first core business, Service Alberta, is $63,580,000. This funding will support registries, which includes land titles, motor vehicles, and other registry services. It also supports consumer services, which include consumer awareness and advocacy and the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

The ministry's second core business is service to government. The estimate for this is $244,854,000, which will help Service Alberta continue providing efficient and effective services to other government ministries. A key program area is business service, which includes such things as mail and courier service, records management, payment to vendors and to our employees, air transportation, and vehicle service. The second program area is technology services. This program includes funding for the data centre operations software licences, the running of the SuperNet, and support and security of government computers.

The personnel administration office. This year's estimated budget for the personnel administration office is $20,140,000. The funding will support government efforts to attract talented people to the public service. Some of this funding will enhance the employee assistance program, a program that assists employees experiencing emotional difficulties in their personal or work lives. The funding will also be invested in continuous learning and development opportunities for employees. The funding will support building leadership capacity, and it will help the ministry provide employees with a healthy and rewarding workplace.

These are the 2007-2008 estimates for Service Alberta. The estimates you will be voting on will support us in our overarching goal to achieve service excellence within and outside of government.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my formal introduction. I would just say before we start that probably one of the areas we really want to focus on, hon. member, is making sure that the government is brought into one domain, that our computer systems are what any good corporate business would look at as the ability to communicate very quickly with each other, that we're providing Albertans with that opportunity to communicate with us. That has been a priority also. We are very cognizant of the fact that our workforce is aging, and the retirement numbers are very close. It's going to be difficult, but that has certainly been a priority of Shirley. Some of those things we recognize are being faced everywhere, but certainly in the government it's growing and also has an aging workforce.

So with that, we look forward to the questions, and we'll do as best we can.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to participate this evening in supply estimates for Service Alberta and, as the minister has outlined, Treasury Board.

I, too, have an introduction to make. It won't take quite as long as the minister's did. It is sort of a historic evening; not only does the minister have officials on the floor with him, but members of the opposition, as you know, Mr. Chairman, are invited to bring officials down as well. I'm pleased to introduce David Kincade, who has been my researcher since day one of my time in this Assembly. I'm probably one of the luckiest Liberal MLAs in that I've managed to work with the same researcher since the beginning. Dave, it's a pleasure to have you here.

The minister has kindly offered to answer some questions or at least receive questions on Treasury Board even though that's not listed on the agenda for this evening. I do have a few quick questions on Treasury Board, so we'll go there first, if it's all right, and then move to Service Alberta. On page 385 of the estimates in the Treasury Board department there are just a number of things that caught my eye, the first being the budget for the office of the internal auditor. I note that the amount that's been requested is nearly $5 million this year. That's gone up from approximately $2 million two years ago. So in a period of two years, we've seen a dramatic increase in the budget for that office.

You'll know that the Official Opposition expressed a great deal of concern last year with Bill 20 that the records of that office are now locked away for 15 years. I have a concern that not only are we not able to access documents from that office for such a long period of time, but now we're spending ever more money to operate that office. I would ask the minister, I suppose, then, if he could outline why the dramatic increase in the budget for that office.

Likewise, the office of the Controller is showing an estimate this year of $3 million compared to $1.9 million the year previous, so a dramatic increase in spending there.

Strategic capital planning, I note, has gone from $361,000 in '05-06 to $2.23 million this year.

Likewise – well, actually, not likewise; this one is a little different – the alternative capital financing office, which is a new initiative, I understand, and didn't exist previously, is showing an estimate of $1.711 million. These may well all be part of the new direction that the President of the Treasury Board has been given, but it is a lot of money and in some cases some dramatic increases. So I'd be pleased if we could hear some explanation as to the dollars that are being asked for there.

Also, I note that the full-time equivalents for staff has gone from 73 last year to 115 this year. That may well have something to do with the fact that that was a partial year, and that might explain the dramatic increase. I'm not sure if that 73 refers only to the period since the ministry was created or not, but an explanation for that would be good, too.

A couple of other things. No, I'm ready to move into Service Alberta.

Mr. Snelgrove: Can I answer the questions?

Mr. R. Miller: Absolutely. If you'd like to do that, Mr. Minister, we'll do that. Great.

Mr. Snelgrove: I may go backwards on the list. The alternative financing existed before in Infrastructure and Transportation, and the plan was that we would move the personnel from Infrastructure and Transportation into Treasury Board. Now, I can't tell you that in entirety that's what will end up happening because what we've learned from dealing with most of the rest of the world is that right now the department of infrastructure does about as good a planning on alternative financing of P3s on roads as any other entity. So if it's working in that thing, I'm not one to mess with it just because it seemed like a good idea. However, there are other opportunities coming forward to look at alternative financing that will be collected underneath there.

The strategic planning committee. I think the hon. member would even acknowledge that things are growing so quickly that it's going to take probably more timely information to be able to look after things like the Industrial Heartland growth and to co-ordinate all of the departments together. You know, with growth comes cost, and collecting the responsibility for co-ordinating all that rests with Treasury Board.

As to the cost increases in the internal auditor or as to the Controller, I'll have to look at the numbers and get back to you about where the increases come from. Whether that's simply in workload or whether it was in bringing different departments in, I don't know.

For the FTE reallocation, they came from several different departments. I think the total increase in numbers of Treasury Board from actual new is 26. I think the rest all came from existing positions within the government.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you for those explanations, Mr. Minister. I guess the other question I have – and I know it's referenced several times in the budget documents – is the fact that the alternative capital financing is looking at P3s, and then it mentions other alternatives. I'm quite sure that in the Speech from the Throne there was some reference to that as well. Of course, we're always curious to know what those other alternative financing methods or models might be, so I look forward to learning more about that.

I will move to questions regarding Service Alberta now. The first one I have is regarding payday loans. Of course, you've met yourself with the Canadian Payday Loan Association and other representatives from the industry, as have I, and they're anxious to see some legislation or regulations come forward that will regulate their industry. I think that in both cases members of the Canadian Payday Loan Association and independent members are for the most part looking forward to those regulations coming in as soon as possible. So I'm wondering if you might be able to update us as to where that process is. I believe you're in the consultative process right now, but I'm curious to know whether or not there is legislation or regulations coming some time soon.

Also, Mr. Minister, I believe it was probably the first set of questions I had the pleasure of asking you upon your being named as minister and acting in that capacity in question period, some questions around a $9 service fee that Albertans pay when they pay their traffic fines online. You know, there were some, if I can call them, flippant answers during question period, but you were kind enough to provide real answers to me the next day. I appreciated that, and I think I told you that I had known the answers at the time. But I'm not completely satisfied, and those people that came to me with the questions are not yet completely satisfied with the explanation.

The concern was that there's a $9 service fee if you pay online, as you know, but if you mail it in, there's no service fee at all. That was the discrepancy: if you show up at a registry office or if you pay online, there's a service fee. I know the constituents that have approached me certainly are understanding of the fact that there might be a fee paid if you attend a private registry office, but their thought was that an online payment should in theory be more efficient, require less staff, and thereby wouldn't require the service fee or if, in fact, there shouldn't be a service fee for all. Again, I guess what we're looking for is: why is there no service fee for mail-in yet a $9 service fee for paying online?

On to some broader questions regarding your strategic priorities. Page 266 of the business plan talks about one of the government's five priorities, which is – well, I'm not going to read it into the record because I think the whole world knows it by now. We're talking about governing with integrity and transparency. I'm wondering, in particular, about the sentence that says that "citizens will gain further benefits through enhanced integrity and transparency of the information each ministry provides to Albertans," whether or not that might mean that this minister would be willing to look at amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, again, particularly as it relates to Bill 20 from last year, which garnered an awful lot of public interest. I would submit to you that had the Legislature sat a couple of weeks longer – the public protests seemed to be just growing at that time – I think that there would have been a real public outcry. I'm curious to know whether or not that's part of the ministry's plans in terms of dealing with that priority to move towards, maybe in a perfect world, reversing the effects of Bill 20, in particular as they relate to ministerial briefings and internal auditors' findings. I'm wondering whether or not the minister is planning on taking any steps to contribute to that, as I say.

On page 268 of the business plan, the performance measure 1(d): "Percentage of Albertans who are satisfied with access to Government of Alberta services and information." The last actual that's listed is 75 per cent, and the target for coming years is 80 per cent. I'm wondering whether or not the minister is satisfied that 80 per cent is even high enough or if that might be considered to be some sort of a failure in terms of the government providing services to Albertans. What steps, specifically, is the ministry taking to improve from 75 to 80 per cent if, in fact, that target is sufficient? Would there be improvements to the FOIP Act to accommodate Albertans' satisfaction with access to information?

If I can then jump to what is perhaps one of the favourite topics for the Official Opposition, and that would be the flight logs. In the estimates document, page 302, line 3.1.3 under Equipment/Inventory Purchases, business services, for air and vehicle services the budget for this coming year is $25.25 million, which is an absolutely whopping increase from $1.85 million the year before. Again, there may well be an explanation for this. Perhaps it's some budgeting that's been transferred from one of the former departments, or perhaps there's a major purchase that's taken place that I'm not aware of. I don't know if we're replacing the entire fleet of government vehicles. I know we bought two airplanes last year, so I'm going to guess that we're not buying more airplanes, but I would be curious if you could provide an explanation for that in particular.

Mr. Minister, looking at the flight logs that are now posted online, as near as I can tell, there are five airplanes in the government fleet. You may be able to correct me on that, but I did notice five different identification call signs for airplanes. One of the things that caught my eye as well is a number of charter flights that have been taking place over the last several months. I'm curious. If we've got two brand new aircraft in the fleet and at least two or three others that are operating, why we would be chartering to what appears to me to be a great extent? I mean, I could understand that if there was a plane that was down for service for a period of time, we may have to charter, but it appears to me that there's a great propensity to charter over the last couple of months. So I'm wondering if you could account for the sudden appearance of charter flights on the logs. I'm sure there's a great explanation.

On page 303 of the same estimates, line 3.1.3 talks about $11.73 million. I'm quite sure that that was for the purchase of the two new airplanes last year. That's showing, actually, the forecast for the last business year. So $11.73 million. I'm quite sure that that was the purchase of the two airplanes, but I just want to make sure. If you could just clarify for me that that was in fact the two new aircraft.

On page 300 of the estimates, then, if we can move to consumer awareness and protection, we have here an estimate this year of $14.2 million, which is a 13.6 per cent increase from last year's estimates. I know in particular there was an awful lot of talk about land titles, and I don't know if land titles falls into this or not. There was certainly a great deal of concern on our side about consumer advocacy and consumer protection. In fact, our Member for Edmonton-McClung had introduced a private member's bill which would have seen a consumer advocate named. Unfortunately, that was defeated. I believe the member from either Leduc or Whitecourt-Ste. Anne – I can't remember who it is – is doing some work in that regard. Perhaps some of this extra funding is going to support that initiative.

Line 2.2.2 on the same page, 300, shows that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is this year getting $6.66 million, a 46 per cent increase from last year. Again, I would submit that that's probably appropriate given the concern that this side has had for utilities consumer protection.

Mr. Snelgrove: Oh, where to start, where to start? Good questions and we've got good answers.

The payday loans. We had said that we would wait until the federal government got their legislation done and then we would consult with the industry. Yes, we have met with certainly one component of it, but as you know, there are the other sides of the stories. After we're done the consultation – I think the payday loan industry does need the guidelines to work with.

The $9 service fee. The registry agents built the site to do it, so they're recovering. Nine dollars may or may not be the right amount, but you know, people do have a choice, to mail it in or to go to a courthouse. If they want to use the system, you know, it's a definite fee for a service that a private group has set up.

Bill 20, in all fairness, as much as the opposition would like to make it out to be a secret thing, was actually making documents available that would previously never, ever have been made available. Do I think Bill 20 will be revisited? No. Are we trying to get around having to make you FOIP all these things? Yes. We're trying to make this information available to you online, through ministers' offices, through the plane manifest because I don't think anybody is served by the work we put our bureaucrats through, our personnel, to try and find out information. If we can put it out there first, we're perfectly happy to do that.

We'll just go a little bit backwards, which may explain some of the things we have from the internal audit services that went from two to five. We will now have enough people to fully staff the office. It is a complement of personnel from the different ministries, and we will be doing more audits.

The controller's office went from two to three. The additional staff will perform and consolidate all of the government's financial statements, that now include the regional health authorities, school jurisdictions, postsecondary institutions, and the operation of the lobbyists registry. So there are some other things there.

The vehicle thing. Yes, we are buying vehicles. We have watched very carefully our costs for the lease and the purchase of them. The number in there, the big increase, is because we are buying vehicles. We're not buying any more airplanes. We do have four airplanes: two six-passenger, a 10-passenger, I think, and then the Dash 8, which flies up to about 40 people. We have five; one is surplus. As you know, we have sold one, and the other one will be sold too.

We do have to charter aircraft. With the small planes, particularly if we're flying ministers to any other part of Alberta, it's impractical to send the Dash 8, and with 18 ministers there are always times when there's a greater call for flights. We do have an individual who closely tries to co-ordinate ministerial travel so that we can encourage a minister that might want to go to Calgary at 2 o'clock and one at 4 to go at 3. We're working and trying to get the information to other ministers that may request a plane to say: "Look. We do have one going at this time. Would you please arrange that?" But if one is going to Grande Prairie and one is going to Fort McMurray, we can't share the plane, so we do have to charter planes.

The $2.1 million increase in revenue of the consumer advocate is primarily due to a public awareness campaign. The consumer advocate is funded by industry, so they're certainly involved in that.

Land titles. We'll go back a little bit to customer satisfaction. Land titles from January have brought the turn-around time from 28 days down to seven working days. In all fairness, these guys and gals in there have done this, certainly, with encouragement from senior management, but a heck of a lot of it has to be pride in their work. I know that they were working nights and weekends, and I think they developed a very keen drive there to show Alberta that they knew it was a real cost and a drag. Boy, I have to tell you that I can't compliment them enough for the work that they put into it.

We get to the satisfaction we talked about back in some of the early questions. I doubt that you'll ever have a call centre or a department of government that can tell you that people that call in are 100 per cent satisfied simply because human nature is much like question period here. You may ask the same question over and over and over and just not simply like the answer. There can be an answer that you don't like, and very likely that means you're not going to like the response. So I think it's a little bit unrealistic to expect that you would have numbers – and I know that the hon. member's got enough life experience to know that in the real world if you want to ask questions that you want "yes" answers to, you can, and if you want to fool around with polls and that, you can get a higher number. Realistically, I think most business would tell you that when you're in the business of delivering, a reasonable number is probably 80 per cent. I certainly think it's something we'll try for.

The $11 million. I can reassure you – and you're aware – that that was for the two planes. Those were ordered and bought under Infrastructure and Transportation. The deal wasn't completed until the restructuring that put the planes under our department. That's why they show up in there. I'm sure that down the road, if the government decides that we need to update or expand the fleet, then it will be a normal budgeted item.

Certainly, the demand to get to the different parts of Alberta is real. I know that it may not seem in Edmonton to be that, but we would normally drive around 80,000 kilometres a year in a vehicle. If you just take that at 100 kilometres an hour, there are another 800 hours that we've spent on the road, going here, there. I know that my good friend, an instructor at Lakeland College – his full teaching component for the year is 740 hours in front of a class. I'm sure the hon. member spends quite a bit of his time running around the country too. I can tell you that the responsibilities in some of the ministries are extreme, that if they weren't able to get an airplane, they probably couldn't do their job in the way that Albertans demand of them.

Got another batch? Let's go again.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments in response to some of the things that the minister said. My colleague from Calgary-Mountain View would never forgive me if I didn't comment on the vehicle purchases. We hope they're hybrids – right? – not Hummers, hon. member, because I'll hear about it if they are.

As far as the land titles and the good work that your staff is doing in terms of improving that turnaround time, I was wondering if you might be able to second some of those people to the passport offices with your federal Tory cousins in the government of Canada because they could certainly use the help.

I'm sure the hon. member knows that I come from a business background. In my business 80 per cent would not be good enough, but I will readily admit that it's a little different than providing services from a government. But in private industry, 80 per cent: I wouldn't be in business very long if that was the best I could do.

I'd like to talk a little bit about registries. Page 266 of the business plan talks about providing safe and secure communities. One of the issues that we've raised in the Official Opposition in the past has to do with the privatization of registry services and the concerns that we've had about that. It's not that long ago, of course, that there was a report in the media that organized crime may have infiltrated some of the private registries in the province, and there may have been false IDs and that sort of thing floating around out there. The questions I have would be: what steps has the government taken to ensure that employees at the private registries are not being intimidated or bribed for access to Albertans' information? How has the minister resolved the security threats that those private registries may have been faced with? Is he as concerned, I suppose, as we are that some private information may be for sale? Those would be some questions regarding registries. I'm wondering if you could tell us whether or not any private registries have actually had their security breached, and if so, how much of this year's budget would be going to address those concerns? That would be a very real concern for Albertans, I'm sure.

On page 267 of the business plan, goal 1, strategy 1.7 states: "Participate in cross-jurisdictional and inter-ministry initiatives to address identity related issues and propose amendments to legislation, policies and procedures where appropriate." I'm wondering what kind of identity-related issues we are referring to here. I just mentioned that there have been some concerns about drivers' licences and false licences. I also know that it's not that long ago – I think three years ago – when there was concern raised by the Auditor General as to the number of Alberta health care cards that might be out there. It was somewhat more than residents in the province. So whether or not that is also a part of the ministry's goal, to look at health care cards.

I've had several people suggest to me that we should crack down on the use of health care cards both within the province and, interestingly enough, externally, in other provinces. Other jurisdictions have raised concern about health care fraud, with false cards from their provinces being used out of province. I actually asked at Public Accounts when we had the health department up how carefully we investigate claims that are coming in from other provinces to verify that those cards are, in fact, legitimate. I don't know if that's what's being contemplated here or not, but I would be curious to know.

Performance measure 1(b) of the business plan, page 268, refers to the number of clients surveyed that were satisfied overall with services provided by the land titles registry. We talked about that a little bit earlier. The last actual year, '05-06, was 72 per cent, and then, of course, we know that throughout the past year, '06-07, we hit an all-time low of 52 per cent. I think that's what we were talking about, that now that's dramatically improved, but you might wish to elaborate on that a bit more.

I mentioned the land titles, I guess, the 14 per cent increase, to $15.245 million this year. I was going to ask whether or not you believe that it's sufficient, but I'm going to guess, based on the answer you've already given, that you're probably quite happy with that.

On page 300 of the estimates, line 2.1.3, the budget for other registry services, $13.1 million is what's shown this year, which is almost a 20 per cent increase from what was forecast for the last year. It's a significant increase, more than $2 million up from what was needed last year. I'm wondering if you could just elaborate for us what other registry services are receiving this funding support and whether or not any additional money will go towards improving the efficiency of registry services or, for that matter, the security of registry services, as I mentioned a minute ago.

On page 302 of the estimates, line 2.1.3, equipment/inventory purchases, again for other registry services there's a fairly dramatic increase to $1.445 million, a significant increase. That may well be for technology, i.e. computers; I don't know. I'm wondering if you can let us know and whether or not it's thought that that extra expenditure might actually improve the efficiency and effectiveness of government services to Albertans.

I know that I'm jumping around a little bit here. I hope that's not causing too much trouble for the staff. On page 300 of the estimates, line 3.1.4 is for business services, amortization and consumption of inventory. It shows $3.419 million for this year. Again, that's a dramatic increase, 128 per cent increase from $1.5 million the previous year, and $1.1 million the year before. I'm just wondering if you could explain why the funding had to be doubled for that particular line item.

Then on the same page, 3.2.2, technology services, enterprise services, $24.33 million. Again a big increase, 24 per cent increase from what was asked last year. I'm wondering if you could even tell us what enterprise services is because, offhand, I don't know. There's nearly a $5 million increase this year over last year, so I'm curious to know what that's for.

The minister mentioned the personnel administration office and said that it would be all right if I asked a question on that, so I thought I should do so. In the business plan book, page 275, goal 2 talks about an engaged and healthy public service that is positioned to meet emerging and diverse government goals. Performance measure 2(a): percentage of employees who agree they are satisfied with their work as a government of Alberta employee. The last actual was 80 per cent, and the target for this year is 83 per cent.

Again, those numbers in private business would probably be lower than I would get away with. Perhaps in this current market that's as good as we can expect; I don't know. I'm wondering whether or not you're comfortable. You know, when we say 80 per cent, that sounds good. What that also means is that 20 per cent of the government employees might not be happy with the work that they're doing. That would be a concern for any employer, I think. I'm wondering what factors would be contributing to the 20 per cent other than growth pressures, I suppose, that the entire province is facing, and also what sorts of plans the ministry has to improve that number. Even if we're going to move from 80 to 83 per cent, which is probably a realistic goal, what sorts of initiatives are we taking to try to improve the morale of the public service?

Performance measure 2(b) talks about the percentage of employees who agree that their organization supports their work-related learning and development. The last actual was 71 per cent. Again, to me that seems a little low. I'm wondering how the ministry feels about that and what they're doing to try to improve that as well. As I said, understanding, of course, that I'm from a business background myself, I know how difficult it is in these times, but all sorts of companies across the province are providing all sorts of incentives to try to attract and retain employees and keep them happy.

I made a trip to Grande Prairie earlier this year, and I met with a number of public service employees in Grande Prairie who feel strongly that they should be given some sort of a northern allowance or a living-out allowance to recognize the increased costs of living in Grande Prairie, so that might be an example.

Mr. Snelgrove: Good questions. One that I'm really happy to talk about is the registries and, I think, the willingness of the registries to work. We're entering into discussions with them. In any system there is the opportunity for people to abuse their position. It would be probably irresponsible for me to say that it couldn't happen or it didn't happen or it wouldn't happen, but we monitor these registry offices very, very closely. We have started an initiative that will allow us to move quite quickly in a case or in an area where we find one that has used their information inappropriately.

Without trying to sound flippant, I really can't talk to you about what we know about the security of them or the breaches of them, but I will say this: the department takes the concerns you expressed extremely seriously – I think as you would expect – and we are working to tighten up and to be able to move very quickly where there is a breach. We have probably the most secure system for drivers' licences in North America, maybe in the world.

An Hon. Member: Not the universe?

Mr. Snelgrove: Maybe the universe.

I had the opportunity to tour the department and see the process we have for verifying the drivers' licences and to authenticate other documents of other sources around. The Alberta government probably would – I mean, they surprise us with what the staff and our departments have done.

With working in the collection, the idea of the health card is something that will probably come, but it is an extremely sensitive issue around just how much information could be on a card. What would it do? You know, what would it mean for tracking? How secure could the card itself and the person be? I'll say this: the system around drivers' licences, the process, I think, probably gives us a leg up on being able to develop that card. That will be a very, very collaborative effort with Health and other agencies that might use an ID card for more than just health information. We've talked about the opportunity maybe to have a card that would allow us to travel, that wasn't a passport.

Really, as a government we're ready to get into the age of identity security probably far ahead of most areas. A lot of that has to do certainly not with my superior planning abilities, but there's a heck of a department that has been working at this for years and years and years, and they've put together an extremely responsible approach to it. So I'm very comfortable as we go into the discussion with whatever department or with whatever province or state we talk to about the ability for us to produce or to secure the cards.

Some of the budget items we've talked about. The amortization on 3.1.4 is an accounting procedure that reduces the cost of capital. It's recorded in there because the amount is a noncash item. The consumption of inventory relates to the air service parts used for maintaining the airplanes, and the $1.9 million dollar increase in '07-08 is related to the new vehicle purchasing program amortization.

Under 3.2.2 the $4.8 million increase between the '07-08 and '06-07 budgets is primarily due to a $3.5 million increase in the government of Alberta migration project, which will consolidate all of the government information technology assets into one standard environment.

The other registries. The program expenses for document control records were previously reported under motor vehicles and have been reclassified as other registries for this season. They include vital statistics, corporate registries, and personal property registries.

The personnel administration office. I agree. I was in private business, as you know, a long time, and we get to measure by the bottom line a lot. You can track it through repeat customers, and you can do all that stuff. It is a little different. But employee satisfaction and also making sure that your employees are working to the level that's engaging – you know, we constantly strive to make sure that they have the opportunity to move up the corporate ladder, if I can say so. If you're not challenged, I don't believe you're a happy employee. I think we all need that, and I think we recognize that. So you have to constantly not only push but provide the opportunity for people to be able to show the abilities they've got to demonstrate, what they can bring to the table in different venues and different opportunities.

Anybody in private business will tell you that that kind of opportunity in a big corporation or a big company is easier than a small business. Nevertheless, it's the same. You need to make sure that employees are not only working to the taxpayers' satisfaction but to theirs too. We're probably harder on ourselves than other people would be. I can just about tell you that if you wanted to come in and say, "Let's go do a satisfaction thing with all of our employees," I could come back with 95 per cent numbers that wouldn't accurately reflect the challenge we think is there to make sure they really are satisfied. So I'm comfortable with this, our very real, not trumped-up numbers.

What are we doing currently to make sure that this is happening and to attract more? Well, obviously, pay. We're reviewing the pay and benefits right now. We're in negotiations. We are working to be able to provide retention and attract employees to the northern areas. We've dealt with the issue in Fort McMurray with regard to some nurses and some others, but we have to work on a broader scale with them and make sure that all of the government employees up there are treated fairly, although that also needs to be done. It was done based on a formula of rental costs with other communities so that there's a real number so that you could say how much more it costs for you live in Fort McMurray and here's that number.

Now, matter of factly, the rest of Alberta is catching up to Fort McMurray in costs. A single house in Canmore is now selling for an average of $714,000. So there are going to be numbers that bring the average up and allow us to reduce the support numbers for Fort McMurray. When Fort McMurray and the rest of Alberta kind of get a balance, then that northern support, if it's unnecessary to attract and retain, needs to go away but based on a formula that's transparent and that all employees can see as they head in there.

Some of the most dynamic people we meet as we go through the government offices are the people that are working on the co-op programs with the educational institutions. I think you can ask the managers, who will tell you that in many ways these new young people bring a whole new life into a department. They're there with all of the laudable goals we had, well, many, many years ago. The co-op program I think is a hidden jewel that the government really needs to set targets extremely high on and to develop kind of a seamless interaction with these institutions.

If you talk to the president of the university, she will tell you that too many students come in already knowing what they're going to do. They spend a couple or three years, and then go: oh, geez, that's not what I wanted. She's talked about how we need to look at that education system, get kids in, expand their education, get them into some of these co-op programs where they can get out and get some experience in the workforce.

Obviously, government has got some pretty exciting things to do too. I certainly don't think the bill of the old sit behind the desk is there. These kids can learn: "God, I really fell in love with that document ID stuff we were doing," or "That work in land titles I found to be, phew, exciting, and I want to redirect into that," or work in our legal departments or transportation and see the engineers. There are so many things that we can help our young people out with by giving them that opportunity to come and learn with us.

The other thing that we need to work on is to be able to move people, and it's to come with a challenge. As governments change and population changes, their demands on people change. You know, to be portable with our workforce and with our experience. I mean, I would love to see a department that said: guess what?

The Chair: Guess what?

Mr. Snelgrove: My time is up.

Mr. R. Miller: That couldn't have been better in terms of timing, Mr. Chairman.

A couple of quick questions since we have the appropriate staff here. I'm curious if you would know or if you could find out for us, Mr. Minister, the ratio of females to males in senior management positions within the public service.

Another question that I have I raised with the former Finance minister. There was a commitment made to move away from verbal contracts, where there was no reporting required and no accountability for taxpayers to look at. I'm curious where that initiative has gone, if, in fact, all departments have now moved away from it. I'm not sure that you're necessarily the minister I have to ask for that, but since you're the President of the Treasury Board and controller of all things financial, I'm guessing you might be.

The last couple of questions I have really relate to responses that you gave to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and the Member for Battle River-Wainwright when the government members had their opportunity to question you on – I think this was Treasury Board. Yes, it was. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere asked about whether or not the manner in which supply support to vulnerable people is, in fact, the best way to support them. We all know that there are always issues around cross-ministry jurisdictional concerns, most recently with the affordable housing situation and the two new help centres that have been established in Edmonton and Calgary to try to sort of fast-track people through the bureaucracy so that we can get them the help that they need when they need it and move away from this sort of traditional model where you're being shunted from one department to another trying to find out where the appropriate programming is.

She was asking you questions about that, and she sort of talked about maybe it would be better if we just had a single method of supporting these people, which sounds an awful lot like a guaranteed income program. The written response that came was that "the proposal to create a single income support program merits further consideration," and then you went on in your written response to outline a number of reasons why it may not work. But just the fact that you did indicate in the written response that it merits further consideration has me intrigued, quite frankly. So I'm curious to know if, in fact, your department is looking at this or what initiatives you might be undertaking to study some sort of a guaranteed income program as opposed to the myriad of programs that we have right now.

Then the Member for Battle River-Wainwright was asking about the business plan that deals with managing expectations. The written response that came back from the ministry was that the portion entitled Significant Opportunities and Challenges within the Treasury Board's business plan refers to managing expectations. It says, "Public values and stewardship, implications of prosperity and population growth, sustainable program spending and infrastructure demands all have managing expectations as a consideration." I'm not one who believes in social engineering, and I'm sure you don't either. I must admit I didn't have time to go check Hansard, but I thought it was sort of interesting that we're talking about managing people's expectations and particularly public values and stewardship. I'm curious whether or not that means that there may be advertising campaigns or public relations campaigns that are being used to influence people's expectations of what they should be getting from government. It just kind of twiggged a little red flag for me. So I'm curious, if you have the time, if you could comment a little further on that.

Before I sit down, I would just like to thank the minister for his co-operation tonight and all of the staff because they did a great job providing really timely answers. I'm going to guess that there won't be a lot that you haven't been able to answer for me already tonight, and I appreciate that.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: I don't know for sure what the other departments are, female to male, but I think we show pretty good in our senior management team here tonight. I can tell you: don't mess with any of them. I don't know. We'll get back to you.

I'm curious. The other thing that I wouldn't even mind if it was part of your question, because I think it's critically important too, is what about the disabled and other opportunities. It's absolutely essential that we show leadership. It's not just good enough that we make legislation around doing this stuff or that we talk the talk. We need to support it. So when we find out the ratio of females and that, we'll also get back to you with anything on the affirmative action, if you want to call it that, which isn't the right term.

The question around the contracts. I've asked the department to look at another way of even buying goods less than $10,000 to try and save us some money. But, certainly, from a control point of view all contracts, all reporting – I think that's why there is a separation of Treasury Board and Finance, to make sure that we can solely focus on accountability.

The support to people and one-stop shopping. I would love to have the discussion with our caucus and with the general public about whether it's practical to have so many different names and different support titles and whether really in this day and age, where things happen so quickly and people need support, you would need to have six or seven or eight different ministers providing different supports to the same person or to things.

I used to say that the guaranteed annual income was completely socialist, and now I realize that it might be more organized than we really are. There needs to be a way to address the working poor and the help we give them. It's really problematic to me that people are qualifying. You can seem to take them along, yet lots out there working every day with whatever circumstance they might be in haven't fallen off the table, so we won't be able to pick them up. What I would like to see is a system that encourages people to better themselves and work where they can and do what they can do and support that without barriers in the way that say: well, you know, once we let you wipe right out, then we'll help you up, and then we'll throw you out again. So I'd love to have a discussion about the opportunity to support people as they get along.

Secondly, the expectations. You know, in many ways we create the expectation of Alberta just simply by what has gone on, what we're doing. I mean, I'm obviously very proud to be in Alberta. I live very close, as you know, to Saskatchewan. The expectations that I think the rest of the world has – and I say this to many people: if you stand too close to a magnificent portrait, it just looks like a blob or a smear; if you stand back 20 feet, it's gorgeous. The rest of the world is standing back 20 feet from Alberta and looking at a gorgeous province, and they want a part of it. Sometime we're too close to see how really pretty it is.

I'm getting the nod from the chair that this exciting and stimulating conversation around Service Alberta has come to an end.

With that, we would thank the hon. member for, I would suggest, his thoughtful questions.

8:00

The Chair: You would be correct, hon. minister. If I could invite your staff to retire from the Assembly so that the next group can come in. We'll allow a moment for that to take place if that's agreeable.

The next item the committee has for consideration is the budget estimates of the Department of Finance. With that, I will ask the hon. Minister of Finance for his opening comments.

Finance

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It certainly is an honour to be here tonight and present the estimates for Ministry of Finance for 2007-2008. With me is Robert Bhatia, my deputy minister; as well as Grant Robertson, the ADM for budget and fiscal planning; and Bonnie Lovelace, the executive director of strategic and business services.

Mr. Chairman, considering that I gave the budget speech and that there was a lot of information in this budget speech, I won't go on at very much length. I would much prefer to take the questions that are going to be very thoughtfully put.

One point that I would like to stress, though, and would like to emphasize in this discussion tonight is that I would like to get into a discussion on the surplus allocation formula. As you know, in this budget we brought forward an allocation formula that put one-third into savings, that put two-thirds into capital, of which at least 50 per cent must be into capital maintenance. I would be more than happy to entertain any thoughts that the hon. members opposite have when it comes to that particular formula. The only thing that I would ask is that if any questions pertain directly to the estimates, you simply provide me with the page number so that I can access those for the numbers.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'd be more than happy to sit down and take any questions at all.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I'd like to thank the minister for his opening comments and welcome the staff aboard. I didn't have the luxury of trading my staff in for new staff as we went from one department to the other, but I am pleased to have David Kincade with me this evening, who, I mentioned earlier, has been my researcher since my first being elected and coming down here, so I'm one of the fortunate members of the Official Opposition to have had the same researcher over that period of time. If I have kept some of your staff awake at night over the last two and a half years, blame David.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister. I'm pleased to participate in the supply estimates for the Department of Finance this evening. We're going to start with a couple of generic questions. I didn't have a chance to ask the minister beforehand if he wanted to do 10 minutes and 10 minutes, more or less, or if you want me to just ask a few and you can come back.

Dr. Oberg: Whenever you sit down, I'll take over.

Mr. R. Miller: Very good. I'll maybe try to pick spots where I think it's relevant to give you a chance, and if I happen to hit the magic 10 minutes, then, obviously, the chairman will ask me to sit down.

Page 161 of the government estimates talks about expense and equipment/inventory purchases. I'm curious at what appears to be a dramatic drop in the overall figure there. We go from a forecast last year of $1.168 billion to this year of $124 million. That seems like a dramatic drop. Not that I would necessarily complain that we would be spending less money, but I'm curious whether or not that is, in fact, the case, and if so, why that would be happening.

Another point that I wasn't actually even going to mention as I first started preparing for debate becomes more and more relevant every day. If we could just direct your attention to page 2 of the fiscal plan. There we're looking at the major fiscal assumptions. Now, I find myself in the unusual situation of not talking about oil prices or gas prices this year but, rather, the exchange rate on the Canada/U.S. dollar. It's shown there that the assumption for this budget year is 86 cents. I believe I heard on the radio this morning that we hit 93 cents. I'm going to guess that this may have some dramatic impact on the fiscal year assumptions. I'm curious whether or not the minister would like to comment on that and whether or not he has any major concerns as to how that might affect the overall fiscal situation of the province.

Specific to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and the government estimates, page 162. Last year we put a billion dollars into the heritage savings trust fund. That's not in this year's budget, of course, and it does cause me concern. The minister knows very well, I'm sure, by now the position of the Official Opposition and the need to build that fund. I know that there is some move towards that based on surplus dollars – of course, we'll probably have the opportunity later to talk about a resource revenue savings plan – but I'm disappointed to see that that's not there this year. In fact, I've raised concern in the past about the fact that current legislation requires that the net profit generated by that fund actually is moved into general revenue and why we still do that in a time and an economic atmosphere when surpluses in the order of billions of dollars are routine and still forecast over the next period of years. That we're actually taking money out of the heritage savings trust fund causes me a great deal of concern.

If I could flip back to the fiscal plan, page 16, and the issue of cost escalation. I know that the minister has discussed this already with government members, when they did their budget estimates on the Department of Finance, but I think it's worthy of being mentioned on behalf of the Official Opposition as well. Out of the $4.9 billion increase that's in there over the next three years for capital projects, $1.3 billion is for cost escalation. I understand as well as every member of this Assembly what's happening in the construction industry right now. I hear numbers quoted of 2 per cent per month inflation. Whether or not that's exactly accurate, I have to admit that I don't know, but certainly there's no question that it is a concern, and that's why it's here in the budget. I'm wondering what steps we're taking to try to mitigate that so that we don't find ourselves, you know, with projects that suddenly cost 50 per cent more than what was originally planned.

I don't have to tell the minister that this has been a long-standing problem for governments throughout history, probably, certainly throughout my lifetime. I can think of several examples. Obviously, it's exacerbated in these circumstances. Some comment on that would be relevant, I'm sure. Whether or not the minister might wish to comment on the application of the P3 model and if, in fact, that is going to address this: I know that in theory it's supposed to, but I think it's a little early in the game still to have determined just how effective that's going to be.

I do have a couple of questions about the Alberta Securities Commission. The Auditor General, after his investigation, you know, made a number of recommendations. To this point there are still a few of those that haven't been fully followed up on. I'm wondering if the minister might like to bring us up to date as to exactly where we're at with the recommendations from the Auditor General regarding the Securities Commission. I know that I could probably ask those questions tomorrow morning in Public Accounts, but I have another plan for tomorrow, so we'll ask those here tonight.

Also, I have concern, and I have constituents and stakeholders expressing concern to me, about what are perceived to be mixed messages coming from this government as to a single national regulator as opposed to the passport system. I'm going to try not to be too partisan tonight. I don't want to play politics in terms of, you know, the minister's message versus the Premier's message. But there are people out there that have expressed some concern that they're not exactly sure which way the province is moving. I think it's a relevant question. I have expressed concern, Mr. Minister, in the past. With all of the time and resources that have gone into developing the passport system, I would hate to see that lost if, in fact, at some point we do move to a single national regulator. I'm wondering if you could comment on that. Are we, you know, spending an awful lot of time and energy on something that is going to be irrelevant if we do move to a single national regulator, or is this something that we'd be able to transfer over and isn't a complete waste of time and resources? If you could comment on that, I would be appreciative.

Just a little bit of an editorial comment, I suppose, about automobile insurance and the fact that the Automobile Insurance Rate Board, I believe, is once again about to hold hearings into the cost of premiums for basic coverage. I'd like to ask why we don't offer the same protection to renters. I'm not sure that you can necessarily answer that, but I think it's important to get it on the record.

There was discussion, when the changes to auto insurance first came in in 2004, about monitoring the optional insurance coverages, the comprehensive insurance, and sort of watching the industry to make sure that they weren't making up for the rollbacks on the mandatory part of the insurance by making up the difference on the optional coverages. I'm wondering if you could update us on where we're at with that.

A couple of related questions which may have been more appropriate for the previous minister – and I'll just read them into the record quickly – and that is whether or not there are plans to expand photoradar in the province and whether or not we're considering attaching demerit points to photoradar. I'm going to guess that those might actually be more relevant to Service Alberta. I will give you a chance to respond.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll address those questions in the 10 minutes that I have. The first question had to do with page 161 and the difference of a billion dollars between the $1,168,057,000 to $124,346,000. The answer, quite simply, is: the billion dollars goes into the heritage savings trust fund. It is not budgeted in this upcoming year.

The second question had to do with the dollar amount. As a rule of thumb a 1 cent increase in the Canadian dollar accounts for a decrease in revenue of $123 million, so if that was annualized over the whole year, it's $123 million per 1 cent. Obviously, the Canadian dollar today is much higher than our budgeted estimate. We will wait and see. It depends what happens with the Canadian dollar. It is fluctuant, but we will address that in each quarterly report. Each quarterly report will address the difference in the Canadian dollar at that particular point in time.

It's unknown, in reality, what exactly the Canadian dollar is going to do. When you take a look at a lot of people, if they're predicting an increase in interest rates, which David Dodge did not do yesterday, what may well happen is that we may see an increase in the Canadian dollar even further than what we are. You've got decreased housing starts in the U.S., which certainly can be kind of a bellwether for what is happening down there.

The third question was about the heritage savings trust plan, and the question was: why don't we keep all the money in there? We have inflation-proofed the fund this year, so revenue from the fund will go back into it. I believe it's around $300 million, roughly, this year that will go back into the fund to inflation-proof it. We are going to be addressing these questions. In reality, we do have a much larger issue and a much larger question to address. We have a lot of endowment funds. We have the heritage savings trust fund. We have numerous other funds out there to the tune of around $40 billion that we have cash in at any one moment. These are dollars that I'm sure we'll be asked about in a little bit but will be moved over to AIMCO for investment.

The question that we're going to be putting to the financial management commission that is going to be coming out in a couple of weeks, is: exactly what is the best way to invest these funds? What is the best way to deal with the endowments? What is the best way to deal with the heritage savings trust fund? I fully expect that part of the recommendations that come back from this commission will actually be the answer to the question that the hon. member just asked.

The fourth point was on cost escalation. Yes, included in this budget is $1.3 billion on announced projects that have seen an increase in cost. This is something that we have to get a handle on. This is also something that, in reality, it is going to be extremely difficult to get a handle on. What we have to remember when it comes to our capital expenditures is that we typically run about 8 to 9 per cent per year of the expenditures in Alberta. Currently today there's $107 billion worth of capital expenditures under way in the province of Alberta. Our typical funding is around $6 billion or $7 billion. That's the range. In reality, it is very hard for us to determine the market.

Moving into the fifth part of the question, which is the P3s, unfortunately, in the media in Alberta there was very little made about the northeast ring road in Calgary. That – and I commend the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation – was actually a stroke of brilliance how they did that. Not very many people understand how they actually did it. What occurred in the past is that for every project that we put out, we actually put out our estimated cost of what it would be to build. On that particular project no one – no one – knew what it would cost us. What we did is: we put our bid into an envelope, and we opened up the bid of the envelope at the same time as the other bids for that tender. What we found is that we actually saved $350 million less than our bid. We could have built that for $350 million more. So on the cost mitigation side of it I do think we have to stop telegraphing how much we think things are going to cost. We do that for budgetary reasons and albeit most of this is in the Treasury Board portfolio, but I do believe that we need to look at a different way of doing that because what we always get is a cost plus as opposed to the actual cost.

The sixth one was about the Alberta Securities Commission, and the Auditor General has noted that we are well on our way to all of the recommendations that the Auditor General put forward. The Alberta Securities Commission has cleaned itself up very nicely and, indeed, is running very well.

The single national regulator: in reality, both the Premier and I have been saying the same thing. What we want is something that is easy for investors, that is easy for capital markets to be brought into, that is easy for companies who go onto the exchange, go onto the public markets, and that is safe, quite simply, that is safe.

There are some stories across Canada that would absolutely curl your socks. One of them, for example, is that just recently there was a gentleman in Vancouver that was convicted of fraud when it came to trading securities. The ironic part about this is that the same gentleman was kicked out of Ontario in the year 2002 for doing the same thing. He simply uprooted, moved to Vancouver, did the same thing, and defrauded people of $15 million. In a country of 33 million people that is just simply not satisfactory.

So the question was on the passport system: have we wasted our time? The answer is no. We absolutely have not wasted our time. Indeed, in the passport system it is intended to go down the road towards a single regulator at some point in time. When that point in time will be I don't know, but the passport system and everything that has been done to date, legislative and dealing with the passport system, is completely consistent with moving towards a single regulator, a common regulator, a common enforcement agency. This is something that we have to look at very closely because of what is occurring now in the capital markets. When you take a look at Sarbanes-Oxley in the U.S., when you take a look at what is happening in London, we have a huge opportunity to capture more than our share of the capital markets and bring the dollars into Canada.

When I was down in New York and Toronto a couple of weeks ago, the common theme was simply: "Well, we're scared off because you have 13 securities regulators. We don't want to go there because you have to do it 13 times. We have to pay 13 fees." This is very much of a concern, and again it is very much in keeping with what my earlier comments were, that we want something easy and we want something safe. So that is going to be my directive, and certainly that's the Premier's directive: to get securities regulators that are easy and safe to bring capital dollars into our market.

The other question: I must say, hon. member, that that's the first time I've ever had auto insurance compared to renters. I will say that that's the first time that has ever happened. Quite simply, you have to have auto insurance if you drive a car. You don't have to rent in a house. It's your choice to rent in a house. The optional insurance coverage is about the same thing.

Photoradar we can certainly deal with in a different department. I must say that I know very little about photoradar, so I'd be more than happy to pass that point on to whichever department – I believe it would actually be Infrastructure and Transportation where the issue on photoradar would come in, with a possible for the Sol Gen as well.

I believe I've answered all your questions.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to go back to the heritage savings trust fund and the inflation-proofing for a minute, if I can. I'm certainly aware of the fact that legislation calls for it to be inflation-proofed, and in fact that's something that the Official Opposition had been calling for for years. I'm glad that that's being done finally. We're probably about $7 billion or $8 billion behind where we would be had we inflation-proofed it since 1987, so obviously that's a step in the right direction.

The minister will know that I was confused by the budget documents and traded some information back and forth with the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and yourself regarding the way that this was communicated in the budget documents. I'll just point to page 10 of the fiscal plan under the title Surpluses, where it says in the second paragraph, "Surpluses are forecast to be significantly smaller, totalling $4.5 billion, over the next three years. These surpluses will be used primarily for inflation-proofing the Heritage Fund and addressing capital cash requirements."

I had raised some concern that perhaps there was a change in direction on behalf of the government. This would lead Albertans to believe that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund would only be inflation-proofed if, in fact, there's a surplus. I know you've told me that that's not the case, and you've pointed to the correct piece of legislation, but I'm wondering if you could clarify for me the budget documents that seem to indicate that the heritage savings trust fund would only be inflation-proofed if, in fact, there's a surplus.

Further down in that same column under the heading Savings it says, "In 2007-08, it is estimated that $284 million will be added to the Heritage Fund for inflation-proofing," and I think you mentioned that figure yourself. But, again, my concern was that the average Albertan reading this document would draw the same conclusion that I did, and that is that somehow if there's no surplus, there's no inflation-proofing. I'm not sure what happened there, but despite the fact that we traded paper back and forth, I never was completely comfortable with the answer that I was given on that, so if you wouldn't mind commenting on that, that would be great.

I asked the President of the Treasury Board, and I'll ask you too because specifically last year it had to do with the Department of Finance, and it may or may not still to some extent. I'm going to guess that it's probably more on the Treasury Board side now. I had raised concerns over the last couple of years about verbal contracts and the number of contracts that had been let where there was no paper reporting required and no performance evaluations and that sort of thing. I know specifically that the Department of Finance, the previous minister had made a commitment that those practices would end, and I'm wondering if you can just verify for me that that has in fact happened in your department at least, if not across the board with all other departments. As I say, that may be a Treasury Board thing, but certainly I'm sure that you could speak for your department.

I'm wondering: on page 61 of the fiscal plan – and this gets back to the P3 question a little bit, Mr. Minister – it talks about the financing costs for government-owned capital, and then in brackets it says "P3s." That number is forecast to be $8 million this year. It jumps to $18 million the next year, and $22 million is the target for the year 2009-2010. So I'm just wondering: are those P3 contracts that we've committed to, and why are we expecting that number to almost triple?

Dr. Oberg: Which page are you on?

Mr. R. Miller: I'm sorry. Page 61 of the fiscal plan. Debt Servicing Costs is what it says at the top of the page, and then under infrastructure and transportation it shows financing costs for government-owned capital (P3s): $8 million this year, $18 million the following year, and up to $22 million in the third year out.

I would like to sort of go back to that heritage fund, I guess, but more generally to AIMCO and investment strategies. I had asked earlier this year, and the department was kind enough to respond with an indication as to how much money the government has invested either directly or indirectly in tobacco companies. This is particularly timely today since I've heard on the news this evening that the government caucus will be reviewing its tobacco strategy this Thursday, I believe is what I heard. The minister will recall that I had introduced an amendment to Bill 22, the AIMCO bill, asking that we divest ourselves of all tobacco investments. Unfortunately, that amendment was turned down, but I notice in the written response that we received that as of March 15 of this year we had directly invested $18.1 million in tobacco companies and a further $39.9 million in indirect investments, for a total exposure of $58 million.

I'm not so sure that I like the word exposure because I'm not so concerned about risk, but I am concerned about the ethics of being invested to the tune of $58 million in a climate where I think we all understand the risks of smoking and the costs that are borne by the government as a result of smoking. I would certainly strongly encourage the government to proceed as soon as possible in divesting itself of those investments, and even more particularly I would like to see an ethical investing policy that would mandate that we just simply stay away from investing in tobacco altogether.

I'd like to ask about the income trust situation. In last year's budget when we had this discussion, I think the answer I received was that Alberta was exposed – and in this case I'll use the word "exposed" – to a potential loss of $400 million per year if the federal government did not make legislative changes to income trusts. That was last year, and I'm wondering: now that those changes have been made, are we expecting $400 million in additional revenues as a result of the changes that the federal government made? Will this be offset by other factors? I'm wondering if the minister can just sort of bring us up to date as to what effect the changes that the federal minister has made will have on Alberta's Finance department.

Inflation-proofing the heritage trust fund we already talked about earlier. I'm going to jump back to insurance, and I'll apologize to the staff and the minister if I'm jumping around a bit. Unfortunately, this is sort of the way I've got it laid out. I hope you can keep up, and if not I'm hoping I'll get written answers later.

An issue that's been in the news a little bit recently – and I recall that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs asked a question of the minister about this recently – is the situation of fire departments across the province facing liability lawsuits when it's perceived by the party that's suffered a loss or the insurance company that the department didn't do a sufficient job in terms of controlling the fire and the damages. It's widely been reported that fire chiefs, I know, in Edmonton and elsewhere across the province are asking for the government to pass some sort of legislation that would protect them from those lawsuits. I'm wondering if we've made any movement in that regard, if we can expect to see something coming down the pipe fairly soon or not. So if you could bring us up to date on that.

I also note that the Independent Insurance Brokers of Alberta have indicated that they're working hard to hammer out a policy that would accommodate regulators' recommendations on disclosure of financial links between brokers and insurers. This is certainly a conversation that I've had in the past with Jim Rivait and the IBC in terms of protecting Alberta's consumers and full disclosure, something that, you know, we've been hoping would happen for a long time.

It looks like the industry's ready to move on that and indicate that they're hoping that their policy has something that will accommodate what the government is looking for. Again, I'm just wondering if you could bring us up to speed on where that is and if Alberta's consumers can look forward to some movement on that fairly soon.

Another one that I found particularly interesting was reported in Thompson's, an insurance industry magazine, recently. That was a situation where the Alberta government was found to be liable for a rental fraud loss, where a rental car company had rented a vehicle to someone who was using stolen identity, and that was unbeknownst to the renter. Subsequently, that renter using the stolen identity was involved in an accident, and it was determined that the province was on the hook and that the money would have to come out of the motor vehicle accident claims fund. With the propensity more and more, it seems, to have stolen identity, I'm wondering what we're doing to address that situation.

8:30

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, on the inflation-proofing of the heritage trust fund, unfortunately, the language was not 100 per cent clear in this document. Which page was that on again?

Mr. R. Miller: Page 10, I think.

Dr. Oberg: What it stated was: "Surpluses or forecast to be significantly smaller, totalling $4.5 billion, over the next three years. These surpluses will be used primarily for inflation-proofing the Heritage Fund and addressing capital cash requirements." The reason we said it that way is because we expect around $700 million in investment income from the heritage savings trust fund as part of that surplus. Certainly, this year $284 million went to inflation-proofing it, and next year a similar type of amount for inflation-proofing it will come out of the surplus, out of the money from the heritage savings trust fund. Could the language have been a little different? Yeah. I certainly accept that from the hon. member, and we'll look at changing the language next year, but the intent is that it will guarantee that it'll be inflation-proofed.

The second one was on verbal contracts. As a matter of record, Mr. Chairman, the previous Finance minister actually tabled in the House a document about all contracts. So there has been a standardization of the contracts. Verbal contracts are not in. They're not a thing that we like to do for obvious reasons, and they are reviewed by senior members of the bureaucracy as well.

The P3 and the debt-servicing side of it and the contracts. Quite simply, the P3s are being built now. Why you're seeing an increase, for example, the east corner of the Anthony Henday: as the dollars get in, we start making the payments. So why it goes 8, 18, and so on is because the payments are actually accumulating while those roads are being built.

The AIMCO one is an interesting point. We have to decide from a policy point of view when it comes to investing these dollars, and these are very important and very difficult questions: do we want to simply make as much money as possible for the citizens of Alberta, or do we want to put caveats on how we invest? Should we only invest in green energy projects versus other projects? Should we only invest in non tobacco-related industries versus tobacco-related industries? I think those are all very valid questions. My personal belief – and this is nothing new to any hon. member here – I am definitely against tobacco; I'm definitely against smoking. But as Minister of Finance it's also my duty, it is my job to ensure that Albertans realize the most profit possible from the heritage savings trust fund and the numerous investments that we have. That is why this is going to be one of the issues that the financial management commission is going to be dealing with. I think it is a very tough question. It's a very apropos question, and the answer is something that we're going to have to deal with.

If, for example, we say that we don't want to invest in tobacco companies, we don't want to invest here, and we don't want to invest there, then I absolutely will not accept any questions in this House about why our returns were not as high as other funds, because that would be the reason. On the other hand, if we choose to invest in everything, then we can morally be saying that we are being complicit in the funding of tobacco, as one example. So it's a very tough question, something that we're going to be looking at with our financial management commission, and we'll await what they have to say.

The income trust. Our estimates were anywhere between $400 million and $450 million. The last estimate was roughly $450 million that it would save us. We have to remember several things. First of all, income trusts have not been banned yet. Income trusts are there for another four years and then will gradually start fading out. Second of all, and this is where I believe that the federal government has gone a little bit astray. I'll use, if I can, BCE. BCE is looking to be bought out by a pension fund, which in effect is going to work exactly the same as an income trust in that they will not be paying the income tax. There will be a lot of accumulated debt, which will allow them to not pay the income tax.

It's very difficult for me at this time to speak to the Assembly about what the actual amount of increased revenue will be from the lack of income trusts. We don't know what vehicle these income trusts are going to morph into. We have no idea what is going to happen to them over the next four years. We don't know if another government will come in and change the rules. So all we can simply quite literally say is: wait and see. We've had 11 foreign takeovers of income trusts so far. We don't know how many others are going to be taken over by foreign companies. Regardless of what happens, we recognize that this is a very large issue in Alberta, and it's something that, quite literally, we don't know what the end point is going to be.

When you add on the whole income trust issue, we also have to remember that at one point in time there was $35 billion worth of capital that evaporated from Alberta, and we have to take that into consideration. So what started off as a very simple question and potentially a very simple answer has turned into something very, very, very complicated. I think the federal government is realizing that as well, that it is becoming a very complicated question and a complicated issue.

The insurance liability for fire chiefs and for the fire departments I believe at the moment is encompassed by the municipal liabilities. It is included in the municipalities' liability protection. It is something we can look at. I must say that I have not been approached since I've been Minister of Finance by the fire departments about this particular issue, but we certainly will take a look at it.

The insurance brokers versus the insurance dealers. Your point that you made is absolutely where we are. We're waiting for the insurance brokers to bring their paper forward. We'll take a look at it and then respond according to what they're saying.

The last point. If I understand your question about the stolen identity and the government being on the hook, there are a couple of issues here. For example, if it was on the hook on the motor vehicle accident claim fund, I don't know the reason for that. But it actually begs the question, if I may – it is something that we're going to be responding to, and this may be a little bit different than what you had actually asked, but it's the whole idea of vicarious liability. As you know – and this is very, very serious when it comes to much of what is being done on vehicle leasing in the province of Alberta – there have been some huge lawsuits in the U.S. and recently some huge lawsuits in Ontario where the actual vehicle lessor has been included in a lawsuit and indeed has been found liable because their name is actually on the ownership of the car. So despite the fact that someone drove the car into a fence post or into a post or into another vehicle, the companies – GMC, Ford Canada, many of the vehicle lessors – have also been implicated in this particular issue.

We are looking at the issue of vicarious liability. We're going to be moving on that, hopefully, in the fall. We're looking at legislation now. Whether it will be introduced this spring is probably very doubtful, but the issue of vicarious liability will be dealt with in the fall. In reality it just is not fair. It's not fair to the people who are the lessors to have them implicated when they had absolutely nothing to do with it.

So I believe those are the questions to date.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Let's go back to ethical investing for just a second, if I could. The minister has expressed, first of all, his support for antismoking initiatives, and I appreciate that. I'd just like to point to Yale University, which has a large endowment fund which includes an ethical investment policy, and that fund traditionally vastly outperforms the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. So I would recommend that the folks at AIMCO have a look at that. Clearly, just because you're involved in ethical investing doesn't mean that your investments have to be less than they would be otherwise.

I'll repeat a concern that I had expressed to the previous Finance minister when it comes to the objective of the managers of the heritage savings trust fund. I can't quote it verbatim, but it pretty much says what you said; that is, to maximize the return to Albertans. My concern with that is: where do you draw the line, then? There are a number of porn sites, for instance, that are legitimate businesses. If they were to be publicly traded, would the Alberta government consider investing in those because they could, you know, generate a tremendous return? There are legalized brothels in the States and overseas that are publicly traded. So there are examples of things that I'm sure the minister and the folks at AIMCO would not invest in. We probably don't need a policy to say that. As you said, it's a difficult issue. At some point I would like to know what is acceptable and what isn't. Where do we draw that line? When do we say that it doesn't matter how good the return is; we're not going to go there? So I hope that, you know, we can continue to raise awareness on that issue and maybe at some point move towards the idea of an ethical investment policy.

I'm going to send over a copy of that particular item regarding the stolen identities so that the minister can read it. As an Albertan who pays taxes here and knowing that these sorts of things do happen and that now we have a ruling from a Court of Queen's Bench justice saying that we're responsible – I don't know how often it happens, but it does cause me some concern.

I'd like to ask about the special broker tax. The minister's office will know that we've asked questions about this before. If I could turn your attention to page 176 of the estimates. Now, in a written response that I had from the minister, he outlined that a special broker is a licensed insurance agent who on application receives a licence authorizing the placement of unlicensed insurance for the agent's clients.

I'm just looking at the revenue to the Department of Finance over the past couple of years. In 2005-06 the actual revenue from the special broker tax was $6.016 million. Then for some reason we budgeted only $1.75 million last year, in '06-07, yet the actual forecast now sits at $5.012 million. I've never been completely clear why we went from an actual revenue of $6 million down to a forecast of $1.75 for the last business year. It turned out to actually be $5 million, which is good but, obviously, a lot more than what was forecast. Then the estimate for this year is $4 million. Again, it seems that we're expecting to bring in less revenue from this special broker tax than we did last year, yet last year we far outperformed the expectation. I'm still not completely clear on how this works and why we seem to have difficulty forecasting the amount of revenue that's going to be realized from it. So any enlightenment that you might be able to provide on the special broker tax would be appreciated.

I'd also like to ask, then, about page 95 of the Alberta Finance annual report. You may not have this in front of you, so if it's necessary to have a written response later, that's okay. On page 95 of the annual report it talks about dedicated revenue initiatives.

There's a line item there that says "Investment, treasury, and risk management," and it shows a shortfall of $1.486 million. To my untrained eye that would indicate that we brought in nearly $1.5 million less in revenue than we were expecting. I may be reading that wrong, but I'm curious. If you could provide an explanation on that.

Here's a question that I've asked previously. Page 45 of the fiscal plan talks about the total liabilities of the Alberta government. I've noted in the past that this number seems to go up from year to year. This year it shows a total of $20.1 billion in total liabilities held by the government of Alberta. Last year in the same budget document it was listed at $18.4 billion, and the year before that it was listed at $15.1 billion. So it does seem that it goes up fairly substantially year after year. I do appreciate that the net financial assets and the net assets of the province go up as well. I mean, we're a booming economy, so I understand that our assets are going up, but it does cause me some concern that our liabilities seem to go up in a fairly dramatic fashion as well. I'm wondering if you could enlighten us as to why these liabilities would be increasing and whether or not you have any concern that they seem to be going up rather dramatically, a 33 per cent increase since 2005-2006.

I'm going to go to page 62 of the fiscal plan, which talks about loans and advances. There's a line item there that shows – well, we talk about Ridley Grain, and we talk about the student loan relief completion payments. But then there's a line that says Other, and it shows $71 million in allowance for other doubtful loans, advances, implemented guarantees, and indemnities. I'm wondering if you might be able to tell us or give us some sort of a breakdown as to what the Other category would include and perhaps also tell us what the total amount of defaulted loans were in 2005-2006, with a breakdown of that. That's information that I wouldn't expect you to be able to provide tonight, but you might be able to gather that for us, or at least point us in the right direction.

I have questions for the minister on the Alberta Society for Pension Reform. I understand that there is an action before the courts, so I know that you can't say an awful lot about that, but I am particularly concerned. I've heard figures upwards of $3 billion if, in fact, the courts were to find in their favour. I'm concerned about the risk that that puts Alberta's treasury at.

I'm wondering whether or not the Alberta risk management fund would . . . [interjection] Oh, the Alberta Society for Pension Reform. This is a group of retirees representing employees from a number of different jurisdictions. I know the local authorities is included in there, management employees are in there, the Alberta teachers are in there. There are a number of different funds in there. They have an action against the government. They feel that they've been wronged by the government in terms of their pensions. I've been told that that could conceivably amount to a total of some $3 billion if, in fact, the courts were to find in their favour.

I'm concerned about what steps the Alberta government might be taking to address that if, in fact, the courts were to find in their favour. I'm sure that this is something that will wind its way through the courts over a period of years. It's not likely to happen tomorrow or next week; nevertheless, I am concerned about the liability that the government might face in that situation. As I said, I'm wondering if the Alberta risk management fund would cover that or if there are other thoughts in mind as to how we would address that situation if it were to happen.

I'd like to point out regarding the Fiscal Responsibility Act the fact that we use $5.3 billion of resource revenue, that we allow ourselves to use that much every year. I'll congratulate the minister because this year for the first time since I've been in this House we didn't go up, and that's a good thing. Some have suggested to me that we should actually roll it back a little bit. Well, I have a different plan, as you know, which would mandate that we save a certain amount of that money as opposed to mandating that we spend a certain amount of that money. Nevertheless, on top of the fact that the budget documents refer to the $5.3 billion, there is also a notation in there that on average $2 billion above the $5.3 billion is spent on capital projects. So that would indicate to me that it's more like $7.3 billion in resource revenue that we're spending. I'd ask you if you could clarify a little bit on that. It does cause me some concern if it's actually $7.3 billion as opposed to $5.3 billion.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. I'll start off with the whole ethical investing question. Again, I commend the member because it is an excellent question, and it is something that in the year 2007 we do have to grapple with. But the downside is potentially being in a situation where we're not bringing as many dollars in, albeit that's a very small situation when you're looking at only a $57 million exposure to tobacco companies both direct and indirect.

However, it potentially could be a larger question. For example, the downside of ethical investing is that ethics are different to whoever is out there, whoever happens to be in the government of the day, whoever happens to be talking about it. Is nuclear power ethical or unethical? Is coal mining ethical or unethical? These are all the various questions. In order to remain philosophically pure, I believe that one of the points we have made and what we've chosen to do is try to maximize the amount of dollars for Alberta taxpayers.

Again, though, I will reiterate that this is one of the questions that we're going to be asking the financial management commission albeit I believe that, ultimately, if it does come down to ethical investing. If they do put forward an opinion on ethical investing, that is something that should be debated in this House. It is something that should be brought forward and talked about because certainly one person's ethics in ethical investing are completely different than another person's ethics in ethical investing.

The second question was on the special brokers. Quite literally, what that is a special type of insurance, and these are the fees that are collected on that as opposed to the insurance taxes that would be paid otherwise. It's a very small percentage. The reason for the difference from 1.75 down to 4 or up to 5.1 is quite literally that it varies from year to year as to how many actual dollars are needed and how much tax is actually being paid. So it does tend to be very much an estimate, but it's an estimate that is extremely variable.

The dedicated revenue costs – I believe you stated it was down $1.5 million – those are simply the costs of our investment operations. They're the costs from the pension plans, the heritage fund, et cetera. Simply, if our costs are not as much, then we do not recover as much from the dedicated funds that go out for that.

The liability question about why we're at 20.1. By far, the majority of this is the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, which is lending out money to municipalities for their particular needs. We have seen an increase in the pension obligations, the self-supporting lending agencies such as AFSC, ATB. That is where the difference in the liability comes. It is collected, though, on the asset sheet, and it is in there.

Where are we here? The Society for Pension Reform. Again, that is something that we are looking at. Obviously, we are engaged in a legal action right now, so as Minister of Finance I can't really comment on this in this particular House. It is before the courts. We feel that we're in a very favourable position, but obviously that's ultimately up to the courts to decide.

The $5.3 billion is the amount of dollars that we use for budgeting. The hon. member is absolutely right; it's exactly the same as last year, which is the first time that that has occurred. It is the maximum amount that we use for our budgeting purpose. Anything over that must be taken into consideration in the surpluses and, subsequently, the surplus allocation formula that is coming forward.

I believe I had one more question. The other loans. Oh, I'm sorry. The allowance for doubtful loans, advances, implemented guarantees, and indemnities, the other components. When you take a look at the top of that particular chart on page 62, what you see are all the various loans that are put out. What the Other is is a compilation of all the risks in those other loans. So it's a risk from the Ag Financial Services, a risk from the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act: all of these other things that are there. That is the risk amount. It's a culmination of those. The asset amount is at the bottom of the total loans and advances.

So with that, once again, I believe I've answered all of your questions, and I'd be more than happy to go again.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Since we're running close to the end of our time, I just want to thank the minister for doing a great job and the staff for providing answers as quickly as you have. I know we're making you work hard, and I appreciate that.

A couple of comments. This afternoon during question period there was a question from a government member, if I remember right, about tax incentives for apartment development and that sort of thing. You indicated that as part of the review that you're undertaking, you will be looking at those. I've had a number of people come to me and talk about a rental tax credit that used to be given to renters back in the early '80s, I believe. I'm wondering if that might also be part of the review that you're doing and if you may consider tax breaks for renters as well. I think that might go a long way towards addressing some of the situations that renters are dealing with right now. I'm pleased to hear that you're looking at incentives on the development side, but let's also look at incentives for those that are renting currently.

We didn't unfortunately have much time to talk about the surplus policy. You know, I'm passionate about that and a resource revenue policy, and I'm hoping that during the appropriation bill debate we can go there. I know that I will, and I'm hoping that you will too because it is a good debate. It's one that I think is long overdue and one that I would hope that somehow we can encourage all Albertans to be involved in and thinking about because it's crucial to the future of this province. I apologize that I didn't have an opportunity to get to it tonight but it's not for lack of interest, that's for sure. As I say, I commit to discussing it during the appropriation debate.

I want to ask very quickly about whether or not we've got any initiatives to increase the financial services sector in Alberta. We all know about the amount of activity that takes place in eastern Canada. Of course, we've got the Alberta Treasury Branch here, and Canadian Western Bank is headquartered here, and the credit unions, which do a great job, but I'm sure that we'd all like to see more involvement from that sector located here in Alberta. I'm wondering what you might have under way to encourage that.

Lastly, just a concern that I expressed previously and you acknowledged – or it may have been the President of the Treasury board that had acknowledged that it's a concern – and that is what implication TILMA will have on Alberta Treasury Branch, in particular, because it's owned by the citizens of this province, but also the others that I mentioned as well, Canadian Western Bank and the credit unions. I understand that financial institutions are exempted until 2009, if I remember right, but that's not that very far away, so if you could comment on that as well.

Again, thank you for the work that you've done today.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much Mr. Chairman. First of all, when it comes to tax incentives it's very hard for the Minister of Finance to talk about any new taxation policy while we're still debating this year's budget. I do have to be very cautious as to what I say. I will simply say that we are looking at all options for tax reform. Any type of tax reform is a welcome approach and, quite simply, hon. member, we're looking at all different ways to get some tax reform.

The financial services sector. I think by far the single biggest thing that we will do in the upcoming year is AIMCO. By centring a $70 billion company into Edmonton, Alberta, I feel that we will actually attract financial services here because people are going to want to come and talk to them in their own surroundings. I think that's by far the biggest incentive that we can give to get the financial services sector here. Obviously, we have low taxes and all the other good things that happen for business in Alberta.

The last one is TILMA. TILMA, we must remember, is a negotiation between two governments, of which we are one. I will say that there is nothing that is going to be in there, there is nothing that is going to be negotiated that is going to be detrimental to Albertans. Certainly the Alberta Treasury Branch is something that Albertans hold near and dear to their hearts. Do we have to make some changes to the Treasury Branch? Yeah, probably we do. We're going to look at them. Then we're going to take a very measured response in regard to the Treasury Branch and look at it very carefully, but we will not put forward anything with regard to any part of Alberta in TILMA unless it is beneficial for both of us, which I really feel there's a huge opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, with that, I'd like to thank the hon. member for his very good questions today and thank all the members who are here who happen to be listening. Thank you.

The Chair: The time is such that by the time we have the staff vacate the Assembly and allow for the Minister of Environment staff to come in, we will be ready to proceed right on schedule.

Hon. members, it's also been indicated to the chair that the minister and the private member wish to share the 20-minute speaking times back and forth under Standing Order 59.01(2). The table will just keep resetting the clock in 20-minute increments, so we can just carry on. If you hear it, we'll just reset it if that's agreeable. Do you want to go 10? I guess, then, we go at 10 back and forth because it has to be agreeable to both.

9:00

Dr. Swann: That's what I thought we agreed to.

Mr. Renner: Back and forth.

Dr. Swann: Sure. Whether it's a full 10 or five or eight, just when we're finished, we'll interact, if that works for you.

The Chair: So you want to set the clock for 20 minutes at a time or 10 minutes?

Dr. Swann: I think 10 at the maximum.

The Chair: Ten is the maximum, or 20 if it's allowable. We'll go with the 10.

Mr. Renner: But just so we understand because I'm not so sure that we're all on the same wavelength. Whether we go 10 minutes or 20 minutes or five minutes, my understanding of the agreement was that the hon. member would ask a question, and I would answer it, and then he'll ask another question, and I'll answer it. So where the clock is set is somewhat irrelevant because he's the only member that's going to be asking the questions.

The Chair: The Standing Orders are still the Standing Orders. We'll set the clock every 10 minutes, and if you ask a question that takes one minute and a minute to answer, we'll just keep resetting the clock.

Dr. Swann: I agree.

The Chair: That's the simplest way unless both parties are agreeable to the 20 minutes. That'll work the best.

Mr. Renner: Well, that's my point. I thought we were agreeable to the 20 minutes. That's just the way it has to be implemented, hon. member. So we either have to go for five minutes, and then you go for five minutes, or we can go back and forth for 20 minutes. So that's what I thought we had agreed to.

Dr. Swann: Oh, I see. Okay. That's fine for me.

Mr. Renner: So, Mr. Chairman, I think we have agreed to 20 minutes.

The Chair: I'll set the clock in 20-minute increments.

Mr. Renner: If it doesn't work for the first 20 minutes, we'll do something else for the second 20.

The Chair: Okay. That's what we shall do.

Environment

The Chair: With that, I will invite the hon. Minister of Environment to provide his opening comments.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I don't have a lot of opening comments, as was discussed with the member opposite. We are going to have an informal dialogue back and forth.

Before we start, I would just like to introduce the members of my staff who have joined me in the House. We have the deputy minister, Peter Watson; along with assistant deputy minister of environmental stewardship, Bev Yee; and assistant deputy minister of environmental assurance, John Knapp. So between the wealth of knowledge that they have at their disposal and in their heads and some that I have managed to pick up by osmosis over the last few months and some of the copious notes I have in front of me, I think we should be able to deal with most of the questions that the hon. member has for us. So at this point I think we'll get started.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Welcome friends, staff, and colleagues. It's my honour to speak to the estimates briefing for Environment 2007.

I want to acknowledge, first of all, the progress on issues that has been achieved with Alberta Environment. They're obviously working hard to make very responsible and sustainable decisions for the province of Alberta on issues, for example, like baseline groundwater testing and mapping; the emergency response team, responding to spills such as we experienced last summer in Wabamun; new funding for Water for Life although infrastructure does appear to be taking the lion's share of this funding; the policy on climate change that was leading the country, and it begins to hold industry accountable for its lion's share of carbon emissions; and the slow progress on air quality criteria standards that's catching up with national standards, in some cases leading national standards. I wanted to acknowledge that there is good work and conscientious efforts by Alberta Environment to address through the budget some of the expectations and responsibilities they've been given.

I'll begin by just making a few comments about three of the five principles the government has articulated – improving quality of life, strengthening Alberta, and creating safe and secure communities – and comment that there is real doubt in Alberta today that our investment in the environment enables these three key criteria to be achieved, especially when one considers a budget of 0.5 per cent of spending in this province, this despite an exponential growth in new and old sites of concern. Albertans are looking to Alberta Environment for capacity to set higher standards, to monitor these standards, to enforce these standards, to force polluters to pay. There is a crisis of confidence at this time in Alberta that they're able to deliver on these expectations.

So with those as preamble, I'll just go specifically to the budget and ask for a clarification about a few of the line items in the budget. Page 142, for example, the line on stewardship is 9 per cent less than was forecast. Maybe you could comment a bit on where that change has occurred and why. Also on 142, the line item on water, a 16 per cent increase in Water for Life. This includes $100 million, as I understand it, passing on to municipalities to enhance or develop their capacities to treat and distribute high-quality water to their residents.

Perhaps I'll just leave it there and allow you to comment on some of those key questions that just emerged from the budget. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to thank the member for his compliments. I think it's a tribute to the people in Environment, who have worked very diligently, and, frankly, I think, also to the hon. member, who as critic for Environment has taken the time to work with us, to become involved and ask intelligent questions and, hopefully, receive intelligent answers as we work together to deal with issues related to the environment.

I want to just briefly talk about the statement that spending on environment is not necessarily commensurate with the need. I've heard that before, and it's something that I find somewhat troubling although I think that it's in the minds of some a legitimate concern. However, I've pointed out on a number of occasions before that I don't share that concern. I believe that it's the role of Alberta Environment to develop the necessary policy, to ensure that we have in place the ability for the people who work in Environment to do their job, to ensure that environmental stewardship is at the levels that Albertans expect. Frankly, I think that it's a case of ensuring that we do have in place the mechanisms to ensure that the policies that we put in place are in fact followed and enforced.

A good example of that is on air emissions. We don't in my opinion need to have literally dozens or hundreds of inspectors on site at every plant, monitoring air emissions on a day-to-day or an hour-to-hour basis. We have very stringent regulations in place that say that if there is any kind of an anomaly, if there is a release of any kind, there is mandatory reporting by the industry of that release. We see a bigger offence and treat with a far more heavy-handed approach any instances where there is a failure to report than when there is an actual emission. Emissions do occur from time to time. Sometimes they are the result of environmental conditions, an inversion or a number of other naturally occurring events, and sometimes they are unavoidable because there are breakdowns of technology. In those cases, we deal with dealing with the release of hazardous materials.

Nevertheless, it's, I think, far more efficient for us to have a system like that, with ongoing monitoring unannounced from time to time, than to have an army of people sitting around doing standard monitoring that for all intents and purposes could be done by a machine. So that's an example. It's a bit of an extreme example, but it's an example of how we can do a better job of stewardship without necessarily spending extra many, many millions ensuring that people are in place.

Now, the question on environmental stewardship: the significant change to the budget has to do with the increase in spending due to a $2 million increase for the ministry's ongoing commitment to aboriginal consultation. There was also an increase in Water for Life; $3.6 million of the increase in Water for Life is due to an increase from the energy innovation fund, and that will be used for groundwater mapping across the province. There's also a $440,000 increase to address manpower inflationary pressures.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Two areas that this ministry has taken on, relatively new areas, have to do with the sustainable resource and environmental management collective cross-ministry initiative to try to make better decisions with surface land-use planning and energy impacts. I'm wondering what, if anything, in this budget addresses SREM and your role with SREM. A second one has to do with cumulative impact assessments and the degree to which the department is developing in-house capability and skills to do timely cumulative impact assessments and use those impact assessments in assessing development proposals and approvals.

Thank you.

Mr. Renner: The commitment to SREM is a very real one. Although it may not show up specifically as a line item in the budget, it is a true interministry, cross-ministry initiative. So that each department has the ongoing commitment to SREM, there is a financial contribution because there are some dedicated staff specifically to the cross-ministry initiative, but each department contributes relatively equally to it, that being SRD, Environment, and Energy.

The deputies are getting into a pretty steady routine of meeting on a biweekly basis. Of late the ministers have found it necessary that we have integrated our involvement into an alternate biweekly meeting. We were meeting on an as-required basis and determined that that was simply not going to be as successful as it needed to be. By the time we determined that there was a need for ministers to get together, it was increasingly difficult to work it into everyone's agendas. So we have determined that it's more appropriate for us to meet on a biweekly basis, and it's easier to cancel a meeting than to try and organize one.

The cumulative impact assessment is under way. We have a number of pilot projects that are either up and running or will be very shortly. We intend to have three pilots that will give us an opportunity to test our thoughts on cumulative impact. One in the Industrial Heartland – and I've talked about that in the House before – will give us an opportunity to work towards regulatory regime for a heavy concentration of industrial development. The other will focus on southern Alberta landscapes. That will be largely a focus on water but not necessarily restricted to that because we also want to talk about the watersheds. We want to talk about how we protect the eastern slopes, which are the headwaters of the South Saskatchewan River basin. We'll be doing that in conjunction with our partner ministries. The third one is in central Alberta. That will be again using a similar model for coal gasification and how we can apply the model of cumulative effect in the development of coal-bed gas.

Interestingly enough, we also have as we speak 12 different EIAs, environmental impact assessments, for a number of different projects. Cumulative impact is part of every EIA although it's in a little bit different focus from what we might think of as cumulative impact from the pilot projects that we're going to be dealing with. One of the requirements of an EIA for the applicant is to show what the cumulative impact will be of this new application, whatever, and how it will have cumulative impact and what the intention of the applicant is to mitigate that cumulative impact. So there already is to some degree cumulative impact.

From a dollar perspective – correct me if I'm wrong – I thought we had at one point discussed a dollar figure of around $2 million that we've allocated to cumulative impact. Is that correct? It's about $2 million in our budget that will go to funding these pilot projects in the development of cumulative impact overall.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'll move on a little bit, then, to outlining a dozen or so concerns that relate to the loss of confidence in Alberta Environment and ask your indulgence to respond to some of these concerns that I hear on a regular basis, mostly from rural but many urban residents in the province, and the widespread perception, again, that the department lacks the capacity, lacks the technical expertise, and lacks the resources to fulfill its full responsibility in a modern, highly technological, and highly industrialized province where there has been an exponential growth without an exponential growth in your capacities. There is a significant credibility gap that I think you ignore at your peril.

Compounding this is a perception that I heard directly from a senior Environment official at a conference, in which he indicated that, quote, our role is not to advocate for the environment but to mediate the interests of industry with the community. End of quote. To broker decisions between industry and community as if community has the capacity to adequately assess the long-term health and environmental impacts of some of these developments or any sense of cumulative impact with nontechnical, nonscientific volunteer municipal boards and councillors: whether they themselves recognize their inability to do some of these assessments or not, their residents do. In many cases they feel that Environment has abdicated its responsibility or hasn't the resources to adequately support municipal governments to do proper assessments, including cumulative impact assessments, before approvals, to do the science of analyzing all the local activities – agricultural and energy and industry and forestry and roads and residential activities – and put those into the context of a watershed that has limits and that this particular community has to live within.

They don't want to see the same thing happen as happened in the southern two river basins, where we failed to recognize the limits until we were already there. They want to see cumulative assessments done before approvals are made so that we're not scrambling with moratoriums and catch-ups. They want to see evidence that the technical expertise exists within the department to do independent assessments of the total impacts on water, for example, or airshed as another example, in the Industrial Heartland, to know that we are not going to exceed limits, that we are going to err on the side of caution, that we're going to use the precautionary principle before approving some of these.

This quotation from one of the senior members of your staff at a conference raised more eyebrows than my own. I would perceive it as a mixed message from the department about what your role is in the province of Alberta.

Perhaps you'd like to just comment on those perceptions.

Mr. Renner: Well, I would say that I would agree with the statement to the extent that it's not the role of Alberta Environment to advocate on behalf of the environment. I don't agree with the second part of the statement, that says: but, rather, to broker the environment with industry. That is absolutely not what the role of Alberta Environment is. Alberta Environment does have a critical role in advising and establishing policy for the government of Alberta on how we are going to protect the environment, how we are going to ensure that we have sustainable development now and into the future.

We do that in a number of ways. We do that by enabling the stewardship of others. I have never been so impressed as I have been of late in travelling around the province and talking to Albertans in the round-tables that we've had on climate change. The one issue that comes out time and time again is the hunger that people have for information. Albertans want to participate. They want to become stewards of the environment on an individual basis, and they feel very strongly that the only way that they can do that successfully is if they have the necessary information at hand to assist them in making some quality decisions.

That is the role of Environment. I choose to define that a little differently than the hon. member may. When I say that I'm not advocating on behalf of the environment, some would take that as being very negative. I say: I'm advocating on behalf of Albertans. I am empowering Albertans to take control on their own, to provide them with the ability to have that local control, make those decisions at the local level from an informed perspective with the resources of Alberta Environment there to assist them because they don't have the technical expertise. Sometimes you need to have at least enough of the basic knowledge to know when you should call upon technical expertise so that you're not just buffaloes, so to speak, by technical expertise without understanding the practical aspects at the same time. So I see that as being very important.

I have been impressed and I continue to be repeatedly impressed by the ability of local groups to take a hold and take ownership of the environment, whether it be through WPACs, the watershed advisory councils, whether it be through local airshed councils, whether it be through what we hope will be a similar kind of a process on cumulative impact, when we start to put all of this together in one package.

The member indicated that he's disappointed that we don't do these impact assessments in advance. Well, that's exactly what we intend to do. We maybe haven't been doing it in the past, but we have every intention of doing it in the future. The process that we're determining right now is how we're going to get there. We want to make sure that we get there by having strong policy that protects the environment, but we just can't put the world on hold. We can't just say: "Stop the world; I want to get off. I've got to do some planning, and I'll be back in a year or two when we get everything all figured out, and then you can start up again." The world that we live in doesn't operate that way. The world continues to turn. People continue to come to Alberta. We have to make sure that we're planning for the future, putting the necessary plans in place but also ensuring that what we approve today will be compatible with the direction that we're going in the future.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, a second area of loss of confidence in Alberta is the fundamental importance of water, both surface and groundwater. The recent reports by both the Radke commission and the Rosenberg forum clearly indicated some serious deficiencies in the way we're monitoring, measuring, and managing our water. As a wealthy province we must do better. We are compromising future generations, especially in the context of climate change. These reports gave some very practical examples and some very practical directions.

There has been a lack of complete and timely baseline testing. The issues of groundwater testing and coal-bed methane have been raised. You and I, Mr. Minister, have discussed isotope testing as the definitive way of establishing cause for gasification in water. I've yet to hear you acknowledge any resource well contamination in spite of a number of resource wells in the Rosebud area that have heavier hydrocarbons, including ethane, propane, butane, and pentane, and isotope evidence that these come from deeper sources.

Not only I but a growing number of rural people are asking: what are you covering up? Why are you not acknowledging either that we are unclear or that there is very clear evidence of contamination and that this is not due to lack of well maintenance, in fact? The five people that presented themselves to this House as little as a month ago all say that there is still lack of resolution in spite of scientific assessment to show contamination. You are simply prolonging the agony and reducing the credibility of your department by failing to acknowledge some of this.

I think that that is an important enough issue to ask you to respond specifically on and perhaps to some of the recommendations of those two reports.

Mr. Renner: Well, with respect to the Radke report much of the reference to Environment is either part of our announced plan to move forward with respect to cumulative impact or is already under way with reference to the IFN. For example, the announcement of in-stream flow needs was almost coincidental with the release of the Radke report, so by the time the Radke report came out, we had dealt with a number of those issues, and we'll continue to deal with those in a similar manner.

With respect to coal-bed methane I have on a number of occasions indicated that from 2004 until 2007, over that three-year period of time, Alberta Environment conducted 95 investigations. That's the number of complaints that we have had drawn to our attention. Of those 95 complaints, every one has been investigated. Seventy-six out of 95 have been closed. They have been closed because there has been conclusive evidence of the cause of the complaint, and it has been resolved to the best of everyone's ability to arrive at a solution to determine what was the cause of the complaint.

It varies across the board. In some cases we simply have to accept the fact that in Alberta there is a long history of having gas in water, and depending upon where you drill a water well, you could well be drilling into the same formation that someone else would drill into were they wanting to create a gas well.

Seventy-six are closed; 19 are still open. Those 19 we continue to work diligently on. We continue to work with the landowners. Of late, we've had an increase of co-operation from some of the landowners who in the past had been hesitant to allow our inspectors access to their wells for whatever reason. I don't want to judge why, but we have had of late more success in accessing wells.

We continue to work to resolve the outstanding cases. We also have in that period of time had the opportunity to drill significantly more Alberta Energy wells that are used as baseline testing. We will have a much stronger, better system for us to use for the testing of those wells by having the proliferation of new baseline wells in place.

The Chair: Hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A third element, relating to water again, that has given evidence of and contributed to a loss of confidence in the department, is the recent approval of waste-water release into the Bow River from the Strathmore development and, again, the reliance on paid consultants and inadequate oversight and independent assessment.

A second, corollary question that is a little bit unrelated but going back to your earlier comments has to do with your developing new capacity in cumulative impact assessment. What budget have you established for that? What new technology and new experts are you contracting to help you to move towards the capacity to do new kinds of cumulative impact assessments? I haven't heard you speak of that. I hear you saying that you are developing the ability to do cumulative impact assessment; I don't see where you're investing to get the appropriate technical support.

Mr. Renner: Well, someday, Mr. Chairman, I would like – in fact, maybe I should make the commitment right here and now to take the hon. member through some of the offices that we have in Environment and let him speak first-hand with some of the people that we have in our department who are world-renowned experts on their own. When he asks where we are going to find the expertise to develop these policies, much of it, most of it is from within. We have got people who are PhDs, who probably could be earning in the private sector three or four times what we pay them but who believe very strongly in what they're doing in Alberta Environment, and those are the people that we rely upon.

I indicated that we had allocated about $2 million to the cumulative impact file. That comes out of what shows in the budget as a $13 million line item under approvals. That's where the $2 million will come from.

On the issue of Strathmore the reason that we have the checks and balances in Environment that we have is to ensure that there are opportunities for affected parties to seek a second opinion. That's really the role that the Environmental Appeal Board plays in this case. The fact that there were assessments done by private consultants is not the least bit unusual. That is what every proponent is asked to do when they submit an application. The work that is done by the consultant is then reviewed by the experts that we have in Alberta Environment.

There is no logical reason why, if the Member for Calgary-Mountain View decides that he wants to put an application in for some kind of water-related project, we should go out and do his work for him to answer all of the questions that we are going to need answered in dealing with that approval. It's up to you as an individual or you to hire someone on your behalf to find out the answers to the questions that we ask.

In my understanding what the appeal board ruled was not that there were deficiencies in the questions that were asked. There was some question as to whether enough information was available that would allow for a determination of health risk. Where we stand at this point is that there will be a requirement for a health risk assessment before there will be further release into the Bow.

I have to emphasize – and I have repeatedly on this issue – that this is not the release of untreated municipal sewage. This is the release of treated waste water, treated to exactly the same level as the water that comes from the city of Calgary, the water that comes from the city of Lethbridge, the water that comes from the city of Medicine Hat.

We are very dependent in this province on ensuring that our neighbours are adequately treating their waste water to ensure that we're not affecting the drinking water for our downstream neighbours. In this particular case the issue came down to whether or not the close proximity would allow for a thorough dispersement of the water and whether or not there were sufficient studies and reviews done to determine whether there were any possible health risks. That is what is under way, and that is the ministerial order that I signed that will require that additional study to take place before a significant amount of treated waste water is released into the Bow.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A fourth area of crisis in confidence, I would call it, is the climate change policy and the failure to really lead the country on initiatives that essentially shift incentives for fossil fuels to incentives for energy efficiency and green energy, renewable energy. It is the test for this minister since this is the first time this government has admitted that climate change is real and requires a meaningful, substantive response in terms of government and industry and the public.

There has been by many accounts, including your own consultations, profound disappointment in the lack of leadership here to set firm limits, to set timelines, to ask legitimately of industry that they take their appropriate share of responsibility and consumers as they are going to have to pay their share as well, and the perennial response that this is going to cost something or that it's going to damage the economy as opposed to seeing this as an opportunity for a new economy in a world that is at war with carbon and that, following the Stern report, we know that we are going to pay. The question is whether we're going to pay a reasonable amount now and forestall a fantastic expense in lives and productivity and future opportunities for our children and our children's children or whether we are going to put all this onto the future generations by our failure and our dithering and our unwillingness to make tough choices as a government.

This is a dilemma for any government to say that everyone is going to pay more, especially industry, but it is precisely what Albertans expect of their government with the new consciousness that we are past due in making the kinds of decisions that are needed on this planet. If Alberta cannot make some of these decisions as the most privileged province in the country, who, then, will start making the tough choices about getting to carbon neutrality in a timely fashion before the ice packs are gone and the water levels have risen to the point of irreversibility?

There's a very serious credibility gap here in this province notwithstanding the fact that we are so dependent on fossil fuels. To show leadership I think would be absolutely vital, and some of the issues in the budget need to reflect that: a commitment to renew-ables, a commitment to retrofitting buildings and homes, a retiring of old technology, demanding that new carbon-based technology for electrical energy like coal-fired plants must have carbon capture in order to be built. This is very fundamental to making a significant progress on the issues and the lack of extra funding for your own initiative out of Calgary, Climate Change Central, and the kind of leadership that it can take if they're given appropriate resources.

Perhaps you'd like to comment on some of those concerns.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thanks, Mr. Chairman. Let me remind the member that this individual has been the Minister of Environment for five months, and I think in that five months we have a record that we can be proud of. We have advanced the issue of climate change significantly. In addition to that, it's roughly five months from today since I became Minister of Environment, but it was only about two to three months maximum that I was able to be minister before the budget that we're discussing today had to be finalized. There are timelines that are involved. So considering all of those timelines, I am proud of the work that I have done, and more importantly I'm doubly proud of the work that the folks in Alberta Environment have done because they have moved this file forward significantly in an extremely sped-up timeline.

We are the only jurisdiction in North America, not just Canada, that has introduced legislation that will, I'm told – because these guys have been working on it for so long, they now have a count-down – in 32 days come into effect in Alberta. We will be making that difficult decision. We have made that difficult decision. Industry will be paying on July 1, 2007, and it's not an insignificant amount. It's an amount that we feel will drive industry to make the kinds of decisions and kinds of investments that have to be made now so that we can see at some point in the not-too-distant future real reductions in CO₂. Those reductions can't come as a result of simply turning off the engine. That's counterproductive. No Albertan wants that. Nobody wants us to achieve the environmental objectives by simply eliminating the opportunities that Albertans have become so proud of; that is, the opportunities that the economy provides for them.

What we have to do is very much what the member has suggested. We have to turn our economy around so that we are not the resource based, dependent economy but that we do have the alternative kinds of energy that are available, we do have standards for housing, standards for automobiles, standards for the way individual Albertans conserve their water supply. All of those things are very much part of the ongoing consultation that's under way.

The commitment, again, is an extremely short timeline. We've committed to having the first draft of our updated climate change policy, which is an update, by the way, of a policy that was originally in place in 2002. Contrary to popular belief, we have not been in denial for the past 10 years. We've actually had people working on this file. We introduced our first policy in 2002. Our updated policy is in 2007, just five years later. That timeline, again, is tight. The end of June, possibly early July we will have our draft. We will have a verification process, again allow Albertans to comment on that process, and we hope to have a government-approved policy in place by fall of this year.

Why do we need it by fall of this year? It is my sincere belief that a year from now – well, maybe a little bit less than a year from now because I hope we're not here at the end of May next year discussing the budget. When the time comes to discuss budgets, the kinds of issues that the hon. member talks about, the fact that we do have recognition of having the incentives in place that people have been talking about at our public meetings, that we do have the ability to put in place the necessary building code improvements so that we can build our buildings to a higher standard – all of those things take time.

I believe that the route to get there is Bill 3, the work that's been done under Bill 3 on the industrial side, and then the work that is going into, as we speak, the development of the updated climate change policy, which will then form the basis for our go-forward not only on the industrial but on the individual and transportation industry and small business industry, all of whom need to work together if we're going to deal with this climate change file in an effective manner.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A sixth area of loss of confidence is in the area of the Water for Life strategy and the tremendous dependence on volunteers, the lack of technical support. I met with a number of water planning advisory committees, and there is significant anxiety, especially in the south, that they can deliver on the expectations and the necessity to have a sustainable water management plan in some of these areas.

The budgeted amounts seem to be significant, but they are not adequate, especially in areas where water is already being recognized as in short supply and threatened. With climate change moving in and the moratorium on the southern two river systems, there is a significant amount of dissatisfaction with the failure of this government to deal with water as a priority, as the number one resource that we should be focusing our attention on.

I wonder if the minister wishes to say more about the investment we have or haven't made in getting the scientific assessments, the water conservation objectives done, an integrated plan for all these river systems, especially in the south, and the appropriate technical support for these people to feel confident that they're leaving their children and their opportunities for business in good hands.

Thank you.

9:50

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As the member correctly pointed out earlier, much of the capital investment side in Water for Life is within infrastructure's budget. But that being said, the budget that is contained within Alberta Environment increased to $12.5 million this year, up from $5.5 million last year. So there's a significant increase within Alberta Environment's budget over last year; $2 million to $3 million of this increase of $7 million is devoted to providing additional capacity at the stakeholder level. The member is absolutely right. If we're going to involve the communities, which I believe is the right thing to do, we have to provide them with the necessary tools so that they're not operating in the dark.

But let's also be clear that we are not abdicating the responsibility that this minister has or that the officials have or the directors have within Alberta Environment to make the decisions on behalf of the environment. The groups that we have at the local level are advisory. They're there so that they can provide input on what meets their needs and how to best manage what is a scarce resource on a community-by-community, basin-by-basin basis rather than having the heavy hand of government come down and say: this is the way it's going to be, and if it doesn't fit for southern Alberta, that's just too bad because it fits in central or the north, or vice versa. That's the reason why we have the advisory groups. That's the reason why people believe that they have a reason to spend the amount of time and energy that they do on these water basin advisory councils, not because they're under any illusion that they are the regulator, that they are the final decision-maker, but because they recognize the importance of having that local voice in decision-making, the ability to formulate a decision that works on the local basis.

The way that they're going to do a better job of that is by us allocating significantly more funding to provide them with the capacity at the local level, the capacity from an administrative perspective and also from a scientific and research perspective. They have to have the ability to get the kinds of studies done that will allow them to make the kinds of positive suggestions and advice that will result in decisions being made that benefit their water basin.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A further area that has eroded the confidence of Albertans in this department is the management of contaminated sites. These raise real concern, especially in rural areas but also in some urban areas. A need for adequate monitoring, timely initiation and timely completion of reclamation, independent assessment, and meaningful fines continue to be sore points with a lot of people that contact me, and also concerns about public liability for some of these sites and questions about how much public money is being spent annually on cleaning up after industry instead of holding industry accountable for some of these issues.

The reclamation processes appear to favour industry, especially since Bill 29 was passed. We now have moved from high-level reclamation/remediation to what's called colloquially risk management. It allows industry off the hook but also low fine levies and no requirements to immediately remediate spills at active sites. As I've indicated, no specific time to begin and end reclamation leaves the public anxious and potentially liable, with long delays in this area. I think a serious level of credibility enhancement would come from shifting, focusing more attention on these sites, and, finally, fulfilling the previous minister's commitment to an industry-funded cleanup fund, that would ensure that all industries share when one abdicates its responsibility and walks away.

Thank you.

Mr. Renner: Before I get to answering the question on contaminated sites, I just want to put on the record something that I should have mentioned when we were talking about water planning. I think it's critical to emphasize the amount of planning that actually has been under way of late. We have the Athabasca River in-stream flow needs study, that has been completed. The South Saskatchewan River basin plan is complete. The Cold Lake/Beaver River plan is complete. The Battle River plan is under way – it should be completed shortly – as is the North Saskatchewan in-stream flow needs. So we've completed a significant amount of work, and we have a number of other programs that are under way.

On the issue of contaminated sites. We have, admittedly, some issues that we need to deal with, but I must emphasize that the assumption that the member made that somehow industry is not held accountable is absolutely false. The basis of everything that we do with respect to contaminated sites is that the polluter pays. Industry is always accountable for paying the costs of cleanup. What we have done that has enhanced our ability significantly – and the member to his credit did acknowledge it in his opening remarks – is set up the ASERT organization. That is now a rapid response organization that has responded to a number of incidents lately that simply never really made much of a news story because, frankly, the issue was contained and they did an outstanding job of dealing with the issue at the time.

That being said, there is some work that needs to be done on reclamation certificates. It's an area that I have expressed concern to staff, that I believe there's too long a gap from the time that the contamination occurs until the point when a reclamation certificate is issued. Part of that, frankly, is because we don't put the proper incentives in place for the polluter to clean up. Even when a reclamation certificate is issued, we may not actually remove the liability from the polluter. Then what incentive is there in place for anyone to go ahead and do the work when at the end of the day we give them a piece of paper that may or may not be worth anything? If I am industry and I'm trying to do some risk management, why would I spend a whole bunch of money today when I find out tomorrow that everything I did today becomes irrelevant? Because the government in its wisdom has changed the standards, everything that I just did is now irrelevant, and I have to start all over again.

That's where I think we have to accept some responsibility as society, that there comes a point in time when we say that the standards of the day we believe are the best standards. That's the expectation that we have. We want this cleaned up as best as it possibly can be by today's standards, and if tomorrow something miraculous comes along and we find out we could have done a better job, we can't expect everyone to come back and do everything all over again. Frankly, that's part of the problem that we have, and that's the discussion that is under way, and that's the work that needs to be done. Having been the former minister of municipal affairs and seeing contaminated sites as a blight in Small Town, Alberta, across this province, I of all people recognize the need to put the pressure on, get these sites cleaned up . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister but will now invite the officials to retire from the Assembly so that the committee may rise and report.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(b) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Finance, Service Alberta, and Environment relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move that the Assembly adjourn until 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:02 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 30, 2007 1:00 p.m.
 Date: 07/05/30
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly His Excellency Dr. Abraham Nkomo, high commissioner for the Republic of South Africa. The high commissioner is accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Marjorie Nkomo, and Ms Mpumi Sibiyi, from the South African high commission in Ottawa. This is the high commissioner's first visit to Alberta, but it's already the second time we have had a visit this year by representatives from South Africa. It was my pleasure to host the high commissioner and his delegation at a luncheon today, and I will add that it's very nice to see another doctor in politics. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly someone who is perhaps well known by a few of our colleagues that have been here for some time, Dr. David Carter, the former MLA and former Speaker. He is seated in the Speaker's gallery.

He was elected in March 1979 to the 19th Legislature. He was elected to Calgary-Egmont in the 20th, 21st, and 22nd Legislatures. He was elected Speaker in June of '86 and served until August of 1993.

Mr. Speaker, he resides in my constituency since his retirement not only from government but as the pastor, curator, and owner of St. Margaret's Anglican church in the Cypress Hills. He also is a well-known author, who has written a great book, Behind Canadian Barbed Wire, the story about the World War II internment camps, and also an author about RCMP members who resided in the Cypress Hills area.

I'd ask Dr. Carter to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Trudy Coady and Jacqueline Dorchak. They're here today on the 264th day of strike at the Palace Casino due in part to the government's unwillingness to enhance labour legislation to protect Alberta workers from unfair employers.

Trudy has worked at the Palace Casino for five years in the slots department. She's a grandmother, who lives with her daughter and son-in-law as she takes care of her granddaughter and grandson while their parents are at work. When she has a moment to herself, she enjoys spending time walking or being in the garden.

Jacqueline has worked at the casino for four years in the coat check. In her off time she loves to garden and also to create paper tole pieces, which can take up to three years to create.

They're joined today by UFCW local 401 bargaining representative Richard Konkin.

I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce today to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two ladies who are very, very important to me. The first is a lady who has worked for me for six years in this building, and she is by any standards, I think, one of the very best assistants we have got. Her name is Carmen Frebrowski.

The second one is my new STEP student for the summer. Her name is Samantha Mertz. She's in her second year of poli-sci at the University of Calgary, actually just completed it, and we're looking forward to a very good summer together.

They're in the public gallery. I would ask both of them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Statement by the Speaker

The Centennial Series

The Speaker: Hon. members, earlier today all members received a set of four books known collectively as The Centennial Series: Legislative Assembly of Alberta. These four volumes, which took nearly five years to produce, were produced entirely in-house by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and people associated with the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

At this point in time I'd like to introduce to you two individuals who played exceptionally large and major roles in overseeing the production of these books. In the Speaker's gallery is the Legislature Librarian, Sandra Perry, who was responsible for leading this five-year project. On the floor of the Assembly is the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly, Dr. David McNeil, who provided the administrative leadership for these past five years. Members may be interested in knowing that on August 1, 2007, Dr. McNeil will be celebrating his 20th anniversary in association with the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

As Speaker of the Legislative Assembly I am extremely proud of the leadership that was provided to this project by both of these individuals and want to publicly acknowledge their outstanding work in this regard.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

The Centennial Series

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you indicated earlier in your introduction of guests, a number of Legislative Assembly Office staff were involved in the production of The Centennial Series: Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I have the honour of introducing members of this talented team to you at this time, and I would ask each of them to stand and remain standing as I mention their names.

In the Speaker's gallery the former Assistant Legislature Librarian, Karen Powell, who coauthored On Behalf of the Crown, about the Lieutenant Governors of the North-West Territories and Alberta, and who assisted with the early research on the Premiers book, The Mantle of Leadership; Jessica Craig, coauthor of The Mantle of Leadership, about the Premiers of the North-West Territories and Alberta, and previously one of the researchers on the Speakers book, A Higher Duty; manager, library operations, Valerie Footz, who coauthored the book A Higher Duty, about the Speakers of the Legislative Assemblies of both the North-West Territories and Alberta, and who was co-ordinating editor of the Lieutenant Governors and the Premiers books, On Behalf of the Crown and The Mantle of Leadership; Jody Rempel, co-ordinator on behalf of the Clerk's office of the book A Century of Democracy, about the elected Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta; Philip Massolin, historian, who was the editor and historical consultant on the Lieutenant Governors, Premiers, and Speakers books; Sharon Bell, librarian and genealogist, who researched and drafted the family history sections of these volumes; Tracey Sales of the communications branch of the Clerk's office, who in consultation with the library was responsible for the beautiful design of these volumes.

In the members' gallery are the following individuals who also worked on the research and the initial drafting of the various sections of these books: Heather Close, Ronald Kelland, Robert Sadowski, Sharna Polard, Greg Morgan, Christine Bouchier, Rose Varkerti, Warren Maynes, Scott Scambler, Stephanie Christensen, Ronda Alberts, Megan Lewis, Anna Scott, Jessica Labbé, Torrie Knoll, Alfred Neitsch, and Kevin Kuchinski.

Mr. Speaker, the work that was done by these individuals was a tremendous accomplishment in researching and compiling the history of our province contained in these volumes and will be appreciated by all Albertans for generations to come. We thank them all for their dedication and efforts.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Chair of Committees.

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Bursaries

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise this afternoon to congratulate Allyson Kupchenko, Megan Connors, Emma Maria Van Loon, Amanda Garrow, Rebecca Bootsman, and Annette Kelm. These exceptional young Albertans were recipients of Commonwealth Parliamentary Association bursaries. The CPA bursaries were given to acknowledge Alberta students for their achievements in an essay contest, the Alberta Girls' Parliament, and the TUXIS Parliament. All of these awards focused on recognizing young Alberta students who have taken an initiative to learn and engage themselves in the workings of parliamentary democracy.

As most of us are aware, democracy was formed on the idea of rule of the people and is enhanced by active citizen involvement. This involvement is strengthened by young Albertans who take an early interest in government. I hope that as these young women proceed through their lives, they continue to develop their skills and knowledge about government procedures and policies. As savvy and competent students they will serve as role models for their peers, communities, and this province.

Each of us has a great responsibility to exercise our freedoms and take an active role in the political process. That is what these young Albertans have done, and it is great that we have awarded their efforts. I wish the recipients well with their endeavours, and I would like to encourage all Alberta students to participate in this capacity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medals

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 17 I had the pleasure of meeting five outstanding young people during an awards ceremony hosted by our Lieutenant Governor and the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture in Calgary. These inspiring youth are among the eight recipients of the 2006 Queen's golden jubilee citizenship medals. They were chosen from hundreds of other graduating high school students as best exemplifying the qualities and attributes of a model Alberta citizen.

Mr. Speaker, enhancing Albertans' quality of life is a priority for the Alberta government, and each of these students, whether providing leadership or volunteering for a social, political, or humanitarian cause, has contributed positively to Alberta's quality of life. For their efforts each young person received a letter of commendation, a Queen's golden jubilee medallion, and a $5,000 cheque to continue their personal development and general education.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to name the recipients of the 2006 Queen's golden jubilee citizenship medal. They are Miles Aronson of Calgary, Atoosa Ghayour of Calgary, Steffen Janzen of Three Hills, Eric Leong of Edmonton, Stephanie Lim of Calgary, Joshua Sealy-Harrington of Calgary, Kali Taylor of Hanna, and Bethany-Anne Woodrow of Lacombe. Congratulations and well done to these young people. I would ask all members of the Legislature to join me in recognizing these great young people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

23rd Annual World Partnership Walk

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to salute and thank the Aga Khan Foundation Canada and especially its affiliates here in Edmonton for undertaking the 23rd annual World Partnership Walk this past weekend. This is Canada's largest and longest running annual event dedicated to increasing awareness of and raising funds for combatting global poverty. Local convenor Karim Kanji co-ordinated this year's event with help from numerous Ismaili community members and friends, which included well over 400 volunteers and well over 1,500 walkers, fundraisers, and other helpers from the broader community.

In the end about one-half a million dollars were raised right here in Edmonton alone, bringing the new grand total to about $40 million Canada-wide. One hundred per cent of all of these funds raised goes directly toward numerous projects in Africa and Asia that address global poverty issues, including health, education, rural development, and strengthening community-based solutions. Many of these projects provide clean drinking water and address safe water collection methods, irrigation, and sanitation matters.

Here in Canada we sometimes take clean water for granted. However, in many countries in Africa and Asia about 50,000 people die every day because of water-borne diseases. The Aga Khan Foundation through its World Partnership Walk has pledged to alleviating these and other major problems stemming from global poverty.

Mr. Speaker, I was privileged to attend this partnership walk again this year along with colleagues from Edmonton-Whitemud and Edmonton-Glenora. I would also like to thank my personal hosts for the day – Nadir Rajan from Crystal Printing, Karima Bapoo, and Sadru Nazarali – as well as Dr. Moiz Ramji and Nizar Mitha and numerous other volunteers for their enormous efforts this year.

I would urge all members in the Assembly to join me in congratulating all the volunteers for staging and participating in this extremely important initiative of the Aga Khan Foundation, which is a non-denominational and registered charity with an incredibly successful record of project accomplishments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Grants to Golf Courses

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to point out the facts to the hon. members for Highwood and Calgary-West. They did not believe me when on Thursday, May 17, I pointed out the lavish grants golf courses receive from this Progressive Conservative government. These lavish grants are not a laughing matter. Upon review of the government's blue book detailing grants by payee for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2006, I was able to uncover $2 million in grants given out to golf courses around the province. In addition, I've prepared spreadsheets detailing these grants through the past three fiscal years for the hon. members' convenience. Total grants by this government to golf courses is $7.2 million in three years.

Think of the difference $7.2 million could make to any number of other government programs. For example, this money could secure annual funding for prekindergarten programs at inner-city schools. These programs give a valuable head start to disadvantaged children for only $250,000 per year. We would be giving children who face potential educational disadvantages the opportunities to play on par with their counterparts in the more affluent areas of the province. We can provide golf courses handouts, or we can do the right thing and provide young Albertans opportunities to foster not only a standard for learning but an enjoyment of and desire for education, culture, and achievement.

All so often in this province we speak of investments, of the Alberta advantage. Why not make the smartest investment of all: an investment in the future? By thinking ahead further than the next round of golf, this government could make a tangible difference not only in the lives of today's children but tomorrow's standard of living. School children need our help a lot more than golf courses.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

School Construction in Lethbridge

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today while I address you there are nearly 900 students from west Lethbridge sitting in crowded classrooms across the city, awaiting the long overdue west side school. The people of Lethbridge do appreciate the funding which has been allocated to the plan, but because of extensive and inexcusable delays to the beginning of the construction on phase 1, this plan is already obsolete. Even if the population were static, there would be roughly 880 high school students living on the west side of Lethbridge in 2009; however, phase 1 will support only 700 of them.

A shovel has not yet touched the soil where a multimillion dollar school should be opening in September of '09, a deadline which was already pushed back a year. There is no doubt that because of material and wage increases, phase 1 will be significantly over budget. Unless something is done now to make room for phase 2, there will be 180 students, a number which is still growing, who will have to find their education elsewhere. This is unfair to students, parents, and teachers all over Lethbridge.

The idea of the west side school and library should be an attractive one to this government given its level of co-operation and partnership. The school will be a three-way group effort on the parts of the public school district No. 51, the Holy Spirit Catholic school board, and the city of Lethbridge. This school, if ever completed in both phases, will be a shining example of the benefits of the synergy between these three entities. If the future of Alberta's education is to become brighter, let us make an example of Lethbridge and give the students there the facility and the attention that they deserve.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) I wish to advise the House that at the appropriate time I will be introducing a motion that written questions and motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: 1:20 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll have to get back to you on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table today the spreadsheets which I referred to in my private member's statement earlier this afternoon. This is for the fiscal year 2005-06, and it goes through to 2004-05 as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today: first of all, the requisite copies of an open letter from the mayor of Calgary to all citizens of Calgary.

Also, seven different tablings, all with the requisite copies, of correspondence from Alberta Environment – there's quite a lot of it here – all relating to our request under FOIP for access to documents having to do with the Balzac project. Didn't get any answers, but we got a lot of paper.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table seven letters and five e-mails. The letters are from Susan Howg, Marlin Howg, Wendy L. Thurston, Patricia Emerson, Ronna McKee, Christine Rogers, and Shanda McKnight. The e-mails are from Kim Orr, David Wetterstrand, Norine Dodge, Craig Brack, and Max Zaugg. These are all teachers, and they all have a common theme of asking and reiterating that there is inadequate and insubstantial funding for school boards and that the unfunded liability debt must be addressed and settled now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Dr. Chris Ayers, an inner-city physician in Alexandra community health centre in Calgary, raising serious concerns about the lack of AISH funding for many of his patients, who are now being forced into very difficult positions as a result of the cost of living and especially accommodation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is an article from Energy Solutions Alberta lauding the benefits of geothermal energy use in home construction.

The second is a recent press release from the Alberta Building Trades Council. This document offers to assist CNRL's Horizon project by completing its tank farm with qualified, readily available, and competent Alberta tradesmen.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for your patience today, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a motion which was adopted by the Idaho State Legislature in March of this year. The motion, passed by both Houses of the state, calls on President Bush to withdraw from the security and prosperity partnership agreement of 2005. With this motion Idaho joins 14 other states in opposing the reduction of standards, sovereignty, and democratic oversight entailed by the SPP.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to table in the Legislative Assembly one complete set of the Centennial Series books, but there are 17 pounds on your desks already.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Danyluk, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, responses to questions raised by Ms Blakeman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and Ms Pastoor, hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, on May 15, 2007, Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing 2007-08 main estimates debate; the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta annual report 2006; Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2006. Pursuant to the Safety Codes Act Safety Codes Council 2006 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Melchin, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, responses to questions raised by several Members of the Legislative Assembly on May 15 and 16, 2007, Department of Seniors and Community Supports 2007-08 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Knight, Minister of Energy, response to questions raised by Mr. Strang, hon. Member for West Yellowhead, and Mr. Cao, hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, on May 16, 2007, Department of Energy 2007-08 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Before we move on to Oral Question Period, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour and pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 33 grade 6 brightest students from Meyokumin elementary school from my constituency, accompanied by their teachers Lisa Nachtigal and Shane Grundy. They are all seated in the public gallery. I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you three guests in the visitors' gallery. We have members of the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops. We have the president, Bert Paulssen. We have Lyle Kusik. We also have Dareld Cholak. If I could ask them to please stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Red Deer River Water Transfer

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans don't buy this Conservative government's denials about the deal to take water from the Red Deer River to support the Balzac megamall. You know, the Premier says it's our responsibility to provide the proof of a secret deal. It's not. It's his responsibility to give Albertans real answers and to make public all information he has. To the Premier. The Ministry of Environment has 1,703 pages responsive to our FOIP request, but its release has been delayed. If the Premier wants us to present evidence, will he release that evidence to us?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this member asked the question or something to the effect yesterday. There's a due date of the 7th of June, I believe. According to the kind of rules and regulations under the act, which we must follow, there is some consideration given to asking permission from third parties. All that will be done. The information is to be provided to the opposition by the date, which is June 7.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier. The Solicitor General's office has 1,500 pages responsive to our FOIP request. The release so far has been 14 of those pages – 14 pages out of 1,500. We've been told we can get 412 more but only after the session and the by-elections are over. Will the Premier release that evidence to us today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's incumbent upon certainly the government to follow the rules and regulations and the laws that have been established by the Assembly. So those are the kind of issues that I mentioned before. We have a responsibility to make sure that we follow the regulations and the act, and there are some third-party considerations. I'm not sure that in this Sol Gen request we'll be able to do that. Maybe I'll provide more information tomorrow. But with respect to the first one that was raised, that's the information I have. The Minister of Environment may give further detail if necessary.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. Untold numbers of pages are being withheld, hidden using just about every section of the FOIP Act: section 6(4), a record created to brief a minister for session; section 17, disclosure harmful to personal privacy; section 22, cabinet and Treasury Board confidences; section 24, advice from officials; section 16, disclosure harmful to the business interests of a third party. Will the Premier admit that he has the evidence that his government has backed this project from the beginning and that he's keeping it from Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this line of questioning has been going on now for most of this session. I've said before that there was no secret deal, as the opposition always alleges. They said that they were going to present evidence a few months ago. We're still awaiting that evidence. Now they're saying: well, we can't present it because we don't have any, but we just said that in the House. This keeps going on and on. All I'm going to say is that we are an open, transparent government. We are doing whatever we can within the law to deliver the kind of request that the opposition wants with respect to government information.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

1:30 Calgary Municipal Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. One of the key markers of character is the ability to own up and accept the blame when you're wrong. It's also one of the key markers of leadership. The previous Conservative government had a penchant for blaming the victims. School board gives you grief? Fire the trustees. Elected health boards getting uppity? Go back to appointing them. Today I see that this Conservative government, which actually is nothing more, really, than the rearranging of deck chairs on the Titanic, is back to shooting the messenger again. Why? It turns out that their sagging support in Calgary is the fault of Calgary's mayor. How impertinent. To the Premier: will he admit that the mayor of Calgary is right to be standing up for the interests of his city and his citizens?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, a number of months ago, when we announced the $1.4 billion municipal fund, there were comments made by the media in terms of responses from various mayors. I said that the mayor is doing his job, that he's got a responsibility to represent his city. I stand by what I said a number of months ago.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mayor Bronconnier sent a letter to all Calgarians, which I tabled earlier in the House today, in their property tax bills this week explaining why he can't announce the start of the new west and southeast C-Train lines, more police, fire, and EMS services, more buses and C-Train cars, more expansion and repair of the road network, more parks, more rec centres, more sports facilities. Will the Premier admit that the mayor is correct in saying that Calgary can't build what Calgary needs because this Premier reneged on his no-strings-attached funding promise to municipalities?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in one of the letters I received there was a comment made – I believe it goes back to 1967 – with the construction of the light-rail transit system. In 1967 I was in grade 10. Please don't blame me for something that hasn't been done till today. I wasn't even in government then.

Look, it's $1.4 billion going to municipalities. It's catching up with a whole bunch of infrastructure that's badly needed across the province of Alberta. This is a 10-year commitment of $1.4 billion. There's so much opportunity now for planning and catching up with infrastructure both in housing and critical infrastructure that's necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like the lady, methinks, doth protest too much. The Conservatives like to claim that they've given Calgary all this money, $5.5 billion this year, although of course only $42 million of it, barely the cost of one interchange, is available for the city to spend at its discretion on municipal infrastructure projects going forward. I would remind the House that this Premier was part of the government that decided not to do any infrastructure spending for the better part of 15 years. Would the Premier like to explain to Calgarians why, if they really have spent so lavishly on this city, there's so darn little to show for it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the values or the ethics of an opposition leader – of course, he isn't the leader; he maybe wants to be, but he's not the leader – is not to be subversive as an opposition, at least to put the facts on the table. The facts are completely different from what the hon. member has said. There's a considerable amount of money going to the city of Calgary. It's well over $5 billion, going towards postsecondary, road infrastructure, hospitals. The money will continue to flow not only to Calgary but to other municipalities in this province because they're all important. We're not going to let the opposition try and divide this province into different areas: rural, urban, north, and south.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government allows the exploitation of temporary foreign workers to continue. There are at least 24,000 temporary foreign workers now in the province, and this government wants to speed the process up by fast-tracking at least another 25,000 workers. My first question is to the Premier. Why is the government planning to recruit thousands more temporary foreign workers when yesterday the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry warned prospective workers or migrants to this province to stay away?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, just a mixing up of words. I'll ask the minister to respond to this.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that yesterday the House heard the most unfortunate circumstances of people who had been unscrupulously solicited, had to pay money to come. That was wrong, and that's against our laws. I was asked about housing availability. When people come under the terms of temporary foreign workers, the employer has made arrangements for housing. Those rules are in place, and they are followed. We make sure that they are adhered to. But when people come because somebody has recruited them dishonestly, then we don't know how to protect them because we don't even know who they are.

Mr. MacDonald: Speaking of not knowing who they are, to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, how many temporary foreign worker visas for Alberta have been denied for reasons of espionage, terrorism, or human rights violations?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the federal government deals with safety and security and health, and they do that screening and assessment. Let's be clear: 800,000 people have applied and are on the rolls in Canada today, waiting to come to Canada. The screening that the hon. member is talking about is something that's done federally. The screening that we do relates to labour market opinions relative to the availability of jobs for those workers and employers to place them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: is the minister currently working with the RCMP to protect temporary foreign workers from exploitation as defined in the Criminal Code and the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if one reviews the content of my budget, one sees that there are several people that have been hired this year to protect people, with employment standards, with occupational health and safety. Seventy-two additional people are working in our department primarily to do assessments, to conduct safety checks, to make sure that all Albertans are safe, among these, obviously, the workers that are temporary. May I say that at the immigration ministers' meeting last Friday we talked about just how we can best track temporary foreign workers.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Government Policy

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This province's overheated economy is making some people prosperous but leaving many people worse off. This might be a surprise to many members of this government, but Albertans are not only aware of the problems caused by the government's inability to plan; they're also increasingly putting the blame exactly where it belongs. The Premier's job is to create and deliver government policy for the benefit of all Albertans, not just those already benefiting from our boom. More and more Albertans are turning to food banks for help, and this is directly related to the Premier's refusal to protect Albertans from soaring rents. If the Premier's claim that he has the right policies for Alberta is true, then why are so many people worse off now than they were a year ago?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the overall economy of the province of Alberta is huge. It's growing. What spills over outside of Alberta's boundaries, of course, is shared by other provinces in terms of job opportunities, provinces like Quebec and Ontario. Definitely, we have more and more people moving to Alberta from other provinces, over 11,000 in the first part of this year. We have others moving from other countries. They're coming here because there are job opportunities. That in itself is a pressure point, and I won't argue it. It's a pressure point with housing, a pressure point with the kind of infrastructure and social programs that are necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and his ministers have repeatedly refused to protect Albertans from rent gouging and other price distortions because they have a blind faith in the market. Well, while this government dithers, more and more Albertans are falling behind. Last year 94,689 Calgarians went to the food bank. Alberta has the highest percentage in the entire country of users of the food bank who are employed. People are working harder and still struggling, but this Premier is either unwilling or unable to help. Will the Premier admit that his failure to help the people struggling in this province is resulting in declining popularity for his government?

1:40

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this year's budget was an increase of approximately 10 per cent. A lot of that increase went to various social programs to support Albertans. Not only Albertans, you know, whether it be seniors or AISH recipients, but those that are moving to this province, looking for places to live, that are here because they have job opportunities. Mr. Speaker, you're well aware that we're critically short of people to fill many of the job vacancies. These are issues that we're working through. Our policies are good, and we will see that we'll catch up with all of these issues and improve the quality of life for all Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, more words.

The Premier has refused to touch the brake on our overheated economy, but he obviously doesn't have a grip on the steering wheel either. It only took a few hours for landlords to start jacking up rents after the government announced its response to the housing task force, and the ink wasn't even dry on Bill 34 before landlords spotted the loopholes in the bill and started making economic evictions. Why is this Premier taking Alberta in the direction of more homelessness, more hungry children, and forcing more middle-class families into poverty?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe I mentioned this to the House before, but of course this hon. member has most of his life received his salary from the public. There are a lot of people in this Assembly that remember the last time the government touched the brakes, in the '80s. We ended up paying 24 per cent interest rates. Albertans were vacating their homes, abandoning their mortgages, moving out to other provinces because the government did put the brakes on the economy and devastated this province. It took us years of good policy on behalf of this government to recover.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Calgary Courthouse

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of Justice. The government of Alberta is building a new and by some accounts overly costly courthouse facility in downtown Calgary at a time when government spending is already high. Can the minister please explain what need justifies the expense of this facility at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Courts Centre is actually one of the shining examples of what's going on in Calgary these days. I noticed earlier in the questions advanced by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie that he was having difficulty in finding something good that's happening in Calgary. I would suggest that he check out 5th Street between 6th and 7th Avenues, and you will see the Calgary Courts Centre. The Calgary Courts Centre is the place where the Court of Queen's Bench and the Provincial Court will go. It will be the aggregation of five locations at one spot. It is something which has been talked about for over 20 years at this point.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you. My second question is to the same minister. Some constituents suggest, however, that the facilities we have right now are just fine. I'm hoping the minister can explain the return on investment that taxpayers are receiving for this somewhat considerable expense.

Mr. Stevens: Well, the considerable expense is $300 million. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the $300 million is what was established as the budget for this particular project when it started some considerable time ago. I can tell you that it is on budget and on time. We will be getting the keys to the buildings at the end of July. The courts will be moving in and operational in full in September of this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund Timberland Investment

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 17 and 18 in response to questions I asked in this House the Finance minister admitted that an employee in his department had made a mistake which cost taxpayers $11 million. The minister admitted that his employee failed to hedge the timberland investment against the Canada/U.S. dollar exchange, yet the 2005-2006 second-quarter update of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund reported that "the under-performance is due to the strengthening of the Canadian dollar against the US dollar." My question is for the Minister of Finance. Why didn't the second-quarter report tell the truth about the losses suffered by the timberland investment class?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. It's great that the hon. member has asked this question again because I believe this morning in Public Accounts he asked the Auditor General this in about eight or nine different ways. The Auditor General told him exactly why. He told him that we had informed the Auditor General exactly when we learned that this had occurred. He told him why he did not put it in his report. He told him what we had done and what we were doing about it. So he got all the answers from the Auditor General first thing this morning in Public Accounts.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, this morning at the Public Accounts Committee the Auditor General, in fact, did indicate that all of the relevant pension funds and investment partners had been notified in writing of the circumstances surrounding the loss. They were all advised of what measures had been put in place to ensure that such a mistake did not happen again. That is true. Unfortunately, the most important entity of all, that being the taxpayers of this province, were never informed why the $11 million loss took place. Again to the Minister of Finance: will the department live up to this government's claims of openness, transparency, and accountability and make a full public disclosure of all of the details surrounding this loss to the taxpayers, perhaps an addendum to your annual report?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, included in my budget this year and over the past years, there is a constant compilation of timberland. When you take a look at my budget this year, you see a line item which says "timberland." I think what is very important as well to recognize is that, yes, there was an $11 million mistake made, and, yes, I did come into this Legislative Assembly and stand here and say that, and, yes, we have made $61 million on a $170 million investment. So did we mess up for a bit? Yes. Has it been a good investment? Yes. Have we reported it? Absolutely.

Mr. R. Miller: And, yes, Mr. Speaker, this Assembly approved $7 million in supplementary supply to pay off the partners that lost money because of your mistake. That's a fact.

Mr. Speaker, a Finance department official has been quoted as saying that the employee was let go not for making the mistake but rather for trying to cover it up. This morning the Auditor General said that he had found no evidence of a cover-up, and the deputy minister, when asked the same question, declined to comment. My question is for the minister. Did Alberta Finance discuss with the Auditor General the human resources issues involved, or was the dialogue . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've stood here before and stated, yes, there was a $7 million issue that was dealt with. It was dealt with on the floor of the Legislature. It was put here in the budget. And, no, I will not discuss human resources issues in this particular Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Biodiversity Monitoring Project

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We take for granted all of the natural features and the living species that bless our province with their presence. Alberta looks at the government to have a plan to manage the biodiversity. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Since developing the biodiversity strategy for Alberta is one of the Premier's top priorities for his ministry, can the minister please tell the Assembly what the biodiversity strategy is doing to fulfill his priority?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report to the Assembly that the biodiversity monitoring project is moving ahead very well. After three years of developing a prototype, we're moving into the field this year. In this year's budget we committed $4.2 million to set up an institute that will do the biodiversity monitoring. Over the past several weeks the institute has completed the training of 22 seasonal staff who will do the monitoring. On Monday these researchers began the process of going out and monitoring the collection of information about plant and animal species across Alberta. This information gathered will be used to build a baseline or a benchmark that will help the government maintain Alberta's valuable biodiversity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. It all sounds rather complicated. Can the minister please explain for the opposition how it works?

1:50

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'll try to draw a picture. There will be 1,600 sites in a 20-kilometre grid – 1,600; 20 kilometres. Every five years one-fifth of these will be checked. Over five years we'll develop a baseline. Five years times one-fifth: a whole. That baseline will then allow us to monitor changes going forward.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sure there was great clarity in the answer.

Maybe your third.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister: why is biodiversity so important?

Dr. Morton: Again, very slowly for the opposition. As a practical matter this will allow us to do the environmental impact statements both for industry and government in a more efficient way. We won't be starting from ground zero, you know, the beginning point. We'll have a baseline to go.

Secondly, the biodiversity will help us with the land-use framework. Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, over the long term the biodiversity monitoring program will help us put together and protect the integrity of our environment, the beauty of this province that makes it the best place in Canada to live, work, and raise a family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Affordable Housing

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. City councillors and the people of Red Deer have made a bold commitment to become the first municipality in Canada to eradicate homelessness. In fact, Red Deer has a 10-year plan. This government rejected the housing task force's recommendation of an Albertan 10-year housing plan. The city of Red Deer appreciates receiving money for affordable housing this year, but what about the next year and the year after that and the year after that? My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Will you enable Red Deer city councillors to plan for the future, even the next three years, by committing here today to renew their affordable housing funding on a long-term basis?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has committed $400 million to the municipal sustainability initiative this year, $500 million next year, and $600 million the year after. We've also committed to funding for housing. The funding for housing for communities that are in need: those municipalities have the ability to decide how they feel their money should be spent and what direction they should take.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the effort to provide affordable housing in this province, which refuses to regulate the market, can sometimes feel like one step forward and two steps back. This year in Red Deer

Monarch house, a 65-unit affordable housing project, was recently sold to a developer for a condo conversion. Monarch house was originally built as part of an affordable housing strategy and, therefore, received funding from both the provincial and federal governments. To the same minister: what is your department doing to protect future affordable housing investments that use provincial dollars from receiving the same fate?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, if an agency or a municipality applies for affordable housing and that funding is granted, and if that agency turns their units into condos or into another means, they have to pay back that funding pro-rated.

Dr. B. Miller: My final supplementary is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. The task force on housing was really concerned about the fact that we'd like to see people flow through the housing continuum, but there's a reverse flow. In fact, we invented a new category, the nearly homeless, who are one rent raise away from being homeless. Apparently, officials in Red Deer and other places have expressed concern that no one knows anything about the homeless and eviction prevention fund. So it's not a question of not only the people in need not knowing, but officials don't know. What steps has your department taken to at least inform municipalities about this program and about the specific guidelines and criteria of this program?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, all of the 59 centres plus the two special centres in Calgary and Edmonton were aware of it from the moment it was announced to go to municipalities. I think we could very clearly identify the web page. There are three simple criteria: that they need assistance, that they qualify for some income support, and that they get in touch with us. Very clearly, we've asked for the director to look in every circumstance at the individual needs before adjudicating any of these circumstances. We've had outstanding results, and people are getting served on the basis of the needs they have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Diabetes Supplies

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we are hearing in the media of a growing incidence of diabetes among children. I have heard concerns from constituents about the considerable costs associated with purchasing diabetic supplies. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What assistance is available to Alberta families for the cost of diabetic supplies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Assistance for the cost of diabetic supplies is available to lower income Albertans through the Alberta monitoring for health program, which is administered for us by the Canadian Diabetes Association. Alberta monitoring for health is currently assisting approximately 21,000 Albertans with the cost of supplies to manage their diabetes. The program is intended to help people without health insurance and those most in need with some of the costs for diabetic supplies. These supplies include blood glucose strips, injection supplies, and lancets. People who are insulin dependent receive up to $550 per year. Those using oral medication receive up to $250 per year, and people who manage their diabetes through diet receive $100 per year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. I'll direct my supplemental question to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Could the minister outline the benefits available to Alberta families dealing with diabetes under the child health benefit?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, $23 million to the Alberta child health benefit program benefits 83,000 children who receive supplies, medical benefits through that program as well as 38,000 Alberta families that receive funding through the Alberta adult health benefit. So we look after the families who require income supports for medical needs for diabetes.

Mrs. Jablonski: My last question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. We know that with proper testing and treatment children with diabetes can achieve a good quality of life. As daily costs increase and eat away at family incomes, will the government consider increasing the income threshold for families to qualify for child care benefits?

Ms Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will. The budget and the publication of our business plan this year indicate that on July 1 there will be regulatory changes to increase the income threshold for eligibility, so you will see support increases at that time. We look forward to that. For those that are students, those income benefits will be applied in August, and subsequent to that, if there were requirements, they would also qualify for benefits if they were in that category of need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Climate Change

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On climate change Albertans are far ahead of this government. They understand that climate change is the crisis it is and are looking for leadership. The government's own public consultation on climate change indicated that nearly 90 per cent of people want to move quickly to absolute limits on greenhouse gas emissions, yet this government continues with the discredited intensity targets that favour industry. The Liberal plan would cap emissions by 2012. To the Premier: why did you spend millions of Alberta dollars if you already had a plan?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we took a leadership role as the government of Alberta with respect to climate change, such a leadership role that, in fact, the federal government worked very closely with the province of Alberta to establish a policy that's going to work with all Albertans in managing climate change over the next number of years. It is a good policy. We're going to continue to work in that direction. Other provinces are now looking to Alberta for the kind of legislation that we have and also for the fact that we took a leadership role back in 2002-03 by putting together a plan so that we can at least have a baseline measure, starting from a measurement so that we'll know how much ground we gain over the next few years.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This government prides itself on consulting with Albertans, but the evidence is that they ignore public values when it's inconvenient to government or to business, whether it's housing or FCSS and child services or, now, climate change. Again to the Premier: if not the public interest, the long-term needs of this province, whose interests are we making decisions upon?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's important that we clearly put into context the issues that we're dealing with in climate change from the public consultation perspective. I've indicated a number of times in the House that Bill 3 was the culmination of work that began in 2002. We immediately began a consultation with Albertans to develop a forward-looking plan. That forward-looking plan is in its final stages and will be released for initial consumption by Albertans over the summer and be ready for final adoption by government by this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The climate crisis is the most serious issue to face the planet this century, and carbon emissions are the most significant contributor. This government has spent millions of public dollars in the last five years convincing Albertans that climate change is just a theory and that serious commitment to this would seriously undermine our economy. Last month this minister boldly announced that climate change is real, but nothing has changed. As with previous Environment ministers it's business as usual in Alberta. Mr. Minister, your job is to protect the environment. Why won't you do your job?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thought that's just what I was doing. When I attended a meeting in Toronto with Environment ministers from across the country, I expressed to them exactly what I have expressed to this House. I expressed to the national media the fact that Alberta is the only jurisdiction in Canada that has come forward with legislation. Many of those ministers were interested in what we were doing. Some thought, like the hon. member, that we should just put some kind of a cap in place without any plan on how to get there. Fortunately, I think, for Albertans we don't believe in making promises that we can't keep. We believe in making promises that have a road to get to the goal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

West Fraser Timber Co. Ltd.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. What with low prices, trade disputes, mountain pine beetle, and other difficulties our Alberta forest industry has been through some tough times. However, this is no excuse to engage in inefficient and unsustainable practices that do not manage our forest resources in the best possible way. There have been many complaints that the West Fraser forestry management area in the Hinton region has been leaving good timber on the ground and burning fallen timber and then bringing in logs and chips from other FMAs to feed their pulp operations. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Will the minister please commit to stopping these inefficient and unsustainable forest practices in the West Fraser management area?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's concerns with the men and women who have lost their jobs, but I suggest that he spend a little more time outside of Edmonton and in the forestry zones. He'd realize that the pictures that he showed to the media today of a few slash piles burning is pretty common in every province and everywhere that forestry is done. I'm afraid he's confused forestry practice with a labour issue. I know that his party pays a lot of attention to unionized workers. I respect that, but he's mixing up two different issues here, sir.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly beg to differ. I would encourage the minister to take a look at the pictures and others that we have available on our website, the NDP website.

Certainly, the workers have a vested interest in sustainable resource practices. Workers with 35 years' experience have told us that they've never seen this kind of waste on the ground before. We're looking for resolution, and we're looking for sustainability in this issue. To the same minister: given that West Fraser's forestry management licence clearly states that the company must not waste its wood, why are we allowing West Fraser to continue these unsustainable forestry practices? I'd like him to look into it, please. Thank you.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member wouldn't know a sustainable forestry practice if it hit him over the forehead like a log.

I've been up to Grande Prairie twice in the last two weeks. I've been out in Kananaskis touring both cut areas and also reforested areas twice in the last two weeks.

Mr. Martin: Whatever the companies say. Right, Ted?

Dr. Morton: No. What we're concerned about is sustainable forestry. That means that the forest will be there in a hundred years. That's what the companies are concerned about. Their value depends upon a hundred years worth of wood. Sustainability is our goal, and West Fraser is committed to that just as strongly as we are. That's what our FMA requires.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's totally irrelevant and certainly not moving forward on this issue just to simply call names. I'm bringing something forward for the attention of SRD. They ignored it before. I'm asking the minister to take a look at this. It's not an unreasonable request. West Fraser is in negotiations with the government for the next 20 years for a forest management agreement. I'm asking him: please, will you ensure that the next forest management agreement will absolutely forbid these types of waste and unsustainability that we've seen thus far? I certainly do know the difference between a cut pile and a big pile of logs that are just wasted on the ground.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, these pictures could be taken everywhere and anywhere. Until we know where they're taken, I don't want to get into it. What I'll tell the Assembly and tell Albertans is that the sustainability of the forestry industry and the jobs you want to protect and the jobs you want to keep in this province depends upon a sustainable forestry. We're committed to that. Our FMAs require it. That's our policy, and we're going to stick to it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Farm Fuel Rebate Program

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent media reports have implied that there are problems with the Alberta farm fuel rebate program, and recent numbers released by Stats Canada contrast with the number of farmers receiving rebate in our province. To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: can the minister tell us why there's such a discrepancy in these numbers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The farm fuel rebate program is a very important program, indeed, similar to the other provinces. The biggest reason for the difference in the numbers is simple to explain. The rebate is given to individual farmers while Stats Canada numbers show the number of farms. As long as there are separate income tax papers filed, there can be more than one farmer receiving a rebate per farm. In fact, there could be two or three, depending on a corporate farm.

Mr. Marz: To the same minister: can the minister tell us, given that the rebate program was flagged by the Auditor General, what he has done to ensure that the problem is being dealt with?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta certainly has stepped up its efforts on new application. As I indicated in the Committee of Supply, we will be starting an internal audit. We are also doing a review of the different provinces to see if there are any processes or materials that we can use here. We are committed to a good process. Once we've taken a thorough look, we can determine how best to proceed with a full renewal, which we have committed to. This is only a good, common-sense process that we're going through.

Mr. Marz: My final question to the same minister: with the rising cost of fuel can the minister assure this House and Alberta farmers that this program will continue to be available to assist farmers in managing their income?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, with today's rising fuel costs this program is probably more timely than ever.

Mr. Speaker, for the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to imply in the media that there is widespread abuse of this program is wrong, unfair, and very mean-spirited to Alberta farmers. Let's be clear: the vast majority of the people in this program are still eligible. Claims that there could be $34 million a year in abuse is both negligent and wrong and unfounded. We will review the eligibility, and we will continue to support the Alberta farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we heard from trustees and school board officials in Edmonton and Calgary about the specific challenges facing school boards in the province. In 2005 the metro school board study provided important recommendations for ensuring that the needs of these unique boards would be met and that the quality of education for students in Edmonton and Calgary would not suffer. To the Minister of Education: how many recommendations from the metro school board study has your department implemented?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member in this session has been so fixated on numbers and twisting the facts and distorting the facts that I thought I'd take some time. This might take me the answer to the question and a couple of supplementaries, but I thought I'd engage the House and go through the Liberal plan and cost it out for us. So let's start here right now.

This particular hon. member has asked consistently in this House that we implement full-day kindergarten and junior kindergarten. The cost of that, Mr. Speaker, is $375 million. The hon. member has also called for province-wide school lunch programs, which is $354 million. We've also heard from the opposition . . . But I'll finish in my next supplementary.

2:10

The Speaker: We'll probably get to it.

The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try and go a little slower. A large part of the problem faced by school boards in Edmonton and Calgary relates to the renewed funding framework, Mr. Minister. When this rural Tory government was developing the renewed funding framework, it recognized that the needs of both the smallest and the largest boards in the province needed to be addressed, yet somehow when the framework was finalized, only the small board administration grant was retained. To the Minister of Education: why did your government choose only to provide support to small rural school boards and ignore the needs of the school boards in Edmonton and Calgary? Can you tell us the answer, sir?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the hon. member has his facts all wrong, and I'm not even going to respond to them because they're just wrong.

So let me continue on the Liberal plan for funding education, Mr. Speaker. The Liberals have called for a 5 and a half per cent increase in conditional grants, another $73 million. They want to eliminate school fees. This hon. member wants to eliminate school fees, $62 million. He also wants to eliminate fundraising, $68.9 million. The total cost of that plan is over a billion dollars. Then the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity consistently doesn't want to look at alternative ways of financing new school construction. I'll finish it in my next supplementary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, we'll get this one answered. The school infrastructure debt in Edmonton and Calgary is out of control, Mr. Minister. The schools for tomorrow strategy promised to end the last decade of school infrastructure neglect, sir. But now we learn that the strategy has been shelved. To the Minister of Education: since you have thrown away the latest school infrastructure plan, where is your plan for eliminating the growing infrastructure problem in Lethbridge, Edmonton, and Calgary?

Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, again, I said earlier: distorting the facts. Nobody shelved anything. The schools for tomorrow document is still there, so let's call facts a fact.

What I said earlier was that this opposition says that we should spend $3 billion and build all these new schools. And then there's the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who wants us to write a cheque for $2 billion to clear up the unfunded liability. Right now, he says. The total for that, Mr. Speaker, the total cost of the Liberal education plan is $6 billion. That equates to a 5 per cent sales tax increase. If they want to go out and campaign on a 5 per cent sales tax, let them go ahead.

The Speaker: Well, that's certainly innovative: a minister of the Crown outlining to the citizens of Alberta an opposition party's platform.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Recycling

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to protecting our environment, often the small steps we take every day are the most valuable, like using public transportation instead of driving individual cars or recycling used garbage containers. It's been reported in the media that fewer and fewer beverage containers are being returned for recycling every year. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Is this true, and if so, are the rates of recycling declining in Alberta even as more and more Albertans are becoming more environmentally aware?

Mr. Renner: Well, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it is true on both counts. First of all, small steps can collectively have a huge impact on the environment. But the member is also correct when he points out that the rate of return on recycling of beverage containers is going down at the same time as the number of beverage containers being sold in Alberta is rising rapidly. More than a billion containers were returned last year, but that only represents about 74 per cent of beverage containers like pop cans, only about 40 per cent return on milk containers, and about 90 per cent of beer containers. These numbers need to be improved, and it's time that we got on with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Mr. Minister, why is it that the number of dairy containers sent in for recycling is so low?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a question that I don't know that I have the capability of answering, but I can point out that dairy containers are exempt from the recycling container legislation which people are familiar with: having a deposit and returning the container to get their deposit back. Some have suggested that that might be one of the reasons why the numbers are so low. Others would suggest that it's simply an awareness and that they've made some significant progress. I don't know the answer to that question. It's one that I would dearly love to have the answer to.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental for the same minister. I want to thank you for the clarification, Mr. Minister. Clearly, this is an issue that needs more immediate action. Can you tell us what concrete actions you're planning to take to get a handle on this?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we need to continue to work with our partners in beverage container recycling. We need to work with the Dairy Council; we need to work with the brewing and the bottlers. But I think we can do more, and that's why I believe that this whole issue of beverage container recycling is a prime example of an opportunity for the newly formed policy field committees to get involved. One of the things that I would like to do – and I intend to very shortly – is introduce a motion in this House that will refer the issue of beverage containers to the all-party policy field committee for their recommendations on where we go from here.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 82 questions and answers today.

Speaker's Ruling
Tabling Committee of Supply Responses

The Speaker: I would like to advise all members of Standing Order 59.05(1), particularly the Government House Leader and the Deputy Government House Leaders. Standing Order 59.05(1) says, "Ministers must table answers to questions asked in Committee of Supply within 2 weeks." Standing Order 59.05(2) says, "The vote on the main estimates under Standing Order 59.04 shall not be held until the answers have been tabled in the Assembly as required under suborder (1)." It's not clear who's responsible for monitoring that answers must be provided within two weeks, but the chair has kept a running tally and believes that there are a few that have not been. So I would encourage such compliance so that we do not run into problems in the future, when and if the day of the voting is to occur and somebody then says that you can't vote because not all the answers are here.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate you raising that and bringing it to our attention. I can assure you that I as House leader have been diligent in my duties in reminding my colleagues that they are to table their answers to questions. You'll notice that every day we've had tablings of answers, and we're following up with the ones that remain.

Thank you.

The Speaker: One minister is saying: am I the one? Well, sorry. The difficulty the chair has is that the chair cannot determine that because under the rules it basically says that a minister will provide answers and the minister will agree to provide written answers. But if a minister during his estimates says, "Well, I answered the question in the estimates," and somebody on the other side says, "Well, no; you agreed to provide a written one," but, "No, no; I gave it in the Hansard," and somebody says, "No, no, no; the rule says that you must provide written ones," all of a sudden you're asking moi to make a decision, an interpretation on your part. So today I'd just simply advise: would you all be very diligent in what you have to do to uphold Standing Orders 59.05(1) and 59.05(2) so that we do not run into any problems, please. The onus is on the members.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Referral of Bill 2 to Government Services Committee

23. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly refer Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007, to the Standing Committee on Government Services for the committee's consideration, review, and comment and request the committee to report to the Assembly on or before the first week of the fall 2007 sitting.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A motion that doesn't need much debate. We yesterday moved Bill 1 to committee. Bill 2, again, is one of those bills that's robust enough and of sufficient degree of public interest with respect to the Conflicts of Interest Act that the public should have an opportunity to advise us as to whether we've got it right or whether there are other issues that should be addressed. It's most appropriate that the appropriate policy field committee have the opportunity to address the bill before we address it in Committee of the Whole, so I'd ask the House to allow this bill to be sent to the appropriate policy field committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to Government Motion 23, moved by the hon. Government House Leader, in my capacity as the deputy Official Opposition House leader and as the Alberta Liberal caucus democratic renewal committee chair. This motion is calling for the referral of government Bill 2, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007, to the Standing Committee on Government Services for the committee's consideration, review, and comment. It also sets a timeline for the said committee, for which I'm humbled to have been chosen vice-chairperson, to report back to the Assembly on or before the first week of the fall 2007 sitting.

Clearly, I would speak in favour of this motion. First of all, I sat on the Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee when this particular legislation came up for review before the all-party committee. The discussions we had and the exchange of ideas and thoughts were positive and most useful, in my opinion. It is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that all-party committees work. They do work for the most part because members from any side of the House tend to be more co-operative and less adversarial in comparison to what happens sometimes in question period or a bill debate. The idea behind having all-party committees is to allow all points of view to be expressed and evaluated. The results always yield better legislation and a much diminished chance of this legislation being rejected by the House when it reaches its floor. You see, if we co-operate at the front end of things, Mr. Speaker, it follows naturally that the suggested bill could cruise through all stages of debate afterwards with minimal resistance. Also, deliberations in committees are not as rushed, and members tend to be more thoughtful and objective, more thorough.

I for one and all members of my caucus do take these all-party committees seriously. As a matter of fact, we campaigned on that very idea in 2004, and having true legislative all-party committees remains an integral part of our democratic renewal work. The situation in the past, where the government did not see a need to have such forums because they had a majority in the House and the government caucus was sufficient, was a bad one. It was a bad situation, Mr. Speaker. The Legislature is here for a reason, and democracy cannot be served when the opposition and the hundreds of thousands of Albertans it represents are excluded from the decision-making or candid discussion tables.

I'm excited that the new Premier has followed through on one of his campaign promises to establish these policy field committees. I also want to acknowledge the Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader for their work and their negotiations and also acknowledge their legislative or parliamentary assistants who participated in those discussions for the hard work they put into these negotiations.

We need to ensure that these committees do work, and I know that the two House leaders from both sides – actually, the three, including the NDP opposition – had some discussions with their respective caucuses and tried to convince all the members in this House to buy into this new model. I know that our House leader on the opposition side of the House did not have any difficulty as compared, I think, to some members in the government caucus who initially expressed some hesitation or skepticism. But kudos still, and it's a day to celebrate that we now have these committees.

The challenge before us, then, is to make sure that they work and that they work well. This is not or ought not to be a public relations exercise. As I said, we are serious about these committees to the extent that we have recently requested formal training for the four vice-chairs, and I am one of them. In terms of reference we would like manuals and things like that, but above all, Mr. Speaker, we need a commitment from the government side that this is a genuine attempt at democratic renewal and that no voice or opinion will be ignored, ridiculed, or dismissed.

Bill 2 attempts to strengthen conflicts of interest laws. It goes hand-in-hand with Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, which was referred to the same committee yesterday with the passage of Government Motion 21. They both try to assure the public that politicians and senior government officials are not as bad as the public thinks, certainly not all, and that we are serious about restoring public faith and trust. Referring Bill 2 to the standing committee is a welcome development, and I am both thankful and excited.

I am also pleased that Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, is hopefully going to be referred to the sister committee on community services as the question of community treatment orders is a contentious and serious issue and deserves thoughtful consideration. So I am optimistic that that motion as well is going to pass.

However, what is alarming and displeasing, what takes away from my optimism, Mr. Speaker, with respect to these all-party committees is the fact that some government members today still think that these committees are just here to examine and discuss government business and government business only. They forget or choose to ignore the fact, as the Speaker reminds us from time to time, that all members of this House are equal and that no idea should be dismissed based on its caucus of origin.

We had an example earlier this session, Mr. Speaker, when my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora suggested that Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, sponsored by my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, be referred to the Community Services Committee, and unfortunately that idea was dismissed. It was rejected.

The Minister of Education tried to be very careful in his choice of words when he said that that idea was not needed, but you have members in this House like the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, for example, who said, "The policy field committees are just being set up, and they do have a lot of very important work to do with regard to government bills." He also says:

And I know that there are other bills that are going to be referred to policy field committees that are again government bills that – I think we really need to spend our time majoring on the majors, focusing on the things that, you know, the Alberta citizens would like us to focus on.

Mr. Speaker, I totally disagree. No idea should be dismissed before it's given a chance to be discussed, and for the suggestion to be made that we only major on the majors . . .

Rev. Abbott: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order. Normally we deal with points of order at this time. What's the point of order, sir? A citation, please.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Rev. Abbott: Yes. Standing Order 23(h)(i) and (j), imputing motives, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say right away that I believe you made a ruling on which bills should go to policy field committees and which bills should not, and the bill that he's arguing for right now, Bill 207, didn't even pass second reading. I believe you made a ruling recently that said that unless a bill passes second reading, it cannot be referred to a policy field committee. Perhaps you could just elaborate on that, and then maybe all of these false accusations he's making could be withdrawn or be of no consequence.

The Speaker: Well, I think the hon. members were making some statements that may have been erroneous in fact. There were statements made in the House yesterday by the chair with respect to a certain matter. The point is a valid point to be raised. Let's just go with the point that we have and the referral of this other particular bill.

Debate Continued

Mr. Elsalhy: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I disagree that these committees should only focus on, as the hon. member suggested, majoring on the majors because our ideas are not minor ideas. They're equally important. It's in the spirit of co-operation and serving Albertans that opposition members approach this new exercise, and we expect the same if not more from the government side.

Certainly, if things are turned the other way around and the government becomes the opposition, we are now faced with a situation of whether we give them a dose of their own old medicine, or do we improve upon what we have? I think this is a chance to build a new type of relationship between the government and the opposition.

I would respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that my quotation from Hansard was meant to demonstrate that some members of this government caucus are still not sure what the all-party committees are established for, and I would really feel upset and disappointed if that entire exercise was basically for those committees to discuss government business only.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, with respect to Motion 23 I support this motion wholeheartedly, and I look forward to more motions like it in the future, in the days to come. I'm also looking forward to when my particular standing committee convenes, and I am looking forward to working with the chair and the other members. For that opportunity, I thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very quickly, we went through a similar process yesterday with Bill 1. Bill 2 makes absolutely the same sense, I think, to be referred to a policy field committee. Again, I was on the same select committee, that worked very well. I see that the chairman is here in the session. He knows that there's one concern that I more or less had about the policy field committees. I'm glad they're under, but I think they should be treated the same as cabinet ministers in terms of the cooling-off period. I would hope that that would be an opportunity, to take a look at that in the policy field committee because I think that is a fairly important issue.

2:30

Mr. Speaker, I've said before that this is a work-in-progress. I don't think we should create problems. With all due respect to the previous speaker, I don't think we need manuals and that because I think we're going to be deciding as committees where we want to go. With the work-in-progress I don't know how you'd have a manual because I don't understand where we're going to go. I think the committee is going to have a fair amount of flexibility to determine their own way. I would not want to say: here's a manual; you have to do all of these things. That would defeat the purpose. I'm suggesting that as we go along – I said it yesterday, and I think this is what the member was referring to.

Yes, it's important to take a look at these bills. I certainly would support, again, as I did yesterday, that the committees have some flexibility to bring in other issues as we go along. I'm not going to prejudge that. I take it that that's what we think is going to happen, and we look forward to seeing it happen. If it's not, we can be critical after the point. But at this point I think it's a big positive step forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly thank the members for their support for the motion. I believe that all members of the different parties in the House have had a hand in drafting the original recommendations of the committee, which were tabled in the House last May. Those recommendations have now been reduced to the particulars that are set out in bills 1 and 2. I certainly have no difficulty in the motion to refer Bill 2 to the all-party committee to look at the specific drafting in those bills, and I look forward very much to receiving the input of all members of the House and further discussion on Bill 2.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, should I call the question?

[Government Motion 23 carried]

Speaker's Ruling Decisions of the Assembly

The Speaker: There was a point of order that was raised by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar during that last discussion, and I would draw the attention of both that hon. member and the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to Beauchesne 479, where "A Member may not speak against or reflect upon any determination of the House, unless intending to conclude with a motion for rescinding it." The discussion on the resolution with respect to the referral of Bill 207 to the committee was a determination of the House. The rule clearly says that a member must not speak against or reflect upon any determination of the House. It was the House that made that decision, so it's not anybody else's fault.

Secondly, with respect to these committees please remember that they're committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, and be prepared to serve on that basis. These are not government committees now. You have moved this away from the government. They're now committees of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 29 Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 29, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007. The Farm Implement Act regulates and provides licensing to dealers and distributors of agriculture equipment in Alberta. Its purpose is to provide Alberta farmers with warranty protection, availability of replacement parts, and minimum requirements of sales contracts. Under the current act dealers are persons operating in the ordinary course of business a retail establishment for the sale of farm equipment. Currently only dealers can sell and lease farm implements to a farmer in Alberta. This provision ensures that warranty service and parts are available to the farmer, which is good. However, the provision has served to restrict other sources, like banking institutions, from offering leasing options to farmers for their agriculture equipment.

Although the trend of leasing agricultural equipment is increasing, the sources for leasing are limited. Farmers have told us they want more choice and competition in their leasing providers. Mr. Speaker, Bill 29 addresses this concern by allowing financial institutions to provide leasing options directly to the farmer. Financial institutions will be required to purchase the equipment through the Alberta dealer network. Thus, warranty service and parts supply will continue to be provided by the dealer and distributor network.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 29 will lead to more harmonized farm implement legislation across the prairie provinces as Manitoba and Saskatchewan already have similar legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to say that the Farm Implement Board supports the provisions of Bill 29. The Farm Implement Board represents stakeholders from a diversity of agricultural sectors.

In conclusion, I can assure all hon. members that the majority of stakeholders are in support of this amendment as it allows more choice for Alberta farmers and the strong possibility of increased sales for Alberta implement dealers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 39 Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on behalf of.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me on behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West. It is my pleasure to introduce second reading of this bill.

In this province, Mr. Speaker, professional engineers and geoscientists who meet strict standards are represented by the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, otherwise known as APEGGA. APEGGA members and their work are governed and regulated under the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act, EGGPA if you wish. Engineering technologists are represented by the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta, otherwise known as ASET. ASET members are outside the regulatory umbrella of the act of APEGGA.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise to move second reading of Bill 39, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007. This amendment act proposes changes which reflect a new governance model for APEGGA and ASET have agreed to one act for two associations. This proposed model is in response to a request the Alberta government made of these two groups last year to work together to come to a mutually agreeable solution over the governance of Alberta's engineering and geoscience technology.

There are three main changes to the legislation that would be required. One is the designation creation. One change would be the creation of two new designations, ASET's professional technologist and APEGGA's professional licensee; the second one would be professional regulatory organization; and the third one will be ASET titles. The third item that the legislation needs to reflect is the protection of ASET's current titles used by its members. Protected titles show that these professionals have met the highest professional standard and must continue to adhere to these standards to be able to use this title.

Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation is supported by the professionals within both of their organizations. This is indeed an achievement long awaited by all Albertans and this Legislature.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: 2:40 Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2007-08

The Chair: The chair has been advised that 45 minutes have been designated for each department, so we will set the clock accordingly. If you go less, that's fine. If there is a need to change that, please advise the chair.

Energy

The Chair: We will start with the Department of Energy, and I will invite the hon. minister to now present his comments.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Initially what I would like to do is introduce the members of staff that I have accompanying me today. I have Dan McFadyen, the DM, and Doug Borland. Anne Denman, I believe, will be in shortly. David Breakwell is here, and John Giesbrecht. We found that our time here in committee has been for the most part very productive, and what I would like to say is that I want to take this time to compliment the staff, that have put a lot of effort into making this process work relatively smoothly.

There had been some comments by the Speaker with respect to questions and questions that perhaps haven't been answered. You know, we have done our best to comply with the written questions. There are some circumstances, I think, that were left, and we're not exactly sure. In some statements that members make could be half a dozen or 10 questions. We answer the questions on the spot that we can answer, and I'm certainly hoping that as the process goes along, members don't feel that they haven't been adequately addressed with respect to their questions. If there are some of them that are, you know – a number of questions that would happen to have been in a statement – it might be difficult for us to ascertain if we've done every one. So we're doing our best to keep up with that, and we have given written answers to the questions that we understand we've missed.

I think with that, I would encourage members to get involved, and we'll continue to do our part. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others that wish to participate in the debate?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, may I continue?

The Chair: You may.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you. You know, I can add a few comments, I believe, to some of the comments that were made and have been made in the process, and I've got a bit that I could add to it. Certainly, the way our industry is in the province of Alberta, we see that across the globe investors continue to seek opportunities to be part of Alberta's energy future, and activity in the energy industry has grown to record levels in recent times, Mr. Chairman, as you know.

All of this investment is for a good reason. In the energy industry Alberta remains the destination of choice for many investment dollars. Alberta is Canada's leading producer of petrochemicals. Alberta has the world's second-largest proven global crude oil reserve after Saudi Arabia, the majority of which is of course found in the oil sands, and Canada is also the world's largest supplier of natural gas. Alberta will play a key role in unlocking the natural gas resources in northern Canada and Alaska.

Mr. Chairman, while Alberta's conventional natural gas and oil are declining slightly, we're not running out of either commodity. Enhanced recovery of oil and gas through new and improved technology continues to help offset declining conventional production. As well, we're looking to build our renewable energy resources such as bioenergy.

Mr. Chairman, through such initiatives as the nine-point bioenergy plan we've been working with business across the province to create a made-in-Alberta approach to diversify our existing energy resources. Investment will ensure that Alberta continues to build the capacity and expertise needed to support an innovative and globally competitive energy sector, Albertans receive their fair share of resource revenues, and it will ensure that we remain attractive to investors in all facets of the Energy portfolio: conventional oil and gas, oil sands development, and unconventional and renewable energy sources as well.

To manage growth pressure brought on by increased oil and gas activity and the demand for electricity transmission infrastructure and generation and to bring about needed regulatory efficiencies, I'm introducing legislation, Mr. Chairman, that's going to separate the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board into two separate entities. The new energy resources conservation board will focus exclusively on the responsibility of the development of Alberta's resource well, and the Alberta utilities commission will oversee the distribution and sale of electricity and natural gas to Alberta consumers. These distinct boards of experts will make timely decisions to capitalize on opportunities in the public interest. The boards will have clear and distinct mandates, which will increase each board's accountability to both government and stakeholders alike.

Mr. Chairman, I see that there are some individuals, I believe, that would like to engage, so thank you very much for the opportunity to add a few comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do have quite a number of questions for the minister regarding his ministry and the budget allocation. I'd like to start with respect to some questions regarding climate change, which is certainly a topic which seems to be a very notable one in the public mind these days. Certainly, I know that the minister has spent a considerable amount of time addressing issues related to climate change recently.

I would like to ask him whether in his budget he can advise whether or not there have been specific allocations regarding the investigation of the feasibility of carbon capture and sequestration, whether or not there are specific resources being allocated through his department in terms of investigating the feasibility of these methods of carbon capture and sequestration, and whether he could update us on what plans and feasibilities there are with respect to not only the carbon dioxide but also nitrous oxide and NO₂, NO₃, sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, and various other pollutants which we commonly call the greenhouse gases.

The second question related to the whole climate change thing is that there has been a great deal of talk recently about the nuclear option as a possible method of reducing the greenhouse gases. Of course, the fission process, nuclear fission, certainly is something that does not create greenhouse gases. I'm wondering whether or not his department is actively exploring those things and, furthermore, whether he can advise whether or not there are any resources in the budget to look at the pluses and negatives of the nuclear option perhaps to be used in certain parts of the province of Alberta. Particularly, it has been touted as one of the possible solutions to a great deal of carbon dioxide production in the oil sands area, where we're burning huge amounts of natural gas in order to produce the bitumen and recover the bitumen.

So I will perhaps allow you to respond to those. I do have a couple of other questions subsequently, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Chairman, and thanks to the member. Certainly, the budget numbers with respect to CO₂, carbon capture and storage in particular – the member knows very well that this department and the government in general terms are very concerned with respect to meeting requirements. As you also realize, the hon. Minister of Environment has put in place some very progressive legislation with respect to setting targets. We intend to support our industries in meeting those targets.

We have a blue-ribbon panel that's a shared responsibility federally with NRCan and our Energy ministry in the province of Alberta. For budget purposes the cost of our blue-ribbon panel is estimated to be a million dollars, and those funds will be shared federally and provincially. So we do have some dollars put forward with respect to that issue.

If you're discussing things around methods for capture and storage, again we've got some excellent programs in place that work towards enhanced recovery and technology around enhanced recovery. Our department supports a number of programs, in the hundreds of millions of dollars in fact. I can't give you exact numbers because some of it has been used. I can get in there and find them if it's necessary. But we do have a number of programs with enhanced recovery and innovation and technology that will assist us to align ourselves as a government with the best practices in industry with respect to capture and storage of carbon.

The discussion around SO_x and NO_x and particulate matter and other flue gas emissions that we understandably need to control and regulate: most certainly, again, the Environment minister would be in a position to be able to give you, I think, a better breakdown with respect to what the government's doing on those issues. But we work with our industry players in the same manner as we have done on CO₂ with respect to decreasing and eliminating these particular problems.

We've done quite a bit of it, and industry has been very responsive over a number of years, Mr. Chairman, on those issues. We've done it by decreasing flaring and venting in the province. Over approximately a decade we've seen a decrease of 72 per cent of flaring and venting in the province of Alberta, well ahead of targets that we set for industry. When you look at being able to take that much flaring and that much venting out of the system over a period of time, it eliminates a tremendous amount of particulate matter that would have otherwise ended up needing to be addressed in another manner.

With respect to the nuclear issue, Mr. Chairman, again I want to make it clear that the government of the province of Alberta is neither a proponent nor a detractor from any nuclear project. At this point in time we do not have any applications in front of us to look at. We understand that there are proponents, and most certainly there are advantages, particularly in greenhouse gas emissions, with respect to electric generation and possibilities in some certain circumstances of hydrogen production and even the ability to use steam from nuclear generation. I think that there are some positive attributes that we certainly will be interested in exploring if and when proponents come to the table with applications. As far as our budget is concerned, we don't have anything in there that is particular to nuclear development in the province of Alberta, but I would say that, most certainly, our Alberta Energy and Utilities Board at this point in time has a capability and a capacity to deal with the upcoming project applications when and if they, in fact, surface.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps I could follow up on the nuclear energy question. Certainly, there have been a couple of ideas floated, at least, which are admittedly not hard and fast proposals at this point, but there have been some proposals by both Canadian and French concerns to become involved in the nuclear industry in the province of Alberta. It certainly would seem prudent to get ahead of the curve on that in terms of assessing what some of the particular costs to the taxpayers of Alberta might be in the long term. I'm specifically referring there to the costs and methodologies of storage of the waste from the nuclear plants. I would think it would be prudent for the Department of Energy to look into those issues. I wonder whether the minister could advise whether or not there are any resources, in fact, that would be allocated.

It seems to me that certainly the Department of Energy would be involved, but the Department of Environment must be as well. It would seem prudent for the government to explore what some of those ramifications might be and what costs might be incurred with respect to securing and storing those things because, as we know, those nuclear wastes are not only dangerous intrinsically, but there has also been speculation that they could become weapons for dirty bombs for criminal elements as well. So I wonder whether or not he could comment, perhaps, on that.

Another issue that I would like to raise with the minister is regarding the oil sands and whether or not there are sufficient resources, in his own opinion, allocated in the budget to ensure reclamation in the oil sands area in terms of the mining and the replacement of those lands and also ensuring that the settlement ponds that they have up in the area of Fort McMurray are properly rehabilitated and that the reclamation is being done in a proper manner. Are there resources there to ensure, in other words, that there's enforcement of the reclamation process in both the landfill area and in terms of the ponds that they use for retention of the waste waters from the bitumen recovery process?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, the member brings up an issue that's at the same time interesting to us, of course, as a government that's going to be responsible at the end of the day to, you know, be involved in and be mindful of any of the applications that would come forward with respect to a proponent of nuclear or, for that matter, any other opportunity for energy facilities in the province.

When we discuss the situation around what we do with spent fuel, the member indicates that this is waste. I'm suggesting to you that that's, again, a look in the rear-view mirror. When we look ahead with respect to the nuclear industry, most certainly spent fuel today is new fuel tomorrow. When you take a look at some of the opportunities that have presented themselves for that industry and governments globally to take a look at this fuel source, we're already seeing some very, very good results from recycling of spent fuel. The new generation 3 nuclear reactors in fact use a lot less uranium in the first place, and secondly, these companies are now able to recycle and reuse a lot of that fuel.

The spent fuel issue is not one that is a responsibility of the provincial government. In Canada the federal government has the sole responsibility to take care of spent fuel. They take care of the storage and the security of spent fuel in Canada, and we presume that that would continue. Constitutionally I believe that still remains the case.

The reclamation projects. I hope I'm right, but I believe that the member is asking about two different issues. One of them would be mining, so the reclamation of mined area, and then the reclamation of tailing ponds, which is a separate issue, really. In fact, if you look at the track record of oil sands players today, although there are many people that would indicate that they don't feel like the progress is fast enough, if you take a look at some of the reclamation that's been done, I think they've done a very, very good job. There is certainly tangible evidence of the reclamation that's being done now. The applications that come forward stipulate that reclamation is part of the application, and the dollars need to be in place to do that. I'm suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that indeed we are standing in very good stead. We don't believe that we would leave Alberta taxpayers responsible for large reclamation and cleanup costs with respect to oil sands in the future.

Tailing ponds. Most certainly, again, in some of the development that's coming forward, the newer developments: less water used in the first place, lower amounts of tailings that would end up in tailing ponds, and a lot of work being done by the industry to assess their situation with respect to tailing ponds and how they will move ahead to do the reclamation that's necessary. Again, a lot more water being recycled. I think, as things move along, a very good job being done of the reclamation of tailing ponds.

So the short answer, Mr. Chairman, is: yes, we believe that we do have the economics in place to take care of this in the future.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've just got a couple of points. As I'm reviewing your estimates for 2007-08, page 134, I just question the aspect of the bonuses and sales of Crown leases. If you look at your budget for 2006-07, you had just about $1.5 billion budgeted, but if you look at your forecast for that year, you've got $2.4 billion. Yet when we look at your estimates for 2007-08, you're at $1.2 billion. So I'm just wondering why the discrepancy, especially when we had an actual reading in 2005-06 of $3.4 billion. Do you foresee that we're going to downgrade that much on that line item from revenue?

On the aspect of coal royalty I notice that in 2005-06 for the actual we had $11 million, but we're estimating $15 million, yet we forecast in 2006-07 $16 million. With the resurgence of coal especially the metallurgical coal in West Yellowhead is moving along a lot better now. Then the other aspect that we're talking about: gasification of coal. Wouldn't you think that we would be able to move those figures up more, or is it just a caution on estimates?

If you switch to Budget 2007, Managing Our Growth, the business plans, I guess that I'm sort of wondering about the aspects of core business 4, where you're talking about the regulation of energy development by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. I'm getting some of the feedback in my riding now on the aspect of the disparity on the funding. They're saying that the government isn't funding enough. I know this has been questioned a number of times. I'm just wondering whether we're looking at that now that we're moving ahead with the different aspects, trying to come to more of a balance on the funding factor with the aspect of industry and government. So if you can give me an outline on that.

The other one that I was concerned about and wondering about was the aspect of the competitiveness of electricity. With the hon. Minister of Environment moving forward with Bill 3 and setting up intensity targets and that, a lot of people are being led to believe that we are going to have very high-priced electrical utilities now, and I'm just wondering where we are on that, especially with your goal 5 on page 138, where you're stating: "Maintain a competitive market framework that provides Albertans with competitively priced and reliable electricity." I'm just wondering where we are with that.

As we see now with different aspects coming up in the province, with Enmax in Calgary looking at building a natural gas plant and sort of centralizing it in the area where it's closer to the users, I'm just wondering if that is what we're looking at as a government: to more or less centralize a lot of these different facilities to feed the market from the close proximity of the power plant.

If I can move on to Grande Cache, the Milner Power station there. With the changes in Bill 3 I'm just wondering: is there some way that we can work out some kind of a system now so that we can burn some of the tailings that are produced from the mining of Grande Cache Coal Corporation, that ships metallurgical coal to the Far East? With this new Bill 3, with the emission standards that we're setting now, they feel that to start with, it's going to cost them a considerable amount when we go into the 1st of July with that.

If you can give me some answers, I'd greatly appreciate it. Thank you.

Mr. Knight: Well, I want to thank the member very much. I like the 12-gauge approach as well. Like the shotgun approach, it works really well.

I've got to go back to the future here with respect to the bonuses and sales of Crown leases. I think he sees a decline in the numbers with respect to what we're going to receive in bonuses and perhaps the idea that somehow there needs to be an answer to the fact that this is decreasing. If you go back to '05-06, I certainly agree: $3.4 billion. Moving ahead, we have numbers on the '07-08 projection here of $1.2 billion. I think that what we need to probably explain is that, most certainly, there have been, you know, larger numbers of hectares sold at certain times, and most certainly the price per hectare varies widely. That is, I think, a reflection of the energy industry itself.

Forecast numbers, for instance, in '06-07: what we're looking at is about $640 an hectare, and the '07-08 estimates are $444. So we're down, certainly, something in the order of 30 per cent or so just on the value per hectare. There are, you know, reasons and explanations for that. I think that what we probably see in this is that in general terms, perhaps, industry feels that there are cases where some of the maybe sweeter pieces of real estate are already in play, and perhaps they feel that on a go-forward basis some of the real estate that they're bidding on may not be quite as attractive.

That's an open-market decision that players will make, and most certainly it adds to our revenues. Again, I don't think that we've ever been in a position in the province where we have actually counted on those dollars coming in on a continuing basis. We realize that they fluctuate and make adjustments accordingly.

Coal royalties. Again, you know, they've gone kind of up and down, and that's depending on the amount of coal production and locations where it's produced. The coal royalties have not really changed drastically in the province in any of these estimates that we have here: from $11 million to $15 million. I wouldn't consider that to be really anything drastic. The member asks: why aren't we taking into account the fact that there may be more coal production and more opportunity for royalties in the future? Certainly, we're optimistic that gasification and the use of coal and the value of coal in our value-added and value maximization in the province will generate more interest in coal and, most certainly, generate more coal production. At an appropriate time, when we actually see a process that's on the ground and working, we certainly would take that into consideration and adjust our figures appropriately.

In the core business the member indicated that it looks like there's a disparity in funding to the EUB, and some of his constituents are questioning that. We've increased the funding to the EUB about $4.5 million in our budget numbers. That actually translates to an increase in capability of the EUB that's quite a bit larger than that because, of course, there is an industry component to the EUB's funding. Most certainly, we've been, I think, very successful in this go-round, in this budget, and we will see some additional members on the ground with respect to compliance and that part of the EUB's business. We look forward to moving ahead and expanding their capacity and their role to continue meeting the requirements of Albertans.

The access and competitiveness in electricity and distributed generation or generation that'll occur nearer the load. Most certainly, Mr. Chairman, all of the generation that we see coming forward is required in the province of Alberta. There was a comment about Enmax. They're talking about a 1,200-megawatt generator someplace in the southern part of the province of Alberta. We think it's a tremendous asset for Albertans, and it will be part of the mix that we need. We look forward to the possibility, say, by 2025 of maybe requiring something in the neighbourhood of 8,000 new megawatts in replacement and additional generation capacity. So we're certainly very pleased to see companies that are looking forward and being productive and positive with respect to that issue.

The Milner tailings continue to be problematic not only for the company that's there but certainly for the Department of Environment and for ourselves in Energy. The answer that I can give the member is that although we haven't anything about Milner coal, particularly, in our numbers, it's the policy of our government to continue to work with these industry players. We will do that with respect to Milner and attempt to achieve a solution that's good for the generation of electricity in the area and, certainly, meets the requirements of Albertans on an environmental standard.

Thank you.

The Chair: Others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a couple more questions for the minister relating to the budget resources that might be allocated particularly in the field of surface disturbance. I'm thinking of habitat that is somewhat valuable as wildlife habitat and wondering whether the minister could comment on whether or not there are resources in the budget allocated to ensure that, number one, there is minimal disturbance of wildlife habitat in instances where wells or pipelines or access roads are placed and, secondly, whether or not the same could be said with respect to aspects of reclamation when wells are abandoned and whether or not those standards are being developed by his department and are evolving.

I know that in the past the policing of that has been largely left up to the landowners at the time of granting access for surface rights and that there's monetary compensation for disturbance of things like natural habitat. I'm thinking particularly of some of the areas of eastern Alberta, where there are large numbers and the spacing units on the natural gas wells have been reduced considerably and where there have been lots of access roads put into large tracts of prairie land which are valuable wildlife habitat, in some cases for endangered wildlife.

I'm wondering whether or not the minister could advise of the current state of the art and whether or not resources are being increasingly put into that field to ensure that there is proper minimization of the disturbance in the initial instances. I know that in some cases trails are now used for shallow gas drilling rigs rather than building roads – I think that's a very positive step – and also things like using natural grass seeds instead of nonnative species, which tend to be very invasive into the surrounding environment.

I wonder if the minister could advise whether he has specific resources in the budget to keep on top of those things and to police those issues.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, the member brings up some very important topics and questions that Albertans not only want the answer to but, certainly, have a right to have answered. We continue to work with industry and Albertans and landowners and the government to address those questions and their concerns.

The discussion around surface disturbance. Of course, I can give you some very good examples of what we've done and what we've done in conjunction with industry players. If you go into the area southwest of Grande Prairie into an area that's got some sensitive habitat for a number of reasons, probably caribou being the primary one, we have industry players now that, say, five years ago or 10 years ago would have gone in and set up situations where they'd put six leases in place to drill half a dozen wells, and they now sit with two rigs on one pad and drill nine wells off a single pad using two rigs. I mean, those are the kinds of things that we're promoting.

Most certainly, when these applications come forward, the resources that we have there are, basically, resources that we use on a continuing basis. It's part of our budget with respect to the EUB both from the point of applications and licensing and permitting going ahead but also on the policing side, after the fact. We do have resources there.

The habitat reclamation. Again, you spoke about an area on the eastern side of the province. I certainly agree with you that there are some very sensitive areas there. Again, I know that many of the companies that operate there now are attempting to do very similar things: reduce the footprint. They do it dramatically by sitting on single pads and trying to access as much of the subterranean mineral deposit as they can from a single surface location. There are instances where there are up to nine, 10, and a dozen directional wells from a single surface pad.

Conoco, I believe, and their predecessors in the caribou habitat region, where it's a bit sensitive, have actually invested about $7 million recently to reclaim and restore caribou habitat in areas where they were not even actively working. Most certainly, you know, I think that we encourage these kinds of investments by players. We don't have at our discretion at this particular point in time a pool of resources to go out and do that kind of work, but we certainly work with the companies that are employing some of their capital with respect to that issue.

CBM and the roadways and minimizing footprints. Again, the member is right to say that there are things being done and to ask what more can be done and what interest this particular ministry is taking with respect to financing these kinds of positive developments in the industry on the surface and on the habitat and species that tend to be under pressure or at risk.

The land-use framework is most certainly led by SRD, but I think it will address many of those questions when we come to a report with respect to a land-use framework. Again, SRD is out in the countryside, but certainly in all of these consultations with Albertans the Department of Energy is participating actively. Of course, the dollars that we have in our budget to support our staff and to support the EUB find their way into that type of participation that does continue to address the requirements of Albertans with respect to those issues.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, I have one other speaker on the list, and the time is up at 3:25 unless the committee desires to have the full question-and-answer taken. I'll assume that's what we want, and I'll take one more question and one more answer.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. If the minister can refer to Budget 2007, managing growth pressures, I just want to sort of go back onto the same subject that the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill was talking about. We're looking at orphan well abandonments. If we look at our budget for 2006-07, it was $13 million, but actually you spent $13.5 million, yet you're forecasting the aspect of your estimate for 2007-08 at only $13 million. Given what we had in activity in the oil field over the last couple of years, I'm just wondering why you lowered the amount of money to move into that part of your department.

Then I guess another quick one is on the Alberta royalty tax credit. Being that that was finished December 31, 2006, have we had much feedback on that now that it has been discontinued?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you. Certainly, the member points out an interesting situation there with respect to the orphan wells. I've answered this question, as a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, in some discussion previously. In '06-07, it is true, there's $13,500,000 that was allocated to the orphan well abandonment program, and then it declines, or it appears to decline, to $13 million in '07-08. The fact is that there were some special circumstances in '06-07, and the $500 million was moved into that program to fortify the program to take care of some specific pieces of business. Our normal budget had been $13 million. We continue to put that money into the program on an annual basis. The anomaly that he sees there was a one-time boost to the program in the year '06-07 to account for some specific work that had to be done.

The second question around the ARTC. The legislation with respect to that is still to be passed in this session by Finance. I believe that that will be raised in presentations during the royalty review that's now before the public.

I believe those are the answers to those particular questions. Thank you.

The Chair: I will now invite the officials to retire from the Assembly so the minister of transportation may have his come in.

Infrastructure and Transportation

The Chair: The next item for consideration of the committee is the budget estimates for the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. I will now invite the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to present his opening remarks.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Before I begin, I'd like to introduce members of Infrastructure and Transportation's executive management committee and the senior officials that are present here this afternoon. On my left here we have my deputy minister, Jay Ramotar. On my immediate right are Winnie Yiu-Young, our chief financial officer, and John Engleder, regional director for Peace River, representing transportation and civil engineering. Up in the gallery we have Shaun Hammond, assistant deputy minister with transportation safety services, looking after our traffic safety plan, and Bob Smith, assistant deputy minister looking after our properties division. We have Barry Day, assistant deputy minister looking after all of our capital projects. We also have Jerry Bellikka, communications director, and my executive assistant, Warren Chandler. Maybe they should stand, and then you'll see how tall one is compared to the other. I just like joking with them, Mr. Chairman, because they're such good fellows, you know.

Alberta has one of the best transportation networks in North America, and our province also has one of the strongest economies in Canada. The link between transportation and economic prosperity is clear. It is also clear that the ability to move people and goods safely and efficiently is vital to our prosperity. Roads and infrastructure play a critical role in the success of our province and Albertans' quality of life. It's also clear that this province has seen incredible growth over the last few years. Since 2001 our population has ballooned by more than half a million people, and in the last five years, the number of cars and trucks on our roads has increased by more than 300,000. This has helped drive our economy, but it's also taken a toll on our roads.

As Alberta grows, my department is working to face the challenges of managing that growth. We are examining the state of our core infrastructure with a critical eye and developing an action plan to deal with the challenges. Building and maintaining roads is directly related to our government's priorities of managing growth pressures and providing safe communities. We recognize the importance of infrastructure and transportation in the success of our province. As a government we are making a huge commitment to our capital plan with a three-year target of more than $18 billion. That's a level of investment this province has never seen before. On a per capita basis it's the highest in Canada.

The estimates I am presenting today are closely tied with the capital plan. This year the ministry's estimates to be voted will be approximately $3.2 billion for expense and equipment/inventory purchases, a nearly 16 per cent increase from the '06-07 forecast. Of the $3.2 billion, $372 million is for noncash items such as amortization, nominal sum disposals, and consumption of inventories. When the noncash is excluded, the ministry has a $2.8 billion spending target for programs. Four hundred and twenty million dollars is primarily for highway rehabilitation and maintenance. Approximately $297 million will go towards provincial highway maintenance and systems and $124 million into highway rehabilitation. Almost $41 million will go into transportation safety services to fund things like vehicle and driver safety programs, monitoring of the commercial carrier industry, and traffic safety initiatives, including implementation of the new traffic safety plan, which is one of Infrastructure and Transportation's three mandates.

The traffic safety plan is designed to reduce the number of people killed or injured on our roads. On average 400 people die in collisions on Alberta highways each year. This simply has to change. We are working to change driver attitudes and save lives. Part of this involves key initiatives to help prevent collisions, build safer roads, enforce traffic laws, and talking to Albertans about traffic safety. Some key aspects of the framework being developed for the plan include a focus on community traffic safety, co-ordinated enforcement, legislation based on best practices, and an emphasis on the safest engineering practices. More than $1 million will go towards the Transportation Safety Board.

A key element of the ministry's program expense is capital support to municipal infrastructure. More than $1.2 billion in grants will be provided to Alberta municipalities in '07-08. These grants help municipalities fund their priority infrastructure projects. In most cases the decisions are local. Using this money, local governments can direct funding at projects, including roads, bridges, public transit, water and waste water, and emergency services.

Over the next three years the ministry will provide $422 million for the Water for Life strategy, of which $103 million is specifically for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo; $159.3 million was approved in the '07-08 budget, $35 million for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo; $174 million was approved in '08-09, $34 million for Wood Buffalo; $88.3 million was approved in '09-10, $34 million for Wood Buffalo.

Also included in the ministry's voted expense category is $360 million for government operations. This funding enables the ministry to maintain the day-to-day operations and maintenance of government-owned properties as well as leases, the Swan Hills Treatment Centre, and capital accommodation projects.

Funding for natural gas rebates in '07-08 is budgeted at $477.3 million, a $114 million increase from the '06-07 forecast. This reflects the projected increase in natural gas prices.

The ministry's capital investment budget will be nearly $1.5 billion in '07-08, an increase of $549 million over the '06-07 forecast. Approximately $201 million will help fund several major projects such as the Royal Alberta Museum's renovation and expansion, the first phase of the construction of Edmonton's new remand centre, and the Brooks crop research greenhouse.

Notably, Infrastructure and Transportation will invest in provincial highway systems and the strategic economic corridor: $626 million is allocated for the strategic economic corridor investment initiative, including the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads and the north-south trade corridor.

I want to take this opportunity to clear up any possible misunderstanding about the cost of construction on Anthony Henday Drive southeast. The '05-06 provincial budget provided $83.3 million for this P3 ring road, but the Infrastructure and Transportation annual report for that period shows an expenditure of $118 million. The additional $34.7 million recognizes the actual amount of work completed by the end of March '06. The $34.7 million does not represent a cost overrun as the cost of this project is fixed. This amount will be reduced from the future budgets to stay within the projected cost.

Continuing with program expenses, more than $385 million will be used for provincial highway systems. To clarify the funding for provincial highway systems, it includes constructing and enhancing provincial highways and bridges so we can continue to meet the transportation needs of Albertans and others who drive through our province.

Infrastructure and Transportation plays a key role in managing Alberta's growth pressures. There has never been a greater need in our province for well-designed, efficient, and safe infrastructure, bridges, and highways. As our province grows and our economy continues to thrive, we are looking ahead to what Alberta's infrastructure needs will be many years down the road. Through careful planning and strategic investment in key projects, we can ensure that Alberta continues to be an economic leader in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had five subjects, but I found that one of my colleagues is going to be asking questions on two of them, so I'll narrow my comments and questions to the minister to three specific subjects. First, I see through the capital plan in this budget that almost $2 billion is being spent on the ring roads for Edmonton and Calgary. I was a little dismayed, I guess, that something more wasn't done in the government's general business plans, perhaps the minister of infrastructure's plans, to help deal with urban sprawl because we know that Calgary is one of the largest cities in the world now, covering the most land, not necessarily population. I was wondering if the minister had considered or if there are plans in the future to come up with something to deal with urban sprawl.

Perhaps instead of building another ring road around the city of Calgary 10 years from now and another ring road around the city of Edmonton 10 years from now, if something is considered or planned to address expanding the light rail transit system within those two cities so that they grow up rather than grow out – I know that in comparisons that I've read between Los Angeles and New York, New York has no more space to grow. It continues to grow up, and they continue to expand their light rail transit, add more buses, add more taxis. But Los Angeles has all the room in the world to grow, so they build now almost every eight years a new ring road around that city. When you watch where the road rage happens and the awful traffic jams, it tends to be Los Angeles, where they just keep building more roads, which encourages more people to drive and causes more traffic issues. I'm wondering why the minister didn't address it in this budget or if he plans on developing some sort of transportation strategy that limits urban sprawl and encourages cities to grow up.

The second category or question. I've argued for several years now that this province needs an extensively developed trade and transportation strategy. I know that there's a lot of discussion around the trade corridors and developing the north-south trade corridor. But I haven't seen in any business plans for any department something that actually addresses where the economies are being built, what types of economies are being built, and where the goods that they're producing need to be traded to. It seems to me hard to develop a complete transportation strategy unless you know where goods need to go, where they're coming from, and what's exactly being produced, what sorts of markets are you reaching to.

You can build roads for the sake of building roads because there are high traffic counts, but the essential principle, I believe, of economics is that the economy will build where you build the infrastructure. If you build a road, eventually an economy will build on top of that road. We've seen it with highway 2. I mean, twinning that highway and growing it substantially meant more businesses locating along there. The communities along there grew.

I've argued over and over again that a major transportation corridor from Fort McMurray down to the U.S. border along the east side of the province would help generate a new economy there as you saw small businesses locate there, more transportation occurring. I'm wondering where – because I haven't seen it in the ministry's business plans – a trade and transportation strategy is going to be developed that will take this province through the next 10 years to ensure that infrastructure is appropriate and that we guide where the economy is going to grow instead of just responding to it.

My third subject matter. The question I have is for a long-term plan for saving money when the province is hot and the economy is growing quickly and then spending money when it's slow. I mean, we know, and with a substantial increase to the ministry's budget, that we have an incredibly fast-growing economy. Now that we're trying to build all of the infrastructure to meet the demands of that economy, we see costs spiralling out of control, a 20, 30 per cent increase on projects that are approved one year and then not built until the next year because the economy is so hot.

It seems that if we're building a proper infrastructure and transportation strategy, it would serve us well to save money during these hot times and pool it, and then when the economy slows down and we're not competing with the private sector for all of our infrastructure demands, we can build all sorts of roads, projects, schools, hospitals, whatever it is we need for five years out. Then when the economy does speed up, we've got a five-year window of extra space, extra infrastructure, extra transportation to fill up before we find ourselves in a situation where we wind up competing against the private sector for our construction and infrastructure demands.

Those are three things that concern me that are missing from the ministry's business plans and not reflected in the budget, and I'm wondering if the minister can address those three issues.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, hon. member. I do have to start out by saying to your first question, actually, that we addressed that quite heavily within our budgets and not just Infrastructure and Transportation but government in general. How we do that is we grant. This year alone in Infrastructure and Transportation's budgets there's $1.2 billion in grants that go to municipalities, most of that totally unencumbered, for them to spend on whatever pressures they have. The AMIP grant alone is $600 million. That's strictly to be spent on infrastructure. Cities can spend it on light rail transit. They can spend it on whatever infrastructure they need to try to stop the urban sprawl, as you spoke.

There are some of our cities right now that in their planning projects – and they've talked to us on that and stuff – are getting a lot higher density. It's still not the densities that you talk about, like New York has, with the real high-rise stuff, but I'll give you a for instance. Calgary right now on any plans that they approve – any developer that walks in to them needs to have a minimum of a nine-unit per acre density in order to get a development approved.

To talk more about what we do to plan for economic growth or where stuff is moving in the province, I will admit that we're in a catch-up mode a little bit. Our economy has been so hot that we have areas where things have even changed on our three-year plan, stuff that's been on the plan that you try to get to to build a road. There is just so much pressure that comes from an influx of people and high growth in certain areas that you all of a sudden have to just put all of your resources there almost just to try to keep up.

We also have really worked on supporting the port of Prince Rupert, for example, because we know how important that port will be for Albertans. Our biggest market that we have to go to now because we are so efficient in Alberta, and we don't have a high enough population to consume what we're capable of producing – I'm not just talking in agriculture and food here. I'm talking in our oil and gas industry and in our manufacturing industry. Without ports that we can get to and roadways to get to those ports, we won't be able to ship our produce.

I understand a little bit of what you're saying: if you build it, they will come. We're looking at that because with the U.S. now negotiating also on opening Wild Horse down by Manyberries crossing – Havre on the American side, Manyberries on our side – we're keeping a real close eye on that. We could have a real trade corridor there, possibly, with highway 41. I was just down there last week, actually, and drove some of that highway just looking at, you know: how much traffic will this highway take before we have to spend a lot of money here? At this point the traffic count isn't there, but we're kind of looking at that.

We're also looking at our policies: is the traffic count the only thing that we look at, or can we broaden that some way? There are some roads that don't have traffic count, but they have a different makeup of traffic or they have other kinds of issues that say, you know, it really does justify upgrading here even though the counts aren't there. We're looking at ways of doing that.

On putting money away. One thing about Infrastructure and Transportation – and I guess it's because of our capital plan side – is that we actually do get to lapse money. If we don't spend all our money in our budget this year, it's not like most, where it has to go right back to Treasury. We can go get special permission and lapse money in our capital plan to use next year.

Some of the reason for that is because as busy as our economy is and with cost escalations the way they are, we really do cross-check our RFPs after they come back in and say: are these prices too high? If it absolutely doesn't make sense, we'll cancel the project rather than get a 40- or 50-cent dollar value on a program because the prices are just too high. We'd rather lapse that money for the next year.

We're also working on different policies to change things a little bit, where we can use the capacity of municipalities right now to maybe help us build roads, which wasn't part of government policy in the past. We didn't think it was a level playing field to allow government-owned equipment, that was bought with taxpayers' dollars, to bid against private enterprise. We're looking at that now because of how busy it is, saying, you know, that if some of these municipalities have capacity, let's maybe let them go ahead and do some building.

I think I answered your three questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, I've got a number of questions, but I'll just take them one at a time, and then the hon. minister can answer them one at a time. The first one was just touching exactly on what he mentioned last, and that is that it is very difficult to access equipment and personnel to build roads and build infrastructure. From time to time municipalities actually have equipment that's maybe not as busy as the private contractors', and there are municipalities out there – and I think the hon. minister knows one that I'm talking about – where municipalities would join together, do a joint project, and use municipally owned equipment and municipally hired personnel to be able to build these projects and actually come under budget or under the costs that they would otherwise have. Not that they can do it more cheaply, but some of the costs are inflated because of the huge amount of work, not too much competition, so the costs get out of control. Municipalities can get in there and maybe do the work cheaper.

I'll just ask the one question first, and then we'll go back and ask more questions. What is the ministry doing right now to maybe enable some of these municipalities to do some of their own work with their own equipment?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The one particular project he's talking about I'm pretty familiar with. Our current policy is going to allow that one to happen. To expand a little more on that, it was a two-year project and not that big of one. They qualified for resource road program money, and then when the second year came along to do the project, the cost escalation was as high as their total amount of grant money. By the same token – and this is a town – their adjoining municipality came to them said: “You know what? We can still do that same job,” because they were partnering on the job anyway, “with our own equipment at the same price or awfully close.”

Of course, no municipalities, I don't think, or very few, have any paving equipment anymore, but a lot of them have grading and setting that up. In this particular case it's going to work out very well for them because the adjoining county has capacity, they have equipment, and they will go in and do it for last year's price for them.

What are we doing right now? We're working on different policies to see how far we can go. Right now we're just asking them to bid roads in their municipalities. We may let them go further than that. We're just discussing: can we actually make it work? Can we let them tender right against private enterprise? Because private enterprise, the private companies, are real dead set against this. In areas where they don't have enough, they're saying: “Okay. We'll let the municipalities build roads there.” To actually get them to bid right against them on projects, we haven't quite got that far yet, but we're working on it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd like to take the minister back to my previous question on urban sprawl and the notion or concept of building fewer ring roads or having to build them less often and providing more incentives to municipalities to improve their bus routes, their light rail transit, taxis, whatever other form of transportation you can develop. The minister had mentioned that there were grants to municipalities totalling $1.2 billion, which were unencumbered, and they were allowed to spend where they liked, how they liked.

I'm wondering. When the province turns around and helps support the development of ring roads and those municipalities receive that $1.2 billion so that the city is allowed to continue to expand, where would be the incentive for them to develop more light rail transit or build more infrastructure instead of building new subdivisions and continuing to expand? The entire intent of my question was: how will the department help effect the change in thinking in some of those larger centres to encourage them to grow up instead of encouraging them, giving them the unencumbered freedom to continue to develop new subdivisions around the city, eating up good farmland, and then building ring roads for them, which allows that to happen?

The other question. The minister had mentioned that there was a lot of pressure right now and that costs were escalating on projects, but they were trying to contain those costs. My question essentially was around: where's the policy or the plan or the strategy laid out in the business plans or in the budget to help contain that, to plan for the future so that there's long-term savings and then long-term projected spending when the economy turns down? I understand the pressures in the situation we're in now, and I know that there's not much we can do about it right now because what happened in the past is the past. But I'm wondering how we're going to affect the budget cycle so that over a 10-year period we can spend when the economy is slow, and we can get stuff built for 80 cents on the dollar as opposed to now when we're spending a dollar twenty to get a dollar's work done. How are we going to come up with a long-term plan to make sure that we don't wind up in the same situation 10 years from now where, I'm sorry, there are pressures, and we need to spend this money?

Mr. Ouellette: I have to tell you that we have some long-term plans. We run them internally. We run a three-year plan externally, and we have a five-year, a 10-year, and a 20-year plan internally. Our job as Infrastructure and Transportation is to try to get the very best value for the taxpayer's dollar but build as much as we possibly can within that. I agree as a Member of the Legislative Assembly and I believe that if we actually could set money aside for when there's a downturn, we could get twice as much work done for the same money plus keep all of our people working.

My job as Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation doesn't go there, though. I will always work towards that with the greater caucus and with our Treasury Board and our Finance committee. The job of actually putting money away today is between our Treasury Board and our Finance committee, so for me to say that Transportation and Infrastructure is making plans that way, I don't think that's our job. I think our job is to try to make sure that your constituents can safely travel wherever they have to. Also, for the businesses in your constituency we have to have roads for them to be able to transport stuff out. Today that's getting very hard to do with how busy our economy is and with the amount of dollars we have. So I'm almost working against what I'm talking about because I'm there at Treasury Board and at Finance saying: I need more money just to satisfy the growth of our province.

What was the other question? Oh, ring roads. I'm also in a difficult position because I worked with the hon. member on a committee that really believed in having a rural lens and making sure that anything we do that could affect parts of the plan we were working on would be looked at by every department before they made decisions. We also looked in that particular report, you know, that the bigger cities should really look at growing up instead of out. But my job when there's a city there is making it safe for those people.

Our ring road actually becomes a provincial highway, and it's really a wheel which is going to allow access by every spoke. The cities kind of take over from there and build the spokes. We also believe that we're going to save lives by taking away congestion on other parts of it. Our job, I believe, is making it safe for the people there, not so much being involved in stopping them from growing out.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Once again I have a question for the minister. I believe that one of the items that was in your mandate letter when you were appointed Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation was to look after the community airport program, to give more money to the small community airports around the province. I think there are about 30 of these small airports, plus or minus, around the province that are used by communities, many of them by private business, you know, for pleasure crafts, people spraying crops. I think sometimes forestry uses these airports to fight forest fires and for search and rescue missions.

Now, many of these airports are falling into disrepair or falling behind in their maintenance, and I think there's about a $2 million budget per year for the whole province. That's not very much money for all these airports. I know that there's quite a demand on their use, particularly by the oil industry and the exploration industry in the province.

I believe that there's a lot of activity happening in the north. There are a lot of people moving in and out of the north, equipment moving in and out of the north, and daily supplies going in and out of the north using airports.

Now, many of the big plants, the oil sands plants and the upgraders, in the north have airports at each site. There's an airport at Syncrude, there's an airport at CNRL, and I believe there are airports being built on the other side of the river to the northeast there at Fort McMurray.

So a lot of these sites where there are a lot of men living have access to flights going in and out every day. I'm wondering if we could be using our municipal and rural airports around the province to better advantage if we could get more money to upgrade these things and have an actual plan to move forward and maybe extend runways or improve tarmacs around runways to get larger planes and to get more flights going back and forth so that you could maybe relieve some of the pressure up north by moving people in and out from areas around the province.

I think that it would be a great asset to the viability of rural Alberta if you would spread out some of the business to the smaller towns around the province. Small towns that are maybe not necessarily connected right now to the north would be connected if they had better airports and better access.

Some of these small airports also have CANPASS. They have access to customs services at these airports so that the flights could even come in from the States or out of country and land at these smaller airports, take in flights from the States and move goods and services into the north or wherever we need them.

So just maybe a comment on what your plan is for moving forward on airports. Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you. You're right: one of my mandates is to make sure that the smaller airports in Alberta stay sustainable and viable. We are actually working on that plan, which we believe will be done before the end of summer, on the different recommendations and where we're going to go with them.

What Alberta has right now is two international airports, 12 regional airports, about 72 other paved strips, and then a number of private strips. We have areas that have three different airports within a 10-kilometre or 20-kilometre radius sort of thing. We understand how important airports are to the economy of the province. We understand how important some of the smaller airports work as feeder airports to the regional airports. I can't comment right now on what exactly we're going to do. We understand, though – and it doesn't necessarily mean that throwing money at it is the only thing we're going to do – that that $2 million was handling holding on to our runways for a while. But now a lot of them are getting more and more – and we probably are saying, "Haven't quite got there yet," that that $2 million isn't enough, and even with other recommendations we're probably going to have to up that portion of our budget to support smaller airports.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not sure I have really any questions today, but I would be remiss and wouldn't be doing my job if I didn't take the opportunity to speak to the minister and his senior staff about some of the successes and some of the issues that we're dealing with in northwestern Alberta.

As I talked to the staff outside before we came in, I said I was sure that they could fill in the sheet as well as I can because they do know the issues, and we get to be a bit of a broken record. Nevertheless, if we keep making these comments often enough, I'm sure we'll see some action. As I continue to tell constituents, on a lot of these projects it's not a question of if we're going to get the project done; it's a question of when. Patience is definitely a virtue when it comes to transportation in the north.

A project that we have seen tremendous success with and the communities have shown tremendous patience with is the north-south trade corridor, or the Canamex highway, which runs from Coutts at the United States border right through the centre of the province and, eventually, through Grande Prairie, west to the British Columbia border just outside of Dawson Creek. The stretch that I'm familiar with, of course, is from Edmonton north. I'm not as familiar with what's been done south, but I think it's probably very close to being completed, maybe one community left to deal with. Other than that, it's tremendous progress.

Certainly, the stretch from Edmonton to Grande Prairie or just west of Grande Prairie is coming along very nicely. There are a couple of stretches that are going to be paved this summer and opened up to traffic. That will leave very, very little left that isn't twinned. It has become a much safer highway to travel up and down. I travel it often, and I often say that I'm not sure I can make the trip any faster, but you can certainly make it in a lot more relaxed fashion and not worry about someone getting impatient and passing a long line of semitrailers going one way or the other. So the amount of head-on collisions has been greatly reduced, and everyone appreciates that.

There is a stretch along that road from Wembley, which is just west of Grande Prairie, to the B.C. border which remains to be twinned. The traffic count on that stretch of road is particularly high from Grande Prairie to the town of Beaverlodge. A lot of commuter traffic: people who work in Grande Prairie and vice versa travel back and forth. So it's certainly a priority in the region to finish that strip of road at least to Beaverlodge. The road won't be finished until it hits the B.C. border, and we need to keep in mind that it is a highway running from Coutts to the B.C. border. We can't say it's finished until we hit that line just outside of Dawson Creek.

I'm glad that we're doing some work on the road to Fort McMurray. Not to say that it isn't needed, and I'm pleased that they're getting work on twinning that road there, but if you just go by traffic count alone, there's no comparison to the number of vehicles travelling northwest on highway 43 going up to Grande Prairie, to a lot of other highway projects in the province. Tremendous growth up there, of course, the city growing 27 per cent, I believe it was, with the corresponding increase in the number of vehicles travelling back and forth. We do have rail service south to Grande Cache and down that way, but the highway truck traffic is unbelievable to people who haven't experienced that road.

In conjunction with that road is what's been identified as 43X. It's a bypass around the city of Grande Prairie. It's a bit different in that I know a lot of communities – and I'm probably safe in saying most communities – when they hear that their community is going to be bypassed, the first thing they do is get into Transportation and say: "Don't go by our town, please. We want the road to go through the middle of town. Our commerce is going to suffer." There was a time when the Grande Prairie businessmen were saying the same thing.

Well, I can tell you now that the chamber of commerce is leading the charge on getting a bypass built around Grande Prairie. They are the most vocal lobbyists out there. They've compiled a very thick document supporting the case for taking the traffic around the city. I believe Transportation has worked very well with the communities of Hythe and Beaverlodge, who at one point were of the opinion: no, we don't want the road to go around. Now they're both in a position where they've said: we understand that it needs to, and let's get on with it.

I think it's significant that these communities see that it's not necessarily the death of their community when the road goes around. They start looking at the other side and saying: gosh, I'm not sure we want to be living with a freeway running through the middle of our city and making it unsafe to go back and forth, et cetera. So we certainly have a buy-in from the communities, especially from the city of Grande Prairie, to go around the city. The amount of traffic on what we call the existing bypass – and you certainly can't call it that anymore. I think there are 12 or 13 sets of traffic lights on that road now, so you can hardly call that a bypass. It's just become a local road, but it is part of the highway network and extremely congested and not built to handle the kind of traffic that we're seeing.

People are patient. We've been very patient with the twinning from Edmonton north. They're patient because they've noticed progress every year. We don't need to feel that we have to do these big projects all in one year or two or even three, four, or five. Your staff could tell us how many years we've been working on the stretch from Edmonton north. It's been quite a few, but as long as people see some progress every year, they've been very patient and very supportive of what we're doing.

That's what I'm asking for when it comes to the bypass around Grande Prairie, 43X. You know, we continue to hear that there's no money in the budget, but I know that there are engineers working on designs. I know that there are staff negotiating for rights-of-way. So if nothing else, we need to change our messaging and say that the money isn't in there for the big project but that we are spending money every year getting ready to do that project. There again, it's not a question of if we're going to do it; it's a question of when. My encouragement is to start saying that message and giving an indication that, you know, the money will flow, and eventually that road will be finished. That will be one less issue for me to deal with.

Just a couple of other issues. I want to thank you for the resource road program and the increase in that funding. The county of Grande Prairie was very successful in that program. You know, the title resource road perfectly describes the kinds of roads that they use their money for. They're roads that are leading to the resource-rich areas south and west of Grande Prairie, the deep basin gas field and the oil patch, heavily travelled with very big vehicles, so a perfect place to spend resource road money. I know that the county is really pleased with what they've received this year, and there will be an aggressive work campaign going on up there to improve a lot of those roads that are really getting beat up by the heavy resource traffic.

While I'm giving out thank-yous, also on the infrastructure side of things the community is delighted with the news that we are getting a replacement for our QE II hospital. The existing hospital was built many years ago for a city of 25,000. Our current city population is 50,000, but it's a regional hospital that serves a population of well over 100,000, so you can imagine the congestion that's going on there. The announcement has been made. The government is funding a new hospital on land that was donated to the province by a local businessman. It's a very, very good location for that hospital, right on the major traffic corridor, and will be a tremendous benefit to the entire region in retaining and recruiting the specialists that we need and have. So that was extremely good news. It was very welcomed by the community.

We have one other hospital requirement in the north, and it's the Beaverlodge hospital west of Grande Prairie, a much smaller project, of course, but it is the oldest operating hospital in the province, I've been told. It's very successful. It takes a big load off Grande Prairie and serves a very large population from the B.C. border east to the city of Grande Prairie.

Before I sit down, I noticed my colleague was talking briefly about airports. The Grande Prairie airport is of course owned by the city and operating and making lots of money . . . [Mr. Graydon's speaking time expired] I was going to comment on Peace Air going out of business.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, hon. member. It's not very often that you actually get compliments on how great everything is going there.

I would like to comment a little bit on the Canamex highway. Actually, the total just in Alberta is 1,175 kilometres from border to border. About 100 kilometres of that is within the city limits of one city or another. If you do the full Canamex highway, there are actually 6,000 kilometres there going from Alaska to Mexico, I guess. At one point in time it will be a twinned four-lane highway. There's going to be quite a bit more done this year. It basically will be twinned right from Edmonton to Valleyview this year. We're working on the west side of Grande Prairie on the engineering and stuff right now.

It's very good to hear that places are saying that, you know, a bypass will work for them because we still have those problems. In fact, on this highway we're actually this year finally going to do the bypass around Milk River. That's the only chunk at the south end that wasn't done as a four-lane, and we're doing that this year.

Also, the bypass in Grande Prairie: I've talked to a lot of people just in passing that tell me how busy. When I used to work in the oil patch and go up to Grande Prairie, the old bypass to me was great, but I hear that today it's like being stuck on the Deerfoot at 5 o'clock in the afternoon or worse. We are really pushing to work on that. I think we're going to get a little bit of it done. We definitely have part of it in the three-year plan, a little bit of it. We're going to finish off that overpass or build the bridge, as our department calls it, the interchange at numbers 2 and 43. We're doing that this year. So some of the things you were commenting on we're actually going to work on and get done this year.

Hopefully, we'll find the capacity and the dollars to push ahead as fast as we can on your bypass. The county should be happy. They've got probably more approvals than most on resource roads this year. That also goes back to say, you know, we always get the blame on, "Why isn't this road on a three-year plan?" or "Why isn't that?" or whatever. Our department has to work on where the highest pressure is right across the province. So sometimes it may look like one area is getting more than another, but that's because that's what met the criteria of how we do the criteria today.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, the time for this order of business has elapsed. We will allow a moment for the officials to retire from the Assembly, so we can get the next group in.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would have closed a little better if I had realized my time had elapsed, but I'd like to thank the committee and yourself for listening to us this afternoon.

Sustainable Resource Development

The Chair: I will now invite the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to present his opening comments.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to be here today and to report on and answer questions on the Sustainable Resource Development budget for 2007-2008. I'd like to begin by both identifying and thanking the top-notch staff I have that have assisted me since I became minister. Starting immediately on my left, I'd like to recognize Mr. Brad Pickering, my deputy minister; a little further down Mr. Cliff Henderson, assistant deputy minister for forestry; and at the end Mr. Ken Ambrock, my assistant deputy minister for fish and wildlife. Seated next to him is Mr. Craig Quintilio, my assistant deputy minister for lands, and on the immediate left of Brad Pickering is Mr. David Bass, the assistant deputy minister for finance and administration. Directly behind me is Mr. Brian Gifford, the chair of the Surface Rights Board and the Land Compensation Board. Also behind me is Mr. Morris Seiferling, the assistant deputy minister for sustainable resource and environmental management. Thank you.

My opening remarks will be very brief. I would just like to clarify some misreporting in the press regarding the ministry's budget for 2007-2008. It was widely reported that our budget was cut 27 per cent, from $486 million last year to $353 million for 2007-2008, the estimate that we're discussing today. This confusion resulted from using different types of figures. In fact, the $353 million allocated to SRD in the estimate that we're discussing today for 2007-2008, if we call that our base budget, actually represents a $115 million increase, or a 48 per cent increase, over the base budget for last year, 2006-2007, which was a base budget of $238 million. So comparing apples to apples, rather than the base budget of Sustainable Resource Development being cut dramatically, in fact, it's been increased significantly.

Now, that increase of $115 million, or 48 per cent, is actually somewhat misleading on its own. It overstates the increase of our proposed budget in this year's estimates. Most of that increase comes about from two changes: one change in accounting practice, if you like, the budgeting practice, and the other in an emergency request. In past budgets much of the operating money for fighting wildfire came after the budget. This year we put it into our main budget. That will represent a permanent increase in our budget, and that represents $45 million.

Also, knowing that we are in the midst of fighting the pine beetle invasion now, immediately as we enter our 2007-2008 budget year, we have already requested a $50 million advance from the emergency fund, and we have put that into our budget as well. So set those aside, if you like – the $45 million for our wildfire base and our $50 million emergency request for fighting mountain pine beetle – and what I would call our actual, real equivalent increase is about $20 million, or 8.4 per cent, which is in line with the overall increase for the government of Alberta estimates for 2007-2008.

That's the end of my introductory remarks. I would be happy to entertain questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to say at the outset that it's indeed a great honour for me to stand here today and question the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and his staff. As a registered professional forester myself in the province of Alberta, it is indeed a real honour. Certainly, the sustainable management of our forest lands is of very deep concern to me.

At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I would like to welcome the minister's staff here and congratulate the minister and them for what I see as progress on many fronts in the sustainable management of our forests in the province. Certainly, many of the staff members here I've known for a great number of years in a relationship that might at times be termed adversarial in that I found myself sitting across the negotiating table from a number of them for different reasons, but I can say without hesitation that at all times I was confronted with professionals in every sense of that word, and I'm grateful for it.

Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions about the budget and the management implications of the funding in that budget. I would like to start under forest protection, specifically the mountain pine beetle infestation that we're experiencing. The minister brushed on this in his introduction. Sustainable Resource Development has received an additional $50 million in emergency funding for mountain pine beetles, which the minister alluded to, and an additional $2.6 million in base funding for mountain pine beetle. I'm wondering if I can get the minister to explain why there's money coming from two funds for the same item. What is handled under base budget, and what's handled under emergency funding, and why was it necessary to handle it this way? Why is it necessary to declare a mountain pine beetle emergency, especially right now in the early part of the season, when there are no beetles flying?

Also under forest protection, firefighting. The minister also alluded to a base budget for wildfires. The Sustainable Resource Development ministry increased its base budget for wildfires this year by $45.2 million. I'd like to have the minister explain to this House how this is different from the way wildfire preparations were funded in the previous years. What are the benefits of moving to this new approach, and is this strictly preparatory work? Does any of the $45.2 million actually go to fighting forest fires, or is it just base preparatory work?

Another area of interest for me and a question to the minister is around the land-use framework. As a professional forester my career was largely in land planning, forest management planning, so this is an area that's very near and dear to me. I suspect, though, that when you talk to people in Alberta, it creates a great amount of confusion. I wonder if the minister could enlighten this House and thereby Albertans as to what exactly is the land-use framework and why it is needed here in Alberta. I'm concerned what effect the land-use framework might have on various industrial users. The concern expressed to me is: is this going to result in greater costs and be detrimental to their ability to remain competitive or detrimental to the rights that they enjoy on the landscape? I also am wondering when we can expect the land-use framework to be completed and implemented.

I have another question, Mr. Chairman, around the oil sands ministerial strategy if the minister can clarify that. What is the oil sands ministerial strategy, why has it become a priority for this government, and how is this ministry involved in that? What recommendations of the oil sands ministerial committee will the $2 million funding identified in this budget address?

I'll move briefly, Mr. Chairman, to fish and wildlife. In this budget the ministry received $1.5 million to hire more fish and wildlife officers. I'd like to know how many new staff positions that actually creates. With those funds where are we going to allocate these positions? Where in the province will we find them located?

Also on fisheries, the fisheries revitalization program, as I understand it, is entering its final year. How will the $1 million in new funds allocated to the program this year be spent? Can you provide a status on the program today?

I'd also like to touch briefly on the Alberta biodiversity monitoring program, Mr. Chairman. We had a question earlier in the House about that. Not just why is it important, but how will the $4.2 million associated with the biodiversity monitoring program be used? What will the program look like, and why is implementing this program important to Albertans?

Finally, Mr. Chairman, in closing, just a general ministry question. I note that the ministry received $6.4 million to cover cost escalations. I wonder if the minister could expand on exactly how that money will be allocated this year.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I just want to congratulate the minister and his staff again, and I want to thank the minister for the excellent answer provided in question period today to a member opposite who asserted that he knows the difference between a cut pile and a log pile. As a professional forester I don't know the difference in that, but apparently the member does. I suspect he was referring to a slash pile. The minister pointed out that he probably wouldn't recognize a sustainable forestry practice if it hit him in the head, and I suspect he's not very far from the mark there.

Thank you so much for the opportunity to comment, and I look forward to the answers.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Peace River for those questions. I'll be happy to try to answer them.

The first question concerned the issue that I tried to address in my opening statements. The question was: why did Sustainable Resource Development receive an extra $50 million in emergency funding for the mountain pine beetle and also an additional $2.6 million in base funding for fighting the pine beetle, and why is this money coming from two separate sources, or two different funds? The explanation for this is the difference between actually having a team ready to go fight the pine beetle and then actually going out and doing the pine beetle control. If you like, I could use a baseball analogy: the difference between having a team in the dugout and then sending the team out into the field.

The increase in base funding of $2.6 million is to have a team that's equipped, trained, dressed, and in the dugout ready to go out. In our case, dealing with this, it would include training, equipment, communications, and other types of expenses. The $50 million is for actually coming out of the dugout onto the field and, instead of playing the game, fighting the pine beetle. This, of course, is an expensive operation partly because of the extent of the pine beetle spread, particularly in northwestern Alberta, and the nature of the preventative measures that we're taking involving removal often of single trees or smaller stands. This is not an economical way to remove trees, but we're doing so to try to stop the spread of pine beetle but also do so in a way that respects the environment and the integrity of the existing forest to the maximum extent possible. So that's where the $50 million in emergency funding is dedicated to.

The follow-up question on that was: what's handled under base budget, and what's handled under emergency funding? I think I've just answered that in the response I've given.

The final related question to that was: why was it necessary to declare a pine beetle emergency now? Last year an emergency wasn't declared until sometime into the budget year. The difference, of course, is we know that currently we're in the midst of the pine beetle infestation, and we know that, in fact, with the detection and removal of infected trees that we've been doing all winter, it's critical we continue that effort in April, May, June, and July. We want to remove as many infected trees as possible before the migration, or the flight, of pine beetle, which usually takes place in late July or early August, which will put at risk or threaten to further extend the infestation. So we knew in advance that we had extensive and expensive work that needed to be continued the minute we started budget year 2007-2008, on April 1, and thus our pre-emptive request for the $50 million in emergency funding.

The next question from the hon. Member for Peace River concerned the $45.2 million increase in our budget for fighting wildfires. This, again, requires a little bit of explanation. If I can use the baseball team analogy again: having the team in the dugout ready to go as opposed to putting the team on the field. In the past we had a very small budget for having our firefighting team ready to go in terms of equipment, training, communications, and so forth and covered much of that expense later in the year when we began to ask for supplementary funding, usually from the emergency fund, once the firefighting had actually begun. Of course, you never know from year to year whether it's going to be a bad year in terms of many fires and a great deal of expense or a good year with fewer fires and similarly fewer expenses. So that's how we did it in the past.

Both our own internal financial analyst and also, I believe, the Auditor General pointed out that we knew that our base operating cost for being ready to fight, being prepared to go out and fight fires, was pretty constant from year to year, so that amount should be moved into our permanent base budget. That's what we did, and that's what the $45.2 million represents. This represents a permanent increase in our base budget. It covers things such as training, securing aircraft, hiring seasonal staff who assist some of our firefighters, opening our tanker bases and our lookout towers, and all of the other activities that are related to fighting fire. We have to do those every year, so now we're putting them into our permanent budget. That's what the $45.2 million increase addresses.

A supplementary question was: will any of that $45 million be used to fight forest fires directly? Again, my previous answer was clear. The answer is no. This gets the team ready. It's our equipment, the training; we're ready to go. The actual fighting of the fire will be done from any emergency funding that's requested once the fire season begins.

The hon. member's next question concerned the land-use framework and why a land-use framework is necessary here in Alberta and a couple of follow-up questions. I don't want to use up the rest of the afternoon talking about the land-use framework. Suffice it to say that Alberta has reached a tipping point in both population growth and industrial activity. In the last 25 years our population has grown by 50 per cent, from 2.3 million to 3.4 million people. If we continue to grow at that same rate, which most people predict we will, perhaps even faster, it means we'll be over 5 million people in the next 25 years. A high percentage of that population of over 5 million people will be concentrated in the highway 2 corridor from the Edmonton area down to Calgary and now, actually, quite a ways beyond Calgary, into High River and Nanton and Claresholm and down to Fort Macleod.

What we're seeing both in terms of increase in human population and an equally great, perhaps even greater, increase in industrial activity is more and more activity occurring on the land in Alberta.

One of the things that Sustainable Resource Development does is manage certainly Crown lands, and we have an interest in what takes place on private lands as well. What we see with this increase in population and increase in industrial activity is more and more competition between different types of users often on the very same piece of land and the experience that I had just 10 days ago on the May long weekend, that some of the members are familiar with, that involved trying to deal with the camping, some of the off-road vehicles that were using some of the beautiful river valleys in southern Alberta.

You have recreational users on a piece of land that's also under lease for grazing leases used by a number of the local cattle ranch operations. In those same areas you have a number of leases for oil and gas exploration. In addition to the off-road vehicle recreation types you also have other types of outdoorsmen that prefer to hike or use horseback and don't particularly like to be on the same trail as an ATV user going by. So you can see that when you have too many different types of users trying to use the same piece of land at the same time, everybody loses. It's a suboptimal result. So the question is: is now the time . . . [Dr. Morton's speaking time expired]

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Strang: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I've got a few that I would like to move forward on. I guess the first one is that the housing slowdown in the United States has had a serious impact on Alberta's lumber mills. What is the department doing to help the forest industry develop a new market and new products for Alberta woods? What plans are in place to handle all the additional wood that will be coming in because of the harvest to head off the mountain pine beetle?

In March and April of this year Sustainable Resource Development had a public consultation on designating three portions of public land in the Yellowhead corridor for potential commercial tourism and recreation development. What are the outcomes of these consultations, and what is the plan for the corridor?

Then I would like to refer to your budget for 2007, the business plan, and move to page 299. I look at the aspect of 1.8: "Offer long-term, secure public rangeland grazing that promotes sustainable resource management." I'm just wondering as I look under that at your performance measures, and I see where you have actual for 1(b) on the public rangeland allocation for your AUMs. I notice that your targets are decreasing as they're going out from your actual of 2005-06. If I could get an answer on that.

Then if you go to page 301, what I'm looking at there is under your goal 3, which will sort of back up on my other one too: "Support efforts to increase the knowledge and research capacity required to expand opportunities for value-added processing." I honestly think that that word, you know, is really overused, and I think we've got to come up with something different so that we can get people moving on that. What I'd like to see on that is with the forest management agreements that we have. Of course, you were asked a question today in the House about West Fraser. He was talking about a 20-year forest management agreement. My understanding is that this is a rotating agreement, that we're really viewing a 10-year and moving it on so that we have a continuous, perpetual 20-year. I'm just wondering why the holdup on that one.

Then if we go to your goal 4 on page 302, I guess what I'm wondering about is under 4.3: "Develop and implement fish and wildlife management plans and species-at-risk initiatives." As you realize, we've had the species at risk going on now since about 1998, and the committee has done a lot of work on that, and now we have the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater looking after that area. I'm just wondering: are we looking at moving any more funding to that area so that we can start working on recovery plans? That is a big thing that we have to look at now so that we can move forward to meet our commitments with the aspect of what the federal government has for SARA. If we're not doing it properly, then they're going to be after us.

To also move on and question the aspect of our Wildlife Act. As you realize, there are some species that are not covered under that. I'm just wondering if we're going to move forward this year to possibly come up with an endangered species act or a species act.

I guess one of my last questions. The government's response to the Auditor General in the 2005-06 annual report mentioned that SRD has developed an appropriate timing reforestation performance report to confirm the effectiveness of the regulatory activities. What are included in these reports? When are we going to expect to see the results of them? The Auditor General also recommended SRD strengthen its monitoring and enforcement of reforestation activities. How does the department improve the efficiency and effectiveness of these activities?

I guess, you know, some of the off-road use and users in the park – I must compliment your staff in West Yellowhead. They've cleared up an aspect on this random camping in nondesignated areas in the public, but it's still becoming quite a problem in some of the areas. We're lucky now that we still have fairly moist ground in our forests, but as we move forward, we've got to make sure that we keep moving on that so that we have the people understand. I know that we have lots of forest recreation areas, and I know that the West Fraser has worked well with that, and then we've also worked in cooperation with the aboriginal groups to maintain these. I think Fox Creek Development has done an excellent job on that.

I'll leave it at that so some of the other members can speak. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll begin by trying to answer the question that I'm sure is near and dear to the heart of the hon. member, about the public consultations dealing with the public lands in the Yellowhead corridor and their potential for commercial tourism and recreation development. I believe the question was: what is the outcome of these consultations, and what is planned for this corridor? The hon. member was correct: in March and April SRD did consult with Albertans to identify the suitability of the three proposed areas of public land along the Yellowhead corridor west of Hinton for possible recreation and tourism development.

The initiative plans for the orderly planning and development and use of public land in the region. The process integrates existing land and resource commitments with future recreation and tourism development and lays a foundation for future economic growth and manages that growth. The results of the public consultation are not yet complete. A final report is expected at the end of June. Following the final consultants' report, the Alberta government will provide direction on how, where, and what types of development could proceed. This direction will help determine what can and should be done on the land to ensure the highest value use of that land. Any outcomes will be consistent with the policies and approaches developed through the province's overarching and evolving land-use framework.

The second question that I'll address from the hon. member had to do with what plans are in place for handling the additional wood that will be coming in because of the harvesting of trees. The question may be have been to head off pine beetle but also, depending upon the extent of the pine beetle infestation, if we're left, as B.C. has been left, with a large amount of dead pine beetle wood. The existing capacity of the forestry industry in Alberta could handle, I believe, another 10 or 20 per cent increase in supply over the next coming years. So within that level we have the capacity to handle it, but if we're unsuccessful in stopping the spread of the pine beetle into our lodgepole pine forest, we could be facing the situation that B.C. is in, having a large amount of beetle-killed wood.

Fortunately, we've worked closely with British Columbia and their forestry officials and also with the industries there, and they are developing plans to deal with beetle-killed wood or wood associated with fighting the beetle. Those plans range from new products, new approaches, biorefineries, cogeneration, wood pellets, that type of thing. We had a meeting just recently with an entrepreneur that's proposing to use that pine wood to provide the types of drilling mats that are good for environmental purposes for drilling rigs, so there are a number of possibilities there.

There was a question on reforestation and following the Auditor General's recommendation there. We have acted on that Auditor General's report. We have a unit within forests called forest operations monitoring program, or FOMP, which has been given responsibility and additional resources to deal with this. I think it's worth stating for the record that there was never any question that reforestation was being done. The question was: was it being adequately counted and verified? We know that our practice is that approximately four trees are regenerated in Alberta for every one that's cut. We replant one or two and through scarification and other techniques induce seeds for another two. So we have a high degree of and a legal requirement as part of our forestry management agreements to do reforestation.

I'd like to state for the record that the forestry companies, it's in their self-interest to comply with this requirement to the maximum extent possible because their value as a company depends upon not a 20- or 40-year wood supply but a 100-year wood supply. So I'm confident that the new plans, the new procedures put in place in response to the Auditor General's query will give the kind of tracking and records that the hon. member is looking for.

The question about off-road vehicle use and some of the things that occurred over the May long weekend. The hon. member is correct that my predecessors in Sustainable Resource Development have had a number of successes in implementing access plans, or some of them are often called forest land use zones. The acronym is FLUZ. We've had a number of successful efforts already in place in which the recreational needs of Albertans have been managed and directed in a way that allows them to use off-road vehicles on public lands in a way that they don't harm one another or compete in a negative way with other users.

Unfortunately, there are certain areas of the province that have become increasingly popular with this type of recreation, in particular the area that's south of the Big Horn, south of the Ghost-Waiparous area but north of the Crowsnest Pass. In those areas we have some access management plans, but in the Porcupine Hills and in Ranchlands, some of the MDs in that area south of Calgary, we have not had proper access management. The result was some of the destruction of public property, in particular wetlands, that we witnessed on the May long weekend.

I'm happy to tell the hon. member that I've had several meetings already with my staff to talk about both short-term, intermediate-term, and long-term procedures that we can take to ensure that that type of destruction does not occur in the coming months on some of the long weekends when Albertans do go up to the foothills in the mountains for recreation. We will put in a plan, and I'm confident that we can replicate the success that we've had in other areas, particularly in the north, referred to by the hon. member, that we'll be able to replicate that success in the south.

I do want to say that our success in this effort will depend upon the co-operation of the off-road vehicle user groups. Some of the media, some of the letters to the editors have been suggesting that they're the problem. Some of their irresponsible members, obviously, have been a problem, but certainly in the areas where we've had success in other parts of the province, the voluntary efforts of these off-road vehicle groups are the key to the success because they're often the ones that dedicate the time and energy, their weekends, to go out and help build the paths, maintain the paths and bridges that are critical to have environmentally acceptable off-road vehicle use.

There's a question again about what the department is doing to help the forest industry develop new markets and new products from Alberta's wood. SRD has worked in the past and is continuing to work closely with the Alberta Forest Products Association. Last year a review was initiated, a competitiveness review, that addressed the global challenges to the industry profitability and the challenges but also the opportunities that the current depressed market poses to the Alberta forestry industry. I've seen a draft version of this report but not yet the final report, but there are a number of constructive recommendations for government to consider, and I will be discussing those with the Alberta Forest Products Association.

On the question of the endangered species program, obviously . . . [Dr. Morton's speaking time expired] Well, not so obviously. We'll get the rest of the answers to his questions to him.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne in the remaining moments.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do expect that you won't have enough time to answer the questions, so I would accept your answers in writing.

A few issues. Land compensation and the inability of transmission companies to provide power lines throughout Alberta are getting more and more difficult. I think a lot of the issue is that the land compensation group under your department has not paid enough attention to today's market values and isn't aggressively making sure that our landowners are being compensated adequately.

A second issue that I'd like to talk to you about is that landowners in my constituency have entered into long-term contracts with Al-Pac to grow trees. If you do support that choice, if you would push through in cabinet with cabinet colleagues from Service Alberta and Agriculture to support an order in council to give full choice to Alberta landowners and farmers.

The next issue is that burnt-over areas throughout the north, especially in my constituency and in West Yellowhead and constituencies further north, have had major forest fires, and there are no trees growing in those areas. Those plantations were free to grow. They were at a stage that they were the responsibility of the Crown. I'm quite disappointed that we haven't addressed to date the replanting of those areas. Is there enough money in this budget to address those concerns?

The next issue I would like to talk to you about is the fish and wildlife officers. In Whitecourt-Ste. Anne they've been served well by officers in the Whitecourt office and the Evansburg office. Outside my constituency the Stony Plain office has provided great service to the east end of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. But in previous years I've had to go to the minister to ensure, come January, February, March, that patrol trucks had fuel, that members had the opportunity to respond to concerns that were raised by the public, you know. They'd have to be paid overtime. I want to make sure that you have in this budget adequate resources that come January, February your staff aren't telling the people that serve my constituents that there's no money to do patrol and provide fuel and basic needs in their units. This happened, Minister, and it's a real disgrace that this has happened.

Maybe I'll leave it at that and give you an opportunity to comment on those issues.

The Chair: The time for this order of business has elapsed, so perhaps the minister could respond to the member in writing.

Environment

The Chair: I will invite the hon. Minister of Environment to provide us with his opening comments.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to be back before this committee once again. In keeping with the fact that this is not the first time that we've been here, I think I'll keep my introductory comments to a minimum.

Before I begin, I would like to take an opportunity for any of the members present who have not had a chance to meet some of the key staff in Alberta Environment to introduce to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to all members that are present the deputy minister, Peter Watson, to my immediate left. Beside him is the assistant deputy minister of environmental stewardship, Bev Yee, and to her left is the assistant deputy minister of environmental assurance, John Knapp.

In addition to these two assistant deputies that we have with us today, members are also I think quite familiar with two others, one being Jim Ellis, the assistant deputy minister who's responsible for the management of the operational side of the department, and then Jay Nagendran, who is assistant deputy minister of our newly formed oil sands unit. I'll probably have an opportunity to talk a little bit about the oil sands unit as we proceed into the afternoon.

I want to simply state for the record that Alberta Environment received about a $9.8 million increase in this fiscal year, bringing our department total budget to $164 million. This budget will help to ensure that Alberta is an environmental leader and able to respond to increasingly complex environmental challenges and risks. Alberta Environment staff work every day to safeguard public and environmental health, promote environmental stewardship, and enhance our regulatory systems and environmental infrastructure.

Mr. Chairman, I'm confident that the Alberta Environment budget is well resourced and will meet our environmental priorities. This year, as I mentioned, we will be adding 30 new FTEs to our staffing, of which 30 are committed to the oil sands environment management, and that will bring the total complement in Alberta Environment to 142 staff.

We will use the increased budget dollars to support the development of the implementation of Alberta's priorities for Alberta Environment; for example, the lion's share of the increase, some $7 million, will help us manage growth pressures related to cumulative environmental effects and the development of the oil sands.

With that, I will resume my seat and look forward to questions from members.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. First, I'd like to start off and thank the minister for always having such a co-operative department to look after us MLAs in the field. What I'd like you to do is turn to your 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund. On page 142 I'd like to talk about your expenditures, where you've got 2.0.4, climate change. As you go across there, I'm just wondering, being that we're coming out with your famous Bill 3 – and I look at what transpired in 2005-06, where you had almost $5 million, and for your estimate for 2007-08 you're only looking at almost $3.7 million – why we're moving down on that when we're moving into an area now where we're possibly going to need quite a bit more.

Then, of course, our Water for Life is moving along. As you know, the saying goes that whisky's for drinking and water's for fighting. I'm pleased to see that you've moved up on that aspect.

But if you move back to the business plan and you go to pages 148 and 149, what I'm looking at is your performance measures. You're looking at the different ones, especially on page 149, where you're looking at your quality of water, "measures the number of water quality incidents." You're looking at quite a decrease as you go out in your out-years. I guess I'd just like an explanation on how you arrived at that.

With the other aspect, as you know, a lot of different areas with the water and with the drinking water safety indicators, I see that you're moving up on those different percentages to meet the standards.

But I guess going back to the Water for Life in your department budget, I would like you to just give us an update on when you perceive to move forward on that. You look at almost $6 million over the 2005-06 actual budget to your estimate of 2007-08. If you'd give me sort of an insight on that, I'd greatly appreciate it.

Thank you.

Mr. Renner: The questions were coming rapid fire, and I'm not sure if we managed to write them down fast enough, but I'll do my very best. The issue on the reduction in climate change funding has to do with the fact that administratively there are not the same requirements now as what we have seen in the past because with the implementation of Bill 3 a lot of the work is done. We now move into the management side of the equation. We're now into compliance and enforcement as opposed to some of the policy development. So that would largely explain the difference in funding there.

With the current consultation on climate change I would expect that it's fair to say that some of the expenditures that are involved with that consultation won't necessarily show up in the climate change line as much as they will show up in some of the other areas that we have with respect to education and communications. It's difficult to compare from one year to the next specifically on something like climate change, which tends to have impact across the entire department.

The question on performance measures and water quality is an interesting one. When you talk about setting standards for water quality, there are a number of factors that can influence those standards that are entirely out of the control of government, and that has to do with turbidity and those kinds of issues that are affected by stream flow. When you look at the outcomes that we have with water standards, there's a huge amount of impact that is based upon whether you're going through an extended drought period – so you've got reduced flow levels – or whether the reality is that you've got high rain events. As all Albertans appreciate, over the last few years there's been a lot of volatility between drought and flood, and that volatility, then, creates the impression that we're setting targets that are below what we've actually achieved. That's because those targets are realistic based upon what we expect to have from the point of view of drought versus rainfall, and it's not necessarily that we are setting our targets exceedingly low so that we can be absolutely sure that we achieve them but, rather, that we're setting the targets based upon what we see as the long-term average from a weather perspective.

With the standards on drinking water it tends to be the opposite. As drinking water standards and policies are increased over time, as new technologies are introduced, then the measurement tends to be skewed the other way. It looks like we're going backwards. When we say in one particular year that 99 per cent of facilities were in compliance and then three years down the road we all of a sudden are forecasting that only 70 per cent will be in compliance, that's not because they've downgraded or gone backwards. It's because we've been increasing the standards. So we have to invest in the infrastructure to ensure that that investment in the infrastructure is compatible with the increase in standards that we set.

The decrease in long-term funding for Water for Life is a reflection of the removal of one-time funding for groundwater mapping that came from the energy innovation fund. During the renewal of the Water for Life we'll be examining what else is needed with respect to groundwater mapping. Again, it is sometimes difficult to do a comparison from year to year because there are from time to time one-time or time-specific injections of funding where we may get funded for one or two or three years.

Finally, the issue with respect to the oil sands. The $6 million increase is a direct result of the creation of the oil sands unit. That's the very short and simple explanation of why there is that $6 million change in the area that the member referred to.

I think that answers the questions, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to talk a bit about the emissions from coal-fired plants and what money you've set aside in your budget to help get the targets that Environment has set for coal-fired plants on mercury reduction. I think that this was a pretty hot topic a couple of years back. We've required the coal-fired generators to remove a major percentage of the mercury that's emitted into the air. I think it was 2010 – I could be corrected – that they have to comply with the new regulations, and I know that there's presently a lot of research and a lot of work being done by your department folks and the Alberta Research Council and our power generators.

You know, just recently you and I heard a presentation from a group calling themselves Ikon saying that in one swoop they could remove all the emissions and inject them downhole to use as a new solvent to enhance oil recovery on oil fields that have gone dry or at least where the production has dramatically been reduced. So has there been some new thinking with the targets set by your department on mercury? Is there any money in your budget to look at this opportunity with this Ikon group and others that want to recover other emissions from the stacks of our coal-fired power plants?

Mr. Renner: The member brings an interesting point up for discussion when he asks: is there anything in our budget to deal with reducing mercury emissions? The answer is: yes, there is. It would fall on page 142, 2.0.5, innovation and policy. That being said, that is funding that is within the department to assist us in funding the team that we would have within Alberta Environment working with industry to develop the policy to ensure that the regulation that is developed is doable, is compatible, and is something that can readily be accomplished. With the input and a great deal of work within Alberta Environment in conjunction with industry policy has been established that will require reduction of 70 per cent of mercury emissions by 2010. Again, interestingly enough, Alberta leads the country. It's the only jurisdiction in the country that has put in place a plan to reduce mercury emissions. It's something that we worked very diligently on with industry, and we feel that we have a strategy that is truly going to get us there.

I have to point out that in the preamble to the member's question or in the direct portion of the question of if there is something to assist industry, that, no, there is not. We don't pay subsidies to industry. We don't invest in industry to encourage development. What we do is assist industry and from time to time, perhaps, invest in some research and technology that will then be applied on an industry-wide basis. We don't invest in specific plans to assist them to meet the, kind of, objectives.

The second part of the question with respect to sequestration is an interesting one. I'm not so sure where we are at with respect to sequestration as it relates to coal-fired power and particularly for enhanced oil and gas recovery. My understanding is that the type of CO₂ that is used for enhanced oil and gas recovery is very pure. It's the kind of CO₂ that would come as a result of production, as a by-product of producing something else, so it's pure CO₂. Anything other than pure CO₂, at least as the technology exists today, doesn't work in the same way for enhanced oil and gas recovery. It doesn't in fact work as a catalyst to remove additional oil and gas. It tends to actually work the opposite way. It starts to work like a glue, and it makes it even more difficult to extract. We have to be careful that we don't mix the two together. If we are able to sequester and capture pure CO₂, there's a tremendous amount of opportunity.

That being said, there is also a recognition that at some point in time if we're going to continue to produce CO₂ in flue gases of one kind or another, then we're also looking at ways that we can actually capture and sequester that flue gas. But that would be more as a waste stream. That would be treating CO₂ and flue gases as waste products, and in a similar manner as we regulate solid waste disposal, we would then also be in a situation where we would be regulating a gaseous waste disposal. I think that there is opportunity, and there is work to be done in that area, but I caution the member about thinking that there's going to be a huge opportunity to use flue gases in enhanced oil and gas recovery because the two are probably not compatible.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I just have a couple of brief comments and a couple of questions. First of all, I'd like to thank the minister and his staff for assisting me in preparing Bill 33, Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act. They've been very helpful with information and working that through the system. I think the regional water systems that are being built around rural Alberta right now are very, very important, extremely important to small communities for the continued development and strength of rural Alberta.

A couple of quick questions on the new CO₂ regulations. Do you have a cost of complying with these new regulations both within the department and within industry? Do you have the resources within the department to monitor these regulations? Are there avenues to co-operate with these regulations with the federal government? They're coming out with their own regulations. Are there ways to co-operate with them and maybe build synergies? I'm wondering also if you are at the same time working with other departments such as Energy to ensure the co-ordination of your efforts so that there's not duplication or wastage there.

I'll just wait for your answers. Thanks.

The Chair: Hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, first of all, I want to acknowledge the kind words that the member had for our staff and the assistance on Bill 33. This is something that is critical to the village of Ferintosh, and I want to applaud this member for taking this bill on. I understand that he's been very successful in working with the opposition to explain the necessity of this bill to ensure that we're able to deal with it in as timely a manner as possible during this session of the House.

The CO₂ regulations contained in Bill 3. Interesting question on what is the cost of compliance both for industry and Alberta Environment. From an industry perspective the cost of compliance will be dependent upon how they choose to comply because, remember, there are three ways that they can comply. One is by investing in technology and actually reducing the intensity of CO₂. That varies from facility to facility, and I couldn't venture a guess on what that might be.

The second is by providing evidence of offsets within Alberta. Again, that will be dependent upon what kind of negotiations take place between the large industrial emitter and the partner that they are able to reach a financial arrangement with. We expect, at least initially, over the first six months to perhaps 18 months, that the majority of the compliance will come in the form of contributions to the technology fund, at $15 a tonne. Our best estimates indicate that if all compliance were to take place in the form of investment into the technology fund, it would amount to about $175 million a year in industry cost. That could change as new players come into the field, but it's a good ballpark figure.

The cost of compliance within the department is somewhat surprisingly negligible. Remember, Mr. Chairman, that we have been collecting this information from these industrial emitters now for four years, and Bill 3 is really just an amendment to an existing piece of legislation that has had mandatory reporting requirements. Really, the only additional cost to the department is that now that mandatory reporting is also going to include a reconciliation between what the actual production of CO₂ is and what the target is and then a determination whether or not the compliance that's chosen by the emitter is in fact reasonable under the terms of the regulations.

We don't anticipate that there will be a significant additional cost within the department. We're anticipating being able to deal with that under the existing budget. The overall cost of compliance across the board within our budget is $11 million, but that's not just restricted to Bill 3. That's for all costs of compliance for all environmental legislation, and we don't anticipate any significant cost above that.

With respect to the co-ordination of our climate change legislation with Energy and, to some extent, SRD and, frankly, a number of other departments across government, we have been working as closely as we can with our key partners, being Energy and SRD and, where necessary, other ministries, to ensure that everybody is in clear understanding of what everyone else is doing and that we don't end up having duplications.

Along the line of duplications and working together, obviously the biggest challenge is working with our federal counterparts to ensure that we don't have overlap and duplication between the province and the federal government. This is an area of jurisdiction that is not specifically defined in the BNA Act. It is a joint jurisdiction officially. We feel that because our legislation is up and running, or will be up and running in a very short time, there is a very strong constitutional argument that our legislation should be seen by Ottawa as having some form of equivalency. That will be the focus of much discussion.

Frankly, we've had positive comments from federal officials indicating that they will do what they can to work with us to ensure that we are able to harmonize both provincial and federal legislation and ensure that the end user, the industrial emitter that is subject to the regulation, isn't subject to duplicate and conflicting regimes from both the province and Ottawa at the same time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My issue is water. I want to first make some comments regarding the situation in my constituency, and then I want the minister to help me to understand the role of government in making sure that Albertans have water.

In the last three months since session went in, the Balzac issue has come up repeatedly in the House. It's an interesting issue, Mr. Chairman, because normally we wouldn't hear about agreements between municipalities in this Assembly. But there was a political edge to many of the comments that have been made in this House about the Balzac area because there's a racetrack involved in it. There's no mention of the veterinarian connection for the University of Calgary. There's no mention of Olds College. We tend not to talk about all of the other businesses that would be developed around this. It's not actually our role to comment on whether it's a great project or not a great project. That was something that was done between the developer and the municipal district. The issue for them was accessing water.

For the record, a number of years ago the government of Alberta invested about $30 million into the Kneehill water pipeline. I know that as an MLA, sir, you're familiar with that pipeline. In fact, it serves a portion of your riding as well as mine. I know that it went through Linden and Acme, came on down through Beiseker, Irricana, and ends there.

The truth of the matter is that the Kneehill water commission is in trouble. They do not have the ability to put enough water through that line to do two things: one, to keep the water quality high and, two, to keep the rates low. So the Kneehill water commission was also involved in this issue and required perhaps some assistance, or they will. I'm sure they will be back asking for help because without the Balzac end of their pipeline, they can neither reduce their rates for places like Irricana and Beiseker, where the water rates are astronomical, nor can they keep the quality of the water high. Because the pipeline is long, it takes so long for that little amount of water to go through that it's actually picking up contaminants from the pipeline now. That's on the one side.

The second side of this issue is that Drumheller had indicated that they didn't wish to proceed with the deal. So, in effect, the MD of Rocky View and Drumheller have no agreement, and there's no more issue about water coming from Red Deer to the Balzac area.

There is a second component to this, Mr. Minister, and that's that the Western irrigation district has a licence dating back to 1903. They're looking at transferring a portion of that 1903 water licence to the MD of Rocky View so that the MD of Rocky View could in fact have water for some of the MD area.

The reason I raise all of this, Mr. Minister, is because I need to know what our government's view is of water for Albertans. Are we of the mindset that if a river is called the Red Deer River, somehow the community of Red Deer gets to determine what happens to the water in the Red Deer River? Or, conversely, if the water is from the Bow River or the Elbow, that are connected somehow to Calgary, Calgary then gets to determine not only what gets built around their area but, in fact, who gets water from those areas.

So when MD of Rocky View and the Western irrigation district proceed farther down the path on their potential transfer of water, I'd like to know from your perspective, Minister, what happens when it hits the director's desk in your department. I know that he's independent and has the ability to make intelligent and rational decisions, but are we going to play politics with this again? Is this going to become yet another political football for somebody to indicate that the MD of Rocky View should not be allowed access to water? It's not just the racetrack or the Balzac complex that's in question here. There are many other developments inside the MD of Rocky View that require water. The people who are purchasing land and planning developments, trying to build affordable housing, and doing other things need to know what their chances are of ever accessing water in this province. While this is a glaring issue in my constituency, it's an issue that I believe, Minister, will start to ripple around this province.

What are we going to do to ensure that Albertans – not just people from the Red Deer River basin or the Calgary area but Albertans – have access to quality water at affordable rates in this province? I'd really appreciate your thoughts on that.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: How much time do I have?

The Chair: You have 10 minutes.

Mr. Renner: I am pleased to comment on some of the issues raised by the member, but I do so noting that she is quite right, that this issue is and has been and probably always will be clouded by politics. So I want to issue a disclaimer right off the top. I'm not going to get into the political debate. My job as Minister of Environment is to make decisions that are sound decisions based on sound management practices of water to ensure that Albertans do have access to water. The individual ways that they share that water tends to get a little bit more political, and I'm not going to go down that road. But I am certainly well aware that the member has an issue within the MD of Rocky View that is ongoing and serious and needs to be addressed.

First of all, in my previous capacity as minister of municipal affairs, who was responsible for water commissions and financing and the creation of water commissions, I am knowledgeable, or at least I was knowledgeable, about what the issue at Kneehill water commission was up until six months ago, when I left municipal affairs. The member is absolutely right. There are concerns that that water commission may have some viability problems because the cost of delivering the water is to such an extent that it's not economically viable for customers to actually buy that water. Part of that is due to lower-than-anticipated demand, and part of it is, frankly, due to the cost overruns that resulted from some construction delays. So it's compounded. Both of those factors came together that are creating some real problems for that system.

As Environment minister my role is to ensure that the operation of that system as it contains drinking water is done in a manner that does not pose any risk to human health as a result of, perhaps, low flows in the system, those kinds of things, and we continue to monitor. I know that there have been opportunities explored to increase the demand for water on that system, and I hope that the commission and the town of Drumheller are able to explore some other opportunities, one of which was the Balzac application.

Now, I want to talk about the Balzac application from the point of view of the Minister of Environment because, as the member points out, we do not view the decisions that we make at the director's level or at any level as being down to choosing and picking winners and losers and saying: well, you're more worthy than you are; therefore, applicant A gets the water, and applicant B doesn't. We make our decisions based upon technical reasons and policy reasons.

Government sets policy, and one of the policy decisions that we made and we have been enforcing is that we don't allow for an interbasin transfer unless it's approved by the Legislature. That's why we have before us a bill, Bill 33, that will allow for a waterline to be extended into the village of Ferintosh, because it's going to be moving water from the North Saskatchewan into the South Saskatchewan River basin.

We have, on the other hand, allowed – and there are numerous examples – intrabasin transfers, where there is water that originates in the Red Deer River and ends up in the South Saskatchewan or the Oldman or the Bow River basin, because the Red Deer, the Bow, the Oldman, the Elbow are all connected and all comprise part of the greater South Saskatchewan River basin. So from a technical perspective it makes no difference, and from a policy perspective it makes no difference where this water comes from. What we also know is that because the Oldman, the Bow, and the South Saskatchewan are now fully allocated, there are no additional new allocations coming out of that portion of the South Saskatchewan River basin. The only area that has further allocation of water is the Oldman. That is what the application was all about. That is what the director was being asked to analyze.

Part of the process in dealing with any application is a public advertisement. Any individuals who wish to comment are encouraged to do so, and those that have direct involvement can voice their concerns. The director is then bound to take into consideration any negative impact that the issuing of a new licence may have on existing licence holders and on the viability of the river itself. That is the sole determination that would be used to make a decision. The fact that politics got involved and that there have been many things said about this particular application are beyond my control as minister and, frankly, are not part of the decision-making process.

The director has to be assured of a number of things: most importantly that it is within the capability of the river to be able to deal with the application and, almost as importantly, that the applicant has got the capability to draw the water from the system. In this case, as was correctly pointed out by the member, the original proposal was that Drumheller would draw the water and supply the water. Drumheller has now pulled out of their part of the agreement, so it pretty much makes any decision that the department would make to be moot at this point because the applicant has no way to draw the water from the river anyway. In any case the MD has asked that we defer any further decision on this project until further notice. We understand that that means at least October, perhaps indefinitely. That's the way we've treated it. We're simply not dealing with it anymore.

There are opportunities within the Bow River basin, within the South Saskatchewan River basins, for existing licence holders to sell or trade or make agreements for others to use water on that licence. Transfers of licence follow a very, very similar process to the issuance of new licences. Like every other decision that Alberta Environment makes, they're subject to appeal; they're subject to public notice. Should someone make an application for a water transfer licence, we will advertise in the usual manner. We will hear from any parties who wish to voice objections or concerns, and the director will be making a decision based upon what is within the existing policy of government and within the scientific well-being of the water system.

I can't really say a whole lot more other than the fact that from Environment's perspective our first duty is to protect the environment. Above all that is where we see our role in all of this. How Albertans choose to share water: the role we play is to facilitate that sharing without compromising the river. We will do everything that we can to facilitate sharing, but we don't feel it's our role to pick winners and losers and direct who should share with who. We feel our role is to facilitate that sharing. That's what we do.

The Chair: I will now invite the officials to retire from the Assembly so the committee can rise and report.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(a) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Energy, Infrastructure and Transportation, Sustainable Resource Development, and Environment relating to the 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 7 p.m., at which time we reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:47 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 30, 2007 7:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/30

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Deputy Chair: The committee has before it estimates for four departments today: Agriculture and Food; Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture; International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations; and Justice and Attorney General. We shall allocate 45 minutes per ministry. It's a private members' day, so the 45 minutes will be spent back and forth. Should there be no further speakers, then we will move on to the next ministry.

Agriculture and Food

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you please introduce your guests first.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, good evening, Mr. Chairman. I'm certainly pleased to have another opportunity to speak about the 2007-2008 Agriculture and Food budget and the strategic investments that we're making this year. Agriculture is a priority for this government, and it's been my honour to serve as the Minister of Agriculture and Food for the past five months.

Our ministry demonstrates a real commitment and a passion for the industry, and I'm proud every time I meet a new member of the Agriculture and Food team. They're not only knowledgeable and professional, but they are clearly passionate as well. As a group they are very committed to ensuring that Alberta's agriculture and food industry grows and thrives.

Mr. Chairman, with me today are a few of these dedicated individuals to help bring you information on this budget and the important work of our ministry. They are my deputy Rory Campbell, AFSC president and managing director Brad Klak, assistant deputy minister Faye Rault, and senior financial officer Jim Carter.

Agriculture has been an important part of Alberta's history and remains a cornerstone of this province. It is a big part of the economic foundation of Alberta and the heart of our rural communities. To put the industry's contribution into perspective, we are the second largest agricultural producing province in Canada. Alberta had $7.81 billion in farm cash receipts in 2006. The $9.6 billion food and beverage industry generates 27,000 jobs in Alberta. Also, in 2006 our agricultural and food industry generated $5.8 billion in international exports, and that's roughly one-fifth of the nation's agrifood exports.

Like other Alberta sectors the agriculture and food industry is growing in size and scope and holds even greater potential for the future. Our current business plan takes into consideration the challenges facing our industry today and outlines how we're working with the industry to take advantage of tomorrow's opportunities.

Our current goals, core business, and strategies support the Premier's government-wide priorities. Our objectives line up with these priorities, and in particular our programs are designed to manage growth, build a stronger Alberta, and improve our quality of life. We are strategically linked to the government of Alberta business plan. The agricultural growth strategy and the agri-environmental strategy are two initiatives that contribute to the goal of having a prosperous economy and managing growth pressure.

Mr. Chairman, the Premier's mandates to me for the Ministry of Agriculture and Food speak directly to our ability to be competitive and sustainable. We are laying the groundwork for an institute that will help turn our concern for the environment into market opportunities. We already know that Alberta's farmers can earn a living in partnership with Mother Nature and are good stewards of the lands, so building on this is a natural fit.

Another Premier's mandate is to develop a transition program for agriculture to succeed within the boundaries of any World Trade Organization agreement. This work will be critical to competing on an international level. The success of our farmers also depends on ensuring that they have access to capital for their businesses. The Premier has asked that we work with our partners to ensure effective agricultural financial services.

Our strategic investments are having a positive impact on our competitive position. The total Agriculture and Food budget for 2007-2008 is $1.026 billion. Overall, our funding commitments haven't changed dramatically, but I'd like to highlight some new funding. Mr. Chairman, $1.1 million in a new workforce strategy funding. As one of the top four areas impacted by labour shortages, this is important funding for agriculture. We've also seen some increases in funding to ongoing programs, such as $5.7 million directed to the Canada/Alberta farm water program, an increase of $4.3 million.

I'd also like to point out that many of our programs are demand driven and tied to our statutory commitments. We are influenced by what happens outside our provincial borders. Our needs vary from year to year. That is why you will see some of the areas of funding go up or down slightly from year to year, as we target resources where and when they are needed.

As I'm sure you are aware, our farmers routinely face some hefty cost pressures, such as fuel and fertilizer prices, which are dictated by the world market. The Canadian agricultural income stabilization, or better known as the CAIS program, responds to these pressures. This budget provides $3.63 million for CAIS to meet our commitments under this national program. As we continue to press for a better national program, Alberta has made necessary improvements, and compared to other provinces this government goes above and beyond to support our industry. For example, in 2006 and 2007 we invested approximately $300 million for the Alberta margin enhancement and the Alberta reference margin initiative. That's support that only Alberta producers benefit from.

When our farmers were impacted by years of consecutive drought on top of low commodity prices, we were the only ones to take on a bigger share of the crop insurance premiums, and Alberta is the only province to offer what's called the spring price endorsement coverage to help manage their commodity risk. Overall, Alberta's farmers and producers are in a better financial position than previous years. Crops have started to rebound and commodity prices are increasing, two elements that are key to our ability to compete.

Mr. Chairman, further good news is that Budget 2007 aggressively addresses growth issues and industry pressures. However, actions must be realistic. We cannot exceed what is affordable and sustainable. Sustainability is a key theme that you will see run throughout our business plan: rural sustainability, industry sustainability, environmental sustainability. Agriculture operations are acutely aware of the need to protect our air, land, and water, the very future of this industry. We're finding solutions that result in rewards for both the environment and the economy. Sustainability means adapting to change, a theme that the Premier tapped into when he set out our priorities.

Staying competitive is a priority for industry sustainability. Just yesterday we took another step towards this mandate. I announced a competitive initiative and appointed a group of agriculture and business experts to identify ways we can enhance our competitive edge. New competitors and technologies, the growing demand for biofuels, market changes in developing countries, labour shortages: these are just some of the things influencing our competitive environment. We need to stay ahead of these changes. We need to determine the concrete actions we can take. The steering group is going to help us do just that. What is key to their work is the industry-wide approach I have asked them to take.

Each member of the steering group brings a wealth of knowledge and experience from different agricultural sectors, but they will apply that history toward identifying balanced solutions. Long-term profitability of the entire industry is the goal here, and we've dedicated $450,000 to identify steps Alberta can take.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, while the clock is set for 45 minutes, we were hoping that we wouldn't be going beyond 10 minutes to allow more dialogue between the minister and members.

Mr. Groeneveld: Absolutely, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: So if you are about to wrap up, maybe you can wrap up, or you can finish off when you get a chance to answer the next question.

Mr. Groeneveld: Why don't I stop there?

The Deputy Chair: Very well.

Ms Haley: I wanted to first off, I guess, say that agriculture is one of my favourite departments. Minister, you have a great department with great staff that work very hard on behalf of Alberta farmers and ranchers, and I'd like to congratulate you and them for the work that you do.

I wanted to start my questions by asking if you could give us an indication of the recovery of the beef industry from the BSE crisis that we were in just a few years ago. If you could give me an indication of where we're at on our cattle numbers. How are we doing with packing plants, reducing our herd sizes, the aging cattle that we had as a result of the border closures? If you could give me an idea of where we're at with the United States right now with regard to some of the older cattle, above 24 months, above 32 months, that type of thing. How are we doing in our negotiation with them to have a completely open border again? Do you see that as a possibility, or is it still going to be more of a boxed beef kind of an issue? I am particularly interested in the packing industry because I know that they ramped up a little bit when our borders were closed. I'd like your impression of how they're doing, just anything on that side.

I also wanted to ask you about irrigation districts. I know that we have a program where we help with some money going out to the 17 irrigation districts on their canal rehabilitation. I'm particularly interested in the Western irrigation district and your impression of how they're doing, where they're at with their canal rehabilitation. You know, are they in any difficulties? What's just your impression of that, Minister?

On the Water for Life strategy, while not in your department, the irrigation districts could play a vital role in helping us with our Water for Life strategy. I'm wondering if you're working with other departments on sort of a cross-ministry issue, where we can make sure that we're dealing with the irrigation districts for the betterment of all Albertans.

My third area of questions is under the WTO and the GATT system. Minister, I'd like to know where we're at right now. When is the next round of negotiations going to take place? Will the supply-side management issue be raised again, and if so, how do you see that one working its way through the WTO issues? If it goes the way people anticipate it will over a period of time, do you visualize our Alberta poultry industry, for example, as being able to withstand the pressure of an open-border position on the supply-side management?

The next one is under ag societies, Minister. I'd like your thoughts on how well they're working. Are they still fulfilling what their original intent was, which was to enhance the rural way of life, or are they more recreation facility focused, more working with urban communities? Has that shift occurred? Is that a permanent shift, do you see, as opposed to enhancing a rural way of life? If so, is this an appropriate use of that money, or should it be something more going through a CFEP issue, where we're dealing with 20 arenas or helping with swimming pools and skating rinks and that type of thing?

The second-last question is on the land-use management plan. I'd like your impressions of Agriculture's role in that, Minister, and how you see the land-use management plan actually affecting agriculture. Is there a way to work with industry and recreation and parkland and everything else so that we can have a sustainable agriculture industry in this province without worrying about somebody being offended by agriculture in some way, shape, or form?

My last question is on the horse-racing industry. I'd like your impression of that industry: how many horses there are in the province, what kind of volume of sales are being done. The last I heard, it was between $300 million and $400 million. I'd just like to get a sense of the economic impact of horse racing in the province as well as just the general horse industry. As somebody who raised quarter horses for a number of years, I know how much money we spent. Never made any but spent a lot. So I would just like a sense from you if that's actually something that your department thinks about, works with, or has any need to be involved in.

With that, Minister, I'll sit down. Thank you again for the opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I certainly knew that the hon. member would come up with some good questions, and I'll endeavour to answer them and give my opinion in some cases, I guess.

Where are we at post BSE? Of course, I don't have to tell anyone here that June 2003 was the mighty date that started this. At that time having the border shut a hundred per cent was to put it mildly, I guess, devastating to the beef industry. But not only the beef industry; it caught a lot of the sheep and the elk. A lot of the industry was caught up. It's not only my opinion, I guess, that we certainly have not totally recovered from BSE.

We came out at that time with some innovative programs to help the beef people in particular, and to say that they saved the beef industry would probably be reasonably accurate, I think. I guess hindsight is 20/20, and we'd probably do something different if that happened again. Heaven forbid that it should happen again that the border would close.

I visited the department here a while back, just talking to some of the people, and they talked almost fondly of the BSE days. They were so busy in the department trying to keep ahead of where we were, the programs we came out with and the monies we made available and the set-aside programs, et cetera, that it was a real issue for them to keep up. The department did well, and probably the industry came out somewhat unscathed to what might have happened.

The hon. member was asking about the older-type beef cattle. I'll address that a little bit later.

Moving along, when the borders reopened for cattle under 30 months of age and we started shipping cattle out, of course, that certainly had a positive effect on our cattle industry. However, I guess what happened there, you know: I think we worked with the thought of having more of our cattle processed here. We did have to do it because we couldn't export, so they all were processed here. We all know the story of how Albertans and Canadians in particular came to our rescue and virtually ate a mountain of beef. They're still doing it. The average beef consumption is still up. However, once the border opened again, we're now shipping cattle south again.

I guess what's kind of scary right now is that now that we're shipping cattle south – and we've got to remember that these are cattle under 30 months of age – we are now shipping more cattle to the U.S. than we were in 2003. Not that that's a bad thing, but what's happened in the process is that our processed beef has started to come down, and the exports have started. It's scary to say that we're almost in the same position we were in before. Heaven forbid, but if that border shut on us now, we'd be right back where we were. We really haven't increased our slaughter capacity a whole lot. Yes, we've got some small ones going, but all of our slaughter capacity is impacted by labour shortages and the herds. Because the older cattle can't be exported, our herd numbers are older. We still have to get these older cows consumed or whatever.

The hon. member talked about what we call the rule 2 decision. They said that when rule 2 comes into effect, we will presumably, if we get permission, be able to export these older cattle. Now, having said that, there were a lot of parameters around there. The rule 2 decision is forthcoming. They had a comment period, and my understanding is that the comment period is over now, but I think it's still a 60-day period before any decisions will be made. That's my understanding right now. Hopefully, yes, the border will become a hundred per cent open.

That just increases the problem that we have. We're exporting these cattle again as a raw product. I've heard the comments out there: maybe you people haven't learnt a lot from the BSE crisis because we're pretty much back where we were. We may talk about this a little later. That's why now with the biofuel things and whatnot and the cattle and just the price of feed going up, our department has put together a competitive marketing group that's going to bring all of the livestock people into one room, and we've got a steering committee put together with some experts. We want to bring all the livestock – the poultry, the hogs, the cattle – into one room and try and deal with the situation we're at now because we're just, kind of, in the same situation where we were, and it's just not where we want to be at this time; that's for sure.

Irrigation. The hon. member certainly knows a lot about irrigation because she lives right in the middle of it. I understand that. It's an important part of our agriculture. The irrigation lands account for what? About 4 per cent of the land and about 17 per cent of the value of what we produce out there at this time. It's a major contributor to our rural development; that's for sure.

I've spent some time with the irrigation people. It's interesting because I had never been directly involved with irrigation. I think that right now we have not increased our water usage, but just through efficiencies we irrigate, I think, about twice as much land as we did originally, and the irrigation districts are servicing a lot of the small towns with water and whatnot. We're committed to working with these people. To tie it in to where you were going a little bit with the Water for Life strategy, I think it's so important: that aspect, the irrigation aspect, particularly in southern Alberta where, as you know, we can get a tad parched and dry at times.

I had some frustration in the last couple of years that I've been here about where Water for Life was going because we talked about it, but we didn't do a lot about it. I guess that was kind of my impression. The irrigation people certainly are doing something about it. Now, I'd suspect it's not because of anything great this government did. I think these people on their own probably picked up that efficiency.

I think we're putting additional funding of $3 million into the irrigation program and the Water for Life strategy this year. Hopefully, that's going to work up some interest because the Water for Life strategy, environment, that's the buzzword where we're at now; that's for sure, and rightfully so.

The WTO. I'll quickly move on to that, Mr. Chairman. Yes, the WTO does seem to be showing some signs of movement, moving ahead right now. We at one time were almost booked to go to Geneva to talk to the WTO. It's been pushed back a little bit. We're getting the word now that things are moving, and probably there will be a meeting scheduled.

Supply management people. Yes, this does concern them. Our position on supply management as the government of Alberta has not changed. It's exactly where the previous minister was at. We support supply management, but we also understand that this puts them under some risk. I don't think we'd ever get to the point anymore, perhaps, where the borders would have no tariffs on them and they'd be wide open, but certainly there could be some reductions there.

In our mandate, as you've probably seen, there's a transition time, a period there where we are to work with the industry in a transition program. Now, I don't think that makes supply management particularly comfortable hearing that. There's no doubt about that. However, you know, we certainly don't want this thing just to happen and not be prepared for it. We as a government are going to be prepared for it, so we can only hope that the supply management people will work with us. I'm not trying to scare anyone. We haven't changed our position, but this could change. I was in supply management myself, and I kind of got out of the business because I thought that with WTO my quota would be worthless. Bad decision. That was a lot of years ago, and now the supply management quotas, of course, are worth a lot of money.

The ag societies. I think probably where we're at with the ag societies – I think there are 297 ag societies, and 286 are small ones. Those are the ones that I'm kind of concerned about myself. I have made a commitment that I wasn't going to do a whole lot of looking at the big nine, so to speak, until we did something with these smaller ag societies. As the hon. member knows, probably the four ag societies that surround Calgary, which we are familiar with, really are considered small ag societies that really serve an awful lot of people out of the city and, of course, in the acreage area, where they're very busy.

At any rate, ag societies are still the backbone, I think, of Alberta, to be honest with you, and they play a role in the rural economies. One thing that the ag societies keep bringing up to me – and I really kind of appreciate where they're trying to go – is that they're very concerned about farm safety. I would like to see us get somewhat more involved in farm safety myself because they would be the perfect vehicle for the education, and they themselves want to go that route.

Mr. Chairman, there was quite a list here. The land-use management, of course, is being led by Sustainable Resources. I facetiously say "thank goodness" because this is going to be a tough one, and I'm glad that it didn't totally fall to Agriculture. But we certainly are going to be a big part of it. We have to be a big part of it; there's no doubt about it. At this stage of the game, I guess, we're fully engaged and have resources dedicated to the land-use framework. Sustainability is a key issue for the numerous interests to be addressed with land use. Our team, you might say, in the department is striving to do just that.

Having said that, I'm also trying to encourage all people, when I go out and do speak in the agricultural areas, to make sure they do attend the meetings that are going on. I think that's absolutely critical because – same old story – we can criticize all we want, but if you're not part of the game, if you're not there, it doesn't help a whole heck of a lot.

The racing industry. I don't know if we have a magic answer to where that's at. Of course, it's managed by Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. We have agricultural people available to provide supports and maintain that connection to Agriculture, but the fact that the breeding industry is really an important part, you know, I guess that's where the Agriculture part of it fits, probably.

Anyway, what physically are we doing? I think that probably we should give you a written answer to that because I don't think I'm going to answer it very well. I know that when we meet with the people on the breeding side of it, that's the Agriculture part.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister . . .

Mr. Groeneveld: You betcha. I'm at the end of my list.

The Deputy Chair: Just for your information we have only 15 minutes left for you, and I still have three other speakers. I'm just making you aware. I don't want to cut you short, but we'll recognize the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat next.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure tonight to be able to rise to address the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I must also say that I find the staff of Agriculture and Food to be second to none with regard to agricultural knowledge and professionalism and, certainly, their timely response to any and all the concerns that I have brought to them.

Before I get into what I wanted to talk about, very quickly, Mr. Minister, you mentioned the spring price endorsement. I can certainly tell you that that was very well received and much appreciated. You also mentioned that the crop prices are rebounded, but also the input costs have more than doubled. I think we have to remember that in agriculture – where else? In what other type of industry do you have a way of life where you have virtually no control over the costs and certainly no control of the prices of the commodity that you raise? As I mentioned, it's a way of life, and that's why people do it.

I think I'll get into one point that you haven't had a chance to mention yet, and that's why I bring it up. That's traceability. I think that having the ability to enhance our traceability system is important for a number of reasons. It provides quick access to good, up-to-date data, which I believe is essential in responding to any animal health emergency. Without this, the time and effort of a slow response can come at a great cost, including economic loss and the risk of the spread of animal disease.

Never has it been so evident, especially since June of 2003, as you mentioned, Mr. Minister, and the border closure because of BSE, that traceability is one of the single most important means of renewing our beef export industry. I think we're also aware that a good traceability system is becoming an expectation of the domestic and international marketplace. World-wide customers are demanding more information about the food they're consuming. With an effective traceability system Alberta will be ready for this emerging market demand and will see greater market growth as a result. I believe the future of our cattle industry depends on our ability to market our cattle, both boxed and live, to the world and in particular the United States. Traceability is one of the reasons we have now renewed our trade with the United States, and other countries have come on board as well.

As the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere mentioned, we still have some issues with the OTM, or over 30 months, animals. I believe the number of animals considered as culls that are OTM are around a million that are in the system. In some cases OTM animals have records of origin, and these are probably some of our purebred varieties, but I think we're mainly talking about our commercial cattle herds. While a good traceability system benefits market access in good times, it can also prevent borders from prolonged closure during a disease outbreak.

I have a few questions regarding the recent OIE ruling granting Canada controlled risk status for BSE, a decision that was welcomed by our beef industry. Can the minister tell me how this recent ruling reflects or impacts Alberta Agriculture's budget? Who is paying for this new system, and who is monitoring and administering it? Will there be changes as a result of this ruling? How will it impact our traceability and food safety measures and initiatives? Perhaps a more important question which has been there is whether it has the full support of producers.

I have many ranchers in my constituency that belong to the Alberta Beef Producers, and they're mainly cow-calf producers. In the last communication with me they expressed concerns that the regulations were very onerous on them. They cited additional costs and the need for additional handling of their animals. These animals aren't pets, and they don't have names. Actually, they're handled as very little as possible. They're also concerned with the perceived need for multiple tags needed and hung from the ears of these animals and the potential for these tags getting caught in such things as fences and feed bunks and being lost. This is also coupled with the extra record keeping requirement. The penalties for not keeping up with these are also a great concern. Perhaps the minister might want to speak on this.

I know that electronic chips embedded in the necks of the animals are perhaps the newest and the best way to keep track of the animals in their respective herds, but is this available at a reasonable cost? Given what I mentioned in the last two questions, are there any financial incentives available to do this?

My last questions: does this traceability system put us in the forefront in the world? Will we be recognized as leading the world with our system? Will it really make a difference? Is our system going to be able to give confidence to all of our global customers?

I'd like to thank the minister for being available, and I'll await his answers. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister, followed by the Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll try and get through this a little quicker than I did last time in the interest of time here. Anyway, to answer the questions on the effects of the budget, the department has already put $3.6 million into new funding to enhance food chain traceability and $20 million over three years to help operators comply with the feed ban. Of course, the feed ban, we know, goes into effect July 12.

Who's paying for or monitoring or administering the new system? That's still being developed, Mr. Chairman. It's a shared federal/provincial funding arrangement. The industry has invested in the CCIA, the Canadian Cattle Identification Agency, for those who don't know. It's not just beef, of course. All livestock commodities are involved in this. That involves sheep, poultry, hogs, and cattle, just to mention some.

Mentioning the OIE, how it impacts our initiatives. The OIE decision, Mr. Chairman, is based on policies and actions. Sometimes we say that with tongue-in-cheek because it's supposed to be developed on sound science, but sometimes the policies get in the way. We have to commit to staying on that path, however, the next step being the enhanced feed ban. We can't relax our actions. We've talked to the federal minister about the feed ban and probably some unexpected costs in there. Alberta certainly is stepping up to the plate on that. I think that probably Alberta might perhaps be the only province that is as ready as can be for what we're going to have to face when July 12 comes along and the ban goes into effect.

Do we have full support of the producers? Actually, I guess, you never get full support, but the first step, the beef producers, you know, have created the CCIA, which is certainly working on the issue. I guess you might say that they've been leaders in the industry. There are concerns about the costs going forward; there's no doubt about that. We certainly are working with the CCIA on that.

Additional costs and additional handling. Current federal legislation already requires that all animals be tagged, and I think that probably the people that the hon. member has been talking to certainly fully understand that. We've been working with the CCIA to make it easier to put information into the systems. Of course, I talked about the SRM costs, and Alberta is the only province that has committed more than its federal/provincial share. We've raised the cost concern with the federal government, as I said, and we will press the federal government to be prepared for what's probably going to come down.

Multiple tags. The objective, Mr. Chairman, is one electronic tag – and that's what we're aiming for – with multiple pieces of information. It will not be the conventional dangle tag that we're used to seeing, which the CCIA came out with originally. They are the button tags. Yes, it's still not a hundred per cent. You can lose the button tags as well, but it certainly has improved maintaining the tags. Will it cause extra record keeping? Yes, it will. But, you know, the CCIA's system is based on farmers keeping adequate records, so I think to probably stay competitive in this world, we farmers and cattlemen – and I'm one of them – have to step up to the plate. You know, we've got to work with the farmers, but we also have to educate them and educate ourselves to the fact that this is the day and age where we have to get the record keeping up because a big part of traceability is the information on those tags.

Just talking about those tags, we say that there's going to be more information on those tags. I think that's absolutely essential, and then I think the average cowman or livestock person will see the benefits of what's available off those tags, and it will improve their breeding program as well. The new tags are going to be electronic. As I said, they aren't the dangle tags that we're used to. The information on those tags, the issue I just talked about, is important.

Also, the device reading those tags. We get warned all the time by the cattle people out there about our IT system. We have to have the most modern system available out there. There are some trial runs right now. I think there's one in Strathmore, as a matter of fact, where the animals are run through the chute in multiple lots. There are some pilot programs out there where the scanner will read all these cattle. They have to be, I think, within 200 metres of the cattle, which is certainly an improvement from the system that we've been trying so far. So the IT system has to be modern-day technology, and it has to work in the pilot project; otherwise, it isn't going to be accepted.

Is it going to put us at the forefront, leading the world? We would like to think so. It's going to help us get back in the market quickly, and it's probably going to take up to four years to be competitive. Enhanced traceability, in my opinion and my department's opinion, will give us access to some new markets, and that is so important. As the conversation we just had with the previous questions, it will meet what consumers are demanding. It has to, or it's not going to be accepted.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for the questions, and I'll sit down.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for West Yellowhead, you have two minutes to put your questions on record at least.

Mr. Strang: Okay. So he won't be answering them. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

I guess, I've got a couple of items I want to talk to him about. If he can go to his budget for 2007 on pages 76 and 77, if you look at his performance measures there on the value-added products that he's developed, he shows that 2005-06 has got 42, but he's got no actual for 2006-07. Yet in 2007-08 he's looking at 90. So there's a missing figure there. I just would like him to let me know on that.

Then on page 78 what I'm wondering about is that with Bill 32 that we got, is this going to move forward to where we're going to look from the farm gate to the plate so that we can make sure that when we're selling our product, the retail outfit can show exactly where that animal came from? Is he going to work forward with the utilization of the tags? I'd appreciate it if he could let me know on that one.

The other issue is on the aspect on what technology and finance assistance is available to farmers and small business owners to start and operate the biodiesel or ethanol plants in rural Alberta. That's basically your goal five, page 81.

I'm saying this for my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka. I would pretty well say that's under your goal 1, and this is with the elk industry. Shouldn't we recognize this as a fully integrated agriculture entity separate from wildlife, and shouldn't there be harvest preserves?

Then, I guess, my other question. When I go to the government estimates for 2007-08, if you look at your budget on page 47, I guess I have a little bit of wonderment when I look at the aspects of your infrastructure assistance for municipality waste water. I'm just wondering, when you forecast for 2006-07, you had $9,073,000, and you're only estimating $5 million for 2007-08, yet . . .

The Deputy Chair: I regret, hon. Member for West Yellowhead, but the time allocated for the Department of Agriculture and Food has now lapsed.

I'd like to thank the officials that have participated by providing support to the minister for their attendance today. Thank you so very much.

Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture

The Deputy Chair: Before I recognize the hon. minister, I just want to welcome the officials and inform them that should they need a glass of water or a cup of coffee, just raise your hand. A page will come by and will be able to provide you with water or coffee.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present the estimates for Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture for 2007-08. Joining me here today are a few of my key department staff who help keep my ministry running very, very smoothly. On my right, Fay Orr, my deputy minister; Sue Bohaichuk, the acting assistant deputy minister of culture and community development; Dave Nielsen, acting assistant deputy minister of parks, conservation, recreation and sport; behind me, Bob Scott, assistant deputy minister of tourism marketing and heritage; on my immediate left, Pam Arnston, executive director of financial services. Also, seated in the gallery are Anne Douglas, my director of communications; Wilma Haas, acting assistant deputy minister of strategic corporate services; Susan Cribbs, executive director of policy, planning and legislative services; Bernie MacDonald, manager of recreation services; as well as Wendy Rodgers, my executive assistant. I think I have just about all of my staff with me tonight.

Mr. Chairman, Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture is Alberta's quality-of-life ministry. Our vision is to foster a superior quality of life to make Alberta one of the best places to live, work, and visit. Our mission is to promote, develop, and preserve tourism, culture, and heritage in support of vibrant, active, and inclusive communities. The work of our ministry touches the lives of all Albertans. With our population growing every day, it is vital that we continue to invest in the well-being of our growing communities for current and future generations. That's why Budget 2007 focused on managing growth pressures, one of our government's top priorities. With your approval and support our department will help meet some of the challenges we are facing.

I was charged with addressing three priorities under this new ministry: establishing an MLA committee to develop recommendations on a community spirit program for charitable giving; developing a plan for provincial parks and recreation areas; and the third one, developing a cultural policy for Alberta. I'm very pleased with the progress we have made so far in these important areas. Of course, our ministry encompasses a wide variety of programs and services, and we have many other priority areas that have received support through Budget 2007.

Our 2007-08 program expense is $756 million, a net increase of $300 million, the majority of which is one-time capital grants. We have allocated $140 million a year for the next two years to create the new major community facilities program. This program will help nonprofit groups, municipalities, and aboriginal communities build, maintain, or upgrade recreational and cultural facilities for public use. Another $80 million in one-time capital grants will support major athletic facilities, fairs, and exhibitions. We have allocated $40 million for the first year of a three-year $69 million commitment to the Calgary Olympic Development Association capital renewal project. These commitments have been made in response to the incredible growth and demands we are experiencing. Other budget allocations have also been based on the need to grow along with our population.

We have listened to what Albertans want and what Albertans value. The rights of all Albertans are always of the utmost importance. Educating Albertans and protecting their rights are key to making our province a safe and welcoming place to call home. Ninety per cent of Albertans say that the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission is important to ensuring that our rights are protected in our province. With that in mind we will increase support for the commission and for programs promoting fairness, diversity, and inclusion by 7 per cent.

Another important group representing the interests of Albertans is the Francophone Secretariat. The secretariat represents more than 205,000 francophones in our province. An 8 per cent increase in its budget will support initiatives promoting French language and culture and will help to preserve a rich part of our heritage.

Another great example of what Albertans value is Alberta's artistic and cultural community. Mr. Chairman, most Albertans, 87 per cent of them, feel that the arts are an important contributor to our quality of life. That's why we will invest $65.9 million in arts and cultural programs this year. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts, which supports festivals, exhibits, artists, and more, received an additional 4 and a half million dollars in lottery funding. This is an increase of 20 per cent over last year.

Lottery funding for the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation will increase by 15 per cent, an additional $3 million, over the previous year. This foundation uses its total budget of $26.6 million to support the Alberta Games, provide grants to more than 100 associations, to train coaches, and much more. With 82 per cent of adult Albertans participating in some sort of recreation or sport, this is a valuable investment, an investment in healthy, active lifestyles.

In addition to increased funding for entities like the AFA and the Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation we are also investing in provincial facilities. We will address services and maintenance in our provincial parks with an $8 million injection. That means more conservation officers, interpreters, maintenance and gate staff to serve visitors and protect our land and facilities. As we celebrate the 75th anniversary of Alberta's provincial parks this year, it is a perfect opportunity to invest in these valuable resources.

Other provincial facilities receiving new funding are provincially owned museums and historic sites. Four million dollars more for these attractions will help with operating costs and refurbishing displays and exhibits. The Royal Tyrrell Museum has already unveiled its plans to renovate a permanent gallery. Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump will produce a new presentation for their main theatre, and exterior and exhibit improvements will be done at Historic Dunvegan, Stephansson House, and Fort George and Buckingham House.

Our museums and historic sites are major attractions for Albertans and other visitors alike, attracting some 850,000 visits in 2005. Promoting even more visits to our sites and other Alberta attractions will increase in the coming year thanks to a $9 million boost for tourism marketing and development programs. This boost is due to a combination of increased visitation, more rooms available, and higher room rates, which means more collections under the tourism levy. These additional funds will help us attract visitors from key markets and will allow us to focus on emerging markets as well. Albertans continue to be our largest market and represent about half of Alberta's total tourism expenditures. With new Albertans arriving every day, we will continue to encourage people to explore our province and all it has to offer.

Increased funding will also go towards developing new and improved tourism products that will help us be competitive in an increasingly competitive industry. Initiatives like the Canadian badlands come to mind. The Canadian badlands are being branded as Alberta's next tourism icon. Reaching from Stettler in the north to the Montana border and all the way from just east of the Queen Elizabeth II highway to the Saskatchewan border, the Canadian badlands include an impressive mix of history, art, culture, and adventure perfect for any traveller. Drawing more visitors to Alberta with new and interesting attractions and experiences like those found in the badlands will bring more money to our province. Tourism, Mr. Chairman, already generates over $5 billion for Alberta's economy and employs more than 103,000 people.

Our other investments in the arts, recreation, and parks not only help improve our quality of life but will make significant contributions to our economy. Recreation and sports grants generate impressive returns. Every grant dollar generates $5 in community spending. Our volunteer organizations and nonprofits employ 176,000 people and have an economic impact of $9.6 billion.

Finally, our provincial historic and cultural sites contribute $61 million to our economy, while our parks contribute $1.3 billion.

Mr. Chairman, it's clear that my ministry's efforts to improve Alberta's quality of life and address growth pressures also make an impressive impact on our economy. By supporting the 2007-08 estimates for my ministry, you are supporting our efforts and helping us make Alberta one of the best places to live, work, and visit.

I would now be pleased, Mr. Chairman, to answer any questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll start by referring to your government estimates for 2007-08 for the general revenue fund. First of all, I want to thank you very much, especially on the major community facilities grants, page 355. That's going to work very well for the communities.

If you can give me an explanation on page 354 under recreation and sports where you've got hosting major athletic events. For 2005-06 you had actually $2,175,000. There's no showing for 2006-07, yet for 2007-08 you're only $500,000. So what happened to $1,675,000? You know, if this is for the Winter Games and Summer Games, we're always having a lot of trouble. You know what transpired in the second last one up in your area where everybody had a partner, and it puts a lot of stress on it. We've never had that function raised at all since its inception. So I really strongly believe we have to move forward on that.

You look on page 352, the third item there under expense. I see you've raised it $14,436,000. I don't know what all you've got in that one there. So I'm just wondering if you can give me an explanation on those.

Then if you go to page 313 of your budget plan for 2007 and your goal 4, speaking on the aspect of tourism and increasing your visitation and that. What I'm looking at is your strategy 4.1: develop and partner domestic and international marketing programs. If you could just sort of elaborate where you are on that.

Then a couple of other ones that I'm looking at. If you can give me an update on where we are on the recreation corridor review. I mean, I'd certainly like to know where we're at with that aspect.

I noticed you mentioned in your opening remarks the aspect of the Tyrrell museum, that you're going to do a lot more there. But we've got a lot more to offer in Alberta, and we're always trying to get tourists to come to Alberta, stay that extra day or so, and I'd strongly suggest that we really work on the aspect of a dinosaur trail. We can move into Tumbler Ridge. They're finding a lot of aspects there now that we're working with British Columbia with TILMA. Then we go through Grande Prairie and Grande Cache and then on the way to the Tyrrell museum. I think we've got a real thing to sell there.

I know I had asked this question earlier today of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development as they're looking at the aspect of the Yellowhead corridor and looking at some tourism destination sites. I'm just wondering: what involvement are you going to have with these tourism nodes that they're developing in the Yellowhead corridor and especially in the Brûle area. As you realize, you have the Alberta Outfitters Association there, and they're questioning the aspect of moving into that area, especially with a lot of that land in there. Sure, it's not under your jurisdiction, but basically it's a lot of leased land for Alberta Outfitters.

On the subject of Alberta Outfitters I'm wondering if you could just give me some insight on the aspect of where we're at with looking at moving forward with them, possibly to look at some licensing of areas that they can operate in. I know that we've got some class 1, class 2 operators. You know, with the Willmore wilderness park we've certainly got to make sure we keep that as pristine as possible. I'd strongly suggest that we sort of work with the different groups, especially the Alberta Outfitters. I'm just wondering where we're at with the aspect of tenure and transferability.

I've got one more. You know, we're talking about tourism, and I wonder how far we're going with ecotourism. Also, another area that is working: I know we're looking at doing some partnership with Jasper and with Grande Cache with the aboriginal tourism. That's a huge area, too.

You had mentioned that Alberta parks are looking at the aspect of their 75th anniversary. Well, Jasper national park on September 14 will have their 100th anniversary, so I hope we're going to work cooperatively with them, too.

I'll leave you with those. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much. I want to thank the hon. member for the questions. Initially, just some quick comments on the major community facilities grant. As you are aware, we have $140 million approved this particular year and another $140 million that's been approved for the following year. That's what we're committing to spending. Mr. Chairman, that's broken down into four different sections, with about $35 million allocated to each of the larger cities of Edmonton and Calgary and another $35 million to the smaller cities as well as $35 million to rural Alberta. We really believe that the facilities are very much needed. We're looking at major recreational facilities, some health-related type facilities in terms of facilities that promote active participation.

On the Alberta Games, basically, you look at the budget going from $2.175 million down to $500,000. I need to indicate that in 2005 $1.3 million was used to pay for the World Masters Games. There was another $250,000 that was used for the cross-country ski World Cup, another $125,000 that was used for the world half marathon, and half a million dollars for the 2007 Western Canada Games. What's being budgeted now is the Western Canada Summer Games: half a million dollars.

Now, your comments on page 313, goal 4. I might reiterate that goal:

Develop and partner domestic and international marketing programs for Alberta through Travel Alberta that support the Strategic Tourism Marketing Plan, which outlines both domestic and international target markets and strategies to increase visitation, length of stay and expenditures in all regions of Alberta.

Certainly, we do have general sales agents that are working around the world. They're hired. We're targeting Australia, Japan, Korea, Great Britain, and Germany. We're working very, very closely with the media in those particular locations to encourage visitations and to get them familiarized with our province.

On the rec corridors, Mr. Chairman, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is working on that and is co-chairing our committee, our group, and is leading that. Basically, we recognize that trails are very, very important to Albertans and to our communities, and there is a need to manage recreational trail networks right across the province. Certainly, there's a need to have better outdoor experiences.

We want to look at a designation program that will help Albertans be involved in trails and, eventually, have better experiences and lead healthier, more active lives. Certainly, funding is available in our particular budget for the operation of the Alberta recreational corridor designation program as soon as that particular program is ready for implementation, and we anticipate that to happen rather soon. There's $500,000 that has been allocated this year for that particular activity and another $400,000 for the next two years following that.

Just some quick comments on the Dinosaur Trail. Certainly, there's a lot of work that's being done in different parts of Alberta. You're familiar with the work that we've done at Drumheller, the improvements that we're doing there, and the additional designation in the south. We recognize the fact that dinosaurs followed the whole length of the eastern part of the province of Alberta. We're looking at, you know, that whole area that can be exploited and developed and encouraged. We are working with a group out of Grande Prairie, as you're aware. Tourism in Grande Cache as well, the death race. Future development of the dinosaur tracks interpretive centre. Longer term tourism development could really include some secondary types of developments in those areas. We really believe that, you know, the whole Dinosaur Trail can become a very strong international icon or a draw for that.

With the outfitters, you're aware that we've met with them, and certainly through Sustainable Resources we're going to continue to work with the outfitters to try to accommodate them. Your comments about licensing of areas has to be reviewed. You know, we're mandated and committed to working with them as to how we might be able to accommodate them.

Ecotourism. We've met with individuals just in the last couple of months. Certainly, that was one of the big discussions that was there. There is a need to look at it. I don't believe that we've got anything formally planned for this year's budget. Basically, we're looking at those areas.

We want to enhance, as well, aboriginal tourism. We recognize and believe that they have a very, very strong role in the tourism areas of the province of Alberta. There are some activities that are already happening with that particular sector, and we want to keep on growing and developing the aboriginal tourism. We've got a committee that's looking at the whole aspect of aboriginal tourism, and certainly we will keep on working with that committee to have some ideas flow through and grow that particular sector.

Mr. Chairman, certainly, the member is right: this year is the 75th anniversary of our provincial parks. We are looking at some major improvements to a number of our parks right across the province. Hopefully, we will be able to join forces with Jasper to make sure that Jasper will have a successful 100th anniversary as well at their particular park.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. I want to talk about your core business 1: manage Alberta's provincial parks and protected areas and promote recreational and sport opportunities. You know, in my constituency for years we had great roadside campgrounds. They weren't provincial parks, but they were places where tourists, international tourists – I had lots of family from Holland that loved to stop at those places and camp and enjoy the scenery. All of these in my area are either closed or turned over to the county and now have gates on them. But I do have one great park, and that's Carson-Pegasus provincial park. I think it was built when there were, you know, just a little over 2 million people in Alberta. With the price of gas I can see an early trend that's started: lots of folks coming out from Edmonton spending their complete holiday at Carson-Pegasus provincial park rather than going to B.C. or Jasper or longer destinations.

8:10

One thing that I'm getting loud and clear from my constituents – and I think, Minister, you've had an opportunity to talk with Leo Zelinski, the chamber of commerce president, and others from my community saying that we need to expand facilities. You know, we haven't had an expansion on camping stalls in our area for an awful long time. I wouldn't expect you to have this information today, but I would kind of like to know: as the population of this province has grown, have camping stalls grown equally? My observation in my constituency is no. I wonder if you have those kinds of stats. It would be interesting.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

You know, it goes back to that quality of life issue. Both residents and visitors have enjoyed our camping facilities, but they're getting harder and harder to get into. I'm wondering: where in your budget have you addressed the expansion of camping stalls in provincial parks? Where in your budget have you put aside some money to talk about P3 opportunities in expanding our existing parks? I think that a P3 may be an opportunity that we might have overlooked. Maybe your staff has done that.

I do want to mention, while I'm looking up at the gallery, two staff members who worked for me when I was minister of government services and acting minister of innovation and science. I always recognize a bright minister when he surrounds himself with bright people, and you've got two of the brightest around, I'll tell you that.

But I'd like some information on where we're going. Where in your plan have you allotted dollars to expand those core business opportunities that you talk about in core business 1? I'll sit down and hear from you on that.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne asks some very, very important questions and has some very timely comments as well. I need to indicate that, you know, initially the roadside campgrounds were basically privatized as part of the changes that were made in the early '90s. A lot of them were picked up by the local municipalities, yet others where no interest was shown actually got shut down and closed. Having said that, presently we have over 13,000 camping sites in the province of Alberta. We recognize that our provincial population has grown quite dramatically, and we also recognize that there is a need for more of that.

We are spending $19 million on infrastructure projects, and they'll cover quite a number of parks. I need to indicate that Carson-Pegasus this year will get about $600,000 in upgrades but more so toward the sewer facilities, the water facilities. We're going to be upgrading the water treatment system at Carson-Pegasus, and we'll keep on working on all of our parks for that. My mandate was to develop a parks program and, certainly, to look initially at a needs assessment – that's what we're doing presently – for what's required and then come back with, you know, additional requirements for additional parks in the province of Alberta.

Our parks operations budget for '07-08 is set at $39 million, just about $40 million, and that's about a 17 per cent increase over what we were spending in previous years. So we are heading in the right direction. We are growing. We are committed to expanding our parks. We're adding full-time equivalents, people, there to run our parks better. We're adding conservation officers. We're adding, you know, interpreters, visitor service representatives, so we're hoping to be heading in the right direction.

You talked about P3s. Certainly, it's a great idea, and if the opportunity is there to entertain P3s, we will do that. We are hoping to enter into longer term contracts with our operators to allow them to make some necessary improvements, improvements that are required in our parks. If a contractor, for instance, wants to set up shower facilities or maybe a small swimming pool in a particular park, that he be allowed to do that providing he's got enough time to recoup his cost: we're really looking at those areas.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few questions for you, minister. The first is with regard to our park area, the actual physical area, including special areas, if you could give me a sense of what we're doing with that, how large it is. My understanding is that we have set aside approximately 12 and a half to 13 per cent of the province into a special areas program, but I also understand that we've not created any additional staffing – if we have, I'm not familiar with what it is – to look after these areas. I'd like your thoughts on that and what we're doing with them and how we can maintain or manage them without putting more resources into them. Do you see down the road a sort of master plan concept for the special areas of what you'd like to see actually being done with them, or is the idea just to freeze them and keep them the way they are?

I'd also like to ask you a little bit about film now that it's in your department and it's all back together, if you can give me a sense of where you see it going. Are we going to be able to increase the funding into the film development program by 10 per cent a year, which is something that we were trying to get done a couple of years ago in a Treasury Board situation? Will you continue to pursue that so that they know that they have growth on a continual basis, that they can continue to expand the film industry in our province until they reach sort of a critical mass?

You have an area of your department that helps with different sporting-type functions. You have a director of, you know, for example – I don't know – canoeing or kayaking or something, just as a thought, you know, but they really don't have a lot of resources to do much below them. I'm wondering if you've looked at that concept, at the various directors you have for different sports to see if there's a more effective or comprehensive way to deal with the sporting issues in our province. On the other hand, if it's truly a great system that we have now, I'd just appreciate your telling me that.

The other comment, minister, would be on our CFEP grants. I know that we've got additional money for the major capital projects, but we're still missing the point on the CFEP grant, and that is: it's been a $125,000 maximum grant, I think, since the inception of the program probably over 20 years ago. Costs have gone up dramatically since that time. Everybody's wants, needs, and expectations have gone up dramatically, but we're still dealing with $125,000, sort of a capped grant. For a $12 million project that somebody's trying to build, it doesn't go very far anymore whereas it used to. On a $2 million project $125,000 was a fairly substantive amount. Are you looking at changing the parameters of that program and, if possible, getting money from a major capital side but rolling it into a CFEP program so that MLAs would also have some input into what the priorities are for their constituencies?

I couldn't help but note that in Calgary's major capital grant they're already over $500 million in asks compared to the 40 or so million that they're going to get. It reminds me of the centennial project that we came up with a few years ago, where we had about a hundred million dollars and about $2 billion worth of applications. Now that we've created this storm, how do we maximize the good that this amount of money can do for the city of Calgary or for surrounding communities that will be dealing with a different pool of money? How are we going to deal with the massive overask that we're going to get on this program?

Those are my questions, and your thoughts would be appreciated.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has some very, very good questions. Her first one was on the special areas and sort of the special places, as we call them. There were quite a few new areas that were added. As a matter of fact, 81 were added under the special places program between 1995 and 2001, and 13 areas were expanded. We have currently about 278 permanent ministry staff and about 300 seasonal staff that provide interpretation and work within all of our parks. We're adding, as I indicated in my previous comments, to the numbers of people that will be working in the parks. Our budget will allow us to hire 34 additional permanent park staff and about 60 additional seasonal staff, and we're also adding, as I had indicated, conservation officers, maintenance service workers, and, again, interpretative and visitor information staff and gate staff.

The just a little over 500 protected areas cover about 27,530 square kilometres of the province of Alberta, and that's about 4.1 per cent of Alberta's land base. That includes the 69 provincial parks that I talked about and over 250 recreational areas or special areas. Different areas have different designations. I think where we're at at this particular time is to develop management plans for a lot of those new areas that were created, and we're at that particular process. We're working on a lot of those areas and, actually, adding and developing some of the management plans that are required for that.

The 12 per cent figure that you identified includes national parks. If we just look at the provincial side, then we're at about 4 per cent, but when we put in all the national parks, we're at that particular level.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

On the film side our increase to funding is 23 and a half per cent in 2007-08. That's about a 3 and a half million dollar increase to our budget in this particular year. Our intent is to grow that. We're getting tremendous interest in Alberta and tremendous interest in what we have to offer. Some of the facilities that we have, the attractions, the province itself lead to more interest from producers, and certainly there's a keen interest there. With the added production comes, you know, increased interest. Increased interest means more applications, so more pressures on the film front. Basically, we're hoping to have it grow.

We're hoping to work with the industry. We're looking at potentially a new funding program for the industry to try to stretch our particular dollars a little further. We're looking at a pilot project with a couple of features whereby we might get two series occurring in the province of Alberta. We're very, very close to signing an agreement on those. That in itself would use up probably a fair amount of our film budget, but we'd probably just about double the economic activity of the film industry in the province of Alberta. The interest is certainly there. We want to grow it. My intent is to try to get additional money in the future. I think we're going to be okay this year, but at the rate that things are growing, we're going to be short in the future.

On the sports side we do have sports consultants, and we are working with various groups. We've got individuals there. Again, the whole sports side has received an increase in funding. My ministry is probably one of the luckiest ministries. We were able to accommodate and allocate additional funds in just about all of the sectors, so, you know, we have been able to allocate additional dollars to them.

On the CFEP one your comments are right, member. We have not changed the $125,000 maximum. It's not our intent, at least my intent, on a short-term basis to see any changes there, and certainly that's why we came out with the major facilities program. The major facilities program is designated to cover anything over and above the $125,000. And you're right: the requests so far, those that we know are coming towards us, already are at $1.3 billion, and the list is growing on a daily basis.

We do have $140 million this year, another $140 million next year, but we need to point out one thing. If I total that $280 million and if that covers, say, a third of the cost of new projects, we can probably cover about $800 million worth of new construction or improvements to major facilities, so it will take a good chunk out of the $1.3 billion of requests.

We will have a challenge to prioritize. In our larger centres we'll leave it to our members to make priorities within their community. When it comes to the smaller cities and to rural Alberta, it will be more of a challenge. Certainly, we'll have to look at them on a project-by-project basis and try to assess the importance of the individual projects as well as try to be equitable right across the province to ensure that some of our money is spent throughout the province, that some of our money is allocated to projects that will meet the greatest needs and provide the greatest service to Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions? Anybody else?

Well, Mr. Minister and officials of the Department of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture, thank you so very much for supporting the minister and providing him with the assistance.

International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be here. It's a pleasure to stand and be here. First of all, I'd like to introduce my deputy minister of many years of experience and service, Gerry Bourdeau, who is with us here today, and I thank Gerry and members of the ministry who are helping us tonight.

It's a pleasure to present the estimates for the new International,

Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, referred to as IIAAR. IIAAR means that I am not a pirate but, quite the contrary, the direct opposite of being a pirate, ultimately helping the 3.4 million Albertans in what we are proposing in this 2007-2008 budget of $67.6 million.

This is, I want to say, quite a collage of ministries coming together from aboriginal relations and, of course, dealing with things such as the Métis settlements and Métis nation as well as dealing with our foreign offices as well as, of course, dealing with intergovernmental relations relative to working with the federal government and our territorial and provincial governments across Canada.

There is no question, in my humble opinion, from the work that Alberta has done in the past many years and, of course, of our Premier, who was also in this ministry as minister, that Alberta is without question a leader when it comes to the leadership role it plays in terms of intergovernmental relations as well as aboriginal relations in dealing with other important stakeholders across this country. I am very proud to say that we are looked on, this ministry, as perhaps without question one of the most experienced and senior ministries when it comes to a comparison to other provinces and territories. Specifically, Quebec has a very good reputation in their intergovernmental, federal/provincial relations, as we observe, and I want to say that Alberta is without question there, if not and then some, when it comes to what we do in terms of leadership in this country.

With this budget I will work with what's most important: the Premier's six mandated priorities in my ministry, two Canadian intergovernmental priorities in terms of co-ordinating Alberta's approach to intergovernmental relations but also developing and enhancing our intergovernmental strategy, and we've had some very good success in that.

One international priority, of course, is enhancing Alberta's international presence in trade relations, especially with our neighbours to the south, the United States. I might add that our budget is about $2.16 million less this year, is what's being forecast. But it's interesting to note that one of our key components that we had in terms of last year and our one-time spending was the Smithsonian event, where truly Alberta showcased the world in Washington, DC, in terms of dealing with the international presence in trade relations with the United States. It was a huge success. In fact, we've received calls from the 10 provinces and three territories relative to the success that we had at the Smithsonian Institution last summer, which many ministers and MLA colleagues and our Premier, of course, visited during that time, in strengthening our relationship with our neighbours to the south.

I might also say that we have three important aboriginal priorities: finalizing the aboriginal consultation strategy, finalizing the long-term Métis governance funding, and building aboriginal self-sufficiency. These priorities, of course, cross most of my ministry's core businesses, and we look forward to working to address the specific key components arising from the Premier's mandate and our core businesses. For example, to finalize aboriginal consultation, we first need to help First Nations complete and share traditional land-use studies as they can better participate in consultation. I think that is an important part of our road map that we are moving down with very good success.

I might also add that through Alberta's 10 international offices and the Alberta international marketing strategy, referred to as AIMS, we are also working very closely to increase Alberta's – and I repeat this; I know that the hon. Member for West Yellowhead is listening intently – $81 billion in exports. You ask me how much: $81.1 billion in exports in terms of what we are doing within our Alberta international offices across the world.

We also will review our international offices in light of Alberta's changing needs. It is very important to ensure that the right priorities are in the right place in this changing global economy. For example, the offices help export-ready businesses find markets, but also we are likely to recruit more workers where it comes to an identified need.

It's important to note that when it comes to workforce capability, this province and our Premier have a priority of Alberta first, other provinces and territories second, and international third. We will never stray from that approach where it's Alberta first, interprovincial second, and then, of course, international third. Because of the tremendous work that we are facing in this province, it is clear that the successes we are having in the international market in foreign workers is important, but we continue to work with our stakeholders, with unions, and with others in terms of how we can have an Alberta first, interprovincial second, and then, of course, from national to international third.

Adding two new aboriginal relations divisions and international offices in trade resulted in a fourfold increase in ministry staff, and of course some amalgamated areas such as human resources, communications, and the newly established corporate services now have more staff but not new FTEs to serve the larger ministry.

Let me just summarize to say that the $67.6 million that are serving 3.4 million Albertans is very small by government standards, but I want to let you know that some things are like dynamite. Dynamite may be small, but it does come with a big bang. I might add that there is no question that this $67.6 million comes with a big bang. The Smithsonian, the work we're doing interprovincially, the work we're doing with aboriginals are just excellent examples of that huge success, and I want to thank our staff for the excellent work that they are doing in carrying out this road map of moving and continuing to move Alberta into the 21st century.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's always great to follow the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. I've got just a few questions. If he could turn to Budget 2007, page 214, under his goal 2 I don't see anything in here that is stating that we're looking at possibly opening up an Ottawa office. I know that 2(b) in his performance measures has worked very well in Washington, DC, so I'm just wondering if we can expect anything on that.

If you go to page 215 – and we're talking about TILMA; that's his goal 3 – I'm wondering if he anticipates any effects on the aspect of logging for the simple reason of partnership there and also working some type of a partnership with the aspect of tourism.

Then if I can sort of switch back to goal 2. As you realize, for a number of years we've had the softwood lumber tariff on the nation of Canada, and of course Alberta has paid a lot into that, and a lot of our different sawmills have paid a lot of money into that. I know that it has to work through the federal government before we start getting any money back on that, and I just wonder what he's doing on that so that we can get it back and get it back working in Alberta so we can move forward.

Then, I guess as a last remark, as you know, with the interim Métis harvesting agreement we're looking at a date of July 1 for the new agreement to come in. I'm just wondering where we're at with that scenario. So if you could give me some information on that, I'd greatly appreciate it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Well, thank you. I want to say, first of all, on the softwood lumber agreement, which is so important, that the new Canada/U.S. softwood lumber agreement ends decades of past disputes and future litigation. I think we can all agree that rather than spending money on the legal profession, we're able to in fact really use our energy and money and financial resources in a positive way of helping Canadians, Albertans, and of course our neighbours to the south.

The U.S. has a history of launching new litigation when decisions are favourable to Canada. That is not a surprise to us. The deal is not perfect, but in exchange for no new litigation Canada accepts some limits on its softwood exports. It is not free trade, but it's managed trade, I think is what we refer to in the 21st century. There were two options to limit softwood exports: a higher export tax with no quotas or a lower export tax with a quota. Alberta, our province, chose, working with our other ministries, an export tax with no export quotas. Industry pays a higher export tax when prices are low but also no export tax when prices are high. Of course, this is favourable, and prices are very low right now, so industry is paying the highest tax. Now, that, though, of course, will change when prices go back up, which I think is so important. Our colleagues in Sustainable Resource Development are also working with industry to implement the softwood lumber agreement.

Pertaining to TILMA, the trade, investment and labour mobility agreement, I want to say that this is an excellent example of barrier busting. How do we help ultimately a trading economy of people, the second largest in Canada, 7.7 million people between B.C. and Alberta? I want to say that at our joint cabinet meeting of B.C. and Alberta last week, both our Premier and the Premier of B.C. talked about how we can move this forward even quicker because of the incredible benefits of trade that can help our taxpayers and our voters when it comes to barrier busting, and that's exactly what is taking place when it comes to TILMA.

Pertaining to the issue of the Ottawa office, I'm very pleased to say that at our CPC meeting there was unanimous support by all of our colleagues for the Ottawa office, but as the hon. Member for West Yellowhead is very familiar, we are doing a review of all of our offices, the 10 offices, and in our budget we have earmarked just under a million dollars for an Ottawa office. But we think it is very appropriate at this time that we review all of our offices – where we are, where our resources are being spent – before we determine to make a final decision if, in fact, that office is the most appropriate use of our resource.

So what we have done is we have factored in the Ottawa office with the other foreign offices, that the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake is doing and reviewing with the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright and also with the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Obviously, we are taking that approach to be able to work collectively to be able to do the best review so that the financial resources will be directed in the best way to yield the greatest results for the province of Alberta in the next many years.

I think we're on the right track. Other provinces are paying attention. The Premier of Ontario has called our Premier of Alberta asking him for information and tips on TILMA. It really is clear to me that Alberta continues to lead on the intergovernmental side within this nation, and I'm very proud to be the minister of intergovernmental and international relations when it comes to leading in such important aspects.

I hope that answers the hon. member's questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a couple of questions, and I promise to be nice. I'm interested in the Métis settlement side of things, to know how that's going. Last year there was a lot of discussion. They had asked for an increase in funding, Minister, to try and get them to the point where they could be more self-sustaining in the Métis settlement concept. I understand that there was money given to your department to do this.

Now, the real question here is: when do we stop funding it? What is the transition period for them to go through so that they can be a small municipality concept where they have their own property tax and can work on an industrial base to increase their tax level? I'm interested in that side of it. I understand the concept of trying to help them get started, but it has to stop at some point.

They also asked for their own version of a heritage savings trust fund concept, where they wanted government to set aside a certain amount of money so that they could draw on it on an annual basis. It was not something that I was in favour of, although I understood their reason for wanting to do it. My question, then, with regard to how to help them create their own sustainability, comes back to the casino concept, Minister, that all of the First Nations will be sharing in some of the revenue for various charities inside that portion of aboriginal affairs, but I don't think the Métis settlements are part of that. So is there something on that side that can be done?

My other question on First Nations would be this. In the States one of their versions of First Nations through their casino concept also set up a series of scholarships for their own children growing up on a reserve, getting a great education, being sent out, becoming chartered accountants or lawyers or educators or professors and various things. Part of the requirement on the granting of their scholarship was that they had to come back and help the next generation develop their skills so that there would be literally a seamless transition between the reservation, with their own lifestyle, versus the rest of urban United States, where there could be a very good transition and a very good working relationship between both sides. I'm wondering, when you're looking at aboriginal affairs, if you look at anything like that, some modelling that you may be able to pick up on from the States on how maybe to make things work better on the reservations so that their standard of living improves in a similar pattern to our own.

My last comments would be on your international offices. Years and years and years ago I had an opportunity to do a presentation to then Premier Peter Lougheed on the need for international offices. The point was never for those offices to do everything for us as businesspeople. We were in an export business on both grain and purebred cattle. What we needed at that time was the government's ability to help us open some doors in other nations like Japan, China, Venezuela, or Peru, places like that, and even into Mexico. It was never about the government having to spend huge, vast amounts of money on, you know, big, fancy, palatial offices. It was always about helping us as businesspeople be able to access their business community. We needed somebody to help introduce us.

I'm wondering, when you're looking at your international presence, if you not only just appreciate that you're reviewing the offices that we currently have to make sure that they're meeting the needs, that we were trying to help Alberta as an export province, but also going back and looking at the original concept of what it was to do, which was to help open doors for businesses in this province. Part of your review, I'm hoping, would also encompass stakeholder input from not just large corporations but the SMEs, the small- and medium-sized enterprises, that actually go out with one person and try and sell, you know, a $500,000 contract or a million dollar contract on goods and services as well as on big petrochemicals. There are a lot of smaller companies, and we need to continue to encourage them to develop here and to encourage their expertise.

Your thoughts on those types of things would be appreciated.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to say that the last suggestion is an excellent one relative to our international offices. As much as we are exporters of $81 billion, I totally agree with the hon. member, first and foremost, that government may have a small role to play, but government is not there to tell business how to do business. I think markets, which I am a full advocate of, will dictate those businesses who will be successful and those businesses who will not be successful. Ultimately, the fate of a business will be determined by how they read the market.

The approach I have taken with foreign offices, I want to say, is that, number one, this is not just simply a government review. I'm pleased to say that the hon. . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I just want to draw to your attention that we are live on webcast gavel to gavel. Unfortunately, the camera is in this direction, so you may just want to be aware of that.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, I'm a bit shy of television cameras, but I will try to do my best.

Actually, on the foreign office side the suggestion by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is so important, that this is not just about government; this is a partnership. It's a partnership of how we collect from not only our key stakeholders, but I believe at the end of the day that if our international offices are successful, it will be Alberta businesses that are out there talking about the important support they've received because of the international work that we've done working with them as partners.

I'll give you a couple of examples of offices that are so important. For instance, I'll give you a good-news story: Olds College. The Alberta office in China put the Olds College in touch with a Chinese business and is supporting project work and student recruitment work. The trade office is identifying potential partners and keeping Olds College informed of business trends. Ms Pat Bidart, who is the dean of agriculture, technology, and college assessing, says this, and I think it's an excellent example on the important topic the hon. member mentioned: I've worked directly with international offices in China, Taiwan, Korea, and Germany. All of the offices have provided excellent support and assistance when we have contacted them. I have worked directly with the China office since 1999, over eight years, and whether it was assistance in identifying projects, determining market forces, or finding out an institution that dealt with management, the Chinese office had the connections and Olds College had the need, but the offices that we had were the ones that were being used.

Another example is Poon McKenzie Architects if I could use a small example. They were seeking to expand on the international market their consulting services into overseas markets. Rather than government saying what you should do, what we did was we partnered. The Alberta office in China supplied market research and information, created contacts with Chinese clients and networks, and provided advice and logistics of international expansions. The architect Mr. Stephen Suen said that he would have never have been able to make contact with Chinese clients and sign a contract without the support of the Alberta international office in Beijing; it was our first international project, and we look forward to many more because of the assistance of the Alberta government and the Alberta international offices. So that's a compliment to our people that we have in those offices that are doing important work.

I might also say that on the international offices not only are we reviewing, but in this changing world and global economy, we are also looking at the BRIC, which is referred to as the countries of Brazil, Russia, India, and, of course, we now have two offices in China, both in Hong Kong and in Beijing. In fact, some financial people have met with me, and they are suggesting that the key part of China in dealing with financial markets and investment dollars is perhaps not in Beijing, as much as that's where the political discussions take place, which we play a role in. They also talked about Shanghai as being the Wall Street or, shall I say, the Bay Street of Canada in Chinese markets. So it's something we will be reviewing as well, determining if, in fact, our offices are located in the right area.

The BRIC of Brazil, Russia, India, and China. Obviously, we are already in China. We are not in Brazil, we are not in Russia, we are not in India, but that will also be part of potential opportunities.

We are also looking for the important point that the hon. member mentioned, and that is their stakeholders, what markets and what businesses are saying in terms of where they think the Alberta government can play an important role politically in helping businesses become successful in what they know best to do, not what government knows best to do. Our job is to help open doors, which, of course, we'll continue to do.

I also want to say that in establishing our foreign offices review committee, their responsibility will be in terms of assessing where our offices are, the costs that are associated with it, but also determining the global economy and emerging needs in terms of assisting Alberta businesses in terms of how we can better integrate when it comes to international operations.

We are also taking a look at the mix of services, their locations, and if, in fact, we are getting the best value for our dollars. I must admit that I have been using not only stakeholders such as independent businesses; I also welcome the valuable advice I've received from many of my colleagues who have travelled around the world relative to offices they've visited. Of course, I've always appreciated the important input. In fact, I know that the hon. Member for Peace River has done some extensive travelling and given me some very important input when it came to particular offices around the world. I have factored those in and am making important decisions relative to how we can get the best value for our dollar with the office, the resource, and with our people that we have there. So I thank him for the important input that we have received regarding that.

Now, on the important point of Métis settlements I want to say that ultimately one of the mandates is self-sufficiency for our Métis settlements. What's really important to us in this example is that prior to 1990 Alberta provided almost 100 per cent of the settlement funding. Today the settlements as a whole are generating a significant amount of revenue that is required to meet the needs of their communities. I applaud the settlements' leader, Alden Armstrong, and his executive, whom I've met with on numerous occasions.

Statutorily mandated payments from Alberta to the Métis settlements ended, many may not be aware, in '06-07. But after negotiations and in terms of this goal and principle of self-sufficiency Alberta agreed to provide $9 million to the settlements in '07-08 in one-time funding. The reason behind that is that the bulk, $7 million, was divided among the eight Métis settlements for continued provision of essential services, but the remaining $2 million – and this is an important point – will be provided to the settlements' council pertaining to the submission of their acceptable work plan, which they are working on as we speak, that they are intending to have in to us by some time during this summer, and that is predicated on the $2 million that will assist them in their business plan in being successful towards self-sufficiency.

So I'm eager as minister to be waiting for their business plan of achieving the goal that the hon. member has mentioned when it comes to self-sufficiency. The intention is that the Métis settlements will move even closer to self-reliance, which I know is a goal of both their leaders, their people, and certainly this ministry. We continue to do very good work there.

I will conclude my comments at this point.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Two issues I want to talk about. First, on core 2, promoting and strengthening international relations. Some 20-plus years ago the province twinned with the province of Hokkaido. At the time the town of Whitecourt took up the challenge from the province and became a twin community with the town of Kamiyubetsu in Hokkaido. I've had the opportunity twice to travel to Kamiyubetsu, and I've had the opportunity maybe a dozen times to host mayors, dignitaries, students in my home over the years.

You know, this relationship that we have has gone a long way in our community to promoting and strengthening the relationship between Hokkaido and Alberta, Kamiyubetsu and Whitecourt, but more so it's given the students of both communities huge opportunities. We now have Whitecourt students that have studied the Japanese language. They have gone over on the JET program – I don't know if you remember the JET program on Japanese education opportunities for teachers – and taught English in Japan. We've had young teachers marry into Japanese families.

We're really getting a great relationship, but it's very hard to keep up to the generosity of the Japanese communities. You know, we fund raise to send our students and others over. The town will sponsor the mayor at times or council members, but it's really hard to match the generosity of the Japanese community because they tap into cultural grants. Kamiyubetsu taps into cultural grants from the province of Hokkaido and from the Japanese federal government. I'm just wondering if there's anything in your budget that my community members, especially the students, can tap into as some funding for these exchanges. It's a great opportunity, and I would encourage everyone out there that's listening to get involved and to know a bit about these exchanges. So my request is: what's in your budget to help promote what the province of Alberta has started?

The second issue I want to talk about is goal 6, the aboriginal relationships. In my band, the Alexis Indian reserve, the chief, Cam Alexis, is one of those chiefs that works very hard for his community like most chiefs that I know you work with. He's also the Treaty 6 housing director, so he has a responsibility to bring increased housing to reserve and off reserve. I know that the federal government is directly responsible for the on-reserve housing issues, but we have opportunities within municipal affairs now. I think there was a $48 million or $49 million grant, and recently some announcements made on off-reserve native housing. So I'm wondering where in your budget or where in your business plan you have people that make my chief aware of these programs because they really have to go and dig for these programs and news releases. They don't hear about this stuff. Where do they hear it from your department? Where is that communication?

So, Mr. Minister, at this time just the two issues, core 2 and core 6. I'd like to hear from you on those.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much. They're very important. I want to say to the hon. member – and I might also say the former mayor of Whitecourt, of course – in these twinnings of the province of Alberta, in actual fact, we have 14 twin communities across many nations. Whitecourt, in your area, is certainly one that is a model for others in terms of the success that has been had regarding education. As a teacher I can say that it has been heralded as a model for other provinces to follow. That's a compliment to the leaders in Whitecourt-St. Anne and, I might also say, to the hon. member, who was the mayor back when the twinning was taking place.

I might add on his question regarding our inner core budget that I'm very pleased that our funding is going up to help our municipal associations. When it comes to that, we're adding an additional – it's under $10,000, but it is intended to assist in building on the partnerships and strengths that have been developed over the last 20 years. So I believe that is very important. I might say that we have had cultural exchange with so many nations, and the one that he mentioned tonight is just an excellent example that this is truly not an expense but an investment in terms of that. I say that as a teacher in terms of so many of the exchanges we've had between our educational institutions from Japan, from China, from many other municipalities across Alberta.

As a former municipal affairs minister I know that the hon. member very much is aware of the fact that as we work collectively in these partnerships, municipal affairs is playing a key role in working with our First Nations, the Alexis band, that the hon. member talked about. Actually, the hon. member has a very, very good point. I've met with the minister of municipal affairs and have talked to him in terms of how we can continue to have a cross-ministry initiative. The hon. member is absolutely correct: we have excellent programs in this province on housing and so many other issues, but sometimes many communities and First Nations are not aware of them. So I see our role in this upcoming year of enhancing that communication with our cross-ministry initiatives. We have many cross-ministry initiatives, and I might say that one of our key ones is with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing because, clearly, housing has been identified within our First Nations and Métis settlements, and there is absolutely no reason why.

So the hon. member, I know, has probably already talked to the chief relative to the fact that this program is available. I appreciate his letting the First Nations chief know what is available. Ultimately this is about: how do we enhance housing in First Nations areas in this 21st century?

I continue to work with our minister of municipal affairs enhancing the advertising, where we can have a brochure sent to our First Nations and Métis settlements and the Métis Nation of Alberta Association president, Audrey Poitras, with our First Nations Treaty 6, Treaty 7, Treaty 8 grand chiefs, but also with Eldon Armstrong in the Métis settlements. It's an excellent example of how we can enhance with the excellent programs the province of Alberta has.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate in this particular segment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just want to chime in on one point, and that's with respect to certain international issues as they pertain to Ukraine. The minister is well aware of one of the councils that comes under his purview, and that is the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations. I think the minister would also know that there are a number of very important issues that face the nation of Ukraine and particularly the government of Ukraine as we speak. They have just recently, for example, agreed to go to a general election sometime in the fall. That's a tremendous step forward, a mark of co-operation, if you will, between President Yushchenko and Prime Minister Yanukovych.

That having been said, however, one of our roles that we play as we keep an international spotlight on these types of situations is to see where it is that we can be of some assistance and, perhaps, where we can also learn something from our friends and cousins elsewhere in the world. So my point here is with respect to some follow-ups that need to be done with the country of Ukraine as given rise to by two previous missions to Ukraine by our former Premier.

Now, this current minister is very well aware of some of these issues, and I'm just wondering if somewhere in the plans in the not-too-distant future there might be an opportunity for a follow-up mission, if not by the minister then perhaps by some others, in order to follow up on the many initiatives and many opportunities that exist in the oil and gas, the petrochemical sector, the agricultural sector, of course in education and in health care, on environmental issues, and so on.

So I'd just like a comment, if I could, from the minister on his feelings with respect to that particular set of questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek is absolutely correct in terms of the important relationship we have with Ukraine. I want to also thank him for the excellent work he does as chairman of this important provincial and, really, international committee, and I might say that in terms of a follow-up I look forward to the hon. member as chair of this important committee and with his vast amount of experience representing our ministry in a return mission to that area. I might also say that I do know that our Premier has also expressed an interest, and it's a matter of determining the timing of the mission. I believe that this is without question an excellent example of the partnership we have.

Of course, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek is very familiar with the special guests that we've had visit our province. Our Premier with his background and with the hon. member's background and as chair of this important Alberta-Ukrainian committee that we have, a future mission is very important in terms of not only what we have but also building on the strength of the partnerships we have.

I want to also thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek for recognizing the excellent work of the committee members from across this province who, of course, have played a key role in the many relationships that we've built with Ukraine. I see the future looking brighter and better when it comes to subsequent missions, and I am quite convinced that within this next year a return mission to Ukraine and building on our strengths that we've established is without question within the purview of this ministry. I might say, certainly, that this important Alberta-Ukrainian committee that we have is an excellent example of how we build on that. So I want to thank the hon. member for raising this and indicate that it is on our agenda relative to funding such an important mission in the next year.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: For his support and assistance to the minister I'd like to thank the official that accompanied the minister.

Justice and Attorney General

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I was here two nights ago, and I did outline at that particular point in time the budget of the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General and indicated, essentially, that there are some net $30 million for operational expenses in this budget that were not there last year and that those particular dollars are going in a number of places.

In the criminal justice area they're going into additional prosecutors, some additional 10 prosecutors and 12 support staff, to help respond to the increasing workload and the complexity. So we have, for example, five new family violence prosecutors, three new prosecutors to handle an increased caseload and megacases, one new prosecutor for the integrated market enforcement team, and one new prosecutor dedicated to the education and training of our junior prosecutors. All of those are areas where there is a significant need for additional support staff, so it will be well used.

In the court services area one of our major projects and, indeed, from my perspective our major project in the go-forward is to implement the justice information management system, or JIMS. This is the new information management system that will be available to all aspects of the justice system, whether it be the courts, the judges, the prosecutors. We are at this particular point in time dealing with what they call legacy systems; in other words, the ones that are on their last legs. So this year's budget has $2.5 million in new funding, which is allocated to the JIMS project, which will be used to cover project start-up costs for this multiyear project, one that will be ultimately dealt with over the next few years if, in fact, the current timetable is maintained.

One of the other areas where we are putting additional resources is ticket processing. The increased population and the Solicitor General's traffic enforcement initiative have resulted in more tickets being written, and our experience has been that more of those tickets are now being challenged in court. We are putting $3.8 million into this particular area to deal with the increase, so we will be able to hire an additional 25 Provincial Court staff. We're paying additional dollars, some $216,000, to the justices of the peace as a result of the recommendations of the justice of the peace commission in 2006.

Under the legal services division we're putting $3 million into the aboriginal law area, which deals with some complex aboriginal litigation against Alberta, and some of that money is also going into the area of aboriginal consultation. There's an additional $2.1 million going into support for the Legal Aid Society of Alberta. Legal Aid, of course, provides assistance to those people who principally are in need of criminal law talent, but there's also a family component, and the total amount this year will be $45.3 million, money very well spent.

The Public Trustee gets some $700,000 additional dollars to hire new staff. The Public Trustee administers the estates of dependent adults, decedents, and minors. This money is much needed.

The medical examiner gets $342,000 in new funding to provide additional dollars for physician earnings and funeral director overhead in rural Alberta among other things.

Maintenance enforcement is an incredibly successful program with some 50,000 active cases, collecting close to $200 million annually on behalf of 65,000 Alberta children. The budget for maintenance enforcement this year is $17 million, which is a $2.1 million increase, and will lead to the hiring of 18 additional collection officers, which will improve the ability of that particular department to provide much needed services to the families in Alberta.

We have $1.5 million in new funding going to the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force, which is one of the Premier's initiatives supporting the concept of providing secure and safe communities in Alberta. That particular task force has now gone to 14 communities throughout Alberta over the past couple of months, led very capably by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. There will be a symposium in Calgary later in June. I believe it's on June 19 and 20. Following that, there will be a report later in the summer from the task force to the minister, and hopefully we will be able to have that reflected in some measure in the business planning for the following year.

There are additional dollars being put into the bill forfeiture collection team. That is the team that ensures that money owed to the Crown is recovered if an accused breaches bail conditions. There are some $500,000 additional dollars, which will provide for six new collection officers.

Sixty-five per cent of the ministry's budget is related to manpower, Mr. Chairman, and the fact is that a large part of the dollars that I have talked about are going to additional manpower. With respect to the existing manpower we have built in $5.7 million to manage inflationary pressures, including manpower.

There is $4.3 million allocated to address the ministry's capital requirements, including $2.8 million in capital funding to complete the installation of technical infrastructure and equipment at the Calgary Courts Centre, which is on time, on budget. At this point in time the total cost of the Calgary Courts Centre will be $300 million. We anticipate that the builder will turn over the keys around the end of July, and over the course of August and September there will be a move into the courthouse by the Court of Queen's Bench and members of the Provincial Court, that are currently in four separate locations. By the end of September all will be fully operational, and indeed some of the courts will be operational in August of this year in the new space.

Mr. Chairman, those are some of the highlights with respect to the ministry's 2007-2008 budget. If there are any questions, I'd be happy to take them at this time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. minister. First of all, I must compliment the task force that you sent out on crime reduction. It was very well received. I want to thank the RCMP from Edson, Hinton, and Jasper for coming. It certainly shows that there is a concern out there. It was very well received by the people that were there in the workshop. I sure hope that we can move forward on some of those initiatives.

On your business plan, page 227, what I'm wondering about – and you explained a bit about it in your opening remarks – is the Traffic Safety Act and the enforcement on that. There still is quite a bit of concern with a lot of the traffic accidents we're having now. I'm just wondering what you perceive will transpire in the short while to get a lot of these traffic violations handled in a quicker manner so that people are going to learn from the aspect of the speed and everything that we have to slow down and be a lot more cautious.

One of the other questions I had was on your goal 2, pages 228 and 229. There seems to be real confusion. I don't know how we can get it out to the public; hopefully, your task force is doing that. People have a hard time understanding the civil and the criminal justice systems. I'm just wondering if there is some kind of way that we could work with some better type of advertising or get some information out so that we can help a lot of people because we seem to have a lot of confusion on that.

Then on your goal 3, page 229, you spoke about your maintenance enforcement. Just one precautionary measure I'd like to state on 3.6. I know that they're doing a good job, but sometimes it's the attitude. I realize that it's a tough portfolio in that aspect. If you're the claimant, they're really nice to you, and conversely, if you're the debtor, they treat you like a criminal in a lot of aspects. I've had a family in there and worked as a go-between for them. It works out well, but I understand that it's a tough scenario to work with on that. I mean, we do have some people that are trying to get out of it, and I think they should have the responsibility of looking after the children because the children are our asset. But if you could just sort of mention that to them, I'd greatly appreciate it.

So if you can give me some insight on those few things, I'd greatly appreciate it. Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. The task force, indeed, has been doing a very good job. As the hon. member knows, they've been to 14 different locations throughout the province over the past two months. Those locations have been north, south, east, west and reflect a variety of different settings. There has been a good turnout from stakeholders – that would be justice and community stakeholders – within those communities who are anxious to participate to ensure that their input is heard by the task force.

One of the principles behind the task force is that the justice system – and I'm talking about the police and the prosecution when I talk about the justice system in this sense – is really the catch basin for the problems of society and that it is not enough to simply put more police officers on the streets and more Crown prosecutors in the courtrooms. That will not address some of the issues that we are facing. We have to work upstream and develop some techniques which are going to divert people out of the justice system into more creative and productive roads toward active and healthy citizenship in our communities. That is one of the things that we are hoping Albertans will be able to help us with in terms of best practice, in terms of where the priorities should be as we move forward. Without doubt, there are also ways that we can protect our communities in a typical or more standard justice way, and we're interested in hearing from Albertans on that score too.

I'm very hopeful, hon. member, in receiving a good result from the task force. I think that the summit that we're going to have in about a month's time will be very useful. And I do know this: each of the members of the task force at this point in time is very appreciative of the opportunity of having gone through the province and having talked to Albertans and is very hopeful of coming up with meaningful recommendations for this minister and this government.

With respect to traffic situations and how to deal with those, the hon. member will know that the Solicitor General over the last year or two has been able to put significant new resources on the roads in terms of sheriff officers to patrol the highways. That has in fact given rise to a significant number of new highway traffic tickets, principally speeding, and that is one of the reasons why we are adding additional resources in processing those in this budget.

One of the things that we are also doing, hon. member, is bringing in the electronic ticket. There has been a pilot project here in Edmonton to test it. At this particular point in time – and we're talking about speeding tickets here – about 90 per cent of those are paid voluntarily by the people who receive them, and 10 per cent proceed to court. The 10 per cent that proceed to court need to ultimately be paper tickets, but the 90 per cent can be done electronically. We estimate that as we bring this out in fullness, we will be able to save something in the order of I believe 380,000 hours of processing time by the people who currently do it, which will provide significant new resources. So we'll be able to redeploy within the system to other needs of the justice system.

Education is always an issue with respect to the justice system, and it's an ongoing interest of ours. At this particular point in time we do have a program to bring education into our public education system. We brought in a module – I believe it was last year – for the grade 3 level. We have one that's anticipated for grade 6 and then grade 9. We work with the folks in the public education, legal education field. There's an organization called PLENA, which I think is the Public Legal Education Network of Alberta, or words to that effect, and we try and provide some assistance to public education, legal education in that sense.

I can tell you, hon. member, that we've also just brought in an initiative called LInC, which stands for legal information centre. It is designed for people who are using our courts but who otherwise are not represented by legal counsel either by choice or because they cannot afford it and there is no assistance at this point in time available to them. In other words, they do not qualify for legal aid. The first of these was officially opened about a month ago here in Edmonton. I had the opportunity to go there. There's a kiosk on the main floor of the Law Courts in Edmonton, and then in the library there are resource people who can work with the folks in giving them education on how to fill in forms, where they can go for additional information. The librarians are prepared to assist them, and indeed there is the ability to refer them out to groups such as the Centre for Equal Justice in Edmonton, where free legal advice of certain sorts can be provided. So that is education, if you will, of a sort relative to civil and criminal justice here in the province.

With respect to the maintenance enforcement program, you're absolutely right; the people who are there are very, very busy. As I indicated in my opening remarks, there are some 50,000 files in Alberta that are open at this time. I believe there are 65,000 children who are the beneficiaries of this. If I recall correctly, the number of contacts on a monthly basis that the staff deal with is somewhere in the vicinity of 80,000 or 90,000 per month. There's an incredibly high caseload. The fact of the matter is that maintenance enforcement are well trained. They do an incredible job. Admittedly, because of the volume, mistakes are made. We recognize those, and we apologize for the mistakes that are made on occasion.

Indeed, as minister I can tell you that there are a number of complaints that are done up in response form that I send out to people. I can tell you that many of them are simply a recitation of fact for people who have a need to understand how the system works. We deal with orders that are granted by the court. We do not have the ability to amend those orders. Often the frustration that people have relates to the fact that they do not believe that the orders that are being enforced are appropriate to the circumstances. Those folks are told that it's necessary for them to go back to the court of originating jurisdiction so that they can address the matter.

I appreciate the hon. member's comments with respect to the need for addressing the needs of the clients. There's constant client recognition training being provided within that particular area, and everybody is very mindful of it. I think they do an incredible job. Certainly, it is something that has to be an ongoing aspect of maintenance enforcement so that everybody is in fact treated fairly. But, hon. member, at this particular point in time I think that given the load, given the nature of the assignment – that is, the collection of dollars from people who sometimes may not feel that it's appropriate that they be collected from them for people who feel that they need these dollars in order to get by every month in a very minimal way; I mean, given that often that is the situation that people are dealing with – they do a very, very fine job indeed. But I do acknowledge that we can always strive to do better.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A couple of items. First I want to talk about goal 2: promote a fair and accessible civil and criminal justice system. I want to tell you how impressed I am on the mediation process. The Provincial Court civil mediation settlement rate is about 65 per cent. I'm just wondering: in your budget are you planning on increasing that opportunity for mediation throughout the province? You know, it is available in the larger centres, but it isn't available in our smaller centres. I think we could increase the actual use of mediation if it was more widely known and more widely used. It could be more widely used.

Goal 3: provide access to justice services for Albertans in need. I guess that if there is a complaint I get on a pretty regular basis, it's about legal aid. The expectations from Albertans using legal aid are pretty high. They think that legal aid can do everything for everyone accessing it. I'm just wondering if, in your budget, there is an increased allocation for legal aid.

Moving on to goal 4, improving the understanding of and confidence in the justice system. You know, we seem to get decision after decision that the public doesn't agree with. Just a simple one like the last one: Albertans widely accept that you should have a picture on your driver's licence, but a decision that comes out of the justice system opposes what the government of Alberta says. We have a piece of identification that's needed. It's our driver's licence. I know that this could be for further review, and I'm not going to ask you to comment on it, but it goes to the point of the confidence in the justice system. We have our local RCMP members do an admirable job with the tools that they've got to work with out in rural Alberta, but time after time the criminal element, you know, hires himself a good lawyer, and they get off on some technicality. Again, that doesn't bring us the confidence in the justice system that we need.

So those are my three issues. I'd just like some brief comments. Of course, I don't want to put you in a position with the Hutterite licence issue. That's just an example that I wanted to use.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, I thank you very much, and I do appreciate the comments from the hon. member. The mediation program is, indeed, an excellent program. Since I became minister some two and a half years ago, I can tell the hon. member that I've had the opportunity to appear in a number of communities to announce that the mediation program in a provincial court was expanding into their community.

Like much of what we do in Justice these days, it is dependent upon the community to establish the resources to allow that particular program to go forward. For example, in mediation you need people within the community who are prepared to become trained mediators to gain the experience so that they have the minimum threshold to go out and offer services like the ones that you are talking about. You have to have a community that is prepared to, in some fashion, either send people away to be trained or bring in trainers to allow people to be trained as mediators and then, as I said, people who are prepared to be trained. We've been able to do that in many communities. We now have it in Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, and I believe that there are perhaps one or two other communities where that, in fact, is also present.

But I can tell you: as minister I feel that mediation is the way of the future. Mediation is very, very successful. As the hon. member indicated, it has a 65 per cent success ratio in provincial court or something to that effect. That means that people who go through the program resolve their matters short of going to court. They almost assuredly do it in a less stressful fashion. They have a resolution that they agree to as opposed to one that is imposed upon them, which is the case if they go to court. So it is very much a win situation for the individuals who have the dispute, and it's a win situation for the courts because time that otherwise would be spent in the courts taking up time of our staff, whether it be the court staff at the counters or whether it be the court staff and the judge in the courtroom, can be spent on cases that, in fact, need to be tried.

Hon. member, I can tell you this: we continue to emphasize alternative dispute resolution. We continue to say that this is an area that we want to expand, but our ability to move it into areas where it is not today has a lot to do with the communities. If we have the will within the communities, I can tell you, this ministry will work with them to try and bring it into those communities. We will do all we can to continue to expand that program.

With respect to legal aid, as I indicated in my opening remarks, this is an excellent program. Indeed, Alberta has, in my estimation, one of the best, if not the best, programs in the country. I say that for a couple of reasons. First of all, the people who are part of legal aid Alberta are volunteers as the board of directors. There are paid staff, obviously, but the board of directors are very committed to this particular exercise and do a wonderful job in providing guidance. We have been able to provide additional dollars to legal aid so that they are able to meet their commitment.

The legal aid program in Alberta provides not only a criminal component but also a civil component, principally in the area of family but also in immigration. When you go to other jurisdictions in Canada, principally what you find is criminal only; in other words, there is no family.

When I go to my federal/provincial/territorial minister meetings, the very first item on the agenda in terms of priority of my counterparts is a plea to the federal government to provide us with long-term funding because what has been happening recently is year to year and, secondly, to increase the amount of funding because like so many federal programs it began as an equal contribution, and over time it has become principally a provincial contribution with a smaller and smaller federal contribution. While we do appreciate the federal contribution, and we couldn't do what we're doing without it, the fact of the matter is that we are asking for more.

The other thing that my colleagues ask for – and, by the way, I agree with all of this; it's just that this is always the way; this is the number one priority – is to expand it into family, expand it into civil.

We are putting more dollars in, some $2.1 million this year. I think we will be fine this year. It's always a challenge for the legal aid people to do what they want to do, and there is so much more to be done.

One of the things I can say that I'm very proud of in Alberta that is a companion piece to legal aid is pro bono, or free, legal advice that the legal community provides. Calgary Legal Guidance is the prototype program in Alberta. I believe it's been in existence for some 25 or so years. It's been around for some time. It is the template that has been used to expand into Edmonton with the Centre for Equal Justice, which is in the process of being renamed. It got set up within the last several years.

Just two or three weeks ago I was in Lethbridge for the official opening of the Legal Guidance clinic there, a wonderful street-front facility. I believe it's in excess of 50 per cent of the lawyers in Lethbridge – and there are some 80 or so lawyers in that particular legal community – that have signed up to provide pro bono legal services. Essentially, what we're talking about is to provide advice to people who have legal issues, whether they happen to be landlord, tenant, criminal, civil. It doesn't necessarily mean that they go to court. In fact, typically they would not go to court. There might be the odd exception. But the fact is that these members of the legal community are dedicating a set amount of time per month, month after month, to provide that type of service.

In this 100th anniversary of the Law Society of Alberta I can tell you that that body has as its anniversary initiative established a $200,000 pro bono Alberta program, essentially a not-for-profit society, which is going to add management and guidance and leadership to the whole area of pro bono within Alberta. So as we go forward, you will see more of this pro bono, I think, offered by the legal society, not only in Calgary and Edmonton and Lethbridge but in other communities.

I think that one has to give recognition to and applaud what the Law Society of Alberta is doing to complement the Legal Aid Society of Alberta because it is fundamental in a democracy, in my estimation, that people do have access to legal services, particularly when their liberty is at risk – that is, in the area of criminal law – but also in the area of family. As we all know in this Legislature – certainly, I don't think there would be any dispute from any of the members – families are the core of our communities, and family law is so essential to ensuring that those disputes be resolved quickly and appropriately so that people can move on productively in their lives.

The issue of public confidence in the justice system is an ongoing one for this minister. I think it's one of those situations, however, where what you read about are the minority of cases. It's sort of as one of our previous Premiers liked to say: you hear about the plane that crashes; you don't hear about the thousands that take off and land safely. One of my remarks earlier was: 90 per cent of traffic tickets are paid voluntarily by the people who receive them; 10 per cent are challenged in court. We are doing very well in receiving convictions, if you will, for people who are charged.

The ones that we read about in the paper are the tip of the iceberg. They are the notorious ones, typically, and they are the ones, obviously, that are going to court and that are being fought out. Having said that, I do understand fully what the hon. member is saying because as Minister of Justice when I read the paper – and I do – I say to myself, because it is my department that usually has something to do with these cases that you're referring to: what is that all about? And often what it is is the newspaper reporting of the case. In other words, the way it is reported doesn't necessarily reflect the situation when one inquires into it.

One of the things that we have done in Alberta Justice is that we have said to prosecutors in certain situations: it's incumbent upon you to talk to the media, to explain to the media at the end of a case when you know there's an interest in the case why it is that the case was resolved by the court in the fashion that it has come. We feel that that's useful in the sense that the information at least is going to the media. Of course, there's always the issue of whether or not it's reported and the fashion. The information ultimately has to make it into print. But we do understand that, and it is a matter of constant concern.

What we do, essentially, with respect to the cases that we have is: we follow a principle, and that principle is that we proceed with prosecutions if the evidence produces in the estimation of the prosecution a reasonable likelihood of conviction. That is the test that is applied in the initial trial. That is the test that is applied after a trial in consideration of an appeal. It is always that way, and it should always be that way.

I think it would be abhorrent to anyone if they said you were using some principle other than that objective assessment of the evidence as you understand it to proceed with the prosecution. You would not want us, for example, to say that we are prosecuting somebody because of a political reason. So that is the standard, and that is an area where we need to educate people better. I can tell you that sometimes it is very, very difficult to get that type of message across, but most of the cases that do get the headlines typically are on the basis of an assessment of the prosecutors or an assessment of the court at the end of the day that the evidence falls short of where it should be.

I can tell you that the prosecution service is very successful, generally speaking. We want to be more successful, and we are trying to expand the number of prosecutors that we have. I think in the last two years we've expanded by some 25; we've got another 10 this year. We've added judges to our provincial court over the last couple of years, so we are expanding the number of people who can address the justice issues. That's one of the ways that I think that we will get better justice and quicker justice, if you will. But we are challenged because there's an expanding number of cases, and the complexity of the cases is expanding.

Charter cases are complex now. Twenty years ago a breathalyzer or an impaired case would be dealt with in an hour. Today it may be a day or two days. That's all because of the nature of the Charter and the Charter arguments that are used. Organized crime is very, very complex today compared to before. We have the advent of the Internet, and that has made life very, very complex. So the nature of the work that the prosecution service does is much different than it was, but I can tell the hon. member that we are very, very concerned and mindful of the issue of public confidence in the justice system and are working on it continually.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I have exhausted the list that I had before me, and if there are no further speakers, I'm willing to ask the committee to rise and report progress. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I was intrigued by the discussion that the minister was having with respect to all of this. I just wanted to make a couple of brief comments and a couple of questions. It's to do with traffic enforcement. One of the things that I was impressed with was the Victoria weekend statistics of enforcement that took place just in that one weekend alone. One of the things that intrigued me was the number of people who were essentially stopped that had previous issues or previous warrants out against them and were in that way brought back into the justice system.

When I hear about electronic ticketing and the benefits of, you know, 380,000 hours' less work and all of this sort of stuff, I say that that's great except that there are two issues with respect to electronic ticketing. There's, of course, the issue that many people see this as essentially a cash cow type of robot law enforcement. The big issue and the one that I want to ask about is that if we, in fact, rely upon electronic ticketing, electronic surveillance, and so on for the bulk of our law enforcement, then the chances of someone being caught driving without insurance, without a driver's licence, without a properly registered vehicle, or who is a fugitive from other issues – the chances of being stopped are a lot less. So I'm wondering if there's a safeguard or at least a study of statistics that will take place to show that we're not gaining on one side and losing on the other, which in my mind would be a whole lot more serious if, in fact, it's easier for people to get away with all of these other infractions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Briefly, Mr. Chairman. I thank the hon. member for the question. The issue of electronic processing has more to do with the administration of the ticket internally rather than the issue of how the ticket came to be in the first place. What we're talking about is a situation where after the ticket is written internally, the processing is electronic rather than paper. Really, it's simply that the volume of tickets is so great. I think they estimate something in the order of three and a half minutes per ticket electronic versus paper, and that adds up to the 380,000 hours because the volume is so great. So it really doesn't address the initial contact, if you will.

9:50

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

There being no further speakers, the committee will now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Agriculture and Food; Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture; International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations; and Justice and Attorney General relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:52 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 31, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/31

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the distinct pleasure and honour today to introduce to this Assembly Ambassador Jose Brillantes of Philippines. Alberta is a province that has more than 30,000 Canadian Filipinos and is a partner in a trade relationship with Philippines that exceeds $150 million a year. His Excellency Brillantes has been enjoying a couple of days in Alberta right now and will remain with us for a few days. He is accompanied today by the consul general, Joseph Angeles; second secretary and consul, Rhenita Rodriguez; the Philippines honorary consul in Edmonton, Esmeralda Agbulos; and the honorary consul general in Calgary, Mr. Guerrero. I would like the whole Assembly to extend the usual traditional welcome to His Excellency and his accompanying guests.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a distinct pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature two guests, very special guests, who have joined us in the members' gallery, Rebecca Edwards and Brad Rabiey. The young and talented Rebecca Edwards works as a youth worker for Boyle Street and is located in LYNC unit. Rebecca's positive demeanour allows her to successfully work on the front lines with Edmonton's high-risk youth, using an effective harm-reduction and client-focused approach. This positive demeanour especially comes in handy in Rebecca's work after time, when she keeps an eye on my senior policy adviser, Brad Rabiey, who is attending question period with her today. Brad is quite simply an outstanding member of our team, and I'm very proud to have him aboard. I would ask that Rebecca and Brad please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Michael Cheung, a senior financial consultant with MD Management – MD Management is a subsidiary of the Canadian Medical Association, providing financial management assistance to physicians and their families – and Ms Belinda Ferro, formerly with MD Management, now taking on a new role at the Stollery children's hospital. I ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 50 bright and enthusiastic grade 6 students from the Grand Centre middle school from the city of Cold Lake. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Jackie Crooks, Mr. Cass Claude, Mrs. Pam Wells, Ms Sara Wiebe, and Ms Brandy Berube; parent helpers Mrs. Karen Wehinger, Mr. Mike Longmuir, Mr. Rob Wilken, and Mrs. Donna Cordick. I had the opportunity of meeting with these students back in January in their classroom, and I can tell you that they are very, very keen on government and politics. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me also to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 52 bright young students from the Lacombe upper elementary school. These are two grade 6 classes, one of them a French immersion class. They are accompanied by a number of teachers: Mr. Bob Epp, Mme Christine Graves, and Mrs. Leslie Smale. They're also accompanied by a number of parent helpers: Ms Jannine Donalds, Mr. Darren Howie, Mrs. Cynthia Campbell, Mrs. Sandra Epp, Mrs. Jackie Lunn, and Mrs. Monique Mickelson. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would also ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As part of my ongoing celebration of Edmonton being named the cultural capital of Canada for 2007, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two sets of artists who are joining us today.

The first person I'd like to introduce is Edmund Haakonson, who is a very fine painter and sculptor, indeed so fine he was a finalist in the first national competition for portrait painters in Canadian history. This summer he's doing a special project, the Alcoa project for invited artists on Sir Winston Churchill Square, creating a six-foot by 12-foot sculpture from rebar and aluminum for the Works festival. He is also in his seventh year as president of the board of directors for Harcourt House Arts Centre. I would ask Edmund to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

My second introduction is a group that have just returned from a very successful tour. This is a local company called Guys in Disguise. With us today is the renowned Darrin Hagen, who is a writer, an actor, and I would have to say Edmonton's best-known drag queen. Would you rise as I say your name? Thank you, Darrin. With him today is Gina Moe, who is by far the finest stage manager that we have, and a great honour to have her joining us today. We also have Davina Stewart, who is a fabulous actor and forever elegant. Look at her; isn't she lovely? Also, as a real treat we have Trevor Schmidt joining us today. Trevor was with the company, which just got back from Orlando. Trevor is also the artistic director of Northern Light Theatre here in Edmonton. Congratulations on a very successful tour, folks, and thank you so much for coming down to join us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure and honour today to introduce to you the parents of an accomplished young man who is a valued page in our Assembly. That is, of course, Conor Smyth, who is presently sitting to your right, Mr. Speaker. His parents are here; that's Peter and Cheryl Smyth. Peter is a valued public servant with Children's Services, currently working with high-risk youth. Cheryl works in finance with Big Brothers Big Sisters. Peter and Cheryl Smyth are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

A second group, Mr. Speaker, is a great soccer club. They were the recipients of the Edmonton-Manning MLA's cup in 2005. That was the MLA's African Nations Cup for that soccer tournament. They're sitting in the public gallery. I'd ask them all to rise as I name them. The manager of the Leone Stars is John Elliott. Please rise, John. The coach is Foday Samura. The treasurer is Alimamy Samura. The team captain is Kelvin Kamara. The caretaker is Prince Thorpe. Three members of the team: Ansu Marah, Jacob Tamba, and David Dominic. I would ask all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Amy MacLeod and Lauren Keating. Amy and Lauren are Palace Casino workers entering their 265th day on the picket line due to this government's failure to protect hard-working Alberta workers from unfair and uncaring employers. Amy MacLeod has been at the Palace Casino for nearly two years as a bartender. Lauren Keating has been at the Palace Casino for three and a half years as a head cashier. Lauren admits that her weaknesses are shopping and reading, and when she's not working, you'll find her doing one of those two things. They are joined today by UFCW organizer Don Crisall. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a pleasure to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very special friends that are seated in the public gallery today. I would ask that they please rise as I name them: Gibson Glavin, who is an RCMP officer with K Division; Jerry and Dee Calder from the fine city of Leduc, just south of Edmonton-Rutherford; and Shirlene, Ron, Natalie, and Jamie Sexton, all residents of St. Albert. These fine folks are here today to help me in celebrating the tremendous work that a group called the Compassionate Friends does for bereaved parents and their families who have lost children. I would ask all members to please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Compassionate Friends of Edmonton Society

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If there are angels on this earth, then we are blessed to have a number of them in the public gallery with us today. These people all belong to a club with the highest initiation fees imaginable; that is, you have to lose a child to belong.

Mr. Speaker, Jerry Calder and his wife, Dee, lost their son Jay when he fell to his death in 1991 at the age of 21 years. Ron and Shirlene Sexton lost their daughter Carly to a brain aneurysm in 1993 at the age of six years. Gibson Glavin and his wife lost Brendan in 2002. He was 8 years old.

Mr. Speaker, while these family tragedies are always devastating, these special individuals have turned their personal experiences into something magical by volunteering with the Compassionate Friends of Edmonton Society. This dedicated group provides support and caring for parents and their families who have lost a child. Shirlene has been the driving force behind the Edmonton chapter for 10 years now, while Jerry has shared facilitating duties off and on for even longer. Gibson has shared duties with Jerry and Shirlene for the past few years and speaks each year at TCF's annual candlelight service.

As you may know, Mr. Speaker, I too am a member of this society. A particularly poignant moment came for me when a 92-year-old great-grandmother attended a meeting. We all assumed that she had lost a great-grandchild. However, it turned out that she had lost her 69-year-old daughter, and she was as devastated as we all are in this circumstance. It is simply not the natural order.

As we have seen in the news this week, the need for compassionate friends is never-ending. With the support and assistance of these angels amongst us families can continue to grow as a result of what their loss has taught them about life, humanity, and spirit.

To all those parents who have lost a child and the many more that unfortunately will, I have this message: we need not walk alone; we are the compassionate friends.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Pincher Creek, Alberta

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the beautiful town of Pincher Creek, Alberta. In 1868 Montana gold prospectors, hopeful explorers of the Kootenay goldfields, camped along a creek north of the border. Following their departure home, pinchers, a mechanism used to trim the hooves of horses, were left behind. Later, in 1874, the North West Mounted Police marched west to bring law, order, and good government to the North-West Territories, and on their voyage the pinchers left behind by the prospectors were found along the creek. Henceforth the area became known as Pincher Creek.

Shortly after, the North West Mounted Police established a large horse ranch in the area as its base of operations. The rolling foothills, mountainous views, and luscious grass quickly attracted many other ranchers to the area hoping to create a new life for themselves in the west.

By 1906 the town of Pincher Creek became incorporated. It has proven to be a town and a municipal district of hard-working individuals, and I'm proud to represent them in this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, Pincher Creek continues to be an area which prides itself on its successful ranching sector, yet progressively minded people have been using other opportunities such as natural gas, wind, and hydro power to continue the prosperity within the region. The residents of Pincher Creek are pioneers of a green community. In fact, the largest wind farm in Canada resides within this area. The opportunity placed before the people represented by chinook winds has allowed them to embrace and to use green energy, and it has set a precedent for the rest of the nation.

This summer the community will welcome all visitors to their progressive town to relive history, enjoy their museums, parks, and attractions like the wind farms and the Oldman River dam. Make sure that you put it on your holiday itinerary.

For all of its accomplishments and for continuing its hard-working, example-setting attitude, I would like to sincerely thank the people of Pincher Creek and district for being the pioneers of the future for a better Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

World No Tobacco Day

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today, May 31, is World No Tobacco Day. World No Tobacco Day was created by the World Health Organization 20 years ago to draw global attention to the tobacco epidemic and the preventable death and disease it causes. This annual event raises awareness of the harmful effects of tobacco use, the business practices of tobacco companies, and helps inspire people around the world to embrace a healthy lifestyle.

Here in Alberta to commemorate World No Tobacco Day, AADAC hosted its annual provincial celebration this past Monday. Nearly 200 tobacco reduction stakeholders from around the province gathered together to share their ideas, learn from leading experts, and build new partnerships.

As part of this provincial celebration AADAC also presented the Barb Tarbox awards of excellence in tobacco reduction. To honour the legacy of Barb Tarbox, AADAC annually recognizes individuals, youth, businesses, and nonprofit groups that make significant contributions in the area of tobacco reduction, prevention, cessation, reduction or protection from second-hand smoke in Alberta.

After being diagnosed with terminal lung cancer, Barb Tarbox made it her mission to share her story with Alberta youth in the hopes of persuading them to quit smoking or preventing them from starting.

Mr. Speaker, the winners of the 2007 Barb Tarbox awards include: in the business category, All Weather Windows; in the nonprofit organization category, Red Deer College; in the individual category, Kathy McKenna; in the youth recognition category, Oliver school's Nellie McClung's BLAST team; and the youth scholarship award went to Trent Nabe of Medicine Hat. Each of these deserving winners has demonstrated outstanding leadership, commitment to their communities, and a dedication to tobacco reduction.

AADAC, Mr. Speaker, also remains dedicated to tobacco reduction and the principles of World No Tobacco Day. Under the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy AADAC and its many partners across the province continue to work towards our goals to reduce the number of young people starting to smoke, encourage and help current tobacco users to quit, and reduce nonsmokers' exposures to second-hand smoke.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Cystic Fibrosis Awareness Month

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this weekend I had the honour of walking with Canada's poster child for the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation. Peyton is four years old and lives in central Alberta. She has cystic fibrosis, but that doesn't stop her. Peyton was out in front, leading the many striders in the Great Strides walk held in many communities, including Red Deer, Edmonton, and Calgary.

Like most little girls her age Peyton enjoys playing with her dolls, fingerpainting, and camping. She also likes playing with her horse Jezzabelle. I learned from Peyton's mother, Charlotte, that Peyton is learning to count her own enzyme pills every day so that her stomach doesn't hurt when she eats.

Mr. Speaker, May is Cystic Fibrosis Awareness Month, and these community events are held to increase awareness of CF. Cystic fibrosis is the most common fatal inherited disease affecting young persons in Canada. CF attacks the lungs and digestive system. Thanks to advances in research and treatment half of all Canadians with CF are now expected to live into their late 30s and even beyond. Early diagnosis and early treatment have contributed to improved survival. We are proud that Alberta was the first jurisdiction in Canada to implement newborn screening for cystic fibrosis on April 1 of this year. Newborn screening for CF will provide CF babies with early treatment and a better start in life.

The Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation is a world leader in the fight against CF. Researchers discovered the gene responsible for cystic fibrosis in 1989 and continue to play a leading role in developing new treatments for this disease.

Please join me in congratulating Peyton, her family, all families who live with CF, all the Great Striders, the many volunteers, and the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation for raising CF awareness and for their work in helping to find a cure for this devastating disease.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Lottery Grants

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has landed in hot water over lottery grants to its friends. It's even ignored the Auditor General's own lottery grant recommendations to set up clear guidelines. This failure is of concern to all Alberta taxpayers. Let me give you a few examples.

First, the government ignored the Auditor General's other initiative program recommendations. In fact, volunteers can't even find an application guideline for it on the government website. Second, CFEP. Again, the Auditor General found that the government broke its own rules. Third, Applewood, a well-connected Tory institution, broke Wild Rose rules. Fourth, in this session we learned that the community CIP guidelines were broken 43 times. While we don't question the merit of any of the volunteer organizations involved, what we do question is why one Tory-connected outfit got to splurge so much money on high-end furniture.

In a heated question exchange two weeks ago about this grant program, Mr. Speaker, I said that the department was paying five times more than they deserved anyway. Poor wording, perhaps, on my part. My intent was to say that the department paid five times more than the application guidelines allowed.

The Alberta Liberals have a long history of supporting volunteer organizations. As shadow minister for TPRC I will continue to fight for the thousands of worthy organizations that apply to this government for lottery funds. I will also continue to call into question any grants that have received favourable treatment just because they are connected to top Tories.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Affordable Housing

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past several months we have seen how the affordable housing crisis affects Albertans from all walks of life. Especially hard hit are those living on fixed incomes as are many of Alberta's seniors. Recently we have heard many examples of massive rent increases, which have been labelled as gouging and called un-Albertan. These stories have been receiving a lot of media attention and have become topics of conversation in this House, in coffee shops, and on main streets throughout Alberta. Often overlooked, however, are the many less public stories that also deserve attention.

While landlords who gouge with $1,000-plus rent increases are the exception, unaffordable rent increases are becoming the rule in Alberta. While they often don't make headlines, these rent increases are of great concern to Alberta's seniors whose fixed incomes simply do not allow them to cope with the rising rents. When seniors face even a moderate increase in their rents, they're often left wondering if their fixed incomes will allow them to both pay their rents and afford to eat. Surely we can all agree that it's unacceptable for our seniors to be forced to choose between staying in their homes and keeping food on their tables. However, this is precisely the choice that seniors and many other renters are now facing as the government has failed to adopt legislation with the power to help them.

Seniors in Alberta have spent their lives contributing to this province and creating the basis for the prosperity within reach of all Albertans, but the price of this prosperity is unacceptably high for many, especially seniors. Should seniors not also share in this prosperity? Must they now pray and hope that they are eligible for relief from the homeless and eviction prevention fund? What is this government going to do to help seniors remain in their homes? It is time to start showing Alberta seniors the respect they deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition with 530 signatures on it. The petition urges the Legislative Assembly to "request the inclusion of Complex Decongestive Therapy in the list of accepted therapeutic procedures covered by Alberta Health Care." Last year my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview tabled a similar petition with 330 names on it, for a total of 860 signatures today.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to table the program for the 2007 Edmonton mayor's awards for the city of Edmonton Advisory Board on Services for Persons with Disabilities. There was a nomination in this category for the Fort Road Boston Pizza in Edmonton-Manning, and they do a tremendous job in trying to help people with disabilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Al Weir, and I would like the government to please read this one particularly carefully because of their concerns about the severe effects of clawbacks on AISH payments when spouses, even seniors on pensions, earn even a modest income.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today on behalf of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. The first is a letter dated May 28, 2007, to Mr. Steve Petz, president and chief executive officer, East Central health region, and it is a letter to confirm attendance at the Public Accounts Committee meeting on Tuesday, September 11, 2007, from 10 a.m. to noon.

The second tabling I have today is also a letter of confirmation to attend the Public Accounts Committee meeting on Tuesday, September 11, 2007, from 1 to 3, and this is a letter addressed to Mr. Bernie Blais, chief executive officer, Northern Lights health region, Fort McMurray.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are five copies of a letter from Mr. Robert Hoover to Mr. Bob Hawkesworth, a member of the Enmax board of directors, about the problem of Alberta workers who are dealing with high power lines playing a dangerous game of recloser roulette.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of a brochure outlining the services of VoicePrint. VoicePrint is mandated to broadcast full text readings of current articles from leading publications for all Canadians but particularly their core audience of people with vision and print restrictions. I know that many MLAs in the Assembly have gone to do readings for VoicePrint. It's an excellent organization.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Tarchuk, Minister of Children's Services, responses to questions raised by several members of the Assembly on May 16, 2007, Department of Children's Services 2007-08 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Snelgrove, Minister of Service Alberta, response to Written Question 12, asked for by Mr. Miller on May 14, 2007.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Environment, responses to questions raised by Members of the Legislative Assembly on May 14 and 16, 2007, Department of Environment 2007-08 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Environment, and the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Health and Wellness, response to a question raised by Mr. Eggen, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, on May 16, 2007, departments of Environment and Health and Wellness 2007-08 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Danyluk, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, responses to questions raised by Members of the Legislative Assembly on May 8, 2007, Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing 2007-08 main estimates debate.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's failure to release 1,700 pages of information from Alberta Environment related to the Balzac project can mean just one thing: they're trying to hide something. For almost four months they have used every excuse in the book to delay releasing these documents. This confirms what everyone knows. This government is involved in this project up to its eyeballs. To the Premier: if your government has nothing to hide, why will it not release these documents to the public?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I gave the answer to the question. In terms of the due date it's June 7, and there are some obligations on behalf of the government for third-party disclosure. The minister has all the information, and he may deliver that information.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, water taken from the Red Deer River to service the Balzac project was always a bad idea. Drumheller has twice said that there is no way they're supplying water to the project. The Minister of Environment stated yesterday that his department is "simply not dealing with it anymore." Now, we know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has met various parties trying to force a deal on water for the Balzac project from the Bow River. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us who his government has been meeting with to force a deal on water for the Balzac project: with municipalities, with First Nations groups, with water commissions, or any other entities?

Mr. Stelmach: We haven't been meeting with anybody to force anybody into anything.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] I guess they love me. Thank you. Thank you. [some applause] You know, it's a sign of desperation that they'll drown us out. [some applause] Carry it on, guys. Come on. That's your last tactic. You're on the run.

Southern Alberta is facing water concerns that are serious. Communities such as Strathmore and Turner Valley face tough decisions about limiting growth due to the lack of water. Farmers also face water issues . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier. [interjections]

A long time ago I said that when I call it, it goes. You're on TV. TV does not understand any of the clapping or the other noises. All the microphones are live on the questioner.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've identified that sourcing water is a serious matter not only for communities, for agriculture, for industry. That's why we have the Water for Life strategy. We've doubled the budget, a 105 per cent increase in that area working with municipalities. We're going to be moving further with planning in those areas where we have to look at long-term solutions to the availability of water. We're doing that by meeting with municipalities and talking to them and developing a plan.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

School Construction

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Albertans continue to pay dearly for the Conservative government's complete failure to plan for our province's growth. They refused for years to invest in the renewal of our public and separate schools. As we all know, of course, this Premier proudly led the calls from the Deep Six for cuts, and the results are clear. Dozens of Calgary communities are without schools, older schools are crumbling, and transportation costs are skyrocketing. This is another critical issue that this government is unable to deal with. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier explain how in one of the wealthiest jurisdictions on the planet so many communities don't have the schools they need and deserve?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the growth in the province of Alberta has been phenomenal not only in the major cities, but you see growth in many rural communities. That is why we put forward an $18 billion capital plan. It's the largest ever investment of public dollars in infrastructure in the province of Alberta. We also are in the process of introducing a policy that's going to be debated here in the House in terms of unbudgeted surpluses. We're asking that a good portion of those unbudgeted surpluses go towards maintenance so that we can not only maintain the buildings that we've built in the past but set some money aside for future generations to maintain all of the infrastructure we're building today.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I don't think anyone believes this government is getting value for all that money it's spending. Over and over this government tells people that it's spending vast amounts on education. My question will be to the Premier. Alberta governments could afford to build schools in the '50s, in the '60s, in the '70s, and even in the '80s, but for the past 15 years, when this government has never been wealthier, it suddenly can't manage to build schools. To the Premier: is this because of mismanagement or because the government doesn't support children going to school? Or is it simply incompetence?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, the opposition leader is totally wrong.

I will defer to the Minister of Education to read out the long list of new school projects, modernization projects in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think I heard the hon. member say that, quote, we're not getting value for money that we're spending. School boards spend 95 per cent of the budget, so I think the hon. member owes school boards an apology.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this PC government has come to power, they've taken over $200 billion in resource revenues out of the ground. They've managed to save almost none of it. Will the Premier admit that Alberta's education system needs truly sustainable funding sources so that we can provide the education system our children need?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, many times as a government we've said that we're looking at how we can broaden Alberta's tax base, reduce the reliance on a major revenue stream, which is oil and gas. One way, of course, to diversify is a knowledge-based economy. Schools, education, play such an important factor in moving towards that goal and diversification of the economy, and that's why we're investing the billions of dollars in public education. We'll continue to do so not only in the infrastructure but in the people that deliver the programs and make sure that we continue to be one of the best in the world in our public education system.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Investments in Tobacco Companies

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, today is World No Tobacco Day. At long last the government caucus is finally catching up to public opinion and moving towards a province-wide smoking ban in public places. For that, congratulations are in order. I want to assure you that the Official Opposition is prepared to sit further into this spring and summer if we can facilitate passage of this very important and long overdue legislation. My first question is for the minister of health. This year $9.1 million is being spent on the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. Can the minister share with this House the annual cost of tobacco use to the Alberta economy in health care costs, lost productivity, and other costs?

Mr. Hancock: Four hundred and seventy-one million, $8 million, $9 million, and $1.296 billion: those are the costs that we incur every year as a result of using tobacco. The $471 million is the direct health care cost. The indirect cost to our community and our society is $1.296 billion.

Mr. R. Miller: Against that, Mr. Speaker, we spend $9 million on the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy.

To the Minister of Finance: can the minister share with this House how much money this government has directly and indirectly invested in tobacco-based companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows because I have sent a letter to him, the amount is roughly $57 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly did know. I asked it to share it with all members of this Assembly.

My last question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Premier, and it's a very simple question. On this most appropriate of days will you and your government finally do the right thing: stop sending mixed messages to Albertans and get rid of the investments in tobacco-based companies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We had a very extensive discussion on this during Committee of Supply, and what I outlined to the hon. member is that we're actually putting all of our investment strategies towards a financial management committee that will be formed almost immediately. We're asking them what it should be. On one hand, we have to say that we should be maximizing the amount of dollars for Albertans versus ethical investment. What is ethical for one person is not necessarily ethical for others. So this is a very important discussion item. It's a discussion item that we have had a lot of talking with the opposition member, and it's something we are taking very, very seriously and will be discussing in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Royalty Review

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance was quoted in yesterday's reports as being nervous about the royalty review. Well, he should be because Albertans are watching. Energy companies' profits are hitting the stratosphere while the government projects declining energy revenues in future budgets. Increasingly, the royalty review looks like a sham, with energy companies crying crocodile tears and the Minister of Finance trying to lower the public's expectations for meaningful change. To the minister: why is the minister so nervous about the royalty review? Is it because he's been torn between the oil patch lobby and the expectations of a public who know they've been hosed for years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the hon. member is absolutely correct. Any time you take a very critical examination of a revenue stream of roughly $10 billion or $11 billion, or close to a third of our budget, you have to be nervous.

What initially we talked about with the review panel was that they need to take a holistic approach on how they look at royalties. They need to take a look to ensure that Albertans receive their fair share as well as keeping the economic activity in the province of Alberta going. I'll certainly respect their decisions, and we hope to have their decisions back by around the end of August. Certainly, they're an independent panel and will be making independent decisions.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given the minister's public comments about concern about the oil patch and its future earnings, I'd just like to remind him that Suncor's earnings were $551 million for the first four months of this year. EnCana's first-quarter earnings are up 15 per cent to $1.8 billion this year. The new titleholder for Canadian corporate profits is EnCana with a $6.5 billion profit in 2006, which exceeds the GDP of a number of small countries. So my question is to the Minister of Finance. How can he tell Albertans that the energy companies will not invest in the oil sands . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The answer is very obvious. EnCana is a world-wide company. It's a world-wide Alberta company that is investing right around the world. Their profits are being made from every other country in the world, being brought back to Alberta, funnelled into Alberta, and being spent in Alberta. EnCana is a true Alberta success story.

Mr. Mason: EnCana may be a true Alberta success story, but this Minister of Finance is not.

I would just like to ask him to please come clean with the people of Alberta and tell them that EnCana and other energy companies are making a killing in Alberta and that they're not paying enough in royalties to the owner of the resources, which is the people of this province.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, our Premier was very wise during the leadership campaign. What he stated was that we would get an independent panel of people to take a look at the royalties, have a very objective look at what the royalties were. Yes, indeed, all eight leadership candidates said exactly the same thing. That is what we are in the process of doing. We're looking at it from a very objective point of view. The panel that we have put together is full of experts. They've heard probably around 50 or 60 different submissions. In the first week on our website we had 17,000 hits from Albertans. So we're going to be taking all of this information together and formulating from the panel the best possible results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Honeybee Die-off

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albert Einstein once said: "If the bee disappeared off the surface of the globe then man would only have four years of life left." No more bees, no more pollination, no more plants, no more animals, no more man. Alberta's honeybees have had a huge die-off this year. Honey producers have lost at least 30 per cent of their bees; some in the north, 80 per cent. Bees are important. Pollination of crops is crucial. Our agriculture needs bees. Alberta exports a lot of honey, some of the best in the world. My question is to the minister of agriculture. When do you expect your ministry will note the extent of the die-off, and what means are you employing to find out given that this is a busy season for producers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A little bit of history along with a very good question, a timely question and probably kind of a concerning question. Yes, certainly, the bee industry is very important. We get about $50 million a year out of it, and it certainly pollinates our crops and adds there. We are already conducting a scientific survey to gauge the status of Alberta bees. We extended the survey deadline twice because beekeepers have been late with their surveys. We're now following up with phone calls on the surveys. Although not all surveys are available, it appears that the average loss in Alberta is . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplementary to the same minister. Honey producers say that U.S. bees are no more dangerous than those from other sources. With all costs included, importing bees from the U.S. is only one-third the cost of importing from New Zealand, the other main source. Given the bee die-off, importation is necessary. To stay in business, cost counts to producers. How will your ministry convince the federal government to allow bees from the U.S. to cross our border into Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are working very closely with both the federal government and our industry on this issue. I have already written to Chuck Strahl, the federal minister of agriculture, representing the CFIA, to conduct their new risk assessment on importing honeybees from the U.S. Given the record challenges facing beekeepers in Alberta and across Canada this year, we are hoping that the federal government will listen to our bee industry and allow the importation of U.S. bees.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Official Opposition laughs about issues from rural Alberta and doesn't seem to care very much about them, but these are important.

The honey industry in some parts of our province is extremely stressed. Some producers compare it to the effect of BSE on cattle producers a few years ago. What assistance is available to honey producers who have suffered significant loss due to circumstances beyond their control?

The Speaker: Point of order.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right. It is no laughing matter to the beekeepers in Alberta. I would say that in assisting, the Canadian agriculture income stabilization program assists all agricultural producers, and AFSC has been working with the Beekeepers' Association to examine how producers will be impacted and how CAIS could assist.

Just to follow up on the first question that I didn't finish, in Alberta we've lost about 31 per cent this year, and the national average over five years has been about 18 per cent. It's not associated with the colony collapse disorder that we hear about in other countries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Smoke-free Places Legislation

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government approved a provincial ban on smoking in all public places in Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell this House what the government's proposals will mean for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're planning to bring forward to this House legislation which will, among other things, prohibit smoking in all public places and workplaces, including within a reasonable distance from doors, windows, and air intakes; ban power walls and other tobacco retail displays and promotion; prohibit the sale of tobacco products in designated places such as pharmacies, universities, colleges, and health care facilities. We already have seen the tobacco tax increase, so what it will mean to Albertans is an improvement in their health status.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the support for the government's proposals, can the minister tell this House when government will bring legislation before the Assembly?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are still a number of processes. We have a very careful policy process in this government before we bring forward legislation. We've been through the policy discussions, and now we need to go through the legislative process discussions, but it's my hope that we'll be able to table legislation this spring so that Albertans will be able to see what we're talking about, see what it means to them, and have an opportunity to plan for its implementation. We'll be talking, hopefully, over the summer with retailers and others because it will have an impact on their business, and they need to know that impact and be prepared to plan for it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. How does the minister expect this legislation to improve the health of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since being appointed Minister of Health and Wellness and in the mandate letter that was given to me by the Premier, one of the four mandates that I was given was to strengthen public health services that promote wellness and injury and disease prevention. Well, the single most obvious thing to do is to reduce the amount of tobacco use because that tobacco use not only impacts us in terms of lung cancer. It's other forms of cancer, it's heart disease, it's lung disease, and in so many other ways it impacts the health of Albertans. By having legislation which is primarily aimed at ensuring that young Albertans do not start smoking, we will improve the health status of Albertans. We also want to continue to encourage adults who have started smoking to stop, and that will improve their lifestyle.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Royalty Rates

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1996 published in the Alberta Gazette were two orders in council that gave both Suncor and Syncrude the one-time option to change their royalty structure from that of synthetic crude oil to bitumen. My first question is to the Premier. Why did the government sign this sweet deal to allow Suncor and Syncrude the one-time option to pay an even lower royalty rate than they are now?

Mr. Stelmach: I was appointed to cabinet in March of 1997, so I don't know what happened in 1996. But we'll get the information and present it to the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: This is a very important issue, and I'm disappointed in the Premier.

Again to the Premier: how much will Suncor and Syncrude save in royalty payments to the province if they are allowed to pay royalties on bitumen and not on synthetic crude oil?

Mr. Stelmach: That's one of the reasons we're doing the royalty review. I guess that there's no answer I can deliver in this House to satisfy the member, so we'll just go to the third one.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. The constituents of this province, who own the resources, would appreciate an answer. Again to the Premier: is Suncor still using an allowed cost, which is an annual amount of $158 million, for historical costs which were not being deducted before 1996?

Mr. Stelmach: I could be a walking encyclopedia and still have – Mr. Speaker, we are undergoing a total royalty review, not only oil sands but conventional oil and gas and coal-bed methane. That information will be presented to all Albertans as shareholders in this great province by the end of August – that's the due date – and Albertans themselves will be able to look at the information and answer a lot of these questions for themselves.

Thank you.

Affordable Housing Projects

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, with reference to an earlier question, Notre Dame high school, Hunting Hills high school, St. Francis of Assisi, and Mattie McCullough have all been built within the last 15 years, not to mention Lindsay Thurber and Eastview.

My question, though, is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing about the 13 new affordable housing units that were announced earlier this month. Can he please explain to this Assembly how the priority of these projects was evaluated?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right that on May 17 we did announce $50 million worth of projects for affordable housing, which took place in Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Ponoka, Stettler, Westlock. This federal funding was allocated, and the criteria were needs in the community, proposed clients for the project, the proposed rental rates. We also considered the experience of the operator and the availability of land.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, based on the two press releases, one dated May 17 and the other dated May 24, a simple calculation shows that the cost of these units varies from as much as $350,000 per unit to $35,000 per unit. Can the minister tell us how we are making sure that we get value for our money?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, each individual application in the project is independent. I would say to the hon. member that probably the average cost of a project is $150,000 a unit. We also have, I mean, some cases that are lot less. Maybe I can use the example of Habitat for Humanity where we have private donations, we have companies that provide supplies, we have donated labour, and the cost per unit is approximately $50,000. This reduces the cost, then, but does provide for more units and more availability for renters.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I know of at least two other applications from Red Deer, one from the Piper Creek Foundation and the other from the Twilight Homes Foundation, that have applied under this program. Can he tell us how these people can find out where their projects are in the approval process?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, what has happened is that the process has changed. The autonomy of these projects has gone to municipalities. The city of Red Deer is getting over $5 million. Those individual applications that were not accepted – or there wasn't enough funding for the acceptance of those projects – will be turned over to the city to consider and to look at the needs of that particular municipality.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister admitted that she cannot help exploited temporary foreign workers because she doesn't know where they are. The government has lost control over the temporary worker program. Albertans have lost faith in their government. How can people have faith in their government when they lose people? This program was bad from the beginning, and it's getting worse now. It's becoming embarrassing. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: how can her department know exactly how many temporary foreign workers are in this province and where they're located?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I've acknowledged that that's a real challenge, but let's be clear: this is a federal program. This is a federal program where this province is co-operating. We are developing an annex to that made-in-Alberta immigration agreement with the federal government. We become involved when we talk to the federal government about these kinds of challenges. Many of the people that develop relationships with recruiters and contract temporary foreign workers certainly advise the provincial government. Clearly, there currently is no requirement for them to inform the provincial government, but many of them do in the course of their duties. We are looking at different ways and approaches to reach . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The CNRL Horizon project was one of the first Albertan sites to take advantage of the temporary foreign worker program. We all know that there are a large number of Chinese immigrants working on the site. We also know that two recently died up there, but that's about all that we know. To the minister: could she provide to this Assembly the exact number of temporary foreign workers on the CNRL Horizon project, and how can she be assured that they're being treated fairly?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are about 200 foreign workers on that site. Principally, the foreign workers that are probably being referenced by the hon. member are from China. There is currently a stop work order in place, in the capacity that embraced the three tanks that were being questioned. Beyond that, we have an investigation under way. We have retained engineers to give us advice about the wisdom of when work could commence in that area. While that investigation is under way, there will be very little that I can provide this Assembly that would be of use.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister argued that she's confident that temporary foreign workers are being protected because her department hired 72 new staff to investigate their complaints. Clearly, the minister does not understand the issue. Exploited workers are unlikely to come forward. They've been lied to about their rights. Many lack the language skills, and this government denies them any sort of labour mobility. In these conditions, they're not complaining; it isn't easy to do that. To this minister: is the government committed to proactively checking up on the temporary foreign workers? If so, how will they do this? They don't know where they are.

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm listening to somebody who is determined to make a very full glass look half-empty. There are many good things happening with temporary foreign workers in this province. Just recently, in fact at lunch, the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture and myself were privileged to hear about the co-operation of the Federation of Independent Business, the health and lodging association, the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association, and others that are making this a thoroughly successful program. There are many places where we are able to provide that kind of data, but clearly there have been times, and in the case of the Indian workers that came over unsolicited . . .

2:00 Nonresident Hunting Regulations

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents of Battle River-Wainwright and, indeed, many eastern Albertans have grown concerned over changes to regulations over out-of-country hunters entering the province to hunt. The permits they're entitled to have been reduced to only six days. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: can the minister explain why such changes were made and what policy decision encouraged this new regulation?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to explain the policy change, but I want to first confirm that the first priority of Alberta fish and wildlife is to provide quality hunting and fishing for resident Albertans.

An Hon. Member: First priority?

Dr. Morton: First priority. Yes.

Having said that, we've always welcomed nonresident and alien nonresident hunters, and we did introduce the six-day alien resident waterfowl licence last year. The purpose of introducing this six-day licence is to monitor the length of time nonresident aliens are in Alberta.

Mr. Mason: What's an alien?

Dr. Morton: A noncitizen, Brian.

An Hon. Member: NDP.

Dr. Morton: Not NDP, yeah.
The concerns are . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. American hunters come to Alberta to hunt, spend a lot of money on hotels, food, supplies, and so on, and are a boon to many small communities who count on those hunters and their money that they spend. Now, those hunters, at least the ones that come to my constituency, are crossing the border to hunt in Saskatchewan, and their money is going with them. Does the minister understand the negative impact this policy is having on eastern Alberta border communities?

Dr. Morton: Yes. Mr. Speaker, we do understand the economic value of hunting to rural Alberta, and we want to encourage it. But we're concerned about a new trend in what we believe to be rogue guides, who are nonresident aliens who come in, pretend they're hunters, but they're actually guides. Instead of spending two or three weeks here, they spend two or three months here, supposedly hunting with their friends, who, in fact, are paying clients. That's against the laws of Alberta. The only paid guiding in Alberta are resident Albertans. I'm happy to report that just last month we achieved a conviction of $25,000 and a lifetime ban from ever hunting in Alberta again for somebody who was found guilty of doing just this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that laws made to stop a few people who are breaking off and have impact on large numbers of groups who did nothing wrong, will the minister consider changing the regulations and perhaps do some advertising to bring back the hunters to eastern Alberta to help those communities that have been hit hard by the policies of the department?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, at this time we're not prepared to change the regulation, but I do want to assure the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright that we do and will support hunting tourism. Just in the last two weeks we met with Alberta Tourism to encourage greater exposure of hunting in their facilities. We'll be coming forward with a new website, a licensing website, in the next about 18 months which will feature those types of hunting opportunities on the Internet, and we'll also be working to add hunting tourism to the rural development strategy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's incompetence to deal with our overheated economy knows no bounds. To rectify its negligent infrastructure planning over the past years and to help out corporate friends, this government keeps pursuing P3 financing. On March 19 of this year the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation told this House that the Calgary ring road "will be done two years ahead of schedule than if we would have done it the conventional way, and we're going to have savings of hundreds of millions of dollars." My question to the minister is simply this. We're going to ask him to prove it. Will the minister, then, agree today to release a public-sector comparator that confirms his statement to this Assembly?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, you know what has been going on in cost escalations and how expensive prices have been rising. I'll tell you what: that hon. member should be wrapping his arms around everybody that even talked P3 on the money that we're going to end up saving by getting the job done now. Certainly, he can come and see whatever he'd like to see on anything to do with that.

Mr. Martin: I'm trying to quit wrapping my arms around people like you.

Mr. Speaker, the point is that we heard the same rhetoric about Anthony Henday here in Edmonton before. When we found out the public-sector comparator was the exact opposite of what the government said, we found out that the taxpayers could be about $70 million cheaper. My question is again: rather than the rhetoric will the minister release the public-sector comparator that tells the Assembly the figures that he has? We want to know that in this Assembly.

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, sir, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin: I'd like to then follow up. We were promised this a couple of years ago, Mr. Speaker. When will he do this in this Assembly, release the public-sector comparator on the Calgary ring road?

Mr. Ouellette: As soon as I have time, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Sign Language Interpreter Program

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past several weeks myself and, I suspect, a number of members of the Legislature have received a number of letters from concerned members of the deaf and hard of hearing community as well as prospective interpreters in American Sign Language. The sign language interpreter diploma program, a two-year course planned for Lakeland College, did not get funding in the recent budget, leaving a number of prospective students wondering what happened. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: can the minister explain why this worthwhile program was approved by his department but did not receive funding?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the program was approved at Lakeland College. They have, actually, two programs that were approved late in the year. The funding envelopes at the time had already been expended to the other course loads because of student timelines and the timelines at the institutions. The previous course, which was at Grant MacEwan College, had very low enrolments. That's where this other course from Lakeland is coming from. We are looking forward to proposals coming from Lakeland College for this fall, and we'll review the analysis of that when it comes forward.

Mr. Tougas: Well, in 2006 the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that deaf and hard of hearing people had the right to government services in their choice of either ASL or the French alternative. Without funding this year Lakeland College will not start producing new trained ASL interpreters for at least another year. There's already such a desperate shortage of trained sign language interpreters that even Lakeland College couldn't hire one for their graduation ceremony. Is the minister concerned that without this program deaf and hard of hearing people may not be able to get government services in the language of their choice, as the Supreme Court has ruled?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not concerned that they won't be able to get those services. What I'm concerned about is providing the appropriate level of infrastructure in our institutions to provide the courses that the students want and that society demands. Certainly, Lakeland College has been very proactive in providing those two courses, that are actually integrated in a pathway, if you will, for other courses as well. As I said in my previous answer, we're looking forward to the proposal coming to us, and we'll look at the planning envelope and the envelope for this fall's enrolments.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mr. Tougas: I have nothing else.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Youth Apprenticeship Program

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With our overheated economy we all know that there's a huge need for skilled labour. One of the possible solutions is training our own – imagine that – and what better place to start but in the junior high schools. We've had three pilot projects in three school divisions doing exactly that, being very creative, getting students to sample a variety of trade possibilities in the private sector. My question is to the Minister of Education. What results did you receive regarding these pilot projects, and what did they achieve?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Lesser Slave Lake is referring to the youth apprenticeship program, commonly called YAP, and it is funded, actually, by Alberta Advanced Education and Technology. The hon. member is correct. It's a six-year pilot project that's now in its third year. This fall we will be looking at assessing the results to date. The project basically allows students to visit work sites and tradespeople to visit schools. The early indications are that it's being well received.

Ms Calahasen: You're right, Mr. Speaker. The project is really well received.

My question is, then, to the same minister. If this program is coming to its completion, could you please indicate whether the program will continue and whether or not we are prepared to do that?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the program has still got several years to run, and the determination on whether to continue it will be part of the assessment that will be taking place this fall. As I said, it is currently funded under Advanced Education and Technology, and I guess, at the end of the day, the determination of whether to continue funding it will be with the minister.

Ms Calahasen: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, but the intent was to expand it further. If it is going to be something that is going to be really working well and we are going to be satisfying the needs of a labour shortage and we are trying to ensure that our kids stay in school, can we then expand this further into other schools so that we can see it be successful?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I guess that would be our desired result. There's no question that the one area where we can certainly do better both on high school completion rates and training our own is in the native and aboriginal communities, but again we need to do the assessment and determine whether or not the program is working. Maybe it's even a situation where you change it slightly. That'll all be determined this summer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Renter Assistance Programs

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The homeless and eviction prevention fund is a temporary measure designed for renters who need one-time immediate assistance, and it's only good for a month. Everyone else is directed to the Municipal Affairs rent supplement programs, which are income tested. This program won't help Albertans who are spending anywhere from 40 to 80 per cent of their income on rent but are still not considered low income; in other words, anyone over $26,000 for a one bedroom or $33,000 for a two bedroom. My first question is to the minister of housing. What is the government doing to help these Albertans? If there are no temporary rent controls, what else can these renters do?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, we do have the temporary support that comes through Employment, Immigration and Industry. What does take place is in the rent supplements. We take individuals that have the most need and address those concerns. We did add $285 million to the budget of Housing to address those concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of EII. The homelessness and eviction prevention fund requires renters to either be in arrears or to have notice of eviction from their landlords. Why would this government rather force renters into debt, possibly ruining their credit rating, in order to receive support? Why aren't temporary rent caps an option?

Ms Evans: The issue of rent caps is something that our ministry is not directly responsible for, but I think there's been quite a significant amount of discussion in this Assembly. Let me just say that we have located 65 people, helping them establish new residences, and 273 families – 273 – that have been given assistance to avoid eviction. So we are providing that support and assistance.

Ms Blakeman: These programs are not working. They're too narrow.

Again to the minister of housing. Rather than address the rent crisis in this province, this government's short-term solution is to pay landlords the rent that Albertans cannot afford. Why does this government prefer to subsidize landlords rather than implementing temporary rent caps, that protect Albertans against unaffordable increases?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government's solution is making sure that there are more rental units available and that we have some stability in the market and making sure that there are more units that are being built. Also, I want to say that we have changed the program as well to try to accommodate individuals who need to have a rent supplement. We deal directly with those individuals and support them for a rent supplement instead of dealing all through landlords.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Aboriginal Housing Program

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than $16 million in new affordable housing projects to benefit aboriginal people was announced last week. Low-income aboriginal peoples and their families living off reserve in Calgary, Edmonton, Grande Cache, Lac La Biche, Lethbridge, Lloydminster, and Wabasca will benefit from 370 new affordable units approved for funding in their communities. To the minister of municipal affairs. Cam Alexis, the chief of the Alexis band in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, is the head of housing development for Treaty 6 nations. He has asked me if another round of grant applications will be considered.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, what has taken place is that this is a partnership with the federal government. The federal government has committed three years of support for housing and housing projects for Alberta. The first round, as indicated, has been distributed. We are in the process of looking at the second round and looking at the individual applications. And yes, they will be looked at.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again to the same minister: will the minister consider communities like Whitecourt and the Alexis band – Whitecourt using municipal sustainability funds and the Alexis band using this grant – to partner in projects to provide more housing projects?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess the quick answer would be yes. The long answer would be that any sort of partnering that we can do to enhance the support given to communities, working together with agencies, working together with groups, is very positive.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This time to the minister responsible for aboriginal affairs. Given those answers, what is he doing to promote the maximum use of these grants for our native and aboriginal communities?

Mr. Boutilier: That's a very good question. Actually . . .

The Speaker: I haven't recognized you yet.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: But proceed.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm so excited about getting a question, Mr. Speaker, that I jumped the gun.

What I am doing is answering questions that the hon. member has asked about the communication with our First Nations and our Métis settlements in terms of this important, positive government initiative: millions of dollars going to help in terms of affordable housing. We're working closely in partnership with the minister of municipal affairs. I might also add that the Alexis band is an excellent example of the partnerships that this government has formed in the past and, certainly, will do in the future.

The Speaker: Was that the short answer or the long answer?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, despite numerous appeals for detailed eligibility requirements for the homeless and eviction prevention fund, the minister responsible still has not made clear whether renters in need of assistance will be income tested or asset tested. Rather, the minister claims that this fund has flexibility because the director has discretion on a case-by-case basis. My question to the minister is: when renters contact any of the 59 Alberta Works offices and seek benefits, what are they going to be told? Given that not all cases will go straight to the director, what guidelines are in place for front-line staff to follow? What are the guidelines?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the comments I could make is that family size, family situation, pending employment: these are all things considered. If a worker needs their truck for work, obviously that's not going to be counted as a negative situation because they have that particular asset. I think it's very responsible to enable the workers to look at the individual circumstances that are facing the families. The policy is to give the director flexibility. That director, in turn, can work with the workers that are counselling people on their needs for income supports and provide them accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, can the minister assure us that there's going to be fairness and consistency between offices? I mean, where is the line between discretion and inconsistency here?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member wouldn't be attempting to speak deleteriously about our staff between offices. Our staff take the policy and strive to interpret it in the fairest possible way. We recognize the pressures on families. We have spoken to all of the 59 centres, assuring them that we want them to be compassionate and considerate of the plights of Albertans. So I'm anticipating that this is a very consistent policy with some kind of capacity for compassion.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, we get information from front-line staff that the information they receive from the department one day is different from the information they get the next day. The question of consistency is really important. I mean, clients are really in need. It's really confusing to them what this program is all about. This government has had plenty of time to come up with and communicate a really clear plan, but Albertans are still confused by flawed and inconsistent programs and policy. Will the minister admit that this government's constant scrambling is impacting services to people in need?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that the 65 families that found new residences and the 273 families that were saved from eviction wouldn't say that we are constantly scrambling. They would say that we are responding. I'd like names, dates, applications that weren't properly dealt with, because that seems to be the inference from the member opposite, so that I can on an individual basis explore them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 94 questions and answers today.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 7(6) I'd like to request that the Government House Leader share with the House the projected government House business for the week of June 4 to June 7, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, June 4, in the hope and anticipation that later on today the Assembly might approve a motion to allow for an evening sitting, we would hope to deal with government business starting at 8 p.m. That government business would include Committee of the Whole on Bill 33, Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act; Bill 26, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007; and Bill 32, Animal Health Act; time permitting, second reading on Bill 29, Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007, and Bill 39, Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007, and perhaps committee on those, time permitting. That would be Monday evening if the Legislature approves a motion later on today.

On Tuesday under Government Motions, depending on progress Monday night, Government Motion 27 calling for an evening sitting on Wednesday would go forward, if necessary, depending on progress Monday night. Committee of Supply in the afternoon would be Infrastructure and Transportation; Employment, Immigration and Industry; and Seniors and Community Supports. That's a New Democrat opposition day. In the evening on Tuesday, again, if the motion is passed this afternoon, Committee of Supply on Education; Employment, Immigration and Industry; Seniors and Community Supports; and Children's Services.

On Wednesday, June 6, in the afternoon cross-ministry day with Executive Council, and again, if we require the motion on Tuesday, the evening session would deal with the same order of business that I talked about on Monday in Committee of the Whole.

On Thursday, June 7, Committee of Supply cross-ministry on land use, and that would involve Energy, Sustainable Resource Development, Municipal Affairs and Housing, and Environment. Then at the expiry of the time for Committee of Supply votes would be scheduled with respect to all matters before Committee of Supply, at 5:45 or earlier if time permits.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before getting to Orders of the Day, we have at least one point of order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in the proceedings, in an exchange on a question, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning made some comments that under 23 (h) making allegations, (i) imputing false or unavowed motives, and (j) using abusive or insulting language I would argue were inappropriate comments to make. They were sweeping allegations that covered indiscriminately members of the Liberal caucus here, and I would argue that the imputed motives are flat-out wrong and inaccurate.

It was during his question about the bees, and it's interesting because at the exact time he was asking that question, I was having a quiet side conversation with the Leader of the Official Opposition, who was underlining to me how important that whole issue was. He certainly used language in his comments or his side comments that provoked a response from members of this caucus, and they certainly view that language as abusive. It certainly did create a disorder and provoked debate.

I think what's interesting here is that there was an assumption that the Member for Edmonton-Manning heard laughter as compared to the regular hubbub in this House and that he believes that it was made by members of the Opposition. Frankly, how does he know, if it was laughter, that it wasn't made by any of the other 82 members in the House? That can be very difficult to distinguish. And there was an assumption that the response was specific to his comments. There are often side conversations that happen while question period is on. Actually, later in question period I noted an eruption of laughter from the front bench on the government side, and I don't think it was in response to the question that was being asked by the member at the time, but how would you know?

I would argue that the member has contravened all three of 23 (h), (i), and (j) and would ask for a retraction of that comment, please.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on this point.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm surprised that a point of order would be called on this matter. You know, I look at Beauchesne's, page 22, article 75, and that speaks to freedom of speech. "The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House and in committee." I would think that that would apply to this Legislature as well.

Certainly, in looking at Standing Orders 23 (h), (i), and (j), to say "makes allegations against another Member" speaks in the singular, and I did not in any way make an allegation against another member, Mr. Speaker. Subsection (i) says, "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." I did not make anything to any particular member. "Uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." There was greater disorder prior to my statement than after, in my opinion.

Mr. Speaker, in terms of the nature of the issue and laughing at it, it was certainly clear to me that there was laughter coming from the benches of the Official Opposition. I did make some comment as to that, but I believe, from some experience, that there was nothing that would have been untoward in due order in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Here's what was said: "I know the Official Opposition laughs about issues from rural Alberta and doesn't seem to care very much about them, but these are important." First of all, the imputation of motives under Standing Order 23 does not apply to caucuses; it applies to individuals. So that would be an inappropriate usage with respect to that. Secondly, there was no doubt at all in my mind that there was uproar before the Member for Edmonton-Manning was even recognized to raise a question. In this case the sightlines of the chair go directly to the position of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, and I have to agree about the laughs because I saw them with my eyes. No point of order.

Hon. Government House Leader, do you have a point of order?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention to raise a point of order with respect to the inappropriateness of the question from Edmonton-Gold Bar because it related to specific details and related to a matter that was some 15 years old and would perhaps have been more appropriate in written questions, but I don't think we need to belabour that point, so I will withdraw the point of order.

Orders of the Day

head:

Government Motions

The Clerk: Motion 24. The hon. Mr. Hancock.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, might it be appropriate to call 25 and 26 before 24?

Evening Sitting on June 4

25. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly pursuant to Standing Order 4 convene an evening sitting beginning at 8 p.m. on Monday, June 4, 2007, for the consideration of government business.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just in case we run out of time, 24 could happen another time, and 25 is important for today. When we brought in the new Standing Orders, there was consideration of trying to make sure that we didn't sit in the evenings unless it was necessary. We're coming to the time which has been well advertised. In Standing Orders for the future we've provided for sessions to begin on the first Monday in February and to end normally on the first Thursday of June. This session, of course, started a little later than that. We have clearly signalled that the intention is to go to the 14th of June.

So we're coming to the close of the spring session. There will be, of course, a fall session called as per the new orders, for I think it's the first Monday in November to the first Thursday in December to deal with the remaining business. But there are some matters of government business which my colleagues have advised me they need to have passed during the spring session, and thus it would make sense to have a session in the evening on Monday so that we can deal with matters that need to come to Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole is a time frame when you perhaps need more time depending on what sort of amendments come forward and in order to ensure that we deal with the business that we have.

We've had a spring session where since the budget came down, Committee of Supply has occupied most of the government business time of the session, which is quite appropriate when you have a budget the size of the government of Alberta budget. It's appropriate to have the time that we've used in Committee of Supply in examining the estimates of each department, but it's also necessary before we rise this spring to complete certain elements of government business. So I'd ask the Legislative Assembly for permission to sit on Monday evening so that we can deal with the items that I indicated in the Projected Government Business section.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are two motions in front of us, three actually, but two about additional evening sittings. We're dealing with them in order. This is dealing with an additional evening sitting on Monday, June 4.

Mr. Speaker, I note that in the revised temporary Standing Orders there is a setting down of the expectations of an end date under usual circumstances, but we're not in that this year. The government chose to come into the Assembly several weeks after it usually does – I think three or possibly even four weeks later – and now there is a great rush to try and get out by a specified date, and frankly there is no specified date. It's not in the Standing Orders.

The government has absolute authority and, frankly, the majority vote to be able to extend the sitting of this Legislature any time it wants. I've already signalled the opposition's reluctant willingness, but willingness, to extend the session during the day and for us to come back and do this business during the day. We did indeed go into those negotiations saying that it would really just need to be extraordinary circumstances for us to be sitting at night. We've had two weeks' worth of additional night sittings now to try and accommodate the government's desire to have the House rise by the 14th of June, and this is adding now a third week, the beginning of a third week of night sittings.

So I would argue that any business that the government needs to get done – I mean, one, we should've come into the session earlier to get that business done; two, to me it's reflective of the disorganization of the government, that it can't seem to organize its business in order to get it done in the time that we have before us; three, if it's really necessary to do it, then let's do it during the day, not calling people back here at night. If we were going to do that, then we could maybe be able to take the time to pass the coming bill on smoking. We'd be happy to do that.

I'm not happy to see this before us. Certainly, the government has the majority vote to pass it, and I'm sure they will today. But I don't think this is in the spirit of what we were trying to negotiate. Why the government insists on pulling in additional evening sittings instead of just extending the sitting beyond an arbitrary day, I don't know and I don't support.

Thank you.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get too uptight about this. If this starts to happen next year when we lay out the time frame and when we know it, then I think I would be very upset because that certainly would go against the negotiations that we had. In my opinion, I knew that the 14th was the sort of the deadline, and I expected this time to have night sittings. I don't like them particularly, but I'm not going to get that excited about it one way or the other. I just want to say on record here, though, that I'm prepared to support this motion but with the proviso that this should not be happening next year because that's clearly what we did negotiate when we set the time frame.

In this case this year I would tend to agree that there's been a fair amount of disorganization getting it going and the rest of it, but that's beside the point. We're here where we're at now, and I think most people expected the 14th to be the end date. So I think we might as well get on with it.

But I just do want to make the warning that this should not occur next year because then, clearly, we will come into the Assembly in February, and the end date is June, and there should be no night sittings. It should flow the way we set it up in the House leaders' meeting.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Government House Leader to close the debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just two points: obviously, if we go past the 14th, there's a constituency week scheduled, so we'd go into the last week of June. The opposition knows that, and if they're prepared to sit, that's fine with them. But it's been very clear from at least halfway through the session that June 14 was our scheduled end date.

With respect to the negotiations that have been referenced, it was clear when we started talking about an end date – and I'll give this to House leader of the Official Opposition, that she always maintained that she didn't need an end date. But most sessions that have a clear, defined start and finish also have what I would call a fail-safe motion. A fail-safe motion is a motion which allows certain legislation to be passed. We agreed not to bring that kind of a fail-safe motion in, but one of the things that we needed then was the ability to either call an evening sitting or extend the session.

So this is not contrary to any of the negotiations or any of the discussions, but I would agree with the hon. member from the third party that this should not be our practice. It wouldn't be our intention to have this as our practice because one of the things that was intended out of those negotiations was to have the type of session where members could have a family life, go home at a reasonable time to their families or to their constituencies and constituency events, and that would be the practice that I would hope that we would intend to follow in the next year.

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Deputy Chair: The committee has before it today the departments of Sustainable Resource Development, followed by International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, and thereafter Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. It's a total of three hours set aside for the Liberal caucus. We will deal with each of these portfolios for one hour beginning now.

Sustainable Resource Development

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, if you don't mind introducing your officials.

To the officials, I'd just like to let you know that should you need a glass of water or a cup of coffee, just raise your hand and one of the pages will come by and provide that to you.

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes, I would like to begin by introducing my very capable staff, who've been a huge assistance to me since I was appointed minister. I'd like to begin by introducing Mr. Brad Pickering on my immediate left, my deputy minister; next to him, Mr. David Bass, the assistant deputy minister for finance and administration; continuing from right to left, the famous Cliff Henderson, the assistant deputy minister for forestry; next to Cliff, Mr. Craig Quintilio, assistant deputy minister for lands; and last, but not far from least, Mr. Ken Ambrock, with his new hip, assistant deputy minister for fish and wildlife.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you may proceed. After your comments we still have about eight minutes left in your remarks. It'll go back and forth between the Liberal caucus and yourself.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to begin by addressing some remarks on our estimates of $353 million for budget year 2007-2008. We believe this budget responds to the challenges of managing our natural resources at a time of significant economic growth and pressures on our resources. We believe our budget and the way it's structured addresses both immediate and long-term needs. It will enable the ministry to better co-ordinate activities on public lands across the province. It also reflects the ministry's internal changes to better focus on forest lands and fish and wildlife.

Our area management model now provides a single window for service delivery, with dedicated area managers assigned to each of the 11 areas in the province. It also allows the ministry to be more responsive to resource management issues. The $115 million in new money is directed towards the ministry's three top priorities as set out by the Premier, specifically the completion of the land-use framework; the implementation of an aggressive strategy to protect the health of our forest, specifically with respect to mountain pine beetle; and finally the implementation of our biodiversity monitoring strategy.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

A few remarks with respect to our forestry budget. The most significant 2007-2008 budget allocation was the addition of the $52.6 million to combat mountain pine beetle in the province. Unfortunately, the front line in the war against mountain pine beetle has moved from British Columbia to Alberta. I've requested and received a declaration of forest health emergency to ensure that Alberta has the $50 million from the sustainability fund to continue aggressive action against the mountain pine beetle.

An additional $2.6 million was added to our base budget to deal with pine beetle. These funds build the capacity for both manpower and equipment. That's the $2.6 million to our base budget. It allows us to develop and implement a strategic response to changing threats posed by the beetle. It also allows for the hiring of seasonal staff and equipment, to secure contracts for mountain pine beetle related operations, talking now about the emergency funding.

Activities that would be included include baiting for the beetles, trapping, cutting and burning of infested trees, and monitoring and identification of infested trees. We also will continue to assist municipalities, as we did last year, in their efforts to identify and remove beetle-infested trees. Last year we provided more than $5 million to 16 different communities, and we're continuing that commitment in Budget 2007.

Having identified funds to support communities as they prepare to face increased control activities, we put that into the budget. This all is the result of the large fly-in, or influx, of beetles from British Columbia in northwestern Alberta during last summer, the summer of 2006.

Finally, we've also approved an additional $5 million to the Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta, known as FRIAA, to undertake specific mountain pine beetle management activities.

With respect to forest protection, continuing on that, mountain pine beetle is not the only issue we're dealing with. We have vast tracts of mature forest across the province. Because of the lack of age distribution, the relatively old-age cohort of our forests, our science indicates that this is a significant wildfire threat, so we propose to permanently increase our wildfire base budget by $45.2 million. This will enable the ministry to achieve a full state of readiness prior to the start of the fire season. In past years these start-up costs were partially funded through supplementary estimates. This year we've made an accounting change, if you like, by fully funding these costs in the base budget. This provides a more realistic model with which to prepare for the coming fire season.

Activities that will be financed out of these funds include the hiring and training of contract fire crews, our network of support staff, and lookout tower personnel. The ministry will also complete contracts for air tankers and helicopters that are all part of our wildfire suppression effort.

In terms of capital spending the ministry is in year 2 of a three-year $42 million commitment to upgrade our air tanker fleet. As part of this, $14 million is allocated for this budget year, '07-08, to replace the aging piston engines in these air tankers with state-of-the-art, Canadian-built turbine engines. This change will make our planes 32 per cent more efficient and also reduce our maintenance costs. The ministry is also undertaking significant upgrades to the air tanker base at Fort McMurray as part of our ongoing maintenance of existing facilities, and another $1 million has been carried forward from '06-07 to complete the work at the facilities at the Springbank air tanker base near Calgary.

Next, I'd like to address a few moments to our land-use framework. This is a top priority of the ministry and also was identified in my mandate letter from the Premier as one of my top priorities. One million dollars in new money is budgeted specifically for the land-use framework in 2007, bringing the total to $2 million. This will enable the ministry to complete the work and present a draft framework by the end of this year. On April 30 we announced 17 public sessions in 15 communities across the province. We're finishing that public consultation this week. Albertans can also participate by completing a workbook in addition to attending these public information sessions. The workbook questionnaire is available through MLA offices and also online. We're looking forward to hearing from several thousand Albertans on what their views are on issues that comprise the land-use framework.

In addition, the SRD land-use framework budget includes $2 million to continue an integrated land-management planning and decision-making process to better co-ordinate the multiple pressures facing our finite land base, and another $2 million for a natural resource information system to facilitate and improve land-use decisions. These latter two programs are not part of the actual framework development. They relate to dealing more efficiently and effectively with land-use issues at hand today.

Next, I'll spend just a moment addressing the oil sands strategy. The ministry received $2 million in new funding to address recommendations from the provincial oil sands strategy. This will address the significant increase in environmental impact assessment work and approvals relating to oil sands development in the north and also allow us to better monitor and manage the cumulative effects resulting from this increased activity. Staff from the ministry's newly formed oil sands team is responsible for overseeing these tasks.

We have also received and have allocated half a million dollars, $0.5 million, for new technology for an electronic disposition system that will improve the management of dispositions issued on public lands. This new system should reduce the turnaround times on applications, provide better service to our clients, and enable the ministry to maintain a better picture of the activity on the landscape.

On the biodiversity monitoring program, another one of the priorities of the ministry and in the Premier's mandate letter to me, we've committed $4.2 million in new money this year to implement the biodiversity monitoring program. This is a joint undertaking between government, industry, and NGOs that will provide ecosystem-level information on Alberta's living resources, habitats, and the activities that affect them. This is the first operational year following five years of prototype development during which techniques were refined. The Biodiversity Monitoring Institute is up and running.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. minister. I'm sure you'll have a chance to continue in a moment or two, but right now I would like to call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, and I've got my clock going as well. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to say congratulations to the minister on his deliberating on his first budget as well as welcome to the assistant deputy minister and all the other members of his team.

You did speak first of all about the $353 million budget, and right off the bat you went into the $52.6 million, I believe, to battle the mountain pine beetle. It's unfortunate, but we've been at this now for two years prior to this date, talking about the mountain pine beetle. Before we were talking about the amounts that we were giving to B.C. When you think about the large scale that we're on right now, it was a pittance compared to now, $52 million. If we'd have reacted then, maybe we wouldn't be in the position that we are now. But do you know what? That's then; this is now. We'll continue to go on.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

How much of that $52.6 million that you mentioned is in conjunction with or in combination with federal dollars? I know that at one point they had allocated or at least were proposing to promise some monies to help with this spread of the mountain pine beetle. How much of that $52.6 million is federal money as well?

Part of the money you mentioned, $2.6 million, is base funding for manpower and equipment. I think that's maybe going to be settled out. This is a separate line item, separate from the equipment and services. You said that you have a three-year commitment, so this would just be specifically for the mountain pine beetle, I'm assuming.

We talk about the pine beetle. I know it's spreading, and we've been doing some monitoring with some of our bases throughout the province. We had an exceptionally cold, quick drop in temperature in November. It was in some locations, I believe, around minus 47, and it did hit quite quickly. I'm just wondering as to the effect. I know we've had this conversation, but what would be the overall impact on the pine beetle? I know that we're doing, as you mentioned, some inspections, some cutting and burnings. But what would be the effectiveness of the cold weather that we've been hoping for for the last couple of years? Has it had the impact that we were hoping for? Has it taken out as many as 90 to 95 per cent? Certainly, that would be a big strike for us in combating this. If not, then we know that we're just beginning to do the work here. Alberta is, as we've said before, the battleground for the rest of the provinces that lie to the east of us.

I'm just wondering, then, if I can just go on on some specifics. Last year we cut down some of our budget from last year. We cut down on our forestry protection. That would probably be Cliff, then, who would be answering this particular piece. We dropped about — what is it? — 40 per cent or decreased our budget. I'm not sure if that was just because we're not expecting as high forest fires. I know that it's always hard to predict the volatility of the weather or where the fires are going to come in. Is the minister expecting a similar occurrence this year?

We've seen overspending before, but we're not quite there again, so we've decreased that particular budget. I'm just trying to get my exact figures on that. I think it was, as I said, about a 40 per cent decrease within the budget. We went down about $140,000 compared to what we were looking at last year. Again, this is just an estimate. I'm assuming that we'll probably go to more specifics later on and maybe do a supplemental supply. I'm not sure how that will work then.

If you're able to break down the forestry protection spending, how much is going to go directly to defend forest fires in your best guess? I know that's a tough one, but if you can do that, that would be great. You've already explained how much is going to pine beetles, the $52.6 million. Then there was another amount, $26.2 million, for forestry capital investments. I'm not sure exactly where that money is being spent. If you could maybe elaborate for me on that particular piece, that would be great.

You did talk about leading into the land-use framework. This is something that the province has been dearly looking forward to for a number of years. I'm just wondering at what point you're hoping to round it up, at least by the end of this month, and have a report to Albertans, perhaps in the late year, December, maybe rolling into January.

I'm kind of skeptical sometimes about task forces, or at least this type of exercise, because we did the Affordable Housing Task Force. We talked to a number of people throughout the province. We were looking for information. It was an enormous cost not only to taxpayers, but a lot of people put a lot of time and effort writing out their submissions. We came and compiled it in a short amount of time, yet the majority, more than half of the recommendations from the Affordable Housing Task Force were dismissed. I'm just wondering how much stock, how much hope people should put within this particular exercise? If they look at the same results as happened in the Affordable Housing Task Force, they were dismissed. I mean, are we going to actually look at what we're getting and take the good with the bad and accept it, or are we going to just cherry-pick like we have in the past?

The Premier, I think, is on record stating that, you know, oil and gas: we're not going to put the brakes on that; that shouldn't be on the table. But, clearly, that has a huge impact on the land-use strategy. Oil and gas has an impact on the lands and our waters. I'm just wanting to know: is that going to be on the table? If there are some negative comments towards the industries and their pace of growth, is this minister prepared, committed to take in some of those recommendations and to do at least a reasonable thing and do an overview as to what the impact of oil and gas is on our overall public lands?

That, clearly, is having a huge effect on northern Alberta and some of the outlying areas as well. When you've got competing interests out there, that's got to be taken into consideration. I know that most people will be giving their submissions on that. I know that the oil industry is already saying that right now they can't afford to pay less on that with regard to the royalties, but this is something altogether different.

I'm hoping that there will be a number of submissions with regard to the land-use strategy for off-road vehicles. There is a desperate need to have some control with regard to the recreational use. I'm not talking about the snowmobiles because we usually have plenty of snow, and they're not usually going out and trying to damage their snowmobiles when there are roots exposed. This is altogether different. Right now, spring, summer, and fall, when you get into the hunting, this is the absolute time that we need to be discussing this.

I've tabled pictures before in this Legislature of some of the activities and some of the devastating effects on some of the areas. You've got a six-foot-two man standing in a trench that has been dug out repeatedly by off-road vehicles. I mean, that's obviously just abuse. I'm just wondering: do we have enough people? We talked about hiring more people. I believe in Public Accounts, when we were there, we talked about 1,900 FTEs. But it's a big province. I'm not sure. I know that we've got them throughout the province on various things – fish and wildlife, fire protection, and various other things – but how many people are actually going around monitoring the responsibility?

I'm not saying that everyone is not responsible, but you know you always have those that aren't responsible when we're using the off-road vehicles. Like I said about the trench, you know, a six-foot-two man can stand in it, and it's up to his shoulders. You've got the repeated use of the trail, which continues to wipe out and wash away valuable watersheds. We talk about towns and municipalities. Some of these people aren't too far out from that.

Instead of just being critical about it, my suggestion would be to designate some of these public lands that we do have and allow these users that consider this a sport or a recreation to have, you know, square miles designated for specific use of off-road vehicles, whether it be landfills later on, like they do with the Clover Bar dump just east of the city here. That's a great area where people like to take their vehicles. You can rip up and down the land. It doesn't matter because at the end of the day, it's a landfill. It's just being covered over. We're hoping to generate some new growth, some trees and grass. But it doesn't matter. It doesn't affect anyone in the long term.

I'm wondering if the province has thought about, you know, in the northern areas, maybe in the south, and in the middle of the province strictly designating some of this area. Maybe it isn't good for much after. You know, coal-bed methane maybe or some drilling has taken effect, and the land is completely being used. We've got some great areas. Has this ministry considered setting aside some of this land to be specifically designated areas?

We have paths and all that, that they're supposed to stick to, but we know that at the end of the day they do not.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to thank the hon. member for his questions. By my count there are approximately six questions with sometimes a couple of multiple questions thrown in there. I'll try to answer them all in 10 minutes.

Is that right, Mr. Chair?

The Deputy Chair: Correct.

Dr. Morton: Yeah, 10 minutes. Okay.

The question of the allocation for pine beetle of $52.6 million. There were two questions there: should we have intervened in British Columbia earlier, and if we should have, why didn't we? The problem there, I think, is that the B.C. government didn't respond properly and early enough. There was a similar debate to the one we're having now, I guess, in Alberta about how proactive and how aggressive the fight should be against pine beetle in British Columbia.

I recently received a file of newspaper articles from British Columbia where there were many letters and editorials and groups urging the wait-and-see approach. In the end that's what the NDP government did in British Columbia. They adopted the wait-and-see approach, and the result was that the pine beetle plague exploded and got so big that they lost control. So we didn't help in B.C. because B.C. wasn't helping itself through this wait-and-see attitude. Of course, that's why we are not taking that approach and are being proactive and taking a positive and aggressive approach and an expensive approach, as the hon. member indicated, in trying to prevent the spread of pine beetle in Alberta.

The question about federal availability of funding. The federal government, when the Liberals were still in charge, announced a hundred million dollars that was dedicated, it would appear, solely to B.C. Since the Conservatives have taken over in Ottawa, they've announced another $200 million. Very little of that has flowed yet. There were some perceptions that that $200 million was allocated just for British Columbia. As you might imagine, British Columbia politicians encouraged that perception, but I'm happy to report that on my visit to Ottawa in April I was assured that the $200 million that the Conservatives have put aside for fighting pine beetle is to go where that money can best be used to stop the spread of the pine beetle because the federal government realizes that this is no longer just about Alberta; it's about the whole boreal forest. If the pine beetle were to continue its eastern migration in the type of the massive numbers and density of insects that we've seen in British Columbia, it's not just Alberta that's threatened but, really, the entire north, all the way across the country.

The second question, I believe, was with respect to winter kill. That, of course, is historically how the pine beetle has been controlled in Alberta, certainly in northern Alberta. It has been partly the lack of colder winters that has allowed it to spread. The hon. member is right; we did have a couple of cold snaps this past winter, in November and then again in January, February. I was in Grande Prairie recently attending a forestry exposition, speaking with a lot of our staff there and also forestry people. Definitely, the research they're doing, the inventory they're doing does show quite a significant winter kill in pine beetle, but at the moment it's looking to be in the 75 to 80 per cent range, not in the 95 to 97 per cent range, that you'd need to really set it back. However, 75 per cent is still a lot better than 50 per cent. Also, the results aren't in yet completely. Unfortunately, the die-off rate from winter kill decreases as you go south, so we still have an issue in the southern part of Alberta.

Your third question was a concern about the decrease in the budget and whether or not that decrease was due to the fact that we expected to do less firefighting this year, and if we didn't, if we thought there were going to be more fires, did we intend to go to supplemental estimates again? I have to admit that the communication on the size of the budget this year was somewhat confusing, but if you go back and look in Hansard at my introductory remarks today, you'll see – I tried to explain; I probably wasn't clear enough – that the $45.2 million that has been added to the permanent base budget of the ministry in past years was being taken out of the emergency fund. It was decided partly on the basis of internal financial control – and also I believe the Auditor General had a suggestion on this – that if that's what it takes, $45.2 million, to be ready for the fire season, then that money should be part of your ongoing base budget year over year and not considered part of the emergency request. So we did a transfer in, and that's a permanent new addition to our core year-over-year funding.

Fortunately, there was a good snowpack last winter and a wet spring. We haven't had any fire problems yet. We, in fact, have even been able to loan some of our forest firefighters to Quebec and Ontario in the last few weeks, but as the fire season develops, we will go into the emergency fund or the environmental enhancement and protection fund and draw on that to actually do the firefighting, as we have in the past.

Your fourth question dealt with the land-use framework and public input. Will we take it seriously? Is it going to look like the Affordable Housing Task Force, where the allegation is made that that was not taken seriously? Yes, we will take it seriously. You've heard me speak on this subject before. A lot of people came to Alberta for jobs, but I think they stayed here for the lifestyle. This government, the Conservative Party that's formed the government of Alberta over the last 36 years but particularly during the Klein era, addressed issues of serious debt, a stalled economy, and getting that back on track. I think former Premier Klein and his governments deserve credit for that achievement.

But we've clearly turned the corner in Alberta's development, and I think the quality-of-life issues now outweigh the quantity-of-life issues. The land-use framework initiative reflects that. Premier Stelmach, certainly, sensed that during the leadership campaign. Obviously, the opposition parties sensed that, talking to the public. So, yes, input will be taken seriously, and I'm looking forward to that.

Your fifth question dealt with off-road vehicles and damage to public lands and specifically wetlands. We have implemented access plans, or what are sometimes known as forest land-use zones, or FLUZ is the acronym. We've done that with considerable success in a number of recreational areas in the province where we've had this type of problem before with random camping, irresponsible use of off-highway vehicles, and destruction of public lands, particularly destruction of wetlands.

There are, however, some areas in the foothills that are not adequately protected yet. One of those was the area that I visited over the May long weekend, and there was some media attention put on that. I'm happy to report that we've had two meetings now with my staff as to how we're going to respond to that in the short, intermediate, and long terms. I won't get into those details, but you'll see that on a go-forward basis.

You ask: do we have adequate personnel? Yes. We have added to our personnel, particularly in fish and wildlife. We borrowed fish and wildlife officers to help us with enforcement in that area. This was actually quite a strong priority of mine, and I fought hard in the budget process to get some new fish and wildlife officers. We have 12 new full-time equivalents, but actually in terms of people that turns into 20 new hires. Many of our hires are seasonal, and we certainly will be using them in this context of recreational use on public lands.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Maybe just to go back to a couple of points that I was hoping for maybe a little bit more detail or clarification on. When we talk about the land-use framework, I'm hoping for a commitment from the minister that all recommendations will be considered and that we won't cherry-pick the good from the bad. When you're asking for public opinion, you're going to have to accept good and bad and try and make that balance. But to toss half of them out because they don't, you know, mix with the philosophy I think is a slap in the face to the people when they come out and put their submissions in. So I'm hoping for a stronger commitment from this minister as to how much of the recommendations – I'm not asking you for a crystal ball. When you get them, you know you're going to get good with bad. Are you going to accept all, or are you going to cherry-pick?

The other one. I know that we had a lot of snowpack. The forest service right now is getting its training over in Quebec. I'm assuming that this isn't a goodwill exercise. The men and women that do go get paid, and it's just a transfer between provinces. I'm just assuming that that's how we're doing that in this particular piece.

We talked about that in the north last year or even the year before we had random camping. That's probably a specific incident that may be popping up now. It certainly pops up here in Edmonton in the river valleys. When I was up there in McMurray, they have tight rental accommodations. We know that we have at least a thousand dollars a month on one or two of the only available parks up there. How flexible is the minister with regard to random camping now? We know that we need the people. We're bringing in temporary foreign workers. Even the Minister of Immigration, Employment and Industry says: don't come unless you have a job and you have accommodations. Well, a lot of these people have jobs but are trying to find the accommodations. A lot of these people drag their trailers up there, and they do take advantage of, I guess, the environment and try and do the camping.

I'm not sure if the previous minister was inflexible about this, but if this minister is going to loosen up some of the regulations or restrictions that were once there – because some of these spots that were once held by some of the groups were bulldozed, with large rocks and that. I mean, I'm not trying to belabour that particular point and really get into it. I'm just wondering how flexible the minister is given the tight accommodations up north.

The other part is – I guess you mentioned it – bringing in new staff. But retention like any business is a big concern. How are you dealing with retention as well as attraction? You've got to compete with the private sector, and certainly we want to make sure that we're being competitive. I noted that within the budget there were some modest increases in a number of the areas, communications as well as some of the other ones, but how much of that is dedicated just to basic salary increases to ensure that we do have the manpower to deal with that not just during the boom in the spring and the summer but fall and winter?

I'm going to switch gears here and talk about – you did mention about the oil sands strategy. The oil sands strategy committee report, otherwise known as the Radke report, was released earlier in the year, and it did make some recommendations to Sustainable Resource Development. It was clear that there was not enough Sustainable Resource Development staff up in the Wood Buffalo region. Without Sustainable Resource Development putting in the amount of people, we can't potentially know about the damage that's occurring in the lands, the forests, and the impact on the wildlife and that biodiversity that we were talking about there the other day and you just mentioned a little while ago. That's again a result of the mining and the oil sands activity and the cumulative impacts of long-term intense development.

So I'm wanting to know about recommendation 10 with the report. It says:

A substantial increase in manpower (FTE's) should be provided to . . . Alberta Sustainable Resource Development to focus on cumulative effects, [environmental impact assessments], research, policy development, monitoring and enforcement in the oil sands areas.

And that's not just specific to Wood Buffalo. I'm sure that particular piece could be encompassing where we do have the activities and seismic development going in, even in particular up in Marie Lake, but right now we're concentrating on the Wood Buffalo. What has the government done to address this particular recommendation?

Obviously, we're talking about an increase in staff. So how much money is going to be dedicated to that? Will it be just short term, or will this be permanent FTEs to deal with the ongoing development of the Wood Buffalo area and the oil and gas? I'm not sure if you have an exact number of staff or estimates that were going to be up there. There was talk about 87 new full-time equivalents in the ministry, so that's like a 4 and a half per cent increase. That would beg the question again: is that directly to deal with the Radke, and how many are going up into the Wood Buffalo? I'm not trying to put numbers and words in your mouth. I'm just hoping that you'll give me a little bit of feedback on that.

How many people or numbers are in the field versus the office? Of course, I mean, it's nice to have a little bit of extra people sometimes at the top, but you certainly need them at the base where all the activity takes place on the public lands, especially in the spring, summer, and the fall.

I asked the minister last year – and this would be with regard to the fishing, and I had received a couple of inquiries. When we have the freeze, we typically get people who are doing the ice fishing or we have people who are doing commercial fishing. I know that there were some payouts with regard to some commercial fishermen's licences up in the Lac La Biche or the Slave Lake areas. I'm not sure why the particular payouts were made in four instances. They were numbered anywhere from $100,000 to $150,000 for individuals with commercial fishing licences up north. So I'm just wondering if you'd care to comment on that particular piece.

Getting back to the commercial fishing, we sometimes have derbies, and we've got derby people coming from other provinces staking their claim on some of the bigger lakes, advertising prizes of $50,000 to $75,000. When we talk about how many holes you're punching in and how many people you're getting in there, who's monitoring the activity of these fishing derbies? I mean, yeah, it's a great idea, but overfishing is also a concern. So who are we monitoring, and what is the effect of outside provincial people coming in and taking advantage of our lakes and maybe the lax regulations with regard to the fishing derbies? I wasn't sure where that had gone. It was your predecessor that I was asking, not yourself. I'll just clarify that particular point.

Just got a little bit more on the people or the manpower outside the Wood Buffalo region, then. I know that it's a huge province, and I recognize that we can't be everywhere all the time, but it would be nice to see that some of the work that we do do is appreciated and recognized, so I would certainly give, you know, kudos to the staff that are doing the ongoing monitoring and the hard work out there, especially those in the lookout towers. Their jobs are starting to become very much full time.

I did have the opportunity to discuss this with them last year. This year during the unfortunate incident where we did have the one woman, the senior lady, who had disappeared – and there were rewards posted, but we've still never found her – we did raise the question about workers' safety and working alone. I had received overwhelming phone calls, e-mails from people who said: "You know what? Just leave that sort of legislation alone. We're quite comfortable. We recognize that part of the benefit of this particular job is the solitude and the tranquility of being out there." So I'm assuming that you're going to continue to leave it just like that.

We're talking about the people that we need out there. Again, getting back to the retention and attraction, how do you retain these people? Last year there were some people that were here 38, 40 years, and I think that's commendable to be in one profession that long. We're just hoping that we can continue with that.

That will lead me into wildlife protection. I know that I'm going to run out in about 50 seconds here. We talked about this. I'm not talking about the bear with the camera on his head; that's just the one. I wanted to know. We did a study. We had a biologist that was in fact let go with regard to maybe speaking out against the report as to the actual numbers of grizzlies that are remaining out there. Best guess: I believe that we're underestimating the amount of grizzlies that are out there. I'm glad to see that the suspension of the spring grizzly hunt will continue, but that still just raises the issue as to how many bears are out there. I know that we do have a number that are hit at crossings and maybe on the tracks. Last year I think there was a 10 per cent decrease because they were females. That's a big issue. During the election that was a huge issue for Albertans. They called in concerned about the grizzly bears.

I'll just leave it at that, then. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the hon. member for his questions.

On the land-use framework: are we just going to cherry-pick the things we like that we're told, or are we going to take everything in? We'll take everything in. This is a consultation with a broad spectrum of Albertans. I can tell you already that there is very unlikely to be a consensus on a lot of the big issues.

I was getting both my internal reports from the media in Lethbridge two days ago, and also the coverage in the Lethbridge Herald that indicated that on a number of key questions what was being recommended verbally – we obviously haven't seen the workbooks yet, but just based on the conversations that were taking place with our consultants and officers, our land personnel that are involved in this, there are some very divergent opinions. We'll have to wait to see where the chips fall on that.

With respect to the question of reimbursement for the firefighters that we've sent to Quebec and also Ontario, there are mutual aid agreements between all the Canadian provinces when it comes to helping one another out to fight fires. There are agreed-upon rates for reimbursement, so that is a reimbursed cost.

With respect to random camping in Fort McMurray, random camping is defined as camping of up to a maximum of 14 days. Of course, the problem that we've had in Fort McMurray because of, as you properly indicated, the mismatch between the number of workers and the available housing is that we have seen a number of kind of camps set up not for 14 days but on a fairly permanent basis. Sustainable Resource Development does have the ability to authorize industrial camps for housing of workers as requested by industry, and we have that authority. But I don't think that is quite what you're talking about.

There are, of course, existing campgrounds, and we can and are working with private campground owners to possibly enlarge their capacity, perhaps on a temporary basis, to try to accommodate this. The bottom line is that while Albertans have a right to use public lands, they don't have a right to abuse public lands. The responsibility of Sustainable Resource Development is to protect the integrity of those natural resources.

On personnel retention I have both official and anecdotal evidence to answer your question there. I think we must be doing a heck of a good job because in March, I believe it was, I went to an employee recognition event for number of years of service, and it was so large that we had to have it out at Fort Edmonton. I practically got writer's cramp filling out all the certificates of appreciation to all the people that were getting recognized. I don't think Cliff was the oldest, but he was getting up there. There were a large number in the 20, 25, 30, 35 years of service, so certainly that gave me the impression that our retention is actually quite good.

I have some more specific answers to that question. We do do regular recruiting for all of our different sections or divisions within Sustainable Resource Development. When it comes to forestry and wildfires, we use our Hinton Training Centre to train people there. Many of our seasonal recruits are rehires, who may do one thing in the winter and come back and work for us in the summer. I have met with the forestry department over at the University of Alberta and talked to them about employment opportunities in our forestry division as well. I hope that answers your questions on that.

With respect to the Radke report and the oil sands strategy I believe the question was: has there been a specific allocation of personnel and budget to meet the needs that were identified in that report with respect to the type of both monitoring of impact on the environment and also the licensing of the activities of the dispositions that take place there? In fact, again, if you look at the breakdown in our budget – I might be able to give you a specific page number in a minute – you'll see that there was a very specific allocation made for that.

We have 11 new FTEs that were allocated to the department specifically for the oil sands strategy. Their responsibilities will include basically what you anticipated in your question: co-ordination of environmental impact assessment reviews and subsequent approval and/or placing of conditions, alignment of issue positions and integration of review, development of cumulative effect frameworks and the application of those frameworks. I think that answers most of your question.

The question of the buyout of commercial fishing licenses. I can tell you that this is a program that was implemented in 2003 with the goals of reducing the number of commercial fishermen and the potential conflict between recreational and commercial users, basically improving the economics of the industry both on the commercial side and also on the recreational side. From an economic point of view there's a lot more economic value in recreational fishing than commercial precisely because it's so much less efficient as many of us know from hard-luck stories.

An Hon. Member: You want to talk about yours?

Dr. Morton: Exactly.

The number of commercial gillnet fishermen is now below our goal. Our reduction goal was to get to 200. We're now down to 177, which is down from approximately 800 at the start of this program, and we anticipate further reducing that number of 177 down to 140 by the end of this budget year.

3:30

Fishing derbies. The fishing derbies, as you probably know, are one of the most popular, particularly winter, activities in many parts of Alberta. You talk about out-of-province people coming in. They often run the derbies, but basically they're derby organizers, and they're contracted out by charities. I think I'm right in saying this: all of the fishing derbies that we authorize are nonprofit operations. They're to raise money. Obviously, the operators are paid a fee to come in and organize it, but the funds raised once expenses are paid go to, usually, good causes in those communities, including often the promotion and the improvement of fisheries and fishery habitat.

You were concerned also about the effect that fishing derbies have on the fishery itself. Almost all of these are catch and release. In fact, part of the problem we have is that we require certain types of tanks to hold the fish so they can be measured and counted before they're released back, and sometimes the specifications of the holding tanks impose some cost issues that are hard on some people to meet. These are factored into the fishing management for each lake they take place on, and while there's probably some percentage of kill just from the handling and so forth, our fisheries people believe that they're done in a good way.

I'll get you information on worker safety and fire watch.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, any other responses you can certainly provide in writing.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, I just want to let you know that there are about nine minutes left in this segment, so if you wanted any responses from the minister, you may want to leave some amount of time for him.

Mr. Bonko: Or if I preferred, could he respond in writing?

The Deputy Chair: In writing. That is another option as well. Yes.

Mr. Bonko: Okay. Wonderful. Thank you. Then I'll just proceed with a number of questions that I do have. I know you may not be able to answer them all quickly, but I'm hoping that I can have some clarification or some explanation and more detail in writing. I'll be a little bit all over the place so I can try and get them all in here.

The Canmore Golf and Curling Club. I just want to ask for some information about the lease that the Canmore Golf and Curling Club has with the ministry. Order in Council 65/2007 in February extended that lease for 25 years, from 50 to 75. I'd just like to ask a couple of questions. If the minister can't provide them, again, written answers would be great. Why extend it now with only 22 years remaining on the lease? I mean, preferably the entire lease. Why did we extend it now and add an additional 50 to 75 years? How much is the land worth as a market estimate, and how much is the club paying to rent that particular land? It seems a little bit odd that we're doing this now still under the option before the land-use framework is even in place.

The other one is, again, getting back to some of the grizzlies and the wildlife protection. This year the ministry released its general status of Alberta Species at Risk 2005 report, which made it very clear as to how little the ministry does know about many of the species in Alberta's wildlife parks and areas throughout the province. It talks about 4 per cent of the mammals being at risk, but with another 5 to 6 per cent that are undetermined. Even worse, the amphibians, or reptiles: 30 per cent may be at risk. Sixteen per cent of freshwater fish are undetermined and 23 per cent of the butterflies or the gastropods or bivalves. You know, the little shells or snails. I'm not too concerned about them, but that all is particularly embedded within the report.

Dr. Morton: You're not concerned about them?

Mr. Bonko: Well, snails. It's escargot. Someone is going to be eating them. Right?

Why do we have measures like that if they really don't remotely even address some of the challenges that we're facing with some of these things? Isn't this just giving the ministry an easy target with some of these generalities out there without some specifics? What's going to be done to reduce the uncertainty? How many resources are being devoted to it, and can we expect a little bit clearer picture in the future?

Again, getting back to the grizzlies, why has the government withheld the numbers of the grizzly bears in the areas where the studies are completed? What's being done while we wait to find out how many bears there are?

Getting into the bears, we also talk about species at risk and the caribou. What's being done to manage the caribou management teams? Specific example: perhaps the Little Smoky group there. What impact are they having on protection? I mean, it's a competing interest when we have recreational and forest companies, oil and gas exploration, and they are going into some of the much-needed areas for migration, as we talked about a few days ago with regard to some of the questions.

Getting into the mountain pine beetle, then. How is the government going to address the threat? We talked about some of that. What proportion will be concentrated on clear-cutting in sensitive areas or areas at risk or block cutting? What proportion will be selective harvesting? What proportion will be – and we talked about this before – managed with controlled burns? What will the main determinant be: the value of the timber or the ecological sensitivity of the forest? How are we going to determine if we're going in or if we're not going to go in, or are we just going to leave it because of the age? I know it has a certain market value on it, but sometimes you've got to cut your losses and just allow nature to take its course.

The impact of the infestation. It's going to obviously tell our producers to increase their quotas, but we also know that under the softwood lumber agreement we're going to be over limits. Are we going to be unfairly penalized when we try and bring some of this lumber to market? We know that the product is dropping on the U.S. side, so, you know, instead of letting it sit and rot or at least be susceptible – I think Weyerhaeuser up north were talking about the Grande Prairie area. Some of the areas, the stands, are sitting there to be produced and in some cases are under attack already by the pine beetle there.

I just wanted to go back again to what we talked about in Public Accounts. The Auditor General had made some mention of general reforestation and our ability to ensure that it actually is being done in a timely fashion. Again, for the benefit of the minister, who wasn't there, we talked about when we do self-monitoring. We did it in school. We used to mark our own exams. A lot of us managed to get a hundred per cent. I'm just concerned about the same sort of thing.

Dr. Morton: Say it's not true.

Mr. Bonko: Well, you know what? I can't say that because it was true.

A lot of us are just concerned. I mean, it just keeps everybody honest. I mean, I'd like to take everybody's word. You know what? Maybe we can get back to it next year. But sometimes we don't get back to it, and then it's the year after. I'm just concerned about the overall impact of the delaying and the reporting of this mechanism, about not having the actual timelines for reforestation and leaving it up to self-reporting. I'm concerned about that particular case. I did reiterate that during Public Accounts, and again it was in numerous recommendations from the Auditor General.

I'm just wanting to know: how much are we going to do with improvement on that area, reporting, and a little bit tighter guidelines for the forestry companies? What's being done to check for it? We talk about 80 per cent targets, I guess, with reforestation – we were hoping for that – but I'm not sure if that's too weak or if that's just fine.

We'll go to the NRCB. We've had some serious concerns about the NRCB. I know that a number of other members not just on our side but on both sides of the House have raised concerns about that, that sometimes the industry is getting a little bit too close, and it's not protecting the rights of Albertans living close to the intensive farming operations. We've talked about the relaxation in the rules.

We talk about some of the runoff. We talk about the large confined feedlot operations and their closeness to large bodies of water. Slave Lake has one that we were concerned about. It did pass last year, but, I mean, that's their main source of potable water as well as recreation. We're concerned about just the impact on the industry and the flooding, which we talked about, which is certainly a reality here in Alberta. What can we do with the confined feedlots?

Going to, I'm sure, a favourite one of the minister's, the interim Métis harvesting agreement. I know that it's something near and dear to his heart as he had mentioned it during his leadership campaign. He was concerned about the agreement and its workings. What's going to be going on with the agreement? Where do the Métis stand with this particular piece? Is the minister satisfied with the interim agreement right now, or are we going to press for a total agreement instead of making it interim? So far this has been an interim agreement in for the two years, so it's either, you know, fish or cut bait. Where are we going with this particular piece?

3:40

Dr. Morton: No pun intended.

Mr. Bonko: Yeah. No pun intended on that one. Exactly.

Those are some of the specifics that I definitely wanted to get out for the minister, then. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the time allocated for Sustainable Resource Development has now elapsed. I'd like to thank the officials that have accompanied the minister for this important assistance to the minister. Thank you so very much.

International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, what an excellent presentation by Sustainable Resource Development and their staff. I want to say that as we move forward, it's indeed my pleasure to introduce my contingent of staff here today: my deputy minister, Gerry Bourdeau. Gerry along with his staff have been doing an excellent job in terms of our ministry budget for '07-08 of $67.6 million. We have done our very best in terms of doing this in a way that is easily understood by all Albertans, the 3.4 million. We welcome our questions today.

I want to say that with this budget the Premier has mandated six priorities for my ministry: two Canadian intergovernmental priorities in terms of co-ordinating Alberta's approach to intergovernmental relations and also developing an intergovernmental strategy and one international priority, which is enhancing Alberta's international presence and trade relations, especially with the United States.

Of course, we're all very familiar with – and I want to say all political parties – the success we had at the Smithsonian last summer, I think without question. For those who may not be aware, Canada was offered the opportunity to host in Washington. Canada chose not to take that opportunity, but the province of Alberta did. I know that was quite something. Other provinces would have welcomed the opportunity to have been able to host. Alberta, with its vision and, certainly, its foresight, was able to put on a very successful show at the Smithsonian. I want to say that I think it was a huge success.

We also have three aboriginal priorities: finalizing the aboriginal consultation strategy but also finalizing the long-term Métis governance and funding and building aboriginal self-sufficiency. These priorities, of course, cross most of my ministry's core businesses, and we also work very closely with other ministries relative to these important priorities.

I would also like to say, finally, that we work on addressing specific issues arising from other core businesses. For example, in finalizing the aboriginal consultation, we first need to help First Nations complete and share traditional land-use studies so they can better participate in consultation, and we are making good progress in that regard.

Another component of my very diverse ministry are 10 international offices, which now also include Washington. I don't know if the hon. members are familiar with where the 10 offices are, but based on the excellent work that our staff are doing, I want to say that the feedback I'm receiving from MLAs who've travelled with parliamentary committees through the Speaker – and that's all three political parties. I must admit that I have always appreciated the very positive comments that have come back when people are visiting, be it in Munich or in Tokyo or in Hong Kong or be it in Seoul. Wherever it is, I think that members of this Assembly, when they attended our foreign offices, were very proud to say that Alberta is rivalling, shall I say, one other province who has a very large international presence, and that is the province of Quebec.

What we have done is we have utilized our partnership with embassies to minimize our cost and, at the same time, have a profile for the province of Alberta because traditionally, I think it's important to note, we have observed that sometimes the federal government refers to Alberta along with the other provinces in western Canada as western Canada, and of course we're very proud as Albertans to be a little bit more specific than just western Canada. So the embassy may talk about western Canada; what we have endeavoured to do is to talk about the province of Alberta. Consequently, our offices have been successful.

But I have asked for a review of those offices, which hasn't been done in over 10 years. In the changing global economy that we have today, the question is: are we getting good value for those offices we have? Should we be considering perhaps closing some or opening others in terms of what we refer to as the BRIC. It's a global term that is used referring to the four countries of Brazil, Russia, India, and China. Of course, we presently have three offices in China: in Hong Kong as well as two in Beijing. One contemplation has been: should we be considering offices in Mumbai? I spoke to my colleagues in Ontario who just had a mission to India, so we are considering them along with South America.

At the end of the day, I've made this comment that it really should be Albertans who are benefiting from these offices, that they are ones saying: hey, keep this office open, or open another office here. I've taken the approach that if we don't have Albertans supporting it, saying these offices are doing very good work, then I will contemplate closing them, but I have been very encouraged by the very positive comments from the hundreds of businesses that have indicated the excellent work that they are doing and the value.

It's really quite amazing. If you look at our export market in Alberta, that natural fact under our international marketing strategy referred to as AIMS, the Alberta international marketing strategy, we are working to increase Alberta in exports to $81 billion, which is quite something and actually rivals what other countries are very proud to I guess brag about. I can say that it's this collective effort that ultimately is showing and having positive results for Alberta.

With that, I'd just like to summarize my $67.6 million budget by comparing to Health or Education. I think I can keep health care running for about three hours on my entire year's budget. I think I can keep the education system running for maybe a half a day with the budget. But I will say that please think of our work to be compared to things like dynamite. Some things come in small packages but have a big bang, and I do believe that our ministry does have a big bang in terms of helping Albertans.

Thank you, and I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to say on behalf of myself and our caucus congratulations to minister and his wife on their very first born.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you.

Mr. Bonko: You're very welcome. I know that it wasn't mentioned, and I just want to make sure that . . .

Mr. Boutilier: That's Marc. Marc with a C, not a K.

Mr. Bonko: Okay.

You started off there with regard to the benefit that Albertans and everything that they have provides not only to Canada, but we're also proud to show it off, which was the result when we went to the Smithsonian Institution down there in Washington. You talked about how it was impressive, and we've done quite well on that. Well, that kind of just begs the question because when we do some of these and we refer to them as junkets or trade missions, whatever you want to call them, we do take staff. It does cost a number of hours, and there is a cost associated with it. How are we able to measure the results from a particular mission or junket? How are we able to measure the effectiveness, the amount of trade that you got from that one particular piece?

We talked about trade relations. You talked about BRIC: Brazil, Russia, India, and three offices in China. How do we know, in fact, that we're getting good value for our offices being there? In some cases we have overbudgeting. In Seoul, Korea, the office was 31 per cent over budget. It begs the question: what are they doing if they can't effectively manage that particular budget in that area? How are they able to ensure that we're going to get fair dollar and fair trade from that relationship there? I think that's a fair question. I'm sure that the Auditor General would even say: "You know what? How do you measure that?" That's a tough one. I've asked the minister of economic development before when that ministry did exist. I'm again posing the same question to the minister now. Is the minister going to address, like I said, the overbudgets that do exist in a number of the trade offices? I know that there's probably a logical explanation.

But you know what? I'd certainly like to hear again what tangible benefits those offices bring not only to Alberta, but there's obviously a western Canada, we'll call it, being that we've now got the TILMA. Don't forget that I certainly will be going into that one as well. What checks and balances or measures does the government use to ensure those benefits? So just specifically talking on the trade relations and the overseas trade offices.

That will lead me into my favourite subject, which is the trade investment labour mobility agreement known as TILMA. I know and I recognize that that is an important issue. It kicked in April 1 of this year, and it's set to go with the signing off of the agreement in 2009, April 1 as well. Yet the government, in my opinion and in the opinion of a lot of Albertans, is being quite secretive on the workings of the agreement. You might say: no, no; we've been quite open and transparent on the whole thing, but I want to sign it behind closed doors. It's not yet come to the Legislature for debate in any way, shape, or form except through question period. Albertans and opposition alike as well as unions and voices of Alberta clearly have reason to be skeptical and suspicious of the TILMA.

Many groups, like I said, may support the agreement because, you know, trade agreements work both for best sides, but given some of the early indications of the TILMA agreement, we're concerned about it. So I'd like to ask some specific questions with regard to TILMA. How much money is in the budget that's going to be spent specifically on TILMA-related issues? What kinds of internal government co-ordination will have to take effect between B.C. and, of course, Alberta?

Now, I knew that they had appointed some specific people to the panel. I wrote to the minister in B.C., and he said: well, the minister here in Alberta has that. So we obviously have some people specifically designated to some of the workings of the TILMA. We have a panel, I guess, in place, and I wasn't sure if we have those names. That would be great to eventually have those provided to ourselves.
